It is gratifying to see men in the world taking a stand for higher morals. We need men in the church who can take a firm stand against the evils of the world, and especially within the church, so that we will have no reason to hang our heads in shame because of having the Lord point out wherein we have failed and in what our infidelity is revealed, because of being "silent when evil has been present among" us, and thus consenting "thereby to a defilement" of God's "heritage." One thing is certain: No man of low and selfish ideals can successfully occupy and maintain an attitude of high moral integrity. No man can hope with one hand to successfully beckon the multitude to exalted heights of Christian duty and virtue, while with the other he tries to cover a life's record of low conceptions, unholy and greedy self-interest, crooked and unrighteous policies, and cunning and dishonest methods. Is that the reason some of us are so uneasy whenever the possibility of higher attainments is broached?

Read a fuller report of Mr. Curran's speech in the "Selected Articles" of this issue.

Bro. F. M. Sheehy reports that a number have been baptized in the branches, also some in various parts of the field. Brn. R. C. Evans and G. H. Hiliard are in the Eastern Mission at present, aiding in the general effort.

Bro. F. A. Smith reports sixty-four baptisms in his field, the Southern Mission, for the quarter ending with the month of June. Many new openings have been made in the state of Texas; the other parts of the southwestern division of the mission are also promising; the eastern division has furnished eleven baptisms for the quarter.

Bro. G. T. Griffiths, writing from Seattle, Washington, under date of July 19, says: "A number have been baptized by the local ministry. The mission is in fair condition; however, we have a few troubles which will be adjusted in the near future.

. . . All the ministry are busy at present, and a number of them report grand prospects ahead. We are making progress in Spokane and Seattle, and expect to organize a branch or two before long. I have been blessed in my labors since my return to the mission. They baptized five at Seattle on Sunday, the 15th inst."

TO THE SAINTS EVERYWHERE.

Believing that all Saints are desirous to see the Lord's work advance and his will accomplished on earth, the honest gathered into the fold, and those properly cared for, both spiritually and temporally, that are already in the church, and as in the past we have endeavored to establish an institution of learning without direct instruction from our heavenly Father, believing it unnecessary to wait to be commanded in all things while seeking to do good where we thought it was needed, and having met some opposition in trying to collect money to pay the college debt, even after that duty had been placed on the Bishopric by action of General Conference, we felt to hesitate in asking the Saints to contribute to the wants of our work in some things that are really needed. Some in the past have helped in every undertaking liberally and freely, while some have been slow to help in some things, but said, if God had directed the doing of those things, then they would willingly help; and as we have many sick and afflicted among us, and all have not faith to be healed, the Lord, knowing the wants and needs of his people, has told us that it was his will that a sanitarium be established by the church, at Independence, Missouri, where the sick and afflicted may be "removed from the influences and environments unfavorable to the exercise of proper faith unto the healing of the sick." Under those conditions the Bishop has already called on the Saints and friends to contribute of their means to accomplish this work. And as we are not to contract debt in doing this work, and as it is to be done without "unnecessary delay," we should get sufficient means in a short time to purchase the land and erect the necessary buildings. It is thought by those whose duty it is to carry out the Lord's will in this matter, that about ten acres of land will be needed for this purpose. That means about ten thousand dollars for the land; then enough to erect and furnish suitable buildings to care for the sick properly will require several thousand more. I now write this to stir up your minds, by way of remembrance, to the Bishop's call. We now have no excuse. It should be the delight of the Lord's people to do his will. Now we have the opportunity to show our faith by our works. Let us not hesitate.

Then, our privileges are further extended by being permitted to help in carrying out the good design of the Daughters of Zion, in establishing a home for children "as soon as consistent with the necessary demands of the work of the church in other directions." What a privilege is thus extended to us to show that we have "pure religion and unde-filed," in caring for the children that are unfortuunate and need help! We did not wait for a command to provide the home for the aged. Now as our Master and Leader has spoken, let all cheerfully respond.
If faithful in those small things we may be permitted after a while to build a house for the Lord himself to dwell in; even a temple. I am fully satisfied that all that appreciate the privilege of being workers with God to accomplish his purposes on earth will gladly respond to his call and embrace the present opportunity to accomplish his will as given to us by direct revelation. Our ambition should be to do the will of God in all things as fast as made known to us, using all the means placed in our power to accomplish the work in his time and way. That it may be done without delay is our great desire. To this end we pray and hope to work accordingly.

AN OPEN LETTER.

Brother Gould: Some months ago I read an article from your pen headed "The ten virgins." I have not the HERALD at hand to refer to, but you will remember that you were treating on the parable of the "ten virgins," and if I understood you rightly you spoke of this present time being the "waiting-time." Will you think it presumptuous, or uncalled for, if I pen a few personal thoughts on the coming of Christ, the waiting-time, of some of the events that will take place during that time of waiting; and a touch or two on the winding up scene, simply by way of an exchange of ideas? First I will briefly state the position that seems plain to me, then give some of the scriptures from which I derive those views.

I believe that this present time is called "to-day";
that it is a time for all men to work and not to wait;
and that "to-day" will last until the sign of the Son of Man is seen in heaven. From that time on until the end, until the bridegroom escorts the wise vir-gins in to the marriage feast, will be the "waiting-time," the "night in which no man can work"; that is, no man in the church can work in the things of the kingdom; but Jesus and his angels will finish the work of redemption preparatory to the destruction of the wicked; for "after to-day cometh the "burning" (Doctrine and Covenants 64:5), and that this waiting-time is also termed "the coming of the Son of man."

There are so many "comings" spoken of to take place down at the end or closing of this dispensation, that to believe that Christ would come direct to the earth, when he appears in the clouds of heaven in power and great glory, would no more fill the bill than one heaven and one hell would do justice to the human race. I will enumerate a few of them:
1. In the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. 2. To the Jews when he sets his foot on Mount Olivet, and it eleaves in twain. 3. With the "Ancient of Days" to judge the children of Zion. 4.
   As the bridegroom to escort the waiting Saints in to the marriage feast. 5. In flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. 6. And finally with all his saints to reign on the purified earth.

Nor do I believe that our Lord while on earth taught his followers to be always looking for his coming. First, because he knew that hundreds of years must elapse before that event would take place, and he would not teach an error to scare people into being ready. Second, because he taught exactly the opposite, to his disciples, when he said,
"If any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there, believe it not." True, he has said "behold, I come quickly." And it will be "quickly" when compared with the world's time, for four dispensations with their intervening periods had passed when he made that statement, and one only remained.
Nor do I know where it is recorded where he bade men to watch for his coming, until after the sign of the Son of Man is seen in heaven.

I also believe that the event that men are pleased to call his second coming, is his third coming. His first was as a babe who grew to be the world's Great Teacher. The second was when he arose from the dead saying "Now, all power is given me both in heaven and on earth." The final will be when he comes to cut his work short in righteousness, and reign with his saints on the earth. (See Luke 12:41, 42.) This final coming, and the signs and events that lead up to it, is so plainly portrayed in Matthew 24 (Inspired Translation) that one needs not be in darkness as to whether this final coming of our Lord is nigh at hand or not. And we have the best of authority for taking that chapter (Matthew 24) as our guide in learning of the signs that precede his coming, step by step, until the sign of the Son of Man is seen in heaven. Herein is the authority, Doctrine and Covenants 45:11: "And now, behold, I say unto you. It shall not be given unto you to know any further concerning this chapter, until the New Testament be translated, and in it all these things shall be made known." Therefore, since it is now translated, we can confidently turn to that God-given chapter, and in it I learn that he has not bidden any to expect or think the end is "nigh at hand," until after those signs or events named in verses 31, 32, 33, and 34 take place, that is, iniquity shall abound, and the love of many wax cold, the gospel of the kingdom be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet be fulfilled. (These are not simply a repetition of words concerning the things that should take place at the closing of the Christian dispensation, but a repetition of the same events that marked the closing of that dispensation shall also take place at the beginning of the end of this final dispensation, for, mark the language: “And again” shall those things take place.)

Let us read a little farther in this God-given chapter, and see if we can learn when the Master bade his elect to look for him, and to know that his coming was nigh at hand:

And immediately after the tribulation of those days (the fulfilling of the abomination of desolation), the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of heaven shall be shaken. . . . Then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn. And they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory.

In verse 41, after enumerating all those events, including his appearing in the clouds of heaven in power and great glory, the Lord says:

Now learn a parable of the fig tree. When its branches are yet tender, and it begins to put forth leaves, you know that summer is nigh at hand. So likewise mine elect, when they shall see all these things, they shall know that he is near, even at the doors.

By this we learn that the Lord has not said that his coming is nigh at hand until after those troublous times take place. And it is after these things that he tells them to watch. If we consider the parable our Lord chose as illustrative of the true situation, it must lead us to conclude that there will be a space of time between his appearing in glory, and his descending to the earth with his saints to reign in righteousness, since some weeks must elapse from the time the fig-tree puts forth its tender leaves ere the summer is with us. Nor is it written that he descends to this sin-polluted earth in that great glory, nor that his saints on earth shall be immediately caught up to meet him. The context implies that neither of these events take place at that time.

For the Son of Man shall come, and he shall send his angels before him with the great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together the remainder of his elect from the four winds; from one end of heaven to the other.

This work of gathering the remainder of his elect may not be done in a moment of time. Besides this, there are many other things to be done “at his coming,” before the righteous reign can commence.

It would seem that after thus revealing himself in power and great glory, and awakening the world, and even the dead with the long, loud peal of his trumpet, signifying to all that his coming is nigh at hand, the veil is drawn again, and he descends unaccompanied by his saints, and reveals himself personally to the Jews; thence proceeds to accomplish his work of redemption of all who are worthy to be redeemed before the destruction of the wicked.

That there is a waiting-time is plainly set forth in the parable of the ten virgins. A time when none of the church will be working in the things of the kingdom; but are in a state of watching and waiting. Now, since those waiting ones constituted the kingdom of heaven, at least the portion of it that was then on the earth, and among them the wise and faithful as well as the foolish, there must have been some good reason for this state of inactivity. The parable states that they took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom. Evidently they had seen him in the clouds of heaven, which would signify that their day of labor was over; for when Christ leaves the mediatorial throne; man’s work for the salvation of his fellow man, i.e., to convert sinners, is at an end. While they wait the bridegroom tardies; but he is not idle. Let us see what some of the things are that shall take place during that waiting-time. In Doctrine and Covenants 45, where the 24th of Matthew is being explained and enlarged upon, two great events are spoken of that shall take place “when he comes.” Yet since the nations of the earth and the wicked of it also, will be involved in those events, it must needs take place before the righteous reign commences. In paragraph 8, after the sign of the Son of Man is seen in heaven, he sets his foot on Mount Olivet, and it cleaves in twain. Turning to Zechariah 14:2-4, we read that at that time a great battle takes place. The Lord fights for the Jews as he did in the “day of battle.” And in paragraph 10 we read, “And then shall the heathen nations be redeemed.” This act takes place also at his “coming.” Now if we turn to Matthew 25, and read from verse 32 to 41 inclusive, we will find that at the time of the coming of the Son of Man, a judgment takes place where the Redeemer justifies a people and gives them a part—not a fullness—in the first resurrection without obeying the gospel: which in no wise pertains to the saints whom he calls his elect, or his servants, and his brethren. But that suits well the good people of all nations who knew no law.

Some may think that this judgment here spoken of in Matthew is the final judgment, i.e., is after the end of the thousand years and the little season; but Jesus has therein marked the time when it shall take place by saying it shall be when “the Son of Man shall come in his glory”; and that is just prior to the thousand years’ reign. And again the final judgment is of “the dead small and great.” But these who are then judged are called “nations”; therefore they are living people, those who are left of all the

And why do I think this judgment takes place before the righteous reign? Because at that time, when the righteous reign commences, there are no wicked ones on earth. The earth is to be cleansed by fire. Jesus told his disciples that the world was the field, the righteous were the wheat, and the wicked were the tares that should be burned. And again in Doctrine and Covenants, those who are not tithed shall be burned at his coming. And the prophet Malachi speaks very plainly of this destruction of the wicked. He says:

For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them [the wicked] neither root nor branch.

The nature of this burning is more plainly seen when we consider the words used by the prophet, and ask, How does an oven burn? All over, at the same time; and is as hot at the top as at the bottom. This corresponds with the apostle Peter speaking of the coming of the Lord, and saying the mountains shall melt and pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall be filled with fervent heat, the earth also shall be filled, and the corruptible things shall be burned up. (See 2 Peter 3:10.) Therefore the burning is universal; and every "root" (individual) and "branch" (society) of the wicked shall be destroyed in that cleansing, unquenchable fire—unquenchable because it can not be put out by any effort of man. "And thus cometh the end of the wicked. . . . But the end of the earth is not yet; but bye and bye."—Matthew 24:56, I. T.

There is also a waiting-time spoken of in Daniel 12. Daniel was inquiring concerning the end, but did not understand clearly the meaning of what the angel had told him, and wanted more light on the subject. The angel adds these words:

From the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate is set up [it will be remembered that Jesus in the twenty-fourth of Matthew says this abomination of desolation shall be fulfilled just prior to the end. It simply stood where it ought not at the time of the Jewish tribulation], there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days.

I do not claim to know what is here meant by the taking away of the daily sacrifice, neither what length of time is indicated by the thousand two hundred and ninety days; but it is not so long a time as the thousand, three hundred and five and thirty days. The point I see in it is this, after the thousand two hundred and ninety days, there is a waiting-time until the accomplishing of the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days, and blessed are they who wait and come to that time. To me it seems to signify that from the time the abomination of desolation is set up until the sign of the Son of Man is seen in heaven, will be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Then comes the waiting-time, which will be forty-five more of these same days, whether they mean days, weeks, or months. I am aware that it is thought by many that the taking away of the daily sacrifice has had its fulfillment long ago. But I believe that this has reference to the time of the end. At the time of the coming of Christ, the Jews will be gathered at Jerusalem in a greater degree than they are now, and will very probably have a daily sacrifice established; and when they gather as a body, the wealth of the world will go with them. Then the armies of the nations shall go up to take a spoil and a prey, and as the Roman army was the abomination of desolation to the Jews beforetime, so also will war and the armies of the nations cause desolation and tribulation in the last days.

Now if we put no private interpretation on those prophetic days, but reckon them as 24-hour days, one might say, from the gathering of those armies about Jerusalem—when they would cause the daily sacrifice to be taken away—till Christ will come and fight for the Jews, will be three years and six months, and the waiting-time about one month and fifteen days; yet no man would know the day nor the hour. When this battle of all nations against Jerusalem takes place, it will be the fulfilling of the abomination that maketh desolation—if that be war—for it will be the last battle that man will fight against his fellow man.

Well might the angel say, Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days; for in the summing up of the whole matter in the parable of the ten virgins, it is shown that only half of those who took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom, or in other words, considered themselves ready to meet him when they saw the token of his coming, endured the waiting-time with the degree of faith and patience that gave an entrance in to the marriage feast—a sad thought indeed.

I do not think it can be said of the church at the present time that it is in a waiting condition, but is to all intents and purposes living and preparing to live. Some are laboring to bring about one of the chief events that shall mark the beginning of the end, viz.: that the gospel may be preached in all the world as a witness to all nations, and thus cause the "army of the Lord to become very great," another prerequisite to the real gathering. And it seems plain that the body of the Saints will be gathered, both in Zion and Jerusalem, at the time of his coming, since it is but a remnant that the angels will be sent to gather.

I have not exhausted the subject, not even made an argument; but thrown out suggestions for you or any one else to look up and see if they are true or false. If false, no elder is to blame; for I did not learn those unpopular points from any one, neither by study, but they were presented to my thought, then I looked in the word of God to see if such could be sustained, or rather if they were in harmony with the word, and found that they were, so far as I knew, yet I am not a thorough Bible student.

In regard to the nations that shall dwell outside of the city during the millennial reign, I believe they are those who are redeemed without law out of every nation since the world began, and who have part in the first resurrection, but do not have the privileges of those who obey the gospel: for “no man can enter the kingdom except he is born of water and the Spirit.” But they may have that opportunity during the “little season.”

EMMA BURTON.

REVIEW.

In the HERALD of June 27 there is an attempted review of the article published in HERALD of May 30, entitled, “Consecration under the law—does it permit of holding bank and other stock.”

Our critic seems to find fault because, as he suggests, we assume that the banking system is founded on just principles.

So far as I can see the banking system is as just as many other laws by which we are governed at the present time, and while we may differ in our opinions as to the justness or righteousness of existing laws, they are supposed to be founded in justice by our wisest legislators, and for the best good of the people at large. The evidence is lacking in the criticism to show that the banking law is founded upon “unjust” principles.

The brother admits that banks are a convenience and places of safety for our business men to deposit, and through which they transact their business. His statement that “the post-office department or express companies are fully as convenient means of remittance” is not shown to be a fact. The convenience we now have through the post-office is of recent date, and even now costs double the amount to send any large sum of money as the bank. As evidence, compare the prices. And the express is also more costly and not so convenient as the bank.

The brother dwells largely on “live Latter Day Saints.” I may not be in the live class, but I suppose the Savior’s rule will do to go by: “By their fruits ye shall know them.” There are very few Saints, I presume, and none so far as I know, that have more money than they can use. Some have a little that they are not compelled to use for a while, and then must have it to meet their obligations. To such the bank is a convenience, and possibly a little profit.

True, if all were convenient to the Bishop, they might let him have it until they would need it, as some do now; and all they have more than they need should consecrate this, as it is surplus, and turn it over to the Bishop. But this does not do away with the fact that we must always keep enough to meet our obligations in some convenient place where we can have it when it is due, so as not to destroy our credit. Banks, then, are a convenience and a help to all business men and also the class named above.

We do not agree with the brother that all who borrow money to invest in stocks, bonds, or real estate are condemned by Doctrine and Covenants 42 and 101; neither by the statement in the last revelation. It does not follow that the men that buy stock in banks or other stock companies have only the object of “speculation or greed for gain” in view. In fact I know this is not the case. But they do it that they may have a safe and convenient place to transact their own business, carried on by their own manufacturing and mercantile plants, which are sometimes started with borrowed capital, by men who have established a character for honor and integrity that is unquestionable, and the object being to give employment to the laborer and in this way bless and help the poor.

Furthermore, under present conditions the Lord’s treasury can not supply farmers and all others who may need a little money for a while, to help them in close places and under pressing conditions; but the bank can help them by loaning them the amount needful, at the legal rate of interest, for a few months, until they can make a turn and raise the money. And this without any mortgage, but on a personal note that any honest, honorable man can give. Is not this a help and a benefit to the poor man? I think so.

Now, this usury question. We must not make the Lord contradict himself. Let Matthew 25:27 answer here. The Lord said, “Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers [banks of exchange would answer for this purpose] and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury.” He commended the first two servants, who invested their talents, traded with them, speculated on them, and doubled the amount of their investment. Jesus said the third ought to have done the same thing, and condemned him because he did not do it, took the talent from him and gave it to the man that had the ten, evidently because he could and would use it.

Now, take the Lord’s rule of interpretation, Doctrine and Covenants 126:10, each revelation having its appropriate bearing on each of the others, and their relation thereto, and what is the result? Our Lord commends trade, and business, and the taking of lawful interest for the use or rent of money. Hence the ordinary definition, “unlawful interest,” must be the proper definition for usury. Again, in Doctrine and Covenants 48:2 the Saints are commanded to save all the money they can, and obtain all they can in righteousness. So the Lord commands the taking of lawful interest and condemns the one that would not do it for keeping his money idle. The law of the land does not allow a bank to take unlawful interest; and if they do, the law is not at fault, it is the bank or banker.

I am not able to see, yet, the difference in a stock company owning and operating a hotel, a store, a mill, a manufacturing plant, a stock-ranch, or a bank. All are necessary and useful. Every bank that we have had anything to do with agreed in starting to take no more than lawful interest, and not to take the advantage of any man’s necessity. The State law compels them to take good notes to protect the depositor and “he that keeps the law of God has no need to violate the law of the land”; pray tell us where the oppression comes in, if the law is observed?

Our critic says, “It should be clear to the reader that when we exclude from the list of patrons all those whose business is found out of harmony with the celestial law, we find ourselves facing this shameful spectacle: an institution, a stock company, composed of well-known and well-fed Latter Day Saints, living upon, or, it may be, simply receiving profits which they do not need, and which they certainly do not work for, from the hard-earned savings of those in need.”

This writer must occupy as a judge in Israel, if he is in harmony with the celestial law. He must know all the conditions, or he can not be a competent judge in these matters. He may be right that they are well known. (That may be the reason the people risk their money with them.) Some of them for years have been fed by the people as they traveled and preached the gospel, but I believe they are generally fed as well as the people can afford to feed them, for which I presume they feel thankful; but are they better fed than those who stay at home and have all their time to make money for themselves, and have the choosing of the diet that is best suited to their taste? How does he know they always receive profits? How does he know they do not need the profits they receive? How can he know they do not work for what they receive? Also, how can a class be in need if they have earned and “saved” their means? We are at a loss to know how he became so well acquainted with other people’s business, unless they have furnished him with a complete statement of all their affairs. There is no evidence, so far as I know, that our bank takes advantage of the necessities of the poor. It is the opposite: the poor are accommodated.

He refutes his own argument when he calls the shares of stock idle, then says they shall not consume the savings of the living, breathing soul that earns what he gets by faithful service. It takes an active thing to earn something. The talent in the napkin (idle) brought the curse. When the time comes (if it ever does come) that stock companies are organized that bring no profit to the stockholders, then the business must fail. It must bring sufficient profit to meet losses, breakage, wear and tear, bad debts, etc. I know men that work hard to pay interest on borrowed money with which they bought stock, and they do not get enough out of the capital invested to pay the interest; but they are willing to struggle on under these circumstances to help give men employment and accommodate the needy. Then to have men who know nothing (comparatively) about the circumstances sit in judgment and condemn those men that are trying to help others, while they themselves from all appearance make no effort more than the ordinary man, makes one feel mortified.

Conditions may change as time goes on and the Saints become more numerous, so they could run business more nearly their own way. We now have to deal with the world, buy and sell, and we must be obedient to the laws of the land and do business according to State laws as they exist, also compete with worldly institutions; and as God authorized the organization of a stock company to build a hotel to accommodate the weary traveler, they must make enough to keep the house in repair, keep it insured, or rebuild in case of loss by fire or otherwise; it must of necessity bring some profit to the stockholder or go down and fail in a short time; and the same is true of any other business, whether carried on individually or by a corporation.

I presume when the Lord wants a different class of men to run his affairs here he can easily find them; or if he wants those in charge to do differently from what they now understand the law, I believe they are willing to be corrected and set right, and do the business as the Lord would have them do it.

With love and good will for all, and profound sympathy and pity for some, I still believe it is lawful to hold bank and other stock under the law.

GRAFT WRECKING NATION’S MANHOOD.

Graft in all its elements, the fall of American ideals, the worship of Mammon over manhood—with pleas to turn from the road of materialism and greed to nobler pathways—were pointed out as a menace to the country’s future at the opening sessions of the thirtieth annual meeting of the Illinois Bar Association in the Chicago Beach Hotel yesterday.

Lawyers from all parts of the State took part in the discussion, some urging reforms along a socialistic line, others by building up a set of new ideals.

Public ownership as a passport to better conditions was urged by several speakers, who laid the blame of the present situation to lack of "real self-government," while others ridiculed in ripping sentences the municipal ownership idea. No general line of agreement of action for a national uplift was apparent, however.

President George T. Page of Peoria started the ball of discontent rolling in the opening address to the body. He pointed out informally the numerous instances of grafting, telling how United States Senators had been convicted for violations of trust, and then related how President Roosevelt, "seeming to forget the lines between the three coordinate branches of government," went to the hall of Congress and waved his "big stick" demanding legislation.

W. R. Curran of Pekin, Illinois, then ascended the rostrum, and, speaking on "The lure of graft and the mettle of its cure," painted conditions a livid color. His address aroused barristers to lively replies and approvals in the discussion of the topic which followed.

"The present condition of graft in this nation has appalled us," began Mr. Curran. "With fear we contemplate the future. The rising tide of greed seems to be undermining and submerging some of the landmarks that our fathers have set. The normal standards that we have deemed as fixed and eternal appear to be crumbling.

"Many men of honored names, who have stood for a lifetime as the exponents of honesty, integrity, and manhood, have been unmasked and revealed to their fellow men as grinning skeletons of deception, fraud, dishonor, and treason to every interest and every trust that we hold dear.

"This unmasking has gone on with such feverish haste, the mantle has been torn from so many frauds, so many have toppled from their pedestals that we have begun to look about and inquire if there are any men left who are honest. Suddenly we have come to think that graft is the crying sin of the age.

"Graft is not the disease that is gnawing at the vitals of the nation. It is only one of the many symptoms of that disease. The real vital disorder is materialism, the worship of the things of sense, and the death of our ideals.

"We have set up false standards of values; for patriotism, love for home, kindred, and native land, we have put the love of wealth; for our love of honesty, integrity, duty, and virtue, we now love the almighty dollar; instead of our love of fellow man, his mental and moral attainments, his stature as an image of his Creator, we love the things that he hath—his lands, his houses, his cattle, his stocks, his bonds, his money, and all the things that he has accumulated.

"In our blind worship of the material the mere fact that he may be a dolt, a scoundrel, or a degene-rate is of no great moment; we are loyal to our idolatry of the material, be he prince or clown.

"The accumulation of honest wealth is not in itself an evil, but the source of much strength and good to the nation or her people. Wealth is as essential as the shell of an egg to the development of the life of the bird, but, as the living bird is more than the shell, so is the life of a man more than the things that have sustained his life.

"It is the lure of graft that has honeycombed the Government and set a boss at every political center to levy tribute and determine what vice shall thrive; to stand between the Government and the people, and say what laws shall be enforced and what ones shall be a dead letter.

"Rockefeller, steel-armed by hypocrisy and the doctrine of ordination taught by his theology, plated with gold, the fruit of special corporate privilege and violated law, confidently defies punishment at the hands of his Creator and his fellow man. This individual is representative of all that class of men who have sought to use the corporation for illegal purposes to violate their duties to mankind and the nation.

"We are come to the parting of the ways. This nation must determine once for all the question, Shall Mammon or manhood be the dominant force in this Government? Shall the dollar continue as king over the children of pride?

"Fear has been expressed that the outcry against graft was becoming hysterical, and that the muck-rake was a detriment. The muck-rake is only detrimental to the muck. The muck-rake is its own justification. So long as it turns up muck we need the rake.

"The most reassuring sign of the time is the promptness and unanimity of the judgment of the court of public opinion rendered on the offenders so soon as the offense has come to certain public knowledge. Graft can thrive only in secret. Darkness is its breeding-ground. Publicity is its poison."

The topic of municipal ownership was then introduced. Clarence S. Darrow spoke first on the question, urging its adoption as a cure for the evils in the country's economic and political situations. In part he spoke as follows:

"Private service is carried on for the benefit of the owner and public service for the benefit of the community. There is no doubt that public service is full of graft. This is especially true in American cities, where mayors, aldermen—in fact, most officials—are elected because of their political pulls, their pleasing manners, or the needs of party machines, and with no regard to their fitness for important affairs.

"But while public affairs are honeycombed with graft, private ownership of public service corporations is nearly all graft. It would be a moderate estimate to say that the railroads of the United States are stocked and bonded for four times their cost, that the great business corporations are stocked and bonded for six or eight times their cost, that the street railways, gas plants, electric lighting plants, and other similar public service corporations are stocked and bonded four times their cost."—Chicago Tribune July 13, 1906.

Shall the Children Help?

Just a few questions we have to ask and oh, how we wish that many, many of those who labored so faithfully last year to help the jubilee fund would answer! Your answers would do us good, and might do good in many ways which neither we nor you can see.

Many of you labored very faithfully in helping the children to earn their offerings. Were you not glad when the results of your labors were announced, and you knew what a nice, large sum the many small ones had made? If you were glad in your heart,—as we feel sure you must have been—it would take but a few words to tell us so, and every encouragement of this kind not only strengthens us but encourages others to try. All, without any exception, need to be encouraged, and as we are human beings, we need human encouragement, as well as a knowledge of divine approval. Few are so strong as to be able to hear the trials and crosses of life unaided, and no one can know all the results for good of just one truly spoken word of cheer or appreciation.

Again, have any of you ever regretted the time you gave, or the labor you expended in helping to collect the jubilee fund?

If you have, will you not frankly tell us so, and tell us why you have regretted it? “By others’ faults wise men correct their own.” If we have led you into making mistakes, we will be glad to know it, so that in the future we may not only avoid those mistakes ourselves, but also help you to avoid them. God will not, can not look with approval upon any offering brought to him, if it was obtained in a sinful manner—in a way of which he could not approve. But he will accept and bless—yes, both bless and multiply even as he multiplied the widow’s cruse of oil, those offerings obtained by sacrifice and labor as well as the offering given with a cheerful, willing heart by those who have the means to give without laboring for it.

And last, but by no means least, among the questions we wish to have you answer are these, Do you not think the object for which this money is being collected a worthy one, and will you not help the children to save, to sacrifice, to earn by honest labor a portion of it?

There is a voice—a still small voice which as we ask this question is whispering to us—speaking to our soul a strong assurance that to the very limit of your ability you will help.

Do not smile at this, nor count it the result of our own enthusiasm. It is not that, but it is the voice of that love moving the mother-heart within us to respond to the call which God has made upon his people to provide a home for his homeless little ones, which brings the faith—the strong, confident assurance that your own hearts will respond—that, as with one heart and with one mind, you will labor until enough and to spare is brought into God’s treasury to build and support this home for the children.

Shall ancient Israel—a stiff-necked and rebellious people, a people whose opportunities of service were (when compared with our own) limited, whose hardships and privations were so great—shall they appear in judgment against us? When in the wilderness, homeless wanderers, with no resources but their flocks and herds—with their daily manna from heaven—the Lord commanded them to build him a tabernacle, and with willing hearts and hands they went to work bringing in everything necessary until more was brought in than the workmen could use, and Moses commanded: “Let neither man nor woman make any more work for the offering of the sanctuary.” More anon.

I Had a Friend.

“What is the secret of your life?” asked Mrs. Browning of Charles Kingsley; “tell me, that I may make mine beautiful, too.” He replied: “I had a friend.”

Truer words were never spoken. There is nothing that brings sunshine to our lives, takes us out of ourselves, and makes life really beautiful and worth living, like a friend.

A true friend is Heaven’s choicest gift. And when we have such, let nothing separate us. Let us love them and cherish them, and above all, let us trust them. There may be actions and words that we do not understand and that pain us, but let our faith be stronger than these, and then nothing will separate us.

Let us cultivate in ourselves what we long for in our friends; sweetness of character, evenness of temper, loyalty, patience, sympathy, and love.

Let us be kind, courteous, and true to all we meet.

Our rarest friend is He who said: “Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you.” This friend will make us good and true.

In eternity we shall know the friends we have so loved here. “Friendships in Christ are for ever. Those that live in the Lord never see each other for the last time.”—Selected.

GREGVILLE, Alabama, July 3, 1906.

Editors Herald: This being my first visit to the South, I meet with a good many things that to me are new, and that differ from what I am used to. The weather is constantly hot, and would be very oppressive if it were not for the cool breeze that one may find in shady places. These breezes make life endurable. I hardly see how men can endure to labor hard all day beneath the direct rays of this almost tropical sun, where even the cooling breeze that frequents the shade has little or no effect. The shade has a very drawing effect on me, and often, while walking along the road in the search ing sun, it will draw me across the road to enjoy its protection for a few moments, even though it be the shadow of an almost shadeless pine. Shadows at midday are ’not long extended as in our northern
The season here is much ahead of Iowa. We had roasting-ears all through June, and strawberries were mostly gone the 23d of May. I am rather surprised here at the scarcity of fruit. I expected to live mostly on fruit, but not so. Apple-trees are very scarce, and while there are a few, they are usually considered not adapted to the climate. Pears have been quite extensively tried, but nearly as extensively have proved a failure. Blight kills the trees. Peaches are nearly as profitless. The trees live fairly well, but the fruit gets wormy and bleighted, and marketable fruit is scarce. Favorable seasons for peaches are uncommon. Blackberries are not cultivated, but grow wild in the woods—fairly plentiful. Huckleberries are to be found, of various varieties, and ripen from May to winter. They grow on bushes from three or four inches high to trees six inches in diameter and thirty or forty feet high. Figs are most common.

The soil is very poor, and must be fertilized to produce to any advantage. They tell me they use from two to fifty dollars' worth of fertilizer per acre, according to the kind of crop raised. Where they use so much, they raise two or three crops per year. Guano and cotton-seed are the principal fertilizers. Some places corn is their principal crop; grown for their stock. They get fifteen to twenty bushels per acre. Here, cotton is the principal crop. I can not give all the peculiarities of this country, so I pass on.

I find the Saints kind and generous as in other places, but hampered largely in their spiritual progress, owing to their scattered condition and lack of means of convenience. A good many work at logging, and at sawmills, and have no horses, so must go afoot. Meeting-places are usually miles away, and to take a family of little children three or four miles to church and Sunday-school and go afoot is more than the most of people will do very often. A good many others have but one horse to do their farming with, and with horse and buggy can not take all their family. So I find it is hard for them to keep up Sunday-school and regular meetings. This makes it discouraging for officers and ministers, and some sit back with folded hands and do nothing.

I commenced my labors in Mobile, Alabama, where I met Bro. J. R. McClain, who labored with me there and at Theodore and Three Rivers, Mississippi. I enjoyed very much being associated with him. At Three Rivers I also had the pleasure of being associated with Bro. Alma Booker, of the missionary force. I truly enjoyed the conference at Three Rivers, which was splendid.

I spent a few days at Scranton, Mississippi, with some old acquaintances from Nebraska. With them I went boating, bathing, and fishing in the harbor and gulf. It is a sight for a landsman to see the boats and ships of all sizes and descriptions plying up and down the harbor and far out in the gulf.

At Bay Minette, Alabama, I spent nearly two weeks, and preached in eight different places. At the church, there, I was able to hold but two meetings, owing to the scattered condition of the Saints. The rest of the time I preached in private houses, part of the time in houses of nonmembers, by their request. I had other invitations I could not fill. I am sure good was done there. Some promised to be baptized later on.

From there I came here and preached at Red Level till conference Saturday and Sunday at Flat Rock, June 30 and July 1. At the conference I did most of the preaching, being the only missionary present. Everything passed off pleasantly, and it was pronounced a success. Some say it was the best conference had here for years. I have had the privilege of becoming acquainted with a number of Saints here, and from Pleasant Hill. I find them a noble band of Saints. Some do not come up to the standard, but that is true of other places as well.

I have not met Bro. Tucker yet, but expect to ere long. What course we will pursue, I know not. I expect to be at Pleasant Hill Branch next Sunday.

I wish that Saints living off from branches in Alabama and Florida, where labor may be done, would correspond with me at McKenzie, Alabama, as that will be my field address. Ever laboring and praying for the redemption of Zion, I am,

Yours in the faith.

STEVENVILLE, Maryland, July 14, 1896.

Editors Herald: I have been a reader of the Herald for a number of years, but not a subscriber, sorry to say, as we enjoy reading all the church papers. We are living in Maryland, among Ham's descendants. They say they never heard of Latter Day Saints till we came here. There are also lots of white people here. We have not heard a sermon for about four-six years. We miss Sunday-school most. It is very lonesome to be isolated from church and Saints. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may be kept faithful to the end, and reign with Christ a thousand years.

Your sister in the one faith,

E. A. CLAYTON.

ONAWA, Iowa, July 8, 1896.

Dear Herald: I write to give you some of the evidences of the truth of the latter-day work in an experience of nearly forty-six years of work in this church. I am about to the end of my earthly race, and if I do not write soon I fear the "reaper" might come along some day and make it too late.

I write with the hope that some person or persons but lately come into the church may be strengthened to "fight the good fight," and that some outside the church may be induced to lay hold of the "rod." I am now seventy-three years of age, and am unusually dim­sighted, a cataract over one eye so that I can hardly see with that eye. My health otherwise is reasonably good. I live in Onawa, Iowa. I was ordained an elder in 1862 at a General Conference held in the northwestern part of Shelby County, Iowa, and, since that time, have been authorized to lay on hands for the healing of the sick.

With this brief preliminary, I will proceed to give the first unmistakable evidence of the divinity of this church. You all know what measles are, and that, when they "go in," as the common people call it, unless the patient receives some sort of treatment from physicians he dies. There is no help for it. In about the year of 1876 I was living in Shelby County, Iowa, and was a member of the Gallands Grove Branch. One day I took a notion to go round and see the brethren. All the old members have heard of, or have seen good old Elder John A. McIntosh. After I had visited several of the brethren in their families, I was about to return to my own home when something seemed to say to me, "You have not visited Bro. John A. McIntosh yet, and you must visit him before you return home." I tried to shake off the impression, but it said, "No, you must go there." I made up my mind to go. It must be understood that I had not heard a word that the family was sick in any way, and I supposed the family was in its usual good health. When I arrived at the door and knocked, some one opened it. I found the mother in bed with measles and as soon as I stepped into the house she raised up on her elbow in bed and said, "Here is Bro. Nathan [my given name], and now Minnie will live." Minnie was a baby about six months old, and I noticed that Minnie had the measles, and that they had "gone in" on her. Bro. John and I administered to the child, and while administering, the spirit of prophecy came upon me, and made me say to the child, "You shall live to be grown." That evening, without treatment other than that, the measles came out to the surface again, and the child recovered and lived to be grown.
Sr. Malinda, the wife of Bro. John A. McIntosh, is alive yet at Denison, Iowa, to testify to the fact, also John M. McIntosh, same place, who was then seventeen or eighteen years of age and was present, and doubtless can corroborate this statement.

The second very notable proof occurred in and near to Onawa, Iowa, in about the year 1893.

My son George William (we commonly call him Will) was working for Ed S. Cody, then county auditor of Monona County, on his farm two or three miles south of Onawa. Will would bring Mr. Cody to the office in the single buggy and then drive back to the farm and do farm work the remainder of the day. One morning he brought Mr. Cody to the office and started to drive back to the farm, but before he got out of town the horse took fright at something and became unmanageable, and threw Will out of the buggy in such a way as to throw his head against something which fractured the outer skull and slightly fractured the inner skull. He was taken to a surgeon’s office and the wound dressed. I called that good old brother, George Montague, and Elder D. A. Hutchings, another one of God’s noblemen, and they administered to Will, and in two weeks he went to work on Mr. Cody’s farm and worked continuously and as hard as if he had never received any injury.

Now comes the proof of divine healing in this case. Some time afterwards, it might have been two or three months, I called at the office of the surgeon who dressed Will’s wounded head, and he handed me a copy of the Medical Journal and pointed to an article in it and requested me to read it. I did so, and found it to be an article from the surgeon describing Will’s case, and stating that he went to work within two weeks.

Said the surgeon, after I had finished reading the article, “Do you think the severity of the wound is overdrawn in that article? You were here and saw the severity of the case, were you not?” “Yes, Doctor,” I said, “but I am not a surgeon and for that reason might not be a competent witness; but if I were to judge the matter I would say that it is rather underdrawn.” Then he pointed to an article just under the surgeon’s report of the case, and said, “Read that.” I read it, and found that it was the editor’s comment on the case in which he said if the case had been nearly so severe as the surgeon described it, Will could not possibly have gone to work in less than six months, and that the surgeon had greatly overdrawn the severity of the wound. This surgeon was made the presiding officer of the Sioux City Medical College, and has remained so ever since, so you see his ability as a surgeon was of no mean quality, and the severity of the wound must have been something near what he described it. Sioux City is a city of about forty thousand inhabitants, and is located in Woodbury County, Iowa, about thirty-eight miles northwest of the little city of Onawa in the same State.

This was one case where the doctor failed to receive the credit for doing the healing, because the wound healed too soon to suit the higher medical authorities. The home surgeon had to bear the mild title of liar.

I have seen numerous other healings by the laying on of hands, but no others so convincing as these. If, in the child’s case, it had been an older person, it could be said that the sickness was all pretense; but the child was too young to feign sickness, and the divine healing is self-evident. In the other case, the wound was too severe to have healed so quickly. The doctors themselves give proof of divine healing. I am.

Yours in gospel bonds,
NATHAN LINDSEY.

Brule, Oklahoma, July 7, 1906.

Dear Herald: I have intended for some time to write a letter to the Herald but have been waiting for affairs to terminate; but as we do not yet see a prospect of this, I will give you an outline at least of the proceedings here. Some three months ago Elder James H. Baker held a meeting in this vicinity, that is, in the school district west of us, and baptized three, one of them a member of the Baptist Church. Later he baptized two more, members of one of the families represented in the first number baptized. While there has been preaching and some baptized at different times here, before, nothing has seemed to arouse the ire of his Satanic majesty as did this. A Baptist preacher by name of E. R. Williams, who was a correspondent of our local paper, the Brule Post, of which William Forster is editor, made a statement in his items like this: “A Mormon church has been organized in our valley ... and all who are posted know the real name of that church is Polygamy.”

Therefore we were ready to correct the statement, which correction showed the difference between the Reorganized Church and the Utah people. The editor kindly published it, and Mr. Williams came again, ignoring our statements, and bringing other accusations applicable to the Utah church. Again we replied, quoting Judge Phillips’ decision and other evidences, showing, we believe, to all fair-minded people, that we as a church are in no way responsible for the work of the Utah people. This letter he answered, but the editor of the Post did not publish it, thinking it best to close the discussion, as far as the Post was concerned. This offended some. Others came to him with articles. He published a picture in Word and Way by request of a Reverend Shane, a Methodist minister, and so stated with the publication. This article we reviewed briefly; but as briefly as we could do this it would occupy much space, and he did not see that he could publish it, but commented on it. Mr. Forster is a member of the Christian Church, but his attitude and remarks in this matter show him to be an honest, upright, Christian gentleman. However, his fairness to us has brought upon him the disfavor of some, especially those whose letters he refused to publish. Reverend Williams, since being shut out of the Post, has been giving lectures all over the country, abusing Editor Forster shamefully, and clashing us with the Utah people, and otherwise misrepresented our faith and practice. Elder R. M. Maloney, our district president, came up here and issued an open letter to Reverend Williams, with a challenge for public discussion. This he would not accept, but said he would meet him in the press. No arrangements have as yet been made, and we do not know as any will be, as this is still very far from a satisfactory issue. As to this one issue, He, Reverend Williams, is still lecturing. We have heard him twice. Last night he came into our own district schoolhouse and misrepresented the church, and advised the people not to go among us, or invite, or receive us into their homes, and in every possible way tried to prejudice people against the Saints individually, and as a church, advising them not to listen to the preaching, and commending some who left two weeks ago when Bro. Bivens was going to preach, after the union Sunday-school, advising them not to stay and hear a Mormon preacher, trying to make people believe we were tricky, underhanded, etc., with our dangerous doctrines of revelation, etc. And when Bro. Bivens asked for five minutes in which to speak, he would not grant it after his tirade of two hours or more.

After he dismissed, Bro. Bivens tried to tell the people we had been misrepresented, and that we would reply to the lecture, and only a few would listen, while the majority made a confusion to prevent those hearing who might wish to do so. We came home rejoicing in the knowledge of the gospel, and praying God to send one of his servants to this place.

A couple of weeks ago Reverend J. J. McLain of the Christian Church sent for a brother of his, Reverend McLain of Manhattan, Kansas, who delivered three lectures on “Joseph Smith,” “Book of Mormon,” and “The place of miracles in the divine economy.” We attended each of these at Brule. He challenged us to discuss Book of Mormon and divine mission of Joseph Smith, but refuses to affirm his church. He uses Braden-Kelley debate, and uses all kinds of dirt against Joseph and the early men of the church. Does not class us with the Utah church, but closed his remarks with a very earnest appeal to the people not to accuse us, the Reorganized Church of polygamy, but warning them to beware of false teachings, and exhorting us to drop our ideas of revelation, Joseph Smith, and the Book of Mormon. He left us with a challenge to discuss these propositions.

So you see that Satan is raging, and the people are imagining vain things; but we do greatly rejoice in the gospel, and ask you to pray that we may ever manifest the spirit of the gospel, and that the young Saints here—mean those young in the work—may receive evidence to sustain them, as the world seems to be “despising and leaving” us just now. But we rejoice in it all, and pray for these people, that the honest in heart (and I feel that some are honest) may hear and obey. Bro. Bivens has an appointment at our schoolhouse for this afternoon at three o’clock.

SODA SPRINGS, Idaho, July 18, 1906.

Editors Herald: The above address will show my location at present time. Am at the home of Bro. and Sr. Simon Dyke some three miles out in the country from Soda Springs; and, as I knew Bro. and Sr. Dyke in western Iowa, some years ago, I am feeling quite at home.

Have been in Idaho some three weeks and have been quite busy most of the time. Attended the district conference at Blackfoot, Idaho, June 20 and July 1, and enjoyed meeting and getting acquainted with the Saints present. Attendance was small; but the conference was pronounced good by all present, so far as the writer knows. Am sure I considered it good, and am pleased to say that we have some noble Saints in that vicinity. The week after conference I accompanied Bro. A. J. Layland on a four-days’ trip, north of Blackfoot, visiting scattered members. It was a hot, dusty ride, at times, but I enjoyed meeting with the Saints in their homes and hope that good was done by our visits.

Last Sunday, July 15, I assisted Bro. Layland in organizing the Eight Mile Branch, eight miles from Soda Springs. Bro. J. D. Stead baptized most of the Saints at that place, and sure of going, but are contemplating attending, send us an song, and enjoy a foretaste of the grand reunion of all the righteous of earth. President Luke Evans and Apostle F. M. Sheehy are expected to be there. For further information write to F. J. Ebeling, Carmel, Ohio, Route 1.

The semiannual conference of the Southern Wisconsin District will convene at Madison, Elmside, instead of Fair Oakes, as formerly announced (no change in the place, but a mistake in the name of location) August 22 to 10:30 a. m. Branch elders please take notice, and see that full and complete reports are furnished. The annual reunion of the Southern Wisconsin District will convene on the same grounds August 24 to September 2, so all who are in time for the conference and can be on hand for the reunion. Tents will be furnished as follows: 10x12, $1.75 and $2; cottage tents, 10x15, $2.50; cots, 25 cents. These with a tick filled with marsh hay, will make good beds, so come with all you need. When you arrive at any of the depots just take street-car for Elmside, and ride till you reach the camp about three miles from the East Madison depots. Dining-tent will be run at the lowest possible price and yet be sufficient to meet the demands of camp life. The grounds are all that could be desired, on the north side of Lake Monona. Patriarch J. J. Bailey of Michigan is expected to be in attendance; also missionary in charge, J. W. West, of Lamoni, Iowa, W. A. McDowell of Chicago, C. H. Burr of Plano, Illinois, and the missionary force of Wisconsin, and as many visiting brethren as may chance to come our way. Send your orders for tents at once, as far as possible. In general, our orders will not be averse to J. O. Dutton, 2128 Dunning Street, Fair Oakes, Madison, Wisconsin. Have also decided to enlarge the district tent twelve feet at a cost of about $25; so all try to have a little to help. J. O. Dutton, president.

The second reunion of the Alabama District will be held at Pleasant Hill Branch, commencing August 24, and continuing until September 2. We invite all who can to attend. We will be prepared to take care of them comfortably. We expect several of the missionaries to be present, and a good time is expected. For the benefit of those coming by rail, will say McKenzie is the nearest station to the church. Any one ordering car berths and detailed information, write or call on John McKenzie, Hill Branch, commencing August 24, and continuing September 15 and 16, $1.75 and $2; cottage tents, $2.50; cots, 25 cents. These with a tick filled with marsh hay, will make good beds, so come with all you need. When you arrive at any of the depots just take street-car for Elmside, and ride till you reach the camp about three miles from the East Madison depots. The Arebella Sunday-school, the Juniata Sunday-school, and the Otter Lake Sunday-school will hold a picnic at North Lake, Michigan, August 13, 1906. All are invited to come; please notify Bro. Walter Jones, or Bro. A. J. Jones, Otter Lake, Michigan, R. F. D. 1.

The benefit of this act will consist more in what it prevents than in what it corrects. Assuming that the courts sustain its main provisions, and that its enforcement is reasonably effective, it may be expected:

1. For the last few years railway rates have been advancing; from now on the tendency will be the other way. This will be due, not to any extensive or sweeping reductions ordered by the commission, but rather to the fact that the railways themselves, having knowledge that the reasonableness of their action may be challenged, will hesitate to make the advances which they otherwise would, and will grant the demands of shippers for reductions, which they otherwise would not.

2. The payment of rebates and the granting of similar concessions from the published tariff will, in the main, cease. Rebates will never entirely stop so long as competition continues, but they will become less, and in ten years from now that sort of discrimination will be as rare as it was universal ten years ago.

