Conference was held in the saints' chapel, Llanelly, September 4, 1897, at six p. m.; E. R. Dewsnap president, L. Bishop secretary. The ministry gave a verbal report of their labors. The spiritual report of Llanelly, Morriston, and Pontyeats branches were read. Sr. J. Edwards, president of the sisters' aid society, gave her report, which was much appreciated. E. R. Dewsnap then resigned as district president; resignation accepted. Rees Jenkins was duly elected district president. Resolved that selections be made from the Doctrine and Covenants on duties of officers defined. It was left in the hands of Rees Jenkins to report next conference. Sunday afternoon an excellent prayer and testimony meeting was held. At six p. m. Elders J. Dewsnap and F. G. Pitt were the speakers. A vote of thanks was passed to Llanely saints for their kindness in providing for all visitors. Resolved that all the various quorums be sustained by our faith and prayers.

Sunday school at 9:45 Sunday morning. Sunday school talk by T. W. Williams at eleven a. m. Afternoon given to Bro. Mintun on blackboard work, Sunday school work at Woodbine reunion, and other interesting features. Adjourned to meet at Council Bluffs second Saturday and Sunday in December.

CONVENTION NOTICES.

Convention of the Northeastern Missouri district will convene at Bevier, Friday, October 8, at nine a. m., for prayer service, to which a special invitation is given to all Sunday school workers to be in attendance. Promptly at ten a. m. the business session begins. A good report is desired from all schools in the district. In the afternoon some very interesting papers will be read on Sunday school work, and there will be a normal class drill. The program for the evening will be of a literary character. Some very good recitations will be recited. Let all those that will attend come on time and come prepared to make this convention a success.

LOUISE PALFREY, Supt.
M. J. RICHARDS, Sec.

Convention of the Northeastern Kansas district will meet one day previous to conference at Centralia. The session will begin Friday, October 8, at ten a. m. Blank reports are expected from all the schools so as to make a full district report. Let all make an effort to come, that we may have a profitable time. A program is being planned by superintendent.

PASTORAL.

I wish to inform all concerned that I enter into coöperative measures, as suggested in Bro. J. R. Lambert's pastoral, found on page 611, in Herald for September 22.

I have already received some invitations, to which I will respond as soon as practicable. And it may be that the brethren think a vacation of three weeks, being one week for each year of absence from home, sufficient, and perhaps it is; for inactivity is not healthful in a spiritual sense to any Latter Day Saint, especially not to a representative.

To those with whom I am to coöperate as per appointment, I wish to state that so far as I know our cause is the same as when I aforesaid coöperated with some with whom I am to recommence the work of coöperation, hence know of no necessity for change, unless the change shall consist in an increased fidelity and loyalty to given and accepted law, which, if we would succeed in the divine life, must always be the rule of action.

'Tis good to be zealously engaged, if so be our zeal be according to knowledge, because a zeal not according to knowledge, if persisted in, will work evil for the cause proportionately as a zeal according to knowledge will work good. And I know of no warrant for me to work, by theory or practice, against the well-being of the cause, therefore look for no special favors, for none, from member to president, are exempt from the law. And while the law may be a terror to evil doers, it is ever a praise to them that do well.

A concession as to the realism of the gospel plan involves a necessity on my part for a practical demonstration of corresponding realism in my moral rectitude.

I have said, and still insist, that the success of the body is a result of spiritual activity of the several integral parts of the body; for which purpose, I believe, God designs that the several departments should be powerful, according to the gifts and calling of God unto them. Those entering into the marriage are ready, and if this readiness is not attributable to activity in our probationary career, I am at sea and fail to see the benefit of subjugating our will to God's will, and resignedly submitting to requisite sacrifice, self-denial, etc.

Though efforts may be put forth to justify nonaction in severing the transgressor from the body, under the pretext that the wheat and tares are to grow together until harvest, I have never been able to see the force of such reasoning. It is possible, of course, the limitedness of my capacity may be preventive. Be this as it may, Christ never taught erroneously, and he says, "The field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world; and the reapers are the angels. As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of the world." This distinction made by Christ ought, I think, to suffice and precludes the thought of justification in exhibition of indifference in dealing with the transgressor. Further, the promise to the righteous of shining as the sun, in the kingdom of their Father, is not realized until all that offends, etc., is gathered out of the kingdom. How striking, then, is the evidence as to the necessity of a final separation, ere the righteous shall bask in the fullness of God's glory and perfection.

Being a petitioner, I can only become a recipient of God's favor as I abide in or by revealed conditions. It were therefore presumptuous, if not wicked on my part, to quibble over or question the sacredness or the imperativeness of those conditions. Look well to an original article in Herald for September 22, and compare it with the following, and I think a very striking compatibility therewith will be visible: "And that ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot and blameless: wherefore, for this cause I gave unto you the commandment, that ye should go to the Ohio; and there I will give unto you my law," etc. This explicitness of God's law, making plain its design, with many others similar in character, were doubtless given to meet an exigency brought about because of the opposition to God's written word, at the time of the introduction of the latter-day work, that the saints might be warned, stimulated, and instructed.

I have said, and still insist, that the success of the body is brought about by the spiritual activity of the several integral parts of the body; therefore there can be no justification for inactivity or negligence by official or nonofficial.

I believe branch officials should be united, living, moving, and acting in each other's confidence and affections, paying special attention to individual duties and responsibilities, and by their united efforts should be familiar with the moral status of the members of the branch, and to my mind the reversalment of the duties and prerogative of the several officials of the church gives sufficient evidence as to the necessity and diligence, in the performance of these revealed duties. And I believe he gives the best evidence of a knowledge of his own duties who legitimately studies and labors to guard and foster the rights of others. And I further believe it to be the duty of every official, to properly discriminate between a love for domination, undue officiousness, and a godly zeal leading to the performance of law imposed duties, which I think should be carried out or performed with an eye single to God's glory, being satisfied to let God take care of results. And he who practically demonstrates a conception of the significance and imperativeness of the declaration; viz.: "The elders shall see that my [Christ's] law is kept," should be sustained and encouraged. But there is a possibility that the "hypocritical whine" of those who evince a determination to rule or ruin, may be heard, and the other ignored; for poor, imperfect man is often vacillating, rather leaning to policy for present advantage, than summoning the requisite courage to meet the consequence attendant in contending and standing for the right, more's the pity.

But forasmuch as since man fell, he became carnal, sensual, and devilish, human characteristics are visible everywhere, and the thought of salvation being a personal affair, is indeed cheering. Let us think on the necessity of self-culture, self-subjugation, etc., and be wise, never overlooking the fact that all are innocent until proven guilty; but the exhibition of this bit of simple justice should not deter the work of inquiry and investigation when for this work a necessity develops. A timely warning may serve as a preventive to the perpetrating of a contemplated evil. Read Ezekiel 33 on the blowing of the trumpet; but be sure a necessity for the alarm exists before making it. Idle gossip, for instance, should not be taken as pretext for bringing an accusation against a brother or sister, though it may afford an opportunity for investigation; for there is much to be done before preferring a charge against a member, yet if a necessity for a church trial exists, it should not be neglected; and yet we should not forget that proper official labor may prevent trouble, and those officials thus laboring will be better prepared to cope with trouble when, despite their efforts, it comes to the surface.

The president may plainly detail the duties of a teacher in a general way, yet prove incompetent to so advise as to meet every exigency that may confront an active and God-fearing teacher in the discharge of his duties. He, therefore, with other officials who aspire to be efficient, must do much in the exercise of his own judgment, and by vigilance may nip trouble in the bud, and no necessity exist for publicity of the affair. Read and study well Doctrine and Covenants 42:23, and you will find a distinction between public offenses and secret offenses and the method of treatment, ever keeping in view the injunction; viz., "See thou do all things according to the pattern," and be content with the wisdom and knowledge the word reflective of God's law guarantees, for more or less than this will bring evil. Should a teacher know of trouble between more than one party, he may consult the president, and by joint effort, if no pretext exists for preferring charges, may adopt a method to meet and adjust the trouble; for the idea of allowing the matter to fester, because no pretext appears for a trial, would be absurd indeed. In the event of such a case, we would do well to remember, and at all other times, the following, said to be

AN ARAB SAYING.

Remember, three things come not back:
The arrow sent upon the track—
It will not swerve, it will not stay
Its speed; it flies to wound or slay.

The spoken word so soon forgot
By thee; yet it has perished not;
In other hearts 'tis living still,
And doing work for good or ill.

And that lost opportunity,
That cometh back no more to thee,
In vain thou weepest, in vain dost yearn,
These three will nevermore return.

Were there no other reminder, the fact of an official being authorized to strive to prevent lying, backbiting, and evil speaking, ought to be an effective preventive to all Latter Day Saints descending so far below the dignity we should evince, to indulge in the demoralizing practice.

All communications on church matters addressed to No. 308 Oak Street, Council Bluffs, Iowa, will receive attention.

I shall be greatly stimulated to learn that the interest evinced in every branch's stated prayer meeting is at least as intense as that evinced in reunions; for talk as we may, the spiritual growth of branches is known by the interest evinced in its prayer meetings.

In bonds,

REUNION NOTICES.

To the Members of the Nauvoo, Decatur, Eastern Iowa, Des Moines, Kewanee, and Northeastern Illinois Districts; Greeting:—We your committee, deem it of interest to all concerned, and especially due to the saints composing the above districts, that a few facts be written up and published, by way of a reminder, to refresh the memories of all, concerning the history of the Bluff Park or Nauvoo reunion.

In 1895, by joint action of the above districts, there was held a reunion at Bluff Park, Iowa, just across the Mississippi River from the city of Nauvoo, Illinois. It was so much of a success that it was resolved to continue such reunions annually, and at a business meeting of the reunion, September 13, 1895, a committee of five, composed as follows: James McKiernan, J. R. Lambert, Daniel Tripp, F. G. Pitt, and J. S. Roth, was appointed to draft a petition to General Conference, that in view of the date 1896 being just fifty years since the saints were driven from Nauvoo, the reunion be made a memorial, and be a General Conference reunion. At the General Conference of 1896 the petition was granted, on April 8.

The reunion was a success, and at its close it was unanimously agreed to continue the annual meetings, and a committee for 1897 was chosen, who carried out the wishes of the body, and the late reunion at Bluff Park was the result.

At the last reunion it was thought by some that it would be well to discontinue the Nauvoo reunion, and so moved at the business meeting, but the motion was defeated by a large majority, and then it was made unanimous that we continue our annual reunions; and a committee as follows was appointed to work up and bring about another reunion for 1898: William Anderson chairman, A. H. Smith secretary, Joseph R. Lambert, Joseph S. Snively, and Daniel Tripp.

As secretary of the committee I have been authorized to notify the several districts, and request them each to appoint a soliciting committee of three to act in unison with the general committee, in soliciting funds to defray the expenses of our next reunion. A few dollars from each district will place your committee in a position to make our next reunion a grand success, and remove the perplexing anxiety resting in the minds of a committee who is expected to bring about a successful meeting without a dollar to start on. Will each district in their coming conferences please remember our request and appoint suitable soliciting committees and make the labor light and insure a rousing success, from the 19th of August to the 3d of September, 1898.

The committee has secured the Bluff Park grounds on the same terms as this year, and hopes to arrange better terms for the cottages. Those intending to attend would do well if they wish a cottage to correspond with the cottage committee; i. e., Joseph S. Snively, Lamoni, Iowa, and Daniel Tripp, Montrose, Iowa, at an early day, as many of the cottages are already spoken for. If there should not be cottages enough, which I anticipate will be the case, the committee will secure tents upon order to meet all demands. Now don't forget.

The manuscript of this edition was carefully compared with the original authorized edition of 1835, which was adopted by a General Assembly of the church at Kirtland, and known as the Kirtland edition. Some typographical errors that crept into and passed through later editions have been corrected, and some omissions supplied.

The revelation on the late Civil War, the "Minutes of the General Assembly" of 1835, the minutes of the "Joint Council" of 1894, and the revelations given to the Reorganized Church to date, are all included in the volume. The "Lectures on Faith" are omitted, but may be published later in pamphlet form, or for those who may want them.

The concordance has been revised and enlarged, greatly aiding study and general use of the book. The concordance, and lists of names of persons and places mentioned in the revelations, are included in the volume.

Ready reference to the book is greatly facilitated by the substitution of figures for the old style Roman letters in section and page headings. The figures can be read at a glance.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

THE THREE BOOKS

AT POPULAR PRICES.

CHEAP AND DURABLE.

Because of the increasing demand for the Inspired Translation in home and class study in general and in Sunday school work, also because of the increasing number of Book of Mormon and Book of Covenant classes being formed in various branches of the church, and the consequent growing demand for the "three books," the Herald Office management has decided to issue popular low-priced editions of each.

The books are all well bound and printed on good paper, the paper and plates being the same as used in higher priced editions.

They are good and durable, and with ordinary care will last the necessary wear of years. They are bound in cloth and sold at the low price of 65 cents for either Book of Mormon or Doctrine and Covenants; the Inspired Translation at $1.

Orders solicited. The three standard books of the church are now within the reach of all.

$1.50. $1.50.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

REDUCED IN PRICE.

Recognizing the closeness of the times and with a desire to place the church paper within the reach of every member, the Board of Publication has decided to offer THE SAINTS' HERALD at a reduced price for one year from the date named, as follows:—

On July 12, 1897, the price of the HERALD was fixed at $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

This reduction applies to both old and new subscribers, on the following conditions:—

Cash must accompany all orders for new subscriptions, as stated.

Former subscribers who are in arrears, who pay up on old subscriptions and renew one year in advance, will receive the benefit of the reduction in price from the date named—July 12, 1897.

Those who have already paid in advance will receive the benefit of the reduction in price at the dates of expiration of present subscriptions, and for the year following said dates, if renewing in advance.

This is a reduction of twenty-five per cent, both in the price of the church paper, and of the revenue derived from it. It is therefore necessary that all avail themselves of the new departure and greatly enlarge the list of new subscribers; and also that those indebted pay up all past due accounts.

Branch book agents and the ministry who can do so, are respectfully asked to second the efforts of the Board by obtaining new subscribers for the HERALD and working in the general interests of the Herald Office—the church publishing plant.

TALKS ABOUT GOOD HEALTH.

HOT-WEATHER DIET.

How to keep cool, is a question which becomes of paramount interest when the thermometer ranges in the 90's, as it now and then does in most of our large cities during the months of July and August, and occasionally in September. That this question is not one which relates to comfort only is amply evidenced by the enormous increase in the mortality rate which always attends a considerable rise of temperature during the summer months.

A study of the character of the diseases which especially prevail during the hot season and which figure most conspicuously in the mortality tables shows them to be what might be termed "toxic disorders," or diseases due to poisons generated within the body. Bowel disorders of all sorts, and nearly all acute disorders of the stomach as well, are well known to be due to poison-producing germs taken into the system with our food or drink. These germs, developing within the body, produce various poisonous substances, which manifest themselves in a variety of ways, giving rise to pain, prostration, fever, or depression of temperature, and numerous other symptoms which are associated with this class of disorders.

Sunstroke and so-called "heat prostration" have likewise recently been shown to be a toxic disorder, the characteristic symptom of this malady being due to the retention in the body of the poisons which are constantly generated in it and which are eliminated through the lungs, liver, kidneys, skin, and mucous membrane. This effect is produced by the influence of excessive heat upon the nerve centers which have charge of the poison-destroying and poison-eliminating processes of the body.

It thus appears as before stated, that the disorders which especially prevail during hot weather and which are attributed to heat, are not directly due to heat, but to poisons produced in the body, either within the alimentary canal from parasitic germs, or in the tissues by the natural life processes being left to accumulate through failure of the eliminative functions.

It is thus evident that in the arrangement of a special dietary for hot weather, special thought must be given to the selection of such articles of food as will discourage the productions of poisons in the alimentary canal and maintain the highest degree of purity of the blood and tissues. Keeping this principle in mind, it is very easy to eliminate at once a number of the common articles of diet. For example, cheese must be discarded at once. Several specimens of cheese recently examined in the laboratory of hygiene of the Battle Creek Sanitarium showed from 1,000,000,000 to 6,000,000,000 germs per pound.

The writer is convinced that the large use of cheese during the summer months is one of the leading causes of the excessive frequency of germ diseases of the bowels during this season of the year. An eminent English authority, Professor Williams, a number of years ago called attention to the infectious character of cheese, and recommended that it should never be eaten without being cooked, so that the worst germs at least might be killed.

Bacteriologists have shown us that cheese may contain germs of tuberculosis and other diseases even when several weeks or months old; and it is well enough known that cheese always contains germs capable of producing most distressing and even fatal symptoms, if a favorable opportunity is afforded them for growth in the alimentary canal. Fortunately, the gastric juice secreted by a healthy stomach is capable of destroying these germs. It is this fact which renders it possible for healthy people to eat such substances as cheese with apparent impunity, although it should be remembered that the apparent innocuousness of such harmful substances is only apparent, since the reckoning day is sure to come sometime.

Great heat depresses the digestive functions, lessening the secretion of gastric juice, just as it produces weakness and depression of all the vital functions. This allows these poison-producing germs a favorable opportunity for growth and development. This explains the fact that many persons who can eat cheese and equally unwholesome things during the cold months, at other times find the same articles intolerable when eaten during the hot months.

The free use of meats must likewise be condemned as objectionable during hot weather. Numerous reasons might be assigned for this, one or two of the most important of which we will now consider.

In the first place, meat is, like cheese, likely to be swarming with germs during the hot months. Decomposition of an animal begins within twenty-four hours after its death, even if the carcass is kept in an icebox. Flesh that is tender, that has a high flavor, is always well started on the road to decay; indeed decomposition has advanced far enough to begin the process of softening which finally results in complete solution and disintegration of the animal. Such meat, examined bacteriologically, is found to be swarming with bacteria. Attention was called to this fact by an eminent European bacteriologist some years ago.

Another reason which may be assigned for the restricted use of flesh foods during the hot season of the year is the fact that meats, of all classes of foods, are the most exciting to the heat producing functions of the body—in other words, the special substances contained in meat serve the purpose of a bellows to blow the vital fires. However useful such a function is in cold weather, it is certainly a most undesirable one in hot weather. But the problem to be solved is not how to keep warm, but how to keep cool.

Still another and perhaps the most important reason of all for the restriction of flesh foods during the summer season is the fact that the flesh of dead animals always contains a considerable quantity of poisonous substances. These poisons are the result of the natural processes of tissue disintegration, or wearing out, which is continually taking place within the body of a living animal. After the death of an animal these processes continue for some little time after the animal's heart ceases to beat, so that the whole tissue becomes saturated with these poisonous substances. When meat is freely used the body becomes charged with these poisons, which are added to those naturally produced in the system, so that the resistance of the body is greatly diminished. This accounts for the well-known fact that flesh-eating animals are far less able to endure heat than the herbivorous and frugivorous animals. It is perhaps for this reason that in tropical countries the lion pursues his prey at night.

A man whose blood is saturated with the tissue poisons derived from beefsteak, mutton, and other forms of flesh food must certainly be more liable to an attack of sunstroke than one whose blood and tissues are pure.

Mustard, pepper, peppersauce, ginger, chowchow, chilis, capsicum, catsup, and all sorts of spices and condiments and similar foods are most inappropriate for hot weather, on account of their exciting and irritating nature. The fact that these substances are much used in tropical climates is not an argument in their favor, for the reason that most conspicuous examples of injury resulting from these substances are to be found in these very countries, where chronic gastric catarrh and disorders of the stomach and liver are found among adults. The use of these irritating substances gives rise to irritation and congestion of the stomach and intestines, which lessen the resistance of these organs and thus invite disease.

Doubtless many who read this paragraph will be surprised at the assertion that fruit is a hot-weather diet par excellence. The fact that the orang-outang, chimpanzee, and gorilla, tropical animals, and the members of the animal kingdom which approach most nearly to man in both structure and function live exclusively upon nuts, fruits, and similar foods should be sufficient evidence to us of the naturalness of fruit as a diet for human beings even in hot weather. But, unfortunately, we usually look to custom rather than to nature for instruction in relation to diet as well as matters of even greater vital importance.

A moment's consideration will show the special adaptability of fruit to a hot-weather dietary. One of the greatest needs of the system in hot weather, when the skin is pouring out a constant stream of fluid, is for a supply of water to make good the loss. Fresh fruit contains from ninety to ninety-five per cent. of water, according to the variety, and water of the purest sort,—water which has been first purified in nature's great distillery by evaporation and condensation as rain, and a second time purified by filtration through the roots and tissues of growing plants or trees.

In addition to water, fruits contain a considerable amount of saccharine matter, which very closely resembles the sugar produced in the body by the processes of digestion,—fruit sugar, or levulose, being practically identical with the sugar produced in the intestines by the digestion of starch and cane sugar.

The small amount of proteids contained in fruits insures against excessive clogging of the system with a superabundance of proteid matters, which are converted into poisonous substances closely resembling those naturally produced in the tissues.

The various delicious acids furnished by fruits are also useful, both as aids to digestion and in creating an appetite for food. A diet of fruits, supplemented by a suitable proportion of nuts and grains, provides the very choicest elements of nutrition which can possibly be obtained and in the purest possible form—a dietary which is sufficient for any season of the year, and from a physiological standpoint must be considered the very best, and one which is specially adapted to the summer season, when absolute purity of blood and tissues is especially desirable.

The popular prejudice against fruit is due to the fact that stale and unripe fruit are highly disturbing to the digestive organs: stale fruit because of the great number of germs which abound upon the skins of such fruit, and unripe fruit because of the inability of the stomach to dissolve or digest it. The substances found in immature fruit must first undergo a chemical and vital change before they can be acted upon by the digestive fluids of the body.

It must be added also that fruit does not agree with all other articles of food. The combination of fruit with vegetables, for example, while well tolerated by a strong, healthy stomach, is almost certain to result in mischief in a dilated or prolapsed stomach, or the stomach of a sedentary or exhausted person. Such combination as fruit with cheese, ice cream, fried meats, and pastry is very likely to result in a sour stomach or some other form of indigestion, especially during the hot months. Many persons who can take any sort of fruit by itself alone cannot take it in such combinations as have been mentioned.

It is more than probable that the facts just mentioned account for the generally prevalent but highly erroneous idea that fruit is to be avoided during the heated term as likely to produce indigestion, bowel disturbances, etc. In fact, fruit may be taken by almost anybody at almost any time, provided it is in combination of suitable kind. It would be very difficult to arrange a more digestible or nutritious meal than one consisting of dry bread with a handful of blanched and roasted almonds and an abundant supply of ripe peaches, grapes, or strawberries. Granose, zwieback, graham crackers, unfermented bread, and toasted water-biscuit are especially to be recommended for use with fruit in hot weather.

We must also remark that tea, coffee, and iced drinks of all kinds must be scrupulously avoided in hot weather, even if indulged in moderate quantity. The same is true of wines and liquors of all sorts. These are bad enough at any time, but are especially injurious during the reign of the dog-star, because of their depressing effects and

CHRIST THE SAVIOR OF ALL.

ONE of the features of the late reunion was the strong effort made by the elders who occupied the stand to convince the hearers that Jesus, the Christ, was the Savior of all men; each man, or class of men in the order to which each should be entitled by virtue of deeds of obedience, through the clemency of God manifest through the Son.

Arguing from the basis that "life and immortality" were "brought to light through the gospel," it appears that immortality should be within the reach of all who might deem it of sufficient worth to seek after it. Nor does it seem to be consistent to suppose that either life or immortality should be forced upon anyone where there was neither will to prize it nor disposition to be worthy of it. Hence the provision, "especially them that believe."

Man values life, the life of the flesh, and clings tenaciously to it under conditions that admit of little hope for amelioration by any change; and many will quite readily relinquish what they may hold of worldly advantage for the merest chance to change their condition in the often fond idea that mere change will greatly benefit them. Men will often do this in spite of the fact that all around them men just as able and as well equipped as themselves are failing in the same enterprises which themselves have undertaken. Failure of others teaches them no lesson; they see only the successes, and by them their vision is obscured to the risks they run.

The message of life which the Savior Christ came to present offers equal success to all. The qualifications necessary to a candidacy for the best of prizes, eternal life, are so easily acquired that none need fail to become possessed of them. The chief of them is fidelity to one's better self and an honest disposition to do the will of God. To such the way is ever open. They may enter, run the race, and receive the prize.

It was contended that the race to be run had been quite clearly marked out; and that, as the Apostle Paul has so ably written, all run, but none obtains, only he who runs lawfully.

That the Lord has mercifully pointed out the "way of life," in the briefest of sentences may easily be seen; "I am the way." If any man comes to God by Jesus Christ he is in a savable condition. The effort then was to point men to the "Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." The sin of the world is disobedience. Jesus, in his way, and in behalf of his fleshly body, took away this sin by obedience to the command of the Father, his Father, whose will he came to do. He, also by divine clemency, and by spiritual supervision, instruction, direction, and command showed how this sin of disobedience might be overcome and annulled to every man, through belief and obedience on the part of every one who proposed seeking for salvation.

The further contention was that if no way had been specifically given, then none had been provided, and man was and is without hope in this world. And if a way had been provided it was only to be found in the gospel, the very means by which life and immortality had been brought to light.

Obedience to the word of God, was and is the grand essential to receiving eternal life.

NOT A PINK TEA PREACHER.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Sept. 20. — The announcement of the Rev. J. E. Pounds' resignation from the pulpit of the wealthy Central Christian Church yesterday was a great surprise to all except intimate friends at the time, and a greater surprise to-day when it was learned that the well-known minister was forced to resign by the aristocratic faction in the church.

The Rev. Mr. Pounds was brought here from Cleveland two years ago to succeed the Rev. Dr. D. R. Lucas. The church building is the finest of nineteen owned by that denomination in the city and suburbs, and in the last few years the aristocratic faction has grown rapidly. Dr. Pounds has been popular with the poorer element of his large congregation, but he has never cut any great figure at pink teas and polite functions, being considered entirely out of place in the parlors of some of his flock. A member is quoted as saying to-day:—

"One woman said to me recently she wished we had a preacher she would not be ashamed to introduce at her social functions."

It was also charged against Mr. Pounds that he had no distinguished appearance, no society ways, and that his pastoral work was mostly confined to the poor, assisting in homes where there were sick and afflicted people.

The above press dispatch is from a late issue of the Chicago Tribune, and is republished as an item of passing news. From all over the land there comes the complaint that the popular churches are not attended by the masses of the people, but that the few, and those mostly from the so-called upper classes, are the pew holders in modern temples of worship; that the old-time religious spirit is supplanted by a cold formalism that has no influence upon, no power to attract and move the great busy masses of mankind.

We cannot vouch for the correctness of the general statements made in the item given above, but have no reason to dispute them. They are, probably, correct on the whole, for no correction has yet appeared in the paper in which they were published, a leading daily and one which the congregation of Mr. Pounds would no doubt ask correction from were the statements untrue.

It has been said that if the Master would come again in the humble guise in which formerly he went about doing good and among the common people, he would again be despised and rejected, and by modern Christendom. If Rev. Pounds has been objected to because of devotion to the poor and needy, the objection substantiates the statement, so far as the action of his congregation is concerned. We have already had some experience concerning the attitude of modern churchianity toward the doctrine of Christ,—those phases of it that he taught in connection with the principles of charity and benevolent ministrations, and of which it forms a part,—and from that experience have not been able to credit the present popular religious societies with a desire for the teachings of Christ, pure and simple and free from prevailing adulterations. We can therefore the more readily believe that in fashionable congregations, whose pulpits are filled by men trained to please their hearers by rhetorical flourishes and mere ethical homilies, and that do not greatly disturb habits and modes of life in vogue among fashionable churchgoers and pleasure seekers, a man devoted to pastoral work among the poor, assisting in homes where there were sick and needy people, would not find genuine sympathy and coöperation.

The case of Rev. Pounds is another illustration of the truth that one cannot serve God and mammon. Mr. Pounds evidently is not a "pink-tea preacher." He could not consent to make a spectacle of his profession by following the prescribed lines of social and church fads, common to many modern church people, and so preferred to remain true to his convictions of duty. He seems not to have cultivated "a distinguished appearance" that partakes of man-worship and honor of the creature more than the Creator, but to have relied upon the cultivation of true manly merit in Christlike character and deed. It would be well if there were more like him in the modern pulpit and pastorate. Such men encourage the hopes of those who labor to establish the true spirit of Christianity in the world, in precept and in fact.

Every manifestation of the Christlike character will be welcomed by the true and honest in heart, and should be encouraged by those who believe that the servant of Christ should be "as his Master." As a people we cannot too strongly encourage the cultivation of the graces of humility, of meekness, of interest in the common people—the poor. The spirit of the modern world is the spirit of haughtiness, of pride, of vanity, of display, and of social caste. These things have been and are yet the enemies of society, both in church and in state, from the beginning, and we cannot too carefully guard against them. Men and women must learn that their safety lies in humility, in devotion to those principles seen and brought out in the character of our Lord, who kept himself in close touch and in actual sympathy with the masses of the people, and among whom he sent his ministry to imitate his example, that all might like him, learn to be "meek and lowly in heart." Men and women inherit and by life in it partake to a greater or lesser degree of the spirit of this world; hence will be "conformed to" the world unless the Spirit of truth reigns paramount within and among them; and it can only find a field of operation within the human heart when its suggestions and promptings are actually heeded and encouraged by strict compliance with its teachings. Be as progressive as we may and as we ought to be, there can be no compromise with the ruling social standards of this world, no more than there can be with the standards of doctrine presented in modern creeds.

It remains true to-day as when written to the saints of ancient days that "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." The Spirit is an indwelling force that actualizes itself in principle, in deed, and the man or woman who has it as he is privileged and commanded to possess it, will "overcome the world;" "for whosoever is born of God overcometh the world; and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."—1 John 5:4.

There is no room for respect of persons, for folly, for pride, for vanity, for ambition and other phases of the spirit of the world, in the gospel economy. We have no ground for confidence of personal or general success without a strict adherence to those principles that shall insure the soundness of our personal and associated characters. Let us lay our foundations deeply, and solidly, and build upon them with materials that cannot be swept away in the fall of Babylon and its vanities.

We have presented these thoughts as they have been borne in upon us in connection with the item given above. It is time that "those upon whom the ends of the world are come" learn by the things man has so repeatedly suffered in the past, and profit by them, and not repeat the follies caused by ambition, disobedience, and haughty self-confidence that have caused so many to stumble and fall, and which have brought them sore chastening and destruction. No man, no woman, no people, is safe, nor can anyone be safe, who fails to submit himself to full compliance with the demands of the discipline and proper restrictive limitations of the law of the Spirit of life. We honor God when we honor the spirit and the letter of his law, by yielding to its requirements. It is the test of trueness, of true greatness, in every individual; and only by building upon its sure foundations can true and lasting progress be realized. Upon its observance is conditioned the promise of the indwelling Spirit of truth "whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him." It is a teacher and guide that is opposite to and cannot be combined with the spirit of the world. The latter is a force that has led and which if followed must continue to lead in an opposite direction. The Master has admonished his people that they "may not be condemned with the world." Let us heed his voice and tread the paths of substantial progress and safety, the paths he has trodden before us, and walking in which we have promise that he will abide with us. He cannot be with us if we be not with him. His paths are "straight;" his Spirit is "just and true."

THE EDITOR ABROAD.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH wrote from Toronto, Ontario, the 5th inst. of his trip abroad among the Canadian saints, as follows:—

I reached the city of Toronto on the morning of the 2d inst., and met the brethren of the London district at their conference held in St. Andrews' Hall, a large hall, centrally located, in their first business session.

Bro. R. C. Longhurst, president of the district, is a genial, whole-souled sort of man, who, though somewhat diffident of his own powers, has full confidence in the power of faith and the Spirit, and desires everybody to enjoy the good things of the king dom. The conference kindly installed Bro. R. C. Evans and the writer as associates in presiding, but the Editor left the labor to be performed by Brn. Loughurst and Evans.

The weather was just excellent, the air mild and pleasant. The representation from the branches was large, and if the district is to be judged from the representatives, the gospel-bearing messengers have been taking their pick from among the people. Both men and women were of the kind that it does a message-bearing minister good to meet. Bro. John H. Lake is not to be blamed for wanting to stay among them. It was most pleasing to meet those who attended the Kirtland conference once again, and to meet with and make the acquaintance of many whom were met for the first time. The glow of Christian friendship, fellowship, and love that shone on all faces indicated that the Spirit of the Master had been with them, and that the gospel was true and Jesus was the Christ, was the bond of unity in the faith.

The business sessions were marked by earnest and kindly desire for the advancement of the work. The preaching services were quiet and orderly, the sermons good—so far as the Editor was authorized to judge—the prayer and testimony services well attended and full of good feeling and spiritual enjoyment.

We certainly feel much impressed by our visit to Toronto. It is a beautiful city; in a chronic state of growth and development. The saints are before the people and have some influence, which will not be made less by the conference session.

A committee of the branch, under the charge of Bro. Virgin, who is president of the branch, had arranged for the care of the people attending conference, by spreading tables in one of the halls in the St. Andrews building, where the meals were served by willing hands, and eaten in praise and thanksgiving.

In company with Bro. R. C. Evans the Editor will go to St. Mary's to-day, to London to-morrow, and thence to Wallaceburg for Saturday and Sunday, where the Chatham district conference will be held.

All honor is due to the Canadian workers. They are doing a good work, and it is having its effect.

IDEAS FOR PRESBYTERIANS.

DR. GREY, Editor of the Interior, made an address yesterday before the meeting of Presbyterian ministers on "Twentieth Century Presbyterians." He said the Presbyterian Church, with all its wealth, intellect, and power, was not making the progress it should.

"It ought to sweep the coming centuries," said the doctor, "and it will if the Presbyterians put the pruning knife in play."

He suggested that the creed could be made more brief and the doctrines of Calvin softened to suit an intellectual and spiritual age. He favored broader views that would make dissension a thing of no need and reunite the divided branches of the church.

He was opposed to the sectarianizing of the Christian Endeavor societies, and thought the Presbyterian Church would not lose any of its prestige by permitting its young people to fraternize with the general Christian Endeavor Society. In conclusion, he advocated a wider field for woman in the church, and her recognition along with men.—Chicago Tribune.

The conservative elements in the Presbyterian Church seem to have indulged the hope that the active prosecution of Dr. Briggs, of the Union Theological Seminary, and others, on charges of heresy, because of opposition to the Westminster confession of faith, had put an end to the active propaganda in favor of creed revision. It seems, however, that while the late General Assembly succeeded in steering clear of snags and former dissensions, in a measure, it was not because there was a spirit of compliance with then existing conditions, but simply because the elements of division and discord were resting from open vigorous assault for a time, quietly awaiting the accumulating processes that would enable them to strike another and heavier blow.

New York, the home of one of the greatest of theological seminaries of the Presbyterian Church, and not far removed from Princeton, another seat of Calvinistic learning, has been heard from; and now comes Doctor Grey, editor of the Chicago Interior, one of the leading lights of Presbyterianism in the West, who demands that the "pruning knife" be used with vigorous execution that the rigid doctrines of John Calvin be "softened to suit an intellectual and spiritual age," etc., etc.

The foregoing item conveys but a faint idea of the strength of the plea that has been made by Doctor Grey. He occupies a position of influence and power in the circles of his denomination; as editor of the Interior he can do much to mold general opinion among his denominational readers.

The leaven is at work, and will not cease its workings until little if anything of the former standards of modern systems of faith is left. It seems that with the decline and fall of Gentile times and rule that the fullness of their creeds has also come in; for in nothing has the spirit of the age manifested itself more strongly than in the changes wrought in popular creedism. It seems destined to go with the moving of all things that can be shaken. A pestiferous little microbe is everywhere at work boring his way into the very center of every substance, if he is not already located there, trying to find an unhealthy condition in which he may thrive and propagate to the consumption and decay of tissues in which he has found lodgment.

The microbe has his place, and a very necessary one in the "human" economy. In the exercise of his legitimate functions his performances are all conducive to wholesome growth and general well-being. However, let the body become devitalized, its forces vitiated and impaired by the introduction of improper and unwholesome matter; let it become run down and weakened by an impoverishing diet that fails to supply nourishing elements for assimilation and rebuilding of its forces,—let such a condition ensue, and the microbe thrives and feeds upon the remaining tissues, until death and dissolution ensue.

Modern church bodies have been fed upon a false and artificial diet—"the precepts of men." Gentile theology has been substituted for the salvation which is "of the Jews"—the faith of Abraham, the friend of God, the father of the faithful, and in which faith Christ the Messiah is revealed. It is not strange that creedism is passing away with other things based upon principles of purely human origin. Its microbe is at work in the field of research and criticism, and the end is not far to see. As a theological system it is destined to perish with other inventions of Babylon the great which shall fall. It is a day of testing, of measuring, and of sifting; and every spiritual and temporal plant which the heavenly Father hath not planted is to be "rooted up." The signs in modern churchism are also signs of the near approaching end of the age.

The gospel of Jesus Christ who is "the light and the life of men" stands unmoved amid the war of elements spiritual and temporal, as an ensign to the people. It is "the truth," hence is guaranteed to furnish correct, substantial, immovable "ideas for Presbyterians," and for all others who will manifest that they love the truth out of a pure heart. "He that doeth truth cometh to the light," is as true to-day as when uttered by the great Leader and Teacher, who declared and who demonstrated himself to be, the Way, the Truth, and the Life; and "in whom are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." However, the same word which intimates that the modern world would be taken "unawares" as in the days of Noah, is verified by the repeated developments which show that men prefer to formulate systems of their own devisings rather than heed the counsel of God.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. JOHN H. LAKE, of the Twelve, wrote from East Delavan, Wisconsin, of progress and general conditions in his field:—

After leaving the reunion at Bluff Park, I went to Joy, Mercer County, Illinois, and preached for a few nights in the tent. I then attended conference of the Kewanee district at Buffalo Prairie; had a pleasant time. From there went to Mission, Illinois, to a two days' meeting; an enjoyable time. Thence to Plano, where we had some meetings in the old stone church. Felt well in presenting the word. I then left, on the 25th, to attend conference of the Southeastern district of Wisconsin. We met on that date in the tent, eight miles from Evanville. It was my first visit to Wisconsin. We had as good a conference as I have enjoyed for years. The Spirit of the Lord was manifest and was felt and enjoyed in all the sessions. Light and inspiration was realized in the preaching, social, and business sessions. Words of solace and cheer were given to the saints. Three young men were called to the ministry, two to the office of elder, one as a priest. Two were baptized, a number of sick received comfort. Reports of the elders were good; prejudice is giving way and new openings being made; many are inquiring for the old paths. I am well pleased with the officials and saints of Wisconsin.

Bro. F. C. Smith, Locust Point, Ohio, the 4th inst.:—

Am having very large crowds and great interest here; people come for miles to hear the gospel, and I am having good crowds at Catawba Island also. They put a notice of our work in the paper, and people seem to be more friendly toward us now.

Bro. J. S. Strain, Council Bluffs, Iowa, the 2d inst.:—

Now that the annual camp meetings are over and we look over the ground, we find much for which to rejoice and thank God. In my opinion we may expect that much more will be realized than has yet appeared as the fruit of the work done at these meetings. The people are beginning to realize that as a church we are fast becoming a power in the land. Since the reunion there seems to be a desire on the part of the local workers to get out and do some work for the Master, and they should be encouraged by all means by the various branches, for there are more calls than can be filled by the mission force. Thank God for the bright outlook at this time, and may his Spirit guide in the work, is the prayer of all who love Zion. The writer preached at Crescent on Sunday morning; Bro. Derry preached at night.

Bro. Joseph Squire, Brooklyn, New York, October 4:—

Our district conference has just closed, and a very pleasant time was had. Brn. W. H. Kelley and A. M. Baker were with us and rendered very good service, both in counsel and in preaching the word. The saints here were especially pleased to have Bro. W. H. with them. We go this afternoon to baptize one in the waters of the bay, a daughter of Bro. and Sr. A. E. Stone, of New Canaan, Connecticut. Thus one more is brought into the fold of Christ.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE Toronto Globe, a leading Canadian journal, published on the 4th inst. a full column account of the late conference of the London, Ontario, district, at which President Joseph Smith, Bro. R. C. Evans, R. C. Longhurst, and others of the ministry were present. After giving quite a full statement of conference proceedings, including statistics of membership, etc., the article adds a terse history of the church, including the apostasy; also a brief history of the Reorganized Church. It noted the preaching of President Smith on "the unchangeability of the doctrine of Christ," and on the "marriage question," and gave leading features of his work in connection with the Reorganization. The Globe has placed the saints and the work in excellent light before the people of the Dominion. They have evidently done well for the work, leaving a general impression for good.

The Saints' Home.—Work is being pushed rapidly on this with expectation of having it ready for occupancy before winter sets in. Sister Alice P. Dancer has accepted the position of matron, and her business experience in successfully conducting her own business interests has been such as to insure success in the management of the Home.

We thank the brethren for marked papers sent us, items from which we can sometimes use, at other times being obliged to omit them. Matters of interest to the HERALD readers and in line with the work are always acceptable.

Bro. Foss was at Akron, Ohio, on the 27th ult., whence he writes of his labors in the Pittsburg and Kirtland districts. Brn. Griffiths, Shinn, Smith, and others were pushing the preaching of the word.

Bro. J. F. Mintun has a two column statement of the faith and history of the church in the Norfolk, Nebraska, News of September 29. It is written in a spirit of candor, is free from pugnacious utterances, and asks of the people their consideration and action on the merits of the facts presented.

The brethren at Beardstown, Illinois, few in number and remote from branch association, meet together each week for mutual encouragement and instruction. They expect Bro. I. N. White to visit them and preach the word to the people, among whom they have sought to sow the good seed by tract distribution and in conversation. So writes Bro. Edward Reynolds, late date.

Bro. J. A. Tanner sends us a lengthy statement of his late discussion with Elder Loynd, of the Utah Church. Bro. Tanner advocated the positions assumed by the Reorganized Church, on succession, and had no difficulty in maintaining his points. He thinks the Utah elders have taken their positions from B. H. Roberts' work on succession; that they have little or nothing to present in addition thereto.

Bro. J. C. Clapp has volumes 1, 6, 7, 9-18 of the Millennial Star that he will sell at the following rates: Volumes below 14 at one dollar each; volumes 14 to 18, containing the History of Joseph Smith to 1842 or '43, at two dollars each. Also volumes 1, 2, and 3 of the HERALD, bound in one, at five dollars. Address Bro. Clapp at Lamoni.

Brighamite elders have been preaching on the public streets at Fort Worth, Texas, and declaring polygamy a thing of the past; but, as usual, when pressed to answer confessed to belief in it as a principle; this Bro. J. E. Nicoll writes us. He ordered, through them, a copy of "Orson Pratt's Works," the original of which contains report of John Taylor's discussion in France, in which he denied the existence of polygamy, though then guilty of the practice. The Deseret News Publishing Company wrote that they still published it and identically as first issued. However, when presented the book omitted Taylor's debate and other matter. Bro. Nicoll therefore refused the book. He would like some of the ministry to visit Fort Worth.

Sr. Mary A. White writes of the work in Wisconsin. The preaching of the elders, meetings of saints, and sessions of Sunday schools are blessed of the Lord. Marked cases of healings have occurred and all the faithful rejoice in the good cause. Her letter is omitted with others crowded out because of increased demands upon our space.

An unsigned letter from Maysville, Arkansas, the 4th inst., commends the labors of Bro. F. C. Keck in that region. He had baptized two.

Bro. P. C. Fisher, of East Aurora, New York, writes that Bro. I. M. Smith was doing effective preaching in Erie County, that State. The people like him and his congregations are large and orderly. He hopes to see a branch organized as a result.

The Salvation Army has negotiated a loan of five millions of dollars with which it proposes to establish extensive farm colonies throughout the country on the cooperative plan. One colony is to be planted at Woodville, near Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; but larger ones will be planted in the West, in California, Arizona, and elsewhere. "By a well-planned cooperative system the leaders of the movement expect to build up prosperous communities that will in a short time overcome the debt." New York capitalists and others are said to be backing Commander Booth-Tucker in the undertaking. A syndicate of wealthy men is said to be raising the necessary funds. Farming and industrial work will be taken up on a large scale. Workshops will be built and lines of trade introduced for the employment of idle men. Criminal classes are also to be taken in, treated kindly, and employed at the eastern colony until they prove themselves capable and worthy, when they will be sent west and be given an opportunity to obtain homes of their own, on the payment of installments. This we learn from the Pittsburg Commercial Gazette of October 2, sent us by Bro. C. E. Miller, of Pittsburg.

We may publish the article entire, to stimulate thought on the subjects of cooperation and other features recognized as essential to a better order of things; to be realized, we trust, when the command comes that God's people "be established" according to the order revealed in his word.

Floods in China in July and August have destroyed sixty villages about North Tungchou, containing over 80,000 inhabitants. The number of people drowned is estimated at from 15,000 to 20,000. The survivors from villages near Pekin have been allowed use of the city walls, but without protection from the incessant rains. Distress of the people is pitiable. Crops in the flooded district are destroyed. The Emperor has ordered all possible relief measures.

Kaiser Wilhelm and his cabinet want 410,000,000 marks for the construction of war vessels during the next seven years. If the Reichstag refuses the grant, it will be sent home by the government and new elections be ordered. Against this movement a large number of factions is arrayed, including "Radicals," "Ultra-Liberals," "Socialists," the "Center party," and others, who denounce it in the newspapers as abridging the "constitutional rights" of the legislature.

"In Bavaria the peasant democratic federation is rapidly gaining strength. During the last week two hitherto hostile branches of the federation have united and adopted a joint platform of the most radical nature. It demands liberty of association, meeting of the press, reform of the judiciary system, a complete division of church and state, a diminution of the military burdens, and the assumption by the state of all rural mortgages. The leaders of this newly formed party expect to sweep Bavaria at the next elections."

The new Spanish cabinet has decided to give both Cuba and Puerto Rico a home government under the suzerainty of the Spanish crown.

Many prominent women of the Methodist Church in Nebraska are said to be boycotting the church to secure equal rights with men in the matter of church representation.

Universalists in State convention at Lansing, Michigan, are quarreling over their creed. The convention declared against making any precise form of words a test of fellowship, provided the principles of the Fatherhood of God, the spiritual leadership of Jesus Christ, and the final harmony of all souls with God, were professed.

Great Britain has formally refused to take part in the proposed sealing conference if Russia and Japan are represented.

Elections for members of the Norway Storting have resulted in great gains for the Liberals, assuring their control of the government.

The prevailing drought has been followed by disastrous fires on the prairies and in the forests of Indiana, Michigan, North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Canada, Ohio, Wisconsin, and in other States. In some cases entire towns have been swept away and human life and live stock been destroyed. Much farm property has also been burned.

Yellow fever continued to increase in the South until the 7th, since which time a decrease in the number of cases is reported, caused by cooler weather.

The Spanish cabinet has recalled General Weyler from Cuba and appointed Marshal Blanco in his stead. The latter is said to be inclined to conciliation. Twenty thousand troops will be sent from Spain.

The United States Navy department is organizing the merchant marine of the country as an auxiliary naval force. The plan is to prepare armaments that would place vessels in commission and ready for service three weeks after a declaration of hostilities.

The British government war office is elaborating a plan by which volunteer forces will also be liable for service abroad in case of war.

News of the 8th reports great increase of yellow fever at Mobile and New Orleans.

The late drought was broken by rains in the States of Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas, Illinois, and Iowa on the 10th inst. The rain, though late, is expected to help the wheat and fodder crops in the Mississippi Valley.

Yellow fever had increased at New Orleans on the 10th. Galveston, Texas, had also become infected.

OCCUPATIONS—CONTINUED.

TRAIN your children in such ways of working as will develop judgment and cultivate self-reliance and common sense. Throw them on their own responsibility as early and as much as possible. Trust to their judgment and show them that you do. Of course you keep a kindly eye upon them and sometimes interpose, like a beneficent Providence, to save them from the result of their blunders; but give as little prominence as possible to this oversight, and sometimes allow them to learn wisdom by the things they suffer from their own mistakes.

Just here is a point regarding children's work too often neglected. In arranging their work we should guard against mistakes and failures, than which nothing is more discouraging. Make success possible in everything you give a child to do, then see that he achieves it. . . .

Children should be supplied with good tools and taught to keep them in order. Children's work should cultivate patience and continuance in well-doing. While it is not well to confine them too long to one task, do not allow them to throw it up whenever their whims prompt them to do so. Have them finish what they commence. Do not allow them to form the habit of commencing half a dozen things and not finishing any of them. . . .

The children's work should train to thoughtfulness and helpfulness, thus tending to eradicate selfishness. Train the child always to have Papa's slippers ready for him by the fire; to find Grandpa's spectacles, or thread Grandma's needle, unasked; to keep the woodbox always full, to bring water for Mamma; in short, to be always on the lookout for ways of helping, and you will do much toward breaking up the tendency to always think of self first. Children allowed to grow up without learning by experience the blessedness of helpfulness are deprived of one of the truest sources of happiness.

The care of living things, plants and animals, develops faithfulness, patience, and a sense of responsibility. Kindergartners acknowledge this principle by giving prominence to plant culture. Each child has his bit of garden or his pot of growing plants which it is his to tend and to enjoy. He learns thereby patience, for he cannot hasten the germination of the seed or the opening of the bud, they must await God's time: personal responsibility, for if he does not water them and give them sunshine they die; and His care for them begets loving interest. If the thing cared for possess animal life, the lesson is even more impressive. So give the children their patches of garden to tend, their birds, chickens, lambs, dogs, horses—pets of every kind; make them responsible for feeding and caring for them. You thus develop a sense of personal responsibility, systematic thoughtfulness, continuous well-doing, for if their pets are forgotten a single day they suffer, perhaps die. You also teach love for animals, and kindness growing out of that love. Do not spoil this lesson by letting the children feel that their deficiencies will be supplied by yourself or a servant, that if they neglect to weed their gardens or water their plants, you will do it. Better let the weeds take the garden and the beautiful fuchsia die of thirst. With animal pets you cannot do this, but you can take them away when they are not properly cared for, and thus teach that ownership brings with it obligations not to be ignored.

Children should be trained in such ways of working as will make them prompt, efficient men and women. Never allow them two hours for doing what ought to be done in one, or to put off till afternoon what ought to be done before breakfast. See that they do their work at the right time and in its right time. They will thus be able, when grown, to keep ahead of their work, and drive it, because they never allow it to drive them. We like that old-fashioned expression—"forehanded," meaning beforehand with one's needs, hence in easy circumstances. It results from being beforehand with work, and whether you are so or not depends in large measure upon the way you were trained to work in childhood. Do not allow your children to grow into Saturday afternoon folks, when you might train them to be Monday morning people; these are they that are forehanded in a double sense—their two hands will accomplish as much as four hands will if they belong to the Saturday afternoon order. "Always be an hour in advance of your work" is a good motto for man and child. . . .

Who will teach your child if not yourself, and when is she to learn if not before she has been trained to dislike work? for children are frequently so trained. This training comes through just such refusals of parents to allow them to work and teach them to do it well when they are little; by lack of patience and system in those who teach them; by being expected to know everything at once and being blamed because they do not; by being required to work amid unpleasant surroundings, uncongenial associates, or with poor tools; or by being taxed beyond their strength; by lack of appreciation of their honest endeavors; by having work made too easy for them, so that they are deprived of the pleasure of conquering difficulties; by being kept at patchy work, doing a little of this and a little of that to help others, but never allowed to do anything wholly, thus experiencing the joy of completion; and by not being trained to do things thoroughly, since there is no real pleasure in doing slipshod work. . . .

Parents often complain that their children have no time to learn to work when attending school. Having time is largely a question of method and system. If they are allowed to dawdle over either their work or their studies, or if you expect them to become versed in all the wisdom of Solomon, with music lessons, china painting, and Kensington added, by the time they are sixteen, they will not have time for work. But if you require of them no more study than is healthful for body and mind, and train them in right methods of work and of study, there is plenty of time for both. I know whereof I affirm, speaking from personal experience, having had during my college course, and during many years of teaching, an unusual amount of home duties which did not interfere either with my efficiency in school or my health.

Many wise parents take their children out of school a year on purpose to have them learn to work. We have known this followed by the happiest results, and the gain was not all in learning to work. It afforded the body a needed rest from study, giving it a chance to catch up with the mind in development, and the mind opportunity to mature. The brain was strengthened in texture, as we saw in chapter second it is, by exercising the muscles aright. Then the young mind has time to assimilate what it has learned, to transmute its knowledge into practical wisdom. A year's change from study to work, especially if it be when great physical changes are going on, often results in increased strength of body and mind.—Childhood: Its Care and Culture.

NEWCASTLE, N. S. W., Aug. 16.

Editors Herald:—Yesterday my heart was filled with gratitude to my heavenly Father, as quite a number of members of the church assembled by the water side to witness the baptism of thirteen precious souls who have decided to obey and show that they are not ashamed of the cross of the Master.

When looking back twenty-two years ago when those good men, C. W. Wandell and Glaud Rodger, first came and raised the standard of the Reorganized Church, following after them saints of like stamp, T. W. Smith, J. F. Burton, J. W. Wight, and their saintly companions and the reapers who are now gathering in the sheaves—Brn. Butterworth, Kaler, and Wells, workmen of the Lord's own choosing (by their fruits they shall be known), in fact if it had needed a miracle to confirm me in the faith, to hear Bro. C. A. Butterworth would have been enough; and the president of the Hamilton branch, Bro. Henry Broadway, who is a saint full of zeal for the cause of the Master. He has given the church a piece of ground and building for a church, which will hold about one hundred and fifty people. And at the confirmation yesterday the Lord manifested his power and we were made to rejoice in the gifts of the gospel. Where is there room to doubt?

It is now more than twenty years since I obeyed this gospel and to-day I am more confirmed than ever in the faith. My wife was baptized a month after myself. We have four children in the church and two yet to come, which I hope to see before I shall be called to go from this stage of action.

The Lord is indeed favoring Zion in this part of the world, so much so that the Brighamite elders here are trying to sail under the colors of the Reorganized Church in Sydney. Bro. Wells will baptize some on the 18th and then he is deputed to go to Sydney and watch these deceivers and expose their doings, which he is well able to do; for he has the will, and ability, and zeal for the Lord's work.

When looking back to the commencement of this work and comparing it with the present, some of the old members have been called to receive their reward, some are waiting to receive the call, and some we see that used to stand with us have wandered from the path and are now groping in darkness, we feel to ask ourselves, Shall we stand to receive our inheritance? By the Lord's help we shall, and I pray that those who have wandered may return before too late.

Yours in the one faith,

C. A. DAVIS,

LAMONI, Iowa, Sept. 30.

Editors Herald:—Although a long silence upon my part, it has not been occasioned by idleness I can assure you. Began this conference year by preaching four sermons in one day, and have not allowed an opportunity to go by unoccupied. Will not burden your pages by particularizing the effort at the numerous places labor was done. While at Lucas the latter part of April attending a session of the Bishop's court, and preaching of evenings, went to the Lipe schoolhouse, and in company with Brn. G. H. Hillard and J. S. Snively, held meetings and baptized four. Held meetings at Lucas and Hiteman. Was called to preach a funeral at Liberty Center; we had the use of the M. E. church, their choir doing the singing; I was greatly blessed as I spoke the word of the Lord to a crowded house. It being Saturday, and I was without an appointment for the Sabbath, I yielded to the urgent request of the people and spoke three times in the West Liberty schoolhouse; the house would not hold the crowds that came out. I ask pardon of Bro. Columbus Scott for breaking the bread of life in his pasture. Accepted the kind invitation of the Pleasanton committee to deliver the address on Decoration Day. The gathering was in their beautiful little park, the day was delightful and balmy, good order prevailed, and close attention granted to the speaker. Many of the crowd went to two cemeteries, and with bowed heads and cheerful hands scattered flowers on the last resting places of the comrades who answered their country's call in the hour of need. I received kind and substantial attention from Dr. Macy, Mr. Frank Walker, and the committee. Hied me away to Ellston, where Bro. T. J. Bell, under the blessing of God, had awakened quite an interest, helped him in tent work for ten days and felt the assurance of the Holy Spirit that our work was accepted, and in the due time of the Lord would be productive of good unto the salvation of some.

June 11 went to Allendale, Missouri, to attend the district conference, the attendance was large, considering it is an inland town and located in the southwest corner of the district. The branch there is few and feeble, but no visitor suffered so far as I am aware. Business was put through with dispatch, preaching was good, and the prayer meetings most excellent. I continued a few days to minister the word and aid the saints as best I could, exhorting them to patience and faithfulness.

July 4, drove in the rain to the Latta schoolhouse, preached twice and baptized one, and in so doing had a dream fulfilled.

While preaching at Hiteman I received a telegram that my father was quite low at his home in Nebraska City. Hastened to his bedside, but too late to hold an intelligent conversation, as the disease that caused death had destroyed the intelligent action of the brain. He fell asleep peacefully, and he welcomed the change. Nearly a year before his death I sought an opportunity to visit him, the privilege was denied me. Soon after in dream I learned that I should neither receive his dying blessing nor see him depart life. Although with him nearly a week, I was not present at the time of his demise. Having given my promise to the President of the church to fill an appointment in the north part of Lucas County, Iowa, and while on my way to fulfill this promise, the spirit of my father returned to the God who gave it. He was not faultless, but I believe was faithful to the gospel covenant made fifty-six years ago. While at Nebraska City, the larger part of my life was reviewed by the objects seen and the people with whom I conversed. I spoke seven times, although the evenings were excessively hot, the attendance was fair. The satisfaction to me cannot be expressed in words for the warm greetings of those dear saints and friends where I began my gospel work in childhood.

August 6, in compliance with invitation of the committee, I went to Thurman reunion. Earnest work was done, and some noble souls entered the fold. My opinion is that the committee struck the keynote on economy and the best method of getting a connected statement of the gospel before the people. The kindness of those dear saints will not soon be forgotten.

My latest efforts were in a tent north of Lucas; the people gave us an attentive hearing, and many thoughtful people are considering our presentation of the restored gospel. Without doubt the chief work of the church is the preaching of the gospel in new fields, and to those who have never had the privilege of hearing the Angel's message explained by our ministers; but years of experience and close observation teach me that the time is near, if not already upon us, that those of missionary force must push out and fill their particular work, and that the standing ministers become active in their calling, otherwise the work must suffer. It is as important to save that which we gain, as that the whole revenue of the church be expended in gathering the sheep of the fold and then to leave them without shelter or food.

The late statement in the Herald of thirty-two baptized some time ago, and only two now remain in the faith, should be an eye-opener to the necessity of pastoral work. "Feed my sheep" and "feed my lambs" has, to me, a very significant meaning, and I opine that it is quite important that the church exercise as much care in selecting and appointing the standing ministers as the missionary force, and have as much anxiety in sustaining with the tithes and offerings each in his place and appointment. Those who love God and keep his law having the best understanding of the same, are usually the most liberal with their means in sustaining the work. God has provided for the standing ministers that they should be watchmen to the flock, and give the needed education that the saints may finally come to "perfection." There is a parallel to this saving of the church membership in the oft expressed thought: It is not what one earns, but what he saves that does him good; or, not what we eat, but what we digest that does us good. Even so; not the number of baptisms that will make us a strong church for good in the earth, but the developing in our membership a good understanding and a faithful compliance with all the commandments of God; so that all the household of faith shall be prepared to give "a reason of the hope" that they profess, that it may be fulfilled as foretold: "saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them." The manifestations of the Holy Spirit should be to the confirming of the Word, and instructing us in the truth and the interest of the same.

In bonds,

ROBERT M. ELVIN.

ANGOLA, Ind., Sept. 27.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing I have been on the go continuously. Have so far attended all the two days' meetings held in this district this year. Bro. Briggs said he would keep me busy if I came to the Lake mission. He has kept his word. I take pleasure though in toiling and teaching, working and waiting in this great work. We are now at South Scott, the historic ground where the Disciples say Leonard Scott "tore up" their church. Very large crowds. Bro. Scott gave us an excellent sermon last evening. It was delightfully illuminating. Flint is the next point and will close the series.

J. M. BAGGERLY.

BALMAIN, N. S. W., Aug. 30.

Editors Herald:—By the time you get this it will be about twelve months since we made a move towards building a chapel to worship in; and to-day we have a nice little chapel, one that will seat about one hundred and seventy-five comfortably. It was built by the brethren giving their labor. It has been neatly painted and finished by the same means, and we have just placed in it a very nice rostrum, which was very much needed. Many thanks are due to many of the brethren and sisters for the way they worked and sacrificed to help. I mention no names, as there are so many.

We have not had any of the missionaries here for about three months; nevertheless we have been having some good times. God has been with and has blessed us. We have good meetings and a good interest has been kept up. Bro. Wells has just run down from Newcastle, where he has been laboring for the last three months, and where there has been some good work done. In fact, God has been blessing us all over the mission.

A very singular coincidence happened here on August 15 and the week following. At Newcastle, where Bro. Wells was, there were thirteen baptized in the morning of the above date, by Elder Broadway, and at the confirmation in the afternoon it was a time long to be remembered by those who were present. Through the week two more were baptized, making fifteen in all. And your correspondent is informed that at the branch at Hastings, Victoria, on the same date they had the gifts of the Spirit in prophecy and tongues; and on the same day while Bro. Ellis was preaching at Balmain, a sister, a visitor from Victoria, saw a beautiful ray of light around his head, and another sister saw a heavenly visitor from the spirit world come to strengthen us. She said he was an elderly man with long gray hair. At our Wednesday night prayer meeting we had the gift of prophecy bestowed. Two prophecies were given; one to the branch, and one to a brother. Bro. Ellis preached grandly that evening, having great liberty, preaching for one hour and ten minutes on the authority. Brn. Butterworth and Kaler have been up north, and just previous to the above date I am informed that Bro. Butterworth thought of coming to Sydney, but was shown in a dream that he was to go to a place where Bro. Kaler had preached and there he would baptize five; so he went to a place called Bullahdelah and preached on the above date, and there baptized two; and he was a little troubled about it, as he understood by the dream that he was to baptize five; so he started back, but called at another place and there he baptized five, making seven in all. And so the work is going on. It is very encouraging is it not?

Bro. Butterworth has got back to Tuncurry where Bro. Kaler is, but we are expecting them to come to Sydney shortly with their families.

Yours in the gospel,
JOSEPH SMITH.

LITTLE FALLS, Wash., Sept. 23.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing you I have visited and preached at Chehalis, this State. I found a home with a cousin of mine whom I had not seen for twelve years, while there. I preached three times there and feel that I made some friends to the work; and when I left it was with an urgent invitation to come back and do more preaching.

My next move was to take the tent and set it up at the hop yard of a Mr. Patterson, at Olequa. Just at this season nearly all the working people of these regions go to the hopfields for an outing and to earn a few dollars, so I thought I would go there also. Mr. P. has a field of about seventy acres of hops, and this brought together nearly a thousand people during the harvest. I was here from the 9th inst. to the 22d and preached, in all, sixteen sermons. I feel that it was a good move. There was another man who held meetings on the grounds on the two Sundays I was there. I sent him an invitation to come to the tent and use it and I would assist him during the morning hour, and then I would occupy and he could assist me at the evening service. He did not come, however; was afraid of the company. Undoubtedly he thinks "a good name is better to be chosen than great riches."

I parted company with Bro. Holt at Castle Rock, he going to Roslyn and I to the hopfields. We expect to meet again near Heppner sometime in the next month. The first Sunday I was at Olequa it was stated that they would pick hops in the afternoon, and so I made no announcement for services at three p. m., but told them there would be no preaching after eleven till the evening hour. However, as I was alone in the tent about three p. m., I sat down and commenced playing and singing, and before long there was a congregation of about thirty who came, some to hear preaching and some to hear the singing. Of course we tried to accommodate both classes. Among the audience was a Mr. and Mrs. Ellis, of Little Falls, who came again the second Sunday, and after the three o'clock services came to me and offered to entertain me if I would come to Little Falls and preach. The result is I am here. He not only gives me a home while here, but secured a team to move me here, and also an old store building to preach in. This I seated with the lumber I used to seat the tent with and so am quite well situated here.

I moved here yesterday and about fifty were out to hear the word at night. This is a new opening. I am hopeful of doing good here. Surely the Lord will reward those who help his work along. I am in need of tracts but funds are low and I can't buy them, but do the best I can. Next address will be Castle Rock, Washington.

Hopefully in the work,

A. M. CHASE.

SEMINOLE, Ala., Sept. 27.

Editors Herald:—I am still in Baldwin County, Alabama. The fever scourge has militated against our work somewhat, but Bro. J. Reeder and I have been traveling together for the past month or so, and we think our efforts have not been in vain. Bro. C. I. Carpenter returned to the Florida district to assist Bro. Allen in some work there before conference convenes.

Having heard a not very favorable report from the work and the saints in Baldwin County, we thought best for me to come and see, lest hurt and harm came to the work; but while there is much room for improvement, I am glad to say I found the work in much better condition than I expected. Brn. Reeder, Law, and other brethren have been holding up the truth before the people, till a number are interested, and some convinced, and five had been baptized by Bro. C. L. Lone. I was glad indeed to find these good brethren laboring so zealously for the good cause. If there is any jealousy in the hearts of these brethren, I have not seen it. Of course, since I came among them, they have been putting me in front to do most of the preaching, and Bro. Reeder says my preaching has confirmed what they have been telling the people for some time. And they are beginning to move toward the church.

I have baptized five since coming here, and seven have given their names for baptism at Beulah, in Escambia County, Florida, and Nathaniel Reeder and wife are to be baptized again, as they have not been satisfied with their baptism, for reasons best known to themselves. Bro. Nathan is a son of Bro. J. Reeder, and is a man of some note, and has a good family. Bro. Heman C. Smith will remember him and his family. These will be baptized the second Sunday in October, if no uncommon occurrence takes place.

Bro. Nathan was almost convinced by the elders of the Utah Church that they were right, so his father took me to visit him and we spent a day and night and convinced him; for I considered him and his family too good to be lost. He had called on the Utah elders to administer to him for his eyes, which had been troubling him for some eighteen months. They did so twice, but no blessing came; so he called on us, and we complied, and his eyes are healed. To God be all the praise. So it seems there will be enough baptized there at once to start a branch.

The two ladies I mentioned some time ago, who gave their names for baptism, will be baptized at conference. They did not succeed in removing Bro. Carpenter and I from Escambia County. The Lord moved upon a young man recently from the State of Ohio to speak against their petition. He was a member of the M. E. Church and told them he would not sign it, for they did not know what they were doing, and that they had better go to hear us; that if they had any members in their church that wanted to leave it and join us, to let them go, that that was their privilege. This is twice that our people in this country have been defended by men from the State of Ohio. Bro. Reeder and I preached yesterday near Braidey, which is a new opening; and I think the prospect good for a branch there in time. Bro. Reeder is seventy-two years old and is quite active; he has sixty-three grandchildren and fourteen great-grandchildren. He is as jovial a man as I ever traveled with. One M. E. congregation here says they believe the Latter Day Saints' Church is the only one that is right; but they feel a little ashamed of the way they have treated the saints; so we may have something good to report in time.

Editors Herald:—Even the islands of the sea rejoice over the revelation of last April. The news has just reached us, not in our own language, but in the Tahitian, being printed in our little paper, Orometua, edited by Bro. J. F. Burton. It is a neat little paper, and I think promises to do much good and carry the gospel to many people who cannot hear the word preached. The natives are much pleased with it. My soul rejoices in the Lord for his loving kindness. We have received no papers later than March, so you may imagine our anxiety to get them once more.

I last wrote from Raroia; have baptized six since then, and have enjoyed splendid liberty in preaching the word—in fact I think I never was so blessed. Mrs. Case has poor health, which I fear will necessitate our returning to America soon.

We called at the small island of Taenga nearly two weeks; found our people at that place in rather a sleepy condition; however, I hope we did them some good. They have been greatly neglected for a long time. We are now waiting for a ship to take us to some of the eastward islands. We desire the faithful to pray for us, that we may be equal to the task allotted us.

LOOKOUT, Cal., Sept. 20.

Editors Herald:—The Northern and Central California reunion closed the 12th inst. It was the best one I ever attended, though I have been to some where the attendance was much larger, but the preaching and prayer services were not so spiritual. I am speaking of course according to the way I view it; the greater good I received from these meetings may be on account of being in a better spiritual condition. The good sisters present concluded to do something religious, and the result was presents to two elders there; one of whom they had noticed was in need of a suit of clothes, and the other without a watch. I must say that I love the California saints, though some are lukewarm in the cause; and I hope my confidence in them as a body will never grow less. When I consider their kindness I am very sorry to think any of them should miss the celestial kingdom; but I fear that some of them, perhaps the greater part, will. I trust I have their confidence, and if I have, I believe I can retain it by being sufficiently diligent in attending to my own duties; but if I don't, I shall consider some unwise or erroneous acts on my part the reason. There may be some cynics among them; indeed, I think there are; but they are exceptions. Every officer who will heed the words of inspiration, to learn his duty and be diligent in his office, will have the support of the most of his brethren.

Bro. Newton and I started to this place three days after the reunion. We came to Sisson by rail, where we were met by Bro. John Hogan and conveyed through a dense forest of pine, fir, and cedar for a distance of one hundred miles, arriving here after a two days' drive. The ride was very dusty, but was made enjoyable by looking at the fine timber and picking out places in the mountain streams that would be good for baptizing. However, have not had any use for such places since we have been in the State. We were all the way and are now in view of the snow-capped summit of Mt. Shasta. Although we are several miles from any railroad or trade center, we have already seen indications of civilization.

We held two preaching and one prayer service here yesterday. We shall endeavor by the Lord's help to "set in order" the branch here, and then do some missionary work. I am favorably impressed in regard to the practicability of reaching the people here, and feel confident of some success, though I may be disappointed. They are not fettered by modern conventionalities to any great extent. I am feeling well in the work, and am certain of abundant success after awhile. In reality very few accept the work, but in my imagination very many become obedient. It makes life sweet, and renders it endurable, to have some ideality. I cannot boast of great progress, but I am certain that by prayer, fasting, and general diligence, I can scale the heights and reach the high spiritual plain—the gospel table land—upon which the glittering word "overcometh" is written. Brethren, pray for me.

In gospel bonds,
A. C. BARMORE.

ELDORADO, Cal., Sept. 25.

Editors Herald:—It is a little more than four months since we arrived in this western State. Spent the first two months in the southern part of the State, mostly among the different branches, trying to encourage the saints and get the gospel before the world as much as possible. We reached this northern district about the 21st of July, and have tried to utilize the time to the best advantage. Attended the reunion at Oakland, from September 3 to 13, enjoyed it very much; in fact, everyone there seemed to enjoy it, and were sorry when it was over. It seems good to meet in the assembly of the saints when one has not had that privilege for some time. I have nearly always lived in a large branch, and did not know what it was to be deprived from meeting with the saints.

I came to this place the day after the reunion, by invitation of Bro. James Askew, who is an old citizen here; have preached a few times in a union church to an audience of about twenty-five, with the exception of Sunday, when we had quite a full house.

Bro. Askew, by being an old citizen and well acquainted, was successful in securing the courthouse at Placerville, the county seat, a town of about three thousand inhabitants. We had some dodgers printed, and I went around and put one in nearly every house in town, both private and business houses. None of our people had ever preached there, so I thought we would get a good crowd through curiosity if nothing else, but our earnest hopes and expectations were not realized; we tried it for three nights, but had such a poor turnout, did not feel justified in continuing longer, as we were under quite an expense for lights and board. I preached twice at the county hospital, at the same place, to a good crowd of old men, who seemed to enjoy our gospel story very much, and had a very pressing invitation to come again. I visited a number of the sick that were not able to attend the meeting; some who had not been out of bed for four and five years. One old gentleman eighty years old said he had never been up for more than three years, but he said he was in the Lord's hands, that he was perfectly willing to die; but if it was the Lord's will that he should still suffer, he was willing to endure it. I thought his trust and patience were very commendable indeed.

Bro. Askew is a man that not only prays for the spread of this work, but is willing to meet all the expenses of an elder in trying to get the gospel before the people.

Bro. Barmore and I are not together much of the time; as we cannot get a very large attendance, we think we can accomplish more good by working alone. He and Bro. William Newton have gone to the extreme northern part of this State to try and encourage the saints there, and build up the work, as it has been somewhat neglected.

The climate and fruit here are very enjoyable; but it seems to me there is not much to encourage a missionary in trying to get the gospel before the world when the people don't seem to have any interest in religion of any kind, and don't want to hear it. Perhaps I expect too much, as this is my first experience as a general missionary; but I try to take comfort in the thought that I have done the best I could, and am willing to leave the result with God. The best interest I have had out here was at a hop field, where there was about two hundred camped. I helped them pick hops in the day, and in the evening would build a camp fire and they would gather around near the fire, while we endeavored to tell them about the restored gospel. I preached eight times, then the boys and young men made so much noise, on purpose to break up the meeting, that I had to quit. Before closing I must say, in my travels in California I have met many true, kind-hearted saints, who have ministered to our every necessity, both in words and actions. May God bless and keep us all faithful to the end is the prayer and desire of

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Sept. 29.

Editors Herald:—The conference held here on Saturday and Sunday last passed off pleasantly. A deep interest was manifest in the working force, and although our numbers are not great in these parts, and much to contend against, the brethren keep up commendable courage and are pushing ahead as best they can. Brn. A. Kent, A. M. Baker, and G. W. Robley, of the general ministry, were present at the conference. These with the home brethren were active in the meetings, including Bro. A. H. Parsons, who is an all around man. Quite an interest was manifest in the Sunday school work. Bro. Ephraim Squires was continued superintendent. Bro. Hosea Bacon manifests much interest in this department of work. Bro. John Zimmerman, the Bishop's agent, is another all around man, and is a mainstay in a financial sense in many ways.

There is a hopeful side to things here. Brn. Alma Kent and G. W. Robley started to Scranton this morning to labor there for a season. Bro. Baker thinks of laboring locally for awhile as circumstances permit. I expect to attend the conference at Brooklyn, New York, this week.

Cheerfully,
WM. H. KELLEY.

EUCLID, Ark., Sept. 25.

Editors Herald:—I have just returned home from Drew and Ashley Counties; met with some success after going through much persecution. On September 10, while I was declaring the word in Bro. F. M. Fuller's house at eight p. m., a mob of about fifteen persons, with blackened and disguised faces, rushed to the door, pointed their guns towards my head and ordered "hands up." Then two of them rushed in, gathered me by each arm and started for the door. At this moment the saints and friends tried to rescue me; so there was considerable pulling. The mob ordering them to loose me. Bro. Fuller was warding off their guns, and the captain ordered him to be knocked down; so Bro. Fuller received three heavy blows on the head with a gun barrel, and the friend a heavy stroke on the breast; then the mob carried me away on double quick.

I was ordered to leave the country at once, but was allowed to return and gather up my books. So I returned to my friends and found Bro. Fuller covered with blood. After returning I called the saints and friends together and we had a season of prayer. One man said he could not see how we could pray for as wicked a set of men as that mob was. Before leaving next morning Bro. Fuller called the saints together and we had another season of prayer; the Spirit was with us in power—the tears were free, and all gave of them freely. Then I blessed four children and administered to five sick ones, receiving a blessing in each case. We returned to Mr. and Sr. Judkins', some eight miles away, where I had left Bro. J. W. Kent. Here we labored for some time, being guarded by the deputy sheriff day and night part of the time. Here I had the pleasure of baptizing five, and the sick were administered to and a good impression left with the people.

LOCUST POINT, O., Oct. 1.

Editors Herald:—I came to this place September 22, and got permission to hold meetings in the young people's dance hall. I am having large audiences to preach the word too, and some are greatly interested in the work. I hope to see some of them obey the truth in the future. At Catawba Island, in the chapel, we have good full houses to talk to. I now have the use of a hall at Peachton, on the other end of the island, where I get larger crowds than at the chapel. Prejudice seems to be giving away and the honest in heart are believing the truth. I am having lots of work in preaching the word—spoke twenty-seven times last month.

Last Sunday Bro. James Welch was made to rejoice when I led his wife down into the waters of baptism. Bro. Welch is a good brother, what there is of him; but he is like Zaccheus of old, little of stature, but is willing to do all in his power for the spread of the gospel. It is eighteen miles or more from where he lives on the island out here, and he and I came the most of the way afoot. I am making my home at this place with Mr. Myers, who is favorable to the work, and who heard Bro. Etzenhouser on the island. There is a photographer here who is reading the Book of Mormon through, and he has never heard a sermon on it yet. He has been reading the Millennial Dawn, and seems to think, like some others, that Mr. Russell is just right. But I see more darkness than light in it, and hope people will get their eyes open to the truth and obey.

I am yours for the truth,
F. C. SMITH.

LAMONI, Iowa, October 8.

Editors Herald:—Will you please say to the saints that my inactivity is not of my own choosing, but that bodily affliction has made it impossible for me to fill the mission assigned me by the last conference. But in all my afflictions I have not forgotten the knowledge that I received of the divinity of the work many years ago. I know it is of God, and if the Lord sees fit to again renew my strength, I will gladly lay it on the altar in such a glorious work.

Your afflicted but not discouraged brother,
J. C. CLAPP.

LECTURE.

SUBJECT, INTELLECTUAL SIGNS OF THE END.

TEXT: But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased.—Dan. 12: 4.

Ladies and Gentlemen:—The present has been styled very significantly, the golden age of the world. Compared with all the ages composing the measure of the past, there is none to equal it; a towering eminence from whose beauty-crowned summit, the eye may survey the broad expanse of the world's history; age preceding age, as wave follows wave, here and there a bright spot like the green oasis in the wide extended desert. No frowning sovereign now sits upon the throne of universal empire to mark out the channels of mind, erect toll-gates upon the highway of human thought, or fix bounds to the development of civilization, science, and art. Free as the proud bird of liberty when released from the deathly grasp of the oriental lion, and permitted to soar aloft and bathe his brilliant tipped pinions in waves of light and glory above the crags, is the genius of research and the realm of intellect.

The soft mellow streams of the world's daydawn, which so gently rested and illumed the brows of the fourteenth century heroes, have converged, and the blessed union enables the intelligent millions to catch the glintings from a deep and limitless sea of inspiration. As if the keyboard of the universe had been suddenly touched by celestial hands to flood the earth with the secrets of chaos, angelic poems have gone the world around. Isles and continents have met, kissed and clasped. East, west, north, and south embraced—tied to wheels of progress by furrows of ocean and bands of steel since the mariner's compass courted and loved the stars. The capitals of states and governments, the fertile valleys and snow-crested mountains, the Arctic plain and savannas of the tropics, the hovels of the poor, the palaces of the opulent, the emporiums of commerce, aye! the atmosphere itself pulsates with quickening throbs of eloquence, or rests in pensive tenderness under soft waves of pathos, since the "art preservative of arts," or printing, arose from the ashes of the past and the revival of letters from the dead!

A highway has been opened through the watery wilderness of the Atlantic, the forests of a new world been levelled and a community of states and nations been reared; the exquisite creations of genius wrought from the marble block; the viewless substance of shadows engraved upon metallic surface; the mimicry of nature painted on the canvas; millions of spindles motioned; as many flying shuttles winged; a thousand iron steeds harnessed to as many freighted cars; mountains of granite have been tunneled; space annihilated with lightning speed. The waters of the world have been whitened with the sails of a hundred nations; every sea has been navigated. Every known land explored. Nature has been reduced in her thousand forms to as many sciences. Her laws have been taught, her future movements prophesied, her untrodden spaces measured, her myriad hosts of worlds counted; their distance, dimensions, and velocities computed.

The genesis of modern sculptural and architectural art has been told in casts of tomb and portal. The walls of the world glitter with pomp and pageantry, bedecked with colors set in fields of opalescent emerald and sapphire, beautiful parks studded with statues quaffing the crystal from marble lips. The barge of state has been oared by the arts and industries, helmed by the scythe of Father Time, and speeded through the waves of Neptune's horses accompanied by nereids and dolphins. Columns, pillars, balustrades, arches, domes, plazas, fountains, gardens, palaces, avenues, and islands are but the caskets in which earth's treasures and Beauty's estate have been enthroned, since the white-robed messenger of art smote the chain of night and bade the minstrel rise, or with fingers clad in lightning's power and flame, Bacon snatched the misty cloud from the fair star of science. Astronomy in her battles with the infinite has piled world upon world, and tossed the comets across the pathway of planets. She has drawn "the music of the spheres" into the soul of man, and translated the fiery hieroglyphics written on the celestial dial plate.

Time and oft had the keen vision of science traced the circuit and watched the twinklings of Alpha Centaur ere the construction of Newtonian or Gregorian telescopes; but since the brain of man has been touched with the inspirational torch, a glass twenty inches in diameter has sufficient power to bring within our field of exploration stars so remote that a ray of light would be millions of years in reaching us. What measureless depths can be sounded by the Lick telescope with its thirty-six inch glass! or the great reflector of Lord Rosse with its mirror seventy-six inches in diameter! The magnificent exhibition of heaven's bright stadium of worlds dawns for a high purpose. We look and see more in the blazing firmament than a swarm of fireflies dancing above the summer marsh.

"The time of the end" has blessed us with a magnified vision, and the heavens are redolent of meaning. Where amid sweeping suns countless minor systems dash in and out, and over and under in intricate mystery of apparent irregular motion, crossing each other's path at every conceivable angle; dancing about like motes in the bars of sunshine, and trailing comets sprinkle bright mosaics in the course of the suns. While their motion is seemingly irregular, it is but apparent. For all move in lines geometric, and paths mathematical with uniform motion. Professor Leland informs us, that "no heavenly body has ever been an instant ahead of its schedule time, and not one a heart-beat behind it." A diverting conclusion or deduction is here reached by these reverent teachings of science: Law back of matter; activity back of law; energy back of activity; force back of energy—the force of all forces, and wisdom in that force. Law itself is inactive. It is the highway of travel only. It means the lines along which the activities run. The power to act is back of the law. Wisdom has planned this system, manifested in the "eternal fitness of things" to which it is adjusted without friction. The instruments of science disclose the universe as infinite, therefore, the Wisdom that planned it is infinite.

The microscope follows the telescope by which every particle of matter is seen to possess a determinate form. Animated beings in certain liquids, so small that fifty thousand of them would not equal the size of a mite—a thousand of them ranged abreast would easily swim, without being thrown out of line, through the eye of the finest cambric needle. And what is more marvelous still, each of these tiny creatures is supplied with mouth, eyes, stomach, blood vessels, and other organs for the performance of animal functions. Every hair of our head is a hollow tube, with bulbs and roots furnished with threads or filaments. The scale of the fish beautifully interwoven and variegated like pieces of network no art can imitate. Every part of the dust on a butterfly's wing is a beautifully organized feather. The mold which adheres to damp bodies displays a forest of trees and plants, where the branches, leaves, and fruit are plainly seen.

The same infinite wisdom which rounded the spacious globe, and the bright masses of planetary orbs and directs them in their rapid motion through the sky, is still discernible. Molecular life make infinite littleness meet us here, as infinite greatness yonder; no atom anywhere but what is quivering and throbbing with energy; rocked in the cradles of growth, decay, crystallization, organization, chemical attraction and repulsion, magnetic and electric influences, heat and light, every particle is full of restless life.

In speaking to you of that limitless ocean in which the numerous worlds are immersed, whose waves or undulations constitute sound, called light, we draw on the spectroscope for condensed beauty. It was once supposed that light was corpuscular—composed of minute particles of matter that were by some force pushed through space; but it is now determined that the ether is a rarefied condition of matter filling the spaces between denser particles; that no matter is solid. We think and speak of iron as solid. To our rough senses it is so, yet Professor Faraday says: "The particles of matter in a cube of iron are no nearer together in proportion to their size, than men would be, if only one man were standing on each square mile of England." It is also known that a grain of musk will scent the air blown through a room for fifty years so our senses detect it. During this half century it is giving part of itself to the air, and we can detect no minification of the musk.

Science has determined that the human eye is capacitated to receive light waves when the number playing upon it reach 396 trillions per second. Below this, the eye can receive no light, above this, the beautiful world of colors dance. Color is in the eye, and when the waves of ether tremble between 396 trillions and 470 trillions per second, the color in the eye is red. When the eye receives between 470 trillions and 510 trillions, the color is orange. Undulations playing between 510 trillions and 550 trillions, it is yellow; from 550 trillions to 610 trillions, green; between 610 trillions and 658 trillions, blue; between that number and 700 trillions, indigo. To 765 trillions it is violet. Waves exceeding 765 trillions per second give no light to the eye. Here the finite and infinite meet in a line of blindness to the finite.

Light does exist beyond, but heavenly eyes only receive it:—

And after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into a high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them: And his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as light.—Matt. 17:1, 2.

And it came to pass, that, as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me. And I fell unto the ground.—Acts 22: 6.

And Elisha prayed, and said, Lord, I pray thee, open his eyes, that he may see. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw: and, behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha.—2 Kings 6: 17.

The genesis of light to this earth in the Bible "beginning," when God said, "Let there be light," was not the birth of light universally; for undoubtedly light was the natural environment of God from all eternity, and in its awesome depths he was not alone with the sublimities of the universe present. The Old Testament revelations were frequently accompanied by this. Not alone to Moses, when in presence of God's glory "his face shone;" but to Ezekiel when the divine glory had the "appearance of fire." Not only Peter, James, and John, when Jesus shone under the splendors of the transfiguration, but John on Patmos when he saw the "city of God," and the "Lamb as the light of it."

This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all.—1 John 1: 5.

As also he is in the sun, and the light of the sun, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also he is in the moon, and is the light of the moon, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also the light of the stars, and the power thereof by which they were made. And the earth also, and the power thereof, even the earth upon which you stand.—D. C. 85: 2.

On a canvas in the Vatican, as the product of Raphael's brilliant mind and pencil, glows a light brighter than the morning's radiance, or the tearful depths of noon. How much of tender glory and serene beauty float in this realm above the color-line, let prophet, seer, and apostle who have looked out of their earthly selves into the untelescoped regions of ecstatic joy and gladness intone their hallelujahs to respond. One thing is apparent, "the glory of God is intelligence."

And after these things I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory.—Rev. 18: 1.

The spectroscope has been called the "light sifter," because the light can be analyzed by it, and the composition and condition of distant orbs determined. The larger end of an instrument thrust through the curtains of a darkened room gathers the rays from a far-off heavenly body, conducts them into the room, concentrates them through the small end upon a prism—a three-cornered piece of glass—the rays thrown through this prism to another, and then another, and then another, and still another, from the last pass the light upon a white screen. By the prisms the rays have been dissolved and separated. Then carefully examine the color-lines upon the screen, knowing the color any burning substance gives off, the composition of the body can be determined. This, one of the crowns of victoried science is "spectrum analysis," and upon the lines thus drawn we entertain the golden glory of heaven in our earthly homes. Truly, this is "sunshine coming to our call." But further on, when at the extreme red end of the spectrum, the rays seem to be invisible, the thermopile pierces deeper and detects them by their heat; and beyond the extreme violet the phenomena of fluorescence or photochemical action disclose as chemical force.

The cathode x-rays point to the border of that world beyond the limits of each sense, and boldly asserts the great Spirit whose omnipresence is space, whose age is eternity, and on whose azure robe nebulae and galaxies shine as the golden embroidery of God's royal vesture. Ah! fair Science, who shall set bounds to your incredulous strides! every organ, tissue, and bone of the human body laid bare to the physician and surgeon! Tungstate, lime, and collodion endowed with the gift of speech, yield the secret. "In the time of the end many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased."

Another evidence of the truth of the latter prophetic phrase—the phonograph—mere registration of sound waves on a sensitive surface; just a simple wax cylinder recording every word and tone, every error in language, every mispronunciation, every harsh or gentle tone of voice, every hasty, irascible, or unholy expression, and preserving alike what is good or evil, for all time to come. O, my friends, who shall doubt the power of God to treasure up the life history we are making into a future day when the secret things are brought to light? Who can tell whether there be not sensitive surfaces in nature on which, even now are being impressed the records of untamed as well as sanctified tongues? Our Father's book of remembrance, written before him, for those who talked and thought upon his name in the sacred dialect of heaven, may be much more simple and natural than we suppose. If this be a legitimate deduction, then with what significance and possibility is the Savior's language invested:—

But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned.—Matt. 12: 36, 37.

Who can doubt the ultimate? The wildest dreams of science to-day will be realized to-morrow. There are no impossibilities with God. He is omni (all) scient (science). The heavens lower bend age by age, folding us nearer and nearer to the grandeur of a higher sphere; yet will the world by its wisdom know not God. Approaching its perihelion in artistic, scientific, and intellectual attainments; but sinking to aphelion in righteousness, moral excellence, and divine law. But the chain so beautifully wrought during the age of the priests and prophet kings of Israel, and broken by the slumberings and ungodliness of nations, has welded, its terminals picked up and clasped, while the great hand of Deity clasps the center links, and binding the worlds together, again says, "Let there be light."

I have filled him with the Spirit of God, in wisdom, and understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship, to devise cunning works.—Exodus 31: 3, 4.

Our first locomotives crawled laboriously over the rough rails, and by mighty exertion made twelve miles per hour. And there were wise men who sought to check this terrific speed by law, saying, "It is impossible for the human body to maintain its life, being hurled at this fearful rate of speed through the air." What would our ancestry now say, could they board the "Empire Express," or the "Kansas Flyer," eat and sleep in luxury, and ride with the wind at sixty miles an hour? And, too, the solitary line of magnetic telegraph, to which the lightnings of heaven yield allegiance and become the common carriers of thought—the willing subject of man? The Lord's interrogations to the old patriarch, Job, come in the train of thought, "Canst thou send lightnings, that they may go, and say unto thee, Here we are?" And the "cunning device,"—Franklin bottled the giant of the universe, and Professor Morse taught it language. It is now subject to call, and "comes" saying, "Here I am," send me around the globe or cable me under the waves to foreign shores.

Again, we are informed that for the first time in the history of the world the count of the population of a great nation was taken by electricity. This honor belongs to the United States; the eleventh census being taken by what is known at the Hollerith system, which has since been adopted by Australia and Canada. The cards containing the data of returns, when packed closely together, made a pile ten miles long. An ingenious machine invented by Herman Hollerith worked its way through these at the rate of five hundred feet per day, one machine doing the work required of twenty men by the old method of tallying and pencil marking, and at a gain of eight hundred thousand dollars in the cost to government.

Ah! do you suppose that brush dipped in the hues of heaven's brilliant arch can paint the outlines of the grandest achievements yet to be, and the amateur not feel painfully the vague, the dim, and somber effort?

"Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Again, notice the "cunning device" in the thread exhibit. There they show you a machine whose work is as follows: It reels thread onto little wooden spools at the rate of two hundred and fifty dozens in a day of ten hours, each spool is wrapped with two hundred yards of thread. It moves and acts like a sentient being. Eight hoppers are filled with little wooden spools, and the machine starts. It picks a spool out of a hopper, adjusts it on a spindle, reels out two hundred yards of thread, cuts it, inserts the end in a nick in the spool that it makes, dumps the finished spool and takes a new one, and repeats this performance all day in less time than it takes to talk about it. The spools are then taken to another little machine that rushes them through a contrivance which pastes a label on them, that it chops out, pitches the spool into a box, and hurries along in a mad race with the machine reeling the thread.

When it is borne in mind that in 1876, at the Centennial Exposition, there was no electrical display, the telephone but a toy, electric lights a dream, the dynamo as remote as the resurrection, and in 1893, after a lapse of only seventeen years, the world gazed on an electrical building 345 by 690 feet, covering five and one half acres, in the "vanishing city," on the shores of the inter-ocean, and devoted exclusively to the industries of harnessed lightning, the thought grows stronger, "Knowledge shall be increased."

I wisdom dwell with prudence, and find out knowledge by witty invention.—Prov. 8: 12.

Then there is that electrical kitchen. Hark! By a process of imbedding wire in enamel on the reverse side of iron, the current that would otherwise change to light or power, according to its application, becomes heat. Lighted by incandescent lamps, to show the progress of the dishes to the housekeeper, is an ingenious box lined with asbestos, to retain heat. It is fitted with glass windows to facilitate this process; is seen in operation baking a fat leg of mutton. A temperature of 320 degrees is secured, and the meat is cooked to a nicety, while the exterior of the electrical oven is cool, clean, and devoid of the discomforts of a kitchen. The cook places her meat in the oven, pulls a switch, and gives herself no further uneasiness until the time is up for completion. Wires coiled under a steel plate are boiling water in glass bottles, and others applied to little soapstone griddles are cooking pancakes. The laundry is provided for also, and the woman who starts in to iron, by turning on the current to her wired flatiron, can go ahead all day without perspiring over a hot fire. A handsome table shows the application of electricity in its three phases—light, power, and heat. The table is designed for a sick chamber, and when the current is turned on an incandescent lamp is lighted, a small stove is heated, and a little fan distributes the warmth all over the room.

Isn't this a sweet message to bring weary housewives and careworn mothers? You who have journeyed far down life's western slope, and sit to-night near by the purple twilight behind whose heavy folds Death's turbulent stream courses on to an eternal ocean bearing upon its somber bosom the freight of human souls, how often in quiet reverie with dim eyes gazing out on the hills does your heart go back over the paths of memory to youthful scenes and fancy when you joined in the work and took no note of time! You have borne the noontide heat and toil, and now at eventide, with tired, folded hands, and far-off gaze, await the summons that shall make the gray twilight brighten into a sunburst of light and joy. But you feel that the days are not as they once were, and that you are lingering in the rear. But,

"She made home happy." These few words I read,

Within a churchyard, written on a stone;
No name, no date, the simple words alone,

Told me the story of the unknown dead.

A marble column lifted high its head,

Close by, inscribed to one the world has known.

But ah! that lonely grave with moss o'er-grown,

Thrilled me far more than his who armies led.

She made home happy, through the long sad years,

The mother toiled and never stopped to rest,

Until they crossed her hands upon her breast,

And closed her eyes, no longer dim with tears.

The simple record that she left behind
Was grander than the soldier's to my mind."

Concluding this lecture, friends, the triumphs of the present century in the fields of real knowledge are surely ominous of that period to which the shafts of inspiration—songs of angels blended with the psalms of men—have ever pointed. There is no darkness that can quench the illumination which now rises on the world. The scroll is wider unrolling. The gulf current sweeps on and on. The linguist is developing from the study of language and literature the unity and diversity of the race. The physiologist is tracing the electric chain with which the immortal mind is darkly bound to its prison of clay. The geologist is mining his way down to the foundations of the earth, and reading the inscriptions which the centuries have written on the eternal rocks. The astronomer has explored the heavens and traced the revolutions of worlds on the high plains of immensity. He has analyzed the floating fire mist in the midnight sky. The naturalist is walking along the grades of being, from the floating slime of the sea, up to the crowning glory—man. The ærial sphere is a whispering gallery. Knowledge is so many voiced and winged. The mechanical genius of man is on the stretch after mechanical inventions and improvements to furnish the already fledged pinions of science accelerated speed in the developing wonders of the scientific world. Tireless millions "run to and fro" through all the earth, and the accumulation is mountainous; yet the door is but slightly ajar, and the race has scarcely advanced beyond the A. B. abs.

We can then take faith. The language of the text burns into the very heart of the present age, and causes its blood to leap with new inspiration, emphasizing "the time of the end."

JAREDITE CORN.

THE following article of correspondence from Anderson, Indiana, was published in the daily Chicago Record in its issue for September 27, 1897:—

VARIETIES OF CORN.

GRAINS FROM A MOUND BUILDERS' TOMB IN ARKANSAS ARE PRODUCING BIG EARS IN MADISON COUNTY.

ANDERSON, Ind., Sept. 24.

SOME PREHISTORIC CORN.

Dempsey Waggy, a farmer residing in Madison County, probably has the most interesting field of corn in the State. Two years ago Waggy and Dr. Cullen, a neighbor, were hunting in Arkansas. They were staying in a small village named Marked Tree. It got its rather unusual title from the fact that one of the trees bore strange hieroglyphics of an extinct race. The small village is surrounded by many mounds of remarkable snake-like countour. During their stay some northern scientists visited the mounds and began explorations, finding many trinkets. Going deeper they found bones of humans, and trinkets which had been buried with them. In one of the hermetically sealed receptacles, which was evidently the last resting place of one of the rulers, the explorers found ornaments, the skeletons of a dog and of a human being, and also some hermetically sealed jars. Both jars were airtight, and when opened were found to contain corn. It was as bright, yellow, solid, and dry as though it had just been shelled. The explorers took these vessels but gave Waggy a handful of the corn. He wrapped it up in a handkerchief and threw it into his traveling chest. There it lay for two years. Scientists claimed that there were ample proofs that the body and the corn had been interred at least two thousand years, and probably as long as three thousand years.

Waggy came across the seeds last spring and planted them in his garden. He was surprised when tiny blades shot up through the ground. The corn grew marvelously fast and as it developed it threw out new mysteries almost daily, until to-day the stalks are ten to twelve feet in height and are somewhat on the order of a tree, being as thick as a man's wrist at the ground. Three feet from the ground they shoot out three long, palm-like leaves. The leaves are heavy and very solid, resembling a cactus leaf. Some of them are five feet long from tip to tip. These are the only leaves on the stalk. About two feet farther up are the ears of corn. Many stalks bear six ears, and none has fewer than four ears. At this rate it is figured that the average yield to the acre would be about two hundred and fifty bushels.

Above the ears the stalk continues three or four feet and is topped with a very elaborate tassel. The husks surrounding the ears are very heavy, and as the corn matures they break and curl back, revealing a firm, yellow-grained ear. The grains are very solid and are exceptionally good for feeding. The roots of the plant are very long and bury themselves deep in the ground. While other corn was suffering on account of the drought this year, the prehistoric corn was green and healthy. Waggy will save all of the yield this year and plant fifty or sixty acres next year. He has some of the stalks and corn on exhibition and they are attracting much attention.

Desiring to know whether this was a truth or simply a hoax, one of the strange creations of some one's brain to make a sensation, I wrote to the postmaster at Anderson, asking for a statement as to whether the account was correct, and if a man named Dempsey Waggy lived in that region and had raised such corn as was stated in the Record. To this I have this day received the following reply:—

ANDERSON, Ind., Oct. 1, 1897.

Sir:—Dempsey Waggy lives here and grew the corn as stated.

Respectfully,

A. A. SMALL, P. M.

This being true it is of no small value as an evidence of the agricultural products of the land in the time of the Jaredites. For there is no doubt that the corn was raised in their time, it being clear that the "Mound Builders," as they are called by science to-day, were the people whose history we have in the Book of Mormon; that is, in the Book of Ether portion of that work.

The time stated in the article; namely, that two thousand to three thousand years have elapsed, according to scientists, since the corn was buried there, agrees with the investigations of wise men concerning the time that has elapsed since the bodies of the last of the "Mound Builders" were buried under the great mounds raised by them in the valleys of the Ohio, the Scioto, and other rivers. The claim has long been made that the dryness of the soil and the perfect methods of interment used by them, when compared with bodies interred in Europe (whose length of burial is known), demonstrates that not less than two thousand years has elapsed since the last of the Mound Builders passed away from the river Ohio and its tributaries, and that probably it was twenty-five hundred years ago.

The time stated also agrees with the theories and estimates as to the age when the fortifications were erected along these same rivers; namely upon the higher terraces, from which the waters subsided at a later period, that none of the fortifications of the "Mound Builders" are found upon the lower terraces, hence a very long time must have elapsed since they were built, not less than about twenty-five hundred years scientists say.

Thus we have three estimates that give about the same age when the "Mound Builders" ceased to flourish, when they disappeared, as science says they did, at a remote period in the past, not less than two thousand, or two thousand five hundred years ago. We read in the Book of Mormon that the Jaredites became annihilated six hundred years before the birth of Christ, or about twenty-five hundred years ago. Therefore the agreement among scientists as to the time when the "Mound Builders" dwelt in the land and about when they disappeared, is of deep interest to all students of the Book of Mormon; and it should be to all who are studying the antiquities of America, that they may find the truth.

Conference Minutes.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN.

CONFERENCE AND REUNION.

Conference and reunion of the above mission met in the saints' chapel at Pleasant Grove, Utah, September 18, 1897. Organized by choosing J. W. Wight president, James McKiernan assisting president, and H. N. Hansen secretary. Statistical reports were received from Union Fort, Salt Lake mission, and Ogden branches. Spiritual condition of branches was reported as follows: Salt Lake mission by J. W. Wight, Pleasant Grove by H. B. Sterrett, both in improved condition. Ministerial reports received from J. W.

Wight, baptized 8, J. McKiernan, J. T. Davis baptized 6, H. N. Hansen, S. D. Condit baptized 2, H. B. Sterrett, and John Ritchens. It was resolved that all of Utah north of the line running east and west at the northern limit of Brigham City, be granted to the Idaho district. Also resolved to revive the Utah district, James McKiernan being chosen president and H. N. Hansen secretary of the district. Further resolved, that when this conference adjourns it do so to meet at the call of the president of the Rocky Mountain mission.

After the business, which was concluded on Saturday afternoon, reunion services were held until and including Sunday, the 26th. Three preaching services were held each day with the exception of Sunday, the 19th, when a sacrament and social meeting was held in the afternoon. The word was preached by Elders J. W. Wight, James McKiernan, J. T. Davis, H. N. Hansen, and S. D. Condit, assisted by H. B. Sterrett and S. A. Wannberg. The attendance was but small compared with reunions in the East, but the meetings were spiritual and enjoyed by those who did attend. Three were baptized and confirmed during the meeting.

It was resolved to hold a reunion in 1898, and Brn. H. B. Sterrett, J. W. Weaver, S. D. Condit, and A. J. Layland were chosen in connection with the president of the mission as a committee to choose location and set the time for next reunion.

The burden of caring for the elders and saints in attendance fell chiefly upon Sr. Sterrett, who now, as for years in the past, did so with cheerfulness.

Miscellaneous Department.

CHURCH RECORDER'S REQUEST.

No reports have arrived from any of the branches in England during 1897 excepting one of Zion's Hope (London) in March. The latest received from the branches in the Manchester district were those dated December 31, 1895, and a still longer time has elapsed since any came from those in the Birmingham and the Sheffield districts. I would now ask that full statistical reports be sent in. Even if some of the branches are now inactive, or even disorganized, a persistent effort should be made to learn and to report the names of all who have died, or who have otherwise been lost to the church since last reported, with the dates thereof, as nearly as can be found. Thus the Church Records may be cleared of the names of those who are either physically or spiritually dead, who have been legally dealt with.

Since the reports for December, 1896, no reports have been received from the Australian branches, but doubtless they will arrive.

From the following portions of the United States reports are now due: Those from the Fremont district for June; Spring River for September; Kewanee for September; Western Maine for May and September; Minnesota for June; Far West for June and September; Independence for September; Central Nebraska for August; Nevada for June; Kirtland for July; Southeastern Ohio for September; Pittsburg for June and September; Montana for June; Western Texas for August, and Southern Wisconsin for September.

It should be remembered (or notice of the fact be now taken) that on pages 152 to 156 of the Rules of Order, which the church has adopted as a law to govern its organized bodies and conferences, that district officers (or branch officers where there is no district organized) should send the original reports of the branches directly to the General Church Recorder, not simply a transcript of said reports, as the manner of some has been.

And it is evidently provided and intended, both in the Doctrine and Covenants and in the Rules of Order, that all presidents and clerks of branches and districts should make it a part of their work to see that an account is given of all members of the church, so far as they may be able to obtain the facts concerning baptisms and membership, and about the death or other losses of members, whether it be as to present existing branches, or broken organizations, or scattering members, everything that may properly come under their notice or charge. This in order that exact accounts may be sent up to this office, and the facts be placed upon the General Record, all gains, losses, ordinations, marriages, etc.

October conferences are advertised to be held in the districts of Chatham and London, Ontario; in the Florida, Alabama, and the Mobile districts; also in Northern and Southern California; Northeastern, Southeastern, and Nauvoo districts, Illinois; Decatur, Des Moines, Fremont, Galland's Grove, Little Sioux, Iowa; Northeastern Kansas; Massachusetts; Northern, Southern, and Eastern Michigan; Minnesota; Nodaway and Northeastern Missouri; Northern and Southern Nebraska; New York; also in other districts in November and December. As far as possible let the reports of the branches that are presented at the above conferences be forwarded early, to be placed on record before those crowd in from the January, February, and March conferences.

Scores of letters, perhaps hundreds, in which I have asked for corrections or for additional items as to births, baptisms, ordinations, etc., remain unanswered. To make the General Record perfect, and also to bring harmony between it and the branch and district records, as to each name and its complete items, it is needful that work should be done by all concerned, and that I should receive answers as to the real facts and figures. If letters are neglected then the Church Records are left in an imperfect condition, and not as reliable as they ought to be. This part of the labor takes ten fold more time than does the mere copying of names and items from correct reports at first; for the reason that thorough investigation is made necessary, as well as much correspondence with branch and district clerks. If branch clerks make their replies to the district clerks then the latter can send copies or the originals to me for use and to be filed for reference.

I would again respectfully ask the missionaries and local ministry to send in full reports of all whom they (or others) baptize who may not be placed on branch records, that such may be recorded in the book kept for that purpose. I will send blank forms to all who may request such.

Your brother,

H. A. STEBBINS,
General Church Recorder.

CHANGE OF CONFERENCE AND CONVENTION.

Owing to the Board of Health at Blair, Nebraska, prohibiting all public meetings in the city till after the 11th, we have changed the place of the Sunday school convention and conference of the Northern Nebraska district to Fremont, Nebraska, the 8th, 9th, and 10th of the month. As there is important business to come before the conference, we hope to see a good representation from all the branches present.

DIED.

TRAXLER.—At his home in Lamoni, at seven o'clock a. m., October 4, Bro. John Traxler suddenly passed from this life while seemingly in the enjoyment of fairly good health and usual powers of body and mind. Bro. Traxler was born at Chatham, Ontario, November 12, 1821, and at the time of his death was nearly seventy-six years of age. On the 25th day of May, 1853, he was married to Miss Esther Best, and the two have journeyed together until the summons so suddenly came on the morning of October 4 for the husband to depart. He became a member of the church July 12, 1864, under the administration of Elder J. W. Gillen, and on the same day was ordained a priest, which position he continued to occupy in the church up to the time of his death. His family are all grown up and with one exception married. Elder J. S. Snively, a son-in-law, was absent on his mission work and did not attend the funeral, and three children in Canada could not be present. Funeral services in charge of Prof. J. A. Gunsolley; sermon by Elder E. L. Kelley.

LILJAROTH.—At her home in Provo, Utah, after much suffering, Sr. Mary Margaret Liljaroth, on September 11, 1897, passed away and found rest in death. Sr. Liljaroth was born March 24, 1839, at Halmstat, Skaane, Sweden. She accepted the gospel as taught by the Latter Day Saints in her native land, and in keeping with instructions then received, gathered to Utah, where she accepted the work of the Reorganization, being baptized by Elder Peter Anderson, June 30, 1890. Funeral sermon was preached by Elder H. N. Hansen in the Second Ward meeting house, Elder Peay, of the Utah Church in charge.

their interference with digestion. Lastly, we must not omit to note the fact that in hot weather a much smaller amount of food is needed than during cold weather. Four fifths of the food we eat is converted into heat, only one fifth being used as energy. When the thermometer is in the neighborhood of ninety degrees, the system is compelled to make a special effort to rid itself of the surplus heat produced in the tissues. This fact is manifest in the profuse perspiration which accompanies the slightest effort made on an excessively hot day. The skin is bathed with water poured out by millions of sweat glands, so that the body may be cooled by the resulting evaporation. It is thus apparent that the food supply for heat-making purposes is not needed on an excessively warm day or during hot weather; hence this may be cut off without reducing the strength or without injury of any sort.

Over-eating is unquestionably responsible for a large share of the inconvenience and suffering experienced in hot weather. It is the writer's custom to take but two meals on a hot day; to make his breakfast solely of fruit, and for dinner to take only a little dry bread, zwieback, granose, or some other dry cereal food, with a few nuts, either in their natural state or prepared in the form of Nuttose or Malted Nuts, Ambrosia or Brumose. With such a dietary, one can do far more work and with vastly less inconvenience in hot weather than with the ordinary diet,—the fact of which any one may be convinced by a single day's trial.—Dr. J. H. Kellogg in the Voice.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

THE THREE BOOKS

AT POPULAR PRICES.

CHEAP AND DURABLE.

Because of the increasing demand for the Inspired Translation in home and class study in general and in Sunday school work, also because of the increasing number of Book of Mormon and Book of Covenant classes being formed in various branches of the church, and the consequent growing demand for the "three books," the Herald Office management has decided to issue popular low-priced editions of each.

The books are all well bound and printed on good paper, the paper and plates being the same as used in higher priced editions.

They are good and durable, and with ordinary care will last the necessary wear of years. They are bound in cloth and sold at the low price of 65 cents for either Book of Mormon or Doctrine and Covenants; the Inspired Translation at $1.

Orders solicited. The three standard books of the church are now within the reach of all.

$1.50. $1.50.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

REDUCED IN PRICE.

Recognizing the closeness of the times and with a desire to place the church paper within the reach of every member, the Board of Publication has decided to offer THE SAINTS' HERALD at a reduced price for one year from the date named, as follows:—

On July 12, 1897, the price of the HERALD was fixed at $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

This reduction applies to both old and new subscribers, on the following conditions:—

Cash must accompany all orders for new subscriptions, as stated.

Former subscribers who are in arrears, who pay up on old subscriptions and renew one year in advance, will receive the benefit of the reduction in price from the date named—July 12, 1897.

Those who have already paid in advance will receive the benefit of the reduction in price at the dates of expiration of present subscriptions, and for the year following said dates, if renewing in advance.

This is a reduction of twenty-five per cent, both in the price of the church paper, and of the revenue derived from it. It is therefore necessary that all avail themselves of the new departure and greatly enlarge the list of new subscribers; and also that those indebted pay up all past due accounts.

Branch book agents and the ministry who can do so, are respectfully asked to second the efforts of the Board by obtaining new subscribers for the HERALD and working in the general interests of the Herald Office—the church publishing plant.

THE PLACE OF DEATH IN EVOLUTION.

THE popular belief that the theory of "evolution" tends to reduce the mysteries of existence to mere phenomena of force and matter, and energetically opposed by Dr. Newman Smyth in his recent work "The Place of Death in Evolution." Taking for his subject the conclusions reached by Weismann, Maupas, Wilson, and other eminent biologists concerning the origins of life, Dr. Smyth maintains that the teachings of science confirm and strengthen the solutions given by Christianity for the great problems of life, death, and immortality. Accepting the revelations of the microscope as to the mechanism of the simple cell in which life has its first known abode, he also sees in the orderly arrangement of molecules of matter and the processes of their development the work of the living spirit which is behind and in all life. Instead of regarding science and religion as antagonistic he believes that: "The coming theologian, therefore—the next successful defender of the faith once given to the saints—will be a trained and accomplished biologist. Not only will his thought, descending from the heights of solitary abstraction, and forsaking the cloistered shades of the schoolmen, ancient and modern, proceed like the wayfaring Son of Man along the familiar paths of human life, in closest touch with the common heart of humanity; but also each organic form will tell to him the story of its origins, and the least living cell will unveil the secret chambers of its divinity."

At some future time Dr. Smyth hopes to carry out plans for a larger work, or series of works, in which the task suggested in the above quotation will be accomplished. In the present volume he has sought to gather up such knowledge as biological science offers in regard to the place and function of death in the order of nature, and to consider the interpretative value of such knowledge in relation to the law of human subjection to death, and its attendant suffering.

The first fact which Dr. Smyth considers is, that natural death does not appear with the beginning of life on the earth. The earliest and simplest organism consists of a single cell, which does not exist for a season and then dies, but lives on and on, by the simple process of dividing itself into two cells, each like the original, and thus lives on for generations without the appearance of a dead body. These simple forms of life, if left to themselves under favorable conditions, increase and multiply indefinitely.

In the organisms composed of several cells life grows more complex, and, while some of the cells contain the undying germplasm, or continuous, hereditary matter of life, others, termed somatic, or body, cells, become limited in the number of their possible divisions. In other words they acquire mortality.

Of the researches by which these facts are proved Dr. Smyth says:—

"From these observed facts, therefore, concerning the origin and earliest working of natural death, we may proceed to further reasonings concerning its future mission in the process of the higher organization of life.

It is seen to be an ever-recurring step of nature in the ascent of life.

"As life becomes more organized and complex, death prevails. It comes to reign on earth, because it comes to serve. At length in the history of life a living form arose, so multicellular and so well organized that it ceased to continue the course of life simply by dividing and multiplying itself into daughter-cells; it had acquired the power of giving up its life for another; it died in order that its offspring might continue its life in forms struggling to still higher organization, and better fitted to survive while it must perish. One parent form passes away in order that others may catch up the motion of life, and in turn transmit to others life's rhythm and joy. Thus death comes in to help, and not merely to hurt; to help life further on and higher up, not to put a stop to life. It evidently became advantageous to life as a whole that certain primitive forms should be left by the way to perish. The column of the living marches on, though individual organisms fall by the wayside; life, ever regnant, continues through death, and past death, on to more life and richer. In other words, in the first struggle of animate existence, by bringing into the field regiments of better equipped forms, life scores a victory although, to win it, it must leave its dead upon the field.

"This fact of the utility of death for life will become still further intelligible if we attempt to conceive what might have been the result if death had not kept the stream of life from clogging up and becoming stagnant. For if death had not entered, then the more finely organized, the more masterful, and the fairer forms of life would not have appeared. There would have been no stimulus and response of life for their production. There would have been no call for their appearance under the law of natural selection; they would not have been needed for the maintenance of life. Death breaks up the crust of nature so that the germinant life may spring up, and grow into the light. Death ends the monotony of the same kind of continued life, and gives it occasion for a new spring, and exist-once upon a higher level. The course of life would have been arrested, had not death come with helpful hand to clear away products of life no longer useful, to remove outworn and mutilated forms, and to let the deepening stream flow on. If we suppose other laws and processes of nature to remain such as we know them to be, we may assert that there could have been made on this earth no garden, no flowers, no birds, no leafy trees for them to sing in, had it not been for the entrance and ministry of death; had death never been sent along life's way to take from life its useless burdens and to set its energies free for better adaptations and results ever more fair and fruitful. Man himself might not have been made of the dust of the earth, if that dust had not been mingled of the elements of the dead forms which were before him. We owe our human birth to death in nature. The earth before us has died that we might live. We are the living children of a world that has died for us."

Proceeding to review the facts which science has contributed, and may be expected to contribute, in furtherance of the doctrine of personal immortality, Dr. Smyth thus summarizes the present attitude of some of the great biologists toward the conception of the universe as existing in some all-pervasive intelligence:—

"There is a scientific arrogance which seems to forget how great is the remaining mystery of life, when the eager hand of an experimenter succeeds in lifting some corner of the veil of the fine physical and chemical process under which its secret of living intelligence is hidden. In contrast with such premature exultation may be put the following conclusion of one of the soberest and most careful investigators among our American school of biologists, who has recently published a valuable contribution to general biology; his words illustrate the wisdom which Dr. Chalmers happily described as the modesty of true science:—

"When all these admissions are made, and when the conserving action of natural selection is in the fullest degree recognized, we cannot close our eyes to two facts; first, that we are utterly ignorant of the manner in which the idioplasm of the germ-cell can so respond to the play of physical forces upon it as to call forth an adaptive variation; and second, that the study of cell has on the whole seemed to widen rather than to narrow the enormous gap that separates even the lowest forms of life from the inorganic world."

□ "The presumption of the purely mechanical conception of nature's highest manifestation of feeling and thought is well hit by the keen philosophic wit of this remark of the late

Clark Maxwell: 'The atoms are a very tough lot, and can stand a great deal of knocking about, and it is strange to find a number of them combining to form a man of feeling.' Increasing the intimate acquaintance with vital phenomena will not serve to diminish the force of the following conclusion of this same typically scientific mind: 'I have looked into most philosophical systems, and I have seen that none will work without a God.' The theory of some superphysical direction in the origin and development of life is more easily conceivable than an exclusively mechanical theory, which would leave intelligence entirely out of all the determination of the world. It is not at least impossible to conceive of vital movements, and of all physical processes, as existing in, and proceeding through, an omnipresent Intelligence; as we know that ideas and whole trains of thought pass in a definite arrangement and logical order of succession through the human mind. Such a conception is more thinkable, because more analogous to our own consciousness, than is any merely mechanical conception of the play of forces in nature. The moment biology lifts up its eyes from its experiments and begins to philosophize, it perceives that life has a larger spiritual background. Vital phenomena are not only related to molecular properties and forces in the foreground of nature, but they must also exist in continuous correlation with the 'unknown factor of evolution'—that potential behind all material processes, and beyond all finite measurement, which evolution must everywhere presuppose."

Further arguments in behalf of immortality based on biological science are thus presented:—

"A definite and clear line of philosophic reasoning toward belief in immortality proceeds from the fact that life, as manifested in man's self-knowledge, has become an extraphysical potency. It is still interwoven with the meshes of fine molecular changes; but it is a life which has escaped from bondage to a purely physical service. Mind does not now exist in a body merely as a physical adaptation for the better preservation of the body. Indeed, if mind were only a means for the better discharge of bodily functions, natural selection might long ere this have eliminated a too intense and consuming self-consciousness from the perfection of animal existence. Natural selection would dispense with an overgrowth of mind as a variation not advantageous to the physical well-being. To some degree natural selection among men works toward a reduction of mental development, although this tendency is interfered with and superseded in human history by a higher law of spiritual selection for more than physical uses. Consciousness, however, is not necessary to a discharge of the purely physical functions, and often too much of it seriously interferes with them. But it is necessary to the perfection of man. His life is raised out of the physical process; mind has no definite and observed materiality. When subjected to the most searching tests of physical analysis, mind is found to contain a residual element—a reserved potency of being—which is known directly in the light of thought and in the glow of love. To the most expert mental physiology the mind of man remains like the mystery of the prophet's vision—a creation more wonderful than nature's most complex mechanism; for the 'spirit of the living creature was in the wheels.' So far, then, from having reduced the world of man to nothing but dust and ashes, evolution presents the universe to our philosophy as existing in two kinds—matter and spirit; the last testament of God in the creation is offered in these two kinds; the sacrament of the life is both bread and wine. Matter and mind are the emblems always with us of the real presence of the one unseen Lord of all. We must find the primal unity, for which all philosophy seeks, in the Giver, not in the gifts. The Lord is one God; and His creative word is one sentence; but it is composed of a noun and a verb, each existing in relation to, and neither made perfect without the other; it is both a substantive of body and an action of the spirit; it is both conjoined—the matter of life, and the energy of will."

We quote one more extract from Dr. Smyth's book, in which an interpretation of the utility, for humanity, of death and the suffering which it involves is drawn from the scientific law of natural utility in death:—

"It now remains for us, in the light of these observations and reflections, to consider further the personal sufferings which our individual subjection to the law of death may render inevitable. Here, likewise, in our thought of the sufferings of our mentality, we are apt to keep firm grasp upon the strong vital principle that death is sent, and works always in the end, for the advantage of life. Hence we must believe that the sufferings attendant upon the entrance of death into the circle of our friendships, as well as the pains of death through which at any hour one may be called personally to pass, are sent, not to hurt us, or to make our human affections our most cruel tormentors, but for some further good purpose and ulterior benefit of life. We begin with the discovery of a law of natural utility in death. We rise to the conception of a higher law of spiritual selection

THE GRACELAND COLLEGE.

It is now indispensably necessary that the church as a whole should take the College into consideration, and come to its aid.

Like the Herald Office, the College is the property of the church, and not the property of any individual, or association of individuals. If the school is kept up until by virtue of time, usage, and success in its work, a sufficient interest is taken and the ranks of its students increased to the self-supporting point, anxiety as to its continuation will cease. And, in order that this may be done, it is needful that the church shall put forth an extra effort to make the enterprise a success now.

There is not a member of the church, near to the site where the College is located, or remote from it, who is not as much interested in the building and lands connected with it, as the committee selected by the church to locate and build the institution. As a consequence, the whole church—every member of it—is in honor bound to see that the hands of the committee are strengthened to meet the obligations they have been obliged to assume in carrying out the instructions given them in their appointment.

This may be done in one, or all of the following ways:—

1. By donation, or bequest direct to the College, by way of endowment, in any sum, small or large, sent to the committee, or its treasurer, William Anderson, Lamoni, Iowa.

2. By the purchase of lots in Graceland, adjacent to the College buildings and campus. These lots are well situated and the location "beautiful for situation," as lots near to, or in Zion ought of right to be. The prices asked are not extravagant, and there is no speculation intended on the part of the committee. They charge nothing for their services, and give their time to the work they do. Inquiries and applications for purchase may be made to Bishop E. L. Kelley, D. F. Nicholson, or Frank Criley, Lamoni, Iowa.

3. By sending students to the College. For catalogues and terms, apply to Prof. J. T. Pence, acting President of College, or D. F. Lambert, Secretary of Board of Directors, Lamoni, Iowa.

4. By the purchase of scholarships, partial or whole. For terms apply to J. T. Pence or D. F. Lambert, as above.

5. By complying with the law of tithing, freewill offerings, or consecration.

There are names going down to posterity whose best claim to a place in the memories of the people is that they have "done what they could," by endowing a school, college, or university; and while this may be said to be one of the ways of the world, the fact remains that the wise man has said, "Get wisdom; with all thy getting get understanding;" Jesus has said, "Be ye perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect;" and the voice of inspiration heard in our own day has placed on our records the words of the Savior, the Redeemer, our Lord and Christ:—

And I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms, that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you.—D. C. 85:21.

Therefore, verily I say unto you, my friends, call your solemn assembly, as I have commanded you; and as all have not faith, seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith.—D. C. 85:36.

"By their works" shall men make manifest their faith. Have we faith? Let us have works also.

CHARACTER SKETCH OF JOSEPH SMITH.

CHARACTER sketch of Joseph Smith, as given by Prof. Hugo Campbell, Toronto, Ontario, October 4, 1897, from a photograph placed in his hands by Elder Fred Gregory. Sketch was made without knowledge who the original of the photograph was.

"If the picture is true and not flattering as steel engravings often appear to be, the person must have possessed much more than ordinary mental power and brilliancy. The perceptive faculties are very prominently marked. Ready cognizance of facts; scholarly talent; a retentive memory and brilliant descriptive power, are qualities for which he should be distinguished. The head shows breadth enough to give much energy and force of character. Opportunity, education, and circumstances might make of him an orator and statesman. He possessed wonderful persuasive power; such a one could lead, influence, and impress the minds of others. He has much character; a high wrought organization; fine quality; can be extremely tender, gentle, kind, and affectionate, or stern, according to circumstances; but the natural leanings are much in the direction of the good and the true.

"If such a nature is redeemed and devoted to the service of the truth, the good results would be far reaching. Only the worst of circumstances with treachery on the part of those he has trusted, could make him a bad man.

"At the age when this picture was taken, the lines in the face are not so deeply marked as to show clearly the direction given to the faculties. Such a one requires only favoring environment to become a remarkable man and a power for good. If good then very good, and brilliant; for he is highly gifted mentally. He possesses wonderful social magnetism and is able to make his influence extensively felt. He resembles his mother and possesses much of her intuitions and instincts. The musical faculty is not easy to read in a picture; so far as can be seen, it should be of a high order, and his tastes are decidedly literary and artistic."

The foregoing character sketch of Joseph Smith, the Martyr, was sent us by Pres. Joseph Smith, and contains much of interest, both to the student of the religious movement inaugurated through his instrumentality, and the student of human nature. Joseph Smith was a puzzle to those who did not understand him, but to those familiar with the spirit and intent of the latter-day movement his character was not an anomaly. Men raised in the old forms of faith and attached to them by tradition and personal interest found it difficult to sufficiently free themselves from passion and prejudice to give his claims and work intelligent examination. With them it was a foregone conclusion that he was a knave and an impostor and his work of evil.

The foregoing examination, as stated, was made by Professor Campbell without knowing the identity of his subject. It presents the Martyr in an entirely different light than that in which his enemies and tradition have placed him. It speaks of the man throughout in terms of high commendation and shows that his nature was good and true and refined in character. The whole sketch presents the Seer as a man of noble nature, highly gifted, and of tendencies strongly leaning toward true purposes and influenced by correct ideals. This is what might be termed as in harmony with the eternal fitness of things, and is a scientific point in favor of the trueness of his mission: the Lord chose a suitable instrument through whom to convey the revelation of his divine will, and by whom an important part of it was to be executed: This was as it should have been.

The examination also serves to show that the Smith family were not deficient in force and intellectual character, as stated by their enemies. The tribute paid to his mother is a true one; the family inherited qualities of mind and heart that endeared them closely to the people—an intelligent people—among whom they played an important part in the development of the work. The many points brought out by the Professor's delineation are quite plain and in harmony with what personal associates of the Prophet claimed and still claim for him. He was richly gifted and strongly endowed. He was naturally a leader and exercised a strong influence over those among whom he was called to act. His natural endowments readily adjusted themselves to the spirit of the movement in which he was a chief actor.

The statement that "only the worst of circumstances with treachery on the part of those he has trusted, could make him a bad man," is significant and interesting. Joseph Smith was destined to meet "the worst of circumstances with treachery;" for from the inception of his work he was constantly harassed by difficulties and persecutions on every hand, and which culminated in his death. He was, like his Master, betrayed by some of his professed friends, in league or acting in harmony with the purposes of open enemies. His nature was confiding and forgiving, making unfaithfulness of friends a severe and sore trial. However, he died without permitting such elements to overcome him and did not become what such circumstances might make of many, a bad man; he maintained his integrity.

The true friends of Joseph Smith have not claimed and will not claim perfection for him, nor that he claimed to be more than a servant of God. They believe he lived and died worthily and honored the work in which he was permitted to act so important a part.

The phrenological examination of Professor Campbell is in harmony with what the coworkers of the latter-day Seer have claimed for him.

THE EDITOR IN CANADA.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH was at Chatham, Ontario, the 12th inst., enroute to Blenheim, London, St. Thomas, and Niagara Falls. He wrote from Chatham as follows:—

The Editor records the facts that he has filled an appointment at Wallaceburg, at which place the conference for the Chatham district was held, Saturday and Sunday, October 9 and 10, in the town hall. Brn. George Green and R. C. Evans looking after the interests of the work.

There are sixteen branches in the district, numbering some six hundred in membership. Of these fully one third were present, and seemed to enjoy the session in its variety, spiritual and social.

As at Toronto, the branch had arranged to feed the assembly in the lower rooms of the hall, while the meetings were held in the assembly room upstairs; all taking their meals in the hall at the same tables. It is both pleasant and economical, and gives the women folks of the resident families an opportunity to enjoy the sessions. And when it is reflected that meeting began at eight a. m., and lasted until 9:30 p. m., with intervals for dinner and supper only, it may be understood what was obtained by all attending in the hall, meetings, and meals.

The business of the conference was done Saturday morning and afternoon, leaving the evening of that day and all Sunday for prayer and preaching services.

On Saturday evening Bro. Arthur Leverton gave a characteristic sermon, and on Sunday morning Bro. R. C. Evans spoke. The Editor filled the afternoon and evening hours. The audience was large and very attentive. What good may have been done time must develop.

Brn. John Shields and Benjamin St. John, of the missionary force, were in attendance and aided in the business and other services of the occasion.

One thing is very apparent in these two districts, the London and the Chatham, and that is the spirit of push and enterprise in the work shown by nearly all. The faces of all were alight with the joy of the hope in the gospel of Christ.

There has been an excellent growth in both districts; and Bro. John Lake is not to be blamed for being loth to leave the field here; there are such excellent men and women who have received the word and been obedient to it. They all miss "Uncle John," but the work is in excellent hands and in good condition. Bro. Lake need have no fear that it will lag or be suffered to go down.

To-night we will be at Chatham, where a meeting is advertised for to-night.

A CO-OPERATIVE MOVEMENT.

FREDERICK L. BOOTH-TUCKER, commander of the Salvation Army in the United States, this week successfully negotiated a loan of five million dollars, which will be used for the establishment of farm colonies throughout the country. Part of the money will be invested for the maintenance of the Woodville colony, on the Panhandle road, near Pittsburg. By a well planned coöperative system the leaders of the progressive movement expect to build up prosperous communities that will in a short time overcome the vast debt.

New York capitalists are backing the commander in his immense undertaking. The Salvation Army colonization scheme is also being encouraged by the citizens in the various districts which have been selected.

The farm colony scheme has been under consideration by the leaders of the Salvation Army for a long time. Only recently, however, has the proposition been considered to secure large tracts of land for the purpose. The first farm to be located was near San Francisco. It is known as the Golden Gate farm. So far there are many signs that it will prosper.

Recently the Santa Fe railroad encouraged the army by offering a large tract of land, comprising thousands of acres, along its system. The company subscribed twenty-five thousand dollars as an inducement for the army to locate along the system. The residents of an uncultivated part of Arizona are raising fifty thousand dollars as an inducement for the army to locate in that district. These propositions have been under consideration by Commander Booth-Tucker for a long time. He has been to Europe in consultation with General Booth and others, and it is understood that when he returned to America, over a month ago, he had the advice to go ahead.

Wealthy men of New York City, interested in the work of the Salvation Army, are now willing to back the new colony scheme with their money. It is understood that a syndicate, composed of many influential persons, is attending to the raising of sufficient funds. This syndicate will hold its interest in the company, and stock will be distributed among them. For their investment they will receive three per cent interest.

Adjutant John T. Fynn, of the Pittsburg corps, received the news of Commander Tucker's success yesterday. He claims now that the colonizations will be a sure go. He claims that the investment by the army, besides returning to it many dollars, will also be the means of saving many souls. The reports from the Golden Gate colony, near San Francisco, are very cheering. Products from the various farms being worked by the members are finding a ready market. Advanced orders are being received months ahead, and there is a prospect that the labor of the residents will all find recompense.

As soon as the army secures control of the money which has been negotiated for, the adjutant says the colonies will be operated on a larger scale. Industrial work will be established. A plan will be put into operation, as soon as possible, to allow each of those who are sent to the farms a certain piece of ground. They can find the material to build themselves homes, etc. If they are anxious to become agriculturists, they will have the soil to work. Useful occupations will be supplied, and those willing to labor can find plenty of it and to an advantage.

Adjutant Fynn says that applications are pouring in from Pittsburg by persons desirous of joining the army in order to partake of the new life in the West.

He says that Commander Booth-Tucker is now looking after the new property along the Santa Fe Railroad and is expected home next week. Then he will complete arrangements in the East for the establishment of the two new colonies. Adjutant Fynn, from what he can learn, says that the new colonies will offer every advantage to men out of employment. The climate, the fertile soil, and the wealthy backing will all aid in encouraging them. The land in Arizona, comprizing many thousand acres, will all be utilized. Workshops will be built and lines of trade introduced for the employment of idle men.

"There is no question but that the colonies will thrive," continued the adjutant. "Our commander has sufficient backing to go ahead with the work. Colonel Thomas Holland of New York, who has had charge of the general relief and social work, will be director of all the colonies. Colonel Holtz of New York, who worked with the foreigners, will succeed

Colonel Holland. Colonel Holtz will be in Pittsburg soon, to establish a German corps. We have no organized movement as yet to reach persons of that nationality.

"There is every prospect that the Pittsburg colony, to be located at Woodville, will thrive. This colony, of course, will not be conducted along the magnificent plans of the larger ones in the West. It will be a place of refuge for those who have no means of support. We can appeal to the prisoners and ex-convicts and others who suffer with the idea that the world is against them. Industrial buildings will be erected and probably will be in readiness when the colony is opened next spring. By prayer and kindness we think we can redeem many souls and much lost manhood. After our dependents are in a fit condition to help themselves, and if we find them to be worthy, it is the intention to send them to the West. Out there they can have their own property. They will pay us in small installments, and afterward will have something to live for."

Commander Booth-Tucker will be in Pittsburg on October 24. He will conduct services in one of the larger churches of the city. He will be accompanied by Lieutenant Colonel Evans of the Atlantic coast division, and staff. It is expected that the commander will tell more of his plans in connection with the big colonization scheme. As yet, but little are known of the details.

Farewell services will be held on Sunday to Adjutant and Mrs. Fynn, previous to their departure to Salt Lake City. The colonel will be succeeded on Thursday next by Staff Captain McFarland, of New Jersey.

Last week's HERALD contained a statement concerning some coöperative movements under the auspices of the Salvation Army. We insert herewith the complete item referred to, as published in the Pittsburg Commercial-Gazette in its issue of October 2.

Our own people, who believe in the gathering and establishment of the people, are interested in the subject. Some of them have studied the history and methods of coöperative movements and have profited both by their failures and their successes, as they should. A few months ago the feasibility of establishing coöperative settlements in the regions round about was discussed, pro. and con., by a number of the brethren, through the HERALD. Their statements and criticisms revealed a deep interest in the question and manifested that there was a growing desire that a movement be made in that direction, when it could be made in such spirit and under such conditions as would insure success. The law of God, which contemplates the gathering and settlement of the people, declares that the work must be done in his "own time" and in his "own way."

We publish the article for the reason that it is of interest to our general readers as showing the growing tendency among many of the people toward the bringing about of better conditions for the masses. A correct coöperative movement, as we have understood, is anticipated and has been provided for by the Master himself, and was revealed and proclaimed for the temporal salvation of his people when the world gave but little thought to the matter. But times have changed, and men recognize the necessity of coöperating with a view to the greatest good of all concerned.

Many of our brethren are so situated, with others of the toiling masses, that they are placed at great disadvantage, both by reason of having but precarious employment and because of the evils of the world about them. Under such conditions they feel deeply the burden of providing for and properly raising their families. To such a prospect of obtaining homes of their own in the cities, where property and living expenses are high, is a poor one. For them, in most instances, the problem must be solved by change of location and by such coöperation as will furnish a solution of their perplexed situation.

We publish the article referred to, not for the purpose of causing discontent or of championing any movement not strictly within the provisions of the law of God, but to stimulate thought with a view to making essential preparation along certain lines for what is to be accomplished in the proper time—that is, when the people are prepared for it. Thought upon the problem will doubtless prove profitable.

In this connection we desire to call attention to some matters that, upon the part of a number at least, seem to require better attention than has been given them. We state them in passing, not as exhaustively treating the subject, but to briefly mention some leading points. In the revelation of 1873 the Lord thus instructed the church:—

It is not expedient in me that there shall be any stakes appointed until I command my people. When it shall be necessary I will command that they be established. Let my commandments to gather into the regions round about, and the counsel of the elders of my church guide in this matter until it shall be otherwise given of me.—D. C. 117: 11.

In harmony with that instruction and evidently in accordance with the spirit of the gathering many of the brethren in position to do so have located in Missouri and Iowa, in the regions named, and so far as they have conducted their affairs judiciously, have done well. A number of others, however, have made the mistake of leaving locations where they were both temporally prosperous and in position to do well by the cause locally, and have moved out without definite arrangements, practically "taking chances" on future success. The law, in addition to the foregoing, admonishes against being "in haste" and commands that all things "be prepared" beforehand. These admonitions some have disregarded, practically becoming a law unto themselves. Others still have sold out and bought from or traded with private persons or dealers in real estate without seeing for themselves what they were getting in return, and as a consequence in most cases have been disappointed and greatly tried.

All such movements are wrong and unbusinesslike, and the saints should be warned against jeopardizing their interests by such loose methods of doing business. Persons should see and know what they are doing and be fully informed concerning property purchased or taken in exchange, unless they are perfectly satisfied to take risks concerning the honesty and judgment of others acting for them. All men are not honest, nor are all men sufficiently unselfish in business matters to do by others as they would be done by. It is also true that dissatisfaction often results where parties have acted in good faith for others as they would have acted for themselves.

The best policy, the true policy, in our judgment and experience, is to personally see what one buys or receives in trade, and to see to it that business matters are conducted according to strict business rules, whether such transactions be made with members of the church, with relatives, or with outsiders. Transactions so carried on result in prevention of advantage being taken and of misunderstandings.

A business maxim in vogue in the world is, "Let the purchaser beware." We do not believe in the principles of transacting business by which such warning becomes necessary; and such business methods are contrary to the spirit of the gospel. But we are admonished that Gentile times and Gentile rules are still in vogue to an extent, and that so long as they prevail and until men occupy much higher ground, it is often necessary that the purchaser beware. In the sense that a man should see and act on an actual knowledge of a situation, it is also proper that he should thus know what he is about, as stated.

We are aware that with some and of some such statements are unnecessary, but know that with others—both purchasers and sellers—they are not. The law of God which commands as cited, plainly implies intelligent foresight and care in the interests of the people. It is designed to prevent hasty, speculative, and injudicious action, which action has always ended and must ever end in failure and disappointment. The counsel of the law of God is just and true. It is in harmony with good common sense business judgment and designed to prevent or insure against wrong movements.

In harmony with the provisions of the law a joint council of the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric, adopted the following, in the year 1894:—

Resolved that all parties wishing to change their location be recommended to correspond with the Bishopric for information.

This is commended to all whom it may concern.

The movement of the church has been toward centralization in harmony with the word to gather into the regions round about, as wisdom dictated. To some of those who contemplate change of location, including sale or exchange of property, the foregoing may be of value.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. J. H. LAKE wrote from Sandwich, Illinois, October 12, of the late conference of the Northeastern Illinois district, held at that point:—

The conference of this district has just closed. We had a very enjoyable time, said by some to be the best conference ever held in this district. The preaching was good, and the prayer meetings were spiritual, and peace ruled in the business sessions. There were five ordinations; two elders and three priests. They were recommended for ordination to the June conference, but were referred to the president of the mission; so I trust all has been done satisfactorily. The Spirit of the Lord was with us in the ordinations and was felt and realized by many in the congregation, and they spoke of it and bore testimony of the same. Bro. W. A. McDowell was with us and helped very effectually. Bro. J. S. Patterson was with us and seemed to enjoy a peaceful and pleasant spirit, and good reports come from Chicago of his labors there as the president of the branch. He is devoting all his time to the ministry.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. GEORGE MONTAGUE, in charge of the Southwestern mission, has an encouraging report to make of the progress of the work in that field. Writing from Standley, Indian Territory, the 12th inst., he says, in effect, that the General Conference appointees have been diligent and successful beyond any former period of labor. Reports show 319 sermons preached, 41 baptisms, besides other items of incidental labor. The local elders report 22 baptisms in addition. He has never seen a more progressive spirit in all parts of the field and feels greatly encouraged. The late district conference at Standley was a decided success. They now have a new district known as the Northeastern Texas and Choctaw district, with Bro. Ellis Short president.

The reunion of the Southern Illinois district, held at Arrington, Illinois, opening October 1, is reported by Bro. J. D. Stead as one of the best ever held in it. Brn. Bond, Slover, Morris, V. D. Baggerly, Stead, and Charles Barmore, of the ministry, were present. All enjoyed the preaching, social, and school sessions; many not of the church heard the word. Provision was made for another reunion, in '98.

With this number we close the discussion of "life insurance," believing the subject has been sufficiently treated, for the present at least.

Lamoni arrivals during the previous week include Bro. O. B. Thomas, from Colorado, and Bro. G. P. Lambert, of the Nauvoo district.

Bro. George Montague wrote from Standley, Indian Territory, the 15th inst., reporting the baptism of seven by Bro. W. B. Toney at that place, on the 14th. Bro. Montague may be addressed for a time at Moorhead, Iowa, his home, whither he has gone to rest and recover from the results of an attack of dengue fever, contracted while in Texas. Expects to return to his field as soon as able.

Bro. D. A. Hutchings of Elmo, Missouri, writes of his labors in the Nodaway district, where he finds openings and work to do. Late conference of the district a good one.

Yellow fever continues with but little change at New Orleans and Mobile. Texas ports are free.

Spain will send 5,000 troops to Cuba this month. General Weyler, recalled, has extended amnesty to forty-six more political prisoners. General Garcia attacked and captured the city of Bequita, in Santiago, defeating the Spaniards with heavy loss.

Severe earthquake shocks at Granada and Andalusia, Spain, October 13; the inhabitants panic stricken.

Heavy winds in Kansas of late have blown much of the early wheat from the ground in the western half of the State, which must be resown.

Spanish anarchists announce the early issue of a regular periodical for circulation in Spain.

Great distress is predicted to occur in western and southwestern Ireland during the winter.

* The Abyssinian army, 3,000 strong, was destroyed by the Somalis in Somaliland, in June last, but sixty being allowed to return alive.

Damage by cloudburst at Reading, Pennsylvania, on the 12th inst.

Mamund, India, advices announce that Jirga tribesmen have surrendered their rifles and have solemnly sworn to maintain peace. Troops forming the Mamund punitive expedition have destroyed twenty-five fortified villages and killed many insurgent natives. Burmese tribesmen attacked British officials and Sepoys at Mandalay, October 11, but were dispersed.

Nicaragua and Costa Rica appear to be on the eve of a desperate struggle.

The Federated Trades has decided to call out its members in sympathy with the English engineers' strike. It is estimated that 400,000 British workmen will be out of employment on account of the great labor dispute.

Continued rains, on the 11th, have further relieved the prolonged drought in the West and South.

The National Council of Switzerland, by a vote of 101 to 9, has adopted a bill making insurance against sickness compulsory in the case of all persons not having independent means.

The Budget committee of the Chamber of Deputies has voted to increase the French standing army by 12,000 men.

A mob made riotous demonstrations against increased government taxation at Rome, Italy, October 11. A number of policemen and rioters were killed and wounded. Revolutionary cries were raised during the melee.

Several people were killed and about twenty injured by the collapse of the dome of a Cincinnati theater, on the 15th during the play "Dangers of a great city." Domes are not the only dangerous things about theaters.

Corea, through its king, has declared itself an empire; this, it is stated, for the purpose of assuming and maintaining the spirit of modern progress and to insure against the assumptions of Russia, China, and Japan, who threaten her integrity.

A reported alliance offensive and defensive between Bulgaria and Turkey.

The saints of Kewanee, Illinois, are pushing work on a new brick chapel, located in the center of the city and where they hope to have a larger attendance than formerly. All are alive, working together for success, and, very properly, obtaining some help from friends not of the church. Brn. Jones and Willets are holding meetings in a Freewill Baptist church, at Mineral, Bureau County, thirteen miles distant, with encouraging prospects. This Bro. Jones wrote from Kewanee, late date.

The Cuban steamer Triton with over two hundred soldiers and civilians was lost of late, off the Cuban coast.

Bro. E. B. Hull, of Philadelphia, reports profitable sessions of the conference and convention of that district, held in September.

Local papers sent us by Bro. Henry Broadway, of New Castle, New South Wales, contain friendly notices of services held by our people, who evidently are gaining the respect of many not of the faith.

"Right is right since God is God;
And right the day must win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,—
To falter would be sin."

SONG OF PRAISE.

Sweet the thought unto my soul;
Angels o'er me have control,
Making mind and body whole;
Thanks to God.

Savior, loving Savior, mine!
O'er my life his light doth shine;
Round my path love's flowers twine
Where I've trod.

Mercies unto me are giv'n;
Mercies manifold from heav'n
Now descend from morn till ev'n
From above.

Ah! the blessings are so sweet,
Each one all in all complete,
While we find at Jesus' feet
God's dear love.

May each thought and act of mine
Be in praise of him divine,
While I worship at the shrine
Of my Lord.

From the world my mind be riv'n,
Go! the things for which I've striv'n!
All my life in service giv'n
My reward.

WORK FOR THE CHILDREN.

WORK for men and women is good; but work for children is better. Success in winning adults to the right way is to be rejoiced over; but success in winning children to a stand for the right is a cause for greater rejoicing. A child has larger possibilities than an adult; and, so far, there is more in him prospectively. A child has fewer drawbacks—from bad habits and the weakness which comes of successive failures—than an adult has; and so far there is more hope of his continuance in well-doing. These truths would seem undeniable; yet how many pastors and preachers write ten sermons, and conduct ten prayer meetings, and make ten pastoral calls, with the idea of reaching and influencing some grown person, where they do one of these things with an eye to the children's benefit. But perhaps—perhaps—this is because they see it is more than ten times as hard to reach an adult as a child, in religious things. There is something in that.—Sel.

WESTON, Iowa.

Dear Sisters:—It has been a long time since I have written to our beloved Column, not because I have lost interest in it, but because I know that there are many abler pens than mine; but God will not reward me for what some one else has done. Why is it we have so few letters in our Column? Dear sisters, let us wake up and do our duty and make it what it should be, a source of spiritual strength to the toiling mothers in Zion. In this way we may be able to bear one another's burdens. I rejoice with you in this glorious work in which we are engaged, for I know this work is of God, for I have received many testimonies of the truth of its divinity and of the loving watchcare our heavenly Father keeps over us, if we truly love him and try to keep his commandments. Dear mothers who have not the privilege of sending your children to Sunday school, send for a Quarterly and on the Sabbath day gather your little ones around you and have a little Sunday school at home, and if you do your part faithfully, God will crown your labors with success, and the influence of a true-hearted mother will be a lasting benefit to her children. I believe there are great responsibilities resting upon us as mothers, to whom the Master has intrusted the lambs of his flock, and he will hold us responsible for how we bring them up. Let us think about these things, and let us try to be lively stones and help to roll on the work of God, that we may be found among the wise virgins that shall be prepared to meet our Savior when he shall come to make up his jewels.

Your sister,

CHRISTINA RASMUSSEN.

GOD KNOWS IT ALL.

YES, and right glad are we that he does know it all. And, dear brother and sister, do not your hearts respond, Amen? Yes, we all are glad that Father knows our every kindly meant effort for the benefit of others. We are glad that he knows, too, how often and how deeply our souls have been wounded, in consequence of the apparent unappreciation of those whom we had favored—and sometimes by the unmistakable evidence of ingratitude exhibited by the same. Often such experience has for a time seemed to crush our once determined purpose to do good, till our soul seemed almost blighted within us, or like a ship dashed upon the breakers; then some favorable circumstance would present itself, and our drooping spirits would revive and we would renew our efforts, believing that whatsoever we do to the least of his, we do unto him, and also that he that is faithful in little is faithful in much.

Yes, 'tis hard when we have so many times tried to do thus by others in their need, to have them, when we are needing help, and especially sympathy, turn away with indifference, and speak unkindly and unjustly to us and of us. Then have we been right glad that Father and our dear Elder Brother know it all. Not that we wish to have punishment inflicted by them upon those who have troubled us, but that we may draw nearer to them and receive of the Spirit that will enable us to exclaim, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do!" 'Tis blessed to know that we have been faithful to our calling, be it ever so humble, or be it ever so exalted; and 'tis more blessed to know, in regard to all such instances, that our soul is untarnished by the influences that have met us.

True, we each have made mistakes, have erred in judgment, or in a moment of vexation yielded to our own weak points, and thereby sinned; yet are we glad God knows it all, for when we, like Peter, have seen our weakness, we can go to him and seek forgiveness and obtain the favor of strength and wisdom, that we may boldly meet other trials, and thereby come off unstained conquerors. We are, O so glad that erring mortals cannot pass the final judgment, and we feel to take courage when we think that the people of the world heaped their various persecutions upon the Son of righteousness; and also, when we think that all who would live godly lives shall suffer persecutions.

O Father, help us all to look away from our trials, and to look up and beyond them; and may our souls expand with the hope of being purified, and made fit to dwell in that land where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest. These are days of tribulation, behind us and before us, on the right hand and on the left. 'Tis like being dashed among the breakers, and no one but the Pilot and lifeboat can take us safely through.

Thoughts arising from circumstances on a stormy Sabbath. If they should encourage one dear brother or sister, we shall not have scribbled in vain. SR. ALMIRA.

'Tis not the wide phylactery,

Nor stubborn fast, nor stated prayers,

That makes us saints; we judge the tree

By what it bears.—Selected.

If you have not a separate room for your primary class, make one with curtains in one corner of your church. You will be delighted with the good results.

Put what you know into practice, then seek for more knowledge. Why come to a dusty, dark, illy ventilated room? Why be tardy? Why go unprepared to your work? We all know this is not right in Sunday school work as well as we know many other things. Then why do it?

By request, Bro. J. F. Mintun visited the Pottawattamie district convention, September 18, 19, at Weston, Iowa, and did much good, "giving advice and encouragement, and inspiring new zeal into all." So wrote the district superintendent, Sr. Julia Hansen.

The revised Constitution and By-Laws of the General Sunday School Association can now be had from the Herald Office. Send ten cents per dozen to cover postage and cost of mailing. They contain all the amendments adopted at the last General Convention. Every Sunday school worker should study them.

The General Superintendent was away from home about six weeks, attending the various reunions; during which time many letters have come and so far not been answered. As many of them are of a nature to require a large amount of work to answer, and other work crowding in for a turn, we are not able to reach it as soon as we would like. But we do the best we can. The man who follows the plough, or works at the bench all day long, cannot be on time with his extra work as he might wish or as others unacquainted with him might expect. We hope none will feel that we are indifferent to their inquiries because we have waited so long. We will reach them by and by.

"A teacher that simply causes another to know is a failure. The really successful teacher is the one that causes others to do also."—Joseph Roberts in Sunday School newspaper, Fremont district.

Quite a number of good reports have been received from the "home Sabbath schools" within the past few weeks. Those who have faithfully tried it find it a success. Many of our isolated families and groups of saints are receiving and studying the Quarterlies regularly, and at stated times on the Sabbath day much the same as in a larger school. If all our isolated saints who feel so keenly the want of branch privileges would secure Quarterlies and have a real Sabbath school in their own home, assembling the family at a certain hour each Sabbath day, singing, praying, and studying the lesson in the regular way; yes, if they would do this, much of the privation would be forgotten. What was a long weary Sabbath would become a day of rest, refreshment, and joy. That spiritual spark that is now so nearly gone out would soon be fanned into a living flame. Try it, and seek God's blessing upon your efforts. He never forgets the faithful, earnest, devout soul. The ministry can greatly aid us and them in this "home Sunday school work," as many are now doing. Brethren, whenever you visit a family that is not near a branch or Sunday school, talk this over with them and induce them to try it, if you can. Let us do what we can for the scattered saints and their children.

SELF-INTROSPECTION.

WHAT?

1. What do I know about the gospel?
2. What do I teach, the gospel or the Quarterlies?
3. What are my plans?

HOW?

4. How many hours do I use in preparation?
5. How do I use the Bibles and Quarterlies in recitation?
6. How many of my imperfections are my pupils imitating?

WHEN?

7. When do I prepare my work?
8. When do my class get to Sunday school, before or after me?
9. When do I pray?

WHERE?

10. Where are my treasures? Are they in the Sunday school work?
11. Where do I spend the Sabbath?
12. Where are my class to be found on the Sabbath?

in Sunday school newspaper, read in Fremont district convention.

ENTERTAINING VISITORS.

JUST above the door, or on the wall, is inscribed the word "Welcome." That term is meaningless to the stranger unless, when he enters the Sunday school room, he is made to feel it from the interest you take in him. Have you ever entered a meetinghouse when you have felt a sensation of coolness and indifference on the part of those in attendance? If you have, did you care to enter again?

Those who have experienced this kind of a reception may better understand the necessity of our taking more than a passing notice of strangers, or visitors, who come to our Sabbath schools. It should be the duty of the superintendent, or his assistants, to see that these visitors are interested, and that they truly feel "welcome." If necessary, lay formality aside, and enter at once into their confidence. Lead them into the workings of the school. Invite them to enter one of the classes and take part in the exercises. If not desirous to do so, show them to a pleasant seat, and do not neglect to insist on their frequent visits. JOSEPH ROBERTS.

LLANELLY, Wales, Sept. 27.

Editors Herald:—Conference over at Manchester, my next thought was to find a home for Sr. Pitt while I was traveling through my mission. We received a kind invitation from wife's aunt to visit Bristol. Taking advantage of an excursion rate, we bade our kind friends at Manchester adieu. August 16 found us in the old but pretty city of Bristol. We received a hearty welcome from aunt and cousins; and though I had never met them, in a few minutes we seemed well acquainted and made to feel at home. This had been my wife's home previous to coming to America, and it was a great joy to her to be welcomed home once more. A more happy home I never saw; the secret of it all was, love reigned supreme. Nothing like a frown or a scowl; each seemed to take delight in making each other happy. Sr. Pitt says she is being spoiled; she certainly will be if kindness can do it. Arrangements were made for a room, so wife is nicely located in what I am authorized to call our English home. Am thankful the Lord has thus kindly provided for us. Our relatives know nothing of the gospel excepting the little we have been able to tell them. Of course it all seems strange to them; they do not oppose it, but seem delighted to have us tell them about it, and they are looking into it. We hope the Lord will open their hearts and minds to its reception. I do not know of a member of the church in Bristol. If this should meet the eye of anyone who does, if they will give us their address they will confer a favor. I have been told a number of the first organization lived here. I should much like to find either them or their children. I hope something may be done towards starting the work here; but it is harder to start in a new place here than in America. No schoolhouses or churches to be had. Our only access to the people seems to be outdoor preaching; and there is so much rain here that even that is very difficult. But we remember that this is the Lord's work, and he is all powerful. We will try to be faithful, so that he may use us.

August 21, we took advantage of a cheap trip to London. Met a kind welcome at Bro. Bradshaw's, and on Sunday met with the saints, preached Sunday morning and evening, and addressed the Sunday school in the afternoon. The saints are quite pleased with their new chapel; it is hardly as large as I expected. They themselves think they hardly got their money's worth, but it is a great source of comfort to them to have a house of their own. I felt at home among them, excepting in their singing. I haven't been able to find why they prefer other tunes to our own. Some of our most familiar pieces are sung to the queerest tunes, and nothing like as pretty as our own, and some of them, oh so slow. In one meeting I struck up "Redeemer of Israel" as we sing it. Afterwards the leader asked me if that was the way we sung it in America. I answered that it was. He replied, "It was rather sharp." Some of the tunes require a repetition of the same words over and over again. Some sing "Redeemer of Israel" to the old darkey melody, "Uncle Ned." When I repeated the words of the song they were surprised. If it were not for the peculiar tunes, I think the singing here would be better than ours in America. They have good voices, and they do not let the leaders do it all, but make the house ring with melody. I hope they will adopt the Hymnal; it only costs fifty cents, and the small books without the music much less. A few Hymnals, with a number of the smaller books for the congregation, would make a great improvement in the singing, I feel sure. The Welsh are splendid singers; but here I am lost again, as they sing mostly in Welsh.

But to return. I remained in London over two Sundays, preached seven times; not very large audiences, but the saints turned out, and a few strangers came. I was well received, and shall always retain a warm place in my heart for the saints in London, and assure them that their words of encouragement were appreciated. I shall try and prove worthy of them. On Sunday afternoon Bro. Bradshaw and I took a walk to Victoria Park. Here was a sight I shall never forget. It seems to be a general place for outdoor preaching. Representatives of different denominations brought with them folding pulpits and went at it, as is sometimes said, "for all they were worth," surrounded by hundreds of people. The first we heard was a man advocating Catholicism. He had just got nicely started, when a few feet from him another minister, I think of the Church of England, began speaking on the subject of the cross. The first man soon lost most of his crowd, but both men kept on in plain hearing distance of each other. Right back of these an infidel erected his pulpit and went at it, and gathered a large crowd about him. In front of these another man was exposing the evils of the Catholic Church. A short distance from him another was speaking on the leading events of the day. Back of him some converted Jews were advocating Christ. Here I was invited to speak, and did so from the text, "Then said Jesus to those Jews who believed on him, If ye continue in my word," etc., in which I endeavored to show that it was not sufficient for them merely to acknowledge Jesus to be the Christ, but that they must obey, and continue in his word. They seemed to indorse what I said. Bro. Bradshaw found out their address and promised to visit them. Such a Babylon I never saw. Some good may be done at these places, but I don't know.

During the week wife and I took in some of the sights of this wonderful city. One place of interest to her was the house where she was born—a three story brick, still in a good state of preservation. We then boarded a car of the underground railway, which landed us at Westminster Bridge. Crossing over we had our first view of the river Thames. The houses of Parliament loomed up tall and grand. They are very handsome buildings. We were denied admittance, so we walked around about two blocks and entered Westminster Abbey—a grand building indeed. I would like to give a brief description of some of the wonderful relics of the past this old building contains, but the Herald would not be large enough for my letter; so shall have to pass them all by. I said to my wife, "What I have seen to-day has paid me for coming over." Among the other places visited was St. Paul's Cathedral, Kew gardens, Hampton Court, the Royal art gallery, and Tower of London. These places were all free to the public, and we made the most of our time. But how this great city is going to be reached by the gospel is a problem too big for us to solve. But this we can say without fear; if all the members had lived up to their covenant, the problem would not be great. The enemy has got on the inside, and has done his work well; not merely in England but in other places. It may be a little late for some, but I think even now the best way to reach the masses is by each living up to their privileges, and show by a godly walk and conversation that our gospel is the power of God unto salvation. No matter how eloquently our elders may preach, or what spirit power is manifest, to be successful we must make spiritual homes for those who are in error, or they will not unite with us; and this can only be brought about by a pure life. Above everything else then, let us all contend for purity.

Returning to Bristol I left Sr. Pitt and came on to South Wales to attend the Western district conference. I stopped at Morrision, where I again met my friend and brother, Ernest Dewsnup, who kindly "took me in." We attended conference at Llanelly. A good spirit was manifest throughout. Here again the ministry did all the business. The people are acquainted with Bro. Griffiths here, and he is held in high esteem. He will no doubt be sorry to learn that some have gone back to their tea since he left. But they are good, kind saints, and bear up against their obstacles well. They have a good meeting-house, members few, and have to work hard for a living; but they keep up their meetings. The sisters circulate tracts from door to door as well as the brethren, and endeavor to let their light shine. If our friends in America would send us Heralds, Ensigns, or tracts, we could make good use of them; we are in great need of them. Will you not therefore kindly send your papers to us rather than destroy them. But my letter is growing too long, so must stop. I am feeling well, kindly received, and blessed in my work. Am neither homesick nor discouraged, though needing your prayers that I may be faithful and make my mission a success.

Yours in bonds,

F. G. PITT.

Editors Herald:—The few missionaries here are not idle; we are kept busy answering more calls than we can fill. We attended the reunion near Matherson, September 3 till 13, and from there home to attend the debate between Bro. C. R. Duncan and a Disciple minister, commencing September 20, lasting seven nights—the writer acting as moderator for Bro. Duncan. The Book of Mormon question was on trial first, for four nights, then the Disciple or Christian proposition for three nights; all of which were handled in a masterly manner by Bro. Duncan. Of course the reverend gentleman left no stones unturned to prove "old Joe," as he called him, a great imposter, polygamist, etc.; but Bro. Duncan proved too much for him, having an answer ready for every argument he would make, and especially on the Book of Mormon. His knowledge and information on that subject makes him a very able defender of the sealed book. They worked us the Rev. "Holy" Clark's old trick, and on the last night of the first proposition they run in all the Campbellites they could and left it to a vote. Of course they beat us bad; but there was such a protest went up, that some one moved that no one be allowed to vote only those belonging to no church. So the vote was called and again we were beaten; but notwithstanding twenty-two out of any church, said by their standing up they believed in the divinity of the Book of Mormon. Those who knew say quite a number of their votes were Campbellites, evidently showing that the Campbellite Church is no church at all, as was plainly shown on the second proposition; but this time there was no vote taken, and they did not seem anxious for one.

Bro. Duncan is twelve miles north, where a young lady is to be baptized. Several from the neighborhood of the debate are asking, When will you and Bro. Duncan come and preach for us? This is in the same school-house where the debate was held. One man who is not a member of any church was heard to say: "Well, Duncan proved one thing if nothing else, and that is that he is a gentleman." Of course he did not sweep everything, but taking all together I consider it quite a victory.

As to the work in Oklahoma, we think it is moving along nicely, and all seem to be encouraged to strive on, believing the Lord will give the increase. Ever praying for the upbuilding of Zion,
S. J. HINKLE.

BOONE, Iowa, Oct. 5.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Roth and I closed tent meetings at Nevada Sunday evening. The interest was excellent. Bro. Roth was at his best and preached with considerable power; he no doubt made one of the best efforts of his life last Sunday night. The tent was by far too small to hold the people that came to listen to the last sermon. I never saw so many old people attend and continue interested as at Nevada, and Bro. Roth says the same. Two ladies were baptized. They were members of the Christian Church up to the time they united with us. There are several in Nevada that believe that we preach more truth than the other churches do. One old gentleman said, "I have lived here forty years, but never heard the gospel preached before." One hotel keeper offered us free board—we stayed one night with him. When we were coming away we were repeatedly asked to come back again. The opinion was expressed by quite a number that if our labors were continued we would raise a branch in town. Bro. Hardy and family, the only saints in Nevada, did their part nobly; may our heavenly Father bless them in return for kindness shown us. I baptized one of Sr. Russell's daughters to-day.

Our district conference meets at Runnells next Saturday. I believe each of the ministry laboring in this district will have their quota of baptisms to report. All are laboring to build and encourage, and to make all acquainted with the truth of the gospel.

I went to Eagle Grove early in September, and held thirteen meetings with good attendance. There are some excellent saints living there. I baptized Mrs. Christenson; she was very weak and sickly at the time. Although she had suffered much with heart disease and other afflictions, she discontinued taking medicine the night before her baptism, and never took any more; but she continued to gain in strength and health from that time. May the Lord continue to bless her.

Bro. C. Scott and I have been hindered in our preaching by having to sit on four courts of elders. On two occasions we had to sit up till dawn next morning. The field looks quite clear at present, and I think there is a brighter day for the Des Moines district. It is said that the prospects in the Des Moines branch are better than for years past; there seems to be greater unity, and Brn. Cook, Gunsolley, Emsley, and Johnson are hard at work. I ought to have mentioned the kindness shown us by the director of the Baptist church in Nevada, giving us the use of their baptismal font free of charge, while others have to pay for its use.

Yours in haste,

E. B. MORGAN.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, Oct. 8.

Editors Herald:—We are still alive and in the faith. Satan in his sedulous and subtle way has been at work here during the past few months, and has done some injury; but from the report of the branch president last night his farther encroachment is checked, and prospects indicate his future evacuation. How easily can Satan undo the work of years when saints permit him to use them as his instruments! One thing, these experiences bring lessons never forgotten! We held an excellent business meeting last night; provisions were made for repairing and painting the church; officers unanimously elected, and a spirit of harmony and union which portends a return of spiritual power and godlike unity prevailed.

I expect to go to Bartlett on Monday to assist Bro. Henry Kemp in a series of meetings. Calls are coming from all quarters, and if we answer half of them we will be kept busy.

I have been hindered more in my work this year than in any previous one of my ministry. What, with personal relaxation in the early spring, together with two severe and protracted spells of sickness on the part of my wife necessitating my constant attendance at home, and the babe having a siege of malaria fever, it seems we have had our share. Whether it is Providence in disguise I know not; but if so, I apprehend he will reveal himself ere the experience closes, that we may know why he thus visits. I, for one, do not believe that, as a rule, bodily sickness comes either as a manifestation of God's love or wrath, so much as a result of our ignorance or folly. If we knew more we would suffer less. If we could locate the main cause of our misery we would find that premature sickness and death is due to ignorance, Satan, or sin, rather than a dispensation of Providence. That Satan intercepts and impairs our usefulness I'm assured, and could we have more faith in God much could be averted. I prefer to plead ignorance rather than to pose as a martyr at the hands of an unexplainable Deity. If God afflicts it is for a purpose, and unless that purpose is disclosed to the sufferer, the lesson is lost and God has labored in vain. We accede that God permits these experiences; but if we knew more, or lived more circumspectly, they might not be necessary. The "whys" and "wherefores" of probation are an unfathomable mystery to me, and when I listen to some who seem (?) to comprehend the whole scheme I am impressed with the magnitude of my own ignorance, or their supreme folly. I'm content to act my part in the "now," permitting the "then" to make its own revelations.

I frankly confess that to reconcile much of the undesirable in mortal experience, with the justice of an inscrutable Providence, is beyond my mentality; yet simply because I willingly defer to his judgment, it does not necessarily follow that I should pose as his interpreter, and proceed to "tell it all." I prefer to say, "I don't know," and leave the disclosure to the arbitrations of time, which I have no fear will make all things plain, and then disclose the wisdom of an unerring Providence. It may evidence my incapacity as a minister for Christ, yet I must humbly acknowledge my insufficiency, and plead guilty to an incapacity for the unknowable.

As evidencing our faith in the final victory of right over wrong, the dethronement of Satan and sin, and the vindication of God and truth, we have tendered our services to the Captain of our salvation, and shall continue in the ranks, asking no furlough and succumbing not to repulses, either till victory perches on our banner, the enemy taken and our Captain crowned, or till he who knows shall say "it is enough," and shall release us from farther obligations. If a man has a store of latent character force I know of no better field for development than in the latter-day work, for it furnishes such varied conditions, so many surprises, that opportunity for experience is never lacking. Transition is evident everywhere, and the inconstancy of most mortals is a striking proof of the Mosaic truism, "Man was made of dust." Were it not that I'm assured that God is at the helm, I could never stand; but believing that he is, I consider his condescension in noting poor me, and it begets a charity for finite associates that hatred flees away and love—Divine love—permeates my being. To stand alone for right, regardless of others, is a Christlike characteristic; and though it may bring disfavor and opposition now, it will prepare us for the crowning "by and by."

May God help us to endure faithful, and to be content with the "knowable," to be humble, and seek to labor where the Spirit guides.

Yours trustingly,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

HEPPNER, Oregon, Sept. 28.

Editors Herald:—I was called to preach the funeral sermon of Sr. Ellen E. Clark, on Sunday, September 19. About four years ago I was the only one in or near Condon who took the Ensign. In its pages was written a sermon, which to my mind was just grand. John and Ellen Clark were at that time members of no church; Sr. Clark had been a Lutheran. Brother John and I sat down on the sidewalk, and I related to him as near as I could the sermon referred to; he listened very attentively until I was through; when, looking up at me, he said, Walt, that is just what I have been looking for all my life; the thought has followed me since I was a small boy that I would see Jesus in this life. He went home and told his wife. They sent to my home and got the Ensign. From that time forward the Ensign was eagerly read, and all I knew was told them.

In course of time Bro. John Davis came to Condon, and very ably presented the angel's message, which to them was like bread to a starving man; and on September 15, 1895, they were both led down into the water by Bro. Davis, to rise to newness of life, which was fulfilled in them both. At her confirmation the promise was given her that if she would prove faithful she would be the means of bringing her own family into the kingdom of God, which promise has been fulfilled; three of her daughters have followed her, and with proper care others will soon follow.

Early last winter she contracted a severe cold, which settled on her lungs. Consumption followed; everything human was done that could be, but no relief came. She came to Heppner to consult a physician, who prescribed for her; but her faith was in God and not man. Your writer administered to her, and that night she rested without pain. The day following her husband took her home, a distance of forty miles, when Bro. Luff administered to her, when the pain left her body, and she felt the presence of God's Spirit with her. But God who doeth all things well, saw fit on September 8, 1897, to take her unto himself. Before she died she had the testimony that her efforts to please God were accepted, and that she should rise in the resurrection with the just. What consolation! How cheering the thought for saints to see one in their life, walk with and then to know that such an one has pleased God.

As before-stated, she died on the 8th. A messenger was sent, but on account of sickness in my family I could not go; but on Sunday, September 19, friends and relatives gathered in Condon's beautiful little church, where with good liberty I spoke to them for an hour from Matthew 5: 8; and truly it caused my heart to rejoice to see the wrapt attention, while tears ran down the cheeks of those who know not God.

Many calls came for Bro. Luff at that place again; but for fear of asking too much space, I will close, by saying, Saints, look up! Look at the dying world around you; see men who know not what you know; then let us by our example show them that truly God is with his people, is my prayer in Jesus' name.

Yours for truth,

W. A. GOODWIN.

RAVENDEN SPRINGS, Ark., Oct. 8.

Editors Herald:—When I last wrote you I had just commenced a meeting at Coats, Arkansas. I preached a series of thirteen sermons and had a good hearing from start to finish; several seemed almost persuaded. Elder Baldwin was with me the first Saturday and Sunday and rendered valuable assistance.

At Cabin Creek schoolhouse I preached six times; baptized two young men at the close, and left several others believing. Two Roman Catholics were converted, but would not be baptized because of trouble in their families.

Sunday, October 3, I met with the saints of Martin's Creek branch at their regular place of meeting; the house was about full, and several young men and boys were outside, some of them peeping in at the windows.

Bro. Baldwin called on the writer to deliver the sermon at eleven o'clock, and while I was speaking I had an experience which I hope I will never have again. Two of these young men of the "baser sort" had a fist and skull fight in less than one hundred feet from the house opposite the windows, where we could all see them; several raised to their feet to look, but only one left the house. When the fight was over, we proceeded with the service. The good sisters had brought dinner to church, and as soon as dinner was over we had sacrament and social service. My heart was cheered when I heard many of the saints testify and express their hope in a glorious resurrection.

Bro. Baldwin and I came to Kingsville and preached at night, expecting to continue for a week or more, having previously published our meetings in the newspapers; but lo, the ire of his Satanic Majesty was raised and operated upon one W. D. Ellis, a Methodist circuit rider, causing him to send me a letter, stating among other things that the citizens in their patience would not tolerate the meeting, and that my presence would be an imposition, etc. Ellis circulated a written protest, and false and slanderous stories against our doctrine, in order to get signers to the protest; thus he obtained seventeen names and had them published in the same papers that gave notice of our meetings. As Bro. B. was not willing to give up the meeting we went again on Monday night, and found Ellis sitting on a large stone in the edge of the village, whetting his knife on his hand, and he called us to a halt; among other things he told Bro. B. to prepare to meet his God. Bro. B. only laughed at him, and we rode on to the church and preached to a few saints, besides three men and four boys. So we left our testimony with them and postponed the meeting until Sunday. The same spirit or power that robbed and killed the saints in former and latter days is still loose in the land. Bro. Baldwin will fill the appointment at Kingsville on Sunday, and I will go to White County on Saturday if the Lord wills.

In conclusion I will say that I have forty acres of fine fruit land, good house and small orchard, one mile from Pomona, Missouri, which I wish to sell. Write for terms, stating how much you wish to pay cash.

JOSEPH WARD.

CENTERVILLE, W. Va., Oct. 9.

Editors Herald:—Conference of West Virginia district, at Sand Hill, was a decided success, we having the best representation the district has ever had—most of the branches being well represented. The work in this the West Virginia district is in good condition, with prospects for a good harvest in the near future. A great deal of prejudice has been removed, and new ways and places being opened up.

Shortly after the close of conference, in connection with Bro. G. H. Godby, president of district, we made a trip into Lewis County, Kentucky, where the Brighamites have quite a following, and gave them a genuine surprise, as they had never heard that there was any other branch of the church, and when we showed them from their own Doctrine and Covenants that we were the true successors of Joseph Smith, and that all other factions of the church were apostates, they treated us very coldly and would not come out to hear. We distributed some literature and left some investigating. We got an insertion in the Vanceburg Sun, the only paper in Lewis County, to the effect that we were the true and lawful successors to Joseph Smith, and that all others calling themselves Latter Day Saints or Mormons were apostates from the original church.

The Brighamites held their district conference in the town of Vanceburg, last August a year ago, but made no converts in that place. They have twenty-six members in the county, with quite a following in adjoining counties, making some two hundred members in northeast Kentucky. I wish to call attention of those of our church who are in charge of this mission, so that if it be possible they may send a man to labor in this part of the field at once, as I think a good work could be done, and there are many places the work could be opened up at a very little expense. I find in my travels among the Brighamites that they are ever ready and willing to uphold polygamy as an original tenet of the church in the days of Joseph the Seer, and they have a little book which they prize very highly, that devotes a great deal of its space in proof thereof.

Trusting that truth and light may prevail, and that all may eventually be saved in the kingdom of God, is my prayer in Jesus' name.

Editors Herald:—I am sorry to say sickness has come into our home, and for three weeks I have been confined to the house and under a skilled physician's care. This is the first time in the history of my church life that I have ever placed myself in the hands of a doctor; but I believe I have received honest treatment, and am glad to say I am getting well. I have suffered great agony and pain. It was not my lungs that troubled me, which heretofore has been my only trouble.

I believe our work here is still on the improve. Bro. Montague has done a good work here and was a father to me through my sickness. I shall try to get over the Southwest Texas district as soon as I can. I ask an interest in the prayers of the saints.

Ever your brother in the kingdom of God,

GENEVA, Ill., Oct. 13.

Editors Herald:—Our late conference at Sandwich, Illinois, October 9, 10, was largely attended by the church membership of the district, and the session was peaceful and spiritual. Visiting brethren, M. T. Short, E. M. Wildermuth, and W. A. McDowell, were in attendance. Two priests were ordained to the eldership, and two young men were ordained to the office of priest. The Holy Spirit was present to direct and bless. The young members of the church are coming to the front—both male and female—in their respective departments of church work; and under present conditions of spiritual evolution the work of the district is bound to advance with accelerated speed and power. Zion's Religio local representatives from different parts of the district organized a district "Religio" during the conference, and this department of work is proving to be an excellent school to educate and develop the young people of the church for the assumption of the duties and responsibilities of church life and work in all departments of church service. A number of young people were baptized during the conference.

The work in Chicago under the local management of Bro. J. S. Patterson, president of the branch, is in fair condition, and both branch and society work by the young people are in excellent accord so far as we can understand. We feel greatly encouraged over the energy and push displayed by the young people of the Chicago branch in behalf of the Lord's work in the city. But while we compliment the young people in this regard, we would not forget those who have "borne the burden in the heat of the day," and who are still pressing forward in the front rank of the Lord's army towards final victory and eternal rest. We are sorry to learn that Bro. C. D. Carter's health is poor.

Editors Herald:—We are doing the best we can. I still have a bad cough, but am able to preach every night. I baptized a gentleman yesterday who has been a minister for fourteen years, a Hollander, who is well posted in the Scriptures, and who can preach in Holland, as well as English. We hope he may be of great help to the work in the near future.

HITEMAN, Iowa, Oct. 8.

Editors Herald:—I see in the Ensign that I am reported by our Lamoni correspondent as being "somewhat feeble yet, but off into Missouri somewhere on his Master's business." Yes, true; in body I am "somewhat feeble," and can say as Paul did, "but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." (2 Cor. 4:16.) Therefore, I am firm in the faith of the gospel restored, and out on our Master's business; not in Missouri, but in Iowa, preaching the word. I have been in the Keb branch, where I closed a series of meetings October 4, preaching nine discourses to attentive listeners. I believe that good will be the result, for some acknowledged the truth of what they heard. Bro. John Brennan was sick when I went there, and called on me to administer to him. He bore his testimony of the Master's blessing, and went to work in the coal shaft next day. The saints there are alive in the latter-day work. They have a comfortable church to worship in, and have it paid for, only it needs papering or calcimining, then they will get it dedicated. I am at present in Hiteman. Bro. Hiram Brunson is here also, visiting his daughter and son-in-law, Bro. and Sr. Archibald. It was agreed at the prayer meeting on Wednesday evening that a series of meetings be held. I preached last evening, and Elder Brunson will preach tonight; good attention prevailed last night, and we hope it may continue, so that good to the Master's cause may be the result. I am as ever, your colaborer for the redemption of Zion, JOHN SHIPPY.

SCRIPTURAL LIFE INSURANCE.

THE arguments offered on both sides of the life insurance question are a multitude. Many on each side are plausible to the natural mind, but much of the argument is too far away from God. The question should not be what satisfies our reason, but what harmonizes with his word.

The fundamental idea of life insurance is the thought of desire or duty to extend one's provision for his dependents beyond the period of his own life. Does God require or desire this? The statement of Paul in 1 Timothy 5: 8:—

But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, can scarcely apply to a dead man, else we may sustain the charge of apostasy against the majority of the departed. Nor do I know of any scripture that would stretch any temporal obligation of anyone beyond his temporal existence. It is doubtless a manifestation of a deep and proper affection for those dependent upon us to desire to secure their perpetual temporal welfare; but it is not a divine requirement, and may conflict with the divine will.

It is assumed by life insurance advocates that temporal possessions are essentially advantageous; but the scriptures do not justify that thought. Wealth, acquired, inherited, or insured is as easily a curse as a blessing. Illustrations of this fact are to be found everywhere. But comparative and often absolute poverty are often the accompaniments and sometimes the cause of rich blessing. Christ's ministers are required to "leave all things and follow" Christ; to travel "without purse or scrip." The Son of man "had not where to rest his head." "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth" was his counsel.

But it is claimed that life insurance is not to secure wealth, but to guarantee necessities. Is it well to thus provide even necessities so long beforehand? The best lesson that any can learn is that of continual reliance upon God for all things. If there is not value in poverty, why are Christ's ministers required to be indigent? Had not our Father designed that we should continually trust him for present needs we would not have been taught to pray, "Give us this day our daily bread." If you cannot trust God to care for the temporal needs of your wife or child, how can you trust him to save your soul?

Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come.—1 Tim. 4: 8.

If, then, those dependent upon us cultivate godliness, they have promise of "the life that now is" as well as that which is to come. If they do not cultivate godliness, will we do for them in temporal provision what God might not? Godliness does not always secure what we would have in this life, but it invariably brings what we need.

For he shall deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also, and him that hath no helper.—Ps. 72: 12.

When we have departed, and our loved ones are "needy" or "poor," and have no "helper," he will deliver them when they cry unto him. If you teach your child to believe and trust such statements, you will leave him a better legacy than a life insurance policy. And you are not stimulating his faith or proving your own when you make provision beforehand for the failure of his faith or of the promise. Should direst poverty come to my child, and teach him loving trust in God, I could but rejoice in his "coming up through tribulation." Will we place the welfare of the body above that of the spirit?

He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth him out of the dunghill; that he may set him with princes, even with the princes of his people.—Ps. 113: 7, 8.

When the Lord does this with the son whose father was not insured, where will be the few thousands of sordid wealth that you have insured to your child? I quote these to show you how superior is the care of the all-Father to that of one father.

The Lord preserveth the strangers; he believeth the fatherless and widow.—Ps. 146: 9.

How much better to trust to the care of him whose the world is, than to hire the care of those who are grasping for the world.

Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed.—Ps. 37: 3.

Your experiences may not have been in line with such promises, but that does not alter the word. Which is awry, you or the world?

The latter-day scriptures agree with the Old and New Testaments in regard to God's provision for his people who serve him.

It is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine; but it must needs be done in my own way.—D. C. 101: 2.

Life insurance provides for some of his saints in another way—that of the world.

And if we seek the riches which it is the will of the Father to give unto you, ye shall be the richest of all people; for ye shall have the riches of eternity; and it must needs be that the riches of the earth are mine to give.—D. C. 38: 9.

It is time that we learn that the riches of the earth are the Lord's and ours only as stewards. Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1 says:—

It is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity.

Remembering that your stewardship is all that you possess, how will you feel when you render an account of that portion that you have paid insurance companies to do the work that the Lord has promised to do? The promise of care for those who serve him are ample, and we would hardly admit that we are making preparation for the time when our loved ones would not serve him. If we seek the "riches of eternity" God will give us

A land flowing with milk and honey, upon which there shall be no curse when the Lord cometh; and I will give it unto you for the land of your inheritance, if you seek it with all your hearts: and this shall be my covenant with you, ye shall have it for the land of your inheritance, and for the inheritance of your children forever, while the earth shall stand; and ye shall possess it again in eternity, no more to pass away.—D. C. 38: 4.

The insurist will say, "In redeemed Zion we do not expect to need life insurance; we are only providing for conditions as they are at present." Zion will not be redeemed to you until you recognize God's possession of your property and yourself amenable to him for the expenditure of it. As I view it, one great barrier in the way of the redemption of Zion is this: Members of the church think that when they pay tithing and some free-will offerings all that they can get beside is their own to expend as they please. But the "earth and the fullness thereof" are the Lord's now as in the past and in the future, and we will be called to account for expenditure out of accord with his plans and purposes.

I may have stated my position radically. If I have, I offer as my excuse my zeal that men should learn to trust in God. If I have misapplied the portions of the word quoted, I trust some one may make the proper application in correction. Let us learn to consult the word in the formation of our judgment rather than to vindicate our judgment.

IS IT NECESSARY FOR SAINTS TO CARRY LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES?

I HAVE read with interest the articles in Herald, of August 4 and September 29 on life insurance, and trust I may be permitted to take part in the discussion in the spirit of love. First, Have we in the three standard books of the church any warrant for such a thing? We will have to answer, No. This being a fact then, in the gospel economy as brought about by Jesus Christ eighteen hundred years ago, and again in the day in which we live, when the gospel is again committed to us, there has not been one word said to his saints for them to insure their lives for one thousand, two thousand, or five thousand dollars. If it was necessary he would have told them of such a grand institution.

Second, In the gospel is everything that is calculated to benefit mankind. Where in those institutions, which are of man, is there any point in advance to that of the gospel? I believe we are told in the Book of Mormon that all secret organizations and combinations are of the Devil. Then it is not right for his saints to be partakers of such things. We have been commanded to come out of Babylon, that we be not partakers of her sins. I fear in place of coming out of her we are inclined to favor her, to our own sorrow.

We have seen those in the church who once were active in church matters, and now they disregard them, and favor those things of the world. And to-day their lamps fail to give, light. We cannot trifle with the things of God. We cannot serve two masters; we will love one and hate the other. The safest and best insurance policy for saints is the insurance policy of the kingdom of God, and if we have this we have more than any institution of this world can give more than it can offer, more than it will ever offer. The Lord saw the end from the beginning, and included everything in the gospel for the good of his people. We should take Jesus for our example, and as ministers of the gospel preach this to the world. Did Jesus carry a life insurance policy, for one thousand, two thousand, or five thousand dollars? It is nowhere written that he did. If we are so doing then thus far we are not following the Savior of the world. The fowls of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head. He was insured in the kingdom of his Father; and the end was, he sat down on the right hand of his Father in heaven.

Can the church and the world walk hand in hand in spiritual matters? You will answer, No. We have been commanded time and again to come up higher. Will we come? Will we try? "Ye are the light of the world." How much light can we shed forth in these man made institutions? The gospel is of a Divine head, and is a fountain of all blessings; a fountain where all may drink till satisfied. Now I ask, if my life is insured for one thousand, two thousand, or five thousand dollars as the case may be, I pay so much to keep my policy up, and when I fail in this, my policy becomes null and void; and at the time when I pay my dues, my family may need this money, and I am taking from them that which they need. In order to save my policy, to keep something up, which is of a worldly character, are we not laying up treasures on this earth? Jesus has said, "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven;" this is the place. Here is the great fountain of life from which all blessings flow. These other things will vanish away at the coming of Jesus Christ, like dew before the morning sun. The Devil is on the alert, he is not dead; and wherein he can get his work in, he will. And if he can sow the seed in the hearts of God's people, then he has accomplished his desire. Paul, the apostle, says in writing to the saints in his day, "Shun the very appearance of evil."

And again, those man made institutions have a tendency to carry us away from our duty which we owe to God. While we may pay our dues to keep in line with them, we should bear in mind not to forget to pay our tithing. This is a duty we owe to God and the church. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." And again, "Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up." I repeat again, that in the gospel is all that is calculated to bless mankind, to make them happy in this life and in the life to come. These institutions of man only hold good for this life. They do not reach into the life beyond, but all must pass away; and the ways of mankind, as far as pertains to this life in these institutions are concerned, are forgotten. Every person has a right to his own opinion upon this subject.

In conclusion I would say that the safest and the best insurance policy is in the kingdom of God, with our name written in the Lamb's book of life.

E. E. MARSHALL.

PAWNEE, Mo., October 3.

IS THE LAW OF GOD PERFECT?

DAVID, in his nineteenth Psalm, verses seven and eight, says the law of God is perfect, and Latter Day Saints believe and teach it. If then we, as individuals, have entered into a covenant with God at the waters of baptism, and ascribed our name unto that document, "the perfect law," with the understanding that we will serve him who is the giver of that law, and we said, as did the children of Israel, "All that the Lord hath commanded we will do."

In reading the article of Bro. P., on "Heaven's Insurance Policy," and the other two following, the question presents itself to my mind: Do we, as a people, try to follow the perfect law which is given to his church as a guide in spiritual as well as in temporal things? The Savior, in Matthew 6: 38, 39, I. T., addressed his disciples in these words:—

Wherefore, seek not the things of this world; but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you. Take, therefore, no thought for the morrow; for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day shall be the evil thereof.

While these words are given as instruction more especially to those who carry the glad news to the people throughout the land, yet the Lord has said, what I say to one I say to all, meaning his church. We are instructed to labor together.

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all.—D. C. 119: 8.

Now do we fulfill the law if we do not labor together with all our might, mind, and strength to bring to pass the righteousness thereof? And must we not labor together to accomplish the fulfilling of the prophecies given to us as a people, or in other words, the end thereof? Now we ask again, Is the law of God perfect? and the answer comes, Yes, it is. Then why not keep it? or at least try to keep it. The Savior says if we break the least one of his commandments we break the whole. What does the Apostle Paul mean by his words to the Corinthian brethren?

Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? . . . And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people.—2 Cor. 6: 14, 16. I. T.

Are we not unequally yoked together when we join ourselves to these companies or societies, and supporting these man made institutions? God has set in his church men to see to the temporal welfare of his people as well as spiritual; but we trust these men in the world more than those whom God has appointed and set apart to do business for him. The Lord has said to his church, My elders shall see that my law is kept. I understand that this includes the temporal law. Where is the cranky part about this? Are those brethren cranky who try to teach the church the perfect law, in order that God's promises may come to his children through obedience unto his law? Are the words misapplied or misunderstood?

Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and my daughters, saith the Lord Almighty.—2 Cor. 6: 17, 18. I. T.

We as a people are looking for the fulfilling of that which has been spoken of by the prophets, when great tribulation, plagues, and disease shall distress the nations, and the wrath of the Almighty God will be poured out upon the children of men with greater power than at the present; and who is able to say when this calamity shall come to pass that these man made institutions will be able to meet their obligations? How long will we trust in the arm of flesh, instead of trusting in the perfect law of God, and try to keep the same? One more thought I will present; we as a people believe that a separation shall take place sooner or later; is it not then wise for us to consider these things, yea even now before it is too late? Will we then look back for that which we must leave to the world of our treasure, because we have treasured up there instead of in God's storehouse? Will it be with us as with Lot's wife? (Gen. 19: 24, 25; see also Luke 18: 28-34 I. T.)

Wherefore, he that preacheth and he that receiveth, understandeth one another, and both are edified and rejoice together; and that which doth not edify, is not of God, and is darkness: that which is of God is light, and he that receiveth light and continueth in God, receiveth more light, and that light groweth brighter and brighter, until the perfect day.—D. C. 50: 6.

Let us walk in the light while we have the light.

ROBERT GARLICH.

St. JOSEPH, Mo., October 2.

IS THE GOSPEL A PERFECT SYSTEM?

In reading the friendly criticism by Brn. Lake and Morris on my article in Herald August 4, "Heaven's Insurance Policy," I would conclude that the gospel was not perfect, insomuch as they discover in their obedience thereunto a necessity during life's toils to further secure themselves by uniting with orders and carry insurance policy. I want to be understood that, individually, I have no grudge or complaint against any of these orders or insurance companies. I firmly believe they largely originated on account of the church and churches of days gone by not recognizing the needs of the unfortunate. Hence men of good desires set about and organized beneficiary orders. Recognizing all the good they have or may do does not answer the question: "Are they a necessity for Latter Day Saints?" If so, wherein are they to be incorporated in the gospel to make God's system of saving humanity here and hereafter more perfect? I fear some only look for salvation in the future, hence think these worldly institutions a necessity. If we cannot trust God's method concerning this present life, how can we trust our future to him? Bro. Lake quotes Paul to Timothy,—"But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel,"—to prove the necessity of saints holding life policies as a means of supplying the needs of those left at death. Brother, it is a well-known fact that this insurance business in all its phases largely originated in this age, not known in Paul's day, hence your proof has no weight in that direction. You notice Paul says, "If any provide not for his own"—his family or those under his immediate care—"specially for those of his own house." In these two statements I gather this fact: As members of the "household of God" we are just as responsible for the care of those who need as we are for our own. Therefore neither should be neglected, but each receive our financial support according to the gospel system. Honest labor and honest compensation since the beginning of the history of man has always been approved of God. Jesus said:—

Man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth.—Luke 12: 15.

But in utilization of the means put in his or her hands as coworkers with God, usury is forbidden of God. Jesus taught that such should not be indulged in by his followers. We use the modest term interest now, and tradition teaches us if the law of the land do not prohibit, it must be all right. I do not believe it is acceptable with God. Hence the Lord has informed us that we should not go in debt. Yet we do it, and are made to suffer thereby. I believe our Father intended that we should each be found as workers, not living off the earnings of others by way of usury or interest. This is the method the world has been dropping into rapidly during the past fifty years, Live off of their fellow creatures by the method of usury. It has become a curse to the country.

Getting something for nothing is to a large degree the motive power moving the human family. As saints it is difficult to keep out of this vortex. Well did the Savior say:—

That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven.—Matt. 19: 23.

The more man gets the more he wants.

Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the HIRE of the LABORERS who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud.—James 5: 1-4.

Mr. Wanamaker has more than once sold out the working people of this city. Pays starvation wages for help. If he is to be the representative man and leader for saints, Bro. Lake, but few, if any, would follow in these parts. He is in the vortex of all the business schemes of the world.

I next note the statement of Bro. Morris:—

The church is not in temporal business.

That is strange, in view of the appeals made by the Bishopric from time to time to the saints, asking for financial aid. Also:—

I say unto you, were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer.—D. C. 102: 2.

You see, Bro. Morris, the gospel, the perfect system, provides for those in the condition that you say these orders were instituted for to help. This being true, what need have Latter Day Saints to invest in that which appertains to this world only, when the gospel pledge provides for all this if we keep our part of it? The lack of united effort in recognizing the temporal law of the church is retarding its progress to-day. God would have his people to know he is able to save now from all the evils common to the human family.

Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation.—Mal. 3: 8, 9.

This idea that God's church was not in temporal business has always been disastrous to its successful operation. And Zion cannot be redeemed till we unite, and each contribute to its temporal needs.

Now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned.—D. C. 64:5.

No man can serve two masters (Matt. 6:24), is just as applicable to us as any people. "Come out of her, O my people," certainly refers to these uncertain, kniving, moneymaking schemes, living off others' hard earnings by usury or interest, and premiums on policies, as well as spiritual Babylon.

Most every wage-earner is looking for a soft snap—as it is commonly called—big wages and little work. While on the other hand employers largely want as many hours of labor as possible, and at as small wages as will keep starvation from the door. To my mind just as long as we cater to these outside issues we are weakening the results of God's church, so far as our part and influence may go. If the ministry must go trusting God, why not the laity? How many of the traveling elders could carry a life policy out of the meager allowance allotted his family? How many of the saints would be willing to increase his allowance so that he might enjoy this privilege if it is necessary? Consistency, thou art a jewel!

By this fact, that the gospel is perfect, — meeting all the legitimate demands of the rich and poor, establishing equality, — being discussed and an education had among the saints on this line and credence given thereunto, will increase faith, establish confidence, supply the treasury with plenty, and recommend the church to every Bible student as from heaven; as God only could construct a system meeting every need of the human family spiritually and physically here and in the future. May his truth prevail. I am in gospel bonds your co-laborer,

A. H. PARSONS.

INSURANCE POLICIES.

A BROTHER in writing in the Herald of September 29, upon a certain subject, makes this statement:—

There is nothing like the happy medium.

Is it possible there be such a thing in this great latter-day work. Must we not stand on one side or the other? We cannot cater to the world and worldly things and at the same time serve God with a full purpose of heart. God has said:—

Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.—Rev. 18: 4.

Is not this saying true and faithful? It surely is; and we cannot mix or mingle with the world and not be more or less partakers. The brother says:—

What could the church do for my family were I to pass away? Absolutely nothing.

O Bride of the Lamb, where is thy wedding garment, if this be true? Were you not to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and administer the balm of gilead to fallen man? If not, what your mission on earth? The brother says:—

The church is not in temporal business, but rather in spiritual work.

What of the temporal law, brother, if this be true? Is not this a part of that great system by which we are made heirs of celestial glory? We are given to understand, and that plainly too, that unless we keep this law we need not expect to have part in celestial glory. God says that if this law is kept he is bound. In speaking to the Jews, through Malachi, he says to them:—

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts.—Mal. 3: 10, 11.

It cannot be said that this does not apply to us, we being Gentiles. For every one that receives the new birth are Israelites by adoption. And those that faithfully keep this law in connection with the spiritual, they or their families will never come to want, or God is untrue to his word (a thing impossible) and he cease to be God. They will not have to resort to worldly institutions to obtain the necessary means to drive the wolf from the door. God has promised to fill to repletion the storehouses of all who keep this law, and challenges us with, "Prove me now." Is not this enough? Must we go to frail man, trusting in the arm of flesh, in the face of these promises.

As the necessity of the ministry frequenting the lodge room that fallen humanity be benefited is not warranted by the books, and no good will ever come of it, the one so doing will lose more in spirituality than he will benefit others. It is impossible to serve two masters at the same time.

SHEFFIELD.

Conference convened at Clay Cross, July 10 and 11, 1897; John Austin presiding; J. Roberts clerk pro tem. Ministry present, 10. Clay Cross branch not reporting financially and spiritually, the president was permitted to report verbally. Resolved, whereas several of the brethren reporting have failed to give reasons for nonattendance, that their attention be called to rule of district, No. 3, which should be observed, and also state what office held. Resolved, whereas, the January conference of 1897, established a ministerial fund apart from the district fund, we, are of opinion that the district fund should answer all purposes, therefore recommend its reconsideration at the January conference of 1898. Resolved, that in the opinion of this body it is the duty of the district president for cause to silence any priest or elder under his spiritual jurisdiction and report the same to the first district conference convening subsequent to the silence; and further, that anyone so silenced is disqualified to act until an investigation is had and a proper adjustment is made; and still further, any elder or priest refusing to hand his license when requested, would give the president a proper pretext to publish his silence in the Saints' Herald. For whether God deprives one of his priesthood or not, neither priest, elder, seventy, high priest nor apostle can act legitimately as a representative of the church when, according to given and accepted law, he is deprived of his license. NORTHEASTERN TEXAS AND CHOCTAW.

Pursuant to notice in Herald of September 15, 1897, delegates from the branches of Manchester and Shawnee, Texas, and Coalgate, Indian Territory, met at Standley, Indian Territory, October 9, to consider the advisability of organizing a district; George Montague, missionary in charge, in chair, I. P. Baggerly assistant; W. S. Brown secretary. Chair ruled it unnecessary to adhere to the delegate system of voting at this informal conference. I. P. Baggerly, upon instruction of chair, formulated a resolution that there is a necessity of organizing Northeastern Texas and Indian Territory into a district, which was carried. Ellis Short was elected district president, Earl D. Bailey assistant, and E. A. Erwin secretary, their offices to hold one year. A committee of three, composed of I. P. Baggerly, Ellis Short, and Ambrose E. Elliott, being instructed by chair to retire to draw up boundary lines of district, returned with following report: District to comprise the Choctaw Nation, Indian Territory, and following counties in Texas: On the west, Montague, Decatur, Parker, and Hood; on south, Johnson, Waxahachia, Kaufman, Van Zant, Smith, Gregg, and Harrison; on east by State of Louisiana. The report was amended to reach and join on the the north the south boundary of Spring River district in Indian Territory. The district will be known by the name of Northeastern Texas and Choctaw district. As Ellis Short held office of Bishop's agent in Standley branch, he was recommended to Bishop as district Bishop's agent. A motion to adopt the delegate system of representation at conferences was lost. On motion a district record was purchased. A resolution was passed to hold next conference at Manchester, Texas, in light of moon in February, 1898. Preaching by Brn. George Montague, Ellis Short, W. B. Toney, I. P. Baggerly, and E. A. Erwin, others assisting. All services passed off smoothly, the good Spirit manifesting itself. We feel that even in our babyhood we are meeting with the approbation of God. One addition, making twenty-eight since General Conference.

Lewis, to the office of elder, was also authorized, having been recommended by the Hiteman branch, and president of the district authorized to provide for the same. Other business of minor importance was transacted. The sessions throughout were harmonious and profitable. Preaching by Elders R. S. Salyards, A. H. Smith, and R. M. Elvin. DECATUR.

Convention convened in the saints' chapel at Lone Rock, Missouri, Friday, October 8, at 10:30 a. m., in capacity of a prayer and testimony meeting, in charge of G. W. Blair and A. B. Hanson. A very enjoyable time was experienced. At two o'clock the convention met in regular business session, with Superintendent W. B. Paul in charge. The chair ruled that as no delegate convention had been called, all present were allowed to vote. A. B. Hanson was chosen secretary pro tem., and at once proceeded to read reports from superintendent, W. B. Paul; assistant superintendent, Oscar Anderson; secretary, E. B. Stafford; treasurer, I. A. Smith, and W. A. Blair, who had been assisting in missionary work. Reports were all accepted, also the resignation of E. B. Stafford as secretary. Reports were also read from the following schools: Greenville, Lone Rock, Andover, Leon, Pleasanton, Lucas, New Buda, Hiteman, Evergreen, Allendale, Davis City, and Lamoni. These reports were all accepted except the one from Lamoni, they reporting for only three months. Report referred back for correction. W. A. Blair was chosen to fill vacancy occasioned by resignation of E. B. Stafford. Resolved that when we adjourn we do so to meet at the call of the district officers. By motion the program committee was appointed as follows: The district superintendent and his associate were named with power to choose one or more to assist them. Instructive addresses were delivered by several superintendents who were present, Bro. Paul reporting for Hiteman and Lucas schools. The convention then discussed the Constitution and By-Laws and duties of officers. A very interesting and profitable time was had, much good instruction being obtained. The evening session convened at 7:30 in charge of Bro. Paul. The Lone Rock school rendered a pleasing program under the direction of Sister McPeak, and then followed "an experience meeting," in which many took part.

NOTICE TO SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

There are complaints coming in to the Herald Office all the time that the Quarterlies are not sent out early enough so that the Sunday schools may receive and distribute them before the beginning of the quarter. We wish to notify the schools that the fault does not lie with the office; the trouble lies with the Sunday School association, by reason of them failing to get the copy for the Quarterlies in our hands soon enough to get them printed in time to send out any earlier than we are sending them. As soon as they correct this matter the schools will get Quarterlies on time. The Quarterlies are not under control of the Herald Publishing Company, but are issued by the Association. They are not edited at the Herald Office. The Herald Office prints and mails them, for the Association, when they are placed in its hands.

Only the members of the two families and a few friends were present; but the occasion was a very pleasant one, and the evening was quietly and socially enjoyed by those assembled. Although retiring and unobtrusive, yet Sr. Carrie has the graces and virtues such as make happy homes for those who are fortunate to win the possessors of those characteristics.

and use, under which, through the suffering of death, life may be adapted to higher ends, and carried on to nobler uses. We observe, moreover, that an effect or working of nature which may seem to be disadvantageous when viewed in relation to one order of life, may be seen to be advantageous when judged in its relation to some higher order of life. 'Degeneracy of parts, or of types of life, has been necessary to the advance of other and better organs or forms.' The end of one kind of existence may be the birth of a new species. A method which works apparently wastefully in one sphere may be the beneficence of nature in which a superior kind of life is trained and perfected. Suffering in the lower kind may become gain in the higher; the death of the one may be the victory of the other. Thus the natural law of struggle for existence becomes a school of altruism in man's development. We cannot affirm, therefore, of any sufferings which men may have to endure in this lower existence, that they are needless or wasteful; we should know first their values in terms of the farther and future life.

"When the sufferings and pains to which man is subjected through the reign of death are thus brought under this conception of its utility—physical, moral, and spiritual—the present mystery of suffering is put in the way at least of its explanation, although now we are far from able to follow this way of its justification through all darkness into the full and perfect light. But when once fairly apprehended from this principle of use for life, although now seen but darkly, pain and sorrow are lifted up, and put in the course of a moral justification as entrusted with a vital mission, they await the final explanation in which all God's ways shall be seen to be the paths of life."—Literary Digest.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The Necessity for a Reorganization.

BY ELDER H. O. SMITH.

This tract sets forth and refutes the false claims and erroneous doctrines of the Utah Church.

It brings to light much of the teachings of Brigham Young and other founders of the Utah faction, and proves them and the present leaders to be at variance with and their organization a departure from the faith taught by the early church and its three standard books.

It also vindicates and maintains the general position of the Reorganized Church in succession.

A tract for the times. Just the thing with which to meet the arguments of Brighamite elders.

Forty-three pages; two for five cents; per doz., 30 cents.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

REDUCED IN PRICE.

Recognizing the closeness of the times and with a desire to place the church paper within the reach of every member, the Board of Publication has decided to offer THE SAINTS' HERALD at a reduced price for one year from the date named, as follows:—

On July 12, 1897, the price of the HERALD was fixed at $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

This reduction applies to both old and new subscribers, on the following conditions:— Cash must accompany all orders for new subscriptions, as stated.

Former subscribers who are in arrears, who pay up on old subscriptions and renew one year in advance, will receive the benefit of the reduction in price from the date named—July 12, 1897.

Those who have already paid in advance will receive the benefit of the reduction in price at the dates of expiration of present subscriptions, and for the year following said dates, if renewing in advance.

This is a reduction of twenty-five per cent, both in the price of the church paper, and of the revenue derived from it. It is therefore necessary that all avail themselves of the new departure and greatly enlarge the list of new subscribers; and also that those indebted pay up all past due accounts.

Branch book agents and the ministry who can do so, are respectfully asked to second the efforts of the Board by obtaining new subscribers for the HERALD and working in the general interests of the Herald Office—the church publishing plant.

AGE OF THE GOSPELS.

LIGHT OF RECENT DISCOVERIES ON THE CONTROVERSY.

At the beginning of this century the question of the authenticity of the Gospels was one which, if mooted at all, was reserved for scholars and theologians. People in general might believe or disbelieve, on philosophical grounds, the story contained in them, but they rarely troubled themselves to examine the historical evidence on either side; and if scholars discussed it their labors attracted as little public attention as if they were dealing with Homer or Tacitus. The present generation has seen a great change in this attitude. Articles in magazines, lectures in our public parks and halls, successful novels, such as "Robert Elsmere," popular handbook for and against Christianity, have familiarized most educated persons with the fact that there is, and for some time has been, an active controversy as to the historical character of the Gospels.

The life of Christ is the center alike of our history in the past and our hopes for the future; and our knowledge of it rests mainly upon the evidence of the four Gospels. If they can be shown to be unhistorical there is little left out of which the story of that life can be put together. It is upon this issue that the controversy of the present generation turns and with which we are now concerned. Let us see, then, upon what grounds we believe them to be historical and on what lines the attack upon their authenticity has been based.

FOUNDER OF THE CONTROVERSY.

I propose therefore, to give some account of the most striking discoveries which have been made during the last twenty years. In order however, to appreciate their importance, it is necessary to state briefly the form taken by the attack upon the Gospels. The controversy in its modern shape is now just fifty years old. Its founder was the great German scholar, Ferdinand Baur, a professor of Tubingen University, from whom the famous Tubingen school of criticism took its rise. It was in 1847 that he published a treatise on the origin of the Gospels; but this was only one among several works embodying a novel view of early Christian history. With German learning and German ingenuity he put together, out of the books of the New Testament, a quite different narrative of the origin and growth of Christianity from that which the books themselves tell. Regarding the life of Christ as a merely human life, he sees in the apostolic age a deadly struggle between the adherents of St. Peter and those of St. Paul, lasting far into the second century, and discerns in most of the New Testament books attempts to write the history of Christianity from the point of view of one or another of these parties. It was claimed that they were not histories in the true sense of the word, but partisan tracts, the value of which depends less on what they assert than on what we can read between the lines.

In this attack upon the historical character of the Gospels, a cardinal point is the late date assigned to their composition. It is clearly easier to regard them as historically false if they were written considerably later than the events which they profess to record.

ASSIGNED TO SECOND CENTURY.

On all grounds therefore it was essential to Baur to put the composition of these books as late as possible; and accordingly he assigns them all to dates well within the second century. Later than the end of that century it was impossible to place them, since the evidence of Tertullian and Irenæus writing about A. D. 200, fully and explicitly demonstrated that their pre-eminence among all Christian writings was by that time firmly established; but no earlier date was granted them than such unimpeachable evidence rendered absolutely necessary. St. Matthew's Gospel was placed by Baur about A. D. 130, St. Luke's about 150, St. Mark's about 160, and St. John's between 160 and 170. The other books of the New Testament, with five exceptions, shared the same fate. None of them was allowed to be what it professed to be, or to have been written when it professed to have been written, except the Epistles of St. Paul to the Romans, Corinthians, and Galatians, and the Apocalypse of St. John.

Such, then, is the theory of Baur, which forms the starting point and foundation of the modern criticism of the Gospels. It is not necessary now to consider the arguments by which he supported it. Good or bad, they were of necessity merely arguments from probability, which could not stand against any clear and decisive evidence of the existence of the Gospels before these dates. What, then, is the result of the new evidence which the last twenty years have brought to light?

Baur died in 1860; and now, a generation after his death, it is not too much to say that his theory is completely shattered. No competent critic can now maintain that any one of the dates assigned by him to the Gospels is tenable. Even the latest of them must have been written before the date which he allowed to the earliest. Nor is it difficult now to see where the fault of his method lies. No one can blame him for his fresh and fearless examination of the historical evidence bearing upon the origin of Christianity; but his results, like those of many of his followers, are vitiated by the habit, wherever absolutely convincing evidence is wanting, of adopting the position most unfavorable to the traditional view.

DISCOVERY OF THE "DIATESSARON."

Of all the discoveries of the last twenty years the first, and, in some respects, the most important, is the "Diatessaron" of Tatian. As its Greek name indicates ("by" or "by means of four"), it is a harmonized Gospel, composed out of the four Gospels by dovetailing verses out of the different evangelists into a single narrative. This is a device which has often been practiced in the church down to the present day, but the importance to us of Tatian's harmony lies in the evidence which it affords not only of the existence but of the pre-eminent position of our four canonical Gospels at a very early date.

Tatian was born about A. D. 110, a native of Assyria. He was converted to Christianity by Justin Martyr, whose chief work, the "Apology for Christianity," was written about A. D. 150-155. After Justin's death, about A. D. 165, he fell into the error of the Encratites, an extremely ascetic sect, who regarded marriage, eating flesh, and drinking wine as unlawful, and he died about A. D. 180. Different views have been held as to whether his harmony was written in the days of his orthodoxy or afterwards. On the one hand, it evidently passed current in the Syrian Church for many generations as an orthodox representation of the Gospel narrative; on the other, Mr. Rendel Harris has shown reason to believe that it exhibited traces of the special opinions of the Encratites. In the one case we should suppose it to have been written about 160; in the other, about 170. If, then, the "Diatessaron" was put together out of the four canonical Gospels, it is clear that they held, at this date, a position of marked and recognized superiority over all other narratives of our Lord's life, and since such a position could not be acquired except after the lapse of some considerable time, this would show that all four were composed at a date at least as early as that which Baur assigns to the earliest of them and much earlier than those which he allows to three out of the four.

SUPPOSED TO BE LOST.

Until twenty years ago, however, the "Diatessaron" was supposed to be lost, and all our knowledge of it was of an indirect kind, leaving much opening for controversy and for the display of critical ingenuity. The earliest mention of it was by Eusebius, the great church historian, about A. D. 325; and he does not seem to have seen the work himself, though he says that it was still circulating in some quarters down to his time. Epiphanius, in A. D. 374, briefly referred to it, but confused it with the Gospel according to the Hebrews. Theodoret, a Syrian Bishop, between 420 and 457, found more than 200 copies of it in use in his diocese, and replaced them by copies of the four Gospels. In 545 Bishop Victor of Capua found a Latin harmony of the Gospels which he guessed might be a translation of the "Diatessaron," of the existence of which he knew only from Eusebius, and published it, substituting, however, the words of the Vulgate for those of the original before him, and this work is still extant in a manuscript known as the Codex Fuldensis. One other notice of the "Diatessaron," much later, but of great importance, must be mentioned. It is that of Dionysius Bar-Salibi, an Armenian Bishop, at the end of the twelfth century, who (following an earlier Syrian author, Ishodad, about A. D. 850) states that Tatian put together "one Gospel out of the four"; that St. Ephrem of Syria wrote a commentary upon it; and that its first words were, "In the beginning was the word."

REFERENCES EXPLAINED AWAY.

[To the ordinary mind these notices might have seemed sufficient to establish the all-important fact that Tatian did actually compose a harmony of the four canonical Gospels, and, consequently, that these had established their paramount position in the church by the middle of the second century. But the ingenuity of the Tubingen critics was able to explain them all away, and even to deny that Tatian ever wrote a harmony at all, or that, if he did, it was based upon our Gospels. An anonymous work published in England in 1875, entitled "Supernatural Religion," which, as embodying the as yet unfamiliar views of Baur, achieved a notoriety quite out of proportion to its merits affirmed boldly that there was no such thing as Tatian's harmony at all; that the work which Theodoret had found and ejected was now the lost Gospel according to the Hebrews; and that this was identical with the Gospel according to Peter. At the moment of their publication these assertions could not be met, as Bishop Lightfoot very ably met them, by a restatement of circumstantial evidence; but within a few years they have been signally refuted by proofs of a decisive character. Tatian's harmony and the gospel according to Peter have both been discovered, and it is obvious, first that they are absolutely distinct works; next, that neither of them is identical with the Gospel according to the Hebrews; and, finally, that the "Diatessaron" is, as common sense had always maintained, a harmony of the four canonical Gospels.

STORY OF THE RECOVERY.

The story of the recovery of the "Diatessaron" is curious, mainly for the reason that it was delayed so much longer than it need have been. Indeed, all the while that Baur was expounding his theories and his disciples were developing them evidence was staring them in the face which made their views untenable, at least so far as related to the dates of the Gospels. In 1836 the Armenian Mechitarist Fathers at Venice published an edition, in Armenian, of the works of St. Ephrem of Syria, and among them was the very commentary on the "Diatessaron" to which as mentioned above, Dionysius Bar-Salibi had made reference, but which had hitherto been supposed to be lost. Published in Armenian, however, and with no distinctive title to call attention to its character, it remained absolutely unknown for forty years, till in 1876, the Mechitarists employed Dr. George Moesinger to revise and publish a Latin version of it which had been made by the original editor of the Armenian, Dr. Aucher. Yet, even then, when edited in Latin by a German scholar, it attracted no notice for four years; and Lightfoot, when writing an answer to "Supernatural Religion," a year after the appearance of Moesinger's volume, was unaware of the discovery, which would at once have determined an important branch of the controversy in his favor. It is to America that the honor belongs of first bringing the discovery forward in its true light, since it was Dr. Ezra Abbot, in his "Authorship of the Fourth Gospel" (1880), who first directed general attention to it. Dr. Wace took it up in England, Dr. Harnack in Germany, and Dr. Zahn was led to devote a large monograph to the subject, in which he endeavored to reconstruct the "Diatessaron" from the quotations given by St. Ephrem.

ESTABLISHED AN IMPORTANT POINT.

The commentary of St. Ephrem established beyond all doubt the all-important fact that Tatian's "Diatessaron" was actually constructed out of the four canonical Gospels; and his very copious quotations enabled Zahn to make out the general structure and much of the actual text of the work. Meanwhile, what purported to be an Arabic translation of the work itself was lying in the Vatican library, and had been briefly mentioned by J. Assemani, who brought it to the Vatican, so long ago as 1791, and by a few subsequent writers. No one, however, had made any detailed study of it, until Zahn, though unable to examine it himself, called attention to its existence, and so aroused the interest of Father Ciasca, one of the librarians of the Vatican. Ciasca, consequently, had the privilege of being the first modern scholar to make acquaintance with the complete "Diatessaron"—a fit reward for much good service to biblical criticism.

One more happy incident, however, had yet to intervene before the world at large was placed in possession of the recovered treasure. Circumstances delayed its publication until, in 1886, Ciasca chanced to show the manuscript to the Vicar-Apostolic of the Catholic Copts, then on a visit to Rome; and this gentleman at once remarked that he had seen another copy of the same work in private hands in Egypt and could undertake to procure it. He was as good as his word; and from this newly-acquired manuscript, which is superior to the copy in the Vatican, Ciasca edited the work in 1888, as a gift from the College of Writers of the Vatican Library to Pope Leo XIII., on the occasion of his jubilee. So, after many vicissitudes, was the world at last placed in possession of the long-lost "Diatessaron" of Tatian.

WORK OF GREAT IMPORTANCE.

The importance of this discovery for biblical criticism has been indicated above. It shows that, at a date at which Baur believed two at least of the Gospels to have been yet unwritten, all four not only were written, but occupied a position of pre-eminence and authority which could not be the growth of a few years. When closely examined it proves even more than this; for the Gospel text used by Tatian, so far as it can be ascertained with certainty, differs already in many respects from that which criticism shows to be the original one. Such divergences, which are due to the mistakes, the insertions, or the omissions of copyists, imply the multiplication of copies and some considerable lapse of time in which the variations may spread. It is true that the evidence on this point is still incomplete, because we have not recovered the "Diatessaron" in its original language. What we have is a copy (or rather two copies) of an Arabic translation, made early in the eleventh century, of a Syrian copy written about the year 900, together with two copies of an Armenian version of a Syriac commentary composed by a writer who died in 373.

Until recently it was always supposed that the "Diatessaron" was written in Greek, as its Greek title would seem to indicate: and in that case we are doubly removed from the original language. There is, however, good reason for doubting this opinion, and for holding the original language to have been Syriac. It was certainly in Syria that its use flourished; its text has strong affinities with that which is found in the oldest Syriac version of the Gospels; St. Ephrem, who commented upon it, was a Syrian father and wrote in Syriac; and there is evidence that the Old Testament quotations in it were in accordance

THE CANADIAN PRESS ON PRESIDENT SMITH'S VISIT.

ITEMS in the Canadian press, written in connection with the visit of President Joseph Smith to the Dominion, have been so fair in spirit and so free from objectionable sensational features, that we publish the leading ones. These items with others were sent us for passing mention, but they contain so much of interest to the HERALD readers that we give them entire.

President Smith and the Canadian ministry and saints have succeeded in making an impression for good in behalf of the work, and are to be congratulated on the character of the statements they have drawn from the press. The items published will have widespread circulation in the Dominion and elsewhere, and be as seed sown that brings a harvest of continuing good. JOSEPH SMITH HERE.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF THE PROPHET AND HEAD OF THE LATTER DAY SAINTS.

History and Doctrines of the Church Founded by His Father.

Brigham Young an Apostate—Polygamy No Part of the True Faith.

Joseph Smith, the president of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, came to the city on Wednesday evening from Toronto, where he was attending the annual conference of the London district, and since his arrival has been the guest of Elder R. C. Evans, of this city, the youngest of the twelve apostles of the church, and president of the Canada mission.

President Smith is the son of the martyred founder of the church, and is the prophet of the sect. He was born December [November] 6, 1832, at Kirtland, Lake County, Ohio, and went with his parents to Missouri, out of which State they were driven in 1838, when, with from eight thousand to twelve thousand other believers, they crossed the Missouri River on the ice and settled in Illinois. In a few years followed the death of Joseph Smith, Sen., and the great pilgrimage to Salt Lake City, headed by Brigham Young. Young Joseph Smith was called to take his father's place, and in 1860 reorganized the church, of which, since that time, he has been the president and prophet. The church was started in 1830, in New York State, by a band of half a dozen people, one of whom was Joseph Smith the elder, who professed to have received a communication from God by the hands of an angel. Smith was an abolitionist, and opposed to what he called a hireling ministry; but despite the unpopularity of his views on these subjects, the church in fourteen years enrolled two hundred thousand members. His denunciation of slavery and paid ministry made him many enemies, however. He was tried forty-nine times before the tribunals of his country, and after being formally acquitted in 1844, was set upon by a mob of one hundred and fifty people and shot to death. After this the church was split into several factions. Brigham Young, an elder, led away some ten thousand people to Utah, and eight years and two months later proclaimed the doctrine at Salt Lake City. This was the first public statement made in justification of polygamy by the Mormon people. Regarding Joseph Smith's views as to polygamy, his disciples say there is not a line either in his sermons or his revelations that in any way countenances the practice or the doctrine. The Book of Mormon, they say, distinctly denounces it. Brigham Young claimed to be the successor of Joseph Smith, but was in reality an apostate.

When young Joseph Smith began the reorganization of the church in 1860, he met with opposition on the part of the United States authorities, who feared the spread of the practice of polygamy. On the invitation of President Grant and Vice President Colfax, he went before a committee of Congress and convinced the rulers at Washington that he had nothing to do with the Utah sect, and that Brigham Young had departed from the faith preached by his father. In 1872 the church was granted a charter of incorporation. The general executive consists of: The prophet, the second twelve apostles, a quorum of seventy, a high council, high priests, bishops, elders, teachers, and deacons. It is a doctrine of the church, declared upon scriptural authority, that God is unchangeable; therefore that his gospel, law, and church organization are the same as in Bible times.

Maitland Street church was crowded to the doors last night, when an address was delivered by President Smith. He spoke for about an hour and a half, and was listened to with the closest attention. After referring to the curiosity manifested in the world at the present time about the existence of prophets, he said the Latter Day Saints believed that in every age in which God has had people upon the earth, he has spoken to them by the voice of revelation. Continuing, Mr. Smith dealt with the principles upon which the church is based—faith, repentance, and remission of sins, baptisms, laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment.—London Advertiser, October 8.

HEAD OF THE CHURCH.

PRESIDENT OF THE LATTER DAY SAINTS SPEAKS

To a Large Audience in the Maitland Street Edifice—He is the Son of the Martyred Prophet and Says Some Things of Interest to His Followers.

President Joseph Smith, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, who styles himself the son of the martyred prophet of that body, Joseph Smith, delivered an address of an hour and a half in the Maitland Street church last night. He had a large audience, the edifice being filled to the doors. Mr. Smith, who hails from Lamoni, Iowa, has been at the head of the denomination for very many years, and he is highly revered by his many followers, both in Canada and the United States. Though well advanced in life, and continually called upon to perform arduous labors in connection with his church, he is remarkably well preserved, and speaks in a clear voice.

Last night he devoted himself principally to the doctrines of the church, and he was accorded a very close hearing. In his opening remarks he said considerable curiosity was manifested in the world at the present time in regard to the prophets. Doubtless a portion of it existed in the Dominion of Canada, and in the city of London. Personally, he was not very particular what might be the opinion of men touching himself as a man, but he confessed that as an individual he preferred to please, rather than displease, men. If there was any one subject, he continued, upon which men might differ, and differ honestly, and hold in their hearts a proper respect for each other, it was on the question of religion; and it was unfortunate for the cause of Christianity that some of the most outrageous atrocities committed have been the result of religious differences. As a people, the Latter Day Saints believed—and he represented the thought—that in every age in which God has had people upon the earth, he has spoken to them by the voice of revelation, and it had been one of the dearest things to believers' hearts that there has been no one between him and his God to prevent the incoming of that force of life by which men have been educated, elevated in thought, and in belief, and have taken a wider and better view of humanity and man's relation to God. And, confessing as he did, that God had spoken to man in the past, he confessed that he did now.

Mr. Smith gave a number of reasons why the Latter Day Saints believed as they did, and he then touched upon the second coming of Christ. A great many who believed in the Savior's second coming had tried to fix a date for the event. Since May 12, 1843, when the Second Adventists fixed a time, every date set had proven a disappointment. Neither would the second coming take place until the prophesy contained in Matthew 24:14 was fulfilled.

"I have for many years," continued Mr. Smith, "been fighting the idea that any belief is good if a man is only sincere in it, and at the same time I have been a disputant of it, and it has been conceded that my argument is right."

The concluding portion of Mr. Smith's remarks was devoted to the church's views regarding baptisms, the laying on of hands, the resurrection, and the judgment.—London Free Press, October 8.

PROPHETS.

BROTHER JOSEPH SMITH DEFENDS HIS SECT.

Able Review of the Basis of the Belief of the Latter Day Saints.

The church of the Latter Day Saints, on Maitland Street, was crowded to its utmost capacity last evening by an interested audience, which assembled to hear Brother Joseph Smith, president of the Reorganized Church. The speaker was followed most attentively throughout his able address, and evidently made a great impression upon his hearers. He devoted his attention chiefly to a review of the grounds upon which the beliefs of the sect are based, and proceeded to outline in a clear, argumentative manner the reasons by which he claimed they were established.

There was, he said in opening, a considerable curiosity in the world at the present time regarding the existence of prophets. He proposed to discuss, partially at least, the proposition as to whether or not the belief in a prophet would be justified in this age and in this land. He was not, personally, very particular what opinion of himself as a man was held by those who did not know him nor the people with whom he worshiped. There were some people in London who had known him during the active period of his life, and who knew what manner of man he was.

The question of religion, he continued, was one upon which honest men are liable to disagree. Some of the greatest atrocities known to history had been committed because of differences of belief. In these days such intolerance ought not to be possible. The sect to which he belonged as a people believed that in every age God had spoken to his people by the voice of revelation. They believed that God so revealed himself to-day, and the belief was founded upon the Scriptures as they are in the accepted (King James) version of the Bible.

Whatever conception of prophets be held, continued the speaker, all Bible readers would concede that of all the prophets in the history of the world, the one who could not be dispensed with was Jesus Christ; and upon his utterances the sect built its belief. The doctrine of the second coming of Christ was built upon his own words; but his coming was not to be looked for until the time referred to in Matthew 24:14, which said: "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." All prophecies regarding the end had failed because they overlooked the truth, "No man knoweth the day nor the hour when the Son of man cometh." The believer should be ever ready.

The sect had made an endeavor to discover what was meant by "the gospel," in the verse quoted. As a practical man, he believed that traces must have been left by which it could be identified. For years he had combated the idea that a man's religion was good if he were earnest. Each minister, if consistent, represented that his church was the church either by open statement or by inference. As a people they believed that the angel referred to in Revelation 14:6, as coming to proclaim the everlasting doctrine, had either come or was to come; but he did not intend to discuss that question at the moment. Was this gospel the same as that referred to in Matthew? If the question could not be answered there was nothing left but wild speculation. He believed that God had left means upon record in the Bible for men to discover what the gospel was, and thus judge of the truth of one coming and representing himself as the angel.

Faith, he said, was a first test. Christ had said, "Ye have faith in God, believe also in me." Faith, then, was one of the principles that the angel must teach. Repentance was another principle. So also was that of the second baptism, baptism of water and of the Spirit. So also that of laying on of hands, for which authority was to be found in Mark 16:18, so far as the imparting of spiritual blessings and healing of the sick were concerned. So also was the doctrine of the resurrection from the dead a means of identifying the angel. The sect believed in the literal resurrection as revealed in the Book of Mormon. The weaknesses of the flesh would be shaken off and their bodies would appear at their best. Finally, the mark of the eternal judgment was clear. The judgment did not, in the opinion of the sect, involve eternal suffering as described by some. The punishment would end when it had wrought its end in reformation. Every man was to be judged according to the deeds done in the body, and this ought to be one of the strongest incentives to the living of a correct life.

Devotional exercises brought the meeting to a close.

Elder Evans acted as chairman.—London News, October 8.

THE EDITOR ABROAD.

PRES. JOSEPH SMITH was at St. Thomas, Ontario, the 18th inst., whence he wrote of his labors and observations as follows:—

Returning from Wallaceburg, by the way of Chatham, held meeting on Tuesday evening, October 12, in hall in Scane's Block. The audience was a good one, and very attentive. Bro. James Tyrrell is in charge at Chatham, and is doing what he can to keep things going.

From Chatham to Blenheim is but a short ride. Here the little church was fairly well filled. Bro. Richard Coburn is presiding, and the saints are doing well. The editor of the local paper attended, and gave us a good report; albeit he became interested and forgot to note a good deal of the sermon—so he confessed at the close. He was generous in praise of effort, in the report sent to the paper.

From Blenheim to London, by way of St. Thomas on Thursday, October 14, and a social gathering at the house of good Sister Hunt, as a sort of a formal reception to the Editor, filled the time for a day and a night; for it was not until the "small hours a-yant the twelve," that home and bed were reached, and then not to sleep, but to rest, think, and listen to the clock tell the hours and half hours as they passed.

Friday, the 15th, the two missionaries, the "boy preacher" and the Editor, spent in visiting a number of the saints at their homes, where the outer man was refreshed by wholesome food, and the inner man by the good food of social converse about the hope of life, and cheerful exchange of thought on the topics of the day.

Meeting at night, when the Editor again faced the house full of interested saints and their friends. The hope is that the result will be good. At all events, the saints showed the most friendly appreciation of the visit in London.

On Saturday, the 16th, we found our way to St. Thomas, where Bro. T. A. Phillips is in charge of a branch numbering over a hundred good souls, who are eagerly trying to keep the "unity of the Spirit" in the unity of the faith. The greeting on Sunday, the 17th, in the "little brick church round the corner," at the weekly morning prayer meeting was very cordial. The spirit prevailing was one of peaceful service, in which the testimony of both young, middle aged, and the old, was alike; and bore evidence of the Master's work.

St. Thomas is a railroad center, of about twelve thousand inhabitants—a busy, bustling city; almost a reflex of a western prairie town of equal size.

Among those met here, we noted a former neighbor of the Plano home, a Mr. Stearns; Bro. Thomas Bearss and wife whom we met at Corinth in 1878; also a Major Faulds, who won his pension in the ranks of the Republic, in the late civil war, and though a citizen of the Queen's dominion, still receives his stipend from the exchequer of the United States. He is a fine specimen of manhood, though trembling with the weakness of age. Bro. Cole, known here as "Grandpa Cole," an aged veteran of eighty-seven years, who knew the family of Pattens, David and Ira, and Archibald; heard David Patten preach and speak in tongues in the far away past, but who from unrecognized reasons did not obey the truth until a few months ago. He himself says that he lived in semi-darkness for fifty-five years in the Baptist Church.

These with the host of the brothers and sisters whom we met gave us cheer and comfort. The meetings had been well advertised, and hence at eleven in the morning and at seven at night, the house was filled, and the Editor did the preaching with thankfulness for faith and liberty of the Spirit.

Bro. R. C. Evans will occupy the pulpit tonight, October 18, and from here we will go to Vanessa for Tuesday night, thence to Niagara Falls, Ontario, for the rest of the week and the 24th.

St. Thomas, Ontario, Oct. 19.—Bro. R. C. Evans and I concluded our services here last night, Bro. R. C. preaching the sermon and at its close baptizing one, who had been a believer for some time, and had concluded to wait no longer before putting on Christ. Bro. Evans gave a fine discourse on the nature of the Book of Mormon as one of the three witnesses to Christ and his mission; it was well received.

The people are willing to hear, and the saints seem to be pleased and are a happy people in their faith.

We will be at Niagara Falls, Ontario, till after the 24th.

WHAT DOES THIS PORTEND?

THE following, making the rounds of the press, taken by us from the Buffalo Express, for October 8, carries with it a shade of suspicion. Now that Utah has been enjoying the uses of statehood for a year or two, probably long enough to get accustomed to the ways of independent legislation, is it intended that the utterances of President Woodruff, upon the taking the lead of political affairs by the leading officers of the church, and again controlling the municipal and State governments as united and independent of the two political parties into which division was made so lately? If it is the intention of the presiding authorities to assume political direction, by assuming to dictate the policies of the people independently of the political influences hitherto obtaining in the Democratic and Republican parties, must the Gentiles in the State, and the people of the States outside of Utah, expect that legislation will be shaped to restore and foster what was so ostensibly abandoned with a view to secure statehood, so short a time ago? We confess some curiosity in the premises:—

MORMONS AND POLITICS.

Salt Lake, Utah, Oct. 7.—President Wilford Woodruff, speaking at the Mormon conference, said: "The day has come when the mouths of Wilford Woodruff, George Q. Cannon, Joseph Smith and the twelve apostles should not be closed. God almighty requires you to unite in your Temple work and unite in your politics. You should unite to elect your city council and also all your State officials. You must put aside your Democracy and Republicanism and as Latter Day Saints unite and you will not be taxed to death."

Should such a condition of things be established what becomes of the protestations so lavishly made by leading men among the churchmen of Utah, emphasized by the attack made upon Mr. Moses Thatcher, the issuing of the manifesto, and all the long list of statements made to induce belief in the good faith of the Mormon people? There is ground for apprehension if the statements made in this slip are correct.

DEVELOPMENTS IN UTAH.

In addition to the editorial, "What does this portend?" in the present issue, we give the following items concerning the late General Conference of the Utah Church, which we take from the Semi-Weekly Enquirer of the 8th, published at Provo, Utah. The stars indicating omissions refer only to matter of a nonpolitical character:—

... President Cannon spoke before the sustaining of the authorities on the material welfare of the Latter Day Saints. Saints ought to devote their entire time, after placing themselves in proper condition, for the welfare of Zion. This can best be done by listening to the living oracles of God. Men who have taken counsel have always prospered in the land. The people have strayed from those paths and the result is enormous public debts and heavy taxes.

"How shall the wrong be rectified?" he continued. "How shall you be led? What shall we say as men of God to point out the dangers and show you the path? I tell you the only way we have is to listen to the voice of God and seek to know it. I believe in the principles of government, and I have no doubt but that parties will do as we do. I believe we should be good party men, and I advocated it when proposed in the church and have not changed my mind, but we need not set up party as an idol and worship it, and say, 'Great is Party!' From no party we should not go to the other extreme; we should act like wise people and do what is best for us."

"I am not saying anything about politics, and want to clear myself of saying anything about politics."

"We should be party men sometimes, but not carry it to extremes."

Another item in the same issue of the Enquirer, headed "the closing day," is as follows:—

There was a political sensation at the closing moments of the General Conference Wednesday afternoon, caused by a short address by President Woodruff. President Cannon had just concluded a lengthy address and it was closing time, when the venerable, white-haired President arose and said:—

"I take the liberty as President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to say that I realize we are groaning under poverty, affliction, taxation, and expense, which would not be if we were united to do our duty. This idea of principle, of being afraid to do something because you are Democrats or Republicans is wrong. It is your duty to get together and appoint men for every capacity in the State and city. You should do what is right, and let the consequences follow."

The other speakers and exercises at conference were as follows:—

"... I have addressed you often, and I don't know that I shall ever address you again, and I want to say a few words on principle. I want the Latter Day Saints to take to heart the words of the apostles and elders that have been spoken here.

"The day has come when the mouths of Wilford Woodruff, George Q. Cannon, Joseph F. Smith, and the Twelve Apostles should not be closed. It is said we should say nothing about politics, but God Almighty requires you to unite together; to unite in your temple work and unite in your politics. If I say 'unite in your politics,' I mean for good men to govern the city, the State, and the nation, and when you don't you lose of the essence of your rights. You should unite together to elect your City Council and all the State organization. The day has come when you must put aside Democracy and Republicanism, and as Latter Day Saints unite and you will not be taxed to death.

The foregoing declarations, following the granting of statehood to Utah and the pledges of the Utah Mormon people — official and general — that church influences would not be brought to bear to control political matters, have created a stir among Gentiles in and out of Utah that can better be imagined than described. We insert it for the information of our readers without lengthy comment, as we near the hour of going to press. He who runs may read.

The Deseret News of the 8th makes claim that President Woodruff has been misrepresented. It prints what purports to be an "official" report of his speech, with lengthy explanations and pleas, in an effort to soften down the rising indignation of the elements that are denouncing the so-called utterances of Elder Woodruff. We may be able to furnish the "official report" to our readers. We doubt, however, if even that report will conceal strong hints or suggestions of church rule in politics.

The course of the Utah Church authorities in the Moses Thatcher case and in numerous other matters has been so manifestly deceptive and dishonest that they have only themselves to blame if regarded as untrue and unworthy of confidence. Notwithstanding their many departures from right the people and government of the United States have shown a disposition to trust them and have put them upon honor in granting them statehood. Of their motives we may not be fully informed; of their acts enough has been brought to light upon which to render a correct verdict; by their fruits we have known them. If men deceive and make lies their refuge, the people should know it and hold them to a strict account, for humanity's sake. The day has come when men and their acts must be looked at in their real light.

CHEAPER SUNDAY SCHOOL RECORD.

In response to requests therefor the Herald Office has issued a cheaper edition of "the Sunday School Record," price 40 cents. It is essentially the same as the higher-priced "Record," except that it is ruled for but one year, and is bound in heavy paper covers. The amount of blank forms can be doubled, in the same covers, for larger schools, at 60 cents per copy.

Bro. T. A. Hougas, of the General Association, indorses the new Record as "just the thing." The low price places this needed "help" within the reach of each school, which should have one. Address orders to Business Department.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. W. H. KELLEY, Plymouth, Pennsylvania, October 16:—

I am booked at Scranton for to-morrow afternoon and evening; trying to get things in operation there. Will go to Boston next week via Philadelphia and Brooklyn, and likely on to Maine, if all goes well at home. The Brooklyn conference was an excellent one. Bro. Robley has gone, to Fagundus.

Bro. I. M. Smith will aid him there. Bro. A. Kent is with me and will remain awhile at Scranton. Bro. A. N. Bishop is put in the lead of matters in Scranton. They have secured a hall in the main part of the city and propose to go on with meetings. Some omens of success.

Bro. E. D. Bailey, Standley, Indian Territory, the 18th inst:—

Nineteen baptized here since the 14th inst.; forty-four in all since August 8.

Bro. T. W. Williams, Council Bluffs, Iowa, October 20:—

Just returned from Bartlett, where we held a very successful series of meetings. People came ten and twelve miles. Two school rooms were crowded; had excellent liberty; several "Christian" preachers in attendance. Though invited, they did not "storm the fort." I find in Bro. Henry Kemp a genial, unselfish, and kind fellow laborer; one whom to be associated with is a pleasure. The Bartlett saints were hospitable, generous, and kind. May the seed sown bring forth a creditable harvest.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. J. W. WIGHT has been trying to correct certain statements made by Utah elders, through the Deseret News. The News refused him a hearing in answer to its comments. It believes in discussion—of its side of the question. Particulars later.

Bro. J. R. Lambert returned from missionary labor in the Fremont, Iowa, district, on the 19th.

Some good brother in Wales has sent us a copy of the Llanelly Mercury, of September 30, which contains a lengthy report of a lecture delivered in the Saints' chapel, Llanelly, by Bro. F. G. Pitt; subject, "What is Mormonism, so-called?" Bro. Pitt made good points, of which the Mercury gives a comprehensive report to its readers. Such articles will doubtless aid the church in Wales as the American press articles have helped and continue to help the work in America. Public sentiment concerning the faith will yet undergo radical changes, abroad as well as in this land. Persistent, faithful work by saints and ministry will, by the blessing of God, bring about great changes in its favor. The Mercury also contains a marked article entitled, "Y Gwrthgiliad Cyffredinol," whatever that may be; probably some good points from the pen of some of the Welsh brethren.

The Herald, of Grant County, Wisconsin, publishes an article on the "Vicissitudes of the Church," written by Bro. M. T. Short, in its issue for September 23. The subject matter is a brief review of the apostasy of the early church, followed by a statement of the Reformation, and of the restoration in latter days. The article contains excellent subject matter and is so arranged as to entertain the reader.

Bro. N. C. Enge of Liberty, Washington, wrote, the 13th inst., of his labors in that vicinity. He had gained the respect and good will of some, had effected new openings, and baptized one, formerly a local minister, whom he thinks will be useful. Bro. H. L. Holt had aided in silencing opposition.

The Daily Planet, of Chatham, Ontario, in its issue of the 13th inst. also made friendly mention of President Smith's visit to and labors in Canada, hence deserves credit with other journals so mentioned.

Sr. M. M. Green writes encouragingly of the saints and the work they are doing in the branches at Appledore and Wallaceburg, Ontario. The Wallaceburg saints have provided themselves a chapel; the work moves and grows according to predictions made to that effect. Saints were pleased by the presence of Brn. Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans at their late conference.

The late Southern Missouri reunion held at Mountain Grove is reported by Bro. C. J. Spurlock, its secretary. It was much enjoyed by all present and regarded as "the best ever held" in that region of country. The meetings were spiritual, the ministry being greatly blessed in presenting the word. Many were present who had not previously heard the gospel. The saints rejoiced in social fellowship and in spiritual association. Brn. Keck and Sparling remained after its close to continue preaching.

A letter from Bro. J. H. Winn, which escaped earlier mention, rehearses the story of good things enjoyed by saints of Puryear, Tennessee, through the labors of Brn. Henson, Griffin, Warn; as a result of which thirteen were baptized, the saints being cheered and confirmed in the faith. They hope to see Bro. T. C. Kelley again among them, his labors being greatly appreciated.

The debate between Rev. J. W. Chism and Bro. I. N. White will be held at Kosoma, Indian Territory, November 8. Note the change: from Antlers to Kosoma. This we learn from Bro. Ellis Short.

Bro. J. W. Peterson, of the Eastern Iowa missionary force, reached Lamoni from Missouri on the 21st inst.

Universalists in general session in Chicago, voted on the 20th on the proposition to broaden their creed to require assent to the following proposition only: "A belief in the fatherhood of God; the spiritual authority and leadership of his son Jesus Christ; the trustworthiness of the Bible as containing a progressive revelation from God, and the final harmony of all souls with God." The vote stood 70 for, 32 against, but was lost, the rules requiring not a two-thirds majority of voting, but of reported delegates. The words "fatherhood" and "son" are given in lower case letters entire, as printed in the press report. It serves to show the spirit of the age which professes to revere, but which in practical act largely denies them.

A syndicate of New York capitalists composed of the Vanderbilts, Astors, and others has assumed control of the custom houses and banking institutions of the Republic of Honduras, and has begun the task of liquidating the indebtedness of that country. The Honduras congress has granted right to build lines of transportation, also tracts of land, and valuable colonization and mining privileges. The syndicate is restricted in its work to the management of financial affairs.

A hand to hand fight between the "Leftists" and the "Rightists" ended the session of the Austrian Unterhaus, on the 19th.

Yellow fever continues on the increase at New Orleans. Up to the 20th there had been a total of 981 cases with 110 deaths; 60 new cases on the 20th.

Serious divisions are reported to exist in the Autonomist party in Spain. The breach is said to be widening so rapidly as to endanger the success of the present cabinet.

Simla advices of the 19th report some minor losses to British troops. Tribes on the Indian frontiers are submitting to England's authority.

The city of Windsor, Nova Scotia, was almost completely destroyed by fire on the 17th inst. Few houses are left standing. The condition of the inhabitants is deplorable. The loss is estimated at $3,000,000. Halifax and other cities have provided relief for the distressed people.

A Russian-American syndicate is being formed for the promotion of trade between the United States and Russia. It is expected that reciprocal trade relations will be established by treaties between the two nations. Agencies will be established throughout the two countries; lines of steamers between New York and Black Sea and San Francisco and Asiatic ports. American manufactures will be exported, Russian raw material be imported. Russia expects also to profit by having a source of supplies in case of European war.

The Lower House of the Hungarian diet recently passed a bill prolonging for one year (!) the compact entered into in 1867 between Austria and Hungary, which was renewed in 1877 and again in 1887, and which was on the point of expiring. So Austro-Hungary is a one-year monarchy. However, it is by no means certain that the present compact will continue for that length of time. Emperor Francis Joseph is aged and liable to die at any time, and the Hungarians are restless under the present coalition. Discontent also exists and grows in Austria proper.

A recent cyclone in the Philippine Islands destroyed 400 lives, and property valued at $1,447,500.

The Czar is to visit the German Emperor. The German army is to be largely increased in number. The maneuvers of 1898 are to be held in Alsace-Lorraine and on an "unprecedentedly large scale." Kings talk peace and increase their military forces. The maneuvers in Alsace-Lorraine will hardly be conducive to French tranquility.

Universalists in session at Chicago ratified the "Boston idea" for "broader fellowship lines." The statement "The certainty of just retribution for sin" should be added to those already reported to complete "the essential principles of the Universalist faith."

Large drafts of British soldiers for India on the 22d. Reports of British success are followed by renewed attacks of native tribesmen. It looks as if trouble in India has come to stay.

Disciples and Friends (Quakers so-called) held a joint meeting at Indianapolis on the 22d, "which was eagerly entered into by both denominations. The friends spoke and prayed as the Spirit moved them. At times there were as many as half a dozen persons on their feet at the same time. . . . The Disciples were equally anxious to say a word for Christian unity." The Friends believe in the actual operation of the Spirit, the Disciples do not, hence the basis (?) of their unity. Discipleism with other forms of sectarianism is fluctuating. It is among the spiritual plants that are decaying and being rooted up, because not planted by the heavenly Father.

Spain has officially replied to the note of the United States which hinted at mediation in Cuban affairs. The communication is courteous in tone, but very determined in rejecting the substance of the American note. Spain resolutely asserts her determination to settle the Cuban question herself without foreign assistance or interference of any kind. She declines to fix any date for the pacification of Cuba, which she proposes to bring about as she sees fit by force of arms and by political reforms culminating in autonomy combined. Regretting the losses of foreign residents in Cuba, she argues that the insurrection would not have taken place if international law had been enforced by the United States.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Home's not merely roof and room;
It needs something to endear it.
Home is where the heart can bloom;
Where there's some kind lip to cheer it.

"What is home with none to meet,
None to welcome, none to greet us?
Home is sweet—and only sweet—
When there's one we love to meet us."

SHUTTING UP THE FOLD.

The fire burns dimly on the hearth;
The light is turned down low;
The wintry winds through bare old trees
In fitful gusts oft blow.
The mother pulls the curtain down
To keep away the cold;
Tucks tightly in the children's beds—
She's shutting up her fold.

She covers up the little hand
 Thrown o'er the coverlet:
 She wipes the place on baby's cheek
 Which one stray tear has wet;
 Kisses the little ones who sleep,
 And smooths the hair of gold;
 Then kneels and "prays the Lord to keep"—
 She's shutting up her fold.

O little ones, fenced round secure
 With mother's love and care,
 What looks of peace and trust and joy
 Your sleeping faces wear!
 Outside to-night some children who
 Are tall and large and old
 Are wishing they could be once more Sheltered in mother's fold.

WHAT HAVE I DONE?

WHAT have I done? is a thought which often comes to my mind when contemplating the great work of God in which I, with many others, am engaged. And looking back over my past life since I have been in this work, I can see so little, comparatively speaking, that I must almost say with the poet,
 "So little my life has accomplished,
 My poor hands have wrought;
 I have lived what has seemed to be ages
 In feeling and thought."

If we are engaged in this work, how are we engaged, and what are we doing for the advancement of the same? These are questions which often come to my mind, and applying them to myself, I cannot answer them satisfactorily. We are all aware of the fact that this work must roll on till it fills the whole earth and the honest heart are gathered out; but, am I helping to roll it on, or am I sitting still, letting others do the work? If I am doing all I can to help, then all will be well; but if I am sitting still, letting others do it all, where shall I stand when the rewards are given? If I have been one of the faithful, willing workers in the vineyard of the Master, my reward will be cheerfully given by him who is "no respecter of persons," and who rewards every one according to what he has done. I know this work is true; but knowing and not doing will only add to my sorrow in the great day of final accounts, when I must stand before the Judge of all the earth, there to give an account of my stewardship here.

To me there is a beauty in the gospel work of Christ, and I am glad to be engaged in a work where there are so many noble, self-sacrificing workers. But their work will never add one star to my crown. So I hope to be able to do something for this work, and that I may be worthy the name of saint, though what little I can do may seem as nothing compared to what others are doing. Yet we each have a work to do no one else can do for us. And may I do the little things with willing heart and ready hands, so that my field for usefulness may be broadened and my life not spent in vain.

Help me, dear Lord, from day to day,
 To nobly bear my part;
 To help a brother on the way,
 Or cheer a fainting heart.

Although I'm weak and erring, too,
 Yet may I firmly stand

To help a brother in his need,
 And lend a helping hand.

To those whose trials are so great
 They almost faint and fall,
 O, may I point them to the Lamb,
 Where Christ is all in all.

And may I ever thus be found,
 With patience kind and true,
 Until my life work here is done,
 And heaven's gates I view.

And may I have a home within
 That city bright and fair;
 When all earth's troubles here are done,
 May I his glory share.

Dear Home Column:—Being one of the scattered ones who has often been cheered by reading our dear paper, I felt drawn to contribute my mite. I often have a number of neighboring children in my home, as well as my own boys, who to me are only amateur men, with likes and dislikes of their own, and have learned by observation that we fail to realize that each one is possessed of an individuality distinct from all others. We are too apt to look at them as only children, and thus dismiss them from further thought. But as mothers, ought we to expect to bring them to our terms simply for our own gratification? Often I feel pained when I see mothers demanding certain acts just for their own convenience, and I believe it to be all wrong. Mould them we may; but how shall it be done? By studying their natural inclinations and letting them work out their own schemes as far as possible without harm to themselves or others. True, they are sometimes noisy and troublesome and we are tired; but, dear sisters, our boys are worth many times the annoyance. We gain their confidence and hold it when older in that way. How much more the boy realizes a parent's love if he can feel that he is on a level with that parent. Not, of course, in judgment, and hence we often have to be firm in denying them some things which they cannot see why we should.

I believe in children being obedient. That is one of the earliest lessons to be taught, but there is nothing gained by demanding obedience in such a way as to arouse all the perverseness in their little natures; and a child soon learns to feel a wrong. I know a mother who is so afraid her boys will soil her carpets or floors that they are never allowed to play in doors, and if called away from home the doors are all safely locked for fear Carl or Willie may go in the house, and of course being tempted by the strangeness of it all, go into the front room, or help themselves to something to eat. Sisters, I hope none of us are so careless. Let us remember that our home is the home of our boys; that we are somewhat responsible for their being there; but having been placed there, they have rights in that home. When it is real bitter cold, often those boys are compelled to come into my house for warmth and comfort. I want my boys to share the key with me and enter the home as one belonging there, and never yet have they presumed upon this confidence by taking liberties when I was away.

Above all, let us trust that word which says, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not," believing that he will direct us as mothers, and let us not be forgetful to ask daily.

DUTIES OF LOCAL OFFICERS.

THE first thought that comes to me on this topic is that every one should know his place in the Sunday school, and how to most successfully do the work that is required of him. But aside from officers' duties, let us first notice some things whereby each of us may be helpful in the work.

It is necessary that we should feel an interest in our work. It is our as Christians to devote a part of our time to Christian work. In so doing we can benefit ourselves and hope to help others. We each have an influence that bears upon others, and whatever that influence may be we are responsible for it.

We all know that we must meet with annoying things. Our methods are criticised. One of the critics may think we are trying to shirk duty, while another thinks we are trying to do too much. But I have always found it best to think of these difficulties in meekness. "Be sure you are right, then go ahead." Considering the

we have first in order those of the superintendent. "He shall preside at each session of the Sunday school, direct its general interests." He should visit each class a few minutes during the session, be an attentive listener, and if the teacher fails to make certain points plain to the pupils, and he can in any way throw new light on the subject, it is his duty, then and there, to do so. Or if he sees commendable features in her work, to not fail to make note of them and encourage her by making mention of them to her privately. A wise superintendent will never speak criticisingly of one officer or teacher to another. If conditions are not right, he will labor prudently to correct them in the business meetings of the school.

HE SHOULD ATTEND

all the district conventions, read articles on Sunday school work, and if in them he finds progressive ideas, see that his teachers adopt those new methods. In schools where it is possible there should be a teacher's meeting during the week, under direction of the superintendent. If the officers and teachers are not acquainted with their duties, he should gather them together in business meetings, and there help them to learn the duties of their various offices.

In a school where there is material sufficient for teachers, the superintendent should not be one of that number. The duties in his office demand his entire time.

HE HAS THE POWER to appoint visiting committees, lookout committees, and any committee that he may deem necessary. He should furnish a written report to each regular meeting of the association.

Of all offices, that of the assistant superintendent is the most neglected. In the majority of our schools you would scarcely know there exists such an officer, except in case of the superintendent's absence. Then he is generally timid because of inexperience. The assistant should be a coworker with the superintendent, and may be called on occasionally to preside while the superintendent is present, so that he may better know his duties when left alone.

He should be present every Sabbath on time, standing near the door to greet pupils and visitors, and invite the visitors to take part. Also showing them to the proper class. He should lead the school in responsive reading. Or if he is not a good reader, the superintendent should appoint one who has the faculty and voice for leading.

NELLIE EPPERLY,

For Kewanee District Convention.

LAST winter Bernard P. Grenfell and Arthur S. Hunt, while exploring in Egypt, discovered in a heap of refuse from an old city, the leaf of a book. Although somewhat decayed, most of the writing could be distinguished. It was written in Greek, and upon being translated it was found to be the words of Jesus. It seems to be a compilation of sayings gathered from the Christian writers, and while no date was given, it is thought it was compiled in the second century. It has been published and given to the world through the Oxford press. Great effort has been made to get further information on the matter, and this summer the labors of these two men were rewarded by finding about a dozen leaves more. In these the date is fixed as 93 A. D. Some of these sayings have a resemblance to some in the Bible, while others are entirely new.

This is especially interesting to Latter Day Saints, because it shows that not all the scriptures are in the Bible; and while the professed Christian world hold the opposite view, they are being forced by their own discoveries to acknowledge the position of the Latter Day Saints as correct.

THE new Sunday School Secretary's Record is now ready to mail. In form of ruling it is the same as the old one. It contains blanks for one year. It is now within the reach of all. Send all orders to the Herald Office.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT.

AN outline developed in the course of a normal lesson by the general superintendent at the late reunion at Woodbine, Iowa.

1¹ Qualifications.

- 1² Should be a Latter Day Saint.
- 2² One who loves the work.
- 3² A natural leader.
- 4² Punctual.
- 5² A live energetic man.
- 6² Modern and progressive.
- 7² Cheerful and kind.
- 8² A praying man.
- 9² Temperate.
- 10² A lover of children.
- 11² One who attends conventions, etc.

2¹ Duties.

- 1² To prepare for the work.
- 2² To study to improve both himself and school.
- 3² To move out and learn from other workers.
- 4² To counsel with his assistant.
- 5² To hold teacher's meetings.
- 6² To visit teachers and pupils at their homes.
- 7² To conduct the Sunday school.
- 8² To be punctual and always there.
- 9² To conduct the general review.
- 10² To see that other officers are in line of duty.

By looking carefully over these points you can see the necessity for them all. It may be difficult to find one who can pass for a superintendent under this criterion. There are those who can, but they are few. If you cannot fill your office with such an one, take the next best. In matters of Sunday school management as in all other fields of work, if you cannot do as you would like, do the best you can.

If you are selected for a superintendent do not hesitate to accept because you do not fill the measure. Go to work. "Study to show thyself approved." Hunt up your defects and try to remove them. Take your case to God in prayer. If you make an honest effort, and that is your work, you may depend upon it he will not suffer you to fail. But he has never promised to help those who do not manifest a willingness to help themselves.

IT IS A MISTAKE

to elect a person who is not in the least qualified for an office, simply because he is a good man, a good talker, a high officer in church or branch, a popular man, or a favorite. Look for the qualification first.

It is a mistake, too, to elect some one just to get them to attend; or to keep peace in the Sunday school, or settlement. All distempers of the mind are contagious. Better keep the "head" free from them, that the body may remain healthy.

Letter Department.

SYDNEY, N. S. W., Sept. 13.

Editors Herald:—In my last from New Castle, I referred to a report that elders of the Utah Church were in Sydney passing under our name. It is proper to state that I have upon investigation found there is nothing in the rumor. They are operating in another part of the city, and as far as I could ascertain, are doing no harm, and creating little if any interest. In the street where their meetings are held, and where two families belonging to that church reside, the people know practically nothing of the strange religion in their midst.

I went to their Sunday night preaching services; found about twenty in attendance (nearly all their own members, they said) and three elders from Utah to instruct them. The service closed with not even a hint of future meetings. I then had a private interview from the standpoint of an investigator, which lasted over one hour. Will not burden your pages with it, any further than to say they were somewhat annoyed at being asked whether or not they believed in polygamy, and if so, why they didn't practice what they believed. They believed in it "if" it was a commandment. I was not satisfied with such an equivocal answer. "Do you believe in baptism?" I asked. "Yes," was the prompt answer. "And you practice it?" "Yes." "Then why can't you give me as straightforward answer in regard to polygamy?" Well, he believed in polygamy "when" it was a commandment. When pressed further, he rather confidently stated they didn't believe in it or practice it. I cautioned him not to speak hastily, for I had been told by other "representatives" of his body that they did believe it though they didn't practice it.

Notwithstanding they affirmed in preaching that Brigham Young was the successor to Joseph Smith, they peremptorily refused to debate this or any other point. "We are here to preach the gospel," he said gravely; our words are few." I see through it all since a little reflection. The affirmation above alluded to was their "testimony" being delivered—"a savor of life unto life or of death unto death"—and when "living oracles" get up before us and say "I testify," that shouldn't be questioned; and is not debatable.

Can the dictatorial priesthood of Rome beat this for assumption? Well, I didn't see any halo or sacred Shekinah around their heads, though I did detect in their voice a self-conscious assumed superiority and priestly dignity (?). In one of the three sermons we were told to "investigate."

I left them with mingled feelings of pity and disgust. Any way, I'm glad I don't represent a God who gave "celestial" commandments under pains and penalties with promise of exaltation; and with a prophecy that the principle would prosper and override all opposition; and who then took it all back and compromised with an earthly power. They have fancied they were being spoken to by the God of Abraham, who gave (?) that Patriarch his Hagar, but a "more sure word of prophecy" declares the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob to be "unchangeable." Let those who assume that polygamy was a part of the eternal purpose fearlessly affirm it and defend it, rather than entrench themselves behind prestige, and priestly dignity and infallibility.

Mr. Editor, inasmuch as Utah propagandists have readopted the original epitome of faith, abandoned the practice of polygamy, and refuse to defend the utterances of "living oracles" now dead, and are declaring that they are not preaching the Utah doctrines of forty years ago, do they not virtually concede all we have affirmed? I see no use in debating a position practically and logically conceded by those whose claims we challenge. If they deny that anything is conceded, then we submit that they must maintain it. There's no playing fast and loose in this matter. That which isn't conceded must be defended or proved. Where are they to be found, anyhow? I, for one, demand to know. If they concede the main points in dispute, then I promise them I will not waste any more time worrying their representatives over here.

Four were baptized here yesterday, large audience at our chapel at night, and wonderful liberty. Late word from Elders Kaler and Butterworth up the country says four were added there. Letter from New Castle says two more there since I left.

GOMER WELLS.

OAKLAND, Cal., Oct. 5.

Editors Herald:—Immediately after the reunion I went to Merced County and got an opening in a couple of private houses, also in a schoolhouse, but on account of sickness among the people could hold but three meetings with only a few in attendance. Change of water, and food, and sleeping brought on my old complaint again, so I was forced to return home yesterday for repairs, and the Lord only knows when I shall be able to go into the field again. But I shall not be idle, as there is plenty to do here in Oakland, if I am only able to do it, where I can be at home most of the time. I ask the prayers of my brethren.

Yours in bonds,

A. HAWS.

MILLERSBURG, Ill., Oct. 12.

Editors Herald:—I left the dear old home the 8th of May, called on a few intervening points enroute, and soon brought up in the romantic State of Wisconsin. My endeavors were confined to the following counties: Racine, Walworth, Rock, Dane, Iowa, and Grant. I wrote considerably for the secular press, and obtained ready access to some of the papers at Madison. Three weeklies are published at Lancaster, Grant County. Six distinct articles have been issued from there, and the seventh will soon appear when space will be available, and time and opportunity will permit.

I stayed by my work all through the heated term of this unusual hot summer. When I could not obtain large audiences I spoke to medium sized, and by times, rather small ones. I met with my brethren in two conferences, assisted some in tent work near, and especially in Madison; and elsewhere aided the missionary force, and the local laborers all I well could. This severing of family ties, with regular habits, and domestic tranquility, and the voice of conjugal love was made tolerable in duty's rugged pathway, as the light of God shone forth where the weary pilgrim's dusty aching feet were wont to go in city or the rural pathways.

While money matters were rather close, owing to hard times, hospitality at the home circle was all that could be expected of any people the wide world over. Many seemed anxious to keep pace with the work and were alive to its interests; but some were careless. The pleasure fields at the theater, and more so the dance, are extinguishing the love of some and bringing the cause into disrepute. An overly dressed person, with glittering jewelry and flashy rings, seldom ever prays or contributes to the support and spread of the work. Once in a while I hear of a scattered few that have grown cold, laid their armor down, and fallen away or turned back to the fleshpots and leeks of Egypt, but these are the rare exceptions.

In the capital city we had no church members when we pitched the cotton tabernacle, but twelve were baptized there by Brn. Wildermuth, myself, and Elder Robinson of Oregon, to which branch they will all belong till a local church is organized in the city famous for beautiful adjacent lakes and elegant scenery. The directing hand of God, and the blessed Spirit of light, love, and truth surely led us to that people. We sowed, in connection with our dear brethren of the holy ministry, with a liberal hand and a willing, cheerful, hopeful aggressive heart; but the planting and watering were in conjunction with the good Lord who evidently inspired the word of life, and gave a successful harvest.

In one family the housewife thereof, through a misunderstanding, and from her wrong traditions, abused me in the presence of several, and bolted away in a rage. I called on her that very afternoon, found her calm, reasonable, and clever, and now to cut the story brief, herself and husband, son and step-daughter are safe in the fold. They were most all active workers in one of the nominal churches, and her husband was director of the mission chapel. While the city pastor was away rustivating on a summer vacation I obtained the use of the aforesaid place of worship, and convened ten meetings. While I was in the western part of the State, the live pastor of the branch twelve miles south, followed up the work and reaped in the household.

The conference that met on the 25th and 26th ult., in the northwest part of Rock County, was a grand success all around. Bro. Lake was with us to counsel, preside, direct, preach, and ordain according to his office and calling; and, best of all, by the wisdom and inspiration of the Lord of hosts, a young man that is nearing his majority, named Francis Sanford, of Madison, was called and ordained to minister in the priest's office when he was only two weeks old in the gospel. Jephtha Wildermuth, the son of Dan and nephew of Eli M., of Loyd, was also set apart to a similar charge, and he too will be heard from by and by. A Bro. K. Gregory of Argyle, who is a live Scandinavian, was raised to the eldership, as also young F. Ball of East Delavan.

Elder W. A. McDowell baptized the sturdy Norwegian's consort and Sr. Eva Williams, nee Hare's, husband at conference. Elder H. Southwick also immersed a brother's wife recently in Grant, and thus these households are united and blessed of God.

Last Saturday and Sunday I attended the Northeastern Illinois district conference, at Sandwich, Illinois, where there was an immense gathering. It was a most excellent session, and unity and love did abound in all the proceedings. Brethren McDowell of Wisconsin, Lake, and Cooper did the preaching; whereas Bro. Henley inducted four female children through the water. Two elders, Henley and Earl, were ordained, and Brethren Frank Crum, Henry Atkins, and — Howard were set apart to be priests. I got in home all O. K. last night, so are all happy here now.

M. T. SHORT.

COLUMBUS, Neb., Oct. 13.

Editors Herald:—When last I wrote I was resting at home, preparing work for Woodbine reunion Sunday school exercises, with the anticipation of a pleasant visit with loved ones for a few days before having to enter into the work of the reunion; but behold a message calling for me to come and pray for the afflicted babe of Bro. D. W. Albertson, of Cedar County, Nebraska; but when I arrived it was to comfort bereaved ones, the spirit of the babe had taken its departure. September 1, I assisted in laying the casket of clay beneath the sod, awaiting the trump of God. Before I started on this sad trip I performed a burial, which to me was a source of joy, when were buried three precious souls with Christ by baptism, one of whom was my second daughter Alice. Her willingness and desire to be baptized to a large extent is credited to her Sunday school teachers. When she was about seven years of age she told me, when conversing with her about baptism, that she did not want to be baptized. I told her she need not be till she was willing and wanted to be. A short time before she was eight years of age, during one of my visits home, she came, and sitting on my knee, said, "Papa, I will be baptized now." I asked, "What has changed your mind? only a short time ago you did not think you would be baptized." She says, "I have learned that God wants me to be baptized, and I want to be because he wants me to be." This lesson she had had impressed forcibly upon her mind by her Sunday school teachers. To such there is a great reward.

Upon my return from Cedar County I found family ready to start to Woodbine the next day, September 3, the opening day of the reunion. During the reunion I was busy, being assistant secretary, in charge of committee on administrations, assisted in looking after telephone, and assistant superintendent of the Sunday school exercises. I received spiritual encouragement through my associating with saints and in seeing and feeling the manifestations of God's power, which was witnessed to a marked degree in all the ministrations both in word and ordinances.

Saturday and Sunday, 18 and 19, I attended Sunday school convention of Pottawattamie district, where I enjoyed the association of many earnest school and church workers; and pardon the expression, I find the most earnest Sunday school workers to be among the most earnest and efficient church workers. Here we heard the voice of Brn. James Caffall and T. W. Williams, intellectually pleading for the upbuilding of this department of church work, and especially was it pleasing to hear the information given by Bro. Caffall concerning the work in England and Wales. Long may he live an efficient worker in the Redeemer's cause.

The 20th I came to Omaha, having the pleasure of seeing Brn. A. H. and F. A. Smith, and counseling with them.

The 21st I came to Norfolk, where I pitched the tent and began a series of meetings which closed the 4th inst., having preached seventeen discourses with excellent liberty, having an average attendance of about twenty-five. Many favorable expressions were made concerning the principles presented, some absents themselves from their own church services, preferring to hear the gospel. Two, a husband and wife, were baptized on the 4th, who were confirmed and gave expression to their joy the same evening in being children of God. I organized a Sunday school there and assisted them in making arrangements for Bible study and social meetings, there being only five members in this place. I was ably assisted by Bro. and Sr. J. H. Logeman in every way it was possible for them to assist. Mrs. Olin assisted at the organ the most of the time while I was there, for whom, and for all who so kindly assisted, there is a sure reward. The 5th I came to the home of Sr. Sarah J. Allen, where has been present the power of affliction to a very trying degree. While there administered to her son Joshua S. twice, and then assisted him to the water and baptized and confirmed him a member of the body of Christ, leaving him feeling better in body and in spirit.

I arrived on the evening of the 7th at Norfolk, where I met with the few saints in social service and gave them some words of instruction and comfort, leaving there next morning for Fremont to attend the convention and conference of Northern Nebraska district. At three and 7:30 p. m. presided over the convention. The reports from schools and teachers were encouraging.

Conference met the following day, continuing two days, during which time an excellent season was enjoyed by all; two being ordained, and a committee appointed to secure a new district tent for use next year.

Came here the 10th, but on account of much sickness it was thought best that no meetings be held, and I appreciated a much desired rest for a couple of nights.

On the streets yesterday I saw for the first time the aged and somewhat bowed form of Guy C. Barnum, who at one time figured conspicuously at Preparation, Iowa, associated with Charles B. Thompson. He has just returned from the Insane Asylum at Norfolk, Nebraska, where he has been in confinement several months. He is released under the express restrictions that he does not study or lecture on hypnotism, into which he had previously indulged, and which was one of the causes of dethroning a—at one time—strong mind. He first drifted into spiritualism from Baneemyism, and then into hypnotism. He owns a large stock farm near here.

I go to Shelton to-day to begin labor in that part of the Lord's vineyard. The saints here are feeling well spiritually, but some are aged and afflicted physically.

With perfect confidence in the final triumph of this work, and the soon coming of Jesus Christ without sin unto salvation, I am your brother,
J. F. MINTUN.

MADISON, Me., Oct. 12.

Editors Herald:—Since General Conference I have been quite diligently about the "Father's business." My first stop was at East Pharsalia, New York; five saints live there; found them alive and zealous in the work. They have a Sabbath school and prayer meetings. Opposition is quite strong; no place was found for preaching; after meeting with the saints a few times I went to Smithville; there I preached sixteen times, baptizing one. At Smithville Flats no preaching had been done before. We used the Universalist church; prejudice was high at first, but they gave us good audiences. This is a fine opening, and whoever next visits Chenango Creek should give it a call. The preacher will find a home with Mr. Bert Harris and others. We left several very interested there. We next called at Springvale, near Norwich; there we found some friends to the cause, made by Bro. Sheehy last fall. They have a very neat chapel where several churches worship with a unity unique and enviable. The M. E. minister from Norwich preaches for them every Thursday night. The prohibition sentiment is very strong there; Bro. D. H. Lewis is the most entertaining talker along that line we ever met. Though born in the "Pine Tree State," our temperance principles were too temperate to pass current there; but as fine milk was in evidence, and they were by no means temperate with that, we grew and flourished.

Bro. Sheehy joined me there, and we continued till June 12, baptizing some excellent people. We started east, Bro. Sheehy stopping a few days at West Pawlet, Vermont. Our trip in New York was a very pleasant one. Opportunities for preaching, where the gospel has never been, are abundant. We hope some day to return.

We found Bro. U. W. Greene, our subordinate apostle, anxious to start the tent in Maine. I joined him in Millbridge. Our Maine seasons are short at best, and this year it has been uncommonly cold and wet. We worked hard in Millbridge; but succeeded in making an opening. We have a church to use when we return, and friends to care for the preachers. While tents are a decided success in some States, we are inclined to question the advisability of their use in Maine. We moved to South Gouldsboro; interest good. Remained about two weeks, then housed the tent and separated; Bro. Greene to attend Eastern Maine conference, while I crossed to Lamoine. There I found a fine interest created by those who have been there before. I made my home with Mr. and Mrs. (now Bro. and Sr.) Hamor. There are many who are "almost persuaded," and three decided to fully venture upon the realities of obedience. We saw here, as elsewhere, evidence of the influence for good upon the lives of others, exerted by those who live their religion. How the work will grow when saints attend to gospel duties, abiding the law of the new life, that they may be transformed by the spirit of life into children of God! "Living epistles" are known and read by all men. Many are so prejudiced they will not listen to a word in explanation of our positions; but they cannot fail to see the change which takes place in the lives of those who keep the "celestial law," and usually God gets the glory.

On my way to conference I visited several branches in the interest of the financial department. Conference passed pleasantly. Several holding priesthood in our district have done nothing in the line of their office. A resolution was passed, which, if we understand its purport, will have a tendency to spur them to honor their office and calling, or cause their names to be dropped from the official list.

Bro. Green and I came here the 6th inst. Madison is a town of about two thousand inhabitants. Five saints live here. We have a fair sized hall for preaching; audiences fair. The town is well (?) churched; we find plenty to oppose and misrepresent.

We are confident of final victory; are cheerful in our warfare. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am

Yours for the conflict,

W. W. BLANCHARD.

RUNNELLS, Iowa, Oct. 14.

Editors Herald:—The series of tent meetings at Sandyville numbered twenty-one. Bro. Kephart visited us and preached once—a good effort—during the time. The services were well attended, in the main, and splendid interest was manifested and continued to the end. About two hundred present at the closing service, the evening of the 6th. The people are investigating, and a number are now fighting for our side with much earnestness. The light of truth begins to shine at Sandyville. Bro. Joseph Knox and noble wife who have stood for the truth there so long and earnestly, now have help there, at least so far as friendly aid goes, by those now friendly to the gospel restored. I tried to sow the seed of the kingdom frankly, plainly, and liberally. Some said they believed the preaching was by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. I feel thankful for the divine aid granted me in my feeble efforts.

The Des Moines district Sunday school convention and conference were held with the saints of the Runnells branch, October 8-10, with a large attendance at all the sessions of both. Sr. Springer, superintendent of the district association, can get as much business done in as brief a time as most anyone, and do the work by rule. The children's session on Friday evening was just fine. The declamations were of a high order, appropriate, and well rendered, and the essays of Bro. J. F. McDowell and Sr. Davis are worthy a place on the records. The business of conference was transacted with a due degree of unity and dispatch. The testimony meetings gave evidence of prayerfulness, humility, and much earnestness. The preaching was spiritual, pointed, and attended by the Spirit's power. The preachers were Brn. C. E. Hand, W. Johnson, J. F. McDowell, and the writer. I was privileged to lead one soul into the waters of baptism on Sunday, Sr. Zula A. Knox; and on Monday Bro. and Sr. H. Nyswonger were baptized by Bro. J. S. Roth, and confirmed before returning to their home. Their accession to the faith will greatly encourage Brn. Cole and Westerly and families, who live near them.

The Bishop's agent's report showed plainly, notwithstanding the closeness of the times, the saints have not forgotten the financial needs of the work, or to sacrifice for its advancement. The agent, W. C. Nirk, reminded the saints that at no time had they ever seen in the Herald a censure of them by him for neglect on their part in respect to finances. I also observed that he was kept quite busy at times filling out receipts for the aid rendered by saints while at conference.

In our field, as elsewhere, is to be observed those who are not very active in the work, and some who are doing nothing at all. And I often wonder what account they will render when summoned to appear at the judgment for rewards! They are here, the gospel has found them; it insures eternal life, rewards of glory, everlasting joy, crowns and palms of victory over sin, doubt, and death, and against banishment from God, Christ, and the good and holy ones of all ages and worlds, if lived up to! Arouse, ye sleeping ones, from your stupor and gloom. "Arise, and Christ shall give thee light!" Walk out into the divine sunshine. Put on the armor anew—"the whole armor of God." Chase darkness from around you; pray much, work while you may. All that the gospel offers you may fail to attain to, may lose! But the account you must render; the judgment we cannot escapell! There is no way of escape. Lay this to heart; be warned while you may. Humility before God, continual prayer, faithful fulfillment of every known duty to God and fellow man is the only course to pursue. "Knowing the terror of the Lord, we persuade men," says Apostle Paul.

Is the time of rewards drawing near? Are we now in the closing generation of Gentile times? See Doctrine and Covenants 45: 3, 4. Did the "this generation" of paragraph three begin with Jesus' birth? Did it extend beyond A. D. 72-75? Were the desolations there referred to fulfilled or completed by the year A. D. 75? Did the "that generation" of paragraph four begin as early as 1830, when "the fullness of the gospel" broke forth among them that sat in darkness? Does the word "generation" in both paragraphs have the same signification? And if the times of the Gentiles are to be fulfilled in "that" (this, our) "generation," will the times of the Gentiles extend beyond 1902-5? Luke 21: 24.

Saints, Where are we? "Then" what? Will Jewish captivity end? Will Gentile woe begin? Are we entering, almost, Luke, twenty-one and verse twenty-five? (Mic. 4: 1, 2; Joel 2: 23-25; 3: 7, 8; Zeph. 3: 8; Heb. 12: 25-27.) And God "now speaketh from heaven." We are living in verse seven of Revelation fourteen, and 16: 12, 13. What say astronomers and scientists about the times dating about 1901-5? Surely the times are growing interesting.

"The Gentile fullness now comes in,
And Israel's blessings are at hand."

The angel has come with the everlasting gospel, the authoritative message is now going to the wicked nations, "Fear God, and give glory to him." Miracle working evil spirits are going to the nations; they are popular, kings are receiving them. Jews are again possessing their land, and Gentiles do them homage, as their servants. New elements are being incorporated into national policies. Political revolutions are increasing. And, grandest of all,

"Look ye nations, gaze and wonder,
Lo! the Church of Christ appears,
In the sun's majestic splendor,
On her head a crown of stars."

While elements and forces are gathering that surely betoken the downfall of Mystery Babylon, crumbling, disintegrating, dividing, weakening influences are surely undermining the popular theologies of the age.

Saints, chronologically, where are we?

C. SCOTT.

MADISON, Maine, Oct. 13.

Editors Herald:—Amid the gorgeous scenery of Western Maine, mountain and dale being resplendent in autumnal tints, we are laboring for the Master. The beauty of our sea coast is proverbial; millions of dollars are annually spent by those who have it, in enjoying the same. October, however, assumes a beauty grander than any other part of the year. The summer has been a busy one all along the line. Our congenial brother from "blue nose" land, H. J. Davison, has caused the prejudices of Aroostook County to melt like frost before the sun. Bro. J. N. Ames is conquering difficulties and sounding the trump of battle in Washington County. Bro. S. O. Foss has erected a little home at Monsepec; though kept from the missionary field he has told the "sweet story of old" each Sabbath to his neighbors.

Attending conference at Jonesport in September; we were greatly blessed by the Holy Spirit. Two baptisms there and two more at South Addison the following Wednesday. Bro. J. S. Walker, with years of faithful effort to his credit, still holds the fort in Jonesport. Sr. Eliza, his efficient wife, superintendent of the Sunday school association, has been doing missionary work among the schools. In Indian River Bro. Uriah Kelley, the new Bishop's agent, is a hustler; under his energetic efforts we trust his department will show satisfactory returns. Western Maine conference at Green's Landing passed pleasantly; five baptisms during the meetings, four by Bro. Blanchard. Bro. J. H. Robbins, ably assisted by Bro. Hutchinson, presides. The branch is in a better spiritual condition than for some time. A notable feature there, is the number of young people who have obeyed the gospel of late, and entered the conflict in earnest. Brn. Pert, Eaton, and Cunningham brought encouraging news from their localities, and express the determination of pressing the fight.

The old ocean that sparkles so beautifully in the sunshine brings sorrow to many homes. How blessed the day when "it rolls back to its own place," and gives up the "dead that are in it." The beautiful three year old boy of Bro. and Sr. David Joy, of South Addison, strayed from the door a few moments; when search was instituted he could not be found. Through the day and night the hunt continued. Next day his body was found on an island, washed up by the tide. May the kind Father comfort them by his Holy Spirit. Thank God for the hope of the gospel; surely 'tis "an anchor to the soul."

The pioneer missionary of Maine, Bro. George W. Eaton, having been a great sufferer for about five years, found it necessary to visit the hospital. I was enabled to accompany him. The operation was successful and he is now improving. Many fervent prayers ascend for him. God grant he may yet spend years in the gospel work. Bro. Blanchard, my colatorer, whose aspirations are greater than the State of Maine, and who, like Alexander of old, seeks other worlds to conquer, having described our summer's work somewhat, I forbear. The State isn't captured for Christ yet, nor are saints all alive to their duties, but we trust the clouds that have obscured our work and impeded our progress are lifting—the dawning of a brighter day being at hand.

In pleasant bonds,

NEVADA, Mo., Oct. 11.

Editors Herald:—Will you please announce through the Herald that I would like to hear from some of the saints in Colorado or some of the western country. I am a teacher and am thinking some of going west, and do not want to land among strangers.

As I depend on teaching I would like to go where wages are as good as possible. Whatever I obtain for my work though, whether it be much or little, I expect to tithe. This I consider a law as binding as any commandment. I wish it were preached more.

Respectfully,

DECEPTION'S REIGN.—PART 2. NO. 1.

BY ELDER COLUMBUS SCOTT.

TRUTH vs. ERROR.

A STRANGE condition in religious matters confronts us all in these latter days. It is not a theory merely, an uncertain and an indefinite theory, it is a Babylonish jargon of a multitude of contradictory theories; and each is clamoring for special recognition and the chief attention of the world. All are pressing their respective claims with all the logic, human wisdom, sophistry, or the admixture of truth and error that their respective advocates are capable of bringing to bear on the minds of men.

Such a condition as is now prevalent never was known to the race before, where Christianity was in the least concerned. The present religious condition is without a precedent in the past history of the world. Well may the attention of all be aroused to the momentousness of the situation, as is truly the case as never before. Well may the question, What is the truth in the premises? rouse inquiry as seldom roused before, with the humble, honest inquirer. And, Whence and what the cause of the uncertainty and division that now exists with us in relation to the things that "concern our hope" in the endless hereafter? All cannot be right and yet so much involved in the question be so contradictory and unreasonable.

"Can we not appeal to the religious 'standard' and settle the difficulties once for all?"

What is the standard?

"What a question!" says one. The spontaneous answer reverberates along mountains, hills, vales, and plains with a mighty roar, as the voice of many waters, "The Bible, the holy Bible is the infallible standard of faith and doctrine for Christians!" We listen, we gaze, and wonder as we look, with great admiration! What is the Bible? we ask. And the reply in thunder tones rolls up from all quarters, "The word of the Lord God of hosts!" And to emphasize the answer, all join in grand chorus:—

Holy Bible, book divine,
Precious treasure, thou art mine!

See the throngs gathered to worship! Behold their devotions! What a mighty chorus of prayer! They are reading those prayers. Are those prayers read from the Bible? See there. That minister takes that little babe, right in the church, and puts a few drops of water on its bright, innocent, sinless forehead; he reads some words of direction from that little book and lays it down on the Bible. The little book seems to be the guide or director in this case. At that grand marriage the other evening,—all in the midst of dazzling splendor, beauty, and reverent happiness,—the officiating minister read the solemn ceremony from that little book, and then laid it on the old family Bible that lay closed on the stand. When that merchant was buried last week the preacher consoled the bereaved, mourning family and friends from another book, and it was not the Bible! I inquire, What does all that mean?

"O, my dear friend, do not be irreverent. That little book is our 'discipline.'"

"What?"

"Our discipline. It is the book we are guided by in our worship."

Is it the Bible?

"No; it contains the articles of our holy religion!"

And you are guided in your faith and forms of worship by these little books?

"Yes; to us they are sacred; and our grand church was founded upon and built; that is, was organized, and established, and built up in strict accord with the teachings of those books. And were it not for the 'discipline,' or the 'confession of faith,' we could not clearly determine how to build the church, or just what our faith might be."

Do these "books" contain the same as the Bible?

"They contain extracts, passages of scripture taken from the Bible; but their contents are more particularly the interpretations of or the 'decisions' as to what those Scriptures mean."

Did God give these "interpretations" or "decisions," as to the meaning of his word to those men, by revelation, to those ministers or councils?

"No; God has given no revelation to man since he revealed himself to John the Revelator, on the island of Patmos, about the year ninety-six of the Christian era."

The decisions or interpretations found in the confessions of faith then are not divinely inspired?

"No; they are the decisions of our most learned theologians as to what they think God meant or should have said when he gave us the Bible."

Later synods and councils may decide that the decisions now in the confessions are wrong, and give new and different decisions and interpretations.

"Yes; that is done sometimes."

The change in the decisions would bring about a change in the faith and doctrines of the membership of the churches.

"Yes."

How, then, can we determine which is the infallibly correct faith, the new or the old?

"We cannot know, infallibly know, just what the faith and doctrine is. It may be one thing in one generation, and differ in many essentials from this in other and later ages."

There is no way, then, to determine with absolute certainty what the Bible teaches?

"The Lord was not able to give a revelation of his will to man, concerning what he should do to be saved, sufficiently plain for him to understand, without learned ministers should give him the meaning of it? These learned ministers have 'decided' that he cannot."

Then recurring once more to the original proposition, "The Bible is the infallible standard of faith and practice for all Christians;" it, for its infallibility or certainty, depends altogether on the truth or falsity of judgment, interpretations, or "decisions" of the poor, fallible council of preachers, after all?

"That would be the legitimate logic of our position."

Might it not be wisest after all to drop the confession as only the opinions of men, and make a direct appeal to the Bible and the revelations of God for direction in matters of duty, rather than to so jeopardize the Bible in trying to save the confession?

"Perhaps it would; as I now see that our position regarding our confession renders both it and the Bible as uncertain as the mind of mortal man and his judgment."

Reader, the few foregoing questions and their answers, if followed understandingly, will enable us to see the ground and cause of the religious divisions that to-day exist in the world. The word of God is an infallible standard of faith and duty to all who take him at his word; nor need we be in doubt or uncertainty regarding what we must do to be saved.

"But," says the defender of the confession, "when we drop that, the foundation of our church or churches is gone!"

If the confession is the "decision" of men as to what God's word means, and these "decisions" differ at different times, thus causing changes in faiths and church organizations, is that not prima facie evidence that they are not reliable, and cannot be depended on for eternal life? What function do they perform then save to divide and confuse and discourage honest seekers after truth? Hence they are a hindrance to the gospel conversion and salvation of men. Human creeds are the cause of the division and present confusion in the religious world. By them man's salvation is made dependent on human judgment! By them the Bible is made to vary and contradict itself in its teachings; and its reliability in teaching is made dependent upon the shortsighted, erring "decisions" of man. Either that is true, or the "confession" is not what it purports to be. Which is it?

But this point forces the inquiry: If we entirely let go of the human "decisions" of the councils, as found in the confessions, creeds, articles and disciplines, and each individual becomes his own individual interpreter of God's word, what better will the condition of the Christian world be? Answer: Each person will then see that every other person will have equal rights with himself; and it will do away with religious dictatorialism, and one not seeking to exercise undue influence over the other to get his neighbor to see as he does will enhance the peace and good will of all. Men will make a direct appeal to the holy word untrammelled by the preconceived ideas born of the creed from childhood.

"O, but the divisions are here," exclaims the apologist for the confession.

Yes; and division is an evil,—an evil the world over, either in the family, the State, or in religion; and the evil will remain as an effect of the creed as long as the cause of the evil remains. This cannot in truth be denied.

"Well, we will just cover up the cause of this evil, and be kind and liberal; and in order not to disturb society too greatly, just state plainly what all the different disciplines or confessions together teach, impliedly. It makes no material difference what a man believes, just so he is sincere."

This proposition is one of the most deceptive deceptions that could be advocated. It implies either that God has given no definite rule of faith, and cares not whether we believe any definite system of truth, or that if he has given positive commands, it matters not to him whether we obey him or not! If a man be only sincere in his religious faith, however greatly he may be in error, he will be saved, according to this care-destroying proposition. This proposition is a deduction from the creeds; is their apology. It is a precept of men, not of God. Jesus found such as this when he was here. He rebuked it, saying:—

Howbeit in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. For laying aside the commandments of God, ye hold the tradition of men. . . . And he said unto them, Full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition.—Mark 7: 7-9.