3. Discriminations between localities will largely continue, and this will be the most fruitful source of complaint in time to come. It is difficult to see, however, how much discriminations can be altogether avoided, unless our waterways are to be shut up and the benefit of geographical position entirely ignored.

This bill is more significant in its passage than in its provisions. While President Roosevelt deserves the entire credit for initiating the movement, he would have been powerless but for the cooperation of the railway companies. The people’s declaration that railways must submit to governmental control, and that certain abuses must stop. If the railways recognize this, if they cooperate, as there is every reason to believe they will, to do so, the continuance of this law, conditions will be fairly satisfactory; otherwise, there will be renewed agitation, followed by more drastic legislation—From “The rate bill: What it is and what it will do,” by Charles A. This country is coming to the front very fast.

Wheat raisers have been very successful here the last few years. Quite often one crop will pay for a quarter section of land.

Alfalfa, oats, barley, broom corn, milo maize (kaffir corn), potatoes, melons, etc., do well here.

There will be close to 80,000 acres of wheat sowed adjacent to Plains this fall.

Other people have confidence in this country, why not you?

Land is comparatively cheap, $800 to $1,600 a quarter section.

Some government land here yet to be had. If deeded, the claim I filed on last March would bring $1,200 or more.

Do not think you are coming to a country that is unsettled or without any improvements, if so you will be disappointed.

If you do not want to deal with the land men, who will drive you over the country gratis, you can get livery rigs here as cheap as any place, and you can buy of the owners at about the same prices that it is listed by the land men.

THE PARABLES.

We have always been taught that the teaching of the Savior in the parables was a part and parcel of the gospel dispensation, and to be for our instruction and profit as representatives of the gospel economy of these latter days. The parable of the prodigal son, the parable of the three measures of meal, the hiring of the laborers at the different hours of the day, the wise and foolish virgins, the jewel in the field, all have been held to be of value in teaching the gospel and the kingdom of God; and we confess we should be somewhat staggered to be told that any one of these several parables is in no sense applicable to the Latter Day Saints, and ought not to be given weight or place in our teaching.

For instance, the parable of the man who, before taking a long journey, called his own servants about him, gave them of his goods, one, five; one, two; and one, one talent. The text says goods, and not mental or physical ability, simply goods. The word talent is employed to determine the value; it was a name given for the measurement of commercial values, as the dollar is now with us.

In this parable the Savior was talking about the kingdom of heaven, and said that it was as a man taking a far journey, who called his own servants to him and gave them of his goods, to each according to his ability as he knew them. What he gave them was called talents, which at that time meant money. To one five, to another two, and to still another, one talent. The text says goods, and not mental or physical ability, simply goods. The word talent is employed to determine the value; it was a name given for the measurement of commercial values, as the dollar is now with us.

These three men had an equal chance to know what sort of man their lord was; the first and second set their lord's money or goods to earning other moneys by trading. Not a word is said by either the servant who received the five talents or the one with two; and one, one talent. The text says goods, and not mental or physical ability, simply goods. Bro. U. W. Greene, reporting his field for the past quarter, includes twenty-two baptisms by those of the missionaries who have reported, with eight baptisms by local laborers. Some of the missionaries in his field have been hindered by sickness and others delayed. However, things were getting into better shape and the outlook was encouraging.

"The grafting church does not grow on the true vine." Neither does the grafting Saint.
parable nor the history states; but nothing of harshness or unjust measures on the part of the lord with regard to these two men appears. Their course was approved and the lord pledged to put them into positions of greater responsibility and honor.

The third man it appears gave rather a hard account, and laid his failure to the charge of his employer, and so buried or hid the money given him to do business with, where it did no good either to his lord or himself. It does the text violence to say that the talents referred to were mental and moral capabilities by reason of which the men were fitted for ministerial work and to win converts, for the text says it was money. "Thou oughtest to have put my money to the exchangers," etc. This man could not have hidden his personal capabilities in the ground; he carried them with him and exercised them every day. His employer knew him and his ability. Each man received according to his ability. It was just as safe for this man of the one talent to have used the sum intrusted to him in a business fashion as it was for the other two. Had he done this he would have deserved the same commendation and reward as each of the others limited only by the extent of the trust. The action of the lord toward the first and second shows clearly this fact.

The lord heard the arraignment of this man, to whom the one talent had been given, in silence. At the end of his speech he says, in effect, So, you knew I was a hard man, that I gathered where I had not sown, reaped where I had not planted. Eh! who told you this? These other, your fellow servants, do not so charge. Taking your own estimate of me, you should have taken pains that I should not have had occasion to find fault with you. You had my goods, you should have used what you had received wisely, and, if you did not choose to occupy upon the talent bestowed, you should have put it into the hands of others, to be used, not to be hidden and lie idle. According to your own statement you are proved to be a "wicked and unprofitable servant," out of your own mouth you are condemned. Then punishment followed. It was harsh, but it was not unjust.

The concluding portion of the chapter deals with the Savior's continued teaching in regard to the future and the judgment, the final end of which will be reward for the righteous, loss and pain and anguish for the unrighteous and the wicked. It is as seemly to condemn the judge of the final judgment-time for the harshness of the penalty affixed upon the wicked as it is to say that the penalty visited upon this one-talent faultfinder, the slothful and unprofitable servant, is unjust. If the parable has no application to present existent things, and is not for the use of Latter Day Saints in that part which deals with the servant of the one talent, what business have we with the part that tells us of the two who received the commendation: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many? If the one part is obsolete, so is the other. And that part of the parable which treats of the faithful servants has always been a standard text on the lips of those elders who have constantly exhorted Saints to diligence for the reason that there was the reward, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many."

We can not dispense with this parable as not being applicable, and retain any one of the others as proof texts; if this one goes so must the rest.

NO CAUSE FOR PANIC.

The following is from the columns of the Kansas City Star for Sunday, July 22, and demands a passing notice. In their search for the sensational some of the daily press very clearly and cheerfully depart from right of thought and reason; this is one of them:

The apprehension is growing among old inhabitants of Independence that the Latter Day Saints will eventually control the town. Gradually, but steadily, the "Saints" have immigrated into Independence until now they hold many of the municipal offices and have become a force in the community.

Just how serious would be the outcome should the municipality be captured by the sect does not appear to be clear to that portion of the population not identified with the "Latter Day Saints" Church. When questioned they reply with somber, but indefinite, prophecies of "Mormon domination" or "sectarian tyranny" and ominous predictions that the usurpers will doubtless spread themselves over the community so effectually as to crowd out every one else.

As a matter of fact, there appear to be signs in plenty that the "Saints" have determined upon a concerted movement toward Independence. More than seventy-five years ago the Mormons settled upon the town as a stronghold for their faith, and since they were driven from the county in the summer of 1838 they have made no secret of their determination to some day establish themselves there permanently. Annually, since the feeling against them in the community subsided somewhat, they have made pilgrimages there as to a Mecca. Some of their property rights have been retained since the days of their expulsion, notably the "Temple Lot," a tiny piece of property about seven blocks west of the public square.

A NEW CHURCH WAS BUILT.

For many years this was kept without improvement, awaiting the fulfillment of a "revelation" that a magnificent temple was to be erected there in a single night by the hand of the Almighty. The edifice was too slow in appearing to satisfy some of the church-members, and after a scuffle in the courts they have made no secret of their determination to some day establish themselves there permanently. Annually, since the feeling against them in the community subsided somewhat, they have made pilgrimages there as to a Mecca. Some of their property rights have been retained since the days of their expulsion, notably the "Temple Lot," a tiny piece of property about seven blocks west of the public square.

But they were clannish. They clung together in a little community near the "Temple Lot," visited among one another exclusively, found their pleasures among themselves and, of course, married only within their own church. They mingled with people of other faiths only in earning their living.

And the money that was paid them in wages went promptly and permanently out of circulation, so far as the Gentiles were concerned, except when a small portion was paid back for clothing, or some one of the number acquired another piece of property. They had several stores, run by their own members, and whenever it was possible they did their trading at these.

With the completion of the stone church affairs in "Mormontown," as the vicinity of the Temple Lot was called, became more animated. Each year, after the annual pilgrimage of "Saints" from distant points, more and more of the visitors lingered and took up their residence in Independence. Their finances improved, they built better homes, enlarged their stores, and made a bid for Gentile patronage. They began to dabble a little, a very little, in politics, and Independence awoke one morning to find itself with a "Mormon" postmaster.

Some "Gentile" sages in Independence are now of the opinion that this political branching out was not favored by the heads of the church.

"It forced the faith into too great prominence," say the wise ones, "something that was to be avoided. The policy of the Mormons was to 'ooze' into the community, as it were, unnoticed and unfearèd, until their numbers became so great that they would have the power to rule at the polls. The time was not ripe for 'taking the town' and political aspirants were sculled."

Members of the faith have continued to 'ooze in.' Lamoni, Iowa, which had become a stronghold of the church, began to lose many of the faithful, and the deserters all went to Independence. Meanwhile the class grew steadily better. There were lawyers, doctors, merchants, and professional men among the immigrants, some with means. They entered the original Mecca without ostentation, established themselves in unpretentious quarters and blended into the community.

Within the last twelve months the denominational situation in Independence has assumed an aspect that has been observed with consternation and declared a crisis. An Independence "Gentile" minister recently preached a warning against "the Mormon peril." Old-time anti-Mormonists are approaching a state of panic.

Politicians are gazing at the "Saints" community with speculative eye and murmuring, "I think I can use you if you can all be moved in the same direction at the same time."

"And there is no doubt that they would all move in the same direction," declare the fearful ones. "The Mormons are as clannish as ever. Now they have grown too strong to be regarded as an indifferent factor in a political contest. Woe be unto the politician who seeks to heed them and succeeds in getting them started—they will run over him and take charge of the whole show."

THEIR GROWTH IN POWER.

Independence now has law offices, real estate offices, clothing and grocery stores, places of business of all sorts, owned and occupied by Mormons, many established within the last year. The newest bank in the city is a Mormon institution scarcely a year old. There are Mormon doctors, dentists, lawyers, abstract men, and professional men prominent in the city's affairs. Twenty-five years ago it is doubtful whether there was in Independence a member of the faith possessed of $1,000 in cash. To-day a Mormon is said to be the city's richest man, and his fortune is estimated at more than one half million dollars. Some of the finest homes in Independence have been recently built by Mormons and they are no longer confining their choice of a residence spot to "Mormontown."

Last week Joseph Smith, president of the "Latter Day Saints" Church, moved from Lamoni, Iowa, to Independence. His removal there will doubtless accelerate the boom in "Saint" immigration. Members of the church say there are now about 2,000 of their number living there.

It is a strange thing that people who have approved themselves as citizens in every State, county, and town in which they have lived or are now living outside of Independence, as the members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints so universally and so confessedly have done, should, by a transition from other places to the county-seat of Jackson County, become such a mischievous and burdensome community.

This article itself shows that for now over twenty-five years Latter Day Saints have been good, law-abiding, upright, sober citizens.

But "they are clannish." What a charge! Are these law-abiding people more exclusive of those not of their ways of belief in religion or politics than their neighbors of other denominations, the Methodists, the Presbyterians, the Baptists, Catholics, or others? Not a bit of it. Who finds fault with the members of any one of the denominational churches for meddling its own business in its own way? Who makes them offenders of the social compact if they choose to deal with those of their own number in every kind of business in which they may engage? Who makes complaint if any one of these throws its influence for or against any political party measure? Who makes the call of clannishness against the Catholic Church because it builds parochial schools and educates its children in those schools, in places even asking for an apportionment of public moneys to aid in supporting them? Who finds fault with any of the named churches if under their pastors' instruction they vote together for measures of public policy which the pastors deem the better for society? It has not been shown that the members of the Reorganized Church in Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, or any other State have ever been interfered with or dominated by instruction, advice, or authoritative command in regard to his social or political views, or any sort of effort ever made by church authority to direct or control any man's vote. Nor can such a condition of things now be shown, in Missouri or any other State or Territory.

The only possible exception to the foregoing is the controversy in society raised upon the liquor question. On that the Saints are united, not because the officers of the church so will, but because they conscientiously believe that Jesus Christ, whom they as religiousists take as the author of their faith and worship, has required and now requires that men shall be sober-minded, free from drunkenness and the evils fastened upon society by the drink habit. They believe and are sure that the sale of liquors which intoxicate is detrimental to the best interests of city and state, and the consequent drunkenness which follows the traffic in intoxicants, is an evil of so serious a nature that it should neither be tolerated nor sanctioned by law, and hence their individual and collective opposition to the liquor traffic. Besides this, as a matter of fact to them, the Lord has said. No drunkard can inherit the kingdom of God; hence, it is their business to avoid instrumentality in making drunkards, so far as they possibly can.

Are good citizens not wanted at Independence, Missouri, of all classes of labor and profession? We think so; and Saints should help to make them.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

It will be noticed that the Bishop's annual report was a part of last week's HERALD. The copy had been in the hands of the printer for several weeks, but was crowded out by a rush of business, and unavoidable delay in getting new type.

The report of Bro. Heman C. Smith, in charge of the mission including Iowa, Minnesota, etc., shows one hundred and fifty baptisms for the quarter ending June 30.

Nauvoo Reunion

SAINTS WELCOMED BACK AFTER SIXTY YEARS OF EXILE.

The Sunday-school and Religio convention and church reunion now in progress in Nauvoo is proving successful.

The city park is well shaded and does quite well as to the size and location.

The meetings opened Saturday, July 28, Elder McKiernan, as temporary chairman, getting the first word.

Speeches of welcome were then made by Mayor Rudolph Summerhalder and Attorney Ritter. These are important as showing the changed sentiment in Nauvoo. The mayor said:

Ladies and Gentlemen: As I am not an orator, and not in the habit of speech-making, you can not expect me to give you a speech. I only want to say, in the first place, that I am glad to see so many here, to meet and greet a people who have come here as a religious assembly to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience, and to visit the old historic city founded by their forefathers.

To you people of the Latter Day Saints' Church I would say on the part and in behalf of the people of Nauvoo, that I most heartily and cheerfully welcome you and extend to you the freedom of the city, and ask you to make yourselves at home amongst our people, who will be pleased to meet you as friends, as brethren, and as fellow citizens. Although some of us may differ in a religious way, yet we all worship the same God who makes no difference as to the creed. It is the faithful who enter into the kingdom of heaven.

I want to say to you there is no doubt in my mind but that Nauvoo is a hallowed spot to you. It is a place that contains many old landmarks of a once established church here which would be of interest to you. It also was the home of the founder of your church, whose remains rest here in peace.

In conclusion I want to say to you that I hope and trust that your visit here, during your stay here, may be one of enjoyment and pleasure as well as a religious benefit, so that when you return to your respective homes, you will feel like, at some future day, to return to the good old historic City of Nauvoo.

Attorney George A. Ritter then spoke as follows:

Fellow Citizens, Christian Friends, and Brethren: Old Father Time is a great healer and leavener. "Behold how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." Words are but symbols, but the life we live and the world we live in demands the salvation of man, and according to that good old book, the Bible, "now our salvation is nearer than we believe."

The world needs religion. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints believes in the efficacy of prayer. Prayer, my Christian friends, is so mighty an instrument that no one has ever been able to move all of its keys. It sweeps along the infinite scale of man's wants and God's goodness.

It affords me great pleasure to be present on this great occasion, and to be permitted to speak a few words in behalf of our community, which is in a certain sense the home-coming of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to their old stamping-ground, the ancient city, Nauvoo, the city of the Saints. It is certainly a day of rejoicing. I see before me to-day the Honorable Alexander Smith, a true son of the prophet Joseph Smith, the founder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. It was this good people who first selected this site for a city and named it Nauvoo, taken from the Hebrew word and signifying the beautiful. But you all know as a matter of history, that the Mormons were driven from this beautiful site, but I now thank God that it is the right and privilege of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to be present at our solicitation, and upon our petition hold their religious convention in our midst.

Our forefathers who founded the government and framed the constitution of the United States of America, which is the supreme law of our land, builted wiser than they knew. They said that all men should be permitted to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints comes under the protection of this constitutional right and guarantee, like all other religious denominations. So, my Christian friends, we welcome you back to this community, and are glad to have you with us to partake of the hospitality and freedom of our city in which to worship God according to the dictates of your own conscience. All history teaches us that God raises up such and such a man for such and such a purpose as used to represent a genuine truth. That God raised up George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, General Grant, Abraham Lincoln, and Joseph Smith is absolutely true. Joseph Smith was a great prophet and seer, and will no doubt live for ever in history and in the affection of his people and followers. The stone that the Gentiles rejected has now become the head of the corner in the new temple to be rebuilt.

May the universal brotherhood of man, and the fatherhood of God soon appear as plain as the day dawning.

I thank you one and all for your attention.

AS I SEE IT.

Fortunately, or otherwise, I belong to the class that has been so quietly convicted on ex-parte evidence by self-appointed prosecuting attorney, witness, judge, and jurors, who have so freely expressed themselves in the editorial and other columns of the HERALD, the official organ of the church, and who look upon bankers as having a hereditary impediment in their honor and veracity, and having happily located themselves on the warm side of society and commerce, lazily sap their substance and contribute only the conventional smile adjusted to the case in hand; a pleasant one, for approval or a solicitation of business, a sad one in turn for the confidence of the unfortunate, and a sickly one for disapproval or conflicting issues, retaining everything of value for one’s selfish accumulation.

One might suggest if these articles hurt business, quit the business; but that would be like advice to a brother: “If drink hurts your business, quit the business.” But let us reason together. My best judgment suggests that it is a misunderstanding of the banking business that has given rise to much that has been written, and it only needs to be better understood to enjoy the hearty support and cooperation of everybody, both rich and poor, for they certainly have interests in common. Bankers are honest men, so are merchants, farmers, and preachers,—not all of them, but as a rule; and the exception is the one to avoid, and in his community the fruits will judge him; and do not offer him support or apology but give him his just dues.

The banking business is largely a matter of confidence; and few are the men who will betray that confidence; they are jealous of it. A customer steps to the window and places his possession of money, uncounted often, and leaves it without a receipt or an evidence of any kind. He sends in his note signed and asks that his account be credited for the amount; sends in a check signed that you may trust the bank for credit. At the close of the month the customer hands in his pass-book that contains all evidence of credit he may have, and the bank has the cancelled vouchers and reported credits both, but not a single betrayal of that trust can you cite us to. Does your nearest friend or your blood relation trust you farther? Bankers fail; so do merchants, farmers and preachers, and it is always unfortunate, but not always criminal. A banker could as honestly fail as any other line, if not so credited. Merchants fail who buy recklessly, extend unwarranted credit, keep loosely their accounts, and open those that prove a loss continuously, who keep down the profits and up expenses. Farmers fail who leave more tracks on the high road to town than in the field; who depend too largely upon earning an honest living by the sweat of the hired man’s brow; who tear down faster than they build, both improvements and soil. Preachers fail when they become too self-reliant, self-appointed, in their minds infallible, aspiring, self-appointed guardians and critics, indispensable to the safety of the organization they represent (or as it sometimes appears the organization that represents them), capable of setting all others right.

The banker who figures freely as a politician, and who indulges in speculation, or backs his friends or relatives in politics and speculation, one whom we might term “sporty,” or one who scatters his resources in a multitude of undertakings instead of confining himself to his line of business, one fascinated by social functions and social extravagance beyond a conservative harmony within his legitimate income, you may watch with no harm to yourself and no injustice to him. On the other hand you may safely confide in your aged and trusted banker, and consult him on matters of finance, and his judgment will be honest, and usually good and cheerfully given, and the result keenly watched for your best interest. You can not well afford to dispense with the banker’s counsel or suggestion. Not that he is so much smarter than you or others; but his line of work more than any other has fitted him for your service. For contrast: a merchant has dealings with farmers, bankers, lawyers, doctors, merchants, printers, painters, dealers in stock and real estate, etc., and it is in relation to the clothes they wear or the provision their families use. The connection had by the banker with the same list of customers is quite different and calculated to give experience in all lines. His connection is in relation to the purchases, sales, trades, leases, rentals, investments, adventures, speculations, partnerships, estates, marriages, and divorces, and the outcome of all their varied transactions is watched with untiring earnestness by the banker, for it all has a bearing of some kind upon the credit of some one, and, as custodian of the funds of the community, the banker must not be lax in the prosperities or reverses of any, as credit is largely based, placed, misplaced, and shifted in harmony with such events, and affects more or less the securities held by the bank. Do you realize that the good credit that you enjoy in business circles is largely due to your banker? Bradstreet and Dunn are authority on the subject, and their deduction on your financial standing is had from the reports of the bankers of the country. Your merchant relies largely upon your banker’s judgment for the amount of credit he extends to you, and he will never cast distrust or discredit unless forced to do so by your own careless action.

or salesman of trust. If you wish to engage in business, your credit will be inquired of. You may give a note, and it will be presented at the bank to be passed upon. If in business, your account will be open, and you deposit one day, draw next, and from month to month your account will be simply changing to your choosing, and never a balance of any value, and the bank each month makes a statement equal to a set of books for you which will show your receipts and disbursements in full, and offer evidence and receipts for the transactions of the month. The idea that bankers get rich off the poor is a mistaken one. Lean does not make fat. The poor man borrows one hundred dollars for thirty days and pays eight per cent, sixty-six and two thirds cents for the use of it. He buys a horse with the money and hires the horse out for fifty cents per day, twelve dollars for the working days in the month. The first you condemn as usurious, the latter you stamp as a good investment; and while we eliminate as much as possible the chance on this class of loans, they are subject to loss, while the revenue on these small loans might possibly pay expenses necessary to the business; but the profits of the business are accumulated from the transactions had with men of means, who are heavy borrowers at times and large depositors at others, and they continually contribute to the income of the bank by funds furnished or interest paid, and are grateful for the convenience. Merchants and dealers are liberal patrons of the bank, and are quick to take advantage of the usual two to ten per cent discount on bills for ten to thirty days, and recognize and appreciate the source that enables them to avail themselves of the liberal discount and establish a credit and reputation for themselves in the business marts. Well-to-do farmers are good customers, who deposit during the harvest and winter months, and borrow while they plow, sow, and mature their product. They honestly credit the bank for a degree of their prosperity as they are blessed in basket and store, in flocks and fields. When you have money to spare, the bank pays you interest for it. When you have all your money employed, any shortage the bank will make good by a loan. When you see a bargain you avail yourself of the ready money and secure the benefit, and as soon as you have served your purpose lay the money down and stop expense.

You pretend to believe in coöperation; each man in the community has a small sum of money, not enough to buy a bunch of cattle or a few horses, or a piece of land, or a house and lot, or a stock of goods when they are for sale, worth the money, but by putting all these mites together they will make a sum sufficient to buy the cattle and serve the farmer well and the same sum will in turn buy the horses, the land, the house and lot, the stock of goods and serve each party to his profit. The banker calls this money from its hiding-places, gets it together, and benefits the whole community, and wrongs no one. The gathering of this money lessens crime in the home, puts an end to the jeopardy one places around his family by hoarding money in holes in the ground, old stockings, idle stoves, chimney corners, etc.

There exists in every business enterprise an element of risk, minimized in old established concerns, but not even in those eliminated because of the uncertainty of all things, and in new ventures it is a potent factor; but capital assumes this risk and makes it possible for new and valuable industries to spring up, offering to the masses employment, more or less permanent, governed by the supply and demand of the line of output of the concern. Certainly you will not consider, suggest, or accept that CAPITAL should take the risk and reap no revenue. That would be injustice. Capital would not interest itself in an enterprise where it would have everything to lose and nothing to gain. It would not associate itself with the laboring classes, assuming all risk, and waiving all chance of profit.

Your premises are faulty inasmuch as you take for granted that all business enterprises are successful financially, and you wish to partake of that success.

Statistics show that the majority of enterprises launched fail; are you as anxious to share that failure or, inasmuch as you have no capital and are proof against recovery of loss, could you honestly and conscientiously associate yourself with capital, assuming to share and share alike?

Who would then become the parasite?

You have all heard of "wild-cat banking," and shrink at the term. An attempt of laborers without capital to engage in any line of manufacturing or like industry, would be "wild-cat" industry, for the reason that there would be nothing back of it to give credit, or make good or valid contracts or obligations, or liquidate claims against them. In this connection let me inquire: Do you think you have a moral right to attack the legitimate undertakings of lawful business enterprises, that a brother may invest his means in, with the object and intent, or the result at least, of doing violence to the good purposes and financial interests of that brother?

Retrograding in view, we find the fundamental instinct and conditions of the savage tribe which once occupied where we now possees was a simple system of taking what they could find from nature and each other with no consideration of individual rights. Time came when furs and corn were exchanged for the tomahawk. Later, glittering beads and colored shells acted as a medium of exchange, superceding rude barter. White men supplanted wampum, skins, and jewelry with precious silver and gold. Banks followed, and civilization and education made apparent the practical and stable forms of credit it offered, and still the growth and development of trade and commerce assumed such mammoth proportions that the necessary gold and bank note became bulky and cumbersome, and checks and drafts are made to do service, lessening the burden connecting the extreme North, South, East, and West to a matter of convenience. The principles and systems of business of the world to-day are calculated to conserve the economic conditions of the present, and are not so bad. The reforms we might suggest would offer no relief if treacherously dealt with as is the case now; and, so long as we are of the world, we must meet conditions as they are, and can only better them by conducting our own small affairs honorably among men, striving to do all things pleasing to the court we must answer to, and profitable to ourselves. We are then sure of having things equal on the same basis of equality in heaven, quantity, quality, and capacity considered. "In my Father's house are many mansions." "As one star differeth from another in glory, so is the kingdom of heaven." We will be rewarded according to the deeds done in the body, and occupy as our credit shall award, the highest or the lowest glory, or one between, and yet no one dare claim inequality in heaven. We possess on earth, according to the deeds done in the body, subject to environments which surround us, coupled with wise choosing, sturdy purpose, and untiring effort.

Some articles rather savor of a desire to return to the primitive condition, dangerous and anti-civilized. Do not let us indulge ourselves in such economic heresies, or allow such an education to be forced upon the minds of old or young, but live up to our privileges each day, thankful that conditions are no worse. The jeopardy Wall Street has subjected the world to in the past is fast losing its terror, as the money centers of the West are coming to our rescue, grappling with the situation, mastering the emergencies, and calmly considering with no sign of quaking when Wall Street speaks.

Your banker is your friend in need, and when you term him an idle parasite you misjudge and slander one of the busiest men in your community. And though he turns the key in his office-door early, it simply closes the routine business of the day, and opens wide the detail consideration which dictates the policy and management of business affairs and only closes during the unconsciousness of sleep. If you have something better to offer us, present that, and as fast as you present it we will accept, and the criticism on banking and Zionic conditions will be unnecessary.

It is not difficult for a man off at a long range to read about, dream over, and figure out in his mind a nice way to build up Zion; but to a man on the ground, it is a problem. When the commandment was given to buy the land as far west as the Kaw River, "the line running between Jew and Gentile" (see Doctrine and Covenants 57), it could have been had at from $1.25 to $2.50 per acre, or might have been taken under the homestead act. That offered a proposition highly profitable in the way of investment, for the advance in value was ahead. Conditions to-day reverse the case, and property is apparently at top price, or nearly so; and while it may remain safe, the investment feature, with big odds in our favor, has passed. To purchase now at present prices the property on the market from the Temple Lot west to the Kaw River would require the entire holding of the membership of the church, and offer only an investment that would not pay one half of one per cent. Let me caution, do not be too ready to take issue on considering the matter in the light of an investment and the per cent it would pay, for remember it is not spiritual but literal Zion you are so concerned in at present, and it is not a clamor for a division of spiritual holding, but of material, and it is a consideration of industrial ventures, you have been agitating, which things can only be safely reckoned from the stand point of dollars and cents.

Suggestions are in order, and one might name a smelter as a good enterprise; but any one would know that would fail at Independence. One suggests a canning-factory. One already failed here, and is idle and useless. A creamery might be built; but certainly it would not be a success. Kansas City pays more for the raw material than she would for the finished product. A tannery might be entertained, as we have the territory west of us where cowhides grow; but investigation shows freight on the necessary barks for tanning to exceed the expense of shipping the same where treatment can be had without this expense. You might find like conditions attending the manufacture of furniture, etc. Well, we can occupy the farm land. Not at one hundred dollars per acre for the less desirable and distant from town, to five hundred or a thousand per acre, and make an interest income to tithe for the benefit of the church. You might start a hennery. You can find the empty coops, the vacant yards, the idle houses in every direction from town, cheap for cash. They failed. I do not know why.

A happy thought comes. We will move out on small tracts of "mother earth" and raise fruit and vegetables, for Kansas City can use all Jackson County could raise in that line. Did it ever occur to you that Kansas City does not depend on Jackson County, but has a network of railroads extending south, placing that country practically in as close access to market as Jackson County, and, being farther south and vegetation earlier, her product enjoys the top market at Kansas City, while Jackson County product takes the after market? When you reflect upon these conditions and others, considering competition, graft, and favoritism, the degree of dependence attending all concerned upon all others in the way of producing, gathering, and distributing, you will notice it is a problem not so easily solved, and those in charge of that department of church affairs should have our support, not our criticism.

I do not imply or believe we will fail to have a literal Zion located at Independence as designed; but I do think it will take the resources of mind and matter greater than human wisdom, skill, and financing can produce to bring the present elements and conditions under subjection, to the accomplishment of the same. In your anxiety over converting the wealth and lawful belongings of others, do not overlook the necessary stay and support had by the church in Ern. Blakeslee, Rogers, Banta, Dancer, and others at a time most needed; and the church may have need of just such substantial support from the brethren among us who have been financially prospered, and they will not turn a deaf ear to an official call. Would that more of us could stand prosperity, and we might get it. It occurs to me it is not becoming for us of no means to be so anxious to divide. Apparently our serious danger lies in continued fault-finding, distrust, suspicion, jealousy, and envy, which solves no mooted question, but breeds disruption and destruction.

Very truly,

J. D Briggs.

Independence, Missouri, July 14, 1906.

SELFISH OR FOOLISH—WHICH OR BOTH

Zion and her people will be an interesting subject until our Lord comes, and then we will be concerned in the realization of it instead of its contemplation; and it is best for all concerned that we be patient with each other, for the "half has not been told." By so doing good is sure to result. Our different occupations in life will give us different views; and by expressing them we will all be brought nearer to that unity we so much desire. That part of the membership which is embraced within the law that says, "take no thought for the morrow," is largely relieved from anxiety, because the church will provide for them according to their "wants and needs," and the fear of receiving a "time check" is very remote. The larger part of the membership are struggling to gain a livelihood amid conditions that are a severe tax on the energies of the strong, to which the weak must succumb, and at the same time sacrifice of their wealth to support those whom the law makes dependent on them. Can and will we give succor to those who so sorely need it, is one of the great problems in building up Zion.

To refer to the fearful waste because of the drink and tobacco habit as a reason of poverty among our people, is very uncharitable indeed. There is more probability of a greater waste by extravagance among the well-to-do.

The writer has been among the toilers all his life, and I find interest, lack of opportunity, and lack of ability, a trinity that is a burden which only a few can bear up under. A few items from my own personal experience in thirty years will be a fair example of many of the Saints.

I have paid enough in interest and rent to purchase two homes, and enough in principal for one more, and yet I have none. I am now paying enough rent to pay for a good home in seven years; and could not pay interest and principal on such a home from my income. I can never expect to get a home. During the thirty years I have paid for pleasure for myself and family as follows: Circus ticket, fifty cents; theater ticket, fifty cents; base-ball ticket, twenty-five cents; three tickets dog and pony show, one dollar; perhaps ten times to Sunday-school picnics in twenty years, and street-car rides to the parks will make about all my money spent for pleasure, and there has been no tobacco or drink bill, and I believe this is a fair sample of many of our people.

Some of the hardships are as follows: in ten years, because of sickness, lost in wages, about $600.00; sickness and death of a boy, $100.00, and quarantined for contagious disease, $50.00, which took fifteen months at $10.00 per month to pay the bill, enough to pay for a small house.

Selfishness or foolishness has blinded those that are able, to the opportunities that lie within their grasp to help the household of faith. A $2,500 investment in a bank in Independence, or elsewhere, will give employment to possibly three persons. A like investment in land, would provide twenty-five homes, which would put about one hundred members in one community,—enough for a good branch, Sunday-school, and Religio. Without interest it could all be paid back in ten years, and reinvested for the same purpose. Which would do the church, as a body, and the poor within it, the most good? The bank investment is not a necessity. All our business could be done in other banks with as much safety as in our own.

The question might be asked, Where is the money for such an investment? From the same place that it comes to invest in a bank; from those who have it to spare. Possibly the following will explain why it is invested in banks. A brother, an officer and stockholder in a bank, told me that the dividend for 1905 was twenty-seven per cent. Are we "selfish or foolish," which?

Farm land in Missouri and Iowa has increased in value more than one hundred per cent in ten years. The Lord said many years ago that wise men should be selected to purchase land. Who should be the wise men among us? Most certainly the officers. And the Lord in April, 1906, reproved them, in connection with the Saints, for their selfishness. The majority of our people, because of poverty and inability to manage business enterprises, must depend on the officers to help them in the great struggle. against hard conditions. How well they will succeed, will depend largely on how faithful the officers will be. One of our greatest needs is that our people be where they can be under the care of good and faithful officers, such as will be real fathers to them, capable and willing to patiently direct them. Many of our young men and women are going out into life’s great battle, unfit for the great struggle, because they have not had the proper training and direction. We need men and women now who love humanity, love the brotherhood of Israel, and will work for them and not for the dollar. The majority of our people must be followers, and we have the men capable of leading them if they will heed the injunctions of the Lord and eliminate selfishness from their work. The light and warning God has given us the past year will take us many miles on our journey, if we will heed it.

I do not take the position that it is wrong for our people to engage in banking; but is it wise, is it common sense to do so when the brotherhood could be better served in helping them get homes? It is needful that the fearful waste of the money of the church and of the Saints be stopped. Our success does not lie entirely in our earning capacity, but in preventing waste. There are possibly fifty or more of the missionaries’ families paying $100 in rent per year, $5,000 in all; and add to that two hundred or more other families, and we are approaching nearly the $100,000 line of waste each year. A tailoring-shop would give enough employment to maintain several families, and a saving of $5 per suit on three hundred missionaries, would be $1,500, enough to keep several missionaries in the field.

The writer believes, and I suppose there are many others, that we have men of sufficient ability and experience to go ahead and accomplish what God has in view, if they will do three things: trust God, love the brotherhood, and go ahead and do the work.

Benjamin Franklin, when our colonies were struggling for their independence, with his good name and energy, went to France and borrowed several million dollars to carry on the war. His cause was no holier than ours. God blessed him, and he will our leaders if they trust him.

Courage, brethren. We common folks must trust our leaders; they must trust us; and both must trust in God. And as we believe he is in the work, it is very important that we are in it with him.

Because I have written in regard to my private affairs, and also that I am not seeking notoriety, I will give my real name to the editor, and call myself

WHAT IS A PARABLE?

A parable is a statement, an illustration, with a double meaning. See Psalm 49, also 78: “I will open my mouth in a parable; I will utter dark sayings.” Mark 4:13, a question: “How then will ye know all parables?”

As I understand from these quotations a parable is a dark saying or statement, that has more than one meaning, addressed to the Jewish people that having eyes saw not, and having ears heard not. Such Jesus Christ taught in parables, not because he wanted to mislead, but because “the heart of this people is waxed gross, their ears are dull, their eyes they have closed.” His teaching to them was of the temporal concerns of life that had a hidden meaning, reaching beyond this life, that they might be induced to open their eyes and ears, and give his statements proper respect. He spoke to them of the sower that went forth to sow, a matter they could easily understand, and thereby hoped to interest them so that they could understand the good seed of the kingdom, that he had come to sow. The disciples did not fully understand his meaning, and after listening to several parables, they asked him to declare unto them the meaning of the parable of the tares of the field. There appeared to them a double meaning. And Jesus said unto them (the disciples), “It is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom, but to them [the Jews] it is not given.”

The parables left on record by Jesus Christ and his apostles are subjects of much speculation among the officials of the church. All seem anxious to explain and teach the meaning as they see it to others. As we see the question there is a spiritual intent and meaning to all the parables Jesus taught, that claim our honest investigation. The temporal side is important to those that sow, that they may successfully reap.

Our attention has been called to this question, because of articles that have lately appeared in the HERALD on “Usury.” Both parties quote scripture freely to prove their respective positions. Reference has been especially called to Matthew 25:13-15. Jesus said: “Now I will liken these things unto a parable. For it is like as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods [or money]. And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, to another one.”

To my mind there are two sides to this parable; one, human; the other, spiritual. First, represents a business man of the world, whose sole object is riches, a lord, a ruler with very little of milk of human kindness in his make-up. It is said he gave this money to each man according to his ability (to use it). When the lord returned and called his servants to account, the man with one talent stated his reasons plainly. He said to his lord, I knew that you were a hard man reaping where you had not sown; there is the talent you gave me. His lord called him both wicked and slothful, and said unto him, Having known that I reap where I do not sow, and gather what I have not planted, you ought to have put my money with the exchangers, where at my coming I should have received my own with usury. The lord admitted the charge; did not excuse himself. He knew he had the habit of reaping what he did not sow. This part of the parable is simply a picture of human depravity, of selfish greed,—no pattern for humanity to follow, no example for the followers of Jesus Christ. It is not safe to decide in favor of usury, because such a character as this lord represents was in favor of it, such a wise lord as he is called in editorial, HERALD No. 27, because such a character determined to have usury. That does not show any good authority for it. Jesus did not teach usury, though the article conveys the idea that Jesus was the lord represented in the parable. The condemnation of the servant was severe; but not more despotic than might be expected from such a lord. He admitted the fact that he reaped where he had not sown, also that the servant knew it. Could any justice or mercy be expected from such a lord? Was that the character that Jesus the Christ represented to man? Does it follow that because he used parables to a people that had eyes but did not want to see, that it justifies a teacher, a minister of the gospel, in using those dark sentences, parables, to prove that usury is one of the virtues, or permissible, where the people not only have eyes to see and ears to hear, but have hearts and minds, and a desire to understand right-doing, truth, equity, and justice, love to God and brother man?

Some have the idea that this lord in the parable represents Jesus Christ the Redeemer of the world; but the character of this wise lord is just the opposite of all that which constitutes the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. If this lord represents anybody on earth to-day, it is those that reap what other men have sown. This lord gave his money to his servants, not for their benefit, but that through their toil and labor, their cunning and deceit in business, they could raise money to enrich him as their lord. This lord manifested a spirit just the opposite to the great God that so loved the world that he sent his Son Jesus Christ to redeem man and teach mankind the way to happiness, peace, and joy in this life in present condition; and how to employ his talents or capabilities that God has placed in every human soul, that he himself may enjoy all that he can earn by right-living in this life, and thereby prepare himself for a more exalted sphere, a mansion under better conditions. Jesus taught, Whatever ye sow that shall ye reap. If they sow, and believe in usury and its kindred evils pertaining to the flesh or the customs of the world, they shall reap corruption. If, as members of the church of Christ, we use all diligence to add to our faith, to improve our talents for good to ourselves and others, we shall as certainly reap life everlasting with all its attendant blessings.

Let us whose attention has been called to the parable of the talents in Matthew 25, reread, and as sure as we have eyes to see and ears to hear, we will find nothing in the teaching of Jesus Christ that gives sanction, or in the remotest degree sustains usury or its kindred evils, either in or out of the church.

From a consideration of this parable we learn the following: That parables used by Jesus Christ two thousand years ago do not apply in any sense to Latter Day Saints of the present age; that parables neither prove nor disprove any part of the law of God.

The parable shows the injustice of this lord in dealing with his servant with one talent. It is said he gave each man his allotment, according to his judgment of the man's ability, and the man because of his knowledge of his lord's proclivities for stealing and injustice was afraid to speculate with the money, and it is said he went and hid it. He was honest above many of his fellows, determined to return what money his lord had given him. Many people of the present day would call him honest at least. What did his lord say? "Cast him into outer darkness."

We are admonished in the editorial referred to not to forget that Jesus was teaching upon the things of the kingdom of heaven, and the conditions to obtain at the end of the world. And the evident intent to convey to HERALD readers that this was the way the Lord would sit in judgment and pass sentence. If I am wrong in my conclusion, I shall be glad to receive correction; for I certainly object to such an unjust judge.

Respectfully,

George Derry.

LET EVERY MAN STAND IN HIS OWN OFFICE.

Therefore, let every man stand in his own office, and labor in his own calling; and let not the head say unto the feet it hath no need of the feet, for without the feet how shall the body be able to stand? Also, the body hath need of every member, that all may be edified together, that the system may be kept perfect. Doctrine and Covenants 88:21.

The above was given September 23, 1832. From it we understand that the Lord instructs his priesthood to labor in their own calling. By so doing all would be edified, and the system kept perfect. Whatever that system is, a departure from it would make it imperfect.

In section 107 we learn what the various officers are that go to make up the perfect system, and their duty. In paragraph 38 we have first the patriarch. Through this channel all who are worthy and seek God may be blessed. Even the Presidency and the leading quorums of the church can in faith receive needed blessings. Let none think that they are above receiving light, strength, and comfort through.
this divine channel; for the Lord says that blessings to the church shall come through that source. Let us have faith in the promise of God, and with grateful hearts praise him for all the gospel privileges and blessings.

Paragraph 39 gives the presiding elder over all the church to be a translator, a revelator, a seer, and prophet. In section 43, paragraphs 1 and 2, we learn that there is none other appointed to receive commandments and revelations as a law to govern the entire body, but the presiding elder of the church. In this there is order and safety, and the Lord says: "This I give unto you that you may not be deceived."

Others may receive revelations for their personal benefit, or for the benefit of those under their care. The presidents of missions, stakes, districts, and branches may receive communications from the Lord instructing them in their line of work; but it is not contemplated in the law and order of the priesthood that the feet small command the head. The membership may receive, by the spirit of revelation, knowledge of certain events that will transpire in the world and in the church. In Acts 11:27, 28 we are informed that there came prophets from Jerusalem to Antioch, and there stood up one of them and signified by the Spirit that there should be a great dearth throughout all the world, which came to pass in the days of Claudius Caesar.

When living in the state of Nebraska, twenty miles from the nearest branch (Columbus), in the year 1872, I dreamed that W. W. Blair was to be one of the presidency of the church, and I believed that this information was imparted to me by the Holy Spirit. Now, suppose I had related this at General Conference, would the church be under obligation to comply with it? No, it would have been unwise on the part of any one to so move. In March, 1873, the call came through the proper channel.

Again, when T. W. Smith was preaching in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, the Spirit spoke to a certain sister that he, Bro. Smith, would be ordained to the apostleship. She thought as the matter was made known to her so plainly, that Bro. Josiah Ells, who was a member of that quorum, would ordain Bro. Smith there and then; but he said, "Sister, you may have the evidence that he shall so occupy; have wisdom and wait until the call comes in harmony with law. You have not the right to call and set apart to office in this church any person, neither would we be justified in complying." The sister thought it strange that the Spirit would reveal a matter, and that she would be advised to have wisdom and not spread it broadcast. But we remember that after Peter, James, and John had seen Moses and Elias, the Savior said, "Tell the vision to no man until the Son of man be risen from the dead."

To the President is given two counselors. In section 99, paragraph 6, we learn that it is according to the dignity of his office that he should preside over the high council of the church, and in case he himself is absent the other presidents have power to preside in his stead, both or either of them. Suppose when the council convenes the President is absent, and there are present the two counselors, some of the Twelve and Seventy, and a motion is made that one of the Twelve or Seventy preside. Would that be in harmony with the instructions? No. Would it not be treating with disrespect those whose duty it is to preside? I think so. The mover of the motion might think, in his judgment, that the persons named were more competent to preside; but the Lord said, "Let every man stand in his own office, and labor in his own calling. . . . that the system may be kept perfect." Let us honor the instruction, and do what we can to assist men in their own office.

In section 104, paragraph 44, the Lord says, "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence."

In section 107, paragraph 40, the Twelve are made the traveling council, "which twelve hold the keys to open up the authority of my kingdom upon the four corners of the earth." A very extensive field.

In section 104, paragraph 12, this quorum is called a "traveling, presiding high council, to officiate in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the presidency of the church, agreeably to the institution of heaven, to build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations."

Paragraph 16: "It is the duty of the traveling high council, to call on the seventy, when they need assistance, to fill the several calls for preaching and administering the gospel, instead of any others."

In the appointments of the Twelve by the Presidency to these fields all have been provided for. Suppose that the Presidency would conclude not to place three of the Twelve in charge of any field, and instead would give missions No. 1, 2, and 3 to one of the seventy and two of the high priests, and appoint the three apostles to labor in some district or stake as a missionary not in charge. "Well," says one, "why suppose such unlawful and unreasonable measures, which have not been used? If undertaken, the Quorum of Twelve would demand from the Presidency the reasons for such a departure from the law and order of the church?" And if the Presidency would say, Well, we found that the brethren we have placed in charge of missions No. 1, 2, and 3 are more competent than the three members of the traveling, presiding high council, what would be the result? I believe that the quorum would say, Well, if some of our members are not competent and qualified to occupy in their office, let complaint be made to the quorum, which has a right to investigate the standing of its members before they are ignored in their office and calling. What would be right in dealing with members of this quorum, would be right in dealing with seventies and high priests. If not, why not?

Section 104, paragraph 16: "It is the duty of the traveling high council to call upon the seventy, when they need assistance, to fill the several calls for preaching and administering the gospel, instead of any others."

By this we learn that it is the duty of the Twelve to call the Seventy first. Under the law, what is the duty of the Seventy and their field of labor? "The seventy are also called to preach the gospel, and to be special witnesses unto the Gentiles and in all the world—thus differing from other officers in the church in the duties of their calling."—Doctrine and Covenants 104:11.

Let us notice in what sense this quorum differs from other officers. Section 104: 43: "These seventy are to be traveling ministers unto the Gentiles, first, and also unto the Jews, whereas other officers of the church, who belong not unto the twelve neither to the seventy, are not under the responsibility to travel among all nations, but are to travel as their circumstances shall allow."

From the above we learn that the Seventy like the Twelve are traveling ministers.

Section 107, paragraph 44: "The difference between this quorum [seventy] and the quorum of elders is, that one is to travel continually, and the other is to preside over the churches from time to time, the one has the responsibility of presiding from time to time, and the other has no responsibility of presiding, saith the Lord your God."

The above information was given to the church in the days of Joseph Smith, Jr., and up until his death there was perfect understanding as to the duties of the Seventy; but we have so much misunderstanding on this line that in 1890, section 120, paragraph 3, the Lord again speaks:

There should be no conflict or jealousy of authority between the quorums of the church; all are necessary and equally honorable, each in its place. The twelve and seventy are traveling ministers and preachers of the gospel, to persuade men to obey the truth; the high priests and elders holding the same priesthood are the standing ministers of the church, having the watchcare of the membership and nurturing and sustaining them, under the direction and instruction of the presidency and the twelve. The seventy when traveling by the voice of the church, or sent by the twelve to minister the word where the twelve can not go, are in the powers of their ministrations apostles—those sent—and in meetings where no organization exists should preside, if no member of the twelve or presidency be present.

In the above we have mentioned the traveling and the standing ministers. The Seventy are the former. They have the right to preside in meetings where no organization exists by reason of being apostles in the powers of their ministrations; but where organization has been effected it is the duty of the standing ministry to preside, not the Seventy. See section 122, paragraph 9:

The quorums in respect to authority are designed to take precedence in office as follows: The presidency, the twelve, the seventy in all meetings and gatherings of the membership, where no previous organization has been effected. Where organization has been arranged, and the officers have been ordained and set in order; the standing ministry in their order; high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons; the parallels are; in the presidency, the president and his counselors; in the second presidency, the twelve; in the missionary work, first the twelve; second, the seventy; in the standing ministry, the presidency, second, the high priests; third, the elders, then priests, teachers, and deacons in their order.

The above is so plain that there should be no misunderstanding as to what field each one should labor in. There is no law that justifies the Seventy presiding over stakes, districts, or branches. In paragraph 8:

The twelve and seventy administering as those prosecuting the work of preaching with the warning voice, baptizing, organizing and setting in order, then pushing their ministry into other fields, until the world is warned. It is the will of God that they do this; yes, verily, thus saith the Spirit, If they will now enter upon this work, leaving the burden of care in organized districts, or conferences to the standing ministry, under the presidency of the church, observing the law already given to ordain and set high priests or elders to preside in large branches and in districts, and also evangelical ministers, then will those officers set in the church be useful and he who gave the law be honored: the differences between the quorums be healed, confidence be restored and good will and peace come to the people as a cherishing fountain.

The Lord says that it is his will that the traveling ministry push out into other fields, leaving the care of districts and branches to the standing ministry, and to observe the law, to ordain high priests or elders to preside in branches and districts. Notwithstanding that it is God's will that the care of districts and branches be left to the high priests and elders, there are to-day many of the seventies in charge, and yet there are in those districts and branches the officers that the Lord said should be set in charge of the work. When the question is asked, Why burden the seventies with the responsibility of presiding, when the law does not place that upon them, the answer is, Because there is no one competent in the standing ministry to take charge. Then we must conclude that the Lord did not understand the condition, when he said, Leave the branches and districts to the standing ministry. He did not know that those whom he had called and set apart for that work were not qualified.

It brings to my mind the case of Ananias. The Lord appeared unto him in vision and told him to go to one Saul of Tarsus; "For behold, he prayeth, and hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight. Then Ananias answered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to thy saints at Jerusalem, and here he hath authority from the chief priests to bind all that call upon thy name." Ananias was of the opinion that the Lord had made a mistake in directing him to go to this man Saul. But the Lord spoke again, "Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto me." The life of Paul from that on proved that the Lord made no mistake.

In section 120, paragraph 2, the Lord said: "If a branch, or district be large, he who is chosen to preside should be an high priest, if there be one possessed of the spirit of wisdom to administer in the office of president."

"Well," says one, "there may be a high priest that has not the qualifications." Then the law says, "Or, if an elder be chosen who may by experience be found qualified to preside, as soon as practicable thereafter he should be ordained an high priest." In this we see the harmony of the Lord on the matter with the instructions to ordain high priests and elders to preside. But, like Ananias, we know what the Lord said, but we think the standing minister is not competent, so we take men who should travel continually and should be free to wait on their ministry in new fields. Yes, we change matters by making the traveling ministry occupy that which the Lord said should be in charge of the standing, and the standing move out into the new fields. Why not let every man work in his own office and calling? do as the law directs? There may be instances when it would be advisable to have a seventy in charge of branch or district; but when it is done for one, two, or three years, the evidence is strongly in favor of the thought that those placing him in charge have no regard or respect for the law and order of the church, or that those whose duty it is to preside are in the wrong pew, and it is essential that a change should be made for the time being by giving the traveling minister the authority that belongs to the standing. It is true that when high priests and elders are sent out as missionaries, they are in line with the traveling ministry. (See section 123, paragraph 15.)

If in the mission-field there is need for a branch or district president, and there are in that mission one of the Twelve, three of the seventy, two high priests, and four elders, it would be in harmony with the law to place the high priest or elder in charge. "But," says one, "suppose they are not competent?" Have you given them a trial? If not, better do so, and then if in the elder there be found the qualifications to so occupy, let him be ordained a high priest as provided for in the law. (See section 120, paragraph 2.) And if the high priest, after being tried, is not found to be qualified, has not the spirit of wisdom, and is a source of trouble, report him to his quorum, and they will investigate his standing and ability.

Now why not use the element that God puts with us in the offices in the church, and take the consequences if they do not happen to preside just up to the notch? Why not do it? It seems to me that would be right. Polished stones have sometimes been made of rough ones, and we have put men in places where they have been trusted, and they have developed wonderfully. And when we talk about experience, if he is an inexperienced man, throw him into the stream, and he will get experience. I got mine hard, hard. I have learned a good deal of it by being severely rubbed. And if it is of any value at all it is of value because it has been made applicable. I would not give a cent for a man with a head full of knowledge and no ability to use it, with a heart full of impulses and no wisdom to guide him. But give the men a chance. Try them. See what there is in them. Watch over them as well as it is possible to do. But let the Spirit of the Master go with the calling, and he will qualify a good many men yet for this work.

The above advice was timely, and in harmony with the law. When will we comply with it? There are one hundred and eight high priests in the quorum, forty of whom are under General Conference appointment, as are one hundred elders and eleven priests; so there are one hundred and fifty-one of the standing ministry out in the active ministry; and it does seem to me that out of the one hundred and fifty-one, to say nothing of the hundreds of local ministers, presiding material could be found to care for the branches and districts without taking men out of the traveling ministry. Notice what the Lord says in section 122, paragraph 7:

The work now lying before the missionary quorums of the church is of such increased magnitude and importance—the field so white unto the harvest, and the need for laborers so great—that the twelve and the seventy under their direction, together with such high priests and elders, as can travel and preach as missionaries, shall be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work, leaving the branches and districts where organization is effected to the care and administration of the standing ministry, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, so far as possible; thus freeing these spiritual authorities and leaving them at liberty to push the preaching of the word into the new fields now widening before them; in which work, if they will but now take counsel, saith the Spirit, they shall feel a peace and vigor of mind surpassing what they have enjoyed in the past.

Not only are the Twelve and Seventy admonished to move out into new fields, freeing themselves from the care of branches or districts, but with them such high priests and elders are out as missionaries. By this we understand that all missionaries under General Conference appointment should be free to preach the word. I know that local authorities and members, when one of the traveling missionaries comes into a branch or district territory, like to place him in charge of the work and let him do all the preaching in the branch, while the standing or local ministers look on. In this we do that which the Lord has said we should not do.

"Well," says one, "our local men have to work, and they are out in the world laboring for the support of the family, and are not in a frame of mind to take charge of the branches and districts and preach." If honorable labor performed disqualifies the local men from attending to this church-work, then there was a mistake made in ordaining them.
We think the mistake is made when the traveling ministry will leave their field and take up the line of work that is intended for the local ministers to perform. Better, in my judgment, would it be for the former to say to the latter, You do all you can and let me push out into new fields, and I shall keep in close touch with you so that any advice or help I can give may be had, for we are all workers together with God. and the Lord says, "There should be no conflict or jealousy of authority between the quorums of the church. All are necessary and equally honorable, each in its place." But if I undertake to do your work, and neglect my own, then it is not honorable, and we are not workers together.

In the statement of President Joseph Smith already quoted, he says, "But give the men a chance. Try them. See what there is in them. Watch over them as well as it is possible to do," just as we have said, Let the traveling minister keep in close touch with the standing, and if the latter is inexperienced, the former can be of much help to him. Also let the standing or local ministers show, by the spirit of meekness and brotherly love, proper and due respect for their brethren of the traveling ministry. Notice what the Lord says, section 120, paragraph 4: "In both branches and districts the presiding officers should be considered and respected in their offices." In what way? By encouraging them to do their own work, not by saying, I am your superior, and while I am here I shall take the reigns of government in my own hands. No, the Lord said, paragraph 7, that even in matters of personal importance and conduct arising in branches or districts, the authorities of those branches and districts should be authorized and permitted to settle them. But in paragraph 4 we learn:

The traveling presiding councils of the church, being made by the law, their calling and the voice of the church the directing, regulating and advising authorities of the church, and representing it abroad, should when present in either district or branch be regarded and considered as the leading, representative authorities of the church, and be respected as such, their counsel and advice sought and respected when given; and in cases of conflict, or extremity, their decision should be listened to and regarded, subject to the appeal and adjudication provided for in the law.

The traveling presiding councils referred to are the Twelve and Seventy. Section 123, paragraph 13, also section 120, paragraph 3:

The seventy when traveling by the voice of the church, or sent by the twelve to minister the word where the twelve can not go, are in the powers of their ministration apostles—those sent—and in meetings where no organization exists should preside, if no member of the twelve or presidency be present.

If an assembly of Saints come together to organize a branch or district, then the presiding officer should be one of the three named, of the Presidency, Twelve, or Seventy. After the organization has been effected, then all meetings held by the branch or district should be presided over by high priest, elder, priest, teacher, or deacon. If there are present at those meetings any of the traveling, presiding high council, they should be respected and invited to take charge of said gathering. And if the body needs counsel along certain lines, they should seek for it from those of the traveling, presiding high council. I do not understand that any member of said council can come into a branch or district conference and take charge of the services without consulting with the officers of the same. If, however, the district conference convenes, and they are in a wrangle, and the spirit of contention exists, and the cause is suffering, then by virtue of their calling they can step in and set in order and regulate.

To explain: Conference convened at Columbus, Nebraska, several years ago. Bro. Josiah Ellis, one of the Twelve, was present, sitting back in the audience. The morning session was very stormy. Things were very much out of order. In the afternoon session the same condition existed. Bro. Ellis walked forward to the stand, and said, in a kind and sorrowful tone of voice, that they were badly out of order, and no hopes of their getting out of the fog, and that under such conditions the cause would suffer, hence he felt it his duty under the law to set them in order, which was done to the comfort and joy of all those seeking for peace.

In conclusion let me again quote: "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence." WILLIAM LEWIS.

Shall the Children Help?

When the Lord required the tabernacle to be built in the midst of the desert, he did not require an impossibility, and we have no record to show that the people looked upon it as such. Much as they had before this time murmured against Moses, now that a certain work was appointed them to do their faith rose equal to the occasion and Moses thus writes:

"And all the women that were wise of heart did spin with their hands, and brought that which they had spun, both of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, and of fine linen. And all the women whose heart stirred them up in wisdom spun goat's hair. . . . The children of Israel brought a willing offering unto the Lord, every man and woman, whose heart made them willing to bring for all manner of work, which the Lord had commanded to be made . . . And all the wise men that brought all the work of the sanctuary, came every man from his work which he made; and they spake unto Moses, saying, The people bring much more than enough for the service of the work, which the Lord commanded to make. And Moses gave commandment, . . . Let neither man nor woman make any more work for the offering of the sanctuary."

What a record, dear mothers, of that which can be accomplished when the heart is willing! No lions are in the way then, and no faint-hearted ones have power to quench the enthusiasm.

which the love of God and the desire to do all that he requires, has awakened in the soul.

Let us for a few moments consider the conditions surrounding this people. When Moses led them out of Egypt they were not the favored, prosperous people unto whom Joseph had appointed the rich pasture lands of Goshen for their flocks and herds, but were a band of liberated slaves—a people long oppressed and despoiled by hard taskmasters. The result of the land of their bondage, carrying all their possessions—save their flocks and herds—"bound up with their kneeling-troughs upon their shoulders." Neither were they in a land of plenty, but wandering in a wilderness where in the absence of the fruits of the soil they were daily sustained by the bread God sent them from heaven.

How is it with us? Can the mind of any one imagine conditions in stronger contrast! To-day we dwell in Joseph's land—that land of which the inspired leader of Israel said: "Blessed of the Lord be his land, for the precious things of heaven, for the dew and for the deep which coucheth beneath, and for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon, and for the chief things of the ancient mountains and for the precious things of the lasting hills, and for the precious things of the earth and the fulness thereof, and for the good will of him that dwelleth in the bush. . . ."

Joseph's land, this land of rich abundance and plenty in which we mothers are dwelling! It is just the fragments of the feast which this land has produced that we are asking you to help the children gather up, that a home may be built as God has commanded in which his homeless little ones may be sheltered—may be loved, cared for, brought up, and nurtured in his admonitions.

Our appeal is to all, and it is made with the deeply earnest, though silent, prayer in our heart that all will respond—that each one with ready alacrity and a determination to do all in her power will respond to the request the Lord has made of us.

But if perchance some are not mindful—not willing to heed the grand opportunity which is now offered them of becoming "laborers together with Him," of helping in the Lord's work, should it discourage, should it cause those who are willing to hesitate? Far from it—so far that it is only a louder call, a more earnest plea that they go to with their might and do all in their power to do, that this particular work of the Lord may be accomplished.

We have no assurance that all helped in building the tabernacle in the wilderness in the time of Moses. The record is: "And they came both men and women as many as were willing hearted."

Here, as in many other places in the word of God, emphasis is laid upon the fact that it is the cheerful giver God loves. But there is another quality mentioned as belonging to those who helped to rear the tabernacle in the wilderness. Moses speaks of them as "wise hearted." In our next we want to see if we can discover why they were wise hearted. Of course it is self-evident that to obey the Lord is always wise, but the reason in this case—if not in all others, we think, must appeal most strongly to the heart of a mother. More anon.

The shadows of evening were gathering when we arrived at Independence from Lamoni. Sr. Ida expected us sooner, and had invited guests, Bro. and Sr. E. L. Kelley, also Bro. and Sr. J. Luff. All were seated around the table partaking of the evening meal, and altogether presented a very attractive appearance.

Our allotted time, of one week for Independence, was all too short for visits to all from whom we had invitations, however diligently we had applied ourselves. Was sorry indeed that we could not visit Holden, where my brother, H. J. Davison, had recently located with his family.

Should I mention all the good times we had, it would weary even those who "hoped I would write up the trip"; but the day at the luxurious home of Bro. and Sr. Bond, the drive to and from their residence—being in the suburbs of the town—was too enjoyable to be passed over. Sr. Bond came for us in his carriage, Bro. and Sr. Layton also accompanying.

Yet we must admit that the social part of our visit in the land of Zion, pleasant as it was, was excelled by the spiritual. The latter portion was the object of our visit to that land, and we did not come away empty. The sacrament-meeting on the first Sunday in May, was a feast of good things not soon to be forgotten. And thanks to Sr. Belle James, we carry with us the beautiful words given by the Spirit, as they fell from the lips of the speaker, Bro. Kemp, and feel that they are a treasure that we would not wish to lose.

Another bright picture of the near past, around which our thoughts often linger, is the little prayer-meeting at Sr. Crick's. Only a few gathered in the sick woman's house, but the Spirit was present in its most desirable form, radiating the hearts of the Saints, and even the room with its light and pleasant influence in which one feels constrained to sing. "A calm and gentle quiet reigns to-night." All partook of its quiet joy, and were sorry when the time came for closing the gates that seemed to have been ajar for our benefit during the evening. How perceptibly one feels the change when, upon such occasions, he who has the meeting in charge arises to dismiss! How distinctly, I say, one feels the reduction of spirit light, as if it were a thing tangible that, when the announcement is made to close, folds its white wings and withdraws, taking with it the additional radiance that it brought, and we mortals awake, as it were, to a sense that we are our same old selves yet.

The last evening in Independence terminated very pleasantly also. It was Wednesday evening, which, as all know, is that for branch prayer-meeting. And since there are so many who wish to occupy during the brief hour it is custom for the young people to hold their meeting in the upper auditorium, while the adults have theirs in the basement. Therefore there was no opportunity after meeting for bidding the young people good-bye. I regretted this, for there were some who seemed like our own folks.

We were all quite tired that evening, with the week of continuous visiting, and hurrying between times to get our necessary work done, together with trunk-packing and lunch-basket preparations, and withal the much handshaking when good-bye came. And right here I will say, I wonder why a person of an ardent nature and strong muscles, I might say a vice-like grip, should expend his whole strength, for the moment, on a woman's hand, till the knuckle-joints grind together, and the woman winces and inwardly wretches with pain? Why not be temperate in that also, and not turn a pleasant pressure into an agony of pain, and why do some warm-hearted sisters adopt the practice of inflicting three or four vigorous strokes across the back with the whole size of their hand (and that, too, usually happens to be right over the lungs) to express their good will? Would it not be much more agreeable to slip the arm lightly about the waist, or rest it upon the shoulder? Well, having been made the recipient of a liberal portion of both of these expressions, I returned to Sr. Layton's feeling tired enough to sleep, and was about to go directly to our room, when my sister said,

"You had better take off your bonnet and visit awhile before going to bed, since this is the last evening you will have with us, for a good while, anyway."

I was very willing to prolong the time with her, and said I would take my wraps off up-stairs and come down again. And as I came down again to the foot of the stairs—which is near the front door—she opened the door and admitted the clear

riving tones of “Nearer my God to thee,” being sung by a group of young people on the lawn in front of the house. Yes, it was the young Saints who had just come from their prayer-meeting. How beautiful the singing sounded, and how kind of them to thus favor us with a few select songs on the eve of our leaving the land of Zion! I felt to welcome them with both extended hands, and all such stupid feelings as being tired and sleepy had fled away. When they had assembled in the drawing-room another song was rendered; then, by their request, there was a native song or two, after which Joseph, by request of the company, entertained them for a half hour or more relating instances of every-day life of the natives, of how they do their cooking, and of what they cook; how they light the fires without matches or flint, their mode of carrying small change—when the style of their clothing did not admit of pockets (how? did you say? Sometimes in their ears), of how they made their table-cloths, and ate without dishes, knives, or forks, etc., after which there was another song, and prayer offered, and cordial good-byes said, and the cheery company withdrew, but congregated near a side window that was slightly raised, and sang “God be with you till we meet again.”

Thus ended the pleasant season of our visit among the Saints in the land of Zion. The next day, being that of our departure, we went, and the hour of chat, while waiting for the California train-time, which came of course, and by noon we were speeding homeward, feasting our eyes on the beautiful country, robed in its spring attire.

Upon arriving in California, more letters from the Islands greeted us, from which Joseph learned that perplexing business matters were pressing upon them, and, being like sheep without a shepherd, they knew not what to do. Therefore we both agreed that there should not be any unnecessary delay, or even deliberate preparations; so we concluded to make ourselves ready to sail on the next outward-bound mail-steamer for Tahiti, which would be on the first day of July. Our good-bye visits with the children were necessarily short, but oh, so good. They each were sorry we were going away, yet not very much surprised; but the “thus saith the Lord” reconciled them to the thought more than aught else could have done.

Editors Herald: I have not written anything for the Herald this year, so will jot you a few items of my work. I came to Chandler a few days ago, and am holding meetings in Bro. J. W. Reser’s house and yard. Bro. and Sr. Reser are an old couple, and the only Saints we have here that we know of. They have lived here nearly seven years. They have a nice little home. Bro. Reser gets a pension, which about keeps them. Bro. H. E. Moiler and I have been together since the eighteenth day of May until a few days ago. We separated at Ripley, going to Woods County, I south to this place. I will miss him and the little Billhorn organ. We put in good time while together. The last five weeks we never missed a night for preaching, and on Sunday preached two or three times. At Terlton we had a fine interest and baptized fourteen more there. I believe that makes us thirty-five Saints there now. They have a good Sunday-school, and are going to organize a Religio soon. That is the place I opened up two years ago. After preaching five sermons, was publicly challenged for a debate by Evangelist Al. Foster, a Campbellite of the R. B. Neal stripe. At the close of debate I baptized nine, and we
"Oh, no, I did not feel as though I could go to meeting with my shabby dress, and sit among all those finely dressed Saints." Well, it made me feel sad indeed, because I knew she and her husband were hard-working people, and she had so few chances to enjoy meetings.

I often think, Will the time ever come when there will not be that feeling of distinction among the Saints? Will the time ever come when there are no poor among them? Will the time ever come that the angels that hover over our meetings will not have to hold back the blessings that are for us, because they can not disobey God and pour them out because the Saints have not obeyed him and put away the things that cause division?

How many times I have heard different ones say, "I do not get the blessings promised." Why, oh why, is it? God is not mocked, neither is he a respecter of persons, neither is he untruthful. He says he can not forget his covenant; but, oh, how oft do we forget ours. But we can not be allowed to keep on forgetting without paying the penalty, for not only hindering ourselves, but others, and God's own work. Saints, my testimony is that if we make the sacrifice our reward is sure. May God in his mercy and goodness help every one of his people to obey, and keep his commandments.

Your sister in Christ,

Addie David.

EAST HELENA, Montana, July 21, 1906.

Dear Herald: I beg leave to use some of your space to remind the Saints that we are not dead or sleeping in this part of the vineyard. We may get discouraged, but the work moves on just the same. Leaving home May 11, I took train from Lamoni to the West. It was thought best by our missionary in charge to send me into Wyoming. I arrived in Alva, Wyoming, May 16, having stopped at Clyde, Missouri, where I preached on Sunday to the Saints living near that town. I found the conditions such in Wyoming that it almost seemed a waste of time to remain there, but felt that we must make an effort, so with Bro. A. A. Baker we commenced operation. On Sundays we made appointments and filled as many as four on that day, one of us going in one direction, and the other taking a different route.

At one place we held a series of meetings, and succeeded in getting one to see the truth—a Miss Sarah Haskins—who we hope to see made a good worker for the Master. There were no Saints living near this place, so was compelled to ride twenty miles each day to fill our appointments.

After spending nearly two months in this section of the country, it was thought best by our missionary in charge to place me in this field. On July 5 I started on my way, traveling eighty miles by stage and team, reaching Moorcroft, Wyoming, where I took train for Bozeman, Montana. The next day, arrived in that city. Found Bro. Reese looking for me, as I had previously written him in regard to my coming. Next day (Sunday) I preached to the little band of Saints at that place at the hours of two and eight. I found some of the Saints in good spirits, while others seemed to be sleeping. While in Bozeman I made my home with Bro. Thomas Reese, which is missionaries' headquarters while in that city.

On the following Sunday, Bro. Reese and the writer drove to the Bridger School-house, where we spoke with good liberty to a fair crowd at twelve o'clock. On Monday, July 16, I took train for this place. Found Sr. Leibold awaiting me at the station. At night I spoke to a fair crowd at the home of Bro. Whittle. On the next day we staked our tent and began services in it. At the present time we are having fine crowds with fair interest. Some ready for baptism. We find some opposition. One lady who desires baptism is a member of the Brighamite church. Her husband does not belong to any church, but he objects to her being baptized. We often wonder, Can any person be in his right mind to raise this objection, and not allow his wife to do as she wishes under such condition as this?

I will remain here as long as interest continues. I would like to say to the Saints of Montana, and especially those who reside where our work has never been presented, that I would like to hear from you. The world needs to be warned, and wherever we can make a new opening we should do so. If you will write me, I will try to reach you as soon as possible, after hearing from you. If we work together, there can be good accomplished, so let us do all we can to advance the work that we all love. My mission address will be 546 West Babcock Street, Bozeman, Montana.

Ever praying for the success of the Master's cause, I am,

Yours hopefully in the conflict,

ROLFE, IOWA, July 24, 1906.

Editors Herald: I came from Mallard, Iowa, to this place yesterday, where I have been busy since the 6th inst. While at Mallard I had the pleasure of baptizing and confirming Benjamin T. Fish, Edith J. Fish, and Ethel M. Wilcox, three excellent young people, with bright prospects before them. The Spirit gave evidence to the writer that their obedience was accepted and approved. May the Lord by his Spirit make them a power for good among his people.

The Saints at Mallard are fairly well, and seem to be courageous and happy. At this writing I am at the home of Bro. and Sr. Alexander Barker, the good people who have so often in the past made the missionaries in this district welcome while they did missionary work in Rolfe and vicinity. I am sure our ministers will ever remember their pleasant home and hearty welcome. As we write the mind goes back to Bro. and Sr. Milton Reed, who also made a pleasant home for the ministers of Christ when they lived in this town and vicinity. They too are kindly remembered. May the Lord prosper and bless them all.

Mr. and Sr. Haner, though quite well along in years, walked down to Bro. Barker's, a distance of perhaps a mile and a quarter, to attend a cottage-meeting conducted by the writer for the encouragement of the few Saints in this town. Only four in number, I believe, living in this proud, wealthy, and prejudiced town, and they need the faith and prayers of the Saints, and the special favor of God's Holy Spirit.

It does not seem so very hard when the ranks are full for a soldier to stand erect among his comrades; but it is a very different thing to stand on the picket-guard alone, with none but the enemy near. The soldier of Christ who can and will stand erect and firm for the truth when surrounded by none but those who are unbelievers, will surely enjoy the favor and help of God.

We thank God that individual righteousness is recognized and praised by Christ. The successful development of the Christ character will secure to its possessor the favor of God, and eternal life. Such persons may truthfully feel that they are not alone, for God will comfort, protect, direct, and help according to their day and work.

There is more peace, joy, and happiness found in one hour's sweet communion with Christ, through the influence and power of the Holy Spirit, than could be found in a lifetime spent without its sanctifying and cheering influence. No wonder that so many in the early days of Christianity fastened the same hour of the night to obey the truth which was sealed upon their hearts by the inspiring touch of the Spirit. Why should not the same prompt obedience be rendered to-day? If it were, there would be a greater flow of the Spirit given. I often think about and pray for those noble missionaries whose duty seems to call them to travel and labor among strangers, and enemies of the cross. May they, too, realize what Jesus did when he said: "I am not alone for the Father standeth by." One thing is sure, they have the faith, prayers, and confidence of the people of God. May God comfort, help, prosper, and bless every worthy soldier of Christ.

Yours in Christ,
CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

Editors Herald: The good ship Arabic carried us, safe and comfortable, over the Atlantic on schedule time, arriving at Liverpool, Friday, at one o'clock in the afternoon, July 13. After about one and a half hours' delay in leaving the ship and getting our baggage past the officers appointed to inspect personal effects, etc., we boarded the train waiting alongside the docks, and were soon steaming away toward London, covering the distance of one hundred and ninety-three miles in less than four hours. No stop after leaving Liverpool, first station from ship. Some of the distance was run at the rate of seventy miles an hour. The view of the country was delightful, as we sped through it; and our hearts bounded with delight as we once more feasted upon the beauties of fair old England, the home of our birth.

Loved ones were waiting at Euston Depot, London, the terminal of the London Northwestern Railway. My wife's sister and her husband and son had been waiting two hours for us, and a royal greeting was accorded us, and cabby took our handbaggage before we had time to remonstrate, and in an hour we were safe in their lovely home at the above-named beautiful suburb of the great metropolis. Those who have been away from friends and loved ones in a foreign land for twenty-three years can appreciate what a meeting of this character means.

Our trip across the Atlantic was just lovely, the sea calm most of the way. Wife and I were able to report at every meal, and able to do justice to the fine fare provided. There were twenty young Mormon elders aboard, besides some women and several other young men who were going for other purposes. They were the attraction of the passage—a nice, clean, smart-looking lot of young men, and they made themselves very agreeable to the ship's company, especially one young man whose name is Willie. He was just the life of the ship, leading in singing, dancing, and having a good time, generally. What they will accomplish in their work, time will tell; but as missionaries they are certainly a crude company as far as experience goes. I was known by several of the passengers who wanted to class me with the Utah faction; but I made a special point of showing the distinction between us, sometimes to the chagrin of ye elders.

I attended the meeting of the Saints here, yesterday. It is quite a distance from Nunhead, and took me a long time to reach the place. I was in Bow Common Lane some time before the appointed hour for the meeting. I had to seek for the place of worship, but soon came to an unpretentious little brick building with the following inscription upon a stone in the front wall of the building: "Dedicated to the glory of God December 29, 1886." [7], by Elder J. Caffall." As I stood and read the inscription, and thought of his recent decease, I could not force back the tears which would flow as the words came almost in an audible way to me, "He being dead yet speaketh." The good old warrior has passed away, and his works will follow him.

Just a few minutes before eleven o'clock Elder J. W. Worth opened the door, and was dusting the seats as I walked in. After a few minutes Elders Clift and Bradshaw came in with a few others, until our members were augmented to an audience of nine. This constituted the little flock of Saints met to celebrate the death and suffering of our Master; for the emblems were upon the table. Elder Clift was asked to preside, assisted by Elder Bradshaw. A spirit of peace prevailed, welcome to the child of God. I did not attend the evening service, as I could not make the two trips very well.

I was informed that special services were to be held as a memorial-service for Bro. Hendrick or Kindrick who had passed away.

I have not made out any program for my work yet, but have plenty to keep me busy among my relatives, unto whom my mission is specially intended. I will try to raise our glorious standard high, and be loyal to our Captain. I hope the Saints will not expect me to write personal letters, as it is almost impossible to keep up a correspondence with many, as my time will be taken up visiting and doing all I can to reach the hearts of my many friends and relatives with the gospel message.

Again I appeal to the Saints of the Massachusetts District to respond to the needs of the work financially, and send in at once your offering for the sanitarium and children's home. Do not wait to see what your brother or sister is going to contribute; but do enough to make it a sacrifice, a pleasing offering unto the Lord, so that our Presiding Bishop may be able to go ahead with the work required at our hands. Kindly remember me in my efforts here.

Address me at 19 Church Yard, Hitchin Herts, as that will be as central as I can now make it.

In bonds, sincerely yours,
RICHARD BULLARD.

Editors Herald: In the Herald of July 4, the Editor writes under the heading, "Are there lions in the way?"

The writer takes exception to some things; and, you know, we are to "prove all things and hold fast that which is good." The parable of the talents, I think, is misleading. It is not supposed that a man that would whip the money-changers out of the temple would uphold our usurious system. Christ said, "For the kingdom of heaven is as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods." Now what kind of goods does the kingdom of heaven consist of? Surely not of our present method of doing business—the profit system. The talents must mean man's ability to make converts—converts to Zionism. True, we have to use this present system until the people are converted to a better way.

But we should hold up the ideal before the people and not this false system, though there be lions in the way. Some have more ability—or talents—than others, in showing up this false system of ours (I mean the present system), and to that extent they make more Zionist converts. If our present system is good enough, there would never have been provision made for a better one.

Zionism will better the condition of the race. Zion is a place and a condition; not a condition first and a place last. John in his first epistle says, "For this purpose [because our present system makes sinners] the Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil." Our present system is his (the Devil's) works. To the extent that we remove this system and establish Zion, to that extent sin will cease. Remove causes and effects will cease. Zionism does not mean a "dividing up" plan; right the opposite. Our present profit system stands for that. When Zion is established the idler will have no place. Why? Because those that will not work shall not eat; unless they are inform. Then, labor will be a standard of values; now the dollar is the standard.

When Zion is established, there will be no such thing as money, as we know it to-day; there will be some kind of a labor check that will buy anything that society has produced, with labor. Now, we can see how the idler will fare. Under a system like this Zionism, there will be no whisky sold; for there could be no profit in it. Whisky will be sold as long as there is a nine-cent profit in a ten-cent drink of whisky. The profit system must go. Intemperance does not make poverty; but poverty makes intemperance. Let us cease fighting effects, and train our guns on causes! Yours for the building up of Zion, in every sense of the word,

D. H. BAGGERLY.

Our reunion here, nearly three hundred miles from Halbrite and Weyburn, was from the 12th to the 15th. In connection with the reunion, the members in the locality where the same was held—about twenty-five in number—were organized into a branch with Elder John Beckman as president, James Diggle as teacher. The writer was encouraged yesterday to see the faithful maintenance of interest where the debate was held last winter, under the sound preaching of the former brother. One of the brethren evinced his sincerity the other day by handing in a check for six hundred and fifty dollars tithing. We have been to Grand Haven, where I have an aunt; from there the former two went to Kansas City, and I to Winnipeg, and later here. Between Winnipeg and here the writer stopped at Treherne, Carievale, Halbrite, Cypress River, preaching a few sermons at each place by the way, renewing old acquaintances and making new ones. At Halbrite I met with Elders J. T. Mortimer, Dorsett, Tomlinson, and a number of faithful local officers in a reunion which lasted about four days, and we had one of our good old prairie times. Preaching was by Elders Mortimer, Dorsett, Tomlinson, Knisley, Fisher, Williams, Wahlstrom. Some of our Dakota friends were up, and they said they had a good time. Three baptisms were performed during the reunion, and several administrations.

some fourteen miles out of Saskatoon. Of course he wants to recover what he lost there last winter. I have refused him on the ground that he is licked there now, that we have all to lose and he all to gain in that neighborhood; and eminently because in the town of Saskatoon we can get an audience many times the size. I do not know what response he will make. If he says Saskatoon, and will commit himself to honorable rules and propositions, I am with him, for the advantage it would lend to our work. No use debating where we have things in our own hands, and where to refuse to debate will entail no consequences detrimental to our cause. It is evident that the advertisement of diamond truth, the good of the work, should always be had in consideration paramount to everything else. My idea is that he who enters the ground that he is licked there now, that we have all to lose must "eat without motives purified and attuned to this sublime end will be the victor without variation—other things being equal. Some things I know of might deter me from an oral investigation of the nature agreed upon, were it not that we are very eager for a foothold in Saskatoon; and that through the instrumentality of this reverend Presbyterian we conceive the possibility of gaining such a foothold. It will afford us an opportunity to flood the town with our literature and to present to unwilling minds—those who might refuse audience under any other conditions—the way by which alone they can be saved.

Soon after my departure from Winnipeg, the brethren there wrote me requesting earnestly my return to confront five Utah elders who had made their appearance. Hence I set out for Midway, at Gilbert Plains, where we have a membership, we have nine or more members there. Elder Dorsett goes to Melfort from here. May God bless him. My address is always Saskatoon.

INDEPENDENCE ITEMS.

As it is one of the weaknesses of human nature to want to hear all the news of the day, doubtless the Saints will in years to come be interested enough in events which are now transpiring to pore over the back numbers of the church papers in order to get a glimpse of the past. In like manner as curious critics indulge the keen relish of reading the diary of that "garrulous delightful gossip," Sir Pepys of the seventeenth century, in order to find out what was going on among the royalty of the court of King Charles, so our posterity will perhaps look backward to pry into the details of history in search of something interesting concerning their sires and grandsires of the faith at the center place.

The lovely days of summer, with their pleasant surroundings, are upon us, and all nature seems to woo the spirit to cheerfulness and inspiring hope; and although the adversary is ever seeking to disquiet the flock, the gentle voice of the prophetic gift is still heard in our congregations, and feelings of gratitude arise in the heart for the Father's tender watchcare.

What greater blessing has he of late vouchsafed us than to direct his servant, our beloved President of the church, and his gifted son and counselor, to take up their abode here, where many are gathering that they may get into closer touch with the higher councils of the church.

The signs of the times indicate the near coming of the Lord, and the presence of these brethren with the Presiding Bishop, and some of those of the leading quorums, together with the many faithful ones of the ministry, impart confidence and zest to the work, and prestige to the cause in Independence.

To be sure, of some of the instructive sermons of late have been savored with reproof; and also it has seemed good in the wisdom of Providence to remove some of the beloved brethren who have toiled with us many years to other parts where their services may be more urgently needed, yet we are glad that others among us stand ready to enter into their labor.

A happy coincidence it is that at the time of the coming of Brn. Joseph and Frederick, Apostle Luff has written for the profit and admonition of all of us an epistle,—words that appeal to our souls with a lively conviction of our many imperfections; yet, because of the loving spirit they breathe, fill us with a sense of joyful repentance and loftier aspirations.

The pleasures which are rife at this season of the year—the opening of the parks of Kansas City with their theaters, pavilions, and varied attractions, the world of social and fashionable enjoyments—all seem to still maintain a niche in unstable lives, even to the extent of times of our failing to show due respect to the counsel and prayers of the presiding officers, and reverence for our sacred duties as believers in the church covenants and commandments, and especially for the ordinances of the house of God.

The historian of the ancient days of Christian martyrdom said that "the Christians, unconquerable by fire and sword, have grown enervated amid the delights of peace." Can it be with us, that, elated by the promised favor of the world, and weakened by its follies, we have come to know too little of "the simple life," or of preferring one another in love; for instance, is it reasonable that when the hour arrives for entering the room set apart for worship, the Saints instead of finding it "swept and garnished" should be forced to notice that the floor is dusty and littered, the seats not clear of books and papers, and should be obliged to meet, as they go into the sacred precinct to offer a humble prayer before the service, bustling Sunday-school librarians, and, in the aisles busy-talking church and auxiliary workers, with laughing "cut-ups" in the vestibu­le,—all this because of a lack of concert of action? "Under the circumstances" some say "division of the school is necessary; then the Saints should retain the galleries, and the bodies of the school occupy the hall and lower auditorium with its three rooms." Of course all this is but one of the little things that tend to retard the harmonious carrying on of the work here.

That the gleams of a more perfect day for the church are dawning on our vision, was never more apparent than now, when we begin to see how necessary it is that the house of God should be set in order, and purged from everything that impairs or defiles, as we read in the epistle, "Let us purge our houses of worship of all unseemly things, allowing nothing to be admitted for gain or pleasure that partakes of anything we could not ask our Lord to participate in were he here in person." He says also, "Let us keep ourselves from vanity, from frivolity, from gaudy or costly apparel"; and would that we might have more of these spirits like John Wycklif to cry out against the many follies prevailing both in the church and the world. In his time the church mendicants sold relics and pieces of the cross to insure the soul's salvation; but venders even in the church to-day sell almost as useless articles, such as face-creams, washes, and beauty-powders to save the complexion from wrinkles, tan, pimples, and other blemishes.

But Wycklif, it seems, was not alone in protesting against "the corruptions which good men lamented," for a famous author quaintly inveighed against the sisters by writing, "I loathe almost to think on their bimbents, and apothecary drugs, the sleeking of their faces and all their slibber sauces which bring queasiness to the stomach and disquiet to the mind. Take from them their periwigs, their paintings, their jewels, their rolls, their bolsterings, and thou shalt soon perceive a woman is the least of herself."

Sr. Frick, on last Sunday afternoon, spoke very earnestly concerning the duties and responsibilities of parents in regard to the adorning of the body. Her whole soul went out in behalf of the young, that they may be brought up in the fear and adoration of the Lord. "Adorning the children," she said, "is more indulged in than it ought to be."

The speaker of the evening, Elder F. C. Smith, also touched upon the prevailing vice of our time, and about two hundred were present and listened attentively to a stirring discourse concerning the coming of Christ. After dwelling lengthily upon the great calamities that had befallen the wicked, and predicting destruction upon many of our large cities, the speaker expressed gratitude that he was again permitted to meet with the Saints.

Bro. W. H. Garrett, with earnestness and liberty of the Spirit, preached on the evening of the 1st, from the text Matthew 6:11, "Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." And may these words ever express the sincere desire of every heart, is our prayer.

During the last month, one death has occurred, that of our aged brother, George W. Pilgrim, who was the second president of this branch succeeding Bro. Henry Etzehouser, priest, who has passed over.

On the 15th of June, young John Arieburn was baptized by Elder E. C. Briggs in the hall font, and confirmed by Elders Briggs and Luff.

Pore little ones have been blessed, and Sr. Evelina Julian was received on the 18th inst. into our membership from San Francisco Branch, also Bro. and Sr. W. J. Mather were granted letters of removal to Lamonii.

May the good work go on.

To the Saints and Friends of the Southern Missouri District; Greeting: Having been appointed as the Bishop’s agent for the above mentioned territory, I take this means of letting all know of the financial need of the district. There are some poor to be provided for, and the missionaries’ families. Will you assist? Must the faith and love by thy works. I want the name of every member in the district on the Bishop’s book this year. Have you not a hog, cow, horse, calf, or chickens you can dispose of and make a start toward observing the law of the time to commence. Who will be the first.

Your remittance, I hitherto. As it I each month in your ber to collect same or be responsible for transmitting it on to Williams, I make it a standing branch to take up a collection of freel will offering on the first Sunday in each month in your social meeting and appoint one of your number to collect same or be responsible for transmitting it on to Williams. If you will do this work, if you will only give it a trial, and I appeal to the presidents of branches to at once bring the matter forward in your respective localities. He is a slothful and unwise servant who waits to be commanded in all things; and whenever it is our business to do our own, and not of another. They who do the commandments of God are blessed here and hereafter. Let me speak unto one and to all; to speak unto one and to all, it is written. Who do the commandments of God are blessed here and hereafter. Let me humbly exhort you for your own good, and for the sake of your children and posterity, to write much on this subject, but leave you all now to consider the matter for yourselves.

LUTZ.—Sr. Emma E. Lutz, at Cleveland, Ohio, July 7, 1906; born December 11, 1868, at Lontario, Ontario, Canada. She joined the church at the early age of nine, but being in an isolated condition joined the Disciple Church. On coming to Cleveland she was rebaptized by Bro. M. H. Bond, December 29, 1894, and was a member of the Cleveland Branch since its organization. She is survived by her mother, who died April 1, of this present year. Funeral-service conducted by Reverend J. C. Simpson, “and was on a par with any of the well-known exclusively live-stock shows in this or foreign countries, and far in the lead of other State fairs, the entries being made at this date in these departments, which have to be filed not later than the last of August, are far in excess of all previous experience. This clearly indicates that the breeders are alive to the fact that to exhibit their products at this great show where over a hundred thousand people see them, is to bring their herds into prominence more quickly than in any other way. Verily it is the ‘greatest annual live-stock show in the world’ and breeders far and near journey here every year, showing their best, or to select from those of their co-herdsmen.”

Great Live Stock Show.

The outlook for a great Iowa State Fair was never better than this year. “While last year the exhibit in the horse and cattle departments was far superior to any previous year,” said Secretary J. C. Simpson, “and was on a par with any of the well-known exclusively live-stock shows in this or foreign countries, and far in the lead of other State fairs, the entries being made at this date in these departments, which have to be filed not later than the last of August, are far in excess of all previous experience. The altitude here is 2,750 feet. Chills and malaria are unknown.

This country is coming to the front very fast.

Wheat raisers have been very successful here the last few years. Quite often one crop will pay for a quarter section of land.

Alfalfa, oats, barley, broom corn, milo (kaffir corn), potatoes, melons, etc., do well here.

There will be close to 80,000 acres of wheat sowed adjacent to Plains this fall.

Other people have confidence in this country, why not you?

Land is comparatively cheap, $900 to $1,600 a quarter section.

Some government land here yet to be had. If desired, the claim I filed on last March would bring $1,200 or more.

Do not think you are coming to a country that is unsettled or without any

If you do not want to deal with the land men, who will drive you over the

SCIENTISTS ON MARRIAGE.

If men of modern every-day thought and practice were asked what they thought of some of the deductions of some of the so-called scientific men of the time, the answer might be with entire propriety the application of Paul's saying about science falsely so called.

Of late certain philosophers and scientists have been laboring with the "idea of marriage," i.e., considering humanity as a whole, trying to determine whether society might not be bettered if the legal restrictions regarding marriages found on the statute-books were removed, and men and women be left in what some of these so-called advanced thinkers denominate the natural, or normal conditions, to conduct themselves without law.

A contemporary secular paper at the close of a short article under the caption of "The professors on marriage," has this:

Now, whether the normal man of Professor Zueblin is in the same position as the first-class hero of Doctor Reich we can not say; but it is evident that these great thinkers have come independently to the conclusion that marriage is not always a satisfactory state. They are agreed, nevertheless, that it is necessary. But to Professor Zueblin we must ascribe the glory of a greater discovery. "Sex," he says, "is necessary." How thankful we should be that we have a University of Chicago for the publication of all these important truths!

The vein of slightly-veiled irony in this bit of secular discussion is found in the "How thankful we should be," etc.

The fact that sex is, perhaps dawned upon this professor's mind after a period of profound cogitation and mental wrestling seeking for the "why" in which the eliminated deduction that sex "is necessary," was reached.

We presume that if this professor should tackle the problem presented by every other fact in existent creations, the nominal or commonplace, the same deduction would result! It is a wonderful thing to find that human conception can grapple with the great problems offered in the field of existent things and find that each individual object in existence "is necessary." It saves the average man from so much fret and worry to realize that his learned neighbor in the world of thought has discovered that he, others like him, and the things he is acquainted and associates with in the material world "is necessary." It is so easy. Science says, Yes, this exists, and from our thoughtful research we find that it is necessary. The average man outside of the scientific pale may say, Of course, if a thing exists it is necessary; if it was not necessary it would not exist. Science says that is faith, blind faith, unintelligent faith. It may be. Science takes up the question of how man knows anything and after putting tomes of writing on record, deduces as the result: "we know because we become conscious of." The every-day average man taps this scientifical deduction and says: "Yes, we know, because we know." Again, science says, that is blind faith, unintelligent faith. Well, let it go at that. But if a whole lot of what is going on in the scientific world is not of a piece with Doctor Forester's sharp saying, "There is no fool so unbearable as the learned fool," we miss the guess. This is to say, that the man who is so saturated with the importance of his own knowledge that he regards the acquirements of others as crude ignorance, the absence of intelligent education, is apt to be self-important, consequential, and overbearing, and hence unbearable.

We do not need to be told that sex is necessary; it is a fact. So, whatever is contingent to that fact is pertinent to the subject and must be considered. For this reason, that is, that sex was the design of an intelligent creative power, marriage was designed and provided by the same intelligent force as an existent fact to determine the purpose of creation and to emphasize the necessity for sex; so, when this learned professor discovered that sex was a necessity he should have discovered that marriage also was a necessity.

The social compact into which humanity was evolved, as a result of creation, in due time made the family relation a fact also, of which each and every other integral portion must take notice and govern itself and be governed accordingly by rules, metes, and bounds, prescribed by an intelligent recognition of and acquiescence in the environments of the several component parts forming society, which by lapse of time became usage and law for the good of all, and so came the necessity of marriage by law, the relation and consequence of marriage to be proper subjects upon which should be laid of necessity restrictions and provisions the observance of which is essential to the well-being of society as a whole. Marriage within statutory enactments is as much a necessity now as are the facts of sex and marriage duly acknowledged as necessities in either the normal condition of man of which the professors have written, or in the abnormal or sociological condition now existing as a fact.

It is sometimes quite amusing to a man not in the immediate circle of scientists, so called, to hear the pundits talk of the normal condition of man. To the average man this term "normal condition" means nothing more than the condition into which man was placed by the act of creation, whatever that condition may have been. The conditions of sex and its resultant marriage were parts of the scheme of creation, hence were normal conditions and in this respect man is still living under the requirements of this condition. The environments resulting from an increased aggregation of men and women can not change the normality of creation; the facts remain, so do the necessities.

The advancement and progress of the race under the rules of civilization, the consequent realization of intelligent design in the creation, make it a necessity that marriage in these modern times be regulated by law. Revelation has so stated to us, and there is every reason possible for the Deity to offer humanity why the marriage relation should be regarded as a sacredly divine institution to be wisely and solemnly entered into, and its obligations be sacredly and righteously observed; the covenant therein made, "Keeping yourselves for each other and from all others," to be answered for in the judgment as a bond entered into in the presence of the Lord himself.

Let the learned professors laugh and jeer, the scientists ponder and look wise, let who will seek to decry the care we may have for the word of God, the trust we have in him, the sacredness of the marital relation to us, but let us as a people keep our covenants as we know them to have been made by us; not permitting the efforts of the higher criticism, the blashphemings of vain philosophy, or the blindly foolish deductions of "science, falsely so called" to cause us to venture into the devious ways of the modern disregard of the sacred character of the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ as the same has come to us by revelation, in the angel's message.

DOWIE'S FOLLOWERS IN WANT.

ZION CITY, Illinois, July 30.—John C. Hately, receiver for the Zion City industries, to-day issued an appeal to the moneyed believers in the Dowie doctrines to contribute for the relief of the destitute of the community. During the last year contributions have dropped off greatly. A large percentage of the population is unfed and insufficiently clothed and the land into which they put their savings has little value under existing conditions. Prompt relief is needed.

The court before which the case between John Alexander Dowie and Voliva for the control of Zion City, ecclesiastical and temporal, put the affairs into the hands of a receiver, deciding that the moneys and other values contributed to the Zion City movement was in the value of a trust and did not belong to either Dowie or Voliva, but to the body of believers; and that the conveyances made by Voliva of certain real estate to different persons were void. The court further ordered that at a time stated an election should be held by the Zionites for the purpose of choosing a leader who should be in effect the trustee to hold the properties and work out the financial difficulties into which the movement has been forced by mismanagement.

This order of the court is bitterly resented by some of the devoted followers of Dowie, for the reason that it appears to them that the Lord should appoint the leader and not the people to choose him. It is late to make this objection, as the tenure of Doctor Dowie's office was the creation of the choice of the people upon declaration urged by himself.

DOUMA DISSOLVED.

There seems to be a lull in the whirlwind of Russian politics at present, (July 30). The Czar has dissolved the Douma, and the old regime of autocracy is being resumed as rapidly as is possible. It would seem that the final settlement is a long way off, and that there can not be a peaceful conclusion; but that in either event the entire overthrow of the reigning dynasty by the blotting out of the Tsar Nicholas and his political advisers of the aristocratic nobles, and the sweeping away of all restrictive laws through the success of a revolution, and the forming of a government by the people, either good, indifferent, or bad; or the overcoming of the proletariat working classes, the peasantry, and the numerous host of all classes among the professions, by the force of the army, the result will be bloodshed, murder, and all the evils that follow in the train of the "abomination that maketh desolate."

The Herald is of the opinion that no permanent peace will be reached for Russia, until there is either a constitutional monarchy like the English states, or a republic like France or the United States is established. We believe that the seeds of political freedom are being sown broadcast over the world and the kingdoms are fast ripening to their fall and the incoming of Him whose reign is to be righteous, from the rivers to the ends of the earth. Are we ready?

GRACELAND NOTES.

Only seven weeks until the beginning of the fall term. Are you coming? Write F. B. Blair, secretary, Lamoni, Iowa, for a catalogue and full particulars.

Arrangements have been made to give several courses by correspondence. Descriptive circulars are now ready for mailing, and will be sent by the secretary upon application. If you desire a better education and can not come to Lamoni, this affords you an opportunity.

We take pleasure in announcing that the college faculty for the coming year is the strongest in the history of the school, and a successful year is assured.