This human, deceptive dogma, that man can be saved by sincerity only, if ever so deeply overwhelmed in error, is doing duty for all the false doctrines in Christendom, and unsettling the minds of multitudes as to the propriety of proving all things and holding fast to that which is good. And with very many that we meet it is stronger than many Bible passages that enjoin obedience to God's positive commandments. Man has found excuses for departing from the way pointed out, from time immemorial; and this false sentiment is one of the latest. God's word is designed to point out man's mistakes and correct his errors; and one of the leading sins of man, from the beginning of the world has been to change the meaning of God's law, either by misapplication or putting special interpretations of his own upon it; and then instead of doing just what God commanded, doing what he thought God ought to have said. Cain did that way when he "brought of the fruit of the ground" instead of the lamb as "an offering." So many, with the same disposition, will resort to all sorts of expedients to excuse themselves from obeying Jesus' command in the gospel mission, when he, by virtue of all the authority given him of his Father, said:—

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.—Matt. 28: 19.

Or as the Holy Ghost through the Apostle Peter said on Pentecost day:—

Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.—Acts 2: 38.

In contrast with this positive command of God reënjoined, juxtapose the statement:—

It matters not what we believe, just so we are sincere in our religious belief.

Men will usually act—do—as they believe; and so with a logical dash, we conclude that it matters not what a man does, as religious duty, so he is sincere!

That is just the way Cain thought and did. (Gen. 4: 5-7.) King Saul was an exalted example of those who think it matters but little what one believes and does, if he is only sincere. When God told him to go and destroy utterly the Amelekites, both man and beast, he, like Cain, took the liberty to vary a little from the strictness of the command, and so Saul and the people spared Agag, and the best of the sheep, and of the oxen, and of the fatlings, and the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly destroy them.—1 Sam. 15: 9.

God said, "Utterly destroy all," but after failing to do so, Saul told the prophet Samuel:—

Blessed be thou of the Lord: I have performed the commandment of the Lord.—v. 13.

God's rebuke of Saul was:—

Wherefore then didst thou not obey the voice of the Lord, but didst fly upon the spoil, and didst evil in the sight of the Lord?—v. 19.

Saul persisted like a modern defender of creeds and perversions of the truth:—

I have obeyed the voice of the Lord, and have gone the way which the Lord hath sent me. . . . But the people took of the spoil, sheep and oxen, the chief of the things which should have been utterly destroyed, to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in Gilgal.—v. 20, 21.

What a confession and excuse! This language contains both. The sheep and oxen "should have been utterly destroyed;" "but the people" desired to sacrifice! Saul yielded to the people, and obeying God only in part, rebelled against God, disobeyed his command, and finally confessed:—

And Saul said unto Samuel, I have sinned: for I have transgressed the commandment of the Lord, and thy words: because I feared the people, and obeyed their voice.—v. 24.

Reader; stop right here and seriously think for awhile. Contemplate this disposition in King Saul in trying to "buy the Lord off" and corrupt God to overlook his "sin," his transgression of God's "commandment;" his having "rejected the word of the Lord," and his "rebellion" against him. Yes; Saul, the leader and chief exemplar of Israel tried to take the Lord in and arrange a compromise with the Almighty with sheep and oxen! No doubt Saul thought, It will be all right with the Lord if we vary just a little from the command given. We'll be excused if we spare just a few of the oxen and sheep, and those beautiful little tender lambs, for an offering (mind you, an "offering") to God. We will be liberal, generous, and withal we are so honest about it and so sincere! And all the dear people are so willing in the good work, I would not displease the people. No! I'll slightly slide around God and his command, to please the people. I yield to their opinion. God's command is plain and emphatic; but the opinions and good sincere desires of the people in this matter must not be ignored. We are all so "sincere"!

What is God's answer to all this sincere generosity?

And Samuel said, Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king. . . . And Samuel said unto him, The Lord hath rent the kingdom of Israel from thee this day, and hath given it to a neighbor of thine, that is better than thou. And also the Strength of Israel will not lie nor repent: for he is not a man that he should repent. Then he said, I have sinned.—1 Sam. 15: 22, 23, 28-30.

And "the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul," and an evil spirit took possession of him—a spirit not from God. Even the people discerned that "an evil spirit" troubled king Saul.

Poor Saul! Now rejected of God; divested of his kingdom. Led by "an evil spirit." His generous sincerity, —aside from keeping the divine law, God's command,—did not save him. Saul was rejected of God because he obeyed not God's command; a fallen man—a fallen king.

Under the law given to Israel, God ordained that Aaron and his sons, the priests, so constituted and divinely authorized, should offer

Upon the altar of the burnt offering, and on the altar of incense, and were appointed for all the work of the place most holy, and to make an atonement for Israel, according to all that Moses the servant of God had commanded.—1 Chron. 6:49.

Now on one occasion King Uzziah, of Judah, being chosen king at sixteen years of age, and who sought unto the Lord for divine directions in the things pertaining to his reign and the welfare of the kingdom, and "did that which was right in the sight of the Lord;" and the Lord was with him, and he was blessed with a long and very prosperous reign; and God helped him to subdue the enemies of Israel round about. He strengthened greatly and fortified his kingdom with increased armies, and built strong, great walls about the cities for defense. All was well equipped for service. Neighboring kingdoms did him honor and service, so that he became very great. In his greatness and the splendor and glory of his kingdom he became careless, even somewhat unscrupulous regarding the law of the Lord. He was sincere, however; but like a great many nowadays, thought it did not matter much what one believed or did so they were sincere in it! So he tried the experiment. And feeling strong,

His heart was lifted up to his destruction: for he transgressed against the Lord his God, and went into the temple of the Lord to burn incense upon the altar of incense.—2 Chron. 26:16.

Eighty-one priests followed him into the temple; and all these valiant priests

Withstood Uzziah the king, and said unto him, It appertaineth not unto thee, Uzziah, to burn incense unto the Lord, but to the priests the sons of Aaron, that are consecrated to burn incense: go out of the sanctuary; for thou hast trespassed; neither shall it be for thine honor from the Lord God. Then Uzziah was wroth, and had a censer in his hand to burn incense: and while he was wroth with the priests, the leprosy even rose up in his forehead before the priests in the house of the Lord, from beside the incense altar.—2 Chron. 26:18, 19.

And the priests, after looking on him, and becoming satisfied that he was smitten with the leprosy, a very loathsome and incurable disease, thrust him out of the house of the Lord; the king also hastened to leave the sanctuary, because the Lord had smitten him with leprosy.

The narrative further states that Uzziah the king was a leper unto the day of his death, and dwelt in a several [separate] house, being a leper; for he was cut off from the house of the Lord; and Jotham his son was over the king's house, judging the people of the land.—2 Chron. 26:21.

A sad fate this! His transgression and trespass was assuming to act in an office to which God had not called him. When his presumption was rebuked by the one authorized to act in the office, the king became angry, and was going to officiate at all hazards; but he failed. God honored his law and punished the transgressor. The law under which these illustrations of Saul and Uzziah transpired was but temporary; only to be binding on Israel from Sinai till Christ should come. It was a teacher, a "school-master," to lead Israel up to Christ. (Gal. 3:24, 25.) That law was but the "shadow" of that developed in the gospel of Christ. (Heb. 10:1.) This law was ratified by the blood of animals. (Heb. 9:19-21.) If God dealt so promptly and so severely with the breakers of or trespassers against that law, against those who assumed to officiate under it without authority—will God be more lenient with those who seek to evade, trespass against, or fail to honor the substance—law of God—the gospel, that law ratified by the blood of Christ?

What of those who claim to find nonessentials in the law ratified with the blood of God? (Acts 20:28.) How blasphemous and heinous is the assumption of those who take this holy covenant into their unhallowed hands to administer its holy ordinances without being divinely called and authorized to do so? Will not their souls be smitten with the leprosy of divine wrath at the great judgment? How severe indeed will be the chastisement of those who cast contempt upon that law and upon the sacred blood that ratified it, by teaching, in the name of God pretendedly, that some of its provisions, as baptism for the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), and the principle of laying on of hands for the baptism or gift of the Holy Ghost, are nonessentials, and that we can be saved in spite of God, and refuse obedience thereto? Such give way to a delusive spirit of some kind, and quite defy the Master, who said:—

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.—John 3:5. (Acts 19:1-6; Heb. 6:1, 2.)

“O, the ‘water’ does not mean water there; it means ‘word.’ And some say it means ‘Spirit.’”

Let us read it that way and see: “Except a man be born of the ‘word,’ or ‘Spirit,’ and of the ‘Spirit,’ etc.

“Well, but—but—it makes no difference what we believe, just so we are sincere!”

If so, what right had the Savior to teach at all? If it really makes no difference what we believe, if sincere, what is the great eternal judgment for? Even the hypocrite is frequently sincere in his hypocrisy, otherwise he would not stand by it when it costs him so much. No, kind reader, it does make a “difference what we believe and do,” for “he that believeth” the gospel when preached by the authorized minister of Christ, “and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not,” and consequently is not baptized, “shall be damned.” (Mark 16:16.)

There is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death.—Prov. 14:12.

He that keepeth the commandment keepeth his own soul; but he that despiseth his [God's] ways shall die.—Prov. 19:16.

The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding [being indifferent as to what one believes, depends on sincerity alone to save him] shall remain in the congregation of the dead.—Prov. 21:16.

There is eternal life and liberty from condemnation and sin in God's commandment, his eternal law. Hence we read:—

Thy righteousness is an everlasting righteousness, and thy law is the truth.—Ps. 119:142.

Here is the answer to Pilate's question (John 18:38).

I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy commandments.—Ps. 119:60.

Let my heart be sound in thy statutes; that I be not ashamed.—V. 80.

They are sound at heart who not only believe, and repent, but who are also baptized, and receive the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Ponder that, reader; listen not to the deceptive pleadings of nonessentialists.

It is time for thee, Lord, to work: for they have made void thy law.—V. 126.

They have made it void by teaching that it matters not what we believe, our sincerity, whether we are right or wrong, will save us.

Depart from me, ye evil doers: for I will keep the commandments of God.—V. 115.

And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak.—John 12:50.

Again:—

As he spake these words, many believed on him. Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.—John 8:30-32.

Disciples indeed—if we keep his word. And “shall know the truth.” And be made free! Free from past sins, free from error, free from doubt—uncertainty; that is, shall come to “the knowledge of the truth,” and be not in uncertainty all our lifelong about our standing before God.

If we abide not in God's law,—Christ's words, God's commandments, the truth,—then are we disciples of Christ in empty profession only—not in deed, and cannot know the truth, and are not free,—but in bondage. Keeping but a portion of the law, and leaving a part unobserved, renders us like Saul, sinners, and rebellious to God. Death is in error, is as true as God.

Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins.—Jas. 5:19, 20.

The errorist is a great sinner, a multitudinous sinner; and unless he turns therefrom, will die! Eternal consequences, therefore, are suspended on what we believe and do. “Sanctify them through thy truth;” that is, God's commandments.

Hisle, Scammon, Kansas, was recommended for ordination to the office of priest and same provided for. A motion to petition General Conference to grant the privilege of dividing the Spring River district prevailed. The election of district officers for the ensuing six months resulted in the reelection of the old officers. On motion the secretary and treasurer's expense bill was allowed. Preaching by W. C. Cather, A. H. Herke, J. M. Richards, and F. C. Keck, each effort being able and instructive, and the prayer service spiritual. Sunday School Associations.

GALLAND'S GROVE.

Association convened at Galland's Grove, October 8, 1897, at ten a. m.; assistant superintendent R. Wight in chair, Fred B. Shumate secretary. Eight schools reported with good results. No reports from Galland's Grove and Coalville. On motion C. J. Hunt was allowed to act as delegate for Pilot Rock and Auburn schools. Verbal reports from superintendent, assistant superintendent, chorister, local officers, and teachers were given, manifesting good interest. Voted that the Pilot Rock school be allowed to join the district association as per request. It was decided to hold a two days' institute before the setting of the next convention, presidency to appoint the time and place. A model Sunday school was held at four p. m., and a good entertainment given in the evening. In session October 9, at 8:30 a. m., convention ordered that district officers, and local officers and teachers submit their reports in writing to the secretary, hereafter. Papers read by J. O. Booth and Clara McCord, ordered sent to editor Sunday School Department Saints' Herald for publication. Adjourned to meet at Dow City, Friday preceding district conference.

SOUTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.

Brewer, Charles Barmore, A. H. Burroughs, and Sr. Heppie Morris were speakers on the program, also Bro. Carter. The program was interspersed with singing and a very touching recitation by Bro. NOTICE TO SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

There are complaints coming in to the Herald Office all the time that the Quarterlies are not sent out early enough so that the Sunday schools may receive and distribute them before the beginning of the quarter. We wish to notify the schools that the fault does not lie with the office; the trouble lies with the Sunday School association, by reason of them failing to get the copy for the Quarterlies in our hands soon enough to get them printed in time to send out any earlier than we are sending them. As soon as they correct this matter the schools will get Quarterlies on time. The Quarterlies are not under control of the Herald Publishing Company, but are issued by the Association. They are not edited at the Herald Office. The Herald Office prints and mails them, for the Association, when they are placed in its hands.

CHURCH RECORDER'S REQUEST.

No reports have arrived from any of the branches in England during 1897 excepting one of Zion's Hope (London) in March. The latest received from the branches in the Manchester district were those dated December 31, 1895, and a still longer time has elapsed since any came from those in the Birmingham and the Sheffield districts. I would now ask that full statistical reports be sent in. Even if some of the branches are now inactive, or even disorganized, a persistent effort should be made to learn and to report the names of all who have died, or who have otherwise been lost to the church since last reported, with the dates thereof, as nearly as can be found. Thus the Church Records may be cleared of the names of those who are either physically or spiritually dead, who have been legally dealt with.

Since the reports for December, 1896, no reports have been received from the Australian branches, but doubtless they will arrive.

From the following portions of the United States reports are now due: Those from the Fremont district for June; Spring River for September; Kewanee for September; Western Maine for May and September; Minnesota for June; Far West for June and September; Independence for September; Central Nebraska for August; Nevada for June; Kirtland for July; Southeastern Ohio for September; Pittsburg for June and September; Montana for June; Western Texas for August, and Southern Wisconsin for September.

It should be remembered (or notice of the fact be now taken) that on pages 152 to 156 of the Rules of Order, which the church has adopted as a law to govern its organized bodies and conferences, that district officers (or branch officers where there is no district organized) should send the original reports of the branches directly to the General Church Recorder, not simply a transcript of said reports, as the manner of some has been.

And it is evidently provided and intended, both in the Doctrine and Covenants and in the Rules of Order, that all presidents and clerks of branches and districts should make it a part of their work to see that an account is given of all members of the church, so far as they may be able to obtain the facts concerning baptisms and membership, and about the death or other losses of members, whether it be as to present existing branches, or broken organizations, or scattering members, everything that may properly come under their notice or charge. This in order that exact accounts may be sent up to this office, and the facts be placed upon the General Record, all gains, losses, ordinations, marriages, etc.

October conferences are advertised to be held in the districts of Chatham and London, Ontario; in the Florida, Alabama, and the Mobile districts; also in Northern and Southern California; Northeastern, Southeastern, and Nauvoo districts, Illinois; Decatur, Des Moines, Fremont, Galland's Grove, Little Sioux, Iowa; Northeastern Kansas; Massachusetts; Northern, Southern, and Eastern Michigan; Minnesota; Nodaway and Northeastern Missouri; Northern and Southern Nebraska; New York; also in other districts in November and December. As far as possible let the reports of the branches that are presented at the above conferences be forwarded early, to be placed on record before those crowd in from the January, February, and March conferences.

Scores of letters, perhaps hundreds, in which I have asked for corrections or for additional items as to births, baptisms, ordinations, etc., remain unanswered. To make the General Record perfect, and also to bring harmony between it and the branch and district records, as to each name and its complete items, it is needful that work should be done by all concerned, and that I should receive answers as to the real facts and figures. If letters are neglected then the Church Records are left in an imperfect condition, and not as reliable as they ought to be. This part of the labor takes ten fold more time than does the mere copying of names and items from correct reports at first; for the reason that thorough investigation is made necessary, as well as much correspondence with branch and district clerks. If branch clerks make their replies to the district clerks then the latter can send copies or the originals to me for use and to be filed for reference.

I would again respectfully ask the missionaries and local ministry to send in full reports of all whom they (or others) baptize who may not be placed on branch records, that such may be recorded in the book kept for that purpose. I will send blank forms to all who may request such.

Your brother,

H. A. STEBBINS,
General Church Recorder.

DIED.

SHULTZ.—Sr. Martha, wife of David J. Shultz, at Santa Ana, California, September 2, 1897. Sr. Shultz was born February 12, 1811; came West in 1860. Sr. Shultz was a member of the M. E. Church for thirty years. Hearing the gospel in its fullness, accepted it some three years before her death, and died in hope of a glorious resurrection. Funeral sermon by Elder D. L. Harris.

BAILEY.—Bro. Oliver J. Bailey was born at Adrian, Michigan, May 7, 1835; was baptized at Concord, Minnesota, by Elder E. C. Briggs, April, 1862; ordained an elder August 29, 1863, at Fox, Kendall County, Illinois, by Elder John Shippy and others; died at Davis City, Iowa, September 1, 1897. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Asa S. Cochran; buried in Rose Hill cemetery, Lamoni, Iowa. His faithfulness until death assures him a crown of life.

CORNETT.—Near Davis City, Iowa, August 23, 1897, Maud, oldest child of Aaron and Rosa Cornett, grandchild of Sr. Carter, aged 7 years, 4 months, and 7 days. She was a dutiful child, and kind and loving in disposition. The parents, three little sisters, and many friends mourn her departure. Funeral services by Elder H. A. Stebbins, at Davis City, on September 19.

HUDELSON.—At Cincinnati Landing, Pike County, Illinois, September 12, 1897, Bro. Eugene Hudelson, son of Bro. O. C. and Sr. Fannie E. Hudelson. Said brother was born February 14, 1887, and baptized by Elder F. M. Weld, June 16, 1896, and was a good and active little saint. When he was first taken sick he said he was not going to get well, nor did he want to; said he had promised the Lord he would come and live with him. At the very last moment he bade his people all good-bye, and told them not to mourn him, and said if they could only see what a nice place he was going to they would want to follow.

JOHNSON.—Sr. Emma Johnson was born November 15, 1867; died September 27, 1897. She was baptized a member of the church

October 13, 1878. Mother, two sisters, brother, foster brother, and a host of relatives and friends mourn. Sister Johnson was buried from the Mission chapel, Lasalle County, Illinois, September 29. Hundreds of people were in attendance. Sermon by Elder F. M. Cooper, assisted by Elder Thomas Hougas.

ARCHIBALD.—Catharine Ruth, daughter of Bro. Coventry and Sr. Charlotte Archibald, passed peacefully away September 23, 1897, at her home in St. Joseph, Missouri, aged 2 months and 17 days, after a very brief illness. The darling babe was laid away on Sunday, September 26, services at the church in charge of Bro. G. W. Best, sermon by Elder J. M. Terry from Genesis 1: 1 with Revelation 22: 20, 21.

KUYKENDALL.—At the home of his parents in Atascosa County, Texas, August 23, 1897, David E., son of Absalom and Drusilla Kuykendall, aged 35 years, 4 months, and 17 days. He was baptized July 15, 1894, by Elder T. J. Sheppard, and lived a consistent saint, bearing with commendable fortitude the five long weary years of suffering that only ended in his final release in death. A large circle of relatives and friends mourn. To his aged parents the loss is especially severe, he being their chief support. May the hope and comfort of the gospel come to them as a cheering benediction from him that doeth all things well. Funeral services by Elder George Montague in the saints' place of meeting, San Antonio, Texas, Sunday, September 26, 1897.

PIERCE.—At Baltimore, Maryland, September 18, 1897, Sr. Lettie S. Pierce, wife of Captain Isaac D. Pierce, of Dennisport, Massachusetts. She was accidentally drowned from her husband's vessel. Not a living person has been found who saw her fall into her watery grave. It is a sad and severe blow to husband, relatives, church, and neighbors. She was of a kind heart and gentle disposition, and in her church life "did what she could" for the gospel. By her life in Christ, death had no terrors for her, and she resteth where there is "no more pain." The expressions of sympathy in the gift of flowers were many and varied. Her body was brought home and funeral services were held September 22 by Elders John Smith and George W. Robley. Music was furnished by Baptist friends. "Blessed in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

BIERLINE.—Sister Minnie, wife of Mr. Samuel Bierline, and daughter of Sr. Mary Ode, of Clarksdale, Missouri, was killed in a runaway accident near her home at Oakdale, Dunn County, North Dakota, on September 12, 1897. Her age was 29 years and 8 months. She leaves husband and two little boys in great bereavement, while the hearts of the mother and three sisters are greatly saddened by the sudden death of daughter and sister. Sr. Ode writes that she is comforted in the assurance that ere long she will meet the loved one in the paradise of God. The funeral was held at Dickenson, in Stark County, Mr. Strohmeier of the Presbyterian Church officiating, and there she was buried.

H. A. S.

YEATMAN.—Sr. Rebecca K., wife of Bro. Jeremiah Yeatman, at Freehold, Monmouth County, New Jersey, October 5, 1897, after two years of painful suffering, passing away firm in the faith and hope in the first resurrection. Husband and one daughter mourn. Funeral sermon the 8th, by Elder A. H. Parsons.

KAY.—Sr. Betsy Kay was born June 11, 1825, at Little Bolton, Lancashire, England, and died September 21, 1897, aged 72 years, 3 months, and 10 days. She married Edmund Kay, December 26, 1850, and united with the church in 1847; came to Council Bluffs, May 2, 1851, where she has since resided. Three children and one brother mourn. She was a kind and affectionate mother and exemplary saint. Funeral sermon by Elder T. W. Williams at the residence, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

WIKLUND.—Bro. Carl Wiklund died at his home in Logan, Utah, October 3, 1897, after an illness of four months or more, the last few weeks having suffered a great deal, but he sank quietly to rest at the last. Bro. Wiklund was born March 2, 1827, at Faland, Sweden. He emigrated to Utah in 1864, and has resided in Logan ever since. He and his companion (who survives him) were baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1891 by Elder Peter Anderson. Funeral services were held at his house conducted by S. D. Condit, assisted by Elders Hansen and Ballif, of the Utah Church, who spoke in very commendatory terms of his upright and orderly life.

BROWN.—At Ladd, Illinois, October 2, 1897, George Dorrow Brown, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Brown, aged 7 months and 4 days. Blessed May 30, 1897, by Elder Frank Izatt. The funeral services were conducted by Bro. Adam Fletcher, with good effect, to many attentive hearers.

BEIRLEIN.—At her home, near Kidder, Marshall County, South Dakota, September 29, 1897, Sr. Elizabeth S. Beirlein, daughter of Bro. John P. Beirlein. Deceased was born at North Freedom, Wisconsin, February 28, 1876. She was baptized November 17, 1895, by Elder Joshua Hackett. She was young in the work of the gospel, but advanced in godliness. Was faithful and zealous in the Master's work, and had the esteem and respect of those who knew her, both in and out of the church. Father, mother, two brothers, and three sisters mourn her departure. Funeral services were held at the house. Her remains were laid to rest in the cemetery near Britton, there to await the sounding of the trump on the morn of the first resurrection. Sermon by Elder Swen Swenson.

PROVOST.—Sr. Elizabeth, wife of Bro. Richard Provost, died suddenly, while seated in a chair at the home of Mr. Ruben Golden, near Rodney, Iowa, on the 6th of October, 1897, where she had gone in company with her daughter-in-law for the purpose of calling on a sick woman; aged 59 years, 1 month, and 15 days. Funeral services were conducted at the home of her son-in-law, Mr. Grant Updyke, near Charter Oak, Iowa, October 8, by Elder C. E. Butterworth. The remains were laid to rest in the cemetery near Charter Oak to wait the resurrection of the pure and good.

with the Syriac version of the scriptures. If this opinion be true, then we have the "Diatessaron" at second hand only; and competent scholars declare that our Arabic text has the appearance of being a faithful rendering of the Syriac from which it is translated. If, then, the variations which we find in it from the Gospel text, as this appears in other early authorities, date from Tatian himself, it follows that the original composition of even the latest of the Gospels must be put at a point very considerably anterior to the middle of the second century in order to allow time for these divergencies to be propagated.

DEMOLISHES BAUR'S VIEWS.

Thus, along two lines of argument we find that the reappearance of the "Diatessaron," though it does not enable us to fix absolutely the date of the composition of the Gospels, yet demolishes the extreme views of Baur and his followers, and pushes back the origin of the Gospels to a period when the friends and companions of the apostles were still alive and could have testified whether the narratives which passed under their names were indeed their work or not.

If the Gospels were not written later than A. D. 120, and this the evidence of the "Diatessaron" seems to establish, then it is very difficult to argue with any plausibility that they fall outside the apostolic age at all. More than this we must not expect to be able to prove by evidence of this class. We can hardly hope to discover any ancient work which will authoritatively fix for us the exact years in which each of the four Gospels was written. It is enough for us to know that they belong, even the latest of them, to the age of the apostles, and that there is no reason, so far as external evidence is concerned, to doubt the traditional belief that they were written either by the apostles themselves or by their companions.

One discovery has thus served to ruin the structure which Baur and his followers reared upon their own imaginings and to render any similar theory much more difficult and less plausible.—F. G. Kenyon, assistant in the Department of Manuscripts in the British Museum, in McClure's Magazine.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

The Necessity for a Reorganization

BY ELDER H. O. SMITH.

This tract sets forth and refutes the false claims and erroneous doctrines of the Utah Church.

It brings to light much of the teachings of Brigham Young and other founders of the Utah faction, and proves them and the present leaders to be at variance with and their organization a departure from the faith taught by the early church and its three standard books.

It also vindicates and maintains the general position of the Reorganized Church in succession.

A tract for the times. Just the thing with which to meet the arguments of Brighamite elders.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

REDUCED IN PRICE.

Recognizing the closeness of the times and with a desire to place the church paper within the reach of every member, the Board of Publication has decided to offer THE SAINTS' HERALD at a reduced price for one year from the date named, as follows:—

On July 12, 1897, the price of the HERALD was fixed at $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

This reduction applies to both old and new subscribers, on the following conditions:—

Cash must accompany all orders for new subscriptions, as stated.

Former subscribers who are in arrears, who pay up on old subscriptions and renew one year in advance, will receive the benefit of the reduction in price from the date named—July 12, 1897.

Those who have already paid in advance will receive the benefit of the reduction in price at the dates of expiration of present subscriptions, and for the year following said dates, if renewing in advance.

This is a reduction of twenty-five per cent, both in the price of the church paper, and of the revenue derived from it. It is therefore necessary that all avail themselves of the new departure and greatly enlarge the list of new subscribers; and also that those indebted pay up all past due accounts.

Branch book agents and the ministry who can do so, are respectfully asked to second the efforts of the Board by obtaining new subscribers for the HERALD and working in the general interests of the Herald Office—the church publishing plant.

In bonds,
FRANK CRILEY, Bus. M'n'gr,
Lamoni, Iowa.

OF THE BASEL CONGRESS.

THE VASTNESS OF THE PROPOSED PLAN NOW ON FOOT TO COLONIZE THE JEWS.

THE Rev. Dr. Schepsebel Schaffer, rabbi of the Shearith-Israel congregation of Baltimore, delegate to the congress of Zionists, held at Basel, Switzerland, on August 29, 30 and 31, arrived home yesterday on the Umbria. Dr. Schaffer was sent to the Jewish congress by the unanimous vote of the Zionist associations of Baltimore and Boston, and was the only representative of the American Jews at the great international gathering, the first ever held by the Zionists, who have been working for forty years on the scheme of colonizing their race in Palestine.

The magnitude of the colonization scheme is not generally appreciated in this country, where the Jews have equal rights with the Gentiles, and consequently nothing to gain by emigrating. In Europe, however, the matter has been secretly agitated in some countries, openly in others, and the congress was the first step toward a realization of the planning of years. Dr. Max Nordau, the author of "Degeneration," is vice president of the Zionists. Dr. Theodore Hertzfel, editor of the Neue Freie Presse of Vienna, is the president.

The congress was conducted very quietly on account of the opposition of certain countries to anything like organization among the Jews. Only the most meager information about the work of the congress has reached this country. Dr. Schaffer told a Sun reporter some of the details. He said:—

"It is, perhaps, easier to explain the object of the congress in the words of our vice president, Dr. Max Nordau, than in any other way. Addressing the congress on the first day he said: 'There exists in every part of the world a specific condition of Jewish disaster. In the countries of Europe the Jews, in great part, are suffering from the oppression of potentates. In other countries they suffer from the mockery and ridicule of the anti-Semites. There is no friend to the Jews to rise up and protest against the cruelty and ridicule to which our race is subjected. We are friendless among the races of the world, and that fact leaves us but one course. We must stand together and help each other by all legal and loyal means. It is the prevailing sentiment of the race, I believe, that the best course to be pursued is to colonize Palestine so that those who have been driven from their homes by the cruelty and persecution of tyrannical rulers can find there the land to build houses on and the implements with which to till the soil. It is to start this work well on its way that you delegates have been called from every corner of the globe to assemble here in convention.'

"The colonization of Palestine is no new thing, as you probably know, but the present advanced condition of the work is not appreciated at all in America or England. Recent events, continued persecutions in countries like Russia, where millions of Jews are forced to lead lives like hogs in a gutter, have made it wise to push the work as fast as possible. It cannot be accomplished in one year, probably not in two, for there are tremendous prejudices and obstacles that seem almost insurmountable to be overcome. But the Zionists came to one conclusion, the effect of which will be felt all over the civilized world. That was to go ahead steadily from now on never stopping until Palestine is colonized with millions of Jews or it becomes apparent that the consummation of the work is impossible.

"There were 204 delegates from all parts of the world at the congress. Russia had the largest representation, sixty delegates being present from that country. There were thirty from Austria, and ten or fifteen from each of the other European countries. The Russian delegates came to Basel very quietly and as tourists. They could not come as representatives from Jewish organizations in Russia, because our race is not allowed to organize in that country. It would be scarcely wise for them to publish their intentions of going to Switzerland, so they came as ordinary travelers to Basel and took their seats in the congress without any announcement. There were three delegates from England and myself from America. The Rev. Adam Rosenberg, formerly a rabbi in this city, but for the last two years a worker in Palestine, was also a delegate and a representative of America, but I was the only delegate to go direct from this country to the congress.

"I must say that rarely has a body of men so distinguished in letters and the sciences been brought together in Europe. The delegates were men high up in the various walks of life, men of intelligence and courage, who can scarcely fail in the work they have undertaken. There were professors, doctors of medicine, lawyers, engineers, clergymen and men of literature, all met together for one purpose, the rescuing of the race from the oppression it has suffered for so many years.

"The reason for the small representation from England and America is the satisfaction of the Jews in these countries with their present condition. They are in sympathy with the Zionist movement, however, as the sending of their delegates indicates.

"Of course the money necessary for the colonization of Palestine, how to get it, and the best means of using it after it is raised, were among the important questions taken up by the congress. It will take nearly $100,000,000 to carry out the work, and the money is to be raised from the Jews themselves. Every Jew in the world is asked to contribute twenty-five cents a year at least. Of course others will give more, but with that as a minimum it will not take a great while to raise the fund necessary for the work. This vast sum may seem a deal more than necessary for the carrying out of our scheme, but it is not. It must be remembered that there may be 5,000,000 people thrown into Palestine if we are successful. Each family has to be supplied with land, a horse, a cow and implements with which to till the soil. The colonists will all have to be started in life, and the expense of doing this will be enormous.

"A committee of twenty-one delegates was appointed to lay out the work and to take charge of it for the present. The committee will have its principal headquarters in Vienna. Neither England nor America is represented in this committee.

"Sixty thousand petitions pledging support were presented to the congress, and 550 telegrams indorsing the work were received on the first day. Probably the most interesting thing about the congress, however, was the reading of papers by the various delegates on the condition of the race in their respective countries. The worst reports came of course, from Russia. No papers on the subject of the Jews in Russia were read. It would not be a safe proceeding. But the matter was discussed, and it can be said that the Jews are worse off there to-day than they have been in years. Up to the time of his death the late czar, Alexander III., grew harsher every day in his treatment of the Jews. His son, Nicholas II., the present czar, is following in his footsteps.

"The Jews in Roumania are almost as badly off as those in Russia. There are 720,000 of them. They are looked on as interlopers and have absolutely no rights. Their children cannot go to the schools, and they are a poverty-stricken and friendless lot. They are suffering greatly, and there seems little prospect for any relief for them. A paper on the Jews in Galicia, in Austria, told of frightful poverty and great persecution from the anti-Semites. A million of them live in one small quarter, and although they have rights under the law, none are granted to them. In Austria and Germany the Jews do not seem to be so badly off. The poverty is not so great, but they are excluded from all offices and have few privileges. There were no complaints from this country or England, and it was the sentiment of the congress that the race is better treated here than anywhere else in the world.

"Dr. Nordau, in an address on the growth of anti-Semitism, said that when France, under Napoleon, granted the Jews equal rights, other European countries followed suit. They did it in the same way that they would imitate a French fashion, because they thought it the proper thing, he said. In England, though, he declared, it was just the opposite, the statutes giving the Jews equal rights there being the result of the wish of the people. In the other European countries where there are laws giving the Jews the same rights as other people, they are simply dead letters on the statute book.

"I feel sure that our work will be successful. I am heart and soul with it. While I was away I spent two or three days in Russia and got some idea of what the Jews have to undergo there. They are looked upon as animals, not human beings. There are 5,000,000 of them, and they are so jammed into one little district of the nation that life is almost unbearable. They have scarcely enough air to breathe. They have no rights and only five per cent of the children are allowed in the schools. Every effort is made to keep down the cultivation of their natural intelligence and they are persecuted in one way and another the whole time. The latest outrage was a government edict forbidding any of them to indulge in the wine or liquor business. These are now destitute and unable to turn their hands to anything.

"We think it very probable that the sultan of Turkey will grant us the concessions we want in Palestine.

He has never persecuted the Jews. There are thirty Jewish colonies in Palestine now, with a total of about 3,000 persons. That is the result of forty years' work, which will give you an idea of what we've got ahead of us. The last thing the congress did before adjourning was to send a telegram of thanks to Turkey's ruler for his generous treatment of his Hebrew subjects."—New York Sun.

Among the topics discussed by the editor of the American Monthly Review of Reviews in the November number of that periodical are the Greater New York political campaign, other municipal elections, the "Referendum" in American elections, the foreclosure of the Union Pacific, the crisis in Spain, recent events in Cuba, England's attitude towards bimetalism, the proposed international sealing conferences, politics in Eastern Europe, Australian federation, and the careers of Charles A. Dana, George M. Pullman, and Neal Dow.

CARING FOR THE TEETH.

Do not eat, or do not feed your children on, white bread, which is deficient in phosphates, and causes the teeth to crumble. A little hard food requiring thorough mastication should be taken at every meal. The teeth should be brushed both night and morning. Avoid sweets. Drink at least two quarts of water a day—a glass the first thing in the morning, another the last thing before going to bed, the remaining quantity between meals. Consult a good dentist about every six months.—October Ladies' Home Journal.

CONVERSION.—NO. 2.

IN common acceptation and use the word conversion means a "change of heart," and is associated with the idea of "getting religion." In the broader sense it means change from one state, thing or religion, to another; a transformation or turning.

From the several standpoints of religious vision various views are entertained as to the fact and evidences of conversion. We once knew a young man who cited in proof of his conversion that he had been confirmed and formally received into the church under the theoretical tuition of which he had been raised from infancy. His life, so far as was noticeable, revealed no change. His habits, conversation, and preferences were such as characterized those who made no religious pretense; yet he seemed to believe, solemnly, that there had been wrought for him by his formal church reception all that was required to insure eternal safety.

We heard another advertise his conversion and give the day and hour when he experienced the change by which he became a saved man. To judge from his word one would at first incline to the thought that he had, in faith, compassed the great redemption plan. Upon questioning him, however, as to his attitude in relation to the ordinances enjoined by Christ, he not only declared against them, but became angry at our suggestion that their observance was comprehended in absolute conversion to Christ.

Still another man, who stands within what we are pleased to call the "true fold," was recently engaged in conversation with an enthusiastic member of another church, and took occasion to ridicule the claimed conversion of the latter, because neither baptism nor the laying on of hands had figured in it. This brother, in his effort (as he viewed it) to set forth the true gospel order, used coarse and unbecoming language and became boisterous and vehement in his demeanor. A few minutes later he was in company with a godless throng and was found gloating over the fact of having "cleaned the other fellow up," and said that he liked to talk "this doctrine" because with it he could "smash every other creed in Christendom," and it delighted him to "see his antagonists squirm." Still later he was seen and heard vieing with the rest of the company to see which could relate the most vulgar and obscene story in the direction in which the conversation had drifted. Had we been a stranger to him and been told that there was one "converted," man in that company, and had we been requested to pick him out, we would certainly have passed this brother many times before selecting him as a possibility.

We happen to know a very few exemplary members, in all that goes to give moral standing in the church, and who are enthusiastic in advocating the "principles of the gospel," and are exceedingly careful to guard their personal influence, so that the church shall not be reproached; but who can scarcely bear to hear an earnest sermon on tithing without becoming annoyed, not to say angry. They frequently testify of miraculous exhibitions of divine power by which they were converted and which led to their acceptance of the doctrine and by which they were subsequently confirmed in the faith; but to them the gospel is "free as air" and money does not enter into the count in their conversation. They acknowledge no obligation other than their own volition in contributing. In all other respects Christ is their lawgiver, but in financial matters they are "a law unto themselves."

Here is variety—not infinite—but sufficient to provoke within us an inquiry regarding the conversion claimed in each case. Our inquiry is: "From what and unto what or whom have they been converted?" If we shall be answered: "From self and sin, to Christ," then we are justified in expecting a transformation. Have we found it? If the old characteristics of self are still conspicuous, where is Christ revealed therein? How much of Christ have they been converted to? How nearly complete has been the abandonment of self and sin?

In dealing with this subject the Apostle Paul embodied such sentiments as these in his writings: "Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price, therefore glorify God;" "baptized into Christ;" "put on Christ;" "Christ in you;" "be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind;" "reconciled to God;" "your life is hid with Christ in God," together with many others equally significant.

Does an emotional acceptance of religion, on the one hand, or a ritualistic observance or compliance with mere ceremonial requirements; on the other, meet the intent of these utterances? Does entrance into the church and securing the Spirit in certificate of our adoption end our obligation to "observe all things" commanded of Christ? Surely not.

The writings from which the above lines are selected come to us as the voicing of divine inspiration, and imply that the truly converted man is one who has forever abandoned the idea of formulating his own policy of salvation in any part or degree, and has adopted Christ's plan throughout. He has become completely reconciled to God's way of doing and has submerged himself into Christ, so that he himself is thereafter to be "hid"—his will and self are to be lost or buried out of sight, and his life is henceforth to be but a reflection of the divine purpose. His tongue is to express God's revealed thoughts on subjects comprehended in the saying process and his character is to remain on the altar of consecration to God, to be "transformed" by divine methods, while all his movements are to be directed in harmony therewith. He is henceforth not his own, and he is not to be heard from, but Christ is to be heard through him.

If, therefore, faith, repentance, baptism, the laying on of hands, tithing, temperance, meekness, honesty, charity, and all that is included in them as factors operating toward that "holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord," are included in God's opinion of what is necessary, it is evident that conversion to Christ on our part means an absolute surrender of any opinions we may have had to the contrary, and an unreserved consecration of our powers to observe and execute the will of Him to whom we have been reconciled—to whom we belong. It means that we retain no lingering hope to yet convert Christ or his church to the ideas that were "our own." It means that those ideas are dead and buried in Christ. It means that God and Christ are to have preëminence in all things in our future course, without reservation in us. It means that hereafter Christ is to be heard from when we speak or act regarding his work. It means that our conversation shall be pure, our dealings honorable, our word reliable, our bodies clean, our intercourse lawful, our love unstinted, and that our powers and possessions shall be on the altar, subject to Christ's word and will in their direction and employment. It means that every man or woman's reputation shall be safe as our own on our tongues. It means, in fine, that God shall be manifest in us. It does not mean "getting religion," but Christ getting us and all we have and are, and his law having free course in us.

This is all implied in genuine "conversion to Christ," and high as this pinnacle of excellence is—far as it may now seem above some of us—we are obligated to aim towards it, and to earnestly seek to crucify all within us which opposes our growth in that direction, whether the obstacles be found in our heads, our hearts, our pockets, or elsewhere. Such absolute conversion as this, if occurring now, will save us from mortification of spirit and meagerness of "treasure in heaven" hereafter.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

WE are still busy on this side of the wave, but have been getting a little more experience and becoming better acquainted before having much to say. We have visited Manchester, Wigan, London, Sheffield, and Clay Cross since landing on England's shores. In each of these places we found an earnest band of saints, and a local ministry wide-awake and ready to meet every call for labor. These brethren surely are not much given to blowing their own horns, for the church in America has but little idea of the talent and zeal found among her local force in the British Isles. There are several young and progressive elders developing finely, and we see no reason why a ministry cannot be developed here in a short time who can take care of the work without much difficulty. We heard two of these young men the other night, and were both surprised and pleased. We could but ask ourselves: What are we here for, when here are men competent to tell the gospel story, and aggressive enough to occupy every inch of ground open to us?

Our colaborer, Elder F. G. Pitt, has labored in Manchester, Wigan, Warrington, Bristol, and London, England; and for the last few weeks has been in South Wales. So far as we have heard he has been cheerfully active and his labors have been well received.

We have not as yet heard from the willing, anxious debater, Elder Bradshaw, of the Utah faction, and we shall be very much surprised if we do.

We learn that at the last conference of the Western Wales district, Elder Ernest Dewsnup resigned the presidency, and Elder Reese Jenkins was chosen to succeed him. We sincerely trust that Bro. Jenkins will succeed to the satisfaction of his brethren, and secure the approval of the Divine Master; while Bro. Dewsnup will not be less useful because of change of position. Bro. Gibbs, of Morryston, Wales, expected to sail, in company with his two daughters, for America yesterday. We suppose they are now on the deep. From information received we conclude that his loss to Morryston and South Wales will be a serious one, so we regret to chronicle his departure; but trust that Wales' loss will be America's gain, and that Bro. Gibbs and daughters will find a comfortable and happy home in the choice land.

We have been wielding the pen to some extent in defense of the cause, but were made to appear in a ridiculous light in Reynolds' Newspaper, of London. We had written in reply to some one who had published a rehash of the Spalding story, and the Editor undertook to condense, and such a condensing! Where we quoted from the article we were replying to, he left out the quotation, but published our comments thereon, so there seemed to be no basis to our argument. We felt chagrined and vexed, and have made up our mind to let Mr. Reynolds entirely alone. So should anything else appear in his paper derogatory to our cause, and no response follow, our friends will please to take note of the reason and make it as public as the occasion may demand.

Through the kindness of Bro. Thomas Bradshaw we were permitted to see some of the wonderful sights and historic places of London. The old "London Tower," around which some of the darkest chapters of English history cluster, were of peculiar interest. The weapons, armor, and cruel instruments of torture kept here as relics of past ages, brought vividly to memory scenes of blood and tyranny, of which we had read years ago. We climbed the stairs beneath which the bones of the murdered princes were found, and where the dark frowning walls of historic buildings surrounded us. We looked upon the spot where Anne Boleyn, Catharine Howard, Lady Jane Grey, and others were decapitated by the headsman's ax. In Westminster Hall we stood upon the spot (now marked by a small brass plate in the stone floor) where stood King Charles I. when the sentence of death was passed upon him by the self-constituted court in the days of the commonwealth. The visit to Westminster Abbey, where we stood beside the tombs, or walked over the ashes of royalty; St. Paul's Cathedral; Buckingham Palace; Houses of Parliament; Cleopatra's Needle; London Tower; and other places seemed like the recalling to the memory some half-forgotten dream; and we could hardly realize that we were really upon the spots where were enacted some of the greatest as well as some of the darkest deeds of the world's history.

The country scenery in England, in many places, surpasses our expectation. It is not so wild, rugged, and romantic as that found in our western mountains; but the gently rolling wood-crowned hills, with green well-cultivated valleys between, are pleasant to look upon.

Any words of cheer from the homeland would be gladly received at No. 17 Dawson Street, Manchester, England. Bro. Pitt also has a keen appreciation of such things, and they will find him at No. 14 Gloucester Road, Bishopston, Bristol, England. But don't always expect an answer, for manifest reasons.

"WHO ARE THE DECEIVERS?"

WE give place in this issue of the HERALD to some correspondence between Bro. J. W. Wight, president of the Utah mission, and the editor of the Deseret News, official organ of the Utah Church. "Deceivers" are given to the habit of distorting facts, or of partly or completely suppressing them. The News has refused to give Bro. Wight's second communication to its readers. That the HERALD readers and others may have opportunity to measure, to some extent, the spirit and policy of the Utah organization, including that of the Deseret News, with a view to passing intelligently upon the question at issue, we publish both sides of the controversy:—

WHO ARE THE "DECEIVERS"?

To the Editor:—Your correspondent writing from Society Islands in your daily issue of the 2d inst., makes some statements which I trust you will grant me the space to correct. By numerical comparison the "Josephites" have rather the advantage of the Latter Day Saints Utah Church in those islands. Your correspondent claims 1,056 adherents, while by the report of our Recorder at our Annual Conference of current year we have 1,946. That certainly gives us "a sufficient number of listeners to encourage" us. As to deceiving the natives, no such effort has ever been made. Our first missionaries landed there in 1873, since when we have kept up the mission. We could not call ourselves other than Latter Day Saint elders without deceiving, for we have never gone under any other name, and our right thereto has been favorably decided in the courts. But we have never stooped to the subterfuge of passing ourselves off as elders of the Mormon Church of which W. Woodruff is president, as implied by your correspondent.

With the desire for the elicitation of truth alone, I am yours respectfully,

J. W. WIGHT.

528 East Second South Street, SALT LAKE CITY, October 2, 1897.

We give place to the foregoing because we do not desire, either willfully or unintentionally, to publish misstatements without correction, or to deny a hearing to any person or organization that may consider himself or itself aggrieved by anything that may have appeared in our columns. At the same time there are insinuations in Mr. Wight's letter that cannot properly be passed by without notice. So far as concerns the figures given by him as to the membership of the Josephites in the Society Islands, the News raises no question. But in relation to the "deceiving the natives" proposition, by which Mr. Wight adroitly seeks to make it appear that the News correspondent made an implied misstatement, we most emphatically dissent. The "deceiving the natives" referred to by our Society Islands correspondent is the claim of Josephites that they are elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints—the church whose first Prophet and President in this dispensation was Joseph Smith, who was martyred in 1844, which church was organized by command of the Lord and never has been disorganized, but remains intact and is now presided over by President Wilford Woodruff; whereas the Josephites referred to are not elders of that church, but by the very name of their society are shown to belong to a "Reorganized" association which is not and cannot be the successor of the church which has no successor, but continues in existence fully organized. As to the alleged "favorable decision" of the courts, the one judge who gave the decision referred to, in a suit for property, was overruled by a higher court on a vital point, so that the Josephite suit failed. But no matter which way a district or State court should have given its opinion, it is the fundamental law in this country, and the principle of right, that a church itself is the exclusive adjudicator as to who are and who are not its officers and members. And all those who claim membership in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, or who assert title to any part of the name or calling that belongs to such membership, without having the right thereto confirmed by the authority that is in the church, are pretenders or deceivers. Upon this point Mr. Wight may well consider the statement of the truth which his cunning assertion invited and has elicited.—Deseret News, October 8.

To the foregoing Bro. Wight wrote a reply, but which the News declined to publish. We append Bro. Wight's reply, together with the News' declination:—

"WHO ARE THE 'DECEIVERS'?"

Editor Deseret Evening News, Sir:—Not being at home I saw neither the publication of my letter nor your strictures thereon until Sunday night. Will you kindly permit me the following reply:—

I have no desire to act or write other than a gentleman should, and if there were a "cunning assertion," let me assure you it was not intentional on my part. In looking over the letter, however, as it appears in print, I confess that I see no "insinuation," neither "cunning assertion," but a simple denial of what appeared to me to be an implication. Of course, I know it makes a material difference as to the kind of theological lens we use as to how we see a thing.

As to court decisions, we had a "favorable decision" in gaining possession of the Kirtland Temple, as well as such a decision from Judge Philips relative to the "Temple Lot," the latter of which was in one sense only overruled; Judge Caldwell, of the appellate court, deciding against us on the question of laches—the sleeping on our rights, or not beginning suit soon enough; all of which implied two very vital facts: Had we not so "slept" the decision would have been ours by right; and that in all other points the decision had been just.

Both Judge Philips, as well as Judge Sherman, of the court of common pleas, Lake County, Ohio, decided that the church in Utah had gone astray from the teachings of the original church under Joseph Smith, Jr., in the introduction of polygamy, "Adam-God," blood atonement, etc., and had, therefore, lost the title to both the property and name of the said original church; such decision being based upon the law and the testimony in the case; President Woodruff being one of the witnesses in the latter suit.

We have never denied you the right to say "as to who are and who are not" your "officers and members," either by inference or otherwise; and it appears to me that this is a mere begging of the question, but the whole controversy has been on the ground of legal succession. Suppose it be true, as we claim, that you, as a church, have gone astray, who are to be the arbiters in the case? Not you as a church, certainly, for no church would ever convict itself!

Isaiah says: "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—8:20. The italics are just as they occur in the Bible, and not to call special attention. "The law and the testimony" in the Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, is: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shalt cleave unto her and none else."—Emphasis mine. And section 49, says: "Wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made." I have emphasized as a means of comment. Have you, as a church, complied with "the law and . . . the testimony" in this direction? If earthly courts have no jurisdiction in ecclesiastical matters, why don't you, as a church, take possession of the Kirtland Temple? And why did God tell us in the revelation of 1833, that we were to "importune at the feet of the judge?" Why, sir, it is commonly recognized as a principle of jurisprudence that when an ecclesiastical body disintegrates our courts have the right, legally, to step in as arbiters to determine which portion, if any, of such original body maintains its integrity in the direction of the original tenets and, therefore, has a right and title to the property and name of said original church.

But you may tell me that you are the original church without any question whatever, but you have no right to decide, as you are an interested party.

It is a further principle in law that the minority has the same right to be heard as the majority. Thousands never accepted the leadership of Brigham Young, and whether they were in the majority or minority, it matters not, they have the same right to be heard that you have.

If you maintain that the right is inherent in your church to decide the legality of your succession, you thereby advance an argument that acts as a boomerang to the vitality of your own existence; or, in other words, you put into the hands of the Catholics a club with which they can batter out your theological brains, for they have long since decided, both by Papal bulls and council edicts, that they are the only true and legal successor to the church as established by Jesus and the apostles.

I admit that the earthly courts may make wrong decisions, but so may ecclesiastical courts; so that all the argument attaching is as broad as it is long.

As to your statement touching "pretenders or deceivers," there is no more argument in it than when it is made by Catholics pertaining to you and other Protestant churches. Upon the question of "authority" both you and we must appeal "to the law and to the testimony." In that direction the "Reorganized" Church claims to have maintained a true integrity, both as to ecclesiastical and earthly law; and that God recognized the necessity of our allegiance to the latter is shown in the revelations given February, 1831, sec. 42; August, 1831; August, 1833, and December, 1833.

If, as a church, you have continued "in existence fully organized" (emphasis mine), what did Mr. Young mean when he said, "and we now, having it in contemplation soon to reorganize the church according to the original pattern?"—Italics mine. Had it gone away from the original pattern? From General Epistle written in Winter Quarters, December 23, 1847. Millennial Star, vol. 10, p. 86.

You may tell me that he had reference to the First Presidency, and that only, when he used the term "reorganize." Very well, there is little use for me to tell you that "re" means over. I do it rather to make the point clear. If, according to Mr. Young, you had to organize any portion or constituent part of the church over, to that extent you are a reorganized church, hence your "Reorganized" insinuation falls flat.

In an Epistle of the Twelve, of December 13, 1841, and to which is attached the names of nine of the apostles, the names of Brigham Young, John Taylor, and Wilford Woodruff among them, the very first paragraph reads:

"The building of the Temple of the Lord in the city of Nauvoo, is occupying the first place in the exertions and prayers of many of the saints at the present time, knowing as they do, that if this building is not completed speedily, 'we shall be rejected as a church with our dead;' for the Lord our God has spoken it."—Millennial Star, vol. 18, p. 807. The italics are not mine this time.

Where had the "Lord our God" so spoken? In the revelation of January 19, 1841. Was the "house" ever finished? Let Mr. Young answer: "The saints, through hunger, and thirst, and weariness, and prayers, so far completed the Temple, despite the devices of the mob, that many received a small portion of their endowment, but we know of no one who has received it in its fullness."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, p. 32.

The Twelve say, "if this building is not completed;" Mr. Young says, "so far completed;" the Lord says, "I grant you a sufficient time to build a house." Until the last part was finished the house was not "built," and as such was never the fact the church must have been "rejected," hence the necessity to reorganize out of those elements that remained true and loyal to the counsel of God.

One request, Mr. Editor, in closing: Will you kindly inform me as to the names of those who ordained Mr. Young as president of the church? and when, and where it was done? Many times I have asked for "bread" on this point and have been given a "stone."

Still with a desire for the elicitation of truth,

I am, yours,

J. W. WIGHT.

No. 528 East Second South Street, Salt Lake City, October 12, 1897.

RESPECTFULLY DECLINED.

The News published the other day a letter from Mr. J. W. Wight, in which the gentleman took exception to a correspondent's statement as to the number of "Josephites" in the Society Islands, and also to a remark of the correspondent concerning a deception of the natives by the "Josephites," in calling themselves Latter Day Saint elders. To the statistics of the "Josephite" or Reorganized Church membership we made no objection, since they should know their own numbers. But to Mr. Wight's insinuation that our correspondent had misstated the case when he referred to the deception named, we made reply that the correspondent was right; that there was the effect of deceiving in the "Josephite" claim to the name Latter Day Saints, which belongs to the church organized under the presidency of Joseph Smith the Prophet, April 6, 1830. This church has continued in organized existence, and is referred to by Mr. Wight as the Mormon Church—the name commonly applied to it by its enemies prior to the martyrdom of the Prophet. To this name there now is no more special objection by its members than there appears to have been by the members of the church anciently to the name Christians which was first applied to the saints in former days at Antioch. The real and official name is not Mormon at all, however, and never has been. That title comes from the Book of Mormon, which the Latter Day Saints believe to be a divinely inspired record pertaining to the American continent, as the Bible is of the part of the earth it relates to. The true name of the church held forth in all its records and public and private transactions, is the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Now comes another letter from Mr. Wight, in which he reasserts his former position, to which our former response stands as a reply. But he goes farther this time, and brings in new matter, alleging the "introduction" of certain doctrines into the church since the death of the Prophet, and he endeavors to argue thereon. As we are possessed of the knowledge that this alleged subsequent "introduction" of doctrines is untrue, there having been no incorporation by the church of new doctrines under the circumstances alleged, we decline, in the interest of truth and justice to our readers to give place to the communication. It would be as consistent for us to admit an article denying and arguing against the divinity of Christ and the facts of his crucifixion and resurrection, merely for the sake of providing both hall and audience for one who desired to promulgate such views, as to give place to these of an equally erroneous character on this other church subject. We make no complaint of discourtesy of Mr. Wight's manner of communication, but have endeavored to state pointedly our respectful declination of his letter for these columns, and the reason therefor, that there may be no misunderstanding or irritation in the matter.

We beg leave to respectfully repeat the substance of Bro. Wight's query, "Who ordained Brigham Young as president of the church? and when and where" was it done? Utah elders passing through the State of Iowa have invariably replied, "We do not know;" to these questions. It would aid those interested in the question of "succession" to have an official answer to these questions from the Utah Church. If such ordination took place it certainly was of sufficient importance to be made a matter of record. Have the church authorities any objection to a statement from said record? The Reorganized Church has long since published the facts connected with the ordination of its President. Let the facts be brought to light from Utah records that all may be able to learn if they have not learned, "who are the deceivers."

PRINCIPLE, NOT POLICY.

BRO. ISAAC RICHARDSON, of Cleveland, writes of the labors of Bro. A. H. D. Edwards, of Irondale, Ohio:—

I inclose from the Irondale, Ohio, Courier clippings of an article written by Adolphus H. D. Edwards in defense of the church, which has been misrepresented at that place. Bro. Edwards, with the assistance of Bro.

Lewis' family, is about to rent a hall and open up the work at Irondale. There is a very extensive tin mill located there, which affords employment to large numbers of people; and since Bro. Edwards (who works in the mill) preached Sr. Lizzie Lewis' funeral sermon, and has written an article for the Irondale Courier, there has been considerable inquiry concerning our faith, and we hope and pray that many there may find the truth.

The Courier article, written by Bro. Edwards, is a well-arranged statement of some leading facts of church history and doctrine. Bro. Edwards argues logically and in a spirit of fairness and candor worthy the subject of which he treats. His article is quite lengthy and contains matter that should correct wrong impressions and make friends to the church. One passage in it is striking, and worthy of repetition. We republish it as strikingly in harmony with the spirit of our work:—

We but aspire to rights in common, with no desire to war against flesh and blood, not stultifying our manhood or becoming cringing sycophants; rather evincing a purpose in life by a straightforward procedure, adopting principle as a guiding star through life, in preference to an hypocritical, wretched policy to obtain present advantage, which a legitimate course would not warrant.

The man who knows he is right is conscious of the power and force of the right, hence is content to abide the outcome when contending for it. He need not resort to policy, but acts from principle. "Principle" is indeed a guiding star that leads in straight paths. One knows where to find a man who acts strictly from principle. He can be located at any time and be depended upon to accept truth in any of its phases; he gives it support, hence is reliable and progressive. The man who acts from "policy" is unreliable, fluctuating, changeable, and cannot always be counted upon for good. He is liable to weaken both himself and his cause and to endanger the triumph of truth (for a time at least, for it finally prevails) by "compromise," through acting from policy. Jesus Christ, the great Leader and Teacher, acted from principle, not from policy. His example stands prominent and preëminent above the policy of the wily scribes, Pharisees, and minions of the Romans, who opposed him. Like his Father, "his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round." Policy is indeed a "hypocritical, wretched" course "to obtain present advantage, which a legitimate course would not warrant." It darkens counsel and skulks in the dark, under pretense. Jesus taught men that their works should be in the light, that they might be seen and known—be made "manifest." "He that doeth truth cometh to the light." God's "wisdom is greater than the cunning of the Devil," or of men. The true course is to seek it and to work by it, openly and truly.

GOSPEL TENT AND MISSION HYMNS.
FORTY-THREE hymns from the Saints' Hymnal—choice selections, with a short address to "friends" and "What we believe" on the first two inside pages.

Bound in paper at 30 cents per dozen; in heavy durable manilla paper 50 cents per dozen. Good for tent, chapel, or general use.

THE SAINTS' HERALD.

DON'T forget that the SAINTS' HERALD has been reduced in price to $1.50 per year. This places it within the reach of all.

Every member of the church should read the official church organ to get its official items and general reports of progress.

We are getting good responses to the call for new subscriptions, but want many more.

New subscriptions will enable the Board of Publication to add additional features for good in different ways.

Send the HERALD to relatives and friends in and out of the church. It will open the eyes of the unfriendly, dissolve their prejudices, and may convert them.

Work for the HERALD and help the cause.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. J. W. WIGHT, Sandy, Utah, the 20th:—

Am preaching nightly here with splendid interest. Have continuous work mapped out down to end of year. Am feeling well and much more hopeful. Feel almost as though an "awakening" has reached here.

Bro. J. J. Cornish, Farwell, Michigan, October 25:—

We took down the tent to-day and put it away for the winter; baptized one more, making ten persons baptized in all during our stay here of four weeks and two days. I start for home to-night, if nothing hinders. Am getting better of my cough and cold.

Bro. J. C. Foss, Conneautville, Pennsylvania, October 25:—

I leave to-day for Rockland, Maine, to move my family to their home at Independence, Missouri.

A letter from Bro. Isaac Richardson of Cleveland, Ohio, the 12th inst. reports the status of the work in that city:—

Our numbers are not increasing here in Cleveland, but good interest is manifested at the very instructive sermons which are being delivered by Bro. Willard J. Smith, who is laboring with us for a little season. I am priest of the branch here, and feel like working faithfully to move the glorious cause along, and hope yet to see the time when I can give my whole time to the latter-day work, for it has always been my desire so to do.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE brethren at Beardstown, Illinois, have secured the services of Bro. M. H. Bond, who is billed to preach the word in Library Hall beginning October 24.

Bro. W. J. Vaughan, of Huntsville, Missouri, writes, adding his testimony to that of many who have written of the "gifts of healings" bestowed in answer to prayer.

Bro. F. M. Williams reports a branch of over fifty members at Wheatland, Missouri, where two years ago there were but one or two baptized. Bro. Sawley, Mannering, White, and others had been diligent, hence the growth which has resulted. Bro. F. L. Sawley was to begin a discussion with a Missionary Baptist at Hermitage, county seat of Hickory County, October 25; large attendance expected.

Bro. J. E. Ritter writing from San Antonio, Texas, October 20, commends to the saints a study of the parable of the man without the wedding garment. He thinks all should be prayerfully and studiously active in the interests of the cause. He commends to all the study of the Book of Covenants that understanding of duty may obtain among the laity with the ministry. Saints there were blessed in social and preaching services.

Some one sends us an unsigned letter on the subject of "secret societies," also a clipping on the same subject and from the same writer, we suppose, which the editor heads, "Very bitter." We do not publish unsigned articles. Personally we do not believe in secret societies; neither do we believe in such extreme views that bitterness toward those who do not see as we do results. If the preaching of the gospel does not affect man for good, denunciation will not do it. "The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God."

Bro. F. R. Tubb wrote, late date, from London, England, of the status of the work in that metropolis of the world. He expresses himself as being highly pleased with the labors of Brn. Caffall, Pitt, and Smith, from America. The local brethren and others have been diligent, but their labors have simply reached a mere fringe of London's extensive area and population. Could such places as Exeter Hall, which seats five thousand, be secured for Bro. Smith and meetings be advertised in the London dailies, he believes many of the middle and other classes could be reached with the gospel. The brethren are in moderate circumstances, hence unable to make such moves. He hopes, however, to see the time when the London public can be made to see the character of the latter-day message. He regards it as a mistake to conclude that none but the poorer classes will heed the truth.

We omit the usual "communication" or doctrinal article from present number of HERALD, in order to give our many correspondents a hearing. There are so many more letters in sight that some must be content to be "boiled down"—not the correspondents, but their letters—for the present.

Bro. D. B. Alvord, of Muscotah, Kansas, wishes brethren in that field to call on him.

Some one sends us a page of Boyce's Monthly (where published not stated), in which appears a "short history of the Mormons," by one Frederic Weymouth, who writes plausibly and in a way to pervert the truth. He mentions the Reorganized Church in such manner as to make it appear a part of the Utah faction. This writer has surely belied his name; he has failed to weigh the words of his mouth or pen. He knows not whereof he affirms.

Bro. J. D. Wiltfong, Mound City, Missouri, requests prayer that he be restored to health. The preaching of Brn. M. F. Gowell and Peter Anderson had resulted in the baptism of some, others investigating, the saints strengthened. Saints all united; never has been any jarring or strife among them; all at peace and in unity. A good record for a branch, sure, and worthy of commendation.

The Kansas City Journal of the 19th sent us by Bro. D. J. Krahl, of St. Joseph, contains a lengthy account of a purported interview with one Elder Kelsch of the Utah Church; also of the late local conference of that church held at Independence. The account includes statements attributed to Elder Kelsch that might appropriately be designated "rich, racy, and rare;" but whether or not the elder is correctly reported, we are unable to state. The item includes a statement to the effect that the influence of the Reorganized Church is dreaded by the Utah elders.

Bro. I. N. White, of the Twelve, reports good progress being made in his field. Reports from twenty-one of the laborers show the following items from July 10 to October 10: Sermons preached 954; baptisms 86; elders ordained 4; priests 2; teachers 2; deacons 1; branches organized 1; oral debates 1. There had been about the same number of local baptisms; the outlook is hopeful.

Sr. Emma Volz, of Minden City, Michigan, writes pleasantly of a trip with saints to attend a conference of the Northern Michigan district, in which all joined together in the spirit of unity and saintlike fellowship. We have not space for the letter, but commend its spirit. Saints who love one another and the cause are happy in the spiritual and social privileges of their gatherings.

Pres. A. H. Smith has been confined to his home, afflicted with rheumatism, for the past week or ten days. He is slowly recovering.

Bro. J. R. Lambert has been very ill of late. He is now sufficiently recovered to be up and about his home.

Of the work in Virginia, Bro. Erwin Dickey writes from Roxbury, that State, that opposition was quite pronounced in that region. The few saints there were doing what they could to press the truth upon the attention of the people. A hall, one opened for preaching, had been closed because of threats against the owner. No doubt the gospel would be received in many other portions of the Old Dominion were the laborers sent sufficient for the harvest.

A letter from Bro. J. A. Dowker, Bayport, Michigan, reports a number baptized at the late Eastern Michigan conference. All were blessed of the Lord.

Sr. Maria Worwood, of Bozeman, Montana, aged eighty-four, writes desiring to bear testimony to the divinity of the work and the goodness of the Lord to her personally. She speaks from an experience of fifty-four years in the church. To her it is good to be in fellowship with the latter-day work.

Late arrivals include Bro. F. A. Smith, of the Nebraska missionary force; departures, Bro. J. W. Peterson to the Eastern Iowa district; Bro. H. A. Stebbins to the Northwestern Kansas district to labor at several points.

Even the Quakers (Friends) are awakening to the spirit of change and new departures in church life. It has been decided to confer legislative authority on the conference of the society. The plan now only needs the approval of the yearly meetings to become a law of the church.

Eighty-seven war vessels are being built in England alone. Thirty-four are for foreign governments. European declarations of peace are on a par with the story of the sick man who said to his enemy: "If I die, I forgive; if I get well, look out!"

Twenty-five persons were drowned in a train on the New York Central road, near Garrison, New York, October 24. The road bed washed out and the engine and several cars plunged into the Hudson River.

The worst blizzard known for years prevailed throughout the Dakotas, Colorado, and other portions of the Northwest on the 26th. Railroads and other traffic were interrupted by heavy sleet and snow.

French advices report a clash of interests between British and French commercial companies in West Africa. The trouble has arisen out of a question of disputed territory.

Bombay advices report reappearance of the bubonic plague at several points in British India, with forty-two deaths at Hardwar. The disease is spreading at Poonah and Surat.

Continuing reports from the Indian frontier indicate that the rebellion of insurgent tribesmen against British authority is by no means quelled. The troops in a late engagement were hotly followed by the enemy to within a mile of the British camp. The confidence of insurgent tribesmen is increasing and they are offering a determined front in all directions. The British officers say the tribesmen excel in guerrilla warfare and are wonderful skirmishers. The enemy is fully supplied with ammunition, and large reinforcements are joining the insurgent camps."

Doctor Kathrein, President of the House, has resigned the presidency, from causes growing out of recent disorderly scenes in the Austrian Reichsrath.

The King of Siam has condemned a member of his suite to death because of a breach of etiquette committed at Lisbon, Portugal.

A disastrous storm throughout Japan, September 30; great damage caused by floods; 65,000 houses flooded at Nagoya; 42 villages with 10,000 houses submerged in the Kaito, Kaisai, Nakashima, and Haguri districts, with 66,100 peasants dependent on rations of food issued by the government; similar damage in other districts; the late rice crop destroyed in some sections; twenty lives lost in Arima.

Fifty-four persons killed, eighty injured in a church panic at Khnieleff, Russia.

Floods in Italy, eight persons drowned near Ascoli.

Yellow fever worse at New Orleans; 59 cases, 7 deaths on the 26th.

Advices from Spitzbergen via Christiana, Norway, state that a rumor prevails in effect that news has been brought by a ship, of Professor Andree, the Swedish explorer, who left Dane's Island, Spitzbergen, in a balloon in an attempt to reach the north pole.

Further particulars in regard to the reply of the Spanish government are that it is conciliatory and not likely to cause an issue. The new departures of the Spanish ministry are regarded by some as an earnest of its intentions to carry out a satisfactory reform program, with a view to alleviating the sufferings of the Cubans gathered in the towns under the concentration order of General Weyler. The following named reforms have been passed upon, it is said: The Cuban Chamber of Deputies is to consist of between forty and fifty members, a deputy for each 40,000 inhabitants. The Governor General is to choose from that chamber five members to form an executive committee consisting of a president and ministers of the interior, finance, justice, and public works. The Governor General of Cuba is to have the right to veto legislation.

The 27th; replying to the proclamation of the British commander on the frontier, the Mazozais protest against the occupation of Khyber Pass, Samana Range, and Swat Valley by the British forces and declare their intention of opposing the British advance.

Henry George, the celebrated political economist, and of late a candidate for the office of Mayor of greater New York, died suddenly on the 29th inst.

"Berlin, Oct. 30.—Dispatches received here from Graslitz, a town of Bohemia, say that earthquake shocks, accompanied by thunder-like rumblings, have been terrifying the inhabitants of that place and its vicinity. These subterranean disturbances have prevailed almost uninterruptedly since Friday evening. Eight of the shocks were especially violent. Many families are leaving the place."

Bro. T. W. Williams, of Council Bluffs, wrote under date of the 30th, "on board a Kansas City train," as follows: "Am on my way from Carson, where I have been holding meetings, to Bartlett. Got telegram yesterday that John McClure (Campbellite) is 'photographing the Mormon carcass.' Shall be present to hear the closing funeral effort. All goes well."

General Blanco, the newly appointed Captain General of Cuba, arrived at Havana on the 31st and, after a consultation with General Weyler, assumed command. General Weyler, it is said, will return to Spain and head the party opposed to Cuban autonomy.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Whatever is a cruel wrong,
Whatever is unjust,
The honest years that speed along
Will trample in the dust.
In restless youth I railed at fate
With all my puny might;
But now I know if I but wait
It all will come out right."

UNITS.

"Only a blade of grass!—

In a world of getting and giving,
If all that I am, alas!

And all that shall come to pass,
Is no more than a blade of grass,
Oh! what is the use of living?"

But with the sun and the rain

The soft, sweet shower, and the shining,
Green things are growing amain,
And the breeze that sweeps the plain
Comes whispering, "See how vain,
How needless, is your ripening!"

"Behold the joy of the grass,

The opulent use and beauty
Of the wonderful waving mass!
And all of it comes to pass
Through each little blade of grass
Just doing its daily duty."

THE REASON WHY.

DURING the last winter many have been afflicted in our vicinity with the disease so prevalent throughout our land, and many have been laid away in consequence; and more have been left in a feeble state than the number that have regained their original health. The saints have suffered as much in consequence of the malady, according to their number, as have others, but all have survived it. The writer was one of the victims; she sought not a physician, took no medicine except simple home remedies, after which she received the ordinance of administration by the hand of Bro. W. G. Pert. The disease was rebuked; that is, grew no worse, and wore off in a few weeks, yet she was badly prostrated, and the throat and bronchial tubes were a source of annoyance at times. She could not bear much air without suffering thereby, and staggered from weakness more or less every day, yet was desirous to go to conference, notwithstanding the apparent impossibility of the case.

The how to go was one source of doubt, but on taking it to God in prayer the still small voice spoke gently to her spirit in tones unmistakable, "The way shall be opened up." The distance to travel was one and a half miles to ride and about two in a little boat, and besides, there was quite a little walking to do after getting onto the island (Little Deer Isle). The way was opened up wonderfully from leaving home to the return, and yet there was much wet weather to brave and only a little strength with which to meet it.

The first day, after resting a little, she went out a few steps from the house and was feasting the eye and the imagination on the beautiful scenery—sparkling waters dotted here and there, as far as the view can be taken in, with beautiful green islands. Not carefully noticing a small substance in the path, the toe came in contact, and quicker than thought she was going, and kept going till she lay perfectly prostrate on the ground. Did she lie there and cry for some one to come and pick her up? No, she is not used to such things, but gathered herself up as best she could, and went into the house, still rejoicing at the thought she was once more so near the conference. Six years before she was at the same place to conference, and three years later was at Bray's Mountain, Great Deer Isle. Went to meeting Saturday evening, but had much difficulty in walking the distance, one third of a mile, and more in sitting on the seat during services, although the desire to be there was great and the sermon most excellent. Had it not been for Sr. Laura Hendrick's kindness, or some other sister's, she could not have walked back to Bro. Hendrick's hospitable home. The brethren, J. C. and S. O. Foss, reached there some little time before the former. Twenty-six years ago J. C. Foss baptized her at the shore a little above; the other brother was a new one to her.

We must remark right here, how very pleasant it must have been to those two brothers to meet at conference after having been separated so much, and to have the privilege of lodging together. To return: She sank into a chair nearly exhausted, yet somewhat excited in consequence of meeting the dear brothers and sisters, and of once more hearing a good sermon. She requested administration by the brothers in the presence of the family and another lodger. Bro. J. C. offered the audible prayer, and every word was to the point, was sweet, gave the assurance of God's loving care and protection in the past, and also encouraging words of prophecy concerning the future. Her soul was filled with raptures inexpressible, so unlike the effect of words spoken by mortals without the aid of the Holy Spirit.

She had hoped before leaving home to receive a physical blessing, as well as a spiritual, at conference, and now the evidence seemed to be unmistakable. A good night's rest followed, which was something unusual when excited, and an improved appetite in the morning. Several days elapsed and no increase of strength, as was greatly desired, and what was the reason? No reason whatever in regard to the elders or on the part of the dear Father. She did not have perfect faith in the promises that were given; did not feel sure that they were from God; felt little and unworthy in his sight, and then the tempter suggested, "It was not of God; it was only your good Bro. Foss' opinion." That was the reason why the strength, so much needed and so much desired, was not given then. Could not have gone to services Sunday, had not Bro. and Sr. Hendrick taken her there.

Conference was over, good-byes were said, and O, how sorry we were that some of our old familiar brothers and sisters were not there! Some of them are sitting in the conference beyond, waiting to welcome us, but not to say good-bye; others were not in a state of health to comfortably endure the fatigue. Shortly we were separated by distance, and when shall we meet again?

Once more after several days she tried to look to the Lord for strength. Requested Bro. John Blastow to make the request in her behalf. Forty-one years ago he was her pupil; neither had forgotten the other. The first words he spoke were, "The Lord loveth thee." Every idea in his prayer harmonized perfectly with those given in the prayer referred to. O how good, how condescending was the Father to repeat the promises and conditions to such an unworthy child! Such is his great love, and from that hour an emotion of strength was made manifest, and it increased each day for more than a week, then overexertion and a slight cold retarded the work for a few days.

Another reason why the body is not stronger is worryment of mind. The habit of sometimes letting vexing things vex us. An indulgence in gloomy or fretful feelings always affects the body, and those who have weak nerves feel it to their hurt. Pray that with the help of God I may be able to speedily overcome this my greatest weakness. It has not been a constant habit, but an occasional one. 'Tis a fearful hindrance to health and happiness when we suffer it to come. That is another reason why. Cherishing our infirmities after asking God to take them away is similar to indulging in other evil propensities after asking him to take them away.

"Oh for a strong, a lasting faith,
To credit what th' Almighty saith!
T' embrace the message of his Son,
And call the joys of heaven our own.

"Then should the earth's foundation shake,
And all the wheels of nature break,
Our steady souls shall fear no more Than solid rocks when billows roar."

Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc.,

BRO. T. W. CHATBURN is now laboring in Tennessee—a new field, especially for Sunday school work. He recently organized the first Latter Day Saint Sunday school in the State or mission at Foundry Hill branch. It was a school of about thirty-five members, with Bro. E. P. Cook as superintendent. May it continue and prosper. Bro. T. W. is a resolute worker in all departments of church work, and the mission that has his help is one of the fortunate ones. We trust that he will in time be able to establish Sunday schools in all branches, and other places too, in the district or mission.

THE Ensign of October 14 says of Bro. W. S. McCrea: "In company with Bro. Butler and Sr. McCrea he visited the Oklahoma branch, near Mathewson, and organized a Sunday school October 3, largely the result of reunion effort." Thus little by little we may see springing up the fruits from our planting. In our planting for the Lord we can never know fully what the harvest will be. We sow the seed, we gather some fruit, but we cannot see it all. Some of the results eternity alone will reveal. Let us do well our part and God will take care of the rest.

REVIEW OF A SUNDAY SCHOOL'S HISTORY.

AS THIS is the first opportunity our school has had of representation through the Sunday school newspaper, we thought it not out of place to give a brief account of its history, for so small a thing as a Sunday school has a history which might be recorded for the benefit of others.

Nearly all great things have small beginnings. The mighty oak was once but a germ in the heart of a seed; and while the winds may rage through its branches and some be broken off, others shoot forth to take their place and the tree lives; and while the fierce lightning may rend asunder its trunk, in time the wound heals, the marks are effaced, and the tree stands a living monument of strength and endurance. So with our Sunday school. Not that it is to be compared to a full grown oak, but to one that has met the storms of adversity and has endured through all, and in time may become mighty and strong.

About eleven years ago there were in this neighborhood only about three families of saints. These, having purchased a building for church purposes, soon after organized a Sunday school. But there were many obstacles in the way of its success. There were no Quarterlies, no association, no conventions; to instruct teachers and officers. Their number was small, few or no young people to give life and enthusiasm to the work; so the result was, after struggling along for some time, it was abandoned. But it was not to remain so. In 1893, the few saints uniting with the Christians, organized a union Sunday school at the schoolhouse, the church having been sold. Large numbers turned out, the school prospered and seemed to have bright prospects; but after all, there were some obstacles to its progress. Truth and error could not dwell together. Truth sought to uproot the error and error sought to uproot the truth, and as a consequence there came a division,—the saints holding the morning hour, and the Christians meeting in the afternoon. But what a contrast! A saints Sunday school with only a few members meeting to study God's word. They were laughed at, ridiculed, and spoken evil of; and still they persisted in meeting together, quietly but earnestly, gleaning new truths, which enabled them to do unto others as they would have others do unto them. The others filled the house with their numbers in the afternoon; but in a few months the interest died away, and like the house built upon the sand, soon was dissolved.

Especial credit is due some of the brethren and sisters, too, for their untiring zeal and earnest work in keeping up the school every Sabbath. At times there were only three or four present, but school was held just the same. It was not long until, by the blessing of God, others were united to the church, and the school increased in number. Then again saints moved into the neighborhood so as to be where the children could go to Sunday school, and thus the numbers were swelled still larger. The permanency of the school was now an established fact. All were diligent in doing their part of the work, and prosperity attended them. Such was the condition of the school when the writer came to the neighborhood three years ago. The school has continued to grow; others have come because we "had a Sunday school," and now the little schoolhouse is scarcely large enough to contain the band of earnest workers who meet every Sunday to study the way of eternal life. The future is bright. We believe others will yet be gathered in as a result of the influence of the Sunday school, and we pray that our heavenly Father's watchcare may be over them, that their influence may ever be for good, and that they may continue to grow in numbers, in interest, and influence. What a

LESSON OF ENDURANCE

we may learn from this! Faithful persistence under trying circumstances is sure to bring success. Think of it you who are discouraged, if there be such. If obstacles stand in your way and all seems dark, if friends neglect you and refuse to give their aid, remember if you are faithful and enduring, God will not let your efforts go unrewarded, and sometime you will see the result of your labors.

[Some years ago we visited this school. It then numbered but about a dozen. They had missed but two sessions in one and one half years.—ED.]

ZION'S HOPE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

THE Harvest Festival and sermons were again held this year in the saints' meeting room, Sheffield, England, on Sunday, September 19 and Monday the 20th. This annual gathering with its display of fruit, vegetables, etc., promises well to be an annual institution. The first of these festivals, held in 1896, was a success in every way, so much so that the branch not only favored its repetition, but this year joined in helping to make it again a great success.

Our missionary in charge, Apostle Heman C. Smith, was present and took part in the proceedings from beginning to close. The superintendent of the district Sunday school association, Elder S. F. Mather, was also by invitation present.

Fruit and vegetables of almost every species used here were represented in the show, and were spread upon a long table in front of the stand. These, together with the children who were arranged in gallery behind this fruit-bedecked table, presented an altogether beautiful picture. The vocal exercises of the children were very efficiently rendered. Thanks being specially due to the voluntary services of Mr. Hutchinson, who conducted the singing, and his son who presided at the harmonium.

The Sunday morning service was in charge of Elder H. Hoole. Elder Heman C. Smith was the speaker. The afternoon service was in charge of Bro. Joseph Arber, superintendent of the Sheffield branch school. Addresses were delivered by Elders S. F. Mather, Heman C. Smith, and H. Hoole.

The evening service was in charge of Elder John Austin, and Bro. Heman C. Smith was the preacher. He read for a lesson the parable of the sower and very suitably illustrated in his remarks the development and maturity of the fruit from the seed as evinced in the display on the table.

The festival was continued on the Monday evening, the service then consisting of recitations, songs, etc., and an address from Bro. Heman C. Smith, after which the fruit and vegetables, which had been voluntarily contributed by members of the branch and friends, were sold. The funds so obtained, after expenses are paid, being jointly shared between the Sunday school and the branch. The festival was in every sense a success, and it is believed will prove an impetus, particularly to the work of the Sheffield branch as well as to its Sunday school. God grant that it may be so.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Oct. 19.

Editors Herald:—Say to those in the Eastern Iowa district that I have been unavoidably delayed here, but expect to be in the field in a few days. Will commence work in the extreme southern part of the district. Will Bro. J. W. Adams look up some places in his neighborhood for preaching? Do not announce the meetings till I get there, and thus give the enemy no chance to spike our guns or discover our plans.

The Brighamites have been holding their State conference here the past three days. Seventeen of their elders were present. I attended three of their five public services, and must say that the greatest and plainest point against them is the absence of the Spirit of God. At no service, which lasted usually about an hour, was there less than two speakers, and sometimes four and five. As to the men, I have nothing to say. As to their doctrine, I do not know of a single principle that is in harmony with the pure doctrine of Christ. Their faith is not genuine when, if their leader told the truth, he said, "Adam is our God, and the only God with whom we have to do." Their repentance is not deep enough to include the abomination of polygamy, which in the Book of Mormon is called whoredoms. That is a grave crime—singular number—which Jacob continues to inform them was polygamy. Their baptism is certainly not genuine unless administered three, four, or more times, as they are compelled to admit. Their resurrection is based too much on a belief in "celestial (?) marriage." What blasphemy! Their idea of the judgment brings them hope of reward for practicing abomination. Their idea of present revelation is wrong, inasmuch as they put as much dependence in a man's own words as when influenced by the Spirit, thus dishonoring God and making man his equal. I refer to the sayings of Joseph Smith and their doctrine of "obey-council-or-be-damned." And thus we might trace their doctrine, principle by principle. Since hearing what I have, both from themselves and others who lived there, together with the experience of my own father, I hope never to hear any of our folks say, "There is not much difference between us, aside from polygamy."

Nothing can equal the zeal they exhibit when opposed on the doctrine of polygamy. It certainly is not a dead issue, as B. H. Roberts can testify, if the statement be true, that one of his spiritual wives has recently presented him with twins. It seems to me that they could see that the United States government is more powerful than the God that gave their celestial law (?) on marriage. If salvation depends on keeping the celestial law, what of their new converts who have been recently baptized, and who may die before they are privileged to practice polygamy without breaking the law of the land? To practice polygamy now is to break one of God's commands—that to observe the law of the land also. If Wilford Woodruff's manifesto was of God, they break another if they do not practice it. Then according to their celestial law they fail of their exaltation, and must be servants to those who have practiced it. Brigham was about right when he said, "Hell is when you want to, and can't." They want to practice polygamy and can't. I wonder how about the Nephites, who were commanded to have but one wife? Will they be only servants to our illustrious Brighamites?

I had about an hour's conversation, privately, with Elder Brigham F. Duffin, and I asked him the following questions:—

If God gave one law to you, which he forbade the Nephites to observe, is he not a respecter of persons?

He answered, "No; they obeyed the law given to them, and we obey the law given to us. To obey God is to receive eternal life," or words to that effect.

I said, "Then you believe that one people can be saved by one law and another people by another law; or in other words, do you believe God is changeable?"

He then referred to the law of Moses, and sought to prove that God did change his law.

I called his attention to the fact that the law of Moses was not a plan of salvation, but a civil law. Then I called his attention to the following from the Book of Mormon: "And my words shall hiss forth unto the ends of the earth, for a standard unto my people, which are of the house of Israel."—2 Nephi 12:6. The italics are mine. Also the following: "Wherefore I speak the same words unto one nation like unto another. And when the two nations shall run together, the testimony of the two nations shall run together also. And I do this that I may prove unto many, that I am the same yesterday, to-day, and forever."—2 Nephi 12:7.

But in the face of this, he still contended that God changed. I called his attention to the fact that God's words, that should "hiss forth," were to be the "standard" to those to whom they should come; but they were not doing that. I have since noticed that they do not accept the word for two reasons. First, their doctrine of "obey counsel" forbids their acceptance of it. Second, they make it a standard to the house of Israel, and not to themselves.

Mr. Dixon said, last night, that the Twelve were more especially to look after the saints at home—were for the perfecting of the saints according to this passage (Ephesians 4). I wonder why the Twelve were sent out away from home in Joseph's day? I wonder if they ever read anything about some of the Twelve in Europe, in Joseph's day? And why did the Twelve leave for a permanent home in the west. In the same twenty minutes' speech, he sought to prove that Peter was the head of the church and an apostle, for the reason that he opened up the work in different places and at different times. Consistency, isn't it? In referring to the Reorganization he said, "Cut off the head of a man, and he is dead. It is fair to presume that the apostles and prophets are the head, then there was a time that certain factions had no head." I presume he never read where the scriptures say that Christ is the head of the church. He stated that the church in fourteen years baptized over 150,000, and that 22,000 lived in Nauvoo, and 80 per cent of them went to Utah. Then again he said common consent is at least consent of a majority of the whole. "What a tangled web." J. W. PETERSON.

SHERIDAN, Nev., Oct. 11.

Editors Herald:—We have no great things to boast of, but we have done the best we could under the conditions that are in this western country. I have done missionary work in other States, and can say from knowledge that the West, or this part at least, is a great deal harder than many places; and to judge the work of the elders by the numbers baptized would not be just. Care is needed in baptizing here, more so than in some other places. The drink and card habits are so common, and in fact the rule of the country, that the greater part of those who come into the church go back to their old ways. Some years ago one of our good men baptized forty or more; to-day if you find ten who pretend to live right you are doing well. They believed at the time they were baptized that the preaching was good; but the good book tells us to "Repent ye therefore, and be converted."—Acts 3: 19. If "every man's works are to be tried as by fire," your writer believes in the end it will be better for elder and the one baptized to use great care. We could have baptized some this year if we had talked going into the water, and worked to that end regardless of some other things. It has been said by one of our staunch men, "When they cannot live out of the church it is the right time to come in."

Bro. R. W. Davis and I have had some stalwart experiences this year. We paid out the last cent we had for hall and place to stay at one point. With hard times, and so many tramps in the country, it was out of the question for us to get the people to keep us. We had most wonderful light and liberty in preaching; after which we had to walk thirty-five miles through a dry, sandy sage brush county. Scarcity of water and the burning sun of July, made it very trying without food. We need a tent in this mission. We can go to towns and live in the same, which would cut down expenses. The saints in the northeastern part of State are willing to do their part in the matter; I haven't talked it with those of the west.

We have just closed a good meeting in the courthouse at Markleeville, Alpine County, California, just over the line. Congregation large; the Judge and lady were out, they expressed themselves as well pleased with our preaching. I hope good was done.

Sr. R. W. Davis is doing good work in the Sunday school department. If the young people can be got to take hold, in a few years the work will look different. It is not a question of a year to build the work up in this mission. I can see that our work is telling, and look for returns in God's time. We are in the faith and never had better light and liberty than this year.

J. ARTHUR DAVIS.

HAMILTON, N. S. W., Sept. 6.

Editors Herald:—Nearly fourteen years since I was buried in the waters of baptism with my dear Savior; all praise to his name. I was led from the Salvation Army through dreams on two successive nights. The gospel was not brought to me, but I was sent after it. And like Nathaniel of old, thought, Can any good thing come out of Nazareth? O how wonderful are the works of the Lord, and his ways past finding out.

How our hearts rejoice in the truth when we go to with all our mights. We labored on through wonderful obstacles, and in May, 1884, Bro. Burton organized a branch of eleven saints. The Lord opened my way so I was able to give the church a lot and a carpenter shop 24x30, and by a united effort it was converted into a saints' chapel.

The work is moving along nicely. Last year, on August 21, Bro. Wells led eleven souls into the waters of baptism; and August 15, this year, I had the pleasure of leading thirteen into the waters, and Bro. Wells two more the following Wednesday.

Sunday, September 5, two more have been baptized, making twenty-eight last year and eighteen this year so far, and the end not yet.

A letter from Bro. Butterworth tells how the work is looking up all over New South Wales. He baptized seven of late. A letter from Bro. Richard Ellis of Sydney, tells of a great day in Balmain branch, August 15; and of the glory of the Lord that surrounded him while preaching at night, and also of the visitation of an angel seen to sit on the second seat from the stand. So you see the Lord is with his people here as well as in Zion. At the confirmation of the thirteen at Hamilton, the Spirit of the Master was present in the gift of prophecy; the power of darkness also made his appearance, and one brother was so bound of him that he could not sit upright.

Dear brethren, we need more laborers in this part of the Lord's vineyard. I have baptized sixteen so far myself, and others are near the kingdom. Our chapel was full the last two Sundays, and I had good liberty in presenting the gospel. A Seventh Day Adventist was out to hear. When asked if they had apostles and prophets in their church he said, "Yes." I asked who the prophet was. He said it was not right to tell me; and after I insisted to know, he said, "White." I said was it Ellen G. White. He said, "Yes." I asked when the Lord had changed and set a woman at the head of God's government on earth, and called her a prophet, and in the face of what Paul said in Corinthians fourteenth chapter. It came just like a clap of thunder to him; and he said he had not thought of that part of it, and he became like a lamb. I said if the foundation is badly laid, how was the house to stand. He says he will come again.

HENRY BROADWAY.

STANDLEY, I. T., Oct. 19.

Editors Herald:—October 6, I started from Manchester, Texas, for this place, at the call of Elder George Montague, to consider the propriety of organizing the branches in the northeast part of Texas and the Choctaw Nation into a district. To say the least, we had a spiritual feast on the 10th. Bro. E. A. Erwin, W. B. Toney, and Ellis Short did the preaching. One was baptized by Elder Earl D. Bailey at the close of the conference.

While here I received an invitation to come to Tushkahomma; I preached five times while there, and baptized a Bro. Sterling Price Cox. Others there are near the kingdom. Since my return to Standley, I learn that Elder W. B. Toney has baptized seven, and Elder A. E. Elliott ten, and Elder Earl D. Bailey one more, making in all since the 10th of this month twenty souls added to the Standley branch, which numbers now 160 members, and many more are near the door. The brethren at Standley are doing a great work. The calls are numerous for preachers everywhere. I am glad the "hastening time" has come. The Psalmist says "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power." The cause is onward in this land.

ISAAC PERRY BAGGERLY.

MOUNTAIN GROVE, Mo., Oct. 18.

Editors Herald:—South Missouri district reunion was held at Mt. Grove, October 8, with Elder Henry Sparling president, Elder C. J. Spurlock secretary. The weather was fine all through. The Spirit of God was present throughout the session, making glad the hearts of all. It has been far the best reunion I ever attended in South Missouri. Eldorado, Midway, or Nevada was not to be compared with this one in spirituality; the power of God was with us in prophecy and healing, and many were the testimonies of God's blessing to his people. Some of the expressions I heard from the young saints were as follows: "I am so glad I came seventy miles;" another, "I would not have missed this for fifty dollars;" another, "I have belonged to another church for many years, but this week's experience has been a blessing to my soul, such as I never felt in my life," and so we might continue.

The bulk of the preaching was by F. C. Keck and Henry Sparling, assisted by J. R. Wedlock, J. B. Graham, Elder Williams, C. P. Carron and the writer. The preaching was good, and was well received by the people; as a proof, the tent would not hold the crowds which came night after night to hear the "little fat man," as they named Bro. Keck, and that Englishman. Surely the Spirit of God was with the speakers. Bro. P. Carron was ordained an Elder, and Bro. E. Edwards was ordained a teacher. A branch was organized here with Elder James McDuffit president, Don Schofield priest, Emanuel Edwards teacher, W. H. Schofield deacon, and Don Schofield clerk. This branch has a bright prospect ahead, good solid officers, and some as noble saints as ever lived are members of this branch. We hope to see the work move here.

Amongst the prophecies given, one by Sr. Bootman to Bro. Sparling was encouraging to our brother regarding his work in the past and future; and the one given by Bro. Sparling to the saints, but more especially to Bro. W. H. Schofield—it brought tears of joy to our noble brother, who has so long stood in the breach at this point, and his noble wife who has made the heart of many an elder rejoice with her deeds of kindness. The heart of every saint present was filled with gratitude to our heavenly Father for his loving remembrance of these kind saints, who stood alone for twenty years or more, always true to the cause; their honest trade and fair dealing with their fellow man have gained them the best trade in town. The reunion closed Sunday night by a sermon from Bro. Wedlock; it was well received. Monday morning, bade adieu to all leaving the town. Brn. Keck and Sparling to continue the meetings another week. Saints who missed this meeting missed a treat indeed.

MCPAUL, Iowa, Oct. 20.

Editors Herald:—Our work in this mission field is on the move for good, steadily increasing in numbers and growing in spiritual strength. The reports of our brethren at district conference were truly cheering and gave general satisfaction; nearly all had something of interest to report. We think we are up to date in written reports, for all the officers of the district—elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, so reported. Our local force are doing nobly; we are glad to state this for their encouragement. The outlook for their future is bright and consoling. We have calls for preaching the word from all parts of the district, and pray continually: Lord, open the hearts and minds of the people, to the necessity of contributing of their means that more laborers may be sent into the great harvest field. We exhort the saints of this district not to forget or neglect this all important matter; lay up for yourselves "treasures in heaven." Come, help the grandest and noblest work which mortals can engage in—a work that deeply moved the "eternal God" in sympathy and "infinite love" for the human race, as revealed in the divine work of our "Lord and Savior Jesus Christ"—a work in which all the "holy angels" are engaged, and the good and virtuous of every dispensation of God's mercy to man.

Dear brethren and sisters, you cannot afford to neglect such an important duty, and come short of so great a salvation. Then let us be cohelpers and faithful laborers with God in our own eternal interest.

We were glad indeed to meet with our much esteemed and worthy minister, J. R. Lambert; his presence comforted the saints. His advice and counsel in our business transactions were to the point. The word of life as spoken through him to us was opportune and timely; all hearts were made to rejoice in God. Long may he live to do his Master's will.

The Sunday school work of the convention was praiseworthy indeed. We have some splendid workers in this department. Praying for the prosperity of the work, I am still in the faith.

HENRY KEMP.

SEMINOLE, Ala., Oct. 13.

Editors Herald:—We had good meetings on the 10th, at a place called Beulah, where there are two churches and a schoolhouse; but like Bro. R. E. Grant, we had to occupy the outside of them. A commodious room was arranged in Bro. N. Reeder's large barn near by, and we hung up our chart and went to work. The meeting had been advertised for a month, so we had a very good time. When the afternoon services were half through, the Baptist minister and part of his congregation came in, and remained till services were over; then they went to the water with us, and waited until three were baptized; then he started on his way to his appointment. Nine were baptized altogether; two of them were sons of Mr. A. M. Maylan. Hope a branch may be organized here ere long. There is already talk of building a church house. Bro. J. Reeder has been traveling with me the past month or so, and has rendered good aid. Yellow fever still progressing, and Baldwin County now quarantined. This makes twenty-seven baptized here of late.

D. E. TUCKER.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Oct. 18.

Editors Herald:—I am out on the frontier, where none of our ministers have been before. Some have been in Bridgeport, but I am preaching about eight miles from there in a union church. Last night the house was nearly full, and the audience gave me the best of attention. After preaching, one man hitched up and brought me to the trolley car, a distance of three miles. I am favorably impressed with this community, and have felt the directing hand of God. If possible I intend to get our people at Broad River branch to follow up the work that I have started, for we can get the church two or three Sundays in every month. Am still hopeful for the triumph of Zion's cause.

A. M. BAKER.

ADEL, Iowa, Oct. 18.

Editors Herald:—I boxed the tent a few days ago for the winter. I was alone all summer, except one week. Bro. C. B. Morgan acted Sankey for me, and he filled the place well at Perry and Oskaloosa. The local brethren aided much by opening and closing the meeting for me. At Nevada I had a very remarkable meeting. Began with a goodly number, and the crowd kept increasing; so that on the last night I was told not over the half could get in the tent. Good interest from the start. I baptized two of the foremost Christian (Campbellite) ladies in that part of the country, the organist and alto singer in their choir, Mrs. Nellie L'Hommedeu and Mrs. Martha Belt. A Christian (Campbellite) lady said to me the day I left there, "Elder Roth, you ought to stay a few days longer, for you have all the Advents turned upside down and all the Christians inside out." A man said to me that he knew of about twenty who were on the fence ready to jump on one side or the other. The Dunkard and Baptist brethren were very kind to us, the former gave us lodging and the latter gave me the use of their church font to baptize in free of charge. The mayor helped us to fill the tank with city water free of charge.

The Presbyterian minister warned his flock to keep away, but he hurt himself more than he did me; his own members told me so. One man (a sanctified one) volunteered to have me tarred and feathered; but he was promptly notified by one standing by that if there was any tarring done he would get it; for said he, "This is the first time the gospel was ever preached in this town, and now you can't stand it." Many friends were made for the cause. May God bless the honest in heart.

I began meetings here in a country schoolhouse last Saturday night; but the prospects look unfavorable so far. It has rained every day since I came here, so the people could not come out very well; congregations small. It still looks like rain to-day. May God bless his people and Zion prosper.

J. S. ROTH.

CASTLE ROCK, Wash., Oct. 19.

Editors Herald:—I finished my series of meetings at Little Falls, where I began September 22 and closed October 4, preaching sixteen times. I made some warm friends, and discovered some very bitter if not outspoken enemies to the work. The last Sunday, as I was about to sit down to dinner, one of these friends came and asked for the key to the hall. Knowing that it would be safe, I surrendered it to him. When I went back to service at three p. m. I noticed what seemed to be a mail box with quite a supply of letters or envelopes therein. At the close of the service a gentleman arose and stated that as they thought there were some who might wish to contribute to help Mr. Chase in his work, they had put up the box with the envelopes. Those who wished could take an envelope home, and at the evening service return it to the box with their offering. The result was a little over ten dollars to help the work along.

Closing services here Monday night with a full house, and many invitations to "come back again," and feeling that the Lord had many there who were very near the kingdom, I came back to Castle Rock the day following, and the evening of the 6th commenced meetings again, preaching alternately here and at Jackson schoolhouse until the evening of the 17th, when I closed this series, having preached nine times at Castle Rock and six times at Jackson schoolhouse. The interest was very good at both places, although the attendance was not as large as I could have wished. There are several at Castle Rock who are believing the work, and will, I trust, before long unite with the work.

Last evening I commenced a series of meetings that I expect will continue until over Sunday next, at what is known as the Lank schoolhouse. I came here by invitation, and am being entertained by one Mr. Myers—a man not of the faith, but who is anxious to learn of the truth. I find both he and his wife very kind. I was greeted by a well-filled house; all seemed to enjoy the singing and listened attentively to the sermon. As to how they enjoyed that part of the exercise, I cannot say. This is about four miles west and north of Castle Rock. A Mr. Vanderford, of the Seventh Day Adventist faith, very kindly came with his team, so that I could ride and bring my organ and the large lamp that we use with the tent. He has been very kind. It was he who furnished the team for me to haul the lumber to seat the tent on the hop grounds. He attended the meetings there and also at the Jackson schoolhouse since coming back, and has aided me in every way that he could. Surely the Lord will reward him and show him the light. I parted company with Bro. Holt the 1st of September; am looking for him here soon now. Think he is somewhere on the Sound. Have been very busy since the parting, and shall welcome him back. I feel that the Master has blessed me very greatly in my ministry in the past month. To him be all the honor.

Rejoicing in the work, your brother,
A. M. CHASE.

WILBURTON, I. T., Oct. 23.

Editors Herald:—Since June my labors have been chiefly in Arkansas; six were added to the church through the labors of Bro. Jackson and myself. I came to the Indian Territory in September, and went to Standley to represent the Wilburton branch, which I did to the best of my ability. I also held meetings for a week eight miles from Standley, where seventeen were added to the church, Brn. Toney and Elliott doing the watering. I have been laid up with cold for several days, but through the kindness of Bro. and Sr. Adamson am better, and was able yesterday to preach a double funeral sermon, the two funerals meeting at the graveyard; one of the dead being some eighty years old, the other a little child of two summers. I am still in the work of the Master, and hope to remain as long as he desires me.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,
Your brother,
J. W. KENT.

SYDNEY, N. S. W., Sept. 20.

Editors Herald:—I have just received and read with pleasure "Talmagean Criticism, No. 1." I can heartily approve of all it contains except the statement concerning religious liberty. I, too, "thank God for American freedom, where the serfs of European dynasties can come and think; and thinking, worship God according to conscience' dictation, with no fear of molestation." But I cannot go so far as to say: "It is in America alone where mind may soar, and the intellect delve, and return with disclosing light from realms above or speaking stones from earth below, and none can say it nay." (Italics mine.) I believe and know this to be too exclusive a statement. I think the brother will pardon my pointing it out; and also recognize that my opportunity to observe justifies this criticism (or rather, this correction). I enjoy the superior advantage of four years' residence under the bright ægis of the British crown and flag; and though I am a bred and born citizen of the United States of America, I have never felt freer, in every sense, under my own flag than here in these British colonies. I am in a position to say that America is not the only country in the world where mind may soar, intellect delve, and serfs worship Almighty God according to the dictates of conscience. The oppressed of European dynasties find as welcome asylum in the lands known as the British Empire, as they do in the United States.

Only yesterday, the organist of the Sunday school here, in Sydney, selected as a closing hymn, No. 1001 in Harp, 247 in Hymnal—"America." I was accompanying with my clarinet, and as we played the prelude, I was thinking, "Wonder if the organist hasn't made a mistake. Can Britains sing this American sentiment? We'll see." I did see. As they joined heartily in the hymn, the last vestige of narrowness was banished from my mind. Why could they not sing:—

"My country, 'tis of Thee, Sweet land of liberty," etc.?

Does liberty belong exclusively to the land of the stars and stripes? The last verse answers:—

"Our father's God! to Thee,
Author of liberty,
To Thee we sing:
Long may our land be bright
With freedom's holy light;
Protect us by thy might,
Great God, our King."

(The tune "America" is the national hymn tune of England and called "God save the Queen." Every boy and girl knew it.)

I speak the truth when I say that I have enjoyed better police protection here than at home, when the same was needed, in the propagation of truth. I say that protection has been prompter than in like experiences in my own land. This I think is due to a better system. At home a local constable is elected by the people, and is not free from partisan politics or local prejudices. Not so here.

Elder J. W. Wight can bear me witness that when we were holding open air meetings in Balmain, Sydney, a blatant and abusive man by the name of Foran (said to be an ex-Jesuit priest, known to be a Romanist) interrupted, and sought a discussion. The next evening was set as the time, and we had a warm discussion, too, with signs of unfairness from the Romanist and his "push." His language became obscene, and a constable stepped up at once and said: "See here, sir, if you don't guard your utterances I'll take you in charge." This cooled him a lot; but at last Elder Wight had to refuse further discussion. I learn since that this man came with his "push" with the avowed purpose of working up a sentiment against us, and then to actually run us off the ground and out of the suburb. The police knew this (though we did not), and the above mentioned constable had several "specials" within easy call, if needed—and this without one hint from the Americans that we wished protection. The same Romanist has since served a sentence in gaol, for some other cause.

And were I a prisoner charged with some heinous crime, I would feel surer of a trial here in New South Wales than in the State of Texas, or even in Indiana, where, a late cable informs us, a lynching and hanging took place by an unauthorized mob. (Was this liberty or license, or what?)

Yours for a broad and fair patriotism,
GOMER WELLS.

COALGATE, I. T., Oct. 23.

Editors Herald:—Last March I was booked for a debate with a Christian minister of Texas by the name of Woslick. Owing to unavoidable circumstances I could not meet him then; hence asked them to meet Bro. Joseph Ward. They refused. Woslick went and blowed around a day or two and left, and gave notice of the same in their papers. Whereupon the Campelites tantalized our people very much all over this country, which has brought letters of inquiry from the saints. This same Woslick was notified by his people to meet me the first of August; he failed to come. They asked for time. We again set it for October 18. I went, and Woslick failed to show up. This makes two failures on his part to one on mine. I have signed eight sets of propositions for these bold lions since I came into this church, which lacks three days of being one year, and they have failed to show up in any single instance. The good cause goes on, and I baptize them, from one to seven at a time. I have been wonderfully blessed of the Lord during the past year, and rejoice that the restored gospel has saved me from my former delusions.

Yours for the truth,
W. B. TONEY.

NEW HARMONY, Ind., Oct. 23.

Editors Herald:—I came here yesterday, after doing gospel work at Leavenworth, preaching and organizing the saints into a branch, October 16, with Bro. Peter A. Flinn priest and president, Bro. Liman Pleasant clerk. The branch numbers twenty-eight members, and meet on the first Sunday in each month for sacrament meeting. They give a cordial invitation to the saints to meet with them in these meetings. There are so many calls and so much to do, sometimes we are puzzled to know just where to move. Bro. Briggs paid us a flying visit in September, but was off so soon, many did not know he was here until he was gone; but he left a promise to return soon. We hope he will, and get things in a better condition than they are in at present. We are doing all we can. I am striving to get the saints to come up higher. I do not see any use in anyone coming into this church and living anyway. Why not live right, or go out and stay out until we can do so? Then come in and live right. We are not benefited any by coming in and not living right when we get in. This is God's work; we should honor his cause by letting our light shine by the good deeds we do. Let us improve our time each day, by trying to live better. All will not be saved in the highest degree of glory. We cannot attain to that condition if we do not live for it. I have learned that it is easier to get members in the church than it is to get them to live right after they come in. I would say to the elders, Be very careful who you baptize into the church. If you want a good building, you must use good material. May the Lord help us to walk worthy of the name we bear.

In the faith and laboring for the welfare of Zion's cause,
G. JENKINS.

CALIFORNIA, Mich., Oct. 28.

Editors Herald:—The series of two-day meetings closed, for our district, with splendid spirit and interest at South Scott and Flint, Indiana, and was followed by the largest conference gathering ever held in Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, under the auspices of Latter Day Saints. Conference opened with the Clear Lake branch in due manner, and the business was dispatched with brevity and kindly feelings. Preaching services good, and the social meetings were seasons of light, spiritual joy, peace, and edification. Each face bore the index of the Christ within, and we feel that the influence of the latter-day message was stamped deeper in the lines of society's countenance, as a result of the gathering. We do know that the work is solidified and on splendid bases, with face fronting the hosts of sin, throughout our district. And while "the nations are mad" (Rev. 11: 18), and clouds of perplexity lower, threatening the peace, and Gentile times are closing in, we plead: the harvest is ripe, "the laborers are few."

After delivering three discourses at Clear Lake, over last Sunday, we are located as per heading of letter, with appointments ahead. Bro. H. H. Robinson in the west, Bro. Baggerly at Grand Rapids, and Bro. Briggs at Valparaiso (at last accounts), leaves only one, in all these parts.

Cheerfully and hopefully,
S. W. L. SCOTT.

W. Wight, October 7, 1890. His life, both before and after joining with the saints, has been one of consistent Christian usefulness. Widow, four sons, and three daughters mourn. The funeral services were conducted at the Josephite chapel, October 20, Elder H. N. Hansen in charge. Elder James McKiernan preached the sermon, and Bishop Thorn followed with remarks. He was born in Cambridgeshire, England, April 27, 1833; emigrated with his parents to South Australia in 1846, where he united with the Utah Church in 1854. In August, 1855, he married Elizabeth Collins, with whom he moved to Utah in 1880. There he became dissatisfied with church procedure and left for Montana and from thence moved into Washington, where he chanced to meet Elder C. A. Bishop, from whom he learned of the Reorganization. He was baptized by Elder A.

Haws, February 5, 1890, and on July 20, 1890, was ordained an elder by J. C. Clapp. He was faithful to the end and died in full hope of triumph through the gospel, leaving a wife and one son and daughter to mourn. His last speech was a testimony of the truth of the latter-day work.

POPE.—Elder John Hall Pope, August 23, 1897, at Brooklyn, New York. He was born at Cutcombe, Somersetshire, England, May 23, 1851; was baptized September 29, 1872, at New Tredegar, Wales. He was ordained an elder, February 21, 1875, and has labored in that office since. He has labored as a branch officer for some years as circumstances would permit, and died in the harness. Widow and four young children mourn. May the good Father watch and care for them along the rugged road of life.

Briggs, and was a loyal member when, "as a shock of corn cometh in in his season,"—in full age,—he was gathered to that "rest which remaineth for the people of God." Funeral obsequies from the saints' chapel. Remarks by Elder S. W. L. Scott to a large concourse of people. "Rest! sweetly rest!"

Husband, four boys, and one girl mourn. She received the gospel message when she was twenty-one years old, and continued in the faith until the last. The interment was at Six Mile Grove cemetery. Funeral sermon by Elder Frederick Hansen.

THE MODERN PARENT REBUKED.

The duties of Dr. Brown as rector of one of our largest churches are necessarily very great, as are those also of his wife, says the New York World. Consequently the small Browns are turned over to nurse and governess.

Last week Dr. Brown ran down into the country to see his children. The visit ended, he arose to go. The youngest of them all, a girl of six, stepped forward, shook hands primly, and said, "Good evening, Doctor. When did you say we may expect a call from Mrs. Brown?"

The rector tells the story himself, and protests that he was more rebuked than amused.

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.
NEW REVISED EDITION.

The manuscript of this edition was carefully compared with the original authorized edition of 1835, which was adopted by a General Assembly of the church at Kirtland, and known as the Kirtland edition. Some typographical errors that crept into and passed through later editions have been corrected, and some omissions supplied.

The revelation on the late Civil War, the "Minutes of the General Assembly" of 1835, the minutes of the "Joint Council" of 1894, and the revelations given to the Reorganized Church to date, are all included in the volume. The "Lectures on Faith" are omitted, but may be published later in pamphlet form, or for those who may want them.

The concordance has been revised and enlarged, greatly aiding study and general use of the book. The concordance, and lists of names of persons and places mentioned in the revelations, are included in the volume.

Ready reference to the book is greatly facilitated by the substitution of figures for the old style Roman letters in section and page headings. The figures can be read at a glance.

This edition is issued from new brevier type. Prices same as the former edition, according to bindings:—

- Cloth.....$ 65
 - Full leather..... 1 00

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

The Necessity for a Reorganization.

BY ELDER H. O. SMITH.

This tract sets forth and refutes the false claims and erroneous doctrines of the Utah Church.

It brings to light much of the teachings of Brigham Young and other founders of the Utah faction, and proves them and the present leaders to be at variance with and their organization a departure from the faith taught by the early church and its three standard books.

It also vindicates and maintains the general position of the Reorganized Church in succession.

A tract for the times. Just the thing with which to meet the arguments of Brighamite elders.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

REDUCED IN PRICE.

Recognizing the closeness of the times and with a desire to place the church paper within the reach of every member, the Board of Publication has decided to offer THE SAINTS' HERALD at a reduced price for one year from the date named, as follows:—

On July 12, 1897, the price of the HERALD was fixed at $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

This reduction applies to both old and new subscribers, on the following conditions:—

Cash must accompany all orders for new subscriptions, as stated.

Former subscribers who are in arrears, who pay up on old subscriptions and renew one year in advance, will receive the benefit of the reduction in price from the date named—July 12, 1897.

Those who have already paid in advance will receive the benefit of the reduction in price at the dates of expiration of present subscriptions, and for the year following said dates, if renewing in advance.

This is a reduction of twenty-five per cent, both in the price of the church paper, and of the revenue derived from it. It is therefore necessary that all avail themselves of the new departure and greatly enlarge the list of new subscribers; and also that those indebted pay up all past due accounts.

Branch hook agents and the ministry who can do so, are respectfully asked to second the efforts of the Board by obtaining new subscribers for the HERALD and working in the general interests of the Herald Office—the church publishing plant.

In bonds,

RED MEN OF ASIATIC ORIGIN.

EXPLORATIONS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA TEND TO PROVE THIS THEORY.

AFTER spending upward of four months among the native tribes of Northern British Columbia Dr. Franz Boaz and Dr. Farrand, the experts of the British association and the American Museum of Natural History, are more than ever convinced that all the redmen of the American Pacific coast are of Asiatic origin.

The investigation upon which this important conclusion is based have extended over a very large area of rough and little traveled territory in the course of which all the tribes along the Fraser in the Hope mountains, at Kamloops and along the Thompson River, living on the Chilcotin plains or inhabiting the Naas and Skeena were interviewed and made the object of serious study.

The physical characteristics of each were carefully noted, measurements and photographs were taken, and innumerable casts were made. At the same time the customs and traditions of the several dusky nations were searched for their unwritten history, and their artistic efforts in paintings and rude sculpture were looked to for the key to the riddle of their existence.

All these sources of information taken together lead to but one important fact—confirming but the one theory as to the origin of all the coast races. They are all, so far as scientists can determine, children of the Orient.

The work done in the British Columbia interior this summer has been a continuation of the scientific exploration of the British association subsequent to 1887, while that along the coast has been prosecuted for the American Museum of Natural History of New York at the expense of Morris K. Jessup, the president of that institution. The present season will not suffice to complete the work, and next year the history of the Indians from the Columbia River to Behring Straits will receive consideration, as well as that of the tribes on the Asiatic side as far as Lower Siberia.

Much new and interesting information in regard to the native tribes of this province has been obtained as a result of the work in the field by Dr. Boaz and his associates. These included, besides Dr. Farrand, Mr. Harlin I. Smith and Mr. James Tait of Spencer's Bridge, both enthusiasts in research and deep students of the characteristics of native races. Dr. Farrand and Dr. Boaz have just returned to Victoria and announce themselves well satisfied with their season's operations—ample testimony that they have accomplished much.

There is indeed no distinctive tribe, modern or extinct, within the boundaries of this province that has escaped attention, the investigations of the savants having extended over both mainland and islands. Their work from beginning to end has been in connection with the grand and comprehensive scheme of the British association and the fraternal American institute for the classification of the native races of the West, in connection with which Prof. Boaz has been earnestly engaged during ten years past.

Reaching Victoria in early May last the party of three went first to Spencer's Bridge where rare fossil treasures are found in abundance, and where the resident tribes, as well as the Kamloops Indians, received thoughtful consideration. Mr. Smith detached himself from the party at Kamloops to pursue his archæological work, and also secured an interesting condensation of the history of the primal tribes of the interior.

Drs. Boaz and Farrand, with Mr. Tait and an Indian guide, in the meanwhile crossed the mountains to the Fraser River, giving scientific attention to all the Indian inhabitants en route. The information which they sought and obtained deals chiefly with the physical and historical characteristics of the various tribes, their customs, and their relationships. After making the acquaintance of all the tribes along the great southern waterway of British Columbia, and noting the peculiarities of the Harrison Lake tribe, the party turned their course northward to Soda Creek, and there crossed into the country of the Chilcotins, with whom Dr. Farrand remained as an honored guest until mid-August. Dr. Boaz continued to the coast, pursuing his investigations at Bella Coola and Port Essington and picking up the thread of his researches where it was dropped last year at Rivers inlet. —Victoria, B. C., Dispatch in the San Francisco Examiner.

HUMAN RACE DYING OUT.

IMPORTANT SUBJECTS DISCUSSED AT THE CIVIC-PHILANTHROPIC CONFERENCE.

BATTLE CREEK, Mich., Oct. 13.—At to-day's session of the Civic Philanthropic conference Dr. Baker, secretary of the Michigan Board of Health, read a paper on the duty of national, State, and municipal governments in relation to public health. He said that the causes of disease must first be known before it became possible to guard against them. Coöperation of all classes is needed for the restriction of diseases. Purity of water supply is a necessity and of supreme importance, and all water should be boiled.

Professor O'Malley of Notre Dame University read a paper on the prevention of contagious diseases in the city. Many cases called diphtheria he asserted, were unjustly quarantined. He held that physicians should be appointed to examine throats of children in schools periodically, and gave instructions for the care of patients and modes of disinfection. The steam disinfectant plants, though expensive, were effective for cities. Coins should be boiled and all paper money disinfected with carbolic acid.

Dr. J. H. Kellogg of Battle Creek read a paper entitled "Are We a Dying Race?" He said in part: "Notwithstanding our marvelous accumulations of wealth and wisdom we are certainly going down physically toward race extinction. Sanitarians pride themselves on having saved millions of lives, thus doubling the average length of human existence, and the credit claimed for sanitary science is justly its due. Nevertheless, we must not see in this great increase in the average length of human life an indication that by a continuation of the same method human longevity may be indefinitely or even greatly increased. The man who has a sound stomach is able to digest cholera germs as well as other vegetables; thus they are rendered incapable of doing him harm. The gastric juice of a healthy man readily destroys typhoid fever germs, and, in fact, germs of every description. The man whose liver is sound is able to combat successfully the poison generated within the body by the invading microbes; whereas the man whose liver has been spoiled by whiskey, tobacco, gormandizing, excessive consumption of effete meats, or blistering condiments, succumbs to the onslaught of these diseased germs.

"It is high time that society gave more serious attention to the great class of bankrupts by heredity, from which springs the greater share of crimes and criminals, cranks, lunatics, fanatics, and imbeciles.

"The remedy is to be found not in the abolition of public hygiene but in the cultivation of private hygiene. More attention must be given to the training of the individual. Men and women must be made to see that the prevalent conditions of our modern civilization are anti-natural, and tend to the deterioration of the vital powers and the development of disease."

At the afternoon session Dr. Kress of the Sanitarium, this city, made some bold charges. His paper was on the relation of habits of life to chronic diseases. Both acute and chronic diseases, he claimed, are due to evil habits, and, owing to bad living of people, are on the increase in this country. People are becoming degenerate, and one of the chief means of producing this national condition is the universal practice of beer drinking. Tobacco, he asserted, is also a national curse, and a majority of the patent medicines and many drugs in common use are deleterious. Meat eating also produces disease.

Dr. MacGuigan of the Kalamazoo Insane Asylum urged isolation of epileptics, chronic inebriates, imbeciles, insane, and other defectives. He advocated a colony system.—Press Dispatch.

JEW'S PLAN TO COLONIZE.

A mass-meeting of the Hebrews of Chicago was held yesterday afternoon in Porgas' Hall, Jefferson and Maxwell streets. B. Howitz, President of the Zion association, an organization formed for the purpose of establishing a colony for persecuted Jews in Palestine presided. Speeches were made by Dr. Felzenthal, rabbi of the Zion Congregation, by L. Zolotoff, H. Horowitz, and W. Shur.

The day being the second of the feast of the tabernacle, was a holiday, and the hall was filled to its utmost capacity, nearly a thousand persons being present. The object of the meeting was to present the matter of colonization to the people and to urge their coöperation. No definite action will be taken until the association learns from Dr. Harzel and Max Nordau, who are the originators of the colonization scheme, what action was taken in regard to colonization in the great convention held last month in Basel, Austria. The speakers urged the necessity of the movement, declaring that the time for such an action was now ripe.—Tribune.

ASSISTED BY SATAN.

Niles, Mich., Aug. 5.—Dr. Doane Wigent of Watervliet, this county, has created quite a sensation by his wonderful magnetic healing power. He is a spiritualist, a radical free thinker, hater of orthodoxy and is an enemy to God and the Bible. Nevertheless he is visited daily by hundreds of Christian people, and he has performed some miraculous cures. He effects his cures simply by placing his hands on the afflicted parts and, unlike other faith healers, who claim the assistance of divine power, Wigent claims that he is assisted by Satan.—Ev.

LAMONI, IOWA, NOV. 10, 1897.

THE EDITOR ABROAD.

THE meetings at St. Thomas were a success; Bro. R. C. Evans occupying on Monday night, October 18, on the witness—the Book of Mormon. The Editor had occupied the day before at eleven a. m. and seven p. m., on the subjects of the probability of prophetic visitation and the means of identifying the angel's message when it came, in the morning; and the necessity for more than one witness—the Bible being one, to be strengthened by one or more others—the Book of Mormon and the Revelations of our own day being the added witnesses. The preached word was well received. One, long satisfied of the gospel claims, was baptized on Monday evening and confirmed.

A reception was accorded to Bro. R. C. Evans and the Editor, at the house of Bro. Samuel Johnson; where a social occasion left memories of pleasant faces, and pleasant converse, with which to remember the visit to St. Thomas.

From St. Thomas to Windham, by rail, thence to Vanessa by way of Bro. R. C. Longhurst's good team, was but a three hours' pleasant trip. The meeting at Vanessa was well attended, the house filled with attentive people. We here met with Bro. Frederick Gregory again; it being in his field for labor. He is a genial, pleasant co-worker, and destined to make a mark in the work.

In taking train for Niagara Falls at Waterford, we visited Bro. John Smith, an old resident and early acceptor of the faith. He and Sr. Smith, his wife, are but waiting the call of the pale reaper to call them into the life beyond, in the patience of hope.

Niagara Falls, Ontario, was the next vantage ground sought for.

Here in the Town Hall, a spacious and pleasant place to meet in, granted the saints by the council of the town, we held four meetings, beginning Thursday evening and holding again Friday night, and twice on Sunday, October 21, 22, and 24, closing Monday night, in the saints' own hall, near by. The audiences in the Town Hall were good; so said the local brethren. They were not large, but they were made up of very attentive listeners. The Editor opened and closed the series, Bro. R. C. Evans sharing in the efforts to declare the way of life.

Bro. William Place presides over the little branch at the Falls, Canada side, and is one of the coming men. The branch has good working membership, and it is probable a further increase will result from further labor there.

As an American citizen, the Editor could not resist the opportunity to see the celebrated Falls of the Niagara. So, with Bro. R. C. Evans, a good citizen of her majesty, Queen Victoria's dominion, as a chaperon, we made the usual visitation to the Falls, both sides of the river, under the protection of both flags, the Union Jack of Britain, and the Stars and Stripes, "Old Glory," of the United States.

Of the Falls, little need be written in this paper. The Horse Shoe, the larger fall, on the Canadian side, is the grander, showing the majesty of force, the grandeur of power; but the American, the smaller, is the more attractive, more beautiful to look at. Descriptive faculty cannot put into words just conceptions of this display of nature's beauties and forces. For miles above the falls and miles below, it is one continuous scene of display, a constant crash of elements in motion and at rest, force and resistance. Captain Webb, of swimming feats fame, was foolish enough to think he could brave these elements; and so donning his swimming suit, he essayed it. He started well, but his body battered and bruised was found below the Rapids, a silent but eloquent witness to the failure of human audacity. Thousands of busy feet have worn the paths about the Falls, and ours did but fall where others have trodden, and thousands more will traverse the same paths; but the Falls, or their successors the rapids, will still be left to sing their tremendous, earth and sky shaking song, anthem, psalm of praise to God, in the diapason of thunderous roar, until the Master comes.

It is a good place here to note impressions; and it may be time for the Editor to record some.

Nineteen years ago we visited a few points in Ontario; Bothwell, St. Thomas, London, Ontario, Louisville, Blenheim, and Corinth, etc. The general appearance of the people of the province to us was English and Scotch. Whether the change is in us or the people, the appearance now is much more American, decidedly of a United States type. Especially so in the cities. There are some striking peculiarities. For instance, Niagara Falls, Ontario, on the west bank of the Niagara River, at the falls, is quite a different place from Niagara Falls, New York, on the eastern bank of the same river, a few hundred feet apart. The town on the west side is comparatively small; appears to be slow in enterprise, dull and lacking in business thrift and push. One line of street railway, horsepower, poorly provided streets, and a partial electric system for lighting, show badly against the city on the east bank, where a very efficient system of electric lighting and street railways show long lines of pushing, enterprising business houses and manufacturing plants. It is stated in the Ontario Falls that the syndicate of business men that has lately tackled the power of the falls of Niagara, and harnessed it to machinery, has paralyzed the industry of the Dominion side by the paid agreement of a subsidy of $25,000 per year, for the privilege of the Canadian side of the forces made ready to the hand of man by nature. This agreement run for a term of years, and has lately been renewed. By it these shrewd United States Yankee tradesmen have stifled the enterprise on the Canadian side, and will keep on developing on their own side until it will be too late for the creation of a successful rival on the side where the business of the government is done under the signet of V. R. (Victoria Regina.) This condition of things seems to be understood by the workmen at the Falls, Ontario, and was told to us by two of them, moving in quite different fields of labor. If true, it is particularly striking, and must have resulted from the suspicion of the Provincial Parliament, that the Yankees could not harness Niagara Falls, and hence might as well be made to pay a money penalty for their folly in conceiving that they could. But, the harnessing has been done, and the agreement stands.

A tunnel seven thousand feet long has been cut through the rocky foundations on which Niagara Falls, New York, stands, some two hundred feet below the surface, and now almost unlimited power is at the disposal of these syndicate men. It is said that the Niagara Falls Park Commission has either obtained an injunction restraining these men from again drawing on the resources of the lake, upon the plea that it is taking from the flow of water over the falls, and thus lessening their beauty and attractiveness, and damaging the business of sight-seeing; or if they have not yet succeeded in getting such injunction they are moving for it. The idea seems to be that if these men are left to go on, it would result in such repeated tapping of the river above the falls that it would reduce the streams flowing over the rocky cliffs forming the falls, until they would be merely babbling brooks, and portions of the rocks at the falls be left bare. To one looking on this would seem to be an impossibility; but if there are seven millions cubic feet of water plunging over the concealed rocks of the Horse Shoe falls every minute; if seven syndicate tunnels should deflect a million feet each from such flow, where would the water be that should make the falls? This is the supposed reasoning, whether good or bad. The water is not taken from the falls in passing over the ledges, nor after it has passed, as the first seems impossible to do; and the water in the river below the falls being some two hundred or more feet too low would be of no avail; so it is taken from the river above the falls, and so takes part of that which would help form the cataract, if left to flow in the original channels. Great is nature; great is science. But the latter seems to despoil nature of both beauty and grandeur, when reducing its forces to the humdrum uses of man. The lightning is an element of beauty and awful grandeur seen in the storm, but as seen in man's telephone, telegraphic, and railway systems, it is but a common scrub of a servant, grown familiar with which man grows careless and disrespectful. The Falls of Niagara as found by man, have been and are elevating, chastening, satisfying, and awe inspiring in their rude simplicity and grandeur; but seen surrounded by the money getting environments devised of man, and harnessed to serve man, like Sampson at the mill, it makes the man who is the lover of nature sick at heart, and disgusts him. Nature raises lavishly for man's sustenance in her wild and undisturbed conditions; but, put in the plow and the hoe, and nature's pleasanter moods pass; she grows stern, and remembers the fiat of her God, and thorns and thistles, weeds and briars follow and man eats his bread "in the sweat of his face."

Man sold the waters of Jordan (?) in the streets of Chicago, during the World's Fair, in 1893; and boxes and trinkets carved from the olive trees of the Mount of Olives are hawked about the streets of nearly every city by swarthy sons of the desert; and it may be that in time children may play in the crevices of the caverns hewn in the rocks by the ages of Niagara's toil, whence the waters by which the carving was done are elsewhere moving in channels dug by human hands, turning the wheels and belts of busy machines doing work for the uses of man. Shades of the rainbows rising with the mists of the Horseshoe and the American Falls, can it ever be!

One noticeable feature of the meetings we have been holding in the Dominion is worth recording. There has been from the first most respectful attention. Those coming into the meeting houses, or halls, come in quietly, sit down quietly, are quiet and still in their seats while the service lasts; and only on one or two occasions has there been any leaving until the benediction was said. The contrast with some of our American audiences in this regard is very striking and very gratifying indeed. Whence comes this respect for an adverse faith?

There is another thing observable in the conduct of municipal affairs under the rule of good Queen Victoria, in the Province of Ontario. There is a recognition of personal rights, but a stringent enforcement of law. Punishment for breach of the law is much more certain to follow the lawbreaker here than in the United States. Respect for the law is demanded and enforced. It seems that the motto, "Every man for himself and the Devil take the hindmost," does not prevail so much over here as in the land of the Republic. Whether it be fair to contrast the forms of government in this way, it is just to give the impressions that casual acquaintance makes on the visitor. And while the sensation of being in a land where one is not altogether certain whether he is on his own ground or trespassing on another's rights rests upon him, as he moves to and fro under the knowledge that he is a foreigner, may haunt the citizen of the great Republic, he ought to be fair-minded enough to give the credit due to the institutions whence the elements of the Republic came; the honest Briton's love of fair play.

There are many interesting things at Niagara Falls. Near by, within the classic domain of Drummondville, lies Lundy's Lane, on and across which one of the battles of 1812-14 was fought. A spot where on March 25, 1814, a fight between the French and English and the American forces took place, in which Captain Hull, on the part of the Americans, with others fell. And where the then Lieutenant, afterwards General W. Scott, distinguished himself, as per legendary teaching. Captain Hull lies in a grave separate and alone, out of the symmetry of the general plan of the cemetery, almost in the pathway, with a stone at the head stating who lies there, and when he fell; being buried on the spot where he was found after the battle. Across the lane there now stands a large church; and it is said to have been built on the spot where the British soldiery built a funeral pyre of alternate layers of Continental Rebel soldiers and fence rails, and burnt them.

This spot was the first historic ground shown us by Bro. R. C. Evans, who said, "This is the place where we Britons whipped you Yankees. Thought maybe you would like to see it."

We acknowledged the shot, and promised him that if he would but come over some day, we would take him to similar places where the same British hosts did a similar business of whipping the Yankees, Bunker Hill, Saratoga, Yorktown, and the like.

This retort tickled Elder Evans, and all was serene again. However, it moved us both to silence to stand on the ground where eighty-three years ago, long before either of us was in existence, men had fought with deadly intent to kill, and shed each other's blood for the maintenance of principles dear to either contending hosts, differ as they might; and where after the battle was fought, kind hearts and tender hands entombed friend and foe alike, commemorating the places where they fell. And we, two, out of a handful, contending on spiritual fields for the imperishable fame of the Great Exponent of Truth divine, stood where men had fought for human rights as they understood them, alone and could we fail to feel how immeasurably greater the interests at stake, how infinitely grander the final result must be. Why then should we hesitate, or why be careless in our allegiance to the Master of Life?

Bro. R. C. Evans is a pleasant and noble companion to travel with. Quick of comprehension; he both sees and feels the peculiarities of the situations as they change in this kaleidoscopic life men lead; and sympathizing with the needy, temporal or spiritual, is ready with word or means to relieve. Unlike Niagara he is small in stature; but, like Niagara, he "grows upon one" through acquaintance. May his usefulness never grow less, but his shadow increase as the years come and go.

CONVERSION.—NO. 3.

IN a former article we canvassed the question of conversion, as to its meaning. We herein touch upon our responsibility in relation to the subject—our obligation as professors thereunder.

The apostle to the Gentiles, when writing to the Colossians, said that in preaching Christ he was committed to the work of "warning every man and teaching every man" that he might "present every man perfect in Christ." He also exhorted the believers to present their bodies a living sacrifice unto God, and declared this to be their reasonable service.

The thought that we are "coworkers with God" suggests that we have the same objects in view and are operating along the same lines with God. This admitted, it is easy to conclude that all our faith and works are pledged in concert with the apostle's aim—to "present every man perfect in Christ," including ourselves, for such was the order of the work of God. Jesus said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." Again, "The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do; for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise." This establishes the oneness of operations with God and Christ, so that when we read the sermon on the mount, we learn the lines, along which they wrought and which they intended should be honored by our observance. They declare the same object as did Paul; viz., that we should be "perfect, even as our Father which is in heaven is perfect." The process of perfecting is plainly set forth in the sermon, and the necessity for it all is announced in the concluding words, wherein is shown the final loss that must accrue to all who "hear these sayings of mine and do them not."

Extremes follow one another naturally in this world. In their eagerness to supplant or uproot an obnoxious principle, practice, or growth, men have often blindly destroyed the good with the bad. Protestantism, so-called, has not only denounced the claimed authority of Romish popes and priests, but has gone to the extreme of asserting that priesthood by divine conferment is absolutely unnecessary. In its intemperate zeal to destroy the priest-enriching practice of saying masses and praying for the deliverance of departed friends from purgatorial fires, it has denounced the doctrine of future probation entire, and has made death the end of human opportunity to find grace unto salvation. In its determination to stamp out the superstitious mummery of human ceremonies, it has abolished God's ordinances as well in some instances; and in its hatred for the Popish practice of granting absolution from sin to confessing penitents, it has ruthlessly swept out of its religion the necessity for priestly intervention at all, and is publicly proclaiming remission of sins without either priest or ordinance as necessary factors.

From the one extreme of blind submission to priests and bishops, and the wearying observance of the details of a despotic ritualism, men have rushed to the other extreme of religious anarchy. The stupid assumption that to man belongs the right to formulate a religion for himself and to tincture it with just as much of Bible as suits him, is confronting us everywhere, and the stupendous folly is being committed of persuading millions of people to believe that God and Christ will "reconcile" themselves to whatever is done in this line, if their names are only printed or engraved on the title page of the published medley. Wild religious fervor here, and æsthetical prudishness there, are our daily greetings. Emotionalism, born of magnetic presence and touching appeal, answers as satisfactory experience on the one hand, and cold intellectual calculation, with no heart references, on the other. Modifications and variations abound to suit the rise or fall of the popular religious barometer. Jesus is a flexible commodity, adaptable to any formulation of wild, weird, or winsome fancy, if he is really to be seen in all that peddles his name. Truly it is astounding.

But, returning to the diverging point, let us ask: "Has the tendency to extremes colored our work in any degree? In our anxiety to exhibit the striking contrast between the doctrine of Christ and the theories of men, do we not give prominence to baptism, the laying on of hands, the resurrection, eternal judgment, and present revelation, to the neglect of themes of temperance, meekness, truthfulness, honesty, industry, and charity. Do not the missionaries too often leave the latter principles to be taught by local authorities, if there are any, and do not the local authorities too often depend upon the traveling brethren to do the educating along these lines? If but three or four sermons are preached in a locality, what proportion, as a rule, of the time is devoted to the former and what to the latter features of the faith? In other words, do we teach conversion to Christ, in the sense set forth in our former article as persistently as we should?

These questions are not propounded in a spirit of fault finding, or as a reflection upon any man's work. They are simply in keeping with the counsel of the Spirit to "come up higher," which can only be honored by self-examination. The church is growing, numerically, at a very gratifying pace, and if care be taken to impress men and women, before admitting them into it, with the fact that heart cleansing and character forming are paramount among the essentials, it will not only enhance the estimate of our work in those already well up the ladder of morality and Christian virtue, but will indicate to those whom we find on lower ground, that baptism and the laying on of hands are not the Alpha and Omega of obedience. It will help them to start right and stimulate them to continue the great work of moral progress from the first step that leads them into our fellowship.

We know a very few members who are quite prolific and boisterous in argument in behalf of the church doctrine; but whose silence in some places would bless the church more than their speech. Their claim for the divinity of their religion is not supported in them anywhere except on their lips, and even those lips are defiled to a degree. Morally they stand just where the church found them. If, as a result of proper education and the use of helps found within the body, they had allowed the saving processes to operate within them they would now be exhibiting a practical guarantee of what they proclaim. It is better that a man's life shall advertise his conversion than that the world should only have his word for it.

Occasionally we hear from a missionary abroad that he can make but little impression in certain localities because a few members there have lived so far below the gospel standard that their neighbors, attributing their condition to their belief, are resolved to give no audience to such a doctrine. This is the exception, but is grievous, nevertheless.

In the gospel, faith and repentance precede admission into the church. They are the legitimate approaches to the baptismal door, and we should be found jealous guardians of the entrance, being as anxious to point out those approaches and require applicants to come thereby as we are to swing the door. Failing in this we are at least partially responsible for the reproach suffered by the church through their admission, should they prove to be vile. We should preach the need of conversion by a change of heart, as well as conversion by a process of initiation into the organization.

The fact that other churches teach faith and repentance, together with moral development, should not make us relax our efforts in that line. Our commission is to preach the whole gospel and not merely those features of it which others discard. The work of absolute conversion to Christ which is to be perfected within the church, should be begun before entry. While we do not believe in keeping applicants in a kind of vestibule probation for several months before receiving them into full membership, we do require, as did John the Baptist, that they shall "bring forth fruits meet for repentance" before baptizing them. Ignoring this we do not, in fact, preach the gospel.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.

THE brethren of the Southern California district show a commendable zeal in their efforts to make plain distinctions in the interests of truth and for the information of the general public, as witness the advertisement given below, taken from a leading Los Angeles journal. Such items are sermons in themselves:—

The general district conference of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints for Southern California will assemble in Panorama hall, 320½ South Main Street, this city, Friday morning, October 15, and continue over Sunday, the 17th. Friends and strangers will be welcomed. Immediately following, beginning on Monday evening, the 18th, there will be a course of lectures delivered at the same place, by elders of the above-named church. The subject matter of said lectures will be to show by numerous indisputable evidences that the Mormon Church of Utah has no legal right to the name of Latter Day Saints, but are simply apostates from the Latter Day Saints' Church. The lectures will necessarily be of a sensational character, as the evidences used by the speakers will be mostly extracts from the various publications of the Utah Mormon Church, showing very conclusively that the teachings of Brigham Young and the chief elders connected with him were both idolatrous and adulterous. The Reorganized Church not only invite, but ask the people of the city to come and hear the lectures, not excepting, but especially inviting the missionaries of the Utah Mormon Church, who are quartered in this city, and will let them use our hall to review, if they wish to do so. More, we hereby publicly challenge them to an open discussion of the above statements.

R. R. DANA.

In behalf of Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 14, 1897.

THE FIRST; WHO NEXT?

BRO. EARL D. BAILEY, of Standley, Indian Territory, is the first one to secure a copy of our brand new edition of the Self-Pronouncing premium Bible; having secured and forwarded the Herald Office fifteen dollars for ten new subscribers to the Herald at $1.50 each.

Who will be the next? Try the canvass and get a brand new up-to-date Bible.

THE SAINTS' HOME.

THE Lamoni brethren, including some of the Herald Office force, have been devoting several days to the work of grading about the buildings and grounds of the Saints' Home. The work is not yet completed, but what has been done has very greatly improved the condition and appearance both of the building and grounds. The brethren and friends who so labored deserve credit and honorable mention. They toiled zealously and in a good cause. The work will be continued and completed at an early date.

The Home is plastered and hard finished on the walls, the basement floors cemented, in keeping with the general excellence and substantial character of the structure. Work on the "finishing" will be continued until the building is completed and ready for occupancy. It will be heated by a hot water plant, which will shortly be placed in position on the lower floor.

A large pond has been provided for watering the stock of the "Home farm." Good barns and other out-buildings have also been erected.

A LARGE, well-printed, and attractive looking handbill from Selkirk, Ontario, announces the labors of Brn. Evans and Gregory in that city. We publish it because it shows how well the brethren are trying to let the people know of the faith and to get them interested in it. May such good work go on. It is our work to reach the people, to prevail against obstacles, and to get the faith before them. We can do it, too, if we go at it aright and keep at it. It requires tact, wisdom, and energy; but all these are at our disposal and much more, if disposed to use them. We are to expect difficulties; we are also promised help to surmount them:—

The Latter Day Saints of Selkirk will begin their series of autumn meetings in Derby's hall on Sunday, October 31, at the following hours: 10:30 a. m., 2:30 and 7:30 p. m.

Elders R. C. Evans, of London, and Fred Gregory, of St. Mary's, will be the principal speakers.

A cordial invitation is extended to all lovers of the truth. Bring your Bibles and note books. An opportunity will be given at each meeting, for anyone taking exception to the things taught, to address the people and show the error.

We court investigation, and would suggest to those who have been so industrious in opposing our claims in the past, that this will be an excellent opportunity to expose us if there be anything to expose.

Another interesting feature of the meetings will be the answering of questions, which may be placed by anybody in the question box, or sent through the postoffice, addressed to M. F. Derby, branch president.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. D. L. HARRIS, Los Angeles, California, October 21:—

I am here, looking after the work, trying to tell the people the difference between ourselves and the Utah people and will probably remain this week. Meetings not as well attended as would like, but saints say it is the best interest ever had here. But the Utah elders steer clear of us. Their conference closed on Monday night with a grand ball; ours closed Sunday night with the preaching of the word of God. We had one of the most peaceful conferences ever held in this district. The good Spirit was here in its comforting influence. May it continue.

Bro. James McKiernan, Pleasant Grove, Utah, October 22:—

Bro. Hansen and I have been here holding meetings at Provo for three weeks; two weeks of the time with tent, with fair interest, considering the bad weather; then it grew so cold at nights we had to close tent work and continue at Bro. S. A. Waunberg's residence. I am in fair health, as also Bro. Hansen.