A large number of the graduates of Graceland's shorthand department are now filling positions of trust in many of the cities. The return of Miss Reimers to this department this fall insures thorough work.

Work on a dormitory for girls is commenced on the college grounds. Rooms will be arranged for the boys in the college building. All will be fed at the same table. This fall a part of the college land will be broken up, and next spring the industrial department will get a start. Reservation of rooms should be made early by writing the secretary.

Graceland as a matrimonial bureau received quite a boom on July 4, when four of last year's students participated in a double wedding at Marshalltown. The college mourns the loss of four worthy students, but the church has added two homes where the ministers for Christ will ever be welcome. How much better this is than to see our young people lost to the church by marrying those of the world.

Students registering at Graceland College and paying their tuition for one year in advance will be allowed credit for their railroad fare to Lamoni, not to exceed ten dollars. Bring a receipt from your railroad agent. This brings the college to your own door.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In all the fields of labor the workers are busy, and hopes for a good year are being indulged in by all.

The report from Bro. W. H. Kelley's field is fairly encouraging. The force though small is doing what they can to keep the faith before the people of the mountain region. Bro. Kelley writes of the field thus: "There is a hopeful tinge to all reports and letters received, showing that the brethren are trusting in the Lord and going forward as best they can. No reason why success may not come to the cause here by effort as well as elsewhere. So we, too, are feeling hopeful and quite well every way."

Sixty-seven baptized in the field of Brn. I. N. White and Joseph Luff, last quarter.

Bishop E. L. Kelley has been at Delta, Colorado, looking after the suit planted against Brn. J. W. Morgan and A. M. Chase by R. H. Wight, for damages to character, etc.

And what does culture become when it begins to decay?—when the dry-rot strikes in? It gives itself a new definition, being satisfied, perhaps, to be a mere enlargement of information, with all the development and enjoyment of taste. It omits the training of the conscience; it omits the disciplining of the will; it forgets or neglects those powers of the soul by which the man reaches forth after duty. It knows not any of the laws of the Spirit. It forgets the rights of fellow man. If our national culture, that is, the trend of life in our educated classes, ever ends upon self, then our culture is in great peril of being added to the "three" whose great mischief has been to prevent the entrance of wisdom, and whose judgment has been or may be to "go down with a crash."—Whitney.

We call special attention to the great truth so clearly and briefly expressed in the third paragraph of the following:

"William Jennings Bryan filled the pulpit of the Methodist church at Normal, Nebraska, on Sunday last. The report says that his text was, 'Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God,' and proceeds thus:

"He declared his belief that religion consists more in kindness to and consideration for fellow men, more in charity for others and in personal purity, than in dogma, ceremony, or creed. He deplored the tendency to higher criticism of the Scriptures and the rejection of parts of it because one couldn't understand. He declared that he found daily more mysteries in life than were bound up within the covers of the Bible. He believed the higher wisdom lay in accepting the good we understand, and hoping for understanding later of what we don't understand.

"He insisted that no man can command real success in the world unless he possesses an ideal, nor can he be of real value to the world so long as selfishness and low conceptions of his duty to himself and others dominate his life and conduct.'

'Mr. Bryan might have made an extraordinary preacher. It was not uncommon in the early days of Methodism for lawyers to become local preachers. Some of the most interesting and impressive preachers in England have been lawyers active in practice. Such has been the case within a few years in different parts of this country. Mr. Bryan is a Presbyterian. How he came to preach in this Methodist church is not reported, but he will never lack hearers as long as he has his voice, his perfect mastery of himself, his expressive eyes, and his extraordinary vocabulary. Entirely apart from political bias, one thing can be said of him, that nothing in speech vulgar or morally depraving has ever been said against him."—Christian Advocate, May 18, 1905.

Jap Fumigation Methods: An officer of the Pacific mail steamship Siberia has the following to say of the methods of the Japanese quarantine service in fumigating vessels:

"We were placed in quarantine at Yokohama for ten days. We were moved over to the quarantine station. A hulk was brought alongside. An officer came aboard and asked how much space there was in this and that compartment. He was given the exact figures and he then returned to the hulk and the fumigating plant was prepared with just the amount of fumes necessary to fill the compartment. A white rat, especially bred for the purposes of the quarantine service, was brought to the Siberia in a cage. The cage was hung just within the compartment next to the porthole through which the fumigating pipes were thrust. Then the fumes were pumped in. Once in a while the sacks inclosing the free edges of the porthole were uncovered and an inspection of the rat made. As long as he was alive the fumes were pumped in. When he was found dead, the fumigation came to an end. That rat was closer to a little fresh air than any other rat that may have been in the compartment, and he lived longer than others. When he was dead every other rat was surely dead. And so the fumigation went all over the ship, a white rat being used for each compartment. Then the Japanese doctors treated us finely. We were taken by detachments to the quarantine station grounds every day for exercise."—Pacific Commercial Advertiser, Honolulu, Hawaii.

A correspondent sends us the following:

"I inclose a clipping from the World-Herald, of Omaha. It was one of a number similar under the title or heading 'Iowa, the Refuge of Persecuted Sects.' Thought the misstatement might be of interest to you. Surely every one knows Brigham Young could not have been the son of any Smith that ever breathed. How little some reporters care for consistency or even ordinary approach to the truth of what they write for all to see!

"'The Mormons, driven from Nauvoo, Illinois, started westward on their Utah pilgrimage in 1847, and while one son of the martyr Smith led on a majority to the western State, another son, Joseph Smith, stopped in Iowa and formed a church, which has since had Lamoin as its headquarters.'"

"The Christian has his property as a steward of God. Christ's parables of brotherhood teach that the highest use to which we can put our possessions is their investment on behalf of others. There is no law against a Christian's having property, if he has acquired it honestly. But there is a law against his keeping all the gain of his possessions to himself. In some other world, where there may be no poor, no unevangelized, no ignorant, no helpless, there may be a different law concerning possessions. In this world the law is 'Freely ye have received, freely give.' We are not our own, but Christ's; and our money is dedicated to him, also. And there is no greater value in money than when it is used as a means of Christian service and helpfulness."
Nauvoo Reunion

Replies were made by Heman C. Smith for the church, T. A. Hougas for the Sunday-school, J. A. Gunsolsey for the Religio, Elbert A. Smith for the church publications, and Alexander H. Smith as one of the exiles. Some of these speeches the stenographer failed to “get.” Heman C. Smith said:

Mr. Chairman, Ladies, and Gentlemen: I do not think it would be possible for me to express my feelings, and the appreciation I feel for the words of welcome that have been extended to us officially by the mayor of your city, and the gentleman whom he has chosen to follow him.

Nauvoo! The very word is associated with memories to us all, and causes our feelings to soften; and as we walk the streets of your beautiful city we feel the solemnities that characterize us sometimes when we walk in the city of the dead, for here we walk upon ground where lie buried memories and buried hopes. This name has been sounded in our ears when we were but infants, many of us, at our mothers’ knees. We have been bidden to remember the scenes that were enacted here, and these scenes have become more impressive when we have considered the circumstances that led up to the association of the people that we represent in this place, coming here, as they did, burdened with trials and cares and with persecutions, they found here a temporary resting-place. Here upon this sacred ground old men and women, who were bowed by the weight of cares and responsibilities of years, thought they had planted their roof-tree for ever. Here they gathered around them their loved ones. Here they taught them the principles of truth as they understood them, pointed them to the Lamb of God who they believed was the founder of the great work in which they were engaged. Here young men and maidens wandered over the valleys, or rested under the shade upon the wood-crowned hills, and plighted their vows of love as they told the story, old but ever new. Here they too expected to rear their homes and experience the reality of their fond dreams of happiness.

But the storm-cloud arose, and our fathers and mothers were driven from this beautiful city to erect other homes, and far away under the beams of the western or southern sun we have heard them tell of this beautiful place, and so vivid have these impressions been in our minds because of these relations, that when we visit these places the depths of our feelings are stirred. The first time that we looked upon this city and its beautiful surroundings, it seemed like some beautiful, half-forgotten dream. It all seemed so familiar to us when first our eyes beheld these rugged hills with the broad plain at their base, around which sweeps in graceful majesty the historic river, that it seemed like but a sweet memory of childhood.

We appreciate the circumstances that confront us to-day when we realize that the storm-cloud has passed, and the things that once disturbed and distracted this beautiful place have passed away, and to-day we meet under this canvas and in this public place and hear the words of welcome from these who are the highest in authority in your municipality, and we have this privilege of responding in behalf of the people we represent, the privilege of meeting here in the homes of our fathers and worshiping God according to the faith that they promulgated. We can but feel sorrowful sometimes when we think of the possibilities of this beautiful place which once, we are told, was the largest in the state of Illinois, and, possessing as it does natural advantages second to none, the key of the situation was in the hands of our fathers—your fathers and ours. And this might have been the center of commerce. There might have been the streams of commerce directed this way, and this city might have been the leading city of the West. It had this opportunity. What city was situated more favorably? What city had fairer opportunities? The advantages of population and being first in the race were here; but because we disagreed, or our fathers disagreed, we lost the opportunity to build the city here, and the streams of commerce have been directed into other places, and the city of Nauvoo remains a silent place, yet a beautiful place, and it appears to me to a pleasant place to retire from the busy cares of life and build a quiet home of peace, of rest. We can not but think of these possibilities, but we are reminded of the language of the poet.

The saddest are these, ‘It might have been.’”

But we can not regain that which we have lost, nor the opportunities that were before us at that time, and now it is ours to make the best of the situation, and I am glad that the time is past, without saying who was to blame, or whether your fathers or ours were most to blame—without entering into a discussion of that. I am glad to say that there is a happier day dawning upon us, and we have heard to-day the words of welcome to those who teach unchanged the faith, once proclaimed upon the spot where now we assemble. And permit me in their behalf to say that we again shake hands with you as brothers, and welcome you to our congregations and to our convention, and ask for them that whatever differences may arise between us in the future, that we may all, and each of us, meet it in a brotherly, kindly spirit, discussing our differences with love and forbearance if we will, and if not thought best to discuss them, let them pass to a higher tribunal, for we will all have to account for our faith, and especially for our practice to God himself. We are not required to account to each other. We are not permitted to be judges. We have not that ability. The right of judgment is with him, and to him we ought to carry these differences, but in kindness and love bear with each other, and respond with heartfelt gratitude to the friendship and the privilege of associating together here. It may not be, I do not know whether we shall ever be associated together as fellow citizens or not. There is no movement upon our part that way; and that we will ever come back to build up the city of Nauvoo is but an unauthorized speculation. The church has taken no steps in that way. We come here only as a convention, as we would come to any other place; but we come here with an additional incentive, for it is our delight to visit the places of our fathers whether we will ever be permitted or have desire to occupy them or not. We come here simply as a convention, not for the purpose of taking possession of the city. It is yours and you are welcome to it. We are content to be your guests, and to partake of your hospitality, and in return thank you for your invitation to come, and for your words of welcome, and invite you to mingle freely with us in our association and service while we offer you the faith of our fathers.

Elder T. A. Hougas said:

Mr. President, Friends, Brethren, and Sisters: It but feebly expresses our feelings this afternoon when we say that it is a real pleasure to respond to so hearty a welcome as we have heard to-day. In behalf of our association, the General Sunday-school Association of the church, we speak our personal feelings, as well as the feelings of, we believe, all our collaborators, when we say that we are more than happy, more than glad to meet at this place. When a few years ago we were permitted to gather with a few of our coworkers on the other side of this beautiful stream in a reunion, and paid a visit to this beautiful place, the thought came to us then, “How I would that all the young people of our church could, in the words of another, ‘See what I have seen, and feel what I have felt.’” And our visit to the sacred places made impressions upon us that have not yet been erased, and they were impressions that have done us good, I believe, and made us better. And we thought then, how glad we would be if all our workers could at least once in their lives make a visit here, see the old landmarks, feel the feelings that naturally come to us at such places and under such circumstances, and learn many things they might never learn otherwise. And we are here to-day, a few of us, and I am glad. We have come here with several things in view. We are here as we have mentioned to see the places of memory, precious and sacred to us, and at the same time to associate one with another, and to learn many things that we need to know in our every-day work, and our every-day life, things that we need to know at home in the discharge of our duties there. We hope to make it educational in several ways, and with the added feelings of inspiration, feelings of—well, we hardly know how to express it, because it must be felt to be appreciated—feelings that carry us back as it did the thoughts of those who have gone before, members of our own family, our brothers. We are representing the work of the children of our church—not the children alone, but it is the work of the entire church, and I believe that we can truly say that a larger percentage of our church membership attend our Sunday-schools than that of any other church extant. But when we say we represent the children, it is the one association that takes them particularly as a religious association, and in their behalf we want to thank the people of this town, through their officers, for the cordial invitation that has been extended to us, and assure them that we will be pleased to have them attend our reunion, for whatever the nature of the work it is in for your entertainment as well as ours, for your benefit as well as ours, and we have learned all along that we are all benefitted by association, we are all built up in mind together, we come to a better understanding, and are better understood and add good in all ways. Again we want to thank you, friends of Nauvoo, for the kind hospitality and for the invitation which you sent us, which we considered long before we came, not from any lack of interest, not from any dislike to come; but because such a move must not be taken hurriedly. We must take the necessary time to bring it about properly, and I thank God that we are here to-day, that we are here for work and for worship.

Following the speeches, permanent organization was effected, with Heman C. Smith, T. A. Hougas, and J. A. Gunsolley in charge, D. J. Krahl secretary, Annie Allen stenographer, Mark Siegfried chorister, Madge Siegfried organist, and Elbert A. Smith, J. W. Peterson, and D. J. Krahl press committee. The evening sermon was by Elder F. M. Slover.

Elder Smith was the preacher on Sunday. To be more explicit, Alexander H. in the morning; Elbert A. in the afternoon; and Heman C. in the evening. The big tent was well filled, and the interest and attendance was good.

What a contrast between now and sixty years ago. Then the sword, the bullet, and the torch were our portion. Now we are welcomed here. The ears of the people are open to hear us. Their newspapers are open to print whatever our press committee may furnish them. The city park is our camping-ground. The city hall is at our disposal. Our committee on arrangements has its headquarters in the old Expositor Office, where formerly the Devil drove the quills and set the types.

Monday opened with a splendid spiritual prayer-meeting. Institute work occupied the time at half-past ten o'clock and at half-past two; a free-for-all social at four o'clock, and sermon by James McKiernan in the evening. The weather has been ideal.

A VARIED AND INTERESTING PROGRAM, HISTORICAL LECTURES, ETC.

An invitation was tendered our people to attend a wedding in the Catholic church on Tuesday morning, July 31. The wedding was at eight o'clock and the long and formal ceremony lasted nearly an hour. We judged that such a ceremony would tend to discourage second marriages. There were more of our people in attendance than there were of the Catholics; but the Catholics were more quiet and decorous than their guests of honor.

An excellent prayer-meeting and a session of Sunday-school institute work occupied the forenoon.

In the afternoon Bro. Will Pitt of Independence read an excellent paper on common errors in public speech. This especially interested the ministry, who smiled even to hear their own peculiar failings lampooned. Watch Autumn Leaves for this paper.

One of the features of Wednesday was the trip “seeing Nauvoo.” Historical speeches in the tabernacle preceded the tour, and then ten vehicles and a “mixed multitude” of people on foot took up the march. Unfortunately some who were unable to walk failed to secure transportation, and were quite sorely disappointed. A second tour was arranged for them. Our convention stenographer, Sr. Annie Allen, of Lamoni, accompanied this first expedition and reported the trip and the speeches. Space will not permit a full report but in part her report is as follows:

Heman C. Smith spoke in the tent as follows:

We are not in the original city of Nauvoo; this is Wells’ Addition. The original city of Nauvoo came within a block west of here, to the next street west of this one, but two blocks north of here; the city extended three blocks further east. Mr. Daniel H. Wells owned this property at the time our people first settled here. He was not a member of the church, but subsequently became one, and laid out this addition. This park that we are on, this quarter of a block (the blocks were laid off in four lots to the city originally) I find by the county records that this park, which is lot 2, block 19, was deeded to Leonard Soby, one of the high council of the church. I do not know whether he even had a residence here or not. We could not determine that by the records. The streets were named for prominent men, most of them.

These streets running north and south lost their original names and are now known by numbers, numbering from the river. This street west of the park running north and south is Twelfth Street, I believe, but was originally Woodruff Street, named for Wilford Woodruff, and the street running east and west is Knight Street, named I suppose for Joseph Knight, or some of the family of Knights. Those of you who are acquainted with the history of the church, will remember that Joseph Knight was one of the first in a material way to befriend the Prophet when he was commencing the work of translating, providing him with the means, sustaining him while at the work.

The next street south of the park is Mulholland Street, running east and west, named for James Mulholland, who was secretary to Joseph Smith in 1839; died soon after. I do not know whether it will be interesting to you or not to name the streets, but I will name a few of them. The next street east of here, running north and south, was Page Street, named for John E. Page. The next street west of Woodruff was Wells Street, named for Daniel H. Wells, and was the dividing line between the old city of Nauvoo and the Wells Addition. The next street north of Knight Street is Young Street, named doubtless for Brigham Young.

There are only two places that we think necessary to mention up on the hill here. One of these is the old Expositor Building, generally understood to be the building on Mulholland Street, known as headquarters of this convention, rented by Bro. Peterson, and occupied by the committee. There is difference in regard to the location of this building. Mr. Theodore Ellison, an old resident who recently departed this life, told me that he was positive it was on the other side of the street on the corner where the hotel is, and President Joseph Smith confirmed the recollection of Mr. Ellison that it was on the south side of the street. There are others who believe from circumstances connected with it that the Expositor Building was down on the river front. The history of the Expositor briefly told is that it was started by some who became disaffected from the church. They issued just one number of the Expositor, June 7, 1844. Immediately after that issue the city council declared the paper a nuisance and ordered the mayor to abate it. I want to say that. It has never been understood generally that the church destroyed the Expositor office because it was conducted by apostates from the church. Members of the church may have had something to do with it, but not as members. What was done was in an official way by the city council, and they ordered the mayor to abate it, and he ordered the marshal, John P. Green, to destroy it, and Mr. Green with his posse went and emptied the type into the street, and there never was another issue of the paper. It is not necessary for me to go into detail as to why this was done. You can make up your own minds as to whether it was necessary to destroy it or not. All that have ever read it will know that it was a seditious sheet.

On the 10th of June it was destroyed, men were accused that were engaged in it, and complaint was made before the justice of the peace in Carthage. They took advantage of the habeas corpus and were tried before the municipal court of Nauvoo and acquitted, and immediately afterward the mayor wrote to the governor of the State and gave an account of the proceedings, and told him if he was not satisfied, all parties concerned would present themselves at the capital for investigation. This was never demanded. At the advice of friends they submitted to a second trial, and at the second trial were acquitted. We are not giving expression to-day to opinion, we are just telling you what happened.

The only other item of interest and one of the main things, is the erection of the temple. That was right on the block adjoining this, just beyond this brick building. The corner-stone of the temple was laid on the 7th of April, 1841. Work was done on it for several years. The exodus from this place took place in 1846, and in 1846 the temple was burned. The walls stood, I believe, but we will bear more about that after a while. I believe it was never completed entirely. It was burned on the 8th or 10th of October—there are different accounts in regard to that date. We have with us Alexander H. Smith, who lived here in his childhood, and saw the temple, and knows more about it than the rest of us, so I will give way to him.

In the brief space of time that would be allotted me, I can tell but very little. I have to speak largely from memory, and if I speak relative to the temple I shall speak of it as I knew it, not as somebody else has told me about it. Of course, I was but a small boy, comparatively, when the temple was begun, and much of my time in playing was spent, (when I could get leave from home,) around the temple. Every one that was at work on the temple knew who I was, and every man that was laboring on the temple always gave some preference to me to aid me in my pleasures around the place. I mingled freely among those who were cutting the stone, laying the walls, etc. I saw the rise of the temple and the laying of the foundation, until the metal figure of the angel was placed upon the dome.

The man who had charge of the temple just previous to its burning, frequently permitted me to pass into the temple with him when he went around showing visitors the temple. Sometimes he would say, “Alexander, you take these people around and show them through the temple; you can climb the stairs easier than I can.” The temple fronted to the west. The part leading to the entrance, or portico, opened with three large doors, one on each side and one in the center. Leading to the interior on the north side of this portico was the office. On the south, in the southwest corner, was a spiral staircase which led to the upper floor of the temple. The lower floor of the temple was sufficiently finished to occupy. There were placed in there temporary pews or seats, and a temporary pulpit at the east end of the room, and public services were held in that room. It was so far finished that it could be used as an auditorium. The second floor never was finished. In fact the floor proper never was laid. There was a floor laid which was called the lining, but the floor proper never was laid.

The room above the second auditorium, during the last year of the stay of the people here, was partitioned off with canvas partitions on the north and south sides, rooms on each side, and a long hall in the center. I passed through the temple, was in the basement; have been in the font many a time. I have been shown the well that was said to supply the water that was used in the font for baptism. If you look at the picture of the temple you will see there is a square above the roof and the line of that square running through the temple was the partition between the office and the stairway room. That partition ran clear up from the cellar. It was begun in the cellar, and on the west side of that partition in the cellar this well was dug. The water was drawn from the well to put in the font, and the font was in a large room in the basement.

I well remember that they attempted to baptize in the font. They put water in the font, but from some defect it leaked, the water ran out, and they could not use it as a rule for baptism, until it should be repaired. Before it was repaired the temple was burned. Certainly not longer than two days before the temple was burned, I passed through the temple, and took two parties, climbed the winding stairs on which the dome rests, and there were ladders from the stairs so we could reach the dome. On the east side of the dome was a tower opening out onto a little walk passing around the dome. There was a little railing around the dome, like that, but nothing to prevent an individual if he felt so disposed, from getting over. I walked around this dome, and as I came to the door, the gentleman to whom I was showing the dome, reached out and caught hold of me. I did not like that, but he was afraid I would fall over. I was not afraid of it.

There has been misunderstanding in regard to the temple being finished. It never was finished. I remember, I think it was in the fall of 1846; at any rate it was the time the Mexican War was in progress; General Warren was summoned from this division. I think his forces were located at Rock Island. As he passed through Nauvoo, with a portion of his army, a part of them were stationed right in my mother’s doorway, and some of his soldiers ate at my mother’s table. You know our memories sometimes retain little things and make impressions on our minds that we remember long after. While these soldiers were quartered in my mother’s house, at one time in the afternoon there was an arrest made for stealing horses, and the prisoner was arrested by some of these soldiers and brought to my mother’s house for meal-time, and as he sat at the table, a soldier on each side of him, one soldier dropped his knife on the floor; mother rushed around to supply another knife when the prisoner said, "Never mind, Sr. Emma, this knife is all right, he wiped it on my pantaloons." That sealed in my memory the fact of these soldiers being there.

While we were yet at the table the cry of fire was raised in the city. We rushed to the door and we saw the smoke rolling out of the east end of the temple from the upper floor. We made inquiry in regard to it, and we were told they were having a jolly good time up there and it caught fire. I do not know how true that was. They said they were dancing and fiddling on the upper floor.

The night the temple was set on fire, our barn was lit up about one o'clock in the morning. My mother saw a light shining in at the east window of the bedroom where I was sleeping about one o'clock. She saw the temple on fire. At the time she saw it the fire was about large enough to see through the upper windows of the dome. I was wakened by the voice of my mother saying, "My God, the temple is on fire." Of course we were all aroused.

I saw the flames break out of the windows of the dome of the temple. It was so light at our home a mile away that we could see to play marbles easily by the light of the burning temple.

As soon the next day as I could get permission, I came up to the temple lot. Immense crowds of people were around it, and of course, being a boy, I ran here and there among them, and I heard the expression of the concensus of feeling in that multitude, and I heard one man make the expression, and I always remembered it, "Oh, I wish we had the man that set fire to it, we would tie him in irons and drag him through it." That seemed to be the general feeling and expression. Now I have lived to see when the wind blew one wall out, and the wind blew another wall in. After the fire the French community bought the temple with a view to rebuilding or repairing it, but it was not intended that it should be rebuilt, and the winds of heaven blew down one wall, the lightning struck another wall, and only one corer remained standing, which reminds me of the song we used to sing: "These remaining pillars, still, of the temple on the hill."

It was so near the houses built on the southwest corner of the square that it was thought to be dangerous, and the citizens blasted the walls down, and not content with removing the stones that were on the surface, they quarried the foundation clear to the basement, and every stone that was not used for building purposes was made into lime, and not one stone was left upon another in the temple that was commanded to be built of God. It had been defiled, and was purified by fire. Now, I have told you my knowledge of the temple which was obtained by reason of being in the temple and on the temple ground.

Starting from the park, the first stop was made in front of St. Mary's Academy, and our attention was called by Bro. Alexander to the south wing of the academy, as being what was the Mormon arsenal.

He said:

The building on the northeast corner was built by Parley Pratt. It is now used as a parsonage. On the next corner south was the temple lot. On the west there was a grove of hickory- and oak-trees, and the people used to hold meetings in that grove.

Turning west to main street, then north, we came to the place which used to be the residence of Lyman Wight. Leaving here we came to what used to be called Commerce; afterwards the name was changed to Nauvoo. The old town of Commerce, or what is
north side of the road and part on the south side of the road, next to the river. New Commerce was located out from the river front, near the old stone house. There were about one hundred houses in New Commerce, most of them log houses.

We next came to what used to be the Masonic Hall. Bro. Alexander said:

In our day in Nauvoo it was originally a three-story building, but was purchased by parties who took the top story off and made a residence of it. Some have questioned the fact of the lodge being legal. It was supposed to have been a clandestine lodge, but it was recognized by the supreme lodge. The supreme lodge took action to annul the charter, and if it had been a clandestine lodge, the supreme lodge would never have taken such action.

We next came to the building that was supposed to be the residence of Orson Hyde. Near it was the building that was put up by Doctor Lyman, and was one of the first mercantile establishments in the flat.

Beyond this, in the same block, was the residence of John D. Lee, which was his dwelling-place when the Latter Day Saints left here. We next came to where three brick buildings are now standing. This site was formerly owned by Almon W. Babbitt.

These brick buildings were used as a grocery-store and a storehouse. In the corner building services are now being held by the Utah Mormons. This property was deeded to Edward Hunter. Farther on we came to a frame building. Our lecturer said:

On this spot running across one lot and half way across the block, was a large, single-story brick building called the brick row. Here the first emigration that came from England, among them Father Church, resided. They came up the Mississippi River, landing at the foot of Main Street. In that company was a widow woman with a little Babe. That little babe became the wife of Alexander Smith.

On the corner of Granger and Kimball Streets was the house that was formerly the residence of Brigham Young, and across the way is a large building which used to be occupied by Joseph Young, a brother of Brigham Young. We next came to the place where the hall used to be in which the Quorum of Seventy used to hold their meetings. A little farther on is the lot on which James Whitehead, secretary to Joseph Smith, used to live. We again stopped in front of the place where the building once stood in which was published the paper called the Times and Seasons. This building was towards the river fronting Water Street.

The next place of interest noted was where the home of Hyrum Smith used to be on Water Street, and near that was where his office was in which he used to give patriarchal blessings, and where the High Council used to hold their meetings, a brick office about twelve by fourteen feet. Near to this is the place where once stood the house in which Peter Haws lived, one of the old pioneer Saints. In sight of this place stands the former residence of William Marks, president of the High Council. To that house John Taylor was brought from Carthage at the time he was wounded.

We next came to what was the brick store, spoken of in history as Joseph Smith’s brick store. In the upper chamber of that store was where the council was held. This building stood until a few years ago. Our next stop was in front of the site of the Nauvoo Meeting House, where the Reorganization first held their meetings, and near to this place is where Mr. Law had his store.

The next place of interest was the Old Homestead, one of the first buildings built in Nauvoo before the Saints came here. The house was remodeled after Joseph Smith moved to Nauvoo. The east end of the upright was a block house built for protection from the ravages of the Indians. Indian Territory was then just across the river in Iowa. This was the first home of Joseph Smith here, built by Hugh White and sold to the church on May 1, 1839.

In sight of the Old Homestead was the corner which used to belong to Asa L. Smith, uncle of the Martyr. Across the street fronting the Nauvoo Mansion is the place where Don Carlos Smith died. The Nauvoo Mansion was then pointed out. Joseph Cooldge was the man supposed to have built the Mansion House. He built the portion that is still standing.

In front of the Mansion House, right on the corner, was the platform that you read about in history where Joseph Smith addressed the multitude, the last time he addressed them in Nauvoo, and from this corner he took his departure to Carthage. Our attention was next called to the Nauvoo House, the house that was commanded to be destroyed. That house never was finished. The part that was started was built to the top of the windows, and subsequently this part was finished, and here Emma Smith died. Across the street from the Nauvoo House and on the Old Homestead lot is the cemetery which contains the graves of Emma Smith, wife of Joseph, also the two martyrs and other relatives of the family.

After leaving the cemetery, we passed the house that was built by Theodore Linley, and the brick house in which Dimick Huntington lived. A little farther on is the former home of Bishop Partridge. Going north to Parley Street, we passed the house in which Benjamin Clapp, father to Joseph Clapp, lived. A short distance from here lived Joseph Cooldge, the mechanic who was employed to build the Nauvoo Mansion. He was also the administrator of Joseph Smith’s estate. Farther on was the house that belonged to Joseph B. Noble; subsequently it was the property of Lucy Smith, mother of the Prophet.

The next stop was made in front of the old Kimball residence. Our guide said:

Right here there are some points that are interesting when we take into consideration the names of some of the men who built this house. It is claimed by the people that went West that they went West in keeping with the revelation which commanded them to go, and that they had this commandment in view before the Prophet was killed. But while they claim they had this in view, yet these houses are monuments that would justify us in the thought that they did have no such idea, that they were building, and expected to make their homes right here. They claim that Joseph Smith appointed a committee in 1843 to explore that country with a view to moving out there, and yet they built this house in 1845, a year after his death.

Leaving this spot we passed the house of Wilford Woodruff, one of the twelve apostles, afterward president of the Utah church. This was the last point of interest on the trip.

Thursday was the day appointed for the steamboat excursion to Warsaw. The Ottumwa Belle and barge left the landing at a few minutes after eight o'clock in the morning, one of the few river excursions to leave on time. Two hundred and thirteen souls were on board. Most of these were paid fares, though some “complimentary” were given the elders. That is, they were called “complimentary.” One of the elders had his doubts. “What is this?”, he asked when the ticket was tendered to him. “Something we give deadheads,” replied the donor, dropping his jaw and drawing in his breath in his well-known way. Moral: Do not examine a “compliment” too closely.

A short stop was made at Keokuk and the city park was visited. Warsaw was reached about noon, and the boat departed at three o'clock. Recitations, speeches, and songs whiled the hours away on the return trip. Bro. Will Pitt and Sr. Mable Bartholomew being encored repeatedly. Bro. Burr's “breakfast food” took well, too. The grounds were reached in ample time for the evening services. The excursion proved a financial success. Nearly forty-five dollars was cleared on the boat and refreshments, exact amount not known. Otherwise, the convention has not paid in a financial way.

So far as attendance is concerned, it is better than the more conservative expected, though not up to the estimates of the more sanguine. The mayor of the city stated to the writer that it was a matter of general comment in the town that our people were very faithful in interest and attendance, being found present at all services.

The program has been varied and interesting. The joint societies have spent the forenoons and afternoons in institute work—teaching teachers how to teach, and committees and officers how to work. Prayer-service has been held every morning, and the missionary arm of the work was represented by able speakers every evening, and three times each Sunday.

The following named elders were in attendance: Heman Smith, Alexander Smith, J. W. Peterson, T. A. Hougus, J. A. Gunsolley, D. J. Krahl, Mark Siegfried, Elbert A. Smith, Frank Russell, O. H. Bailey, Amos Berve, R. T. Walters, James McKerrnan, C. H. Burr, F. M. Slover, C. E. Willey, J.

It was the intention to visit the park at Warsaw and occupy the time with speeches; but a letter to the mayor elicited a reply which was in the main courteous and friendly but closed by saying:

When your speakers touch on "Mormon" history, let them remember that there are scores of old settlers in Warsaw who have the true history burned in their hearts as if it were but yesterday that the events occurred, for they bitterly suffered, both in flesh and in pocket, in the making of that history.

Warsaw need not have suffered had she attended to her own business. No one troubled her. But she welcomed the Missouri mobbers, and herself took up the work of pillage and murder, and became one of the most bitter nurses of mobocracy of that day. It is suggested that some things were "burned into" those "old settlers" and they will sometime reach an abode where some things will be "burned out" of them.

THE SPECIFIC DUTIES OF A HIGH PRIEST.

(By request of the quorum presidency this article was written by Bro. H. A. Stebbins and read before the High Priests' Quorum in April, 1906, and by vote of the quorum its publication was asked for.)

The chief and special duty of one holding the office of a high priest is that he should be able to preside. And this includes also that he should labor as a true pastor, a faithful shepherd over his part of the flock.

His other chief duty is to seek to qualify himself therefor, to prepare himself to do as well as he possibly can this special labor in the church, so that he may successfully occupy, not only as a presiding officer over branch, district, or stake, but also that he shall prove to be a worthy shepherd of the sheep, a Christlike pastor over a people and over the work placed in his charge. He should obey the exhortation and injunction that Paul gave to the church officers at Ephesus, namely, "to feed the church of God, over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers." I believe that this appeal by Paul has particular application to the work and calling of the high priests in their daily lives.

Under the gospel covenant, as reintroduced and re-established in the latter days, it is evident that the office of high priest in the Melchisedec priesthood is a very sacred and important one, the word important not meaning that the man is to be important or to feel important, but that this office and calling is a very useful one, a necessary one in the gospel work, so much so that it cannot be dispensed with, its duties and labors cannot be left out or disregarded without the church of Christ and the cause of truth suffering an irreparable loss. And, if the special and particular work assigned for the high priests is not efficiently and sufficiently done, the result of this lack will be more or less an injury to the cause, and it will also prevent the intended growth in righteousness among God's people.

Consequently, a failure to do well or a lack in being qualified to do well the specific duties of this calling will also prevent an increase in membership. This for the reason that a practical daily righteousness among the Lord's people always wins many to Christ and like salvation, while unrighteousness among them always causes stagnation, and in time decay and ruin wherever error and sin abound. And wherever high priests have pastoral charge over branches, districts, or stakes, upon them rests the special responsibility, the most sacred obligation of endeavoring to keep the Saints up to the true standard. Their constant work and faithful service should be to comfort, encourage, advise, and strengthen the members against the evils of carelessness, indifference, contention, division, and skepticism.

For by latter-day revelation it has been made very plain that the divinely appointed duty of the high priest is to build up and perfect the work of God within the church and in such manner and to such degree as no other quorum in the body of Christ is appointed or ordained to do. Their work among the Saints should ever be for the progress and triumph of the people by their living according to the principles spoken of and commanded by the Savior, such teaching being especially found in Matthew's testimony, chapters 5 and 6, and in John's testimony, chapters 14, 15, 16, and 17.

Beginning with Matthew, fifth chapter, we find a great summing up of the true righteousness of heart and life that Christ demands of his people in order that they may "see God." And in all these things the high priests who are placed in charge of God's people should be examples in and teachers of, namely, "blessed are the pure in heart," "blessed are the peacemakers," blessed "are the meek," "blessed are they who do hunger and thirst after righteousness," and the other beatitudes.

A high priest may do much good by preaching to those not members and also through his example in daily life, and indeed it should so result, but his special and chief duty is to the members. His special work is for the personal perfection of those who have already stepped into the "narrow way" and are seeking to obtain a sure title to eternal life. By revelation to the church and by many individual experiences, also by manifestations of the Holy Ghost, the duties, responsibilities, trials, and joys pertaining to this calling have been made known and testified of to various partakers in the work of the Lord, the Holy Spirit having comforted, aided, and strengthened men during their labors in this office.
whenever and wherever such brethren have been acting in the line of duty and laboring in faith and in love towards God and for humanity.

You are all aware that very little was given to the church from 1830 to 1844 about the duties of the high priests, notwithstanding men were ordained to this office as early as 1831. Because of this lack some in our time have claimed that the work of the high priests was rather of an unimportant character, not specially essential, and that the quorum was more of a body in which to place the worn-out material, or those who could no longer be of good service in the really active and necessary quorums of the church, in those bodies that were actually needed for the continuance and growth of the church. But on this point the minds of some have been enlightened by the revelation given to the present President of the church, the important labor intended by the Lord to be done in this calling being made plainer than it was before, and the necessity of their work has been stated, as it pertains to branches and districts, also more apparent as to stake organizations and bishops.

Nevertheless the early revelations make clear that one of the specific duties of the high priests was to preside. The oft-quoted word to W. A. Cowdery said that he should be appointed and ordained “a presiding high priest” over the church at a certain place, and one revelation says that the quorum of high priests “is instituted for the purpose of qualifying those who shall be appointed standing presidents over different stakes scattered abroad, and they may travel also, if they choose, but rather be ordained for standing presidents. This is the office of their calling, saith the Lord your God.” (Doctrine and Covenants 137:42)

In section 104, paragraph 31, the President of the church is spoken of as the “presiding high priest” over the whole church, and in 104:11 the three men composing the First Presidency are called “three presiding high priests.” That is, whatever their extra duties are, by virtue of their presidency, they are really high priests, the office of high priest being in truth the office of the high priesthood, the office of elder being a lesser degree of the same priesthood, for the purposes stated in the revelations.

In Joseph Smith’s history he stated that on September 11, 1833, ten high priests were appointed to watch over the ten branches of the church in Zion; and in March, 1836, he gave instruction stating that high priests are for the purpose of presiding over churches. (See Times and Seasons, vol. 6, p. 850, and Millennial Star, vol. 15, p. 727.)

Also in a letter addressed to Elder Jared Carter in April, 1833, he wrote as follows: “The duty of a high priest, is to administer in spiritual things. It is a high priest’s duty to be better qualified to teach principles and doctrines than the elders.”—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 752.

Now ability to preside is either an important gift or it is a valuable attainment, not so much for the purpose of presiding over an assembly or over a session of conference deftly, but a man needs still more to have wisdom, insight, intelligence, and steadiness of character for the general work that comes to one placed in charge of branch, district, or stake. As he goes to and fro attending to and providing for the various necessities of such organization, he should seek to keep everything as nearly as he can in the order and harmony that the great Master would like it to be in, and so far as He gives him wisdom to accomplish. But every high priest should make himself familiar with the rules governing deliberative bodies, so that he may be able to preside over an assembly whenever the necessity arises in conference and branch matters.

Coming to the other special duties of a high priest, certainly one of the greatest is that he should endeavor with all his heart and soul to qualify himself, to prepare himself in all things for the daily service of the Master and of the Master’s people so long as he shall live and serve in this capacity.

In this special duty the first need is that he learn to control himself, to chasten and fit his own spirit for this great service, that he have constant watch-care as to his speech, his actions, his thoughts, and the tendency of his mind in its motives, purposes, and ideas, and to examine what things his heart and soul naturally seek after that are not altogether good, that he may, by God’s help, eradicate the evil. How many mistakes and errors could be prevented, and how many might have been, if all realized this great need at the beginning, or in the proper time.

Also one special duty of a high priest is to seek for and to obtain wisdom from God, so that he may not only be influenced by the divine Spirit in his own daily conduct, but also that in his presidency over a branch or a district he may prayerfully meditate and carefully consider all matters pertaining to the work in his charge. Also that he may act wisely and speak cautiously, to the intent that his advice and counsel may be for the building up of said work, such as will bring harmony and peace, and that the fruits of righteousness may abound, so far as possible, in the hearts and lives of those “called to be saints.”

As a pastor one special duty is to be a peacemaker everywhere, and that he have great patience in the midst of the difficulties and differences that arise, that patiently, and in humility and love, he may be able to deal with the various dispositions and inherited ideas and peculiarities that he finds along the way. Every man who has charge over branch or district needs to have power with God and with men, worthiness to receive divine help in his work, and ability to give light to the darkened minds, so that in loving humility he may pacify contrary dispositions, and as far as can be unite discordant elements and thus bring the lives of members into harmony for their own good, for the sake of the cause of truth, and for the comfort and peace of the body of Christ.

It is the special duty of a high priest to be as a father who has the respect and affectionate love of his children, to be a true pastor, a shepherd who is gentle with the sheep, remembering the statement concerning the great Shepherd, that he thus did. For sheep are easily alarmed, and a rough, inconsiderate, or hasty-tempered shepherd frightens the sheep from him and he may drive them from the pasture and the fold. He needs to be like the tender mother who is faithful day and night, through every time of danger, sickness, and trial.

It is also his special duty to keep himself from holding grudges, ill will, or prejudice against any of the sheep, knowing that often misunderstanding is the sole cause of differences and prejudices, and that mutual love and forbearance, with willingness on the part of all concerned to talk matters over in a Christ-like spirit, may cause the supposed difficulties to vanish as the mist departs from before the morning sun. It may be found that the differences have really been of no more value than the differences of little children in their play.

A high priest should be far from acting the part of a tale-bearer or a tale-hearer. Neither should he take sides or allow himself to be prejudiced against any. If he becomes so he should hasten to do his complete duty in learning if he or others are really justified in holding such feelings, if after all real justice has been done and a godlike mercy has been shown to the person against whom prejudice is held. He should consider that different dispositions and peculiar temperaments cause people to see things as they do, and that until they see them in a different light, or are educated up to a different view, it is impossible for them to make radical charges. All have not the same intelligence, or brightness of mind, or capacity, to see quickly, yet each may be as sincere, earnest, and devoted. Also a really good member may be misunderstood, and the part of mercy and love is to do all that can be done to correct every evil. Each individual has by birth peculiarities of nature differing from others, yet if all such are treated with consideration then a good service may be had from each for the Master.

Hence as all people have faults, it is needful that the high priest in his watchcare should impress that fact upon the minds of all Saints, with the additional thought that each should see and correct his own faults as fully as he sees and condemns the faults of others.

Every high priest should be strictly honest in his dealings, very truthful in his words, faithful in keeping his promises, clean in his speech and conduct, yes, in his thoughts also. And in all these ways he should be an example to others, and to the young especially a helper and a guide by his daily life, daily example, as also by his counsel when it is needed.

High priests are often called upon to fast and pray for those who are very sick that the Lord may heal them, and for strength and blessing to be given to those who are passing through severe trials. Therefore the need that they be prepared in heart and mind, and by steadfast purity of soul and integrity of life, so that the Lord may more readily hear their petitions and give them his Spirit when they come before him to seek blessings for others and aid and instruction for themselves.

Considering all this, there is need that much care be taken in selecting men for ordination as high priests, that those be chosen who have many of these characteristics, with a deep and abiding love for humanity as well as for God and that they be considerate of the feelings of others, and helpful to all. No part of the ministry should surpass the high priests in earnestness of life, in devotion of spirit, in prayerfulness of heart, or in readiness to learn the will of God and to perform it. Therefore should the quorum try to recommend such men, as also that they have ability to preside and who show a growth in that direction and in their solicitude for the welfare of the sheep.

I have said nothing about the duties of high priests as bishops and high counselors because those matters do not pertain to this article nor in the appointment to write it. What I have written I respectfully present to the quorum, having been asked to write for that purpose.

GIVING.

In giving as in all other acts in life, there are certain rules, principles, and motives involved, the carrying out of which is necessary in order that such acts may be in reality what they purport to be. The principles governing acts may be destroyed by ulterior motives, or motives contrary to what the acts purport to be. An act of obedience under extenuating circumstances, by which honor and free will is crowded out, is obedience in form only—it is an outward compliance with an inward unwillingness.

The transfer of something from one person to another where there is a consideration involved makes such transfer a gift neither in form nor intent. A transfer without any understanding or agreement as to consideration, but with expectation of a return value may be considered a gift, but it is in form only; in reality it is not a gift. One definition of a gift is: "Anything transferred from one person to another without compensation." We have heard it expressed concerning some who were shrewd financiers, and questionable in their methods, that they never gave a dollar except when they could see two for themselves at the other end of the string. In such cases it would be an investment, or speculation, and in some cases it might be gambling so far as the heart is concerned, when the so-called gift is made upon a chance of big returns. Paul says, “It is more blessed to give than to receive.” Giving with a thought of receiving in return robs the act of the joy, the pleasure, the “blessed” features that might accompany it.

Giving with anticipation of returns, and competitive giving can neither be classed as “blessed,” because they are robbed of the right incentive to govern a gift. If the incentive be for gain, whether it is for intrinsic value, honor, or through competition to be classed above others, it is not the right one to govern a gift, and the act partakes of the spirit of commercialism.

Should that spirit be allowed to enter the church, the Sabbath-school, or the Religio? I believe competitive giving is wrong, not only because it destroys the proper motive in giving, but it is unjust and discouraging to those who may be unfortunate. Some are debarred from entering as competitors from the fact that they are not fortunate in having the means to compete with the more fortunate ones. They may, like the poor widow who gave the two mites, give their all, and like her give more than all the rest, but in the competition they are not so counted. If Christ had the awarding they would be placed at the top.

There is no blessedness in giving grudgingly. The “blessed” gift, whether it be to a friend, the church, or to the poor, must be a heart-gift. If we could be educated to make heart-gifts, or give because we love to give, we would not only feel “blessed” in the act, but the church, the Sunday-school, and the Religio would not lack for funds. When we come to realize that the poor widow who gives her farthing may be giving more than some wealthy person who gives a thousand, when we pay our free-will offerings and our tithing with no motives otherwise than a love to do so and not because others do so or because we want to see our names in the Bishop’s report or because we expect God will return it to us tenfold or a hundredfold, then we will realize the “blessed” part of giving.

THE MARVELOUS WORK OF GOD.

Amidst the clamor of many opinions, which are not at all times spiritually edifying and uplifting, we will center our thoughts for a time upon the most inspiring of all themes, “The marvelous work of God,” awe-inspiring and beautiful beyond comparison, God moving in his glorious majesty, far removed from confusion and strife, looking down in love and pity on the humblest of his creation, surrounding them all with his marvelous love. As we can not measure the blue depths of the ocean, so we can not comprehend the boundless love of God. “Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God.”—Romans 8:39.

How trifling are the things that claim so much of our thought and time in comparison with the glorious privilege of climbing the heights and gaining a knowledge of God! And this privilege is yours, O saint of God. Far above any worldly advantage is a knowledge of the wonders of God. “The glory of God is intelligence.” No man, however deep his knowledge and worldly wisdom, can fathom that intelligence; but we get a faint glimpse of it in the grandeur of nature and the marvelous strides of science and modern inventions. Job says, “Canst thou by searching find out God?” His ways are past finding out; but vain man in his boundless egotism will acknowledge no power of God in these marvels.

We understand in this age of marvels that God permitted man to delve into the unfathomable mysteries of the unknown, not for the pleasure of man but to bring to pass his glorious purposes, that his wonderful gospel might go to the ends of the earth. In all this we see the glory of his intelligence, both in nature and in science; and he has bestowed intelligence on his creatures, and it is our privilege to use it in gaining a knowledge of him. There are mines of knowledge in the word of God for those who will dig deep. The cares of the world are no excuse for remaining in ignorance. How many homes are without church papers, when some luxury could be dispensed with easily—some article of clothing or table luxury! A Saint’s home without Doctrine and Covenants or Book of Mormon, but probably a novel or a Sunday paper on the stand! It is not hard to judge of the spiritual standing of that home. No intelligent knowledge of God or his work! Content to stay on a lower plane, when God is pleading, “Come up higher!” Content to relate some vision or dream or prophecy given months or years before, and refusing the higher knowledge that comes to the intelligence by a study of God’s word!

How did we get a knowledge of the first principles, of baptism, and laying on of hands? By an intelligent understanding of God’s word. Then, after obeying the gospel, are we going to fold our arms and go to sleep and lose the prize (eternal life) which is given only to those who overcome? He that overcometh shall inherit all things. Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have a right to the tree of life and may enter in through the gates of the city. “And there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie.”—Rev. 21:27.
loration 21:27. If my testimony will not square with my conduct before the world, then my words are only as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. Generations of ancestors long since gone have bequeathed to us their good or bad traits of character, and we are given the task, the mighty task, of overcoming the bad traits and developing a truthful, honest, fearless character before God.

There are different phases and traits of character as there are different nationalities; but all are inherited or acquired, and all must come under the process of development of true character. We must overcome; that is our life task.

From a long line of sturdy Scotch ancestry on my own part, I have inherited a proud spirit that brooks no control; but God gave me some severe trials, and step by step he is leading me all the way. From our human weaknesses, we must rise into stronger character. We are not fighting against flesh and blood but against principalities and powers. (See Romans 8:39.) Powers of darkness, and all the hosts of hell are combined to overcome the weak, trembling saints of God; but "if God be for us, who can be against us?" "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life."

Dear Sisters:—To-day the sky is overcast and the sun obscured; but yesterday, the day of our departure, was beautiful. We gathered up the few hand-pieces we had to take to the ship, and left good Sr. Putney's—where we had been so kindly cared for during our stay in Oakland—about nine o'clock. Sr. Putney, Sr. Young of Livermore, Bro. Charles Crumley, and others accompanied us to the ship. While crossing the bay to San Francisco on the ferry-boat, we discovered that Bro. and Sr. Lake were on the same boat, and we greeted each other gladly; had not met for three days, as they lodged the other side of town.

Notwithstanding the brightness of the day, a momentary sadness filled my heart as we drew near enough to see the barren hills and ghostly walls of the ruined city. We had ridden through it on the street-car the Sunday before, to and from our church, and can only say the imagination can not picture it. Neither do the photographs convey a tittle of its dreadfulness. It must be seen with the eye to be realized. A solemn awe seemed to hover over the whole scene. The somber silence, together with the imposing ruins, the piles upon piles of broken bricks and mortar, twisted iron, pools of water, and sunken earth; all say in a most melancholy voice, "Pity! pity! for the Lord has laid upon us his chastening hand."

But this day of which I commenced to write, we wended our way on foot from the ferry station to the dock at which the Mariposa lay, and saw little of the surrounding gloom.

The Saints of San Francisco, being few in number now, postponed their morning meeting to come to the ship and see us off. Some were on board to greet us, others soon came. And yet others of the Oakland Saints soon joined the company, Bishop Parkin and wife, Bro. J. Cockerton, R. C. Davis.

Bro. Henry Burgess and son from San Jose. All were in the best of spirits; and having gathered early enjoyed a most pleasant social hour before sailing time. Promptly at eleven o'clock the ship's whistle blew and the gong sounded for visitors to go ashore; and in a few minutes we were backing quietly from the pier. No tearful faces, or sad good-byes. Each smiled back at the other, while best wishes were exchanged. Handkerchiefs fluttered in the breeze a few minutes, then faded from sight as our ship sped her way down the bay, and out through the Golden Gate.

There was no sea on the bar and very little beyond; but a side-swell caused the ship to roll slightly, which was not comfortable to Alberta, and she soon hastened to her room. After lunch we too sought our couches. How pleasant to rest the mind and read and be rocked to sleep.

I had the Ensign that contained Bro. Luff's epistle, and communication from the Lord. I had read both a week before, and thought them excellent, yet, knowing my mind was, at the time, more or less preoccupied, I reserved it for rereading at a time of more leisure, and a better could not have been had—the mind altogether disengaged from care or duty, and the heart filled with peace and gratitude to God for his continued favors. And as I read, the same Spirit—I believe—by which they were written, lit up the subject, revealing its truths in a greater light than upon the first reading. And though it showed how far short we as Saints come, of being and doing the things that are pleasing in the sight of our Heavenly Father, my soul was filled with a great happiness in that my work seemed more plain than before, and also in the resolve to square my life more with our heavenly Father's will. Oh, if the spirit that accompanies the reading of messages from on high, would abide permanently, how joyous would be all our duties in this our life-work. But it takes its flight to more congenial environments and leaves one to his own old self again, to conquer and overcome, as he determines. I have folded the dream and laid it aside for frequent perusal.

July 6. A most delightful day, with ocean as smooth as a pond. All the days have been delightful to me. I never enjoyed a sea voyage more. But Sr. Lake can not say as much; though she only kept her bed twenty-four hours, the motion of the ship, the pulsation of the engine, and the shaking of the propeller are not pleasant, and she daily wishes the voyage was over. Bro. Lake has spent his first "Fourth of July" outside of America, and feels as if he had made a notch in his life-line. There was a great bustling about on the part of the waiters on the morning of the Fourth, and by breakfast-time.
the dining-saloon was beautifully decorated. Before the captain sat down to the table he announced that there would be a speech, also singing and prayer in the social hall at ten o'clock, and a program in the evening; and thither all repaired in holiday attire.

Elder Burton was called upon to make the speech, and the prayer. It was his first attempt on a Fourth of July occasion; but it was favorably commented upon by several. The evening was very enjoyable. There are about thirty-one saloon passengers, all very agreeable; two in the second-class cabin, and two in the steerage.

The atmosphere is still very comfortably cool with light clothing; and the deep blue ocean stirred by a gentle breeze, sparkles in the sunshine like a sea of diamonds.

Sunday, July 8. One week at sea. This morning the grand old ocean was all alive: The foam-crested waves were tossed hither and thither by the strong breeze, occasionally dashing a handful on deck, but our good ship heeded not their sportiveness, other than to rock leisurely to the bend of the waves as she plowed her way steadily forward. It is already becoming smooth again, and by midnight she will have resumed her steady pace. Yesterday we passed through the doldrum region, where we were refreshed by a few showers of rain. At the present rate of speed, we will cross the Equator at noon to-morrow, after which we will feel as if we are drawing near to the Islands.

Papeete, Monday, July 18. We arrived here on schedule time Friday morning. And here I exhort, for my pen can not describe our reception: for while it may enumerate the part enacted it can not convey the depth of feeling manifested. But knowing that the Saints in America, and perhaps elsewhere, will be interested to learn the minutest details, I will undertake a description.

As the ship was being warped into the wharf we,—Charlie, Bertie, and I, for Joseph was occupied down-stairs—saw a group of natives a little apart from the rest that I concluded at once were our people. Could not see their faces, but one had the form of Metuareo. Presently Joseph came to the rail and lifted his hat at arm's length. That settled the question of who they were, for there was a lively flutter of hats. There was nothing to do but stand and look, and make signs to each other till the ship was entered, and the mail sent on shore, after which the passengers were permitted to land, during which time most of our people returned to Tarona except Metuareo, and a few of the leading elders. Upon landing we found a carriage drawn by two horses was in waiting to convey us to the chapel. In honor to our devoted people, I will say ours—was the only house all stood upon their feet and commenced singing, answering by Joseph, Bro. Lake, and the writer, with tears and broken voices also. Then came the personal greeting, after which we were conducted to a pleasant little cottage just beyond the grounds. Two rooms, a bed in each, a front and back porch, and a storeroom off the back porch. A table was spread for us on the back porch, and a small center-table with a lamp in the largest room, twelve by thirteen, which gave a far more comfortable appearance than anything we had anticipated, and though we are rather cramped for room, or convenient places for our household goods, since our boxes and trunks have arrived from the ship, yet it is not uncomfortable; for the house is cooled, and there are shade-trees about it, yet not all in the shade.

Our new missionaries, Charlie and Alberta, seem to take to the people and the accommodations of this mission as naturally as ducks to a mill-pond, and we are a happy family. And if poor me did not have to sit in silence while the rest enjoy their pleasant chat it would be happy indeed. Alberta is picking up the language quite readily, so also is Bro. Lake. He is now using up the boxes in fixing shelves for our dishes, has got the oil-stove unpacked and put up, so we will soon get to housekeeping in earnest. Sr. Vira, those paws you gave me after the trunks were packed came in very handy, for we have been cooking over a little camp-fire and they were needed.

The saints have done all they could to make us comfortable. Tarona looks gloomy enough, yet there are a few trees left, but their beauty spoiled for a year or so. Poe's big tree, the largest and most beautiful one on the place, blew over, and has been chopped to pieces, yet the roots are not all torn out, and it is trying to grow. Three of the gate-posts still stand, or rather lean. The fence being all gone, and the little huts built up in all directions so changes the looks of the place that I can not tell where the houses used to be, except that of the missionary house. The two plots of green grass that were in front of the house, and the paved walk is still left, also two coconut-trees, and two other shade-trees at the side that were outside the fence, and a fragment of the bura-tree that shaded the west side of the house. Yet, taking Papeete as a whole, it is not so bad as we anticipated. Having seen San Francisco first, this seems to be a light calamity.

The Saints look about the same. William looks better, for he had to go to work to get something to eat, and it has taken several kilo’s of superfluous flesh off and he looks more comfortable. Motu also has had to go to work. His wife was telling us of it, and laughing as if it were the greatest joke of the season. He never worked for wages before; has always been chopping wood and trading.

There seems to be a good spirit among them all. They speak of the calamity that come upon them, as the “judgments of God.” The Sunday services were very enjoyable; as spiritual, I think as any that we attended in America. Bro. Lake preached at eight in the morning, and Joseph at ten, after which was Sunday-school, and prayer-service in the afternoon. More could not be said by the people here, or done in their present circumstances than has been done to manifest their love, joy, and gratitude. They are always pleased to see new missionaries.

Thursday the mail steamer will leave, and on Friday we four go to Tiona and remain with the Saints over Sunday. All are well. No sickness among the people that I know of.

May faith and good works crown the days of all God’s children.

PONCA CITY, Oklahoma, July 19, 1906.

Editors Herald: I want a little space in your columns to express my gratitude to my heavenly Father, and to all the Saints who gave heed to my request for prayers last April. I was sick nigh unto death, but through the mercy of God in hearing prayers and blessing the administration and means used I am so far restored to health that I made the journey from Akron, Iowa, to Ponca City, Oklahoma, one week ago, and am no worse, but think I am improving. Am taking treatment under Bro. Joseph Luff of Independence, Missouri.

I praise God for showing me the restored gospel and giving me courage to obey the angel’s message given to us in this last dispensation. I still want your prayers that I may hold out faithful to the end of my pilgrimage, for I am isolated, and no longer in the midst of the Saints to get interested in the latter. I am president of the Religio here and find the work very interesting. I do not think of myself as one of the idle things.

Hampton’s, who keeps a boarding-house.

Oh, I never will go back into the world,

No, not I; no, not I.”

How I hope and pray that I may sing by the Spirit of truth,

Let us not be weary, comrades!

Both the aged and the youth.

Let us not be weary, comrades!

My whole desire is to go on to perfection. I stumble sometimes, but He in whom I put my trust is abundantly able to keep me. I know He will not permit me to be tempted above that I am able to bear. At times it seems hard and rough, but the sun is shining somewhere.

Dear Herald: We have just organized a new branch in Douglas County, Washington, to be known as the “Columbia River Branch.” Its personnel at present are G. W. Wilcox, president; J. M. Puckett, priest; Eugene Weeks, deacon. The new branch starts out under very favorable conditions, with fourteen members, others to be added soon, officered by earnest, faithful men of experience who will carry it on to success. The post-office address of these members at present is Mold, Washington, Douglas County. A Sunday-school and Religio will no doubt soon be added. F. J. Chatburn, one of the missionaries, is located here. This is what is known as the “homestead” or the “Big Bend” country of the Columbia River, one hundred and fifty miles west of Spokane. The Spokane branch is still improving, the entire debt on lots has been liquidated; seats only now stand between us and dedication. Saints are usually well and doing well.

Your’s in bonds,

CRESSE, Iowa, July 21, 1906.

Editors Herald: Last spring we moved from the Hazel Dell Branch to the Crescent Branch. We found some noble Saints here who manifest the true spirit of the gospel. The branch is presided over by our aged Bro. C. McIntosh, who has the love and confidence of the Saints, but here as in other branches are many members who do not come out to the meetings. I have asked several why they did not attend meeting and they tell me their feelings have been hurt because they think others have not done right, but, dear Saints, let us not deceive ourselves, for God will not justify us in neglecting our duties because some one else may have neglected his. This work is an individual work and each one will have to stand or fall for himself, and whatsoever we sow we will also reap.

Seven young people were lately baptized here. One was our own little daughter. The others belonged to the Oakdale Sunday-school. This school was organized by Bro. and Sr. Frank Hough and others. There are quite a number of Saints living in that vicinity and we hope there will soon be a branch organized there. They have Sunday-school every Sunday and preaching by some of the ministry. They have bought an organ, and... there is a good interest in the service. I believe there are many such openings where the work could be started if the Saints have courage to start out and see what they can do, and surely the Lord will crown your efforts with success. "Oh, the good we all may do while the days are going by." I have been sorely afflicted since last November. I have been greatly blessed through the prayers of the Saints and the administration of the elders at times, but am still very weak and suffering. I would earnestly ask the Saints to pray that if it is God's will I may be restored to health and strength, and that I may have patience to endure until God shall see fit to heal me. My faith is unwavering in the promises of God, for I know they are true and faithful.

May God bless his people everywhere, and may we strive to come up higher and do all we can to help roll on this glorious work, for surely the end is near.

Your sister in the gospel,

DAVENPORT, Iowa, July 19, 1906.

Editors Herald: As Bro. F. A. Russell has already informed you of the condition of the work in the Tri-Cities, I will only say that we all hope for an improvement. Brn. Russell and Bailey were with us the 15th, Bro. Bailey speaking in the forenoon to the Moline and Rock Island Saints, and in the afternoon to the Davenport Saints, and gave us a splendid sermon. There have been some Utah elders preaching on the streets here on Saturday nights, bragging about their morality; so Saturday night, the 14th, after they were through Brn. Russell and Bailey showed them up to quite a crowd. We could hear praises of our brethren all through the crowd.

While the writer and family were spending the afternoon of the 17th at Black Hawk Watch Tower (a summer resort named in memory of the Indian chief, Black Hawk) I had the pleasure of meeting an old gentleman who claims to have known Joseph the Seer. He said he had slept with him many nights; that Joseph had worked for his father. He told me many things that are true according to history, but other statements were erroneous. He said that Joseph had told him all about the angel appearing to him the first time. Said he had seen the place where Joseph had dug up the plates. I told him that some people believe the Book of Mormon teaches polygamy, and he said if it did that it had been changed, that the original one did not teach it. I told him the Utah elders claim that Joseph introduced polygamy and that he practiced it. He said that was false, that Joseph Smith never had any wife except Emma, and that he had been down to Nauvoo to see them just before Joseph was killed. He said the Utah elders had been to see him and tried to get him to make statements that were not correct, and that he could produce letters they had written him. He said he had never believed in the Book of Mormon, but that if the people would live up to the teachings that Joseph Smith gave them they would all be better off. He told me that Joseph Smith was born in 1805 and that he himself was born in 1806. He said he would like to see the present President of the Reorganization. If any should wish to write to him they can address him as follows: John Dunn, Sears, Rock Island County, Illinois.

Trusting that the Saints will remember us in their prayers, and praying for the advancement of God's cause, I am,

Your brother in the one faith,

HAMILTON, Scotland, July 12, 1906.

Editors Herald: Since last writing the weather has been very nice, and there has been no chance lost to tell the story of the gospel, to my knowledge at least. Three weeks ago I wrote to Bro. J. W. Rushton to try to come to Scotland and he came and stayed two weeks with me, all of which time was well spent for the sake of the truth. The night that we left Hamilton we went to Motherwell, according to request. After waiting until one meeting was over we called the people to order, asking them to kindly hear and then judge for themselves, but before they heard they judged and their judgment was false. They told me that we were chased from America and had left behind from two to thirty wives. We were often interrupted by words like these, "I hope God will open your e'en" (or eyes)! and we were impressed to believe the time is not yet, there at least. So then we went to my native town, called Slamannan. We stayed six nights there and left some good impressions—at least we think we did. I will return there before I come home and will report to Bro. Rushton progress, if any. I find as he said to me that it is like trying to cut granite with a chisel of putty, because of the impression that is left by the church of Utah, and while it is true we can not find one of the Mormon missionaries, yet they have told the story here that they told me in Kansas, that both churches were one. Surely their portion will be with the liars that are doomed to death in Revelation 21:8, because they have been the means of many of our poor worthy brethren being persecuted and cast out of company where otherwise they would have been sheltered in the time of storm. Well, we hope, and let us labor also, for the establishment of the gospel, knowing this is the only means of salvation. We may be persecuted but if we are for righteousness' sake ours is the kingdom of heaven, so the reward will more than repay us for all our labor. As the song says, "Tis only a little way on to my home." I have been told of danger, but I do not see it, and what I do know does not do me any harm. It is easy to get people to hear and we may convince them of the truth, but alas, to obey is the whole secret of God's law to man.

May God help us all to purify our lives according to the law given to us all.

Editors Herald: Seeing in a recent Richmond paper the notice of the death of one who has posed as a prophet, in late years, and thinking it might prove of interest to your readers, I will send a condensed account of his life and works and claims; for to my mind they are only added proofs of the divinity of the work inaugurated through the angel messenger, and by the instrumentality of God's chosen prophets of latter days. It is truly wonderful to note how all structures, built on the shifting sands of man's opinions and theories, are tottering, until there seems to be no safety in any of them. Only that which is a building upon the Rock of Ages, and those who try to found it will standfast. The fall of Dowie most clearly shows this fact to be true; for if strength were in numbers, then they would have succeeded; or if it consisted merely in zeal and enthusiasm for reform, it might have flourished many years yet, until like many other reform movements, it would have a large prestige, and so much popularity that it would live and thrive on these, after the manner of many other dead and alive churches.

William C. Thurman, the founder of the sect of Thurmanites, died in City Home, (in other words, the almshouse,) July 2. His was a remarkable life. At one time in his life he attracted much attention as a latter-day prophet, and had at one time twenty thousand followers, possibly half of whom were in Chicago, where Thurman lived in 1875, when he predicted the end of the world, to take place. But the failure of this prediction caused nearly all of his followers to desert him. While all this was a great disappointment to him and a source of humiliation, yet he never abandoned his theory, claiming the trouble was that he had missed some of the signs of the time, and some of the inspired writers were out of date, and also failed to make just the right astronomical calculations, and thus missed the date by some fifty years. He then fixed a later date at 1917, but about this time Russel appears on the scene, and as there were no failures to count against him, his following absorbed the greater part of the Thurmanites, and Mr. Thurman from that time was a back number. Russel has the end of the age to occur in 1915. It is possible that he used Thurman's theory on which to base his calculations. It is certain that Mr. Thurman's standing as a prophet was based only on his human knowledge—on the shifting sands of scientific calculations, and chronological reckoning. There was no "thus saith the Lord" for a foundation.

Mr. Thurman was born in 1820 in Albemarle County, Virginia. At the age of eighteen he began to preach the gospel according to the Baptist faith, but soon after joined the Dunkards, where he always claimed membership, or fellowship at least; though after he became tainted with Millerism, which was shortly after joining the Dunkards, they seemed to take but little stock in him; and he soon began to preach independent of any church organization. When the world did not end in 1844, according to Miller's predictions, and that prophet retired into oblivion, Thurman began to study out the plan for himself, believing Miller's theory all right, but that Miller had made mistakes in his calculations.

He wrote many pamphlets and books, some of which were very interesting, the cost of publishing being borne by his followers. These were circulated free, the author never clearing one cent by his literary efforts. His most famous book was entitled,—The Sealed Book of Daniel Opened. In this book he claims to have found where Miller made his mistakes, and, correcting those errors, as he thought, he fixed the date for the winding up of mundane things for 1875, specifying a certain day, at which date thousands of people sat upon the roofs of their houses watching for the second coming of the Lord.

When this prophecy failed Mr. Thurman, although so sorely disappointed, still clung to his theories; and, going to Boston, he spent the most of his time for nearly twenty years in the famous public libraries of that city, striving to discover his error in the calculation of his prophetic dates. About ten years ago he announced that the error had been discovered, and 1917 was the correct date for the beginning of the millennium.

Getting old and feeble, and having relatives in Virginia, he came back to the old State and located in Richmond. He had many warm, true friends, who kindly supplemented the small pittance received from his relatives, and he managed to live quite comfortably until, his health breaking down entirely, he became an inmate of the City Home. For many years he spent most of his time in the state library reading and writing, and regular visitors became familiar with the picture of the venerable old man, "sitting for hours, poring over some abstruse problem."

A snap-shot artist came across him one day, and took his picture, which Mr. Thurman said was the only picture he ever had taken.

His death was caused by a fall he had while suffering from an attack of vertigo. His head was injured, and he was never himself again, though he lived about a year after. Mr. Thurman never married.

I have met Mr. Thurman many times. He used to come to Mr. Daugherty's church occasionally, and I think Mr. Daugherty got many of his ideas from him, though not his later-developed ones.

He was a noble-looking old man, with pleasant though penetrating black eyes, snow-white hair, flowing beard, and heavy white eyebrows, and had much of the patriarchal appearance and manner. He claimed all of the churches (orthodox) were the Babylon from which God would and was now selecting his people who were to be caught up to meet the Lord when he comes in 1917. He also believed in divine healing, and carried a little bottle of oil with him to administer to any who might need his administrations.

A lady member of the Apostolic Church was ill with malarial fever. Her husband invited him to take dinner with him one day, and finding the lady ill, he read from James 5, and prayed with her and for her, and anointed her with oil, and she immediately sat up and was healed. I called to see her the next day and she was perfectly well, and was so happy she could hardly refrain from shouting. He claimed that he was commanded to teach healing after this method many years ago.

One thing about him, he was sincere in his belief. He was noted for his humility and for meekness. He never seemed to have any desire for worldly honor or gain, but was consistent in all his life with what he believed and taught, and he had light far beyond that of the average reverends of the orthodox churches. But he is only one more proof of the truth that "man by searching," by his own wisdom alone, can not "find out God," nor understand all his plans and purposes.

Whatever spirit actuated him, it seems never to have been that of self-seeking.

ALICE R. CORSON.

Dear Herald: Some ten days ago I received through Bro. and Sr. Pitcher an urgent request to come to Clear Creek and hold a few services at their schoolhouse, believing that good would result. Being engaged with the tent, assisting Bro. Cook, we felt that if we could get some one else to go, it would be better. Not being able to hear from any of the missionaries, and on receipt of the second request, we decided to divide up for three days, the writer going to Colo July 20. Was met by Bro. W. Pitcher, and we enjoyed a nice ride through the country, and was on hand for our evening appointment. Only a few people were there for our first meeting, but the presence of the Spirit was very apparent to all. The attendance increased until the closing service, Sunday evening. Sunday was a splendid day to all, but brought special joy to Bro. and Sr. James Veach in that their daughter, Mrs. Odessa Hampton, of Nebraska, their son Charles, of Baxter, Iowa, and daughter-in-law, Bessie Veach, were baptized at the close of the Sunday morning service.

We pen these few lines that the many friends of the family may rejoice with Bro. and Sr. Veach in seeing nearly all their family gathered into the fold of God.

These were confirmed at the evening service, which brought a marked outpouring of the Holy Spirit, evidencing divine acceptance and approval of these young soldiers of the cross.

The home was saddened by the death of James H. Veach, who was taken from earth-life May 23, 1906. "Jimmie," as we all called him, was the oldest of the three children mentioned, and husband of Sr. Bessie. They were married only a few months ere the pale reaper claimed the husband, leaving wife, father, mother, two brothers, and one sister, to mourn the loss of the dear one. We pray that God may speak peace to their souls, and bring them comfort in their sorrow.

And, with the Saints, and friends of the family, we rejoice with the parents, in the joy that comes to them in having these their children with them in the kingdom of God. May the Spirit of truth ever guide them in the straight and narrow way.

Yours in the conflict for truth.

W. CHRISTY.

PAPIERTH, Tahiti, July 18, 1906.

Dear Herald: After a pleasant voyage of twelve days, on the steamship Mariposa, Captain Lawless in charge, we landed early Friday morning, the 13th; and our experiences since then have proved the fallacy of the old superstition that when the 13th comes on Friday, it was sure to be an unlucky day for all hands. When within speaking distance of the dock, we heard the pleasant greeting of the brethren gathered at the water's edge awaiting our arrival—"Ia ora na," to each one separately.
As soon as the bridge was in place the brethren kindly came aboard and took charge of our baggage. When freed from the government inspectors, we were taken to a carriage in waiting for us, and driven rapidly to the chapel, where about one hundred of the Saints were assembled to welcome us; and an impressive reception it was, too. Love for Bro. and Mr. Burton fairly beamed from their eyes, and the new missionaries felt in no wise slighted, either; each one trying, as best he could, to show his pleasure at meeting us.

Several of the brethren, one from each of the Islands, refugees because of the storm, spoke feelingly, and displayed much emotion; after which Joseph spoke in reply; the writer and Sr. Emma, in turn, also spoke a few words of appreciation for their kind welcome.

When the speech-making was finished, a general hand-shake was in order, after which we were taken to a rented house for us to occupy until other arrangements are made. An excellent dinner was brought by the brethren from a Chinese cook-house, and much enjoyed by the hungry four; especially by the one that had fasted during a greater part of the voyage. The other three, however, enjoyed good appetites all the way, and have since landing.

We strangers of the party have been agreeably surprised many times, and more especially with the temperature; it being much cooler than we had anticipated. Although this is winter-time this side of the equator, it seems to be much cooler than usual, and we are hoping the change in climate may prove to be permanent.

The white people are also pleased, at Bro. Burton's return, and everyone with whom he was acquainted has given us a cordial reception. Have been quite busy since landing, and consequently have had no time to write to the many friends in America; but hope to write to many of them in time for the next steamer's return.

Ia ora na, outou atoa, (Peace be with you all.)

C. H. Lake.

Cooper Point, Texas, July 29, 1906.

Editors Herald: I received a call dated July 15, by Bro. J. C. Tipton to come to his place in Cherokee County, this State, to baptize some of his children. I started as soon as circumstances would permit, which was on the 22d inst. Arrived at Bro. Tipton's on the 24th; found him and family as well as usual, except some of them having chills and fevers. On the 26th Bro. Tipton hooked his team to the wagon, and away we went to a lake about three miles away. When we arrived at the lake, we found a crowd of fishermen at the place where baptizing is usually done. Bro. Tipton notified the men that we were going to baptize in the lake, and asked them to attend, which they did. I delivered a discourse upon the first principles of the gospel, as we understand them. We had good liberty and attention. We then baptized a young man and lady, son and daughter of Bro. and Sr. J. C. Tipton, the good Spirit being present to the comfort and edification of all, some in one way and others in other ways.

I returned home the 27th, as I am not a missionary this year. I see the missionaries in these parts are still going from branch to branch. When will the world be warned? The Utah elders are doing better missionary work. They go from house to house and teach.

It seems to me that our elders ought to make greater effort to open new places. I have protested and do protest against the course that has been pursued. When will missionaries comply with the law of God in doing missionary work, and when will the world be warned by them? I guess they could have had better turn over the branches and districts to the missionaries, and go out to warn the world in this nation. Of course it is nice to visit branches and district conferences and preach to them a week or ten days at a time. It is all right for a missionary in charge to visit branches and districts and set matters in order, when local authorities can not or will not; but I have never seen or known a missionary that was sent to Texas (that is, our part) that has visited a branch and set anything in order that was wrong, or tried to. Doctrine and Covenants 122:7, 8 they do not seem to know anything about, or do not care anything about what the Lord has said along that line. I see as a rule these missionaries are great defenders for some parts of the Word of Wisdom; especially do they oppose the members using tobacco, and drinking coffee, which is all right; but they ought to be consistent.

In the conflict for right until the end

Boston Items.

Eight of our Boston people attended General Conference (arriving in time to take in the conventions as well), three of them remaining in Zion or her borders, Bro. Holmes J. Davison, his wife, and daughter Bico, whose health is very poor, who with their son Burpee, already a westerner, having spent a year or so in Independence with his uncle and aunt, J. W. Layton and wife, have settled in Holden, Missouri. We are hoping that Burpee and Bico may soon regain their health in that far-off western town.

Charles and Alberta Lake came to Boston from Maine in time to spend two or three weeks with us before starting on their trip across the continent to take ship July 1 for the Society Islands together with Bro. and Sr. Burton, as you all know. We did not see how we could spare them, but felt it to be a wise choice. On the 30th of May, a party of old and young took a trip to Marblehead in their honor, and had a most enjoyable time, but for one thing: in the crowd a crook relieved Bro. Charles of some money. Of course he could not have known it was a Latter Day Saint elder he was robbing, and that he was about to take a long journey. May heaven's richest blessings be theirs and may they set the hand of God directing them in all their ways as well as comforting.

We were much pleased while in Independence in April to again be able to greet Sr. Sheehy and Ruth, with her nice baby boy, William Francis, as well as Arthur Crocker, Bro. and Sr. Bond, Bro. and Sr. John Smith, Walton and Hattie Wood, H. Bullard, and others who had been easterners.

In May we went to Haverhill for our Religio and Sunday-school convention. Boston was best represented, as we were nearest Haverhill. Though the Saints there are few in number, they entertained us royally. They hired the G. A. R. Hall where we held forth, and our meals were served in the same building—meals fit for a king. We do not doubt the ability of Haverhill to entertain.

Another of our Boston young men has taken unto himself a wife. Frank Dobbins and Emma Thayer of Haverhill, Massachusetts, were married in June. Sr. Dobbins is quite a fine violinist—we are hoping they will settle in Boston in the fall.

On July Fourth we had most complete arrangements made for the children's picnic, but alas, the weather was anything but what we wanted, so it had to be postponed until our next holiday, which is Labor Day.

On July 5 Bishop R. Bullard and wife took ship for England, where she will visit relatives, her mother especially, whom she has not seen for over twenty years, and he will remain for some time to do missionary work among his relatives.

But a few Sundays ago we were pleased to have with us Sr. Ada Sanford, from Providence, Rhode Island, Sra. Gertrude and Margaret Wood, of Worcester, and Lucie Sears who was returning home to Cape Cod from her school in Torrington, Connecticut, accompanied by her mother.

Bro. Calvin Rich with his wife and little son are still with us, staying with her people, Bro. and Sr. Busiel; Calvin, the sisters say, is laid up for repairs. He can preach just the same.
On June 28 the Mite Society held a strawberry supper after which a short program was rendered, one number of which was a brief review of the work done by the society in seventeen years since its organization, written by Sr. Bradt. You would be surprised to learn how much the Mites have done.

Sr. Florence Hill is spending the month of July in Maine with friends and will return in time for our reunion.

Not many days hence our eastern reunion will open at TousIsset, Rhode Island, on the salt water, not far below where it was held last year. New York, Philadelphia, and Maine have an equal share and interest now in the reunion with Massachusetts District, and we expect a large attendance.

Bishop Hilliard preached for us last Sunday evening, and Bro. Foss, from Independence, in the morning. Bro. Hilliard will preach to us again on Wednesday evening. President R. C. Evans we expect to be with us next Sunday and a few days next week, when he will attend our reunion.

Bro. R. W. Farrell is expected home from Nova Scotia to attend reunion. We hear U. W. Greene is coming, and hope we have heard aright. F. M. Sheehy will be with us; he has never missed but one of our reunions, he says, and that year he was in California.

Sr. Clara Johnson will soon be taking the train for her western home where she will spend her vacation. She will return to Boston this fall we understand.

Sr. Genesee Lewis is still in New York with friends and relatives, writes as if she might come home for reunion, but it is doubtful, as she has still another place to visit before returning.

July 17.

In the first part of 1905, before General Conference, I had the following dream:

I dreamed I was in a little village or town, that had a nice church-building in it. I was not far from it. My attention was soon directed to some young men ascending. I noticed one more particularly; he was large and seemed to be stout in build. They had not ascended very high, when I thought he should, judging from the speed of his descent.

At once my attention was called to the church-building. I noticed some young fellows near the church who seemed to be playing with toy kites. I noticed that the fire was quite high up in the air, especially one of them, which swung around and set the church-building on fire at the top. The fire spread rapidly on the top of the building, and I commenced to halloo very loudly to notify the fire company to come and put the fire out, while I watched for the fire company to come. They did not come at all. I turned and looked toward the church-building. It was not; for it was burned, and there was nothing left of it but the foundation, and a few bricks that it seemed had been in the building.

These bricks seemed to be more on one side of the foundation, which looked to be very new, with no sign of the fire about it. I looked a short distance away, and saw a man of medium size, and it occurred to me that he was the one who had controlled the fire that had burned the church. He was dressed as a laborer. He got upon the foundation and commenced to use the bricks that seemed to have been in the building that was burned.

Will some one interpret the above dream?

Extracts from Letters.

Louise Mannering, Chickasha, Indian Territory: "If any of the elders can come this way and hold a meeting, we would gladly welcome them. We live about five miles north of Chickasha. The Rock Island Railroad runs through our field. Bro. Willie Mannering stopped on his way to Texas, and preached twice while here. We are all the Saints I know of around here, except Bro. Spencer, who lives in Chickasha. People are mostly Baptists, but I think we could get a very fine hearing at a schoolhouse. Have been here about six years."

Sr. M. A. Christy, Ponca City, Oklahoma: "If there are any Saints here I do not find them. I am a stranger here with the exception of my daughter and family, and they are not in the church. Would be glad to have an elder come here, even if he had to preach on the streets. My daughter's name is Mrs. Laura Hampton. Her son is Roy Hampton, a barber. I am here from Akron, Iowa, visiting my children."

John D. Jones, Kewanee, Illinois: "I would like to inquire if some one of our patriarchs is not soon to come this way, that we as well as others may receive his ministrations. Am thankful to God for his love and mercy so kindly bestowed upon us all through life, and have in us the hope that all will be well 'over there.'"

Maggie Davis, Kingsley, Iowa: "I want to ask a favor of the dear Saints. Please remember my sister Ella Miller in your prayers, as she has a cancer, and is not expected to live."

W. R. Rush, Independence, Missouri: "I know this gospel is of God, and knowing it to be true we are enabled to endure the opposition that so often rises against Christ and his followers, and follow the teachings of the Savior in the fifth chapter of Matthew, to love our enemies, and do good to them that despitefully use us. I want to do all I can for this work, but am in a pressed condition, financially, and can do not very much. I am trying to pay for a home in Independence, but do not see how I can meet the payments, fifteen dollars a month. If any Latter Day Saint wants to buy a home, I will sell to him at a bargain, as I can not meet my expenses and make the payment monthly. I do not want the place to go out of the hands of the Saints. Write to me, if you are interested."

Roxy Cooper, Seminole, Alabama: "We as a little band of Saints are trying to hold to the rod of iron which leads to the tree of life. We still have our Sunday-school and prayer-meetings every Sunday and Wednesday evening. We have just had a time of rejoicing the past week, as Bro. Ed. Powell has been with us, and preached some excellent and encouraging sermons. Dear Saints, pray for me and my family, that we may be confirmed more and more in the one faith."

L. E. Hargrave, Graham, Texas: "I have been sick for six months, most of the time under the care of the doctor, but am better, though not well. I have been previously healed several times, and ask all the Saints to remember me in their prayers that I may now be healed. There have been no elders here since four years ago last May, and we would have been so glad in the last six months to have had an elder come."

Lydia Meeker, Excelsior, Mississippi: "I feel like saying to my brothers and sisters in the gospel that this work is of God. Let us be true to him, for he is true to us. May God bless you all."

G. B. Moss, Seale, Texas: "I am unable to walk, and it gives me great joy to read the HERALD and Book of Mormon. I love the latter-day work, and the faith once delivered to the Saints. The are no Saints here but myself and wife, so you see we have a hard time, as we are persecuted on every hand. Still we try to serve the Master the best we can. Many thanks to the brothers and sisters for so many good letters and remedies for eczema. I am some better."

Jerome E. Wildermuth, Fargo, North Dakota: "This is a very healthful and beautiful country in summer. This is a busy time of year, and it is hard to hold evening services before nine o'clock, and when harvest commences it will be difficult to hold them at all. Our reunion at Leeds was a success. Had the pleasure of uniting in marriage Bro. W. D. Thompson's eldest son, Eber, to Miss Maggie Leeland, July 21."
NAUVOO REUNION.

Sunday was the closing day and the time was well occupied. Three preaching-services were held, and one service each of Religio and Sunday-school. Rain cut down the attendance at the morning services, but the largest audience of the entire week assembled to listen to the closing sermon in the evening, by Heman C. Smith.

"God be with you till we meet again," was sung as the closing hymn, and then the delegates gave themselves the melancholy pleasure of saying goodbye all around.

Every one expressed the thought that the meetings had been successful.

Most of the citizens who attended seemed favorably impressed. One was heard to remark: "I have been around their meetings and have watched them pretty close, and I have concluded that a man has got to be a pretty good sort of a fellow to be one of them."

An occasional "old citizen," wearing a bushel of beard, makes it his business to tell what he "don't know" about "Joe" Smith, and prejudice dies hard; but even here in its very stronghold we are gaining ground.

ELBERT A. SMITH, of Press Com.

Second Quorum of Elders.
I have just mailed a circular letter to each member of the quorum. If any member fails to receive one, please let me know, and I will forward to you another.

F. C. WARNKY, Secretary.
2424 Wabash Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri.

Conference Notices.
Pittsburg District conference will convene at Fayette City, Pennsylvania, September 1, 1906, at 10 a. m., in the Saints' chapel, and continue over the following day. This will be a mass convention, as the delegate system was abrogated at the last conference held at Wheeling, West Virginia. Come and bring with you the spirit of love and good will, with an earnest desire for the uplifting of our cause. Let none have needling in their heart ill feeling for a fellow Saint, neither faultfinding on their tongue, nor a hypocritical mask, or any wish to indulge in animadversion, for these gender not unity and the peaceable things of the Holy Spirit. One item of some importance was left over from last session, namely: the adoption of a rule to deal with the careless and indifferent ministers, not forgetting to provide for the aged, infirm, and those with other reasonable excuse for nonperformance of duty. Every member residing within the limits of the district is hereby requested and urged to submit a report covering his labor for the past six months, or since last reporting. All communications and reports should be sent to district secretary, James Raisbeck, Fayette City, Pennsylvania. Robt. M. Elvin, president.

Okahoma District conference will convene at Piedmont, during time of reunion, Wednesday, August 29, 10 a. m. The question of dividing Oklahoma District will be considered, also the question of district officers. The question of dividing the district should interest all alike, so you can "come over and help us" in the work. R. M. Maloney, president.

Eleventh semiannual conference of the Independence Stake will be held Saturday, September 1, 1906, convening at 10 o'clock a. m. at Hawthorne Station, on the Kansas City and Independence Electric Line, between Mt. Washington and Independence, on the grounds selected by the reunion committee for the annual reunion. Contrary to the usual custom, the conference will precede the reunion, which will follow with a ten days' "special effort" to instruct and please in both spiritual and educational matters pertaining to the church. This will afford the Saints an opportunity to camp out for a few days in one of the beautiful spots in Zion. I especially ask branch officers to mail statistical reports so they will reach me not later than August 20, and according to a resolution passed at last conference they must be in duplicate where the membership is seventy-five or more. Ministry reports should reach me August 15, to insure official recognition. Blank reports are being mailed this week. All come up to the camp of Israel and enjoy yourselves for a season. W. S. Brown, secretary, 2143 Bellevue Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri.

Convention Notices.
Pittsburg District Sunday-school convention will convene at Fayette City, Pennsylvania; entertainment, August 31, to September 7, 7:30 p. m. Business-session September 3, 10 a. m. Secretaries please send reports to Louis A. Serg, secretary, 4025 Eoff Street, Wheeling, West Virginia.

Northeastern Kansas District convention will convene at Fawng, Kansas, August 23, at 2 p. m. Lillian Gowell, secretary, 216 Davies Street, Topeka, Kansas.

Reunion Notices.
To the Saints of the Independence Stake, Greeting: We are pleased to say that we have secured the use of one of the finest groves near Independence for our reunion, beginning with the conference Saturday, September 1, and intend to have able speakers, good lectures, and good singing; provision has also been made for auxiliaries of the church. The aim will be to give a high order of profitable instruction, and to make it a helpful social gathering. Programs will be sent to each branch in due time, for distribution, that all may know of the arrangements made and the regulations governing. We wish it to be successful, and hope to have a large attendance from the various branches throughout the stake. Come with feelings of friendliness, with prayer, with joyfulness, and scatter sunshine everywhere; let each contribute to make it what he desires it to be. The workers, earnest workers for the Master, will receive the greatest benefits, therefore let us all work and pray, and our hearts will be made happy. The afternoon exercises are provided with the thought that those who wish may gather for intellectual improvement; not that all will be expected to attend, though all will be welcome who do so, but it is left for each to choose in the matter, and those who may desire to engage in some useful labor will not feel hampered, but at liberty to do as they choose. But at all the regular preaching- and prayer-services, as many as can come we wish to have present. We have made arrangements with the Baker & Lockwood people, of Kansas City, for different sized tents, as many as may be needed. 10x12, 3 foot wall, $1.50; 12x14, 3 1/2 foot wall, $2; 10x14, 6 foot wall, 2.50; 12x14, 6 foot wall, $3; 12x16, 6 foot wall, $3.50; 12x20, 6 foot wall, $4. We shall have plenty of cots and camp-stools on the ground that can be used for tents. Any reason for not having tents takes a little time to place the orders. A commodious dining-tent will be run on the grounds, where we expect to supply the needs of the inner man, at 15 cents per meal. There will be no objections to any coming who desire to do so, and furnishing their own tent, and boarding themselves during the reunion; but come anyway and have a time of rejoicing with us. When you decide what you wish to do, send your wishes to Elder J. W. Wight, minister in charge, and Heman C. Smith, together with the missionary force of the district, are expected to be with us. Chas. H. Burr, chairman of committee.

In the notice of two-day meetings for Southern Indiana, in issue for July 18, an error occurred in date for Plainville Branch. It should read the 22d and 23d of September, which are Saturday and Sunday, instead of September 24 and 25, which are Monday and Tuesday.

LYNCH.—George H. Lynch was born in Massachusetts the twenty-first day of September, 1830; was baptized June 10, 1835, by Elder Levi Phelps, at the church in N. C. Illinois. Elders of the Chicago Railroads, please take electric-car line on West Electric Street going direct to the ground, and the conductor will direct you. Ample provision will be made on the ground for teams. Feed will be furnished at cost, plenty of water on ground. Collection will be taken at the reunion for the general expenses. We have decided not to have a boarding-tent this year but will have a camp-meeting the first and second days of the reunion. Come to the stake conference and stay during the whole time of the reunion. Would like to hear from those wishing to engage tents as soon as possible so that we may put in our order early. We shall have the largest auditorium tent we have ever had at any reunion. Everything will be made as pleasant as possible for those who may gather. For further information and directions write to R. May, Independence, Missouri. G. E. Harrington, for committee.

Final Notice of the Colorado Reunion: The first service will be held Friday morning, August 17, at ten o'clock. Friday, the 24th, will be occupied by the Religio and Sunday-school conventions; conference will follow on Saturday and Sunday. Aringtonton Park is in the south part of Denver on Harman Street car line. It is well supplied with shade, water, and lights. Tents, 10x12 or 12x14 furnished, set up and taken down, for $3 for the whole time. Write Bro. E. P. Shupe, 3293 Clayton Street, Denver, at once for tents. Bring bedding and straw-ticks. Board will be furnished at the dining-tent as cheaply as possible, but you may board yourself if desired. Good speakers will be in attendance and good music provided. Bring your Hymnal and Zion’s Praises. A successful reunion is assured. Come for the whole time if possible, and send word to others. If you cannot come, pray for those who do, that the Lord’s kingdom may be extended. Emsley Curtis, chairman, Bryant, Colorado, Charles A. Gurwell, secretary pro tem., Frisco, Colorado.

With the knowledge and consent of the ministers in charge, Elders Fred A. Smith and H. N. Hansen, there will be a camp-meeting near Bethany, Oklahoma, commencing September 28, called Autum Leaves. This meeting will be held on Clear Creek, in a shady grove; beautiful stream of water, and spring near by. Abundance of pasture for stock, with but little cost. Every effort will be made to make this a profitable meeting. We have chosen a place where the Saints will be more free from rush of farm work. We hope to have a good attendance of the Saints. Come prepared to attend from first to last. The Beaver Co. tent will be used. Those coming will need to provide their own bedding. It will be difficult for the committee to procure tents. Those coming by rail will write Elder C. H. Blakesley, Bethany, Oklahoma, who will arrange to meet them at Gage, the nearest railroad point. That this meeting may continue on definite time, we ask those who intend going to make your intentions and needs to arrive early. The date set is September 28, 1906, at his home in Flint. Being thrown from a buggy caused his death. He lived a faithful, consistent life, and was loved by all who knew him. He leaves a wife and five children to mourn their loss. Funeral from home. Interment in Avontine Cemetery. Funeral remarks by E. J. Good-enough.

"Why," said Kimball, throwing away an asbestos toothpick, "make a call for tithing."

Senator Spoon walked down the path, which was fresh with the dew of early morning. He paused in astonishment as he beheld a small pursuing his leisurely way along a twig.

"Why do you go so fast?" he queried, "I had always heard that you were very slow."

"I know not why you ask," said the snail, "I am proceeding at my usual gait, about an inch an hour."

"Surely," replied the Senator, drawing his hand across his brow, "I have been meeting with the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and your speed seemed frightful."

Wellman's Polo Airship.

Although there have been no material developments in aeronautical matters since our last review, there has appeared an increasing interest in all that pertains to aeronautics. An example of that interest appears in the plan again to attempt to solve the secret of the North Pole by a voyage through the air. It is now nearly ten years since the ill-fated André left Spitzbergen, never again to be seen. But André's balloon was but a drifting gas bag, while Mr. Wellman now proposes to make the attempt in a modern dirigible balloon, constructed according to the latest experiences of Santos-Dumont, Renard, Surcouf, Hervey, and other experts. It is believed that by starting from North Spitzbergen, the journey can be made in about ten days, and that it may be possible to construct a machine capable of remaining in the air from twenty to twenty-five days. The expedition, which is planned under the auspices of a Chicago newspaper, is on a large scale, the estimated cost being $250,000, and a staff of thirty-five men being required for the equipment. The general plans for the dirigible have been made by M. Louis Godard, the balloon being fifty metres in length, and having a diameter of nearly forty metres. When inflated with hydrogen it will have a lifting power of more than 7,000 kilogrammes, or nearly 16,000 pounds. Two motors, one of fifty and one of twenty-five horse-power, are to be used, and since the art of gasoline-motor construction has reached a point of being worked out most carefully in detail, with the endorsement of such a body as the board of managers of the National Geographic Society, the expedition is given a scientific status which distinctly above anything of the kind which has hitherto been attempted.—Henry Harrison Stupic, in the July-September Forum.

Canned Rhubarb.

Pare the rhubarb and cut into one-inch pieces, using a silver knife. Pack solidly into a jar, put under the cold-water faucet and let the water run for twenty minutes; then adjust the cover. I have asked many chemists why rhubarb could be preserved in this manner, but have received a satisfactory reply. As a matter of fact, I have known rhubarb so treated to keep from one rhubarb season to the next.—Fannie Merritt Farmer in Woman's Home Companion for August.

The July Arena contains a number of extremely interesting papers, among which are three characteristic ones: one dealing with Governor Albert B. Cummins who is described as "a statesman who places the interests of the people above the demands of privileged classes." It is by Professor Lewis Worthington Smith of Drake University. The other two have been prepared by the editor of the Arena, the first dealing with "William Jefferson Proctor: A practical idealist who is achieving a great work in redeeming drunkards," and the other dealing with "Edward W. Redfield: an artist of winter-locked nature." Fine portraits of Governor Cummins and Judge Pole- latzki accompany the papers, and the study of Mr. Redfield, the famous artist of winter-locked nature, is illustrated with a number of admirable half-tone pictures. Another interesting illustrated paper is entitled "Bambies in Switzerland," by Carl S. Vroman, but the literary feature of the number that will probably attract the most attention is Professor Archibald Henderson's luminous paper on "Aspects of contemporary fiction," one of the keenest and, we think, the most discriminating and informing essays of recent months. The essay which will probably elicit the most general attention, is entitled "Child labor, compulsory education, and race-suicide," contributed by William French of Washington. In it the author tentatively advocates the pensioning of all school children during the school-age. Of special interest to friends of democracy and political reform are the papers by Ex-governor Lucius F. Goodell of Rhode Island on "Solving the labor problem," chapter three of "A primer of direct legislation," prepared by Eltweed Pomeroy, Robert Tyson and Ira Cross, and dealing with the "recall," "proportional representation," "the absolute majority method," and the "direct primary," and the thirty pages of trenchant criticisms of present-day political and economic conditions, by Mr. Flower, which constitute the department of "In the Mirror of the Present. There is also an extended and informing essay, entitled "The most important recent work on higher criticism," being an extended review of Professor Otto Pfleiderer's Christian Origins, by the editor of the Arena.

For the kingdom of heaven is as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods. And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey. Then he that had received the five talents went and traded with the same, and made them other five talents. And likewise he that had received two, he also gained other two. But he that had received one went and digged in the earth, and hid his lord's money. After a long time the lord of those servants cometh, and reckonneth with them. And so he that had received five talents came and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliv­erest unto me five talents: behold, I have gained beside them five talents more. His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord. He also that had received two talents came and said, Lord, thou deliv­erest unto me two talents: behold, I have gained two other talents beside them. His lord said unto him, Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord. Then he which had received one talent came and said, Lord, thou deliv­erest unto me one talent, and I went and hid thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou hast that is evil. His lord answered and said unto him, Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that thou hast not sown, and gathered where thou hast not strewed; and I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou hast that is evil. His lord answered and said unto him, Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strewed: thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the ex­changers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury. Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents. For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance; but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath. And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

It seems that we have stirred up a deal of comment and opposition in reference to this parable, one writer going so far as to virtually discard the para­ble as a whole, and another to set aside that part referring to the unprofitable servant. We have quoted it entire, beginning at the fourteenth verse, and closing at the thirtieth.

The twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth chapters of Matthew deal largely with the end of the world and the future state. Passing from the consideration of the servant whom the Lord at his coming will find oppressing his fellows, the twenty-fifth chapter takes up the burden of the Savior's teaching in two parables, the ten virgins, and the one for which we are called in question as to our use of it.

If the parable has any meaning, it is because the Savior used it in teaching the value of faithfulness, and the result of unfaithful occupation in the things intrusted to men. If Jesus had no reference to the kingdom of God, why did he say, ‘The kingdom of heaven is as a man traveling into a far country’? The parable and Christ’s after-teaching connectedly, are with reference to the kingdom. In the parable of the ten virgins, Jesus said, “Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins; in the parable under consideration he said, “The kingdom of heaven is as a man,” etc.

To those who do not like the parable as we see it, we commend the reading given in Luke 19:11–26 inclusive. In this version of the transaction, the man was a “nobleman,” one who had honor, place, and fame. We have the undoubted right to assume that he was a wise man. Nothing in the story shows anything to the contrary. He had cities to dispose of as stated in Luke; and the fact that he received his kingdom and was able to reward or punish is evidence that he was a wise administrator. Jesus’ use of the circumstance is an indorsement of the character of this nobleman; for immediately he proceeds to state what shall take place at the end when men appear to answer for their stewardship. If the act of rewarding for occupying upon the talents given is justifiable, so is the punishment with great loss to the man who accused his lord of being hard, and a gatherer of what others had sown. Matthew’s version says this man, who feared his lord, was told that instead of hiding the money in the earth he should have put it to the exchangers. Luke states that the lord told this servant that he should have put the money “in the bank,” so that there might have been an increase, a reasonable interest, call it usury if it suits your argument the better. But we are not dealing, or doing business, under the old law, the Jewish economy, but under the gospel economy. And if one portion of that law is binding, so is every other part, and under it we will have the slave, or perpetual servant with his ear pierced by an awl against a door-post, the yearly feasts, the jubilee year, and all the whole long list. Whence then goeth the Spirit?

Once again we refer to the condition referred to when men shall sit under his own vine and fig-tree. The prophet Micah in his fourth chapter has the following:

But in the last days, it shall come to pass . . . But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig-tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it.—Micah 4:1, 4.

The word own is not in the text; nor is it needed. If every man shall sit under his own vine and under his fig-tree, the pronoun his covers the whole ground. If it is his it is his own: no other has claim upon it, no one can oust him of his possession; and it is to be in the time when the “mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountain.” That is after the toil and turmoil of this life are over, and the bad economics of this worldly condition have been eliminated by the better rule of Christ, who will rule in love and power.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

President Joseph Smith’s address hereafter will be 1214 West Short Street, Independence, Missouri. Correspondents please take notice.

Some of the brethren seem to be persistent in classing a bank as a nonproducer. Have they failed to study the way in which banks are run by the world? Given a community of twenty thousand moderately well-to-do citizens, a bank can produce, in a decade or two, by worldly methods, two or three millionaires, several hundred paupers, two or three hundred poverty-stricken families, as many prosperous ones, and three or four score of criminals.

Did some one throw out a challenge to point a single betrayal of trust by a banker? How about the president of the Chicago bank who, it has developed in the last few days, has absorbed $1,003,000 of the earnings of 22,000 needy families by forging about two hundred names of his friends and creditors to worthless notes, and holding uncancelled notes, which had been paid, to be classed as assets by the examiner?

It may be possible for Latter Day Saints to run a bank in a perfectly upright and honest way. If they do, however, it will not pay big dividends to the stockholders for their accumulation, but rather an amount about equal to the elders’ family allowance, if they need it; if not, less. Only a few months ago we heard a brother say, very enthusiastically, that his investment in a certain bank (not in either of the millionaires, several hundred paupers, two or three hundred poverty-stricken families, as many prosperous ones, and three or four score of criminals.

Hello! did any one say anything about usury?

‘Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill of Zion? . . . He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent.’—Psalm 15:1, 5.

In the selected article department of this issue will be found an interesting and able book-review from the pen of B. O. Flower, editor of the Arena, one of the most progressive and staunch defenders of the rights of the people of all the periodicals which reach our exchange table.

This article, “The menace of privilege,” ought to be carefully read and pondered by every member of the church. As a people, we expect, sometime, to be instrumental in the hands of the Almighty in bringing about and establishing the principle of equality. That we have been given this work to do, by revelation, is a recognition of the fact that inequality exists. If inequality exists, there is a cause for it. If there is a cause for it, it is our business to learn as much as possible about that cause. This is absolutely necessary in order that when we have made a start in the important work lying before us, we shall not, because of being ignorant of the causes of inequality, keep constantly drifting back into the meshes and the gutters of inequality. Unless we make ourselves acquainted with these things, we never can be effective in bringing about equality, worlds without end. "The menace of privilege" assists us to understand the cause of inequality. We apprehend that it may be classed with the "good books" we are commanded to study. "Privilege" will as surely bring about inequality in Zion as any other place. If one man is "privileged" to live in idleness and luxury in Zion, because of worldly accumulations, or position, or name, it will be but a short time before some one else will be living that way, then another, and so on, and we will drift right back into our present conditions. Thus you see the necessity of a consecration of all above our needs and just wants before it is possible to be Zion, and a subsequent consecration of our increase, whenever we obtain more than our needs and just wants, in order that we may continue to be Zion.

Bro. John Zahnd is laboring in the interests of prohibition in Indiana. The prohibition platform of that State has some good planks in it, and is entitled to credit. It stands for, "No license—high or low," "Purity in politics," "No private profit from public funds," "Reduction of all excessive salaries of state and county officers, and abolition of fees," "Two cent fare," "Law enforcement," "Initiative and referendum," and "Right of suffrage to all citizens upon the same conditions." From a press report we take the following: "On Saturday night last, by appointment, John Zahnd addressed a meeting at Wirt, Jefferson County, held in a church which was crowded. His theme was the responsibility resting upon the Christian voter. A basket-meeting, with three ministers present to preach, was held the next day. But the committee urged Mr. Zahnd to occupy the evening hour, and most of his audience was composed of license-party voters. A good many of these, however, will not so vote hereafter if they remain true to what they told the speaker. Mr. Zahnd was asked to come again on August 25, to an old settlers' meeting, with the assurance that he should be heard for a Prohibition talk. People are getting tired of old-party bossism and are resolving that the saloon must leave Indiana."

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 28.—The influx of Jews into Palestine during the last few months has been remarkable.

Some weeks ago about 5,000 Jewish immigrants from Russia and the Balkan states landed at Jaffa. They are settling in the plain of Sharon, round the towns of Ramleh and Lydda, and in other Jewish colonies along the sea coast.

A few weeks ago some Jewish financiers made a trip to the region east of the Jordan, in the direction of Kerak. They saw the land, and were highly satisfied with its fertility and the nature of its soil. They are willing to colonize the district, but are rather suspicious of the neighboring Bedouin tribes, who are averse to any permanent settlement being effected in their midst.

It is believed that the Jews are in communication with the government on the subject, and should the latter give them sufficient guarantee of protection against the raids of their neighbors the sale of large tracts will soon be completed.

It is a noteworthy fact that some of the most fertile districts of Palestine are possessed by Jewish colonists. The Jews are repossessing the land by degrees, and should this quick rate of possession continue, the whole country will in a few years belong entirely to them.—Houston Post.

Strength of character is not mere strength of feeling; it is the resolute restraint of strong feeling. It is unyielding resistance to whatever would disconcert us from without or unsettle us from within.—Dickens.

Service of Song.

(Gathered from Doctrine and Covenants 119.)

The service of song in the house of the Lord,
If united in spirit we cling,
Is accepted with God and is blessed to the souls
Of the hearer and those who may sing.

But the singer whose heart with sadness is stirred,
And the hearer who's bitter in soul,
Are displeasing to him; though charming the notes,
'Twere better the song to withhold.

Let the young men and maidens to whom have been given
The sweet gifts of music and song,
Fail not to make use of their talent to bless,
And speed the glad message along.

And those who are older are not to forget
The gladness and joy of their youth;
But be cheerful in warfare while here upon earth,
And rejoice in the triumph of Truth.

And let not the organ or instrument sound,
When Saints meet to sing and to pray,
Lest the tender of feeling with sadness be stirred,
And grieve the bless'd Spirit away.

AFRAID OF OUR OWN SHADOW.

The careful student, who endeavors to harmonize some of the editorials and communicated articles appearing in the official organ of the church with the spirit and genius of this latter-day work, is frequently confronted by insurmountable barriers.

Frankly, I am unable to account for some of the weak and illogical excuses made in defense of the present social order, unless it is that the writers in question have become so accustomed to follow the way of the world that, like the man of proverbial vision, they are afraid to let go, notwithstanding in "holding on" we are being led to our financial and social death.

A recent editorial in the HERALD, entitled "Are there lions in the way," seemed to me so unaccountably inconsistent that my first inclination was to lay the paper down in sheer dejection of spirit. On second thought, I concluded to carefully reread and search for some hidden meaning. This only magnified the inconsistency.

Why is it that nearly every writer in the church defending the present social order misconceives the motives and position of those who are seeking to inaugurate a better one? Surely no man in the church stands for the "common stock" plan of Lyman Wight and others, and yet writers in the HERALD have made attack on "all things common" because Joseph Smith at that time repudiated this visionary and undesirable scheme which was no more like the "all things common" plan of the New Testament and Book of Mormon times than night is like day.

It must be borne in mind that at the time the disciples adopted "all things common," it was just after the crucifixion; they were practically nomads. They were persecuted to the extent that it became an essential feature of their work to dispose of all earthly property and band together for self-protection. Though they consecrated all, the bishop at that time could not give them an inheritance, so there was only one thing for him to do, and that was to supply their wants out of the common treasury. Had he been in a position to give them inheritances, then the law as portrayed in the Doctrine and Covenants could and would have been enforced.

The plan was practically the same. It was the same in Book of Mormon times. Let me then ask, Who has ever advocated an "absolute level of equality," or, in other words, uniformity of life and social relationship? Have we not one and all contended most strenuously that "to labor is the normal condition of man"? These writers in the HERALD referred to in this editorial have been very tenacious in urging this thought. Then why this special caution? The editorial is so worded that the only conclusion the reader can take is that these writers have overlooked or ignored these points. The opposite is true. We have been the most persistent in urging these things. We surely object to some idlers living off the product of the men who toil. Who is an idler? A man who does not work. In other words a nonproducer. Unfortunately too many writers apply this solely to the shiftless, ignorant underworld who are more sinned against than sinning. What about the men who by stealth and selfish aggrandizement have appropriated the means of life, and live, leech-like, on the back of the toilers of the world?

We object to conditions which make it possible for one man to dictate the who, when, how, and what of labor to another: who shall labor; when he shall labor; how he shall labor; and what he shall receive in return for his toil. The wage system as now understood and applied in the world is both unscriptural and unjust. Every employer of labor seeks to arrange conditions so that he may realize a profit off the labor of every one of his employees. If he did not do this he would naturally go out of business. If he takes the product of the toiler, which represents so much value to him, and gives him less in return, he has dealt unjustly with the other man. He surely has not enforced the golden rule, "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." If you were working you would desire to receive all you earned. Then being an employer of labor, the only way you can enforce the golden rule is to give the toiler exactly what you would desire to receive if conditions were reversed. This realized, the wage system would, of itself, be solved.

In the building up of Zion we should, just as rapidly as possible, get away from these conditions. The church can not change the world. It can not change all of the conditions in the world; but neither the church nor its representatives should be a party to the present system of confiscation and injustice by introducing or sanctioning in its initial steps toward the gathering the very things which have and always will make for social inequality and injustice.

The rights of property as against the rights of man, as it is generally interpreted in the world to-day, is wholly subversive of divine ethics, and which the church must eschew. No man in all the world has a justifiable title deed to any natural commodity, whether it may be land, water, mineral, air, or light, save it has been given him of God, said gift always being conditional; the fulfilling of said conditions always determining the duration of occupancy. While it may literally be conceded that every man will possess enough of the land for his own needs and no more, it will be held by them as a gift from God subject to his sovereign power and kingship.

Real estate speculation, fictitious land values, mortgages, usury, interest if you please, all of these things will and can not build up Zion. We will have about as much use for the banking system in Zion redeemed as a grown babe has for the cradle of his youth. Let me assure you we do not believe in "dividing up." We do not care at all for the fictitious or real wealth of the men who have, neither do we parade the virtues of those who toil. We are, however, bitterly opposed to the present arrangement wherein the toilers of the world are always compelled to "divide up" and give the lion's share of the product of their toil to men who do no work.

What possessed the writer of this editorial to misquote scripture? Where do you find this passage, "dividing up,"? The word own is not there. This word own makes quite a difference in the meaning. It is a significant thing that throughout the whole line of thought connected with God's plan of redemption, that of private ownership of God's gifts is ignored. True, men will inherit and occupy. As an inheritance, they will retain and hold subject to the terms of the inheritance; but the right to rent, barter, and sell and speculate upon will be tabooed. Take these privileges of private property away, "rent," "sell," "speculate," and the desire to perpetuate is forever gone. I recognize so long as we are living under the law of the land we would of necessity willingly honor it.

The church in giving an inheritance to-day could, however, place restrictions in the deed. In all large cities there are restrictions in the article of conveyance, such as prohibiting the sale of intoxicants, or the cost of the improvements and many other things. It does not invalidate the transfer.

1. Men will not rent land in Zion.
2. Men will not barter and sell land in Zion.
3. Men will not speculate on land in Zion.

If these things will not obtain in Zion, then their adoption now will retard rather than advance its coming. The "mine" and "thine" of property will be meaningless under a proper adjustment of human relationship.

The rich man drinks. I have never read a homily in the Herald advocating that because a rich man drinks we should appropriate his property; and yet the editorial in question practically urges that because a poor man drinks he is responsible for his poverty. Is this writer not aware of the fact that labor is a commodity bought and sold in the open market? That the tendency of those who control is to force the wage to the level of human needs? If labor unions are formidable and resist, then prices are forced upwards.

Frances Willard, after spending her life in the cause of temperance, said in one of her last utterances that, wherein she had always thought that intemperance was the cause of poverty, experience had taught her that more frequently poverty was the cause of intemperance. Rich men drink and still remain rich. Poor men drink and still remain poor, so this argument counts for nothing. The rich, well-to-do people spend more money proportionately for the tabooed articles mentioned than do the poor, and they are increasing in wealth, while the poor are, if anything, poorer. Intemperance is not the leading cause. Is it intemperance that is sending thousands of comparative babies to premature graves working in the cotton-mills of the South? Is it intemperance that forces women and girls to work for a pitance per week in all large cities?

Is it not a fact that the membership of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as a rule are the most temperate people in the world? Is not drinking, tobacco-, tea-, and coffee-using the exception and not the rule among our people? Then it must follow, according to the logic of this writer, that they should be the possessors of great wealth. What are the facts? As a church we are among the comparatively poor of the world. I assert without any fear of controversy or consistent refutation that the man who adheres to the just application of the law of life as enunciated by Jesus will be poorer so far as this world's goods are concerned than the man who stifles conscience, satisfies appetite and passions, and rushes in, giving his selfish nature the reign in the acquirement of property. This contention then fails to the ground.

When the writer of this editorial spoke of "dividing up," he apparently failed to consider that the circulating medium was only a drop compared with the great wealth of the country which labor has produced. It is sheer folly to talk of dividing up, if we leave open the very means whereby inequality has been perpetuated. Why talk of dividing up? No honest man in the church believes in it or wants it. We do protest against the conditions to-day whereby certain men are privileged to hold the public up and extort what they please. We are dividing up now. We want it abolished. If you want oil or gasoline, who decides what you are to pay? Standard Oil. What do you pay for it? Anywhere from five to fifteen hundred per cent more than it costs them for actual production. If you want meat, who decides the selling price? Meat trust.

We recognize that vested privileges are responsible largely for the present inequality. We recognize that whenever the dollar or property is placed above the man, it eventuates in slavery. Then can you blame us when we see articles in the church papers upholding the present order and misapplying scriptural passages to do service in excusing the financial injustice and inequality in the world, if we feel called upon to protest? We do not question others' motives. They see it one way, we another. Their view is dependent upon environment, largely. So is ours. Some men read only one side. We try to read both.
At least we do not attempt to criticise the other side until we have studied it.

If Zion means anything to us, it is the bringing about of conditions whereby there shall be no rich and no poor among us, and we will live together in love. There will be no rich because the thing which makes for the selfish accumulation of property will be eliminated; no poor because they will be made self-reliant and self-helpful and afforded the means to earn their living, and to retain it after they have earned it. There is one eternal fact, and that is that labor produces all wealth.

There will be no real wealth in Zion aside from the legitimate product of toil. There will be no bonds and stocks whose value consists only in the future privilege to extort tribute from toil. Stocks and bonds have no other real value.

According to one writer in the Herald advocating the holding of bank stock, the only ambition on the part of the holder would be to use the God-given ability to increase the real wealth of the church. I am willing to bank my whole argument on this one proposition. I call upon the brother to point out one instance in all the history of the world wherein a bank, following its legitimate sphere of banking, has created one cent’s worth of real value to the wealth of the world. They make some men richer; but they do it at the expense of some one else. In other words, they create no real value.

Suppose we have a community of ten thousand Latter Day Saints. Among these are represented all the productive agencies. Aside from this there is a bank. Some brethren take stock in the bank, of course only to increase the real wealth of the church; for they would spurn to use their ability for selfish aggrandizement. They propose to consecrate and reconsecrate according to the provisions of the law. Twenty years pass away. The assets of the bank now have increased five hundred per cent. Let me present an axiomatic truth. For every dollar of increase in the holding of the bank, the toiling patrons are that much the losers. How have the bank-stock holders helped the church? If the bank consecrated all of its surplus annually, it would then be a roundabout and unnecessary way to God’s storehouse. If not, then both church and individual have been victimized.

Stocks, bonds, chattel mortgages, etc., represent no real value. We know the church can not control the trusts. We can avoid those things which have made the trust possible. An unequal advantage to one man, when successfully followed up, means the eventual supremacy of that man above all his fellows. Do some of the writers in the Herald think we are all children when they urge that certain kinds of stock companies are the only way we can do business? The Government does not proscribe co-operative effort wherein it allows of the individual being the unit of power instead of the dollar. It places no limit upon the determining policy of the institution save that sufficient guarantee be given the state that the interests of the investor will be protected.

Would you make Zion prosper? Then organize with a view to giving labor all it produces in supplying the consuming Saints the products of the institution at cost of production and distribution. We have plenty of stock companies in the world now who make money off the toilers for the stockholders. We must reverse the plan and institute stock companies of the toilers, for the toilers, by the toilers.

Private property in the essential elements of human life is untenable, unscriptural, and unjust. What I mean by this is the private holdings whereby one man controls more than he needs, resulting in depriving another of what he needs. If every man sits under his vine and fig-tree, and plants and eats the fruit thereof, the menace of private holding to-day will be for ever gone. Then holders of bank or any other stock would starve to death if they depended upon that stock to yield them a living.

The rights of property should always be subservient and secondary to the rights of man.

Interest, wherein one man takes more real value than he confers, is unscriptural; so likewise is the wage system whereby the man who toils is dependent upon the whim and caprice of his employer. Everywhere when wages are referred to in Bible or Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord emphasizes that the toiler should receive all he earned.

The Bible throughout condemns usury. God told Israel, “If thou lend money to any of my people that is poor by thee, thou shalt not be to him as a usurer.”

—Exodus 22: 25, 26. “And if thy brother be waxen poor, and fallen in decay with thee: then thou shalt relieve him; yea, though he be a stranger, or a sojourner; that he may live with thee; thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor lend him thy victuals for increase.”—Leviticus 25: 36, 37. You will observe that the Lord condemns lending to the poor for increase. He goes still farther. “Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother; usury of money, usury of victuals, usury of anything which is lent upon usury.”—Deuteronomy 23: 19, 20.

These two passages eliminated the usury question among the Israelites. When I speak of usury, I use it in the sense they did: “Anything taken for the use of.”

True, in this last chapter the Lord says: “Unto a stranger thou mayest lend upon usury, but unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury.” The consistency of this is in the fact that if they had lent to the aliens in the surrounding country as to their brethren they would have been spoiled; the Lord did this for their protection.

The Psalmist David indicating the character who would be worthy to inhabit Zion gave this as one of the chief essentials: "He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent."—Psalm 15:5.

And now the parable of the talents. This isolated passage is the stock argument of all individualists. What right has the author of this editorial to call the "lord" of the parable "wise"? Christ never called him wise. The book does not say he was wise. Christ was here representing a principle as in all other parables. Christ did not say that God was going to deal his children as the lord dealt with his servants; in fact in the closing verses of the chapter he shows he will not. There is nothing to show that Christ indorsed the action of the nobleman. The inspired Translation shows that this nobleman did not illustrate the King (God), or his kingdom. What was it Christ likened to this nobleman and his servants. The people prior to the coming of Christ. He said some would have oil in their lamps; some would not. Some had done what they could; others had neglected their opportunities and were worthy of censure. If you stand for a literal comparison and analysis, then the oil represents money. Will money in any sense acquit me before the Master when he comes? The illustration of the talents was simply this: When our Master gives us something to do, and we do what we can, he will reward us: if we fail to do what we can, he will punish us. Why, Christ only wanted to show them how reasonable this was, and he took an earthly experience to illustrate it. These talents have nothing to do with God's methods of reward. You will notice that in the case of the earthly lord reward was predicated upon acquisition. Now follow the beautiful picture presented by Jesus in verses 22 to 47 and you will then discover that when the Son of Man will come in his glory, reward will be predicated upon "giving." The man who contributes to the wants of his fellow will receive the divine commendation. Quite a contrast between this and this mercenary earthly lord who judged his servants by the amount of gold they rolled into his coffers. Again, this nobleman admitted that he was a hard man, and reaped where he sowed not and gathered where he had not scattered. Please do not associate the God whom we adore with such as this. There is no comparison between this earthly lord and the divine Savior who taught, "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them"; the Being who said these words could not countenance "speculation." I do not see how the writer of this editorial could advocate "speculating," when the Lord through his chosen mouthpiece at this last conference said, "The spirit of speculation, the exhibition of greed for gain is unseemly in the Saints and officers of the church and should be avoided." Here the Lord condemns the "spirit of speculation" and tells us to avoid it, and yet hardly three months afterwards we have an editorial in the Herald advocating it. Thank God for a prophet to reveal his will to men.

Speculate: "To purchase goods, stocks, or any other commodity in the expectation of a rise in price, and of selling the goods to an advantage by reason of such advance; to engage in speculation. Frequently used of engaging in unsound and hazardous business transactions."

These are the things which God condemns in the last revelation. This writer in the Herald indorses speculation. He endeavors to show that the Lord favors it. I unequivocally deny that God countenances speculation in any form as it is known in the world to-day. The whole tenor of Christian philosophy is an appeal to the unselfish purpose. The great ideal Christ is the manifestation of continuous contribution as against selfish acquirement. If I know anything of God or his plans of reward the man who will receive the greatest commendation in the end will not be the one who may come with fabulous wealth saying, "See, Lord, how much I have acquired"; but rather the man, empty-handed and devoid of earthly possessions, but bearing the record of uninterrupted contribution to others: contributions of love, spiritual and material help.

I have tried to speak plainly, yet manifest the truest regard for the motive of my fellows. All men do not see alike. We may attack a man's logic, but love the man. May love continue.

Yours hopefully,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

HOW SHALL WE PREPARE THE WAY BEFORE US?

The Lord has commanded us to gather, not in haste, but to have everything prepared before us. When shall we commence to prepare the way? Now, or some time in the future? If in the future, how long shall it be, and what is the preparation to be made, and how shall we go about it? These are questions that all Latter Day Saints should be asking themselves. As for me, I believe we should commence now, just as soon as we have found out what is required of us. We should not put it off until some future time, just because the Lord has told us not to gather in haste; but I believe we should make haste to prepare all things necessary before us.

The Lord has told us, in the last revelation to the church, that the gathering must be in accordance with the revelation given on Fishing River. Now, let us see in paragraph 2. The Lord said that they had not imparted their substance to the poor, and were not united according to the union required by the celestial law, and that was why Zion was not redeemed at that time.
Now, we are beginning to get some light on what is required of us in preparing the way before us. We see it must be done by and through the celestial law of the kingdom. We will get a little more light by reading section 77. There the Lord tells them to organize themselves; and this was for the purpose of providing for the poor. And also section 81, paragraph 4, gives us some insight into the celestial law. And as we read section 101, paragraph 12, we can fully understand how we can be united according to the celestial law of the kingdom. And I understand by reading the revelations bearing on this subject, that we must be organized in order to prepare the way before us.

Just here is a good place for me to state what the Lord revealed to me in answer to prayer. After the earthquake in this city, last April, I prayed much, asking the Lord if it was his will that we should gather back to Zion, or did he wish us to stay in this place for a while longer. One night, while I was asleep, I seemed to be conversing with a personage who said we were to gather, but not in haste, but to have all things prepared before us. I asked what was meant by having “all things prepared before us.” The answer came, You must enter Zion will be in her redeemed state. Then I was made to understand that we must be living under the celestial law before we could gather to Zion. I used to think all that was necessary to prepare the way before us was to go back and take a look around to see what chance there was for one to make a living, not thinking of any one but one’s self and family. But I understand it differently, now. I see in this preparation, I will have to consider the poor; and I find under this celestial law that I must not prepare to start a bank, to loan money to the poor on interest, but must help to start a bank to provide the means whereby the poor may have homes given them.

If we had been organized and keeping the celestial law years ago, as we should have been, the brethren and sisters who lost their all by the San Francisco earthquake and fire would not now be waiting on the slow motion of the insurance company to pay the little bit of insurance they had on their property, nor would our poor brethren in the Islands be writing to Bro. Burton telling him that they are hungry. Instead of this, their every want would be supplied from our treasury. This is one of the things that Zion is to be redeemed from, that is, from the possibility of being brought to hunger and want. Now if we ever intend to redeem Zion from an unrighteous system, we will never do it by going there and doing business under the same old system. We must go there, keeping and practicing the celestial law.

I would suggest that at our several reunions, the coming year, we get together and make an effort to organize ourselves, asking our heavenly Father for divine guidance. We can organize ourselves into cooperative bodies, concentrating our efforts for the purpose of saving money to buy lands in the regions round about the land of Zion. This will be a start in the right direction. Let us go as far as we know how, then ask for instruction from those whom the Lord has appointed for that purpose. If we never make a commencement, we will never be prepared. If we are not prepared our gathering will be in vain. If our gathering is in vain, then Zion will never be redeemed; but it will be redeemed from that unrighteous system now being practiced there, no matter who participates in it.

Now I hope some abler writer than I am will take up this subject and write upon it. Ever praying for the redemption of Zion,

Your brother in Christ,

J. A. Anthony.

“The Menace of Privilege.”

A BOOK STUDY.

No more important work dealing with the grave problems that confront the American Republic to-day has appeared in months than Mr. George’s strong, clear, and logical work, The Menace of Privilege. It is a book that every young man and woman who loves the Republic should carefully read. At a time when a vicious opportunism is pervading our social, economic, and political literature, and the most plausible sophistries are being cunningly advanced to excuse reactionary and class-movements inimical to free government, and when the fundamental principles of democracy are being sneered at and flouted by those high in positions of honor and trust who seek the wealth and favor of privileged interests, it is refreshing to find a strong, logical work instinct with the spirit of the fathers—a work in which clear thinking goes hand in hand with high moral idealism and that reverence for justice which a recognition of the sacred rights of humanity imposes on those who would be true leaders and way-showers of the people—those who would place the principles of democracy above all sordid ends. Mr. George has nobly taken up the great work which his illustrious father carried on and has given us a contribution of vital importance at the present crisis.

The work is divided into twelve books, the first of which is devoted to the consideration of “The Land of Inequality,” and “The Cause of Inequality.” When the Republic was young, when honest work

was the rule and "the badge of responsibility and respectability," "the printer, Benjamin Franklin, the surveyor, George Washington, the lawyer, Thomas Jefferson, the sailor, John Paul Jones, the merchant, John Hancock, were American types of manhood and practical citizenship." There were then no great fortunes, while "on the other hand, real poverty was casual and nowhere deep or chronic." Then the free access to the soil and the absence of monopoly rights rendered ours preemi-nently the land of equality.

That a great change has come to pass is obvious to the most superficial observer.

"This Republic has become palpably a land of inequality. There has been no lessening in the power of producing wealth. On the contrary, nowhere has there been so auspicious an era of invention and labor-saving processes. Production has increased by leaps and bounds. But there has been something grievously at fault with its distribution. It has gone in great part for the enrichment of a few. As if by magic, it has piled up amazing fortunes; as though some possessed lodestones drawing to them a very large portion of the wealth and leaving to others only sufficient to afford subsistence and barely encourage a continuance of production.

"The effect of this highly unequal distribution must be manifold and marked. First of all it divides the community into two general classes: the gainers and the losers; into the House of Have and the House of Want. Next it causes broadly a lowering of public and private morals.

"Where wealth concentrates, the rich grow intoxicated. They are, as it were, in a land of wonders, where dollars pair and multiply without aid of human thought or touch of human hand. Coins that but a moment before filled a single bag now fill an array of them, such as greeted the eyes of Ali Baba when the words 'open sesame' disclosed the treasure-cave. This sudden flood of riches begets a thirst for more, particularly as their possessors realize that with these riches goes a power to buy—to command—the services of the multitude struggling for subsistence or something better. And so desire augments. Those who have a million would have ten; those who have ten would have a score, a hundred, millions. They play a game of chance not only for its excitement, but for its gain—a game where winnings come so fast as to supersede the ordinary means of counting. They play with a money-greed upon them. They play even when they know the dice are loaded, if indeed they do not load them."

"And thus it is not true that there is no way open to correct general morals. What is needed is to correct the thing that corrupts general morals. That thing is the unequal distribution of wealth. Correct that and morals will correct themselves. Let it be possible for all to get the easy living to which the tremendous increase in productive power entitles them, and morality will govern generally in the higher as well as in the common affairs of men."

"De Tocqueville in writing to his father of the old conditions, after observing that "this people is one of the happiest in the world," said: "Amongst the novel objects that attracted my attention during my stay in the United States, nothing struck me more forcibly than the general equality of conditions among the people."

The change in our social and economic conditions was coincident with the rise of a privileged class.

"Now the word privilege means not a natural, but an artificial condition. Even its derivation shows that. It comes from the Latin privilegium, meaning an ordinance in favor of a person; and privilegium comes from privus, private, and let or legem, a law. Hence, in its essence, the word privilege means a private law, a special ordinance or a usage equivalent to a grant or an immunity in favor of a particular person.

"This word privilege, or private advantage, had application to land monopoly which destroyed Rome."

To-day it is much as it was in olden times.

"When we examine the matter in the light of simple reason we may see that of all privileges land ownership is the greatest,—that, indeed, it is the chief cause of unequal distribution of wealth. For consider: In the beginning God made nature and man. He did not endow man with the power to produce something from nothing, but required him to apply his powers—that is, his labor—to nature so as to draw forth the things necessary to satisfy human desire. The part of nature to which man was to apply his labor was land.

"Where practically all available land of a particular kind is subjected to private ownership, a monopoly of land is created. The power of this monopoly in the hands of any one—of an imbecile, if you please—might make him rich out of the tribute that would have to be paid by such as were driven by necessity to use his land."

Mr. George, after further discussing the influence of land monopoly, passes to an examination of those less obvious results of land monopoly that are none the less great immediate factors in the unequal distribution of wealth. "And out of these various forms of land monopoly," he tells us, "comes a superimposed speculation, which, to those who can control it, is prolific. This is speculation in mining, railroad, and 'industrial' stocks. These stocks are issued by companies based upon land monopoly of some kind."

He shows how, with some land value as a basis, the modern gamblers of Wall Street, by the well-known practices of watering stocks and making secret arrangements with great holders of special interests so as to eliminate, in so far as they themselves are concerned, all element of uncertainty from their game, making the results precisely the same as gambling with loaded dice or stacked cards, succeed in amassing vast fortunes, never earned and to which from neither the standpoint of moral right nor justice are they entitled.

He explains that he treats private ownership in land at length because in its direct form and its indirect or public franchise form "it constitutes the worst of all privileges, since it commits the heaviest robberies from the wealth-producers." Next he notices other forms of privilege, as, for example, "taxation, when it is made to fall, as is generally the case, only slightly upon monopoly advantages, which it might be used to kill or to absorb into the public treasury. . . . The protective tariff is a shining example" of this. "It is sought by domestic producers to discourage foreign competitors. The higher such tax, the less the competition and the greater the centering of production in a few hands."

"There are still other subsidiary forms of privilege, but speaking in a general way, the privileges causing the unequal distribution of wealth may be named in four divisions, to wit: 1. Natural opportunities privately held under special or general laws. 2. Various kinds of taxation on production and its fruits. 3. Franchise grants. 4. Powers of incorporation and various sorts of immunities from the courts.

"The existence of these various forms of privilege explains, and nothing else will explain, the sudden rise of private fortunes in the United States. So long as privileges were few and carried only weak appropriating powers, the mass of the people of the country had practically equal access to natural opportunities, and were deprived of but a small share of the produce of their labor. The country was then, as observed by Mr. Bryce, a land of equality in respect to the production and distribution of wealth."

From this luminous exposition of inequality and its causes, our author passes to his second book or division and notices typical "Princes of Privilege." He briefly and graphically sketches some leading figures who represent wealth acquired under various forms of privilege. J. J. Astor comes in for an extended treatment. Among other typical figures are John W. Mackay, John D. Rockefeller, Andrew Carnegie, and J. Pierpont Morgan. Some of these men acquired their fortunes through land speculation and holding; others rose to the mastership of millions by siezing upon the stored-up wealth of nature, together with other forms of privilege. Thus Mr. Rockefeller's wealth springs from several forms of privilege, but chiefly from the wealth stored up by nature, which should be a common heritage, and from secret railroad rebates. Andrew Carnegie had three sources of privilege aiding him to acquire his fortune: land, transportation, and tariff. J. Pierpont Morgan, the trust-former and merger-effector, has been able through the use of water or the inflation of securities to appropriate millions upon millions of wealth for which, in the last analysis, the people must pay. Here we find another kind of privilege in which the promoters put stocks on the market capitalized for several times—often three to nine times—the amount of money actually represented. Then by shrewd manipulation and adroit deceptions they unload the stock at par or above, depress it, then bull it. Thus coming and going they reap millions through bare-faced gambling operations of the most dishonorable nature. Nor is this all. On the watered stock, by virtue of their privileges in land, transportation, and tariff, they are able to force the consuming millions to pay exorbitant prices that in effect are the same as usury. Thus by gambling with stacked cards and by practices that are equal to usury, fabulous fortunes are acquired that are not earned—not the rightful fruit of honest industry on the part of the beneficiaries.

After a luminous discussion of typical Princes of Privilege and the methods by which they acquire vast fortunes at the expense of morality and the weal of the nation and the people, our author considers how the princes live—their palatial homes and their lavish expenditures in furnishing; their amusements, dissipations, and marital relations; after which he devotes a chapter to "Aristocracy a Fruit of Privilege"—a chapter pregnant with solemn truths that should be impressed on the conscience of every thinking American.

Book Three is devoted to "Victims of Privilege," in which the defalcations of the masses and the physical, mental, and moral deterioration incident to unjust conditions for which privilege is responsible, are treated with a statesmanlike breadth of vision and with that true sense of moral proportion that marks the work of a fundamentally sound reasoner.

Book Four is devoted to "Resistance to Privilege," and contains chapters on "Organization of Laborers," and "Dangers of Unionism." No man in America is a truer friend of labor than is Mr. George; yet like his illustrious father he does not allow sympathy to blind him to defects that are radically opposed to justice or the law of freedom on which true advancement must depend. Our author, while showing some dangerous tendencies and wrongs for which labor-unions are responsible, clearly points out that these things are in most instances the result of privilege-making conditions inimical to freedom and justice, and making it seem to labor as necessary to resort to aggressive acts in order to protect itself from the crushing power of privilege.

To us the chapters that are of the greatest importance to the rank and file of our people, and especially to those who love the Republic and who dare and care to think seriously, are found in the division of the work entitled "Weapons of Privilege," in which our author discusses the "Use of the Courts by Privilege," "Government by Injunction," "The Bayonet in Civil Affairs," and "Federal Army in Strikes." These chapters should be issued in pamphlet form and the whole country should be sown with them, precisely as was England sown with free-trade and anti-corn-law literature in the forties of last century. Here our author traces historically the rise and the abuse of the injunction power, showing how the courts have become "a most potent weapon in the hands of Privilege to crash strikes and break the backs of trades-unions." He shows how the federal judges are "appointed almost wholly from the ranks of attorneys representing the great monopoly corporations"; and he shows very clearly how difficult, if not impossible, it is for such men to be impartial or just when their point-of-view has for years been adverse to the people's rights and interests. So long as our courts are recruited almost wholly from the army of hired retainers of privileged interests it is idle to expect justice, for "it is needless to cast a breath of suspicion against their integrity to perceive that a bench made up of judges drawn from such sources will lean in the direction of privilege."

Interesting and highly suggestive is the history of the precedents upon which the injunction abuses rest. The march of the injunction abuse has on several occasions practically resulted in government by injunction, and to-day we actually see a governor occupying the seat who was never elected to the chair he holds, never received a vote, indeed, for governor. J. F. McDonald, "the present governor of the state of Colorado, may properly be called an injunction-made executive."

Ominous and subversive as is the flagrant abuse of the injunction power, it is by no means the only sinister influence, destructive to justice-governed and reason-ruled democracy, that has marked the ascendancy of privileged interests in our city, state, and national government; for "along with the abnormal development of the injunction principle has come within the last two decades in the United States a startling use of soldiers in civil affairs." Mr. George reviews the aggressions of privilege and its servile tools in graphic language, giving a vivid picture of the overthrow of free government in Colorado by the high-handed and thoroughly unjustifiable action of the ill-famed Governor J. H. Peabody and the unspeakably profane and brutal General Bell, both the most abject tools of lawless corporate interests. Bell, as Mr. George well observes, "is one of the kind of men who forget the rights and duties of the citizen when they don soldier clothes."

Other notable instances of the use of State and Federal soldiers are cited at length as showing how "Privilege uses the soldiers of the Republic as it uses courts—for itself and in violation, in abrogation, of the rights of the body of the people."

The book devoted to the "Weapons of Privilege" constitutes one of the most important contributions to the literature of democracy to-day; yet even of greater moment, if that be possible, are the next two divisions, Books Six and Seven, which are concerned with privilege, the corruptor of national, state, and municipal politics, and its influence over public opinion. The author shows in the most con-inclusive manner that privilege to-day "is the real spoil of politics." "And it is an enormous spoil. It is a huge river of wealth that comes from laying villages, towns, cities, states, and the nation at large under contribution." And very clearly he shows that:

"This contribution is not after the manner of a conquering army of old that slew and sacked. It is effected in the modern way, peaceably and legally, by acts of legislature that make direct gifts from the public treasury or that grant powers from appropriating wealth from the general mass of the people. Some idea of the magnitude of such powers may be drawn from the fact that in Greater New York alone the ownership of the franchises or mere rights of way used by the public service corporations there is by competent judges computed to be worth at the present time $40,000,000 a year."

By the marshaling of a convincing array of indisputable evidence, Mr. George shows beyond peradventure of a doubt, not only that there is an enormous — an almost inconceivably enormous — annual loot garnered from America's millions by the Princes of Privilege, but also how the conquest of the modern Egyptian overlords is rendered possible through the black-horse cavalry, through giant lobbies, and other agencies which work in the halls of city, state, and national government. The story is one that will arouse any sane man to a sensible realization of the stupendous and almost fatal character of the peril that threatens the Republic to-day. The power of privilege, however, working noiselessly through political bosses, party machines, and its vast army of retainers whom it has placed in office, would be of short tenure in a land where the people enjoyed the educational advantages enjoyed by our people and the right of the ballot-box, were it not for the influence of privilege over the press, the pulpit, and the school—an influence which our author describes in a clear, forceful, and compelling manner.

Book Eight deals with the "Present and Past." Here the centralization of government and its strong tendency away from the basic principles of democracy are startlingly illustrated by an array of citations of recent happenings that are autocratic and bureaucratic in character and that are making precedents that in time may easily be used to overthrow even the semblance of democratic government. Centralization at home has naturally enough been followed by foreign aggression, which receives proper attention from Mr. George, after which he considers our nation in the light of the lessons and warnings of civilizations that have gone before. Here, with a statesmanlike breadth of vision and the deep insight of a philosophical student of history, our author marshals before us pictures of events and conditions of other days that wrought death in nations which were long oblivious to the presence of a mortal malady—nations and civilizations which imagined, indeed, that their external pomp, splendor, and show of power spoke of vitality and virility, when as a matter of fact they were the hectic flush of death, the autumn burst of exterior glory that spoke of rapidly approaching decay. Mr. George shows how Rome went to her death, and that we are on precisely the same highway; how privilege destroyed the mistress of the Old World as it surely will destroy the great Republic, unless men and women of conscience and conviction consecrate their lives and their all to the restoration of the nation to the people.

The closing sections of the work are concerned with "The Remedy." In the pages that have gone before our author has clearly demonstrated the evil conditions whose existence none can truthfully deny, and that "in consequence of these privileges, veritable princes of riches are being raised up on the one side, while the masses are being held down to an intensifying struggle for a living on the other." He has shown that we have to-day "two distinct classes—the one imbued with feelings of superiority and arrogance, the other of envy and hatred"; and he has also shown that "as a further consequence, public and private morals are suffering, the superabundantly rich falling into monstrous business practices, private infidelities, divorce habits and irresponsibility for child-bearing, while the multitude of workers are being reduced to conditions breeding want, sin, and crime, from which must come general physical, mental, and moral deterioration." He points out that:

"All these results we have seen to follow a continuing unequal distribution of wealth, and this unequal distribution of wealth to be a fruit of the grants and passive sanctions of Government, called privileges.

"Therefore in looking for a remedy or for remedies for this mass of great evils besetting the Republic, we must address ourselves to their causes—to privileges."

He finds these privileges to be divided into four great groups or classes:

"1. Private ownership of natural opportunities.

"2. Tariff and other taxation on production and its fruits.

"3. Special Government grants; and

"4. Grants under general laws and immunities in the courts."

These tap-roots of privilege, these fosterers of inequality, are analyzed somewhat at length, our author's purpose being to show, with the aid of what has gone before, precisely how they are the parents of the brood of evils that are blasting and blighting present-day democracy. Political independence is essential for the florescence of civilization, but it must be supplemented by economic independence that can not exist where privilege flourishes. Equality of opportunities and of rights demands the abolition of privilege and the return to the natural order.
Many who have followed Mr. George with great pleasure and assent through all the earlier chapters of the work will question the sufficiency of his remedies under present conditions. Some will doubtless feel that he has touched too lightly on some of the forms of privilege, as, for example, that enjoyed by the banking interests; while many will feel that he should have emphasized more strongly that which he so frankly believes in and which he is convinced would come with the establishment of fundamentally just economic conditions—the establishment of purely democratic methods in government as provided by the Initiative, the Referendum, and the Right of Recall. On the other hand, many will feel that this work, so fundamental and so comprehensive in its treatment of the root-evils of the age and time, is equally comprehensive in the remedies proposed and which our author believes would transform society, resulting, to use his closing words, in the following democratic changes:

“Labor applied to free conditions would find so ample a reward as to lead sensibly to a shortening of the hours of toil and the development of the mental and moral natures. Prisons and penitentiaries, almshouses and insane asylums would cease to be crowded, and most of them would crumble in disuse; for sin and crime, and disease and helplessness, which are the progeny of involuntary poverty, or of its antithesis, superabundance, would lessen with the change that brought bountiful opportunity to all.

“Again the worth of individual manhood would shine forth, and public questions would be the interest and the concern of all. Again would revive the spirit of the town-meeting—the wisest invention,” said Jefferson, ‘devised by the wit of man for the perfect exercise of self-government and for its preservation.’ Politics would clear and purify, for where would be the prizes that corruption now wins; who to be corrupted, among a people filled with a new hope? The bondage of the press would cease, the public be freed from the hand of special interest, the pulpit cut away from deadening dependence. The trend of Government would change from centralized, solidified, one-man power, toward democratic, decentralized, federated communities. More surely then the sense and sincerity of the mass of the people would become the guides of progress; and, too strong to fear oppression, the Republic would become too just to oppress.”—B. O. Flower in the Arena, April, 1906.

The aerial flight of the Knaakshue airship at the Iowa State fair will be as sensational as the exhibitions of the same wonderful craft in New York and Washington and at the Portland exposition. It will be a practical demonstration of safe navigation of the air by the only successful airshipping expert in the world. The initial exhibition will be given on Monday of fair week.

The Home.

“As long as a boy is anchored to a happy Christian home—to the experience of it in his youth and the remembrance of it in his manhood—he is reasonably safe for this life and the next.”—R. S. Storrs.

If this be true (and to a large extent we believe it is) what is the trouble with our boys? Why are parental arms everywhere stretched forth reaching for something to cooperate with them in the guidance of their boys?

We can readily understand why it is thus in the world, but when we come to our own church—a people so highly favored of the Lord as to be the recipients of special directions in this matter, it certainly is hard to understand, and did we not know by actual experience and observation that it is, at least in a degree, true of the church as it is of the world, we would find it difficult to believe.

We have said that the home is heaven-ordained, and having been instituted of God, made it were the foundation of the whole social fabric, it is only natural to expect that he should give special directions concerning it. And in this expectation those who carefully search his word will not be disappointed.

Great changes have taken place in all departments of life within the last century. This applies as well to education as to all else. Especially does it apply to the mental attitude assumed by very many in relation to this question of all questions: the proper nurture of the young. Indeed it is doubtful if in any other department so great a change has occurred. Child study, child culture, psychology, and kindred terms have seemingly become the shibboleth of the present time until the ordinary mind becomes lost in a labyrinth of seemingly conflicting principles, and between the old way of manifesting love by strict discipline, restraint, and severe punishment for disobedience, and the later way of ruling by love and in accordance and harmony with the nature or individuality of the subject to be governed, turns almost hopelessly—hopelessly—from the task before it and steeped in doubts as to what should or should not be encouraged, what should or should not be repressed, stands with almost paralyzed hands regarding the rapid growth of evil and the choking out of much that is good in the children.

And now the question arises, Is there really a conflict between the old and the new? And if such really exists, which is the better way?

That a conflict in the laws governing the case—or the problem if we are pleased to call it a problem—really exists, we do not believe. The conflict, like the many which have seemingly arisen between science and religion, is wholly in the seeming. We have not the key or have not rightly sought to harmonize the two, hence we speak of conflict where really no conflict exists.

When God made choice of Abraham to become the father of a great nation, he assigned as his reason for choosing him the fact embodied in these words: “For I know him that he will command his children and his household after him and they shall keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment.'"

In this statement much is involved and from a careful study of it much has a bearing upon our subject may be learned.

Du Bois—the author from whom we quoted largely in our last—you will remember, says: "The parent must be obedient to God before he can rightfully demand obedience of his children." This truth was understood to be as vital in the days of Abraham as it is to the minds of the best educators of the present day. Obedience is the very foundation principle in the structure of all family government, and, until obedience is secured, all else is hopeless.

Mark the object-lesson in the case of Abraham. God chose him because he demanded obedience upon the part of this people whom he was choosing, that through them—"in thee and in thy seed"—all nations of the earth should be blessed. Hence, that Abraham might in turn have the right to demand this same obedience from his children, it became necessary that he himself should render to God the same obedience which God was choosing him as his special instructor to teach to others.

It is hardly necessary to refer to Mount Moriah—to mention that which from the time of its enactment to the present day has been held up (and truthfully so) as one of the grandest object-lessons of faith the world has ever known. But is it less an object-lesson of obedience? Of the absolute infallible necessity of obedience upon the part of those who govern to the same power, the same laws, to which they wish and demand of others to be obedient?

And just here we wish to introduce a thought which we feel sure will prove helpful, not only to parents, but to all who will test it by putting it into practice. Hughes says: "All truth dies in the mind unless it is lived out in practice." God did not intend that the grand fundamental truth of the absolute necessity of obedience should wither and die in the mind of Abraham through want of being put into practice, hence the commandment, "Get thee out of thy country and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house unto a land that I will show thee." And as if this were not enough, while yet a homeless wanderer in a strange land, he received this added commandment: "Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah; and offer him there for a burnt-offering upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of."