Bro. F. T. Baker, Lebeck, Missouri, October 30:—

I wish to ask Bro. J. F. Mintun to hunt up one O. S. Gossard, in Antelope County, Nebraska; post office Oakdale. If Bro. Mintun can't make it convenient, will some other elder take the trouble to do so and present the gospel to him? Whoever it is that goes to him with the gospel message, tell him that his old friend Baker requested it. I would like, if it is not asking too much, that I might receive a letter from the one visiting him, telling of the results.

Bro. T. C. Kelley, Higdon, Alabama, October 16:—

I am at last out of quarantine and rejoicing in the liberty and freedom to move out in the endeavor to get the work before the people. I shall try to make up lost time. This is a mountain region and the people are backward in taking hold of the work. Have three worthy members here however, baptized some time ago.

Bro. F. C. Warnky, Argentine, Kansas, late date:—

I am again actively engaged in the ministry and God is blessing my efforts; baptized two last week. Remember me in your prayer.

Bro. C. J. Hunt, Dow City, Iowa, November 1:—

Closed a two-weeks' meeting here last evening. Four baptized, all young people, belonging to families of the saints. Elder J. M. Baker is in charge of the branch and is an earnest worker. I go to a place near Dedham next.

Bro. J. J. Cornish, Reed City, Michigan, November 2:—

Our conference is over; we had a grand good one, Brn. Briggs, Durand, and J. A. Grant outside of the district were with us. Bro. G. D. Washburn baptized six persons, and the large gathering of saints enjoyed themselves much; also some outsiders felt glad to see and hear, some of whom testified and declared their belief in the faith, etc. Those who attended were well cared for, and all went home rejoicing.

Bro. R. Etzenhouser, Toledo, Ohio, November 5:—

Still surviving after four months in Detroit, where my lot was cast, and where sunshine predominates over the shadows with those who have sufficient faith in God, as it always has and will. I turn my face for new fields in Pennsylvania. Of Detroit experiences more later. My address is again, "In care of Box 28, Cleveland, Ohio."

Bro. J. M. Baggerly, Fremont, Indiana, late date:—

I am preaching here. We had an excellent conference; large attendance of Saints and friends. All enjoyed themselves. The prayer meetings were especially grand and impressive; great good was done.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. T. C. KELLEY, in charge of the Southeastern mission, reports conditions and progress for the quarter ending September 30. We summarize such features as are of interest to the HERALD readers, as follows: The outlook is not flattering in the mission as a whole, but of some portions there is no need to complain, as the work seems to be moving along as well as could be expected. There has been a "boom" of baptisms in Tennessee and Kentucky, and quite a good showing in Florida; also a few from South Mississippi. Had it not been for the yellow fever scare and quarantine regulations, a better report would have been made from Alabama and Mississippi. Taken as a whole the report is as near satisfactory as any he has been permitted to make, if not more so. The total number of baptisms by mission and local forces is from ninety to one hundred; reports not all in. Considerable labor had been done in entirely new fields. Missionaries had been active in prosecuting the work.

Mrs. Philander Hinkley, of Cedar Grove, Carroll County, Tennessee, requests information, to secure a pension, concerning the death of her husband's first wife, "Mrs. Philander Hinkley," which occurred near Mooresville, Caldwell County, Missouri, March 15, 1878, she thinks.

Bro. H. C. Bronson stopped off at Lamoni from the 4th to the 6th, enroute from Michigan and Ohio to St. Joseph, his former home. He labored at Hiteman, Iowa, about one week, while visiting his daughter, and baptized two. He is enjoying good health and is in fine spirits. Expects to return to his former field of labor.

President A. H. Smith has again been quite ill during the past week or ten days. We learn as we go to press that he is decidedly better.

Bro. L. F. Daniel, formerly of Whitestown, Indiana, has removed to No. 11,925 Union Avenue, West Pullman, Illinois. He reports the work at Pullman moving nicely; the saints meeting twice a week for services.

The Baptists will meet in their fifteenth annual session in Chicago, November 16-18. The principal questions to be discussed are: "Is baptism a prerequisite to the Lord's supper?" "Are the teachings of the apostles of equal authority with those of Christ?" "What limitations should denominational belief impose upon religious teachers, whether ministers or professors?" "What is the duty of our government toward the oppressed of other nations in the suppression of wrongs and the encouragement of liberty." Some of the questions to be discussed "will undoubtedly provoke vigorous controversy."

The summary of the season's football calamities thus far is as follows: Killed, 2; probably fatally injured, 3; severely injured, 88. No record of those slightly injured. "This is the intellectual, mind-improving game which its advocates claim is characterized by 'the absence of brutality and ungentlemanly conduct.' This is the game which is said to have been freed from all its objectionable features by prominent college authorities. Compared with it pugilism is the mildest sort of pastime," etc. The foregoing is from a late Chicago Tribune editorial. A bill is now pending in the Georgia legislature which provides that football be prohibited in colleges and universities in the State.

The Ameer of Afghanistan has assured the English viceroy of India that he will aid the suppression of the Indian insurrection by preventing the insurgent tribes from taking refuge in his territory. British troops have occupied in the "Maidan Valley" which the Afridis boasted no invader could penetrate.

A project is reported by which Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, and other Indians in Oklahoma are moving to secure the admission of a part of Oklahoma as an Indian State in the Union. It contemplates the union of five tribes, who, it is stated, are discussing the movement and are favorable to it. While such a step would probably fail to obtain indorsement necessary to its success, the action shows the increasing development of the Indian tribes.

The Bechuanaland Railroad, from Cape Town to Buluwayo, has been completed and will be opened in November. This is part of a system of railway by which it is proposed to bisect the continent of Africa from the Mediterranean to its southern extremity. Some idea of the progress being made in Africa may be obtained by noting the statement that in 1896 Buluwayo was the home of Lobengula, a powerful African chief. Other lines of railway are in operation in Belgian, Dutch, and other territory. Railroad building is being pushed rapidly forward.

The London Times has a dispatch from Corea in effect that the Russian minister has forced the Corean government to dismiss its English financial adviser and chief of customs to put a Russian in his place.

A political crisis has arisen in Peru. The cabinet has resigned and a new ministry is being formed.

The London Mail states that Austria is seeking the consent of Italy to her annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Captain General Blanco has offered clemency to all who submit to the authority of Spain in Cuba. He also promises to push the war relentlessly. Spain is unable to obtain war ships in Great Britain without making cash payments. The Spanish cabinet is considering the impeachment of General Weyler because of his offensive utterances against the government. It is said that owing to irritation caused by ex-United States Minister Taylor's late article in the North American Review, the Spanish cabinet has decided to reply to the United States Minister's acknowledgment of receipt of the Spanish note in reply to representations of the United States on the subject of Cuba, declaring in guarded terms that in reference to granting autonomy to Cuba Spain will do what she deems fit. The Minister of Colonies will gazette decrees establishing the extension of suffrage in Cuba and Puerto Rico, assimilating the rights of the inhabitants of the colonies and the mother country and determining the mode of carrying out autonomy. General Blanco is giving attention to the starving concentrados. He will give the pacificos every facility to return to their respective districts. The owners of estates will be induced to again start cultivation. Both Cuban and Spanish successes are reported. Cuban leaders repeat their determination not to accept autonomy.

Sir Julian Pauncefote and Secretary Sherman are to confer with a view to reopening discussion upon the subject of a treaty of arbitration between America and Great Britain. The President of the United States and the British Premier are both reported as in favor of reopening the question with a view to concluding such treaty with the development of public opinion on the subject. A prominent representative of British trades union,—a former member of Parliament,—also a prominent English clergyman, will visit the United States for the purpose of creating greater interest in the question.

Yellow fever continues with but slight abatement at New Orleans, notwithstanding prevailing cooler weather.

A dispatch reports Bulgarian threats of independence unless demands upon Turkey are complied with.

National feuds and conflicts continue between German and Czech students arising out of the question of union between Austria and Hungary. Great disorder continues in the sessions of the Reichsrath between rival factions. Two unruly members have been expelled.

Natives in the Congo district defeated a detachment of the French expeditionary force. French troops have evacuated Saki, to which point a force of British troops had been sent, on the appearance of the latter. European dispatches predict trouble between England and France over disputed African territory.

Professor Elmer Gates, a Washington scientist, claims to have made an extraordinary invention—the "telemicroscope," by which, assisted by "photomicrography," "the power of the microscope has been so increased that it extends as far beyond the scope of the instrument at present as the microscope now exceeds the visual power of the eye." Briefly stated the inventor claims that by the use of some telescopes in connection with his invention, "the moon would be brought within a distance of from twenty to fifty miles. If the same microscopic attachment be applied to a large telescope we may expect to see objects about thirty feet wide," etc.

General Blanco has instructed the Spanish army to treat prisoners of war and noncombatants with clemency. The Spanish government has decided to try General Weyler by court-martial for his utterances against its present policy. Hannis Taylor, ex-United States Minister, predicts an early ending of the war, and victory for the Cubans. Spanish officers in revolt in the Philippine Islands, where discontent is spreading, have been warned by the government that they may be executed.

From late report of Commissioner of Pensions for the year: 50,101 new pensioners added; 3,971 dropped pensioners restored; losses by death and other causes 41,122; whole number on rolls June 30, 1897, 976,014; net gain in year 5,336. Seven widows and nine daughters of Revolutionary soldiers still on the rolls. Total amount disbursed, $139,949,717.35. The report recommends publication of complete list of names of all pensioners, and the passage of a law that no pension be granted to the widow of a soldier that remarries.

Austria's internal troubles threaten serious disorders, if not the dismemberment of the empire. The Hungarian parliament has ratified the Austro-Hungarian union for another year. This the Germans in Moravia and Bohemia conditionally refuse to accede to; the Bohemians and Moravians are now practically defiant; any concessions to them would rouse the Poles and Czechs to the verge of revolution. Martial law may be necessary to quell disorders and preserve peace. The throne is imperiled; Austro-Hungary seems to be on the verge of dissolution.

Bro. G. H. Hilliard, of the Bishopric, came to Lamoni from Independence, on the 6th inst., to remain for a time in the interest of church business.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"How I admire the man who speaks his mind,
And panders to no party, scheme, or sect;
Who unto all is generous and kind,
Yet fraud and error ever doth reject.
Who holds no false, deceptive views of life,
Nor preaches what in practice he forgets;
Who would not wage a war of petty strife,
Nor yet express unmeaning, vain regrets;
Who is too proud to act a servile part,
Or lend himself a tool in others' hands;
Who fears no foe nor deep designing art,
But by himself alone undaunted stands;
Who shuns deceit as he would pestilence,
And thrives and triumphs by his own good sense."

SELECT READING FOR DECEMBER MEETINGS OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

[WE wish most earnestly that we had space to quote and you had time to read the entire chapter on Occupations. But we have not, and must content ourself with giving you instances of the beauty of labor. The one taken from high life the other from lowly, but both beautiful and sublime in the lesson they teach.]

What can children do? All children should be trained in the use of common tools—hammer, nails, and saw; needles, scissors, etc., boys and girls alike. Scarcely a week passes in the household in which it would not be a great convenience for a woman to be able to "hit the nail on the head" literally, as well as metaphorically; to tighten or loosen a screw, or to saw a board. It takes but little time to learn to do these things properly, for there is a right and a wrong way of doing such simple things. How much strength women, myself among the number, have wasted opening fruit cans, trying to unscrew the lid, first one way and then the other, before we learn that all screws turn one way from right to left—and if we would unscrew them we must turn them from left to right. Modern housekeeping involves so much machinery—washing machines, sewing machines, and patent everything, even to potato mashers, that a lady needs to be quite a machinist to keep them in order.

Men often find it very convenient to be able to sew on a button, to mend a torn garment, and to handle scissors dextrously. They laugh at women's awkwardness in driving a nail; this is only because they have never seen themselves as others see them threading a needle. Often, too, they would find it something more than a convenience to be able to prepare a plain, palatable meal, or perform well other household tasks. So let the boys learn these things by helping mother. They will learn another valuable lesson at the same time, that of not despising or undervaluing woman's work, a lesson which a score of years hence will make their wives happier and better. Little boys and girls can both be taught to knit and sew, finding pleasant occupation therein for rainy days and evenings which otherwise would hang heavily upon their hands. Supply them with bright, pretty material to work upon, and encourage them in weaving into their work as many bright fancies as their imagination can devise. . . .

The result of Queen Victoria's sensible training of her daughters is beautifully shown in the Princess Alice, whose premature death not only England, but all Christendom mourned. Of her when a young girl, Queen Victoria writes: "Alice is very good, sensible, amiable, and a real comfort to me. I shall not let her marry as long as I can reasonably delay her doing so." But she could not delay forever the unwelcome event, and Alice, like her mother, made a love match, marrying Prince Louis of Hesse, and removed at once to her husband's German home. Here she found full scope for all her executive ability, and the exercise of the industrious habits learned in her royal home. No work was too menial for her to do if by it she could benefit another. Accompanied by her maid she personally sought out cases of suffering and relieved them with her own hand. Writing to her mother of one such visit, she says: "I sent Christana down with the children, then, with the husband's aid, cooked something for his sick wife, arranged her bed, took the baby and bathed its eyes—they were so bad, poor little thing—and did odds and ends for her. I went twice." And this is told incidentally, as though cooking for poor, sick women, washing their babies, and doing "odds and ends" for them, was the natural work for royal hands. During the Austro-Prussian war of 1866, she worked far beyond her strength in the hospitals, thanking God "for good nerves," and "putting all her trust in one Friend who in time of need never forsakes us."

The Franco-German war of 1870 brought her sad, busy times; she constantly visited the hospitals, attended personally to sending nurses and supplies to the front, and had several wounded in her own house to whom she gave devoted attention. When chided with working too hard for others she answered, "Life is meant for work, not for pleasure." She seemed to find her highest pleasure in service for others; her life was a beautiful realization of the old Saxon motto, "Ich dien" (I serve). As a writer in the Woman's Magazine says of her: "In the best and highest sense was Alice of Hesse a lady,—'a loaf giver.' Of her might it truly be said, 'She stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy.' When she had nothing else to give she gave love; as in one of her hospital visits she notes a severe operation on a soldier, and adds, 'I held his hand.'"

If every home in Christendom showed the same training to industry and loving service for others seen in Windsor Castle, the millennium would soon come. . . .

We cannot leave the beautiful Crescent City without telling you the story of Margaret, to whom New Orleans has erected a statue in one of her parks. She was a poor orphan child, brought up by the Sisters of Charity. Faithful in all things from her childhood up, whatever work came to her hand she did it thoroughly and well. As she grew to womanhood she bought some cows, and for years her familiar form was seen each day in the quaint little milk cart peculiar to that city, going from door to door selling the milk, and never lacking for customers, as all knew that the milk in her cans was always pure and good. Later, a bakery was added to her possessions. She made good bread and sold it. Money flowed in upon her, but it made no change in her simple mode of life. She used it all to feed the hungry and to care for the orphan children. Always doing the duty that lay next to her, never dreaming that fame waited on the doing, this humble, simple-minded woman not only gained the encomium of her Lord, but received the honor of being the first woman in the world to whom a monument in a public park was erected. It is to the honor of mankind, the glory of womanhood, that this first monument was erected not to some idle queen, some brilliant woman of exceptional gifts, but to one of the common folk, doing the common work of life, but doing it in a spirit which glorified all service and won respectful homage for the homely arts of life. When she died the dignitaries of the city and of the State followed her coffin as mourners. She is enthroned in the hearts of the people, who erected this monument to her, and with a fine sense of propriety made it to perpetuate the simple service of her daily life. It is of beautiful white marble. In it she sits in the marble semblance of a splint-bottom chair such as she always rested in after her day's work. She wears no Greek or Roman drapery, but the humble garb so familiar to all. Her arm is around a little child, whose upturned face, as it looks into her own beaming with love, expresses the loving veneration that all children felt for her. Around the statue's base bloom the flowers she loved, and just back of it towers the monument dearer to her than any marble memorial could ever be—the orphan asylum which she founded and loved while living and provided for in dying, so that it shall ever stand a memorial of her and of her love for children.—Childhood: Its Care and Culture.

TEACHERS AS FACTORS IN SUSTAINING SUCCESSFUL SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

BY WILL S. PENDER.

MY subject will include a consideration of the importance and work of teachers of all grades—the entire corps of teachers in the school.

THE ATTENDANCE

of the children and people in the neighborhood where the school is conducted, and in the vicinity of it, is a necessity in sustaining successful Sunday school work. Whether a satisfactory attendance shall be maintained in the school depends materially upon the interest each teacher has in his own class and its work, and the ability he has, and the methods he employs to incite and sustain a similar interest in each member of his class. In secular and Sunday schools alike, a general and continued

LOSS IN ATTENDANCE

may usually, if not invariably, be traced to one underlying, contributing cause, viz., a loss of interest on the part of the pupils in the work being done in the school. So long as a lively interest is sustained by the students, in the work of each class, so long will the attendance be sustained by such class. So soon as interest in the work of the class begins to subside, you may expect the attendance to begin to dwindle away. Let all interest in class work be lost, and the probabilities are that the class itself, or a large part of it, will be lost to the school. The interest the students have in the work of the school is the that impels them to be in attendance. All that we do in life which requires any effort, we are prompted to do by some incentive; the greater the incentive the stronger effort we make to accomplish a purpose sought; the less the incentive is, the weaker the effort will be which it induces.

Assuming that interest in class work may be made the chief incentive to attend the school, and it follows that the attendance of each class, and hence of the entire school, will be in general terms, in proportion to the interest maintained in such class work. Mathematically arranged in the form of the terms would be: 1. Great interest in class work; a full attendance. 2. Little interest in class work; small attendance. 3. No interest in work of class; no attendance. The first and last of these propositions, the two extremes, would be modified by actual experience. Let the interest in the work be ever so great and circumstances would arise of an insurmountable kind, which would prevent some, occasionally, from attending. In such an instance, however, no small hindrance or trivial matter would keep pupils away from this class and school. Even then their return could be depended upon as soon as the barrier was removed. On the other hand, let the interest be practically lost in class work and some might still attend the school, thinking thus to harmlessly pass a part of Lord's day. In such case the most trivial matter would keep them away from the school.

Acting upon the hypothesis that keeping up the attendance of the school depends largely upon keeping up an interest in class work, we may well inquire how teachers may sustain such interest. What you yourself do not possess you cannot bestow upon another. What you do not have, you cannot give. From the above axiom we deduce two necessary of every successful teacher. First, He only who has a real interest in each member of his class—in the line of study they are engaged in and in the progress each is making—can incite interest in class work, or even sustain the interest another may have created. A loving regard for every pupil is the best certificate of recommendation a teacher can present to his class. No matter how many and commendable other qualifications he may possess, without an intuitive love for those who look to him for instruction, his work will be routine, dull, and lifeless. The possession of this inborn and life-giving characteristic, so refreshing to us all, will not only condone for the lack of many other needed qualifications, but it will stimulate its possessor to thought, study, and prayer, until, lo! he is clothed upon with every necessary qualification. From the axiom already quoted: "What one himself does not possess he cannot bestow upon another," we infer, first, that he who would incite interest must himself possess it; Second, he who would impart information must himself first secure it.

Second, It is, therefore, essential that a teacher should be very familiar with what he undertakes to teach. He should be so thoroughly acquainted with the subject matter of the lesson as to be able to conduct the recitation without access to text book of any kind. A teacher ought never to attempt to conduct a recitation without PREVIOUS PREPARATION.

Preparation before attempting to recite is equally, but no more imperatively demanded of the pupils. In this respect, the inspiration of the example of the teacher will go a long way, and with many students will be all sufficient to lead him to properly prepare for recitation. To insure a careful preparation of the lesson by all, questions should be directed to every member of the class, at each recitation. This will make them all feel that their knowledge of the lesson will be tested. If they know nothing about it, the questions asked them will develop that fact. The humiliation of advertising their ignorance of the lesson will not likely be repeated. Hence, the teacher should be persistent in asking questions of the diffident, and those who make the least preparation of the lesson. Let him ask as though he expected an answer, too, and his expectations will not long be disappointed. Absolute con-confidence reposed will be amply rewarded. The practice of

to the class at large, and not directing them to any particular member of it, is very objectionable. A few informed and zealous pupils will answer all the questions. The diffident and uninformed will remain so. Nothing is required of them; nothing is received from them. The plan of

to the class, adopted by some teachers, is also subject to the same objections as the above. It does not give the pupils who have studied the lesson an opportunity to tell what they know, and hence will discourage similar preparation for future recitation. Nor does this plan develop the lack of information of those who have not studied it.

We briefly recapitulate thus: The attendance at the Sunday school will be in proportion to the attendance in the several classes. The attendance in the various classes will depend on the interest created and kept up in class work. To establish and maintain the desired interest the teacher himself must be brim full of interest in his work, and must prepare himself by a careful study of the lesson. He must adopt methods that will lead his class to thoroughly study the lesson before attempting to recite it. To aid in this he should impose individual responsibility upon every member of his class and at each recitation.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Oct. 21.

Editors Herald:—Conference for Southern California district assembled in this city the 15th and continued over Sunday. Quite a fair turnout of saints from the various branches attended, bringing with them a goodly degree of that Spirit which is always conducive to peace, joy, and happiness. Not a wry face, not a single contentious spirit was manifest to disturb or mar our peace. The entire sessions were marked by the presence of a spirit of union and brotherly love. Our young brother, Albert Carmichael, ably presided, assisted by Bro. D. L. Harris; the business matters were disposed of with a dispatch seldom if ever witnessed in this district; though before conference convened some feared that in the selection of district officers there might occur some unpleasantness; but the matter was made a subject of prayer by many, and some fasted and prayed for the presence of the good Spirit; and their prayers appeared to have been heard and answered, as the election of officers was accomplished without even a jar.

On Sunday, the 17th, the conference of the "polygamous theocracy" assembled in this city, using the day in preaching, and on the day following transacted their business, and at night had a kind of jubilee sociable, winding up on Tuesday night with a dance, in which I am told that the twenty or twenty-five missionaries present joined, and possibly did their best by trying to make lasting impressions upon the minds of the sisters present, favorable to their pet doctrine; so that if the advice of President Wilford Woodruff, at their late semiannual conference, "to unite in their politics" should succeed, they (the sisters) may be ready to become one of the helps toward enthroning these polygamous gods. Well (like the story of the boys and the frogs) it may create bright hopes in the minds of those who expect to be gods; but rather cold comfort to those women, who can only hope to become one of the dim stars in the crown of their liege lord, when he passes by the angels and the gods to create a world of his own, and people it by the same means as this world has been peopled, thereby continuing the sorrow and conception of woman. (See Gen. 3: 22, Inspired Translation.)

Well, Messrs. Editors, in harmony with the editorial found in Saints' Herald of September 29, some of the elders of the Reorganized Church have "buckled on their armor," and have been pressing our mountain cousins for an investigation of the issues between us and them. First, we tried to get them to exchange addresses of membership, that we might visit their members and they ours; but they refused to do so. Then we invited them to exchange pulpits or halls with us and each bring their membership to hear both sides; this they also declined to do. We also challenged them to discussion, which they of course declined. Then we determined to make an effort to secure some popular hall, and have Bro. D. L. Harris make as thorough an exposition of their pernicious teachings as possible to be made in three lectures, and by extensively advertising in the newspapers; but times being hard, hall rent and advertising expensive, we could not raise sufficient funds, but succeeded in collecting enough to advertise in two papers (a clipping of which I will inclose), and to pay for the printing of one thousand large handbills; also to rent a sufficient number of chairs for our own place of meeting to seat quite a large number of people. Thus we have done, and Bro. Harris has already delivered three lectures this week, in which he has hewn to the line, and will continue indefinitely. Congregations so far have been largely of our own people, possibly not more than ten to twenty-five outsiders present either night. People nowadays are too much engrossed in popular theocracies and delving for their daily bread to pay much attention to the all-important angel message; at the same time I believe that our efforts to get the message before them will stand as "a witness" against them in the day of judgment. However, some few are investigating and seem near the door of the kingdom. One, a Mr. Fisher, a German, who by the way is a fine Bible student, also well versed in ancient and modern history, has concluded that we have the truth, after hearing one sermon and two lectures, says he intends uniting with us; although until a few days past, opposed us, believing there was no difference between us and the Utah Mormons.

We were all made happy last evening by the announcement through a letter from Bro.

Luff, that Pres. Joseph Smith intends making an extended visit to this coast, and will remain in Southern California some three months. Come on, Bro. Joseph, and all will give you a hearty welcome and a warm reception. The same will be extended to our missionary in charge, Bro. Joseph Luff.

Hoping to see error and falsehood annihilated, and truth prevail o'er land and sea, I shall try to await that time as patiently as I can.

Yours in bonds,

R. R. DANA.

SPRING HILL, Nova Scotia, Sept. 29.

Editors Herald:—Soon after returning from Maine I was joined by F. M. Sheehy, and with others spent an enjoyable time at South Rawdon, where the district conference convened. While the conference was not largely attended, those who did attend, who were in the line of duty, spoke of it as being good, and of a cheering nature. When will we all learn that the path of duty is the way of happiness? Elder Sheehy did the preaching, which, if judging by the demand for more, was very acceptable. One fine feature of the conference was the concert of the Sunday school. It being in so many respects like other successful Sunday school concerts, we will not burden your pages with details, suffice it to say that the subject matter selected was of a high order, and in harmony with the subject—harvest; the chapel being finely decorated for the occasion. The school deserves credit for the effort made. And the bright, joyous faces, mingling with fruits and flowers, tend greatly to the enlivening of those who are called to pass through the darker and more stern realities of life.

The following Sunday we crossed Minas Basin in the Steamer Hiawatha, to Cumberland County, and after some ten days of preaching in different places and preparation, we found ourselves at Williamsdale, where the new chapel was about ready for dedication. Sunday the 26th, was a glorious day from sunrise to midnight, and many will long remember the event of the dedication with pleasure—nothing occurring to mar the success of the whole affair. The chapel was beautifully and profusely decorated with autumn leaves, evergreen vines, and flowers potted and cut. The appearance of the interior was pronounced very beautiful, of course on a modest scale. The morning service was in charge of the writer, Elder F. M. Sheehy preaching the dedicatory discourse, from the text—"I will build my church," which was pronounced simply grand by a crowded audience.

In the afternoon I gave a talk, in which occurred the synoptic history of the work in the community. Beginning at the visit of Sr. Mary Page of California, who first began to tell the story of the latter-day work among them, and who encouraged me, and paid my fare to visit and preach to them. Since that time they have been visited by Elders Sheehy, W. H. Kelley, M. T. Short, U. W. Greene, and George W. Robley, each doing a good work and establishing the faith. The report concerning the building shows that a small number, with a good deal of courage and backbone, but not much ready cash, began to build; others seeing the matter going steadily forward, dropped into line and generously aided. And without an entertainment, pin social, tea meeting, or anything of the kind, a chapel has been erected, and stands paid for, which reflects credit upon the community, and the saints and friends from a distance who generously contributed. Space forbids that I should mention all the names who did nobly; but perhaps I should notice one, Bro. Hazen Johnson, who is not a man of wealth, who gave the land and exceeded all others over fifty dollars. The best of it all was that no dissensions, cross voting, or anything of the kind occurred to cause a ripple or mar the good feeling of any. A collection was taken of about nine dollars for giving the building another coat of paint in a few months.

Elder Sheehy discoursed again in the evening. Two were baptized during the week, Bro. and Sr. James Ripley. Now may the members rise to the demands of the occasion, shake off the old habits that retard the work, and be diligent in keeping the law, and give the world a lesson in spiritual things equal to the one they have given in temporal affairs.

Since I began this letter it has been mislaid. Elder Sheehy has returned to Boston, and I am left alone again. I have been at North Alton, trying to awaken an interest among a good, intelligent people, who have been "preached to death" by about all denominations; each has become a law to himself, but does not try to live that. They give me a good hearing, however, every time I go there.

Yours hopefully,

H. J. DAVISON.

SCRANTON, Pa., Oct. 27.

Editors Herald.—I came to this place September 30, in company with Bro. Robley, who remained here ten or twelve days. A week later were joined by Bro. W. H. Kelley, who stayed a week preaching, visiting, and giving much needed advice and council. The work has been neglected here; only now and then some elder passing would drop in and preach a few discourses, and then away to more inviting places. Bro. A. N. Bishop having located here it is hoped the work may be permanently established; his excellent family are earnest workers, and will be a help to the work by their example and Christian devotion. All who are called saints do not deserve this good name; and those whom we expected the greatest help from are the ones who do the least towards the encouraging of the work and building up of the kingdom of God. I am satisfied there will have to be some pruning done before the work will move forward. At the same time wisdom should be used and the pruning done with care. Experience has taught me that to neglect pruning at the proper time destroys the vine, dwarfs the fruit, and lessens the harvest. Elder Kelley did not deem it wise to organize a branch while here, though the majority of the members desired it. However he appointed Bro. A. N. Bishop to take charge of the work, and left the writer to skirmish for awhile in the regions round about. I have no doubt that the chief Apostle in charge of this mission discerned that there should be some kind of sacrifice made on behalf of the work in this place, and not being in a position to make a big one, thought that a small one would be better than none. Well, I am here, and I shall make the best of the situation. The saints are very kind to me; they have procured a very commodious hall in the heart of the city, where we hold forth every Sabbath: Sunday school at two o'clock, prayer service at three, and preaching in the evening. While here I have preached in Providence, Dunmore, and Petersburg. Congregations are small, but attentive. Some interest is manifested, and with care some will be added to the church, when people see and can feel there is permanence to the work.

One hindrance to the progress of the work here as elsewhere is that cursed blight of polygamy and Utah Mormonism. The Utah missionaries are here in gangs of seven to twelve, and while they do no public preaching, they do a systematical canvass from house to house, and distribute tracts until every family is supplied with reading matter. These fellows are well supplied with tracts, and scatter them with a liberal hand. They are also supplied with money from home to sustain them. They take up no collections, and it is said they will not receive money from sinners to carry on the Lord's work, etc.

We have appointments for the week, and will endeavor by the help of the Lord and the saints to push the work out into new places. There are over three hundred thousand souls in this valley that are dying daily without the hope of eternal life, and how little we are doing to rescue the perishing ones! My soul grows sick at the thought. Times are hard and money is so scarce that it seems almost impossible to move forward and do anything to save poor humanity from the blighting curse of sin. If I had the five millions spent by the Christian Endeavor Society recently I am sure I could accomplish more good with it than they. But alas! the poor cannot and the rich will not. So the world moves on until the times come and God cuts short his work in righteousness, then who will be able to abide his coming and stand when he appeareth?

In gospel bonds,

ALMA KENT.

LEBECK, Mo., Oct. 31.

Editors Herald.—I write to request that Bro. W. S. Pender will call upon the family of J. M. Peet, Meredith, Kansas, if possible, and show them the "one blessed way."

A glorious time was enjoyed by the saints here to-day at the chapel. God's Spirit was present in power to the edifying and comforting of his children.

Would like to hear from Bro. Pender if he makes that part of Kansas a visit. Bro. C. R. Duncan has been there and some are interested. I am much interested in the Peet family hearing the gospel more fully, as Mrs. Peet is the only sister of my mother.

F. T. BAKER.

McGraw, Pa., Oct. 28.

Editors Herald.—After the reunion in Massachusetts Bro. R. Bullard and the writer set the district tent at West Dennis; held services a week, had fair attendance and some interest. One baptized by the writer; and we trust others were nearer to God because of our efforts. Bro. Bullard was compelled to return to Boston. After packing the tent away I came to Providence and preached several nights in the new chapel to small audiences, but some interest I think. Continued preaching in Rhode Island until September 23, then left for Philadelphia to attend conference. I was kindly received at the hospitable home of Bro. O. Christy, and enjoyed my brief stay in the city renewing old acquaintances. The conference was enjoyable and spiritual. In company with Bro. Alma Kent I went to Scranton; remained until October 14, preaching as opportunity offered. Bro. Kent assisted at Scranton, and is still there. Bro. W. H. Kelley preached some nine discourses in Scranton and at Providence, Pennsylvania, while we were there. Bro. Bishop is actively engaged in the work at Scranton, and is doing all he can. May the good Lord be with them all.

I found Bro. I. M. Smith at East Aurora. Bro. Philip Fisher is the only church member in town, but he is a good man and respected by the people. I went to East Elma with Bro. Smith and preached once there. Tuesday October 19 found Mr. Bert Manross waiting to take us to Fagundus; and by the way "Bert" has always stood right by us, and you always know where to find him. We received a kind welcome at Bro. G. Parker's. Began meetings Wednesday night and held over Sunday, preaching to small but increasing audiences. Monday night began preaching at McGraw, in the Union church, and have had good interest and good audiences thus far. The local preacher, Mr. Bedow, kindly announced our services and told the people to come out and hear. This same gentleman assisted me in some of my services last summer when I was here alone. Calls begin to come in for preaching and the prospects are encouraging.

GEO. W. ROBLEY.

FAIRBURY, Neb., Nov. 1.

Editors Herald.—I came here October 18 and began a series of meetings. Our attendance has been on the increase; the little church is well filled each evening. Two of our Utah friends came in one evening, Robinson and Jones. We had previously promised to read some of the Book of Mormon teachings. We read Jacob 2:6; we called the attention of those in attendance to the fact that there were others that had a misunderstanding of the Scriptures. Last evening we treated on the question of latter-day apostasy. Mr. Jones claims that Bro. F. A. Smith misrepresented one of his relatives last spring at Omaha, concerning baptism for the dead. I asked the gentleman why he did not correct the brother at the time, and informed him that Bro. F. A. would be the man to talk to on this matter, and not go around backbiting in this way. The city papers have agreed to publish an article for us, which will be the means of illuminating the minds of the people relative to our position.

The saints are doing all they can for the work. The Lord has been with us. The Baptists are strongly opposing us. One good Baptist sister said she liked Baptist pie, and that she would continue to eat it till she died; but I notice she has an ear for investigating. May the Lord bless her.

Our people have a very nice Sunday school here; the little church is well filled every Sunday; good prospects for future work. May the Lord add his blessing.

In gospel bonds,

H. W. BELVILLE.

SANTA ANA, Cal., Oct. 25.

Editors Herald:—Having seen in the Herald of October 13, that a sister in Lee County, Illinois, desires the prayers and fasting of the saints for her husband to quit drink, so I write this, for I don't know her address. I know by self experience that when I have that craving for liquor, if I go and take a drink of water it will stop the craving; and I believe will do so by every one that will try it. It may take a long time to cure without the help of God, but I feel sure that one can keep away from strong drink if they would only do so. It is so simple that perhaps no one will try it.

Hoping this will reach some poor unfortunate, I remain yours respectfully, in bonds,
X. Y. Z.

SPENCER, W. Va., Nov. 2.

Editors Herald:—The work is onward in West Virginia, and Satan rages. October 27, 28, and 29, Bro. J. L. Goodrich and I held meetings at Mount Nebo schoolhouse; on the 28th a mob attacked the house with rocks, almost breaking up the meeting. The attack was renewed next evening; and after meeting they attacked the saints, while on their way home, with eggs, rocks, and revolvers; but no one was hurt. I am here to obtain warrants for the offenders. Pray for us that God may give us favor with the people, and that the officers of the law may do their duty in preserving law and order, and protect citizens in their rights.

Your brother in bonds,

G. H. GODBEY.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Nov. 1.

Editors Herald:—I thank all saints in San Francisco and also wherever the Herald has carried my request, who have kindly remembered me before the throne of grace. My health has improved very rapidly in the past month, and I know that many faithful saints have been praying for me, for I was shown in a vision that in this particular case my own prayers were of no avail. I was administered to by Brn. Hilliard and Parkin. Bro. Parkin is our branch president, and I have never known him to shrink from duty's call.

Our branch is in a very healthy condition; no quarreling, backbiting, or contentions among the members that I am aware of. A few of our members are sick, and I do want every faithful one to pray for Sr. Case. She is in a most pitiful condition; has had a white swelling on her foot for, I think, eighteen years. The effects of it have spread until now she has four running sores between her hip and ankle. Her husband is at work in this city and would like to have her here with him, but she cannot be moved from Ukiah, where she and her four little children are staying with her mother. I wish all saints who feel impressed would fast and pray for her on the first Sunday in December. Pray in secret that if it is the Lord's will she may in some way be relieved from the terrible pain of that decaying limb.

Yours in bonds,

MARY HAWLEY.

DECEPTION'S REIGN.—PART 2. NO. 2.

BY ELDER COLUMBUS SCOTT.

“LOOKING BACKWARD.”

THE past as it is reviewed, its doctrinal plains present to the view of the beholder numerous wrecks, wastes, and fossilized thought-remains. A full survey of the realm of past human belief creates feelings of mingled solemnity, regret, astonishment, with the silver lining of hope and admiration. The courage of the heroic advocates of many of the doctrinal ideas, then fought for, but now dead, is admirable.

That multitudes of sincere people believed in doctrines with all the powers of their being, and that their hope of eternal life was builded on them, and yet those doctrines are now known and proven to be false, delusive, and deceptive,—admitted so to be,—is astonishing, and touches our sympathy.

Entire churches or denominations have builded on those false doctrines; but time, the infallible corrector of human mistakes, and history, leave them but wrecks, fossilized remains, testimonies of man's weakness and follies. It is not the heathen world now here referred to, but Christendom. What a reign deception has had! Its sway has been almost universal; and, with what degree of intolerance!

Our summary includes not all the past. The task would be too arduous. Let us therefore look backward but a brief period, and recapitulate only in part. It will help us in making an estimate of man's ability in forming plans of salvation independently of God and his directions. The doctrine of man's infallibility, as illustrated in the official pretenses of the popes of the Roman Catholic Church, so devotedly and religiously accepted by multitudes unnumbered in the past, is now almost entirely discarded by all, both Catholic and Protestant, as a slavish deception. Common sense and reason both declaring that to be really infallible,—that is, not liable to make mistakes,—one must be able to the most infinite degree to determine absolutely the difference between right and wrong; and to this even the angels in heaven dare not pretend, even officially, save where the to them superior, infallible law of God directs plainly, without falling; in which case should they so pretend, they become devils—angels of the Devil. (Ezek. 28: 14, 15; Jude 6; 1 John 1: 8-10.)

Where to-day is the doctrine of “Unconditional Predestination and Foreordination,” as found in the books and sermons of John Calvin and John Knox, Jonathan Edwards, and others of two to three hundred years ago? That God, before he created man, preordained a portion of the race—the elect—to salvation, and he will save them at all hazards. The rest he passes by—the nonelect—having foreordained them to eternal damnation “to the praise of his glory,” as the old creed read? It was a logical deduction from the foregoing premises, that if some of the nonelect died in infancy, they too would be sent to “eternal woe,” and good devoted mothers and fathers used to sing in the services:—

And hell is crammed,

With infants damned,

Without a day of grace!

not knowing but that they were praising God for the condemnation of their own sweet, innocent offspring! These ideas grew out of the false belief, that because Adam sinned in the garden of Eden, that his sin, preordained of God, would cause all the nonelect to be eternally lost. So all the good they might be able to do availed nothing in their behalf. There is a tinge of this false doctrine decorating so-called evangelism of the present day. It is the idea that God does not attach any merit whatever to good deeds, such as attached to the "nations" represented as "sheep," outside of uniting with "our church!" (Matt. 25: 34-40; 10: 40, 41.) So that if there is one place hotter than another in the lower world, the upright, moral, nonprofessor will catch it! As a result of this false doctrine, practical Christianity, the daily doing of good deeds, is virtually laid aside; while the making of the high profession, joining the church, is extolled as the principal thing. The result is, to the onlooker, the latter is looked upon as an empty profession, because the former is neglected, under the plea of, "You can do nothing of merit to save yourself. God must do it all!" The fact is, the good works, the Christian fruit, must go with obeying the gospel—or joining the church. "Cease to do evil; learn to do well."—Isaiah. "Save yourselves from this untoward generation."—Peter. "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling."—Paul. Out of the doctrine of unconditional predestination it was logical to deny that man was free to do as he chose. Had no agency, could act only as God moved on him. Consequently man was not responsible for his acts. God forced them to act badly, and then puts them in woe eternally for doing so! But this very unreasonable, inconsistent, and deceptive doctrine, with all its logical and absurd deductions has about died out, and is only looked upon as among the unenlightened traditions of the past; and having its origin from among men and devils. And the divine truth that man was designed and created a free and intelligent agent in his sphere of action, and possessed with reason, prescience, and the ability of deciding, and with volition, and is therefore a responsible being, has quite taken the place of the old fancy—predestination unconditional. The old "twin relics" of physical penance, and the infliction of physical punishment for sin here and hereafter, are going rapidly; both are of heathen origin, and neither are even hinted in God's revelations to man. The strange idea, putting the spirits of condemned sinners in a literal lake of literal fire to punish them for sin, is rapidly fading from the theologies. And it ought to. Its origin is the human theologies. It is not mentioned in Christian revelation.

The ordinance of "baby sprinkling," as found taught in modern creeds to save the babies from the imaginary fire, is a wondrous and far reaching stride of improvement on the old custom of making the little innocents "to pass through the fire!" (Deut. 18: 10.) It greatly misrepresents the Infinite Justice, implying as it does, either the sinfulness of the innocent babes, or the imputation of sin to them, though they are incapable of recognizing the law. But where law does not apply, God does not impute sin. (Rom. 5: 13.) It is evident therefore, that subjecting babies to moral law, or to positive religious law, such as the law of baptism, never originated with God. For the same reason that moral evil is not punishable in literal fire and, brimstone, physical literal death would not be inflicted on the finally impenitent.

If the wicked sow what they reap, or vice versa, what ought little children to reap? (Gal. 6: 7, 8.) Let us right at this point hear Paul's admonition, "Be not deceived." Will not the atoning blood of Christ reach to and include in its infinite bounds the sinless little ones? Those who die in infancy as well? Is not infant sprinkling, therefore, casting contempt on the atonement? That baptism is a saving ordinance we believe; but those who sprinkle infants attach a far greater efficacy to it than we! For it means, if it means anything at all, that children who are not sprinkled will be lost! Either that, or nothing. In either case it is "error," sin, "mockery." But it is fading away where God's word is studied. Let us be thankful, and labor to its banishment from among men. (See Book of Mormon, Moroni, 8: 2.)

Is there anything strange then, in view of what we have just been noting, that some even dare to look into the creeds with a view to casting overboard the grievous errors and deceptive doctrines that have held sway so long? The souls of men are seeking light and liberty. There is hope on the behalf of many that they will forsake error, be delivered from deceptions, and receive the light of the truth and its fruits,—life, light, and salvation.

How great, black, and heavy have hung the clouds of error and deception over the human mind through the influence of false, delusive doctrines. But of these we have noted but a few as illustrations of our subject.

But the wily foe of man has not been content to advocate, through man, false and deceptive doctrines, to blind him; he has gone further—has called to his aid the power of deceptive,

EVIL INVISIBLE SPIRITS, whose mission is to attend false doctrines and Scripture perversions, and advocate them with strong delusive power. (See 1 Sam. 16: 14; 2 Thess. 2: 9-12.) So that man has not only erred in doctrine, but in spirit likewise. The prophet Isaiah, who delivered so many notable prophecies now being fulfilled, when speaking of God's great latter-day work and its corrective power on the people blessed with a knowledge of it, says:—

They also that erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine.—Isa. 29: 24.

So many whom we meet in this age of divisions will remark, "We differ in our doctrinal beliefs, but we are one in spirit." This idea is itself a delusion. Every distinct form of doctrine has its own, an adapted spirit to accompany and operate with it. The truth of this will demonstrate itself to the close observer. Try it.

The spirit that actuates the Spiritualists, for instance, does not move in any other religious society in the manner it does there. That spirit acting among the Quakers does not move on any others as it does among them. The "falling down" spirit, as manifested among Primitive and Free Methodists, is not the same in its operation as that among the M. E.'s.

The spirit that actuates the Christian Scientists differs quite radically to that manifested among the Christian Alliance people. Most any onlooker can see this if they but notice closely. The spirit in most any one of these, if stirred by a little opposition, will accuse any of the others of being of the Devil! These spirits will not unite or let those they respectively control unite. Now if these spirits, respectively, were the Holy Ghost, would they not all work together to answer the prayer of the Savior which says:—

Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be ONE, AS we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me.—John 17: 20-23.

Is it essential to man's salvation that they believe that God sent his Son, the Messiah, Savior into the world? Is not the unity of believers in faith, belief, and spirit here by Christ made the evidence to the world that he is the Messiah, the sent of God? Jesus labored and prayed that believers in the word, which he gave to the apostles, might be united in faith and spirit. Will not the Holy Ghost, where permitted to operate, work to the same end? Or is Christ working and praying in the direction of unity, while the Holy Spirit leads in the opposite direction; viz., to division? If the spirit that actuates divided, contentious Christendom now be the Holy Ghost, then is the Godhead in heaven divided! They will not unite, let them try ever so heroically. But there is a secret here. Let us tell it. The words of men, in creeds, disciplines, and confessions are sought to be made the basis of their unity, not the "WORD" (not words) which Christ gave to the apostles! Christ prayed that all believers be one in belief!

The basis of faith is testimony. Christ gave to the apostles the word—the testimony. Testimony is unalterably the same, identically the same, in all places and ages. Testimony in fact is unequivocal. It conveys the same identical idea to all capable of conceiving the idea. The idea of "adding" is identically the same in operation in all minds able to conceive the idea. It is the operation of a principle. Unity on "principle" is what Jesus prayed for. The idea of the principles on which this unity is to be effected is conveyed to the minds of men by the "word of God." It is living and powerful. It "lives and abides." It increases to men in amount; it never decreases. One trouble among men is, in their opinion, some of "the word of truth, the gospel," (Eph. 1:13), does not apply nowadays; and they assume to separate that part which they think applies now from that part which they think does not apply! They are partial with God's evidence. They would hardly think it right to thus deal with court records on earth; but more license is assumed with the word of God than men's records. But this mode of dealing with Holy Writ is a deep deception. They take great pleasure in limiting the organic development of the kingdom of God to ancient times. (See Eph. 4: 8-14; 1 Cor. 12: 28-31.) Also some of the promises of note likewise, as see Mark chapter 16:16-20; Eph. 1:13-18; with 1 Cor. 12:1-13. Though the commissioned servants of God, and the witnesses of those days, took no such license with God's evidence, men without divine call or commission scruple not to thus handle the word of God deceitfully.

What thing soever I command you, observe to do it: thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it.—Deut. 12: 32, involves the principle upon which God commands that his word shall be dealt with.

Though it be but a man's covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man dismantleth [takes from], or addeth thereto.—Gal. 3: 15.

All the promises of the gospel covenant ratified, confirmed by the blood of Christ, with all the commands, are as essential now as in any past age. That "word" all goes unbroken, all goes together; together it stands or falls.

Hear another witness:—

We are of God; he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error.—1 John 4: 6.

The doctrine of applying the word of God partially is prompted by "the spirit of error."

Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world.—1 John 4: 1.

False prophets seek to deceive us and sustain their deceptive doctrines by perversions and misapplications of God's word, not only by applying the laws of one dispensation to another, contrary to God's own expressed arrangement; but also by making special application of the law of a given dispensation, to one period in that dispensation instead of applying to all parts of the dispensation alike. No divinely called and inspired servant of God ever did that way.

What authorized and divinely inspired minister of God ever taught that the law of baptism for the remission of sins, could be rejected by man, and yet he could be justified of God and saved? Or, that it was all right in the apostolic age, but would not be essential after that age? Which of them ever stated, and where is the statement recorded, that the ordinance and "principle" of the "laying on of hands" for "the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts 19:4, 5; Heb. 6: 2) was designed of God to apply and operate during the days of the early apostles, and then cease to be practiced and become obsolete? These ordinances, like faith or repentance, are "principles,"—terms of the everlasting covenant. Failing to practice these, we fail to keep our part of that covenant, and God is under no obligation to bestow the grace and blessings he designed to flow out of their observance. Under the shadowy Mosaic law, to break or fail to observe one of the terms of the law or covenant, was to break the covenant, and incur the full penalty. What are the consequences of a like course pursued under the substance, the gospel covenant? Of the former law James says:—

For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all.—James 2: 10.

Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and done despite to the Spirit of grace?—Heb. 10: 29.

So the great apostle reasons regarding the latter law, and those who in any wise reject, disregard, or deceptively pervert it. It seems to be the special mission and work of deceptive evil spirits to veil with darkness the human mind to the light of the truth. This is confirmed by all past history from the day of Cain, the son of Adam, till now; and that too whether it be among nations blessed with the light of revelation from God, or those enrobed in heathenism. To the enlightening power of the Holy Ghost in John, superstitiously religious, idolatrous Babylon and Rome were dragons,—"that old serpent," "the Devil and Satan" "which deceived the whole world" (Rev. 12: 9),—because he and his aids, angels, are the spirit that works "in the children of disobedience." (Eph. 2: 2, 3.) As also to the revelations of the same Spirit, these spirits are "as a roaring lion seeking whom," in the kingdom, among the children of God by gospel adoption, they may devour. (1 Peter 5: 8.) He began his work on earth in Eden. He scrupled not to pervert God's word. God said to Adam and Eve:—

But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.—Gen. 2: 17.

Satan added the word "not" to the last member of the above sentence, quoting it, "Ye shall not surely die." (Gen. 3: 4.)

Our first parents accepted the word as perverted and quoted by Satan; they were blinded, chained, deceived, and fell! A curse as a penalty was placed on all creation below. Their disobedience to God, through Satan's deception, was sin; and death came by sin. (Rom. 5: 12-19.) What a mighty consequence followed heeding one little word God never spoke!

If such be the result following adding one word to what God says, what will be the consequences of taking away one or more of God's words from what he says? Who can tell? God says of his word:—

Neither shall ye diminish aught from it.—Deut. 4: 2. (12: 32.)

But, notwithstanding this clear and positive statement of God, it is a lamentable fact that in theology, as accepted by a large proportion of the professed Christian world, some of the plain words of our Lord are to all practical intents and purposes taken away from what he has said, and are treated as though he never uttered them. Take for example John 3: 5, where the three words "of water and" are passed over as silently as though they were not there; while others leave out of their faith, except in an historical sense merely, and as not essential to their faith or salvation in this age, the words of the same passage of God's word, "And of the Spirit,"—four words!

Saying nothing for or against the honesty or sincerity of those who so treat God's word, by what power or influence are they led to do this? Not the Holy Ghost, for surely it was by it those words were originally spoken and enjoined as essential to our salvation. Not by their love to God are they led to so treat his fatherly counsel. It seems with them, as with Adam and Eve, so much easier to believe what God did not say, than what he does say. Why is this? Other words of God bearing directly on the same subject—regeneration—are similarly treated by the same theologies; as, "for the remission of sins." (Mark 1: 4; Luke 3: 2, 3; Acts 2: 38; 22: 16; Rom. 6: 17, 18.) John the Baptist, filled with the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb, preached the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. And also the Apostle Peter, when filled with the Holy Ghost, did the same; and since such was the case, it cannot be that the same Holy Ghost would now inspire men to contradict so positively its former teaching, by absolutely ignoring its former conditions on which sins were remitted, and ordaining an entirely different and new way to procure the remission of our sins! Besides, baptism is a "principle" of the doctrine of Christ (Matt. 28: 19), and was enjoined upon all nations, by the resurrected, immortalized Jesus; by the Holy Ghost (Acts 1: 2), through which he gave "commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen."

A "principle" of the doctrine of Christ, or of any other science, is a very arbitrary thing to deal with. The principle of gravity does not down, and away to nonentity, just because some human freak waves his hand. Addition or multiplication, principles of the science of mathematics, are foundational, fundamental,—all essential to their science as necessary parts thereof. The laying on of hands as a gospel ordinance, is a principle of the doctrine of Christ, administered among other purposes, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. (Heb. 5: 12, 13; 6: 1, 2; Acts 8: 17, 18; 19: 1-6; 9: 17), and with the other principles of Christ's doctrine is essential to salvation.

This principle of the doctrine is omitted from the human theologies of this age. Why is this so? Who is the cause of it? Would God, who claims to be the author of those principles, now rearrange his plan and by omitting now, confess that he made a mistake before when he included them in it? Or has man, by his superior wisdom, been able to arrange a better way of saving man, and leave some of the principles of the original plan out, especially baptism for remission of sins, and the laying on of hands of God's authorized ministers for the gift of the Holy God?

If such infinite consequences as did followed the adding of just one little word by Satan to what God said to Adam, who will describe the great and stupendous results which follows the taking away of so many of God's words from his plan of human salvation by human theologies? What infinite loss will be suffered by those who are so led by such deception? What of the deceivers?

Remove from me the way of lying: and grant me thy law graciously. I have chosen the way of truth: thy judgments have I laid before me. I have stuck unto thy testimonies: O Lord, put me not to shame. I will run the way of thy commandments, when thou shalt enlarge my heart.—Ps. 119: 29-32.

It is time for thee, Lord, to work: for they have made void thy law. Therefore I love thy commandments above gold; yea, above fine gold. Therefore I esteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right; and I hate every false way.—Vrs. 126-128.

An interesting discussion on mission school was had. After an informal talk on "How can we secure the interest of adults in Sunday school work?" by most of those present, Bro. Robinson took charge of the blackboard and those present developed an outline for the work of visiting committees. The evening's entertainment was as follows: Address by Mark H. Forscutt. Vocal trio, "I waited for the Lord," by Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. James, and Miss Amy James. Recitation, "The church and the world," by M. Eunice Winn. Vocal solo, "When the heart is young," by Mrs. Robinson. Sunday school newspaper by Mrs. A. A. Horton. Saturday morning from 8:30 to 9:30 was devoted to Sunday school prayer meeting, and convention adjourned to meet the Friday preceding and at the same place of the next conference of the Independence district.

NORTHEASTERN MISSOURI.

Convention convened at Bevier, Missouri, October 8, 1897, at ten a. m. Louise Palfrey, superintendent; M. J. Richards, secretary. The superintendent read a part of the first four chapters of "Trumbull's Teachers and Teaching." A motion prevailed that all Sunday school workers and visitors and the traveling ministry be allowed to take an active part in our conventions. Higbee, Pollock, Salt River, and Bevier schools reported, showing progress. Treasurer's report: June 20, balance on hand $10.68; received during term, $3.19; on hand, $13.87. Three bills of expense, for superintendent, secretary, and program committee, were read, and the treasurer authorized to pay them. The question of a district newspaper was brought up, whereupon it was voted that Bro. Burch, of Pollock, Bro. Tanner, of Bevier, Sr. Thorburn, of Higbee, Sr. Susie Stoddard, of Salt River, and Bro. George Tryon, of Huntsville, act as editors for the different schools, with Sr. Thorburn as general editor. The motion that was tabled till this convention in regard to having a book of rules outlining program committee's work framed, was discussed, and a motion prevailed that our superintendent, Bro. Thorburn, W. J. Richards, S. A. Tanner, and Sr. Thorburn constitute the committee for the purpose of framing a book of rules. It was voted that when the superintendent sees fit to visit any school in the district that she be authorized to draw on the treasury forthwith to defray her expenses. The Salt River school sent in a petition asking for the privilege of joining the association, and they were cordially admitted. The business being done, program was taken up: Normal class drill by superintendent. Paper on Sunday school work by Sr. C. F. Lankford. Blackboard use in Sunday school by Sr. L. Palfrey, and purpose of review by F. T. Mussell and Lydia Edmonds. The evening's program was of a literary nature. Sunday morning a good school was held, being divided into nine classes. Review by Sr. Palfrey. Collection amounted to $2.89. Adjourned to meet at Bevier, the Friday prior to our next conference. A peaceful influence prevailed throughout the entire sessions.

NAUVOO.

Association convened at Rock Creek, Illinois, October 1, 1897, at 10:30 a. m.; Hattie McKiernan superintendent, Marjorie Wright secretary. Report of treasurer read. The following schools reported: Rock Creek, total enrollment 28; classes 3. Bright Prospect 56; classes 7. New Canton 40; classes 5. Superintendent, Hattie McKiernan, gave a verbal report of her work and condition of the schools visited. The treasurer was authorized to pay the expenses of the superintendent and secretary to and from the regular convention of the association. Voted that Hattie McKiernan, Sr. Birchell, George P. Lambert, and F. M. Weld compose program committee. Resolved that hereafter we perform all business of the convention in the forenoon, and any reports and business coming in too late to be acted on be deferred until next regular convention. The afternoon was occupied by three class drills occupying twenty minutes for lesson and ten minutes for criticisms. Wm. Lambert acted as teacher for senior class, Marjorie Wright intermediate, and George Lambert infant class. In evening two essays were read, written by Sr. Birchell, of Ottumwa, and Sr. Callie Stebbins, of Lamoni, after which was a discussion on the subjects of essays. Report of program committee read. Adjourned to meet the day previous to the district conference at Burlington, Iowa.

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.

Convention met at the Palmyra branch, October 8 and 9, 1897. Four sessions were held. Reports were received from three schools and officers of the district. One session was devoted to business and teachers' meeting, one session for general review and business, one session for literary and musical exercises, and one session was set apart for preaching services, occupied by Bro. James Caffall. A very profitable meeting.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENTS.

To the Saints of the Southern Illinois District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints:—

Please take notice that Bro. W. A. Kelley, Bishop's agent of said district, has resigned, and at the recommendation of the district conference, held October 13, 1897, I have appointed Bro. F. M. Slover, of Orchardville, Illinois, as agent of said district.

Bro. Kelley's resignation was made on the ground of his inability to travel and teach the duties of the saints touching this part of the gospel as much as he thought proper to be done. Bro. F. M. Slover will doubtless be able to present the matters to all parts of the district, and we hope and trust every lover of the truth will aid to the extent of his ability as the Lord has blessed him so that the gospel may be preached in Southern Illinois. The gospel is without price to those to whom it is sent; "without money and without price." But it takes means to aid in the sending of the same, and it is the membership and friends of the gospel who make it "without money and without price" to others as they work in the interest of the Redeemer. In this way as by the minister in the performance of his duty in preaching the word we become "workers together with God." Let it not be said of any that he or she has fallen short of the great privilege granted of each bearing a part. Every saint and friend should have his or her name enrolled upon the record of the workers.

We extend special thanks to Bro. W. A. Kelley for the faithful manner which he has discharged the duties of the office and trust that instead of lessening his efforts they may be redoubled in the interest of the cause of Christ.

Very respectfully in the truth,

E. L. KELLEY,

Presiding Bishop.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

I respectfully request that all general missionaries, district presidents, and general officers of other church organizations, also presidents of branches not in districts, will, as soon after January 1, 1898, as practicable, send me at the address below a brief statement of labor done during the year 1897, with statement of the general condition of the work in their several fields or departments. No details are wanted in this statement, but just the names of countries, states, counties, and so forth where labor has been done, the extent of labor done, sermons preached, debates held, results in additions, and on the public mind, etc., with just a sentence or two about how your work has been received, the general conditions, prospects, etc. Remember that to reach me here the letter must not weigh over one half ounce, and must be fully prepaid with five-cent stamp. I only want these items in order to make a historical report, in a general way to the Annual Conference, hence the details would be cumbersome and entirely useless here. However, all details which would be of interest in the history when published, you are earnestly solicited to send to the Assistant Historian, Bro. Frederick Madison Smith, Lamoni, Iowa, that they may be kept on file in the office for examination and use when required. If any have old books or documents, of any kind, which are of historic importance which they are willing to donate to this department, please send them also to Bro. Frederick.

Respectfully,

HEMAN C. SMITH, Church Historian.

BISHOP'S AGENTS' NOTICES.

To the Saints in Oklahoma:—The church in this mission is behind financially with the missionaries here, and I would like every one that possibly can to send in tithing at once, for it is badly needed here. It is just as much one of God's laws as laying on of hands, and let us observe his whole law.

Your brother in Christ,

S. J. HINKLE, Bishop's Agent.

STILLWATER, Oklahoma, Nov. 1, 1897.

To the Saints in Minnesota:—I will hardly be able to visit some of the branches this fall, as I contemplated, by reason of injuries received recently. While unhitching my team I forgot to unhitch one tug. Starting off rapidly, with halters in hand, I was thrown under horses' feet and trampled upon, receiving injuries which anyone might expect.

I am glad to report that the saints are doing well in paying their tithes, the best of any previous year. To those who yet intend to pay, remember that the last day of December, 1897, closes the account for this year. Be on time, saints, that credits will appear in annual report, 1898. My post office address is as it has been for twenty years, Cormorant, Becker County, Minnesota. I need not give any other directions than, Do not put off sending your tithes. Remember, "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." As ever for the welfare of the cause we so much love,

W. W. McLEOD, Bishop's Agent.

NOTICES.

TO NAUVOO DISTRICT.

To those branches and members that have expected a visit from me this fall, will say I have been at home sick some four weeks, and have been very much disappointed in not being able to fill my appointments and prosecute the work more effectually in the district. I am thankful to state, however, that I now think I will be able to be in the field again this coming week. Ever praying for the success of the work, I am,

Your brother in bonds,

F. M. WELD.

The "Lectures on Faith" are omitted, but may be published later in pamphlet form, or for those who may want them.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

The Necessity for a Reorganization.

BY ELDER H. O. SMITH.

This tract sets forth and refutes the false claims and erroneous doctrines of the Utah Church.

It brings to light much of the teachings of Brigham Young and other founders of the Utah faction, and proves them and the present leaders to be at variance with and their organization a departure from the faith taught by the early church and its three standard books.

It also vindicates and maintains the general position of the Reorganized Church in succession.

A tract for the times. Just the thing with which to meet the arguments of Brighamite elders.

Forty-three pages; two for five cents; per doz., 30 cents.

THE SAINTS' HERALD
REDUCED IN PRICE.

Recognizing the closeness of the times and with a desire to place the church paper within the reach of every member, the Board of Publication has decided to offer THE SAINTS' HERALD at a reduced price for one year from the date named, as follows:—

On July 12, 1897, the price of the HERALD was fixed at $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

This reduction applies to both old and new subscribers, on the following conditions:—

Cash must accompany all orders for new subscriptions, as stated.

Former subscribers who are in arrears, who pay up on old subscriptions and renew one year in advance, will receive the benefit of the reduction in price from the date named—July 12, 1897.

Those who have already paid in advance will receive the benefit of the reduction in price at the dates of expiration of present subscriptions, and for the year following said dates, if renewing in advance.

This is a reduction of twenty-five per cent, both in the price of the church paper, and of the revenue derived from it. It is therefore necessary that all avail themselves of the new departure and greatly enlarge the list of new subscribers; and also that those indebted pay up all past due accounts.

Branch hook agents and the ministry who can do so, are respectfully asked to second the efforts of the Board by obtaining new subscribers for the HERALD and working in the general interests of the Herald Office—the church publishing plant.

THE THREE BOOKS
AT POPULAR PRICES.

CHEAP AND DURABLE.

Because of the increasing demand for the Inspired Translation in home and class study in general and in Sunday school work, also because of the increasing number of Book of Mormon and Book of Covenant classes being formed in various branches of the church, and the consequent growing demand for the "three books," the Herald Office management has decided to issue popular low-priced editions of each.

The books are all well bound and printed on good paper, the paper and plates being the same as used in higher priced editions.

They are good and durable, and with ordinary care will last the necessary wear of years. They are bound in cloth and sold at the low price of 65 cents for either Book of Mormon or Doctrine and Covenants; the Inspired Translation at $1.

Orders solicited. The three standard books of the church are now within the reach of all.

PROF. GATES' WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.

THE Chicago Tribune printed yesterday the details of Professor Elmer Gates' extraordinary invention of the telemicroscope, by which assisted by what he calls "photomicrography," the power of the microscope has been so increased that it extends as far beyond the scope of the instrument at present as the microscope now exceeds the visual power of the eye. . . .

The scientific details of the professor's inventions are clearly and concisely stated. . . . It is more to the point to indicate briefly the results of this discovery, assuming the professor is correct in his estimate of what he has accomplished. The great point in his discovery is his ability to utilize light better than it can now be done in the working of the microscope. He explains how by his invention he can not only save but multiply light. He says: "I can, judging from some former experiments, put at least 100 times more than the usual amount of light through the microscope." And again he says:—

"With the lowest and cheapest of microscopic objectives and with a toy telescope the power of the instrument has been augmented at least twenty-five times. If no further improvement could be expected by the new method this would mean that a ten-inch telescope can be made to magnify twenty-five thousand diameters, which is by far beyond the range of the best existing instruments. If the new method be applied to the best existing instruments and if we expect only such results as we have already obtained it will augment their power twenty-five times.

"This means that we can see an object upon the moon, through a ten-inch telescope, with a width of one-twenty-fifth of a half mile—that is, we have reached the startling conclusion that objects 100 feet wide can be seen upon the moon through a ten-inch telescope with a microscope attachment having a one-inch ocular and a two-third-inch objective. The moon, by this instrument, would be brought within a distance of from twenty to fifty miles. If the same microscopic attachment be applied to a large telescope we may expect to see objects about thirty feet wide."

When it is considered what this means as applied to astronomy it will be seen that if the professor accomplishes all he now estimates as practical we are on the eve of the greatest and most far-reaching scientific results the world has ever known. It means that an object thirty feet wide on the moon may be seen; that the secrets of Mars and Jupiter and Venus and new information from far distant stars out on the very limits of our system may be revealed, that we may learn definitely of the composition of the sun's surface and of numerous other mysteries of the solar system hitherto considered as shut out from scientific research.

But the wonders of this discovery will not be confined to astronomy. It can be applied in the direction of the smallest imaginable object. It may solve the secret of the microbe, reveal all the unknown functions of digestion, open the realm of psychology and show the formation of impressions, and, in a word, reveal all the operations of nature, within the limits even of its smallest dimensions. The new discovery reaches from the stars to the infinitesimal microbes. If Professor Gates is correct in his statement his discovery is of the highest importance, not only to those engaged in scientific pursuits but to the whole human race. It will prove the greatest discovery of the nineteenth century and one full of the greatest possibilities, an immense stride forward in the field of human knowledge. —Tribune.

CHURCH LOSS AND GAIN.

STARTLING REPORT IS MADE TO THE CONFERENCE OF METHODISTS.

"WHILE the city churches of the Rock River conference are growing, its rural churches are rapidly declining, both in membership and in financial strength. There are no young people in their congregations. The older people cannot be got to give a testimony and a revival has become almost an impossibility. Unless strenuous exertions are put forth by the conference these churches will become absolutely extinct."

These discouraging and exciting statements were made yesterday afternoon at the anniversary of the Conference Domestic Missionary Society, by its corresponding secretary, Rev. Dr. G. R. Vanhorne. The congregation was the thinnest that had attended any meeting of the conference; but when Dr. Vanhorne, who was evidently greatly depressed and deeply in earnest, made these remarks, they created a decided sensation.

The Domestic Missionary Society is only a year old. It was organized with a view of promoting revival work in rural churches which are too poor to employ an evangelist. That the conference regarded the condition of these churches as critical is shown by the fact that Dr. Vanhorne, one of the most prominent Methodists in Illinois, was appointed as corresponding secretary. But the conference was not at all prepared to hear the result of his first year's travels, labors, and observation.

REVIEW OF DR. VANHORNE'S WORK.

Rev. J. B. MacGuffin presided at the anniversary meeting, and after brief devotional exercises introduced Dr. Vanhorne as the speaker of the occasion. Dr. Vanhorne began with a brief statistical review of his year's work. He had traveled 3,207 miles, assisted twenty-three churches, visited 458 families, and witnessed 120 conversions. He made also a financial statement, showing that the year's work had cost the conference only $345. He then addressed himself to the matter that lay nearer to his heart and gave him more trouble.

Explaining that he meant by rural churches those that were located a few miles from the railroads, he said he was probably the best qualified of any man in the conference to report on their condition, and his report was that their rapid decline in membership, financial strength and spiritual life was a palpable fact.

He said there were many reasons for this, and he gave a few of them. The first of these was the well-known fact that the population of the United States was rushing to the cities. Fifty years ago the cities of 8,000 population and over contained only 8 per cent, and now they contained 29 per cent of the population. But those young people of these churches who did not come to the city went west to buy cheaper lands and left the churches almost destitute of such members.

GROWING AVERSION TO FARM LIFE.

Another reason was the growing aversion to farm life, and especially to dairy farming. Getting up at four in the morning and spending four hours in the stables and then repeating these labors in the evening was something so terrible that the young people were scattering in every direction to escape it. Soon after they left their parents, if they had accumulated anything, went to some nice town to reside. Then, though the owner could not not make a living on the farm, a tenant takes it in hope of making both the rent and a living. Such a tenant had nothing to give the church.

Another cause was labor-saving machinery, which had thrown thousands of farm laborers out of employment. Then by the concentration of capital and the establishment of large business houses convenient to shipping facilities the small towns had been depleted of their merchants and tradesmen. Another cause was the multiplication of lodges and clubs, which now absorbed all the time and savings of the people who once gave both to the support of the church.

The worst cause of all, Dr. Vanhorne said, was the Sunday creamery. Near the Sunday creamery the Sabbath had almost been abolished. The morning service was delayed until eleven o'clock, and the farmers, after spending hours in racing their wagons to the creamery with their milk, came to church so tired they could hardly sit up. Meantime nothing could be heard but the rattle of milk wagons.

REVIVAL ALMOST IMPOSSIBLE.

Dr. Vanhorne said the rural pastors are noble men and cooperated with him splendidly. But he was compelled to say that a revival was almost a matter of impossibility. He sometimes held a ten days' meeting without seeing a single conversion. The men who attended sat like statues, and could not be got on their feet to speak or on their knees to pray. In short, he said, the conference must give a hearty support to the Domestic Missionary Society and sustain an evangelist for this work, or it must be prepared to see these rural churches go out of existence.

He made an appeal for financial help, and based it on the fact that the strength of the city churches was all derived from these same rural churches. His remarks made a deep impression, and a liberal collection was taken up.—Chicago Times Herald.

LACK OF CONVERSIONS IN CHURCHES.

"I KNOW of a church in the great metropolis of Chicago, a Methodist Church, too, with a membership of 900 persons, and not a single soul brought to the altar in three years. If the church of John Wesley, of Whitfield, of Edwards, had attended to its business there would be no need of the Salvation Army. Shall not God avenge his own elect speedily? Shall there not be a day of reckoning?"

Thus said the Rev. C. J. Fowler, President of the National Holiness Association at Desplaines yesterday. He was talking about the need of greater work in the conversion of sinners, and deprecating the attitude of the churches in the large cities towards active efforts along the old-time lines.

The day was ushered in at the holiness camp-meeting by a revival service at daybreak, and the meeting was characterized by many conversions, several being converted whose appearance attested that they had almost reached the allotted age of three score and ten.—Chicago Tribune, August 6.

CONTRIBUTIONS FALLING OFF.

GALESBURG, Ill., October 20.—Much time was spent by the Illinois Presbyterian Synod to-day over a recommendation by the Sunday school committee that the Rev. C. K. Powell be appointed synodical missionary. Schuyler Presbytery objected because of expense, and the matter is not yet ended.

The various reports submitted show that during the year twenty-one Sunday schools, with 875 pupils and twenty-two foreign missionary societies, have been organized, and five new churches erected in the synod. There has been a marked falling off in the synod's contributions to home mission work, not one half of the churches contributing the last year. The reports on the colleges ended with a long statement by Dr. Herrick Johnson, explaining the defalcation of the treasurer of the Board of Aid to Colleges. To partly cover the remaining shortage of $3,000 the synod raised $1,000. Changes were recommended in Sunday school work, the committee favoring the use of the board's publications.—Chicago Tribune.

IMPORTANT CHANGE IN TIME.

VIA NICKEL PLATE ROUTE.

Commencing Sunday, November 14, the New York & Boston Express will leave Chicago at 10:25 a. m., instead of 10:35 a. m., as formerly. The New York & Eastern Express which formerly left Chicago at 3:05 p. m. will leave at 2:00 p. m. The evening train will leave at 10:15 p. m., as heretofore.

The same high standard of through train service will be maintained as prior to November 14, with the advantage to passengers leaving Chicago on our 2:00 p. m. train, which will afford through sleeping car accommodations to Boston, reaching that city at 10:30 the following evening. All the delicacies of the season will be served on Dining Car.

CONVERSION.—NO. 4.

A PREACHER once said that he did not consider a man soundly converted whose horses and cattle and dog and cat did not feel the beneficial effects of it. This was the practical side, and his idea was correct on general principles, though all men are not cruel or abusive to their quadrupeds before conversion.

The announcement of the conversion of a godless man justifies in the mind of the world an expectation entirely different from that of former time. He is thereafter to be gauged by a different standard. Not only is this a fact, but it is presumed that the converted man intends it shall be so and is figuring to meet the new exactions, not for the purpose of disarming critical observers who watch suspiciously, but because the course they assign him is the right one. Their espionage is not the prompting cause of his moral rectitude. The cause lies in his change from nature to grace—his honest adoption of Christ as his life regulator.

This means, in most cases, a severe struggle; for not only do old habits haunt the convert, but the Adversary seems often to take special pains to spread new nets for his feet, and to multiply vexatious conditions and occurrences until the almost despairing soul is made to feel himself at times unequal to the task of subduing his passions and maintaining his ground. But right here comes the assurance of divine aid. "Helps and governments," are vouchsafed to the needy when earnestly sought, and the struggler, availing himself of these, triumphs, and in his triumph learns that his victory was due to a power superior his own, hence learns his dependence.

We have seen men naturally perverse and obstinate become gentle and easy of persuasion, and men who seemed to be unapproachably austere become as humble and communicative as children, as a result of giving themselves to God in the gospel. We know of a home or two where the return of the husband and father was formerly a cause of nervous agitation and fear to the wife and children, because of uncertainty as to the mood he might happen to be in. Those homes are now the abodes of joy and peace, and the approach of that same father is the signal for a rush to see who shall first receive his greeting, no apprehension being felt as to what the character of the greeting shall be. The only explanation of the change is found in the fact that his heart has become the residence of Christ, through the Spirit. The gospel is doing its work.

We have seen drunkards and idlers made sober and industrious men by the magic influence of the power that wrought their conversion. Men who have been noted for unreliability in word and dealing, and whose profane and vulgar speech has been an offense to decency, have, under the transforming grace of Christ, conveyed through the gospel, become worthy of place and confidence anywhere among good people, and have become as noteworthy for the purity of their entire deportment now as they once were for the opposite.

The touch of the gospel power has not only relaxed hard hearts but close fists also, and the penurious have become generous; the purse has been laid upon the altar with the head and hand and heart, with the intention that the law of Christ should direct the employment of them all. We have, in fact, never known of a case where entire consecration to God has failed to effect a transformation of head and heart, or has been barren of splendid results.

We have thought, however, as a result of observation, that some persons had consecrated only their heads to God, others only their hearts, and still others only their means. Peculiar as this may sound, it is, nevertheless, our way of accounting for anomalies we meet. When we see a person of inferior mental quality changed, after entrance into the church, into a capable and shrewd reasoner, yet whose habits of contracting debts and evading creditors, whose methods of dealing and whose treatment of his family (formerly bad) are in no sense improved, we fail to see where God has been given much room in the heart. When we see a man abandon the saloon for the church meetings, becoming kind in his family and employing his means to give comfort to those dependent upon him instead of squandering them as before, yet who cannot read a word nor write his name, and is compelled to call on others to make an intelligent scriptural defense of his faith, though he is but in the prime of life and has been several years in the church, we wonder if a little more active head consecration would not round out his character development and make his conversion more complete.

When we hear a man regularly bearing testimony that God has certified the divinity of the church doctrine and organization to him; who cites even the later revelations in evidence that God is supplementing and indorsing the methods of the body; yet who will not tithe himself under the law as defined and in execution and thus approved, we are led to wonder if he had not left his purse behind when he gave himself to God, or if there is not just that much lacking to make his conversion complete. When we see another who pays tithes according to the law and is liberal at every appeal for financial help, yet who is sadly deficient in regard to moral requirements, we again wonder if there was not a partial reservation at least of head and heart when the purse was put under the law.

Like the Galatians of old some still cling to customs and traditions of their former estate and yet expect the gospel to bring to them its full measure of possibility; but like those Galatians, they must also learn that the kingdom of God is perfect in itself, without foreign support, and that its wealth of spiritual treasure is only placed at the feet of those who surrender all else at its shrine. Perfection by the gospel law cannot be attained by us while we have mental or other reservations in placing ourselves under it. We cannot expect any part or possession to be sanctified by the law until it is subjected unreservedly thereto. True faith acknowledges the right and the wisdom of God to direct our giving as well as our doing—our means as well as our morals. In Christ was exemplified entire consecration, and his life corresponded with his word: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." He is not really "in us," nor are our lives really "hid" in his until his given law receives complete and unquestioned observance at our hands. All his laws are spiritual, we are told; hence that part which bears upon our temporal concerns aims at the development of some part of our spiritual nature, and the principle we apply when preaching "first principles," holds with equal force here, for only he that doeth "shall know" what blissful assurance follows obedience.

Perfection lies at the end, not at the beginning of the saints' career; but it is guaranteed to all who abide the conditions of purging, renewing, and sanctification; nor has anyone advantage over his fellow. Those who enter the church from a former high plane of morality and social standing will find occasion for self-abnegation and self-crucifixion in the task of stooping very low and very often to encircle with their arms of affection and sympathy those who, less fortunate than themselves, are finding it hard to conquer old habits, and are occasionally stumbling almost to their fall. True conversion to Christ does not lead us at such times to stand off and refuse to stoop so low. It means that we shall do exactly as Christ would were he there in person. Who shall help them if those stronger and and on higher ground refuse?

Some of those so far beneath our moral level have traveled farther than we, even though they have not yet reached our altitude. Our perfecting will depend as much upon our stooping to lift and support such, as theirs will depend upon their continuing to struggle. A few of them may never reach and occupy, in this life, as high spiritual ground as some others; but if they made their start leagues behind or below those others, and are making a noble fight against the odds that threaten to crush them, and which the others are strangers to, are they not as striking evidences of God's power and mercy as are those others? If they are doing what seems to be their best, and are persistently trying, are they not demonstrating conversion? If the help that others above them might furnish and that would make the struggle less torturous and more successful, is withheld, are those withholding giving as clear evidence of conversion to Christ as even the despised ones? Would Christ ignore a struggling one? Is it not a fact that we are here to act in Christ's stead to the extent of our power? Where will the unfortunate ones look for a Christ exhibit if not in those above them?

We love to cherish the belief that what is lacking at the end of the race in the soul that has made a valiant fight will be supplied by the generosity of Him who witnessed the struggle and has the gift of life in his hands. But will what is lacking in others because they refused to stoop and help—refused to do that part of the Christ work intrusted to them—be supplied at the end? The Christ likeness is developed by doing Christlike work in a Christlike spirit. Will he supply a deficiency that results from our unwillingness to act "in his stead" when opportunity was afforded?

Conversion to Christ, as a theory, is everywhere discussed; but its practical revelation is in greater demand. If introduced and applied throughout it would make a living Jesus discernible among us always. It would indeed make us "one."

As a church we are on higher ground than we were, but there is still room above, and experience as well as divine promise assures us that as we climb the atmosphere will become clearer and the area of our spiritual vision will become wider. As it gets into more direct line with the "Sun of Righteousness," the church will more clearly and brilliantly reflect the rays of that Sun, and thus become in the more complete sense of divine intention, "The light of the world." Let us then as individual members thereof come fully under the covenant, and with the law in our "minds" and "written in our hearts," be perfected by its unhindered processes within us. Let us arise and ascend to the highest sphere of our possibility in holy service, and continue to occupy "till he comes."

THE OLD WORLD AND THE NEW.

WHEN one has been all his life in America amid scenes comparatively new and he is by a very brief voyage transported into the "old world," he can hardly realize that he walks over ground that was old in history before his native land was known to the race that now inhabits it. To walk among the tombs and read the inscriptions there, dating back for centuries, and to view the old abbeys, castles, cathedrals, and other historic marks, to try to recall how long they have been in existence, and the names of illustrious characters who have been connected with them, seems like a strange and unreal dream; and occasionally he startles, as though suddenly awakened, only to relapse again and again into the same dreamy reverie. The fact that a country so broad, rich, and beautiful as America is, could have remained so long undiscovered—so near a nation boasting of its maritime prowess—seems more and more wonderful the more we consider it. We are irresistibly led to conclude with the great explorer—Alexander Von Humboldt, and Mr. Robertson whom he quotes—that it was so decreed. He says:—

Robertson was justified in saying that it was decreed in the destinies of mankind, that the new continent should be made known to European navigators before the close of the fifteenth century.—Humboldt's Cosmos, vol. 2, p. 639.

Again, Mr. Humboldt relates a singular occurrence, which probably so changed conditions in North America as to prevent what would have been a very undesirable result, and if true, shows that the hand of God was directing the movements of Columbus, and reserving in America a place for the establishment of that government which our fathers planted, and to the defense of which they pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honors. He relates that Columbus "found himself on the 7th of October, 1492, in the parallel of 25° 30'," and that about that time he yielded to the persuasion of Martin Alonzo Pinzon, commander of the Pinta, and changed his course from west to south-west. Pinzon remarked on the occasion:—

It seems to me like an inspiration, that my heart dictates to me that we ought to steer in a different direction.

Mr. Humboldt then adds:—

The talented and ingenious Washington Irving has justly observed, that if Columbus had resisted the counsel of Martin Alonzo Pinzon, and continued to steer westward, he would have entered the Gulf Stream, and been borne to Florida, and from thence probably to Cape Hatteras and Virginia,— a circumstance of incalculable importance, since it might have been the means of giving to the United States of North America a Catholic Spanish population, in the place of the Protestant English one by which those regions were subsequently colonized.—Cosmos, vol. 2, p. 638.

The student of and believer in the Book of Mormon will at once notice the harmony of these incidents with that record. Lehi, just before his death, gave many words of counsel to his family, and among other things said:—

And behold, it is wisdom that this land should be kept as yet from the knowledge of other nations: for, behold, many nations would overrun the land, that there would be no place for an inheritance. Wherefore, I, Lehi, have obtained a promise, that inasmuch as those whom the Lord shall bring out of the land of Jerusalem, shall keep his commandments, they shall prosper upon the face of this land; and they shall be kept from all other nations, that they may possess this land unto themselves. And if it so be that they shall keep his commandments, they shall be blessed upon the face of this land, and there shall be none to molest them, nor to take away the land of their inheritance; and they shall dwell safely forever. . . . If the day shall come that they will reject the Holy One of Israel, the true Messiah, their Redeemer and their God, behold, the judgments of him that is just, shall rest upon them; yea, he will bring other nations unto them, and he will give unto them power, and he will take away from them the lands of their possessions, and he will cause them to be scattered and smitten.—2 Nephi 1: 10-13.

Nephi saw in vision that the last named results would obtain, and witnessed the movements of Columbus, as he was moved upon by the Spirit. He writes:—

And I looked and beheld a man among the Gentiles, who was separated from the seed of my brethren by the many waters; and I beheld the Spirit of God, that it came down and wrought upon the man; and he went forth upon the many waters, even unto the seed of my brethren, who were in the promised land.—1 Nephi 3: 107.

Lehi, during the discourse referred to above, uttered some cheering words of conditional promise and encouragement, to all who should after inherit the land, coupled with words of warning and admonition, to which the American people will do well to take heed; and we sincerely hope that our countrymen will not make the mistake of the Jews when they said: "We are the children of Abraham, and we only have power to bring seed unto our father Abraham," by thinking: "We are the children of our revolutionary fathers, and we cannot fail to enjoy the liberty guaranteed by our fathers."

He who truly loves his country (and surely we have reason to love it) will earnestly, honorably, and humbly seek to know the right, and courageously maintain the right without fear or favor of man, or any combination of men.

Again, how completely the Book of Mormon fulfills the anticipations, and expectations of Alexander von Humboldt, as expressed in the following terse language:—

I do not participate in the rejecting spirit which has, but too often, thrown popular traditions into obscurity; but I am, on the contrary, firmly persuaded that, by greater diligence and perseverance, many of the historical problems which relate to the maritime expeditions of the early part of the middle ages; to the striking identity in religious traditions, manner of dividing time, and works of art in America and Eastern Asia; to the migrations of the Mexican nations; to the ancient centres of dawning civilization in Aztlan, Quivira, and Upper Louisiana, as well as in the elevated plateaus of Cundinamarea and Peru will one day be cleared up by discoveries of facts with which we have hitherto been entirely unacquainted.

Was Humboldt also inspired?

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform."

A FEW WORDS.

WE wish our space was sufficient to include the many good things that come to us for publication, but it is not. We suggest that all the saints take the HERALD. The Board of Publication will then be able to enlarge it, adding other features that would make it a greater power for good.

The Board is ready when the saints are to make new and progressive departures in many lines of literary effort. A large subscription list would aid it greatly in placing needed matter in the hands of the saints.

It is to be hoped that all will see both the propriety and necessity of subscribing for the official church organ, that they may be informed upon church questions at home and abroad and keep in line with the general forward march.

Think the matter over; it has a bearing upon all branches of the work; local, general, internal, and external.

The HERALD is now reduced to the low price of $1.50 per year. It presents the growing manifestations of God's goodness and the work of forces for good in general, in contrast to the increasing disorder and evil which is developing in the world at large.

No one can afford to fail in keeping in line with the wonderful developments of the age in "the hastening time."

SERIES OF MEETINGS AT LAMONI.

BRN. G. H. HILLIARD and E. L. Kelley of the Bishopric, and J. R. Lambert of the Twelve, have been holding a series of meetings at Lamoni during the past week; Bro. Hilliard speaking two Sunday mornings and every evening except two, when Brn. Kelley and Lambert addressed the saints. The admonition and instruction given was wholesome and pointed. It touched mostly upon present practical work and duty, and in such a way as to set the people to thinking and acting in real earnest. The work of the redemption of Zion, including the preaching of the word abroad, was set forth in such simplicity as to make plain the general duties of every member of the church under the law. Such wholesome, practical teaching, in regard to living, working, giving, and against the spirit of pride and division, is always emphasized by the presence of the good Spirit.

The effects of such teaching among the saints at home and abroad must be great for good. It is the plain practical real work that tells.

Bro. Hilliard left headquarters on the 15th to continue work for good among other branches. He is a plain talker—an image smasher, as well as a sound builder. He means what he says and says what he means in a spirit of frankness and fearlessness, for the good of the people entire, that is commendable.

AUTUMN LEAVES.

ELSEWHERE in the HERALD will be found a card containing notice of reduction in the subscription price of Autumn Leaves, requiring payment in advance, and requesting payment of delinquent subscriptions and that new subscribers be obtained.

Those interested in the Leaves and in continuing its career of usefulness as the organ of the young people and their work, through which their talents may be cultivated and their work reported, have an opportunity to manifest such interest, both by remitting for their own and by obtaining other subscriptions. The magazine needs earnest, telling support, and ought to have it now.

Of the value and attractiveness of the publication all may readily judge. It has increased, very greatly, the measure of its work during the past year. It is worthy the active support of all concerned—youth and adults.

It is to be hoped that the young people of the Religio-Literary Societies, in whose behalf so much has been done through its columns, will take up the work of obtaining subscribers, both individually and collectively.

Subscriptions are asked for by the Board of Publication; the earnest support of all interested in the magazine is desired.

Please remember the price and terms: $1.00 per year, in advance.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. H. N. HANSEN wrote from Sandy, Utah, November 8, that he had baptized five persons there on the 2d inst.; "prospects fair."

Pres. A. H. Smith, who has been ill for the past month, is again confined to his bed. Though not dangerously ill, his condition of health is very poor. He has not been well since the early part of the spring season.

Yellow fever has almost disappeared at Southern ports. Trade is assuming its normal condition, though it has been dealt a heavy blow by the plague.

Large bands of well-armed and disciplined rebels are scouring Madagascar and cutting off isolated French detachments.

Hartsell, the American missionary, and Stanley, the explorer, addressed an audience at Buluwayo, Matabeleland, on the 8th inst., in which they expressed the hope that the stars and stripes and the union jack would combine in defense of human rights. Civilization was progressing in Rhodesia.

Baroness DeHirsh, the widow of Baron DeHirsh the Jewish philanthropist, is devoting herself to the work in which her husband engaged much of his time and means; viz., that of bettering the conditions of the Jewish people.

Pope Leo will shortly publish an encyclical address to the Canadian Episcopate of Manitoba on the school question in order to vindicate "the right of Catholics in that province to school teaching." The Vatican officially contradicts the published report that the encyclical would undertake to accept the compromise suggested by the Canadian Premier; viz.: neutral schools with religious instruction after school hours only.

Peru and the United States have taken action to formulate a basis of agreement for trade reciprocity.

A cyclonic storm did damage at Denver, Colorado, and adjacent points, on the 10th inst.

Secretary of War Alger has approved the estimates for coast defense work submitted by General Miles. They will be submitted to the House Committee on Appropriations. The sum involved is $15,858,000, and provides for elaborate coast defenses, including the Gruson steel turret system, at Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Texas, California, Oregon, and Washington cities, and important approaches thereto. The Gruson turret system is controlled by the Krupp gun establishment in Germany, and is regarded as practicably impregnable as a system of defense. Submarine mines, barbets, mortars, torpedo boats, and other armaments will also be employed as means of defense.

Bulgaria and Russia have severed diplomatic relations. The Russian envoy has left Sofia.

"The Peruvian Congress refused to sanction the project of the Senate providing for legalization of non-Catholic marriages, and the President of the Senate . . . declared that the Senate sanctioned the project of the Chamber of Deputies, which provides virtually for civil marriages."

"Simla, November 7.—Official dispatches from Maidan, in the Maidan Valley, where the British column under Sir William Lockhart is encamped, say that a large deputation of the Orakzais has entered the camp to treat for peace, but that as yet the Afridis give no sign of yielding. Meanwhile, the tribesmen cut the telegraph wires nightly, persistently harass the expedition, fire at long range on every baggage convoy crossing Arhanga Pass, and attack every foraging party. One of the latter narrowly escaped massacre. Several have been killed or wounded in these desultory encounters." Official dispatches from Maidan, the 10th, report a disastrous rout of the British forces under General Westmacott. Fifty men were killed or wounded in the fearless assaults of the insurgent tribesmen.

"Berlin, Nov. 7.—The Reichstag will meet on November 30. It is understood that, in addition to the budget, a naval bill and a measure for the reform of military procedure, both of which have been under ministerial consideration for some time past, will be introduced as soon as the session opens. The military bill, as drafted, proposes to establish public and oral procedure within certain limits, and involves a renunciation of the right of the Emperor to confirm or cancel the verdicts of military courts. Both concessions are of the highest importance."

A new polar expedition, projected on a new plan, is being organized in Canada. The plan proposed is to sail for Siberia, going thence north by sledges with dogs and reindeer.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Canadian Premier, the British Ambassador, and other Canadian and British officials are in conference with representatives of the United States government, at Washington. The Behring Sea seals, border questions, Canadian-American interests in the Klondike, and Canadian-American reciprocity are said to be the questions slated for consideration.

On the resumption of business in the Austrian Reichsrath on the 8th the acting President strongly denounced the riotous proceedings that had marked the sessions for some time past, and expressed the hope that the proceedings would be "of a more decent nature in the future." The representatives of the German People's party, the German Progressist party, and the Social Democrat party protested against the declaration made by the Minister of Finance, in which he gave warning of a suspension of the constitution by the government unless the provisional compromise bill was adopted. The minister also stated that he would deeply deplore the result if political circumstances compelled the government to enforce a compromise by other than parliamentary means; but, he explained, there were circumstances which were materially stronger than all forms. "After the representatives of the parties mentioned had protested against this declaration they strongly denounced the threatened suspension of the constitution. The speakers were uproariously applauded."

"Buda Pesth, November 10.—In the Lower House of the Diet to-day Francis Kossuth characterized the action of the Austrian Minister of Finance in threatening a suspension of the constitution in the event of the Austro-Hungarian compromise bill being defeated as being contrary to the terms of the Hungarian constitution. Kossuth also called upon the government to make a definite announcement of its position in the matter, and addressed an interpellation to Baron Banffy, the Hungarian Premier, relative to the attitude the Hungarian government would adopt in the event of Austria suspending the constitution as threatened."

"Vienna, November 10.—A large band of German students made a demonstration to-day in the main hall of the university, and in front of the Reichsrath, singing German national airs. They dispersed on the advice of Herr Wolff, the German Deputy."

A company of Spanish soldiers doing garrison duty on the coast of Southern Cuba, lately deserted, joined the insurgents under General Rabi, and swore allegiance to Cuba libre. The garrison had suffered for some time from sickness and for lack of supplies. A member of the Cuban junta in the United States makes the statement that President Diaz, of Mexico, has received and given audience to a messenger from the junta; that he desires to see Cuba free, and will address a note to the United States urging intervention. Marshal Blanco, Governor-General of Cuba, has issued an edict to the Cubans expressing the magnanimous sentiments of the Queen Regent and the firm determination of the government; rebels who submit are offered pardon, such to remain within the limits of a fixed "military zone" of cultivation and not to change locations without permission of both civil and military authorities. The military authorities are not to invade the jurisdiction of the civil; Cuban agricultural and general business operations to be promoted so far as possible under conditions incident to the war. The reply of the Sagasta government to Minister Woodford's note which hinted at the necessity of early pacification of Cuba is regarded by the United States cabinet as pacific, courteous, and calculated to allay any fear of a hostile outbreak. American consuls in Cuba are reporting the condition of the peaceable "reconcentrados" — the noncombatants gathered into cities and towns from the country districts under General Weyler's government of affairs. These reports contain harrowing details; that starvation is frequent and that bodies are often unburied and hauled out for the buzzards by local authorities; it is estimated that in Pinar del Rio and Havana provinces one half have died. General Gomez is collecting Cuban forces in Santa Clara. General Blanco is said to require constant medical attention because of enfeebled health. The present government in Spain is receiving the support of the press and the people. Relations with the United States have improved.

An effort in the industrial line is being made by a number of parties, whose advertisement, "The Lamoni Soap Company," appears in this issue. This is not in any sense a church enterprise. However, the movement is being made by those who believe that industrial movements on the coöperative plan should be established at this point. While the HERALD does not indorse this or any other private business enterprise, it is but just to state that Lamoni needs and must have industrial plants in operation, and that if this one is properly managed there seems to be no reason why it should not succeed and prove beneficial to the town and surrounding country. We have reason to believe the projectors and friends of the movement have in view the good of the community entire, and that their effort deserves commendation.

Mount Vesuvius is again in eruption, in harmony with the condition of earthly things in general. Columns of smoke and tongues of flame are belching from the center crater, while showers of cinder are falling.

An Austrian war vessel has been sent to the Turkish port of Adena to protect the Austrian consulate and the Christians of Mersina.

The Lovejoy monument was dedicated at Alton, Illinois, November 8, 1897, the sixtieth anniversary of the assassination of Elijah Parrish Lovejoy, the first American martyr for the freedom of the press and whose death gave courage and force to the cause of human freedom. Lovejoy was the fore-runner of Abraham Lincoln, the great civil emancipator and political martyr.

One hundred and fifty thousand persons are said to have died of starvation in Cuba since the beginning of the famine in September last—1896.

Commander Booth-Tucker has signed a contract for a four million acre tract of land in Colorado for the Salvation Army's coöperative colony.

The Vienna Neue Freie Presse of November 11 published a dispatch from Constantinople saying that some Greek bands which crossed the Thes-salian frontier have been repulsed by the Turks, who killed many of the invaders and captured a large number of prisoners. The Turks also seized 150 rifles and 170,000 cartridges belonging to the Greeks.

Another polar expedition will start from Sweden in 1898. A Norwegian expedition will start for Greenland next June. The Belgian antarctic expedition which left Antwerp in August has arrived at Montevideo.

The Barcelona police have seized a shipload of arms intended for the Carlists. Spain has been unable to arrange for use of Japanese or Chilean war ships in the event of war with the United States.

The Mexican government newspaper El Mundo states that a contract has been signed between the Secretary of Finance and an English syndicate, including the Rothschilds, by which the latter undertakes to place one million European colonists in Mexico in the next twenty-five years. It guarantees to take over the public debt, about $110,000,000, while the government agrees to turn over one third of all receipts to the syndicate, also to pay $100 cash for each family located, to withdraw all public lands from the market, and give the syndicate exclusive use of said government lands for colonizing purposes.

Late advices from Standley, Indian Territory, report a victory for the cause in the late discussion between Bro. I. N. White and Elder J. W. Chism. Fuller account later.

Cablegrams indicate a growing strain upon the relations between England and France, caused by the advance of British forces in Africa. French newspapers boast of the strength of France, in the Russian alliance.

The Cuban debt at the outbreak of the present war was $168,500,000; the aggregate is now $443,500,000. Spanish securities continue to decline. The government is being pressed for funds, and the Rothschilds impose severe conditions, including leases on mines, it is said. Italian government officials are said to have expressed sympathy for Cuba. The Queen of Spain has written the Pope imploring him to order the clergy to abstain from supporting the Carlist cause.

THE COLLEGE FUND.

SAINTS who are earnestly working and praying for the success of the work and the interests of Zion's cause, will be glad to know how that great auxiliary to this work, Graceland College, is prospering, and what are its present prospects and needs.

On the 9th day of April, 1895, in General Conference at Independence, Missouri, after some six years of agitation and thought, the church appointed a building committee with directions to proceed with the work of organization and building, authorizing an incorporation for this business and the solicitation of means by the committee to carry on the work.

The committee earnestly entered upon this work, and in June, 1895, ground was broken for the building, and on the 17th of September, 1895, the school opened with sufficient instructors to meet all the demands of a good school, and the school year closed after the accomplishment of much good work.

It had been expected at the beginning of work on the grounds and buildings that sufficient of the real estate belonging to the college would have been sold to aid in furnishing the same, but the close times which soon set in to a great extent defeated this hope and the committee had to move forward under the difficulty of collections of subscriptions under such unfavorable conditions, as well as in the sale of lots, with but one consoling thought in their work; and that was in the fact that dealers everywhere were sorely pressed with the close financial times and we could buy material much cheaper than it was possible to do before this, and it has proven that it was for much less than the same can be bought for at the present time.

The subscriptions to the college fund have been less than one third of what was necessary to build such institution and put it upon its feet, as the church set out to establish; and at the present time there is absolute necessity for such addition to this fund as will relieve the present necessities and continue the college in its important work. We do not see in the near future any prospective endowment by any individual by which these wants shall be supplied; and under the circumstances the Board of Trustees at its meeting in October, 1897, appointed President Joseph Smith and the undersigned a special committee to present the matter to the saints; and after fully considering the situation the committee have entire agreement in presenting the matter at once to the church in the manner herein set out so that sufficient means may be had to meet the obligations incurred in building and establishing this school by the church, and placing it in a successful working condition.

It is possible and practicable to do this and we present the matter before the saints in the confidence that it will be taken hold of at once and accomplished within ninety days from this date.

It is our hope and expectation that other important matters in church work will be upon us the coming year, and these stepping stones, as it were, to it, should be fully established before any further undertaking; indeed, it must be done to insure success when the church shall move forward in its work.

The Home for the poor and aged will be completed ready for occupancy and in charge of the superintendent by the new year, and the College matter should be disposed of by that time or soon after; and the only way to do this is to meet the issue like men and women of faith, and leave the doubting and quibbling for those who never do anything else.

There are at present seventy-two districts of the church with Bishop's Agents, and each district can in a short time furnish ten (10) subscribers to this fund of twenty ($20) dollars each. The Agents of the larger districts can do much more. This will furnish a very ample endowment for Graceland College and meet all emergencies and give time for the sales of real estate which will be ample in the future to insure complete success to the institution if it shall get no special endowment by individuals who may feel to aid a worthy cause.

It is with confidence in the saints and friends of education and the cause of Christ that I call upon the Bishop's Agents in the several districts of the church to aid this laudable and essential institution in the progress and development of the youth, and thereby the cause of Christ; and obtain the subscription of at least the minimum number named herein to each district and forward at once to me that the church may be relieved in its work.

Already we have applications of two young men in the Society Islands who wish to come to America and enter Graceland College and learn the language and become fully acquainted with the work of the church so they may return as missionaries and helpers to their own country and race. We will have applications from other nationalities. While they get their qualifications they want to be with the church: Shall we as a people be equal to the emergency of supplying such institution as will meet the demands? It is better to fit missionaries in this way for those far-off countries, than to send too many to them from America and take the time there to educate and fit them for the work.

All contributions will be published at once under the heading of district wherein the same is made together with name of donor, unless by special request this is omitted; and when contributions are sent directly to the Bishop they will be duly credited to the proper district.

To the agents and saints we confidently look for a ready and hearty response to this appeal, knowing that the promptings are not our own and that your every proper effort will be commended by Him who will justly recompense his people for every worthy work.

I am as ever confidently, your co-worker in the truth,

E. L. KELLEY,
Presiding Bishop.

ANOTHER YEAR.

Another year is dawning!

Dear Master, let it be
In working or in waiting
Another year with thee!

Another year of leaning
Upon thy loving breast,
Of ever-deepening trustfulness,
Of quiet, happy rest.

Another year of mercies,
Of faithfulness and grace;
Another year of gladness
In the shining of thy face.

Another year of progress,
Another year of praise,
Another year of proving Thy presence "all the days."

Another year of service,
Of witness for thy love;
Another year of training
For holier work above.

Another year is dawning!
Dear Master, let it be
On earth, or else in heaven,
Another year for thee!

EAST SAN JOSE, California.

Dear Sister Walker:—Recently I have been quite ill and unable to sleep through the long and silent night watches, but have been greatly blessed and spiritually strengthened and built up through meditating upon the goodness of God and the wonders of his creation; and, too, I think I have gained a deeper and clearer insight into the marvels of redeeming love. I gain much instruction through reading and pondering upon the lives of the prophets, apostles, and others that are recorded in the word of God. What grand and noble traits of character, as well as frail and human traits are portrayed therein. I think it has all been written and handed down to us for our benefit and instruction.

One thing that makes the scriptures seem so real to us is, that they show us both the good and the evil in human nature. If the Bible was a history of the lives of men and women who were perfect and free from all earthly blemish, it would be of very little benefit to us as a guide and helper in building up a strong and lofty Christian character, for as we viewed those Godly lives, knowing our own shortcomings and imperfections, we would feel our inability to ever attain their high standard of perfection: but as it is, we review the lives of those early teachers, and see wherein they erred or fell, but arose and struggled on; so we feel encouraged to again take up our cross and press on towards the mark.

I like especially to think of that patient and long suffering old man we call Job. We have all heard how he was tried in the furnace of affliction. His children died, his wealth took wings and flew away, his friends forsook him; even his wife arrayed herself against him. His enemies mocked, and I suppose they told him his troubles were all a judgment upon him because he dare follow the dictates of his conscience and come out on the Lord's side. Any way, they told him it was all on account of his sins, and they charged him with every kind of wrongdoing, but through it all he maintained his integrity of heart. I think I see him as, arising, he stretched forth his hand in the face of adversity, and cried out, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another." I think God himself must have revealed that fact to Job, for, as far as I know, the doctrine of the resurrection was not generally taught at that early day. I am well aware that it is conceded by most people that the book of Job is only an allegory; that in fact no such a person ever existed. Still, if the narrative was written by Moses, as they claim, it shows that he understood that in the last days there was to be a restitution of all things.

I often wonder if we fully realize that we are living in the latter days so often referred to in scripture. Paul tells us that "in the last days perilous times shall come," and no doubt at the present day nearly every kind of peril is abroad on the earth. But for all that I think this age in which we live is the best the world has ever seen; but if our privileges are great, so also are our responsibilities; "for unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required." I pray that we as saints, both as a church and individually, may arise and put on the beautiful garments of salvation, having our lamps constantly trimmed and brightly burning; for we know not how soon our Lord cometh; whether he shall come at evening, or at midnight, or at the cock crowing, or in the morning; for he hath commanded us to watch, lest he in coming suddenly find us sleeping.

Respectfully,

I. B. S.

NEWCASTLE, New South Wales.

Dear Sisters:—I thank my heavenly Father I am still in the faith and still striving for the better part. I have read with much pleasure the letters in the Home Column and have received much strength from them; one in particular from Sr. Clara D., speaking of little things. It seems to just suit me. I don't know how many times I have said to myself, "I will write to the Herald," but not going right away and doing it, cares came in the way, the opportunity was gone, and then I thought, "Well, I have nothing to write about that would interest anyone."

It is twenty-two years since I entered the church, and I have seen many of the gifts and blessings, and have been blessed myself. Many times in a special manner have I seen the gift of healing with my children and myself also; not once, but many times. I have seven children grown up, almost. Four of them are in the church, two boys and two girls. One (that Sister Burton might remember as the baby when she was here) I had the pleasure of seeing baptized yesterday, with twelve others, many of them growing girls and boys. We have a nice Sunday school in our branch and to the influence of the Sunday school I firmly believe the credit is due.

I feel that my faith in the latter-day work grows stronger every day I live; and when I think of the many and bounteous blessings bestowed upon me and my house, I think, "What am I, that the Lord has been so good and merciful to me? Like my sister, I am not without trials, and many of them, too, but I have realized that all things work together for good to those that love the Lord, and my burden has never yet been heavier than I could bear, though I have bent sometimes and got faint-hearted. My desire is to go on and strive to serve Him to the end of my life, and be faithful to the end.

Your sister in the gospel,
CATHERINE DAVIS.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

THE General Sunday School Association will again issue a Christmas program which will be ready to mail soon. See notice next week.

THE second annual session of the Interstate Sunday School Teacher's Institutes will be held at St. Joseph, Missouri, during the holidays. The first session held at Council Bluffs, Iowa, December 26-29, 1896, was an eminent success. We have all reason to believe our next will be even more successful. Complete explanations will be given in a notice to appear later on.

REV. JESSE LYMAN HURLBUT, in his "Revised Normal Lessons," says: "That which is to be remembered must be frequently reviewed. . . . Hence there should be on every lesson,—

"1. A constant review during the lesson.

"2. A class review at close of the lesson.

"3. A superintendent's review after the lesson.

"4. A rapid review before the next lesson.

"5. A monthly, quarterly, and annual review of all the lessons."

A SISTER from the east wrote some time ago concerning the Sunday school superintendent's review: "I find in my travels around that almost every superintendent reviews the school by reading or asking the questions in the Quarterlies." That is far better than no review at all. But a little careful preparation by the one conducting the review will put him in condition to do more and better work. The whole lesson must be so thoroughly in mind that no reference to the Quarterly by the reviewer will be necessary. Get clear in your own mind just what you wish to teach, and ask it in your own language. But better still, have as much of the lesson given without questions as you can, or as time permits, and use your questions to suggest points the recitations do not cover. In short, let the pupils tell what they can and question to get what is not told.

Conduct your review as best you can, even though you do not succeed as you would like, but do not omit it.

THE following is clipped from an article by Rev. William H. Shults, in Sunday School Times. He strikes on several points that are just what we should keep in mind, one of which is that we must continually keep reviewing if we would retain what we have once learned:—

"It will always be the case that the most successful work can be done by teacher and pupil before the recitation hour comes. Yet urge as we may, and convince as we will, there will always be those who will drink in the truth by the "funnel method," through the ear and eye rather than by original mental research. This being the case, there will be no "line upon line and precept upon precept," to these unless there are reviews upon the lessons.

"First of all, these reviews should begin at the close of the lesson conducted by the teacher. What has been the central thought? What is a brief outline of the lesson? How has its truth been illustrated? How can it ennoble and better our lives? How can we digest and assimilate this truth to our own profit? Then follows the superintendent's review of the lesson before the school, and from many pupils and teachers additional thoughts and points will be brought to our minds.

"This, generally, is the end of the matter, so far as it refers to that particular lesson. But I plead for another review or two, so that the word studied may be steadfast, lest we should let it slip from the memory. A brief review of it in the class should again precede the entering upon the study of the next lesson on the following Sunday. And through it there should be an easy approach to the next lesson.

"I suggest another final review, which we have tried with very satisfactory results. . . . If such reviews are continued monthly, other phases of Sunday school work may be introduced successively by superintendent or pastor, which in the course of a year may cover every detail of the Sunday school management and work.

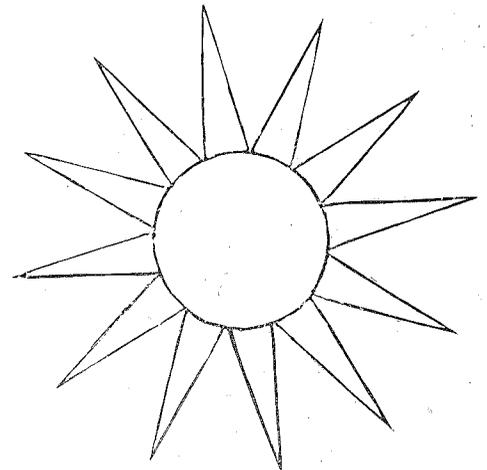

"Thus those present, many of whom are not instructed in any other way in Sunday school methods, may have brought before them the subjects of normal work, home department, teachers' meetings.

"Thus every aspect of the Sunday school work can, in the course of time, be brought under review and advanced, and more successful work will be done."

MCPAUL, Iowa, Oct. 17.

Sunday School Superintendents of Fremont District:— Though we now have uniformity of texts in our three grades of Quarterlies, I trust your efforts to make these lessons of practical worth to your schools will not lessen in the least. In dealing with such abstract subjects as we now are, you will doubtless find it difficult to make your review work attractive. To aid you in so doing, the following method is suggested:—

Get a yard of white cloth (paper or black-board would do) and with care take colored crayon and make drawing as figure below. In the central disk the word God is placed. At the close of each lesson place the attribute which is the theme of the lesson on the part that radiates from the disk. Each succeeding lesson furnishes an additional attribute, and the last lesson will complete the star. This is very simple, but remember we are dealing with children. Try it, and note results. Variety is what we need.

REPLY TO ELDER LAMBERT.

Editors Herald.—When writing my answer to Elder Lambert's queries in your issue for August 4, I little thought it would elicit a twenty-two page "Reply to Elder Bays;" and I am now of the opinion that there is nothing in what I said to warrant the effort or justify the course Elder Lambert has pursued. The real gist of the matter seems to be a desire to lay a "sure foundation" for future operations to be pursued by the Elder and his coworkers, my letter only furnishing a suitable text for the occasion.

After referring to what I said about not wishing to be misunderstood, and hence, misrepresented, your correspondent says: "These desires are right and commendable; but is it not a little strange that after these statements, he does not only fail to show wherein I misrepresented him, but he does not directly affirm that I misrepresented him on a single point."

Then if we do not "directly affirm" a misrepresentation, why should it be assumed that we charge misrepresentation? After an acquaintance of nearly a quarter of a century, Elder Lambert ought to know that, if I believed him to have misrepresented me in any important particular, I have the courage to say "thou art the man." I never deal in innuendoes. What I believe I usually state without circumlocution. I understood at the time, and now understand, that Elder Lambert was simply expressing his opinion as to what Elder Bays was willing to do, and to this opinion he has an unquestionable right, regardless of the abstract question as to whether he is right or wrong in that opinion. Not knowing in what light the much talked of debate had been presented, I simply wished Elder Lambert and my friends generally to understand that I had not been running around the country with a theological chip on my shoulder daring somebody to knock it off. Instead of wishing to "object" to Bro. Lambert's statement as to what he thought me willing to tear down, I simply wished to explain that I was willing to "tear down" that only which I now deem to be error, although I may once have considered it truth. If the church he represents has nothing but the truth, I am sure he need not waste time in talking about somebody being willing to tear it down.

Hitherto I have made no complaint of any misrepresentation on the part of Elder Lambert, but in the article now under consideration I find that which justifies me in making the direct charge of misrepresentation. Concerning the proposed debate and its origin, Elder Lambert says: "Brown asks Elder Bays if he will debate with us, and the answer is, 'I will if they will furnish a representative man to meet me.'"

The above words, quoted in italics, are said to be my words which Elder Lambert declares are "found in his letters sent to me and H. O. Smith." Before me are copies of all letters written on this subject, and I assert positively that no such sentence occurs in one of them. The words "representative man" are the only two consecutive words to be found in the passage it is intended to represent. If putting a whole sentence into a man's mouth that he had never uttered be misrepresentation, then am I justified in writing this down as Misrepresentation No. 1.

Elder Lambert next complains that "Elder Bays was so 'willing' . . . to tear down what for years he sought to build up, that he accepted a challenge which was not made to him, but to the minister of the M. E. Church."

This is clearly misleading, and does not state the facts in the case, as a reference to the correspondence plainly shows. It was Elder Brown, and not Elder Bays, who accepted the challenge, as may be seen by the following extract from my letter to H. O. Smith: "The challenge was 'tendered' not to me but to a minister who was at the time, pastor of the M. E. Church of this place, . . . and upon his solicitation I consented to take up the 'forensic cudgel,' if a representative man should be furnished to stand for your people."

Upon assuring Elder Brown that we would accommodate them if they were "spoiling for a debate," that gentleman accepted the challenge. Shortly after this one of the challenging parties came to my house to arrange for the debate, Elder Brown coming in an hour later; and this was the first conversation I ever had with anyone on the subject except that with Elder Brown. These are the facts in the case, and will not be denied. This, then, may be regarded as Misrepresentation No. 2.

Then in the very next sentence Elder Lambert says: "And then when Elder H. O. Smith decides that there is no necessity for a debate, Elder Bays gets out of fix and seems sorely disappointed."

But Bro. Lambert does not attempt to give the language of Elder Bays showing him to be sadly "out of fix," and "sorely disappointed," and so I here reproduce my language to H. O. Smith upon this point that your readers may be able to decide as to whether it justifies the language quoted above: "2. You say: 'I do not consider a necessity exists.' A challenge issued by one party to another implies either a 'necessity' for the discussion proposed, or a wanton desire to disturb the peace of others. . . . Since the challenge was issued by your friends, not mine; and since the challenge has been accepted and propositions submitted, if you see no 'necessity' for the debate, why, of course I have nothing more to say. . . . As stated in my letter to Elder Lambert, now in your possession, the discussion is not one of my seeking, and I shall not, therefore, 'urge' its necessity, but shall content myself by placing the responsibility with you where it rightfully, and logically, belongs."

These facts reveal Misrepresentation No. 3. The only reason assigned by Elder H. O. Smith for declining to debate, he states in the following language: "But I wish to state here that I decline to be held responsible to every 'Tom Dick or Harry' that may challenge you or anyone else to a discussion."

In justification of what he has affirmed respecting my willingness to "tear down" what I had so many years "sought to build up," Elder Lambert goes back to 1892, and, from the reasons offered for my resignation and withdrawal from the church, quotes my language concerning certain "doubts and difficulties" under which I then labored, as follows: "When these difficulties first began to appear, I sought, through a more thorough examination of, and comparison between, the standard works of the church, to remove them. But instead of accomplishing the task imposed, I found the situation to become more grave and complicated."

The particular thought which my critic and reviewer wishes to fasten upon the minds of his readers is rendered obvious by the following: "The reader will please remember that among these 'standard works of the church,' the Bible occupies the leading position."

"A little further along Elder Bays says—" Here Elder Lambert introduces another quotation from my paper which he says "covers nearly eleven pages of letter paper," but he does not tell his readers how much farther along he finds the passage quoted, nor does he inform them as to its connection with what he had previously quoted from the same paper. But here is what he quotes: "I have sought light upon the vexed questions from every available source, but without avail."

Instead of quoting my language to explain what is meant by the term "vexed questions," as a fair-minded writer should do, he merely gives what he deems a summary of them, as follows: "What Elder Bays means by 'the vexed questions' will appear when we mention his reasons for resigning."

Just here I wish to digress far enough to say that there is nothing in my "reasons for resigning" of which I need feel ashamed; and had the Herald editors given my reasons to the public, as I repeatedly asked them to do, there would exist no necessity for Elder Lambert to inform his readers as to what Elder Bays meant by this or that term. Let the whole article be given to the public.

But to resume. My critic continues: "First, he objects to the inspirational claims of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants; second, the Book of Mormon; third, the Bible."

The evident intention of Elder Lambert in connecting the brief extracts from my paper as he has done, is to create the impression that I had placed all three of the books mentioned upon exactly the same plane, which he ought to know was not my intention. I unreservedly declared my absolute rejection of the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants and "Inspired Translation;" and he must certainly be aware that no such declaration was ever made by me concerning the Bible. But his purpose will more clearly appear as we proceed. And I now call upon Elder Lambert to produce a single sentence from my paper (although I have not examined it for five years, and speak only from memory) in which I call in question any statement of the Bible itself as to its "inspirational claims." I simply, and only, object to the claims made for it by others, and not the claims which the Bible makes for its own inspiration. That some of its writers were inspired to deliver special messages there can be little doubt by anybody who will closely study its pages, but that the several books composing the Bible were written by direct inspiration does not appear.

Will Elder Lambert point me to a passage in the entire Pentateuch in which the claim is made that Moses wrote his books by direct inspiration? Will he point to chapter and verse where even the prophets wrote their respective books by direct inspiration? That the prophetic utterances were inspired has never been denied, but that the historical and homiletical portions were written by supernatural power is nowhere claimed by any of the divine writers.

My point was, and is, If the Bible itself makes no claim to plenary inspiration, why should we make the claim for it? Who has authorized Elder Lambert, or any other man, to claim for the Bible what it does not claim for itself? Will Elder Lambert claim that the Songs of Solomon were written by "divine inspiration"? If so, why was it left bodily out of his "Inspired Translation"? If the Book of Genesis was the result of "plenary inspiration," why did Joseph Smith add eight entire chapters—chapters 1 to 8—utterly unlike anything in the common version? In short, why an "Inspired Translation" at all, if the Latter Day Saints believe in the "divine inspiration of the Bible"? The fact is, neither Joseph Smith nor the Latter Day Saints believed in the plenary inspiration of the Bible or they would never have made another that suits them better. And yet Elder Lambert arraigns me for not believing in the verbal inspiration of the Bible. O, consistency, thou art indeed a jewel!

Let Elder Lambert answer these questions, and harmonize the facts with the position of his church on this "vexed question," or forever after modestly, and discreetly, hold his peace.

After quoting one of my reasons for rejecting the doctrine of plenary, or verbal, inspiration, the Elder continues: "It will be seen from the above that one of the vexed questions is the Bible."

Is it possible that Elder Lambert cannot see the difference between an attack on the Bible, and an attack on something claimed for the Bible? I hesitate to believe it, and yet such seems to be the fact. To take any other view of the matter would be to convict the Elder of wilful duplicity, which I am not prepared to do. To show that I have not misrepresented him upon this point, I quote his own words as follows: "I herewith give his own words when writing up his objections to the Bible."

Yet not one word of objection to the Bible can be found in the passage he quotes. Thus it will be seen that Elder Lambert has grossly misrepresented a very plain statement; but charity forbids that I should entertain the thought that the misrepresentation is intentional on his part. I rather inclined to the belief that it is a blunder resulting from a too ardent zeal to convict an opponent of a skepticism bordering on infidelity. I have read many articles from his pen, and I do not remember to have known him to reach conclusions so utterly unwarranted by his premise. All the facts considered, it will perhaps be conceded that this may be written down as Misrepresentation No. 4.

After asserting that one of the "vexed questions" under consideration "is the Bible," my critic continues: "Elder Bays gives much space to a consideration of this question; that is, in a comparative sense."

What question is being considered, the Bible? If Elder Lambert is not able to make the distinction, his readers will doubtless be able to see that the question under consideration was not "the Bible," as Elder Lambert asserts, but the plenary, or verbal, inspiration of the Bible. The question to which "much space" was given relates, as the brother must know, to that of plenary inspiration, and not to the veracity or authenticity of the Bible. Does Elder Lambert take the ground that either the Book of Mormon or Doctrine and Covenants affirms the plenary inspiration of the Bible? Will he affirm that the Church of Latter Day Saints ever pronounced in favor of the verbal inspiration of the Bible? If not, why talk about considering the question "in a comparative sense"?

During my fifty years of experience in the church, I have yet to hear one of its ministers affirm the doctrine, or anything that could be tortured into a support of it; and I very much doubt if Elder Lambert himself believes it. If he does let him now, for the first time, so place himself on record, that he who runs may read.

My venerable critic, in order to make himself clearly understood, and fasten conviction where, in his judgment, it belongs, again quotes from my paper, with appropriate (?) comments, as follows: "His talk about 'destroying the last vestige of any ground upon which to base an argument in support of the dogma of plenary inspiration,' is a man of straw, and is not sufficient to hide his evident unbelief in the claims of the Bible, at the time he wrote up his resignation."

Aha! the secret is out—the real purpose in writing this two page article now clearly appears. How stealthily the lion has crept upon his prey! It is my "evident unbelief in the claims of the Bible," that Elder Lambert wishes indelibly to stamp upon the mind of the reader. If he can but accomplish this the end for which he strives will have been achieved, and his mind will then, doubtless, find rest and peace.

In proof of my "unbelief in the claims of the Bible," my critic again quotes my language, as follows: "Ministers of the gospel are expected to teach the inspiration of the Bible. During the later years of the ministry I made this a question of special enquiry, and quite contrary to the generally received opinion, I found nothing to sustain the belief that the Old and New Testaments, or any particular book in either, were written by divine inspiration. Hence I have been led to reject the dogma of the 'divine inspiration of the Bible' as wholly untenable."

This, the Elder seems to think, places beyond doubt the fact of my "unbelief in the claims of the Bible" upon this point. Suppose we look into this matter a little further, and see if the Elder's conclusions are justified by the facts. Now what are the facts? I had said that I found "nothing to sustain the belief that the Old and New Testaments . . . were written by divine inspiration."

Now, remember it is "the claims of the Bible," and not the claims of men respecting its inspiration, that we are charged with rejecting. Again I ask the Elder to produce a single statement from the Bible which claims that it was written by divine, or plenary, inspiration. If the Bible anywhere makes such claim I have overlooked the fact, and am perfectly willing to publicly retract any former statement I may have made respecting this "vexed question," when convinced of my error. Will Elder Lambert please enlighten an erring brother whom he considers to be wandering in the mazes of spiritual darkness?

All fair-minded and truly liberal critics are willing to interpret an incidental declaration of a writer in the light of a well-defined statement. My position upon the question of divine inspiration had been clearly stated in a paragraph previously quoted by the Elder, which was manifestly intended as a modifier of any statement on the same question which might follow, and which should be allowed to qualify the words in quotations, namely, "divine inspiration of the Bible." By every well-defined rule of just criticism the words "divine inspiration" can, therefore, mean nothing more, nor nothing less, than "plenary inspiration."

But instead of following this obviously just and liberal rule of criticism, Elder Lambert characterizes what we say about the doctrine of plenary inspiration as being "a man of straw," thus deliberately making the charge of duplicity and downright dishonesty of purpose on our part. This is hardly what might be expected from a man in Elder Lambert's position as an apostle of Christ, and a teacher of men. Could my critic rise above his petty prejudices sufficiently to divest himself of a seemingly definite purpose to convict, I feel quite sure he would not permit himself to adopt such questionable methods of reasoning. In view of the facts as I have here presented them, the unbiased reader will, doubtless, recognize this as being Misrepresentation No. 5.

My partisan critic thus concludes his argument upon this point: "The leading statement of my letter concerning Elder Bays is now more than vindicated by the Elder's own words."

Are they? Had Elder Lambert said that his statement was "vindicated" by his own construction and interpretation of "the Elder's own words," he would be much nearer the real truth. Why does not my old colaborer allow that my declaration about the plenary inspiration of the Bible represents my real sentiment on this "vexed question"? Why does he prefer to characterize a sentiment thus clearly expressed as "a man of straw," thus charging an opponent with insincerity and dishonesty? The reason is obvious. He could not in any other way justify this unprovoked attack, and his whole case would fail.

But suppose we view this question from another standpoint. Elder Lambert's "leading statement" is that Elder Bays is "willing to tear down that which for many years he sought to build up," and refers to my views concerning the plenary, or divine, inspiration of the Bible as the principal effort to "tear down." Before his declaration can, in any sense of that word, be regarded as "vindicated," the Elder must show that I had sought to "build up" "the dogma of plenary inspiration." Has he done this? The careful reader will have observed that he has not even attempted it. And now I challenge Elder Lambert, or any other man, to go back to the beginning of my ministry, in 1861, and produce a single instance in which I have sought to "build up" the doctrine of plenary inspiration; and if he cannot do this, he is in honor bound to recede from the position he has assumed.

But let us suppose that all the implied charges of skepticism—nay, more, of my absolute "unbelief in the claims of the Bible," be true, is it an unpardonable sin? Elder Lambert seems to think that a man who does not view the doctrine of verbal inspiration from his standpoint, is "worse than an Infidel" and has already denied the faith. Had I in fact denounced everything in the shape of religion, it would but furnish another exhibition of the fruits of the system of which Elder Lambert is a representative.

It is the boast of Latter Day Saints that an intelligent man, once a Mormon, is "spoiled for any other church;" and had I gone into Infidelity, as is usual in such cases, it would doubtless have confirmed Elder Lambert's faith, and afforded him a degree of pleasure he does not at present enjoy. This suggests another query, namely: Why does Elder Lambert, and those of "like precious faith" with himself, prefer to see a man who renounces Mormonism go into Infidelity rather than into some Christian Church? I will now leave this part of the subject for the candid consideration of the fair-minded investigator, and proceed to the examination of one or two points of minor consideration.

After referring to Bro. Toney's letter concerning my book as "the thing to down Toney with," the Elder thus remarks: "Of course Elder Bays wrote his book since his withdrawal from the church."

Of course he did—he wrote it last winter and spring.

"It is fair to presume," continues the Elder, "that this work and the writing of his long letter to our young and zealous Elder Toney, were done within that period of time when such splendid opportunities offered themselves to Elder Bays for tearing down the work of others, had he only been disposed to improve them!"

Not so my brother. These "splendid opportunities" were offered within the first year after my withdrawal from the church, and were in the form of solicitations to "write up Mormonism" for the press, but which were respectfully declined; while the long letter to "our young and zealous Elder Toney" was written, in answer to inquiries, after Bro. Lambert's "Reply to Elder Bays" appeared in Saints' Herald of August 4, last.

The next point to which I shall invite attention is that suggested by the following: "This shifting of positions in writing an answer to one query is rather a bad 'give away.'"

In what does this "bad give away" consist? Let us see. The "one query" to which answer was made, includes two distinct lines of thought and action, one relating to the past, and another to the future, as may be seen by a very brief reference to "Query No. 1" of Elder Lambert's former letter, as follows: "Should Elder Bays engage in forensic contest with the Latter Day Saints, [a thing evidently in the future, as no such contest has ever occurred,] is he likely to secure a more signal victory [still in the future] than he ever secured before [clearly referring to our efforts in the past] when defending their faith and doctrine?"

To that part of this query which relates to the past I replied: "In my former efforts in defense of the faith of the saints, . . . if success crowned my feeble efforts it was largely due to the fact that I tried to inform myself upon the questions to be discussed."

And in reply to the other part of the query I said only what Elder Lambert concedes, namely, that "As to whether 'a more signal victory' shall be achieved in such efforts must necessarily depend upon the tenability—the logical and scriptural soundness of the positions assumed."

What more could I say? And yet, while endeavoring to answer this query in its two directly opposite phases, Elder Lambert is pleased to say that "this shifting of positions is rather a bad 'give away.'" I presume to say that had the query been answered as to one of its phases only, the critical Elder would then have called it evasion. "If not, why not?"

All of Bro. Lambert's talk, therefore, about "shifting positions" is a mere play upon words, and reminds one of the fabled individual who, while he "strained at a gnat" could very easily "swallow a camel."

Relative to my real or supposed success in the forensic arena, during my ministry with the saints—and as to whether "all this success and victory," of which Elder Lambert speaks, was "the result of Elder Bays' ability as a man," I have nothing to say beyond the fact that the failure of my opponents

(if they failed) was due, as I now believe, to their ignorance of Mormon theology, rather than to a lack of ability in forensic contest. Of this I am fully assured from my own examination of the other side of the question. I am led to make this statement out of a deep sense of duty to all concerned.

And now, in conclusion, I can but repeat what I have before stated, namely, that in my future efforts I shall vigorously assail what I believe to be fundamentally wrong, regardless of what my opinions in the past may have been,—and, having once found myself in error, I am frank to admit that it is possible—although not probable—that I may be in error now; and if that error can be shown to my satisfaction, I shall be only too glad to exchange error for truth.

What is truth? and where may it be found in its apostolic simplicity?

The truth, as I understand it, is that only for which I wish to contend.

Fraternally yours,

D. H. BAYS.

BENAN, IOWA, Nov. 5.

Editors Herald.—Since our reunion at Woodbine I preached a few times in Little Sioux district, after which I labored three weeks in Pottawattamie district; but the farmers being busy, I found it inconvenient to hold meetings every night, so I visited the people at their homes and endeavored to do some good in that way, and unfortunately the stormy weather prevented meetings two Sundays, though the preacher was on hand, but the people living at a distance did not turn out, yet I got in several sermons in different places and trust I did no harm.

On the 23d of October I went to Deloit and held a series of meetings, and on the 30th Elder Turner kindly took me in his buggy to Benan, where I preached that night after a drive of thirty-five miles, and have continued preaching here until last evening, when I closed for a rest until Sunday, when I expect to resume my work. It was my intention to have gone to Auburn, but last night I received word from President Carrol that diphtheria was raging there and the town council had closed all public meetings for the present.

I now think of going to Coalville, in Webster County, but shall wait advices from there. I found the saints generally in the faith and endeavoring to let their light shine. If there are any difficulties between brethren I did not see them; still there is room for improvement, and will be until we have attained "to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." I found numbers of outsiders who were persuaded that the doctrines were true, as measured by the Bible and reason; but are not fully persuaded to take hold of the rod of iron and follow it until they arrive at the tree of life. They will defend it, and some even aid it liberally by their means. Some excuse themselves that they cannot live it. I tell them God has promised divine aid, and is merciful to us in our weakness, and that he has decreed that "no temptation shall befall his children but what he will make a way of escape from the same;" and, "if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." And that he will plead our cause when we manifest that "godly sorrow for sin" "that worketh repentance." Another class see the faults and shortcomings of saints, and express themselves as good, morally, as some of them. I tell such that God holds everyone responsible for his own life, and will reward accordingly; and he who refuses to obey the gospel because some of the professed followers of Christ are inconsistent and unfaithful, is blind to his own interests, and must come short of eternal life, unless he repents and does his heavenly Father's will.

I am persuaded there are hundreds, if not thousands, that are convinced of the truth in Western Iowa, but the pleasures and honors, and perhaps cares of the world, stand between them and their duty; but I trust, and sometimes think, God will speak to them by his judgments in such a manner that their ears will tingle, and their hearts will relent, and they will turn unto him and be partakers of salvation, even though they may not attain unto those things they might have received had they followed their convictions when first the Holy Spirit opened their eyes.

Their neglect to obey does not lessen the responsibility of Latter Day Saints; but it should make us diligent, and careful to walk circumspectly, lest the blood of our fellows stain our hands, and we come under the great condemnation. I cannot boast of great success nor of great congregations; but I can say the word is listened to very attentively, and I believe appreciatively, and it may be some will gather in the wheat. My aim is to convince the sinner and encourage the saints. I am still in the war, and expect to be while strength is given, and am glad to learn of the progress of truth in all quarters.

Yours sincerely,

CHARLES DERRY.

ARTHUR, Ont., Nov. 2.

Editors Herald:—Bro. John Taylor with Bro. S. Tomlinson and myself effected an organization of saints at Arthur last evening. A. McMullen is at present acting as president, but Bro. G. Bushland will be ordained a priest in course of a few days, and doubtless will be chosen president with present president as teacher and Thomas Berry as deacon of branch. There will be over forty in this branch, and bright intellectual people they are too. May God keep them united and humble, that Satan may never enter his infernal wedges of division. Elder S. Tomlinson has been laboring with me the last ten days, doing a good work; at present he is afflicted. Will saints remember him in prayer, please? Elder J. L. Mortimer bade good-bye to wife and saints to-day; off for his mission field. May God sustain him with his Spirit; he is to labor in North Bruce.

I expect to leave this noble band of saints in a few days and strike out into the broad fields and open up the work. It seems a sad parting, when I think how kindly I have been cared for here the past ten weeks. The Saints are endeared to me beyond my own relatives. I love to preach the gospel to the world; it is getting plainer every day, and Father is lending me his Spirit. I expect to labor at Brighton, Ontario, shortly. Will saints remember me in common with all missionaries, that I may have success.

May God bless all these grand saints I am leaving and prevent the adversary from destroying their souls.

Yours in bonds,

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Nov. 4.

Editors Herald:—The gospel is slowly winning its way in this north land. I have baptized two of late: one seventy-three and the other sixty years of age; one a well to do merchant doing business in this city, the other a farmer living about four miles in the country. Both are men of good repute and will be a help to the work. The eight men from Utah are still here preaching on the streets, but are not likely to set the city on fire with their style of preaching. I met them a few days ago and had a talk with them in regard to discussing the difference between us, and they refused point blank; said they would discuss the principles of the gospel with any of the sectarians, but would not discuss with me. This proves that I was right when I told the people on the street that they would not meet the issue, but would back down. "How are the mighty fallen," and what a contrast is presented in this from the early position of the church and the one occupied by the Reorganization. But I don't know as I blame them, for they know full well what the result would be. But I do blame them for representing a faith they cannot defend. I wonder how many of the ministry of the Reorganized Church would have left home last spring if the heads of the church had said to them, Don't meet the men from Utah in public debate, meet anyone else, but don't meet them. How is it, brethren, would you have went with such instructions? I trow not.

I have written several articles of late for the papers, showing some of the differences between the two churches, and the effect will be far reaching; will be like casting "bread upon the waters," it will return after many days. The cities are a hard place to spread the gospel; only a few want it. About the only way to get a hearing is to go upon the street corners and either by good singing or instrumental music attract the attention of those passing, and then it wants a good speaker to hold them. I think the time is near when we will have to do this. But perhaps not to any extent until the ministry receive their endowment, for it will need to be preached in the power of the Spirit of God to take effect. I mean by this that it will be with that power that the enemies of truth cannot stand before it.

I called upon one of the preachers of this city the other day and had quite a long talk with him, and have since then written him a letter in regard to our talk and the position held by him and others that I have heard preach of late. The reason that I called upon him was that I went to one of the missions in the city and he was the speaker; among the things said was the following: All the churches of the day are in apostasy, and he did not know what to do with his own church (Congregationalist) only to smash it up; said that he was willing to receive the truth, let it come from whence it would. I thought that a good chance to test his honesty, so went to see him. He took the position that repentance was not for the Gentiles, hence not for us; and when I gave him some Bible quotations showing that repentance was one of the principles of the gospel and binding upon all, Gentile as well as Jew, he said that he did not want to talk any more. I then told him why I had called upon him and referred him to what he had said in his discourse about receiving the truth, let it come from whence it would. His reply was, Not from you. I know who you are; you are a Mormon, and I won't receive it from you. The old adage holds true, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" and they are not willing to come and see. I am still alone, but looking for Bro. Roberts every day, and expect that he will stop a few days while on his way to the southern part of the State. I am still hopeful and expect to continue till the end. E. A. STEDMAN.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Nov. 3.

Editors Herald:—I came to this city October 28; am assisting Bro. R. E. Grant in preaching the gospel to the one hundred thousand human beings who live here. I got here in time to see the last two days of the great carnival. All the city turned out in the general hilarity. Factories were closed and stores were shut up, and the whole town joined the carnival picnic. Great crowds came pouring in on excursion trains from cities and towns in this and surrounding States. The merchants, saloonists, and the places of amusement seem to have gotten the most returns from the carnival. It was also a great time for the politicians, and all the bright political stars from all directions were here.

The streets were crowded and jammed with people, who were dressed in a great variety of grotesque and comic costumes. Every possible kind of mask was used. There were hundreds dressed to represent demons with red tights, horns, and tails. Bands were playing everywhere, horns were blowing, and the air was filled with noises. In the evening there were many beautiful parades. The most handsome feature, perhaps, of the carnival, and it is said the most beautiful creation ever seen in the city was the magnificent flower parade on Wednesday afternoon. Its novelty was only exceeded by its beauty, which was paramount to everything else. Words are inadequate for a description. . . .

The city is now quiet. The sounds of tabret, psaltery, and instruments of seven strings which filled the nights with their wanton melody, has ceased. The people have returned to their reason and are pursuing their usual avocations. They are worn out and are resting. There is every reason why they should be weary, as one night in that great jam was enough to tire out an iron man.

One man who lives here said that the Devil had full control in Grand Rapids, that she was sold and delivered to him; and that, therefore, it would be impossible for the gospel to make any impression upon them. It certainly looked as though he spake the truth. In a word, the whole occasion was wildness run wild, madness run mad. But I think there must be at least "ten righteous" within the city, or God would destroy it.

The branch of the church here numbers about ninety members, and are doing their best to keep the Lord's commandments and live Christian lives. Elder E. K. Evans is their pastor and is very efficient. I have preached three times since my arrival. On Sunday the basis of my talk was the lessons gleaned from the prevailing wickedness, and love of pleasure exhibited here during the past week. We are surely living in the time of the end. Next Tuesday Bro. Grant and your humble servant will begin meetings in a new hall at the north end of the city. We usually have good crowds with good attention.

I may remain here for a month. I am busy about all time. I am trying to learn to rest while I work, which Jesus taught when he said, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." We missionaries sometimes get weary in the work, but never of it.

Bro. Briggs was here last Friday, but went to South Boardman to attend conference of the Northern Michigan district. Bro. Leonard Scott was at Clear Lake when last I heard from him.

Yours in gospel bonds,
JAMES M. BAGGERLY.

SNICARTE, Ill., Nov. 5.

Editors Herald:—I came to this place from Beardstown yesterday, Bro. Curry bringing me as far as the Sangamon River ford, where I was met by Bro. Avery, whose horse and wagon furnished transportation the balance of the journey.

The Baptist church in this place, which had been secured for the evening with the understanding of privilege of continued meetings, was filled, largely by the curious as we apprehend, and with expectation of listening to "strange doctrines," in which they were certainly disappointed, and very evidently surprised at hearing Jesus Christ instead of Joseph Smith exalted, his moral precept and example, and, inferentially in closing, his religious precept and life pattern extolled and defended. Many were surprised, we were told, at our use of their Baptist pulpit Bible, instead of a "Mormon Bible" of our own. Help from the Lord was granted; the people were evidently not only surprised, but the majority greatly pleased; those whose word controlled the use of the church even indorsing the sermon; but—they had concluded upon consultation "that it was not wise nor for the best interests," etc., etc., "to grant farther use of the church." And although Jesus Christ and him crucified alone was preached, the Bible alone indorsed and sustained, yet common report, the fear of what might be said if farther opportunity was granted, the evident satisfaction of the unusually large congregation, and the success of the meeting was instinctively felt by the managers to be a success that the Baptist Church could not, in a dogmatic or sectarian sense appropriate, hence the necessity of forestalling possible division or disaster.

From the ordinary superficial standpoint they may have thought their action a wise one; the sequel proved—so far as last night's demonstration is concerned—a popular mistake. Loud and long and many were the protests made at the close of the meeting at the action of the church managers in excluding the stranger. The pastor's absence was made one of the excuses; but that, with the other apologies, were universally pronounced "thin," and evidently stamped with insincerity and fear of a religious competition that might prove dangerous if not disastrous to the Baptist monopoly of affairs in the town, that being the only church in the place.

The town hall is to be secured for us tonight, with a probability of its being packed. This is the first advent or introduction of the gospel as taught by Jesus Christ to the people of this immediate country, or I think in Mason County.

Prior to coming here we had been preaching nearly two weeks at Beardstown, Illinois, every evening in Library hall, which had been secured by Brn. Shoemaker, Bartlett, and the friends. Newspaper notices and "dodgers" announcing our meetings were provided. The crowds were not there, though the large hall was well filled on Sunday evening, October 24. Last Sunday the Holiness people managed to get it away, and were rewarded with a stormy bad day and night—an ill wind which blew good to us—as the rent was saved and needed rest came to us. Brn. Shoemaker and self attended Methodist church in the evening, drawn there in part by the subject announced, which we thought indicated a probability that we or our meetings were to be discussed. If, however, that was intended, it was omitted from the short discourse to a decidedly abbreviated audience. The pastor, however, came immediately to us at the close—"glad to see and meet us," etc., "had seen notice of our meetings," etc., but he didn't come to hear at any time.

The 25th, we opened the door of the church and performed the burial rite of baptism for four precious souls; and the day before coming here baptized three more—seven in all—all adults with exception of the twelve year old daughter of Bro. Avery, Sen. The Spirit was present at the water side as we addressed briefly, and under the Spirit's power, the quite large, intelligent, and respectful crowd that had gathered at the bank of the Illinois River. Many were and are still interested, some at the very door, and will surely unite with us. Many friends for the cause were made, and prejudice and misunderstanding allayed and corrected.