We have so long been accustomed to regard these instances simply as demonstrations of faith, that it may be a little difficult for us now to draw the dividing-line and look upon them as grand object-lessons of obedience. But these they surely are, and as such they may be tested by the word.

James says that "faith without works is dead, being alone." Is not this a declaration of the same truth—the workings of the same infallible law to which Hughes has referred, as we have quoted above, namely: "all truth dies in the mind unless it is lived out in practice"?

Faith is dead—dead as the body without the spirit—unless it incites to works—or in other words to obedience. Had Abraham said, "Yes, Lord, I hear," and yet have remained in his own country and among his own kindred, what of his faith? Had he said, "Yes, Lord, I hear and will hasten into the land of Moriah," but notwithstanding had still remained in his tent while Isaac followed his boyish sports in the land of the Philistines where they were sojourning, what of his faith?

"Without faith it is impossible to please God." But, dear fathers and mothers, let this truth be borne in upon your minds, that there is no faith without the works of obedience. He who knows how to command or govern must know how to obey.

"Children, obey your parents in the Lord," may well be supplemented, as it was, with that other injunction to parents, "Provoke not your children to anger, but nurture them in the admonition of the Lord." Faith, existing in the heart, enables us to pray, Give us day by day our daily bread; but if we fold our hands and wait for the angels to bring it, is it likely to come? So, too, faith leads us to pray for help that we may train our children aright. But if we forget that this training must be in the Lord—in other words, that it must be in harmony with the instruction which the Lord has given upon the subject—where is our faith? Dead, we answer; and unless it be quickened into life, by the power of his life-giving Spirit, it is (like the body from which the spirit has departed) a corruptible mass which needs to be buried out of sight lest it contaminate the living.

Dear parents, for whom these pages are written, will you now enter with us into a prayerful and careful examination of what our homes should be, and if here we find that mistakes have been made, find that our homes are not all which they should, which they might be, that in them our children are not being nurtured, not receiving the food necessary in order that the spirit and soul may be properly developed, and our sons and daughters be fitted to take places of trust and honor in both church and state, shall we not study, and that too earnestly, to discover wherein our mistakes lie; and, having discovered them, shall we not determine that with God's help we will strive to remedy them? If to this question you answer, "Yes, I will," then come with us in our search for light and truth—for the instruction to be found in the word of God as well as in other good books; and when it is found, and you have mistaken your own home, your house by it, and have discovered that in this you are lacking, then remember that though you have discovered the truth—have incorporated it as a part of your own mind, yet unless you live it out in practice it will die there, and your accountability will be greater than if you had not known the truth.

Our search must be for certain general principles, fundamental truths which will apply to all homes, all children, since the undertaking of more than this could but be foredoomed to utter failure. Leaves upon the forest-trees do not differ more widely than the natures and dispositions of children in the same family. What then is to be expected where many families are to be considered? To study the peculiar nature and disposition of each child from almost the very hour of birth, becomes the duty of parents but especially of the mother, because she, as a rule, is much more with her children in their early years than is the father. From this study she is to determine what food will really nurture her child, and, if possible for her to obtain this food (and here the father's help can not well be dispensed with), it is to be furnished for her child—her children—to each one severally as each demands. And just here let us remark that in every family questions at times will arise, problems hard to be solved, and the mother especially feels that she needs and must have help to untangle the knotty skein. She feels the need of some one having more experience than herself with whom to counsel. This need was one of the motives leading to the organization of the Daughters of Zion; that mothers might meet and counsel together for the best good of their families. For this same reason many high class journals and religious periodicals have departments especially devoted to this purpose. But while we have examined many of these, and for years have been a constant reader of some of them, we know of no other which we can so cordially and unreservedly recommend to the careful reading of mothers as American Motherhood. This magazine is published at Copertown, New York, and is most carefully edited by Doctor Mary Wood-Alen, assisted by her daughter Rose. In this magazine is a department entitled, "Parents' Problems." This department is conducted by Mary Wood-Alen, whose name is widely known among American mothers, and is loved wherever known. In this department she answers all queries sent in by subscribers. The magazine, to any mother, is worth many times... its subscription price of one dollar a year, for mothers may be sure that in answers given by Doctor Allen they are obtaining the very best which a long experience with children, as well as the most thorough understanding of hygiene coupled with extensive medical practice, can give. But above and superior to all this, their answers will come from a devoted Christian woman—a woman who with all her accomplishments places motherhood as the crowning glory of womanhood.

Questions Upon September Reading.

What constitutes a happy Christian home? Are the boys of the church anchored to such homes? Are they being made safe for this life and the next? If not, is it because the gospel law is lacking? What change has taken place within the last century in regard to the nurture of the young? Is it worthy of our study to discover which are better, old ways, or new, and where the one or the other are most in harmony with gospel principles? Shall we cease to study because some perplexities arise? Do not these very perplexities show us our need of understanding? What reason did the Lord give for the choosing of Abraham? What is the foundation principle of all family government? To whom must the parent be obedient before he can rightfully demand obedience of his children?
What object-lesson of such obedience have we in the life of Abraham? What is the quotation given us from Hughes? Com-mitt this to memory. By what must our faith be supplement-ated when we pray for help to train our childrenright? Are we anxious to know what manner of homes we ought to have? Is it possible that we have been making mistakes in regard to them—that they are not all that they ought to be for our children’s sake? Can they be improved? Are we willing to exert ourselves in study and in living out in practice the truths which we discover?

Request for Prayer.

Letter Department

BATTLE MOUNTAIN, Nevada, August 1, 1906.

Dear Saints: Possibly some of the faith might be attracted to Nevada by the mining excitement, and by the opening up of the Government land along the Truckee-Carson Canal. This canal will prove a blessing in time, but it is not a poor man’s proposition. The price of the land, together with the cost of leveling, checking, and other necessary improvements will bring the cost up to as high as twenty-five to thirty dollars per acre before a crop can be harvested from it.

Nevada is one vast body of veins, ledges, and deposits, or nearly so. With modern methods of hoisting and treating ores, properties heretofore worthless can now be worked at a profit.
But there are all kinds of sharp practices that prevail in the boom camps. Even the Pacific Railroad takes a hand as soon as an industrious miner gets something good on his land, or anywhere near it. It is simply folly to go to law with them, for they will never allow it to come to a decision. Railroad influence controls, more or less, every office and officer from United States Senator down. Senator Nixon started in with the railroad many years ago, as agent at Humboldt, where I knew him thirty years ago.

Public schools are poorly managed except, perhaps, at county-seat. The law provides that any community with five children is entitled to a public school; but, unless you have a political pull, you will never get it. It is graft, graft, railroad influence, and politics that control the schools, as everything else. The railroad will close an office and move a station any time to defeat a school.

However, you can have a private school AT PUBLIC EX-PENSE if you can control a few votes in a county or district where they are needed. I know one man who has had a pri-ivate school in his back yard for fifteen years, all at public expense, and has over eight hundred dollars to the credit of the school. Another man has a “public” school at public expense to teach a single child. An older daughter gets sixty dollars per month for teaching the younger one. I lived for months within sight of such a “public” school, but could not send for a single day, although I had six children.

The moral atmosphere at Reno, the metropolis, is certainly bad; and, in the principal mining-camps, is vile indeed. The camps along the canal during the construction period were the worst I ever saw or heard of. Murder was a daily occurrence; and, of over twenty-four bodies found in the Truckee River, not so much as an arrest was made.

Altogether, Nevada is no place to raise a family, and I moved my family out of it.

For the benefit of any who might contemplate going to the “Silver State,” these facts are given.

DAVID E. LANDER.

DESMOINES, Iowa, August 1, 1906.

Dear Herald: As it has been some time since I have written anything for your columns, and as I have had the pleasure of a little break in the monotony of office routine in the shape of a vacation of thirty days’ duration, it occurred to me to write an account of how I spent my vacation and send it to you.

Of course it goes without saying that I can not write an account that will be anywhere near an interesting or enjoyable to your readers as the vacation was to me, but I trust it will be of some interest to a few at least.

On Saturday morning of June 30, wife, the three babies, and I arose early, eager to get started on our long-anticipated journey. (To those who know the writer best, it would be needless to state that a vacation would be of no pleasure to him without his loved ones with him.) We pulled out of our home station at fifteen minutes past eight in the morning on the Minneapolis & St. Louis, bound for the broad prairies of South Dakota, where lives my wife’s only sister, Sr. Lovie Snook, who moved there from Des Moines two years ago. The day was very pleasantly spent on board the train, the ever-changing landscape making the time pass quite rapidly, the little folks being enthusiastic over each new object of interest which passed within their scope of vision, and especially did they deem it a novelty to partake of the toothsome lunch which mother had so thoughtfully prepared. At fifteen minutes after seven in the evening we arrived at Minneapolis, the end of our journey for the day.
As the train pulled into the station, on looking out of the window, what should we see but the smiling face of our beloved brother, H. A. McCoy, formerly of our home district. On step-ing to the platform we were welcomed, as per previous arrangement, by Sr. Lillian Lundeen, whom we thus met for the first time, also by Brn. McCoy and Robertson, who had likewise just arrived, coming from their reunion at Piazza for the purpose of holding tent-meetings at Excelsior, a small town near Minneapolis. We were very glad to again meet Brn.
H. A., also to make the acquaintance of Sr. Lundeen and Brn.
Robertson. After the usual glad hand-shakings and greetings, Brn. McCoy and Robertson went to the home of Brn. Greene, while we were escorted by Sr. Lillian to her home where we were very cordially received by her parents, and made to fo

"at home" at once by their genial hospitality. The next day, Sunday, we met with the Saints at half past two in the capacity of sacrament and social meeting in charge of branch president, Bro. Hilton, at the home of Bro. Greene, branch teacher. A goodly number were present and the presence of the Spirit was enjoyed by all. The Saints there all seem humble, and striving to do the Master's will. No matter where you meet with the president, Bro. Hilton, at the home of Bro. Greene, branch Sunday, the same good testimonies and expressions of love may be heard. Remained at Bro. Greene's for supper, after which we went to the hall they have rented. Here they have Bible class at seven and preaching at eight every Sunday evening. After some parleying as to which of the three "visiting brethren" should do the talking, Bro. Robertson and the writer prevailed on Bro. H. A. to occupy the hour, and our hearts were made glad to again listen to his timely remarks, which in this instance were on the subject of "Freedom from bondage."

Monday a little party, consisting of Sr. Lundeen, her little daughter Alpha, Brn. McCoy and Robertson, the writer and his family, spent the day in sight-seeing, taking in Lakes Harriet and Calhoun, the beautiful Minnehaha Falls and Park, where seen a goodly number of animals and birds from elk and bear down to prairie-dogs and guinea-pigs. This park we were told contained one hundred and twenty-two acres. The writer could have enjoyably spent the entire day by this rippling stream, but desiring a glimpse of other scenes, we next went over into St. Paul, where we looked after the needs of the physical man. From there we went to Lake Como and Park, passing the new State Capitol, Armory, and other places of interest. Como Park comprises nearly four hundred acres, and is a veritable panorama of beautiful flowers, shrubs, and trees. Of special interest were "The Gate Ajar," a stairway and gate composed of different kinds and colors of foliage plants, and a large lily-pond, with its rocky border filled with water-lilies of all colors, and its many golden fishes, showing a great deal of taste and skill upon the part of those in charge of the park. Considerable time was consumed here and, after a row upon the lake, the lateness of the hour necessitated our journeying homeward, catching passing glimpses of the huge flour-mills, St. Anthony Falls, etc. That evening the Saints met in the capacity of a business-meeting at the home of Bro. Lundeen, at which was taken up the matter of purchasing a lot and building a chapel in which they could worship as their own. Out of a lot, one was selected upon a committee appointed to purchase same, raise funds, secure material, etc., for the building. It certainly gave us joy to witness their interest and enthusiasm in this good work. May the Father bless them in their efforts, that they may soon have a "home" of their own to dedicate to his service.

Tuesday morning we arose and prepared to journey onward, and we can truly say we were loath to part from our genial host and family, whom we had learned to love even in this short time. May the peace and blessing of God abide in their home. As Bro. Lundeen is priest of the branch there, and the writer of his home branch, we took considerable pleasure in discussing the work along our special line of duty. Bro. McCoy accompanied us to the Union Depot, where we were supposed to leave at fifteen minutes after ten on the Great Northern, but owing to the excursion for the Fourth the train was crowded and we were somewhat delayed. Three extra coaches were soon added, however, and at a quarter of eleven we were again speeding on our way. A short distance out of Minneapolis we passed Lake Minnetonka and saw one of the steam yachts starting out on its trip around the lake. Arrived at Benson about half past five in the evening, where we changed cars. Taking the train on the Watertown Branch, we were soon at the little town of Nassau. Here we were met by our brother-in-law, Alfred Snook, with team and carriage, and taken five miles across the line to his home in South Dakota, and were at our journey's end, some-what weary in body, but otherwise none the worse for our journey. Here we experienced our first unpleasantness, as we were not welcomed by Sr. Lovie, she being at the hospital at Albee, where she had a short time previously undergone an operation. However, we were privileged to go and see her the following day, the Fourth, and on Wednesday of the following week we were made happy by her home-coming. Am glad to say she is steadily regaining health and strength.

Here we spent twenty-five happy days in good old farmer style, helping with the chores, plowing corn, shocking rye, going fishing, target-shooting, enjoying the invigorating influence of sunshine and fresh air, taking on a goodly coat of tan, and enjoying ourselves in general. A good team and buggy was at our disposal, and we enjoyed several pleasant drives. The writer went with Alfred one day with four-horse team and load of barley to Big Stone City, some thirteen miles north of his place, and after unloading and getting our dinner we rowed out on Big Stone Lake and fished for a few hours, getting home at nine o'clock in the evening. One afternoon wife and I went about three miles north to a small stream, and, in a little over an hour, had landed fifty-three nice fish. This was quite a relief from the hot, stuffy office; and to say it was thoroughly enjoyed would be putting it very mildly.

On the morning of the 27th, we boarded the train "homeward bound." Made close connection both at Benson and St. Paul, and at eight o'clock the next morning we again saw our home, the vacation ended, but many a pleasant memory still remaining; and, best of all, the writer finds himself heavier by nearly seven pounds as a result of the outing. Having had four hundred and sixty acres of fresh air to breathe for a month, twelve by fourteen feet now seems pretty small. Almost I am persuaded to return to my former occupation—farming.

Brn. J. F. Mintun and S. M. Reiste have been holding tent-meetings here in the city since the Fourth, with fair attendance and attention, five having been buried with Christ in baptism during that time. They expect to continue at the present location two weeks longer, until reunion-time, after which they expect to resume work in a different part of the city.

J. R. EPPerson.

DESmOINES, IOWA, August 1, 1906.

Editoris Herald: Since July 10 tent-meetings have been held in the east part of the city of Des Moines. I have had for my associates Bro. and Sr. Reiste, and the cheerful help of many of the local members and ministry. There has not been a large attendance except Sunday nights, but those who have been present have shown much of an investigative interest, and respect. There have been about fifteen hundred pieces of literature distributed, and more to be distributed. Five were baptized the 21st of July, two of whom were formerly members of the Brighamite church, but, being convinced of the mistake they had made in professing to believe what they taught, carefully examined our claims, and being convinced that they were true, obeyed, and will be noble helpers in the work wherever they may be. The three others who were baptized were pupils of the Sunday-school, and enter into the work in earnest.

Bro. and Sr. Reiste will assist elsewhere in the district till the reunion which begins the 24th of the month. With the local help, with probable providential assistance now and then, we will continue the tent-work till time to send the tent to the reunion, after which we hope to have the tent again during the season. Other places in the city mission are wishing for the use of the tent as soon as practicable. The president of the branch here, Bro. E. O. Clark, met with an accident while at his work last Saturday which resulted in fracturing his leg between the instep and the knee, which incapacitates him for work, and this will give him more time to assist with the services. He is doing as nicely as he possibly can under the circumstances, sleeping well and suffering no pain.
The sickness of Srs. Vice and Mather has been a sad condition that has brought with it the deepest sympathy of the Saints, and a day of fervent prayer, associated with fasting, was held last Sunday for them and other afflicted ones in the city. Both of the above-mentioned sisters are very sorely afflicted, and unless the power of God is exercised they will not be with us long; in fact neither could have continued with us thus far had not the Lord shown his power. They live to be loved by all the Saints, and to show forth an example of faith and patience worthy of imitation. Their affliction has caused a deeper humility and contrition in most of the Saints, which is good to see. It is true here as well as elsewhere that some of the children of God are drifting, and becoming very cold; but remarkably the larger number are increasing in fervency of spirit and devotion of heart. Some are striving against adverse conditions of a serious nature, but are doing nobly.

There came into my hands to-day a copy of the "Burning Bush," dated August 2, that has an article on "Mormonism," and like many other articles upon that subject shows considerable ignorance on the part of the writer. If it is only ignorance it will be corrected when the editor receives an article that I have just written to him. This writer claims that what Joseph Smith introduced is being represented in Utah, and is but a "hideous reptile." He claims that the word Mormon is obtained by a circular combination from the words Hiram and Solomon. Hiram of Tyre was a heathen, and Tyre is described as the headquarters of the Devil, "while Solomon was one of the notorious backsliders of the Bible who took the seven hundred wives and became, to that extent, a Mormon after God had left him."

Bro. Joseph Seddon of Persia assisted with the services last Sunday week, and Bro. W. D. Bullard of Independence, Missouri, assisted last Sunday. The efforts were a pleasure to us, and the Saints tell me that Brn. W. Christy and M. H. Cook are in Montour, having good meetings.

The Saints are improving their church property to-day by putting a cement walk on the north. This has been needed for some time, but it was deferred for want of funds; but when the time came that it was necessary to put this in the funds were forthcoming; and I believe there is enough already to meet all the expenses before the work is completed. The tent expenses were not so heavy in some respects as was expected, as the lumber merchants, Ewing & Jewett, loaned us the lumber free of charge, which kindness we appreciate very much. Other expenses are being met, that is, the expenses that are thought necessary; and while we would be pleased to witness more hospitality on the part of city residents, yet the Saints have done well, but could have done better, no doubt. I can see a marked improvement in the spirituality of many of the Saints, and especially of the young, and yet expect to see a greater improvement, and it is to this end that we are laboring.

Some things have come to my ears of late that show that some of the ministry have not done all they could to bear the burdens of others. It is possible that they wrought as best they knew, but it was taken by the Saints as though they wished too much waiting on, when they could have waited on themselves. But this was in the past, and I shall hope that the younger ministry will not get such ideas as though the Saints have to wait on them when they can wait on themselves, and also that they will bear a share of the burdens of others, especially when those burdens are very heavy, and could be made lighter by just a little thoughtfulness on the part of the ministry. We go out, my brethren, as representatives of the Christ, burden-bearers, and if we make it a study we can the more perfectly fulfill our mission in the Spirit of the Master. So far as I know, the missionary force in this district are quite busy, and I learn that there are many calls for labor, and some interest. In places where the Saints are not representing in their practices what the ministry are sent out to preach, the interest is not so good. It has always been thus.

In this part of the city the Saints are well thought of, and I do not know of any part of the city at present where they are not thought well of. May it ever be thus. It is true that indifference at times predominates even among the Saints. The indifference of the world to hear the gospel is very great, so great that at times it causes discouragement, and the ministry wonder if it is worth while to make the sacrifice. I want to endure till the end, and show an example to my brethren of patient continuance in well doing, if nothing more.

Hopefully and trustingly,

J. F. Mintun.

STANBERRY, Missouri, July 29, 1906.

Editors Herald: We are grateful for the restored gospel in these latter days, and with Paul we can say, "It is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." I am glad that our Brn. Haden and McCord have been returned to this district, for they are workmen "that needeth not be ashamed" because they "read from the law of God distinctly," and give the "sense," "rightly dividing the word of truth."

I had the privilege of occupying in one of the churches of this city a few times with good liberty. One of the devout (?) believers in the Advent doctrine said he liked to hear me talk, but that I knew better than to believe the way I did. Convince me that Adventism is right, and then I will yield. My heart's desire and prayer to God is that they might be saved. For they being ignorant of God's righteousness (the gospel, see Romans 1:16), are going about trying to establish their own righteousness.

Dear Saints, do we realize the demands of God upon us? The work seems to be enlarging every year. Prophet, seer, and revelation looked down the dark vista of unborn time and vividly portrayed the latter-day glory. Daniel says the little stone that was cut out of the mountain without hands became exceeding great and filled the whole earth. Ah, is this not true of the work we represent? Jesus compares the kingdom of God to a mustard-seed in its incipience. The church organized at Fayette, Seneca County, New York, had only six members. Now she numbers thousands.

My prayer is that God will bless those in authority in this latter-day evangel, and grant them help in every time of need. Bro. Peter Anderson of the Twelve preached three excellent sermons in the Adventist church last Saturday night, Sunday, and Sunday night. He is one of the most logical reasoners I ever listened to, and the people were well pleased with the efforts. May God bless all the faithful is my prayer.

JAMES SCHOFIELD.

STOCKPORT, Ohio, August 3, 1906.

Editors Herald: I left home May 18, for my field of labor, Ohio. Was delayed in starting by the illness of my wife, at our return from General Conference. Stopped over Sunday, May 29, at Chicago, and preached twice, once in each branch, being kindly received by the minister in charge, Elder W. A. McDowell, and the Saints, who know how to make the missionary feel at home. I went on, stopping briefly at Coldwater, to visit my mother, now seventy-six years of age, and other home ones. My visit among Coldwater Saints reminded us of other days when blessings came, as we labored in the work, in answer to prayer, and right-living.

At their district conference in June, a great blessing was enjoyed by us and others, as Bro. Bradford, George, Ann, and Phebe Corless, Sr. E. Lockerly, and others now grown gray in God's great work, bore their testimony to the divinity of our cause, with the power of the Spirit, as in years agone. Their children, too, are growing stronger in the work, as "the days go by." The conference was a spiritual feast.

I did not attend all the conference, as my brother-in-law, Lorenzo Sinclair, was unconscious with paralysis, and died the following Tuesday, June 12. He had become anxious to obey the gospel, but waited, alas, too long! Sad, how sad that so many do thus, concerning their duty to God. I entered upon the work in my new field of labor, along with Elder G. A. Smith, the president of the Kirtland District, at Toledo, a beautiful city near Lake Erie, (and just in the midst of a great building boom,) of one hundred and eighty thousand population. Noting the immense amount of building going on there, one would never suppose that such an extensive emigration as is on, and has been for five or six years, to the Dakotas, British America, and to Texas and the great South and South-west, was rolling on like a mighty avalanche, as is the case.

Bro. G. A. Smith is a good colaborer with one exception, careful and dignified, but he is too willing for his helper to do most of the preaching. Our stay at Toledo was pleasant. Bro. W. G. Kimball has charge of our work there, and they have a hall on Washington Street, and are holding regular services and Sunday-school. Bro. Tanburg superintends the Sunday-school.

June 16 to July 2 I was at Unipolis, Alginiae County. Near there Bro. G. W. Grass and wife and Sr. Hardin live. Bro. Smith was there with me a part of the time. Here it was that C. Braden and Elder Toney met and locked theological horns and nearly destroyed the cause there represented by both—Disciple and Methodist. They discussed baptism, and the office-work of the Holy Spirit. Their respective positions are too well known to need describing here. While at Unipolis we found the three Saints, yes, four, (one a mere child living at Sr. Hardin's,) standing bravely for the faith, the gospel, but waited, alas, too long! Sad, how sad that so many do thus, concerning their duty to God. We preached there a number of times, mostly in private houses, with good liberty, and some are interested.

July 2 to 19 I was at Toledo and held a number of services. On the last date mentioned, after counseling with Apostle U. W. Greene, minister in charge, it was thought best for me, or Bro. Leonard Scott, to come to this place and look after a debate to have been held by Bro. R. M. Elvin and one A. W. McVey, a minister of the "Anti" wing of the Disciple or Campbellite Church, to begin July 20. Bro. Elvin could not meet this date because of illness of his son-in-law, who was in a helpless condition. Counseling with these brethren, Bro. Leonard Scott took his hands full, looking after the work in the Michigan District, including arranging with committee for a reunion, so he could not respond. And although I had been feeling poorly in health for some weeks, I came, trusting in God. Elder McVey would neither put off the debate, nor arrange new propositions, would accept nothing but Elvin or his substitute. Noting that to seek for proper arrangements under the circumstances might be made to appear as a back-down on our part (Bro. McVey, who had local arrangements, not being well), I accepted the situation rather than to be advertised as being afraid to meet the issue, and on the evening of July 20 the debate of twenty sessions began, and ended August 1. My health improved from the start, and although I came unprepared, having only seen the propositions July 19, and worked continuously from half past four o'clock in the morning to ten at night, by God's blessing I feel better than when the discussion began. This is a new place, and a majority of the people are on our side so far as the debate is concerned. Elder McVey concentrated his efforts on David Whitmer, Martin Harris, and Oliver Cowdery, trying to break the strength of their testimony on the Book of Mormon, and endeavoring to show that Joseph the Martyr taught and practiced polygamy; also trying to show that the Book of Mormon contradicts the Bible. He used United States Histories, Bays, John Hyde, Beadle, and other works, and Whitmer's Address, in which David gives us his opinions, on the subjects treated by him. But his witnesses destroy each other. Bro. F. J. Ebeling and E. E. Long aided me very substantially in the debate. Also, Doctor Gage, who loaned us books for the occasion. R. B. Neil's lying sheet was used by my opponent. But Neil seems not to have read the books published by our opponents. They contradict each other on the exact points at issue. So far as what he read from the Book of Commandments, I noticed it did not differ from the Doctrine and Covenants. He used Doctrine and Covenants 3:2, 3 to kill Harris' testimony; Judge Keene's affidavit, as published by Neil, to slay Cowdery's evidence; and Whitmer's address to kill his own testimony to the Book of Mormon. Let the brethren be on the lookout along these lines.

Bro. F. J. Ebeling is quite nervously affected, is doing what he can for the work, and needs the prayers of the Saints. He has been very active; has rather overworked. We hope and pray that he may be better soon.

The great American Anti-Mormon Association has been effecting but little so far, and is anxious to get to work. May our Father wake up his Saints all along the line, to remember the work both in their prayers and with their means. Many of the Bishop's agents need means with which to prosecute work, and the Lord is just waiting on the Saints to become educated and spiritual-minded, and unselfish enough to begin the work of the gathering, the redemption, and building up of Zion. This can be done only in the way pointed out in the revelations. Will we do this by unselfish cooperation, and proportional equality, or will we surrender to the world, and simply say, "It can not be done in the way pointed out"?

"And if ye are not one ye are not mine," says the Lord. "And you are to be equal." And we must willingly submit to be organized, "that you may be equal in the bands of heavenly things; yea, in earthly things; for if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye can not be equal in obtaining heavenly things." "And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom, even that of a terrestrial, or that of a telestial kingdom."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:5. Saints, where do we stand on this momentous question? Speak out!

The reunion of this Ohio District will convene at Wellston, Ohio, August 17. We will attend if the Lord wills.

In hope of eternal life,

C. Scott.

MINATARE, Nebraska, July 22, 1906.

Dear Saints: Some time ago I told of my sorrowful stay at Lincoln, Nebraska, with my very sick son, Daniel D. Shirk. Well, to-day I have the pleasure of telling you that I baptized him the 8th of July. I think some of the family will soon obey, also others.

I will also say that Olive Branch is in better condition again, and I hope we will grow in favor with God and man. We have some prospects for a reunion near Bro. Sanford Barkdoll's just south and east of Gering, Nebraska, about October 1. Would say further, that Bro. Charles W. Prettyman came in our midst June 20; remaining just about one month, and assisted us at our business-meeting, also preached upon the streets in our town, as also indoor services. I believe his labors will result in good and we wish him God-speed.

In taking up the Herald of July 18, I find a letter from Walter M. Self, also an article from W. T. Cairns, both touching upon secret organizations, also some time ago articles from other writers. Brethren, you may place my name on the record with yours, as pertaining to this matter. For I feel sure it will stand the test for time and eternity. And I wish to say, now, that these things have been a source of annoyance and a stumbling-block to me ever since I became identified with the church in 1884, and even before. And I well recall how one of the Seventy found fault with my hair, it being longer than his, saying I had better take heed that the birds did not get into my hair, yet at the same time he was wearing a fraternal badge on his bosom. And I tell you truly it lowered him much.

as a Saint and Christian in my estimation, although I even heard him speak in tongues, or what claimed to be such. I did not say anything to him about the matter, as I was but a novice in the church; but I thought then it would be wise to let Egypt alone and remove the beam from his own eye.

I would suggest to our brethren who are fond of badges: Get a large one with the name of Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints upon it in large letters, and wear it in all places in which now they wear other badges, thus showing their faith in the church to their lodge members, as they now show faith in their lodge to the church membership when they come to the church services, communion, etc.

O Lord, that thy Holy Spirit may cleanse our hearts from all worldly lusts, in Jesus’ name. Amen.

Humbly your brother,

D. W. SHIRK.

395 Spring Vale Road, SHEFFIELD, England, July 17, 1906.

Brother Joseph: Just a line to say that we are in the land of the living, and we know it in this mission, and can assure you, for it is taking us all our time to keep our end up. We have some good meetings and conferences, but some bad times, at other times. It would seem that when in conference we collectively generate spiritual power and force, to judge from the volume of testimony, that we could easily withstand all the combined forces of hell itself. But it is another picture we see when we are face to face with the world itself. Why is it? I have the testimony, backed up by twenty-five years’ experience, that the power in this work gives to each one real, personal, spiritual ability to overcome evil and sin, whether within or without, ourselves or the church, power to stand steadfast in the truth and for the truth, for right and for God.

We are doing our best to build the work here upon the solid foundation laid by the Master himself, even the word of truth. Let us have your prayers. We want to win, but the burden we have to carry is a very heavy one all the time. If we can get through successfully, we are hoping to hear the ‘well done.’ Faithfulness to duty will be the only passport of any lasting worth to any one of God’s servants. We very often talk of you, Bro. Joseph. Your visit to our land will live in the memory of many while life shall last. We hope you enjoy good health. Sr. Greenwood and the children join in love and good wishes to you and your family.

W. H. GREENWOOD.

CHEROKEE, Oklahoma, August 1, 1906.

Dear Herald: I will write a few lines to let the Saints know how we are getting along in the “Sunny South.” We are all very well pleased with our new home. Crops of all kinds could not look better, as we have had plenty of rain. The winter wheat was an excellent crop, but the rain has spoiled a great deal of it, as the most of the people left it standing out in the shock. Hundreds of acres are unthrashed yet.

We have had a very pleasant summer so far, and have not suffered with the heat any more than in Iowa. It is very hot when the sun shines, but there is almost always a cool breeze, and sometimes it gets quite cold in the night.

We could not be better pleased with the prospects, financially, but we miss church and Sunday-school very much. There are a good many Holiness people around here. They hold Sunday-school in two schoolhouses near here. They do not have any regular minister, but have preaching occasionally.

There are no Saints here that I know of. I truly hope that the Lord will send some one to tell the gospel story, and that an opening may be made here. I am willing to do what I can in the way of helping an elder, and will furnish the best we have while he stays. If any of the ministry in this part of the country see this, we would be very glad to have them call on us.

G. L. SWEET.

Dear Herald: Thought a few words from this part of the vineyard would not be amiss, as I have been writing to all the branches in the Central Michigan District, trying to get each one to pay to the sub-Bishop’s agent ten cents per week, to the storehouse of the Lord. There being something like six hundred members in the district, it would make sixty dollars per week, or two hundred and forty dollars per month, and twenty-eight hundred and eighty dollars per year, being a small amount for each one to give, yet the grand total will soon redeem Zion, if each one in the church will give. It may be a sacrifice for some to give even ten cents per week; but the greater the sacrifice, the greater the blessing. The Lord has told us in Doctrine and Covenants 84:5 that this is a day of sacrifice, a day “for the tithing of my people”; and in section 106, paragraph 2, he tells us that they that fail to keep this law of tithing and consecration shall not be worthy to remain in Zion.

The writer had the privilege of baptizing an aged colored brother in Saginaw July 29, and August 5 we baptized an aged sister, in the same place, the fruit of the preaching of Br. Bennett and Smallwood. August 12 the writer has a baptism tomorrow in West Bay City, and so the work goes on. The Lord is calling now to battle, both the aged and the youth; and so they are coming, as the prophets have said, two of a city, and one of a family. Ever praying for the advancement of the gospel of Christ, I am,

Your coworker in the faith.

E. S. WHITE.

AUBURN, Minnesota, July 28, 1906.

Editors Herald: I am always so interested in the letters in the Herald, as they always touch the heart; but not seeing any from our little branch recently, I thought I would write a few words, that you might know that God’s Spirit is still with us, that his few followers here are still faithful and prayerful.

Three souls have found the truth of his glorious gospel during the summer, your humble servant being one of them; and others are investigating. I have been reading that grand book, With the Church in an Early Day, and I wonder how any one can doubt that God does perform miracles in these latter days as he did thousands of years ago.

To one who must mingle with the affairs of business and life, and see the graft, the greed, the hypocrisy that surround us—as we see the millionaire take the widow’s last dollar, as he turns the begging child away without a farthing, then do his ilk have, in his gold-headed cane and homes, the thronging crowd that ascends the marble steps and enters the church-door, and there asks God to bless him—with these scenes daily confronting us, is it not a miracle, the greatest miracle of the age, that God, in his infinite love and mercy, has patience to still let us enjoy the beauties that this beautiful earth gives us; that he still holds out that invitation, ‘Come unto me’? Oh, what patience with an unappreciative people!

A few days ago I visited the state fair in our neighboring State. The city where it was held claims one of the most beautiful church edifices in the State. As a piece of architecture it could hardly be excelled; but who worship there? Not the poor and humble, not the meek and lowly, but the rich and grand, those of fine clothes and well-filled purses. As I took a friend to visit the interior of the building, while she stood in amazement at its magnificence, I closed my eyes, for on every side it seemed to me I could see only his Satanic Majesty smiling, as he held out his hand and said, “This beautiful throne is mine; this is my house. I am king here, and the worshipers here are my people.” At last, as we stepped out onto God’s beautiful footstool, my friend said, “Isn’t it beautiful?” But she looked rather astonished when I said, “Not if you wish to worship God. It is truly a beautiful piece of man’s handiwork, for man’s admiration and enjoyment, to be ruled by man and overruled by the evil spirit, for there the poor and humble, the meek and lowly can not enter, neither will the Spirit of our blessed Savior enter."

Later as I stood watching the great crowd that had entered the fair-grounds, estimated to number twelve thousand people, a voice seemed to whisper on every side, "Many shall be called, but few shall be chosen;" and my thoughts went back to our own blessed gospel, perhaps the most persecuted and most unpopular church on earth, yet they, the few, God's chosen people.

Brother and sister Saints, is it not expedient that we, his gospel-bearers, awake to the responsibility resting upon us, that we be not only "hearers, but doers of the word"; that we sit not idly down while hungry souls around us perish for God's truth; but rather let us reach out our hand and give them the invitation to enter the precious fold which we enjoy: that when he comes we may return to him the talent and ought not. I fear too often we hesitate, lest we are censured for declaring the truth? Are we not our sister sooffed at and ridiculed for declaring the truth? Are we better than he? Let us ever remember that a cause which is worth living for, is worth dying for, if need be.

For ten weary years my hungry soul searched the scriptures and searched the church creeds for one place where truth was proclaimed; but not till I found the doctrine of the Latter Day Saints did I find it. Thanks to Bro. M. O. Erickson and Sr. M. L. Hawley for my instruction. God bless them both is my daily prayer. Not till the resurrection from the watery grave of baptism, not till the Holy Spirit brought peace to my soul, did I know the true meaning of God's word. Oh, brothers and sisters, pray for me that I may ever prove worthy to be numbered among the faithful few who shall be God's chosen on that glorious morn of resurrection.

Your sister in faith,

MYRTLE ROSE STEWART.

Central Texas.—Conference convened with Texas Central Branch July 28, 1906, 10 a.m., John Harp in the chair, Johnie Hay clerk. Branches reporting: Philadelphia 51, Texas Central 80. Ministry reports: Elders E. W. Nunley, John Harp, S. S. Smith, S. R. Hay, Johnie Hay, J. M. Nunley, W. S. Standlee, W. G. Atkinson, D. B. Higginbotham; Teachers Albert Vancelove, A. Kincey; Deacon J. T. Hobbs. A committee consisting of J. M. Nunley, D. B. Higginbotham, and Johnie Hay was appointed to examine all branch reports and make necessary changes. Tent committee reported, and committee continued. Bishop’s agent’s report read. Election of officers: E. W. Nunley president, Johnie Hay secretary, J. M. Nunley Bishop’s agent, and Johnie Hay local historian. A committee composed of D. B. Higginbotham, S. R. Hay, and Albert Vancelove was appointed to make an examination of the district records to ascertain whether or not Nevil Sherrill has ever been enrolled as a member of the church and whether ever excluded before. After considerable discussion, the action of the Philadelphia Branch in regard to the ordination of Bro. L. Kirkpatrick to the office of a priest was declared null and void. Committee to audit Bishop’s agent’s report, reported: ‘‘We your committee appointed to examine Bishop’s agent’s report beg leave to report as follows: We find that since last report he has received $52.10, has paid out $42.05, leaving a balance $10.05 on hand. We find further that fifteen dollars of the amount paid out went to agent on what was due him at last report, leaving the district still owing agent $1.50; this taken from the amount on hand leaves a balance of $8.55 on hand.’’ Johnie Hay, D. B. Higginbotham, Albert Vancelove, committee. The report was adopted. So also were the following: ‘‘We your committee on branch reports present the following: We examined the reports and with two slight corrections in the Central report they were correct.’’ Johnie Hay, J. M. Nunley, D. B. Higginbotham, committee. "We have examined the district record, and fail to find the name of Nevil Sherrill.” S. R. Hay, D. B. Higginbotham, Albert Vancelove, committee. Bishop’s agent, total receipts for four months, $290.36; expenditures, $290.45; balance on hand, $38.45. A communication from Omaha Branch recommending Bro. F. R. Schafer for ordination to the office of elder was approved, and ordination referred to Branches. Bro. L. Kirkpatrick was appointed to report on the resolutions now in force on the records did so, and their recommendations adopted with a few exceptions. The matter of purchasing a church-building at Blair was brought up by the chair and a statement from Bishop E. L. Kelley read to the effect that the fund from the sale of the Saints’ church at Fremont could be applied on said purchase if authorized by the district. A motion that the funds be so applied prevailed. Bro. E. W. Nunley resigned as vice-president of the district, in consequence of being absent so much, which was accepted, and Bro. D. R. Chambers was chosen to fill vacancy. Bro. H. W. Smith resigned as secretary, having removed from the district. Bro. W. C. Marshall was chosen secretary. The resolution providing for conference to be held on the last Friday in January, May, and September was rescinded. Next conference to meet at Valley, Saturday, September 29, 1906.

To the Members of the Independence Stake: Greeting: That the blessings of our heavenly Father may be upon us, it is necessary for us to remember our financial obligations to the church. Fry need means to carry on our work. This last spring we were commanded to build a sanitary at Independence, and but very little has been contributed to that fund up to date. There is not one of us that would prefer to be under condemnation for not contributing our share, that is, the talent, and offering; this fund is exceedingly low, therefore the necessity of making this apostle. Remember the poor we ‘have always with us,’ and the families of those who are devoting their time and money to this Angel’s mission for the salvation of the human race and the kingdom of heaven upon the earth. We are not justified in diverting the means placed in our hands to other uses, and forgetting the Lord’s work. We should first consider the state of the Master. First seek to establish the kingdom of heaven and his righteousness, and all these other things shall be added unto you. Have we the proper faith in the words of the Savior? Remember first to consider the wants of the church and whether you enter in upon any new enterprise to enlarge whatever business you already have, or to build houses or barns, or to add house to house, or field to field, or lot to lot, or even to take pleasure-trips without first considering God’s advice to us. We to whom the greater light has been given, upon us rests the greater responsibility. Others in the world make great sacrifices to advance that which will be of but little value to them in the great day of reckoning. Why should we hold back when we know that the blessings of our heavenly Father may be upon us, it is necessary for us to remember our financial obligations to the church and how it is right to affect your obligations to God, before you seek his advice? Remember first to establish the kingdom of heaven and his righteousness, and all these other things shall be added unto you.
respect for the rich man than he has for the poor. It is a question of doing our duty according to our several abilities. The Lord will take care of the rest.

Every person who has not filed his statement with the Bishop, it is necessary and proper that he should do so at once; and those who have, do not forget your further obligations, to render your account as the law requires.

Thus may God's blessings and his favor be upon us all, is the prayer of your servant. Roderick May, Bishop of Independence Stake.

AN APPEAL TO THE SAINTS.

Utah District; Greeting: As a servant of Christ and one who is desirous of seeing the good work move forward, and having a desire to see all those who have obtained like precious faith assist in making the work intrust co all, I take this means of reaching all of you; having now visited all the branches in our district, and having failed to receive a proper response to the call made, I again appeal to you in all good faith and conscience, and ask you to remember the repeated calls that have been made for your support in the gospel work. The Lord has said to his church in these last days: "Let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of God, remember the word of the Lord and the teaching of our Lord Jesus Christ. Notwithstanding the teaching of others, they that labor in the word should support themselves."

Now we regret that we are under obligations to again appeal to the Saints of this the Utah District for their support in the work of the Lord. It seems to be required of us, as we are called to teach the law, and we were further duly appointed to act as agent for the Bishop in this part. And now it remains for the Saints here to uphold us in the office and calling wherein we have been called, by bringing in their "tithes and offerings," that there may be funds in the treasury to help in the execution of our mission work in this field, as well as to supply the needs of the missionary families, who are dependent upon the "Lord's storehouse" for support.

We have borne with the conditions here as long as we can consistently, and do justice to ourself and those dependent upon us, and though the only one of our missionary's wife's have been called from this district with the meager allowance of $20.00 per month, she has had to deprive herself of nearly all the necessities of life, and is now four months behind in her allowance, and is still sacrificing the things that are needful that her companion may be able to continue in the mission field; but this can not always continue. Either the Saints here will have to impart of their substance in the way of tithes, or we will be under obligations to discontinue the ministry and engage in secular work in order to cancel the debts contracted by our beloved wife. I call attention to this that I might provoke you to shame, and that thereby you might see the need of contributing to the advancement of the work. Now we are ready to receive for tithes and offering at any time, and hope you will rally to the assistance of the work that the Lord says shall continue, i.e.: It is the will of the Lord that the mission in Utah should be continued.

Shall we assist in the good work, or shall we be the losers? Let us hear from you; and in hearing let us rejoice in your work.

OGDEN, Utah, July 30, 1906.

Misdirected Energy.

Frances, a girl of thirteen, was destined by her mother to be a fine musician. While still a little child she was taught to read the notes and her tiny fingers were placed on the keyboard. Year in and year out the child was obliged to practice, and she acquired a measured amount of skill, but her playing was wooden and spiritless. In despair, her mother said to her, "If I have a house of my own, the first thing that I shall do will be to order the piano chopped up for kindling-wood. I want to be a doctor." Time passed musical studies were dropped, and duly Frances went to the medical college. At last she was allowed liberty to grow in her own proper direction. She is a successful physician, treating nervous disorders with rare sympathy and understanding.—W. M. Stengel, in the Woman's Home Companion for July.

FINEST MUSIC

SAINTS" HERALD

THE WORLD FOR STATE FAIR VISITORS
IN IOWA.
There is not any musical organization better known all round the world than the military and concert band under the direction of Signor Liberati. This organization has traveled for many years and in all countries has commanded the attention of immense crowd.s of delighted music lovers. It will be again present at the Iowa State Fair in Des Moines the last week of the month, and on each day will give a series of splendid con.certs of choicest modern music. The opening concert will be given Sunday afternoon at 4: 30 o'clock. In addition the fair management has secured an orchestra for the pavilion, and the F'ifty-sixth Regiment band, I. N. G. for music at the amphitheater and elsewhere. Iowa people love music and they will be given the best there is at the State Fair.
While the Fair is distinctly educational in character and practical in every part, there is abundant provision for the pleasure of visitors. With music and races there goes a program of highest class vaudeville, the special features including the Eight Allisons, finest acrobats ever brolight to America; the Miller performing elephants in wonderful tricks; the thrilling "double gap of death" where men on bicycles pass each other in mid-air; the four Pickards, in feats of casting and return of an aerolite; the Seventeen Zouaves; circus acts, trick mule, clowns, etc. The setting for this almost complete show will be a specially painted tropical garden scene 300 feet long.
The Knabenshue airship will make its first trip from the fair grounds to the city passing over the top of the state-house on Monday, August 27. It will be a sight worth traveling far to see.
IN

An Ideal All-around Newspaper.

Probably no other newspaper in the United States can show so brilliant an array of special features suited to the tastes and needs of every member of the family as the Chicago Record Herald. Its regular daily and Sunday features include the letters of William E. Curtis and Walter Wellman, besides the special dispatches from the great centers. Next in importance comes the Record Herald's unparalleled foreign news service, embracing its own special cables and those of the New York

Its pages devoted to commercial and financial news of all kinds are unsurpassed in scope and accuracy. Among other noteworthy features are its popular sporting page, its sound editorials, Kiser's humorous "Alternating currents," the lively "Stories of the street and town," the railroad and insurance columns, music and drama, society and clubs, daily reviews of the latest books, the continued story, the "Woman Beautiful" department, the daily fashion article, "Meals for a day," news of the lakes, etc., besides a complete array of local and domestic news-all uniting to give the people of Chicago. and the Northwest a complete and interesting all-around newspaper.
The Sunday Magazine of the Record-Herald is an artistic and literary triumph. Famous authors and illustrators, fine paper and presswork, combine to make it the rival of the great independent periodicals and. a <listinct departure in Sunday journalism.
The Arena for August contains some very interesting articles for students of present-day political problems. "The court is king," by the Honorable Thomas Speed Mosby, the present Pardon-Attorney of Missouri, and author of a manual of Supreme Court practice, is a contribution of very great value to persons who believe with Thomas Jefferson and other great statesmen in carefully guarding each coordinate branch of government from encroaching upon the legitimate rights of · the other branches. Another paper of deep interest is entitled ''Common ground for socialist and individualist," and has been written by Mr. John W. Bennett. The editor discusses at length the results of the recent referendum vote in Oregon, and points out how the results have vindicated the efforts of the friends of Direct-Legislation in all their claims for Popular Sovereignty and have proved the unsoundness of the arguments advanced against the fundamental principles of democracy in government as practically applied through Guarded Representative Government. Among papers of general interest to thoughtful readers we would mention the following: "The right of the child not to be born," by Louise Markscheffel; "The spirit of American literature," a criticism of Gertrude Atherton's article, by Winifred Webb; "Our next ice-age," by John C. Elliot; "Alfred Russel Wallace: scientist, philosopher, and humanitarian," by the editor of the Arena; "Picturesque Rothenburg," an illustrated paper, by Williamson Buckman; "Shall prohibition be given a fair trial?" by Finley C. Hendrickson; "San F'rancisco and her great opportunity," by George Wharton James; "Foodproduction of the future." by John A. Morris; and "Byron: a study in heredity," by Charles Kassel. There are many other features of popular interest in this remarkably strong and interesting number.
The F ~remost Personality of ihe Douma.
Aladyin! Odd name. Odd individuality. Molten lead is less fiery than he under stress; cooled lead less stolid when he is at rest. The Douma bristles with personalities; no congressional body more. The venerable, the striking, the warriorlike, the statemanlike, the plain people in homespun whose very simplicity is a distinction-all are there. Only one stands uniquely apart,--Aladyin. The Westerner casts one glance at him and murmurs, "Walking Delegate." He is just that type. But this is a type new to Russia. Verily, he is the first.
"Who are the most striking personalities in the Douma'?" I asked of four representative men. Each one of the four named Aladyin first! Yet he is not distinguished, not prepossessing, not unusual. Indeed, he is essentially commonplace, but largely and intensely commonplace. He is the average man emphasized, --his hopes, his ambitions, his weaknesses, his failings, are all inherently mediocre and bourgeois. But he burns with that commonplace hope; he would be a glad martyr to that middle-class ambition; he betrays his weaknesses in his step and in his dull eye;
he trips repeatedly over those ordinary failings that a cleverer man would avoid. Of reserve he has little~ Of force he has much. He is fearless to foolhardiness, and outspoken beyond all courtesy. In other words, he is a simple, honest man. The analysis of personality is a fatuous thing, and one may easily go astray by elusive leads which promise what they do not reveal. Aladyin has many traits of character that are tangible.
But none explains the man. He is this, and that, and the other thing--all obviously-and yet the man remains an enigma.
Interests center in him because of these paradoxical qualities.
-From "Aladyin, Russia's first walking delegate," by Kellogg Durland, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for August.