The trouble in Beardstown was first started by our irrepressible brother, John S. Robinson, who although a traveling man engaged in secular affairs, hunts for and finds time to get in work semi-occasionally in the interest of the best and only—from an absolute standpoint—defensible religion in the world. Business deals opened the way for gospel opportunity, and Bro. John of course promptly stepped in; and Bro. Shoemaker being a Disciple or Campbellite, stuck to his man and "fought to a finish" with the usual result. Bro. S. was baptized by Bro. Robinson, next his wife; they got hold of Bro. Bartlett, a leader in Congregational affairs and a church elder, Sunday school superintendent, etc., a man of universal "good report." It ended with a visit to St. Louis last spring—just to look us over—we baptized him; and like the Eunuch in Philip's case, he "went on his way rejoicing" even unto this day, confirmed especially in our late visit, as we all were and are by the signal favor which God bestows upon those who are willing to cooperate with him in following his perfect law and counsel.

In closing I wish to add that since our work was about finished for the present at Beardstown, and after appointment was out for this place, I made the discovery that we are over the boundary line and into the Northern Illinois district. I believe, and it is the universal desire of the saints at Beardstown and the people here, that the boundary line be again changed so as to include this territory in the St. Louis district, as that is by far their most natural, easiest, and most accessible point for conference; or, so far as present indications are concerned, ministerial help.

There are fourteen of our number already in Beardstown, and more to follow if the work is at all wisely cared for. I had written to Bro. White for counsel and instruction ere I discovered that we were in Bro. Lake's territory; I will address Bro. Lake, however. We are willing to be forgiven for our mistake, if it is so held; but hope that Bro. Lake and the Northern Illinois district authorities will either make or consent to an arrangement whereby these people and our farther interests may not be neglected.

In gospel bonds,
M. H. BOND.

LITTLE SIOUX, Iowa, Nov. 6.

Editors Herald:—Since my last communication I have been quite busy preaching throughout the district allotted to me at General Conference. Bro. Crabb and myself did tent work at Dunlap, Correctionville, and Smithland, with varying success, enjoying good liberty as a rule; and in most of the places named the closest attention of the people. Much prejudice was removed and friends made for the cause. Since the reunion at Woodbine I have held a series of meetings at Moorhead with fine audiences in attendance, and trust the results were beneficial to both saint and sinner. The saints and people at Moorhead know how to encourage a speaker by furnishing an audience that should be an inspiration in itself. I have been here a week to-day. Busy times have reduced the audience to a small crowd, but then the farmers must take care of their crops, and to do so must work early and late before the snows of winter drive them to the shelter of their homes. I have an active campaign mapped out for the balance of the conference year, and will say to the saints of Galland's Grove district that I will spend some time with them, but may not be able to start before the first of the new year; but trust that they will be patient and not censure, although I may not do all they would like to have me. Up to date I have preached about one hundred sermons and baptized forty-four (thirty-two at the reunion), and find as I look back over the year's work that the Lord has blessed me abundantly, for which I thank him, and trust that I may prove myself worthy of blessings in the future.

I have just concluded the reading of the latest expose of Mormonism by our whilom brother, D. H. Bays; and I must say that having carefully read it from preface to end, that I find it one of the weakest efforts that has ever been made against the "marvelous work" that I have ever read. I cannot in as limited a space as this letter notice all of the weaknesses of the book, but will mention a few, so that one can form an idea of the general weakness and unfairness of the writer. After reading the preface, which declares that "We take up each proposition as it is presented by its friends, and then proceed to answer and refute their arguments in a fair, straightforward manner," you may judge of my surprise when I found that in the body of the work quotations were garbled, whole qualifying clauses left out, and the position of the church that he is endeavoring to tear down falsely stated in many instances. He denies in his letter in Herald, in reply to Bro. Lambert, that he has been endeavoring to tear down that which he had formerly assisted in building up; but on page 34 of his book he states that "the work in hand is destructive rather than constructive," and in this destructive work he has been engaged ever since he left the church in '92.

As a sample of his garbled quotations I will refer to page 406. He quotes the first few paragraphs of section 102, stopping at the word "hands"—cutting the sentence in two at a comma, leaving out the statement that they "are full of all manner of evil," then quotes and do not "impart of their substance, as becometh saints," then leaves out the clause "to the poor and afflicted among them," and then tries to show that it was Joseph Smith's avarice, that it was to "the leaders" that they had not imparted their substance, then cries "Shame." But a man who can so unblushingly prevaricate and misrepresent ought never to cry "shame."

He asserts that because the saints in 1835 placed a declaration of unbelief in and denial of the practice of the doctrine of polygamy, and gave as the reason for making the denial in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants that their enemies had accused them of the crime, that that was prima facie evidence that they were guilty. But when in a letter—which he answers in the latter end of his book—Bro. T. E. Lloyd, of Independence, asks him if because the former-day saints were accused of crimes and so forth, if they were for that reason to be considered guilty? he answers:

"In answer to this charge allow me to suggest that it may be well for you to prove that Christians, generally, were guilty of the abominations you charge upon them, before you make it the ground of an apology for this latter-day abomination. I deny the charge most emphatically, and declare that it cannot be maintained. That their enemies charged them with immorality and crime is conceded; but that they were guilty as charged, Christians everywhere deny."—Page 444.

In one of Bro. Bays' favorite expressions, "comment seems useless." And to show the desperate straits to which the man is put to prove something, I will refer in conclusion to his denial of the fulfillment of the prophecy of the rebellion. In regard to the clause, "Slaves shall rise up against their masters," he says: "Latter Day Saints claim, however, that the proposition which says, 'slaves shall rise up against their masters,' was also fulfilled. But this is not true. The negroes of the South did not rebel against their masters; neither were they marshaled and disciplined for war, as the prophecy declares. After the famous emancipation proclamation of Abraham Lincoln there were no more 'slaves' in the South—they were all now freed men. These freed men rushed to the support of the government, and were enlisted into the Union army. But no slave ever rose against his master, and no slave was marshaled and disciplined for war. This may, therefore, be set down as failure No. 1."—Page 429.

How profound. Comment seems useless. Let the reader draw his own conclusions of the mental acumen of the man who advances such an argument as that.

In speaking of the "remnants" of the revelation, he says, "In the next place the 'remnants,'—and that may mean anything, possibly the shattered and demoralized Southern armies,—were to 'vex the Gentiles with a sore vexation.' Nothing of the kind was ever known to have occurred, and that makes failure No. 5."—Page 430.

How is that for "taking up each proposition as it is presented by its friends?" Then he says that the revelation asserts that "the Saints were to stand in holy places, that this, they should occupy their 'inheritances in Zion,' and were not to 'be moved.' But as they were driven from Independence (Zion) and from Jackson county, in November, 1833, and all other Mormons from the State in 1839, this may be regarded as failure No. 6."—Page 430.

Now you have the style of the man, and the false premises from which he argues, and the utterly false conclusions drawn from them. And after all this display of wisdom (?) and honesty (?) he says, "tried by the infallible rule, tested by the touchstone of eternal truth, the organic structure of the Mormon Church is shown to be a failure and a fraud. One thing only remains to be done—write in flaming letters the Belshazzaran inscription, 'WEIGHED IN THE BALANCES, . . . AND FOUND WANTING,' and nail it above the door of the Mormon superstructure, that he who runs may read."—Page 111.

I only regret one thing, and that is that Elder Bays states that he was a minister in the Reorganization for twenty-seven years. I use another of Elder Bays' favorite expressions, "I repeat with emphasis," it is the thinnest thing I ever read.

Yours,

H. O. SMITH.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Nov. 9.

Editors Herald:—On the 15th of October I baptized three persons at Runnells, and Bro. J. F. McDowell and I confirmed them. The next day Bro. George Jamison took me to Milo, Warren County, near where we began a series of meetings the same evening at the Concord schoolhouse, and continued for nearly three weeks, preaching twenty sermons with the divine blessing attending. It is there that Bro. and Sr. Robert Bare, Bro. and Sr. Shoppell, and Bro. William Griffin have been guarding the interests of the work opened up by Bro. Kephart some two years ago, and all of whom are firm in the faith and hope of the gospel.

On Sunday, October 31, Bro. Bare was made glad in witnessing the baptism of his brother-in-law, Bro. Elias G. Agard, and Bro. Griffin was happily surprised to have his wife and daughter Ivie join him in the journey to the celestial city. Ivie, although but sixteen years of age, moved out to do the Master's will with an intelligence and independence of demeanor becoming those of more mature years, and even now discerns the gospel wheat from the chaff of sectarian teaching. Also, at the same time, Sr. Mina Vansyoc was baptized; she is a lady of uprightness and independence of character, a school teacher, and fears not the opposition of the world for the Master's sake. Truly an example worthy many older ones in the work, and who have some experience. How many there are who now cower before the battle, but who expect to show up on grand parade just after the war and the battles are won, and lay their claim for laurels and the crown! But lawful labor precedes rewards as surely as the substance casts a shadow in the sunlight. In this latter campaign the election at the last is to those only who make the race on merit. Thank the Lord for this; God is rewarder and judge.

Nine Brighamite representatives from Utah have lately dropped into the city of Des Moines on a tour of proselytism. Two of them attended our services on Sunday. I was greatly blessed in reviewing the past perversions of the faith and presenting the legal phase of the successorship in the Presidency of the church; the law used being Mal. 3:6; James 1:17, 18; Acts 10:34; Doctrine and Covenants 2:1; 42:7; 49:3; 17:17; 43:1, 2. A comparison of the action of the conference at Amboy, Illinois, 1860, with the proceedings of some at Winter Quarters, December 5 and 24, 1847. The Utah elders did not stay after the services to applaud my effort! Am looking up this recently instituted propaganda in the city this week. Pray for us.

BYER, Ohio, Nov. 9.

Editors Herald:—I have been laboring in the West Virginia mission since August, except while holding an eight days' meeting in Perry County, Ohio, near New Lexington, a new opening. Two gave their names for baptism; there was not water there at the time—and has been none since—sufficient for the ordinance, but the rain is now descending, and I hope soon to return and find "much water" there. I have been laboring in West Virginia, under the direction of Bro. G. H. Godbey, and find him doing a good work in his mission; he is an efficient laborer and a pleasurable comparison. Persecution is very strong and the "heathen rage." One impudent wretch came to the window, and putting his ugly face in where a pane of glass had been broken out, began to mock while I was preaching, and in a short time returned and repeated it. The next night a mob came and rocked the schoolhouse, but were soon repulsed by the good citizens of the place. The night following they came again and repeated the work, and also attacked the saints on the way home with eggs, stones, and revolvers; but no harm was done. This occurred at Mt. Nebo, Roane County, West Virginia; quite a recommendation for civilization, isn't it? Some of the parties are known, and have been arrested, as I have been informed by Bro. Godbey. I baptized one excellent young lady there, and her father and mother have given their names for baptism when I return on the 14th inst. I expect to labor in this mission till Christmas, then return by the way of Perry County, Ohio, and baptize W. H. Stockman and wife, unless some of the brethren in the Ohio mission can get there sooner. I send herewith a testimony of healing, which is quite remarkable, and which is causing some sensation.

Yours in bonds,

J. L. GOODRICH.

CREOLA, Ohio, Oct. 30.

On the 14th day of October, A. D. 1897, while engaged in a series of meetings at Mt. Nebo schoolhouse, near Higby, West Virginia, in company with Elder Charles Moore, of Bellgrove branch, I was called upon to administer the ordinance of anointing with oil and laying on of hands with prayer, by the father and mother of little Lena Cadle, seven years old, who had been afflicted with some spasmodic trouble some two years ago, and which left her arm on the left side nearly paralyzed, or what I judge the doctors would call chorea, from what the parents told me and from what I saw myself. She had violent spasms, which caused her to froth at the mouth, and which drew her face and limbs out of shape; and the watchcare of two persons were required to keep her in bed. She seemed to have little or no controlling power over the set of muscles in the left arm, and every movement was unnatural, and she could not grasp an object without first a muscular jerking, and several attempts to get a firm hold, the will seemingly having no guiding power. In a short time she went to her mother, and to her father, and to me, extending the arm, and taking hold of objects with little difficulty, and overjoyed with her blessing and recovery.

J. L. GOODRICH, } Elders.
CHARLES MOORE, }

We, the father and mother, and who are not members of the church, feel grateful to our heavenly Father for his goodness and for the blessing he has conferred on little Lena, and subscribe our names to the truth of the above statements.

R. P. CADLE, } Parents.
SARAH CADLE, }

BAY VIEW, Wash., Oct. 27.

Editors Herald:—Your statement in last Herald as to the advisability of the saints heeding the advice or command, to gather into "the regions round about," has been exemplified in the movements and conditions of a number I know that have left "the regions" and moved to California, Oregon, and Washington, in hopes of bettering their condition financially; and I don't think there is one that has not lost money in so doing, and few if not all regret the step. The Lord surely knows and is willing to advise in these things we call temporal matters, the same as in spiritual things; but this I suppose the saints, the most of them, will have to learn by bitter experience. It may be wise to flee to the west, but as a rule not beyond the appointed lands. The wisdom of this will no doubt be more fully seen in the future.

As we now see the wisdom of a former command, "to buy up a certain country," many are now seeing very clearly by the things they suffer. May God give wisdom to his children and hasten their deliverance.

I commenced holding meetings here eight days ago; attendance and interest all that could be asked, but they seem loath to forsake the ways of their fathers. I am cared for by Sr. A. Campbell and others. My next address will be Heppner, Oregon. Will be pleased to hear from the saints.

HIRAM L. HOLT.

CANTON, Ill., Nov. 8.

Editors Herald:—Have held a three weeks' meeting here; the crowds have been small, but very fair, in fact more than the average for Canton. I have had two baptisms and two or three others are interested. The saints are feeling better, and we have organized a Sunday school, but it will need a good steady effort; victory will come in the end. The churches here are commencing revival services, but unless I am unable to read the signs, "an eye opener" is in store for them. The papers at least tolerate us. I succeeded in getting a long article in the Cantonian, and the editor has promised to publish more when he has space. An elder cannot always succeed to act all the time on the defensive, so I am trying the aggressive. One lady who is attending our meetings (who for thirty years has been a Baptist), after hearing two discourses, in which I touched on authority, said: "I am all torn up," "and he has just knocked my religious foundation from under me, but I expect I can come again." When I heard it I said, "Well, if you will keep coming I have no doubt but what you will get mended again."

I believe much can be accomplished here with hard work and self-denial. We have no difficulty to hold our own fort; but we have a little to do to storm the others; but we know that in the end "this hail shall sweep away their refuge of lies," and "these waters shall overflow their hiding place;" "for a consumption is decreed upon the face of all the earth;" for the kingdoms shall be broken in pieces and consumed by the kingdom that shall fill all the earth, "and stand forever." So we are encouraged to press the battle.

Yours in the one hope,

T. J. SHELDON.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Nov. 10.

Editors Herald:—The State Baptist convention has just closed at this place, and some of the difficulties that disturbed that organization in this State have been peacefully settled. We feel to congratulate our Baptist brethren. There seems to be a younger element in the convention that are working for better unity of churches in the State. I noticed that many of the delegates (preachers) used tobacco, smoked cigars, and spit tobacco all over the floor of the convention hall, causing an odor to arise that ought not to characterize such an assembly, especially of so-called God's servants. Over twelve hundred ministers were in attendance.

We are preaching every night; there seems to be some interest in the work here. My health is fairly good at present.

Bro. T. Jett has a good interest here among the Mexicans; congregations are growing. He preaches to them, and from the reports that come to me, the Mexicans are well pleased with Bro. Jett's efforts, and many are talking of being baptized—entire families in some instances. I am greatly interested in the Mexican work here, and will watch it closely and carefully. The following is the Baptist report of their Mexican work in this State to the convention just closed, which may be interesting to those interested in our Mexican work:—

"Great disaster has overtaken the feeble Mexican churches in Texas. They were turned over to the spiritual leadership of novices—men who had recently come out of Rome. In ordaining novices we have suffered the usual results of disobeying the Scriptures. There are two hundred thousand Mexicans in Texas. Many of them have practically cut themselves loose from Romanism. They are accessible and ready to hear the word. The board has chosen Bro. C. D. Daniel to give his time to work among the Mexicans. He seems a special gift of God for this service. He speaks the Spanish tongue well, understands the Spanish mind, and will have entire supervision of the work. He reports seven brethren at work, and is hopeful of seeing gratifying results from the labors given. Already there are many tokens of growth, and not a few baptisms. We hope this work will be prosecuted with diligence and persistence."

Will the saints of Southwest Texas please take notice that our district conference will be held at Pipe Creek, commencing November 26, at seven p. m., to continue over the 27th. Please make an effort to come, all that can. Two or three wagon loads are going from San Antonio. We expect a big time and a spiritual feast. Don't miss it.

Your brother in bonds,

H. P. CURTIS.

Sunday School Associations.

DES MOINES.

Convention met at Runnells, October 8, at ten a. m. District officers were all present. Reports were received from the following schools: Des Moines, Head Grove, Oskaloosa, Boonesboro, and Des Moines Valley. We were informed that two schools had been reorganized; viz., Pekay and Perry, the latter having a much larger attendance than heretofore. Blackboard work being used in the school was given as the reason for such an increase in membership. The treasurer reported: On hand last report $9.58; received since $6.53; paid out $10.40; balance in treasury $5.71. Mattie Hughes and H. A.

McCoy were appointed a committee to draft resolutions for new work in the association. The following resolutions were framed: 1. Resolved that each Sunday school prepare a paper of special Sunday school items, such as leading thoughts gleaned from the lessons and any important event that may occur in the school; these papers to be forwarded to the district secretary, from which a paper shall be prepared for and read at each convention. 2. Resolved that blackboard work be adopted in the various schools as far as practical. 3. Resolved that a Sunday school missionary be appointed to labor in the district, and that to furnish the means to meet all legitimate expenses, let each school hold a special session to be known as Mission Day, at which a collection shall be taken up for this purpose; also the missionary shall be empowered to take up collections at such places as wisdom may direct. The duties of the missionary shall be to organize schools in places where no schools are now held; also to make a canvass from house to house and introduce our literature. The above resolutions were laid on the table till next convention so that each one might carefully consider them before they were presented for final action. The afternoon was spent in discussing various subjects which had been arranged previously.

SOUTHERN MICHIGAN AND NORTHERN INDIANA.

Association convened at Clear Lake, Indiana, October 8, 1897, at 9:30 a. m.; Sr. J. H. Royce superintendent, O. H. Storey secretary pro tem., Samuel Stroh assistant. More attention was given to the sending of delegates than formerly, and reports were sent in from all the schools. An interesting program had been prepared by the superintendent and published in convenient form for distribution at the convention. The program consisted of the following topics: "I can't" not excusable, Mrs. Ella Houseman Davis; "What any crayon may do," G. F. Weston; Question, Superintendents, how do you determine whether the day's lesson has been generally understood or not? "Minister and Teacher compared," (a) as to duty, G. A. Smith; (b) as to influence, Mrs. M. L. Corless; "Advantages of a graded system of work," S. W. L. Scott; "A lesson illustrated," G. F. Weston. Bro. Weston not being able to attend, Bro. J. M. Baggerly was substituted for the subjects and charts assigned to him, and also substituted for the subject assigned to Elder S. W. L. Scott. The other topics were all treated upon by the persons to whom they were assigned. Several mottoes and lesson illustrations sent to the convention by Bro. Weston were by vote presented to the school at Flint, Indiana, and a vote of thanks accompanied by a collection of $2.45 from the convention sent to Bro. Weston for the same. I am partially informed that some literary exercises were given on the evening of the close of the convention. On motion the meeting adjourned to the day previous to the next district conference at Coldwater, Michigan.

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.
NEW REVISED EDITION.

The manuscript of this edition was carefully compared with the original authorized edition of 1835, which was adopted by a General Assembly of the church at Kirtland, and known as the Kirtland edition. Some typographical errors that crept into and passed through later editions have been corrected, and some omissions supplied.

The revelation on the late Civil War, the "Minutes of the General Assembly" of 1835, the minutes of the "Joint Council" of 1894, and the revelations given to the Reorganized Church to date, are all included in the volume. The "Lectures on Faith" are omitted, but may be published later in pamphlet form, or for those who may want them.

The concordance has been revised and enlarged, greatly aiding study and general use of the book. The concordance, and lists of names of persons and places mentioned in the revelations, are included in the volume.

Ready reference to the book is greatly facilitated by the substitution of figures for the old style Roman letters in section and page headings. The figures can be read at a glance.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

The Necessity for a Reorganization.

BY ELDER H. O. SMITH.

This tract sets forth and refutes the false claims and erroneous doctrines of the Utah Church.

It brings to light much of the teachings of Brigham Young and other founders of the Utah faction, and proves them and the present leaders to be at variance with and their organization a departure from the faith taught by the early church and its three standard books.

It also vindicates and maintains the general position of the Reorganized Church in succession.

A tract for the times. Just the thing with which to meet the arguments of Brighamite elders.

Forty-three pages; two for five cents; per doz., $3 cents.

THE CASE OF DR. WHITSITT AGAIN.

A PEACEFUL solution of what is known as the Whitsitt controversy, which has been raging for a considerable time in the Southern Baptist Church, is again hoped for in the near future. The main points in the attack made upon Dr. Whitsitt by some of his brethren in the Baptist denomination are thus summarized in the Chicago Standard: (1) That in an article contributed by Dr. Whitsitt to The Independent he had spoken of persons as Baptists who did not practice immersion, instead of using the more correct term, Anabaptist; (2) that in an article in Johnson's Cyclopedia he wrote: "The earliest organized Baptist church belongs to the year 1610 or 1611," thereby implying, so it was claimed, that there had been no churches with Baptist principles anywhere in the world before that date; (3) that in his book he omitted important clauses and sentences from his quotations from William Kiffin, Praise-god Barebone, Edward Barber, Henry Bullinger, and others; (4) that he borrowed from Dr. Henry M. Dexter quotations from authorities which are incorrect, and which Dr. Dexter wrongly interprets in his parenthetical comments, errors and incorrect explanation being all adopted without remark by Dr. Whitsitt.

These utterances and statements by Dr. Whitsitt have been strongly resented by many Baptists in the Southern Church, as our readers know, and the controversy arising has assumed such dimensions as to threaten a schism in the denomination. It was charged that Dr. Whitsitt was disloyal to his church and not fit to preside over a Baptist seminary of learning. Resolutions denouncing his course and calling for his withdrawal from the Seminary at Louisville were adopted by several Baptist associations in the South. This state of affairs has been a source of great anxiety to many prominent Baptists in the South and elsewhere, who have feared that the outcome of the difficulty would be a disruption of the church. With a view to averting such a calamity and restoring peace and harmony within the denomination, a number of prominent Baptists from various parts of the country came together recently at Nashville, and drew up an appeal for unity and fraternity which has been sent out to the Southern churches. One of the leading sections of this appeal, which we find in The Religious Herald of Richmond, is as follows:—

"We regard Dr. Whitsitt as a competent historian, but we would not, in this statement, shield him from any fair criticism for his opinion that the English Anabaptists first adopted immersion for baptism in or about the year 1641, and we protest that it is unbaptistic to criticize him as a Baptist for this opinion; for, if we accept said opinion as a test of Dr. Whitsitt's orthodoxy, we thereby make a new test of orthodoxy and surrender the time-honored Baptist principle of the Bible, and the Bible alone, our only guide in all matters of faith and practice. And as we depart from this old landmark into this new test, we come to the violation of another honored Baptist principle—freedom of speech; for Dr. Whitsitt is avowedly in 'hearty accord with his Baptist brethren in every distinctive principle which they hold.' He has not uttered one word contrary to the Bible or Baptist faith; he has simply expressed his opinion about a matter of history. If, then, he be displaced for his opinion, it will not be Dr. Whitsitt who is sacrificed, but our old Baptist principle of freedom of speech. We do not intend to argue the merits of the case, or to express any preference for Dr. Whitsitt, but to call the attention of our brethren to the fact that these two great Baptist principles of appeal to the Bible only and freedom of speech are in danger of being lost to us by this attack upon the president of our Seminary, if it be successful.

"It would be a calamitous error to condition faith and fellowship among Baptists upon a post-apostolic history or tradition, rather than upon the pure Word of God, and to restrict freedom of speech by the commandments of men. We are aware that many brethren honestly grieved at Dr. Whitsitt's utterances, are proceeding against him in all good faith, and do not intend an attack upon these two ancient Baptist principles. We deeply sympathize with their earnest spirit, but we deplore the fact that their actions will reach beyond their intentions, and if they strike down Dr. Whitsitt, for the causes alleged, they will also strike down these two old landmarks. What is true with reference to the history of English Baptists in 1641 will soon be brought to light, if it be possible to get at the real facts. We would accord brethren on either side of this discussion full freedom of speech; but we are opposed to either side making their opinions a test of Baptist faith and fellowship; we deprecate the passage of such resolutions by our associations and conventions as tend to establish this test of fellowship; and we call on our brethren to stand with us as we stand by these old landmarks."

The appeal is accompanied with a long statement from Dr. Whitsitt himself intended to remove certain misapprehensions which have gained currency throughout the South concerning his utterances. The first of these misapprehensions grew out of the fact that Dr. Whitsitt used the term "Baptist" to describe a sect who were not at the time "in the practice of immersion." The paper now submitted by Dr. Whitsitt sets out that the articles wherein this use of the word occurs dealt with a period of transition, when the English Anabaptists, having rejected infant baptism and holding to the doctrine of a regenerate church membership, had not yet emerged into the full light of New-Testament teaching. The paper further shows that the use of the term "Baptist" to describe the Anabaptists in this transition period "is well established among the best writers of Baptist history," and quotations are given in support of this statement from the "Bamfield Document," from Crosby, and from Robinson.

Of the much-discussed statement in the Encyclopedia article that "the earliest organized Baptist church belongs to the year 1610 or 1611," Dr. Whitsitt says: "Here I was speaking of English Baptists, and had their history exclusively in mind."

The remainder of the paper deals with the charge that Dr. Whitsitt has "garbled" his quotations in his "Question in Baptist History," and has exhibited unfairness as a historian.

Referring to these explanations by Dr. Whitsitt, The Standard (Baptist, Chicago) says:—

"It will be seen that Dr. Whitsitt practically admits some degree of haste or lack of care in his published utterances which perhaps gave some ground for criticism. Beyond this he will not and cannot go. When the attempt is made to impeach his orthodoxy on this slender ground, it can be nothing less than absurd. He has now done what his opponents demanded that he should do—namely, he has explained the slips and supposed slips in his book. They are not entirely excusable, but they are trivial. Let us hope that his admission will be received in a kindly spirit. We need to stand together and work together. If two people who have had a misunderstanding are resolved to go a little more than half-way, they are sure to meet—and nobody cares whether they meet in the middle or somewhere else. The meeting and the handshake banish the calculating spirit that measures concessions. We are sure that all that either side desires in this matter is an honorable and speedy settlement. If no further obstacle remains to prevent so happy a result—and we do not see any such obstacle—the sooner things are smoothed over the better for us all."—Literary Digest, Nov. 6, 1897.

The newspapers tell of a search that is being made in the Vatican archives for an official report by Pontius Pilate on the trial and crucifixion of Jesus. One of the New York dailies, taking advantage of the interest aroused by the statement, came out with what purported to be this official report of Pilate's, taking care to affix a copyrighted notice to the translation. A writer in a rival daily gives what seems to be the true history of this document. In 1883 Rev. W. D. Mahan went from this country to Rome and, with some assistance, translated the "Acts Pilati"—documents long known to scholars but considered unauthentic—and other MSS. of like character, which were published in the "Archko Volume" in Philadelphia, in 1887. From this volume this report of Pilate's has been taken in full!—The Literary Digest, November 20, 1897.

SINGULAR ACT OF THE POPE.

A Rome correspondent telegraphs that general surprise was recently caused by the unusual action of the Pope in creating three brothers named Economos Roman Counts. These gentlemen belong to the Greek Church and are Turkish subjects, so that it seemed curious that his Holiness should select them for an honor which few good Catholics have been able to obtain. It is now announced that the brothers Economos have shown their gratitude in practical princely fashion by sending the Pope 2,000,000 liras to be devoted to the work in which his Holiness takes such profound interest, the bringing about of a reunion of the Christian churches. The brothers Economos reside at Triest, and their fortune is estimated at 200,000,000 francs. Rome now confidently expects that they will become converted in due course.—Chicago Tribune.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION IN RUSSIA.

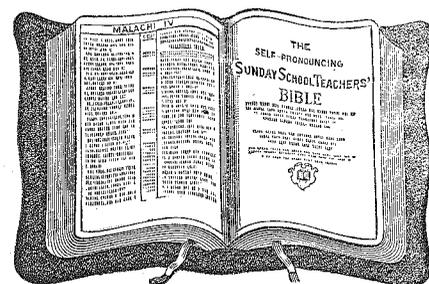

Czar Nicholas, before leaving St. Petersburg for Darmstadt, where he is now staying with his consort on a visit to his brother-in-law, the Grand Duke of Hesse, gave orders for the drafting of a decree, which he expresses his intention of signing immediately on his return to Russia, and which provides for the introduction of compulsory education, free of cost, for all classes of the population. This move on his part is encountering an immense amount of opposition, especially in government circles, where it is argued that the principal source and cause of Nihilism is the over education of the lower classes of the population, for whom no occupation in keeping with their intellectual attainments can be provided or found, and who are therefore so dissatisfied with their lot that their discontent takes the form of anarchy and nihilism.—En.

Following the action of Austria in demanding payment of claims due the Oriental railroad, an Austrian corporation, for transportation of Turkish troops during the late war, Russia has peremptorily warned Turkey that she must pay the war debt due Russia, and not use the funds paid her by Greece in increasing her navy.

ABOMINABLE TEACHINGS OF UTAH MORMONISM.

PAST TEACHINGS INDORSED BY PRESIDENT LEADERS.

SIGNIFICANT STATEMENTS IN THE LIGHT OF PRESENT CLAIMS AND MISSIONARY EFFORTS OF THE UTAH PRIESTHOOD.

REPRESENTATIVE men, great and small, of the priesthood of the Utah Church, are engaged in a missionary propaganda throughout the United States in general, also in other portions of the world; making the States the leading center of their operations.

The claim made by these men is: that they are the "true Latter Day Saints;" that they represent unadulterated Latter Day Saintism as taught by Joseph Smith the Prophet and other early elders of the church who were called to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ; that they are in affiliation with and are sent out by the original church; that the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints"—the lawful continuation of and in succession to the original church, and presided over by Joseph Smith, eldest son of Joseph Smith the Martyr, the legal and duly appointed successor to his father in the Presidency—is not the true church, but a departure, a faction of the original.

When confronted with statements of facts; viz., that Brigham Young, John Taylor, and Wilford Woodruff, as Presidents of the Utah Church, with other men at the head and in the ranks of that body, did both teach and practice polygamy, and make it a cardinal principle of their faith, and did also teach and indorse other corrupt practices;—these men now state that "polygamy is a thing of the past;" that it is not now an issue between the two churches; that since the issuance of President Woodruff's "manifesto" (so-called) polygamy is dispensed with; hence that the ground of popular prejudice and objection to them as a body has been removed, and that they now stand clear before the world. They also deny that other corrupt dogmas are now preached or practiced.

Acting upon this assumption large bodies of Utah elders are patrolling the country, distributing tracts, doing some preaching (such as are able) and creating quite a sensation, if nothing more.

Late issues of the Chicago Tribune have given accounts of the efforts of Apostles Francis M. Lyman and Matthias F. Cowley, who applied to Dr. John H. Boyd, Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of Evanston, Illinois, for the use of his pulpit, and who, according to the Tribune, claimed that the Doctor "should extend to them the same courtesy that other preachers enjoyed," and "proceeded to argue the point," etc., etc. They were to return to "hire a hall" and prosecute missionary work.

The Des Moines Leader, of November 7, has a lengthy account of "A Mormon Propaganda in Iowa." Kansas City, Minneapolis, and numerous other papers also contain accounts of the work of Utah elders, who teach some principles of Christianity, and who make claim to belief in Christianity pure and simple.

In the light of these facts, in the interests of truth, and that our readers and others may be informed, to some extent, concerning the true attitude of the Utah Church, we publish the statements which follow, uttered or written by their representatives, and published in their own papers.

It should be remembered that when pressed to answer, Utah elders confess belief in polygamy as a "celestial principle" essential to "celestial salvation;" hence the manifestly deceptive character of their efforts.

The subject matter will reveal, to some extent, the abominable character of their teachings; also that they have prostituted and departed from the faith of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

From the Utah Enquirer, October 19, in account of Utah Stake quarterly conference:—

Elder G. Reynolds took pleasure in testifying to the noble character of President B. Young and said he knew he was a prophet of God.

Apostle A. O. Woodruff next spoke. He said Pres. B. Young was not only the founder of this great institution, but that he was also the founder of this great commonwealth.

Saturday afternoon the first speaker at the stake conference was President David John. He felt that the saints ought to rejoice in their knowledge of God, his attributes and powers, making them in no way dependent on the opinions or scientific theories of men. We are the children of God, begotten as other children; that is, we also had a mother in the eternal world.

Apostle Woodruff regretted to see so many empty seats and so few young people in attendance. . . .

Supt. L. E. Eggersten explained to the [Sunday school] children the object of meeting with parents in conference. It was mainly to make children acquainted with the authorities of the church.

Supt. A. L. Booth led the children in questions and answers relating to the general authorities of the church.

From the Deseret News of October 8, account of General Conference:—

Elder John W. Taylor of the Council of the Apostles was the next speaker. He dwelt for some time upon the great value of the living oracles of the church, which, he said, were of more value than the written word. He quoted facts and statements embodied in the sacred history of past ages in support of this view. He then showed that God had required his people, at various stages of their history, to perform certain works. The expression of the divine will in this regard could not be conveyed in what had been written. It invariably came through his living oracles whom he had called and appointed as the channel through which his will should be communicated.

[Elder Francis M. Lyman also spoke on the "living oracles."]

President Wilford Woodruff spoke briefly upon the comparative value of the living oracles and the written word of God; also upon the privilege of the priesthood and saints generally to possess the spirit of revelation, and know the mind of God in respect to their individual duties.

From the Provo, Utah, Enquirer, of October 29:—

AS TO DOCTRINE.

PRESIDENT PARTRIDGE WRITES A LETTER ANSWERING THE QUESTIONS ASKED BY REV. WILKS IN OUR RECENT CONTROVERSY—ONE MINISTER'S REMARKS.

Editor Enquirer:—For some time there has been a little controversy, if it may be so called, going on through your columns, concerning "Mormon," or Latter Day Saint doctrine of what is generally termed polygamy or a plurality of wives, in connection with God the Father and Jesus Christ, his Son.

Now while I do not think it profitable or wise to enter into a lengthy discussion on these subjects, at the present time, it seems to me that some straightforward answers should be given to the question propounded by a reverend gentleman of this city.

As I understand the orthodox doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, there is nothing contained therein that we should not be willing that all men may understand when they are desirous of learning the truth for the truth's sake. Perhaps it would not be wise to impute to the reverend gentleman other than the best of motives for the articles he has written, and laying aside all reference to innuendoes or unkind and unchristian inferences, I will inform the gentleman, by your leave through your columns, some of my own sentiments regarding the subject to which his questions relate.

We have a few books which contain the exposition of principles accepted as orthodox by the church and which have been passed upon as such by the elders bearing the high priesthood and the church in General Conference assembled. The contents of these are books acknowledged as the doctrines of the church and the word of God. Other works have been published such as newspapers, periodicals, the Journal of Discourses, etc., for disseminating the word, defending our principles, and for the edification of the saints, which are not given as the word of God only so far as they conform to the doctrines contained in the accepted works. Inspired men speak as moved upon by the Holy Ghost; men may speak when not so moved upon, but when a prophet says, "Thus saith the Lord," the people are not justified in rejecting his testimony. So much by way of explanation.

The principle of plurality of wives was given by revelation from God to the Prophet Joseph Smith and was practiced by divine commandment, but the principle was rejected by the government of the United States and such pressure brought to bear upon its practice that after much suffering had been endured by the people, the Lord moved upon his servant, Wilford Woodruff, to proclaim the discontinuance of the practice. But no one need think that God has changed his mind as to the truth of the principle. Truth is eternal and will never change. Some people appear not to comprehend the difference in the belief of a doctrine and the practice of it. At one time, in the Hawaiian Kingdom, the officers of the government decided that the Mormon elders should not solemnize marriages for the reason that, "They believed in the doctrine of polygamy the practice of which was contrary to the laws of the Kingdom," although it was not shown that the elders ever advocated the practice in that country, but the reverse.

Now as to the question of Jesus being a polygamist or even a married man, I don't know of any revelation on the subject, but arguing from the intimate relationship existing between Jesus and some of his female followers and from the standpoint of marriage being a divine relationship of the sexes, I see nothing unreasonable to conclude that he had entered into the holy union, it being a divine institution and having never been spoken against by him. I am not prepared to say how far he may, or may not have entered into that holy relationship with the faithful women who loved him. But this with me is only a matter of speculation and not profitable to teach as doctrine.

The same arguments will apply to the other proposition of the Father having a female companion. I am free to say that for myself I cannot conceive of a father in the nature that we understand him to be the father of our spirits without associating with him a mother also, as is so beautifully portrayed by one of our most popular hymns composed by Sister Eliza R. Snow. Further than that I am not prepared to go at present.

It has always been to me a matter of wonder that men who profess to be followers of Christ should entertain such bitterness against their fellow men who are equally believers in his divine mission, simply because they differ in their views regarding the plan of salvation. I can easily understand how men may differ in their faith, and all be based upon the written word as contained in the Bible, for I am informed that "no one can understand the things of God but by the Spirit of God." Therefore, unless all are in possession of that Spirit there will necessarily be differences of opinions. But how men can reside among the Latter Day Saints, meet them, and shake hands with them, and may listen to their public discourses if they choose, and then make such barefaced false statements as it was reported to me a week or so ago that one gentleman did who pretends to the title of reverend, and to be a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, unless he is a depraved wretch and a wicked sinner himself, is something of a mystery. He is said to have stated to a woman of this city that the Mormons were all whoremongers, and that the temple which we have erected for holy purposes was only for immoral purposes. When men who ought to know us and be somewhat acquainted with our abhorrence of evil doing and especially of our sentiments regarding unchastity, it is very hard for me to believe in their honesty. Respectfully,

EDWARD PARTRIDGE.

1. In commenting upon the foregoing we shall presume, not upon the information of the reader, but that some who read are unacquainted with the facts concerning true and false Latter Day Saintism. Many of our readers are well informed upon those topics, but others are not; and it is important that the real status of questions involved be comprehended.

2. The "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" was organized on the 6th of April, 1830, by Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, and others. It was organized by divine commandment and authority, made manifest and conferred by the revelations of the Holy Spirit and the ministrations of angels. The organization was brought about as a "restoration" of the church, in the latter days—the "dispensation of the fullness of times." It claimed to be a restoration of primitive Christianity, pure and simple; basing the claim upon the statements of the Holy Scriptures concerning the departure of the early church into apostasy and the restoration; also upon the facts of history; both of which show that during the period that followed the days of Christ and the apostles there had been a departure, an apostasy, from Christianity; that the early Christian Church had departed from the faith to that extent that complete transgression and spiritual darkness ensued, involving a loss of authority to minister for God; that said condition of apostasy continued during the Dark Ages and on, until with the developments of the Reformation there came a degree of light, which through the work of the Reformers and of others prepared the way for civil and religious liberty and an authorized restoration of a gospel dispensation, with apostolic authority to again build up and establish the church, that the gospel might be preached in all the world as a witness before the second advent of the Messiah.

It will be seen from this brief statement that the church did not make claim to "apostolic succession" through any continuing body or sect; but claimed a restoration of apostolic authority, in contradistinction to the claims of Greek or Roman Catholics, or of Protestants, or others.

3. The recognized standards of authority by which the church was to be governed are named in the following revelations given to the church in February, 1831, through the prophet, Joseph Smith:—

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach.—D. C. 42:5.

Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church; and he that doth according to these things, shall be saved, and he that doeth them not shall be damned, if he continues.—D. C. 42:16.

The three standard books, the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, were adopted by the church in general assemblies, as standards containing the law of God and articles of government by which the church was to be governed.

A revelation to the church contains the following instruction:—

Neither shall anything be appointed unto any of this church contrary to the church covenants, for all things must be done in order and by common consent in the church, etc.—D. C. 27:4.

And again, every person who belongeth to this Church of Christ shall observe to keep all the commandments and covenants of the church.—D. C. 42:21.

4. The church was “regularly organized and established agreeably to the laws of our country, by the will and commandments of God.” (D. C. 17:1.)

Loyalty to civil governments was enjoined upon the church by the following and by other commandments and enactments by the church itself:—

Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet. Behold, the laws which ye have received from my hand are the laws of the church, and in this light ye shall hold them forth. Behold, here is wisdom.—D. C. 58:5.

5. The position of the church on the marriage relation is briefly stated in the following:—

And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, and said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder. They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement, and to put her away? He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it was not so.

And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery; and whoso marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery.—Matt. 19:4-9.

And were it not that I must speak unto you concerning a grosser crime [than pride], my heart would rejoice exceedingly, because of you. But the word of God burthens me because of your grosser crimes. For behold, thus saith the Lord, This people begin to wax in iniquity; they understand not the scriptures: for they seek to excuse themselves in committing whoredoms, because of the things which were written concerning David, and Solomon his son. Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord, wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me: thus saith the Lord of hosts.—Wherefore, this people shall keep my commandments, saith the Lord of hosts, or cursed be the land for their sakes.—Book of Mormon; Jacob 2:6, pp. 115, 116.

From a revelation given to the church in February, 1831:—

Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit; and if he repents not, he shall be cast out.—D. C. 42:7.

When the elders were sent on a mission to the Shakers, who did not believe in marriage, the following commandment was received:—

And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.—D. C. 49:3.

The following is also in evidence:—

Marriage should be celebrated with prayer and thanksgiving; and at the solemnization, the persons to be married, standing together, the man on the right, and the woman on the left, shall be addressed, by the person officiating, as he shall be directed by the Holy Spirit; and if there be no legal objections, he shall say, calling each by their names: “You both mutually agree to be each other’s companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives.” And when they have answered “Yes,” he shall pronounce them “husband and wife” in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by virtue of the laws of the country and authority vested in him: “May God add his blessings and keep you to fulfill your covenants from henceforth and forever. Amen.”—D. C. 111:2.

The foregoing is but a portion that might be cited to the same effect.

7. At the death of Joseph Smith, in June, 1844, the church had been built up by the preaching of the gospel of Christ, and the items of faith cited had been taught from 1830 to 1844. It then numbered about two hundred thousand (200,000) souls, with about thirty thousand (30,000) settled in and about Nauvoo, Illinois, the remainder being located elsewhere in the States, Canada, Great Britain, etc.

At the death of Mr. Smith, in 1844, Brigham Young, then president of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, assumed the leadership, and in 1847 and later succeeded in persuading about ten thousand (10,000) of the membership to follow his exodus to Utah; his subsequent membership being composed mostly of new elements, proselytes from Europe.

(The Reorganized Church began its work in 1851, and is composed of elders and members of the original church who refused to follow the leadership and exodus of Brigham Young. It also includes those subsequently baptized into the church in the United States, Canada, Great Britain, etc. Its President is Joseph Smith, eldest son of Joseph Smith, and the lawful successor to his father in the Presidency of the church. It has steadfastly adhered to the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, the standard books and containing the original faith. It denounced polygamy in Utah before Brigham Young publicly proclaimed the dogma. It has persistently opposed the false positions and practices of the Utah Church. It has been loyal to the laws of our country and is purely American in spirit. It has contributed largely to the education of public sentiment against polygamy in Utah, and has assisted the passage of legislation for its suppression, in the interest of all concerned.)

Polygamy was practiced by Brigham Young, by most if not all of his leading subordinates, and by others, without being clearly affirmed as a doctrine, until August 29, 1852, over eight years after the death of Joseph Smith, when it was openly proclaimed a church tenet, by Brigham Young. Using the prestige of Smith's name, Young declared that Joseph Smith had received a revelation in July, 1843, commanding the teaching and practice of "celestial marriage" or polygamy. He presented what he claimed was "a copy" of the original, stating that Emma, the wife of Joseph Smith, had burned the original. This the latter denied, maintaining until her death that her husband neither taught nor practiced polygamy; and that she was the only woman who bore to him the relationship of wife.

The assertions of Brigham Young, that Joseph Smith received the revelation on polygamy, rest upon the statements of himself and others guilty of the practice of polygamy, and who have also believed in and supported other and kindred evils.

Revelations given to the church in the days of Joseph Smith were regularly and officially examined and passed upon by all the quorums, each acting for itself, and by the general assemblies or conferences of the church. The revelation presented by Brigham Young was never so presented. Eight years after the date claimed for its reception it was forced upon the Utah people under the domination of Brigham's then practically absolute rule.

The teachings and life of Joseph Smith refute the statements that would fasten the authorship upon him, and prove them to be false. However, had Joseph Smith been the author of said revelation, that would not have authorized its acceptance. It was contrary to church articles, the fundamental principles of the faith.

8. Brigham Young, Jedediah Grant, Heber C. Kimball, and other Utah leaders believed in and taught the doctrine of "blood atonement," "Adam-God," etc.; that if a man was in danger of apostatizing from the church his soul would and should be saved by "shedding his blood;" that "Adam is our God and the only God with whom we have to do." Other teachings, with practices equally abominable, emanating from the lower regions, from Satan himself, were freely and repeatedly set forth by Brigham and his misguided associates. Sermons showing such teachings were published and sold by elders in the Utah Church at home and abroad. (See Journal of Discourses, volumes 1-4.) Volume 4 of the Journal, containing the worst features of such doctrines, is now on our desk before us.

Utah elders abroad, as stated, deny that such things should be mentioned. Some of the younger element may not know what their early leaders did teach. All, however, so far as we have seen or heard from them, when pressed to make direct unequivocal answer, confess belief in polygamy as "essential to "celestial glory;" hence adherence to it as a principle that must be practiced as essential to celestial "exaltation," is the logic of their position. Some we have questioned defend all other evils taught by Utah leaders past and as "conditional truths" "for their time and place." We know of none who unequivocally reject them as principles.

9. In the face of the foregoing matter,—a tithe of which only has been presented, both of utterances of Utah elders and of items of church doctrine and history that condemn them,—the reader may readily discern the true position of the Utah Church at present, and what the protestations of its elders amount to, and how far they are to be relied upon.

They are doing an evil work of misrepresentation. They are not the true, but false Latter Day Saints. Their organization has put the work of God to shame, and their present efforts would hinder its progress and altogether belie the Church of Christ, were it not for the work done and being done by the "Reorganized Church," the true church in succession. Courts of the land have decided the Reorganized Church so to be—the lawful continuation of the original church; also that the Utah Church is a departure and an apostasy therefrom.

10. The utterances quoted from Utah are far from pleasant reading. Some of them contain nothing short of blasphemy. Not even the name of the Almighty himself, nor that of the Christ, the Anointed of God, escapes the darkness and evil that has proceeded from the apostasy that prevails in Utah. It must needs be stirred if it is ever to be purified by the cleansing forces of truth that are to agitate the elements within it that assume to be wholesome and clean. No wonder it shuns investigation and counsels and demands of its priesthood that no discussions be held with elders of the Reorganized Church. Apostles Lyman and Cowley did not explain to Dr. Boyd, when demanding use of his pulpit and a hearing, that Elders of the Reorganization were denied such hearing in Utah.

11. Briefly then to close: Brigham Young is still a "noble" character among Utah Mormons. His past arbitrary tyrannical rule by which subordinates were taught to "obey counsel," follow "file leaders" and "do as told," together with his abominable teachings and practices and evil works in general, are still "indorsed" in Utah.

The counsel of leaders—"living oracles"—is still to be followed as of old, in preference to the written word—the law of God. Jesus taught men to live by what "is written." Brighamism substitutes other gods—the living oracles—for the God of holy writ, the God of Israel. President Woodruff talks about "individual" duties; but the members are to follow living oracles as they direct.

The apathetic condition of the people is hinted at. Other matter, not republished, showed several references to prevailing immorality among some of the people. Many of the Utah people are not guilty of such things, however, be it said in justice to them. However all are blinded and misguided by their leaders.

President Partridge's communication suggests much thought for comment, but the length of this article admonishes that a fuller analysis be left for the reader, who will hardly need to have its most repulsive features enlarged upon. His references to the "books" indorsed by the original church in the days of Joseph Smith the Martyr, are to be considered in the light of statements of the Utah Church authorities concerning "living oracles," who have denied the teachings of said books, both in theory and in practice. The Brighamite Church left out the article on "marriage" in its 1876 edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and substituted therefor the so-called revelation of 1843, which commands the practice of polygamy and other evils. The Journal of Discourses referred to by "President Partridge," contains reports of sermons delivered by Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, et al. on the subjects of blood-atonement, divorce, etc. Reference to these books has been called out by some clergyman who has been calling attention to the past and present attitude of Utah Church leaders.

Partridge says:—

But no one need think that God has changed his mind as to the truth of the principle. Truth is eternal and will never change. Some people appear not to comprehend the difference in the belief of a doctrine and the practice of it.

This, he states, in reference to polygamy. One may see from this where the church stands in regard to the delectable dogma. The Utah Church is true to its Ishmaelitic nature and tendencies. Like the son of Hagar it was sent into the desert, and is determined to stay there. The Lord declared that the rebellious were "not of the blood of Ephraim"—the children of promise and to whom pertains the work of leading and gathering Israel in the latter days. He also declared through the prophet, Joseph Smith, that the rebellious should be "sent away," out of "the land of Zion." They went, under Brigham Young, "to a salt land," as those "who departed from the Lord," who trusted "in man" and made "flesh" their arm." (Jer. 17:5, 6.)

Polygamy is a leading principle in Mohammedanism, the religion of the Ishmaelite with Mohammed his false prophet. It occupies its natural place in a system that is illegitimate and a departure from God and his law. The logic and philosophy of the situation is plain.

The depraved references to the Father and the Son, whom we worship, are the natural sequences or results of the spirit of Brighamism. We pass them by without further notice. They need little or no comment for any reader who would rightly judge the spirit that could prompt such blasphemies. We speak plainly; it is not a trifling matter with which we are dealing. We would be gratified could we have reason to believe the situation in Utah to be otherwise than it is.

We have not written in bitterness or harshness to the Utah people. Many of them are honest, but terribly deceived and misled. The truest work we can do for them is to show the real condition of affairs and thus assist in bringing about their deliverance. This is a part of the mission of the Reorganized Church, and it is trying to do it. It is its work to contend for, to vindicate, and make the faith honorable in the eyes of all people, that they may see the light and come to it.

We cannot credit men "with abhorrence of evil-doing" who sustain the Utah Church in wrong. We cannot and will not credit them with what they ask when their own statements prove their claims and assertions to be false and misleading. Out of their own mouths they stand condemned. We have presented but a small portion of the evidence against them, however.

Let the facts be submitted to a candid world.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. I. N. WHITE wrote a brief word concerning his debate at Kosoma, Indian Territory, of late date. His letter is dated "In depot at Springfield, Missouri, November 17," and is as follows:—

My debate at Kosoma, Indian Territory, that closed on the 14th inst. was a hotly contested one. The forty or fifty young saints that attended were greatly confirmed in the faith. They saw that they had embraced a faith that neither faded by time nor could be shaken by sectarian winds. I went into the debate with poor health, and came out feeling fine. It was marvelous to me. Bro. Toney will give items to Herald, which I hope you will find space for. I go to Clinton to-day, having been commanded to go there by the Spirit. The brethren at Standley, Indian Territory, are on the move, and Bro. Ellis Short's work in a financial way is commendable. He looks to the interest of the work.

BRO. E. A. STEDMAN, Minneapolis, Minnesota, November 16:—

This leaves me in fair health and feeling well in gospel work. Baptized two more last Sunday, the 14th, and have been having some very good meetings of late, and feel that the work is onward here in this mission. Expect

Bro. I. N. Roberts this way soon. Have not seen those men from Utah for some time. They keep clear of us here, and will not meet the issue.

BRO. D. M. RUDD, Bayard, Nebraska, the 11th inst.:—

I believe some here will soon obey the gospel. Six were baptized by Bro. Porter at Maxwell, October 24. Lots of work to do.

BRO. J. M. BAGGERLY, Grand Rapids, Michigan, November 16:—

I am still in this city, as the audiences seem increasing and the interest also. I have been preaching about every evening for two weeks. Last eve was rainy and gloomy, yet there was a good audience in the hall. It is hard to get Bro. Grant or Evans to assist me in the preaching, as they say the people wish to hear me. There seems to be a revival of gospel work here now. Bro. Grant and others have builded well. I like to preach here.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

ATTENTION is called to the practice of some who send notices for publication, to the effect that scattered members will be taken from branch or district records if not heard from within a specified time. Branches and districts are not authorized to take such action. A rule adopted by General Conference provides that names shall not be dropped from records except in case of removal, death, or expulsion. Members may be indicated as "scattered members" on the records of branches or districts; but in no case should such scattered members be dropped from the records as such.

Brethren who have business projects to advertise are respectfully and kindly referred to the advertising columns of the HERALD cover. We cannot publish such matter in the Letter Department.

BRO. E. E. WILLIAMS, of Marceline, Missouri, wrote on the 13th inst. that the few saints there need help from the ministry. They have a few ready for baptism. Some noisy and demonstrative "evangelists" had been laboring there, teaching the people of a Savior, but denying his teachings, etc.

BRO. COLUMBUS SCOTT has been doing some excellent literary work for the church, through the columns of the Des Moines, Iowa, Sunday Leader. The issue of that paper for the 14th inst. contains on one of its first pages a two and one half column article entitled, "The Latter Day Saints—A Historical Review—The Reorganized Church;" in which Bro. Scott places before the people of the State capital the main outlines of the faith of the church, and the scriptural evidences and general principles upon which it rests. He also points out the real status of the Utah Church. The distinctions made are clear and pointed, and such as are calculated to give the general public a comprehensive knowledge of the situation. Bro. Scott has done well, both in advocating the affirmative character of the faith and in defending it against the false position in which the representatives of Brighamism would place it. The daily Leader of the 14th, furnished us by Bro. W. H. Deam, of Lamoni, also contains a half-column interview on "the two churches," in which Bro. Scott had also stated the leading features quite clearly. Utah Elders had made great pretensions at the Iowa capital. Bro. Scott is on duty as a minute man, ready to act in his calling as a special witness.

Bro. H. A. Stebbins returned on the 17th from points in Kansas, where he had been preaching.

Pres. A. H. Smith, who for some time has been quite ill, is now much better, and able to be up and about his home, though not fully recovered.

Sr. Jane Heaton, of Basalt, Idaho, wrote of the labors of Bro. R. J. Anthony at that point. Utah Church authorities permitted him to preach twice in their church building, but refused further use of it and warned their people not to attend his meetings at a schoolhouse. However, some came and heard the word. She requests prayers in behalf of a Sr. Shoemaker and family, also for her own.

The Fairbury, Nebraska, Enterprise, recent date, has an item concerning leading points of difference between the Reorganized Church and the Utah Church; written by Bro. H. W. Belleville. The Jefferson County, Nebraska, Journal, has an item of similar import, from the pen of Bro. A. J. Meyers. May such good work continue.

We received, on the 19th, a report of the White-Chism debate, from one of the brethren. We may find room for it in next week's issue. However, brethren who send us matter should get it to the HERALD as early as to any other publication. We ask only what is right. The HERALD as the church organ, should, to say the least, receive as prompt treatment as any other. It is unprofitable to publish items of passing news after such items have appeared elsewhere, and become stale. We may publish the leading points in the report mentioned.

The discussion of creed revision closed on the 15th in the weekly meeting of the Chicago Presbyterian clergy. Dr. Gray closed the discussion, saying: "The prophet, after summing up a discussion similar to this, I judge, said: 'What is the conclusion of the whole matter?' What has been the conclusion here? Dr. Johnson says, 'Preach Calvinism.' I say evangelize our theological seminaries."

The Czar is to rebuild the burned Christian quarter at Canea, Crete, at his own expense; he is also to rebuild the Greek church, and to expend a large sum for the poor of that city. The Cretan provisional commissioner nominated by the great powers was objected to by the Sultan, whose objection was supported by Germany. The Russian Foreign Minister now insists that the commissioner must be of the orthodox Greek faith, and has so informed representatives of the powers.

The late conference at Washington between representatives of the United States, Canada, and Great Britain resulted in a better understanding on the Behring Sea question, also in the arrangement of a basis for future discussion of Canadian-American reciprocity and other questions affecting the relations of the two countries. Nothing definite was concluded, however.

The estimated loss to the South from the late yellow fever scourge is $60,000,000 in commercial transactions alone. To this must be added the loss incident to the general paralysis that followed the visitation.

A Havana special, dated the 16th, to the New York World states: that seventy-five per cent of the 400,000 helpless women, children, and other noncombatants in Cuba affected by General Weyler's policy, are dead; that despite the orders of General Blanco to feed the starving, the daily mortality of the remaining reconcentrados is frightful; that the rabid Spaniards, who believe that only by extermination of the Cubans can the war be won, openly challenge Blanco's statements of intention to feed and find work for those whom Weyler has not killed; that they also claim he is enforcing the barbarous concentration of the people as Weyler did; that the local press no longer publishes news from the small towns; that one of the last articles upon the hunger situation described it "as one of the most awful spectacles ever presented to humanity." Pando, the noted cruel Spanish general, is in the service under Blanco. General Weyler has reached Spain. In a public address he declared the Cuban pacificos to be enemies of Spain and defended his Cuban policy. Spanish authorities announce complete submission of Philippine Islands insurgents. General Lee has returned from America to Havana.

The 16th.—Sharp fighting is reported in the Maidan Valley, on the British-Indian frontier. The natives show persistent opposition and succeed in greatly harrassing British and loyal native troops. They are both courageous and treacherous in the cause of Islam. The 18th.—Sanguinary contests continue and are characterized by much bravery and daring on both sides. Many of the engagements are hand to hand conflicts.

German sailors and marines who took possession of Chinese forts in the province of Shansiun, found the Chinese soldiers well armed, with modern rifles and Krupp gun artillery. The action of Germany's marines is regarded in Chinese official circles as an act of war. A rebellion in Northern China against the Chinese government, is spreading.

The German foreign office is said to be striving to persuade the Porte to accept another batch of German military instructors. It is said to be well known that Germans in the service of the Sultan have made careful surveys not only of the Greco-Turkish frontiers, but of the Roumanian and Russian frontiers as well. A German-Turkish military convention is reported concluded.

Germany and Italy are said to have in contemplation a joint naval expedition to Brazil, if the latter fails to redress grievances of their subjects.

"All day long a fierce wind from the sea drove the waters of the Neva up the stream and flooded canals, suburban islands, and outlying portions" of St. Petersburg, on the 16th. Several bridges were swept away. The wind had changed and a great flood may be averted.

At the ceremony of swearing in the guards recruits at Berlin, Germany, on the 18th, they were warned by the Emperor that they might be called upon to fight an enemy within the empire.

The Sultan has complied with the demands of Austria, and the Turks will salute the Austrian flag.

Earthquakes in Bohemia and Saxony, November 16.

Two French expeditions have started from Ubanga, in Africa, toward the Upper Nile. One will distribute 2,500 rifles to local recruits.

Political unrest exists in Japan, against the administration of the present government.

The Budget committee of the Lower House of the Austrian Reichsrath has adopted the bill for provisional renewal of the compact between Austria and Hungary. One German Progressist protested against the decision.

Eight dead, 286 maimed, 17 injured for life—the season's record up to the 15th in the American game of football; statistics compiled by the New York World. It is not impossible that Americans may descend to a revival of the ancient Roman gladiatorial contests. Bull fighting from Spain may also be introduced in due time. The end of the century is bringing some unlooked for finishing points in the modern "world."

The London Chronicle of the 16th publishes the decision of the Pope on the Manitoba school question, confirming the Montreal Star's version, plainly setting forth that the Pope does not accept the Laurier-Greenway settlement. All accounts agree that the forthcoming encyclical "will maintain the rights of Catholics to denominational schools."

Spain, once invited to join the triple alliance, is said to have been objected to, recently, by King Humbert, of Italy, because the Catholic heads of Spain wish to see the temporal power of the church restored.

The Chinese government has inaugurated a postal system within its borders. It will be extended to interior points, and also be operated in connection with the Russian post offices along the Peking-Kiachta line, with the Hongkong and Macao post offices for the handling of mails; and with French Indo-China, etc. Later on Manila, Java, and Borneo will be attended to, and through Japan, Formosa will be reached. When the general system is developed these countries, it is expected, will be brought into the postal union.

Germany's occupation of the island of Kiao Chau, because of the murder of German missionaries, has caused the Chinese government to issue an official statement of the affair: The government had taken active measures to punish the offenders, but a German naval force took possession and ordered the native garrison to withdraw; China, in view of former friendly relations with Germany ordering her garrison to remain under strict control in adjacent positions. Kiao Chau is the key to one of the best harbors and ports on the Chinese coast, and is pledged to the use of Russia, with Port Arthur, in case Russia becomes involved in war. It is believed that Germany has acted to compel trade concessions from China, as in the general scramble for commercial advantages in the East she has failed thus far. Germany has promised to make explanations.

Uruguay is on the verge of war.

Many of the German newspapers comment unfavorably on the Emperor's late speech to the German recruits. Some of them ridicule it.

Soudanese troops in the British expedition to the lake country south of the equatorial provinces, assisted by Mohammedan tribesmen, revolted on the 19th, and were only subdued by a hotly contested engagement, October 19.

"Hundreds of people" were injured by lightning at Muncie, Indiana, the 18th; none seriously.

The city of London was swept by a disastrous fire, the greatest since the historic fire of 1666, on the 19th inst.; loss estimated from $10,000,000 to $16,000,000. Melbourne, Australia, suffered a loss of $5,000,000 from a conflagration in the center of the city, on the 21st. Many have been thrown out of employment in both cities.

The organ of the Austrian cabinet is discussing the dismemberment of Turkey.

SUPPLEMENTAL READING FOR DECEMBER MEETINGS OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

ECONOMY OF STRENGTH.

How important the subject under consideration, one feels, when they see so many tired, wornout wives and mothers. Many are unable to hire labor done, and have a family of children to care for. Our aim is not to discuss the poor management seen in so many households, but the things needful to help to overcome this distressing condition of things.

To our mind it requires order, system, simplicity, patience, and obedience in the well-regulated household. We will not consider an extreme case, but something which with will power can be carried out in every home with the above requirements, and if we have not got them, let us set to work to get them, for they certainly add to our happiness and saving of strength. First, let us (no matter how small or inconvenient our accommodations are) have a place for everything and see to it that they are kept there when not in use. Even the children, when old enough to play with things about the floor, can be taught to put them in their places. Thus much time and worry is saved the tired mother, in picking up and fretting about the litter. Little ones must have things to amuse them; but when those things have lost their charm for the time, they can and should be taught to put them away, thus learning lessons of value in afterlife. We should systemize our work. Whatever is to be done to-day, we should plan for it the previous night, and go at it in order and not get fretted by doing something in the morning that might better have waited a later hour in the day. It is evident that a greater amount of work can be accomplished with less worry by so doing.

Let us live simply. No matter what our income is, be it little or much, it is more becoming to saints. It is a saving of time and strength that we could more profitably use for preparing and fitting ourselves for the life beyond. It is better for our health and that of our children to eat simple, well-prepared food. A stranger with a master mind stopping for a few days at a home where cooking was of this kind, his comment was, "Such food makes pure, good thoughts." We do not need to spend one half hour in mixing bread. I am sure I have eaten just as good when not over five minutes was spent in kneading. I myself used to do it, but O such saving of strength as well as economy of time!

Let us dress simply. How many, many hours of precious time and strength as well as of worry are used out of the year for extra adorning of our garments, and especially so when there are children. Did you ever think of it, mothers, that that time so spent might be required at your hands? Every husband certainly has the right to request it of his wife not to so misuse her strength. "Sweet simplicity," how beautiful! Pages could be written on it. Then why waste so much time, strength, and worry trying to get something different?

Could we not economize strength by doing less sweeping and consequently less dusting? The little pieces lying around the carpet could much easier be picked up and not be swept every day. Have a rug or some means at the outer door for cleaning the shoes before entering the house, and require the children to be particular about this. I have seen weary mothers allow their boys to track all over their freshly cleaned floor, and then say, "It keeps me cleaning all the time." Teach your children to be thoughtful and careful of mother's strength. We should teach our children to be observing and helpful. Even three-year-old baby can be taught to love to help mamma. Praise them, when they do little things, and as they grow older require more of them, and soon you will have a houseful of helpers. Have patience, with yourself, your children, and your husband. Don't be over-exacting or particular, but require obedience. That great basket of clothes to be ironed each week I almost forgot to mention. My experience is that clothes folded as they are taken from the line are easier ironed than when crowded every way into the basket and allowed to stand for several hours and sometimes days without folding. Many unstarched pieces require no sprinkling and very little ironing. Starched pieces, if sprinkled evenly and not too wet, will save much time and labor to make them look well. "Whatever is worth doing at all is worth doing well" does not apply to extremists, and do you not think that is what many of us are in our housework?

Is it not better, think you, to save our strength, and thus our patience, health, and time, and be the better fitted to enjoy our homes, and instead of tired wives and mothers, we will have time to devote to husband's and children's pleasure and amusements? This ought to be the one great pleasure of every wife and mother, and I believe would be if more ways and means were devised to economize our strength. As it is, many are like Martha of old, overburdened with much serving.

M. J. GARNER.

OUR RESPONSIBILITY FOR TRUTHFULNESS IN OTHERS.

RESPONSIBILITY for other people's truthfulness rests very lightly on the souls of the best of people. We feel it to be perfectly moral to entangle a man in his talk so as to put him on the side of the worst opinions. If we drive him to the point, and make him let out ideas which he would rather have kept in, we plume ourselves on having done valuable work in the secret service of truth. We forget that perhaps the man's desire not to commit himself just then was the truth for him, and that we helped him disobey his better impulses. In common ethics we esteem it perfectly fair to put a man at a disadvantage. It is his own fault if he falls into it. But when we have put a man at a disadvantage, we have put him where he cannot act truly and speak freely, and so the truth cannot all get out of him. We share in whatever untruth gets out of him then. Arguing is cultivated more than conversation, and the end of all but very few arguments is, not to see the truth rise up, but to see the antagonist go down. To put a man at his ease is one of the essentials of getting at the truth in people. Any one of us ill at ease will express himself in a hundred acts and sayings which we never intended to do or say.

Truth is not a great colorless abstraction, an affair of yes and no, but it has as many tinges and colors as there are men in the world to express it. A man's temperament and tastes, and the traditions behind him, make up the truth that God would speak through that man. Put a mystic in the atmosphere of the dogmatist, and you will make him ridiculous. All of us can be made ridiculous if put in a slightly different atmosphere. The poet and the theologian have often been at war. You can riddle the literary man's theology with logic, but it is an illogical proceeding. The theologian tries to express his last thought in harmony with some previous thought. The poet pours out his last thought as if it were the only one he ever had, and leaves God to do the harmonizing. If the poet would remember that there is such a thing as theological science with metes and bounds of which he knows nothing, and respect what is not in his habit, and if the theologian would remember that truth is not all systematic as we are systematic, but is also an affair of glimpses, colors, atmospheres, and feelings, and learn to regard with reverence some pathways that God never gave him to walk in, the feud might be composed.

To put a man where he cannot be himself (and to be one's self is about the most difficult thing in the world), and to get the better of him then, is a poor, mock, shabby victory. The case can never be concluded with what a man says in such circumstances. When we hamper a man's personality we obstruct God. A Christian duty is to cultivate the skill that shall put people at ease, and not judge them until they have had a fair field and plenty of favor.

Heresy trials ought to take three or four years instead of as many days, and many a heretic might have been saved to the church, perhaps, if some people had been zealous in helping him to say what he meant. We can always find heresy if we look for it. The gospels might not have been so short if the truth-seekers of Israel had helped Jesus to tell the truth. And all the beautiful things that he left unsaid, and that our hearts still long to hear, might perhaps have been heard, if only people who thought they were truthful had realized that at least half of one's truth telling in this world is in helping others to tell the truth. And sometimes we treat the New Testament just as the Pharisees did Jesus, trying to entangle him in his talk to make him say something that he did not mean to say. We treat it as if it were written in Boston two hundred years ago, instead of in Asia Minor and Greece eighteen hundred years ago. With a new truthfulness, let us help the New Testament to say what it means, and be sure it never can say it without our help.—Sel.

READ CAREFULLY.

It has become necessary to discontinue the practice of sending out quarterlies either to schools or individuals after the time for which they were ordered has expired. We give some of the reasons below.

1. Some schools do not run all the year round hence do not want the quarterlies continuously. But we do not know which these are.

2. Schools that are discontinued do not want their supplies continued even for one quarter thereafter. But they seldom give any notice to that effect.

3. Many schools are obliged to increase their supplies in summer seasons. Many mistakes occur in ordering the "extras."

4. Schools change officers frequently. The new officer orders a supply of quarterlies and does not mention the standing order. The standing order would, of course, be filled unless notice to "discontinue" was received. The new order being filled gives the school a double set of quarterlies. This they do not need. They return the extra bunch, causing at best a loss of double postage and sometimes a loss of the quarterlies too.

To avoid these many mistakes together with the great amount of correspondence necessary to correct them, the Quarterlies will be sent for the time ordered only.

Superintendents should see that their supplies are ordered early. Order through branch book agents.

REPLY TO ELDER BAYS.—NO. 2.

In Herald for November 17 appears Elder Bays' attack on my positions as set forth in my first article of defense. Before proceeding to examine the character of the attack, or a further defense of the positions assumed in my former article, a few observations and statement of facts, seem necessary.

1. My first allusion to Elder Bays' attitude occupies less than one half column in the Herald. It consists of a mild statement of fact, and two queries. It was in no sense an "unprovoked attack," as Elder Bays puts it. That statement is entirely false; though whether it was made willfully or innocently, I do not say.

2. Elder Bays replied to my statement and queries, occupying two and one fifth columns in the Herald. It was this reply, much of which is misleading (and some parts evasive) that called forth No. 1 of my defense.

3. To the above reply I made answer in an article which occupied nearly six columns in the Herald. This was written to explain some things which Elder Bays did not seem to understand, correct his misleading statements, and vindicate my former statement by submitting "facts to a candid world." My only purpose then, was precisely what it is now, viz., that the situation should be made to appear as it is, without regard to where it strikes or whom it hurts. This I conceive to be the proper way to labor in the interests of diamond truth.

Personally, I feel as well towards Elder Bays as I ever did. I have not knowingly misrepresented him on a single point, nor do I intend to in the future. Indeed, I have made it a point not to enter into controversy with any man while there is a feeling of ill will lurking in my heart towards him.

4. Elder Bays makes his second reply which consists of an attempted defense of his paper of resignation, and an effort to convict me of vile misrepresentation. (This reply occupies about eight columns in the Herald.) How well he succeeds will be seen as we proceed. It is important to note right here, however, that my leading statement of fact, which is the basis of all this controversy, is, in this article, conceded to be substantially correct. Why did not Elder Bays concede this before? Was it because he did not have to?

5. A number of points mentioned by Elder Bays in his former article, as issues between us, are now dropped; so, I conclude that my answers were satisfactory, or that Elder Bays does not consider it good policy to oppose them. This narrows the ground of dispute between us, a thing which is always desirable.

We now conclude, in the light of these tacit admissions, that until Elder Brown, or Elder Bays, comes to us properly indorsed by the M. E. Church, signifying his willingness to affirm and defend the faith and doctrine of the M. E. Church, and oppose our faith and doctrine, the entire responsibility of "the much talked of debate," rests with these two men. And even then, our responsibility would depend upon two contingencies: First, that the alleged challenge of W. A. Smith to Elder Brown was actually made (which is probably untrue); or, second, that one of these iconoclasts of "Mormon dogma," comes to us with a direct and formal challenge. So much good secured by this controversy, you see. It puts that much talked of debate in its true light.

Since writing my former defense, I have met and conversed with Bro. Chapman, of Persia, Iowa, who is the "non official" referred to by Elder Bays. He denies that any challenge was ever made to Elder M. T. Brown, for a joint discussion, either by himself or W. A. Smith. I also have a statement from Elder H. O. Smith of Woodbine, Iowa, in which he says that he conversed with W. A. Smith about the matter, at the late reunion, held at Woodbine, in which conversation Bro. Smith stated that no such challenge as referred to by Elder Bays was ever made by him. According to the testimony of these two brethren, which we have no reason to doubt, Elder Brown was conducting preaching services at Persia, in which he took the liberty to reflect, offensively, upon some parts of our faith. One or both of the brethren, referred to above, then asked him to divide time with them so that they could defend against his accusations, which, of course, as usual, he refused to do. This is probably all there is of "this much talked of" challenge.

6. In my former article I showed that Elder Bays evaded a straight answer to "Query No. 2." In his last he does not refer to this so we will drop it from the issues between us.

7. Elder Bays says nothing more about his queries, "No. 1" and "No. 2," so I conclude that my answers were satisfactory, or such as he did not care to meet, so we will drop these.

8. Let it be borne in mind by the reader that the matter of dispute between Elder Bays and me is not concerning the truthfulness and divinity of so-called Mormonism; but, rather, in my allusions to Elder Bays' religious attitude, have I correctly represented him? I claim that I have; he denies. Anything in addition to this issue is simply and only incidental.

We now come to a direct consideration of Elder Bays' last article. Please re-read it carefully before reading our reply.

Elder Bays thinks there is nothing in what he wrote "to warrant the effort or justify the course Elder Lambert has pursued." If my effort and course have been what Elder Bays represents them to be he is certainly correct; but if, on the other hand, I have correctly and truthfully represented his positions, where is the ground for complaint?

If, as Elder Bays presumes, my object was "to lay a 'sure foundation' for future operations," is such a course to be condemned, provided such foundation is laid in righteousness and truth?

Referring to what I said about the leading statements of his former letter, Elder Bays adds: "Then if we do not 'directly affirm' a misrepresentation, why should it be assumed that we charge misrepresentation?"

Answer: Because Elder Bays says indirectly, and by plain implication, what he would not dare to say directly. It does not matter about our acquaintance of twenty-five years, nor Elder Bays' statement that "I never deal in innuendoes," etc. Paul teaches me to not accept "another gospel" though it should be brought to me by an "angel from heaven." I deal with things as I find them, without any reference to what men claim for themselves.

The truth is that Elder Bays placed my statement right at the beginning of his article, and then added these words: "In the first place, I wish to be neither misrepresented nor misunderstood by my former brethren and friends." If Elder Bays was only laying a "sure foundation for future" defense, why did he quote my leading statement first, and then place it in juxtaposition with his strong words?

This statement was not an expression of my opinion as to what "Elder Bays was willing to do," etc., but a statement of fact which the Elder now concedes to be true in every important particular; for if it had not been true, he would have attacked it directly. Why did he not say it was true at the time, so that his article would not legitimately convey one thing to the reader, while he had an entirely different thing in his mind?

If my statements were correct, it was a shame for Elder Bays to use them as he did. If he wished to explain what his attitude had been towards the church, since 1892, he could have done so without any reference to my statements. As it is, he said to every intelligent reader of the Herald, by implication, that he believed that he was misunderstood and misrepresented by Elder Lambert, who is one of his "former brethren and friends."

Prior to the writing of Elder Bays' last article, no misrepresentation is charged against me; but now he brings them along thick and fast. But he has overdone the business in his great anxiety to make a case against me, as will readily appear to the unbiased reader.

Elder Bays refers to my representation of what took place between Elder Brown and himself concerning the proposed debate, and then accuses me of putting a whole sentence into his mouth which he never uttered.

I did, it is true, by the use of quotation marks, represent Elder Bays as saying to Elder Brown, "I will, if they will furnish a representative man to meet me." My thought was, at the time I wrote the sentence, to abbreviate by presenting my own construction of words. The only complaint that can be made with a shadow of justice to sustain it, is my use of quotation marks. When I used them, I did so for the sole purpose of representing clearly the response of Elder Bays to the invitation of Elder Brown. I was under the impression that I used them legitimately, and had no thought of misleading or misrepresenting. If I used quotation marks where I should not have done so, I beg pardon for my lack of due care.

But if Elder Bays had possessed a little more frankness and honesty, notwithstanding his claims, he would have stated that this sentence, about which he says so much, did not injure him, nor misrepresent him at all, except in a partial construction of words. In a letter written to H. O. Smith, under date of August 3, Elder Bays writes: "These challenges were tendered, not to me, but to the minister, who was at the time, pastor of the M. E. Church of this place [Persia, Iowa], and hence not an 'irresponsible person,' as you recklessly affirm, and upon his solicitation, I consented to take up the 'forensic cudgel,' if a representative man should be furnished, to stand for your people."

Here is exactly the same representation, as to sentiment, and partly in words, from Elder Bays' own pen; and yet he stands upon a mere technicality, at the best, and has the hardihood to dignify it as "Misrepresentation No. 1"!

At the very beginning of Elder Bays' article he represents mine as a "twenty-two page 'Reply to Elder Bays,'" whereas it covers a little less than two pages in the Herald! Does Elder Bays refer to my manuscript? If so, how did he come to know how many pages of manuscript I had? I cannot now tell myself how many pages I had.

Next, Elder Bays complains at my statement which reads as follows: "Elder Bays was so willing . . . to tear down what for years he sought to build up, that he accepted a challenge which was not made to him, but to the minister of the M. E. Church."

Here the Elder italicizes four words, and thus changes the meaning of my statement without permission. Had he informed the reader that the italics were his, no complaint would be made. As it is, they are misleading to the average reader.

In the paragraph just preceding this objectionable one, I show by actual quotation from Elder Bays' letter what I mean by his accepting the challenge, viz., that he consented to meet the issues. Did not Elder Bays virtually accept the challenge when he said I will meet them, and wrote out propositions for the debate? Or, are we to understand that he was simply a blind partner, secured to do the fighting?

But let us see how far I was wrong according to Elder Bays' own statements. In a letter to H. O. Smith, dated July 27, we have this statement: "And we, being the challenged party," etc.

To whom did this "we" refer? Evidently to Elders Brown and Bays; and yet, the Elder has been telling us all along that the challenge was not made to him, but to Elder Brown. This is an exact parallel case, showing again that Elder Bays is as guilty as I am. Did this "we" accept the challenge? or is it Bro. Bays' position that his part of the "we" has not yet accepted? If it is, then why does he claim that the responsibility of the proposed debate rightfully belongs to us?

This, another mere technicality, Elder Bays dignifies as "Misrepresentation No. 2."

In the same objectionable paragraph Elder Bays finds some more material out of which to construct another charge of misrepresentation. I said Elder Bays got "out of fix" and seemed "sorely disappointed."

If Elder Bays has a right to express his opinion as to the purpose of my articles, and impute to me "petty prejudices," without furnishing an item of proof, have I not the right to express my opinion as above? "If not, why not?"

Elder Bays quotes from his first letter to H. O. Smith to prove that he was not "out of fix" nor "sorely disappointed." This letter was written before Elder Smith had reached his conclusion, hence the supposed proof does not apply. The quotation comes from a letter bearing date of July 27, while the final conclusion against debate, to which I referred, is contained in a letter of H. O. Smith to Elder Bays, bearing date of July 31. It reads as follows: "Under these circumstances, I shall take no further notice of your challenge, unless you urge the matter, stating in conclusion that neither myself or my brethren will fail to respond to any legitimate offer to discuss the merits of our church, or the Book of Mormon, when the invitation is presented to us in properly worded propositions."

In Elder Bays' reply to the letter containing the above quotation is found that upon which I based my statement and opinion. Much of the language and spirit of this letter fully justify, in my opinion, the statements I made, and H. O. Smith saw them in the same light. Thus we dispose of another technicality which the Elder dignifies as "Misrepresentation No. 3."

Elder Bays states that the only reason assigned by Elder H. O. Smith for declining to meet him in debate is expressed in these words: "But I wish to state here that I decline to be held responsible to every 'Tom, Dick or Harry' that may challenge you or anyone else to a discussion."

The statement is not true. It is not the only reason assigned. The decision not to hold the debate unless Elder Bays urged it, had been given before this "only reason" was penned. In H. O. Smith's first letter to Elder Bays he informs him that we will require that he be indorsed by the society using him as their champion. In Elder Bays' reply he said nothing about this required indorsement. So, in Elder Smith's second letter, just before and right in connection with his decision not to debate, he says: "We could not think of entering into a discussion with anyone unless indorsed by some representative body, either Christian or infidel, and in your present wavering condition, I should judge that it would be difficult for you to get any church to indorse you. I judge thus, because you say nothing about it, although Bro. Lambert and myself each called your attention to that important part of the arrangement."

Then follows the decision not to debate as before quoted. The truth is, that Elder Bays never furnished us with a particle of evidence that he could secure necessary indorsement—not even his own statement, until after Elder Smith decided there would be no debate unless he urged it, a thing which he afterwards said he would not do! Now, I am under no obligations to fix up this false statement and crooked work, but I just leave the whole thing in its naked deformity and pass on.

Next, Elder Bays makes a long and labored effort to establish another misrepresentation, and at the conclusion of his meanderings says: "All the facts considered, it will probably be conceded that this may be written down as Misrepresentation No. 4."

Not much danger, I trust, nor would such concession, could it be secured, make the allegation true.

Then comes another, very much like the one just alluded to, which closes with these characteristic words: "In view of the facts as I have here presented them, the unbiased will, doubtless, recognize this as being Misrepresentation No. 5."

Elder Bays speaks of the "reasons offered for" his "resignation and withdrawal from the church," etc. His paper says nothing about his withdrawal. He simply and only resigned.

When I say "a little further along," etc., Elder Bays endeavors to raise suspicion, where there are no just grounds for it, by stating: "But he does not tell his readers how much further along he finds the passage quoted, nor does he inform them as to its connection with what he had previously quoted from the same paragraph."

My first quotation was paragraph three in its entirety, and my next was the first part of paragraph four. What next, Elder? Is not such stuff as this a wonderful foundation upon which to base the charge of "misrepresentation?"

I stated plainly that Elder Bays objected to the inspirational claims of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, the Book of Mormon, the Bible, (King James' translation, of course,) and the Inspired translation of the Bible. In these statements I thought I was fairly and properly representing Elder Bays. I think so yet. The only reason why I did not quote what he said concerning the Doctrine and Covenants and Book of Mormon was the want of space. The reason why I did quote from what he said concerning the Bible, and the writers of the Bible, was that the reader might have the full benefit of his own words. But now, as the matter has gone so far, if the Herald does not reject my voluminous reply, I will furnish the reader with all that he said concerning the three books, just as he wrote it.

I did not presume to say whether Elder Bays placed all three of the books on the same plane or not; I simply represented the facts as I then understood them, and as I now understand them, and further did not presume to speak.

Elder Bays says: "And I now call upon Elder Lambert to produce a single sentence from my paper . . . in which I call in question any statement of the Bible itself as to its 'inspirational claims.' I simply and only object to the claims made for it by others, and not the claims which the Bible makes for its own inspiration."

And I now call upon Elder Bays to produce a single sentence from his paper in which he calls in question any statement of the Book of Mormon or Doctrine and Covenants as to their inspirational claims. And I aver that if his interpretation of the phrases "Divine Inspiration" and "Inspiration of the Bible," be correct, then he has said little or nothing to injure the proper claims of either of these books!

Elder Bays now says: "But that the several books composing the Bible were written by direct inspiration, does not appear."

But in his paper of resignation nothing is said about "direct inspiration," but it is claimed that these Bible writers were not inspired to write.

Elder Bays calls upon me to point out a passage from the Pentateuch or from the writings of the Prophets, to show that Moses or the Prophets wrote by direct inspiration. "That the prophetic utterances were inspired has never been denied," says the Elder.

When Elder Bays wrote up his paper of resignation he was dealing with the Latter Day Saints and with them only; therefore, it is pertinent for me to refer him to Genesis 1:1, Inspired Translation, for evidence that God commanded Moses to write. The Lord said to Moses, "Write the words which I speak."

If the Apostles and Prophets were inspired to speak and preach, is it reasonable to believe that God made no provision for the preservation of their words? And if any were commanded to write these messages of truth, would it not be as important, or more so, that they should be inspired in the making of these records as that men should be inspired to deliver the word verbally? I think so. As to "plenary" inspiration, it is highly impertinent for Elder Bays to keep flinging that at me, inasmuch as I have never claimed it for any of the sacred books of the church, and he himself says that I probably do not believe it.

The statement that I arraigned Elder Bays "for not believing in the verbal inspiration of the Bible," is entirely false. I have never found any fault with Elder Bays, nor anyone else for that kind of unbelief; and it is not noble in him to apparently try to hide the true character of his paper of resignation by making such false statements.

So far as the "veracity and authenticity of the Bible" is concerned, not one word in favor of either is to be found in the paper referred to. Elder Bays is invited to produce it.

When I said "Elder Bays gives much space to a consideration of this question; that is, in a comparative sense," I referred to the Bible, and the statement is entirely true, as will appear.

Elder Bays says by question, implication, and direct statement, that the Church of Latter Day Saints never "pronounced in favor of the verbal inspiration of the Bible;" that during fifty years of experience in the church, he never heard one of its ministers affirm the doctrine, "or anything that could be tortured into a support of it;" that the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants do not claim it for the Bible; that Elder Lambert probably does not believe it; that during all the years of his ministry, he never sought "to build up the doctrine of plenary inspiration." Thank you, Elder, for these statements. We shall have use for them by and by.

Now, in order to prove that he was only fighting the absurd claims made for the Bible, and not the Bible itself, (though he affirms as we have just seen that the Latter Day Saints never made these claims!) Elder Bays refers to some of his "facts." One of these facts is, according to Elder Bays, that when he wrote the paragraph I referred to, he had already "said that" he "found nothing to sustain the belief that the Old and New Testaments . . . were written by divine inspiration."

I beg pardon. He had said no such thing. The paragraph which I quoted in full is the first of what he said on the Bible. So, away goes this labored effort to convict me of misrepresentation, violating well established rules of interpretation, etc., etc. Elder Bays, I believe I am just as careful and fair as I ever have been. The difference is, this criticism bears against you; the others did not.

Now, after getting off all this stuff, contrary to the facts in the case, Elder Bays finds it in his heart to refer to me as his "partisan critic;" and also to say: "Could my critic rise above his petty prejudices sufficiently to divest himself of a seemingly definite purpose to convict, I feel quite sure he would not permit himself to adopt such questionable methods of reasoning."

That is, if I could only rise high enough to accept all that he has just said which is in direct opposition to the recorded facts, as they stand over his own signature, I would thereby give evidence that I am broadminded and liberal! Will you please excuse me from such broadminded liberality!

Now Elder Bays quotes my statement wherein I say that the "leading statement of my letter concerning Elder Bays is now more than vindicated by the Elder's own words," and then proceeds to claim that they are only vindicated by my construction and interpretation of his words. I had shown from his own letter that he was willing to meet the issue; that he took a position in opposition to our faith as early as 1892; that he had written out propositions which he said he was willing to debate, two of which deny the principles of our faith. And now will the Elder have the hardihood to deny this proof? Worse than all, right at the beginning of Elder Bays' article, he concedes that my statements were substantially correct. If they had not been he would have attacked them directly, and I ought to have known it! I suppose we are to accept this, too, as evidence of a fair and broadminded critic!

As an evidence of Elder Bays' close logic (?) I quote the following: "Had I in fact denounced everything in the shape of religion, it would but furnish another exhibition of the fruits of the system of which Elder Lambert is a representative."

Elder Bays evidently had in mind the class of minds which he hopes to reach, now, when he penned the above words. The proposition asks us to believe that he could not denounce that which is good and true. That is, "once in grace, always in grace," which we refuse to accept.

The faith which Elder Lambert represents has reclaimed many a man from the dark mazes of infidelity and doubt, and made him a staunch defender of "the faith once delivered to the saints"—full of faith, hope, and good works. Not one case can be produced where an individual has intelligently and properly adhered to the principles of our faith—as set forth in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants—and has been made worse morally or spiritually by such adherence. I am of the firm opinion, too, that no intelligent person who has had good opportunity to test the principles of our faith, by personal experience and investigation, and who remained honest with himself, his God, and his neighbors, ever renounced the faith.

The Latter Day Saints, as a Church, do not rejoice because men usually go into infidelity or spiritualism when they renounce our faith; but they point to it as an evidence that it is not, necessarily, the faith that is wrong, but the individuals themselves.

"If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness."—Matt. 6:23.

I stand corrected on the minor statement that Elder Bays wrote his book at the time when those splendid opportunities for tearing down what he once sought to build up were before him. I accept the Elder's statement that these splendid opportunities only lasted about one year after his withdrawal from the church. Too bad they closed so soon, and "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism Examined and Refuted," had to be written up after they were gone!

Elder Bays finds fault with me because I charge him with shifting his position in answering my first query. My point is that success in debate depends upon the same conditions in the past, present, and future; and if Elder Bays' success, when he was a Latter Day Saint, was largely due to the fact that he was well posted on the issues, his success will now depend upon the same condition. If he is victorious now, mainly because he has the truth, that was the cause of his victory then. So, I say again, the Elder did shift his position, and no amount of special pleading can hide the fact.

But now Elder Bays seems to have struck it, if never before, on this point.

"I have nothing to say beyond the fact that the failure of my opponents (if they failed) was due, as I now believe, to their ignorance of Mormon theology, rather than to a lack of ability in forensic contest. Of this I am fully assured from my own examination of the other side of the question. I am led to make this statement out of a deep sense of duty to all concerned."

That Elder Bays' opponents did signally fail is a fact, if his testimony as then given can be relied upon. But it was because they were not posted on "Mormon theology." Indeed! Is this the reason they failed when they undertook to affirm their own faith and Elder Bays denied it? As Elder Bays surely knows, right here is where our opponents have most signally failed, "all along the line."

Let us look at it from Elder Bays' present point of view. These opponents of Elder Bays were under the conviction that Mormonism is a very deceptive and dangerous thing; but they did not know enough about it to expose it intelligently! They were the true and intelligent servants of God, whose hearts were fired with the love of humanity. They were defending the truth of God and trying to expose a dangerous fraud. And yet they did not take the pains to post themselves on the character of that fraud, and when it came to a fair contest they were always left, and especially when they tried to affirm their own faith from a Bible standpoint!

The most vital point between Elder Bays and me is this: I claim that in his paper of resignation, he not only opposed the Book of Doctrine and Covenants and Book of Mormon, but that he also opposed the claims of the Bible. He claims that he did not oppose the claims of the Bible, but simply and only the doctrine of plenary inspiration. I herewith quote from his paper so far as space will permit, presenting all that he says concerning the Doctrine and Covenants, Book of Mormon, and the Bible, and in the exact order in which he wrote it.

After resigning his office as a minister of the First Quorum of Seventy, Elder Bays said:—

"Without a doubt you will expect me to give my reasons for this rather unusual course.

"My reasons are briefly as follows:—

"1ST. THE BOOK OF DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.

"After years of careful investigation of the facts, as well as the circumstances under which the Book was written, I have arrived at the conclusion that there is absolutely nothing to be offered in support of its claim to divine inspiration. As a minister of the church I would be expected to defend its claim to be divinely inspired and acknowledge its authority, neither of which can I do with a clear conscience. To act honestly both with myself and the church, I feel it my duty to resign.

"2D. THE BOOK OF MORMON.

"As to the ethical status of this book, I think no unfavorable comment can be made. Its moral precepts are unquestionably good. They are all that its friends claim for it, and, indeed, superior in some respects to those of the Bible.

"But the mere fact that its moral precepts may be regarded as faultless, cannot serve to prove it to be of divine origin.

"The principal point of strength in favor of the Book of Mormon is to be found in the fact of the profound mystery surrounding its origin. No living man knows anything whatever of the fact of its true origin. To say the least its inspiration and authority are extremely doubtful.

"3D. THE BIBLE.

"Ministers of the gospel are expected to believe and teach the inspiration of the Bible. During the later years of my ministry I made this a question of special inquiry, and quite contrary to the generally received opinion, I found nothing to sustain the belief that the Old and New Testaments, or any particular book in either, were written by divine inspiration. Hence I have been led to reject the dogma of the 'divine inspiration of the Bible,' as wholly untenable.

"4th. Not only do I find that the writers of the several books of the Bible, whoever they may be, do not claim to have written the books attributed to them by inspiration, but I find a marked, and irreconcilable disagreement between them, on questions of vital importance; thereby destroying the last vestige of any ground upon which to base an argument in support of the dogma of plenary inspiration.

"A single instance of this will be deemed sufficient for the present occasion:—

"In Matthew 1:16, and Luke 3:23-34, we have the 'generation of Jesus Christ,' in his lineal descent from Abraham through the 'loins of David.' From Abraham to David is perfect harmony between the two writers. After leaving David, no two names, in the order of their descent, agree. Matthew says the descent was through Solomon, while Luke declares it was through Nathan.

"As may readily be seen from the accompanying genealogical table transmitted herewith, the two writers are aiming at exactly the same thing; namely, to show that Christ was a literal descendant from Abraham through the loins of David, the King, thereby establishing his right to sit upon the throne of his father, David. It is equally clear that, if the recorded statement be true, Jesus, the Son of Mary, was also as literally the Son of Joseph. If the genealogy came abruptly to an end in Joseph, then Christ was in no sense a descendant of David; and the genealogies of both Matthew and Luke are incorrect and unreliable. If I am to accept the genealogical descent, and consequently the human paternity of Christ, then I am forced to abandon the doctrine of the immaculate conception as presented by the same writers. And if I accept the doctrine that Christ was miraculously conceived by the Holy Ghost, then I am forced to deny the accuracy of both Matthew and Luke as to the genealogical descent.

"In short, to say nothing of the irreconcilable differences between Matthew and Luke respecting the genealogical descent of Christ, I find one theory to be in direct opposition to the other.

"If one is true, the other is false; and these irreconcilable discrepancies utterly preclude the possibility that they were written by divine inspiration.

"As these discrepancies seem to be absolutely irreconcilable, it leaves the investigator at liberty to accept that which seems most reasonable. The doctrine of the miraculous conception is at variance with every known law of natural generation.

"That Christ's human form had a purely human origin, and that this view agrees with every known law, is apparent. Hence, I believe that Christ had a natural father as well as a natural mother. Otherwise he could not be 'in all things like unto his brethren.' (Heb. 2:17.)"

From the above the reader can draw his own conclusions. However, the following statements are legitimate:—

1. What I have quoted constitutes the larger portion of Elder Bays' "reasons" for resigning his ministerial office.

2. These reasons are furnished under three distinct heads; namely, "The Book of Doctrine and Covenants," "The Book of Mormon," "The Bible."

3. Under the first and second captions, we have one section each, but the last, "the Bible," is divided into two.

4. The first section of the third general reason for resigning, contains nothing about plenary inspiration, nor of extravagant and false claims made for the Bible. Not a word in it can justly be construed to refer to anything but the claims of the Bible as understood and held by the Latter Day Saints.

The opening sentence says: "Ministers of the gospel are expected to believe and teach the inspiration of the Bible." The closing one, "Hence, I have been led to reject the dogma of the 'divine inspiration of the Bible,' as wholly untenable."

5. If "Divine inspiration," and "inspiration of the Bible" mean the same as "plenary inspiration," when found in Elder Bays' paper, then according to a just and well-established rule of interpretation, "divine inspiration," "divinely inspired," and "inspiration," must be interpreted in the same way when used in connection with the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Mormon.

6. That the Doctrine and Covenants and Book of Mormon contain revelations of God's will to man, is not directly denied, while the divine origin of the latter book is left as an open question.

7. Section one of the third reason, rejects "the inspiration of the Bible," or else sections one and two do not reject the inspiration of the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Mormon. Elder Bays can take which horn of the dilemma suits him best.

8. If God commanded the Bible to be written, he would certainly inspire those who were thus commanded in the faithful performance of the work. If he never gave such commandment, then its authority is only human.

9. Elder Bays not only rejects the inspiration of the Bible, but he rejects the exceedingly plain accounts of Matthew and Luke as to the conception of Christ by the Holy Ghost. He also claims that he has discovered that the writers of the several books of the Bible are guilty of "irreconcilable disagreement . . . on questions of vital importance." In fact, not one word can be found directly in favor of the Bible in this whole paper! Was I to blame for believing that he made an attack on the Bible as well as the other books?

10. If Elder Bays' claim is correct; namely, that he simply and "only" attacked the claim of plenary inspiration, then how does it come that he makes this one of his strong, leading reasons for resigning his office, when, as he himself claims, the Latter Day Saints have never advocated the doctrine? It will not do. Either he was making a leading attack on what the Latter Day Saints believe concerning the Bible, or he was indulging in the most consummate folly, such as we would hardly impute to a child, much less to an intellectual and bright-minded man.

The character of Elder Bays' religious faith, at the time he wrote up his resignation, is clearly indicated in his closing words. They are as follows:—

"With feelings of the highest esteem, and with an abiding faith in the moral excellence of Christianity, I have the pleasure to be Yours very truly,

"D. H. BAYS."

This "moral excellence" he fully accords to the Book of Mormon.

When Elder Bays attached himself to the Baptist Church, and then to the Christian Church, did he find religious bodies which reject the claim of plenary inspiration for the Bible, and the conception of Christ by the Holy Ghost? etc. Did he?

I do not need to prove that his incidental statement (for that is all that it is) concerning "plenary inspiration" was a "man of straw," for he himself has confessed that the Latter Day Saints never advocated the doctrine, he never taught it while a minister of the church, and he does not think that I believe it! Was I not right, then, in referring to it as "a man of straw"?

"Plenary inspiration," "inspiration of the Bible," and "divine inspiration," are not synonymous phrases which may be used interchangeably. The first one of these phrases refers to a claim made for the Bible; the second and third, to what the Bible claims for itself. However, if Elder Bays wishes to explain, now, that he meant plenary inspiration all the time, we accept his apology in good faith; but we cannot allow that these phrases mean one thing when applied to the Bible, but an entirely different thing when applied to the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

Perhaps the good Elder will have learned, by this time, that consistency is "a jewel indeed."
J. R. LAMBERT.

SHARON, Pa., Nov. 16.

Editors Herald:—On the 10th inst., my family and self left Kirtland; the family for Worcester, Massachusetts, and the writer for the mission field. My permanent address will be, until further notice, No. 208 Austin Street, Worcester, Massachusetts.

I arrived at Conneautville, Pennsylvania, on the evening of the 11th, in a drenching rain, and which during the night turned into a terrible snowstorm and kept it up nearly all next day. The rain and snow got the roads in a bad state, and we were informed that there were two or three protracted meetings going on in the vicinity; hence I did not think it wise, under the circumstances, to undertake to hold a series of meetings there.

On the night of the 12th I came to this place, and it has been raining almost all the time since my arrival. However, I have held preaching meetings right along, but the audience has been quite small. This branch is in a splendid condition. We had a grand saints' meeting on Sunday afternoon. Our young brother, Richard Baldwin, is the president of the branch; and he is one of our coming young men, if he will only continue to be humble and faithful before the Lord. Truly the Lord is raising up young men all over the church to carry on his grand work. The saints here treat the elders with every kindness; may the God of our fathers ever bless them abundantly.

I expect to be with the Pittsburg branch on Wednesday night, and on Friday evening the 19th, I shall begin operations at Fayette City, Pennsylvania, and will be there a week. I have been summoned to serve as a juror the 29th; will have to appear before the court on the above date, ere I can be excused, if I do not have to serve.

We are expecting a visit from President

Joseph Smith soon. The saints are very anxious to see him, and will give him a kind reception when he does come among us.

Bro. J. C. Foss returned home on the 1st of the present month. He did a good work while in the mission, and will be kindly received when he returns. The saints and many of the outsiders speak highly of his labors.

Bro. W. J. Smith has been laboring for some time in Cleveland and other places in the mission. Bro. Smith is one of our ablest ministers and leaves a good impression wherever he labors, and has the confidence of the saints; and the cry is, "Send Bro. Smith back." He will soon leave the mission, but he goes with our best wishes, and we earnestly desire that he will be returned to the mission.

Yours hastily,

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

HAMPTON, Va., Nov. 2.

Editors Herald:—Will you be so kind as to send me some cards of your faith and such other matter as you think proper to distribute. There is a series of revival meetings being conducted here and I wish some good elder could be present to take part.

I am not a member of your church, but have read not a little of it, and talked with some that are, and with one elder in New Jersey. I like it best of all, so far as I understand it.

There are a few Utah Mormon elders hereabouts, but they are not meeting with much success.

I believe if one of your elders was to come here he would do well and be received kindly. At all events he can find a home with us so long as he desires to stay and work for our Master.

Cordially,

MISS LIBBY BROOKS.

SEMINOLE, Ala., Nov. 10.

Editors Herald:—Am still confined to Baldwin County by quarantine, which prevents me to some extent from laboring in the county as I would like. With Bro. J. Reeder as my assistant, I manage to put in every Saturday evening and Sunday to good advantage, and frequently hold one or two services in the week. We held three interesting meetings at Mr. W. Parish's house, near Brady, notwithstanding our Methodist friends had scoured the neighborhood trying to raise money to pay a Rev. Mr. Belt, of De Funiak Springs, to meet us there and prove us wrong, and who failed to materialize; but instead advised people to stay away. We had a good hearing, and some are interested.

While on our way home from Mr. Patterson's logging camp, the 2d, where we had held meeting, we were met by Bro. D. Skillman, who informed us we were wanted at once to take charge of a funeral at Luna's Ferry, several miles distant. So we turned and headed our horse in that direction, and on our arrival were informed the procession had left an hour before. We were permitted to pass through the quarantine, and cross the river going and coming free of charge. Taking a nearer route we fell in behind the procession just before reaching the place of interment, at Beulah, Florida, seven or eight miles distant. We were met by two Baptist elders, at the door of their church, and told it was the request of the family that we take charge and preach the sermon. The church was open for us, and quite a large audience was present, the school having been dismissed that all might attend.

We read Isaiah 26:19. And while we thought the sermon but an ordinary one, some of the most influential people pronounced it the best sermon ever preached in the church, and all appeared well pleased so far as we learned. This is the same place where we baptized the nine. The funeral was that of a young man, of 13 years and 26 days old, who came to his death in a cyclone. The mother was once in the church, and the father believed in none. There were nine in the house when it was struck; it was quite a large story and a half frame structure. The eight were injured somewhat, but not seriously. People are thinking and talking, and the prospect is favorable for us.

Bro. C. I. Carpenter is in Santa Rosa County. Has organized the first Sunday school in Florida, after the rules of the General Association. Bro. C. I. is a good Sunday school worker. May this feature of the work continue to spread. In bonds, D. E. TUCKER.

Editors Herald:—Sr. Gregory, of South Haven, Michigan, wishes to have some of the traveling ministry come there to preach, as there is an opening for an elder in the schoolhouse near her place. She says she will meet any who will come, at the station, if they will let her know. She is the only saint there. Address Mrs. John Gregory. Last Sunday my husband's aged mother was led into the waters of baptism by Elder J. J. Bailey. It was a day of rejoicing for us; it has been what we have been hoping and praying for for over a year. She is mother of thirteen children, all of whom but two are very much opposed to the Latter Day Saints. Pray for her and us that our influence may be for good in the cause of Christ.

ORTENSIA MOGG.

EDMOND, Okla., Nov. 17.

Editors Herald:—It will probably be of interest to your readers to know that "I, Clark Braden," has been "exposing Mormonism" at Norman, Oklahoma, recently. Norman is a stronghold of Campbellism, and for some time past they have been talking debate with our people, and even went so far as to challenge Brn. Macrae and Maloney some time since. While arrangements were delayed, Braden was sent for and began lecturing, flaunting his challenges and making a great spread. He was just going to annihilate Mormonism if he could only find a victim. As he could not find any saints in Norman he went out into the sand hills, twelve miles, and lectured in a log schoolhouse, where there were only seven Latter Day Saints, and two of them were children. He wanted a debate and wanted it bad. The secret was that there was a good congregation of Campbellites there, whom Braden knew were able to pay him well to hold a debate.

About this time the writer appeared on the scene. As I had heard Braden's noise before, I did not become alarmed, but proceeded to issue the following circular, scattering them broadcast among the people.

This was a turn that Braden was not looking for. He was at the end of his row. He immediately "did the Arab act"—"quietly folded his tent and stole away" not even halting long enough to call a "mass meeting" or "appoint a committee," the course generally resorted to by him when he gets into a close place. I believe we have met Braden as often as we should, and that he should be ignored henceforth by our people. This position has not hurt our cause at Norman, neither will it anywhere else. It is a new departure in dealing with this man, and my course may not be approved by all; but it will be by those who have been in a position to understand the man and his methods.

It is quite encouraging to me to read the following from the pen of Bro. George Montague, president of the mission. He says: "I am entirely satisfied with the course you have taken, and heartily indorse your views in regard to Braden. I believe the church should refuse positively to have anything to do with him further." Others have written me expressing the same views.

The Campbellites have accepted our counter challenge and selected J. S. Warlick, of Joshua, Texas, as their representative. No doubt a discussion will take place soon at Norman.

In gospel bonds,

C. R. DUNCAN.

[The circular forwarded by Bro. Duncan provides for discussion of two propositions involving the general faith of the Reorganized and "Christian" churches, but states, in effect, that he will not debate with Elder Clark Braden, because of the latter's peculiar and dishonorable methods of conducting discussions.—ED.]

Editors Herald:—The work in Galland's Grove district is in a fair spiritual and working condition. As a rule the saints are striving to develop the Christ character, and maintain the interests of the Master's cause. The majority of our local officers are making an effort to discharge their duties, and thus feed the church of God, which he has purchased with his own blood. Missionaries are doing a good work, though they are not baptizing many. They are looking sharply after the work where it has been opened up for some time, and making new openings as often as possible. There is much work needed in this district if the territory is ever to be fully canvassed by the heralds of the gospel; but the work is of that peculiar nature which requires that at least the majority of the laborers should be endowed with the ability and disposition to hunt for and find work. Aside from the branches and scattered members, there are comparatively few who send us an invitation to come and preach for them.

Elder Charles Derry is doing some acceptable labor in the district, by invitation, and is finding a hearty welcome wherever he goes.

The saints are expecting a visit from Bro. H. O. Smith, and are waiting to make him welcome, and listen to him preach the word. The saints have a kindly feeling for him, and appreciate the work which he did in the district some years ago. Hopefully yours,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 12.

Editors Herald:—On Sunday, October 31, with several others I attended the meeting of the Utah people. There were present among others two of the Utah Twelve; namely, Apostles Lyman and Cowley, of Salt Lake City. We sent our cards up to each of them, but obtained no introduction. We remained and heard Elder Lyman preach, but had to leave before he got through, to attend our own meetings. In leaving we gave a copy of the accompanying document to the usher, with the request that it be handed to the presiding elder at the close of the services, with a desire that we might hear from them soon; but up to date nothing has reached us, and we fear they won't accept.

All goes well here. Regards to all.

Yours in bonds,

JOHN S. PATTERSON.

WHAT WE DON'T BELIEVE.

The following are the points of difference between the Utah Church and the Reorganization:—

1. We dispute the claims of Brigham Young and his successors to the presidency of the church.
2. The doctrine of polygamy.
3. The Adam-God doctrine, or idolatry.
4. The doctrine of blood-atonement.
5. Utah the gathering place.
6. The secret oaths of the endowment house.
7. The doctrine that the living priesthood is greater than the word of God contained in the three books.
8. The doctrine of blind obedience to the counsel of the priesthood.

All of which the representatives of the Reorganized Church are willing to debate publicly, with the representative men of the Utah Church.

JOHN S. PATTERSON,

President of the Chicago branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

CLAY CENTER, Kan., Nov. 8.

Editors Herald:—Our quarterly conference, held at Goshen, has just closed; the business was transacted in a pleasant and agreeable manner, free from that boisterous spirit that sometimes manifests itself at conferences. We were favored with the presence of Elders H. A. Stebbins and W. S. Pender, who dispensed the "word" in a very able and entertaining manner; and I believe I voice the sentiment of all present when I say that our hearts were made glad to feast upon the good things of the kingdom. Quite a number of saints from a distance attended, also a goodly number of nonmembers from the immediate vicinity; and while the weather was somewhat inclement, gloomy clouds obscuring the brilliant orb of day, yet within the walls where worship was proceeding, there appeared not a cloud upon a single brow; all seemed happy and content in one another's society, and glad to have the privilege to meet again under such favorable circumstances.

This morning Brn. Stebbins and Pender started for Greenleaf, to commence a series of meetings, where quite a good interest has been worked up by the faithful and untiring efforts of Sr. Ella and Bro. William Landers.

L. F. JOHNSON.

STOCKTON, Cal., Nov. 13.

Editors Herald:—My last to you was from Heppner, Oregon. Since then I have labored in Lebanon, Sweet Home, Waterloo, Drain, Hudson, Looking Glass, Myrtle Point and schoolhouses adjacent thereto, in Oregon. The time occupied was from August 4 to October 17; the number of sermons preached was 63, and the number of baptisms 7. The total number of baptisms this conference year, so far, has been 16. The interest has been varied and the attendance in most places fair. Some of the places named give promise of splendid results if the needed labor can be supplied. In fact Oregon is the most promising part of my mission so far visited. I have not yet been to Nevada, and therefore cannot speak of it from observation. The reports from there are not flattering as to immediate returns, but still are not without encouraging indications.

I reached California, October 27, and have filled two appointments at Sacramento, one at Irvington, and one at San Francisco since then. Came to Stockton two days ago, and am billed for two sermons for to-morrow. Wherever the missionaries have been at work this year I hear good reports regarding them. I wish I had a dozen men to put into the Oregon division of this field alone. Washington is looming up encouragingly, and if it can be provided with more workers will make a good showing.

My health is much better than when I was here a year ago. I am not well, but am able to keep in motion and do twice the work I could on my last trip here. Among the saints I am happy. Some of them are poor and their accommodations limited, others enjoy greater immunity from the pinchings of hard times; but everywhere I have been treated to the best they had, and the scant provision of the former has been as sweet to me as the bounty of the latter. Where the gospel spirit is, there is a home of contentment for me. I will not attempt to give names or single out instances of hospitality. Every place where I made my home was left with a feeling of regret that my stay could not be prolonged. May the Lord bless and reward them all, together with all who contributed in any way or degree to make my work among them a pleasure and a success.

I shall probably not be able to visit Nevada this conference year. This I regret very much for several reasons; but I cannot consistently ramble about to gratify either my own or others' desires to see and be seen.

Work is demanded—hard, persistent work—if results are to be secured either immediately or at some remote period; and this demand cannot be met by indulging the inclination to spend a day or two wherever branches invite. I am glad that the elders are getting to feel that way and act upon that idea.

Our work is suffering greatly in many localities from the lack of local presidents. Think of Washington and Oregon without even a district organization, and saints scattered all over those States without any regular place of assembling, or a branch president to hold them together and minister for their growth, except perhaps in about three instances. Never did my spirit groan within me more over the needs of the different localities than during this year. Surely there is occasion to "ordain and set high priests to preside" where I have traveled. If the interests of the church are to be conserved some persons with ability for local presidency must be sent there to reside and build up the cause. But my letter is stretching out to a wearisome length for the reader, so I will "ring off" for the present.

In the harness,

JOSEPH LUFF.

P. S.—My address is No. 3010 Sixteenth Street, San Francisco, care C. A. Parkin.

FAIRBURY, Neb., Nov. 5.

Editors Herald:—We are all striving for the Master; his work is onward here. Bro H. W. Beleville has been holding meetings here now going on three weeks. The interest is better than it has ever been before; the people think he is the right boy for the place. We give God the praise. Two have given their names for baptism. We have a Sisters' Prayer Union meeting every Thursday afternoon. Our Sunday school is improving wonderfully. We also have prayer meeting every Tuesday evening. Bro. A. J. Myers is our faithful presiding officer. I have been a member of the church about three years, and I do not regret the step taken. Am thankful that God ever showed me the light. I ask an interest in the prayers of the saints, that we all may see the necessity of continuing in the work of the Lord.

In Christ I am your sister,

MRS. KATE RAUSCH.

GREEN.—At Netawaka, Kansas, October 9, 1897, Eva, youngest daughter of Bro. David and Sr. Jennie Green, born August 17, 1891. Father, mother, three brothers, and two sisters, mourn. She was a lovely child. Funeral services conducted by Elder D. Williams, assisted by Harry Thomas, to a large gathering at the saints' church.

WILLIAMS.—At Atchison, Kansas, November 2, 1897, Bro. Wilber J. Williams (son of Elder David Williams, formerly of Atchison), aged 34 years, 8 months, and 11 days. In the prime of a worthy and noble manhood the circumstances attending his last days and his departure were very sad. In his youth he was baptized by his grandfather, Bro. George Thomas, and he loved the gospel. A funeral service was held at Atchison on the 3d, a sermon being preached by Elder H. A. Stebbins at eleven o'clock. Then the body was taken to Netawaka, where his parents and two brothers reside, and at half past two another service was held, Bro. Stebbins preaching again, assisted by Elder W. E. Peak. The aged father and mother are hardly able to endure their great grief; yet their hope in God sustains them in this trial as in others before.

COX.—At his home at Standley, Indian Territory, November 6, 1897, after an illness of one year, Bro. John Cox. He was born April 18, 1836; was baptized June 15, 1894, since which time his life was characterized by a consistent adherence to the cause he had espoused. Wife, five sons, and six daughters mourn. Remarks at grave by Elder S. V. Bailey.

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.
NEW REVISED EDITION.

The manuscript of this edition was carefully compared with the original authorized edition of 1835, which was adopted by a General Assembly of the church at Kirtland, and known as the Kirtland edition. Some typographical errors that crept into and passed through later editions have been corrected, and some omissions supplied.

The revelation on the late Civil War, the "Minutes of the General Assembly" of 1835, the minutes of the "Joint Council" of 1894, and the revelations given to the Reorganized Church to date, are all included in the volume. The "Lectures on Faith" are omitted, but may be published later in pamphlet form, or for those who may want them.

The concordance has been revised and enlarged, greatly aiding study and general use of the book. The concordance, and lists of names of persons and places mentioned in the revelations, are included in the volume.

Ready reference to the book is greatly facilitated by the substitution of figures for the old style Roman letters in section and page headings. The figures can be read at a glance.

The Necessity for a Reorganization.

BY ELDER H. O. SMITH.

This tract sets forth and refutes the false claims and erroneous doctrines of the Utah Church.

It brings to light much of the teachings of Brigham Young and other founders of the Utah faction, and proves them and the present leaders to be at variance with and their organization a departure from the faith taught by the early church and its three standard books.

It also vindicates and maintains the general position of the Reorganized Church in succession.

A tract for the times. Just the thing with which to meet the arguments of Brighamite elders.

Forty-three pages; two for five cents; per doz., 50 cents.

Presidency and Priesthood.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

THE DRIFT OF METHODISM.

BISHOP D. A. GOODSSELL, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has been "expatriated" as he puts it, for nearly two years by the order of his church. Which means, we presume, that he has been assigned to the inspection of Methodist missions in foreign lands. Three thousand miles from America, under the shadow of St. Peter's, at Rome, he becomes reflective over the tendencies of American Methodism, and sends the results of his reflection to The Methodist Review (September).

From a doctrinal point of view, Bishop Goodsell thinks no change or controversy is in sight. Higher criticism is not sapping the faith of his church in the Holy Scriptures, nor, on the other hand, has she so hopelessly committed herself against scientific truth or to any one doctrine of inspiration as to burden the conscience with reservations. But no one can keep his ear close to the voices of the church without hearing two movements in opposite directions. He proceeds to describe and comment upon them as follows:—

"One is toward the modification, if not destruction, of all which indicates our descent from the Church of England; the other seeks to assimilate our worship and the plan of our episcopal supervision to that from which our fathers came out. For a moment let us recall our history. We receive from that church our Articles of Religion, our ritual, our ministerial orders and office; and from her Arminian divines our theology. But we are not the heirs of her spirit. Of this the Protestant Episcopal Church is the sole American possessor. Our mother has changed as she has aged, and has grown more narrow, more exclusive, if not more aristocratic. She has more tenderness for the Roman and Greek communions than for the Protestant churches. All this approach to Rome in spirit and ritual is rewarded by the bull which declares that her bishops are no bishops, and her orders utterly void and worthless. She will remain so much in the control of a generation trained in Tractarian ideas that no change will be immediately visible. The next generation will assuredly be broader. It will perceive that the unity of Christendom is impossible until the claims of the Roman Church are humbled and she be reduced, by combat of her errors, to a less pretentious place. This is a large task, but its successful accomplishment is as inevitable as the growth of science, the substitution of radical faith for superstition, and greater freedom in free countries for the Roman Church itself.

"There is, therefore, no reason why we should accelerate a drift, if it existed, toward the Anglican Church, so far as her present teaching and spirit go. Though she is doing better philanthropic work than before, she is not doing her spiritual work on a truer basis. Like Rome, she teaches dependence upon priestly functions and priestly sacrifice, diminishing her past teachings as to the priesthood of all believers. She is in the Judaistic stage of sacerdotalism and legalism. When she abolishes all intercession between the soul and God, other than that of the compassionate grace of God manifested in Jesus Christ, and reduces ceremonial, in symbolism and obligation, to the orderly, decent, and excellent expression of the church's life and aspiration; when she sees that her true place is in the lead of Protestant forces against Roman error, it will be time enough for us to come into larger sympathy with the mother who, always unkind to her strongest child, now declares it to be illegitimate."

But, Bishop Goodsell continues, the case is different with regard to the enrichment of the church's mode of worship and possibly with regard to the localization of the episcopate. Toward these, decided advance has been made of late. Three items in the English service have been formally placed in the order of worship, namely, the recitation of the Apostles' Creed, the responsive reading of the Psalms, and the Gloria Patri thereafter. The use of these is now directed by the supreme body of the church, and the bishop thinks that the time is near when additional liturgical elements should be allowed to such congregations as desire them.

As for the plan to have the committee on episcopacy of the General Conference localize the bishops, it had a large following in the last General Conference, and while Bishop Goodsell thinks there are fatal objections to such a course in the cases of bishops who have, under past conditions, reached a final course of residence, there are no fatal objections to such a course in the cases of bishops yet to be chosen. Certain it is, however, he adds, that the greater the localization of the bishops the less the dignity and authority of the presiding elders. — Literary Digest, Nov. 13, 1897.

ABOLITION OF SIBERIAN HORRORS.

NEXT to the reported alliance between France and Russia there could be scarcely a more important announcement from the same quarter of the globe than the report that the Czar has determined upon at least a partial abolition of the policy of exiling offenders to Siberia. While there has been no doubt of the humane instincts of the young Czar as compared with the spirit which controlled most of his predecessors, he has been hampered by a long line of precedents and the prejudices of his official counselors and advisors. The change in policy will probably lead to a large increase in the capacity of the local prisons, but will tend to an amelioration of the Russian system of justice, so long identified with the horrors of Siberian exile, while it will bring the whole punitive system more immediately under the eye of the Czar.

This is but one of the evidences that the present Czar is disposed to follow in the footsteps of his grandfather, Alexander II., whose abolition of serfdom thirty-six years ago was the longest stride towards freedom for the masses since the foundation of the empire, although it did not protect him from death by assassination. Coming, as it does, as a sequel to the act of December, 1895, transferring the prison administration from the Ministry of the Interior to the Ministry of Justice, this is evidently but one of the steps of reform contemplated by the reigning Czar, though a most important one, as it seems to imply an abandonment of the policy of arbitrary conviction and punishment without trial of persons charged with political offenses—a policy which has brought infamy upon the whole Russian system of justice. In 1893 the number of exiles sent to Siberia was officially reported at 22,856. Of these 51 per cent were condemned by the courts and 49 per cent by the administration. The number of exiles sent by the administration to the Island of Saghalien—the Russian Botany Bay—the same year was 1,625, of whom 172 were women, besides 482 women and children following their husbands and parents. Probably the highest figure was reached in 1888, when the political exiles numbered 636 and the women and children accompanying them were 5,184.

These figures indicate the importance of the reform said to have been determined upon by the Czar. In view of the mixed population of which the Russian Empire is composed, and the various stages of civilization existing in its different portions, it would be impossible to establish a uniform system for the administration of justice, such as exists in this country. Although the act contemplated does not go into effect until next year, there will be world wide gratification that it has been determined upon. That it will be acceptable to the nihilistic leaders, who have used the Siberian convict system most effectively in winning proselytes to their cause, is hardly probable. Yet it is to be hoped that they may not be able to use their influence in such manner as to drive the present Czar into a policy of reaction, as they did Alexander II. after his beneficent abolition of serfdom in 1861. Its consummation will not only mark a most important era in Russian history, as did the act of Alexander during the first year of our civil war, but may be accepted as the forerunner of important reforms to follow.

ABOLITION OF SIBERIAN HORRORS.

THE announcement recently made that the Czar has determined upon at least a partial abolition of the policy of exiling offenders to Siberia has attracted much attention and comment, the latter being distinctly favorable to the humane instincts of the Czar as well as to his desire to follow in the footsteps of his grandfather, Alexander II., who emancipated the serfs, and to institute a reform in the governmental policy of Russia. Without detracting at all from any credit the world may be disposed to give to the Czar it is possible that another reason may be assigned for the proposed change in policy.

The near approach of the completion of the great overland trans-Siberian railroad will open up to free settlement a vast area of country, as extensive, in fact, as the whole United States, and multitudes of Russians may be expected to pour into that territory when access to it by rail becomes easy, quick, and cheap. They will be attracted there by the farming, mining, and fishing prospects which there is every reason to believe are very promising, as well as for commercial purposes. The Czar in such case cannot well continue making Siberia a penal colony after this migratory movement thither begins to take place. On the other hand he must find some new place or places for the detention and imprisonment of Russians convicted of crime.

A similar experience occurred in the relations of Great Britain to Australia. The latter country was used by the British for many years as a penal territory for convicts and felons. But when free and honest settlers sought the continental island the government ceased to send convicts there and made other arrangements for them. The same motives and reasons may now be producing the change in the policy of the Czar to which the Tribune has made allusion. Assuming such to be the case, it would still be a great reform and productive of benefit to the whole empire to abolish the practice of making Siberia a penal colony. A new locality can be found on the large Saghalien Island north of Japan, and convicts could be transported thither overland by rail to the Pacific seaboard or by water via the Suez Canal, or around the Cape of Good Hope, and thereby save them that awful land journey on foot, occupying from four to six months of extraordinary fatigue and suffering. This of itself would be a material abatement of the terrors of Siberia as well as of the cruelties practiced on the march which are sometimes even worse than those experienced in prison camps. It is one of those cases where any change apparently would be for the better.

"MAN PROPOSES, BUT GOD DISPOSES."

WHETHER it be true or not true that Deity, by personal oversight and direction, interferes in and disposes of the ordinary affairs of men, it is at times comforting to think that "the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord."

Goodness is at times a conventional term, and men and things are good or bad as conditions and comparisons with other men and things may seem to make them. So, in some of the movements of men as societies and as individuals, there often arises the questions, are they the results of human deliberations and decisions, or are they, were they directed by the Higher Power?

James' declaration: "For that we ought to say, If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this or that;" ought to be ever a present admonition of the uncertainty of human affairs, the mutability of things sublunary.

It would have been a bold man who, in the days when the angel's message was being so successfully delivered from 1830 to 1844, should have declared that in a little more than half a century from that day there would be two or more contending factions of men, resulting from the church organized by divine command, and each claiming to be the sole legal representative and successor to that original church; yet such is the fact of history to-day. That an apostasy was imminent, the testimonies of the New Testament and the Doctrine and Covenants, and those prophecies uttered from time to time, as fugitive declarations of the Spirit resident in the prophets, all go to show. But, so indistinct was the impression made by these last-named passing prophecies, or so remote the period assigned for the fulfillment of them by those that heard them, that the introduction of that which was to lead up to the "falling away first," was not noticed; nor the things of Holy Writ, given as the indices of danger, and the provisions for safety made in the law, kept in remembrance.

It had been stated a good while ago that the people and nation that existing on this land should forget God and forsake his word, should be left to their own devices, and the Lord withdraw from them.

The church had been definitely told that those laws given in 1830-31, both in New York and Ohio, and the Scriptures, were to be the law of God to govern the church, "until he reigns whose right it is to reign."

There is no possibility for any mistaking of the meaning of this enactment. To make it more binding upon the good and faithful of the church the Lord added the very significant enabling clause, "Behold, here is wisdom."

The opposite of the courses of human belief and conduct in the church pointed out in the laws of 1830-31-32, would be folly. How long? For the same length of time that the things written of were intended to continue, "until he reigns whose right it is to reign."

This covers the time included in the contention between these two large bodies now called, and calling themselves Latter Day Saints. Who is right in the contention ought to be determined by a comparison of views and citations from the standard books both factions accept as the books of reference and authority—the Word of God.

But, it is not a little strange that the one class of these two disputants, who ought to be most interested in such examination, is absolutely refusing to make it, or allow it to be made before their people.

Whether such examination, if made fairly, and with the intent and purpose to get at the absolute truth of the differences in the faith, doctrines, and positions of the two peoples, would result to the good, or ill of either, and a final settlement be effected to the extinguishing of the one, or the other as to its claim to righteous and legal succession, or otherwise confirm each alike in the claims made and doctrines held, we believe the examination should be made.

It is to us quite inexplicable that our "cousins of Utah" as some of the elders of the Reorganized Church call the church in the valleys of the mountains, should so studiously avoid a discussion with our growing organization, holding to the basic principles upon which the church was founded as we do and have done from the start. Surely there are serious reasons why the grave burdens of disbelief and error under which one, or the other must be laboring, and which must result injuriously to those overwhelmed by them in the hereafter, should be lifted and the victims released for both pleasantness and peace here and salvation hereafter.

CONVERSION.—NO. 5.

IN proportion as Christ enlarges in the human character, the new creation becomes apparent by unmistakable signs. For instance, the appetite changes. Hungering and thirsting after righteousness takes the place of the old lusting for pleasure, display, and giddy people, and resorts. The ballroom is supplanted by the prayer circle, and the clubroom and theatre by the testimony meeting and preaching service. The promise of the Savior that those so hungering are "blessed" and "shall be filled" is fulfilled, as is manifested by the oft-borne testimonies that spontaneously burst from the lips of those transformed.

The mind-inflaming and passion-stirring literature that alone could furnish gratification before is no longer in demand. The normalized appetite now seeks food—nutriment, not stimulant—and the solid and substantial truths of the standard books of the church taste divinely sweet and make the soul unspeakably happy.

How many times have we heard believers exclaim, "How glorious that is," or "How full of comfort is that word," and then inquire, "Why did it not sound so and make us feel so before?" Ah, it was but one evidence of the new creation—the transformation. A perverted taste has but little relish for the really substantial diet that nourishes and sustains life; but the soul that is "born again," and begins to feel the new hungering and thirsting, has appetite for that which builds up a spiritual nature, and the "sincere milk of the word," followed by the "strong meat" in its season, gives spiritual fatness.

Not only does the appetite change, but new spiritual vision, or sight, is secured. "I am the bread of life" begins to break in upon the soul as a realism, and instinctively the child of grace senses the significance of the announcement, "This is that bread which came down from heaven; . . . he that eateth this bread shall live forever. . . . The words that I speak unto you, they are Spirit and they are life." Heretofore, he had discerned no bread in that word and its provisions, but now he feasts thereon and is glad. There has been no change in the Word nor its Author, but a very material change in the one who has become "reconciled to God." Being "born again," he can now "see."

Without spiritual vision before, he could not penetrate the enshroudings of truth, and know how to live by "every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God;" for "where there is no vision, the people perish." Where the power to "see" is wanting, food may be near in abundance, while the visionless perish from starvation. But unto the obedient "it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom," or in other words, the power to "see." Hence, it is not difficult to explain why "the Bible is a new book" to so many who have thus been born. New sight accompanies the new appetite, and becomes characteristic of the "new creature." That new sight dissipates mystery, and the child of God begins to understand the things of God, for they are "spiritually discerned." Before this, he had eyes but saw not.

This thought agrees with the promise of the Master: "By me if any man enter in [to the sheepfold, or church], he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture." Truth is the pasture. Entering the church and receiving the Spirit, as was promised, the believer not only finds food within, as furnished by the direct revelations of heaven to the saints, and in the ability to better comprehend the written word; but when duty requires him to go "out" and mix with the world and investigate the many theories that abound (which contain more or less of truth, though mixed with error), he carries with him a something that enables him to instinctively discriminate between the true and the false. He finds "pasture," and is thereby nourished. The truth tastes as sweet to him there as if found within the church publications.

The Palmyra Seer was commanded to study all good books, and get knowledge and wisdom thereby, as well as by revelation. When he was forbidden to translate and include certain books in the Scriptures, he was told that they contained some truth and much error, and that those having the Spirit could discern the truths therein when reading. Thus it is clear that the Master expected his followers to "go in and out" and "find pasture," as he had said they might.

Two small bars of steel—each of the same size, weight, temper, and brightness—may be passed through the same pile of sand, in which particles of metal abound; one will come out covered with those particles, while the other will be as free from them as when it entered. No cause for this difference can be detected by looking at, weighing, or measuring the bars; yet that there is a remarkable difference must be admitted. One has been submitted to a process by which (while losing none of its former qualities for good) it has taken on or imbibed another, though invisible, quality, by which it attracts to itself substances in affinity with it. This is called magnetism. The other has not been thus submitted, hence is destitute of this mysterious power.

How apt is this illustration: The Master, knowing that the office work of the Spirit was to "guide into all truth," had that fact in mind when speaking, as above shown. The process by which he saves, or the new birth is effected, removes not a particle of former virtue from the character, but adds an invisible—spiritual—quality, which, while retained, attracts to its possessor all truth with which he is brought into contact, whether it be "in" or "out" of the immediate realm of church literature or open revelation. Anywhere that he can take this detector or discerner with him, it will do its work within and for him. Hence it is that a host of believers, thus endowed, may move along the several lines of their chosen or appointed work, and brush against every phase of diversified doctrine, theory, or philosophy, whether in books or active life, and return, each bringing his or her measure of accumulated truth, extracted therefrom. This they lay at the feet of the church, and from this store is drawn by many what perhaps no single one would have gathered alone.

Who is there among the active saints but has frequently been made conscious of the operation within him or her of this spiritual magnetism—this discerner of truth—this detector of error? Who is there but knows that this invisible quality came by means of the new birth process? If it is doubted, range in imagination alongside of some one of equal natural capacity with yourself, yet who stands without the fold, and explain if you can why it is that said individual finds it so difficult to "see" or comprehend what to you seems so plain and self-evident. Why is your ability to separate the wheat from the chaff in what is being preached or published broadcast to-day not shared by him equally?

The command to study all good books and get wisdom and knowledge thereby, was not intended to govern the Seer alone, nor was it meant to imply that he was to believe everything he found in those books. He was, however, to believe and utilize the good contained therein, and he was obligated to discard whatever was not good. This implied discernment or discrimination, and that under his gospel covenant that power was to be his. It is not claimed that this ability is shared equally by all who obey the gospel; but that the necessities of position, place, and duty shall govern everywhere.

Salvation, to the truly converted soul, has a meaning unthought of before. It is no longer believed to be a change wrought merely to prepare people for death; but a transformation by means of which they learn how and are empowered to live. The object is that God shall be manifest in them thereafter as a God of salvation indeed. No one part of the being is confined to the exemplification of this redemptive work. As shown in a former division of this article, the entire man is brought under the rule of life. Development is the order. Faculties of head, heart, or elsewhere, which have lain dormant, awaiting the touch of the Spirit, become active and reveal possibilities never dreamed of before. "Base things, and things that are [were] naught, begin to bring to naught things that are." The power of salvation reveals itself in every department of the individual. Its redeeming virtue is seen in lifting up, ennobling, and enlarging the mind, which quickly reveals a capacity far beyond the limit of supposed possibility. Stripping Davids, of limited intellectual force before, have, under this quickening, become a terror to the theological Goliaths turned loose from the seminaries of what the world calls orthodoxy. Consciences once seared or fortified beyond reach, reveal a sensitiveness to sin's approach that throws a moral safeguard around the entire life. The body—if corrupted to any degree by disease, or vice, or their entailments—yields to the discipline of the new regime, and exhibits salvation's power in cleanliness, virtue, and frequently in health.

In fact the mental, moral, and physical atmosphere are changed, and in this change the new idea of salvation is revealed. It is simply Christ, as the remedy for all the ills entailed by Adam's fall, accomplishing his redemption work in every part of man that has been demoralized by the effects of that fall. It is the gospel's process of cleansing, developing, and sanctifying all the human members and faculties. In this is voiced its power to save. As a consequence of this, God is to be manifest, not only in the change thus wrought, but by the blessings this sanctified life confers upon the world by its Christlike services.

Perhaps no words can better express the broad truth than those penned by inspiration long ago: "If a man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things have passed away; behold, all things are become new. And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ."

While it is true that it "doth not yet appear what we shall be," it is strikingly evident that the transformation wrought even here tends toward a still more glorious ultimate. It is most reasonable to believe that "we shall see Him as he is" if while here we have been made "like him" by the gospel. Surely the hope of the truly converted man is well grounded and fortified. Such hope is ours if we abide in the faith of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. It is important, therefore, that we note the word which says: "Every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he [Christ] is pure." To us, real conversion to Christ means absolute consecration under his law as a beginning, and complete transformation into his image as a final result. By this rule the church is seeking to operate, and in the glory of this consummation it hopes to participate.

A STRONG ARRAIGNMENT; A GRAVE CONDITION.

AT the late Interstate Civic-Philanthropic conference, held at Battle Creek, Michigan, in October, Rev. S. Herrin, of Chicago, the conference secretary, discussed the topic, "How to drain the social sewer." Among other things he said:—

The social sewer is the greatest evil of to-day. In Christianity should lie the cure, but the organized Christian Church is a failure. The present church does not touch the greater evils. Plans to heal wounds must be as broad as the wrongs are. In a Chinese city are twenty-seven Christian sects, but paganism does not know they are there. In Michigan only one man out of a dozen goes to church; still many more are moved by the Spirit of Christ who are true Christians, although supporting no sect. Despite adverse criticism no church is doing a great philanthropic work to-day as the Catholic, yet masses and sermons will never accomplish what is needed; churches burdened with debt cannot easily help others. Intemperance is thriving despite efforts of the church. More beer and whisky are being consumed than ever before. The W. C. T. U. was organized and sent a thrill through the land, but it has gone into political trickery and will never put down the traffic. The Y. M. C. A. meant to do good, but is worldly. It ought to be buried. It is a corpse; as a philanthropic movement it is a fraud, though as a club it is entertaining. There are quarrels over the officers, but no real good is done.

The foregoing is the most sweeping statement we have seen from the ranks of the ministry of the churches. Taken in connection with the statement of another minister, who complained of the Epworth League and the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, that those organizations were practically running the churches and doing them harm, the whole field of church work, including popular church movements, is swept almost bare by Rev. Herrin's added statement, leaving the whole line of church organization and activities a confessed "failure."

With creed revision, higher criticism, and men of high standing within the ranks of the churches, sectarianism is in a condition bordering upon dissolution. The question, What shall be done? is pressing itself home upon ministry and laity. Instead, however, of getting at the root of the trouble and correcting the evils that threaten to completely destroy the faith of the people, new inventions are resorted to, in liberal church movements, so called, that simply offer something new and novel, but that do not prescribe a remedy; and that serve to show the blindness and helplessness of humanity unaided of God.

The Prophet David gave utterance to a statement that reveals a great basic truth, applicable to all ages when men have found themselves religiously at sea and in a condition of darkness. He said (Psalms 119: 126), "It is a time for thee, Lord, to work: for they have made void thy law." The Lord foresaw the conditions that would prevail in the present age, and provided for the salvation of the people by setting up the standard of Zion in these "the latter days." It is strange, in one sense, to see bodies of men claiming to be the Christian ministry and to believe in "the Fatherhood of God"—strange to see their unwillingness to be governed by the precepts of the One whom they profess to revere. Men have the Bible in hand and read therein of God's repeated warnings to and corrections of Israel, yet they fail to see that light from God in present revelation is necessary to meet the demands of the present age. Perhaps they will learn in time, some of them, that human wisdom is wholly inadequate to the task of providing a remedy. It does seem that good men ought to be able to see the need of divine intervention and be willing to accept it, even though to them it seem to "come out of Nazareth" through the ministry of those to whom the Almighty revealed his will in this dispensation.

Let us hope and labor that the honest in heart may see the real condition of affairs and come to and "walk in the light." We have reason to renew our diligence as the organizations of men are drifting to wreck and ruin, that the church may bring to them light and truth and hope, where now there is gathering so much of darkness and despair. The church has a work of no ordinary character before it; such a work as will require entire consecration of mind, of heart, and of means. May those who comprise her membership realize the gravity of the situation and the sacred character of the responsibilities "in-trusted" in some degree "to all."

The rapid consummation of worldly affairs in this the fullness of Gentile times emphasizes the need of the spirit of solemnity and of soberness, rather than of lightness and trifling, that those upon whom rests the duty of laboring for truth may enter into the spirit of that labor. The Master realized the solemn character of his obligations to God and to fellow man. They who partake of the spirit of his work, cooperating with him, will not idle or trifle away their time and opportunities in the face of important and trying conditions now demanding the labor of every individual who loves God and the people.

Let us all remember the parable of the virgins, and be awake and at work in the service of the Lord. If we have oil in our vessels with our lamps we will individually show forth the truth by both oral teaching and personal example.

A GOOD WORK.

A GOOD work in which to abound: that of securing new subscribers for the SAINTS' HERALD. All members of the church ought to read it and keep in line with church progress; all need the help afforded through one another in "the family of God," "the church." Help the members and aid the cause by sending us new subscribers.

The HERALD is within the reach of all, — $1.50 per year in advance.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

A BROTHER writes of his labors in a place where a number of other churches and secret societies abounded, to which he applies the scripture found in Revelation 18:1, 2. Some of our own membership, according to his statement, were too busily engaged at meetings of secret societies to help by their presence at his meetings. We do not believe in secret societies, nor do we commend the practice of neglecting saints' meetings to give preference to those of such societies; we are also aware that other religious bodies act unfairly toward those differing from them in belief. However, we doubt the wisdom of denouncing all such societies in general in the manner mentioned. We cannot convert men by denunciations. We should faithfully endeavor to teach them, leaving results with them and with Him who works upon the minds and hearts of men for good.

Bro. B. W. Pack, of Templeton, California, reports the saints of the Santa Maria branch, that State, as working together for the good of the cause.

Bro. Edwin Smith, of Sacramento, California, sends a newspaper clipping containing statements of spirit mediums, which indicate the limited degree of intelligence manifested by many if not all those under so called spirit control. Good common sense would save some people from many vain and foolish imaginings. However, "common" sense is not common in two ways; being an endowment of a high order, and possessed by few.

Bro. G. W. Shimel, of the Des Moines district, writes of his labors in Warren County, Iowa, in which he was assisted by Bro. George Jamison.

He had striven to do what he could according to his opportunities. He expected to continue and would make a tour into Hardin County, preaching the word as openings could be made.

Bro. James C. McConnaughy, of Akron, Ohio, wrote under date of November 15, of having formed the acquaintance of an old gentleman, "Mr. Bunker" by name, aged eighty-two, now a resident of Akron, an old citizen of the Western Reserve, who states that he personally knew Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, Sidney Rigdon, and many of the early saints. Mr. Bunker was born in "York State," on the west side of Lake Champlain, in 1816; moved to Vermont in 1819; locating in Portage County, now Summit County, Ohio, in 1835. During his residence there he became acquainted with the early elders and saints, of whom he speaks in the highest terms; especially of those named, whom he mentions as preachers of the Bible and the saints as a law-abiding and worthy people. Many of the old inhabitants of the region in and about Kirtland speak in high terms of the character of the Seer and his associates.

A birth notice gave the date of birth of a child as 1867 instead of '97, in our late issue; a typographical error. The law provides that children under eight years of age are to be brought before the church and blessed by the elders; also that parents shall teach their children the principles of the gospel, and the duty of children to obey the gospel in baptism when eight years of age. (See D. C. 17:19; 29:13, 14; 68:4; 90:6, 9.) "The record of children blessed should be kept on branch records, but are not required on the general church record."—Book of Rules, p. 157.

Bro. F. M. Sheehy visited Brooklyn, New York, of late, enroute from Connecticut to New York State; and while there looked in at Brighamite headquarters when conference was being held. After a careful analysis of the situation Bro. Sheehy is of the opinion that the city of "greater New York" is not greatly disturbed or awakened as yet by "this last call to the Gentiles." He is also disposed to question the correctness of Orson Pratt's philosophical deductions, who claimed wonderful intellectual and spiritual results to appear as products of the celestial (?) theory once loudly extolled, now claimed to be temporarily abandoned, but still believed in by Utah Mormons.

Bro. R. W. Davis, laboring in Nevada, wrote from Sheridan that State, of late date that all was well with the laborers there and the Lord blessing their work for good. Bro. Davis' field address is Sheridan, Nevada.

Bishop E. L. Kelley went to Independence, Missouri, on Saturday, the 27th, on church business.

Pres. A. H. Smith continues slowly to recover, though yet unable to do more than to be up and about at home.

Bro. F. G. Pitt, writing from Lydney, Wales, late date says: "Conditions are improving; our conference in Lydney is considered to have been one of the very best. The district was well represented. God blessed us with his Spirit; gifts were manifested to the edifying of all."

The St. Louis Republic, of October 24, sent us by some good brother, contains an account of the finding of an ancient Coptic text of the Psalms, in which psalm 151 is included. Inasmuch as that psalm is said to have been rejected by theologians in the past, importance is attached to this late find. However, scholars are not yet agreed upon which century to assign this Coptic manuscript. An item of additional interest in connection with the find is worthy of note: The manuscript, with other written matter, was found carefully wrapped in coarse linen cloth and all enclosed in a stone box or coffin that had been fastened firmly to the ground.

The Independent, of Coalgate, Indian Territory, contains an article on the "Origin and Tenets of the Latter Day Saints," in its issue for October 29. The article was written by Bro. W. B. Toney, the paper being sent us by Bro. C. M. Fulks.

Some one sends us a copy of the Philadelphia Inquirer of number 6 containing an account of the year's work of the Sunday Breakfast Association. This benevolent organization solicits and receives contributions of clothing, food, money, and other necessities, which it distributes to unfortunate persons, in exchange for work. It associates religious devotional work with the religious work of supplying the needy. It has helped and encouraged many by its timely aid and cheer.

Sr. Hattie Fletcher of Kewanee, Illinois, writes of her faith in the gospel and expresses a desire to continue in the paths of peace. She is blessed in the doing of the word.

The Washington, Pennsylvania, Observer, for October 23, comes to our desk with a lengthy illustrated article, "Where polygamy was born;" a restatement of the old "Spalding Story," including an account of the life of that overestimated individual, Solomon Spalding. The Spalding story has long since been refuted and exploded; the Book of Mormon, said by its enemies to be based upon it, strongly condemns polygamy and kindred vices. The editor of the Washington Observer, with some others, should "wake up" and keep awake.

The National Armenian Relief Committee has sent us a statement of the condition of the Armenian Christians, with an account of what is being done for them in an industrial and general way with a view to making them self-supporting and thus leading to a revival of agriculture and other industries in Armenia. The report gives a graphic account of the awful experiences of those people; of the massacres of fathers, mothers, and children by Turks and Kurds, and the wholesale destruction of villages whose inhabitants would not renounce Christianity and embrace Mohammedanism. The Relief Committee is undenominational. It is seeking to provide for and encourage the destitute widows and orphans who have suffered so sorely at the hands of fanatical Mohammedan fiends. The committee's circular requests that contributions be sent to Rev. F. D. Greene, Secretary, Andover, Massachusetts, and from whom literature on the Armenian question may be obtained free on application. Reading the account of terrible sufferings endured by the Armenian people one realizes a broadening of his sympathies and a better appreciation of privileges enjoyed in more favored lands. The people of all lands, however, are living in conditions far below what should prevail; but the extreme sufferings of the Armenians especially appeal to the sympathies of all who love humanity and who hate oppression.

"Baron von Bulow, speaking for Emperor William, has declared that if the Vatican persists in its policy of sympathy with the Franco-Russian alliance the German government will retaliate on the Roman Catholics."

Illinois' Secretary of State has twice refused to issue a license to incorporate the Mount Zion Brotherhood," which "George Jacob Schweinfurth," the so-called messiah, proposed to locate at Winnebago, that State.

Late elections in Germany indicate the increasing unpopularity of Emperor William and his measures. It is thought that the existing discontent will influence the Reichstag in its action on the government's bill for an increase of the navy. The Emperor is said to cherish the hope of destroying England's claim to supremacy on the seas.

Broomhall, the statistician of the English grain trade, states that nothing but a plenteous yield in Argentine in the coming harvest can prevent an absolute dearth of breadstuffs in Europe. The world's production this year is 278,000,000 quarters, compared with 298,000,000 in 1896, and 308,000,000 in 1891—the so-called famine year.

Father Koslowski, of Chicago, has been consecrated as a bishop by that branch of Catholicism in Germany known as the Old Church, which is not under the jurisdiction of the Vatican at Rome.

The British army is to be increased by an additional enlistment of 14,000 men.

The report is confirmed that the powers have decided to blockade Constantinople in case Turkey refuses to withdraw her troops from Crete and to accept a European governor of the island; this from the Rome correspondent of the London Chronicle.

George Jacob Schweinfurth, the Rockford messiah, has obtained possession of 1,700 acres of land near Portage, Wisconsin; whether or not to be used for his peculiar purposes is unknown.

"London, Nov. 23.—According to a special dispatch from Berlin, received here to-day, the German government considers that the land occupied by the forces of Germany at Kiao-Chow Bay, Shan Tun Peninsula, China, is insufficient for a naval station and proposes to enlarge its holdings there, 'diplomatically, if possible.'

'Berlin, Nov. 23.—The newspapers of this city report that Prince Henry of Prussia, brother of Emperor William, is to take command of the second German squadron in Chinese waters. Admiral Von Diederich will command the combined squadrons. There are five warships in all.'

General Sir William Lockhart, commander of the British forces in India, issued an ultimatum to the revolting tribesmen, demanding that they submit to British authority.

Joseph Chamberlain, Secretary of State for the Colonies, recently declared that the greater part of the coming session of Parliament would be given over to the government measure granting local government to Ireland.

A British force under command of Major Arnold routed Prince Idau, the slave trader, on the Guinea coast, Africa, November 14.

'St. Petersburg, Nov. 24.—The Russian newspapers urge that Russia, France, and Great Britain should occupy points in China to counter-balance the German occupations of Kiao Chou Bay, Shan Tun Peninsula.'

The United States government expended $6,345,158 for coast defenses the past fiscal year, it is expending $9,517,141 for the same purpose during the present year, and the war department asks $13,378,571 for coast defense expenditure during the coming year. The government is also placing the navy upon a strict 'fighting basis.' It has recently placed orders for the largest amount of ordnance required since the Civil War.

General Blanco is reported to have used money in order to bribe prominent officials in the Cuban army, and it is stated, without success. Havana advices of the 23d are that the Captain General has been authorized by the Madrid government to spend $100,000 for the immediate relief of the suffering peasants gathered in towns in possession of Spanish troops. Daring Cuban raids, within sight of Havana, are reported. Commercial bodies and political factions in Spain are urging opposition to the policy of the Sagasta government in colonial affairs. They denounce customs autonomy for Cuba and Puerto Rico and demand protection for Spanish products. General Blanco firmly insists that Cuba cannot be pacified without tariff autonomy; that the success of his mission depends upon that feature being granted. The Madrid Gazette has published the government's decree pertaining to universal suffrage, and expects to also publish other features of the reforms agreed upon when it can do so without unduly increasing the excitement of protectionists at home and autonomists abroad. The answer of the Cuban government to the offer of autonomous terms by Spain is in the hands of Estrada Palma, head of the Cuban Junta in New York City. 'It is the action of the assembly of the constitutional government, and states in dignified and manly phrase the purpose of the revolutionary leaders to decline any proposition from Spain that does not mean complete and absolute independence and perfect freedom from Spanish domination.'

A disgraceful riot occurred in the Lower House of the Austrian Reichsrath on the 24th, growing out of consideration of petitions against an ordinance making the Czech language coördinate with the German in Bohemia. The President left the assembly, after some of the members had become involved in hand to hand conflicts. The disorderly scenes were reenacted and increased in the attempt of the President to convene the Lower House again on the 26th; deputies were removed, after prolonged scenes of turbulence and personal conflicts, until the whole assembly was obliged to retire in disorder. About nine o'clock in the evening a crowd estimated at 10,000, including a large number of students, assembled in the streets of Vienna and threatened the government with revolution, and Count Badeni, the Premier, with the guillotine. An attempt was made to attack Count Badeni's house, which the police prevented. Some citizens were injured, but quiet was finally restored. Editions of the newspapers for the day were confiscated, and many persons arrested for offering papers in the streets. A serious riot is reported at Gratz, capital of Styria, police and military being called out to restore order, and who arrested twenty of the ringleaders.

A Turkish commission, including Constantinople palace officials and an Albanian noble, has been dispatched to Ipek to calm the Albanians, in revolt against the appointment of a new governor of Albania, the latter's predecessor having been obliged to flee on account of hostility.

Berlin advices, November 26: A dispatch to the Frankfort Zeitung from Rome reports that a sanguinary conflict has taken place between the French and British at Nikki in the Lagos Hinterland, in the rich Niger Valley of West Africa, where both nations are seeking to occupy disputed territory. London cablegrams concede the imminent danger of a conflict, but express doubt that such has actually occurred. The Italian version states that the British were treacherously attacked and practically annihilated. French authorities discredit the report.

Echoes from Palestine, a Christmas Sunday school program, containing exercises for all grades—Senior, Intermediate, and Primary—is now being mailed by the Herald Office. The program has been prepared under the auspices of the General Sunday School Association. Copies will be mailed to any address on receipt of a one cent stamp, per copy, to cover postage. Sunday school workers will note the announcement.

Count Badeni, the Austrian Premier, and his cabinet have resigned. Baron Gautsch has been instructed to form a new ministry. The Emperor has decreed the adjournment of the Reichsrath until further orders.

It is now stated that Germany is backed by Russia in her seizure of Chinese territory.

Original Poetry.

THE CHRIST LIFE.

There is a goal we all should win,
A life of worth, of lasting good;
Whose outward deeds reveal within,
"Man's love for man"—earth's brotherhood.
This aspiration for the right,
This love, that seeks to others bless,
Unselfish as the morning light,
It spreads its beams from east to west.

'Tis not enough to say, "We're just."

'Tis not enough to say, "We're kind," Life's deeds must must speak for us—they must!—

Or else we're false, and weak, and blind.
There is for man a higher school

Than selfish natures every taught,
Where reigns supreme the golden rule,
Where "right" is neither sold nor bought:

Where God has touched all hearts to feel,
And eyes to see all human need,
And hands to work for others' "weal"
Forever free from selfish greed.

Where hatred is a thing unknown
Within the precincts of that life;
Where love and justice rule alone,
Exempt from malice, envy, strife.

'Tis just to say, within that state
That love abounds for human kind;
For those that love, for those that hate,
For those that see, and those who're blind.
The Christlife then we sure must live,
If we a better world would know,
'Forgive us," Lord, "as we forgive,"
Must guide us all our journey through.

If I would reach the higher plain,
Where inspiration is divine,
My brother's rights I'll first maintain—
Seek first his good, then think of mine,
Dear Lord, above earth's selfish sight,
Thy hidden glories still reveal,
Till all within, around, is light!
And we thine own perfections feel.

"The Hand that binds the star
In its far center, and around it rolls
Through space its worlds, with never halt nor jar,
No less my steps controls.

"That same unfailing Hand
Hath led me forth from still eternity;
'Twill guide me onward through star-vistas, and I follow trustingly."

WE AND OUR NEIGHBORS.

I WAS very much interested in reading the child's relation to the Bible. I believe any subject can be made so common that it does harm. Even teaching children to be straightforward, manly, and honest, if kept before them at all times, is apt to lead to one of two extremes, either it gets so tiresome that it has no effect, or it makes the child conceited. He will seek opportunities to do something noble to get praise. He will watch his mother's face while he tells, and sometimes exaggerates a little, and if she does not praise him he is disappointed; and if (as most mothers do) she praises him he feels quite a hero, and starts out to find another chance to make a display.

In my observation I have noticed several cases of this kind. One was a good, conscientious woman. She told me she never lost a chance to give her son good advice; never passed by him without encouraging him. So at the age of thirteen or fourteen he no doubt had found out he was a most excellent boy, so he decided he would study for the ministry. At seventeen he got a permit to preach; filled several appointments. At eighteen or nineteen he stopped school and the ministry, and here we draw the veil.

I have in mind another very excellent neighbor, whose little son was quite an example in the neighborhood. He went out one afternoon to play with two other little boys. One was not a very good boy, for he would swear. In a short time the lady came over and told me that her son came home because that boy took the name of God in vain. He said he did not mind swearing quite so much, but he would not play with boys who would do that. His mother was very happy and proud of her child. When the youngest of the three was asked, "Why did E. go home?" the reply was, "O, because G. would not let him be man when we were playing horse."

Another child in a family of several was held up as a pattern to the others for being trustworthy and prompt. When school was out that child would not take the time to speak to anyone, but would run all the way home. The rest were like other children, they would be several minutes behind, when they would get a lecture for not being prompt like brother, when brother would be all smiles, and run faster the next time. Those were all excellent people, and are like all who do the best they can and encourage their children in doing right. But I believe too much encouragement amounts to praise, and the child seeks opportunities to make a display and to court praise more than from principle. I think most teachers have more trouble with those children that are considered so good at home because they expect praise and to be held up as models. When that is not done they rebel and are unhappy because their training has made them expect notice. I believe principle and honesty should be taught. There are good opportunities now and then when it is wise, and will do a great deal of good, but like all other good things should not be made common. Children should not be praised every time they do right. They should be made to feel that it is no more than their duty and we expect it of them.

It is never wise for us to tell the good qualities of our children, for we do not always know. The weakest mothers are those who think they have the most perfect children. They tell about their noble traits when everyone else knows they are no better than the average. One lady said to me when her daughter married it would be a lottery, but she did not think it would be so with the girls who married her sons. At that time I knew her oldest son was a hard drinker, but that was kept from her. Example is the best teacher. Let the child know you do right because it is right; that you could not be satisfied with yourself were you to do any other way.

There is a great deal inherited that is almost impossible to change. I think every one who has raised more than one will admit there are no two alike. There is also a great deal in associations and surroundings, as well as home influence and training. We should never compromise with wrong. We should insist on being obeyed at home, and stand by the teacher when there is any trouble at school, even if we think the teacher is a little to blame. We do not know the particulars. The teacher is not apt to punish without cause, and it is our duty to insist that they do not break the rules of the school. And when they go out in the world they will be better and more law-abiding citizens. MRS. H. B. TORRANCE.

A WORD TO SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS, TEACHERS, AND PARENTS.

BY FRANCES.

While writing a word for the children
Of encouragement, good in its way,
There comes just a thought for those older,
We hope is not out of the way.
'Tis the thought thus expressed, you remember,
Of "Line upon line," being good—
"Here and there," just a word of reminder,
If win in the contest we would.
'Tis a world of temptation and conflict,
For them as for us older grown;
But Jesus will ever remember
To aid and to succor his own.
Yet one thing must not be forgotten,
In fitting their boats for life's sea,
He calls with imperative mandate,
That you his tried helpers must be.

Each day for us comes a beginning,
 Each morning his mercies are new,
 And softly as cometh the evening,
 We may count them as drops of the dew.
 They call with a voice never ceasing:—
 "Come higher, come nearer my throne,"
 So you to your children, your scholars,
 Must act as Christ acts to his own.

Just a word now and then in its season,
 A planning of when and of how,
 The gathering an offering for Jesus,
 The directing aright of the prow
 Of each little boat which is sailing
 Life's sea, where the storms beat and break,
 That you, with God's help, act as compass,
 Pointing true to the path they should take.

If the call thus to act as His helpers,
 In saving a lost world from sin
 Is worthy; O then, we entreat you,
 With zest and good will enter in.
 Enter into this labor by aiding
 The children an offering to bring,
 To help spread the gospel of Jesus,
 Our Savior, Redeemer, and King.

THE CHRISTMAS OFFERING.

AS THE Christmas tide is fast approaching, we are meditating over many things that always come therewith. The entertainments, the feasts, the gifts—all have their time and place. But for many reasons the uppermost in our mind, this year, is one of our gifts—the Christmas offering.

When last year we reached the mark for which we had so long been working, the one thousand dollars, we thought if so much could be done and so few, comparatively speaking, helping do it, what could be accomplished if all would aid in it. The "offerings" of last year would keep about four missionaries in the field. This year we have thought to double it, or even more. Nor do we think we are extravagant in our expectations, for as far as we have seen, many more than twice as many schools are taking up the Christmas offering work, and if not neglected during the year will amount to several times the aggregate of last year.

Superintendents, are you giving due attention to the "offering" work in your school? If you have done nothing yet, begin at once. There is time enough to do considerable yet.

Teachers, keep a small book in which to record each child's offering from Sunday to Sunday, together with a brief note telling how the child earned or procured it. This to be read in class time occasionally. This is a very successful way to maintain an interest in the work.

Parents, are you assisting your children and their teachers in this work? We trust you are. Let each family, class, or school put forth an effort, and see that they do their part.

Our esteemed sister and colaborer, Sr. M. Walker, has for years earnestly and unceasingly labored to make the Christmas offering movement what it now is. Her efforts should be gladly seconded by all, and the call for offerings meet with a hearty response.

Other articles upon this subject give you the benefits and necessity of this movement.

We give it our full indorsement, and earnestly urge that every person of the families of the saints, infant, youth, or aged one, should find their names on the roll with an offering. Do not hesitate because it is small. God knows your circumstances. The "widow's mite" was greater than the wealth of the rich men. Let us effectually sustain our missionaries in the field and the Christmas offering is one of the ways of doing this.

Your brother and colaborer,
 THE GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT.

ON CHRISTMAS OFFERINGS.

Each of us, for good or ill
 Is influenced by another's will;
 'Tis no less true that every one
 Is shaping the course another runs.

JUST stop a moment, to think of it! You teachers, officers, and parents of Sunday school children, do you fully realize that the powers are in your hands to make a grand success of offerings this year?

Your opportunity is here! Christmas is nearing, and we must roll up a good $2,000 this time to present to our missionaries! It all depends on you and your enthusiasm. The little ones are ready, willing—yes eager, and it only remains for older and wiser heads to plan the ways and means to make the opportunities, and then see that they are improved—and success is assured!

How good will be the victory; and amid the general rejoicing which will surely follow the announcement of the grand total, would any of us wish to feel, 'way down in our hearts, that we did nothing, said nothing, or moved no one else to energetic action in this universal effort at Christmastide?

Ah! with our greater powers, if we but coupled the eager will which animates even the least of Zion's Hopes in regard to these offerings, the heart of our good Bishop will swell in anticipation of the good it will accomplish, and his eyes fill with tears as he thinks of the many sacrifices made, the little arms tired, the patient little labors, and the faithful waiting and watching of the little toilers in the Master's vineyards; and he will feel a touch of reverent gratefulness to the teachers, and parents of these little ones, who have thought and labored for this good result.

How eagerly the little ones watch for the Blue Hope, and they feel so well repaid for their care and consecration as they read their little letters and receive the kind words of praise and appreciation from the editor! And, above all, how proud they are of the grand total!

Parents, teachers; do you know that since the last Christmas time there have been elders and ministers sent out to tell the people of the glad gospel message whose hearts have in some instances ached with the knowledge that the loving wife and loved children at home are almost in want—lacking of comforts; and in other cases, he toils on, in ignorance that such conditions prevail at home; his patient, sacrificing wife preferring to struggle along rather than unfit the absent missionary for his labors by a recital of her trials?

These are painful, sad facts; but they are facts, nevertheless. And now, that your attention is called to these things, the opportunity to help comes to you, and thereby the responsibility for your share is laid upon your shoulders! You cannot—you must not shirk these duties by saying, "O, the little I can help cannot go very far. Some one else will see about these things." Your responsibilities must be met and shouldered by you, and cannot be shifted to another.

By tithes, prompt and generous; by offerings from hearts filled with desires to help; by encouragement and assistance given to the children, in preparing and giving their Christmas offerings, let us go at this matter together and astonish even ourselves with the grand result!

Remember the cheery old sea call, "A long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together!"

"There are battles in life we only can fight,
 And victories, too, to win;
 And somebody else cannot take our place,
 When we shall have 'entered in.'
 But if somebody else has done His work,
 While we for our ease have striven,
 'Twill be only fair if the blessed reward,
 To somebody else is given."

Editors Herald:—Seeing the request of Sr. Mary Hawley of San Francisco, California, in last Herald, that prayer and fasting be offered in behalf of Sr. Case on the first Sunday in December, we also desire that all the saints who will to please make mention of our poor mother in their prayers on that day; she has been afflicted for sixteen years. Pray that she may be restored every whit. Nevertheless, let the will of the Lord be done. We desire that she may be relieved of her affliction by the power of God.

TUNCURRY, N. S. W., Sept. 21.

Editors Herald:—In observing the numerous "jots by the way" it reminds me that others, beside myself, are anxiously watching the movements of the work in this far off isle of the sea, and are made to rejoice with us to know that the Lord is adding to the church occasionally. During the last few months a wave of progress has reached this part of the vineyard, and about thirty-six "whose hearts the Lord opened," have attended to the word by which they were initiated into the family and fold of Christ. This gives us exceeding great joy, to realize that the gospel still comes with power, demonstration, and much assurance, and that the seed sown, often amid tears and anxiety, is not always lost. One man greatly desirous of knowing who had authority to baptize him, heard an audible voice at midday, saying, "He who has brought you the gospel is the one to baptize you." This was enough. Another gentleman, at midnight, while meditating whether he would join the church or not, heard a voice saying, "This is your last chance." These men are now rejoicing in the truth, and at their confirmation the Pentecostal promise was fully realized, and with inexpressible joy we all rendered our feeble thanks for his boundless grace. This is the bright side of affairs.

On the other hand Satan is working hard to deceive and lead astray the children of the Lord, and to a certain extent has succeeded. Some occasionally lose sight of the true riches, and drift away into the ways of the giddy, ungodly world. In smoking, dancing, card playing, sweeps, drinking, and a little swearing, some see no harm; but for all that, apparently, harm comes out of such conduct, and hinder the progress of righteousness. A child sees no harm in a pretty striped or spotted snake; but if he comes too near, death is sure to be the result. As saints we should touch not, taste not, nor handle the unclean, which defiles the body and destroys our usefulness.

Sr. Butterworth has been located here for nearly a year, and to say that the saints have been generous is putting it mildly, when we call to mind the saintly like manner in which our wants have been supplied; and our hearts are made glad to think that our lot has been cast in such pleasant places. Our stay here has been one of the oases in life's journey, which greatly strengthens one to move steadily on in the battle of life. Words cannot express our thankfulness; but we know justice will be meted out when every man is rewarded according to his works. A few weeks more and we will be off for our old home in Victoria.

In bonds,

C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

ARTHUR, Ont., Nov. 10.

Editors Herald:—I came here October 22 by request of president of mission and district president, Apostle R. C. Evans and High Priest R. C. Longhurst, to organize a branch. Elder Daniel McGregor and his wife having labored here for nine weeks, and as a result of their labor, along with the assistance of our worthy brethren, George Boshlen and J. L. Mortimer, twenty-five precious souls have been added to the fold during that time, and two more since I came. Others are deeply impressed that we have the truth, and will no doubt obey ere long. The people seem to be ripe for the truth; the seed sown years ago by Apostle J. H. Lake and Elder James McIntosh, is now beginning to take root and grow.

On Sunday morning, October 31, we met for prayer service at the home of Bro. Adam McMullan, the sweet Spirit of God manifested itself in power in tongues and prophecy, to the edification of all present, and to the setting apart of Bro. George Boshlen to the office of priest, Adam McMullan a teacher, and Thomas Berry a deacon. We had a time long to be remembered; both saints and some not of the church felt the Spirit's presence.

On Monday the saints met at the home of Bro. Boshlen to complete the organization. Bro. John Taylor, vice president of the district, being present, was chosen to preside.

The name of the branch is Arthur branch.

Elder McGregor and his wife, and the writer have organized a Sunday school, to be known as West Luther No. 1 union school. Elder McGregor leaves to-morrow for Toronto and Cameron, so I will be left alone to fight the battle with the assistance of the new officers. Bro. Boshlen preached his second sermon last night and did well. Pray for us that we may be able to overcome self, and at last find rest with the pure and the good.

Your brother in Christ,

S. W. TOMLINSON.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, Nov. 12.

Editors Herald:—For some time past our branch has had much of the presence of the good Spirit, and we are thankful therefor; and our beloved pastor has also had a goodly measure of the heavenly manna. On last Lord's day eve he spoke on the parable of the sower; and among other things he claimed that while the seed-sowing was very important, it was also important to note carefully the results produced on the hearts of those who claimed to have been the recipients of the good seed, or word. He spoke of different ways in which people were affected by preaching, and suggested that many mistakes has been made in admitting persons into church relationship before the good seed had had time to produce genuine repentance or reformation of life. He further insisted that in our efforts to bring souls into relationship with Christ, not only should the first principles be taught, but the candidate should be fully acquainted with all the duties that he will be called upon to perform.

I think the position is a logical one; and I am sure that the neglect to teach practical duties, and placing too much stress on faith, repentance, baptism, and laying on of hands, has produced a class of members of the church who, while they were theoretically sound, were spiritually cold as a wagon tire in winter, and practically a dead weight on the church.

Many of the ministry go to an old branch of saints and for an hour and a half drill them on first principles, when every one of them is well versed in all the initiatory rites of the church; but perhaps a large number of them have no family altar at home, neglect the communion, prayer meetings, and other duties that they should perform. When I think of this, I am reminded of the young preacher on his first trip. He had two places to preach; at one place all were sinners, at the other, saints. He first found the saints, and to them he said: "O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" And he surprised the sinners by the promise: "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

But, all levity aside, Brother Editors, I feel that if we made it a rule to teach the people there is something else to do to gain the celestial glory besides giving a formal assent to the truth, and yielding a perfunctory obedience to the requirements of the gospel, they should be taught: "Add to your faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity."—2 Peter 1: 5-7. And if we do these things we shall not fall; but he that lacks these things is said to be blind, and to have "forgotten that he was purged from his old sins."

I am confident that if more pains were taken to thoroughly instruct after baptism, in regard to the practical duties of the Christian life, there would not be so many to say they had not felt the Divine Spirit move their hearts, after years of life in the church.

There are so many soul-cheering and Spirit-reviving themes that the preacher cannot fail to find abundance of seed to sow in the soil prepared by those who are obedient and truly repentant.

May God show us the right, is my prayer, in Jesus' name. Amen.

The son of our beloved pastor is lying low with membranous croup. Others are well, so far as we know.

Yours in the faith,

J. S. STRAIN.

FREMONT, Neb., Nov. 21.

Editors Herald:—Subsequent to my three weeks' vacation I have visited Wheeler, Carson, Persia, and Crescent City, in Iowa; Nebraska City, Bennett, Omaha, and Valley, in Nebraska. Have preached forty-eight sermons, congregations at times were fair, at other times meager; muddy roads, dark nights, prospect of, and falling rains appeared to be the hindrances. There may be some excuse for delicate sisters failing to face a light rainstorm, or plod their way through dark and muddy streets, but it were distressing to know that stalwart brethren fail to put in an appearance at stated branch meetings, because of such slight hindrances, especially so when occasionally a sister evinces the courage of overcoming these slight hindrances; and not unfrequently one hears of those that are laggards in branch duties being most conspicuous at reunions. But with the loyal and true hearted Latter Day Saint, religion is a matter of conscience, and such an one is not ebbing and flowing in tide fashion, evincing an outward zeal in duties that may be pleasurable, and studiously avoiding, under some silly or unheard of subterfuge, that which may not be quite so pleasant; for it does not require a large amount of brain power to formulate excuses to justify negligence. But as the negligent are studious to find excuses, etc., the ever diligent saint is studious with a corresponding anxiety to do a little more each day for the Master if possible, and though the difference between the negligent and the diligent may not be very visible in the meantime, the difference will be visible enough in the day of retribution.

Paul was so beloved at one time by somebody, that had it been possible they would have plucked their eyes out for him; but he lived to see the time when such (as it would seem) liberal souls became enemies to him. Could it be possible that they lavished their hospitality upon him to purchase his influence in their interest, and when he failed to show them favor, they became hostile? Let the reader judge, and you may be greatly aided in reaching a decision by a due consideration of events narrated in 2 Corinthians 10: 7-14. And it will prove beneficial to the most devoted Latter Day Saint who may find that it often requires more actual courage to do the right than to get inveigled in the meshes of wrongdoing. We like favors, but may fear frowns, but anything savoring sycophancy is adverse to ministerial dignity, and he who would transcend it, for present prestige or advantage would likely do worse to have prestige thus secured perpetuated.

The meagerness at a Sunday evening gathering at ——— was attributable to some members attending a popular place of worship. Why is it thus? I was glad to note a change at Omaha for the better. There are sweet singers there under the leadership of Bro. John Suttles. There were fifteen the last evening I spoke, sending forth melodious sounds, which was highly creditable to the leader and his coworkers. I don't claim to be a timeist, or in any sense a musician, but surely Bro. Suttles and his choir were on time on the above evening, with telling effect for good. I was benefited in attending the Sabbath school at Omaha. Discipline, order, reviewing lessons were good—very good. Young brethren and sisters at the front. God bless and keep them. The labors of Bro. F. A. Smith and others in Omaha have been effective for good. Nor was the discussion between the Rev. Savidge and Bro. T. W. Williams wanting in beneficial results for the cause. The labors of the latter brother have been effective for good in other localities, yet the good brother has not pleased everybody.

It would be a great benefit to the church if a greater interest was evinced in singing in other branches, for those having a talent for singing are under the same obligation for utilizing that talent for the good of the cause as the elders sent to preach. It is distressing to hear poor singing in a branch, especially so when a glance over the congregation will reveal those possessing musical talent, yet failing to utilize it for the good of the cause, through some trival matters that never should prevent Latter Day Saints from cooperating according to the gifts and calling of God unto them, for the building up of the cause we all claim to love. It is high time we should be men and women in understanding and children in malice, so work together in unity.

I find Sabbath schools in every branch visited, hence have some conception of the prosperity of Sabbath school work since 1868, when a Sabbath school was organized in Council Bluffs branch—one among the first in the Reorganized Church—which still survives, under the superintendency of Bro. C. Jensen, who is certainly adapted for such work. And I think diligence is required of all in work for which they are best adapted, ever seeking God's grace to strengthen, and his Spirit to guide. I heard some fine singing in Persia and Salem branches; Wheeler, Carson, and Crescent are making good efforts in this direction. The Nebraska and Council Bluffs branches could and should improve.

I sincerely hope there will be a ready response to the call of the business manager that the desired increase of the circulation of the Herald may begin, and not stop short of ten thousand, and that the Autumn Leaves list may swell at least to seven thousand, with a corresponding increase for the Hope. Think of one dollar a year for the Autumn Leaves. We have heard much in the past about a tumbling in the price of our church literature, and now the tumbling process has commenced, let us rally to the help of the Board of Publication in their efforts to give the world a cheap literature, and practically demonstrate our belief that sacrifice brings forth the blessings of heaven.

"Current History" and the "Religio's Arena" are great acquisitions in the Autumn Leaves. I cannot see how any Latter Day Saint can do without it. Why, each number is a young encyclopedia. Long, long may it survive.

In bonds,

JAMES CAFFALL.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Nov. 15.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing, the work has been onward in our city. Elder J. M. Baggerly has assisted in the three weeks' effort put forth here, and has been successful in arousing quite an interest among both saints and outsiders, as quite a number of strangers have become interested through his preaching. Bro. Baggerly fills the bill splendidly as a boy preacher; being small in stature, and so boyish looking, the people are led to wonder and seem astonished when they hear him. Saul was ahead and shoulders above his fellows, of the strong, stalwart stature; but he never was able to throw stones like little David.

The work is growing wider and deeper here day by day.

The entertainment given, Saturday night, by Sr. Fern Griffiths' Sunday school class was just perfectly grand. A large gathering was present to enjoy the well-directed efforts, as each scholar seemed to be on time in every spot and place; the singing was so sweet by times that it made one feel as though they were being hushed by the lullaby of the bright train that sang to the shepherds on the plains of Judea. The class certainly reflected the good talent and taste of their worthy teacher.

R. E. GRANT.

WEST FARMINGTON, Ohio, Nov. 14.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing you I have been very busy. I baptized one old brother at Locust Point before I left there. Came home to Kirtland, dug my potatoes, and got a load of coal for winter, and then came to this place. I have been holding meetings all I can, but with so much rain, the weather and roads are against us. Quite a good many are interested, and I have baptized four here, and others are nearly ready for the water. Brn. Earnest and Wesley Fishel have done a good work, preaching and writing, to show the people the truth.

The heaven is working, and God's kingdom is spreading far and near. I have lots of places to work in now. The lives of the saints, and what kind of a light they have, tell wonderfully to convince sinners of the truth.

In bonds,

F. C. SMITH.

ARGENTINE, Kan., Nov. 13.

Editors Herald:—The prospects in this part of the field are very good. We hold regular meetings every week; an excellent spirit prevails, and almost a perfect unity exists among the members. We are also holding regular meetings at Rosedale, where we baptized two excellent ladies lately, with others standing at the door of the kingdom. We also preach frequently at Mariam and South Park; at both of which places we have succeeded in making friends to ourselves and the cause we love so well. Doors are opening for us upon every hand, and it seems that God is sending his angels before us to open the way and prepare the hearts and minds of the people to receive the message of life as restored from heaven by holy angels, according to the scripture; and we are aided by the divine Spirit to unfurl the banner of King Emmanuel. Our hearts are filled with love, and our minds with light, to our full satisfaction.

And not a wave of trouble rolls
Across our peaceful breast.

Brn. F. Parker and Omer Hughes have been of excellent service to us in our labors.

F. C. WARNKY.

SEDALIA, Kentucky, Nov. 15.

Editors Herald:—The conference of the Kentucky and Tennessee district is a thing of the past, but we are rejoiced to report that it was a fine one—the very best ever held in the district, so reported. The local force of saints, with large representation from nearly all parts of the district, were present. The reports show sixty-seven baptisms and eight ordinations during the past four months, evincing that the social and spiritual strength of the work is rapidly increasing. The business was disposed of without a jar. The social service on Sunday was very good and marked with the Spirit's presence. Bro. Cook, the Bishop's agent, preached on Saturday evening, with his mantle on. Sunday forenoon the writer occupied. In the afternoon Bro. Henson delivered one of his characteristic sermons. Bro. D. W. Cook was ordained an elder and C. Harris a deacon at the social meeting. The few families of saints deserve great praise for the royal manner in which they cared for the conference. It was certainly made manifest that the spirit of the gospel unifies and makes Zion one. I hope that every one in the district who bears the priesthood will go to work under this good influence, and "thrust in their sickles and reap."

Bro. Sory, of Memphis, was with us, cheering and comforting many with his testimony. The next conference will be held at Foundry Hill; time to be set by president of district.

To arrive at the truth we should spare ourselves no pain, but certainly inflict none on others. Quarrels will never advance our cause; and to persecute is no way to convert men. No man is stronger than his weakest point. Temptation will find it sooner or later, and his strength will be tested. The Lord has very little good for a man who has to tell how good he is before the people find it out. God expects them to find out his true character from the life he lives. Let us all strive to live as becometh saints in the bonds of charity and peace, and the victory is ours.

We are still in the faith, and doing the best we can under the circumstances.

Yours in bonds,

T. W. CHATBURN.

CLITHERALL, Minn., Nov. 22.

Editors Herald:—I am still in the faith and rejoice in the blessings of the gospel. My ministry was hindered during the summer by sickness; so much so that I was forced to leave my mission the first of August. Many thought my work was about done; but I am thankful to our heavenly Father that my life is still preserved, and that on the 15th day of August, when Elders J. R. Lambert and S. Ackerly administered to me I was instantly healed. Since that time I never felt better, both in body and spirit.

I visited the saints in Missouri and Kansas, and enjoyed many blessings of the Master while with them. Kansas was my first mission field, and to say that I enjoyed my visit there is only putting it in a mild form: for I met a number that I brought into the church twenty-one years ago. Some cried, others laughed, and some could not speak at all at first. I was indeed glad to find them still in the faith and enjoying the love of God that came to them when they first obeyed the gospel. Where I used to preach in dugouts and sod houses now stand good comfortable schoolhouses, in which our present missionaries can preach Christ and him crucified in power. Thank God for his goodness. I had the pleasure of meeting some who were healed by the power of God under my hands twenty years ago, who were not members of the church and are still outside, but it is not their fault. May the good Lord open the way for them yet, is my prayer. I was well received by all I visited while there, hence I mention no names, as all are dear to me by the ties of the gospel. The only thing I regret is that I could not visit all; being called back to my own field to look after its interest is what hindered me from doing so. I hope none have taken offense.

The work in my mission is growing slowly but surely. All seem to enjoy the blessings of God. I married a nice young couple on my fifty-fourth birthday—the 11th of this month. The parties made happy upon that occasion are Mr. Ben Whiting and Miss Lizzie Thoreson, both of Clitherall, Minnesota. There were about a hundred people present, and the many valuables presented to them are too numerous to mention. May they have a long, peaceful life is my prayer for them. I returned to Audubon and found Sr. Way almost at death's door; but through the ordinance of God's own appointing, she was healed. This made our hearts rejoice.

Our church building in the town of Audubon is inclosed, and we hope to get it in shape for use this winter. When finished it will be a credit to the saints in that part of the mission; and will speak in praise of those who have sacrificed in that direction. My co-laborers are busy and pushing ahead as best they can.

In the faith,

I. N. ROBERTS.

HOLDEN, Mo., Nov. 16.

Editors Herald:—The work in Holden is in better condition and a better state of feeling exists among the saints since the elders from Independence labored here. Elder H. H. Robinson preached some faithful discourses, which were instructive. He was followed by Elder G. H. Hilliard, on the subject of tithing—the latter being the best we ever heard. The speaker held the attention of the congregation so close that the dropping of a pin could have been heard. If all the saints whose names are enrolled on the church books were as faithful in duty as that brother, the spirit of God would be with them, and they would all be of one heart and mind. Elder Hilliard is the best exponent of the gospel I ever heard, and his sermons had a beneficial effect on the saints.

The Master has said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." There is a good deal implied in the language above quoted. If every professed follower of Christ would deny himself some indulgence and use the means employed for such in promoting the interests of his cause, making it the ruling principle of his life, the cause of God would receive an impetus that would send it on and on, until it reached the desired end. The present is ours to improve; if we will, we can do much to aid the work. The old Scotch proverb says, Many little make a mickle. With the sum of our little we can send out an elder into the field, whose heart is in the work, that others can have a chance given them to obey the gospel. When we have done this, let our prayers ascend to God that his ministrations may be blessed, then we will have done our part and God will do his.

Finally, let our prayers ascend to God for all whom he has chosen to be his standard bearers, that he may inspire them with zeal and confidence, and to this end may all work, that the speedy redemption of Zion may be accomplished.

E. B. FARRAR.

MAYSVILLE, Ark., Nov. 20.

Editors Herald:—I have just returned from a trip south. I left Maysville, September 7, visited Coalgate, Indian Territory, held a meeting at that place, and baptized three. I enjoyed fine liberty in presenting the word to the people, and was well cared for by the saints; they looked after my temporal needs while I ministered to their spiritual wants. At Paul's Valley, Indian Territory, lives a worthy and faithful couple, Bro. and Sr. Blackwell. I held meeting in a hall; had good hearing. I then held services at a schoolhouse eight miles east, with a fair hearing and some interest. I visited my brother Andrew at Oscar, where I once lived four years; here I had the pleasure of again preaching to my old neighbors and friends; had excellent liberty in all my efforts.

I then returned to Paul's Valley and remained a few days, assisting Bro. Blackwell in fitting out a rig to travel with; and on the 6th started with buggy and team a distance of two hundred and fifty miles through Indian Territory alone. On my way I stopped at a store at Rock Crossing on North Canadian River, to see if I could stop over night. The men in the store were busy and said I could not stop, as they were not prepared to keep travelers. It was night; I insisted. They said they were only camping. I told them I could camp with them. Then I was told that they were not only campers but were Mormons. I then told them I was a Mormon preacher. The next question was, Utah or Reorganized? I said "Reorganized." They were members of the Reorganized Church, and after the usual handshaking took place I was made welcome to the home of Bro. Perkins and sons. Those men I found to be firm in the faith and doing a good business, dealing in drugs, dry goods, and groceries. I stayed all night, but could not stay longer, as I was on my way to Choteau, to hold meetings. On the morrow I bade them good-bye, but not until they had remembered that an elder needs an overcoat and other clothing, as well as money to pay expenses. I promised to return as soon as possible. May the Lord bless those brethren in spiritual and temporal blessings.

I went over the country for three more long days and landed at Bro. and Sr. Snodgrass' at Chouteau; held three preaching meetings with poor congregations. Spent several hours with this noble family in pleasant conversation, after which we bade them farewell and started for Maysville, landing home safe and sound. Found all well at home, and a happy welcome by saints and many brethren. Will preach at saints' meetinghouse on Sunday night.

Now in conclusion, a word to all saints in my mission field: When I got home I was met by my little ones all happy and glad to see Papa; the saddest picture I ever saw, they were all barefooted and ragged. They had to quit school as soon as the weather became cool. Now, dear saints, this is a sad picture, but not overdrawn. Do try and send in your tithes. May the Lord bless us all.

S. W. SIMMONS.

THURSTON, Neb., Nov. 22.

Editors Herald:—I came to this place November 8 in company with Bro. Joseph Sumner, who lives six miles north of Lyons, Nebraska, where I held meetings for a week, with small audience but good interest. I don't know that I did any good unless I strengthened the family of Bro. Sumner. I enjoyed my visit; they are a noble hearted family, including Bro. Arthur Sumner, his brother.

I commenced meeting at Thurston the 10th; the house is crowded every night; it is a large schoolhouse, and there is not seating capacity for the audience. The interest is good, and the Lord is blessing my efforts, and the Spirit is with me, and is moving out on the people and drawing them near the Lord. And, dear saints, that same spirit of love and joy that the Lord blessed me with last fall when I was in the city of Camden, New Jersey, is with me here, and while presenting the truth to the people I see that same light on many faces in the congregation that I see on the faces of the saints. It is encouraging, and I feel as though the Lord is blessing my efforts. When I look over the audience and see so many honest souls that are in the dark and worshiping God with the best light they have, my soul yearns for them that they may see the grandeur of the gospel and obey before it is too late.

Last night at the close of the meeting I sold five of the Book of Mormon, which I order to-day; one of the books was for a Lamanite brother, or may be some day. His father is a white man. He is a bright young man, and if he sees the gospel in its pure light he can do some good with his people. I believe the time will come that the Book of Mormon—their own history—will be the book that will convince them that Jesus is the Christ.

We have one name for baptism next Sunday—a noble, gentle-spirited young lady—a school teacher near Thurston. She says there is something to think about in this gospel. She will be an honor to the church, because I think she will be a worker. There may be more good with her next Sunday. We have got an organ, and our noble sister, J. E. Butts, is organist, she is one of the sweet singers of Israel. I am stopping with Bro. and Sr. Butts, four miles east of Thurston; they are as kind to me as though I was their brother indeed, and they seem as though they are my brother and sister. Dear saints, remember me before the Lord, that I may have God's Spirit with me, that I with you may continue faithful to the end of this life, and then when called to depart, that we may hear that welcome plaudit, Well done, good and faithful servants.

CREOLA, Ohio, Nov. 24.

Editors Herald:—I arrived here on the 21st inst. and found the little town in great excitement over the sad misfortune of the little daughter of Bro. and Sr. A. B. Kirkendall.

Within the infinite dealings of God we see many things hard to understand; but this one seems to be the most difficult. We cannot believe, as some do, that cruel death is inflicted upon the sweet, innocent child to remind the parents of their remissness. All who know Bro. and Sr. Kirkendall would pronounce this visitation very unjust, from that point of view, for we have few saints in the church whose influence for good among all classes excels theirs. One hour's acquaintance with them induces one to believe their acquaintance has been life-long.

On the 20th little Merl, with some other children, were playing around a fire about ninety feet from the house, when her underskirts were ignited, and by her running to the house fanned the flames, which were only extinguished by the frantic stricken mother wrapping her in her own garments until receiving severe burns, she drew the suffering body to the rain barrel and put the flames out.

As soon as she was brought into the house she called for Papa to administer to her, which he did; but he could not, with all the faith and anxiety of a devoted father, receive that earnestly prayed for assurance that she would ever recover.

When I first saw her she looked cheerful and pleasant in the midst of this awful ordeal. I could not think for a moment she would have to succumb to the demands of death; but after administering to her my hopes of her recovery became clouded. She was burned almost to a crisp, from her ankles to her neck. About two o'clock the next morning she peacefully passed away without the least sign of pain, while uttering a prayer for her parents.

Bro. James Moler being her favorite among the elders, was sent for and gave a very encouraging discourse from the text selected by the mother: "Their angels do always behold the face of my Father," which none could more appreciate than the bereaved ones.

On Tuesday she was conveyed to her last resting place amid expressions of sympathy seldom witnessed on like occasions. While standing around the new-made grave, and viewing for the last time the cold remains of what was once a blooming flower in the unbroken wreath of a griefless family, we felt in the midst of it all to praise God for the glorious promise that some day we can embrace this darling, where devouring fires cannot rob her of life. Then and not till then, will the mysteries of death be fully elucidated, and every dispensation of God—be it ever so hard to bear in this life—be held in highest praise.

We are about to enter into a discussion with Elder Cole, of the Hedrick faction, providing he will be as willing to debate as some of his members here seem to be. Elder James Moler is to be our defender.

Elders Frisbie and Haldeman of the Hedrickites came to Coalton a few months ago and waged unrelenting war against the Reorganization. Armistice was shortly effected, but since that, civil war has broken out among them, which will likely result in the disruption of their autonomy. More anon.

Yours for the right,

F. J. EBELING.

WHITE-CHISM DEBATE.

Bro. I. N. White, and Elder J. W. Chism of the Christian faith, met in debate at Kosoma, Indian Territory, November 8-13. Elder Chism affirmed his church proposition first, and by the aid of the hoofs and horns, dates and figures, brought the Campbellite reformation out for 1827, through the instrumentality of Alexander Campbell, Barton W. Stone, Walter Scott, and others.

Bro. White steered clear of his argument on this line until Elder Chism got his date thoroughly established, and then accepted his date, 1827, as being the time for the beginning of the restoration, and showed that September 22, 1827, was the date upon which the angel appeared to Joseph Smith and delivered to him the plates upon which the Book of Mormon was written. During this time Bro. White worked from his chart on the dispensations, taking for a basis Matthew 20:1-16; and building from Amos 7:3, showing how God had introduced the different dispensations; that he had always used an inspired prophet to bring about every dispensation to establish his work. This Elder Chism acknowledged, but still claimed that all miraculous communication ended with Christ and the apostles; that God had "spoken in these last days unto us by his Son," in the Bible.

Elder Chism having conceded Bro. White's chart argument, and Bro. White having conceded his date, 1827, for the restoration, the contention was on the scriptural characteristics of the persons who brought in the restoration and on the manner in which they did the work. Bro. White got before the people how God had begun former dispensations; first, through Adam; second, through Noah; third, through Moses; fourth, through John the Baptist; this agreeing with the "first," "third," "sixth," and "ninth hour" of Christ's parable, recorded in Matthew 20:1-16. This was corroborated by two other witnesses: Luke 20:7-19, Mark 12:1-12, showing that Matthew's ninth hour was Luke's and Mark's time of John the Baptist, and the Son of God, the heir. Hence the "eleventh hour" of Christ's parable in Matthew 20:1-16 was at that time lacking of fulfillment.

Elder Chism having committed himself to Bro. White's interpretation of the chart up to the "ninth hour," and having by the means of the hoofs, horns, and figures fixed the date for the last restoration for 1827, and Bro. White having accepted that date, made the fight a very interesting one. Whose man—Alexander Campbell or Joseph Smith—was to carry off the "eleventh hour" dispensation, coming in fulfillment of Bible prophecies pointing to that great event? was now the question. Bro. White pressed Revelation 4:1, showing that the things that John was permitted to see from there to the close of the book were at that time unfulfilled, and were to take place "hereafter."

Bro. White pressed Chism on Revelation 12: the woman clothed with the sun, the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars; and the remnant of her seed, etc. Also, Revelation 14:6, 7. Showing that in the "eleventh or last hour"—the hour of God's judgment, an angel was to come to earth "having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell upon the earth."

Elder Chism here committed himself again, and interpreted the woman of Revelation 12 to be the "new covenant and sanctuary," that had been broken, neglected, and trodden under foot, which had been restored, and cleansed, by Alexander Campbell, Barton W. Stone, Walter Scott, and others, by preaching the "old Pentecost gospel;" and that Alexander Campbell was the "angel," or swift messenger of Revelation 14:6, 7.

Bro. White here stated that he would not make any fight on Chism's exegesis of Revelation 12, that the woman was the new covenant—the sanctuary but that he believed she represented the church. (Rev. 19:5-8.) So the fight came on Revelation 14:6, 7. Elder Chism claiming the Greek word angelon means "swift messenger," and that that swift messenger was Alexander Campbell.

Bro. White maintained that it was a literal angel; that Paul by inspiration had his eyes on this very event when he said in Galatians 1:8, 9, "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." Paul made this statement twenty-five years after Christ had delivered the commission to the apostles, recorded in Mark 16:15-18: "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." Bro. White here showed that Paul and all the apostles had invariably preached that "signs should follow the believers."

At this juncture the whole contention was narrowed down to two very important points: Who received the message of Revelation 14:6, 7? and, Was it a restoration of the "old gospel" of Mark 16:15-18 that Christ first delivered unto his apostles? Here Bro. White crowded Elder Chism along the line on Amos 3:7: "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." This Elder Chism hastily conceded again, as Bro. White had previously quoted from Campbell's "Christian System," page 38, where Campbell says: "For a divine warrant has always been essential to any acceptable worship. The question, 'Who has required this at your hands?' must always be answered by a 'thus saith the Lord,' before an offering of mortal man can be acknowledged by the Lawgiver of the universe." This statement, taken with Amos 3:7 and Elder Chism's acknowledged interpretation of the chart, where Adam, Noah, Moses, and John the Baptist had introduced God's work, but not without a 'thus saith the Lord,' made Mr. Chism's foundation look rather shaky.

Here Bro. White showed how God had visited Adam and introduced the "early morning hour" dispensation. He also visited Noah, and introduced the "third hour" dispensation, and that by a prophet; and he also visited Moses by an angel in the burning bush (Ex. 3:2-7), and introduced the work by a "Thus saith the Lord" in the "sixth hour" dispensation: and again visited Zacharias by an angel while in the temple performing his priestly functions, and introduced the "ninth hour" dispensation by a "Thus saith the Lord." And now for God to be like himself, he surely would not attempt to introduce the culminating and crowning dispensation for the salvation of man, without a "Thus saith the Lord." Hence John being instructed, "Come up hither and I will show thee things which must be hereafter" (Rev. 4: 1), viewed the landscape and saw "Another angel flying in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell upon the earth." (Rev. 14: 6.) Here Bro. White introduced Alexander Campbell again, who in his Christian System, page 250, says: "We want the old gospel back, and sustained by the ancient order of things."

Since Mr. Chism has acknowledged a "falling away," or an apostasy, also a restoration in 1827; and as it is the "old gospel" that Mr. Campbell and his disciples, as also the ministry of the Reorganized Church, represents are contending for as being restored in 1827, the question is, Who has it? "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isa. 8: 20. A right application of this should decide which of us (White or Chism) is right. It all hinges now upon what was the "old gospel" and what part was apostatized from, and what was introduced in the restoration of Alexander Campbell, or the restoration brought about by the instrumentality of Joseph Smith in 1827, and how introduced? Christ gave the "old gospel" to the apostles. Paul says that neither men nor angels dare preach any other, and now has Christ commissioned any man and sent him out under a "Thus saith the Lord" to tell the people that the "old gospel" has been restored, and preach "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall not follow them that believe"?

Bro. White here showed that when the angel sped his way to earth, and restored the gospel through Joseph Smith, September 22, 1827, he restored the same "old gospel" of Mark 16: 15-18, as delivered by Christ to his ancient apostles, without addition or subtraction. He showed that it was ridiculous to teach that Alexander Campbell was that angel flying through the midst of heaven. He further showed that Elder Chism was mutilating God's word by adding to John's prophecy, which he had warned the people against in Revelation 22: 18, 19.

The debate kept growing more interesting along this line, and all present became disputants and were worked up to the highest pitch of excitement. Elder Chism began to lose his grip when putting Alexander Campbell as the angel against the real angel with his message to Joseph Smith. Now came Elder Chism's desperate end, to blacken the character of Joseph Smith, by reading extracts from John Hyde's book against the Mormons. His main jawbreaker was that one in which Peter Ingersol is reported to have said that Joseph Smith said, "He had no golden plates, nor did not believe there was such a thing in existence. But he had the d—n fools fixed, and was going to carry out the fun." But all this failed to turn Bro. White from his purpose; he pressed the "ancient gospel" and the claims of Joseph Smith to the proper fulfillment of the prophecies of the restoration of the "ancient gospel" in its fullness through the hand of the angel of Revelation 14: 6, 7. Yes; in September 22, 1827, in harmony with Chism's own interpretation based on Daniel's prophecies and the Book of Revelation.

The contest now narrowed down to the restoration of the "ancient gospel" with or without signs following the believer, Elder Chism, now more fervent than ever, claimed that the angel of Revelation 14: 6 was Alexander Campbell, and that Campbell restored the "old gospel"—condemning all signs, dreams, visions, tongues, prophecies, healings, etc. Bro. White still stoutly maintained that said angel was a real angel from heaven, and that he did surely visit Joseph Smith, in September 22, 1827, and restored the "old gospel" with the signs spoken of by Christ in Mark 16: 15, 16, when giving the commission to the apostles to go preach the gospel to all the world and every creature.

Here Elder Chism became very warm and wanted Bro. White to show him a sign, by striking him blind. He would point out first one of the saints and then another, and ask them if they spoke in tongues when hands were laid on them for the gift of the Holy Ghost; and he would also ask them if they had ever seen any of these signs and wonders.

Here Bro. White reminded Elder Chism that it was him he was debating with, not the audience; and that the audience had no way to defend themselves against his ungentlemanly thrusts, but to confine his remarks to him, as he was there to take care of him, when he got the floor. But to this Elder Chism paid but little heed.

In Bro. White's last two speeches he introduced a line of witnesses in proof of miracles and spiritual gifts from the days of Christ until the fourth century, and also in this our day. The line of proof was as follows:—

1. John the Baptist, Matt. 3: 11. 2. Jesus Christ, Mark 16: 15-18. 3. Philip the evangelist, Acts 8: 12-17. 4. Ananias, Acts 22: 16; 9: 17, 18. 5. Paul, Acts 19: 1-5; 2 Tim. 1: 5, 6. 6. John, 2 John 1: 9, 10. 7. Jude, Jude 1: 3. 8. James, James 5: 13-15. 9. Justin Martyr, who wrote about fifty years after the apostles, says: "There are prophetic gifts among us until now. You may see with us; both men and women having gifts from the Spirit of God."

10. From Church History for the third century, page 143: "I cannot but observe on this occasion how strongly their continuance in the third century is here attested."

11. Cyprian, who was converted in A. D. 259, says: "Hence an ability is given with sober charity, uprightness of mind, and purity of language, to heal the sick, to extinguish the force of poison, etc."

12. Milner, in his Church History, speaking of these events, says: "Indeed, the testimonies of the Fathers in these times are so general and concurrent, that the fact itself cannot be denied without miserably impeaching their veracity."

13. The great historian, Mosheim, vol. 1, page 78, says: "In the third century the church was blessed with dreams and visions; to this may be added the healing of diseases, and other miracles which many Christians were yet able to perform."

At this point Bro. White introduced John Wesley's testimony in his ninety-fourth sermon, when he says that spiritual gifts were not taken out of the church by the hand of God; but that the people were turned heathen again, and had nothing but a dead form left.

14. He next introduced one of Mr. Chism's own men, Hayden's History of the Disciples on the Western Reserve, page 250, where Mr. Hayden gives an account of Joseph Smith healing one Mrs. Johnson, a Methodist preacher's wife, whose arm had hung lifeless at her side for years from rheumatism.

15. He confirmed this by one Mr. Kenny, who testified that Mrs. Johnson lived for fifteen years afterward and never had another attack until her dying day.

16. Here Bro. White introduced the sworn testimony of one Elsworth Moorman, who testified that he was healed in 1875 from deafness, under the administration of Elders I. N. White and W. C. Nirk.

As Elder Chism had repeatedly called on the saints who sat in the audience to tell whether they had seen miracles, Bro. White decided to have a few get up and testify and have the time deducted from his time.

17. The first was Elder Ellis Short, of Standley, Indian Territory, who testified that he had been afflicted with periodic asthma for five years, from 1875 to 1880; that there would be five and six days in each month that he could not rest day or night; the best medical aid could give no relief. While suffering the most he sent for Elder W. S. Taylor. He administered to him in harmony with James 5: 13-15, and he was immediately and permanently healed, and has never had a return of the disease.

18. Ellis Ford, of Abbott, Indian Territory, testified that in 1893 he had a surgical operation performed on his right arm, which left it in a paralyzed condition. He was administered to by Elder J. D. Erwin, and was permanently healed, and had never felt any effect of the paralysis since.

19. Next was Mrs. Lucinda Hogue, of Standley, Indian Territory, who testified that she had been afflicted seven years with what the doctors called consumption, and had "suffered many things of many physicians," all without effect; at last she sent for Elders Ellis Short and Heman C. Smith, and was permanently healed, and had never felt any discomfort from it since. That was in the summer of 1895.

20. The fourth and last one who testified was Miss Eva Bailey, of Standley, Indian Territory, who testified that she had been healed; had seen and heard people sing and speak in tongues and prophecy, etc. She had heard her mother sing in tongues; and read a verse of a song she sang in tongues, as follows:—

"Awake ye saints and labor,
Be not slothful any more;
For the time is surely coming,
When your labors will be o'er.
Then arise, be up and doing,
Labor while 'tis called to-day;
Gather out the honest-hearted,
Bring them in the narrow way."

While Sr. Bailey was giving her testimony the Spirit rested upon the audience in great power, and many were made to give vent to their feelings in sobs of grief.

Bro. White then took up his argument where he left off, and went on and finished his speech, which closed his part of the debate.

The debate went off with the best of feelings all around. Bro. White came to Standley and preached a very interesting discourse to the saints. That night he sought the Lord in prayer, to know where to go, and was directed by dream to Clinton, Missouri. When he awoke the room was perfectly aglow with the Spirit of the Lord.

He left here the 15th for Clinton, where he will spend a day or two. The saints have been greatly strengthened here by Bro. White's labors among them. May he live long to labor for the Master.

Yours in bonds,

W. B. TONEY.

She was baptized by Elder Robert Davis, in 1880, and shortly afterwards moved to Independence, Missouri, thence to Lamoni, some two years ago. Her sojourn in life was 45 years, 6 months, and 17 days. And ere her departure to the summer land of rest, there was administered a visitation of comfort, and a gracious foresight of the first resurrection. Funeral in charge of Elder J. A. Gunsolley, sermon by Elder Robt. M. Elvin, from Psalms 116: 15, at the brick church to a large congregation. Interment in Rose Hill cemetery. Prayer at the grave by Elder F. A. Smith.

SMITH.—Elmeda, daughter of Bro. Wm. and Sr. Alice J. Smith, August 30, 1897, at her home near Winston, Missouri. The parents mourn, but are comforted in the promises of him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me." Funeral services were held at Winston in the Evangelical church on the 31st, J. C. Elvert in charge, J. S. Constance delivering the sermon to a very attentive audience of relatives and friends. The little one was aged 5 years, 2 months, and 24 days.

They emigrated to America in 1860, locating in Macon County, Missouri. In 1862 moved to Bevier, where they resided until his death. Wife, four daughters, and a number of grandchildren mourn. Deceased was born at Pointon, Lincolnshire, England; was married to James Bradley, October 12, 1838. She united with the Latter Day Saints while living in England. Came to America with her husband in 1849, settling at St. Louis; moved to Wisconsin in 1850, and came to Amber, Jones County, Iowa, in 1863. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church by H. P. Brown in 1866, and was faithful until death. Funeral sermon by Elder Warren Turner, from Revelation 14: 13.

HAMMOND.—At Los Angeles, California, October 14, 1897, Sr. Belle Hammond, aged 41 years, 8 months, and 3 days. She was born in Audersley, Renfrewshire, Scotland, February 11, 1855. Sr. Hammond was the daughter of William M. and Sr. Elizabeth Gibson, of San Bernardino, California. Her mortal remains were deposited in Evergreen cemetery, in the eastern limits of the city of Los Angeles.

He was afflicted the greater part of his life and suffered much, but never murmured because of his affliction, and seemed to bear it all with that patience only a child of God could. He was a member of the Reorganized Church. Was baptized by Bro. James R. Badham in California. Funeral sermon at the house by Elder I. N. Roberts.

HENNING.—Sr. Minnie Henning was born in Brown County, Minnesota, November 18, 1873. Baptized by Elder R. J. Anthony, June 14, 1886, at Salem, Utah. Died near Nevada, Missouri, November 17, 1897. Funeral obsequies from the Green Valley M. E. chapel on her twenty-fourth birthday, by Elder F. C. Keck, assisted by Elder C. F. Belkham. Sr. Minnie lived an exemplary Christian life, loved by all; best by those who knew her best, because of her patient endurance and pleasant disposition at home and in the society of those with whom she mingled. Being bereft of both her parents less than two and three years ago, she assumed the reins of responsibility and took charge of the five children beside herself, also the management of the farm by the assistance of a brother, which was done to her credit. Her life and submission to His will to depart this life should be a lesson to the youth of the church and those who knew her.

Thy earthly task is done;
Father and mother gone before,
Will meet their darling one.

Was among the first of the church in the Southern Indiana district; was priest and president of Union branch for years. He fought for his country in the late war, and come home with an honorable discharge. An honest man, one who helped the needy, and was charitable in the true sense of the word. Wife, five children, and a host of friends mourn. Remarks by Elder M. R. Scott, Jr., to a large gathering.

CUNNINGHAM.—At West Surry, Maine, November 13, 1897, Bro. Vinal R. Cunningham, aged 67 years, 9 months, and 3 days. He was baptized August 25, 1889, by Elder U. W. Greene, and led a consistent Christian life. Funeral conducted by Elder U. W. Greene in the presence of many relatives and friends. A good saint gone to his reward.

A XMAS GIFT FOR ONE DOLLAR

APPROPRIATE ALIKE FOR ONE OR ALL.

A broad statement this, but one that is borne out by the facts. Not only can you make such a present on such terms, but in doing so you will be giving something that will remain a source of delight and instruction to its fortunate owner for years to come. We have decided to extend through the holiday season our remarkable introductory offer on the great in ten large handsome volumes, over 5,000 pages and 3,000 illustrations, which has recently been completed after years of preparation and the expenditure of vast sums of money. Our reason for this is that the sets sold in this manner will be the most effective advertising that we could give the regular subscription edition, which will be sold at $60.00 net.

Briefly, it is a gathering within the covers of one set of books of all that usually goes to make up the "reference corner" in any public or private collection of books.

Chief among the contents of the library stand the ENCYCLOPEDIA, ATLAS & DICTIONARY necessities in every home, office, or school in the land. But besides these, it includes Biographical Dictionary, Gazetteer of the United States, Dictionary of Technical Terms, and other indispensable requisites of a working reference library.

The Encyclopedia is in itself worth twice the price of the whole library. It is par excellence the book of reference for every man, woman or student to have at his or her elbow at all times for quick, ready reference. It is the latest, best, most concise, yet thorough and accurate encyclopedia extant, and the only one in existence that is brought down to September, 1897. It is edited by John Clark Ridpath, LL.D. It includes comprehensive and reliable articles on The Cuban Rebellion, Klondike Gold Fields, Moving Photography, and other topics of live interest to-day. In all, nearly 100,000 topics are treated, and these are magnificently illustrated with thousands of engravings, colored maps and charts.

The Atlas comprises a handsome series of maps and charts, brought down to date; 100 colored and 200 in monotint, which, for convenience sake, are scattered through the volumes of the Encyclopedia, according to their alphabetical arrangement. Also hundreds of diagrams, sketches, battle plans, portraits, etc.

The Dictionary is the work of the ripest linguists of modern times. It is an unabridged, etymological, pronouncing, literary, scientific and technical Dictionary of the English language, and is an acknowledged authority both in England and America. The regular price of this great king of books is $24.00. It comprises nearly 3,000 closely printed columns of words and definitions.

OUR GREAT INTRODUCTORY OFFER.

For advertising purposes merely, and to introduce this grand work to the public, we have decided to place a few sets in each community at about one-third of the subscription price, and deliver the set complete

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

DEFENDING THE VERACITY OF THE HEXATEUCH.

NOW THAT even the German critics are beginning to give us back one Homer, one Iliad, and a Trojan war, the time has come, Dr. S. C. Bartlett, ex-president of Dartmouth College, thinks, to say something for Moses and Joshua. He has accordingly put forth a volume of 400 pages on "The Veracity of the Hexateuch," in which, with a wealth of detail and innumerable foot-notes and a considerable appendix, he defends the biblical as against the modern or critical theory of the first six books of the Bible. What he considers at stake in the controversy is not simply the exactness of the Old Testament in minor points, but its fundamental veracity from the beginning; and not only this, but the attack on the truthfulness of the Hexateuch is a flank movement on the Gospels and the Epistles. The whole Bible is, therefore, in Dr. Bartlett's mind, at stake in the controversy.

The method of defense followed by him is, beginning with Joshua and following the stream of events back to its beginning, to compare the details given with the results of recent investigation, and to show that the account has all the ear-marks of a narrative from close and personal knowledge. The questions concerning the identity of the writers and the dates of their writing are not of prime importance. Is the narrative itself truthful or fanciful? That is the important thing to be ascertained.

In taking up the Book of Joshua, Dr. Bartlett groups his facts and inferences under nine heads. The course of his argument here fairly illustrates that of the whole book. 1. He maintains that it is unreasonable to presume that a man of Joshua's stamp, coming from a land where writing was a "mania" to another land where it pervaded the whole region, should live on, twenty-five years after the events recorded, and never provide for any record. 2. The proximity of the date of writing to the events is shown by many incidental touches and by certain monuments remaining to this day. 3. The minuteness of the narrative marks its contemporaneous origin. This minuteness is especially evident in the account of the spies; of the crossing over Jordan; of the capture of Jericho; of various of the battles. 4. The existence of memorial names and landmarks commemorative of the events recorded is evidence of importance. 5. The minute and exhaustive description of the land in the conquest—the list of 31 kings, the list of 300 towns and cities (many definitely located today). 6. The natural portrayal of the character of Joshua himself—as much beyond the invention of later Judaism as it was above the level of his own time. 7. The confirmation found in newly discovered documents, such as the tablet found at Tel-el-Hesi in Palestine, the 320 tablets found at Tel-el-Amarna in Egypt, proving that the art of writing, in a very elaborate form, was prevalent in Joshua's time not only in Egypt and Arabia, but in Palestine. 8. Confirmation from both Palestinian and Egyptian sources of the account of Joseph's burial. 9. The many references in the subsequent books of the Old Testament to the facts given in the book of Joshua as unquestionably true.

We cannot follow the train of argument pursued by Dr. Bartlett in defense of the other books of the Hexateuch. A few extracts showing his attitude in regard to some of the miracles will be of interest. On the crossing of the Red Sea he has this to say:—

"Extensive shoals extend far out in a southeasterly direction, and a long, narrow sand-bank reaches toward them from the eastern shore, being at low tide a small channel some 780 feet wide and from three and a half to five and a half feet deep. But at high tide the width is about three miles, and the elaborate map of the Suez Canal Company gives the difference between the highest and lowest known seas as ten feet and seven inches. Here are the conditions for the safe crossing of the Israelites and the drowning of the Egyptians. The statement of the Scripture narrative that the Lord 'caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all night' conforms to the fact mentioned by the travelers Wellsted, Schubert, and Tischendorf—namely, the great effect produced on the height of the waters by a long-continued northeast or southeast wind in connection with the tide. . . .

"Dr. Robinson makes a computation to show the feasibility of the passage of two millions, moving at the rate of only two miles an hour, within the allotted time; a dry space of half a mile or more would admit a thousand persons abreast, and a column two thousand in depth, two miles or more from front to rear; this would require an hour for the entire column to enter the channel, and two hours more to move over the distance of three or four miles, making, on this last supposition, two hours and a half in all. It may be added that if, on account of the flocks and herds, we suppose the time to be doubled, the interval between sunset and sunrise in April, being about twelve hours, would still allow ample time for the safe passage of Israel, and, when the waters were driven back in full volume, for the destruction of the pursuing host. It would undoubtedly be a difficult movement to arrange and execute with such a great company as the Israelites, but a Moses or a Napoleon would be capable of effecting it."

The fact that the Deluge took place is, we are told, beyond rational dispute. The tradition concerning it has been found by Richard Andrée in not less than 87 widely scattered tribes or races, 47 of them on the American continent. The similarity between the Hebrew account and the newly discovered Babylonian account indicates, not that the former was derived from the latter, but vice versa: while the Hebrew account "could easily have degenerated in transmission into the incongruities and impossibilities of the Babylonian, it is not readily supposable that the latter could have been rectified and elevated into the dignity and consistency of the former." The flood was "universal," not for the entire earth, but for the earth as inhabited. This view is argued at some length, and removes the objection that the Ark could not have contained a pair of each of the 366,000 different species now known to have existed on the earth. To cover the inhabited earth, the flood may not have had to involve a greater area than Palestine, where five millions could have found room to live. Nor is it likely that it was caused by the rain, but by the subsidence (followed by the reëlevation) of the land, and the rushing in of the ocean—such a subsidence as geologists record in many parts of the earth, Dr. Bartlett devoting a number of pages to quotations from geologists on this point.

Dr. Bartlett lays much stress on the minute directions for the construction and care for the tabernacle. We will close with a quotation on this subject: "Now as an actual record of a transaction of the times, a transaction of sacred and central significance to the chosen people, this singular minuteness and voluminousness of detail is perfectly accounted for; but as an alleged fabrication of after-ages in regard to a fictitious affair a thousand years obsolete, it involves the supposition of a stolid and aimless industry and a laborious and superfluous trifling not credible in priest or layman.

"This is not all. Such a specification of details involves an amount of accurate knowledge of historic facts not supposable, yes, not possible, in any late writer of fiction. In fact, in the earlier part of the present century such scholars, not merely as von Bohlen and Vater, but even De Wette, could declare that the construction of the tabernacle and the priest's garments implied a cultivation of the arts and an abundance of costly materials which we could not expect of the Israelites when they left Egypt, and that whole description of the tabernacle therefore belongs, not to history, but to fiction. This bold statement now shows the impossibility of its being a fiction. It was in their day necessary even to argue the case with the most learned men that the art of writing was practised so early as the exodus. It is undoubtedly safe to say that from before the time of Ezra the priest till well on in the present century no human being could have ventured on such a detailed account of the materials and processes without blundering at every turn." . . .

"It remained for the explorers of the present century to find ample evidence of all this skill prevailing in Egypt, at and long before the time of the exodus. The very finest of fine linen has been found there. Spinning and weaving by hand is delineated in the paintings, and bright colors were employed. The whole process of working gold is delineated in the tombs at Beni Hassan as early as the twelfth dynasty; goldsmiths are often mentioned, and even the chief goldsmith to the king. . . .

"Now for any writer in after-ages, eight hundred or a thousand years later, to pass safely through all these liabilities to mistake, snares, and pitfalls at every step, maintaining his accuracy even in the minutest points of difference between the lands and the ages and the circumstances, and with no collection of antiquarian books or museum to guide him, there can be no hesitation in saying is absolutely out of the question."—Literary Digest Nov. 27, 1897.

There were ninety-three warships under construction in the United Kingdom at the end of the quarter closing June 30 last, and of this number seventy-nine, of 214,175 tons displacement, were in private yards, while only fourteen, of 133,020 tons displacement, were being built in royal dockyards.

Out of 25,000 school children examined in Minneapolis 8,000 had defective eyesight. The highest percentage of defection was found in a poorly lighted and unsanitary building.

BAD POLICY.

THE following, cut from the Toronto, Ontario, Saturday Night, for October 30, is suggestive of what may be astir in the Catholic world of religious thought.

There has been, of late, some stir in the Dominion of Canada, upon the influence of the Catholic Church exercised in the politics of the country. The issue between the old time church dogmatism and control of affairs where the members of the Catholic Church were in interest, was fairly joined in the school question in Manitoba. In that contest, the Catholic Church authorities demanded a continuation of their parochial schools, under the fostering care of Governmental funds, as had been done while the country was largely Catholic; but the new Canadian (American) element would not see the right of that church to public moneys and the control of the schools by church influence, more than for other churches as well; so, the question was fought out, and the new element won in the contest; and with the result that in Manitoba the public schools are to be free from denominational control, and parochial schools conducted by the church and controlled by it cannot be maintained by the public funds. This is as it should be.

But there has risen another question, that of the domination of the voter by the priests. It appears that Archbishop Cleary, of Kingston, has been irritated by the apparent discovery that Catholic citizens living in Protestant voting precincts are susceptible to the influence of political and economical issues, and are turning from the counsel of their church authorities to exercise the suffrage without consulting spiritual advisers. Bishop

Cleary objects to this, and, to counteract it, brings old time ecclesiasticism to bear, and has denounced the attending of weddings and funerals among the Protestants as mortal sins. The clippings given below are from editorial comment in the journal quoted from, and indicates the probable result to churchly domination, if it continues to be exercised in Canada on the lines assumed by Archbishop Cleary, of Kingston. It is a sharp criticism, but is according to sound domestic policy, and abreast the times of emancipation in which we are living:—

Archbishop Cleary, of Kingston, has never been suspected of being a member of the P.P.A., but I doubt if there is in that organization a man who does more to promote its interests than his grace. To make him an honorary member would only be a fitting recognition of his services in influencing the minds of Protestants against Roman Catholics. If we live in heresy and sin, marry wickedly, and do not die to suit his grace, why should we make any effort at all to win his approval? Why should we be fair in politics or business? for these are but trifles compared with our enormities. He issues a pastoral, proscribing as far as he has the power our form of marriage and our burial service; makes it a mortal sin for a Roman Catholic to even witness one of our marriages or burials—thereby assuming an attitude which, if assumed by us, would suppress his religion. He justifies the charge made by Protestant ranters and ridiculed by the more liberal among us, that if the Roman Catholics had the upper hand our churches would be razed and our religion outlawed. He may say that he is only exercising authority over the conscience of his flock, yet he is taking up precisely the same position as that taken by those who tortured heretics. His condition of mind excuses and justifies anything the church ever did in the middle ages in Spain, or Italy, or France, or England. . . .

It is to be hoped that he may live long and increase in bitterness of feeling towards Protestantism. He is doing more to overthrow the supremacy of the old time idea in his church than could be done by half a dozen liberal prelates working in the ordinary way. To defeat a bad law it is but necessary to enforce it, for then it will be rebelled against; and to eradicate a wrong idea it is but necessary to put it into effect, and it will prove so wrong that it will be discredited for all time. Archbishop Cleary is doggedly defying the growing reason of the age.

Without tact or cunning he keeps at it, hammer and tongs, demolishing all that the subtler minds of his church can build up in the way of safeguards against the exigencies of a constantly moving world and changing life. A few more vehement pastorals and he will make it sure that no more prelates of mediæval tendencies will wear the mitre in Canada.

"MORMONS AT LANARK."

THE Hamilton, Scotland, Advertiser, of October 2, contains an article from the pen of Bro. Heman C. Smith, President of the European mission, and one of our corresponding Editors, from which it will be seen that Bro. Smith has been doing some excellent service for the cause in literary work, in addition to other general lines of ministerial labor.

The reader as he proceeds will discover the causes that gave Bro. Smith opportunity to offer a word in season.

In addition to other good points the one made in connection with Apostle Teasdale's statement is especially worthy of note. It is manifest, from the public acts and utterances of Utah leaders themselves, that the Utah Church is guilty of apostasy—self-confessedly guilty—and that it is impossible for said church, turn in whatever direction it will, to extricate itself from its dilemma, without repentance, confession, and other radical changes essential to its welfare. The reasons why its leaders have determined upon the policy of prohibiting its elders from discussing with elders of the Reorganized Church become more apparent as additional facts are brought to light:—

MORMONS AT LANARK.

Mr. Heman C. Smith, London, sends the following letter, dated 9th September last: We were much interested in a letter found in your issue of 21st August, addressed to the "Mormon missionaries," and signed James McCulloch, and in the reply signed by William McMillan et al., and published in your issue of September 4. We could but admire the manliness and honesty of Mr. McCulloch as expressed in his confession that he was mistaken in regard to the teaching of the Book of Mormon on the subject of polygamy, and in his frank apology to the Mormons for the mistake made. This is honorable in controversy, and much to be commended.

It seems to us that if these missionaries were as fair and candid as was their opponent, that they in their reply would have stated that the church they represent did, on August 29, 1852, at Salt Lake City, Utah, in conference assembled indorse a document purporting to be a revelation from God, which justified and commanded the practice of polygamy; and that in 1876 they removed from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants an article on marriage indorsed by the church in the lifetime of Joseph Smith, and published in every edition of this book prior to 1876, and inserted in lieu thereof this purported revelation on polygamy. They would have stated further that the discarded article provided for no other system of marriage than a monogamic one, and hence did not suit their purpose.

This revelation is doubtless the one read by Mr. McCulloch, and they should have been honest enough to have confessed to its existence. It is true, as they confess, that polygamy was by them practiced and taught publicly. It was not only taught and practiced, but it was declared to be a part of a perfect system, and in the light of this fact we have wondered how they could abandon it and still claim to have a perfect system. That they did so teach not only in Utah but here in England will appear from the following:—

On December 9, 1879, Elder William Budge, of their number, preached a sermon in Goswell hall, Goswell Road, London, in which he strongly defended the practice of "plural marriage." This was published in pamphlet form by Elder Budge himself. On the first page we find the following language: "There is another reason for my position to night, more potent than the others; namely, that the marriage views entertained by us are a part of the system of religion which we have embraced; part of a perfect order revealed from heaven for the regeneration of the earth and its inhabitants."

If now they have renounced polygamy, they have, according to Elder Budge, renounced a "part of a perfect order revealed from heaven." Can this be done, and the order remain perfect? Later and still more authentic, is the following: In the Millennial Star for April 15, 1889 (only about eighteen months before the said relinquishment), published at 42 Islington Street, Liverpool, when Elder George Teasdale, then as now one of their twelve apostles, was editor, is an editorial entitled "The real point at issue," from which we quote:—

"Those who think 'Mormonism' never would have encountered any great amount of opposition had it not been for the principle of plural marriage, utterly fail to comprehend the forces at work in this matter. The agitation on 'Mormon' matrimonial affairs simply serves as a cloak to cover other designs, as we shall hereafter see. The assault against the church is made on the line of the marriage question, because it seems to offer at present the greatest prospect for the success of hostile effort. The saints in general are less firmly united on this principle than on many others belonging to the gospel, and it is hoped by our enemies that this circumstance will conduce largely, if not successfully, to bring about its renunciation by the people in a church capacity. Such an act would be tantamount to an apostasy, and the consequent destruction of the power and authority of the priesthood would be consummated."

If, as Elder McMillan et al. intimates, they did, in 1890, in church capacity, renounce polygamy, then according to Apostle Teasdale they committed an act tantamount to apostasy, and the destruction of the power and authority of their priesthood is consummated. Will they now have us believe that the views of Apostle Teasdale were erroneous, or will they have us believe that they represent an apostate body without power or authority in their priesthood?

Like Mr. McCulloch, I wish a little more light. Though Mr. McCulloch's question as to how many wives Brigham Young had was not a material one, these gentlemen appear weak and contemptible when they attempt an answer, and make a confession which perhaps they did not intend to make. They say: "He had no more than he supported, and enough to let other men's wives alone." Do they wish by this to acknowledge that Brigham Young was that kind of character that could not let other men's wives alone unless provision was made for him to gratify his lustful propensities at home? This gentleman is admitting all that has been charged against him. Do you mean it? Now, if it is the policy of the people of Lanark to persecute, maltreat, and violently drive these men from their midst, we want nothing to do with the unholy practice. We denounce mobocracy as a relic of barbarism and unworthy the intelligence and civilization of the nineteenth century. But if the people of Lanark desire it, and these men will consent, we hold ourselves in readiness to meet them publicly, and in honorable controversy show that polygamy was introduced among the Latter Day Saints by fraud, practiced in deception, and abandoned at last, if abandoned at all, when civilization would no longer endure it. We are also prepared to show that much more of their system is not only contrary to the Bible, but contrary to the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and other church publications issued before the death of Joseph Smith, June 27, 1844.

If our services are needed, we can be addressed at 17 Dawson Street, Manchester, England. In some points Mr. McCulloch has been misled in regard to the early history of the church, but judging from his disposition to be fair with these men from Utah, we think he will be willing to be corrected.

Though want of space will preclude an extensive examination, we would like to invite his attention to the following points: We need not inform a man of his information that it has always been too true that in times of great religious agitations it has been a very easy thing to get men to sign statements against the moral character of their opponents. Hence such statements made at such times, and made for the purpose of militating against the religious influence of an opponent should be received with a great deal of allowance. He will observe that the statement against the character of the Smith family, which he quotes, though it is very bitter in a general way, contains but two definite specifications, neither of which is serious; viz., "infamous for visionary projects," and "digging for money." When we consider that under the bitterness of spirit in which they wrote they would tell the worst they knew, this is not a bad showing. Besides, general accusations without material specifications are of no value to the thoughtful investigator. Besides this, we are prepared to produce statements from some of the most respectable citizens of Palmyra, New York, who knew the Smith family well, who certify to their good character.

In regard to the trouble at Nauvoo, Illinois, it is true, as Elder McMillan et al. say, that Dr. Foster and his colleagues had been expelled from the church—some of them for immoral practices—and they sought revenge. We do not think, however, that the claim was made that Dr. Foster's wife was corrupted. The destruction of the Expositor was not effected by "a mob of two hundred of Smith's adherents," nor a mob of any other number. The Expositor was declared a public nuisance by the city council, some of whom, we understand, were not Mormons. By their order the marshal and his posse destroyed the office and pied the type, but no attempt was made on the life of the editors or anyone else. We do not appear, however, as apologists for this act of the city council as we believe it to have been of doubtful justice and propriety; but we think that the facts should be stated, and to this, if our estimate of Mr. McCulloch is correct, he will agree.—Hamilton, Scotland, Advertiser, October 2, 1897.

THE MORMONS.—Sir:—I am much obliged to Mr. H. C. Smith for his very very able letter in last week's issue, and desire to explain that I did not reply to the letter of the missionaries because I considered it showed they were worthy only of the contempt of every right-thinking person.

Yours, etc ,

JAMES McCULLOCH.

MR. JOHNSON BRIGHAM, Editor and Publisher of the Midland Monthly, of Des Moines, Iowa, has shown a commendable desire to correct the wrong impressions made by the unfortunate article "Anti-Polygamy Mormonism," which appeared in the October number of the Midland. President Joseph Smith and Mr. Brigham have for some time been in correspondence, and as a result the forthcoming January edition of the Midland will contain an article from the pen of President Smith direct. Announcing said article the December Midland says, editorially:—

Pres. Joseph Smith, of the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," finding himself and his church incorrectly represented (unintentionally we are sure) by Mr. Lesan's paper on "Anti-Polygamy Mormonism," which appeared in the October Midland, has sent the editor a carefully prepared and well tempered correction of the errors and a frank and modest statement of what he and his people do actually believe and purpose. This paper came too late for our December number, but will appear in the January Midland—over President Smith's own signature. We shall take pleasure in thus giving space to an authoritative statement from the present head of the church, the eldest son of the founder of the Church of Latter Day Saints.

FIELD WHERE 100,000 MEN DIED.

PROFESSOR WALTERS EXPLORES A VAST PREHISTORIC BATTLEGROUND.

WICHITA, Kansas, Nov. 28.—Prof. Edwin Walters, an archaeologist and geologist, at the head of a party of scientists has been investigating a remarkable deposit of human bones in the northeast corner of the Choctaw country in the Indian Territory that was discovered by workmen nearly a year ago while the Kansas City, Pittsburg, and Gulf Railway was being built through that territory. To-day he made the announcement that a prehistoric battle occurred there, in which from 60,000 to 100,000 warriors were killed. The area of the tract in which this vast number of bodies lie buried has been determined by sounding and digging to be thirty acres in extent. The site of this prehistoric battleground is near Redland, Indian Territory, and on the south side of the Arkansas River. The river at that point runs east and west and divides the Choctaw from the Cherokee country.

Extensive excavations bring to light great numbers of skeletons, curious specimens of pottery, and vast quantities of stone battle instruments. It has been ascertained that there are between 2,000 and 2,500 bodies to the acre. Professor Walters at first supposed he had found a great burying ground of the Mound Builders, but when he made the discovery that nearly every skull was pierced with one or more spear points or broken in with stone axes, and that some of the bones had been cleft with javelins, he was forced to the conclusion that one of the world's greatest battles had been fought here. This accorded fully with his theory that over 20,000 years ago two great races contended for supremacy in North America. One, he says, was the Mound Builders, who occupied all of the territory east of the Mississippi River and were gradually pushing their lines westward. The other was the Mayas, who lived originally in Central America, but at various periods overspread the country now included in Arizona, Southern California, the table lands of New Mexico, and Texas and Southern Colorado.

Professor Walters has spent seventeen years locating and making a map of the battle line, and declares that he has found a series of fortifications extending from Omaha, Nebraska, clear to the Gulf of Mexico. These fortifications face each other, in and near Omaha, Kansas City, Neodesha, Kansas, in Anderson and Allen Counties in Southern Kansas, along the Big Elm River, thence following the Grand River in Indian Territory to Redland, thence through Texas to the gulf.

Our numerous students of the Book of Mormon and American archæology will note the statements in the foregoing dispatch to the Chicago Record. The statements of the Book of Mormon history concerning the long-continued series of wars between opposing nations in their "contention for supremacy" together with the accounts of regular lines of fortifications and tremendous slaughter in battles, is strikingly corroborated by this and other late discoveries.

We leave the study of the article for the reader.

DIFFICULTIES IN THE WAY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

WE have waited some time for some acute observer among the thinking clergy to express the sentiments of the class regarding the methods of the popular evangelists, and as a consequence towards the evangelists themselves. Rev. Battisby, of Chatham, Ontario, has voiced this sentiment in no uncertain words, for which we bespeak the sympathy of the readers of the HERALD. We give extract published in the London News for October 16, of the Rev. gentleman's discourse.

Chatham, Oct. 14.—At the anniversary services of the Victoria Avenue Methodist Church, held Tuesday evening, Rev. Dr. Battisby caused a sensation by his speech, in which he deprecated, in strong language, the practice of holding evangelistic services, conducted by traveling evangelists. The subject of Dr. Battisby's address was "Difficulties in the Way of the Christian Church." He first dwelt with the rationalism so prevalent in Germany, and the ritualism which is driving the spiritual life from the church in England. Materialism was also openly acknowledged. Excessive spiritualism, he said, was spiritualizing everything away into thin air. The difficulties Christianity had to deal with were enough to make a man stagger. There were people who denied that there was such a thing as death, or disease, or sin.

Dr. Battisby said he honestly believed the church of God was to blame for many of these difficulties. He spoke of the practice of calling in outsiders, evangelists, to do the work of the pastors. These evangelists came, he said, and created a great stir, upsetting the whole life of the church. They put the people through a steaming process and manufacture Christians by the wholesale. They introduce an unstable element and bring weakness rather than strength to the church.

"I have known," he said, "all the evangelists that have been here in the past twenty years, and there is not a single instance in which I could not tell you of a good deal of dirty work which had to be done after them, and a good deal of bitter feeling to be removed."

Lack of proper training under the parental roof was another great weakness to the church. The home was the proper place for the training of children. The panacea for all these difficulties was a living, vital, personal godliness, founded upon a rational knowledge of God's word. The church of God, he said, was drifting, and the cause of it was catering too much to the tastes of the world. Her pastors and her people should stand by the truth of God and preach only the gospel of Christ.

He hoped that it would not be thought that he was directing his remarks to those who lived and worked in the Victoria Avenue Church. He was speaking from his observations of twenty years in Chatham.

We commend the thoughts of Rev. Battisby in dealing with the problems confronting the churches, of which he is a pastor; for the reason that all the so-called evangelical churches are facing the same conditions. Rev. Battisby represents the Presbyterian branch and is a pastor of twenty years' standing in his pastorate at Chatham, and is reputed to be a well-informed and well-liked clergyman of his order; and must long since have observed the difficulties besetting and hindering the progress of his own denomination, and of course others.

Rationalism, the tendency of which is to disrupt faith and its work; and the formal ritualism, which is sapping the life of the Church of England, is nothing more nor worse than the formalism of the daughters of the mother church, from Luther down. Materialism, which Rev. Battisby asserts is openly acknowledged, lies perdu in the philosophies which this reverend gentleman himself is forced to indulge in in the learned homilies he delivers to his congregation; and is found in every pulpit the occupants of which deny the doctrine of the Master, and flout the office work of the Spirit in revelation and the manifestations of the gospel gifts in attestation to the great truth that Jesus is the Christ. It is a wonder that so keen-sighted a man as this reverend is cannot see this, as well as to see an obstruction to Christian progression in present methods of evangelizing. The one is as patent as the other, and if one is removed, or overcome, both should be.

"Excessive spiritualism" is good. But what does the good pastor mean by it? Does he refer to the prevalent method of the popular pulpiteers in attempting to dispose of the men of direct thought who believe in the word as written? If so, we can join him in the saying, that they are "spiritualizing everything away into thin air." It is a pity that his contemporary churchmen cannot see as Rev. Battisby does.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. W. H. KELLEY, Jonesport, Maine, November 24:—

Held meetings here last Sunday and each evening since. Go to Indian River this afternoon for over Thanksgiving, then to Moose Neck, and here again Sunday; Monday at Machias, and Thursday of next week by boat to Stonington; and Bray's Mountain, December 5, to attend district conference. Ground is covered with snow; it is cool. Bro. U. W. Greene is with me. Have had pretty good weather up to date.

Bro. A. H. Parsons, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, November 30:—

Sr. Eunice Beam, living at Lindsey, Jefferson County, Pennsylvania, desires an elder to come that way. They are poor but will furnish a house and a place to preach in. Utah elders are there, doing their best. I baptized her some three years ago in Maryland. Since they moved, her husband desires baptism. I preached twice in the Baptist church at Hornerstown, New Jersey, on the 27th and 28th, the minister assisting. The work moves slowly. All well.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE Sunday Leader, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, in its issue for November 28, publishes a lengthy account of an interview with President Joseph Smith, now visiting and laboring among the churches in that portion of the field, in which the work of the church and the leading points of distinction between the Reorganized Church and the Utah faction are clearly stated. We may be able to give the article entire to the HERALD readers, in our next number. It seems providential that President Smith has been able to render such aid to the missionary and general forces of the church abroad as to secure the plain statements that have appeared in prominent publications throughout the country where he has labored of late. While the Utah force is at work, a stronger arm is causing the true facts of church doctrine and history to be brought to the attention of the people. The Author of the faith is moving in behalf of the vindication and promulgation of the faith delivered to the saints. The Reorganized Church has reason to be gratified by the courtesy and candor manifested toward its President and his collaborators in the field of gospel work at home and abroad.

The Cambridge, Massachusetts, Tribune, of November 27, published a lengthy article, "Utah Mormons in Cambridge," written by Bro. Richard Bullard, of the Massachusetts district. It appears that Utah elders had announced that they had "come to Cambridge to stay." Bro. B. doubtless thought it well to inform the public concerning the false position of the Brighamite faction. If Brighamism thrives under the very shadow of Harvard College, we have mistaken the spirit of the American people.

Sr. Sarah M. Ray, of Olga, Illinois, writes of her hope in Christ and her desire to continue with the church in the light of life.

Bro. and Sr. H. D. Stevens, of Madison, Wisconsin, report the existence of a thriving little branch of thirteen members at that point. All are in earnest in church work, including the Sunday school cause.

Clippings from a Norwalk, Connecticut, local paper show good work being done at Norwalk and Stratford by Bro. A. M. Baker, who is called "the boy evangelist" by the editor. It appears that Bro. Baker, being denied admission to St. Paul's German church, for which he had arranged, concluded to hold a series of meetings in front of the Norwalk Hotel, which he did, "with a small but enthusiastic audience present." The printed statements indicate that Bro. Baker lacked nothing in courage and skill and that he made many friends in the face of opposition.

The year 1897 will be notable as one of the most disastrous to shipping interests. British marine underwriters alone lost upward of $12,500,000 in the first sixty days of the year, fifty per cent of which is traced to "missing vessels." Since that date losses have been phenomenally large, and are predicted to reach $75,000,000, the largest known in history. The losses of life by wrecks were 1,969 up to November 1.

A typhoon swept over the Philippine Islands, October 6, causing one of the worst disasters reported from the southern ocean in years, if not in the history of that section of the world. Thousands of lives were lost, including many Europeans, with appalling destruction of property: Fully 400 Europeans were drowned, and 6,000 natives are estimated to have perished. The hurricane struck the "island," devastating the entire southern portion. On the 12th it reached Leyte, and in less than half an hour the town was in ruins, many people being buried in the debris. Many vessels were lost. The tidal wave and winds also wrought havoc at "Samoa," where the sea swept inland nearly half a mile, destroying property valued at millions and causing wholesale deaths among the natives.

The new Prime Minister of Austria will enter into negotiations with leaders of the Germans and Czechs in an endeavor to bring about a modification of the ordinances making the Czech language coördinate with the German, which caused the disorderly scenes in the Lower Reichsrath, a popular ferment bordering on revolution, and the resignation of the Badeni ministry. The Bohemians renewed their outbreaks at Prague, November 29. The German Theater and the German club were attacked and the windows smashed. It was necessary to call out the military to disperse the rioters. Rioting was resumed at Prague, Bohemia, December 1. In spite of the presence of the military the mob continued to raid the German quarter. The Czechs are said to have been infuriated by reported attacks by Germans. The troops fired once, killing and wounding some, and by midnight had restored order. Riotous demonstrations also occurred at Pilsen, where police dispersed the crowds and are guarding German residents. Vienna advices of the 1st concede that the new ministry will face as great difficulties as their predecessors. The parliamentary situation is hopeless; Baron Gautsch has conferred with leaders of the majority and minority, but both parties appear irreconcilable.

December 3: Martial law has been declared in portions of Bohemia. Excesses occurred at several points, and frequent collisions between mobs and police. In the Lower House of the Hungarian Diet, at Buda-Pesth, Franz Kossuth, son of Louis Kossuth, asked Baron Banffy, the Premier, if the Hungarian government, in view of the political situation in Austria, would submit bills to enforce Hungary's right under certain circumstances to act as a free agent in the settlement of economic matters common to Austria and Hungary. Answer was deferred until Monday.

The Minister of the Haytian Republic has conferred with the State Department at Washington with a view to obtaining American protection against demands made by Germany for indemnity based upon alleged ill-treatment of a German subject. The firm attitude of the Haytian Republic and inquiries and representations of the American Minister have led the German government to modify its attitude and to countermand the order for a German war vessel to proceed to Port au Prince the Haytian capital. Prince Bismarck resents the suggestion of American interference.

"Echoes from Palestine," the Christmas program for Sunday school exercises, is now being mailed free to Sunday schools by the General Sunday School Association, from the Herald Office. Copies are distributed proportionately — according to the membership of each school. Single copies mailed on receipt of stamp.

Albanians, 5,000 to 10,000 in number, have been in revolt against the Turkish government. Sharp fighting has occurred in the districts of Ipeck and Diakovo. Turkey reports the revolt suppressed.

London advices of the 29th report furious storms on sea and land, resulting in great destruction to shipping and other property. Many vessels are reported foundered with all hands lost. New England, an island off the British coast, several thousand acres in area and surrounded by a high sea wall, was swamped during the gale, and everything, including a farmer, his buildings, and stock, were swept away. Other ports report disasters.

December 2: Fierce storms again broke over the coast of England last night, causing a recurrence of sea and land disasters similar to those reported earlier in the week. The number of wrecks on the Norfolk coast and the fury of the storm on the Kentish seaboard are unexampled.

Simla, India, the 3d: Savage resistance has met the Kurren column of the British punitive expedition, which burned thirty native villages.

A cablegram from Rome to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat reports that King Humbert, of Italy, will abdicate in favor of his son, the Duke of Naples. The King's decision is said to be due to his inability to fulfill his promises to the rulers of Germany and Austria, the bankrupt condition of Italy being due to obligations imposed by the terms of the triple alliance.

Pekin advices confirm the statements that Germany has made demands upon China. They state that the latter will refuse the demands, except that reparation will be made for the killing of missionaries and damage done to mission property. Russia had not yet helped China, which hoped to effect a settlement by diplomacy. London advices from Shanghai, December 2, are to the effect that the Emperor of China has declared he will forfeit his crown rather than agree to Germany's demands. China desires that the dispute be settled by arbitrators chosen by Holland and Belgium. Berlin dispatches report the sending of additional naval forces to Kiao-Chau Bay. Cablegrams also report China to have made important concessions to England and Russia.

United States Minister Angell has notified the Ottoman government that indemnity must be paid for the pillage of American missions.

Havana dispatches to the New York World continue to bring to light the terrible results of the war in Cuba. It is estimated that when the grim returns are all in the massacre of the innocents will show a full 400,000. This number does not include those killed in battle or the "thousands and thousands" of women and children who have died of exposure, disease, and massacre in the managuas and swamps. Spanish official reports of burial permits alone admit that in the Province of Santa Clara alone, 71,847 persons have been buried since General Weyler issued his fiat. Letters from the Island of Fernando Po, the Spanish penal colony in West Africa, state that 150 out of 250 exiles sent there are dead and that the survivors complain of their treatment.

Madrid advices say that Don Carlos, the pretender, has summoned his representative in Spain to Venice, his home, to take steps to renew agitation of his cause; that an attempt to negotiate a loan in the Carlist interest was a failure.

Washington advices of the 30th confirm the statements made by the New York World, and add that under the Blanco régime the awfulness of the situation is being revealed. General Blanco does not conceal the fact that he is overtaxed by the demands from the people for relief. He has permitted those able to help themselves to do so; has organized juntas in the centers of concentration to relieve distress, and ordered money and rations distributed.

The Spanish Minister at Washington is said to have informally expressed to the American government the feeling that anything the charitable Americans may do toward relief will be gladly received.

Cardinal Vanutelli is said to be canvassing for votes in the College of Cardinals with a view to succeeding Leo XIII. as Pope. It is related that Pope Leo has manifested impatience with the unblushing manner in which the canvass is being prosecuted. Vanutelli is burdened with such an army of more or less reputable relatives, some employed by the Papacy, and others looking for employment, that the opinion is expressed that if he became Pope the very worst features of Papal nepotism would be revived. He is supported by the Triple Alliance.

SELECT READING FOR JANUARY MEETINGS OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

"AMUSEMENTS in the home should have these characteristics: they should unite the family, deepen children's love of home, and guard them against temptation. To accomplish the first object we need recreations in which parents and children can join. Here at the very outset we are met with a difficulty, the irrepressible conflict between children's noise and grown folks' nerves. Love of noise seems innate in every child, certainly it is in every boy, and not only is the love of noise innate, but the noise itself seems to be in him and must come out. . . .

"It is a hard question, but we believe we can better afford to bear his noise at home than to let him go away to make it. And if we are in the midst of the making, the noise does not trouble us half as much as if we stand outside and listen. Then a good hour's romp with the children every day will strengthen the nerves and sound a truce in the irrepressible conflict with noise.

"How many of you now look back with delight to the game of blindman's buff played in your mother's kitchen with father, mother, and perhaps grandpa too, joining in it? If such a picture hangs on your memory's wall I am sure you would not exchange it for any specimen of high art you can purchase at Goupil's. This same kitchen brings up memories of nut-crackings, candy-making, corn-poppings, apple and chestnut roastings, and all the fun that accompanied them, father's stories, mother's songs and happy talk and bubbling laughter. Such musses as we used to make! and the fact that we knew we must clear them up, leaving the kitchen in good order, did not detract from our pleasure, for we managed to extract a deal of fun out of the clearing-up process. These kitchen romps usually came early in the evening, right after the chores were done; later, came the quiet hour in the sitting room, with music, work, and reading aloud. I well remember such evenings in my own home. Lewis' and Clark's 'Explorations,' and D'Aubigne's 'Reformation' seem sacred books to me because my father read them aloud to us during the evenings of the last winter he spent on earth. Reading aloud in the family circle cannot be too highly commended; the reading should be in turn by all who can read.

"Music is invaluable as a means of recreation. There are few families in which there is not one member who can sing well, and others passably. Sing together, even if you do sometimes make discords. The more you sing together the more harmonious will you grow in more senses than one. An instrument of some kind aids greatly in the family music, and they are becoming so common that few families are without them. . . .

"We know a family in which 'taking journeys' was a favorite pastime for the winter evenings. Some place was chosen as a destination that father, mother, or some member of the household had visited, and an imaginary journey thither taken. You will better understand how pleasant this may be made by the recital of such a journey as actually taken in a family of my acquaintance. During the preceding summer the father and mother had visited Iron Mountain, Missouri, and this was chosen for their first trip. Imagine the family gathered around the table, on which stands a bright lamp, around it clustered specimens of minerals brought from Iron Mountain. Each child had his school atlas, brought home for the purpose. The mother sat by with her knitting, which, however, was not so engrossing as to prevent her taking part in the conversation and helping little Billy find places on the map when he could not find them for himself. 'Now let us play it is summer, it is so much pleasanter traveling when the trees are green, the flowers in bloom, and the birds singing everywhere. Where shall we go first?' 'To Peoria, and down the river to St. Louis,' said one. 'To Burlington,' said another; 'To Quincy,' said a third. 'Yes, either way will do, but I think we will go to Peoria, and then we can ride on two rivers; what two?' 'Illinois and Mississippi.' 'Yes, now find Peoria.' Soon on every map Peoria was hidden by a chubby finger. 'Now we will go down the river,' and each finger moved slowly down toward its mouth. 'Where are we now?' 'On the Mississippi.' 'And what city are we passing?' 'Alton, where the State Prison used to be,' they answered. 'And here is the Big Muddy flowing right into the Mississippi,' exclaimed Harry, entering into the play enthusiastically. 'But the waters of the Missouri are a beautiful color, if they are muddy, says mother. 'Just the color of a cup of delicious coffee with the rich cream in it, or of your auntie's watered silk dress. It pours its great volume into the Mississippi, but for miles the brown stream and the blue stream flow along without mingling. Here we are at—'St. Louis,' the children inserted in her pause. 'See the crowds of boats, some loaded with corn from Illinois; some with wheat from Minnesota; some with cotton from New Orleans. Now we are at the pier; the beautiful blue and brown tints are all gone, the water looks black and dangerous. So it is—the captain says—twenty feet deep here, with under-currents that would suck you down to death if you should fall overboard. But there are little children, some no bigger than our Nannie, clambering over the slippery docks, springing out upon the rafts, holding on with one tiny hand, while with the other they reach far out to catch the floating driftwood which is all the fuel they have. It makes me shudder to look at them, for one slip would be their death.'—Childhood: Its Care and Culture.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

SR. MOLLIE LUCART, of Castana, Iowa, requests your faith and prayers that her husband may be brought to a knowledge of the truth and be led to obey the gospel.

TAMA, Iowa.

Dear Sister:—As I read your letter in the Herald requesting fasting and prayer for your husband, I did so, and I feel to say that if you wait patiently on the Lord, faithfully do your duty in showing your love in all that you do, and not upbraid, and hold your peace at all times, conquering the tongue, you shall have the desire of your heart and be blessed abundantly, and be the means of bringing him into the work.

In the faith,

A SISTER.

AXTELL, Utah.

Dear Sister Frances:—It is with much pleasure I address you again after so long a silence. To-day is Thanksgiving Day, and every one is feasting with the exception of myself. I set this day apart for fasting in behalf our aged sister, Permelia Sterrett. She has been afflicted for eighteen years, and wished so much to be remembered by the Prayer Union. All the eiders who have been here in Utah trying to reclaim the pure and honest in heart will remember my mother-in-law, Sister Sterrett, as she has always made them welcome, and I hope each one of them who may see this humble request will remember her in their prayers that she may be healed of this long standing affliction. She has suffered a great deal for her religion's sake, being one of the first to join in Utah. Thanking my heavenly Father for blessings to me, I close by asking his blessing upon all his children.

OCCUPATION FOR LITTLE BOYS IN THE CITY.

(Supplementary reading for Daughters of Zion locals.)

THE first item to success in any undertaking is to be in love with the work. Now, I'm fond of boys—little ones preferred.

As soon as boys can walk, they want to do something. So I tried to interest them in doing something that—while they thought it was play and that I was only amusing them—should, in the end, be useful to them. I interested them in all kinds of housework, from the time they were large enough to carry a cup to the table (maybe to let it fall and break), until now; so that those who know them best, say the oldest boy is the best "girl" I have.

We had a small yard and I made a little garden; each had a piece about three feet square and the baby spent as much time as the older ones planting (and much more time "pulling up") his garden, but he learned, soon, to let the produce of his neighbors alone. In one corner we had a pile of sand. What child does not love to play in sand?

My brother visited us and made the children a "rocking-boat." It was intended for four, but I have seen eight or ten children (some of them neighbors) piled in it and very busy paddling with sticks, "crossing the ocean." They would land at any port they could call the name of.

As soon as they were old enough to have tools, we got a box of cheap ones. Then they dug trenches, builded bridges (tiny ones, of course) and laid railroad tracks of little strips of wood.

Each had his share of getting coal for the fire, chopping kindling wood, sweeping the walk, and other chores according to his years and ability, and for their work they had "good marks," and their failures "bad marks"—the good ones were paid for in pennies, and deduction was made for the bad ones in the same way.

They liked to get a "study-book" and play school before they knew their letters; they learned to spell lots of words with the game of "100 letter blocks."

They early understood that the alley and the street were not to be explored "for fear 'the baby' would get lost," and as we had a "baby" in the house for at least ten years (not the same baby either) they grew accustomed to the ruling to "stay at home." The children's game of "ten-pins" helped to teach them to count and add while it amused them.

A wagon, whether a box on four cotton spools, or a "boughten" one, is indispensable. Little boys soon learn to make a "spool wagon," and they enjoy the work. One of my boys had as many as five sizes of these wagons at one time.

I hope I have not made this letter too long, but if I have, I will excuse myself on the ground that "the children" are my hobby and when talking or writing about them, I am apt to overdo it.

These suggestions are all for little boys; if you wish I will send a list for older boys.

THE program for the Interstate Sunday School Institute is fast being completed, and will appear in our columns soon. The services of the General Superintendent, the General Secretary, Bro. W. N. Robinson, and Bro. J. F. Mintun are secured. Others are expected, but we cannot speak with certainty yet. The work at the institute will be made to meet the needs of all who are interested in any way in Sunday school work. There will be work for the officers, work for the teachers, and work for the members. The institute will be held at St. Joseph, Missouri, December 26-29. Brn. J. M. Terry and D. J. Krahl are the local committee. Watch for their notice.

CHRISTMAS OFFERINGS.

Christmas Offerings.	Why have	Important part of a child's training. An incentive.
	When offered	Each Sabbath. Does not affect other collections.
	Who give offerings	Children. Teachers. All.
	Results	Helps sustain missionaries. Applies child's pennies in a useful way.

"Christmas"—Christ's birthday—"Offering," a sacrifice; an oblation; anything offered in worship or sacred service.

WHY HAVE CHRISTMAS OFFERINGS?

One great reason is this, the child must have something to work to. We explain like this to the children: "You are pleased to have your parents and friends remember your birthday, and you remember your parents', brothers', and sisters' birthdays. That is right; and we think it a nice custom, if just simply congratulations that you have reached another mile post safely." It gives thoughts for the welfare of others, and takes some of this self away. We teach the children Christ's birthday is the grandest the world has ever known. Then, if it is nice to remember our own loved ones, who can do so little for us compared to "him who died that we might live," shall we let his birthday go by unnoticed? No, no. Tell them to save the pennies earned or given to them, and give some of them to Christ. He does not ask for all of them. He is not selfish. Let it be willingly given. Celebrate his birthday with praise, recitations, songs, and offerings.

Will the children think he wants the money for himself personally? . . . Teach them that the elders are Christ's brethren, and "inasmuch as ye have done [or given] it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it [given] unto me."

These elders have children and loved ones to be fed and clothed while they work for Christ. Help him in his work of teaching men, women, and children. . . .

RESULTS.

Does this system of Christmas offerings work well? "Yes." Does it diminish the regular collection for Sabbath school? "No." The children do not buy so much candy, gum, and soda water—those unwholesome things which make diseased children. It teaches them that there is a better way to spend their money. It helps the child out of these selfish and—I was going to say contemptible, stingy ways, which we see in many of the older ones who have not had such training.

We have been told of children in our infant class saying, when pennies have been earned or given to them, "Well, Mamma, I will save them for Sunday school and Christ's box; I won't spend it just for candy." These children have learned something good. They are benefited themselves and helping Christ's work along at the same time. It lifts them up to higher purposes.

PLAN.

Some of our teachers have a box with a slot in the top, where the teacher and pupils drop their pennies or nickels as they save them and have them to spare. The money is collected every Sabbath. We think this is best for the younger classes, especially the primary and intermediate. We think it would work well for all the classes, for we are all children just a little older grown, and we go to church every Sabbath to be reminded of our obligations. Christ's birthday comes, the box is opened, its contents counted, and eyes open wide as the amount is given. "I did not think it would be so much," are the words we hear. Since we have used this system we have had larger offerings, and they have been more easily collected, and no one is made poorer thereby. Just stop and think of the four or five elders kept in the field, by the children's offerings. Who can tell the good those pennies are doing or will do?

THE LAW OF GOD.

We read in the good books—"Teach the children the law of God." Is not the tithing and offering a part of the law? We who are older grown ought to know that "moth and rust will corrupt, and thieves will break through and steal." Then there is a place to put these treasures where they will do good. Are we not putting into the children's minds higher and holier thoughts of the day—Christ's birthday—when we give him an offering? If by observing this we could just soften or take away this selfishness of the coming generation, what a grand work that would be! But there is something more to be done than this. Then let us awaken to the needs of the hour.

Parents, superintendents, and teachers, let us try this way of remembering Christ's birthday. If you find it a failure, then—but it will not be a failure.

Your coworker,

MRS. M. E. PACE.

THE BLACKBOARD.

We much regret that we do not have space in this department to insert blackboard work regularly. But we do not. In a letter from Bro. J. F. Mintun, written from Cairo, Nebraska, he gives the following, which he expected to use the next Sunday in the general review of the lesson. The lesson is past, but the work is in a line which may be adapted to many lessons that will follow. Study it, and try adapting the method to a future lesson. It is impressive and therefore effective.

GOD IS HOLY.

Temples { Our bodies } Holy { Given.
 { At Jerusalem } { Be Kept.

"Be ye holy." [Golden Text.]

BY BEING.

1. Loving.
2. Merciful.
3. Good.
4. Just.
5. Wise.
6. True.

BY DOING.

1. Believe.
2. Repent.
3. Obey.
4. Pray.
5. Forgive.
6. Keep clean.

BY AVOIDING.

1. Covetousness.
2. Hatred.
3. Anger.
4. Swearing.
5. Lying.
6. Intemperance.

"For I am holy."

You can see the application without much explanation. Since God gave both the temple at Jerusalem and our bodies—the temple of the Holy Ghost; and all his works are holy—being given holy they should be kept holy. Then using the Golden Text by placing the part relating to our duty first, show under the "By Being" the qualities of God's nature already studied in previous lessons of this quarter. Then I associate on an equality the "By Doing," and cover the main ideas of the previous lessons. Follow this with the "Avoiding," giving the last part of the Golden Text, "For I am Holy" as a reason for "Being," "Doing," and "Avoiding."

Letter Department.

FLINT, Ind., Nov. 24.

Editors Herald:—Have just concluded a series of eighteen meetings at this point, and led into the waters of baptism four persons, making the total membership at Flint twenty-one—all heads of families. The attendance was large throughout—increasing till the close, notwithstanding the Disciples and Methodists were blowing loud trumpets not a block away, and the "Kickapoo Medicine Company" were entertaining the "optional" class, nightly, for one week. Extra seats were procured some evenings, and a large crowd turned away. Many more are on the very brink, and will yield obedience, we think, soon. The light seems to be brightly dawning in all the surrounding country and illuminating the many honest souls when its blessed rays are admitted. Old Babylon's miasmatic breath, which in times past, has rendered the theological lungs of the millions so weak, sickly, and pallid, is losing its victims, and "unclean birds" have no power to fasten the claws of "creed" or "confession" to the heart touched by the beams of the angel-restored message. The masses are conceding that—for the harsh and jarring growls, the discordant elements of disruption, and the wildly tempested—intensely heated and fast founding bulk of spiritual sickness of this age, the remedies proposed are worse than the disease they are designed to remove. They have been wrought out from praiseworthy motives and laid on the altar of revelation as acceptable offerings, but God declines the oblation, disclaims the necessity, and disapproves of the expedient.

The cause is strengthening, and in unplowed fields moves grandly. Bro. G. A. Smith and F. Granger speak encouraging words of the new appointment over at Blakeslee, Ohio. Two popular churches open at that point—we know not how long—but long enough to wake up old Satan evidently. Letters revealing seven new openings have come to my address the past two weeks, unsolicited, and so far unhonored. We haven't the ministers; and just now, while the demands are so great and multiresource, the harvest "white" and the laborers "few," I am reminded of the good old colored brother's petition from Alexandria Valley, down in Georgia, to the conference: "Send us a bishop to preach. If you can't send us a bishop, send us a sliding elder; if you can't send us a sliding elder, send us a stationary preacher; if you can't send him, send us a circus rider; if you can't spare him, send us a locus preacher; if you can't spare him, send us an exhauster." That settled it, and he got his preacher. Bro. Briggs, send us some help; if you can't send us anything else, trot out the "exhauster," we'll put up with him.

I expect to be off for Lansing in a few days; no excuse for "rusting out," but opportunity plenty for "wearing out." Quite a winter campaign is mapped out in our district. We will do all that we are able to do, but "home" seems "sweet" once during the year. Winter, with ice and chill, flutters over us at present, and a little snow has fallen from his wings.

Hopefully,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

FAIRLAND, Ind. Ter., Nov. 27.

Editors Herald:—October 20 myself and Bro. G. W. Beebe, Jr., of Lebeck, Missouri, left home and dear ones for the Indian Territory to preach the glad tidings of salvation to our Lamanite brethren. We held forth at Galena and Baxter Springs, Kansas; Tulsa, Chelsea, and Fairland, Indian Territory. Near Tulsa we preached twelve sermons and baptized three, all heads of families; namely, N. B. Edwards, husband of Sr. Hattie Edwards, also a Mr. W. D. Wheatcraft and wife Ida May. After which the Baptist minister advised us not to preach in their (cracker box) church or schoolhouse, as he would not vouch for our safety; but we answered that we were preaching the truth, the gospel of Christ; we should fill the appointment as given out, or make the attempt, and that we had no fears, and could not die in a better cause if it comes to that. Well, we made the attempt, but found a 2 x 4 timber spiked over the inside of the door; but as the window of the cracker box was open we entered, only to find that the lower joint of the stovepipe had been removed, and as the night was too cold without a fire, we turned the house over to them in peace, and shook the dust from our feet as a testimony against them.

Here we found a Bro. and Sr. Huntsman, formerly of Redding, Ringgold County, Iowa, and a Bro. Smith and Bro. C. White and family, of Oklahoma.

At Chelsea we made the acquaintance of Bro. D. M. Beck, W. E. New and families, and a Sr. England and others, and preached to them a few times. Thence we came to this place, where we are preaching nightly at the home of J. T. Riley. Here and near here are located Sr. Stringer, G. M. Rhonemus, W. B. Hillen, J. J. Calkins, and W. S. Watson and families, all striving to win the crown. In the last month have sold over five dozen of the Voice of Warning, besides taking subscriptions for other church publications, and have done as little harm as possible, and made as many friends to the work as we could. We hear the Macedonian cry, Come over and preach for us a week or two anyway.

Are on our way to Blendsville, Missouri, conference, which convenes December 3.

In gospel bonds,

J. C. CHERESTENSEN.

CRENSHAW, Pa., Nov. 25.

Editors Herald:—It has been written, "And thorns as well as roses are waiting for our feet." Such has been the heritage of man since Eden. God has permitted that—in the sacred records of things past—both the good and the bad of human procedure should be disclosed to our view. Could it have been otherwise to our profit? To write of our work, then, as it transpires, necessitates the narration of the unpleasant at times, as well as the pleasant. To the church now, and to God finally, we must answer for work done. If what we do is done to conserve the right, whatever view others take of it, if it is found to be right in the end, we can well afford to have passed the experience of its testing.

In Detroit, Michigan, matters of years' accumulation had seemingly exhausted the regulating powers of branch, district, and mission authorities. It seemed good, to a number, to petition for aid direct from highest powers of the church. The Presidency suggested to the Twelve the sending of some of their number; resulting in W. H. Kelley, G. T. Griffiths, and R. C. Evans being sent. Eighteen days of investigation followed. A lengthy yet terse decision comes in its time.

A new man is put upon the scene, so that all may rally to the standard of right, as little embarrassed as possible. The decision in the time of its presentation is approved by thirty-four, against a negative of thirteen, and the new man installed by that action.

Three months of careful observation reveal the wisdom of the decision rendered in all of its provisions. Patient effort is made to bring all to unity, which is offset by several, with the bitterest and continued denunciations of the church, from its president down. To the antagonizing ones the privilege of appeal to the entire Quorum of Twelve is presented as proper recourse, which is scouted as futile.

Not a cent of heavy expense made by the answering of their petition with others is paid by them. A month after the sixty days for appeal is passed another court is called to act. Some are expelled. Whether appeal in the case of the last court's work shall be taken remains to be seen.

To rule or ruin has been the policy of some. Those laboring in Detroit, for some years past, have had this to contend with. Many and complicated conditions, ever changing, have existed to be met. Consequent changes in rulings at times have been regarded as characterizing the one or ones making the rulings as a "turncoat." In this the writer has had a share with others.

The writer indulges the hope that the decision of members of the Twelve shall find its way to the columns of the Herald, from the quorum at its next sitting, because of its worth on general principles.

A goodly number of devoted saints are to be found in Detroit, who can yet push the work on to success if they will, notwithstanding all the discouragements they have had.

Let them sing and execute, as saith the poet:—

"We'll stand the storm, for it won't be very long:
We'll anchor bye and bye."

Many pleasant experiences in Detroit will be fondly cherished in memory. Association with Bro. E. C. Briggs, as missionary in charge, was both pleasant and profitable; as also with fellow soldiers—A. Barr, W. Davis, and J. A. Grant.

The foregoing could all have been written ere I left Detroit; distance, however, sometimes lends enchantment to the view, and time sometimes softens the spirit of man, making a proper consideration possible; so delay becomes an advantage sometimes.

May the day come when the unfortunate ones, who incur the severities of the law upon themselves, will retrace their steps and re-enter the fold, while others, nearing the precipice, profit, face about, fall in line, and do the right. As of old, the law of God is a "savor of life unto life," or of "death unto death." We make the choice as to which it shall be by the use of our agency.

The faithful few here are pressing steadily onward, making advancement amid discouragements. I am steering for new territory in the southeastern part of the State, where the restored gospel has never been proclaimed, I believe. My address is care of Box 28, Cleveland, Ohio.

In bonds,

R. ETZENHOUSER.

WACO, Missouri, Nov. 27.

Editors Herald:—I am working away as hard as I can. My work this fall has principally been in new places; good results at some points, simply nothing at others, so far as appearance goes. But I am not working to make appearance, only to please the eye of God. He can see that some reject the counsel of the scriptures and the doctrine of Jesus Christ. Since writing last I had the pleasure of baptizing three into the fold at Scammon, Kansas; they were converted by others than myself, however. One, a Sr. Morgan, said her first light was gotten while hearing Bro. J. W. Gilbert preach; and it is only just to say, the ground had been somewhat prepared through the efforts of Bro. and Sr. Hisle, in their neighborly way of trying to let their light shine.

Waco is an entirely new place for gospel work. I came here to fill my first appointment October 9—walked from Webb City, about twelve miles. I stopped at first with Mr. W. Holsworth's family, and was afterward made welcome by a Mr. Bryan, and was nicely treated at both places. After a few sermons there, I preached from a Friday night to Sunday night at Rawling's chapel, an M. E. church, six miles southwest of Waco. At first they wanted a protracted meeting—a "good meeting," and a man who "would preach the Bible." I preached simple and plain, and not radical; but lo, the next day one of their leaders, a Mr. Walter Merrick, announced around that I would have to be closed out. Their desire for a "big meeting" suddenly ended when the doctrine failed to fit the M. E. view.

I returned to Waco and preached a few more sermons with good crowds and increased interest. I closed and left no appointment. I borrowed a horse to look for another point, and went to Medoc, but that looked too dark for me, so I went to Nashville, the scene of the Cather-Blalock debate, and learned that a friend to the cause being very low with typhoid fever, I stopped in to see the sick; but as I neared the bed, the only signs of life were the jerking of the jaw and ghastly rolling of the eyes. I was invited and preached the funeral sermon next day to a large crowd, with good liberty, many of our prejudiced friends were present and gave good attention.

I then returned to Waco, and by the impression of Spirit went to Weir City, and then to Bird schoolhouse; had good crowd there and good attention.

I then went on an exploring trip north of Pittsburg to Englevale, where Bro. Christie resides. A protracted meeting by the Church of God was raging there, so we made arrangements for the M. E. Church for a later date and left on foot for another new place, Mulberry, a few miles distant. I tried to get the M. E. church; all the trustees agreed but one, and he spoiled it all for the present at least. His name is Taylor, and is related to John Taylor of the Salt Lake faction. I expect, Providence permitting, to open Mulberry in spite of Mr. Taylor. I stopped over night with him, and we had a hot time of it; and while we talked, his family got to hear considerable of the gospel. I found Bro. Christie growing in the faith and anxious to do all he can for truth.

As the way closed down at Mulberry, I was impressed by the Spirit to go to Scammon; so off I went, leaving Mr. Taylor at nine a. m., and walking about thirty miles, reached my destination at seven p. m. I there held a prayer and sacrament meeting at Bro. and Sr. Hisle's house; all neighboring saints were present; the Spirit was nicely enjoyed and I think all were renewed in feelings and spirit. The preaching was fairly attended and blessed. Soon after I left Waco last, the citizens arranged among themselves for me to come again, so I was written to and appointment made. Hence one of the reasons for my being here at present. I commenced last night to a good sized, attentive crowd. Two have decided to be baptized, but as yet the time is not set, the reason being a fair one. My Waco friends say they want to help me with a little money, that a man can't preach for nothing. Their view is right; a preacher needs the temporal help as well as others who are not preachers. Their thoughtfulness here is truly appreciated, and may heaven bless them with her rich blessings.

HEPPNER, Oregon, Nov. 26.

Editors Herald:—Since writing you last I have finished my series of meetings at the Lank schoolhouse, where I baptized two—the Mr. and Mrs. Meyers. At the close of the services there (nine in number) I went back to Little Falls, October 27, preaching three times and returning Saturday, October 30, so that I could attend services at the Jackson church, Sunday, the 31st, where a Rev. Bailles of the Christian Church had advertised a lecture on "Mormonism" at eleven o'clock, sending me an invitation to be there, and when I applied, promised me the use of the house at three p. m. to reply. The expose or lecture was, as usual, based on the old stories told in the Encyclopedia Britannica, "What the World Believes," etc., sandwiching in a little doctrine, i. e., affirming that there could not be shown by the Bible that there was ever a successor to one of the original apostles. In fact only twelve were ever spoken of in the Bible; and that the power to work miracles was never delegated unto any except those who were called and ordained under the Savior's hands. I had advertised the meeting as fully as I could, and the house was full. The Lord helped me in the reply, and much good for the cause was surely accomplished. I was challenged to meet a new man whom the "Christians" would send for. I accepted and submitted propositions. That was November 1, and while their man lives somewhere near Portland, yet he has not been heard from yet.

November 1, went back to Little Falls and preached every night and Sunday at eleven a. m., three and 7:30 p. m., nine sermons in all. Here I baptized one, a Sr. Mosier. Other say they will be ready when I return. Feeling that I needed a rest of a few days, I returned to Castle Rock, and spent the week visiting, resting, and fishing. (By the way, I caught a few fine trout, one that weighed three pounds.)

While here a card from Bro. Holt, written from Avon, stating that he would be in Castle Rock, Tuesday, the 16th. A big revival had been in progress at the Presbyterian church this week, and was to end Sunday, the 14th; but when we put out appointments for the week commencing Sunday evening, at the City Hall, the revival suddenly developed into a "union meeting," composed of the three local churches—M. E., Presbyterian, and Christian—so you see we brought unity, at least. However, our meetings were fairly well attended, and the result—visible—was seven "born again," making ten baptized in Castle Rock since August 19.

Closing our services there November 23, we started for Heppner the morning of the 24th, going to Portland and taking the steamer Regulator the morning of the 25th—Thanksgiving. Well; we had a fine day and enjoyed the trip, the scenery, and the "turkey." We opened our little organ and soon had the passengers singing. Well, the Captain did not put us out and we had a fine trip. Among other events was a small but quite spirited discussion with a spiritualistic professor, also with a Holiness lady preacher. I think some good was done, and many asked me to call on them if I ever found the opportunity. We reached the Dalles about six p. m. As we had until 12:40 m. to wait, we spent the intervening hours as best as we could; putting in a few hours at the Salvation Army hall—judging the number of hours by the seeming length. "Blind leaders of the blind." The train arrived in due time, and boarding "Nahum's chariots" we sped on our way. Changing cars at Heppner Junction, we were landed in Heppner at about six a. m. We are domiciled with Sr. C. R. Rush at present, a sister of Bro. John Hatcher. There is about two inches of snow here. Will commence operation from this base as soon as possible now. The health and hopes of Bro. Holt and your writer are very good. May the Lord add his blessing.

LEEDS, England, Nov. 14.

Editors Herald:—I am pleased to inform you that the saints here generally seem to have received a fresh impetus in the work through the labors of Bro. H. C. Smith, who has been with us a little more than two weeks; his efforts have been very much appreciated amongst us, and we have been rejoiced at the plain, solid, and eloquent preaching of our brother, and sincerely trust that the fruit thereof may abound; already the signs of good appear, and though no new converts are added to the church to my knowledge, yet I believe there are those who have been converted to the privileges that accrue to the saints of God, and some who were discouraged have had their strength renewed and have felt that God's Spirit had inspired the messages delivered.

The progress of the gospel in this vicinity has not been rapid, but to the contrary; the people as a rule seem to have no time to spend over such a commonplace, and as many regard it, old fashioned notion of religion. In their wisdom they look with contempt upon all who devote their time in its interests, and let us see that they pity us. This is not to be wondered at when we consider the woeful contention and disastrous rivalry among the so-called Christians; but more sad to relate is the fact that oftentimes among the saints the spirit of rivalry and discord obtains, and does more harm to the cause than all the opposition from outside. The more intense and bitter the persecution from the world, the more intensified is the love and good fellowship within. We expect this, for Christ left us our legacy so far as the world is concerned when he said, "In the world ye shall have tribulation, but in me ye shall have peace." But the arch enemy has learned that he can more effectually frustrate the work by breeding strife and persecution right in the church, and cause that the lack of brotherly kindness and sympathy among the household of faith shall drive us asunder, and we work our own destruction in the prophecy of Christ, "that a kingdom divided in itself cannot stand"—it must inevitably fall. It is time we learned this scheme of the adversary, and sought to counteract its baneful influence by the Spirit of love that is the antithesis to the above, and its effects are binding and powerful, indeed impregnable against men and devils. Then we shall pity the failings of each other rather than distend or enlarge them.

The representatives of the Salt Land church are very busy around here. I have sought to engage in discussion with an Elder Robinson, of Utah, and he has been offered the use of our pulpit to present their side of the question, with the understanding that we would follow, but nothing has resulted as yet. This elder informs me that they have baptized sixty in England so far this year, and seven were just recently baptized belonging to Leeds and neighborhood; they have a conference house in Bradford, ten miles from here, and I accepted an invitation to visit them there. They also have a branch there, and intend holding a conference there on November 28. They seem to have a number of elders over the United Kingdom, and have about one thousand members altogether.

Bro. Smith succeeded in getting a lengthy letter published in the Hamilton Advertiser, a publication of Scotland, which was redundant with good points, showing the false position of the Utah faction. I understand the Utah elders were going to reply; thus far, however, no reply has appeared. I fancy it will take a while to think out a reply to evade the cogent statements of Bro. Smith.

Trade in this country is in a very poor condition, owing to the strike and lockout of the engineers; distress and want are wide spread, and the end is not yet in view. Before winter has gone, unless a change takes place, it is easy to prognosticate that poverty and starvation, with their attendant evils, will have left an indelible trail.

I pray that God may help us to realize the magnitude of our responsibility as his alert, and enable us to present in practice as well as precept the principles of divine truth that shall be instrumental in emancipating the world from its woeful condition, and that the day will soon dawn when

"Man to man the world o'er, Shall brithers be and a' that."

SELKIRK, Ont., Nov. 29.

Editors Herald:—I am very thankful because I have nothing but good news to write. Since last General Conference many of the Saints have seemed to renew the fight against the triune enemy—"the world, the flesh, and the Devil." Some who have been careless act as though they have been born again, "from an old existence into a new life." The general testimony of the ministry is, "I feel better;" more light and an increase of spirituality in every department of the church work is being enjoyed. Peace and unity exist in all parts of the mission, so far as I am informed. The only thing that gives cause for anxiety is that some are careless, while in some few places the evidence of formality seems to exist; but in the main we are hopeful, in that the future seems big with promise of a solid work being done.

Elders George Green and R. C. Longhurst, the honored presidents of Chatham and London districts, seem to be guarding with prudence and ability the sacred interests of their respective districts; while our very limited missionary force, consisting of John Shields, Frederick Gregory, Daniel MacGregor, Samuel Tomlinson, A. E. and J. L. Mortimer, and B. St. John, with the local ministry, seem to be urging the gospel claims with Christian meekness and fortitude.

The dear old face and wise counsel of "Uncle John"—Apostle John H. Lake—is greatly missed; no man ever left Canada with more friends than he. May his future be sunshine and peace.

The visit of President Joseph Smith to this mission has done a vast amount of good. The newspapers have given very prominent, fair, and kindly editorials on his work. His sermons have been fairly well reported in the main.

The general history of the church is better understood by the reading people of Canada than it ever was before. I regret that the limited time at his disposal, together with a two weeks' attack of his facial affliction, prevented his preaching at several other points in Canada. I had the pleasure of being with him on most of the trips through Canada. While he may have lost some sleep in consequence, yet I have been the recipient of much needed counsel and information. His visit has been a blessing to me, and will be a lasting benefit to the mission generally. I think Joseph likes Canada, and of course I admire his judgment.

Elder Gregory joined me here eight days ago. Since then we have preached eleven sermons, held one prayer meeting, and are billed for every night this week, and four meetings next Sunday. This place is a stronghold of the followers of the late Alexander Campbell; but alas, alas! how far they have wandered from the unique path marked out by the sometime reformer, sometime restorer of Bethany. He who in early days strongly and violently denounced Bible, tract, and education societies, Sunday schools, and the hireling ministry as schemes of the clergy "fraught with mischief to the temporal and eternal interests of men." Baptists, schools, and colleges were placed among the marks of the beast.—Mill. Har. vol. 1, p. 15. Preparing young men for the gospel ministry was denounced "as a new message from the skies," unheard of in the Bible. Christian missionaries were denounced. But now they who claim to stand by "the restorer" have given evidence of their apostasy from his early teachings by organizing foreign mission boards, paid preachers, Sunday schools, and colleges. "The Bible gives us no idea of a missionary without the power of working miracles." "Miracles and missionaries are inseparably connected in the New Testament."—Chu. Bap. p. 15. Now they have the missionary, the hireling preacher, but miracles are not found among them; truly "a form," "denying the power." Some few in this place, and hundreds in other places, have as the great Christian preacher, Paul, advised, "turned away."

We feel encouraged with the prospects here. Elder Derby has fitted up a nice hall in the center of the town, and while the Disciples and Methodists have commenced special meetings, and the Baptists have made provision for a special effort next Sunday, yet we are happy and hopeful. "The stream impeded has a song," hence we believe the opposition will help our cause. Let those who look for my coming have patience. I am doing all I can; and as soon as wisdom directs I will reach other points.

The saints of this mission have done well in remembering their duty in the financial part of the work—that is some of them; yet many are slow in this regard. Now it requires money to send missionaries into the field, and many are calling, "send us an elder." The elder must be fed and clothed, his traveling expenses must be met, his family must be provided for—all this takes money. Now in order that the missionary "come soon," "stay a long time," we must increase our missionary force. If increased they could remain longer in each place. May the saints see to it that they all comply with this part of the law of God, that the Bishop's agents of London and Chatham districts will have such a good report at the next General Conference as will insure the authorities that Canada has the right to more missionaries. Let each member do his duty, and at once.

Your brother in the conflict,
R. C. EVANS.

FAIRBURY, Neb., Nov. 19.

Editors Herald:—The saints here, though few in number, and not organized into a branch, are striving for the mastery over the evil one and his emissaries, and are enjoying a degree of the Spirit. We have weekly preaching and prayer services, a Sisters' Prayer Union, and a good Sunday school. Bro. Myers, our local elder, is trying day by day to teach the people the beauties of this glorious latter-day work. Bro. J. W. Waldsmith is with us at present and is holding meetings every night. Bro. H. W. Belville was with us about two weeks a short time ago. He is a good speaker, and has the ability of holding the fixed attention of his audience from start to finish. He is a very spiritual young man, with a life entirely consecrated to the service of the Master and the upbuilding of his kingdom. May God bless him and give him of his Holy Spirit to guide and direct him into all truth and righteousness, that he may never grow weary of well-doing.

There are two Brighamites in our little city at present. They came to our meetings twice, but Bro. Belville was unable to get them to debate the differences in the two churches. They are distributing tracts and talking wherever they can get the opportunity, denouncing us as apostates from their church; they are also teaching the people that Joseph Smith practiced polygamy. But all things work together for the good of them that love God; so we strive to possess our souls in patience, believing that God will turn and overturn events to our good and his name's honor and glory.

Five years ago last June 26, I was baptized into God's kingdom by Bro. George Shute, and I have never regretted the step. I have received many blessings from my heavenly Father, and my only regret is my weakness that causes me to do things I should not do, and leave undone the things that should be done. Before becoming identified with this people I was a firm Methodist. I enjoyed a great degree of the Spirit and was earnest, honest, and devoted in my faith and conduct; but it was not enough to satisfy me, my soul was hungering after the bread of life. I only heard two sermons preached (I had read many) until I announced my readiness for baptism. What a disturbance it raised in the Methodistical dovecote! What a flutter, and sputter, and hullaballo! "My dear sister, you are being led astray." "You are allowing your queer ideas to deceive you!" "O they are a deluded set!! Utah Mormons, polygamists; but the law stopped them, that's all!!!" etc., etc.

The pastor came to me and we had a long, exciting, and I fear (to him) unpleasant interview. He strove to point out the foolishness of my unheard-of conduct, the pernicious practices of the Mormons; how, even from a worldly standpoint, I was foolish. "You will find I believe in every good thing they teach," he said. Next moment he told me prophets and apostles were done away with; "we don't need them now, we have a higher civilization to-day!" Poor man; higher than Jesus, whom he professed to worship! Finding argument unable to shake me, without Bible proof, he descended to ridicule, and finally angry vilification of the saints. He reminded me of the exhaust pipe of an engine; little short puffs and escape of steam, with a terrible lot of hissing and jarring and racket. He went off in high indignation, declaring he would not give me a letter, I would soon come to my senses, and come back to them. But I haven't yet, nor never expect to. But few of my M. E. friends know me now; yet I can say with the poet,

"Though my friends despise and leave me,
They have left my Savior too."

Now I fear you are weary with the length of this letter. Hoping to escape the waste basket, I may come again some day.

Your sister in Christ,
REBECCA MCLEAN.

SOUTH GOULDSBORO, Me., Nov. 19.

Editors Herald:—I came here yesterday from Northern Aroostook, where I have been laboring for the past four weeks with fair success among the saints there, and with excellent interest among the people in general, many of them admitting our work to be the truth. Satan had been working discord among the saints, by circulating his fabrications. This has had its effect towards keeping some of the people from coming to hear. To some extent satisfaction and peace is restored among the saints in that section. They are a fine lot of saints, but living so far away, and being so isolated from the church, they have been greatly neglected.

Among the curious things we learned while in Aroostook, we mention the following, for the benefit of the saints, that they may not be duped. One Harry Hagerman, a Baptist minister, has a poor blind boy by the name of Suecie on exhibition, presenting him to the public as an object of pity, and thus soliciting their sympathy and getting their money, paying the boy one dollar per day, retaining the balance himself. It is said on good authority that he has laid by some few hundred dollars the past summer in this way. He is just now traveling in Pennsylvania. Saints, beware. It is further stated of him, that when he cannot get the people's money by presenting the boy, he will pray, using the most pitiful language that he can command.

I believe they are just having a cyclone in Caribou; or in other words, Evangelist Gale is booked there for two weeks, at the small sum of two hundred dollars per week. It is hoped they may get their money's worth from Mr. Gale.

Coming to this place was the result of bad roads, occasioned by deep snow in the section where I had been laboring. Here I met with Apostle W. H. Kelley, and U. W. Greene, of the Seventy. Listened to Bro. Kelley twice, as he turned on the torchlight of truth, and his voice thundered forth the eternal truths of heaven, inviting the people to come to the light of the gospel. I am to remain here for a while, continuing the labors thus begun, and the brethren have passed on to Jonesport. S. O. FOSS.

BILOXI, Miss., Nov. 18.

Editors Herald:—"Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth thy bottle to him, and makest him drunken also, that thou mayest look on their nakedness."—Habakkuk 2: 15.

"Coming events cast their shadows before." Already plans and preparations are being made for the Christmas festivities; presents decided upon, secretly made and securely hidden, to be brought forth for happy Christmas surprises. Mothers plan for the roast turkey and cranberry sauce, with puddings, pickles, and pies; salads, sauces, and sweets; and all the accompaniments of a Christmas feast. The children plan for popcorn and nuts, and all the happy little doings of a yearly going to grandpa's.

In how many homes of the saints, because it is time-honored custom, handed down from father to son for generations perhaps, will the pure and innocent festivities be marred by the presence of wine, eggnog, or hard cider? How many will forget that God has said, "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink." "I have warned you, and forewarn you, by giving unto you this word of wisdom by revelation, that inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold, it is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father."—D. C. 86: 1.

Brethren, when you gather with your little ones for the happy Christmas feast, will you teach them to dishonor and disobey God's word, by offering them any strong drink, because it is "only this once," or "such a little that it can't hurt"? Is "a little" any more "meet in the sight of your Father," than enough to intoxicate would be?

Since we are to offer our bodies a living sacrifice, is it right to defile that sacrifice with even "a little" of that which God has forbidden? "not meet in the sight of your Father." Let the words ring in your ears.

Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to the God of Israel is that the tables of the saints, everywhere, shall be undefiled by the presence of that which "biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder;" upon which we are not even to look, much less to drink.

(Prov. 23: 32.) That the curse pronounced by Habakkuk shall not fall upon any, because they have given their own children even "a little" strong drink; but may the peace of God rest upon you all at the coming Christmas time, because the tables are meet in his sight, and all things done according to his revealed will.

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. IDA STEWART.

WIRT, Ind., Nov. 26.

Editors Herald:—This conference year, so far, has partially been one of sore disappointment to me as well as happiness. As per announcement in Herald, I fully intended (after having raised a little crop to supply necessities to wife and children) to spend my time during autumn and winter in the ministry; but have realized that God's ways are not man's ways. Man proposes; God disposes. The latter part of June my wife's health began to fail her. She grew worse all the while; so much so, when the time came for me to take my grip in hand to leave loved ones and home to proclaim the wonderful story to a dying and famishing world for the bread of life, I was compelled by the ties of nature and the love that is exhibited in the words, "and they twain shall be one flesh," to occupy a place by her bedside. And duty says, there I must remain until the mercy of God shall step in and destroy the dreadful disease. I desire and request everyone who reads this to bow in fervent prayer for her recovery, including the Prayer Union, and every saint of God that has entered into a covenant relationship with him.

These being the circumstances by which I am surrounded, I know not how soon I shall be able to enter the missionary field; but will do so as soon as the sick one is able for me to leave. It is my desire to spend the greater part of my days for God, believing if I could save one soul I shall have done a great work.

In parts of the district the work is doing fairly well, considering all things. The farthest we are behind is in not abiding the temporal law of the church.

Under direction of Elder E. C. Briggs I conducted a Sabbath school at my home branch; average attendance about seventy. Closed for the winter the first Sunday night in October with a children's entertainment, consisting of sixty-six recitations, songs, and dialogues. The church filled to overflowing.

Whilst looking over the past, we feel to thank him who reigns on high; yet we are made to sorrow somewhat. Our district, numbering about four hundred, and not one fourth of that number have their names enrolled on the finance book. (Hope it is not so in the book of life.) What, O what, my brethren and sisters, are we colaborers with God? Surely this is neglect on our part. Cannot we all pay five cents. Remember the poor widow that threw in her mite. Cannot some of us pay ten cents, twenty-five cents, fifty cents, one dollar, five dollars, ten dollars, and so on? O how the good work might be pushed forward if all would do something. I will be glad to send you receipt for a nickel, if you are not able to do more. Surely we know that a church without means is like an engine without steam.

Now, dear saints, the time is drawing near when we will have to make our yearly report; won't you send in your mites, and thereby show to the church, to the world, and to God that we have not lighted our candles and put them under a bushel; but placed them where the world can see that we have passed from death unto life; have oil in our vessels, lamps trimmed and burning, singing the beautiful hymn: "I am waiting, dear Jesus, for thee." May this be our happy lot. Praise the Lord. Let us then awake to duty. No time for delay, no time for dilatoriness, no time for contentions, for jealousies, hatred, envyings, and strife. But it is time for us to be one, even as the Father and the Son are one. The poor cry for help, but there are no means to help. The missionaries' family must have support.

A sacrifice is required.

It hath been said: "Whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him." We trust branch presidents and solicitors will make a special effort to see that each and every member of the several branches hand in something (so far as they can) and send to my address: Box 14, Wirt, Indiana. There are some poor ones that must have help soon, dear saints. Will you now come to our relief? We are told, "he that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord," and I am sure he will be a good paymaster in time to come.

Bro. Briggs was with us a short time; hope he may return again. Trusting the Lord may guide, uphold, defend all from the least to the greatest, I remain, as ever, your humble servant,

WILLIAM C. MARSHALL.

DECEPTION'S REIGN.—PART 2. NO. 3.

BY ELDER COLUMBUS SCOTT.

I HAVE referred to the two principles of baptism and the laying of hands, to illustrate the expediency resorted to by creed makers and theology manufacturers in their deceptive dealing with God's word. And yet they are terribly wrought up over the lecture of R. G. Ingersoll on "What must I do to be saved," wherein he takes the liberty of denying the essentiality to salvation of the principle of faith. And yet faith is the first of a series of seven principles, of which series baptism and the laying on of hands are the third and fourth, respectively. Baptism of the Holy Spirit, the resurrection of the dead, and the eternal judgment being the other three.

God ordained these seven principles or doctrinal, foundational pillars (Prov. 9: 1, 2; Heb. 6: 2) as essential to salvation. They are the everlasting pillars placed under the moral and spiritual government of God among men; and if it be counted infidelity in Mr. Ingersoll to deny one or all of them, what must we call that in any man, or any number of men, who deny the essentiality to the salvation of man, the third and fourth of them? A little leaven leavens the lump! Those principles of the doctrine of Christ all stand or fall together. "But," says the theologian, "for by grace are ye saved through faith!" True; but the grace that gave the principle of faith also gave and includes the other six following and connected principles. All are the doctrine of Christ. All are by God applied in the solution of the problem of individual life eternal. All are necessary to salvation.

Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee.—1 Tim. 4: 16.

Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house [in his pretended official capacity], neither bid him God speed: for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds.—2 John 9-11.

From this Bible statement we must most consistently conclude that God is not where his doctrine is not, and where he is not his Holy Spirit is not, as an advocate. John gives this language as a test of teachers and their teaching, and assigns as his reason for giving this doctrinal test:—

For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an anti-christ.—2 John 7.

Deceivers, false teachers, "confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh." "Jesus Christ," the anointed of God, Messiah, sent of God. (John 1: 41.) God's "witness," "leader," and "commander" to the people. Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, by creation of all things. Prince of Peace. He is "God was manifest [revealed or come] in the flesh." (1 Tim. 3: 16.) His law, commandment, or doctrine is God's law, commandment, or doctrine. (John 7: 16, 17.)

Therefore, the minister who teaches the doctrine of Christ, all of it, confesses thereby that Christ is God manifest, while he who refuses to teach it all does not confess; but by differing with Christ as to its essentiality, denies his superior authority; and hence is "a deceiver and an anti-christ"—that is, is against Christ. John's doctrinal test is infallible in all ages and climes. The principles of the doctrine are seven in number. (Heb. 6: 1, 2.) They are faith, repentance, baptism in water (a command), for remission of sins. (Luke 1: 76, 77; 3: 2, 3; Matt. 28: 19; Luke 7: 30; Acts 2: 38; 22: 16.)

I know that his commandment is life everlasting.—John 12: 50.

Baptism doth also now save us.—1 Peter 3: 21.

Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. (Acts 8: 14-17; 9: 17; 1 Tim. 4: 14; Acts 19: 1-6; Gal. 1: 8, 9.)

Baptism of the Holy Ghost, as promised. (Acts 2: 38, 39; 1: 4, 5; 10: 44, 45; 1 Cor. 12: 13.)

Resurrection of the dead; and the eternal judgment. Those who refuse to teach the principles of the doctrine as here presented by Paul and John, Christ and Peter, "Profess that they know God; but in works they deny him (Titus 1: 16), and confess not that God was manifest in the flesh. "Take heed that no man deceive you."

By the same process of discrimination that excludes from the human theologies the principles of the doctrine of Christ above referred to, as a living belief, the teachings of Paul in 1 Corinthians, chapter 12, are likewise excluded. So that we are forbidden by creeds and creed-makers to believe in receiving and enjoying the gifts of the Holy Spirit, as there described, although the chapter ends with the injunction, "But covet earnestly the best gifts." (1 Cor. 12: 31.) And further on, Paul says, "Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy." (14: 1.) The theologies divide this verse and insist that we should "follow after charity;" but must not desire spiritual gifts, for if we desired them now, it would be wrong, and we would be disappointed, for God (say they) would not give them to us. By inserting the little word "not" into the statement of Paul, so that it reads desire "not" spiritual gifts, we add a word like Satan did to God's word in Eden, and it reads just precisely as human theologies teach us, and would have us believe; and if it works as successful as when it worked Adam and Eve out of Eden, we shall surely be kept out, never more to return! God gave those gifts to his church to edify and perfect the saints (1 Cor. 14: 12; Eph. 4: 12), and were designed of him to aid his people in preserving the unity of the faith till Christ should come in glory to redeem them (1 Cor. 13: 10-12; Eph. 4: 13-15); but the theologies tamper with God's word, set aside his means of grace, and deny the efficacy of his designs as trivially as though they were child's play; and in their stead offer their learned human wisdom, which with God is vanity and foolishness. (1 Cor. 1: 25.)

It is God's will for his people to be endowed with those spiritual gifts (1 Cor. 12: 11) divided among the members of his church "severally as he will," that they might not be deceived by men's "cunning craftiness" (Eph. 4: 14); but the theologies have decided that they can be dispensed with, because no longer needed; and because they are away behind the times! Electricity, telegraphs, telephones, and motor cars are away in advance of the spiritual gifts for religious purposes! We go to heaven nowadays by railway and telegraph!

Now don't laugh at me when you read this, for as a minister I am told by advocates of human theologies that the leading reason why the spiritual gifts are not necessary in this age of the world is, we are so far in advance of the apostolic age in civilization and scientific development! Now if that argument means anything, logically, in this connection, it means that as a means of salvation, civilization and science have now taken the place in the plan of salvation of the gifts and revealing and enlightening power of the Holy Spirit. This or nothing. Which?

Really, I see nothing to hinder R. G. Ingersoll from falling into line with the theologies, except that he has not yet learned the difference between them and Christianity, though he ought to be able to see it easily, for in very many regards it is their opposite.

In the foregoing manner all parts of the plan of God's salvation not compatible with the feelings of the theology weaver is omitted; though God was able, if he found it necessary, to make all changes required. But God has never seen the necessity yet, so far as he has informed us in his revelations, to change in his works or purposes so as to improve on them. He is not a man that he should lie, or the Son of man that he should repent,—change his purposes. (1 Sam. 15: 29.)

It is clearly a deception to suppose for one moment that God has varied a hair's breadth from the gospel plan as originally designed and revealed, from the foregoing considerations. The gospel in its original principles; the church in its original apostolical organic form; and the Holy Ghost in its original office work and operation, with all its gifts and blessings, all this, nothing short will fill the demands of the case consistently with the character of the all wise, all merciful, all loving, impartial, immutable God.

I observe that in our glancing backward, we do so with strict regard to present adjustment of ourselves to truth and right, and with the special view not to be deceived or led into error. God's plan of saving man, as set forth in the gospel, was so designed originally by him, as to adjust itself without change to the conditions of man as an ever progressive being in intelligence, knowledge, wisdom, and power—morally and spiritually. The knowledge, wisdom, and power, being the same in nature and character to all the saved of all ages, necessarily require that the means—gospel—by which it is brought to man be and remain the same in all ages. The demands being the same with all willing to be saved by the gospel, necessarily demand that the plan in all its parts be absolutely immutable. To the plan of salvation then, as originally given to the world, we must conform, or fail in our efforts to attain to the salvation it proposes.

Enter ye in at the straight gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because straight is the gate, and narrow is the way [not ways], which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.—Matt. 7: 13, 14.

As the same fountain cannot send forth both sweet water and bitter, no more can we expect that from the immutable, eternal, impartial, infinitely wise God will there issue two or more streams of knowledge and wisdom, and they be divergent and contradictory. It is impossible. No more should we expect him to ordain as essential to man's salvation, in one age, that which in another age he would abrogate as being not essential to salvation.

Kind reader, you may wonder why we hover so closely around the ideas of God's immutability and the consequent unchangeability of his gospel plan. It is for the reason that just here is where the great world has made its mistake. Admitting a change in the principles of the gospel law, or that it may vary in different ages, leaves the openings where deceptions have entered in, and deceivers have taken advantage of mankind, and a multitude of humanly constructed religions and theologies have usurped the place of the gospel, and crowded it out from the attention of mankind, for some centuries of our era. Christianity, original, has become such a stranger to a large proportion of religionists, that they do not know it when presented, and they denounce it as a delusion and imposition! They do this ignorantly, as did the ancient Jews, with the Bible in their hands.

For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every Sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him.—Acts 13: 27.

It was through the false and delusive idea that God's unchangeable gospel law was variable and changeable, or that parts of it pertained to the apostolic age that did not pertain to future centuries, that during the fourth, fifth, and sixth centuries human philosophies and heathen dogmas were allowed to corrupt the faith of the gospel—and such principles of the gospel as could not in any mode of interpretation be made to appear to harmonize with the philosophies and dogmas were laid aside as being no longer necessary. "Grievous wolves" entered in among the church, "speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." (Acts 20: 29, 30.) Right in the church were ministers, supposedly of Christ, who were ready to aid and encourage the false, deceptive prophets in their wicked work of corrupting the pure gospel faith, and pushing it into obscurity; and so they divided the flock, and led the saints away after them, as Paul predicted. (2 Peter 2: 1.)

To set aside the principles of the gospel, wherein the saints should have stood (1 Cor. 15: 1; Eph. 6: 15; Rev. 12: 1), and substitute in its stead human dogmas, was to remove the pillars of faith on which the church was originally established, and open the way for changes in its organization. This was done in those centuries. Prophets announced it beforehand; and subsequent history records the unerring fulfillment of their statements. The existence of so many varied and conflicting theologies all join in testimony to its verity. Indeed it is because of this great apostasy from God that then took place that they exist at all. And they have to fight the gospel that Jesus and Paul preached, or cautiously avoid it, and keep their adherents in sweet and blissful ignorance of it, to exist at all! The more immediate result of that move in the centuries mentioned, that followed the remodeling of faith, was the breaking of the gospel covenant, the "everlasting covenant," so called by Isaiah and Paul. (Isa. 24: 5, 6; Heb. 13: 20.) And having broken the covenant of God, and forfeited all right to his aid, and the guidance of the Holy Spirit, they sought the help of earthly power, "and the earth helped the woman," or church. (Rev. 12: 16.) And they, like ancient Israel, when desiring an earthly king, forsook the Lord, and formed an alliance with the kings of the earth. The wings of a great eagle, representing earthly power, were attached to the church, or woman. This was largely done by vesting the earthly chosen officers of the church with political prerogatives.

Of this period Mosheim, the historian, wrote:—

The face of things began now to change in the Christian Church. The ancient method of ecclesiastical government . . . by imperceptible steps, it varied from the primitive rule, and degenerated. . . . This change . . . was soon followed by a train of vices. . . . Bishop's assumed . . . a princely authority. . . . A throne, surrounded with ministers, exalted above his equals the servant of the meek and humble Jesus; and sumptuous garments dazzled the eyes and the minds of the multitude.

. . . Presbyters, who, neglecting the sacred duties of their station, abandoned themselves to the indolence and delicacy of an effeminate and luxurious life.—Part 3, third century, (Chap. 2: verses 3, 4.)

I have italicised some words of this quotation to direct attention thereto. Notice the change referred to by this writer, which he says occurred in the church, and its government, and its bishops, and elders.

These changes could have been permitted only under the deceptive idea that the law governing the church was changeable, or was abrogated, and other man-made laws had a right to usurp the place of the gospel. When men or any body of men step out from under the law and constitution, and refuse to be governed any longer by them, and seek other laws and government instead, men call such rebels. What are such when refusing God's laws and government? And will such be held guiltless by him?

These changes and this great move of those centuries resulted in the establishment of a great and quite universal union of church and state, of twelve hundred and sixty years' duration! The religious system was a mixture of heathen rites, foolish ceremonies, human dogmas or doctrines,—a slight sifting of Christianity in a greatly perverted form,—and predominating political domination, and a large measure of superstition and ignorance. It is represented to the Apostle John in his vision (Rev. 17: 1-6), under the allegory of a woman married to the kings of the earth, "seated on a scarlet colored beast full of names of blasphemy." The beast represents the Roman government, under what is called its Papal form. The woman represents the religious church form supported by the earthly government—beast. This union existed from about 540 A. D., to 1800 A. D.—1260 years. The woman's name is seen by the apostle, "Mystery, Babylon the Great [who is Babylon the less?], the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth."

That does not either look or sound like the name of "the Bride, the Lamb's wife," or the "kingdom of God," or, "of heaven," or, "the church of Jesus Christ." This woman is a church. She is an ecclesiastical organization. She is the mother of harlots. Are these harlot daughters churches too? A figurative woman cannot be the mother of literal women! Where are the harlot daughters, reader? As a religious professor, are you a member of one of this Babylonish family, or a member of the kingdom of God? Which? The family of Babylon is very richly and gorgeously arrayed with gold, pearls, scarlet, and precious stones. "A golden cup in her hand." The "hand" is the ministry; the golden cup is the bulls, decrees, catechisms, creeds, articles of religion, confessions and disciplines. And its contents—their contents—are the doctrines taught, or the wine drunk.

The cup was "full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication," and with it the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk." Infallibility of the Pope in his religious office, non-marriage of the ministry, sprinkling and pouring instead of baptism, the sprinkling or christening of little infants instead of the baptism of penitent believers, and the doctrine of selecting men to fill the various offices in the church by the clergy and the people, instead of being called of God direct by revelation; together with the putting of Popes, or presiding elders, or bishops at the head of or as the highest officers in the different church organizations; or that presbyters or elders are the chief class of the officers in the church, instead of,—first apostles, then prophets, then evangelists, then pastors or presbyters, bishops, teachers, and deacons,—as Paul says God arranged his church or kingdom on earth; all these, and many more doctrinal points, not here enumerated, are all traceable to that golden cup for their origin in this world, not to God's revelations. (See Matt. 16: 16-18; 1 Cor. 12: 28; Eph. 4: 8-14.) For all those doctrines we are indebted to the mother church and her daughter churches, and not to the Bible.

AN EARNEST AND SPECIAL REQUEST.
BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—Are you interested in the work being done by the Board of Publication? Do you believe the press to be a mighty power for good or evil in these days of rapid advancement along all lines of invention, thought, and action?

Have you noticed the recent reduction in the price of Autumn Leaves?

About the 20th of December our holiday number will be issued, and we do earnestly hope that each one who reads this, and can truthfully answer the above questions in the affirmative, will send ten cents for a copy of the holiday issue. The Board of Publication is making every effort to meet the emergency of the close times.

Are you willing to do your part?

Send for this number, and when you have carefully read its pages you will be prepared to answer as to whether you do or do not think the contents calculated to help the advancement of the truth. Then if honestly convinced that they are, is it not your duty to come to the help of the Board? What we need, and all that we need, is an earnest, united effort upon your part and the work is done.

The department of the Religio appeals especially to the young for support. Sr. Palfrey is doing her part nobly, and without other compensation than comes from the consciousness of work for a good cause faithfully and conscientiously done. How many of the young in the different locals are entering into her labors with the determination of helping to increase the circulation of the magazine, and by so doing enlarge the sphere of its usefulness.

The department of Current History is of interest to every believer in the latter-day gospel, and its value to the young in helping them to see clearly the lines between moral right and wrong in a period of time when such lines in many cases are almost obliterated, and in others very faintly defined, is simply untold.

During the coming year, Bro. Hilliard has promised to contribute occasional articles in furtherance of the inspired and inspiring work which he is now in his official capacity presenting to the church. They will be written especially for the Leaves, and will not appear in other church publications. And the articles of Alexander H. Smith, embracing many of his experiences in the ministry, will also be continued; while the chapters of Beatrice Witherspoon become more deeply interesting with each added one.

Think of it, saints, and answer if you can afford to miss all this when it may be obtained for one dollar? Other features of the magazine, which because of their intrinsic value, appeal strongly to the saints for support, we will notice at another time, when those who are not now subscribers shall have granted our earnest request to send ten cents to Bro. Frank Criley for the January number, or one dollar ($1.00) for a year's subscription.

A XMAS GIFT FOR ONE DOLLAR

APPROPRIATE ALIKE FOR ONE OR ALL.
 A broad statement this, but one that is borne out by the facts. Not only can you make such a present on such terms, but in doing so you will be giving something that will remain a source of delight and instruction to its fortunate owner for years to come. We have decided to extend through the holiday season our remarkable introductory offer on the great in ten large handsome volumes, over 5,000 pages and 3,000 illustrations, which has recently been completed after years of preparation and the expenditure of vast sums of money. Our reason for this is that the sets sold in this manner will be the most effective advertising that we could give the regular subscription edition, which will be sold at $60.00 net.

Briefly, it is a gathering within the covers of one set of books of all that usually goes to make up the "reference corner" in any public or private collection of books.

Chief among the contents of the library stand the ENCYCLOPEDIA, ATLAS & DICTIONARY necessities in every home, office, or school in the land. But besides these, it includes Biographical Dictionary, Gazetteer of the United States, Dictionary of Technical Terms, and other indispensable requisites of a working reference library.

The Encyclopedia is in itself worth twice the price of the whole library. It is par excellence the book of reference for every man, woman or student to have at his or her elbow at all times for quick, ready reference. It is the latest, best, most concise, yet thorough and accurate encyclopedia extant, and the only one in existence that is brought down to September, 1897. It is edited by John Clark Ridpath, LL.D. It includes comprehensive and reliable articles on The Cuban Rebellion, Klondike Gold Fields, Moving Photography, and other topics of live interest to-day. In all, nearly 100,000 topics are treated, and these are magnificently illustrated with thousands of engravings, colored maps and charts.

The Atlas comprises a handsome series of maps and charts, brought down to date; 100 colored and 200 in monotype, which, for convenience sake, are scattered through the volumes of the Encyclopedia, according to their alphabetical arrangement. Also hundreds of diagrams, sketches, battle plans, portraits, etc.

The Dictionary is the work of the ripest linguists of modern times. It is an unabridged, etymological, pronouncing, literary, scientific and technical Dictionary of the English language, and is an acknowledged authority both in England and America. The regular price of this great king of books is $24.00. It comprises nearly 3,000 closely printed columns of words and definitions.

OUR GREAT INTRODUCTORY OFFER.

For advertising purposes merely, and to introduce this grand work to the public, we have decided to place a few sets in each community at about one-third of the subscription price, and deliver the set complete

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

GOING BACK TO CHRIST.

A NEW and broad arena for the discussion of the theological questions of the day has been opened in The American Journal of Theology, a quarterly issued by the University of Chicago press. In the first number of this periodical, just issued, announcement is made that "writers upon all theological subjects and of every school of theological opinion will receive a welcome." One definite limitation, however, is laid down, and that is that contributed articles to be acceptable must recognize the necessity of applying scientific methods to the discussion of theological questions. Among the contributors to the first number are Professor Bruce, of the Free Church College, Glasgow, who writes on "Theological Agnosticism"; Prof. Charles A. Briggs, who discusses "The Scope of Theology and Its Place in the University"; and President Strong, of Rochester Theological Seminary, who reviews "Recent Tendencies in Theological Thought." Other contributions are from Prof. Casper Rene Gregory, of Leipsic, and Professor Menzies, of St. Andrew's, Scotland.

President Strong's article on the drift of theological thought at the present time is of special interest because of its indorsement of the progressive school of thinkers and its general tone of confidence and hopefulness for the immediate future of Christianity. Current theology for the last twenty years in Germany, and now in this country, it is said, has for its watchword "Back to Christ," and the main purpose of the article is to vindicate the truth of that phrase. Dr. Strong writes:—

"I, too, would go back to Christ, but in a larger and deeper sense than the phrase commonly bears. I would go back to Christ, as to that which is original in thought, archetypal in creation, immanent in history; to the logos of God, who is not only the omniscient Reason, but also the personal Conscience and Will, at the heart of the universe. . . . I would go back to Christ, but I would carry with me and would lay at his feet all the new knowledge of his greatness which philosophy and history have given. I would reach the true Christ, not by a process of exclusion, but by a process of inclusion. And this I claim to be an application of the methods of science, when science possesses herself of all accessible facts and uses all her means of knowledge.

"We must judge beginnings by endings, and not endings by beginnings. Evolution only shows what was the nature of the involution that went before. Nothing can come out that was not, at least latently, in the germ. I must interpret the acorn by the oak, not the oak by the acorn. Only as I know the glory and strength of the mighty tree can I appreciate the meaning and value of the nut from which it sprang. 'We can understand the ameba and the polyp,' says Lewes, 'only by a light reflected from the study of man.' It is only an application of this method of interpreting the germ by what comes out of it, when Christian faith sees in Christ the source of the whole modern movement toward truth and righteousness, makes his historic appearance upon earth the beginning of a spiritual kingdom of God, and so recognizes him as divine Wisdom and Love incarnate. I would go back to Christ; but I would let nature and humanity and the church tell the true nature of him from whom they all derived their being and in whom they all consist."

Dr. Strong then proceeds to unfold the thought that if we accept the story of Christ's life on earth as told by the Evangelists, a going back to Christ must be a going back to a being of supernatural power, a being whose mission was not so much moral teaching as it was the dying for men's sins. This view of Christ is affirmed also by the later gospel writers, and especially by Paul, who asserted Christ's resurrection as an indubitable fact—the one fact indeed upon which Christianity itself is based. We cannot, it is declared, strip Christ of the supernatural and dogmatic elements with which he clothed himself, and with which Paul and John clothed him, without depriving Christianity of its very essence and leaving it without authority and efficacy. Of those who seek to do this, it is said:—

"They give us simple law instead of gospel, and summon us before a tribunal that damns us. To degrade doctrine by exalting precept is to leave men without the motive or the power to obey the precept. The Alexandrian philosophy enabled Paul and John to interpret Christ better than this—it enabled them to see in him the life of God, and so the life of man. Not only the Alexandrian philosophy, but all subsequent philosophy—yes, all science, all history, all art—has its part to play in enlarging and classifying our conceptions of him. And so we come to our proper task. Let us go back to Christ, with the new understanding of him which modern thought has given us. We propose to go back from deism to Christ the life of nature; from atomism to Christ the life of humanity; from externalism to Christ the life of the church."

Dr. Strong sees a growing recognition in the thought of the time of Christ as the life of nature, and he thinks that this will lead finally to a complete accord between theology and science. Proceeding on this point he says:—

"Theology tells us the why, science tells us the how. We need have no fear of evolution, for evolution is only the common method of Christ, a method, however, which does not fetter him, because his immanence in nature is qualified by his transcendence above nature. Immanence alone would be Christ imprisoned, as transcendence alone would be Christ banished. Reason and faith are not antagonistic to each other."

Dr. Strong's hopeful and optimistic view of the theological situation is thus emphasized in his closing paragraph:—

"He who goes back to Christ as the life and power of God can have no doubt as to the issue of the struggle between good and evil, truth and error, for the secrets of all hearts are known to Christ, and he is the omnipotent force that works for good in human history. The solid globe is in his grasp, and when our prayer touches the hand that upholds the western hemisphere, the other can instantaneously answer that prayer in India or in Japan."—Literary Digest, Nov. 27, 1897.

CELEBRATING THE WESTMINSTER STANDARDS.

In accordance with the recommendation of their General Assemblies, North and South, the Presbyterian churches throughout the country have recently been celebrating the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the completion of the Westminster Standards. In an editorial commenting on this celebration The Christian Advocate (Methodist Episcopal, New York) says:—

"Neither the Confession, the Catechisms, nor the Standards are accepted literally by modern Presbyterians, and the churches would be utterly broken to pieces if they were made a condition of membership. While various attempts have been made to revise, and these have failed, it has been noticeable that no speaker opposing revision has declared his allegiance to the whole of them. As compared with sentiment, even in Scotland, the celebration will emphasize the fact of a most wondrous change. Less than one hundred years ago Presbyterian preaching was doctrinal, uncompromising, and the awful doctrine of reprobation was boldly avowed and forced upon the understandings of men; and a refusal to accept it was considered an outbreak of the total depravity of the human heart.

"To-day one may travel for years from Calvinistic church to Calvinistic church without hearing, either in city or country, one discourse, that has been composed within thirty years, which could be called an uncompromising indorsement of the statements of these Standards. Nevertheless, there is abundant material for impressive addresses on such an occasion, and the history of Presbyterianism has been glorious in every field in which a church can effect the development of civilization, even though a renaissance of the Standards is impossible."

In a brief note, Christian Work (un-denominational) has this comment to make on the same subject:—

"The very quiet manner in which the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the completion of the Westminster Confession has been celebrated in several localities is as significant as the mere fact of the commemoration itself. In fact, it emphasizes more its historic than its religious aspect. And then it is undeniable that the Confession has ceased to be preached from the pulpits of the country as it once was two and a half centuries ago. Then what has been called 'the Pauline theology' dominated all Protestant Christianity. But the Episcopal Church has given it up, while the Methodists, who went out from that body, never had it. This may not be subject for deep regret so long as a life-saving gospel is preached."—Literary Digest, Nov. 27.

Under the caption of "The National Government and the Public Health" is presented a timely and important symposium contributed to by Dr. John H. Girdner, Dr. Alvah H. Doty, Health Officer of the Port of New York, and Dr. C. M. Drake, Chief Surgeon of the Southern Railway Company. In the opinion of these eminent practitioners, the protection of the public health of this country against the danger and annoyance from infectious disease, both at the coast and in the interior, requires the establishment and maintenance of a National Bureau of Health. Among the short articles in the North American Review for December are: "The Legality of Progressive Taxation," by Max West; "How to Reform our Financial System," by C. B. Farwell, and "Advantages of Hawaiian Annexation," by A. C. James.

PRES. JOSEPH SMITH AT PITTSBURG.

IN last week's issue of the HERALD reference was made to the favorable newspaper articles which appeared in connection with President Smith's visit to the Iron City. We give herewith such press notices as have been sent us. The first is from the Sunday Leader of November 28; the second is from a Pittsburg paper, name unknown; the third is from the Willoughby, Ohio, Independent, of December 3. Willoughby is a few miles from Kirtland, the birthplace of President Smith and an important point in the history of the church. All these press notices indicate the friendly influences for good that are moving in behalf of the Reorganized Church in its work of promulgating the truth:—

A MORMON APOSTLE.

JOSEPH SMITH, THE HEAD OF THE CHURCH, HERE.

He is the Son and Successor of the Noted Founder of this Modern Sect—He Contends Brigham Young was a Usurper and Perverter of the Original Tenets of the Church.

Joseph Smith, the head of the Mormon Church, is in Pittsburg. He has been here a week, but so unostentatious has been his coming that his presence had not become generally known only among his followers in this locality.

He is stopping with a family of the name of Smith, but no relatives, at No. 807 Locust Street, this city, where a Leader reporter visited him last evening.

Mr. Smith's official position is president of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which is the title used to distinguish it from the Brigham Young church, which Mr. Smith designates as a corrupted branch of the original Mormon faith.

He is the son and successor of Joseph Smith, the founder of the Mormon Church, and contends that the tenets of the faith differ radically from that practiced by the followers of Brigham Young. Principal among these differences is the discountenancing of polygamy, which Mr. Smith says was never taught by the church, and was a later institution of Young and his associates. Mr. Smith's father with a brother, Hyrum, were killed by a mob at Carthage, Hancock County, Illinois, on June 27, 1844. They had been arrested and were awaiting trial on a charge of treason in connection with their teaching the new faith, when they were seized by the mob and put to death. Mr. Smith looks upon this killing as a martyrdom. He says the governor of Illinois was at Nauvoo, in Hancock County, only eighteen miles distant, when the outbreak occurred at Carthage, and was counseling the people against violence as the entire State was worked up to a state of frenzy against the promulgation of the new sect.

Mr. Smith was chosen to succeed his father as head of the church in 1860, at a General Conference held at Amboy, Lee County, Illinois. He has since occupied that position, and as such is looked upon by his followers as the apostle of the church.

Although the church organization is not as large as the Brigham Young branch, Mr. Smith says it is more general in extent. It has a membership of 45,000 communicants, with a general membership, which embraces children, of about 60,000. These are scattered all over the United States and Canada, but the strongest following is throughout Iowa and Missouri. There are five branches embraced in the Pittsburg district, which represents 187 communicants. The church organization is of the primitive faith, consisting of a division of twelve apostles and seventy teachers, with corresponding subdivisions. Each church directs its own local affairs, but is dependent upon the central body for spiritual direction. An epitome of the belief held by the followers is contained in the following brief summary of doctrine:—

[Here follows the Epitome of Faith.]

In referring to the question of plurality of wives, as formerly practiced by the Mormons of Utah, Mr. Smith said: "This was never taught by the original Mormons, and was discountenanced by my father, who was the founder of Mermonism. It was not until August 29, 1852, that this was first promulgated by Young, after he had assumed the presidency of the church in December, 1847. After the killing of my father and uncle at Carthage, Illinois, in 1844, no successor was elected to him as head of the church. In the spring of 1846 the feeling against Mormonism became so strong that Young, with some of his followers, agreed to leave the State, and pushed into the west. In July of 1847, they reached the valley of Salt Lake, where they established themselves, and in December following Young assumed the presidency of the church without any legal authority from the general body for so doing. Although this following had gradually adopted polygamy, it was not publicly promulgated until 1852 by Young, and received by his followers.

"The church discipline relating to the marriage state was never changed from the original foundation on August 17, 1835, until Young, without any action of the church, took it upon himself to eliminate this entire section."

Mr. Smith exhibited a copy of the book of discipline, which contained the clause relating to this question, and is known as section 111, and reads as follows:—

[Here follows the article on marriage.]

Mr. Smith stated this was the requirement under the original discipline, and the one that is followed by the members of his church. Although a law has been passed by the general government against polygamy and it has apparently been observed by the Mormons of Utah since 1871, Mr. Smith asserted that it was his belief it was still secretly practiced there. His belief for this was that as the marriage ceremony of the Mormons of Utah was performed secretly it was very easy for them to carry out this system of their belief.

Mr. Smith's present mission in coming to Pittsburg is for the purpose of reviving the faith of the old followers of the sect throughout this section. He says there were a number of followers of the original band of Mormons who remained behind in this section of the country, and it is his intention to look them up and organize them. He says there are a few living in Fayette and nearby places. He could not say how long he intends to remain in these parts. His headquarters are at Lamoni, Iowa, where he edits the Saints' Herald, which is the representative publication of the church organization. He is a man of patriarchal appearance, with a flowing gray beard and hair almost snowy white. He is about five feet eight inches in height and of commanding presence. He is slow but deliberate of speech and when once started in conversation becomes very animated. His visit here, owing to the important position he occupies in the church, is looked upon as an honored event by his followers.

He will direct the church services to be held to-day in the hall at 67 Fourth Avenue. The services will be held at 10:45 this morning (Sunday) and 7:30 this evening.

MORMON ELDER'S VISIT.

Joseph Smith, Head of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Elder Joseph Smith, of Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa, president of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and eldest son of Joseph Smith, the original "Mormon prophet," yesterday addressed the Pittsburg branch of this body twice in the hall at 67 Fourth Avenue. Mr. Smith said last night that he was in Pittsburg "incidentally" while on his way from Canada on a business trip to Washington, D. C., and Richmond, Virginia, for which points he will leave to-day. He has been in Canada on a missionary and evangelistic tour.

"The Reorganized Church of Mormons differs from the Utah Mormons," he said, "mainly in that we do not believe in polygamy, we do not accept the teachings or revelations given out by Brigham Young, and we are opposed to the whole Utah philosophy. We are aggressive propagandists, and number about 45,000 members in the United States, mostly in Iowa and Missouri, over 5,000 being the increase last year. In Pittsburg there are 168 members of the branch under Elder G. H. Hulmes."

It is noticed by Pittsburg papers of Monday that President Joseph Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa, preached in that city last Sunday, taking for his subject, "The church, and what it believed." Mr. Smith has been in Canada, and is making a tour of the country in the interest of his church. He is expected to spend some time with the brethren at Kirtland before returning home.

MORMON CHURCH TREACHERY.

LEADERS IN A POLITICAL FIGHT AGAINST DESPITE RECENT PROMISES—PRACTICE OF POLYGAMY.

SALT LAKE, Utah, Dec. 4.—[Special.]—James Charles Bowen, a member of one of the teachers' quorums of the Mormon Church, has been disfellowshipped because at the recent school election he worked for E. B. Critchlow, a non-Mormon, and against Charles W. Symons, a Mormon.

The action of the quorum has aroused much indignation, not only among the non-Mormon population, but also among the more liberal-minded Mormons, who believed that when the late manifesto was issued, the principal theme of which was that the Mormon Church was out of politics, it meant what it said. For a year or more past, however, there have been indications of treachery on the part of high officials in the Mormon Church. This was apparent at the late city election, and the recent action has clinched the belief with many who hesitated long ere they arrived at that conclusion. The Salt Lake Tribune, once a bitter foe, but latterly very friendly toward the Mormon Church, referring to the matter, says:—

"Utah is never going to be a slave State. That question was decided in 1865, so far as the bodies of men are concerned, and that kind of slavery is not half as degrading as the slavery of the soul."

It now but remains to see what action will be taken by the high officials of the Mormon Church. Unless an order to reinstate Bowen be issued the idea that the Mormon Church is still in the saddle politically, as well as spiritually, will be generally accepted by those who wish to believe otherwise.

That any polygamous marriages have taken place since the issuance of the manifesto cannot be proven, but that at least a thousand polygamous wives have given birth to children within the last year is beyond question.

The foregoing telegram is from the Chicago Tribune of Sunday, December 5. It is reprinted as showing how some are compelled to regard the affirmations, protestations, and policy of the Utah Church concerning the subjects referred to.

The Deseret News, official organ of the Utah Church, has used a large amount of its space in making explanations of official statements made by President Woodruff and other leading men of the church, who had given a considerable amount of counsel upon political matters at the late General Conference of that church. George Q. Cannon, one of the Utah Presidency and Editor of the Juvenile Instructor, has also given the political situation some attention through the editorial columns of that publication. One other Utah paper, to our knowledge has also had something to say on the subject.

The elections resulted favorably to Mormon candidates, creating a strong suspicion in the minds of many in Utah and in the States that the attitude of the church was still one of activity in political matters, as in days past before Statehood was secured.

The attitude of the church in the case of Moses Thatcher, candidate for the United States senatorship, and in other instances, has strengthened the opinion of many, who in harmony with the statements of the article given above, have been obliged to conclude that the church still adhered to the practice of influencing the trend of political matters.

The statement concerning polygamous practices will be noted as significant. Some in position to know have averred that plural wives continued to present their liege lords with offspring, as of yore. As has been stated, it is impossible, or nearly so, to ascertain if polygamous marriages are still celebrated, inasmuch as when such ceremonies were performed, they were performed in secret. But whether celebrated or not, it seems manifest that the practice of polygamy is by no means abandoned by some plurally married before issuance of President Woodruff's so-called manifesto.

NOT DEAD.

SAYS POLYGAMY IS NOT DEAD.

MORMON AGENT MAKES AN INTERESTING STATEMENT NEAR BOSTON.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 17.—The Rev. Charles R. Bliss, financial agent of Salt Lake College, Utah, spoke in Franklin Street Congregational Church, Somerville, on the "Present Attitude of Mormonism." He said:—

"The American people misconceive the nature and underrate the power of Mormonism. The position taken by many that polygamy is dead is not true. It is still practiced by many prominent people in the church, and is generally accepted by the Mormon people as true in doctrine."

The foregoing was cut by us from a Toronto, Canada, paper, and is evidently making the rounds of the press, and is having its effect.

We believe from experience that there is among nearly all those who report for the press locally, or as a business, a disposition to seek for and chronicle whatever promises anything like sensationalism, and sometimes grossly exaggerate and misrepresent men and bodies of men that may be written of; yet, when from so many sources items like the above find their way into print, we can but think that the men who are representing Utah Mormonism are either very careless in statement, are very easily misunderstood, or there really has been no honest abandonment of the practice of plural marriage in Utah.

The protestations made by all leading Mormon speakers during the political campaign which ended in Utah becoming a State, were calculated to make the impression on the public mind that there was a genuine intention on the part of the church in Utah to conform to the laws of the United States and abandon a practice that had so long been a bone of contention and a serious objection to Utah becoming a State in the union of States. If the statement of Rev. Bliss is correct, then there is a sufficiently open practice of plural marriage in Utah to be known to those not in the church, which would indicate that leading men in the prominent circles of the church who were either not in earnest in promising the American public that the practice would be abandoned, or they are openly disregarding the pledges made and are violators of the laws.

No people can expect to secure and retain the confidence of the public who do not keep their pledges made to the public when asking favors; or who systematically violate the faith reposed in them. Because of this, if leading men in the Utah Church are still practicing plural marriage, or living in family relations not in accordance with the monogamic institutions of the country, there is grave reason to doubt the sincerity of those men when making the plea for admission and asking the people to have confidence in their protestations of loyalty to the country. We regret to think the statement to be true, notwithstanding the fact that we as individuals, and our people as a church, are at open hostility to the Utah Church on the subject of plural or polygamous marriage as a church dogma, and the questions of theory, practice, and organization in church succession and government. Whether they will give us the credit to believe this, or disbelieve, it is not the less true that we should very much prefer to have that people absolutely free from suspicion and blame in the matter stated by Rev. Bliss.

CUBA.

It is hard to think that President McKinley, now the "first gentleman" in the United States, should hesitate to give some sort of aid and countenance to the Cubans so gallantly fighting for the right of freedom from tyranny and oppression, to be extended to them in the hour of their greatest need. It would almost seem to be the proper thing to do, to recognize Cuban independence and then find the way to do it afterwards. When the American colonies were struggling against the huge odds brought to bear upon them, France gave us recognition, and from Frenchmen we received substantial aid, not the least of which was the moral prestige to be obtained by recognition itself. It is a poor recompense to the spirit of liberty for the Republic to now hold back when the same principles are at stake as were the prize for which the Revolution was fought out to the end.

The Cubans ought never to accept autonomy in any form under Spanish rule. They have struck for independence and life, state life, national life, and ought not to accept anything less. The conduct of Spain, its traditional and historical policy, its institutions, its government all warn the struggling heroes not to trust the promises made by a proverbially treacherous nation. Had it not been for the treacherous treatment of a crowned head, Cuba had been free within a quarter of a century after the American Republic became a fact. No crowned head is to be trusted in conditions like those under which Cuba is struggling for her freedom. Cuba Free, may well be the Cuban watch cry. Cuba Free, should be every patriot's wish and prayer.

Let it be open to hope that no paltry commercial policy, or supposed possible loss of a few millions of dollars to American merchants, bankers, or speculative syndicate shall be permitted to dictate the course to be pursued in the settlement of a question of such probable import to the world, as the success or failure of the Cuban effort for freedom is, and must be.

It has been said of them that they are not qualified to rightly govern themselves if they were free. Perhaps not. But we do not believe the suggestion. Not until the experiment had been tried did it dawn on the old world that the colonies could govern themselves. Not until the Cubans have been allowed to try the experiment of self government is it just to say they cannot. There may be some failures; but there follows after the long fight to be free a new spirit and sense of manhood, which enriches the soul of the freeman, and gives him a new fitness for citizenship, and under the ægis of liberty men take on new elements of statesmanship that enable a downtrodden race to rise to the conditions of self government easily and successfully. Besides this, if the United States were but once to drop the hindering bars now preventing the outburst of American love for freedom and sympathy for the oppressed, there would flow into that island such a host of freemen willing and able to spend money and life for the establishment of the principles at stake that freedom for Cuba won, would furnish valuable aid in political government in numbers who would remain, help develop, and grow up with the reconstructed country. Sadly as the country must now be wasted by the cowardly, cruel methods of a military despot to overcome by doubtful and brutal measures where he failed to conquer in open warfare, twenty-five years of peaceful independence would present a splendid instance of rehabilitation, both in an established government and a physically redeemed land. The wonderfully productive elements of earth, and air, in that land of almost fabled fertility would cover its now devastated fields with smiling plenty; none but the spots where men fell fighting for their rights, or the places where the innocent victims of a tyrant Governor General lie in heaped and unconsecrated graves would remain as marks which would identify the land and the period where and when Freedom fought and won again the victory over cruelty, superstition, wrong, and oppression. As a patriot we sympathize with and have hope for Cuba.

THE HERALD editors receive quite a number of newspaper articles containing false statements concerning the church and its faith, which they are requested to correct. It is impossible for them to prepare replies for all such matter, either for publication in the secular press or in the HERALD. It is right, of course, to seek correction through the publications issuing such matter; but the editors lack the time necessary to correct all such sensational statements. Competent brethren in the fields or in the local work in localities where such items appear can often find opportunity to refute such misrepresentations, when they deem it necessary to do so. We say "competent" brethren, for the reason that we believe such work should be done, as in public discussions, by those called and qualified to advocate and vindicate the work. Occasionally it may be necessary to answer such matter through the HERALD; but not often. It is often a burden to our readers, as it must include reproduction of stale falsehoods that have been answered repeatedly, in order to refute them. We believe such matter ought to be corrected whenever possible, but where it cannot be done by direct reply,—through the paper publishing,—it will be done in time through the growth of the work, by the influence for truth it is exerting and which it is destined to exert more widely. Saints grounded in the truth will not be moved by falsehood. Others lacking experience in the work may be disturbed to a degree by such matter, but with a little reflection will discern the spirit actuating the writers and the manifest incorrectness of their statements, or both. All, we know, desire vindication of the truth. Send us the items as they appear and we will make such mention as seems necessary.

THE INDIANS.

FROM the November, 1897, report of Secretary Bliss of the Interior Department:—

The total Indian population of the United States, exclusive of the New York Indians and the five civilized tribes, approximates 177,178, located on 177 reservations, which contain approximately 33,404,837 acres. Of these 4,545 have accepted allotments of land which aggregate about 644,147 acres. . . .

No government for the Indian Territory will be satisfactory until Congress shall provide for the establishment of a single uniform system for the entire Indian Territory that shall place all its inhabitants in possession of the rights of American citizens.

TITHES.

IT IS the office work of the Spirit of truth to direct, admonish, move upon, and lead the disciple into all truth. It may direct him to avoid temptation, to be prompt in church attendance, to pray vocally and in secret, or, it may admonish him to pay his tithing, that while he may be in position to rejoice in the truth, the message through the preaching of the elders may also be extended to others. To none of the things enumerated should the follower of Christ be indifferent or disobedient. It is just as necessary to pay tithing as to pray, to speak in the social meeting, or to attend church service of any kind. Some lines of duty affect the individual only; others are farther-reaching and affect others, showing that the spirit of the gospel is designed to make all who receive it coworkers for good in behalf of personal salvation and the redemption of man universal. It may be easier to pray than to pay; nevertheless, both lines of effort are essential to the prosecution of the work of God. Some are praying without paying, but the spirit of the gospel requires both. If all prayed and none obeyed the temporal law, the work would come to a standstill. It moves in proportion to the willingness of God's people — his agents—in doing their part. Will not prayer be more effectual if accompanied by active obedience to all demands of the law? It evidently will, for the Lord has said concerning the payment of tithes, "Try me, and prove me herewith"; that is, in effect, pay your tithes and see the manifest results in blessings that shall follow. We suggest that we all pray, attend church, and pay to the Lord the reasonable and just proportion of our temporal means, that the demands for service and the necessities of the elders' families be supplied. It is written that "the willing and obedient" shall receive the rich blessings of God; also that, "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." Those who have the work at heart are "anxiously engaged in a good cause."

THE Advocate of Peace, a publication of the American Peace Society, in its December number urges that pastors and churches cooperate to observe Sunday, December 19, as "Peace Sunday." It says:—

We appeal to all our friends everywhere . . . to call the attention of pastors to the subject and try to secure the preaching of sermons on peace and arbitration. . . . The forces which make for discord and war were never more restless and aggressive than now.

THE Western Passenger Association authorities have sent us printed matter in evidence of what is being done by representative railway men, manufacturers, and merchants to secure the passage of anti-scalping laws by the various State Legislatures and the Congress of the United States. No less an organization than The National Merchants' and Travelers' Association, with a membership of 60,000, scattered mainly throughout the West, is heartily cooperating with authorities of land and water transportation lines to suppress the evil. The Chicago Times-Herald and other prominent dailies are supporting the movement. Its published articles include long lists of business firms who have joined in this moral crusade against illegitimate and unprincipled methods that have become so glaring in the business carried on by many ticket scalpers. The scalping evil has therefore been attacked by the very parties it has claimed to directly and peculiarly benefit. Railroads have their rights in common with other business organizations and public servants. It is no less a crime to deal unfairly with them than with an individual. Wise anti-scalping legislation is needed among other reforms.

"MORMONISM IN AUSTRALIA."

BRO. GOMER R. WELLS has found it necessary, in common with his brethren in other mission fields, to call public attention to the diverse character of the Reorganized and Utah churches, in the prosecution of his work:—

MORMONS IN AUSTRALIA.

To the Editor of the Evening News, Sir:—I read with interest in one of your recent issues a statement under the above caption. Permit me to point out that there are two separate and distinct bodies of Latter Day Saints: The one with headquarters in Utah, U. S. A. (commonly called Polygamous Mormons), and the other with headquarters in Iowa State, the very heart of America. The latter are known as "Reorganized" Latter Day Saints, and claim to be the original, true Latter Day Saintism. They set up the claim of being the first church in all Christendom which sent missionaries to Utah to convert the followers of Brigham Young from the error of their way. In the article above referred to it is remarked that "some of the Christian sects which at the present day deservedly claim general respect were originally associated with enthusiasts, whose zeal took the most extravagant and dangerous shapes." The Anabaptists are cited as an example, and the writer then suggests that Mormonism may experience a similar transformation.

It is interesting to know that the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints has been contending for the last twenty or more years that originally the church contained nothing "dangerous," though to other religionists it might have appeared "new" from a doctrinal standpoint. They claim as a fact that not until years after the organization of the church, and eight years after the death of Smith, was anything hurtful or frightful introduced—and then by Brigham Young, after he led a section away to Utah in the far west of America. The other section repudiated these innovations from the first, and moved right on upon the original principles; but for purposes of property and distinction in print they were compelled to prefix the term "Reorganized" to the name of the church. If your readers will turn to the "Government Gazette" New South Wales, also "Directory," they will see ministers' names registered under such a head.

A recent high court decision in matters of property in United States, America, sustains the contention made by the original or Reorganized Saints. The line of distinction is being recognized more generally throughout America, and the churches in Australia are hopeful that the facts will be more fully known here at no distant day. Representatives of both churches are now in Australia; but the Brighamites peremptorily refuse to meet the representatives of the Reorganized Church in debate upon the points at issue, which is very suggestive. There seems to be a movement back towards original Mormonism by the apostate section in Utah. The writer met three missionaries from Utah lately, and they stated they were not willing to defend Brighamism. The Reorganized Church claim some credit in having brought about this change of policy. This body claims a membership of over five hundred in New South Wales and Victoria. They have several chapels in Sydney and Newcastle,—and claim that they are here to stay. Yours, etc.,

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. W. J. SMITH, Detroit, Michigan, December 1:—

A Mr. Small is publishing a book giving an account of the various religious denominations of the United States, and I have been corresponding with him for some time, and think I will succeed in getting a proper statement of our faith in his book. He has ordered a copy of the Book of Mormon. I have been in Cincinnati for about three weeks and think my work there was productive of good in that I have succeeded in heading off the work of the Utah Mormon missionaries. A number who were almost persuaded to enter their ranks now turn from them in disgust because of their belief in polygamy; their doctrine that Adam is God; blood atonement; Utah Zion; etc., etc.; all of which they kept in the dark and evaded answering when interrogated concerning them, until I exposed them publicly. At the close of my lecture some said: "Well, I am done with Utah Mormonism." These people are now investigating the claims of the Reorganization, and I think, in time, a good work may be done in Cincinnati with proper effort. In conversation with Elder Davis, missionary in charge of the Utah Mormon mission there, he said to me when pressed by statements in "the books," "I don't care what the books say; I have received a testimony of our work." Of course I called attention to the fact that the disciples of Prince Mike or G. J. Schweinfurth had also testified to having received "testimony" to the truthfulness of their claims, but that testimony which was not in harmony with the law was to be rejected. "If they speak not according to this word," said testimony is not to be relied upon. The elder became indignant when I pressed him with the above rule. Two of the Mormon elders listened to my lecture on Mormonism the 21st inst., but made no attempt to controvert my arguments while in my presence, but afterwards, I learn, they called it merely "slinging mud."

I expect to remain home for a short time, as I am not well, my nerves being in such a condition that I am able to sleep but very little, and hence need some rest. Bro. and Sr. Riggs were very kind to me while there, and are ever willing to aid in getting the work before the people. They have my kindest regards for assistance furnished me while there.

Bro. William Newton, Santa Rosa, California, November 29:—

I have just returned from Modoc County, Big Valley, where I have been laboring for the last ten weeks with Bro. Barmore. We have got the Mountain Home branch in good working order. I baptized seven while there.

Bro. Peter Petersen, of Nubel, Grawenstein, Slesvig, North Germany, writes November 10, concerning a Scandinavian tract he has written and has on sale:—

I do hereby inform the Scandinavian people in our church that for twenty cents in stamps I will send my tract, "God answers prayer."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. B. S. SHOUP, of Eldon, Iowa, writes of blessings received by manifestations of the Spirit in the church by which he has been strengthened and confirmed in the truth. As a physician he commends to the saints an observance of the Word of Wisdom, by obeying which he has been blessed in body and in mind. Bro. Shoup expresses both in word and by remittance of means for the church his love for the cause.

The Harrison County News of the 3d, published at Missouri Valley, Iowa, calls attention to the work of the Reorganized Church in its opposition to the policies of the Utah organization.

The Editors acknowledge receipt of various newspapers and clippings, of value in connection with the history of passing events and developments, of interest to those who note the signs and incidents of the age. Marked copies of articles helpful in the general work are always acceptable.

Sr. Nettie Martyn, Byrneville, Indiana, writes of her conversion to the truth, from another faith in which she had been traditioned. She enjoys the privileges and blessings of the gospel and has been confirmed by manifestations of the Spirit of light.

Bro. F. M. Slover writes of his labors at Kibbie, Illinois, December 1, where he found it necessary to defend the work, including the character of Joseph Smith the Martyr, against work being done by Utah elders. As usual the latter declined to enter upon a public investigation of questions involved.

The Gospel Trumpet, published at Grand Junction, Michigan, in its issue for November 4, contains an article on Mormonism, in which the faith is attacked, from a doctrinal standpoint, in a unique way. Could not some of our Michigan representatives secure insertion of a correction in reply? The Gospel Trumpet, we notice, is trumping up "another" gospel and giving an "uncertain sound."

Word from Englishville, Michigan, through Bro. F. E. Wood, December 5, describes the efforts of saints there to contend for the faith against opposition from a traveling "evangelist," so-called, and his friends. The people, those among them willing to see, were made acquainted with the faith and became friendly to it. Bro. J. M. Baggerly was preaching in a school-house near by. Bro. Wood relates a dream of a good colored brother who saw the letters "G. P.," and interpreted them to mean "Go preach;" but was nonplussed when told they might mean "Go plow." He thinks many of the passing evangelists might do well to rightly interpret their callings, inasmuch as they deny many plain gospel teachings of the Christ.

The late Sunday school association minutes of the Northern Michigan district gave the Boyne City school as 5 instead of 50. Please note that the school at Boyne is half a hundred strong in the good work.

Sr. Laura E. Fuller, an aged widow of a Union soldier, living fifteen miles south of Escanaba, Michigan, earnestly desires that some of the ministry labor in that region. Her address is, Ford River, Michigan, where she lives on about forty acres of land, which she wishes to sell, that she may move near saints and be comforted by them in her old age. Who could aid her in selling her property?

Receipt of letters is acknowledged from Bro. E. Wilsey, Wathena, Kansas; Sr. H. G. Nickerson, North Plymouth, Massachusetts, and others, all expressing confidence in the work and recounting the goodness of the Master. Sr. Nickerson pleads that sacrifice be made in the interest of the poor and the spreading of the gospel.

According to the Boston Post of the 21st ult., sent us by Bro. M. C. Fisher, that aristocratic center of wealth and culture has been surprised by "a Mormon invasion," Elder H. H. Kinsman with a corps of missionaries from Utah having opened mission headquarters for New England, in Howard Street, Cambridge. The same journal also gives an account of one "Professor Morrison," "Boston's Prophet," who claims that he has been anointed with the spirit of Elijah to interpret scripture; but, as the people do not appreciate free religious privileges, he asks the modest sum of $500,000 for his services as interpreter of difficult passages. The Modern Athens is having its share of religious attractions, and the usual confusion reigns, there as elsewhere.

A personal letter from Bro. J. W. Wight indicates that some of the Utah Church membership are becoming interested in the faith and claims of the Reorganized Church. He was hopeful of better opportunities for reaching the people; however, he had not yet heard from his challenge to that body, with reference to B. H. Roberts in particular, published in the Salt Lake Tribune and Herald.

Bro. Jacob Waltenbaugh writes of labor done in the Northeast Missouri district in company with Brn. William Summerfield, C. A. Brown, and others. There had been sufficient opposition to give life and tone to their efforts, causing some to investigate. Elder Briney, a former opponent, had lectured against the work at Higbee; local brethren looking after the matter. He requests prayer in behalf of Bro. Samuel Smith, who is sorely afflicted with paralysis.

A copy of "Evanelia Lost," a duet for soprano and tenor, words by J. Cole Moxon, music by W. H. Leib, and published by the Ensign Company, has been sent us. The number is issued in up to date form in every respect and is illustrated by a fine engraving of the Evanelia lying at anchor.

The Omaha Bee, of the 5th, contains a large illustrated supplement, a birds'-eye view of the Transmississippi Exposition, to open at Omaha, June 1, 1898. The number and dimensions of Government and State buildings and the general plan and scope of the Exposition indicate that its magnitude will be in keeping with the area and interests of the great West. Thanks to Bro. E. Rannie, Jr., for the paper.

A clipping from the New York World (date not given) describes the wonder-workings of one Professor D——, a so-called "God-gifted healer." The item avers that the person named has effected marvelous cures by the laying on of his hands "by means of the life-giving current of his magnetism." The article looks like an advertisement. However, what is claimed for such characters as the party named is by no means realized; some may receive a measure of relief at their hands, but quite often it is but momentary, or more imaginary than real. And, persons thought to be healed often have found themselves under an influence worse than the disease from which they suffered. In the kingdom of God faith and righteousness are prerequisites to spiritual blessings, and they are sure, beneficial, and bless in body and in mind. It is not so of the work of some of the so-called healers at least; and it is questionable if any of them do the afflicted a particle of good. That they do much harm is beyond successful question.

Pope Leo is said to be about to announce the transfer of the University of Washington from the propaganda or missionary control to the congregation of Studies, thus ranking the United States on a level with the Catholic countries of Europe.

The Italian ministry has resigned. The former Premier, the Marquis di Rudini, has been intrusted with the task of forming another ministry.

Another conspiracy in Guatemala is reported. Should we fail to make mention of all Central American uprisings the remainder should be taken for granted.

Pope Leo is in poor health.

The German government bill for increase of the navy caused a spirited discussion in the Reichstag among the opposing political elements. It is significant that one member denounced it as the "outcome of personal rule." The government urges the need of a large navy to act with the great powers and to protect the interests of the fatherland at home and abroad, but denies being moved by a policy of conquest.

A Berlin dispatch recounts the settlement of the Haytian affair: A German war vessel cleared for action in the harbor of Port au Prince; a diplomatic request for delay was refused and half an hour before the stipulated time expired the indemnity ($30,000) was presented; the Haytian government's letter of apology arrived shortly afterwards; the German flag was also saluted.

German marines and sailors with machine guns entered the city of Kiao-Chou, eighteen miles from the bay, and took possession of the city walls and gates, the Chinese troops retreating as the Germans advanced. The naval force is the largest ever sent by the German government beyond European waters.

French troops have occupied the capital of Borgu, West Africa, claimed by both France and Great Britain. The London St. James Gazette announces authoritatively that the government does not expect trouble with France regarding the Upper Nile regions, France having agreed to accept the situation.

Sofia, Dec. 7.—Alarming news comes from Macedonia. The Albanians are reported to be committing great excesses at Debra, Kitchoo, and surrounding districts. The local authorities are powerless. Wholesale persecutions and arrests of Bulgarians by Turks are also reported from the Bulgarian frontier. The news has caused great excitement.

Rioting continues unabated in the city of Bucharest; the mob is 20,000 strong. The German theaters are placed under military protection. Emperor William places the blame upon the city officials and says the disorder cannot longer be tolerated.

A German expedition on the west coast of Africa has been driven back by a warlike tribe, the "Mboulies." A German war ship with troops is enroute to reinforce an expedition being organized to punish the natives.

According to a Bombay dispatch the British punitive expedition in India will cease its military operations until spring.

Discussion of the celebrated Dreyfus case in the French Chamber of Deputies and Senate caused such excitement and demonstrations as to threaten the resignation of both the ministry and President Faure. Troops were stationed in the streets of Paris to preserve order. The ministry was finally sustained.

Vienna, Dec. 8.—It is expected Emperor Francis Joseph will shortly issue decrees prolonging for a year the status quo between Austria and Hungary regarding the sharing of imperial expenditure, budgetary, and other essential matters. The government is continuing the negotiations for a settlement of the language question. Owing to fears for the safety of the German members the meeting of the Bohemian diet was postponed.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 9.—Throughout Russian Asia there is general unrest among the Moslems. It is attributed to the exaggerated reports of the Turkish victory over the "great Greek empire" which have spread through the length and breadth of the continent. The authorities even fear that the revival of brigandage recently noticed in the Caucasus is directed almost solely against the government officials, and the unprecedented phenomenon of Georgians displaying hostility towards Armenians has become manifest. The danger is so serious that a conference of Caucasian Governors has been convoked to concert measures of pacification. Travelers in Central Asia report an extraordinary ferment among the Moslems of different races. They are sinking their mutual animosities and declaring that they are first of all Mohammedans, with the Sultan as their common chief. It is evident that the slightest pretext would suffice to bring about an uprising, and to plunge Russia into the same state of troubles as India.

The bubonic plague is adding to the miseries of the concentrados in Pinar Del Rio Province, Cuba. The editor of the Madrid El Heraldo is reported as stating that Cuban autonomy will fail. Spanish troops have been sent to portions of Spain where Carlist agitation is said to prevail. El Imarcial publishes a strong editorial criticising President McKinley's message and urging heavy expenditures in increasing the navy that Spain may be prepared to meet American interference in Cuba. Other papers publish articles similar in tenor. Spanish advices claim a slight victory over the forces of General Gomez in the Sancti Spiritus district. The Cubans are concentrating their forces for a formidable demonstration against the city of Havana. Madrid advices of the 9th report Premier Sagasta as stating that Spain will defend her honor should the United States interfere. The press continues to urge additional preparations to meet the American government's intervention. The insurgents have recently captured a Spanish fort, at Port Caimanero. The organ of the Italian government predicts American intervention should Spain fail to pacify Cuba, and states that European sentiment would justify such step.

The German war department has given orders for the immediate rearmament of all forts along the frontier of Russia. The expense will be enormous. The government regards it a matter of extreme urgency.

The New Castle, New South Wales, Herald, of October 23, sent us by Bro. Gomer R. Wells, contains an item from Hamilton, giving an account of the marriage of Bro. Wells to Sr. Adelaide M. Pascoe on Thursday, October 21; Elder John Kaler officiating, Elder C. A. Butterworth giving away the bride, in the absence of her father. The HERALD extends congratulations, and best wishes for the future happiness and usefulness of this worthy couple. Bro. Wells is the third American missionary to acknowledge and pay tribute to the worth and attractiveness of Australia's fair daughters; and the church has shared with them in the increased usefulness their choice has brought.

Original Poetry.

IN MEMORY OF SR. LUCY TERRY,

WHO DIED AT ADRIAN, ILLINOIS, SEPTEMBER 15, 1897.

O thou immortal spirit, mild and lovely,
So soon to paradise to pass away,
While yet the dawn of youth shone bright above thee
And flowers of promise bloomed auspiciously!
Among the saints on earth in deeds of kindness
Were passed thy golden summers, seventeen;

Now thou hast left this dreary realm of blindness,

And gone to reign with saints above, a queen.

To all you met your ways were kind and gracious;

You kept the faith through all the world's rough strife,

And now within those mansions, fair and spacious,

You'll find the crown of everlasting life.

Yet not alone will heaven's courts be gladdened

When your bright harp is heard;

Our hearts on earth will echo, sweetly saddened,

Each joyous, loving word.

Our Father, in our sadness we would thank thee

For gracious presence, though but briefly given,

Of one who by thy grace walked circumspectly,

And turned our hearts from earthly things to heaven.

O may her sacred memory ever bless us,

And teach us to be brave;

And lead us to the glories yet before us,

Beyond death's threat'ning wave!

Lord, let our sorrows tend to our refining,

And make us gentler with our fellow men;

For hearts are soon embittered by repining
And slothful brooding over grief and pain.

O God, unchanging, let thy gifts and blessings

Exalt thy trembling saints of latter days;

And may thy Spirit lighten grief's oppressions,

And cause each one to walk in wisdom's ways.

"Only a little longer let me stay,
For much remains undone,
Of victories, planned at break of day,
Few, few are won,
And now life's ardent noon fades fast away."

BRISTOL, England.

Dear Sisters:—I would very much like to have a little talk with many of the dear saints, relatives, and friends separated from me by the ocean's deep waters, so will ask you to grant me a little space, hoping I may be able to tell your readers something interesting.

In the first place, I feel to praise God for his goodness when I realize the number of blessings attending us ever since we left our home at Chicago. We met with a very zealous little band of kind-hearted saints near Niagara Falls, also at Philadelphia and Brooklyn, meeting with the saints at each place. Such large cities; plenty of room for our latter-day work, but where are the workers? Oh! I wish so much that the treasury was full, to send more laborers into these large cities; that suitable halls could be rented, that the people would come out to hear. I feel that I would like them to have a chance. The gospel is for the poor, I know, but if we could reach those in better circumstances and convince them we should be better able to take care of the poor. If we had nice, comfortable halls in the middle of the cities, and advertise lectures at first, I think we could get them to listen to the truth better in that way, with large congregations that would defray the expenses. But we need an able staff of elders and good singing. The sectarian churches have comfortable rooms, halls, or churches that really attract the people. Why should not we? even if we had to concentrate our forces in one city, and take a town at a time, lecturing and preaching until we get the people interested. Collections are expected to be taken up to pay for the expenses for hall, light, and fire.

I am deeply interested in the work here and have visited several of the branches in England and Wales with my beloved husband. I see so much room for improvement, so much work to be done, so much help and money needed to carry on this latter-day work. For the want of means little progress is made, therefore I am led to appeal to all our brothers and sisters in America, for I know they are just as anxious for the advancement and prosperity of the work everywhere as we are, and this plan has presented itself to me: That every Sunday school and all societies should have an English mission fund in every branch of the church. The very smallest donation would be gladly given by many, and very few would miss a penny per week, and it is a grand opportunity for all to help a great, good work here. England I know is considered a small place, a little island; but when you take into consideration its large cities with their vast populations, England seems to increase in size. London, so grand, so magnificent, with so many large, beautiful towns, such a large number of people! How much we regretted that we had not gathered out of that great mass of humanity more than about seventy to obey the gospel.

I have taken up a little work here and I earnestly hope it will be the means of doing good; that is, to organize aid societies on the American plan. I have bought material to make samples of work. I feel very much encouraged and think the saints will soon see the great benefit the aid society is to the branch. The Lydney branch commenced at once and remitted me by postal order 7s. 6d. to buy material for them at the lowest figure at the Bristol drapery stores. I have also an aid society of my own. I have bought material for fancy and useful articles; have made up some and sold them to buy more goods to make and sell again. The proceeds to help pay hall rent, to try what we can do at Bristol, where there is only one church member, and who I have not yet had the pleasure of meeting. I should rejoice so much for the work to be successful here. There is such a nice class of people at Bristol, room for a great good work.

I have met many good, kind-hearted people, and I have seen many lovely places, cities, towns, and villages; buildings grand and scenery most beautiful. To me the grassy fields are so fresh and beautifully green, and the hedges are kept in such beautiful order, nicely trimmed, and the roads are smooth and level. To ride on them or drive is very delightful, with the air so balmy, laden with fragrance from the pretty wild flowers in the hedges. A happy party of us, consisting of my husband and cousins, enjoyed all this one afternoon, with the addition of a beautiful sunset, the grandest I can ever remember. There is much to enjoy, and I am rejoicing in the great privilege of being with my beloved husband. He is earnestly and busily engaged at present at Aberaman, South Wales. I attended a lively and pleasant little conference at Lydney, enjoying a spiritual feast. Our dear children have been very thoughtful and good, supplying us with weekly letters. One severe trial we have had to pass through during the painful and dangerous illness of our dear son Fred, and just as we were feeling encouraged by the good news of his recovery and restored strength we were again cast down by the sad news that he had a second attack, having to undergo another surgical operation. We are trusting in our loving Father's mercy, and leaving our dear ones in his care. We hear he is better and doing well, so we are encouraged to hope once more that his life will be spared, that some day we shall have a happy meeting with our loved ones.

I feel truly thankful for the many prayers offered by our loving brothers and sisters in his behalf. It is in such times of suspense as these that we feel the inconvenience of the long distance; then we realize that the waves divide us. I pray for the spirit of endurance that I may remain faithful to the end of life. With affectionate love to all, from your sister
In gospel bonds,
C. C. PITT.

"ECHOES FROM PALESTINE."

By agreement of the Superintendent and

First Assistant, the Christmas program published by the association has been mailed to all the schools so far as could be from the lists at hand, at the expense of the association, the late date at which it was published precluding the possibility of schools ordering and receiving them in time to prepare exercises for Christmas.

The distribution is not as complete as we wish, but is the best we could do. We hope they will reach the majority of the schools in time to be of service.

Fraternally,
F. E. COCHRAN.

BELOW is the program of the Interstate Sunday School Institute at St. Joseph, Missouri, December 26-29, 1897. Note carefully the subjects to be considered. As far as time will permit every subject presented will be canvassed in its very detail. We hope to make it profitable alike for all from member to the highest officer.

As you will observe, the work of the Religio will this year be represented by several of its ablest workers, including the President, Vice President, and General Secretary.

The saints of St. Joseph extend us an invitation to come, proffering board and lodging free. This together with the regular holiday reduced railroad rates—one and one third fare for the round trip—brings it within the reach of almost all to attend. Ask your local railroad agent concerning reduced rates. Remember, you cannot start later than midnight, December 25, and get reduced rates.

We sincerely hope you will consider the necessity of such work being done and come to help do it. Many have already signified their intention to be there and all bids fair to make the institute a success.

Drop a card to Bro. D. J. Krahl, St. Joseph, Missouri, stating on which railroad you will come and time of day. All go to the Union Depot to get off. Trains upon which passengers are expected will be met by some member of reception committee wearing a red, white, and blue ribbon badge. [See notice of committee in Miscellaneous Department, Herald, this issue.]

Anticipating a profitable and pleasant session, I am, Fraternaly,

SISTERS' WORK; GRACELAND COLLEGE FUND.

RED BLUFF, Cal., Dec. 4.

Dear Sisters:—While reading the article entitled Graceland College, in the Saints' Herald of October 20, 1897, followed by the "Ways and Means" by which we might help this noble enterprize, so unselfishly undertaken by the Committee.

These words—"The whole church, every member of it, is in honor bound to see that the hands of the committee are strengthened." At first I decided that I would be one of the excusable members of the church, being a widow with a young son who is trying to get an education, and is also in poor health. We have no home of our own, and I have to work for my living—"surely I am excusable." I kept saying this to myself, in order to ease the longing desire to help in something that I have so often felt our church needed. But just as I was beginning to feel that I would not be able to help, here comes the letter in the Herald, November 17, headed, "College Fund," by Bro. E. L. Kelley; and ever since I have felt more than ever like it was my duty to help in this cause; yet it is so little that I can give, that I feel it a trial to send it. But, dear sisters, if some of you who are more fortunate will give what you can, even if it be the "widow's mite," it may encourage others to do what they can.

Let the church at large do what they can to help in this; but let us, sisters, form a "Sister's Fund," to see how much we can raise between now and the 6th of next April. Let it be a "coilege fund" for the sisters; of course, if the brethren feel like sending help to our fund we will gladly receive it, but this is to be a sister's work for the coming five months.

Let us all do what we can, and I pray that by February 1 it may take a whole page of the Herald to hold the names.

Here is my mite. I wish it might be more. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion,

I am your sister,

ALICE M. DEMPSTER.

AUBURN, Iowa, Dec. 3.

Editors Herald:—I feel to express my pleasure on reading the editorials running through the Herald's pages on the subject of Conversion. To me they are meat and drink, spiritual food to my soul, and I know they must be to every true Latter Day Saint. The subject matter is what I have been trying to teach the saints for many years, in my simple way; but I find it set forth in your pages in so much better, clearer, and cogent a manner, that I cannot refrain asking that those articles (those that have, with those that may appear from the editorial pen,) be printed or published in a more permanent form—a small volume in book form, that it may always find a place in the family library or center table; for its value is far more than all the treasures of earth. It is a mirror in which all may see themselves, a balance in which all may weigh themselves and learn their true spiritual standing, and see the necessity of "coming up higher" in the scale of excellence and coming nearer to that perfection which it is the purpose of the gospel to bring us all unto. To my soul it is the inspiration of God, the droppings of heavenly dew and as worthy of a place in the archives of the church as anything that dropped from the inspired pen of any apostle or prophet that ever wrote. And I would kindly invite every Latter Day Saint, of every stage of spiritual growth, to read, and reread, and ponder its glorious truths in the heart.

If any have attained to the height of excellence set forth therein it will increase their joy and encourage them to greater degrees of perfection. Those who may not have attained to those heights, it will enable them to see themselves as they are, and show them what they have lost by their negligence, and will spur them up to a sense of duty such as they never had before.

I thank God for the Spirit of inspiration. I thank him that he has chosen men through whom that Holy Spirit can speak, now as well as in the days of old. If I know my heart, I love his truth. It grows dearer to me day by day; and the only regrets I have, after more than fifty years' service, is that I have not been more diligent in its glorious cause, and have not proved myself worthy of greater blessings. But I shall live and die trying to do honor to God and his cause.

Those who never knew the truth may continue to rage; the rebellious and apostate may vent their bitter spleen and use their puny efforts to destroy the work and church of Christ; but it is written, "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord." How true that promise has proved itself in all the years of conflict since this church was started! Men of giant intellects have brought all their cunning to bear against it, the powers of hell have inspired apostates of every shade and caliber, and sent them forth filled with the deadliest venom to fight against that which they once professed to love; but to God be the praise, his promise has never failed even the weakest of the servants of God, while they have trusted in him; and to-day the truth shines brighter, the cause of God is more firmly planted, and his church and kingdom is rolling on more rapidly and is gathering to itself the honest in heart and meek of the earth; and the glory is the Lord's!

Let no one imagine that I have written this to glorify any man! I have written it to the glory of God, and to call the attention to the God-inspired truths as found in those articles on Conversion.

I wish to add a few words about what should be preached to the saints. In the first place, let every minister have his own heart right before God. Let him study God's word with a prayerful spirit, and let him seek unto God for wisdom to direct in presenting the word to the people, depending upon the Holy Spirit for guidance in the subject matter to be presented, and that Holy Spirit will direct unerringly so that saint and sinner will be fed "with food convenient for" them. I have found many instances where even saints needed to be fed with the sincere milk of the word—"the first principles of the gospel." It may be said that it is a shame that such necessity exists. But the necessity does exist, however, and must be met; and where that necessity exists the Holy Spirit will direct; and it would ill become me to find fault with the minister for teaching even saints the first principles. They may already understand them, and not know how to set them forth, or to defend them; and a discourse setting forth their nature and how to defend may be very beneficial. I firmly believe with my brethren that every candidate should be well instructed before the sacred ordinance is administered to him; but, unfortunately, there is so great a desire on the part of some to enlarge their lists of baptisms on the church record, that the duty on the part of the minister to more perfectly instruct on the nature of the ordinance and the solemn obligations to be entered into, is forgotten; and while the list of membership may be enlarged, the work is not done on a sure basis; in other words, by such neglect we "build" "wood, hay, and stubble" on the foundation, and our work will "be burned" and we shall "suffer loss."

No one man can teach another how to preach the gospel effectively; the Holy Spirit alone can do that. Let each one secure that divine Guide, and follow its lead, and there will be no mistakes. I cannot preach like other men; I am not altogether constituted as they are. I may be more clumsy in dividing the word, less eloquent and pleasing than they; but if I study to know God's word, and seek divine guidance, relying entirely thereon, seeking to improve orally, intellectually, and spiritually, I shall not labor in vain. My work will endure in the day of trial; so will that of every servant who is laboring solely for the glory of God and the salvation of souls.

CHARLES DERRY.

CLAY CENTER, Kan., Nov. 27.

Editors Herald:—Returning from the reunion at Maysville, Missouri, the writer attended a two-days' meeting at Fanning, Kansas, September 18, 19. These meetings incited considerable interest in the gospel, with some who had been previously indifferent. They were also profitable to the saints of whom there was quite a large attendance. September 25, 26, attended a two-days' meeting at Netawaka, Kansas. The success of these meetings was largely counteracted by sickness and other causes. In my opinion, they were profitable to us all, however. It is possible for us to be "made perfect by the things which we suffer."

October 2, 3, attended a two-days' meeting at Scranton, Kansas. A few of the saints there have "oil in their vessels;" but at Scranton, as in many other branches of the church in Northeast Kansas district, there is a lamentable lack of a proper execution of the law of the Lord. In consequence of this, the tendency and power of the gospel to enoble, elevate, and save its own adherents, is greatly hindered, if indeed it be not entirely nullified. Thus, too, the light of the church, to illuminate the world, is practically extinguished.

In such districts, better conditions cannot be hoped for, unless and until a high priest be chosen to preside over the district, who shall be supported, either by the church or the district, so that he may give his entire time to such presidency. October 9, 10, attended conference of Northeast Kansas district, near Centralia, Kansas. The attendance was small, but an excellent spirit prevailed in all the sessions and services. Brn. H. Green, J. W. Hudgens, and the writer did the preaching. Services were continued one week after conference with good attendance and interest, resulting in the baptism, October 17, of Miss Mollie McDougal.

October 26 to November 4 was devoted to discussion with J. B. Briney, at Blue Rapids, Kansas. It was held in the opera house, except three sessions, which were held in the Saints' church. The questions discussed were:—

"Resolved, that the Christian Church, sometimes called Campbellite Church, is in complete harmony with the church organized by Jesus Christ and his apostles as the same is described in the New Testament Scriptures, in organization, doctrine, practice, and blessings."

"Resolved, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God."

Five sessions of two hours' length were devoted to the examination of each question. In the discussion of the question pertaining to the Christian Church, it developed, as usual, that its defender did not claim that it was like the primitive Christian Church, in many and important particulars, and offered many apologies for the dissimilarities between the New Testament church and his own.

For determining the truth or falsity of Joseph Smith's prophetic claims, I offered the following rules, and had them written upon a blackboard:—

1. All that Joseph Smith produced, as revelations, were true. 2. Many of his prophecies have been fulfilled. 3. None of his prophecies have proven false. 4. His church work fulfilled Bible prophecy.

After having carefully read these rules, Elder Briney stated in his opening speech, that they were proper ones to use in discussing the question: "Was Joseph Smith a prophet of God?"

Following rule 3 he probably used ten minutes in an effort to prove that some of Joseph's prophecies had proven false. The balance of his time he divided by giving a misleading digest of the Book of Mormon, and making an effort to prove that Joseph Smith was a man of "no reputation whatever." His evident desire that I should follow the low, slimy trail of his slanderous footprints was not gratified. It was not necessary. He was compelled to follow me a goodly part of his time and I led him to higher, better ground, and the discussion assumed a more pleasing, interesting aspect. The contrast between the discussion the first night and the second, and between the attitude of Joseph Smith as he appeared in the first session and the one that followed, was so great that it must have attracted the notice of all.

The first evening Elder Briney used much of his time in an effort to prove that Joseph was unworthy of consideration by persons of ordinary intelligence and common honor. The next evening, desiring to show, with some degree of plausibility, that Joseph's prediction of the war of the rebellion so long before it occurred, should not distinguish him as a prophet of God, Elder Briney compared him to Henry Clay who also predicted a war, he claimed. So long as Mr. Smith was growing so rapidly in importance and value, and that, too, in the estimation of an avowed opponent, I concluded that his claim of divine appointment and prophetic power was in no immediate danger. So I believed at the close of the debate.

Just at this juncture, and in time to hear the last session of the discussion, Bro. Henry A. Stebbins arrived from "headquarters" and accompanied the writer to conference at Goshen, Clay County, Kansas. The conference, of which you will learn more fully from the district secretary, was pleasant and profitable. Thence Bro. Stebbins accompanied the writer to Greenleaf, where he preached in his usual instructive and impressive way, nightly for a week, baptizing Mrs. J. H. Scott, on Sunday, November 14. Being unable to persuade "Uncle Henry" to remain longer, office work calling him home, the writer continued the meetings another week at Greenleaf, baptizing Mr. J. H. Scott, merchant, and Mr. John E. Soderstadt, an enterprising young student in the high school. On November 23 baptized Mr. C. H. Woodford, Probate Judge of Washington County, for three years past. His wife has reflected the light of the gospel several years. The life, influence, and other material and necessary aid of Bro. and Sr. Landers rendered the success of these meetings possible.

This week and our Lord's Day, I am endeavoring to induce the people to go to the court room to listen to the gospel. A combination of prejudice in some, indifference in others, and quite unfavorable weather, has allowed us but small hearing so far.

WILL S. PENDER.

APOLLO, Pa., Dec. 2.

Editors Herald:—At my request for an elder to be sent here, Bro. D. L. Shinn came about the 11th of November, stayed two nights with us, and preached one evening in a hall just across the street. He returned next day to Pittsburg to fill an appointment to preach on Sunday. When he left we had an understanding that he would return and preach on the 29th. He did so and preached four excellent sermons, three on the Sabbath day and one Monday night.

There was quite a number out on Sunday, and those I hear from were well pleased. Some lingered to meet him. I can't see why they could object; he shunned not to declare the counsel of God, and it was done with so much of the Spirit of Christ.

I believe the Master's hand guided us, as Bro. Shinn seemed to understand the situation here immediately. He will return soon after the holidays, and at the request of the old soldiers deliver a lecture for their benefit; then he will do some more preaching. Pray for us that we may be strengthened physically and spiritually.

Your sister,

MRS. HENRY UNCAFER.

AUBURN, Neb., Dec. 1.

Editors Herald:—I am somewhat in the heat of battle here, trying to let my light shine, etc. I have encountered an ugly foe in a "Disciple" evangelist. He says that apostles, etc., are not done away, as Christ founded his church once for all, and at the time of founding it, all its members were on earth in the flesh; but as they died and went to the better abode, the membership became divided, being both in heaven and on earth, in this manner the apostles are still in the church. Also that Christ never had but twelve apostles, and, when others were cited, that the twelve were Christ's for founding the church, and others were God's (great point). That the Christian Church is not the kingdom upon earth, that Christ will bring it; that God is changeable, because he made a covenant with Israel, it became old, and he made a new and different one; that the gospel preached to Abraham was simply the fact that in him all the earth should be blessed and that the gospel Paul taught, as recorded in first Corinthians 15:3-5 was or consisted merely in telling the fact that Jesus died for our sins, was buried and rose again. (Isn't that strange, and from a Disciple Church exponent?) He wanted to prove the gospel was not preached before Christ; he also said, in explanation of first Corinthians 13, that each member of the then organized body knew a part, and when each delivered their part it constituted a perfect gospel, and then the parts (tongues, interpretation, etc.) were done away, and that all that abode, or remained, were faith, hope, and charity. We to have these, not the other gifts.

Their meetings have just closed, and I am spreading tracts and preaching. Pray God to help me; I am alone in this town to battle.

Yours in bonds.

A. L. LIGHTFOOT.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Dec. 7.

Editors Herald:—We closed our efforts here last evening. Sunday evening we had a large audience and all seemed thoroughly interested while we spoke of the signs of the times and the second coming of Christ. I believe a great deal of good has been done for the cause. I was at Alpine Saturday evening and Sunday; spoke there twice, and then came back to the city, and occupied in the hall that evening. So you see I'm rather a tired "little minister." Bro. Evans baptized a fine young man—Mr. John H. Stoutenburg, of this city—Sunday before last. He is a cousin to Elder Willard J. Smith.

Progress is the word throughout the mission. I go to Detroit to-morrow to do gospel work.

JAMES M. BAGGERLY.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Nov. 26.

Editors Herald:—Perhaps it would be interesting to some of the saints to know that there is some effort being made here to establish a branch. Elder Willard J. Smith is at the present time with us, and has been laboring in this field for two weeks past. We have had three preaching services, and another booked for Sunday, 28th. Not a great number out to hear the word, but a few that are much interested in the gospel are seeking for the truth.

The Utah elders have been working here for some time past. They held their conference here about three weeks ago. Doctor and myself attended one of their meetings, but on account of the inclement weather, were prevented from attending the rest of the conference. They have a few members here, but they do not amount to very much. Several of their prospective converts are very much interested in Elder Smith, and I am inclined to think that a good many points are in our favor with these people.

Last Sunday afternoon Elder Smith gave us a very interesting lecture on Utah Mormonism, and I tell you it opened the eyes of many of the earnest seekers, and caused a great deal of comment after services. The Utah elders (that is only two of them) were in the audience, and when questioned by their prospective converts, they were compelled to acknowledge that Elder Smith spoke nothing but the truth, and confessed that it was their faith. At this juncture a gentleman said, "If this is Utah Mormonism I am done with it." I think that we will be able to claim this man after he has investigated our faith thoroughly. A few more I think will embrace this grand work after they have been made acquainted with it.

We were requested to call upon one of the Utah converts, a German lady, who had been baptized by B. H. Roberts. The elders had no doubt been around to see her and had warned her of the possibility of our calling upon her. She was informed that the Devil was coming; so every one can easily see our success with this German lady. She could not understand English very well, but would not so much as look at a book we had with us, which was published in Utah by her own people. All she would say was, "That is all from the Devil." She did not know at that time that she was telling the truth, perhaps, if she had opened her eyes a little and investigated, she would have weighed her words a little bit. We could easily see that some one had posted her. Before leaving, she said if we had any German books she would gladly read them.

So this is the condition of the work here. Doctor and myself are all alone in this field. Expenses for hall, etc., all fall on us. We are anxious to do all we can in trying to seek the honest in heart, and trust that the Lord will bless Elder Smith in this field.

Bro. Smith has won many friends here. We can count on about eight of Utah's prospective members as our friends.

In gospel bonds,

HATTIE RIGGS.

DECEPTION'S REIGN.—PART 2. NO. 4.

BY ELDER COLUMBUS SCOTT.

WHERE was the church that Christ set up 1800 years ago, as an organization, during the 1260 years of the union of church and state, from 540 to 1800 A. D.? Where was it in the sixteenth century, when Luther and Calvin and Knox, who were all brought up from childhood, Catholics, broke loose from that church? Where did these men get their authority to build their respective churches? Where was the kingdom of God when these men began to build their respective churches in the sixteenth century?

If it was in existence then already, what are these churches—the kingdom of God or daughters of mother Babylon? The Episcopal Church of England is a body that once separated from the mother church, under King Henry the Eighth. All the differing schools of Methodists are the offspring, either directly or indirectly, of the Episcopal Church. All the differing Presbyterian divisions are the children of the organization originally established through the efforts of John Knox, and his aiders, in Scotland. These statements are historically true. No denial of it will be made. Did those reformers get their authority to build their respective churches from the Catholic Church? Could the Catholic Church be all wrong, as those reformers all said she was, and at the same time the authority they received from her be all right? If the authority was all right, she was all right; and those reformers did wrong and left the kingdom of God when they separated from her communion. And if she is right, and is the church of God, what are the churches the reformers organized? If the Catholic Church is the Babylon of John's revelation, the mother of harlots, then what are the churches the reformers organized?

Where are you, reader, in some department of Babylon, or in the kingdom of God? Which? The Baptist Church is the only modern church that has claimed to extend back through the dark ages to the apostolic age. But her leading historical professors have lately not only admitted but confidently declared that it is impossible to trace their succession back without going through the Catholic Church for a period of five hundred to one thousand years! A link in the chain of succession of from five hundred to one thousand years is quite a long period, even from the Baptist standpoint, for the organized kingdom of God to be absent from the earth.

Kind reader; Isaiah the prophet foresaw and foretold this long reign of deceptive error that has held the religious world under its power for the last fifteen or sixteen hundred years, and that gave rise to the great apostasy from original Christianity, introduced so many creeds, false doctrines, deceptions, and divisions. When speaking of "the multitude of all the nations" that should fight against "Ariel" or Jerusalem—the Jews, he says:—

Stay yourselves, and wonder; cry ye out, and cry: they are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink. For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered. . . . Wherefore the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people [multitude of all the nations that fight against the Jews] draw near me with their mouth [read their prayers from books], and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men.—Isa. 29: 9-13.

The nations began the fight against the Jews, in fulfillment of this prophecy, about A. D. 65, and have kept it up in some form or other till the present century. The Jews have been captives among the Gentiles till lately as Jesus has, like Isaiah, foretold. (Luke 21: 20-24.) And while Isaiah the prophet foretells that the natives should be drunk and stagger, but not with literal wine; John the Revelator, foretells through what agency this sad condition should be brought about. False teachers with their creeds, catechisms, confessions of faith, their articles of religion, and disciplines, all man-made, called by Isaiah "precepts of men," and represented to John as the wine of Babylon's fornication, are the agencies by which the nations have been made drunk.

It is the doctrines that we are here inquiring into, not the sincerity or insincerity of the peoples blinded by them. These questions we must inquire into, for our eternal salvation is involved in them, and we are not of that number that believe that sincerity only, regardless of the truth, will save us. Babylon has made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.—Rev. 14: 8.

The inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication.—Rev. 17: 2.

For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies.—Rev. 18: 3.

For thy merchants were the great men of the earth; for by thy sorceries were all nations deceived.—Rev. 18: 23.

And the woman [Babylon] which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth.—Rev. 17: 18.

"All nations deceived!" Astonishing! How universal has been Deception's Reign!! What system of religion anywhere in all the popular world is not mixed to a greater or less extent with the doctrinal wine from great Babylon's golden cup? Is God's church mixed up in all this divided Babylonish confusion, where, in the sum of them all, it can have access to the whole contents of the golden cup? Is not the wine in parcels handed down from one theology to another, and thus perpetuated from one generation to another in succession, as each subdivision of religionists separates from previously existing ones? And are not Babylon's deceptions handed down and perpetuated successively? And is it not this that perpetuates the religious divisions that continue to exist? Surely we must answer affirmatively. Religious division is antichristian, is opposed to both the letter and spirit of the gospel, and is therefore a deception. And we are justified in the statement that all who apologize for religious division are deceived. It is conceived in wine of Babylon's false doctrine, brought forth from her iniquitous cup, and nourished and matured by her theological offspring.

GOD'S ADJUSTMENT OF THE DIFFICULTIES HERE ENCOUNTERED.

An inquiry naturally arises here, Is there no divine deliverance from the power and influence of the delusions that Babylon has thrown over the whole world like a pall? This is a pertinent question; but who cares to be delivered from them, is a question also. Surely God has a way of deliverance for all willing to accept of his way. But remember one thing. God says to man — all in Babylon — as well:—

For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.—Isa. 55: 8, 9.

Please do not forget this emphatic statement of God. He will do his work in another way than that proposed by man. We must not expect that God's work will be done as man prefers.

Now man has been proposing to deliver us from Babylon, from the days of King Henry VIII. and Luther, till now; men have taught and tried the expediency of reformation. When a learned man differed with the church, Catholic or Protestant, that he belonged to, his proposition was to separate himself and as many more as he could induce to come out with him, from the church; and then, without any direction from God, organize themselves into a separate church so called. And this process they call reforming—"reformation." Of course a creed, or articles of religion, were agreed upon before the new church was organized, or soon after. And thus were children, daughters, born to the mother church—Babylon. Thus were the members of the family multiplied.

And so man, uninspired and un-commissioned of God proposed reform—reformation. Reformation, as a panacea for all our religious ills, for the last four hundred years. Reform, as used in the sense of organizing, means to “form again,” to reproduce that which once was, but has been lost or disorganized. The late reformers did not reform, or form again, or reproduce, the church as organized by Jesus Christ anciently. Their various church organizations were originals,—nothing like them ever existed before in the history of the world. No one of them in organizing his respective church followed any pattern or example of anything that ever previously existed. Hence the New Testament record is not appealed to, as describing their church form, but their disciplines! Their advocates on this point all argue and contend that the form of church organization, set up by Jesus and his apostles, was never intended by the Lord to exist after the ancient apostolic age, either in form or spirit. This they do to try to show us that there is room for their respective unauthorized church organizations. More debate is had nowadays over this than most any other question. No denying this statement.

Reformation of society merely morally is not enough to answer the purpose. Organization is felt to be a necessity religiously, politically, financially, socially, benevolently, and in all departments of religious and civilized life. While man has “thought” to solve the great problem of coming out of Babylon, and having a church by “reformation,” and has tried it that way; God, whose ways are not as man’s ways, has proposed from the beginning of the world, to solve this problem of opening the way out of Babylon for us by “Restoration.” Restoration involves man’s reformation, and more. It implies the re-establishment of his church according to its original form, with its lifegiving Spirit. Hence, the Apostle Peter in referring to the times closely related to the Second Advent of Christ, informs us relative to the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.—Acts 3: 21.

Babylon is to meet with a tremendous fall, before the end of the world and Christ’s second coming. Read:—

And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.—Rev. 14: 8.

But before this great downfall, and in order to the escape of the honest in heart, God restores the gospel through the ministry of an holy angel, as foretold by John. (Rev. 14: 6, 7.) This angel comes before Babylon’s fall, the second one after the fall. The everlasting gospel being restored in all its elements of word, power, or authority, Holy Ghost, and much assurance (1 Thess. 1: 5), men can by it be called out of Babylon, adopted by obedience thereto into the family and “one fold” of God. (John 10: 16.) The word of the gospel, being the seed “of the kingdom” or church (Matt. 13: 19), and by the revealment of the Holy Ghost, one of the elements of the gospel; and by virtue of the “power” or authority of the gospel, the church can be builded up again, restored, according to the will of God as originally designed,—with apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, bishops, teachers, and deacons, as set forth in God’s New Testament pattern. Also a knowledge of the respective duties of the officers of the church can be revealed as in olden days. And thus the restoration go on as God designs.

Isaiah, who predicted the marvelous work of God to be done in the last days, places it after the great apostasy from the faith, as before cited in these papers (Chap. 29: 9-14), and just “a very little while” before the restoration of the fertility of Palestine (Lebanon) (Isa. 29: 17; Joel 2: 23-25), through the restoration of “the former and latter rains” to that land. He says:—

Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people [whose rules of faith are creeds, see verse 13], even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid.—Isa. 29: 14.

The marvelous and wonderful work that God here declares he would do, corresponds chronologically with the work foretold by John. It is a marvelous work, indeed, that God would reinstate original Christianity in spirit, power, and letter. Restore the gospel as of old, and per sequence the church, in organization, authority, and spirit!

But it is too late now in the world’s history for the marvelous work to begin. The early and latter rains have been restored already to Palestine in 1846 to 1853 A. D. Testimony on this point is abundant. Among the names of the witnesses we mention Professor Barclay, who was there at dates above given; Rev. Dr. D. A. Randall, of Columbus, Ohio, who was there in 1862. Rev. Hugh Stowell, in 1853, wrote to the Scottish Presbyterian Magazine:—

I see manifest signs and tokens that the Holy Land is preparing for the people, and that the people are preparing for the Holy Land. If I turn to Palestine, I perceive indications the most distinct that God is returning to water its desolate places, and clothe its mountains once more with beauty and fragrance. The clouds are again dropping fatness upon its desert places, and many of its wildernesses are beginning to blossom in promise that they shall bloom as the rose. I know not whether you are aware of the fact, but it is one that is fully authenticated, that the “latter rain” returned last year to Mount Zion—a rain that had been withheld, so far as our information goes, ever since the dispersion of the people. And he who has brought back the latter in its season, will also give the “former rain” in its season, and these returning showers of earthly blessings are the harbingers of returning showers of spiritual benediction from on high.

These words were penned in 1853; since that date the former rains have been restored, as the returning fertility of the land abundantly testifies.

Mr. H. G. Spafford, who died at Jerusalem in 1894, and who went from Chicago there some years ago to live, wrote to the Chicago Inter-Ocean some five or six years ago:—

And so we find that suddenly, without warning, Jerusalem has become in fact again a Jewish city! It is a change which has come like a thief. The busy world has taken little notice of it—but it has come. Does it not look as if that time of the treading down of Jerusalem by the Gentiles—upon which so many of God’s purposes respecting the Jews and the whole world are in the Scriptures made to depend—was about fulfilled?

From the Restitution, Plymouth, Indiana, 1882, in communication dated

Jerusalem, May 15, 1882, I extract as follows:—

A rainstorm on the 15th day of May is an event hitherto unknown in Palestine. It is cold this evening; cold enough for a fire. I think the Lord is going to send his people plenty. If he sends the people he will send abundant crops to feed them.

Our way is paved along here with facts. Fruitful seasons have returned to Abraham's promised land. His children are returning as promised long ago. The great restitution is moving on in the advance. The dawning of the morning is radiant with the fulfillment of the promises!

The angel spoken of by John came to little Joseph Smith, the Seer, in western New York, in 1823, just a little while before the beginning of the restoration of the former and latter rains to Palestine, in 1846. To him was committed the keys of authority to open up the great work of "the dispensation of the fullness of times" (Eph. 1:9, 10), and to preach the gospel as in apostolic days (Matt. 17:10, 11), and power to bring to light the great things of God's law to Ephraim as given to them on the American continent anciently (Hosea 8:11, 12), and counted "a strange thing," and called the Book of Mormon.

The Book of Mormon, the sacred record of God's dealings with the children of Joseph of Egypt, who came to the western world B. C. 600, and who flourished here for a thousand years, a great and prosperous people, and who are the forefathers of the American Indians of North and South America, — that record, though hid away in the earth, near fifteen hundred years ago, in the western part of what is now New York, in the hill Cumorah. That record was to be restored to the knowledge of man, is by Isaiah the prophet associated with the rise and development of the Lord's latter-day marvelous work and wonder. It is the sealed book of verses eleven and twelve, of chapter twenty-nine. They read:—

And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this I pray thee: and he saith, I cannot; for it is sealed: and the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned.

After the golden plates upon which this record was inscribed, in reformed Egyptian characters, was by the Angel of God delivered to young Joseph Smith, he transcribed some of the characters, and sent the transcription to Doctor Mitchill and Professor Anthon, of Columbia College New York, by one Martin Harris, who requested them to read those characters; but the answer to this request was, "I cannot read a sealed book." Young Joseph did not at the time know that Isaiah had foretold this transaction. And it is strange that a man intending to practice a deception would proceed in that way. Counterfeiters as a rule do not begin their work by exhibiting samples of their spurious work to learned doctors and scholarly professors!

God then inspired this unlettered youth, Joseph Smith, to translate the record. This was in the years 1827–1830. Opposers of the work have tried to use Prof. Anthon's statement of this transaction, in regard to the characters, and his description of them, against this work since those days; but the Professor's description of the characters so fully corresponds with the description given by other scientific men, in their descriptions of the modes of writing, and the characters used by ancient American writers, as developed by recent scientific explorations, that Prof. Anthon's description has become an evidence to the truthfulness of the work. But posted opponents of the work now seldom refer to Prof. Anthon's statement, since it reverts against them. But though the learned man was unable to read the book, it was to be translated. Isaiah says further, indicating the time when the sealed book was to be read:—

Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon [Palestine] shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest? And in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity, and out of darkness.—Isa. 29:17, 18. (See Isa. 32:9–19; 40:16.)

Isaiah then goes on to predict what great blessings shall come to Israel following the coming forth of this strange record. That the "shame and paleness of face" that has characterized Israel—the Jews—now so frequently called "Old Shylock," was to be removed. This, after eighteen hundred years of slavery to Gentile nations, is now, in the eyes of all nations being done! The present exciting and unparalleled investigation of the money question, among the nations, is placing this subject before us as perhaps no other ordinary means could. The days of Israel's servitude to Gentiles are ended! He is beginning to "possess the gate of his enemies." (Gen. 22:17). They are beginning to "eat the riches of the Gentiles;" and "in their glory" to boast themselves. (Isa. 61:6). Already is

The remnant of Jacob . . . among the Gentiles in the midst of many people, as a lion [king] among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion [money king] among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces [financially], and none can deliver.—Mic. 5:8.

Already are the children of the Gentiles being sold, commercially, into the hands of the children of Judah. (Joel 3:5–8.)

Here are some of the prophetic citations that point out the conditions that were to prevail among the nations at the time of the great restoration of the latter days. Here, with us, are material evidences that the restoration predicted by the prophets has already begun. Reader, are you interested in the grand movings of God's arm? If so, cease drinking longer at Babylon's golden chalice. Turn and walk in the light of the Lord.

The day-star has already risen, the light of God's glorious latter-day work gleams already along the brow of the mountains and hills. Awake, behold its glories. Come, bask in its life-giving powers. Drink of his wisdom and joy unto life eternal! David, too, beheld by vision of olden days the dawn of this day. He predicted the regeneration of Israel, and of the ancient covenant land, after its long desolation, and in prophetic extasy exclaims:—

Lord, thou hast been favorable to thy land; thou hast brought back the captivity of Jacob.—Ps. 85:1.

And after giving utterance to an exultant prophetic prayer for Israel's salvation he exclaims:—

I will hear what God the Lord will speak: for he will speak peace unto his people, and to his saints: but let them not turn again to folly. Surely his salvation is nigh them that fear him; that glory may dwell in our land. Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other. Truth shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from heaven. Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase. Righteousness shall go before him and shall set us in the way of his steps.—Ps. 85: 8-13.

That David's land is now beginning to "yield her increase," in fulfillment of this prophecy, is evidenced by the conditions now prevailing in Palestine. Since the restoration of the former and latter rains, in 1853, her valleys are living fields of wheat and barley; the terraces on the mountain sides are reared again, and flow with wine as of olden days; the vales are as Eden's flowery odorous garden; her lemons and oranges are in New York and Boston, competing with the fruits of California and Florida. Her cities are springing up; and art and science are lending their power and beauty to the land and people.

A railroad spans her Philistia plain and Judean mountains and valleys, and where Jesus walked and wept in sadness over ancient Israel's darkness and rebellion against God, there the roar and shrill whistle of the modern American railway engine is heard. Where he sorrowfully walked, taught, and prayed in the days of yore, there the clicking of the printing press is heard and seen, sending out to returning Israel its educational influence. What a mighty change has been brought about in that land in so short a period of time!

But let us not forget that associated with this return of blessing to Israel, God speaks! "I will hear what God the Lord will speak," says David, "for he will speak peace to his people and to his saints." Revelation from God has opened up the great latter-day dispensation, and by revelation will it be carried to a glorious consummation. Associated with the great work of God here predicted, "Truth shall spring out of the earth." Truth is God's word. (John 17: 17.) God's "law is the truth." (Ps. 119: 142.) The great things of God's law written to Ephraim on Joseph's land (Hosea 8: 11, 12), the western continent, in olden days, and hid by the hand of Moroni, for safe keeping till the time appointed, sprang out of the earth in 1827, when Joseph Smith, by God's command went to the place of its concealment, and took it, and translated it, and published it to the world in the year 1830 A. A Word From The Board Of Publication.

Inquiries have come to the office touching the action of the Board reducing the Herald to $1.50 per year, instead of the $2; and also asking that the Hope be mailed in single wrappers instead of in bundles to Great Britain, to which the Board offers the following suggestions.

First. To the protest sent in by a few of the brethren in England against the reduction in price in the way it was made, for the reason that it does not advantage them any, or that it gives an advantage to new subscribers over the old. A little reflection will show that all subscribers had the benefit of the Herald up to the time that the reduction was made and either had paid up or were in debt for it at the time of the reduction. These could lose nothing by the change. Those who had paid in advance from the time that the reduction was made received the benefit of the reduction having the extra amount credited to them. No discrimination against them. The brethren in England who protest forget that they have been given an advantage and received benefit therefrom for a number of years past in the way of postage; that the Herald has been sent them for the same price as to subscribers in the United States and the Canadas, whereas, the postage was much greater, making a difference really of about fifty cents per year on each number. Now if the new subscribers to the Herald under the special reduction should have a little advantage for a short time we cannot see where the justice would come in from a protest by brethren who had been receiving this special advantage for so long a time; and especially since under the new order they get the reduction if they pay in advance just the same as any other subscriber, and the benefit of the extra postage besides.

Second. To send Hopes to foreign countries in single wrappers would cost one cent for each Hope. There are fifty-two numbers sent during the year. This will be fifty-two cents for postage. Since the price of the Hope is fifty cents per year, will some of the brethren please note what amount the office will make when sending in single wrappers? It has been the work of the Board of Publication to advance the cause of the gospel work as well as to run a publishing house. The Board has been aware for a number of years that it was not for the money that was in it that the church literature was sent to foreign countries; but it has been hopeful that in due time subscriptions might be had in Europe, Australia, and many of the islands so that a better arrangement might be had for sending church literature to the saints in such countries. The Board has not grumbled, however, although the office was the loser in fact in many instances where the papers have been sent. Its work is to publish the gospel and it has no other interest to conserve. The only questions with the Board are: 1. Is it right? 2. Can the office stand the expense?

Third. Heralds may be sent in single wrappers to Great Britain and Australia, and the islands when desired, without extra expense to the office. But Hopes cannot be sent in this way without loss as clearly appears. On the Herald there has been a general reduction and it is based upon the ground of payment in advance and in the hope of extending its list of subscribers. It is possible for the office to succeed if payment is made in advance and its friends make an effort to enlarge its mailing lists. If we have the payment in advance each dollar that comes into the hands of the office is used to discount the bills of the office at the rate of four per cent per month on paper or other articles that the office has to buy and pay for monthly; and it will not take much of a financier to see that four per cent per month for twelve months will amount to forty-eight cents saved in discounting the bills. If we do not have the money in advance the Board has to hire money and pay interest, so that instead of making our discounts we are paying interest for money to use, and in the West, where the office is located, high interest is generally demanded and often not to be had for that.

This statement is made for the purpose of showing the necessity of persons making payments in advance if possible. It is in the interest of the work; shuts off the borrowing business and relieves the office so that it can do business; and there has been no time in the past thirty-seven years that the office has not been under the burden and disadvantage of a heavy debt. The Board has had to borrow money in order to exist, and it is borrowing now, but expecting with the help of the saints and friends in the different parts of world to be from under this debt before a great while longer; and as soon as this load can be removed, the interest of which amounts to several hundred dollars each year, it will be possible to move forward in aid of the publication of the gospel of peace with much less expense and with much greater satisfaction than at any time heretofore.

It should be remembered, too, that if all the arrearages on the church papers now due the office were paid up this debt could be canceled at once, and interest stopped.

Instead of making protests, then, it is hoped that the saints everywhere, whether in America, Europe, or Asia, will make an united effort to place the church publishing department upon a solid and neverfailing basis, that it may be able to accomplish the work before it.

Very respectfully submitted to the saints and friends interested by
THE BOARD.
LAMONI, Dec. 6, 1897.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENTS.

WESTERN DISTRICT OF WALES.

Notice has been forwarded me that Bro. John R. Gibbs, Bishop's agent at Morryston, Wales, has removed to America, and the branches in the Western Wales district have recommended Bro. John Edwards, of Llanelly, Wales, for Bishop's agent of said district; this recommendation has also been duly indorsed by Bro. F. G. Pitt, missionary laboring in said district at the time. Having also learned that Bro. Edwards was willing to undertake the work of agent of said district, I have therefore appointed him agent of the Bishopric of the Reorganized Church for the Western Wales district.

The saints and friends will please take notice of the change and forward tithes and offerings to Bro. Edwards, who has authority to receipt for same in behalf of the church.

The Bishopric take pleasure in expressing satisfaction and confidence in the work of Bro. Gibbs, and trust that he may be blessed and prospered and be able to do much good to the cause of Christ in his new home, wherever that may be. It is the hope of the Bishopric that every member of the church in the world will make an effort for the advancement of the church's interests in a temporal way so that the work may be aided and, in the language of the revelation, "The law of Christ be fulfilled." It is right and proper that there be unanimity of work in this department as any other, and all, whether old or young, who have come to years of accountability so as to be able to comprehend the gospel, should also make an effort to in some way sustain the gospel. If we can but arrive at the state when every member of the church shall have performed his or her duty under the law relating to temporal things, we will then see the church placed in a condition to perform its work, and it will receive commendation from the Master that it has not yet attained to in the nineteenth century, by the outpouring of spiritual blessings.

To this end we trust that the saints in every district, collectively and individually, may work and pray. As ever, hopefully in the truth yours,

LAMONI, Iowa, Dec. 6, 1897.

DIED.

DAVIS.—At Lamoni, Iowa, December 7, 1897, Helen Irena, daughter of Mr. John W. and Sr. Caroline W. Davis. The little one was sick about two months. She was 1 year, 3 months, and 18 days of age when the spirit went to be with the redeemed through the atonement of Christ. Sermon at residence by Elder Robt. M. Elvin. Interment in Rose Hill cemetery.

WILSON.—At Jonesport, Maine, October 31, 1897, Sr. Cora B., wife of Joel D. Wilson, passed peacefully away after a long and tedious illness, which was borne with great patience. She was born November 21, 1861. Being converted under the preaching of President Joseph Smith, she was baptized January 11, 1891, by Elder J. C. Foss. During all her suffering she never lost faith in God, nor in the gospel of Jesus Christ, but was fully resigned to the will of God, and talked of the glorious change as if she were going on a visit. The church has lost a zealous worker, and a pure, devoted saint. Her husband has lost a true, faithful, and affectionate wife, and her two boys a dear and loving mother. The saints deeply sympathize with them in their sad bereavement. Funeral services by Priest Uriah M. Kelley.

BISSELL.—At Lone Rock, Missouri, September 27, 1897, Mr. Roger Bissell, aged 74 years, 9 days. He was born in Chenango County, New York, in 1823. Married Lucinda Bartlett in 1845. They came to Marengo, Illinois, in 1866, to Decatur County, Iowa, in 1875, and to Lone Rock in 1894. Sr. Lucinda died thirteen months before he did. Two daughters died in New York. One son, William, survives them. Mr. Bissell never united with the church, but he was very friendly and hospitable to the saints, and very cheerful and happy in his disposition towards all. Funeral sermon by Elder C. H. Jones, assisted by Elder T. J. Bell.

KIZER.—Robert Kizer, at Timber Lake, Tennessee, September 21, 1897. Born February 14, 1870; baptized August 22, 1897. Funeral sermon by Elder T. W. Chatburn, at Beach River church, Tennessee, October 17, to a very large and sympathizing congregation. Wife and one child mourn. His gospel life was barely a month's duration, but died rejoicing that he had entered in, passing away in peace.

PERTHEL.—At Providence, Rhode Island, November 24, 1897, Sr. Julia Perthel, aged 80 years. She fell peacefully asleep conscious of the hope of the resurrection. Funeral services at her late home, November 28, by Elders John Smith and George H. Gates. Singing of two solos by Mrs. Morgan. The Daughters of Rebecca, of which she was a member, read their burial service over her remains.

McFARLAND.—At her home in West Burlington, Iowa, September 13, 1897, Sr. Mary Paul McFarland, after a painful illness of two years. Deceased was born in Bridge of Weir, Renfrewshire, Scotland, December 12, 1820. A XMAS GIFT FOR ONE DOLLAR

APPROPRIATE ALIKE FOR ONE OR ALL.
 A broad statement this, but one that is borne out by the facts. Not only can you make such a present on such terms, but in doing so you will be giving something that will remain a source of delight and instruction to its fortunate owner for years to come. We have decided to extend through the holiday season our remarkable introductory offer on the great in ten large handsome volumes, over 5,000 pages and 3,000 illustrations, which has recently been completed after years of preparation and the expenditure of vast sums of money. Our reason for this is that the sets sold in this manner will be the most effective advertising that we could give the regular subscription edition, which will be sold at $60.00 net.

Briefly, it is a gathering within the covers of one set of books of all that usually goes to make up the "reference corner" in any public or private collection of books.

Chief among the contents of the library stand the ENCYCLOPEDIA, ATLAS & DICTIONARY necessities in every home, office, or school in the land. But besides these, it includes Biographical Dictionary, Gazetteer of the United States, Dictionary of Technical Terms, and other indispensable requisites of a working reference library.

The Encyclopedia is in itself worth twice the price of the whole library. It is par excellence the book of reference for every man, woman or student to have at his or her elbow at all times for quick, ready reference. It is the latest, best, most concise, yet thorough and accurate encyclopedia extant, and the only one in existence that is brought down to September, 1897. It is edited by John Clark Ridpath, L.L.D. It includes comprehensive and reliable articles on The Cuban Rebellion, Klondike Gold Fields, Moving Photography, and other topics of live interest to-day. In all, nearly 100,000 topics are treated, and these are magnificently illustrated with thousands of engravings, colored maps and charts.

The Atlas comprises a handsome series of maps and charts, brought down to date; 100 colored and 200 in monochrome, which, for convenience sake, are scattered through the volumes of the Encyclopedia, according to their alphabetical arrangement. Also hundreds of diagrams, sketches, battle plans, portraits, etc.

The Dictionary is the work of the ripest linguists of modern times. It is an unabridged, etymological, pronouncing, literary, scientific and technical Dictionary of the English language, and is an acknowledged authority both in England and America. The regular price of this great king of books is $24.00. It comprises nearly 3,000 closely printed columns of words and definitions.

OUR GREAT INTRODUCTORY OFFER.

For advertising purposes merely, and to introduce this grand work to the public, we have decided to place a few sets in each community at about one-third of the subscription price, and deliver the set complete

"How the Bible came down to Us" is the title of an article by Dr. Clifton H. Levy in the December number of the American Monthly Review of Reviews. Dr. Levy traces the history of the various versions of the Scriptures, presenting photographic reproductions of portions of the most celebrated manuscripts and printed texts. In view of the recent revival of interest in biblical discovery and textual criticism, this attempt to give a popular exposition of the subject will doubtless be warmly welcomed.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

AS TO MODES OF BAPTISM.

ONE of the questions that came up for discussion at the Baptist Congress held in Chicago last month (November 16-18) was this, "Is baptism a prerequisite to the Lord's supper?" Among those who argued strongly in the negative were Rev. O. P. Gifford, D. D., of Buffalo, Rev. Russell H. Conwell, D. D., of Philadelphia, and Rev. T. A. K. Gessler, D. D., of Lake Hopatcong, New Jersey, all leading men in their denomination. They declared in favor of "open communion." Dr. Gifford said: "We challenge the assumption that the New Testament does furnish us with the model of the church; that the model of the church was finished in Corinth, or Rome, or Ephesus; that the practice of the church in the first century is a common law, and all departures from that practice sedition and anarchy. The essence of the Lord's supper is in the power to discern the Lord's body. Immersed men who fail to discern the Lord's body do not observe the Lord's supper. Unimmersed men who do discern the Lord's body do observe the Lord's supper." Dr. Conwell took the same position. He declared that not only is baptism not a prerequisite to the Lord's supper, but, on the contrary, the latter is an ordinance peculiarly adapted to the needs of the erring and imperfect. Dr. Gessler said (we quote this from the proceedings in the Chicago Standard):—

"There is not a particle of ground in the New Testament for the statement that the supper is a church ordinance. If you find it anywhere, you find it in some inference, not in a direct statement. When our Lord instituted the ordinance, the apostles then present did not constitute a church. Is it not far more reasonable to suppose that it took a place more analogous to the daily meal than to a ritual performance, bound up with certain other restrictions?"

The chief argument in defense of "close communion" was presented by Rev. P. S. Hensen, of Chicago. He expressed his belief in and preference for immersion, since it seems to symbolize the burial and resurrection of Christ. He, however, said that, whether or not this be true, he has not felt himself constrained to establish any police surveillance of the Lord's table, nor to make invidious discrimination among those who present themselves as communicants, nor have any ever been thrust away by him. So "while lovingly declaring the truth, as we understand it, we have been accustomed to study the things that make for peace and the things wherewith we may edify one another, till we all come in the unity of the faith and the knowledge of the Lord God unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

These utterances, relating as they did, to what is generally regarded as one of the fundamental tenets of the Baptist Church, have been the occasion of much editorial comment in the religious press, and will probably continue to be a subject of discussion for some time to come. In alluding to the debate on this question, several of the Baptist papers say that the views expressed were those of individuals only, and however much weight they have on that basis they should not be taken as representative of the Baptist denomination. The Baptist congress is a body without any legislative or ecclesiastical authority. It is simply a meeting for debate on questions of interest to the denomination. It is with this view of the matter that The Examiner (Baptist, New York) urges its readers not to be disquieted by the discussion. It says:—

"The conviction of the denomination at large is settled and immovable that baptism is a prerequisite to the communion, just as personal faith is prerequisite to baptism. This is the plain logic of the New Testament conception of the relation of the ordinances, and no sentimental considerations, based on conditions which did not exist in New Testament times, and would not now exist but for the prevalence of erroneous views of the divine command concerning baptism, can persuade the 'plain people' of the denomination that they are wrong in adhering to their conviction on this point."

The Standard (Baptist, Chicago) sees no cause for alarm in the situation. It says:—

"For ourselves, while we have no sympathy with certain tendencies manifest in the congress, and notably with the expressed desire on the part of some for an open communion which cannot but end in denominational anarchy, we can see no good end subserved by refusing to acknowledge the presence in the denomination of a group of men who hold these views, and in refusing to look at the question at all. Such a course will not tend to correct error, nor to establish truth. We may believe such men in error, but we do not care to muzzle them. Let those who fear that the evidences of departure from the standards hitherto regarded as stable remember that divergence of views is nothing new among us."

Papers representative of other denominations are inclined to place a deeper significance on the discussion before the congress. Thus The Outlook (Congregational) thinks that it indicates that "a storm is brewing among the Baptists of the United States." The Outlook concludes its editorial on the subject as follows:—

"No baptism of any kind is a prerequisite to the communion; the only prerequisite is love for Christ and loyalty to him. It is probable that always the vast majority of those who love and are loyal to Christ will be baptized. But it is certain that always there will be some loving and loyal souls who will never have received baptism, neither by immersion nor by sprinkling, neither in adult age nor in infancy—neither, that is, in apostolic fashion, nor in that adopted by the church at a later date. The church has no authority to exclude such from the communion table. The only invitation which Christ authorizes is that which he used: 'Do this in remembrance of me.' The door to this memorial supper he has opened to all who love him and are loyal to him; and the door which he has opened, no one has a right to close. And each disciple is to decide for himself what love and loyalty require; it is not to be decided for him by others. This is the position of the English Baptists; this is the position toward which the Christian Church is gradually tending; and the recent discussion in the Baptist Church congress indicates that the Baptist Church in America may yet lead the way toward this more spiritual and less legalistic view of the relation of baptism to the Lord's supper and of both to the Christian life."

The Northwestern Christian Advocate (Methodist Episcopal, Chicago) gives an editorial summary of the discussion and then says:—

"That all this implies a revolution in Baptist sentiment as compared with the practical tenets of the last half century, no one needs to say. No theological battles of the almost recent past have been sterner or more determined than the struggle about modes of baptism. Exclusiveness in spirit and actual exclusion of the unimmersed from the Lord's table are within the experience of many who still live. The Baptist Church has changed, as other churches have changed. This open expression of toleration and this evidence of growing fraternity are proofs that God is with his people. The walls of separation are tumbling, and the world will not fail to honor and respect candid men as it once did not honor them. Three churches notably are approaching each other—the Baptist, the Presbyterian, and the Methodist. Europe has been influenced vitally by the triple alliance of Germany, Austria, and Italy. The three rulers have aided to preserve the peace of Europe, and mankind are their debtors. Much more must humanity on earth and angels in heaven rejoice when three great churches like those named approach each other and give guaranties for the peace of the world in the name of their common Lord."

The Presbyterian Journal alludes to the arguments against close communion simply to say: "This is very gratifying and indicates the growth of a more liberal and charitable, not to say scriptural and brotherly, spirit."

The Independent has an editorial entitled "The passing of close communion," in which a contrast is drawn between conditions in the Baptist Church twenty-five years ago and now:—

"We recall 1875. Those were the days just before the exodus of the young Baptists who preferred peaceful liberty outside to war inside the denomination. Dr. Behrends was then pastor of a Baptist church at Cleveland, and Professor Wilkinson was now graciously smiling on him as a young sentimentalist with whom patience must be exercised, and now thundering away on the duty of obedience to the command 'Be immersed.' Dr. Pentecost was still a Baptist pastor, and so was Dr. Bridgman. When such men as these, and Dr. Jeffery and Mr. Banta ventured to attack close communion, then Dr. Bright brought up a battery of Baptist guns against them. He declared that there were in the whole Baptist denomination scarce a dozen close communionists.

From the theological seminaries at Upland and Rochester the cannon belched forth on the rebels, and blew some of them out of the denomination. It seemed for a moment as if the hopes of increasing fellowship were destroyed. . . . Now it would be almost as hard, among our Northern Baptists, to find a representative minister who would stoutly defend close communion as it was then to find its confessed opponent."—Literary Digest, December 11, 1897.

The estimated value of the mineral and metallurgical products of Upper Siberia last year was $75,000,000, a gain in twelve months of 25 per cent. The principal commodities among these were coal, coke, pig iron, and furnace castings, foundry castings, large plates, and sheets, thin plates, and sheets, and wire.

The total length of the world's telegraph system has now reached 7,900,000 kilometers (4,908,823 miles), exclusive of 292,000 kilometers (181,440 miles) of submarine cables. This mileage is apportioned as follows: Europe, 2,840,000 kilometers (1,764,790 miles); Asia, 500,000 kilometers (310,685 miles); Africa, 160,000 kilometers (99,419 miles); Australia, 350,000 kilometers (217,479 miles); America, 4,050,000 kilometers (2,516,548 miles). It will therefore be seen from the above that America leads and has almost double the mileage of Europe.

The Odeski Novosti learns that the law relating to the residence of Jews in Siberia contains a technical error, and, when rectified, permission will be granted to the Jews to live there.

The Christian Advocate, New York, announces that upon the completion of its current volume the form of the paper is to be changed to about one half the present size. "The number of pages will be forty, and about once a month it will increased to forty-eight. Illustrations will be used."

The Rev. Winnington Ingram, of the "Oxford House," in Bethnal Green, London, is quoted in The Christian Commonwealth as saying, when preaching recently before the University of Cambridge, that, from his personal experience, he believed that no part of England was "in itself more morally depressive than East London, with the possible exception of South London," and that only 1 per cent. of the population attended either church or chapel.

The Presbyterian says that the offer was recently made of a prize to any teacher or scholar in a Sunday school at Los Angeles, California, who could without preparation, correctly repeat the Ten Commandments. Out of 280 members of the school only six or seven ventured to compete, and no one was successful.

LAMONI, IOWA, DEC. 22, 1897.

THE EDITOR ABROAD.

I OCCUPIED two Sundays at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, the 21st and the 28th November, had only small audiences.

Left here on the morning of the 29th, and reached the Capital City, Washington, and there found Sr. M. A. Jolley at her sister's, Mrs. Elizabeth Bloom, a widow since the late war. Sr. Jolley met me at the station and took me to the home, No. 2907 Fourteenth Street, N. W.

On Tuesday, the 30th November, I went to Richmond, Virginia, the capital of the late Southern Confederacy, to meet Dr. P. P. Starke, dentist, of that historic and now famous Southern city. I went by previous arrangement with Dr. Starke, who had by quite thorough investigation, satisfied himself that the Reorganized Church was true in faith, doctrine, and organization, and was also the true successor of the church organized by divine command, April 6, 1830. He met me at the train, and I was soon comfortably located in the comfortable boarding house of Mrs. Hart, where I was quite well cared for during my stay in Richmond.

After previous consultation with the doctor, we sought the James River on the morning of December 1, a cool but bracing day, and in a suitable place I baptized him into the fold of the church militant. And in his office, corner of Second and Broad Streets, I confirmed him by the laying on of hands for the conferment of the gift of the Holy Ghost; and, being led thereto by the impression of the Spirit, I ordained him to the eldership, there being no branch or organized church there by which a vote could be taken.

Bro. Starke gave notice last March to the pastor and brethren of the First Baptist Church, of Richmond, of which he was a member, that owing to a change in his faith and beliefs, he desired that his name be dropped from the roll of members, and requested that his letter of withdrawal be read to the church. This was not done; so last September, he notified them by letter that he proposed joining the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, and again requested that his name be dropped from the records of the church. It appears that this last request was complied with, and at my visit he was free in conscience to unite with us in baptism.

The good Spirit of the Master was with me in attending to these rites, and witnessed that the James River, in the Old Dominion of Virginia, had been sanctified by the first baptism in its historic waters in the history of the Reorganized Church.

The Doctor is a young man, unmarried, quite well known in his circles, and is quite well informed in general church history, doctrine, theories, and organizations. He has strong desires for the work, and will be able to assist whoever may hereafter go into the historic city to open the work there, by his experience, knowledge, and practical acquaintance in the city, which he hopes will not be long in being brought about.

Beyond doubt Dr. Starke will find in his own case how bitter persecution by former friends, for religious opinion's sake may be. It has already begun, and will assume proportions as soon as his act is known. He has written an excellent article for the press, for publication of which he had promise; and it is to be hoped that he will not be disappointed.

From Richmond I returned to Pittsburgh, via Washington, spending Friday in the latter place, viewing some of the noted sights of the city of magnificent distances.

The city is much improved since I first visited it in 1866. It had not then recovered from the awful throes of the four years internecine warfare; and much of it was an improved waste. Now, however, the spread of a healthy growth has widened the city, until a population of 270,000, occupies the beautiful site. Whether it is because I have seen the magnificent heights around some of our far western cities, like Los Angeles, San Francisco, Kansas City, Burlington, and Nauvoo, or that the recollection of the Capital of the United States has grown dim after the lapse of fifteen years, when last I saw it, I do not know; but the site of the whole city seemed to my sight to be low, the heights nothing like so magnificent as they once appeared; the distances once deemed magnificent have been dwarfed by occupancy, and the introduction of the electric street railway system has shortened the ways, until the old darkey's saying about the way is almost verified: "Ef yo' takes the road afoot, it will take yo' all de day to get dar; ef yo' takes de saddle hoss, or de co'ch, it will take fo' ours; but, ef yo' takes de kyars, sho yo' dar now."

Howbeit, a fire destroyed the power house of some of the railway lines awhile ago, and on my visit these lines were being operated with horses, a going back to primitive railway service painfully slow in this day of rushing things. One of them ran our way, and so I had the difficult pleasure to measure of riding on the horse railway cars. I am greatly indebted to Sisters Bloom and Jolley for care and sight-seeing in the Capital City. It is a beautiful city, notwithstanding the low altitude of the location.

Congress has done a magnificent thing in providing for the erection and care of the Congressional Library. The building is probably one of the most magnificent in proportion, design, and finish in the world; and is a decided credit to the Congress and the Nation. It dwarfs the Capitol, however, and makes it look low and squatty—bad word, but significant—in comparison. The Washington monument, unfinished at my last visit, is finished, and is an unrelieved straight shaft, square, and some five hundred feet high. It stands on a raised, low mound, and is surrounded by low grounds, though they may be beautiful in summer and well kept.

The Smithsonian Institute, once almost outside of the city, is now in it, and surrounded on all sides by public and private buildings, some of modern style that make the once plain, but massive looking buildings look ancient and out of date in architectural design. A notable instance of the difference between the buildings of the Institute, Agricultural Department, United States Fish Commission, Patent Office, and modern buildings, is seen in the contrast shown by the comparison of the new Post Office building for the District with those named above; the latter is fine, imposing, grand; while the former are dwarfed both in dimensions and design. The same is seen in the beautiful building erected by the District to accommodate the gift of statuary and paintings, made by the late W. W. Corcoran, as contrasted with the one the same collection occupied a few years back. The same disappointing disparity between the old and the new is seen in the Treasury Buildings, the War and Navy buildings, and the White House, the Presidential residence, and some of the magnificent modern edifices for public and private use, seen nearly all over the city.

One thing commends itself to the visiting United States citizen, and that is the magnificently paved and splendidly cared for streets of this should be typical American city. The streets are finely paved in concrete, wide and well kept. The White Brigade, a corps of men employed in street cleaning, dressed in white canvas pants, jacket, and helmet, are as busy as bees gathering up the accumulating debris of city waste, and wear and tear. It was raining while I was there, and the streets were in places washed clean, and were almost as white as marble. When there last a part of the pavement was in asphaltum that softened in the summer and became soft and sticky, and in the winter was hard, heavy, and cracked. One thing, however, seemed to me to be bad, Pennsylvania Avenue,—the traditional thoroughfare between the Capitol and the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments, and the President's Mansion,—is disfigured by street car lines, and fast being encroached upon by pushing, enterprising business houses. It is a pity that such beautiful things should be corrupted to the uses of traffic and gain. But the contest between the utilities and sentiment is unequal, and sentiment must go to the wall.

As an American citizen, it would be pleasing to me to see the City of Washington the first city in the world in beauty and grandeur of its public buildings. It should be second to none. The city of Toronto is building a city hall, the tower of which is to be some hundreds of feet in height. The design is massive and beautiful. It is, or appears to be as large as the Treasury building, and is much more attractive in its appearance. And yet, Toronto has but 250,000 population, Washington 270,000 and still in its infancy. I saw the active representatives of the military forces of the Crown's dependencies, some 2,400 strong, armed and in uniform, marching to the sound of trumpet and drum. In Richmond, the whilom capital of the late Southern Confederacy, I saw the Richmond Blues, a magnificent array of blue uniformed men with white plumes in their hats, marching to the sound of the band and the drums. In the capital city of the greatest Republic known to the present world, I saw not a soldier nor a gun; except the tradition-keeping cannon standing at an entrance to public grounds or buildings. The only men in uniforms were the bluecoated police guardians of the public peace, the bluecoated citizen-hatted drivers of the hacks for hire, and the white-helmeted street cleaners and not a weapon save the policeman's clubs, the drivers' whips, and the street cleaners' brooms and huge dust pans. I noted this and was thankful that the stars and stripes, "Old Glory," still floated over a nation's Capital City whose peace and the dignity of whose citizens were maintained by the acquiescence of public and private citizens in the laws which themselves had helped to make, and not by an obedience to monarchical edicts enforced and maintained by armed men kept by public expense "in times of peace."

When Sisters Bloom and Jolley read this screed they may wonder when their quiet guest had time and opportunity to see and note all here set down.

I reached Pittsburg on Saturday evening at 6:55, December 4, via the Pennsylvania Railroad to Baltimore, Harrisburg, Altoona, etc., in time to get a restless night's rest, and on the Sunday morning at 7:45, with Bro. G. H. Hulmes, of Pittsburg branch, who kindly volunteered to accompany me, went to Fayette City, a mining town forty-five miles up the Monongahela River, where in the last two years a branch of some thirty-three or four members has grown up under the fostering care of the missionaries, and Brn. Robert Perry and George Hull, and Arthur Bickerton, brother of Elder William Bickerton, once the active president of a movement having its seat at Elizabeth City, in the Monongahela Valley, if we have remembered correctly, but now "scattered and peeled;" the principal number being now some forty odd under Elder Cadman, and located a few miles up the river beyond Fayette City. We, Bro. George and I, found a nice little band of believers under charge of Bro. Perry. Brothers Shotton met us and had us get off at Naomi, a two mile walk from Fayette, where in the hall we met a very attentive congregation, to whom I tried to preach the word, ably assisted by Bro. George and the singers led by Bro. Shotton and little Emma Perry. From Naomi, after service in hall held at 10:30 to 12 m. we went to Bro. Hull's, where the outer man was cheered and the inner man strengthened by Sr. Hull's good cheer. At 2:30 p. m. we met a good congregation in the Opera House, a large hall in center of town. The singing was good, service again in charge of Bro. Hulmes, and the Editor for the preacher; attention good. After supper with Bro. Arthur Bickerton and family we returned to the Opera House, where a large congregation met the man from Lamoni; who tried hard to do his part, and was blessed with good liberty. All seemed to be edified and pleased. Bro. Perry looked happy and said: "This is the most notable day in the history of this branch. We will all remember this day. We may never have another like it."

The services in the evening were more than usually impressive for some reason. Bro. Hulmes followed the preacher in a few well chosen words of argument and comfort to the saints. At its close a citizen sent a sum of money to the preacher by the hand of Bro. Hull, with the statement that the sermon had been worth that much to him. The sum given was six dollars. It was timely, for the preacher's traveling fund was running low. Has God ever forsaken his ministry? or left his servants to falter by the wayside, if faithful to their service?

Brn. Perry and Hull seemed to be of the opinion that the work and the branch had been helped and strengthened by our coming among them.

Some of the staunch members are of the one time Bickertonite brethren; the policy pursued by President William Bickerton and after him Elder Cadman having hurt their influence and loosened the hold of their philosophy on the people. It is strange to us that men will persist in the pursuit of parts only of the latter-day work, claiming to be saints and the church, and yet standing in the way of progress to be finally overwhelmed in the onward sweep of the grand work. It seems to us that it would be far better to accept the inevitable, drop their partial theories and personal ambitions, turn in with the progressive elements of the church and be "workers together with God," putting on the whole armor, being led by the word of God, accepting Isaiah's injunction, "To the law and to the testimony. If they speak not according to this word there is no light in them," rather than consenting to be led by wild personal vaporings and the imperfect revelations of so-called "living oracles," who discard the word.

It was certainly a pleasure to wind up the week's work begun on Monday, November 29, by a visit to Fayette City, and an administration among so promising and faithful band of believers, strangers and yet well known; never seen before and yet familiar as members of the one family, as we found at Fayette City. Brn. Perry, Hull, and Bickerton, may your shadows never grow less, but your usefulness and spiritual stature ever grow unto the fullness of the stature of men in Christ Jesus.

ON TO RICHMOND.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH'S visit to Richmond, Virginia, narrated in his account of his itinerary in the East, brought out the following, which appeared in the Richmond, Virginia, Times of December 1. It is to be hoped that this friendly notice will result in a better understanding of our work by the people of the Old Dominion, and lead to more favorable consideration of our message:—

MR. JOSEPH SMITH HERE.

THE DISTINGUISHED HEAD OF THE LATTER DAY SAINTS IN THE CITY.

Mr. Joseph Smith, President of "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ," is in the city in the interest of the church work.

Mr. Smith comes from Lamoni, Iowa, where the central organization is located and incorporated under the laws of Iowa. The church accepts the Book of Mormon as doctrinal, the Bible, and also the Doctrine and Covenants, which latter contains covenants which the church agree to observe among themselves and also contains what they accept as revelations which have been given from time to time.

The church is and always has been distinctly monogamic, and does not countenance polygamy nor other heretical doctrines as they believe, which are taught by the Utah "Church of Jesus Christ," under the leadership of Brigham Young, and subsequent presiding officers. The two organizations being separate in government, officers, and doctrines which they consider irreconcilable.

Mr. Smith comes in the course of a tour through Canada and a number of the cities of the United States, at various points of which he has received favorable press notices, the people often being surprised to learn that any organization embracing latter day views and accepting the Book of Mormon, can be anything save polygamic.

The specific mission of this church is claimed to be the restoration of the gospel, by divine revelation, of that church which was overthrown in early Christian ages and was to be restored according to prophecy after something over one thousand years disorganization.

Mr. Smith leaves after a few days' stay and will continue his work in other States before returning to his home in Iowa.

VERDICT AGAINST MOBBERS.

SCRANTON, Miss., Dec. 18.

PRES. JOSEPH SMITH,

Lamoni, Iowa.

Verdict of guilty in ten cases; mobbers fined; justice' court.

F. P. SCARCLIFF.

The HERALD readers will remember the assault made upon Bro. T. C. Kelley, by a mob, near Escatawpa, Mississippi, about the 1st of September; that Bro. Kelley had been ordered to cease holding tent services, but upon resuming was waylaid and beaten by a mob, headed by a local preacher. Complaint was made against the mobbers, but it was feared that justice might fail to reach them. However, the telegram given above shows that the sentiment for right has been sufficiently strong to secure conviction of the offenders.

We congratulate the brethren upon the verdict. The community where the outrage was perpetrated is also to be congratulated upon the result. If anything is foreign to the spirit of Americanism and its institutions, it is the spirit that would suppress exercise of the right of free speech or any other privilege guaranteed under the law to all men in common.

Any disposition to deny the free exercise of any right common to all, or to coerce or unduly influence any individual, contrary to the free exercise of his own judgment, unhampered and unhindered, ought to be set down upon, and with emphasis. We hope to see such policies sustained, in church, in state, and in departments of life that shall make the people free indeed, and universally so.

May God speed the right.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. W. E. MESSENGER, of Prescott, Iowa, forwards a copy of a document, "The coming conflict of the nations," written by R. W. Rogers, of Hennessey, Oklahoma; once a Methodist, then a Seventh-Day Adventist, now organizer of an independent church movement. It requires no special prophetic foresight to discern the preparations for impending conflicts in the world. It did require such foresight sixty years ago, when all was apparently placid and moving on the even tenor of peaceful progress. Joseph Smith and his coworkers both warned the world and presented, under Christ, a means for its deliverance, as early as the year 1830. There are many prophets abroad who run without tidings, whose professed interpretations and predictions hinder rather than aid the going forth of the legitimate warning of the world through the proclamation of the gospel. The world needs the authoritative declaration that God is calling upon his servants to proclaim, not the uncertain sounds being multiplied by lo here's and lo there's. Those who compose the numerous and increasing army of self-commissioned prophetic characters who are perplexing the people with confusing messages have as much need to repent as has the world they are seeking to warn.

A local paper gives account of the sudden death of the young daughter of Bro. and Sr. A. B. Kirkendall, of Creola, Ohio; her death resulting from burns caused by her clothing catching fire. The parents have the sympathy of saints and friends in the sad visitation.

Letters are received from Bro. Alfred and Sr. Jennie Wright, of Chariton, Iowa, and Sr. I. L. Jones, of Canton, Illinois. The former write of preparation needed to meet the Master, the latter a review of the closing year's experiences, and of hopes for continuing progress in the coming year.

Bro. A. B. Pearce reports two baptized at Providence, Rhode Island, December 6, by Bro. George Smith—both young men of talent. Local brethren were active in Providence and adjoining branches.

Brethren have sent us copies of a purported report of Pontius Pilate to the Emperor Tiberius concerning the trial and crucifixion of Christ. The document has long since been pronounced unauthentic. See HERALD November 24, page 2 of cover.

A Thurston, Nebraska, paper, date not given, contains a courteous statement of the labors of Bro. W. A. Smith, of Persia, Iowa, who has been laboring at Thurston and adjacent towns. It commends his preaching and recommends him to the people as a man worthy of a hearing.

A surplusage of letters requires that some be epitomized.

Bro. M. T. Short wrote from Gilchrist, Illinois, of various matters of passing interest. He has some hopes for the rising generation in Utah, but little for those active in evading the plain teachings of the law of Christ. He enjoins humility, love, and a close observance of and reliance upon the revelations given to the church, that requisite unity and progress may be realized, also observance of the Word of Wisdom, etc.; and calls especial attention to the command which prohibits use of tobacco or strong drinks. These things observed, with diligence, avoiding jealousies, with good will toward all, he thinks will insure success all along the line.

Bro. J. A. King writes that saints at West Pullman, Illinois, were earnest and united in branch and Sunday school work. Attendance of nonmembers quite good.

Bro. G. S. Smith, Au Gres, Michigan, writes: Bro. David Smith had labored acceptably in that community, where he is highly esteemed. Saints earnest in branch work and hold regular semi-weekly services. They would be glad to have some of the ministry with them again; have had no preaching for four months.

By letter from Bro. W. B. Toney, of Indian Territory, to Bro. S. V. Bailey, of Lamoni, we learn that he had lately concluded a discussion in Washington County, Arkansas, in which he had gained a signal victory and baptized two. Bro. Toney is booked for another battle in January.

Vienna, Dec. 13.—Unrest continues in Bohemia. To-day the troops have patrolled the streets of Prague and special guards are stationed at the German theaters, owing to the fact that a bomb was found last Thursday evening near the Royal German Theater. There are numerous arrests daily, and the prisons are so full that it has been found necessary to discharge the minor cases. Slight collisions between the students and the police have occurred at Prague, Cracow, and Gratz. During the present week thirty newspapers have been confiscated in Bohemia.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 13.—The Novosti says that the absence of protests from the other powers at Germany's evident determination to remain at Kiao-Chou Bay indicates that the partition of China has actually begun and will proceed quickly. Another newspaper expresses the belief that the United States, among other powers, may object to the permanent occupation of Kiao-Chou Bay by Germany. Russian official circles, however, appear indifferent to the step taken by Germany.

London cablegram, December 11.—Germany has demanded apologies and indemnity from Portugal for ill-treatment of German sailors at Lisbon. The demands are humiliating and the government dare not grant them for fear of revolution, as the Lisbon people are turbulent and lean strongly toward republicanism. On the other hand, Germany may seize Delagoa Bay, a Portuguese possession and one of the principal factors in the economic future of South Africa, and by which Emperor William might fulfill his dream of establishing a protectorate over the Transvaal Republic. To the latter step, however, Great Britain would object, with a strong force if necessary; and Admiral Rawson has been ordered to Delagoa Bay in anticipation of Germany's intentions.

The Amalgamated Society of British engineers voted almost unanimously against accepting the proposals of the employers. The Senior Professors of Oxford University have signed a protest against the attitude of the employers. The strike began July 13; loss to British trade, $75,000,000; number of workingmen affected, 200,000.

Reports from Simla the 13th. General Kempster's rear guard was attacked and cut off by tribesmen on the 11th, and was obliged to intrench for the night. The enemy was dislodged on the 12th after a severe engagement. News of the 14th states General Westmacott's march into the Sturi-Khel country was a continuous action. The enemy closed in upon the rear guard at short range and British losses were heavy. Further news of the 15th, give accounts of most desperate fighting, resulting finally in the British forces inflicting severe punishment upon the tribesmen. Both sides showed great courage.

Philadelphia marine advices from Argentine state that the condition of affairs, owing to the locust plague is "horrible in the extreme;" that without immediate aid the inhabitants will starve. Locusts in clouds swarm and destroy every blade of grass. Railroad traffic was suspended for a time because of the dense swarms. The government is taking active steps to rid the country of the plague. In one locality 1,000 tons of locust eggs, collected by the natives by government direction, were being destroyed.

London advices of the 13th state that England has agreed not to oppose Germany's occupation of Kiao-Chou in return for Germany's promise not to interfere in the Egyptian question. Germany has extended the area of her occupation and now controls four hundred square miles, with a German administration at Kiao-Chou. Lansing, Mich., Dec. 13.—As a result of an exhaustive investigation of its workings in Michigan cities and villages, Labor Commissioner Cox gives it as his opinion that municipal ownership of electric lighting plants is entirely successful where the same careful management that is found in the conduct of private business affairs prevails. Their failure has resulted, it was generally found, when the management of the plants had been intrusted to politicians rather than to electricians. An aggregate of $6,500,000 is invested in public lighting plants in Michigan.

There will be interest in the announcement that the plan for a union or federation of Central American republics, which was interrupted some months since, will be carried to completion. The States taking part in the Union are Nicaragua, Salvador, and Honduras, the republics of Guatemala and Costa Rica still holding aloof from the arrangement. The union will amount to a practical consolidation under one national administration instead of a mere alliance of independent republics, as has been supposed, although each will retain control of its internal affairs.—Ex.

The Mexican Herald editorially states that European nations are looking forward to the time when by the weakness of the great republic, the champion of the Monroe doctrine, they may proceed under one pretext and another to carve up South and Central America. "The Pope's encyclical to Canadian bishops is enroute. The bishops are enjoined to unity and silence on church questions." On reading the foregoing one is reminded of the policy of the Utah Church, which practically counsels silence when sending out its elders with instructions not to discuss "church questions" with elders of the Reorganized Church. There are strong points of similarity between the general policies of the Roman and Utah churches.

"We are quick to see the ill—we are slow to share the blame;

STOP AND THINK.—NO. 1.

BY SR. ALMIRA.

YES, let us stop and think when we hear an evil report about anyone, and especially about a friend. Weigh the matter well before accepting it. If it will not balance on our scale of charity, try consistency. Study the different points in the statement, and if they do not seem consistent, call to mind some of the false reports that have gone out against us and been told and retold till all engaged in the scandal believed it to be true, and yet not the first particle was true. Probably not one thought in the statement had ever entered your mind, and yet it had been buzzing from one to another, and each telling, or buzzing, had added a little to the former statement, or clipped a little—rarely though. Scandal too frequently goes at railroad speed, while truth comes creeping along like a snail.

We are liable to misunderstand, and some people are liable to misrepresent,—the reason why is best known to themselves,—and we are sorry that we have reason to say that some people—and we hope only a few—manufacture stories for amusement, or from a revengeful spirit. We have seen those who seemed to enjoy this evil practice as earnestly as others do labors of love; never for one moment thinking what the result might be, how much food it gave the gossip, or how deeply it wounded the feelings of others, or how much it lowered them in the estimation of other people.

The following incident will illustrate the fact that it is very easy for one to misunderstand, or to make a mistake: A father who has fond affections for his children, and especially for his firstborn, fell into a fret, or we might say a passion by his own careless mistake. His son went away in the morning to his work, but expected to be at home sometime during the afternoon, as it would not take all day to finish the job. About one o'clock he saw the son, as he thought, on the street with a young man who was not considered first-class company, and especially for the young. He thought that the son had finished his work earlier than he expected, and was coming home to help him, so he went about his work expecting the other to join soon. But no boy put in his appearance, and the father at first wondered, then concluded that he had gone off and was foolishly spending his time with this low fellow. He had forbidden the same many times, adding harsh threats which would be executed if he was not obeyed. Time passed on; it was two o'clock. No boy came to help him, as was expected. His work was hard and he needed help, and in such cases had it, but now the idolized son was getting undutiful, all in consequence of keeping company with that detestable fellow. The more he thought the matter over the more hideous grew the aspect, and at length his ire kindled, and the smoke of its torment covered all parental love. 'Tis awful, but yet there are many who indulge in the baneful habit. He fretted and fumed to himself and at length went into the house and poured out his feelings to the comfort or discomfort of his wife, and a friend who was present. Calling the boy by name he said: "He has gone off with that low-lived puppy, and he knows I want him to help me—the undutiful scamp! He don't do anything, don't pretend to help me, but spends his time strolling around with that numthead—the miserable rascal! He'll wish he hadn't gone, or I miss my guess;" expressions and intonations giving force to his words. "I wish he would go off and stay forever with him!" etc., were the harsh remarks uttered against his idolized child.

The mother calmly remarked: "I never knew him to do such a thing before. I can't understand it, but I think he will be at home soon." He was a very prompt lad, was faithful in discharging his duties at home, and was diligent in study. He came about four o'clock. The father being out, accosted him in a rough manner, accusing him of being off with the said young man, and leaving him to do all the work alone.

"I have not seen him to-day, neither have I been off to play, but I worked till the job was finished, and then came directly home," said the boy. The father would not accept the statement, although it was true, but still persisted in his conjectures. His false imaginations were burning in his soul like a consuming fire, as it were, burning out his love and his sense of justice due to his child. Just then the son of the man who employed the lad drove by.

"If you do not believe me," said the latter, "ask him."

The father would not condescend to expose his own hasty mistake, so let the blame rest on the mind of the innocent one, and cherished his gross injustice in his own bosom. O, how unfit was that heart to present itself before the Father above, until it had sought forgiveness of the injured one.

He too came in and gave vent to his deeply wounded as well as aggravated feelings before his mother and his friend. Neither made a reply, for it was so unlike him they knew that he had been unjustly dealt with. "Parents, provoke not your children to wrath," presented itself to the mind of the writer, and also the thought that the father was accountable, not for his own sin only, but also for his son's.

Not a word was passed between them that evening. Every expression, every movement showed that each was very unhappy, all caused by a careless mistake and a stubborn will. The lad that the father saw and thought was his son was a young man who was visiting in the neighborhood. A careless glance without stopping to think was the cause of all those unpleasant feelings, and who knows what the final result may be? Such things make an impression, and often a lasting impression. In all such cases the one who has wronged the young should acknowledge the same, and strive with the help of God to overcome their weakness—or error.

DUTIES OF SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS.

A TEACHER'S duty is so broad it is impossible to speak of only a few of the most important things. We should not allow any minor thing to keep us from our for in so doing we forfeit not only the respect of our pupils but our position as well. Whether teacher or pupil, our place in the Sunday school left unfilled, can be filled by no one else.

A teacher should possess

FIRMNESS.

She cannot afford to hesitate when action is necessary. Children will quickly discover this fault and lose respect for the decisions and directions of such an instructor. Do not be hasty. But learn to think and act promptly. She should no preferences based upon the outward appearance of families. Rich and poor should be alike. Remember they all have souls to save.

It is hardly necessary to speak of the importance of before appearing in our place as teacher. A neglect of this duty can soon be detected by the pupil. And all know too well the result.

If we were to deliver an earthly king's message, how careful we would be in presenting it correctly. How much more careful we should be in delivering our heavenly King's message.

And now in conclusion, the successful Sunday school worker is the one who has the love of God in his heart, who attends to his work, not because of any little personal credit or honor it might chance to contain, but from a sense of duty we owe to our heavenly Father, a desire to advance his cause and kingdom; one who gives his attention not only when the work prospers, but who works with a will when times are dull. Let us go to work with a zeal, leaning upon the promises of that One who assures us success.

LIBRARIES.

DURING the year the association has taken action on the subject of libraries, and has selected a general librarian to gather useful information for those contemplating the purchase of books. But few realize the whether good or bad. Most of our fathers settled in this land when it was new, not having the advantages of books and papers which we have to-day, and many have not developed the habit of reading as it should be; but it remains for us to improve these opportunities for the rising generation.

We believe that every home, and especially where there are children, should have a library of as many books as can be conveniently secured; and that all may have a variety of books it is necessary that the Sunday school have a library also. The influence of books may be gleaned from the following reasons why every school should have a library. These are given, supposing, of course, that the books are all pure and good.

1. Books entertain the student—filling his mind and keeping it occupied with useful thoughts, thus keeping him safer from temptation and evil.
2. They broaden the mind.
3. They aid in forming character.
4. They help him to think the thoughts of great thinkers, thus developing the power of thought.
5. They give a large amount of general information.
6. They bring him into closer acquaintance with the world and its leaders.
7. By knowing the achievements of great men the ambition is aroused to do likewise.
8. Show him the beauty of those things which by his own nature he would not perceive or enjoy.
9. They create love and sympathy for mankind.
10. Draw him nearer to God and teach him how he may find Him.

THE OLD FAMILY BIBLE,

with pictures in, has had a great influence upon the life of your writer. The sweet memories of childhood's happy home cluster around that old book. Ofttimes it was taken from its resting place and laid upon the table, around which would gather three or four children. There may have been some soiled hands which left their marks upon the pages; there were careless or untrained fingers which caused many of the leaves to be torn while looking eagerly and earnestly at the pictures; but those children were gaining, unconsciously, knowledge that would remain forever. As the pictures were studied many questions were asked, and mother came to tell the story; but even that did not satisfy them, and not until they were able to read it for themselves were they contented. In this way was the for extended research in God's word. Through constant use the book was almost worn out, and by some it may have been considered an unprofitable investment; but one of those children can testify that its influence cannot be counted in money, neither in time. Eternity alone will reveal its work and show the character of the investment. Every stain upon the page may have prevented a stain upon the life page of one of those children; every rent in the leaves may have prevented a rent in the heart of a loving mother. If you have one of those books, let it be open to the inspection of the children. If you have none, a sacrifice of something else will secure one.

FOUNDATION LAID

What is the

of a book of paper and ink in comparison to the eternal welfare of a living soul?

In conclusion, we urge upon every parent and every earnest worker to study this subject of books for the home and books for the Sunday school, and do all in your power to extend their influence.

CHARLEY FRY,

In Sunday School Newspaper.

Letter Department.

14 Gloucester Road, BRISTOL,
England, Nov. 26.

Editors Herald:—I spent nearly six weeks in the western district of South Wales, where I last wrote you. I did not meet with the success I had hoped, so far as reaching the outside world is concerned, as but few attended our meetings. The people are more under the domination of the clergy than in our own land. At Morrision, I am told, our brethren had a good Sunday school up to a certain day, when all of a sudden nearly the entire school were absent. Seeking for the cause the fact was revealed that the minister had been around and told the people not to allow their children to attend our school. At Tumble, the minister went from house to house and warned the people to stay away from our services. This is one reason it is so hard to reach the people. Many are afraid or ashamed to be seen at our meetings, and when we pass along the street, people stare at us as though we were some new species. We spent one Sunday in Bristol, attended a Baptist Sunday school, and had the pleasure of addressing the children. Our counsel was to accept the word of God in preference to their written lessons, to believe what the Bible said when open, and gave them a few thoughts on character building, all of which was indorsed, the children showing their appreciation by clapping their hands. I afterwards told the superintendent my faith, and found him rather a liberal minded man. I also attended the pastor's class, composed, I should judge, of from four hundred to five hundred men of all shades of belief, and unbelief, where a sort of free discussion is indulged in. I am told that anyone has the privilege of presenting their ideas here. It occurs to me that this will be a good place to present our claims. As soon as I get time I intend to make application for a hearing. If I succeed, I want to follow it up with a series of lectures.

Sister Pitt is busy sewing and making up articles, and selling them to try and raise the required amount to pay for a hall and advertising. It is rather a big undertaking; but I do not doubt that she will succeed, if her health only continues. We need money in this country to reach what is called the middle class. I believe we would have better success even among the poor, if we could reach those in better circumstances. But if we meet in little out of the way places, in poor neighborhoods, comparatively few will come out to hear us.

October 28, we went to Lydney to attend the conference of the Eastern district of Wales. Here we found a live little body of saints. The conference was well attended, and a splendid spirit of unity and love prevailed. They quite cheerfully corrected some things that seemed to need correcting, and the best of feeling prevailed throughout. We were led to tell them how some were cheating themselves out of God's blessings by failing to comply with the law of temporal things; to the truth of which the Spirit bore witness. A general inquiry concerning the law of tithing followed. The explanations given seemed satisfactory, and so far as we could learn, every one went home resolving to renew their diligence in this direction. That these resolutions were not vain is evidenced by the fact that the Bishop's agent already reports sufficient money coming in to meet all present demands and pay off past indebtedness; and adds "The Lord seems to have moved upon the saints in a marvelous manner of late." This is very encouraging.

The saints at Lydney are blessed in a great degree with the outward manifestation of the Spirit, which we hope they will use wisely. We were moved to tell them that they were receiving a wonderful amount of power, which they would have to utilize properly or they might expect to have it withdrawn. When, if they still persisted in seeking for the manifestations merely for the sake of having them, the enemy might see his chance to get in and work mischief among them. We are glad to find the saints willing to be counseled as to the proper use of the gifts. The time has been when such counsel was looked upon by some as opposition to the gifts. God grant that the saints may have wisdom in the exercise of all these blessings.

After spending a little more than a week at Lydney, I went to Nantyglo. Here we found a little branch composed mostly of one family. The two Elders Jones, father and son, are active in the work. The town cryer had been sent around to cry out our meetings, a convenient hall secured in a good location, and the result was we had good interest as well as fairly good audiences from the first—the largest in fact since we came in this country. We held seven preaching services in all, and the last night the hall was packed and many standing outside in the rain, so we were told, during the entire service. The windows were open so that they could hear outside as well as in. Our audiences were composed mostly of men, which seemed a little strange. Some who had not been inside a church for years seemed the most interested. Our services seem to have created considerable talk in the town, and we are informed our side found many friends to defend the truth. The indications are in favor of a good work here if the saints remain faithful.

We held one service at Tredegar; here another brother Jones secured a room and a good audience, many of the miners coming direct from the mines, not having time to wash up. We had excellent liberty, and all seemed greatly interested. I felt that there were some noble souls hidden behind some of these black faces. As I find myself in some of these out of the way places, sometimes I wonder whether I am not helping to fulfill the prophecy of Jeremiah 16:16.

After nine days' visit at Nantyglo, we called at Aberaman. Here we found another little body of saints struggling to uphold the banner of righteousness. The branch seems to have had its dark days, and some of the members severe trials. But through it all, some noble souls were found clinging to the rod of iron; and the indications are now that the Lord is about to revive his work in this place. Two were baptized the same evening that I arrived. Two had been baptized a few weeks previous; one of whom has since been ordained an elder, he an Englishman, and one who is very zealous, and who will, if faithful, be able to do a good work, we feel assured. We remained here a week, preaching in a private house; a number of old time saints and some few outside the fold attended. We tried to instruct and cheer the saints as best we could, and have reason to believe that the next time we visit them, conditions will be better for reaching the world. Most of the saints here can understand the English language; so we felt at home among them. Some few, however, could talk or understand but little of the language.

Some matters needing our attention at Bristol, and it being so near Thanksgiving, we ran home for a five day's visit, where wife and cousins had arranged a regular American Thanksgiving dinner—pumpkin pie and all. We had much indeed to be thankful for. A letter from home brought the good news of our son Fred's recovery from his very severe illness, and that the rest of the family were well. Wife is enjoying fairly good health for her, and rejoicing in being able to assist in mission work. This, together with a happy home at Bristol, and the many other evidences of God's favor made it a thanksgiving day for us indeed. I only wished it might have been so that Bro. Heman could have been with us; but we have not seen each other since the second day after his arrival.

I expect to finish my work in Wales by Christmas for the present, and visit different points in England, when I hope to meet Bro. Heman. I am feeling well and hopeful.

Yours in bonds,

F. G. PITT.

P. S.—Thanks to the kind friends who have sent us papers. We are making good use of them and need more.

F. G. P.

BYRNEVILLE, Ind., Dec. 4.

Editors Herald:—Byrneville branch is in a good organized condition, about fifty in number; but the work seems to be moving slowly. We have one added to our number now and then. We believe as many have said before, that we should come up higher; that we should strive to live better from day to day, that we might escape the judgments that are coming upon the people and that will continue to grow worse, until Christ's second advent.

So let us put our shoulder to the gospel wheel, and work and help to move this great latter-day work; for if we are stones in the building, we should be lively ones. If we have found place in that spiritual building, we have been placed there for a purpose; we have a work to perform. So let us go about teaching the doctrine of Christ wherever opportunity offers. This is a day of God's preparation, and a day of warning, and a day of calamity and destruction; for when we look about us we see these things on all sides. It is famine, earthquake, cyclone, wars, rumors of wars. This reminds us of section 102, paragraph 4, Doctrine and Covenants: "Behold, the destroyer I have sent forth to destroy and lay waste mine enemies; and not many years hence, they shall not be left to pollute mine heritage, and to blaspheme my name upon the lands which I have consecrated for the gathering together of my saints."

By the reading of this paragraph we have a warning that we might escape the destroyer that is sent forth; and may the saints take heed. The scriptures say that judgment will begin at the house of God; so let us be as wise stewards, and live in a way that we may be worthy of the name of saint, and be among the few that will meet Jesus Christ at his appearing, and be permitted to dwell with him on this earth in the thousand years' reign. We feel that this time is very near, and we are glad that the saints have knowledge sufficient that they can discern these things. See 1 Thessalonians 5:1: "But of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you." For this scriptural promise we are thankful, that we have so great a knowledge, and are not ignorant as some appear to be. This is a day of preparation and of calamity, so let us live faithful and worthy of our calling.

Your brother,

JAMES P. SAPPENFIELD.

FAGUNDUS, Pa., Dec. 6.

Editors Herald:—Elders I. M. Smith and G. W. Robley are in this vicinity and are getting good full houses to preach to, and some of the best families in the county are our friends, and take these brethren home with them; so the good work goes on. May God bless those who care for his servants as they go from place to place doing his work; and may God bless his servants as they go forth to declare his word, that the honest in heart may be gathered out and brought into the fold of Christ.

I felt sad when I read that letter of S. W. Simmons, Maysville, Ark., in Herald, Dec. 1, the last paragraph of which made me feel sad indeed. Dear saints, old and young, let us all do our part in paying our tithes, that the families of God's servants who forsake home and friends to tell of this latter-day gospel may not suffer. Just stop and think, and see what a sacrifice they and their families are making, and then think, What am I doing for the cause? It seems to me when I think of these things, that I am doing so little to help along; yet I try to do all I can. Sometimes I wish I was rich, so that I could give to the church a thousand or more dollars every year. It does me good to help along in a temporal way. I think it would be better for us in the hereafter if we were more prompt with our tithes and offerings, so that God's servants would not have to leave their fields of labor and go home to earn something to get their families food.

I do not mean to hurt anyone's feelings in what I have said, and I hope none will take offense at it. Just let us stop and think, What have I done that God does so much for me? Saints, are we worthy of all we get? Do we do our part? If not, let us commence now to do all that we can in our feeble way, both spiritually and temporally, and God will do his part. He will meet us more than half way, every time. So let us be as faithful as we can, and not hesitate to do anything that we can do, and God will bless us. I wish all the saints to pray for me that I may ever be faithful in doing my part of the Lord's work. Sometimes, when I think things over, I wish I was able to talk as well as some can, and then I would like to be where I could talk and do some good. I hope to be more worthy of God's blessings in the future than I have been in the past, that I may have greater blessings. Ever praying for the advancement of the church and the redemption of Zion, I am your brother in the one faith,

BOSTON, Mass., Dec. 9.

Editors Herald:—The Massachusetts district conference was held here on the 30th and 31st of September. It was of the best. A good representation of the district was in attendance, with their old-time zeal and earnestness manifest. The reports sent in were excellent; they show the local officers to have been active and commendable, unity existing among the saints. Words expressing cheer and confidence come in from all quarters. The Bishop's agent has been well sustained, with other things, and his reports bid fair to claim the blue ribbon. Our Richard is right up to time, active; and the saints esteem him.

October 6, I joined Bro. U. W. Greene at Stonington, Maine. We held four services here with excellent interest manifest. I have never seen a better interest manifest among both saints and outsiders in that place. Although there were two other meetings held in town on Sunday evening, the audiences were small, while our seats were filled. The Sunday school is being well conducted, under the leadership and untiring efforts of Sr. Colby, who is supported by others devoted to its interests. If faithful there is no reason why the saints should not gather in all that is valuable on the island in time. But the word "faithful" means much, yet the honor and success of the cause depend upon it. Bro. and Sr. Greene, with others, kindly cared for me while there. Duly appreciated.

The 11th found Bro. Greene and I at Marlboro, back of Bar Harbor, arriving in time to fill the evening appointment. We made our home with Bro. George W. Haman. He is an old soldier, and was in Andersonville prison, so we went over reminiscences while accepting his hospitality. The first snow-storm of the season struck us here, and we were home all one day; besides no one turned out to church at evening. It was a regular "down easter," but we were comfortable, and among pleasant friends. We held meetings in two schoolhouses while here, with a good interest manifest. There are some fish "hereabouts" to be caught ere long.

Monday, the 15th, Bro. Greene was called away to preach a funeral discourse, and I went to South Gouldsboro and preached to a small audience at evening in the schoolhouse. Continued meetings until Saturday with increasing audiences. Bro. Greene found me again during the week, and also Bro. S. O. Foss, who had just come in from the Aroostook. He aided us two evenings, and was to continue meetings over Sunday. We were pleasantly received and entertained here by the Brn. Sargents and Mr. Hammonds, very deserving folk, and those who do not belong to the church are giving its claims careful and respectful consideration. Brn. Greene and Blanchard did tent service here last summer with good effect. They have a good report among saints and outsiders, and Bro. Foss is highly spoken of; all of which is very pleasant to note.

The 20th the Mr. Hammonds placed us still more under obligation to them, the young man carrying us at an early hour to West Harbor, where we took boat to Bar Harbor; here we changed to the Frank Jones, in the meantime having met with Bro. McCuan, who accompanied us, and at evening arrived at Jonesport, where we met the happy countenance of Captain Mansfield, and was soon enconced at the "Mansfield Hotel" by a comfortable fire, and treated to some piping hot brown bread and beans, with other things to match, which made Bro. Greene smile complacently.

Sunday, after service, we (I) went over to Bro. and Sr. Walker's, and hung up for the remainder of the stay. There was a good attendance at the evening service—many of them familiar faces—and some say Sr. Mansfield could hear the preacher without her ear trumpet. He must have had liberty! It has gone into a proverb downeast here, when you can hear a preacher a mile he is having liberty! Bro. Greene has grown stouter and his lungs expanded nicely of late. He seems to be a coming man! It was pleasant to see Jonesport people again; but our program was so arranged that our stay had to be short.

We visited Indian River and held two services in the church, with good interest. Was entertained at Bro. Smith's and Uriah Kelley's. On inquiry it was encouraging to learn that the Kelley family is not dying out. They are reported as numerous around these parts. We accepted Sr. Kelley's invitation to dine with them on Thanksgiving. A number of the brethren came together and we spent the day pleasantly, concluding, after trial, that a "duck dinner" was just as good as turkey. Thanks! The Brn. Crowley and Johnson still reside here. We succeeded also in getting in two discourses at South Addison, under unfavorable circumstances, as it stormed almost constantly. The interest was excellent. Thanks to Bro. and Sr. Bray for a home and care while it rained. Our stay was too short here, but appointments were arranged ahead.

Sunday, the 28th, we held four services at Jonesport; i. e., Jonesport and Beal's Island, with old-time interest. There was a splendid turnout at the church in Jonesport at evening. The young folks did excellent singing. The whole service was of a high grade, which made one feel glad to be a saint in latter days, and others wish they were.

We were sorry to find Bro. Walker ailing, but he was gaining. He has been a good faithful soldier. Both he and Sr. Eliza have been devoted to the work for many years, and deserve the prayers, sympathy, and aid of the saints. If they have not "washed the saints' feet," they have their clothes. May the future find them in comfort.

Monday following we went out to Machias and received a cordial welcome at the home of Bro. Emery Foss with his very kind family, young Bro. Foss having conveyed us part way over. We were treated royally. On the way we called on the family of Bro. S. O. Foss to find them well and comfortable in their new house, but so far away from every place but that, it looked to us, and later, dined with Bro. Francis Foss, where we had a pleasant visit and saw the boss babe in our travel. It stormed so at evening that the preaching was dispensed with at Machias. Two others were held later on with good interest, considering the weather. The writer spent a part of a day with Bro. Mealy in Machias village, and his pleasant family—good Irish saints.

Thursday, December 2, young Bro. Foss conveyed us by team to Machiasport in time to take the four a. m. boat, and at evening we were in the schoolhouse on Little Deer Island, with a splendid audience to hear the word, having received letters and Sr. Mansfield's contribution of funds at Jonesport on the way. Sr. Mary is thoughtful. Here we met Bro. W. W. Blanchard, who had held meeting the evening before, and was looking after the financial part of the district. We received excellent care at the Brn. Blastow's, who are main supporters of the work here, Bro. Billings being in charge of the branch. There are signs of life here—going ahead. They are arranging for a permanent place of worship of their own. Poor fishermen, yet they do more for the cause than some who own their thousands. More than one "widow's mite" will tell in eternity. Bro. Hendricks, word ever goes, is of great courage in the faith.

Saturday, in company with a number of brothers and sisters, including Bro. B. Eaton as pilot, we crossed over by boat to the larger island and went to Mountainville to attend the district conference. The writer received a comfortable home at Bro. Peter Eaton's. Conference convened at two p. m., and the business was transacted in a satisfactory manner, Bro. Blanchard preaching to an attentive audience at evening. The wet weather hindered some on Sunday, but the regular services were held with good attendance and satisfactory results. Adjourned to meet in May on Little Deer Island. At the close accepted the invitation of Bro. Thomas Eaton and Charity to return with them to Stonington for the night.

If kind reception, good audiences, and attentive listeners are in evidence, the work in Maine is gaining. They need more local and general laborers. Bro. U. W. Greene is familiar with the whole line of labor and is pushing and highly respected. We had a pleasant preaching tour together which will long be remembered by the writer. Brn. W. W. Blanchard and S. O. Foss are highly spoken of as men and laborers. For lack of time we had to pass by Dixfield.

Monday, December 6.—After participating in a partridge and rabbit dinner with Bro. and Sr. Greene, in company with Bro. Blanchard—which was good enough for a king—three o'clock p. m. found me on the boat bound for Boston. Arrived here safely next morning and am booked for over Sunday.

Merry Christmas to Herald readers.

LUCAS, Iowa, Dec. 10.

Editors Herald:—Since my last communication I have visited Coal Creek and Pekay; found them not ready at that time for special meetings. I then went to Dunkerton, Black Hawk County, where Bro. James Goodrich secured the use of a hall, and we started a series of meetings, but only continued one week, as the hall was engaged ahead, one half of the time for different societies and dancing. We had small but attentive congregations, but I could not afford to lose half my time while there. Baptized Sister Carrie Peck, who is a bright young lady, and we feel will be an honored member of the church. Bro. Goodrich then secured the use of Jar-rad schoolhouse, eight miles north of Dunkerton, where we held forth over two weeks with fair congregations. Quite an interest was manifested by a number, but here our meeting was brought to a close by me being called home on account of my daughter being taken down with typhoid fever. She is now a little better, but quite weak, and requiring constant care day and night, after an unabated run of the fever of thirty-one days. On account of urgent requests of those outside of the church at Coal Creek, I will start for that place on the 11th inst. This is a new field I opened last spring, and seems to be very promising.

JASPER, Mo., Dec. 9.

Editors Herald:—Have just returned home from Indian Territory, and from our late conference at Blendville, Missouri, December 3 to 5. The Spirit of the Master was with us in power. Not a jar from first to last. The preaching was powerful, and the prayers and testimonies spiritual. We had a time of joy and peace. In looking over my order list in behalf of the Herald Office publications, I notice they foot up $19.73 since November 21. I am making an effort to get the saints and others posted in regard to this great latter-day work.

I find some that have not the sign of a church book or paper in the house,—and they are so poor that they cannot afford them. O no; but coffee, tea, and tobacco must come—and by all means tobacco. No money to pay into the church coffers; but life insurance and secret order assessments are promptly paid—or no go. But how about the company that is being represented by the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost: No pay—no go,—is that it? Well, I am thankful however that we have but few saints of that stamp, and I pray that God's Spirit may move upon them to a remembrance of God's law and the word of wisdom. Am home for a few days, then off about my Father's business.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. C. CHRESTENSEN.

ROBINSON, Ill., Dec. 11.

Editors Herald:—After leaving Lamoni last month I went to Burlington, Iowa, and preached two nights; at the close of the second night's service one lady gave her name for baptism. I referred her to Bro. Sheldon, he having come that day (none of the branch officers being present). The Burlington branch needs a good, wise, active laborer there for a time, to get the work in proper condition; there being some things out of order that need correcting.

I went to Xenia, Illinois, and preached Thanksgiving sermon in Charity Hall, at seven p. m.

On learning that four Utah elders were present, and that they were operating, and had been for some time in that vicinity, I concluded to show the difference between the Utah apostasy, and the Church of Jesus Christ as Reorganized, and represented by us. I so announced, and invited them to be present the next evening, stating they should have full liberty to reply, one or all of them. Next evening the hall was well filled, and the Utah elders were present; and after showing that every step taken by the Utah Church, from the time they left Nauvoo, was contrary to the law they professed to believe; citing their own history and the law, one of them attempted to reply. He begun by saying he was not as well posted in the history of their own church as he ought to be, and he would content himself by reading what eminent men had said about them as a people. He then proceeded to read some statements made by men while assisting them to gain admission into the Union as a State, and did not even make an attempt to answer my argument. They seemed like children bound hand and foot, not even making a struggle to get loose.

I then visited the Brush Creek and Dry Fork branches of the church in Wayne County, and feel free to say their spiritual condition is very much lower than it ought to be, and needs to be revived.

I then visited and preached for some saints in Richland County, Illinois. They are not organized into a branch, but are in fair condition, considering their opportunities.

I next went to Kibbie, Crawford County, Illinois, where Emsley Curtis did such an excellent work a few years ago; where Joseph went and dedicated their church house in December, 1892. If Elder Curtis had left there then, no doubt there would have been a prosperous church in that place now; but his work after that brought disaster and ruin to the branch, and now you can scarcely get a dozen saints together; and prejudice is terribly against us at that place. The branch officers are discouraged and say they can do no good there. We tried to encourage them to keep trying.

I am now on my way to visit Springerton, Tunnel Hill, and Parrish branches. This district needs a good, competent man to take charge of it; that can give it all his time. Bro. F. M. Slover, submissionary in charge and Bishop's agent, is going through the district with me. He is very studious and well liked by the saints, and seems to have that essential qualification that so many of us are deficient in, "meekness;" and this is very necessary if we would do much good.

Praying and working for Zion's weal, I am still in the faith,

G. H. HILLIARD.

MALAD CITY, Idaho, Dec. 8.

Editors Herald:—Although I have been silent for a long time, I have not been idle nor unobservant since I have been in the Rocky Mountain mission. I have given a great deal of thought to the peculiar condition of the Utah and Idaho Mormons. They are great pleasure-seekers. "Have a good time" is their motto; and I don't know of anything in use among the Gentiles for pleasure but what is freely used here; hence they are below the gospel standard in moral status. Nothing else is needed to prove an apostate condition: "Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." People in such a condition have always been very hard to reach.

I can overthrow all their arguments as easy as I can breathe, but that does not convince them; they don't base their arguments or ideas on the law, but on the "living oracles," and that means every "Tom, Dick, and Harry" that makes claim to any office; he has to be obeyed without question. They have placed authority above the law, and have substituted impression for revelation in the proper channel. It is by impression they govern the whole institution, and that is the way the officials may happen to think; and that is their revelation, and that is what constitutes their "living oracles."

We cannot preach near what we want to, for we always have a Bishop or two standing between us and the people; and the understanding I have from some of them is that all the meeting houses are virtually closed against Josephite missionaries; but they will not say so in just so many words, but will excuse by, "We occupy every night;" or, if not, it is the rule to allow the use of the house for "one night" only. Sometimes we get the house, but not the people—teachers had been at work!

Utah missionaries in the fields no doubt make great pretenses to "liberality among the Mormons," the same as they pretend that polygamy, etc., is "dead." But with us we know that it still "breathes." If you hear Utah elders complain of "hard fields," etc., you may tell them that we have hard fields also in Utah and Idaho; every obstacle is thrown in our way, and that by people who expect to be accommodated by others; and no wonder, for what we offer is provided for in law, and hence must prove true in testimony. But their claims are not provided for in law, hence cannot be true in testimony. The success of ours means the death of tyranny.

When the Utah Missionaries are met by our elders in their different fields, I hope they will teach them in kindness, and they will return with lessons in effect like Samson's firebrands and foxes; some have already come.

I believe the mission should be sustained. A tent would be a good thing for Idaho. The elders could be more or less independent to reach the people of the different settlements during the summer months at least. A house to house canvass with tracts during the day and preaching at night. What say ye saints of Idaho? Can it be done for next summer's work? Fifty cents each will do it.

In best of bonds,

ISLAND NUMBER TEN, Mo., Nov. 30.

Editors Herald:—This morning my mind was carried back to the time when God's people were commanded to gather into this part. I thought of the afflictions they had endured, the cruel treatment received, the sorrowing and suffering that followed. My heart went up in prayer to God that he would remember his promises to his people in this age. I rejoice in sorrow this morning as I write these few lines. I rejoice because the saints are again permitted to dwell in the land of Zion; I sorrow because our brethren were driven hence by a cruel mob; by so doing denying the right to others they desired for themselves. I thought of the statement, "Posterity will give us justice when we sleep together under the sod." This was addressed to the "mob." They are nearly all gone; we find here and there an isolated one, on both sides, tending speedily to the beyond. "We view the same sun" (but I hope not), "run the same course that our fathers have run." Notice the conditions that obtained then, and the conditions now, and let every saint in Zion ask this question, Will the same cause produce the same effect?

Psalms 14: 2, 7, "For the Lord looked down from heaven upon the children of men, and by his voice said unto his servants, Seek ye among the children of men, to see if there are any who do understand God. And he opened his mouth unto the Lord, and said, Behold, all these who say they are thine. . . . O that Zion were established out of heaven, the salvation of Israel. O Lord when wilt thou establish Zion?"—I. T.

How often I have desired this, to see the "salvation of Israel." The pure in heart shall inhabit Zion.

"My servants have been harsh one with another; and some have not been sufficiently willing to hear those whose duty it is to teach the revelations which my church has already received. Until my people shall hear and heed those who are set in the church to teach the revelations there will be misunderstanding and confusion [Babylon] among the members."—D. C. 122: 1.

Evidently Zion must be purged of Babylon, or there is no inheritance. Confusion and peace are the opposite of each other. "Behold all these who say they are thine." "Except ye are one ye are none of mine." This thought comes thundering down the ages. Israel, latter-day Israel, "O hear it!" "Some have not been sufficiently willing." "The willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land." "When the wicked are cut off thou shalt see it."

These with many others, cause me to think, and that seriously too, "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill of Zion?"—Ps. 15:1. Please read the next few verses in the Inspired Translation. Then read 2 Corinthians 13: 5, and if you are in the faith "blessed are ye." The vision of Bro. White, in vol. 3, No. 12, Autumn Leaves, should also be read; it may help some who do not understand God.

"Yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves. Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, [the tenth] according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."—D. C. 101 :2.

"And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her my people."—Rev. 18: 4.

"Gather ye my saints together, they who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." Where? "Where the carcass is, there will the remainder be gathered together," "who are the elect according to the covenant." "The righteous will gather; the wicked must perish."

"O Israel, O Israel, in all your abidings, Prepare for your Lord when you hear these glad tidings."

I have been laboring in the Far West district; but it is not near as far "west" as Washington; it is far east to me. I have labored in connection with Bro. W. E. Haden, a very nice companion indeed. I attended the reunion in Maysville; the first I ever attended, although I have belonged to the church since 1869. I felt thankful then am thankful now that I had such a privilege. I know there are many in Oregon and Washington that would have enjoyed such meetings. Brn. Holt and Chase have my prayers in their behalf; also all in that part of the mission. The poet has said:—

"Let us anchor our barks in the center,
And be saved from the rocks on the shore."

That is all right; but he "that thinketh he standeth, let him take heed lest he fall." I have always understood that "we are bought with a price;" but did not know that that "Price" was in Orting. However, thank you, brother, for I know and will not soon forget my first trip with Bro. Enge to Orting. We went afoot. The saints there are dear to my soul; there are precious jewels there, and I am glad of it. I pray God's blessing upon them and all the saints of that mission. Was glad to learn that Thomas Morris, of Hail Ridge, accepted the truth; continue faithful, brother. I know Bro. Goodwin will hold his own, and not only that, but he can help others out also. Success crown your efforts, brother.

I held a discussion this month at Union Star, December 8-12. Propositions: "Do the scriptures teach that Holy Ghost baptism is the only baptism essential to salvation from sin in this age?" M. A. Hughs affirms. "Do the scriptures teach that water baptism is essential to salvation from sin in this age?" John Davis affirms.

This age business was a little out of the ordinary. The scripture says, "Let another praise thee, and not thine own mouth." Truth never lost anything. This may benefit some. His position was that the Jewish age began with Moses and ended A. D. 70, at the destruction of Jerusalem; the Christian age began at Pentecost and terminates in the end of time. He argued that the Jewish age and the Christian age had a lapse of thirty-seven years, and as long as the Jewish age lasted, seventy years A. D., baptism was necessary, but not after that period. He also took the position that all of the New Testament was written before the year 70. He got just as close to his proposition as he got to the destruction of Jerusalem, and you know just how far that was away. This is as near as I can compare it. It was age, age, aion (Greek) age. In order to fill up the time I ran a counter claim, taking up the dispensations. I do not question his ability as an orator or a scholar; but as a debater he made a miserable failure, if I am to judge.

In the second proposition, of course, I waded right into the water, far enough to convince some that baptism was essential to salvation in this age. In my two last speeches I made an attack on the ages with Romans 11; by that I broke a piece, ten years, off the lap. My next was showing that John wrote his Gospel in 98. That took a chunk out of the remaining lap. Next Jeremiah 31, where the children of Israel broke the covenant. Then Zachariah 11, where God had broken his covenant with all the people, and they sold their king to the Gentiles; hence I broke it off at the cross. He made no attempt to answer it, spoke fifteen minutes, and stopped, so one of the moderators told me. So ended the debate. He was a gentleman all through the debate.

Bro. Babbitt assisted me much in the controversy. Quite a number came and welcomed me and were with me, others sent their congratulations. Truth is in this latter-day work, and so is God. I was not afraid to meet the "Goliath," but I felt my weakness. God's name be praised forever; out of weakness I was made strong.

I received, while in the tent, Heralds from Sr. Severance, Fairhaven, Washington; thanks. I feel to continue in the good work.

From pillar to post,

JOHN DAVIS.

LINDSEY, Pa., Dec. 15.

Editors Herald:—You did well in furnishing in Herald of November 24 that that appears on first page. The third column should be clipped and put in place for instantaneous reference by our elders till those fellows shall reproduce again the whole pollution. At Emporium, Cameron County, this State, polygamy was advocated in closing session of their conference. They have operated there about a year. It is the same flock Bro. Sheehy encountered. I exposed them in the opera hall, there, and shall here in the Methodist church which I have secured for a few efforts here. This is new territory. Am making friends. Two Utah elders, Davis and Neff, were menaced from here recently. I may not have the smoothest sailing from rumors, but will try to be wise, consistent, and faithful, and trust in God. This is thirty-seven miles south of Crenshaw.

R. ETZENHOUSER.

DECATUR, Neb., Dec. 10.

Editors Herald:—I arrived at this place on the evening of the 5th. We closed our meetings at Thurston, Nebraska, on the evening of the 7th, with good interest. The Lord blessed our efforts there. We had twenty-five meetings, baptized two precious souls into the kingdom, and left about six more near the door. About all they need is washing. I sold seven copies of the Book of Mormon and one Hymnal here; have promised to return as soon as I can.

When I left the home of Bro. and Sr. J. E. Butts it seemed like leaving home. They brought me to this place, a drive of thirty miles. I will commence meetings at Lake Shore branch to-night. I send you clipping from the Thurston County Republic, which was sent by the M. E. class leader of Thurston.

Dear saints, we are at the close of another year, and as we look back and see our mistakes, let us profit by them, and not be overcome by them again. Let us start in the new year with more strength; and I pray that we will be valiant soldiers in the army of the Lord.

Your brother in Christ,
W. A. SMITH.

DECEPTION'S REIGN.—PART 2. NO. 5.

BY ELDER COLUMBUS SCOTT.

THE Book of Mormon is here. It speaks of the dealings of God with his sheep of the house of Israel in ancient America. His sheep not of the fold in the land of Judah. (John 10:16.) No man living can account for its origin in any rational manner, except as accounted for by Joseph Smith and those associated with him in the bringing forth of the work. Not one of the theories so far presented by opposers of the work, for the origin of the Book of Mormon, have proven to be reasonable or consistent. Not an isolated fact has been shown to exist connected with any of their theories. Not one! Aside from the statement given by Joseph Smith as to the manner of the coming forth of that book, no account exists or can be given of its origin. That the plates should have been hid in the earth for preservation is reasonable, from the fact that at the time they were so secreted Israel in America was relapsing into barbarism. They were so found at the discovery of America in 1492 A. D. And it is a fact that barbarous people do not preserve written record, however sacred they may be. If God had taken them to heaven for safe keeping it would have required the angel's coming at the time of its restoration to bring them to earth, and the objection to new revelation would have remained.

That the descendants of Joseph of Egypt came to America anciently, and became a multitude of nations here, is in harmony with Bible prophecy. (See Gen. 48:10-20; 49:22-26; Deut. 32:7, 8; 33:13-17; Isa. 16:8; Jer. 49:30-32.) Note carefully that while Jacob prophesies that Ephraim and Manasseh were to become "a multitude of nations" "in the midst of the earth," the entire twelve tribes became but two nations—only two nations—on the eastern continent. (Ezek. 37:22.) This point cannot be moved by the Bible; nor by all the subterfuges or sophistries of the learned of the age. Try it, ye doubters of latter-day revelation from God.

That the record of the Book of Mormon was written on golden plates is in harmony with the general custom of all civilized ancient nations. Also of Bible history. (Exodus 28:36.) As also other imperishable material, stones, brass, and copper were used by them. (Josep. vol. 6, p.132; Apocryphal writings of the Old Testament, Macc. 14.48, 49.) And besides all this the Hebrew language has been exhumed from the mounds builded by ancient Americans, in the State of Ohio, since the Book of Mormon was published, in 1830. Twelve men give their evidence to the world, men whose testimony would be received anywhere on any reasonable question, and whose testimony has never been impeached; that they saw, lifted, and handled the golden plates which contained the record of the book. They also testify that they saw and examined the engravings on the plates. Three of these men say that on a clear, bright May day, in 1829, they, in answer to humble prayer to God, and in harmony with a promise given through Joseph Smith, saw those golden plates and the engravings thereon, in the hands of the angel of God having them in charge; that they were by the angel layed on a table in their presence and sight, that they handled and hefted or lifted and examined; and that they on the same occasion heard the voice of God in the heavens above them, declaring that they had been translated by the power of God. Now so far as we have any history of those twelve witnesses and their after lives, they were upright, truthful, religious men. They never denied either their faith in the gospel of Jesus Christ, as restored to, and administered by Joseph Smith, or their testimony to the divinity of the Book of Mormon. Never! Let it be written to the credit and to the memory of these eleven witnesses to the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon, and to the verity of the restoration of the everlasting gospel of Jesus Christ in its original simplicity, power, and authority, by the angel of God through Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery and others, during the years 1827 and 1830, A. D. They stood true to their testimony, and maintained their fealty to the gospel restored, to the close of their earthly pilgrimage, and passed behind death's mystic vale in bright hope of the glory and the reward of the justified in Christ Jesus.

The fires of persecution, such as is only known by the earlier saints of this dispensation, tried their faith and courage; but their zeal never flagged, their hopes never dimmed, their glorious faith never weakened; but like a fixed star, shone on to glorious victory.

That angels should take part and joyfully minister to God's servants, in God's great and marvelous and wonderful latter-day work, is but consistent with the unchangeableness of the Deity. He dealt thus in all past dispensations of his grace and mercy. All the prophets of the past have spoken of this great work. (Acts 3:21.)

Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?—Heb. 1:14.

Are there no heirs of salvation in this generation? Why should the heirs of salvation object to their own ministry? Why refuse them? The man, Cornelius, in a sense a heathen, who never had known of a Savior or the gospel of his salvation, never did so wickedly; but on the other hand set a wonderful example to the Christians by gladly welcoming an angel's visit and message, and which proved his salvation! (Acts 10:1-8.) God sent his holy angels to men evidently, in "the early morning hour" dispensation of his kingdom, or in the days of Abel and Enoch and Noah. (Matt. 20:1, 2.) Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, of "the third hour" dispensation (Matt. 20:3), were not strangers to the angels of God. (Gen. 15:2; 18.) Sarah was glad to entertain them and eat with them. (See also Gen. 22:15-18; 26:2-5; 35:9-15; Gen. 48:16; with Ps. 105:13-15.) Moses and his associate ministers, with others of "the sixth hour" dispensation (Matt. 20:5), were authorized through their ministry to do their work, and enlightened and directed by the angels of the Most High (Ex. 3; 23:20-23; Josh.

7:10-15; 1 Chron. 21:18), with evidences too numerous to refer to. Likewise did the Lord open up and institute the ninth hour dispensation of his kingdom, at three o'clock in the world's great day, at the coming of John the Baptist, and the first advent of Christ, by angelic administrations, as declared in the New Testament. (Luke 1:11-20, 26-37; 2:8-16.) Now, since it is shown to be God's method to have opened up all the past dispensations of his "kingdom" by angelic ministrations and the revelation of the Holy Ghost to his prophets, why should he change and do some other and different way in opening up the last dispensation of his government in this world, "the eleventh hour" dispensation? (Matt. 20:6-16; Luke 14:16-24; Eph. 1:9, 10.) Paul here says it is God's "good pleasure," and "his will," and his purpose to institute this final great gathering and culminating, finishing dispensation, in which the gospel will be dispensed, handed out, and administered for the last time in the history of this world. These laborers are out to invite the nations to the gospel feast "at supper time!" They labor "but one hour" ere the eventide comes!

It will be noted by all who study this lesson in Matthew, chapter twenty, that the laborers referred to are God's called, chosen, authorized ministers. Sent by him. Not by man. Directed by Jehovah by direct revelation, and not left to their own erring judgment as to when they shall begin, nor where or what they shall do. For God has not only created of one blood all men to dwell on all the face of the earth, but has "determined the times before appointed" in which man shall be privileged to seek and feel after him. (Acts 17: 26, 27.) Jesus, in the chapter in Matthew indicates these times appointed, by the "early in the morning hour," that is from Adam down to Noah; and "the third hour" or the days of the Patriarchs Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob—the nine o'clock dispensation. Also "the sixth hour," or high noon of the world's great day; and this dispensation of God's kingdom (See Ex. 19: 6) was ushered in by the commission given to Moses through the Angel of God, as recorded in Exodus, third chapter, Moses was sent by the great "I Am," or the Immutable.

The greater portion of that dispensation was favored by direct revelation from God through angels and prophets, by visions and the revelations of the Holy Ghost. And a divinely authorized ministry was provided, that God's church or kingdom (Acts 7:38; 2 Chron. 36:15, 16) might be administered in harmony with the Father's will. But God's people then as now, "mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of God arose against his people, till there was no remedy." No balm in Gilead to heal the people for the sin of rejecting new revelation. No healing medicines among men for such a great wrong. It must be expiated for. It was for breaking God's law and rejecting the ministry sent with new revelation that Israel was carried in shameful captivity to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar; their beloved city, Jerusalem, destroyed; their kingdom temporarily disorganized; their homes desolated; while they served, captives, in their enemy's land; while they hung their harps on the willows, and sat in tears and great anguish of spirits, and listened to the sighing of the winds, and the moving, restless ripples of the waters of the river.

What a sad condition, for man to be left to the promptings of the human mind in religious things, without the guidance of God through direct revelation!

The universal testimony of the ages is, that whenever mankind have ceased to merit present revelation from God, the results have been the same, without exception. The result was confusion, division, darkness, uncertainty, and the turning of society against each other.

This was the case at the time of the flood—at the tower of Babel—with Israel in Egypt; all along Israel's history, from the death of Moses, to their final scattering and captivity among Gentile nations at the destruction of Jerusalem by Rome, in A. D. 72. And the present divided, confused, distracted, restless condition of the religious world, who have now been groping along for the last 1,600 years without direct revelation from God, and who yet trust in the wisdom of man, uninspired, is "an irrevocable testimony to the truth of this statement, and cannot be successfully controverted. The facts of human experience stand by us here.

The three o'clock dispensation of the kingdom of heaven is by our Savior indicated as "the ninth hour," sending of laborers into the Lord's vineyard. To those ministerial laborers Jesus said:—

The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest . . . for the laborer is worthy of his hire.—Luke 10: 2, 7.

Say ye not, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest. And he that reapeth receiveth wages and gathereth fruit unto life eternal: that both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together. And herein is the saying true, One soweth, and another reapeth. I sent you to reap that whereon ye bestowed no labor: other men labored, and ye are entered into their labors.—John 4: 35-38.

Of the divinely sent ministry, Paul said:—

For we are laborers together with God [of the church in contradistinction to the ministry he says]: Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building.—1 Cor. 3: 9.

These statements of Jesus and Paul are very significant, showing positively that the laborers are the ministers of God, and are authorized and sent by revelation at the time they are sent; and also, as showing that the popular sectarian idea that when a great revival, so called, is held and a great religious excitement, and numbers are excited to join the church, that "many laborers are entering the harvest of the Lord;" is false; a humbug and a gross deception, when Jesus' words are so applied by them. Also the further idea that the different "hours" referred to by Jesus, means the different periods of human life, from babyhood to their deathbed, at which they can unite with the church and be saved. They, by so interpreting the language of our Savior, construe his teaching into putting a premium on sin, by teaching that man may wait till the eleventh hour of his life, in the world, in wickedness, and then, when old, steeped in sin, and the vigor of life is gone, he joins the church, dies, goes right up to God, sits down in glory, along with Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Moses, and all the holy prophets., the saints and the angels of light!

But to such as have a life of opportunities to obey the truth and do not do so for the love of the truth, God says:—

Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded; but ye have set at naught all my counsel, and would none of my reproof: I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh; when your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you. Then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me: for [because] that they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the Lord.—Prov. 1: 24: 29.

All Bible believers admit that in the dispensations referred to hereinbefore—each one was opened up by new revelation from God. Abel, Seth, and Enoch were commissioned of, and held communion with God. So was Noah, Abraham, and Moses; likewise, Joshua, Samuel, and the prophets. And in "the ninth hour" dispensation, angels announced the coming of John the Baptist, Jesus, and the great gospel age then ushered in upon the stage of action. The gospel was revealed anew, and the church of God was organized, the ministry was set in the church, all by direct revelation from heaven. There was no such idea advocated by the church in that dispensation that revelation from God should cease, or that the canon of scripture was full. Such an argument used then would have logically argued that God was a changeable being. For he had at that time been revealing his will to his people for a period of four thousand years. And to stop revealing himself then, unless his people had forfeited this divine blessing by the transgression of his majestic law, would have necessitated a change in himself. God's own statement is:—

I am the Lord, I change not.—Mal. 3: 6.

And based on this eternal foundational truth, God builds his own argument in favor of being a God of present continuous revelation in these words.

Let the people be assembled; who among them can declare this, and show us former things? let them bring forth their witnesses, that they may be justified: or let them hear, and say, It is truth. Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, and my servants, whom I have chosen; that ye may know and believe me, and understand that I am he: before me there was no God formed, neither shall there be after me. I, even I am the Lord; and beside me there is no Savior. I have declared, and have saved, and I have showed, when there was no strange God among you: therefore ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, that am God. Yea, before the day was I am he: and there is none that can deliver out of my hands: I will work and who shall let it. . . . Behold I will do a new thing; now it shall spring forth; shall ye not know it?—Isa. 43: 9-13, 19.

Thus reasons our Father, when contrasting himself with the so-called gods who reveal nothing. Because he does reveal himself to his servants whom he chooses and sends, "therefore," says he, "ye are my witnesses." This is a peculiar statement, in that it is his own reasoning! He tells us here that he is known as the only God, because he reveals himself to his servants.

Since, therefore, God is a God of present revelation, he will introduce "the eleventh hour" dispensation and call, by revelation, as in all former dispensations of his grace.

DUTIES OF THE SAINTS, BY THE BISHOP'S AGENT FOR THE CENTRAL TEXAS DISTRICT.

To the Saints:—I have this year endeavored to present the law of tithes and offerings to the saints and friends of the Central Texas district to the best of my ability, and attended two conferences of the district for this purpose, urging the necessity of compliance with the temporal law as well as the spiritual, and I now take this method of stirring up your pure minds in the work to the necessities of our missionary and his family who is in need of means, and of the church generally.

The members of the Church of Christ are commanded to "Live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." We can only be acceptable to him by compliance with this rule of law, and for a person to think he may be acceptable before the Lord when he has obeyed but a part of the principles of truth, and refuses to comply with that particular work in the gospel of Christ that is enjoined upon every citizen of his kingdom, is to deceive himself. In the time of the apostles it was urged that men should do this word equally with others, both by the Savior and those whom he sent out to teach, and the apostle urges the matter upon the saints in his time, instructing them that "as the Lord hath blessed everyone, so let him give." Every citizen of the kingdom has a work to perform in order that he may don the wedding garment spoken of by the Master, and the New Testament clearly teaches that unless it is put on we will not be accepted when the great feast is prepared. We put on the wedding garment by performing the works of righteousness under the law; and one of these works is, compliance with our duty in temporal matters, and the failure of which will lose to the individual so failing his robe of righteousness.

Again, it is very clearly taught that we are stewards under the law of our heavenly Father; and that we should render an account to him of our stewardship while in this life, touching the things which come into our hands. If we are found faithful in the stewardship we shall be commended; but if unfaithful we will meet with condemnation. This is fully taught by Jesus in Luke, where he instructs his disciples touching their duty in things referred to as the "mammon of unrighteousness," or the riches of this world. After making reference to such stewardship and work, Jesus declares concerning it, "He who is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much; and he who is unjust in the least, is also unjust in much."—Luke 16: 10.

Those who do not do the bidding of the Master are called slothful servants. We are further instructed in Luke not to neglect laying up for ourselves treasures in heaven, rather than devoting our time to the accumulation of this world's goods. "He that layeth up treasures for himself and is not rich towards God," is like the foolish man who said to himself, "I will pull down my barns and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits, and my goods. And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry. But God said unto him, Thou fool! This night thy soul shall be required of thee; then whose shall those things be which thou hast provided?"—Luke 12: 20-22.

Revelations of the nineteenth century to the church are in keeping with the instruction that is found in the scriptures. In 1831, it is said, "Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming); for after to-day cometh the burning; this is speaking after the manner of the Lord; for verily I say, To-morrow all the proud and they that do wickedly shall be as a stubble; . . . and I will not spare any that remaineth in Babylon. Wherefore, if ye believe me, ye will labor while it is called to-day." (See Doctrine and Covenants, sec. 64, par. 5.)

In 1861, instruction to the church is again impressed upon us, and the law of tithes and offerings stated to be especially applicable. The same thought is expressed by Jesus in the 11th chapter of Luke, 42d verse. (Inspired Translation.)

It seems there is no passage of scripture that is more applicable to the church to-day in the inspired writings than the word of the Lord through the Prophet Malachi. It is not only found in the book of Malachi, in the Bible, but was repeated by the Savior to his disciples on the western continent in what is termed the "first century of the Christian Era," with the additional statement that it was "for the good of future generations." The passage in the Bible reads, "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse; for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."—Malachi 3: 8-10.

This work must be done by willing hands and hearts. Not those who are grudging, or who seek to shun the performance of duty; or give for the purpose of simply making a show of their means; or plan to get the good will of their neighbors thereby.

In the language of the Savior we are instructed to "take heed that ye do not your alms before men to be seen of them, otherwise ye have no reward of your Father which is in heaven."

The giving of alms and tithes and offerings in one and the same thing. The giving of alms under the Jewish law to which Christ referred is called tithes and offerings. The Apostle Paul exhorted that, "He that giveth, let him do it with simplicity." (Romans 12: 8.) This is in keeping with Jesus' instruction as to manner of giving.

The revelations of the nineteenth century speaking of tithes and offerings say concerning the same as to manner of giving: "Behold, the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind." (D. C., sec. 64, par. 7.)

Alma in the Book of Mormon, "Commanded that the people of the church should impart of their substance, every one according to that which he had; if he have more abundantly, he should impart more abundantly; and he that had but little, but little should be required; and to him that had not should be given. And thus they should impart of their substance, of their own free will and good desires towards God, and to those priests that stood in need, yea, and to every needy, naked soul. And this he said unto them, having been commanded of God."—B. of M., Mosiah, chap. 9, par. 9.

The amount required under the law to-day is the same that was required of Abraham. He is sustained by the Apostle Paul as the father of all the faithful in Christ; "if ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

Abraham paid a tenth of all that he had after that he came up out of the land of Egypt. When Abraham went down into the land of Egypt, he had very little. When he came back he was rich, "in silver, and cattle, and gold." All of this was increase, and Abraham paid upon it; and it agrees with the statement of the Apostle. (Hebrews 7: 2.) Referring to Melchisedec, the keeper of the storehouse of God, or Bishop, he says: "To him also Abraham gave a tenth part of all."

The rule of Abraham was the same complied with by his grandson, the great patriarch, Jacob. He gave a tenth of the increase, or tithed himself. "And the place of this stone which I have set for a pillar, shall be the place of God's house; and of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee."—Genesis 28: 22. The fact that Jacob made the vow and the Lord blessed him under this vow, shows that this was the correct rule; for God would not have accepted a vow contrary to his law.

To begin with, all that God has blessed us with is increase; and if we have not already rendered an account to him upon this, that is our first duty, and we should pay a tenth of the same into the hands of the Bishop, or his agent. (See the law, B. of C., sec. 42, par. 8.)

After a person has paid once upon property, proper account has been rendered, and it is no longer called increase under the law. A person may make offerings in the way of consecrations: of any part of this which he has over and above, but farther than this, the law of tithes and offerings has been complied with. After having paid upon what he has, the Bible rule is in harmony with itself all the time, and he still pays upon the increase, whatever that may be.

Seeing that it is the law of God, and remembering the fact that we claim to be his children, let us live by his words, and arise from our slumber to the performance of every duty, and let us put what belongs to God into his storehouse and try him, as he has asked us to do, and in this way ask his blessing; and not ask it when we fail to perform our part under the law.

I also call the attention of the saints to the article of the Bishop touching the necessities of Graceland College. Each district is asked to furnish ten persons at the amount of $20 each to aid in this enterprise as a special endowment. If each district performs its work under this call, no further request is to be made in behalf of Graceland College for years at least. Shall not the saints then, in this district perform their duty under this appeal and make an effort in the interest of the educational work of the church?

If a person is unable to give the $20, let him send the amount possible for him to do, with his name, and it will be forwarded to the Bishop and placed under the district account.

The Central Texas district should not be behind on this fund. Let us show to the church and to the world that we are ready to sacrifice for the good of the work and aid in every undertaking that is required to save our young people from the spirit and vices of "Mystery Babylon."

I hope to hear from every member in the district within the next sixty days upon these two important works. First: Tithes and offerings under the law. Second: Such contributions as each is able to make for the benefit of the college. If it is only one half dime, or one dollar, send it on. Let us be men and women; saints in deed and in truth, and show what our district can do in aid of the work of the Lord. Very respectfully yours,

E. BATES, Bishop's Agent.

DURANGO, Texas, December 5, 1897.

A XMAS GIFT FOR ONE DOLLAR

APPROPRIATE ALIKE FOR ONE OR ALL.

A broad statement this, but one that is borne out by the facts.

Not only can you make such a present on such terms, but in doing so you will be giving something that will remain a source of delight and instruction to its fortunate owner for years to come. We have decided to extend through the holiday season our remarkable introductory offer on the great in ten large handsome volumes, over 5,000 pages and 3,000 illustrations, which has recently been completed after years of preparation and the expenditure of vast sums of money. Our reason for this is that the sets sold in this manner will be the most effective advertising that we could give the regular subscription edition, which will be sold at $60.00 net.

Briefly, it is a gathering within the covers of one set of books of all that usually goes to make up the "reference corner" in any public or private collection of books.

Chief among the contents of the library stand the necessities in every home, office, or school in the land. But besides these, it includes Biographical Dictionary, Gazetteer of the United States, Dictionary of Technical Terms, and other indispensable requisites of a working reference library.

The Encyclopedia is in itself worth twice the price of the whole library. It is par excellence the book of reference for every man, woman or student to have at his or her elbow at all times for quick, ready reference. It is the latest, best, most concise, yet thorough and accurate encyclopedia extant, and the only one in existence that is brought down to September, 1897. It is edited by John Clark Ridpath, LL.D. It includes comprehensive and reliable articles on The Cuban Rebellion, Klondike Gold Fields, Moving Photography, and other topics of live interest to-day. In all, nearly 100,000 topics are treated, and these are magnificently illustrated with thousands of engravings, colored maps and charts.

The Atlas comprises a handsome series of maps and charts, brought down to date; 100 colored and 200 in monotint, which, for convenience sake, are scattered through the volumes of the Encyclopedia, according to their alphabetical arrangement. Also hundreds of diagrams, sketches, battle plans, portraits, etc.

The Dictionary is the work of the ripest linguists of modern times. It is an unabridged, etymological, pronouncing, literary, scientific and technical Dictionary of the English language, and is an acknowledged authority both in England and America. The regular price of this great king of books is $24.00. It comprises nearly 3,000 closely printed columns of words and definitions.

OUR GREAT INTRODUCTORY OFFER.

For advertising purposes merely, and to introduce this grand work to the public, we have decided to place a few sets in each community at about one-third of the subscription price, and deliver the set complete the balance of the special reduced price being due in small monthly payments.

UPON PAYMENT OF ONLY ONE DOLLAR,

To show our entire confidence in the work and to insure you against any risk whatever, we further agree that if, after keeping the set ten days and thoroughly testing it, you are not perfectly satisfied, you are at liberty to return it to us, and receive your money back.

SEND ONE DOLLAR NOW and the complete set will be forwarded, at once, to any address you may desire. Unless otherwise instructed, shipment will be made by freight, at purchaser's expense. Subsequent payments will be at the rate of $1.50 monthly for fifteen months. Half Morocco and Full Sheep bindings can also be supplied, the monthly payments being $2.00 and $2.50, respectively. To those who desire an extra durable and handsome binding, we strongly advise the selection of the Half Morocco style. We refer to this publication and the Garfield National Bank, New York City. THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

LESSONS OF THE WESTMINSTER ASSEMBLY CELEBRATION.

IN connection with the recent celebration by the Presbyterians of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Westminster Assembly and the adoption of the Westminster Confession of Faith, it is interesting to note what the religious papers representative of churches other than the Presbyterian have to say in regard to the meaning and significance of the event. The occasion calls forth from The Examiner (Baptist, New York) the following comment:—

"It has been said of the men who formed that Assembly [the Westminster] that 'the Christian world since the days of the apostles never had a synod of more excellent divines.' It is certain that their work has exerted a potent influence upon the development of the world. It has made for liberty, civil and religious, for constitutional government, and for the dignity and worth of the individual. Next to the Bible, the Westminster Catechism has probably had more influence than any other book in shaping the religious sentiment of the present day. Although there is a large and powerful faction in the church which is anxious to have the standards revised, the old creed is held sacred by the majority of the 12,000,000 adherents of Presbyterianism, and its hold upon them is almost as powerful as at any time since its adoption."

The Churchman (Protestant Episcopal, New York) has this to say:—

"The celebration of the Assembly's anniversary teaches many lessons, but none more forcibly or profitably than this, that the center of religious interest changes from age to age. Two hundred and fifty years ago the questions which seemed supreme and imperative were those which had to do with ecclesiastical government and with the doctrine of predestination. Most people felt that upon the right understanding of these matters depended not only the welfare of the church, but the everlasting destiny of the individual. The preacher found them suggested in every text. Last Sunday there were not a hundred sermons delivered upon either of these subjects in all the pulpits of Christendom.

"The theme of present preaching is the relation of the Christian religion to life. What the preacher wants is to minister as best he can to the better life of men as they live it day by day, to give help in the meeting of temptation, to awaken people to their opportunities, to assist in the solution of practical problems. That, we feel, is a real advance upon the positions of the Assembly. It may be that we are misled, as men have been before, by the exaggerations of perspective, and that the present is not after all so much better than the past; but it does seem plain that an interest in the great task of making the world happier and better and nearer to the ideal of the gospel is more in accord with the life and spirit of Jesus Christ than an interest in the distinction between sublapsarianism and supralapsarianism."

In The Outlook (undenom.) the subject of "The Westminster Confession" is treated editorially from the point of view of the Higher Critics. It does not desire to be numbered among those who regard this Confession as "a perversion of truth and an obstruction of human progress," nor among those "who regard it with reverence as the supreme and final utterance of the Christian Church respecting the verities of Christian doctrine." It would view it rather from the point of view of "one who believes in human progress, believes that every stage in human destiny is an improvement on that which has preceded, and is a preparation for greater improvements that are to follow." Proceeding on this line of thought The Outlook says:—

"We can understand the state of mind of one who regards Christian revelation as a finished product given complete from the hand of God to man. We can also understand the state of mind of those who regard Christian revelation as progressive; as, to use Christ's own simile, a seed planted in the soil and germinating and growing to maturity. But we confess ourselves unable to understand the state of mind of those who attempt to combine these two contradictory views; who regard, or appear to regard, the Christianity of the New Testament as a seed which did once germinate and grow, but which came to its consummation in either the Nicene Creed in the fourth century or in the Westminster Confession of Faith in the seventeenth, and can grow no more thereafter. Those who regard Christian revelation as a completed product ought to go back to find in the Sermon on the Mount the perfect Christian creed; those who regard Christianity as a seed ought to regard every creed valuable, not as a final statement of truth, but as a historic witness to the measure of truth attained and the aspect of truth perceived in the age which has produced such creed. Either of these views is self-consistent. The view which regards theology as a growth for the first four centuries of the first sixteen, with no growth thereafter, is self-destructive because inherently inconsistent."—The Literary Digest, December 4, 1897.

THE ORDINATION OF MRS. BOOTH.
AN interesting and unique ceremony was that which took place at Carnegie Hall, New York City, on a recent Monday evening, the occasion being the ordination of Mrs. Ballington Booth, of "The Volunteers of America," as a minister of the "General Church of God." The ceremony of "laying on of hands" was performed by Commander Booth, assisted by the Volunteers, Brigadier-General Fielding, Col. J. G. Hallimond, and Col. J. W. Merrill. Reverend Dr. Josiah Strong, Secretary of the Evangelical Alliance and the Rev. Amory H. Bradford, D. D., of Montclair, New Jersey, were present, but not in a representative capacity. A feature of the occasion was an address by Chauncey M. Depew. Mrs. Booth gave an address on prison work, in which she said that during the last year the Volunteers had reached about ten thousand inmates of penitentiaries.

In an article commenting on this event at Carnegie Hall, the Christian Advocate (Methodist Episcopal, New York) says, with particular reference to the ceremony of ordination:—

"The theory of the ministry of the Congregationalists and Baptists differs greatly from that held by the Protestant Episcopal Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Presbyterian Church; also from that held by the Lutheran churches. The Baptists and the Congregationalists attach comparatively little importance to the distinction between the ministry and the laity. Mr. Spurgeon was never ordained, and used to say, 'I thank God that no man ever laid his empty hands on my empty head.' We are informed by an eminent Baptist clergyman that in this country laying on of hands in the ordination is generally omitted. Our readers will remember the extraordinary difficulties which attended the baptism of Miss Smiley, and her admission to the pulpits of Brooklyn and elsewhere. The Congregational theory does not invest the minister with any special governing power. Nor has he any more influence in the Baptist Church as a governor than any member of the church, except as he derives it from his personal character. He votes with the rest in deciding any question submitted to the church, and has but one vote.

"The theory of the local Congregational and Baptist churches is that the center of power is in the church itself. No church has any legal jurisdiction over any other church; its powers extend entirely to its fellowship, and to admission into the associations.

Mrs. Booth cannot be qualified by any such ordination as this to take part in the administration of the holy communion in any church which restricts the consecration of the elements and their administration to the ministry, and the ministry to men. Perhaps the Volunteers will develop into a regularly defined Christian sect, as may the regular Salvation Army. In this case, like others, they will be compelled to derive their resources chiefly from their own members. One sect more or less makes little or no difference, as the census of 1890 shows one hundred and forty-three religious denominations in the United States, of which about one hundred and thirty are Christian in name, and since that census was compiled several new sects have been started."—Literary Digest, December 18, 1897.

TALKS ON DOCTRINE AND CREED.

AT Washington Park Congregational Church yesterday morning the Rev. William E. Danforth took as his theme, "Difficulties about doctrine and creed." His text was: "If any man will to do his will he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God." Among other things he said:—

"To many minds of the present day the word 'doctrine' has a grating sound. The popular idea of doctrine, mildly expressed, signifies something to make people uncomfortable, like the cold chill from a musty cloister of the twelfth century.

"We may know that when Christ used the word it was with no such suggestion. In the sense that Jesus used it 'doctrine' means a translucent teaching arising out of an eternal truth.

"As no man can consider a truth without forming some kind of doctrine, so none of us thinks seriously about any fact without having some sort of creed in connection. The error of the past was that certain men built up systems and miscalled them creeds, when they were not creeds at all, for they never penetrated the mind and heart. A doctrine or creed which does not get inside the man has no place in the economy of life.

"The Jews were eminent specialists in doctrines, so minute as to defy a magnifying glass to discover their worth in terms of truth, but Jesus told them that the way to discover the validity of doctrine was to begin putting it into action to see what results it produced.

"To all hearts which are sick of shams and long to know the truth about these things, the advice of Jesus is to set about living out faith, hope, and love. It is thus that a man's beliefs begin to grow vivid to him, for frauds cannot stand the strain of practical working."—Tribune.

R. S. SALYARDS - - - ASSISTANT EDITOR.
HEMAN C. SMITH, } CORRESPONDING EDITORS.
JOSEPH LUFF, }

LAMONI, IOWA, DEC. 29, 1897.

THE EDITOR ABROAD.

FROM Fayette City I returned to Pittsburg, on Monday, December 5, having spent a profitable day at that place. Found the usual correspondence for the Editor and President awaiting attention. Spent the week busily catching up, and visiting, attending the weekly Wednesday evening prayer service, which was fairly spiritual; Brn. D. L. Shinn and Jacob Reese presiding.

The Hall, No. 67 Fourth Avenue, while centrally located, is not in an attractive quarter; for, though central, it is in an entirely business portion of the city, where few will come unless specially interested, which most of strangers are not. Enjoyed the meeting. The saints have in contemplation the building of a church, and have what is called an Auxiliary Aid Society, the object of which is to secure means to build with. The branch, though numbering somewhere near two hundred, is not strong financially; yet no branch in the church has a better record for the helping hand than Pittsburg, that we are aware of.

On Friday evening Bro. Ralph G. Smith, knowing what a soul for music the Editor had, took him to hear a symphony concert, by Pittsburg Orchestra Company, Mr. Fred Archer, conductor. It was held in the hall given the city by Mr. Andrew Carnegie, and for which beneficence he is more or less abused by some. The music was "classical," but very excellent. The Editor thoroughly enjoyed the splendid treat.

On Saturday, the 11th, the Editor went to Wheeling, West Virginia, that plucky half of the Old Dominion that refused to secede and stayed in the Union of States.

Brn. L. D. Ullom and Francis Ebeling met us at the train, and in a few minutes we were at the residence of Bro. Albert Smith, another of the peculiar tribe of which, once on a time there was not one to be found in all the land of Israel. See the Bible account of preparations to build the Temple, and note where the men came from. Bro. Smith is a worker in the steel or iron mills in Benwood opposite Bellaire, Ohio.

On Sunday the saints met at 10:30 in Sunday school, at eleven the Editor occupied the stand, with a good audience in attendance. At 2:30 a testimony and prayer service was held, which was much enjoyed by all, seemingly. At 7:30 the Editor spoke to a room full of interested auditors, from the subject, Why should a man join the Christian church?

The effort was continued on Monday evening; when, the Tuesday evening being occupied by the Sunday school workers of the branch, the effort came to an end at Wheeling.

From Wheeling to Irondale, in Jefferson County, Ohio, is but a short ride; and the Editor took it in company with Bro. Francis Ebeling, a young and growing missionary at work in the Pittsburg district, resident at Benwood.

Bro. David Lewis, resides at Irondale, and was down the Ohio at Wheeling, Sunday, and secured a promise for Wednesday night at that tin plate town. Bro. Adolphus Edwards, a young and energetic Welshman, from the old country a couple of years, made himself a committee of one, and interviewing Rev. William Powell, of the M. E. Church, succeeded in getting the church building for the evening, and at 7:30 we faced a fair audience. The room was large, but there were a good number present to whom we told the gospel story, from our standing point. At the close Rev. Powell stated to us that if we came that way again we would be welcome to the church for services, and at parting bade us "God be with you." To this we responded, "Peace be unto you."

At Irondale there are only Bro. David Lewis and wife, Bro. Albert Logsdon and wife, Bro. William Lewis and wife, and Bro. Adolphus Edwards and Sr. Anna. But this is a host, for they are united and earnest and helpful. Bro. Edwards is an elder, and had charge of the meeting, opened by prayer and read the hymns, in a very creditable manner. They have lately hired a hall and begun holding services. We left Bro. Ebeling to continue the effort.

By the kindness of Bro. Edwards, Bro. Ebeling, self, and Sr. Anna visited the tin mill, where the steel is rolled into sheets, polished, cut into required sizes, tinned, trimmed, and put up in boxes. Some four hundred hands are employed, a number being women. We followed the steel plate from the half inch thick plate to the thinnest steel sheet; saw the constant transformation, till the sheets of tin lay in boxes to the number of one hundred and twelve sheets per box, ready for the tinsmith and the roofer. It is easy enough, if one only sees it passing through the various processes.

At Wheeling and Benwood there is a branch some two hundred strong, with an excellent prospect for good. A movement has been lately started to secure grounds and build a church in a more suitable location than the one now used. One is selected and as soon as means can be raised the work will go forward. The committee are L. D. Ullom, Sr. Mollie Brewster, Albert Smith, O. J. Tary, Bro. Serig, and Joseph Ebeling, we believe; a strong committee. We hope the effort will be a success; the branch needs a better location than the one now occupied.

The people of the branch are very hospitable. They are noted for setting good tables of good things, and we partly believe it; for by especial invitation we partook of the good cheer of Brn. O. J. Tary, Joseph Ebeling, Mother Ebeling, Sr. Mollie Brewster, Albert Smith, Bro. Fryman, Bro. Sutton, and Doctor Eskey, of Wheeling, all in four days. During our stay we were in or through Benwood, North Wheeling, Wheeling, Aetnaville, Bridgeport, on the West Virginia side; Martin's Ferry, Bridgeport, West Wheeling, and Bellaire on the Ohio side, and had crossed the Ohio River twice by Ferry.

Wheeling is a city of 40,000 inhabitants, is seven miles long and about one half mile wide, on an average, a regular string of a town strung on an electric street railway line running parallel with the river, which here runs south. There are mills and mills, steel, iron, coke ovens, smelters, potteries, pipe mills, all sorts of mills, where many hundreds of men find work, toil, and the means for daily food.

The branch is in charge of Bro. L. D. Ullom, and is made up of a band of earnest, very earnest people, rich in faith though they are toilers.

Dr. Leonard Eskey is the physician who attended Bro. Josiah Ells in his last sickness. At his request Brn. Albert Smith, F. J. Ebeling and self visited him Monday forenoon, December 13, and had a visit, a dinner, and some excellent music by the daughter of his hospital housekeeper after dinner. The Doctor has a remarkably lively recollection of the last scenes of Bro. Ells' life, and frankly stated to us that Bro. Ells' passing was one of the most impressive deaths to the life of the flesh he ever witnessed. "It was the passing from this life, into the life beyond, of a Christian who had no fear of death." "It was the glorious consummation of a well spent life by a strong man, strong in both body and mind." The Doctor talked of it for nearly an hour; asked many questions about the work, our numbers, hopes, gains, etc.; gave us our dinner and bade us "Good speed" at the end of a very pleasant visit.

One very pleasant incident occurred during our visit at Wheeling. We met Bro. James Craig, an old-time elder and worker; who, many years ago was an active defender of the faith and missionary, but who for reasons not now necessary to state, was estranged some seven years ago; but who was unable to get the work out of his mind. He came from his home at Bellaire, Ohio, to our Sunday services; and on Monday put in an appearance at Bro. Fryman's at Martin's Ferry, where we had a long and good talk. On Wednesday morning he came to us, and stated that he had decided to seek to be reinstated by baptism. The branch will take the proper action and once more Bro. James Craig will be among the workers.

We were much and favorably impressed with Bro. Craig, never having met him before, and we feel confident he will be the means of much good, if permitted to do so, and not prevented by undue and unnecessary cavilling. We should learn the force of the advice given at Kirtland concerning men of other faiths, and as elders quit preventing those who would come.

We reached Pittsburg on Thursday, the 16th, at 1:40 p. m., and will be in the city for Sunday the 19th, thence, on the 23d, for Toronto, Ontario, enroute home.

We have had pressing invitations to visit the district under Bro. James Moler's care, and other points in Ohio and elsewhere; but the conditions do not favor our accepting them, much as we should like to, and others like to have us.

The surroundings and conditions of the work at Wheeling and Irondale seem to be encouraging, so far as we can discover.

Courage, brothers; keep the work moving; faces Zionward.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH AT WHEELING.

THE following item, illustrated with an engraving from a photograph of President Joseph Smith, appeared in the Wheeling, West Virginia, Sunday News, of December 12:—

LATTER DAY SAINTS.

AN INTERESTING EVENT AT BENWOOD TO-DAY.

The Church of Latter Day Saints will welcome its President, Reverend Joseph Smith—Early Events Recalled.

The church on Water Street, in North Benwood, of the Latter Day Saints, will be the scene to-day of two highly interesting meetings. The Rev. Joseph Smith, the founder of the sect sometimes confounded with that of the Mormon faith, will preach at eleven a. m., and 7:30 p. m. Rev. Smith is now the president of the church his father founded. He is the editor of the Saints' Herald, the official organ of the church, and is a man of commanding presence and great power as a speaker. His appearance here to-day is his first visit to the sect in this part of the country, and all of the members of the church are consequently deeply interested.

In speaking of Rev. Smith and his connection with the Church of Latter Day Saints, one of his members said yesterday:—

He is the eldest son of Joseph Smith the founder of the Church Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, who was ruthlessly martyred by a mob at Carthage, Illinois, June 27, 1844. It is believed by many that Joseph Smith was the founder of the Mormon Church in Utah, which also claims the name of Latter Day Saints. But polygamy and other kindred evils and pernicious doctrines of the Utah Church were no part of the teaching of the church organized in 1830. After the death of their leader, Brigham Young, by boldly assuming leadership, succeeded in getting a large following to emigrate with him to Utah. There he led them into complete apostasy and in 1852 he publicly proclaimed his belief in the doctrine of polygamy. This abomination was practiced by him and his followers until prohibited by the passage of the Edmunds-Tucker bill in 1892. The passage of this law by Congress was largely due to the efforts of Joseph Smith, the present president of the Reorganized Church. The Reorganization began in 1856 [1851], among those who would not be duped to following Young, but remained true to the original faith. The present Joseph Smith was chosen president in 1860, having been designated for that position prior to the death of his father. Since then he and his collaborators have zealously sought to expose the pernicious evils of the Utah apostates and have done much toward placing the true church in its proper light before the public. He is now sixty-five years of age and his life has been one of constant activity in the interest of the church.

PLACE PRINCETON UNDER A BAN.

OHIO PRESBYTERIANS REFUSE THEIR SANCTION TO THE GRILLROOM AT THE NEW JERSEY UNIVERSITY.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Dec. 14.—Princeton University was placed under the ban of the Maumee Presbytery at the meeting held in this city. The grillroom at that university is the cause of all the trouble. The presbytery decided that it would not recommend that institution for patronage, although it has long been recognized as a Presbyterian school. The resolution as adopted is as follows:—

"Resolved, That the Presbytery of Maumee still stands by the declaration of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church that all such rooms should be abolished by the force of public sentiment acting through the strong arm of the law, and that the Presbytery of Maumee can but consider the opening of a grillroom, patronized by the students of Princeton University, an act of disloyalty to the position of many of the General Assemblies and inimical to the best interests of the students.

"This presbytery cannot recommend that educational institution to the patronage of the church and the world until the present relation to the liquor traffic be changed."

Princeton University, with Princeton Theological School attachment has been censured by a number of State and local presbyteries, also by temperance organizations, because, as stated by one set of resolutions, "the Sesquicentennial Anniversary of that institution was celebrated with the use of intoxicating liquors at its banquet;" also "because we are surprised beyond measure at the news that any of the Christian professors of this honored seat of learning should have signed petitions for licenses to sell intoxicating liquors to their students."

The action of the presbyteries is based upon the following resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church:—

Those who knowingly rent their premises for the [liquor] traffic, or indorse licenses which legalize it, are reprehensible as accomplices in the guilt of the same.

Presbyterian theological seminaries have done much to roughen the sea over which that church has sailed in late years. However, the present question is not a difficult doctrinal one; such as grew out of the trial of Doctor Briggs, of Union Theological Seminary, and will probably be more satisfactorily and easily disposed of. The liquor traffic gives no quarter and should receive none. The Presbyteries are manifestly right in this instance, if they have not been correct in some other positions assumed.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. HENRY J. KEMP, Shenandoah, Iowa, December 21:—

Our work is moving along very nicely in this district; interest quite good in most places. I have labored in Hamburg; baptized two noble souls; prospects for future additions good. Also baptized one in Shenandoah of late. Have been quite busy, doing the best I could. Feel well in health and spirits. All are doing well at present.

Bro. C. A. Parkin, San Francisco, the 20th:—

Bro. Joseph Luff got in a good sermon last night at the Holm's mission. He commenced at eight o'clock and finished at ten. His subject in the main was baptism for the remission of sins. It was a masterly effort. We are sure much good will result. Many of Mr. Holm's followers said, "We believe that doctrine, whether Mr. Holms does or not." May God bless and prosper his cause.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

WE learn from Bishop Kelley that Bro. David Dancer has deeded another forty acres of land to the church for the Saints' Home farm, the second free gift of the kind made by Bro. Dancer, or eighty acres in all. This brings the Home tract out to the main road or to "Main Street," of Lamoni, and adds very greatly to the institution and its general surroundings. The Home is now the possessor of one hundred acres of some of the best land in or about the city. It is a worthy institution, and one in which Bro. Dancer has shown much practical interest from the beginning. The gift will add much to the possibilities of the Home in its beneficent work of making comfortable the aged ones who there shall seek shelter and rest in their declining days.

Pres. A. H. Smith, who has been confined to his home for the past two months, was able to be at the Sunday services on the 19th, and has since been at the Herald Office. He is yet crippled by sciatic rheumatism, but manages by driving and little walking to get about to a limited extent.

Bro. R. Etzenhouser incloses a clipping from the Independent, of Emporium, Pennsylvania, which defines lines of distinction between the Reorganization and the church in Utah. The Punxsutawney News and the Spirit, also insert similar items. Bro. E. has opened three new places since the 12th, and the field is widening before him. Brighamites have also been on the ground, but are being looked after. He expects to go to Clearfield, in answer to call.

Meetings held at Henderson Grove, also at Henderson, Illinois, in November and December, by Bra. J. T. Kinnaman and D. S. Holmes resulted in baptisms and conversions of others who will obey; letter from Bro. Jacob Brown, December 18.

Bro. I. N. Roberts writes from Audubon, Minnesota, late date, that he has succeeded in getting quite a number of the Norwegian people interested in the work; others, of the sectarian world, are fearing the effects resulting to their organizations where the word is preached. The truth is spreading in that field.

Correction.—The lectures delivered against the church by Elder J. B. Briney, referred to in last issue, were delivered at Moberly, Missouri, not at Higbee as erroneously stated.

According to a London dispatch to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat the Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of the Church of England, has given orders to his Vicars General to issue no more licenses for the marriage of divorced persons. Inasmuch as the laws of England do not prohibit such marriages, under certain conditions, the action has created a stir in social, church, and legal circles.

The enormous sun spots which have recently become visible without the aid of a telescope are the subject of an article by Prof. G. P. Serviss in a New York paper. As to the probability of a new world having been formed he says: "While it is possible that a mass of matter has been ejected from the sun within the last week which equaled the earth in size, yet since that mass must have been in a gaseous or vaporous condition, it would not weigh a millionth part of the weight of the earth, and, as it cooled, it would rapidly contract until, instead of a thing as big as a world, it would become simply a meteor. And it is also within the range of possibility that that meteor, or some of those meteors, may reach the earth. The chances of their coming direct to the earth, however, would be very small.

London, Dec. 27.—A special dispatch from Shanghai says: It is reported that 17 British war ships are off Chemulpo, Corea, southwest of Seoul, supporting the British Consul's protest, really amounting to an ultimatum, against the king's practically yielding the government of Corea into the hands of the Russian minister. The protest is specially directed against the dismissal of McLeavy Brown, British adviser to the Corean customs, in favor of the Russian nominee. The news has produced consternation at Seoul, which is heightened by the knowledge that Japan has a fleet of 30 war ships awaiting the result of the British representation, which Japan fully supports. Japan is irritated by the arrival of Russian troops in Corea, and it is believed that she will oppose them.

"According to a dispatch from Shanghai it is reported there from reliable sources that a British force landed at Chemulpo on Saturday and caused the reinstatement of McLeavy Brown. The same dispatch refers to a native rumor that the Union Jack has been hoisted on an island in the mouth of the Yang-tse-Kiang River."

STOP AND THINK.—NO. 2.

BY SR. ALMIRA.

OFTEN people do not give strict attention to what is being said to them, and on rehearsing it, represent it in an altogether different light than that which the speaker meant. Then another takes it up and makes a little change and so on, till every original idea is perverted, consequently public opinion is in a flame, ready to consume the innocent one.

For illustration: A young man married a woman, who claimed that she did not know how to do the many kinds of work that were presented in her new situation. This was told to his aunt, who had always been his friend, partly because of her love for him, and partly out of gratitude to his departed mother. Her heart was filled with kind emotions for him. Not one unpleasant word had ever passed between them. An acquaintance told her of the bride's inability to properly fill her position, and she out of love to her nephew and a wish to do good replied:—

"I expect to go to their house to take care of a sick friend, and I will do all I can to show her, and to help her. Probably I can give her useful instruction, in regard to her house work, and cooking as well as in sewing. And I will do it with pleasure." Her heart was filled with pleasure at the thought of conferring a blessing on her nephew and his wife. No thought of self, no thought of gain, no thought of anything but to do good. She had pleasant anticipations in regard to the new field of usefulness that was being opened up before her, till she had entered the new situation, a few weeks later, and the woman remarked:—

I don't know much about work. My mother died when I was young, and my step-mother never would show me how to work, or let me do anything but some of the hard work."

The aunt promptly and kindly, out of the abundance of her heart, replied: "I have had opportunities to learn how to do many kinds of work, and I will gladly teach you."

Before the sentence was finished the other broke in, "I know how to work as well as you do." The manner of speaking plainly said, "I don't want any of your help," and it deeply wounded the feelings of the one addressed, and besides shut off the stream of interest that was flowing in behalf of the other. Only a few days had passed, when the latter accused her new aunt of having said that she was coming there to boss her in her new home, and intended to drive her away and stay herself, saying that such a woman had told it; referring to the one to whom the kind remark had been made a few weeks before. That misrepresentation was a counterfeit of as pure a thought as ever existed; not wholly by one, but by several. Neither one stopped to think what the result might be. It was the source, however, of much confusion and bitterness, many other similar streams running in and swelling it into a river.

We will also illustrate a case of falsehood: Nearly thirty years ago, when the first branch of the church was organized in this vicinity (the Western Maine district) the father of one of the sisters reported that if his daughter disobeyed or displeased her husband, he would take her to the shore and baptize her. This he had done seven or eight times, and it was a law in the "Mormon Church." This statement was made to the writer soon after she had joined the church, by an acquaintance whom she considered truthful. When opportunity offered she told the dear sister the story, not to make trouble, but to get the facts of the case, knowing that there must have been an untruth told by some one, although the lady said, "It must be so, for Mr. E. B. told me so, and it is right in his own family and he is a man that won't lie."

The sister replied: "She is not as well acquainted with him as I am. I have been baptized but once, and Father Gurley officiated—no! my husband." No doubt many believed that foolish report, for a man who claimed to be a Christian told it, and others of like profession passed it on, not one of them stopping to think of the ridicule and reproach which might spring therefrom.

No doubt every member of the church has had some similar experience; but we have the comforting thought that truth will eventually triumph, and consequently error must fall; and also that each will be rewarded according to his works. The writer is the only one of the four referred to that is living in the flesh. They have all tried the realities of the beyond. The dear sister has been gone from us fourteen years, and not one honest person who knew her could for a moment doubt her happiness. Every child of God has persecutions, and frequently those of our own household are the persecutors, even as in our Master's case. We who are in a distant corner of the church privileges must have less than those who labor in the front; and when we think of the mistakes, the misrepresentations, and willful lies brought against the members of the church in the early days, and all the way down to the present (could we know them all), we must think that we have had a smooth experience. O Father, give us grace to bear all things, and forgive our persecutors, for they know not what they do!

These are facts under our own observation, the second point in our own experience.

"WHERE THERE'S A WILL, THERE'S A WAY."

BRO. ELMER E. JOHNSON, of Chicago, secretary of the Northern Illinois district Sunday school association, in a letter December 17, writes: "The example of the people at Shaw [Illinois.—Ed.] is commendable. They have no branch there, but the few members meet every Sunday for Sunday school, and go around among the neighbors and pick up their children and bring them to the school in their farm wagons and buggies." He further observes that "Generally, where there is enough of the will, there is some way of starting a school."

"WORK THAT WINS."

BRO. JOHN J. BILLINSKY, of St. Louis, Missouri, writes December 17: "I go to St. Clair, Missouri, next Sunday to organize a Sunday school. Expect to start one in East St. Louis the first of the year; and so the work goes on."

This is as it should be. There are from few to many places in every district where schools could be organized, if the local or district workers would seek them out. Applications for organization seldom come to you; you must hunt them.

HOME SUNDAY SCHOOL.

BRO. JONAS DRURY, of Brownville, Nebraska, writes, telling of a home Sunday school which they are running in the family of one of the saints. It numbers five. They use the lessons of the Quarterly, and the black-board for illustrating the truths of the lessons. Such work is commendable. If all families or groups of the saints would "go and do likewise," much of the privation to them of being without church privileges would be removed. Many other families are and have been for some time running "Home Sunday schools," and find it both enjoyable and profitable. All who cannot attend a regular or public Sunday school should have a Sunday school at home.

Below is a circular letter sent to the various schools of the Fremont, Iowa, district, by the assistant district superintendent, Bro. Joseph Roberts.

CLEARWATER, Neb., Dec. 11:

Editors Herald.—Having been informed that Mr. D. H. Bays, in his onslaught on Mormonism, claims that Egyptian was not known at the time Martin Harris presented characters to Professor Anthon, being as I suppose one of his weapons used to wreck or annihilate whatsoever may savor of latter-day saintism, or Mormonism; and what this astute, farseeing, sagacious, vacillating gentleman may erect on the ruins thereof is certainly among the uncertainties, but we may possibly catch a glimmer of light, as this great smasher succeeds in his contemplated projects.

I herewith forward you a copy of that found in a late edition of the Oxford Bible, purporting to be a history of the Rosetta stone, which was discovered by Mr. M. Broussard, an officer employed in the great expedition of Napoleon I., which is found in the British Museum, with the Moabite stone and ninety-eight similar ones. The history and contents of each given, the inclosed being in full of that given touching the Rosetta stone.

THE ROSETTA STONE.

From time immemorial the ancient Egyptians employed as characters for their hieroglyphic writing pictures of men and animals, and natural and artificial objects; they continued to do so, with certain modifications, for some centuries after the birth of Christ. From the fifth or sixth century of our era until the beginning of the present century, the key to the decipherment of their inscriptions and writings was lost, and the only available information we have regarding them was to be gleaned from the works of classical and other early authors.

In the sixteenth century a German scholar, Kircher, attempted to decipher certain texts without success, and the same ill result attended the labors of Jablonski in the following century. Towards the end of the eighteenth century some attention was paid to the subject. Zoëga, who observing the occurrence of groups of hieroglyphic characters inclosed within ovals or cartouches, rightly conjectured that they must form some royal names.

But in 1799 the Rosetta stone was discovered by M. Broussard, an officer employed in the great expedition of Napoleon I. This stone found at Rosetta, a city near the mouth of the Nile, to which it gives its name, is of black basalt, and measures 3 feet 9 inches by 2 feet 4½ inches by 11 inches. When complete it was inscribed with about fifteen lines of hieroglyphics, thirty-two lines of the demotic, or conventional form of writing common among the laity of Egypt, and fifty-four lines of Greek. Here, then, was a bilingual inscription in Egyptian and Greek; the Greek evidently a translation of the Egyptian. The Greek text proved to be a decree promulgated in the year 195 B. C. by the priesthood assembled at Memphis, in honor of Ptolemy V., Epiphanes king of Egypt. In recognition of his benefactions to the country, honors were to be paid to the king's statue, a yearly festival was appointed, and a copy of the decrees in hieroglyphics or the writing of the priests, and in demotic, and in Greek, was to be engraved on stone and set up in every temple of the first, second, and third orders. The stone which has now come to light had been placed in the temple near Rosetta. The extreme importance of its discovery was at once recognized; and, as soon as it was brought to England, copies of the inscription were circulated among the scholars and learned societies of Europe. The first to publish any important work on its decipherment was Akerblad, the Swede, who succeeded in ascertaining the true value of fourteen demotic characters; he was followed by Young, who in 1814 rightly interpreted six hieroglyphic alphabetic characters. At length in 1822 the French scholar, Champollion, formulated a demotic and hieroglyphic alphabet which has successfully withstood all attacks upon it, and which is practically the alphabet in use among Egyptologists to this day. Champollion was better equipped for his work than either Akerblad or Young, and to him belongs the great honor of completing the decipherment of Egyptian hieroglyphics; but the credit of discovering the alphabetic element in the demotic and hieroglyphic characters belongs to Akerblad and Young. The first clue for the reconstruction of the Egyptian alphabet was found in the names of Ptolemy and Cleopatra, which occur on the Rosetta stone, and also in a bilingual inscription on the obelisk at Philæ. With the alphabetic character thus obtained Champollion was able to spell out the names of the titles of the Greek and Roman rulers of Egypt, and thus eventually to complete the alphabet.

CENTRAL CITY, Neb., Dec 15.

Editors Herald:—I have just closed two nights' meetings in the Baptist church at this place; an excellent interest was manifest in the large attendance. The pastor objected to me using the church, but the deacons, majority of the trustees, and the liberal part of the membership prevailed over the pastor's influence, and I enjoyed much of the Spirit while discoursing to the people upon the restored gospel. The pastor, Rev. (?) Smith, and the pastors of the M. E. and Presbyterian churches refused to read a notice of my meetings, which has lessened the estimation of some of their leading members of them. Grandma Pemberton and her daughter, Mrs. Hastings, have rendered much assistance in securing use of the church, attendance, and a pleasant place to stop. Prospects are excellent for raising up a branch, and many requests for my return; but thought it wisdom to come when I could have the tent, and such requests I think must be satisfied.

When last I wrote I was on my way to Shelton, Nebraska, to fulfill a long-standing request to help in regulating the affairs of the branch; the district president being unable to attend to it, requested that I should.

I remained from October 13th till the 27th, finding much that needed regulating. I found a body of saints that with few exceptions were willing to comply with the counsel and instructions given. With the exception of a lingering effect resulting from difficulties running long without regulation, all is well in the vicinity of the branch. I found a hospitable, liberal-hearted body of saints, who had, because of being young in the faith and lacking understanding, fallen into difficulties, which had they been regulated at the time but little trouble would have ensued; but because of their remaining unsettled, much damage has been done to the general interests of the work.

I was at Phillips, in Bro. Peak's field, on a visit to a brother in the flesh whom I had not seen for years, and while there preached every night to large audiences in a hall secured by my brother free of cost. A good work can be done there, and the elders will find a home with my brother, John W. Mintun, who lives a few hundred yards from the town.

Visited at home while attending to some business from November 1 to 8, assisting at services of the Magnolia branch on the 7th; the Spirit's presence seemed to indicate the Lord's acceptance of the branch, and to encourage much those who were officials. It was a refreshing time from the Lord to me.

The 8th and 9th I assisted the district president, J. M. Stubbart, in the Fremont branch, which has become much weakened by removals. A few noble souls there are trying to keep afloat the banner of King Emmanuel, but under quite discouraging circumstances. I pray for them that faith and patience may be given that they may endure to the end.

Came to Cairo on the 9th, where resides a body of saints, members of the Shelton branch, who had been brought into covenant relationship principally through the labors of Bro. S. D. Payne. I found them in great need of help, and yet so situated that it was a severe task to help them as I so much desired; but with all the discouragements there came rays of hope from the heavenly Father, and I was permitted to see good results, which I hope and pray may be permanent and spread until these babes in the kingdom may become men and women of valor for their Master's cause. While there I reorganized Olive Branch Sunday school, and reestablished regular prayer services. On the 4th I came to Shelton branch, when by request I presided over their regular business meeting, at which there was selected as officials, J. W. Smith president, J. F. Lippincott priest, M. Stearley teacher, and P. Moldrup deacon; and some resolutions passed as will assist in keeping up the interest of the work among its scattered members. I remained there till the 12th, preaching and attending services each evening. The evidences are very manifest that God is much pleased with the advanced steps the saints have taken in several ways, and that if the officials labor discreetly, much good will be done; but on account of strong prejudice and unwise actions on the part of some of the members, it will take time to reach the people with the gospel.

On Sunday the 12th I received that which to me was precious, and of much encouragement, in the shape of a letter of remembrance from the Sunday school of which Sr. Anna Light is secretary, containing a Christmas present for companion and children. May God bless the donors, bearing them witness by his Spirit of the high appreciations such tokens of remembrance are held by the lonely ones who are sacrificing that others may be blessed.

I have appointments for each night until the holidays, and work outlined till the last of the year, when I return home to look after home interests, which seems to be a necessity.

Encouraging reports come to me from the labors of Brn. W. A. Smith and Samuel Woods. The work is onward, but opposition is strong and seemingly growing stronger; but I see some things to indicate that the future will be fraught with great success, if the saints are humble and faithful. The need of humble, patient, energetic men to look after the interests of the branches, so as to free the missionaries from such work, only in the sense of missionaries, would be the greatest help the church could now receive from the hands of God. May the Lord raise up such for all the branches in this mission, is my continuous petition.

With great joy in the service of the Master, and hope for its final triumph, I am,

J. F. MINTUN.

P. S.—Those who have requested labor will please be patient and do all they can to prepare the way for the missionary when he comes, and all will end well. I regret very much that several requests have remained unsatisfied so long, but I have done what I could with the help I have. Lord send more laborers into the vineyard.

AUDUBON, Minn., Dec. 5.

Editors Herald:—Our branch is in a good spiritual condition, and so far as we are able to see and understand, willing to do all we can to help the cause along.

Bro. I. N. Roberts has been with us again this fall, and we feel to thank God that he saw fit to heal him that he might be able to go on in this glorious battle for Christ. Bro. Roberts seems to be just the one for this place, and has labored hard and faithfully, sparing no means in his power to get the gospel before the people.

It has been that we could not get a church to hold meetings in, but this fall the Congregational church has been opened to us, for which we feel very thankful, and know that God will bless its members for so doing.

We are trying to build a church in this place, and the way the people outside as well as inside the church have contributed, we feel that God's hand is in the work, and hope soon to have a comfortable place in which to worship.

We have been hearing good sermons lately, delivered by Elders T. J. Martin and H. Way, in what is known as the Ochsner schoolhouse.

Dear brethren and sisters, I feel glad when

I hear the work is onward all over the world, and want to do all I can to help it on. Although I have been called to pass through hard and bitter trials, yet I am strong in the faith, and rejoice in the gospel of Christ, and want to let my light shine out to those around me, and be a saint in very deed.

Your sister,

L. M. HAWLEY.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Dec. 7.

Editors Herald:—I have just returned from a visit to the Broad River saints and am pleased to say that they are doing well, growing strong in the faith and in knowledge of the truth. Elder A. E. Stone, of New Canaan, is their presiding elder, and is doing what he can to keep the work moving. He is much esteemed among the little flock. Bro. H. Buttery is the teacher of the branch and alive to the work. Julius Cabel is the deacon and is an earnest young man. Bro. Hobson, who is the priest, has moved away. He is missed very much, as he was a good worker. This little flock is being blest.

In bonds,

JOSEPH SQUIRE.

CUSTER PARK, Ill., Dec. 16.

Editors Herald:—The writer spent ten days in Aurora recently, very satisfactorily to himself and with some degree of profit to others he hopes. Had the pleasure of joining Bro. Adam Keck in the Sunday services held in Apollo Hall, November 28, as well as the satisfaction of meeting the resident saints of Aurora, who all seemed hopeful and firm in the latter-day message. Bro. Keck's labors in Aurora were commended and appreciated by all enjoying the benefits of his ministrations. With such local workers as Brn. Wilsey, Henley, Atkins, and Haynes, assisted by others, the prospective outlook for the future of the church is good, and the maintenance of "the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace," is the one essential condition necessary to give permanent success to the work in Aurora, as well as throughout the world.

Through the efforts of local brethren and the courtesy of those in charge we were permitted to occupy the pulpit of the "Emmanuel mission" on Sunday evening, the 5th, to a full house. Favorable comments at the close indicated an appreciation of the word spoken. We reached our home in the "windy city" on the 9th, and on the 10th responded to an urgent call to visit the sick near Ritchey. We were glad to find out, while in the above section, that the effort made by Bro. Houghton and the writer, in the M. E. chapel near Ritchey, last fall, was not only appreciated by the people, but that there is a strong demand for a renewal of the effort as soon as practicable. There are several fine points for missionary work to be done in those regions round about, but the open weather and muddy roads make the present time unseasonable. We stopped at Wilmington, a nice little town situated on the banks of the Kankakee River, but found the opportunities for preaching the gospel were among the "invisibles," but we hope not "eternally" so. Preachers are against us most everywhere to a man, and they employ social ostracism, misrepresentation, and every unfair method they can against us; besides occupying an exclusive pulpit in educating the people wrongly regarding our faith and true position. But these are the men in principle and kind that the founders of these religions condemned as men of injustice, unfairness, bigotry, intolerance, and falsehood. But these sectarian sons of sectarian fathers, are practicing with high-handed effrontery the very things their fathers condemned in others. But pause! It is the other man's ox that is gored now. A difference, the chief characteristics of which are hypocrisy, inconsistency, and injustice.

On the 11th we procured the consent of the mayor of Coal City to publish an appointment for preaching in the city hall the following day, Sunday, the 12th, at 2:30 p. m. In the evening Bro. Dagon and I gave the Presbyterian and Methodist minister of the town written notices of the appointment requesting them to read them to their respective congregations at their services on Sunday morning. This they both promised to do, in a very polite manner of expression. Bro. Dagon attended the Presbyterian service in the morning while I went to the M. E. Church. The Presbyterian preacher, after some suspicious remarks ventured to read the notice; but the M. E. preacher failed to do as he promised. I would not venture to say he was guilty of falsehood, but it was doubtless a change of mind, incidental to afterthought and reflection. Our congregation was small in the city hall, but the interest was good, and some of the M. E. brethren said they would be pleased to have us preach in their church; but that minister's conduct and countenance froze out of my heart one chief element of hope—expectation!

If our church ever becomes popular and rich, will it become intolerant?

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Dec. 13.

Editors Herald:—I have just closed a series of five nights lecturing on the Book of Mormon in this city. Our congregations were good and all seemed to take a lively interest in the subject as some came to me after the lectures were over and thanked me for the effort; not being members of the church, I took it as a favorable sign of an honest search for truth.

The saints of this city will meet next Friday night at their hall to devise ways and means to build a church house in San Antonio. I believe this to be a good movement for the work here, as it would give us so much better advantage to present our work to the city in a substantial way. Many people ask me where we hold our meetings, and when I tell them where it is, they do not want to go, for it is away out on the outskirts of the city, and off the car line, and hard to find. There is as much inquiry for our work in this place as any city I ever was in, and the saints have been unable to provide a suitable place for meeting.

We are about to make a final great effort to meet this demand, and I am satisfied the work will be accomplished. The friendly citizens of this cause will give us help. I think the saints can rely on our judgment in the matter. We may be quite poor as a church here, but we have got some very good "cold water disciples" down in this country.

The weather has become too cool for our Mexican work to be carried on out of doors, under our arbor, so I will go out to see Bro. Jett soon to make some arrangements for him to preach to them in a suitable house.

MUSCOGEE, Fla., Dec. 13.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Reeder and I are still on the move; but have to move considerably to do a little preaching, as our appointments are too many miles apart. Held a very interesting meeting at Mr. William Parish's house. On the first Sunday four gave their names for baptism—heads of families. They will be baptized the first Sunday in January. Since writing you we have baptized and confirmed two worthy souls, both young ladies. Preached once in the colored Baptist church at Point Clear, some whites in attendance. They are anxious for us to come again. Preached one sermon in the white Baptist church in Muscogee; had a very interested audience. This town is the headquarters of the great Southern States Timber and Lumber Company, containing some six or seven hundred inhabitants. We were invited here by the superintendent of the works, who is also superintendent of the Sunday school. He heard us in one discourse from the chart in Bro. N. Reeder's barn. We are also billed to preach there again the third Sunday; two discourses from the chart.

Bro. Edward Maylan, who was baptized August 10 last, through his energy, zeal, and industry, has erected a little house of worship on his father's land, some two miles from Muscogee, on a beautiful site. The building is 16x20, built of lumber, and will seat nearly one hundred people. It is made of rough lumber, except the floor. This young brother did all the work himself; no one as much as held a board for him while he nailed. Not wanting to stop his younger brother from school, he went ahead alone. He didn't have a dollar to begin with, but went to the superintendent and told him he was going to build a Latter Day Saints' church, and I think asked him if he could help him; so he gave him the sills, and told him he would sell him all the lumber he wanted on credit, and he could pay when he earned the money. Another friend I believe gave him some of the framing; so he bought the balance of the lumber, hauled it, and put the house up himself; and now he has it paid for. His father told him he had better wait till we got twenty-five or thirty members, and then build a good one; "but" says he, "that's what I want to build it for—to get the twenty-five or thirty members." The windows are to put in yet, and the door to hang, and then it is ready for use. He now sends for Quarterlies and two Hymnals to start a Sunday school, furnishing the funds himself. This young brother is only eighteen years of age. His father now says he thinks he will deed him five acres of land, where his church stands and let him deed it to the church if he wants to.

Now if there is anyone who has done as much from the 6th day of April, 1830, down to the present time, who has been in the church no longer than he has, and who is no older than he is, and who has done it under such unfavorable circumstances, and without a dollar to begin with, as he did, we would like to see a note of it in the Herald, and would like to see the name or names of any such on record together in the history of the church.

We feel assured this young brother will make his mark in the church, if he continues as he has started out. The Lord ever bless him.

NEW ALBANY, Ind., Dec. 15.

Editors Herald:—We have rented a hall for one year in this city, and Bro. M. R. Scott, Jr., is with us holding meetings. Crowds are not very large so far, owing to rainy weather; interest not overly good.

Bro. T. W. Chatburn is operating across the river in our sister city, Louisville, Kentucky. He spoke Sunday night for us. He says they are having good crowds and interest in the great tobacco city; for it is noted for its great tobacco market. I pray he may water some seed that has been sown there, and make a permanent opening.

SCRANTON, Miss., Dec. 19.

Editors Herald:—Owing to yellow fever and consequent quarantine restrictions, the trial of the mob who tore down our gospel tent last September did not come off until yesterday. The jury were out but a short time, and rendered a verdict of "guilty as charged," and recommended them to the mercy of the court. Whilst the small fine of five dollars, costs, lawyers fees, etc., was no punishment commensurate with their crime, yet it was a victory for us. There are two other indictments against them, which our attorney thinks it best to bring before the grand jury, then if bills are found against them they will be tried before the circuit court, which will probably sit sometime next month.

Besides these two cases there is still another; that of the two inhuman beings who so shamefully mistreated Bro. Kelley on the public highway. There is but little doubt that in case Bro. Kelley appears against them, but what they will be indicted by the grand jury. This I consider to be about the most important case, as members of the mob have avowed that our missionaries will not be allowed to preach in the country.

We hope to come somewhere near getting justice and to have some interest aroused in our work, as through this ventilation in court and newspapers our true position and standing is brought before the people, or a few of them at least, and although the travail incident to such persecution is distressing, yet good to some is brought forth under the Father's watchful care.

We trust to see the tent start out again next year, when the season opens for tent work, which is early down in this Gulf region, untrammelled by quarantine restrictions or lawless men, that the good for which it was intended may be accomplished. Although we know that the sacrifices made by the saints in the district will not go unrewarded, but be had in remembrance by our loving Savior, yet we naturally desire to see others blessed through the glad some sounding of the gospel trumpet under that tent purchased by the sacrifices of these saints and their friends. Will the saints everywhere kindly remember us in their prayers.

Your brother in Christ,

FRANK P. SCARCLIFF.

THACKERY, Ill., Dec. 15.

Editors Herald:—In our field of labor at Arrington station, where this district held the reunion, we had a very good time in the prayer and testimony and preaching meetings.

In company with Bro. C. Barmore we went to Barnhill and held two meetings. We visited with Sr. Foster of the Utah Church, but she is not in touch with the faith of that church, but is in harmony with the Josephites, as she expressed it. She desires to be baptized; will Bro. Morris or Brown, Walker or Thomas visit her.

Our next stop was at Springerton and Bungay, where we held meetings two weeks, with big crowds. The saints were strengthened and remembered the missionary financially, which was very much needed. May God bless the saints there, and may the indifferent ones remember the covenants they made to the Father and live closer to him in the future. There are many noble saints in that vicinity.

At Brownville we met Bro. Benjamin Wadkins, and found him and his wife in the faith, and glad to see us. We held five meetings at his house; the first any of our elders have preached there. We had a good crowd and some opposition from the Baptists. Was challenged for debate by one Rev. Moore; referred him to Bro. White and Slover. Baptized three at that place.

Then we went to Tunnel Hill, the birthplace of W. H. and E. L. Kelley, the home of T. C. and W. A. Kelley, and the Smith and Webb families, all related in the flesh, and all in the kingdom; we had a good time. It seems that everybody believes the gospel there, but somehow they do not come into the church. I baptized one there. At Kelley Wall, where we held twelve meetings, with big crowds, I preached the Thanksgiving sermon at Bro. Frank Kelley's school, and Bro. Barmore gave a song and recitation, all of which was well received.

Were met at Eldorado by Bro. J. T. Falkner, then four miles to his father's, Bro. Balm Falkner's, where we held two meetings; attendance small, the Baptists were holding a protracted effort there. At Parrish we began meetings December 1. Bad weather hindered us, but on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday nights we had very good attendance. We enjoyed the society of the saints. May our heavenly Father bless and prosper them in all things.

At Rural Hill we held nine meetings, with some interested in the message. We were taken care of by the Davis brothers, who are holding the work up before the people. May they be blessed in their work. To-day Bro. F. M. Davis brought us to this place, but we failed to get a house to hold meetings in. We are domiciled at Bro. George Taylor's. Will remain only a short time. Bro. George has made several efforts to get the gospel before the people, but could get the house only for two or three meetings at a time. I think of returning in a week or two, to see what can be done. We desire an interest in the prayers of God's people. Wishing all the saints a merry Christmas and a happy new year, I am,

Yours in bonds,

PARRISH, Ill., Dec. 20.

Editors Herald:—Bro. G. H. Hilliard and I have lately made a tour of the branches of Southern Illinois district. This is the place where Bro. Hilliard began his ministerial work about thirty years ago. He did not get to remain with us very long; but while we were together he did all the preaching, except the writer preached once. I received much valuable instruction and counsel from him in regard to the perfect law, which advice and counsel I desire to profit by in time to come. His counsel to the saints was grand, and no one should fail to perform their duty as it was thus made plain by him. All should strive to do their duty, and remember that it is only those who live right that can have claim on God for the promised blessings. He that receiveth my law and doeth it, the same is my disciple; and he that saith he receiveth it and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you. All should try and set the right example at all times, in order that we can have claim on God for those blessings he has promised in his word. And until the saints learn to live according to the perfect law, the church cannot accomplish the work required according to the revelations it has received.

The Lord says that Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom; otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience if it must needs be by the things which they suffer. So if we fail to heed the admonition given in the divine law, we may expect to suffer in consequence of disobedience thereunto.

Many of our people disregard the counsel of God in regard to the use of tobacco. The Lord says in Doctrine and Covenants, section 119, to avoid the use of tobacco, and be not addicted to strong drink in any form. I trust that all those who read the word of the Lord, as referred to above, will heed the counsel and advice given therein, that they may be workmen meet for the Master's use. One aged sister who had been using tobacco something near fifty years has lately put it away, and I trust that others may fall in line and profit by the above example.

According to the rules of the church no elder will be sustained in the field as a missionary who is guilty of using it. We are told not to be hypocrites, nor of those who make a man an offender for a word. If we break the law of God, then we are not law-abiding citizens in his kingdom. We should not be disloyal to the government of God; and remember the law of tithing is a part of the gospel law; and all those who have not yet begun to comply therewith should do so at their earliest convenience. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse; and he that is tithed shall not be burned at his coming. The Savior teaches us that it should not be left undone. I trust the saints where Bro. Hilliard has been laboring will heed the instructions he has given, by placing themselves in harmony with the divine law. All are called to engage in a great work; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all. But for fear my letter will occupy too much space in your paper I will remain silent here. F. M. SLOVER.

KIRKSVILLE, Mo., Dec. 20.

Editors Herald:—I have been doing what I can here in fireside preaching to those who visit me, and distributing tracts, and expect to appear in a four or five column article in the Saturday Mail, after holidays, advertising crowds it out just now. Any elders coming this way we will be glad to have them stop. Can you not send an elder here after the holidays? We will see that he is taken care of. I ask an interest in the prayers of the saints, as almost every bone in my neck and spine is out of place; adjustment is slow and painful. Breast bone and ribs are now nearly normal. In bonds,

DECEPTION'S REIGN.—PART 2. NO. 5.

BY ELDER COLUMBUS SCOTT.

WE desire to see our way clearly as we approach this "eleventh hour" call, as indicated by Jesus. It is a matter of infinite importance to all who desire to understand the truth. The subject is one of no less importance than "the kingdom of heaven." That subject includes all that relates to the salvation of man,—from faith in God, and the atonement of Christ, to the bliss of eternal life and glory. There was a period of time intervening the hours of calling, during which revelation from God ceased, and those periods were seasons of darkness. The reason of this was the people kept straying further and further from the divine truth, and rejecting God's commandments, choosing rather to walk in their own ways, and to follow in ways of the worldly wise, who substituted their own precepts and theologies for the knowledge and revelation of God, till they forfeited all right to his blessing and guidance.

We may go farther and state, that when such has been the case with the people, God withdrew his Spirit from them as a mark of his divine displeasure, and left them to walk in their own ways without the light of present revelation, as a divine judgment and retribution against them. And, to us, one of the strongest things related to religious subjects is, Bible readers do not see this! Let us see if this is true.

To those who turned away from God under the early morning call or dispensation, God said:—

My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh: yet his days shall be a hundred and twenty years.—Gen. 6: 3.

Here we see that because the wickedness of the people was great, and the imaginations of their hearts evil only continually, God withdrew the spirit of revelation from among them. Noah was a prophet, a revelator, "a preacher of righteousness," (2 Peter 2: 5), and although "the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah" (1 Peter 3: 20), the people repented not, and so the light of the spirit of revelation was withdrawn, and they left to be destroyed.

Of those to whom the new revelation and commission of the third hour call was sent, and who finally rejected it; God said:—

But in the fourth generation they [Abraham's seed] shall come hither again: for the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full.—Gen. 15: 16.

Where no law is, sin is not imputed. But the gospel of salvation through Christ, the seed of Abraham, was preached in those days. We read what Paul says:—

And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel to Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. . . . He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ.—Gal. 3: 8, 16.

Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.—Peter, Acts 4: 12.

Salvation through the gospel of Christ is what Paul and Peter preached. And Paul declares it was preached thus in Abraham's days. Of the missionary work done by Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, under the commission of the "third hour" call, David says:—

When they went from one nation to another, from one kingdom to another people; he suffered no man to do them wrong: yea, he reproved kings for their sakes; saying, Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.—Ps. 105: 13-15.

God does not constitute men "prophets" and anoint them to travel among the nations just for their health! just to be gentlemen of leisure! No. Those great prophets and patriarchs proclaimed the gladsome news of salvation to the nations of their day through a coming Redeemer. But the descendants of those nations, the Amorites and others, would reject the divine law and message, and bring upon themselves the condemnation of heaven, as the Deity informed his friend, Abraham, "For the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full." So that when the children of Israel emigrated to Egypt, the light of divine continued revelation was withdrawn from among them, and they ultimately fought against God, to their utter destruction off the earth.

Concerning those who lived after the "sixth hour" call, and to whom the gospel was proclaimed, and who rejected it, and would not believe it (Heb. 4: 2), and rejected the word of the Lord, slew his prophets, "and misused his prophets" (see 2 Chron. 36: 14-16), till there was no remedy, God denounced his judgment against them thus:—

My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge: because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest unto me: seeing thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children.—Hosea 4: 6.

This prophecy has been in process of fulfillment for more than eighteen hundred years; and they, (the Jews) will remain thus rejected of God until they become willing to let God deal with them by new revelation through living prophets, holy men, and angels.

For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without teraphim: afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days.—Hosea 3: 4, 5.

Israel was led astray from God by false teachers, who taught them to reject present revelation, and to believe only in the prophets of previous ages. (John 45: 47; Matt. 23: 29-33), while rejecting the living ones,—and for this grievous doctrine and sin, which led them to reject their Savior, God has since fulfilled this judgment of heavenly wrath upon them.

Therefore night shall be unto you, that ye shall not have a vision; and it shall be dark unto you, that ye shall not divine; and the sun shall go down over the prophets, and the day shall be dark over them. Then shall the seers be ashamed, and the diviners confounded: yea, they shall all cover their lips; for there is no answer of God.—Micah 3: 6, 7.

After the introduction of the "Ninth hour" dispensation of the kingdom of God by angels, John the Baptist, Jesus Christ, and the apostles and prophets, near nineteen hundred years ago, all of whom were authorized and directed in the work of reestablishing the kingdom or church by direct continued revelation,—history began to repeat itself. The saints of New Testament days began to reject continued revelation in days of the apostles, for, to such Paul wrote:—

And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption.—Eph. 4: 30.

Quench not the Spirit. Despise not prophesyings.—1 Thess. 5: 19, 20.

But if any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant. Wherefore, brethren, covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak in tongues.

Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts.—1 Cor. 14: 1, 38, 39.

And yet later along down the age, God said to the church:—

He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the church.—Rev. 3: 13.

And is it not strange, that from the day the Lord gave these admonitions till now, the great professed Christian world have never paid any attention to them! But to this day they go right along in direct opposition to them, saying to the people, "There is to be no more revelation from God,—the canon of scripture is full." "God has long since ceased to reveal himself to men." This is precisely the position occupied by the Pharisees and hypocrites of old, who rejected Jesus with new revelation, saying:—

We know that God spake to Moses: but as for this fellow, we know not from whence he is.—John 9: 29.

God has long since ceased to reveal himself to the self-exalted proud professed world,—long ages ago,—but it was not because he has changed right about, and ceased to be a God of present revelation,—not because he respected his children anciently more than now; but because the deniers of new revelation have departed from the narrow way, and forfeited the right to present revelation, just as the Jews before them had done. They have broken the gospel covenant, as prophets foretold they would. They have taught "perverse things to draw away disciples after them," as was foretold by the Apostle Paul:—

For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them.—Acts 20: 29, 30.

False teachers have entered in among the church, brought in damnable heresies, denying the Lord that bought them, by denying that he continues that give revelation to his people when needed, and many have followed their pernicious ways, by reason of whom the way of truth has been evil spoken of; and through covetousness have made merchandise of the people, and are still doing so, by turning their religious institutions into money making enterprises to enrich a few "presumptuous," "self-willed" preachers, while their deluded followers, many of them, follow along in blindness and poverty.

They speak "evil of the things they understand not," being natural-minded, and sensual; being greedy of reward, beguiling unstable souls, the way of truth they have not known. Their great swelling words of boasting of their being representatives of churches that number their millions, by which they mock the narrow way that so few find; as though numbers and popularity were tests of the truth and the right, urge them on to a judgment that lingereth not, and to a damnation that slumbereth not, for they shall utterly perish.

Woe unto them! for they have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and perished in the gainsaying of Core.—Jude 11. (2 Peter, chapter 2.)

Reader, all this change in the religious world has come about since revelation from heaven ceased, soon after the days of Paul, and Peter, and Jude. We now see their prophetic statements have been, and are being fulfilled. And the condition of things in the popular religious world will continue to grow worse till Babylon becomes the hold of every foul spirit, and the cage of every unclean and hateful bird. Rev. 18: 2.

But in the midst of all the divided, contending, dark and confused state of religious affairs now existing, there are good, well meaning, honest but misguided people. Many of them desire the light of truth. For all such, the "eleventh hour" call or dispensation of the kingdom of God is now instituted, and has been for the last sixty years and over. We are living in the day of the downfall of "great Babylon," and that due warning may be given, and honest seekers after the way of life be placed upon their watch tower, and invited to safety from darkness and woe in Babylon's fall, a voice is heard by the waiting ones, saying:—

Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities.—Rev. 18: 4, 5.

And should you be inclined to inquire what the plagues of Babylon are, the answer comes, replying, "Death, mourning, and famine." (Verse 8.) This surely is characteristic of these days!

The character of this voice heard from heaven, just prior to Babylon's great fall, is further indicated by the prophetic statement of the Revelator in these words:—

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.—Rev. 14: 6, 7.

And the time when this wondrous, startling event was to enter upon its fulfillment, is indicated by these words following:—

And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.—Rev. 14:8.

The last great divine commission, then, given to men to go to the nations and administer the gospel, is restored through the medium of an holy angel. The voice heard from heaven, calling on honest men and women to come out from the religious confusion, and come forth and accept of the gospel unmixed with the contradictory doctrines and the deceptive precepts of men, is conveyed "from heaven," from God, by a messenger of light from the realms of glory! This is God's way of solving the greatest problem of the age. Uninspired, humanly learned man says, No. Revelation from God is hereby opened to men, as foretold in the Bible. God acts like himself. Not as man dictates.

The angel comes, not with a new gospel. There is but one gospel designed of God to save men. But one "way" that leadeth unto life. (Matt. 7:13.) Whatever that one way consisted of nineteen hundred years ago, it is the same now. It is "Jesus Christ the same, yesterday, to-day, and forever." Hence, no need to be "carried about with diverse and strange doctrines."—Heb. 13:8, 9.

In the foregoing prophetic utterances we have the introductory stage of "the restitution of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets" set forth. The divine administrative authority of the kingdom of God and its laws and ordinances being restored by divine interposition; the gospel, the "seed of the kingdom," the word of God which is "spirit" and "life," is being proclaimed to the nations with authority. Men, therefore, have no need now to impose themselves and their Babylonish theologies, contradictory and deceptive, on men any longer.

It was this wonderful work; to be introduced in the last days by an holy angel, that Jesus was directing the attention of his apostles to, when answering their sweeping interrogation,—"What shall be the sign of thy coming; and the end of the world," when he answered:—

And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.—Matt. 24:3, 14.

Jesus here predicts a great and mighty work to be done among all nations—a great concluding act and work of God's directing, to conclude the history of this world. How like our Father this is. How like his dealings with the antediluvians in Noah's day, just before the destruction of man by the flood. Jesus tells us that as it was then, "so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of man." By the special commission of prophets and divinely inspired preachers was the world then warned. (Matt. 24:38.) Some have been deceived into the idea by our modern uninspired, unauthorized teachers, that to print the Bible and translate it into the various languages of earth, and send it among the nations to be read by them, and accepted as interpreted by the contradictory human creeds, accompanied with tracts, and man-sent missionaries, to inculcate their varied and contradictory opinions, is the fulfillment of the foregoing great prophecy of our Lord. But that idea is a deception. It is in reality but further extending the influences of the wine from the cup seen by John, in the hand of mystery Babylon, and God's design in sending "the everlasting gospel," "the gospel of the kingdom," and authorizing men to preach and administer it, in "the eleventh hour" dispensation, is to counteract the work being done by the creeds as far as it can possibly be done, and save all who will from their influences so blinding and confusing. Jesus did not require the ancient apostles to put the Bible into the various languages of the earth, write tracts, and send them forth to all nations as interpretations of contradictory creeds and confessions of faith, as a fulfillment the command to them to go "into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Were the creeds and religious confessions and catechisms all destroyed, and the Bible translated into the languages, put into the hands of a divinely called and authorized ministry as they go to the nations to PREACH the gospel "as a witness," as Jesus says shall be done, they would no doubt greatly aid those ministers in their work. But to read the Bible and creeds is not being preached to. To preach or testify "the gospel of the grace of God," is altogether a different thing from having a record of it read. To preach the gospel is an official work, as well as the administration of its rites and divinely appointed ordinances, and building up the kingdom.

The dissemination and defense of creeds or the advocacy of diverse and contradictory theologies, is not preaching the gospel, or building up the church or kingdom of God. In the very nature of the case, God, who has always, when speaking of division among his children, has always condemned it; would not authorize men to go to the nations and establish creeds, theologies, and divided religions. If Bible readers and believers could see this great truth, they could easily see why it is necessary, in God's economy, to again call men to declare the gospel as a witness to all nations, build up the kingdom, and gather the honest hearted out of Babylon; that they may be united in the "one faith," be all baptized into the "one body," in water and the "one Spirit," and worship the Lord "with one consent," as teaches Paul; and the ancient prophet. (Eph. 4:1-6; Zeph. 3:8, 9.)

THE ELEVENTH HOUR CALL.

And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing idle, and saith unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle? They say unto him, Because no man hath hired us. He saith unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard; and whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive. So when even was come, the lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward, Call the laborers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first. And when they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, they received every man a penny. But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more; and they likewise received every man a penny. And when they had received it, they murmured against the goodman of the house, saying, These last have wrought but one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us, which have borne the burden and heat of the day. But he answered one of them, and said, "Friend, I do thee no wrong: didst not thou agree with me for a penny? Take that thine is, and go thy way: I will give unto this last, even as unto thee. Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? Is thine eye evil, because I am good? So the last shall be first, and the first last:

for many be called, but few chosen.—Matt. 20: 6-16.

The eleventh hour call of a ministry to prune the Lord's vineyard for the last time, is just one hour prior to the even time. "The even" is the time to reward the laborers. "The even" is the end of the world. Jesus then comes to reward. He brings the reward with him. Paul looked forward to the coming of Jesus to raise the dead, and reward them. He wrote:—

Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.—2 Tim. 4:8.

And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his works shall be.—Rev. 22:12.

For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works.—Matt. 16:27.

But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind: and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just.—Luke 14:13, 14.

For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming.—1 Cor. 15:22, 23.

These New Testament statements show beyond cavil the time of the reward of God's children, including the laborers in the vineyard. It is at our Savior's second coming, when all the dead saints are made alive by the glorious resurrection. This is the even. And having determined this beyond question, we return to the great events connected with God's work about one hour anterior to this time, when the heavens are again opened, as in former dispensations of the kingdom of heaven, and lo! a holy angel is sent to men to endow them with authority from God to minister again the gospel as in days of old. And as in other dispensations it was said, so now the divine mandate goes forth, "Go ye also into the vineyard." "The harvest is the end of the world."

Let both grow together until the harvest: and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them; but gather the wheat into my barn.—Matt. 13:30.

And his disciples asked him, saying, Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come? And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come [before Jesus comes the second time], and restore all things.—Matt. 17:10, 11.

Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: that in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him.—Eph. 1:9, 10.

Under this head many more Bible evidences might be adduced supportive of the truthfulness of the claims hereby made. That here in the days of the downfall of mystery Babylon, "In the time of the harvest," of the "end of the world," the restitution should be introduced by a prophet, an Elias, that God will call men by revelation in the eleventh hour, or one hour before the end of the world, to labor in the vineyard, or proclaim the gospel of Jesus Christ "as a witness to all nations."

Reader, you have read and heard of the patriarchal dispensations, of both before and after the flood, of the Mosaic or Israelitish dispensations; also of the ninth hour, or the dispensation of the gospel, introduced by John Baptist, Jesus and the apostles; and how all those dispensations were introduced and carried on for a time at least, by revelation from heaven. How the ministry were called by revelation direct to them from heaven. But are you now prepared to accept in good faith the eleventh hour call, the "dispensation of the fullness of times," as predicted by the great apostle to the Gentiles; the great and last dispensation of God this side the second glorious coming of our Savior, to raise the dead and reward mankind? The dispensation in which God proposes to gather in one, all in Christ, not only all in heaven, but those on earth!

Whether you are prepared or not, whether you believe it or not, it is "the mystery of his will,"—God's will,—mark you, to do this. It is not only his pleasure to so bring to pass, but his "good pleasure," for he has purposed it, says Paul, and who will stay the purpose of Jehovah?

The present confused condition of the world requires this divine interposition to lead honest hearts out of the confusion. The religiously divided state of society demands it. The great uncertainty that characterizes the efforts of contending religious leaders demands it. The cold formality and spiritless deadness of religious forms of to-day cause our hearts to wait for light and revelation from God now!

Should the inquiry arise in your heart, while pondering deception's great reign in the world, and the desire to walk into the light should seize your anxious soul to find the right, come and investigate the gospel of Jesus as preached by the elders of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. They will be glad to converse on this infinitely important subject,—the gospel now restored, and Church of God restored as of old.

Sunday School Associations.

POTTAWATTAMIE.

Association convened at Council Bluffs, Iowa, December 11 and 12, 1897; superintendent, Julia E. Hansen, Jennie E. Scott secretary. Reports received from the following schools: Council Bluffs, Underwood, Crescent, Hazel Dell, and Carson. No report from Boomer school. Total enrollment in the district 383. Reports from district officers and most of the teachers and officers in the different schools were read. The Carson school sent in a petition asking for the privilege of joining the association, and they were cordially admitted. The evening program was of a musical nature. Adjourned to meet at Crescent the second Saturday and Sunday in March, 1898. A peaceful influence prevailed throughout the entire session.

CONVENTION NOTICES.

The Clinton district Sunday school association will convene at Rich Hill, Missouri, January 7, 1898, prior to the convening of the conference. Let all the schools have their delegates elected and with their statistical reports be there on time to assist as earnest workers in the advancement of the Sunday school work. The entertainment this time will be on Thursday night. Come in time for this, not only to listen, but to perform some part yourself to make it of interest. Bro. T. A. Hougas, General Superintendent, is expected to be present.

VINA GOFF, Supt.

WHEATLAND, Missouri.

Massachusetts district Sunday school convention will meet at Fall River, Massachusetts, January 8, 1898. Saturday eve, 7:30, business session. Sunday, 9:30 a. m., social meeting, short talks by delegates. Half past ten, teacher's training class in charge of E. H. Fisher. Subject for preparation found in Part One, "Teaching and Teachers," by H. Clay Trumbull. Every superintendent, teacher, and delegate expected to come prepared to discuss knowingly the subject named. At 2:30 p. m., teachers' meetings, how conducted successfully. Open for questions and discussion; M. C. Fisher. N. B.

Text for study, Trumbull's new book entitled, "Teachers' Meetings." Question Box. Come to the convention with something in your head, and with a desire, at least, to help, as well as to be helped, and with a determination not to complain because a session is longer than you desire. Possibly, if you have the "interest of the work" at heart the sessions may seem too short. Try to lead a part of the time, instead of being led all the while. Be a doer as well as a dreamer. Remember, "Nothing great is lightly won." At 3:30 p. m., reviews, their meaning and their practical application, discussed and illustrated by F. O. Coombs. Study, Trumbull, "Teaching and Teachers." Methods in review, Sections I., II., and III. Evening session, 7:30, discussion by convention, topics taken from Question Box, and, Possibilities of the Sunday school by 1900 A. D.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints of the St. Louis district:—The branches all seem in good condition, and I hope growing spiritually. Bro. Billinsky is in charge of the Sunday school interest, and has lately organized a new school at St. Clair, Franklin County, Missouri, which promises well. In this brother the Sunday schools have an earnest and effectual worker, who is willing to spend and be spent.

By action of the last two conferences the local ministry were to be allotted certain places. This work is incomplete, but I hope to be able to see a systematic plan in operation soon. I hope they will make determined efforts to widen field work, as there are in some branches a good many more of the priesthood than are necessary to look after the several congregations. We ought not to esteem ourselves better preachers than others. The law says, "all are called," etc. Let us help the weak, and work together in love. The Holy Spirit makes, and the lack of it unmakes.

Saints, please do not forget the Herald. That is our first duty to our subscription list.

I suggest that we make a further effort toward the end sought by again renewing our fasts; namely, that all presidents of branches announce from time to time that all who desire are requested to keep the first Sunday in each month as a day of fasting—by abstaining from the first or the second, or from both first and second meals. This is not compulsory, but I believe it will help us very much.

I hope to have such financial and other help as will enable me to visit all the branches and localities where there are saints, before the meeting of our next conference.

Let us also remember that our Bishop's agent's books are now closed for 1897, and a new year for tithing and offerings is before us. I hope that each member, without exception, will have his or her name on his books, "as God hath prospered" for 1898. He gives to all; and unless all return a just proportion to his work, we cannot expect to receive the greatest fruition of our spiritual growth. My experience has convinced me that our agent, Bro. John G. Smith (No. 2816 Lyon Street, St. Louis, Missouri), will thankfully receive small amounts as well as large amounts. Please do not forget him; and when he comes among you invite him into your pulpit to "stir up your minds," etc.

Let us push forward, each one laboring in his own office and calling, that the happy New Year may be the greatest of any of the past for what we shall overcome, sacrifice, and attain to; so that the Spirit may be fully in us "a well of water springing up into everlasting life," and that out of us may "flow rivers of living water" along the stream of life of the new years which are to come.

Praying that the Lord may bless you all, I am your brother and coworker in the restored gospel.

JOHN S. PARRISH,
President of District.

Permanent address: St. Clair, Franklin County, Missouri.

Also all visiting ministers who may have done labor during 1897, will they likewise, please be kind enough to report at once.

So far as practicable I would like to make a complete report of all that has been done for the good of the cause in this division of the vineyard. In bonds,

ROBT. M. ELVIN, Dist. Pres.

Please favor us with early and full remittances of Herald, Leaves, Hope, and other subscriptions, also of book accounts.

DIED.

SHEEN.—Charles Sheen was born in Littlethorpe, England, February 12, 1826. Death claimed him as a temporary victim, December 7, 1897, at his home, and after an illness of only about eighteen hours he peacefully went to sleep, and his mortal remains were placed away to await the glorious resurrection of the just. The life of Mr. Sheen has been one of activity in and devotion to the faith that was an inspiration to his life, a lamp to his feet, and a guide to his pathway. In 1860 he was baptized, and soon after was ordained a minister by and for the Church of Latter Day Saints; to which he consecrated his time and energies up to the time of his death. In 1865 he with his family came to America, locating in Jones County, Iowa, and in 1875 he moved to Decatur County of the same State, where he resided and labored until 1884, when he and his family, accompanied by Fred Sheen and family, came to Hyde County, South Dakota, where he lived until the time he wrapped the drapery of his couch about him.

Those of his family who survive him are, his devoted wife, to whom he was married in 1850; five children, Fred Sheen, a worthy and respected citizen of Hyde County, two sons and two daughters in Iowa, and eleven grandchildren, who mourn his departure, yet cherish a memory of a husband and father as a blessed inheritance.

Personally Mr. Sheen was a man of most kindly attributes and genial disposition. He preserved his mental vigor unimpaired by advancing age up to the time of his death. Although often importuned by his family to cease from toil, he still pressed on, preferring to wear out rather than rust out. Few men have lived who stamped the impress of a sympathetic and imperial nature upon those associated with them as did Mr. Sheen. Starting in early life, by that unceasing zeal and devotion that characterized his whole manhood, he climbed to the height of a well-rounded and symmetrical character, and having lived the allotted span of life he peacefully lay down to his rest.

His remains were followed to the Highmore cemetery by one of the largest concourses of people that have attended any like service in Highmore.

"Gently the passing spirit fled,
Sustained by grace divine;
O may such grace on us be shed,
And make our end like thine."

SAMUEL GREGG.

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.
NEW REVISED EDITION.

The manuscript of this edition was carefully compared with the original authorized edition of 1835, which was adopted by a General Assembly of the church at Kirtland, and known as the Kirtland edition. Some typographical errors that crept into and passed through later editions have been corrected, and some omissions supplied.

The revelation on the late Civil War, the "Minutes of the General Assembly" of 1835, the minutes of the "Joint Council" of 1894, and the revelations given to the Reorganized Church to date, are all included in the volume. The "Lectures on Faith" are omitted, but may be published later in pamphlet form, or for those who may want them.

The concordance has been revised and enlarged, greatly aiding study and general use of the book. The concordance, and lists of names of persons and places mentioned in the revelations, are included in the volume. Ready reference to the book is greatly facilitated by the substitution of figures for the old style Roman letters in section and page headings. The figures can be read at a glance.

$1.50. THE SAINTS' HERALD REDUCED IN PRICE.

Recognizing the closeness of the times and with a desire to place the church paper within the reach of every member, the Board of Publication has decided to offer THE SAINTS' HERALD at a reduced price for one year from the date named, as follows:—

On July 12, 1897, the price of the HERALD was fixed at $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

This reduction applies to both old and new subscribers, on the following conditions:—

Cash must accompany all orders for new subscriptions, as stated.

Former subscribers who are in arrears, who pay up on old subscriptions and renew one year in advance, will receive the benefit of the reduction in price from the date named—July 12, 1897.

Those who have already paid in advance will receive the benefit of the reduction in price at the dates of expiration of present subscriptions, and for the year following said dates, if renewing in advance.

This is a reduction of twenty-five per cent, both in the price of the church paper, and of the revenue derived from it. It is therefore necessary that all avail themselves of the new departure and greatly enlarge the list of new subscribers; and also that those indebted pay up all past due accounts.

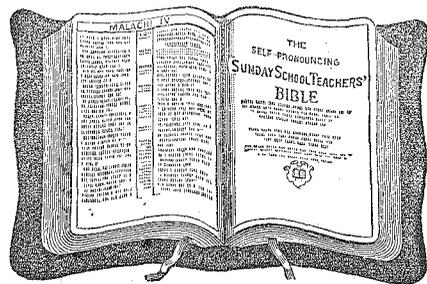

Branch hook agents and the ministry who can do so, are respectfully asked to second the efforts of the Board by obtaining new subscribers for the HERALD and working in the general interests of the Herald Office—the church publishing plant.

In bonds,
FRANK CRILEY, Bus. M'gr,
Lamoni, Iowa.

SPECIAL PREMIUM OFFER.

Herald and Self-Pronouncing Bible.

THE Herald Office has decided to offer its patrons an excellent opportunity to secure a useful and valuable premium—the celebrated "Self-Pronouncing Sunday School Teachers' Bible," the same as the "Oxford Bible," with "helps" and "maps," in good large print, bourgeois type, with marginal references; printed on thin paper, flexible binding; size 8½ x 6¼.

OUR PREMIUM BIBLE.

For one (1) new subscriber to the HERALD and $3.25 in cash, we will send the HERALD for one year to any address and a copy of the Bible to the remitter.

Or, anyone sending us ten (10) new subscribers for the HERALD at $1.50 each, cash accompanying orders, will receive a copy of the Bible.

This Bible has been purchased by a number and has become a favorite volume for ministerial and Sunday school work. It gives entire satisfaction.

We want one thousand new subscribers for the HERALD within the next ninety days. The church paper has been reduced in price and should circulate in every home of and be read by all Latter Day Saints.

Here is an excellent opportunity to aid the cause and to secure a first class help in general work, a serviceable and up to date Bible.

We hope to hear from all interested at once.

Does the HERALD circulate among all the families of your branch? If not, it ought to reach them. Can you not help us to place it in the hands of all the membership, also among those not of the faith? Strangers will read it and take it. Try them, and let us hear from you.

Sample copies of the SAINTS' HERALD free on application.

ELASTIC STARCH has been before the people of the United States for twenty-three years, and is without doubt the greatest starch invention of the Nineteenth Century. Last year its sales reached the unprecedented number of twenty million packages. It is prepared upon scientific principles by men who have had years of practical experience in fancy laundering. It makes ironing easy, restores old summer dresses to their natural whiteness, and imparts to linen a beautiful and lasting finish. It is the only starch manufactured that is perfectly harmless, containing neither arsenic, alum or any other substance injurious to linen, and can be used even for a baby powder.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.
 K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.
 The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.
 There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.
 Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.
 The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.