Moved to Independence

The senior Editor of the HERALD, President Joseph Smith, has with his family removed from Lamoni, Iowa, to Independence, Missouri. Perhaps the readers of the HERALD would like to know why the President should have done this:

For a number of years the slow passage of time has been making the Editor grow old, and an additional burden of sickness borne for the past six or seven months has admonished him that he could no longer meet all the requirements of multifarious duties. In connection with this the brethren have been advising a cessation of labor and a consequent "taking care" of one's self.

Some years ago the Editor and President had certified to the Bishopric, general and local, that at any time the church needed or could use the house he had built and occupied at Lamoni, when his family was large, and would provide a home more suitable for the smaller family, the place was at the disposal of the Bishopric.

The time of our sickness last fall seemed an opportune one; several of the brethren put their forces at work, and December 1 moved our household stuff, or as much as was needed, into the house formerly occupied by Bishop E. L. Kelley, the intention being to relieve us of the care of so large a house, to get us nearer to the office and work. We were grateful both the care and consideration, and the taking the labor off our hands. The winter was tedious, and an enforced idleness was hard to be borne; so, when the Bishop decided to take over Liberty Hall for the use of the Saints' Home we were out of possession and accepted the parting with our home as a thing decreed.

We attended the April session of Conference at Independence, and heard again the opinion of many that we ought to move to the city. At first we disliked to entertain the idea, but after consideration, and taking it to the Lord in prayer, we became reconciled to the thought of removal from Lamoni, and were ready to accept the direction and admonition of the Spirit to us to make a home at Independence.

The way to our securing a home was opened up and on August 8 we removed, and have located at

The associated press, August 20, reports some of the details of the destructive earthquake at Valparaiso, Chile, in which it is estimated two thousand lost their lives, seven thousand were injured, and one hundred thousand left homeless. Great loss of property. Sixteen inland cities shared in the destruction. There were three hundred and eighty-two shocks reported, lasting a period of sixty hours. As in San Francisco, fire and scarcity of water added to the horrors. "Are not cities and nations and villages but as pebbles in my hands? For, behold, on yesterday their magnitude was thine amazement and to-morrow thou shalt ask: 'Where are they?'"

We give three reasons for this removal: 1. A change was necessary for us. 2. The Home needed Liberty Hall. 3. Independence was the logical sequence, if we made a new home anywhere. And to this we add the admonition and assurance of the Spirit to us, that it was our duty.

That coming events cast their shadows before, is true in this instance, as testimonies to many have shown.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

President Joseph Smith has removed from Lamoni Iowa, to Independence, Missouri, and in consequence will be away from the central place of business for longer or shorter periods of time. In the meantime no change of place of business is made, and Lamoni will remain as principal business center until a change has been properly made as provided in law, if such change is at any time in the future deemed necessary by the church.

The Church Secretary, Bro. Richard S. Salyards, is at Lamoni, and will attend to all church business requiring attention, attaching to his, or the President's office, forwarding to the President what will require the personal attention of the Presidency, as well as giving attention to what is for the Secretary's own action. Bro. Salyards also being the President's private secretary, is in position to attend to and reply to many of the questions coming into the office touching church affairs, rules, regulations, etc., and he is well qualified by his long service to so attend to business for the church.

The Presidency will give attention to matters requiring their attention as heretofore. President Joseph Smith and Counselor Frederick M. Smith are at Independence at present. Counselor R. C. Evans is in attendance at reunions and conferences in the East, but can be reached when needed.

Address business to Lamoni, Iowa, care of R. S. Salyards, Church Secretary; personal matters to President Joseph Smith, 1214 West Short Street, Independence, Missouri; President F. M. Smith, 630 Chrysler Avenue, Independence, Missouri; and President R. C. Evans, 474 Adelaide Street, London East, Ontario.

ELDER WHITE IN HONOLULU.

The Pacific Commercial Advertiser for July 29 and 31, have reached us by the kindness of Bro. G. J. Waller. From the latter we clip.

Elder J. D. White of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints delivered his first public discourse in Honolulu, at the chapel of that body, yesterday evening. The service was well attended. Among a goodly number of visitors from outside the church membership were some elders of the Utah communion.

In a pleasing mode of speech Elder White laid particular stress on the difference between the Reorganized and the Utah churches. Also he was emphatic in urging that the scheme of salvation as propounded by Jesus Christ was the only way whereby man could be saved. It was perfect. Nothing could be taken from or added to it.

Elder White arrived here from Independence, Missouri, on Thursday last, as reported in the Advertiser next day, to stay some time, perhaps permanently, as a missionary of the Reorganized Church. By secular profession he is a lawyer.

DOWIE OBJECTS.

Doctor Dowie makes objection to the finding of the court in the contention between himself and Overseer Voliva, his objection being against the statement that the property at Zion City was a trust, and was so held by him, he having only a five per cent claim, which claim he said was well understood by those who contributed to the general fund. We are quite sure that we saw a statement to this effect in Leaves of Healing; but it seems that the Doctor's objection will hardly be valid—it comes too late.

Notwithstanding the perversity and prejudice and corruption with which this reverend adventurer so freely charged the courts of Illinois, he now appears to make appeal to those same courts to aid him in what must be an individual venture, if his objection is correct. It is not the first time secular courts have been called upon to decide pending quarrels between the holy brethren.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. C. A. Butterworth, of the Australasian Mission, reports four baptisms for the quarter. He states that Bro. Henry Broadway is laboring in West Australia, where he has baptized some who with Saints living near by will form a new branch in the near future.

The discussion pro and con as to the permissibility of holding banking stock, etc., under the celestial law, has been quite interesting to some. The vantage ground from which we observe the situation may have something to do with our enjoyment or nonenjoyment of the subject. We hope that neither capital nor its devotees will show the white feather, and demand that the press be muzzled. We believe Thomas Jefferson spoke the truth when he said, "Where the press is free, and every man able to read, all is safe." That is, all right is safe. Truth will not suffer by free discussion and critical examination. Present both sides, and let every man judge for himself. Let capital tell how it toils and sweats, even after closing hours, to formulate plans for benefiting the poor and needy; and then let the poor and needy tell how they were benefited by the plans so carefully laid as a result of this tedious overwork. Let all the brethren who have paid more than the amount of the principal on their homes in interest, and still owe the principal—let those who have paid for a home two or three times in this way—tell how they were benefited when, because sickness stopped temporarily the payments, the home which had been paid for twice or thrice went to satisfy the balance of the debt. Let the builders of those vacant hen-coops of which we heard awhile ago tell, if they wish, how they were unable to pay for them, because mortgage and interest swallowed the chicks so fast they never could get anything ahead to pay on the principal. Who is afraid to have the facts told about these things? Truth is not.

Original Poetry

Where the Somber Curtain Falls.
Out before my vision sweeping,
There extends the course of man,—
By the measure of time's creeping, Pressing to 'ard the silent van.
Behold the youth with all his power,
To think, to love, to plan and do,
Treading onward to that bower
Which screens alike, all from our view;
Where the golden bowl seems broken,
Or the silver cord be loosened;
Where the muffled word is spoken,
And our hopes are tempest-tossed;
When the bowl at Nature's fountain Breaks while wounded love yet calls;
When despair looms like a mountain,
As the somber curtain falls;
Is there then for hope no anchor,
Which can stay her shifting bark?
Of a night so deep and dark?
Shall we stand and view that curtain,
With its somber shades of night, and our hopes are tempest-tossed?
Shall those powers once so vivid,
In their strength and beauty grand,
Yield for ever to the livid
Work of death's most canny hand?
Prail the cord so easy broken,
That by merest chance 'tis rent;
Shall this chance be then the token
Of progress now, for ever spent?
Speed the question as with arrows,
To the heights, and depths below,
And a thousand thousand echoes Strongly, firmly, answer—No!
Let that "No," faint heart, go deeper;
Deep down in thy troubled soul;
For 'twill be a sweet peace-keeper,
And light thy feet to a shining goal.

JAMES YATES.

RIDGETON, Oklahoma, July 26, 1906. to Rome and discover if he could, right at the seat of the church, the added knowledge that would fit and prepare him for a grand career; but when Martin Luther found what was going on in the Vatican his soul was aroused to righteous indignation.

Instead of finding that degree of spiritual culture and righteousness at Rome and the seat of the church that he expected to find from his devotedness, he found a scene of confusion, priestly corruption; and that some of the rumors that had been made by the adversaries of the faith were true. He undertook to remonstrate with many of those with whom he came in contact, but he was laughed at; and when he gave up the thought that he could benefit the cause by remaining with the church at Rome he returned to his home in Germany, and began a crusade against the encroachments of the Catholic Church that resulted in the Reformation. He was joined by a number of students, among them Melanchthon. And if it had not been for the conservative element that was injected into the movement by the presence of Melanchthon it is probable that the world would never have seen such a widespread reformation as followed Martin Luther’s effort. He was befriended by the duke of Hesse-Cassel, and this ruler certified to Martin Luther and to Melanchthon that he could not live a religious life, unless he was permitted to have two wives; and this privilege was granted him by a royal ukase issued by the church. I only call your attention to this for the purpose of not exactly pointing the moral, but to get at the real facts in the case. Whatever of priestly authority descended upon Martin Luther came through the Catholic Church; and in seeking to follow the separate movements we find that Servetus made headway, advancing a dogma that John Calvin would not accept, a trifling difference, as it might be, a separation occurred, and Servetus was burned at the stake at Geneva.

Subsequent revolts gave to England the Covenant­ ers, or Independents, and the Congregationalists, finally the Methodists, arising from the efforts of Charles and John Wesley. These obtained the name Methodists from the methods employed in their worship, and for many years the term “Methody” or “Methodists” was a term of reproach; and was finally accepted by them as a body; and, so far as America is concerned, through the influence of Whitefield, Bishop Asbury, and others, the Methodist Church became established in America. When the numbers had increased it was thought best by some of them here that they should have a bishop ordained.
As a natural result they went to the Church of England for it; but when Mr. Wesley was first approached upon the subject of ordaining a bishop, he looked at the thought with a kind of holy horror; the idea that he should lay his hand upon a man and anoint him to the holy office of bishop—and Bishop Asbury was the result. Whatever of historic or successive authority was vested in the Methodist Church came through the Church of England. I am simply stating a fact that all of us may be familiar with, but it is necessary for the purpose of occupying farther on.

The colony up yonder at New Haven had an uneasy member there, who by some means had become imbued with the thought that there was no particular necessity for the domination of the citizen by the church; and who held that citizenship should be governed by civil laws, as the church and state should be separate; and the religious authorities of the colony up there banished this man down to the Indian settlement, and Roger Williams became the central figure from which sprang the Baptist Church in the United States. When he found that he would not be permitted to stay in the colonies about New Haven, take part and parcel with their work there, began preaching in the region where he was settled, called the Providence Plantations; finally others fell in with him and it became necessary, as they thought, to establish a church, upon which he and one other went down into Long Island Sound and baptized each other, and thus arose the Baptist Church in America. Whatever of power and authority attached to this departure may be traced through the Puritans and others back to the Church of England.

I am willing to grant for the sake of argument that revolt was righteous. I am willing to grant that men had the right to dissent in opinion from their fellows; that it was possible that there might be a portion of virtue which passed through these different ordinances and gave rise to these different organizations; but the difficult matter so far as we are concerned is, that we can not distinctly trace a line of apostolic or authoritative succession through unbroken, uninterrupted generations unto the foun­ dainhead of Christ; and we are all impressed with the thought that if there had been authority granted unto the church by Christ and it was intended that it should continue in human history, that it should come on down the stream of time unbroken, so far as its succession is concerned, and through channels that Jesus Christ himself would recognize. If they do not, and we find the breaks of such character that we can not concede that Christ accepted them and gave his sanction to them, we are warranted in believing that there was not a sufficient degree of apostolic authority descended through the church to give them the proper succession.

Tracing the matter a little further for the purpose of our occupation, we find Thomas Campbell, the father of Alexander, a stanch Presbyterian. It is said that he came over to America for the purpose of reestablishing his health. It is also whispered that at home he was something of a recluse (?) trend; but at all events, when he came over here he was a stanch Presbyterian. He settled about Brush Creek in Western Virginia. His son Alexander and his sister, finding that there was a discussion in reference to the validity of Christian baptism to be held near their home attended such discussion between a clergyman of the Baptists and another, in which the Baptist clearly proved that the true order of Christian baptism was by immersion. After he returned home, in conversation with his sister and looking the matter up, he became satisfied that this was correct; and so posted away some forty odd miles and was baptized by a Baptist minister whose name was Luse. The proposition upon which he was baptized by this man was this, and I think it found its recognition in the statement subsequently made by Thomas Campbell about the time of the organization of the so-called Christian Church, signifying that the church was a band of believers who had been baptized by one who was a baptized disciple. Whatever authority was conferred, so far as baptism was concerned, and which would give a right to church significance that attached unto Alexander Campbell, was received through the Baptist Church. I want you to bear it in mind, because it will affect the argument a little further on. Alexander Campbell immediately set about preaching from the word his peculiar views. He became associated with the Mahoning Association up there in Northern Ohio, and he with others began a remarkable movement there, having for their chief sentiment or doctrine, "Jesus is the Christ," and "baptism by immersion the only mode of Christian baptism." The advanced ideas of Alexander Campbell did not find favor with the Baptist association, and they finally relegated him to the private walks of life; and he and others, upon this hypothesis, organized what was known subsequently as the Christian or Disciple Church, having its chief seat along in the Western Reserve and Northern Ohio.

Among these individuals subsequently was a man by the name of Sidney Rigdon. He was a successful minister in the Baptist Church, located at Pittsburg upon one occasion, and became a fiery, eloquent advocate of the Baptist philosophy; but he too drank in with the advanced movement made by Alexander Campbell and others, and became an associate with them, and labored all through Northern Ohio and Western New York; and it has been the task of Brn. William H. and E. L. Kelley to search the records and to find out the whereabouts of Sidney Rigdon during the three years prior to the organization of the church and the publication of the Book of Mormon; and I am told by Bro. Kelley, and I believe it, that they located him every month of the time, could tell where he was and what he was doing. He celebrated marriages here, and there; he preached and held meetings in other places, and so they traced him by the county records and by the published affairs of the time, and located him, and could not locate him anywhere where there was collusion between himself and Joseph Smith.

The principle now, as I understand it, of church succession is this: If Jesus Christ organized a church and perpetuated it upon the earth, and it could be traced in its organic form until the time in which we live, it would be our privilege to go no further than that; as we admire and hold to the thought that our safety and salvation were to be found in acknowledging Jesus Christ as the supreme head of the church, we should find it in his church; and if we could have traced it, as others have thought they did, it is a serious question if this body that we represent to-day would have ever been born into the contending elements in the religious world.

I have shown you briefly how these matters came to pass in the United States and I argue that Alexander Campbell, Thomas Campbell, and those men that came out of the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches associated with them, had the undoubted right to revolt against any encroachment of doctrine, practice, or philosophy that would destroy the organic form of the church, or that was hurtful unto a line of succession by which authoritative administration was had by members properly received unto the existing church of Christ. I admit that. I admit that John and Charles Wesley had the right to institute a reform. There is no kind of question but what John Wesley was one of the most eloquent and persistent denouncers of evil habits and wrong among mankind. There is no kind of question but what Charles Wesley had aspirations that were noble; they are breathed in his songs that he wrote for the church, and the persistency with which they continued to work in behalf of this infant church which they were the means of planting indirectly, at least, on American soil, is worthy of all praise—but John Wesley died a presbyter of the Church of England. I admit now that if Sidney Rigdon chose to do it, he had the undoubted right as an individual to revolt against the encroachment of the original church and to have planted in its stead that which was in accordance with the will of God if he could have discovered it, and it is a significant fact and it may be worth our while to take notice of it and inform ourselves relative to it, that no church organization from the Catholic Church down ever succeeded from the text of the Old and New Testament in perfecting an organization that would bear a distinct and clear relation to the New Testament form; and when an individual who had come out from the Christian Church and had united with us became dissatisfied and proposed to withdraw from the church, and I asked him the question if it would not be profitable for him to remain until he could find something better, he says, "I can go out and organize a church according to the primitive pattern, and so can any other man with the Bible in his hand." I said to him, “Brother John, blot out from your memory that which you have received from the teaching of the men with whom you have been in association for the last five years; take from your memory and your grasp the Book of Mormon and the revelations in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and you are just as unable to organize a church according to the primitive pattern as either John Wesley or Alexander Campbell. You are not as smart a man as either of these, and if these men failed, as you know they have, you with your inferior talents would not be more able to do it than they to-day; if you are able to do just what you say you can, your fortune is made; you can climb the heights of renown in this American country, you can place your name high up in the galaxy of reformers, and you can make it possible to destroy the onward sweep of this work that we are advancing; because if you can successfully infuse the thought of proper church organization into existence by virtue of what you have in the Old and New Testament alone, you have done what no man has succeeded in doing hitherto.”

I admitted then his rights as I do now. The reason why I do that is this: that if the right be held as attaching to this man, it attached to other men, and for the same reasons; and if perchance Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon should have found that there were things taught, and things practiced as church teaching and church practices that were not in accordance with the will of God, they had the right to rise up in the church to which they belonged, and protest against such teaching and practices; and had the right to agitate and carry on the warfare of reformation until they too should have secured disciples and organized a church; and I am gratified sometimes with the thought that had these two men done this without reference to what has been claimed touching the ministrations of an angel, they would have been eminently successful and doubtless would have rivaled the churches from which they came out in process of time.

But suffice it to say, that no collusion is shown between Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon until after the Book of Mormon is published in 1829. Mother stated that she became acquainted with Sidney Rigdon sometime in the fall of 1830, she could not say the exact month. My Aunt Katharine Salisbury, who became united to her husband, Mr. Salisbury, in the spring of 1831 says that the family did not know Mr. Rigdon till they met him in Kirtland in 1831. The family unite in saying that there was no collusion between Sidney Rigdon and my father before 1830. We are told that this church was organized according to the commandment of God; unfortunately for us, the men who were engaged in the movement, perhaps not seeing what might afterwards attach of importance unto their having kept a correct record or a minute record of all the things that took place, have left the record of the period from 1829 to 1835 in something of a disordered and disjointed condition, and when I am asked the question as to certain things, I can not tell why they were done; I can not tell who did them, nor can I tell the time at which they were done; but suffice it to say that at the time the church was organized, it began to take form and that until 1835 its laws came to them by revelation, and by commandment were given to the people, acquiesced in by them, and movements consummated in connection with them by which the church-work was done. I am not here to say that these men did not work according to that which had been given them as commandment; to find fault with them because they have not put an absolutely faultless record into my hands by which I might know every step that they took in this formative period; but I am here to say that in 1835 the rules of the organization were sufficiently crystallized, and the formative movement had gone forward so far that they were able to publicly place before the world their faith, and to affirm that the word of God as understood by them was found in the Bible, placing themselves squarely before the people to whom they preached, that they accepted it as the word of God. Not in the absolute sense in which some believe, or because they did not believe it was inspired plenarily in every chapter, in every verse, in every line, in every word, but they took the Bible and stated to the world that they accepted it for what itself purported to be.

They also placed themselves on record as a body as holding to the Book of Mormon—that the word of God was contained in the Book of Mormon. They accepted this statement upon the hypothesis made by one of the writers of the Book of Mormon, that it was not a faultless book, that there might be found things in it that were disjointed or broken; but, if there were faults there, they were the faults of men and they made no apology for it. They also presented to the world their acquiescence of the rules and obligations of the church at that time with the commandments or church articles and covenants, and formulated their belief and placed it upon record, placing the three records as forming the standard books upon which their organization and the success of the movement were to be placed.

I was born in the latter part of the year 1832. I was born during this formative period of the church. I became, as a boy, acquainted with many individuals who comprised it. Afterwards, reading the history, I found that they went out into Missouri, being led there by a specific purpose to tell what they believed to be the design of God given unto them by direct commandment, and there they planted a church. There they planted a branch or branches of the original church, having the same organic form, having the same rules and the same laws that the church at Kirtland, Ohio, had at the time that this belief was formulated.

A rapid advancement had been made; a great many persons had united with the church, among them Sidney Rigdon. A disturbance occurred at Kirtland; individuals lopped off here to the right and to the left. A disturbance occurred in Missouri, and individuals dropped off there; but no specific divergence of faith or unbelief was ever urged against the church itself, against its doctrines and its philosophy, but against individuals; but these were not done until after the formation of the rules by which the church was identified as one. David Whitmer and others were expelled from the church in 1838, long after they had been identified with the body and in personal accord with the rules of the Doctrine and Covenants, the faith of the Book of Mormon and the Bible; long after they had served for years as members of the church; and when they did go out they went out not protesting against the doctrines and saying that they were evil or that the encroachments were wrong; but for other reasons than these they went out. I admit they had the right, if they found Joseph Smith and others were endeavoring to take captive the liberties of the people, they had the undoubted right to rise up and object and protest as strongly as it is possible for men to protest; and had they done this and remained in the church fighting consistently; and if they had publicly arraigned these leaders of the church for those specific encroachments, had there been any, and naming them, they would have received the strong support of members in such arraignment, and would have been joined by them, defeating the object of usurpation; but they did not do it. The history shows nothing of the kind, and I think I discovered at the first conference we held at Independence, Missouri, one of the reasons why Doctor William E. McLellin did not continue in harmony with the church. We met with the conference there in our little church-building over on the east side, and when we went through our usual formula of having an informal organization, and when it was broached, some one made the motion to proceed to an informal organization and I heard Doctor McLellin say, "That is wrong," not once, but several times, and I turned and rebuked him. I told him we would take care of our own business, and that we did not propose to allow persons on the outside to regulate and direct us. I thought right then and there that Doctor McLellin exhibited the disturbing element of interference with things beyond his jurisdiction, and if he had been properly rebuked at the time he might have been made a useful man. At the close of the service I reached out my hand to shake hands with him, and he put his hand behind him and said, "No, sir, I don't think I ought to shake hands with you." I said, "Why?" He says, "You rebuked me." I said, "Doctor, it isn't worth while to aggravate your offense by lying about it. You interfered, sir. When we made our informal motion you said, 'That is wrong, that is wrong.'" He said, "I didn't think you heard me." I told him I did, and if we were going wrong we would take the consequences of it. We were quite good friends from that on, only he remained outside of the church. I speak of this to show that some of the reasons that have been assigned for departures from the church are not correct; that there is an unwritten history in connection with it which would go far toward establishing the correctness of the formation of the organization during that period and subsequent to the time of their being driven out from Missouri.

In 1833 they had to get out of Jackson County; in 1838 they had to get out of the State. But during all this time the supremacy of the church, the integrity of its doctrines were as they had been. From 1830 to 1835 there was no specific change, and none charged and none demanded, and every man that had stood with the church in regard to those things remained the same in his opinion.

In 1844 Joseph Smith was killed; in 1846 they moved out from Illinois; and soon after the death of Joseph Smith we began to hear whispers and rumors that certain things had been had in the church that were of an evil nature. It was alleged that Joseph Smith taught secretly evil doctrine, that he instituted evil practices; but we trace the history along down and find no public advocacy or teaching of such things. We find no public statement in reference to that specific doctrine affirming it as a tenet of the church until August 29, 1852. Now if it be true that such a thing as that occurred prior to the death of Joseph Smith, it was the undoubted right of every man that belonged to the church from his counselor down to the latest addition to it, to openly protest against it; and I have the opinion that if this had been done it would surely have saved the strange apostasy that took place. There was only one or two that assayed to raise a voice against it after Joseph Smith's death, and before the exodus from Illinois; and these were overwhelmingly crushed. But there was a class of individuals that quietly drew away from active participation in church-work: they did not accept the philosophy; they did not believe in the principle; it did not conform with that the church had received at its inception and thence on to the declarations of belief in 1835; it was dissonant unto the organic elements that were in the church, and nowhere can we find a public document written by any of the leaders, or the report of a single sermon of any of the eldership down to the death of Joseph Smith, in which these things were advocated or even hinted at. I speak of this for the reason that our chief opponents in the way of church succession in the West assumed that they are the body in succession. If they are, we are not. If they are in the true succession, we are but an offshoot, an apostate organization, and every man of us is moving forward in our faith in our church organization at the extraordinary risk of being finally discharged as being heretical, and our works burned, though we may possibly be saved as individuals.

But it so happens that rumors of what was going on had been circulated; and three years and a half after the death of Joseph Smith in 1844, an individual rose up in the congregation and said that it was time for the church to be reorganized; beginning with the First Presidency; and this reorganization began. There were but a small number collected together at Winter Quarters in Iowa and Nebraska, when it was done, and it is quite possible that some of these gray-haired men that are listening to me were present in the assembly. Brigham Young was declared President of the church. This reorganization began there, and when those pioneers went across the mountains and President Young struck his cane into the soil and said, “Here shall the temple of the Lord be built,” they went down into the waters of City Creek, or the Jordan, a number of them, and the next morning there were two hundred and eighty-eight rebaptized; and from that time on under the edict of President Brigham Young all that had been baptized in the East and in foreign lands were required to submit to rebaptism. And the only statement I was ever able to get out of any of them as to the reason why it was done, was simply that it was done at the command of the men in authority. When I asked Uncle David Garner, a brother to Bro. Henry Garner here, how it was that they submitted to it, he said that the Presidency ordered it. I asked the question if there were any reasons for it, and the answer was that President Young had said that they had sinned enough in crossing the plains to be discharged as being heretical, and our works burned, though we may possibly be saved as individuals.

I go back a little now. I was baptized by my father sometime in the close of 1843 or the beginning of 1844. I was confirmed by Almon Babbitt. Was a member of his Sunday-school class; and to all practical intents and purposes I was a member of the church and had been for some months at the time father was killed. I had been blessed in Liberty jail, Missouri, in 1838, according to the legendary teaching of the church or traditionary teaching of the elders, and what was laid down in reference to the priesthood and it having been hid with this man and that man in Christ, or in God, according to their lineage; and prophetic statements had been made concerning me. I was called into the presence of a number of the elders in Nauvoo, and I was again blessed and prophetic statements made concerning me in reference to my rights and privileges as a lineral descendant of Joseph Smith; and one of the elders of the West has written a work in which he professes to show that this could not possibly be of any value because it was never thought of until 1860. I remember myself hearing the statement made in Nauvoo by several men, that no reference must be made to the successor of Joseph Smith, that it was well known to many that one of his sons would succeed, but to give a knowledge of that to the people was to put a knife to the throat of the lad. It would never have been referred to by me but for the knowledge of the fact that when I came to manhood and became satisfied that it was necessary for me to make some movement, I made inquiry for myself and was directed to unite with the Reorganization. I ascertained where that was, because in 1856 two messengers had reached me in reference to it. There was no necessity for urging anything in regard to this succession, until the time came that there was a necessity for it. There was no appearance of this necessity through human agency, hence no claim may have been made; and it is not against us that nothing was said about it until 1860. The silence that men had maintained in regard to it did not vitiate the fact, for when it was necessary for it to come to the light, like all other things which God has made in his time it did come to the light.

In 1851 a number of these individuals who did not go west, who did not accept the administration of President Young, the dogma of plural marriage, and all that pertained to it; the matter of sealing for time and eternity; these individuals had settled all around in this western land and in parts of Illinois and Wisconsin; and the Spirit began to move upon them just as the prophet saw it as stated in the Book of Mormon, and began to teach them that they were to gather together and talk to one another about their hope. They did so, and in June, 1852, a conference of these members was held; and thanks be to God, according to the idea that was found in the statement made by Doctor Robinson touching the integrity of the movement that was made at the time the Mayflower came over here in reference to the inspiration of God, he told the people that when the inspiration should come they must be as ready to receive it as they had been the teaching from his own lips. So when these men gathered together, instead of there coming to them a specific revelation directing them every step they should take, the Spirit told them that the law of the Lord was written in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and that there they should find what to do. That is the first time that the laws of the church given by the Master had been distinctly referred to as being the organic law through which an organization could take place, if there was ever a disintegration.

Now here was the question: By what right did these men do this? I answer, as members of the church they had been legally inducted into the church by an authoritative baptism, through the restoration of an authority that could not be traced through the churches back to the primitive organization under Christ. They had been permitted to have the authoritative sanction of God telling them what they should do, and they were ministered unto, and made properly members of the church, and their membership could not be divested from them, unless they by direct act of transgression turned their backs upon the offers of mercy and did that which was evil and wrong, thus vitiating their covenant with God and becoming castaways. No branch of church legislation, no elders' court, no board of referees, no quorum, no council could possibly divest a man of his membership, unless it was for cause; and while he retained his faith, his membership in the church, the right to protest against the encroachments of evil and of wrong attached to him; the right to preach the gospel, the right to officiate in the ordinances which belong to the church, the right to exercise the privileges attaching to him by virtue of the call and ordination unto the priesthood attached to him; and when these men protested as they did in June, 1852, against these terrible encroachments, they were by two months in advance of the efforts made to fasten it upon the church without the action of a proper council, and without the action of the body properly taken; without the uplifted hand, as was had from the Mount Sinai when Moses' people acknowledged the law of the Lord and said, "Upon us and our children be the consequences if we keep not this law." The members of the church, the children of those members raised their voices and hands in solemn affirmation that they would not accept this that disintegrated, broke up, and destroyed the integrity of the church; that they would not accept the dogma and practice which had brought in such evil and disturbed the true rights of the people of God. I protest that as an individual member of the church, as a man, individually, from the time of my early manhood until the time I became acquainted and connected with the church, I had never forfeited my right to the membership; I never had been tried by any class of men or an ecclesiastical court for a departure from the creed; I have never been charged to appear before any tribunal of the church to answer for evil conduct by which the church had a right to dismember me. I speak of this now because what attached to me attached to every man that retained his integrity, every child that maintained his integrity that was baptized into the church.

Now just as certainly as the movement under Loyola by which the Jesuit became a vicious adjunct of the Catholic Church, by which it became acquainted with the secrets of state and made possible all the cruel things done in the name of religion, the persecution that followed the poor devotees that protested and were driven, degraded, pursued, hunted, and killed, the remnants left from which persecution went into the mountains of Italy, Montenegro, and the Black Sea and cast the seed of the church broadcast over all lands; just by the same process by which the authority of the Catholic Church was vitiated, coming through corrupt popes and vicars, by just the same processes there came to pass a disintegration of this church in these last days by which its organization was destroyed and its right to act before God was broken up; and no member was under obligation to submit to it for a single moment. I am sometimes glad as an individual I withstood it. I am many times glad that men like Uncle John here, Father Allison, Bro. Haywood, Bro. Zenos Gurley, Bro. Isaac Sheen, Bro. Israel Rogers, and I don't know how long the list might be, had the courage to maintain their dignity, their manhood, their right to membership in the church of Christ, by a faithful holding on to that which they had received, and refusing to accept that that was sought to be forced upon the church by the strange statement made by that leading elder, from the stand, "You have got to accept it; if you don't believe it, you will be damned."

We have seen that a good deal of anxiety has been had about the suit to recover the possession of the Temple Lot in Missouri. A great many Latter Day Saints have mourned because the time and the privilege to build upon it might be forfeited. We have done the best that we could. I am not one of those that feel like sending a brass band before me to announce what processes are at work with God's designs, as I understand them, and I am not among them that propose to go out and throw up my hat and shout until the victory is mine. We proposed, if we could peacefully, to get possession of that property; and when our brethren of the Hedrickite Church, having obtained a sort of legal possession of it, would not treat with us in such way that we could without forfeiting our integrity submit to a compromise that would show that we disbelieved a part of the record and part of the commandments given to the church; and when we had but two years to act before the right to produce our cause in the courts would have expired, we then began suit; because we had been told in revelation that we should implore at the feet of the governor, and then to the judge that we might obtain our rights; and when these men (I am saying nothing about their individual characters) refused and stayed there, a hundred of them originally, and when we began the suit dwindled to something like forty all told; something like thirteen when the suit was absolutely begun; we had to submit to the obligation to go to the courts in an effort to succeed in obtaining possession. We obtained a verdict in the court below. The whole question of church doctrine, the whole question of church succession and its authority, were presented, and testimony heard in regard to it, and argument made before the court and we obtained the decision. An appeal has been taken from that decision to the Court of Appeals, which court will meet either at Minneapolis or in St. Louis. And lo and behold! since this decision we have the affirmation made by some of those people in the West, that they are not parties to the suit, that it is a quarrel between two branches of the church, neither one of which has any right to be called the church, or any part of it. I do not know whether it is a case of “sour grapes” or not, can not tell until the matter is finally tried. It is in process of development whether we are the rightful succession in the church organized in 1830, or whether we are not.

Now I know that these people in the West are interested in the movement; because it has made them angry for the reason that we that are called the “Josephites” have dared to go into the court and impinge upon them and others that question of church succession. I knew more than twenty-five years ago that it would be done; I told Bro. Israel Rogers right there that it would be done. He did not see how it would be done, and I did not then. I felt the shadows of it rest upon my soul. I felt further than that, as I had written in the HERALD when having my controversy with C. W. Penrose at the time that he was publishing the Ogden Journal—one part of it in the Ogden paper and the other part in the HERALD—I certified to that people that we had set the machinery of our attack down and established the lines of our circumvallation in front of their citadels, and we proposed to batter away until we either battered the walls down, or they opened unto us. Mr. Penrose said in reply, that the son of the Prophet was trembling for fear in reference to the things that were to be revealed. I told those lawyers that went west in our behalf, that if certain things transpired in the court, for them to see to it that they got right down to the bottom facts, all that were possibly available, and see if there was any truth in them or not. I told them that men and women would be put upon the stand to prove that father had, or did practice polygamy; and when Wilford Woodruff was called upon to testify, he testified before the court that there was no law on marriage except that known in the Doctrine and Covenants, as late as November, 1844 (which President Young took out in 1876); that he knew of no marriage law, other than that, and that no marriages that took place prior to that time and up to that time, to November, 1844, were polygamous, or plural marriages; that there were no such marriages known in the church. I am glad that President Woodruff lived as long as he did to testify thus in the court.

And when Bathsheba Smith was put upon the stand and testified she told the truth; and when Samuel Smith, my cousin, went to her and said to her, “Aunt Bathsheba, why didn’t you tell us that years ago, you would have saved us all the trouble we have been in so long?” she said, “Samuel, I did not dare do it.” (All this is in the abstract of evidence which is upon record.) We are sustained in the position we have taken by the evidence that has been produced, and when I say we have the right now to canvass the question and determine whether or not we are in succession, these people are interested in it; and if they can show that the fount of authority has been vitiated, it is their duty to do it before the public; but do they do it? Oh, no. These men say, “Don’t you discuss with the Josephites.” Bro. Williams down here at Council Bluffs had two of them there, was to debate with them. They tried it a night or two and they soon got tired of it and then took shelter under the instruction of the leaders in Salt Lake City and backed squarely out of it. Down in San Bernardino one of our brethren, a teamster down there, David L. Harris by name, met Messrs. Roberts and Apostle Lyman, and while they had our church there and occupied to present their views to the people, he refuted them and drove them out fully, and the men of the city looking on said, “It is a singular thing that this man who does teaming for the merchants of our town, can go into the pulpit and successfully maintain the Reorganized Church organization against these men from Utah,—there must be something more in it than they of the Josephites have been given credit for.”

In 1890 when we were holding the reunion here in October, there was a manifesto read from the sacred desk out yonder, in which the practice of polygamy was abandoned. Down goes that citadel of latter days; and quite recently, to wit, last spring confer-rence, President George Q. Canon notified them that they had made a mistake in administering the law of adoption; that all the work that they had been doing in that line of adoption was done incorrectly; and if this is true it must come to naught. Since I have arrived upon the ground here, I have been told by two, that now they have abandoned the idea of rebaptism; but they did not do that until we had forced the legal conclusion upon them, that whenever they undertook to rebaptize those who had been properly baptized before, they baptized them out of the original covenant into that new one, and it was not the covenant of Jesus Christ. Where do we stand in the point of succession?

I have never publicly discussed that so-called revelation before any of you; never discussed it by pen or by voice in the assemblies of the people. The reason for that has been that I have not thought it was the proper time and place to do it. When I was at Salt Lake City, and at Richmond, Utah, I told the people there that as the son of one of the original elders and entitled to the rights of membership in the church, I had the right to a public examination of that document before the councils of the church, or before the people; and not until I had that right accorded me would I ever keep still, or my voice be hushed in regard to it, and that it might be possible, after I had that right and had been defeated before the people, that I would then keep still. I have never had the right yet, brethren, and you that have been born into the church since then have the right of an examination of that upon which the tenet was based that was to change one of the fundamental principles and the practice of the church; and to foist upon the church what was contrary to the absolute law of the church given in 1831; and until you are permitted that right, never you fret about the right of succession. They can never foist that upon the church; never make it a successful practice as a church dogma, or fasten it upon us as a belief, until we have the right to canvas it; and when we have done that and are defeated we will be satisfied, and not until then. You know what the result of that would be if we had it before the people.

In 1876 President Young by his own order took out the section on marriage unanimously adopted in 1835, and put in its stead that revelation (so called) on celestial marriage. When I asked my Cousin John, patriarch of the church, by what authority it was done, he said, "I suppose it was done by authority of the President." I then asked, "Were you present at the spring conference of 1876?" He answered, "Yes." "Was there any resolution presented by the President, or by the Quorum of the Twelve or Seventy authorizing it?" He again said, "No." "Well, by what right did he do that?" He drew up his shoulders and said, "Well, I suppose President Young ordered it." President Young had no business to do it; the Quorum of the Twelve, nor Seventy, had any business to do it; it must have been not until there should have been a solemn examination of the document and it be affirmed by the voice of the people; never until then had they the right to take the one out of the book and insert the other.

Now I want to tell you people not to boast about this Temple Lot suit until it is decided. In the language of the common proverb, "Don't count your chickens before they are hatched." No matter how positive you may feel in regard to the issue, do not make any boastful demonstration in regard to it. We do not know what may transpire in the courts. The courts of these United States are like the Indian, they are "mighty uncertain." The purest and best rights of people may be divested of them through prejudice, and while I do not believe that Judge Caldwell is a prejudiced man—he is an Iowa man—I hope he is all right. It goes into the court before Judge Caldwell to be tried upon the original abstracts of evidence. We know something about what that testimony is, and I have strong hope; but I am not of the kind that shall boast to-day or make any claims as to what I will do or what I will say until the matter is decided. One thing is certain: that these people out in the West propose that they will have the lot when it comes time to build upon it, no matter who may have possession of it. I believe that if the time shall come for the Lord to have a temple built upon that lot, that he will direct somebody to set about it; it is our business to put ourselves in a position to be used as the instruments, with holy hands and hearts, with true and faithful brains, by an adherence unto the doctrines of the church, upon which it was fundamentally founded at the start; the principles of life and salvation; the solid unbroken phalanx of testimonies that have been borne to the work that are found in the three witnesses, which the church accepted in 1835, and which we have accepted since; and we may rest assured, that as David the man of blood was not permitted to build the temple because he was a man of blood—we may rest assured that no temple to be accepted of God will ever be built out of the remnants of this so-called church of Christ which are polygamists. I predict that I told them so at Salt Lake City, and at Richmond, in Utah. Orson Pratt told them in 1876, in the Seventeenth Ward Assembly Room, when talking upon the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah in which talk he said: "Not many of us that came from that country and remained in these mountains will be permitted to go back and build that temple." There are only a few of them left. President Woodruff is the last one of the original Twelve that is left.

So far as the ecclesiastical side of the question is concerned, we believe that there is not a tribunal in Christendom but what will take the evidence that we
The Deseret News has attempted to make it appear that the writer teaches and believes the same doctrines of unquestioning obedience to the men holding the priesthood as is taught by the Mormon leaders. Neither the writer nor the Reorganized Church, of which he is a member, is under examination on this question, and when we are, we are prepared to give an account of ourselves, both as an individual and as to our attitude as a church organization, and will not enter into it here except briefly to state that as a believer in the principle of continued revelation, and a believer in Christ’s divine mission as a part of God’s great plan, we believe in the potency of obedience to God and his commands; but we have not believed, and do not now believe in rendering “unquestioning obedience” to what comes through human agencies. We claim the right to examine and weigh and consider, in the light of the law that God has revealed in the past, everything that purports to be from God, and when that which comes, even though it may have come through one claiming to hold and act by the authority of the priesthood, is in conflict with what has already been given as law, we claim the right to reject it as not being from God. Thus “unquestioning” obedience is not given. As an evidence that we hold to this belief in theory and practice, it is only necessary to state that I have never sworn away my right thus to question what shall come through any man purporting to act in the name of God, and as one of the leaders of the Reorganized Church I can say that that organization does not ask its members to enter into covenants which will take from them this right—the covenant “not to speak against the Lord’s anointed.”

Obedience to God always; but “unquestioning” obedience to men, even though they hold the priesthood, never. Obedience to God and his commands always; but obedience to commands or purported commands which come through human agencies (agencies in which human liability to err is always present) without first determining them to be in harmony with God’s law, never.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.
SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, January 27, 1906.

It has been said that all language is ambiguous, and this is largely true, hence any one may be misunderstood. Therefore, President F. M. Smith or any other man should have the privilege of defining his own position, when such position is under consideration; and the above is submitted as his declaration of position.

Respectfully submitted,
HEMAN C. SMITH.

BANKING, INTEREST, STOCK COMPANIES, CONFISCATION.

In response to the “Review” appearing in Herald for July 25, it seems necessary in order that my position be set clearly before those interested in this question, that notice be given a few points therein.

I am a little surprised to see the following statement from the pen of a bishop: “There are very few Saints, I presume, and none so far as I know, that have more money than they can use.” The divine plan is “every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just.” (Doctrine and Covenants 82: 4.) I never yet have seen the person who could not use all he could get hold of, but the pertinent question is: Is it a proper use?

“We do not agree with the brother that all who borrow money to invest in stocks, bonds, or real estate are condemned by the statement in last revelation."

Let us see whether it does or not. According to the Standard Dictionary, speculate in a commercial sense is defined as follows: "To make a purchase or investment that involves a risk of loss, but also offers a chance of considerable profit." This last revelation says, "The spirit of speculation, the exhibition of greed for gain is unseemly in the saints and officers of the church, and should be avoided."

I did not know before that my owning stock in a bank would render the bank a more safe or convenient place for me to transact my own business. If the bank fails, honestly, I not only lose on my temporary deposit but on my shares of stock besides. I do not think the Herald Publishing House owns any bank stock, yet it seems to suffer no inconvenience about doing business through the bank.

It is true, I am sorry to be compelled to admit, that "the Lord's treasury can not supply farmers and all others who may need a little money for a while, to help them in close places and under pressing conditions," and I will venture the suggestion that it probably never will be able to so assist so long as Saints are encouraged to use their means in such an illegitimate manner as investing in bank stock or other stock for the purpose of personal gain. God does not approve of it, and the man who teaches or practices it may prosper financially; but he will fail spiritually.

I have yet to know of a bank that is permitted by its rules to loan money much or little to a poor man, unquestionably honest though he may be, without security such as a mortgage upon personal property or the signature of a person who is legally and financially responsible.

We now come to the most interesting and remarkable phase of this discussion, viz.: the parable of the talents. We are asked to accept the action of those servants and their lord as evidence that the Savior commends the taking of interest. Quoting from an editorial on this subject, "The text says goods, and not mental or physical ability, simply goods." "What he gave them was called talents, which at that time meant money." Never before in all my reading have I seen, nor in all my listening have I heard a preacher try to cover up and disregard the real truth the Savior aimed to teach in this parable. The matter will appear more plainly by referring to another parable or two. Take for instance the parable of the sower and the seed. Here the Lord talks about "seed," "ground," "field," "fowls," etc.; but by his own interpretation he says the "seed" is the word of God, the "field" is the "world," and the "fowls" are the Devil. Then there is the parable of the net cast into the sea that gathers every kind of fish. We understand here that the "net" is the gospel of the kingdom, the "fish" are men and women, the "sea" is the world. Take the reasoning of the brethren in connection with these parables and the absurdity of their position appears at once.

Why, the world in general is so united concerning the application of this parable of the talents that the word has been modernized, and is used every day by nearly everybody in such expressions as, "She has a remarkable talent for music or art," or "He is a very talented man."

See how nicely I can justify crooked bookkeeping by applying the reasoning of my opponents to the parable of the unjust steward:

There was a certain rich man, which had a steward; and the same was accused unto him that he had wasted his goods. ... Then the steward said within himself, What shall I do? for my lord taketh away from me the stewardship: I cannot dig, to beg I am ashamed. I am resolved what to do, that, when I am put out of the stewardship they may receive me into their houses. So he called every one of his lord's debtors unto him, and said unto the first, How much owest thou unto my lord? And he said, A hundred measures of oil. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and sit down quickly, and write fifty. Then said he to another, And how much owest thou? And he said, A hundred measures of wheat. And he said unto him, Take thy bill and write forty score. And the lord commended the unjust steward, because he had done wisely.—Luke 16:1-8.

Whatever may be the lesson the Savior intended to teach by that parable, surely no one will contend that it is right to cut the accounts of our employers' debtors simply to gain favor in their eyes. But there is just as much reason for making this claim on the strength of this parable as for making the plea in favor of interest-taking because of the other. Verse 15 of this same chapter is highly appropriate and very suggestive in this connection, and seems to give a good reason why the Lord used such parables to illustrate his points:

And he said unto them, Ye are they which justify yourselves before men; but God knoweth your hearts; for that which is hideth in secret shall be made manifest, and that which is under the earth shall be known. For what is Concealed is not hideth, but shall be manifest alone, and that which is secret shall be told out in speech. But I say unto you, That God shall requite every man according to his works. —Matthew 16:4-7.

There seems to be a difficulty to see the difference between a stock company operating "a hotel, a store, a mill, a manufacturing-plant, a stock-ranch, or a bank." The difference is simply this: The one produces value of some kind, or renders a necessary service to the community, while the other, though it may be a convenience to some and of service too in some ways (and to this phase of it we do not object), yet the real life-blood of the institution is the loaning on interest.

If I need one hundred dollars to help me under pressing conditions, and a bank or an individual offers to loan me that amount, charging me three dollars for the use of it, that bank or individual has taken advantage of my necessity, to get that three dollars. That way of doing is highly esteemed among men; but how about its appearance in the sight of God?

The brother complains that I am acting as a judge in Israel. "He must know all its conditions, or he can not be a competent judge." Oh, no, not necessarily. If I see a man walk up to another and shoot him down on the spot, I know that man has committed murder. I may not know the name of either. I may not know why he did it, whether he was insane, angry, or intoxicated. I saw the act. My knowledge of crimes teaches me it was murder.

The names of these well known Latter Day Saints have appeared week after week in the advertising department of the HERALD, as stockholders in these institutions. I know that some of them are engaged in other business which requires their time and service. I know that others are General Conference appointees, and according to the rules of the church are supposed to receive their support from the church treasury. I know that it is the rule for shares of bank stock to pay dividends occasionally. I know they do not work for what they receive in profits, because dividends on shares of stock, and interest on deposits are not paid for work done. Because a man earns and saves out of his small salary sufficient to pay his house rent, or the interest on his grocery bill, probably by wearing his shabby clothes to church when he ought to have a new suit, is no evidence he is not in need.

"I know men that work hard to pay interest on borrowed money with which they bought stock, and they do not get enough out of the capital invested to pay the interest; but they are willing to struggle on under these circumstances to help give men employment and accommodate the needy." The brother does not need to feel mortified, for we stated clearly in our former criticism that we believe in and approve of all stock companies organized for the purpose of producing the necessities and comforts of life at the smallest possible cost to the consumer. We did condemn those organized with the object of personal gain, or profit, if you please.

"Losses, breakage, wear and tear, bad debts, etc.," are a part of the legitimate expense of running a business and the profits do not appear until these are met. Where then is the necessity for failure if the profits remaining are turned back into the business? The living necessities of the stockholder are a part of the running expenses providing he performs his share of service in the enterprise.

Now a few words in reply to "As I see it." The hundred-dollar loan is quite different from the hundred-dollar horse. The horse performs labor from which certain values are produced, each day of service brings him that much nearer the time when he becomes useless. This is not true of the money that is borrowed.

"Do you think you have a moral right to attack the legitimate undertakings of lawful business enterprises, that a brother may invest his means in, with the object and intent, or the result at least, of doing violence to the good purposes and financial interests of that brother?"

Yes, my brother, I have the moral right, nay more, it is my duty to cry out to my brethren against every legitimate and lawful enterprise that they may invest in, when it becomes so apparent that these enterprises are in direct violation of the divine plan; for you must remember, as I have already quoted, "that which is highly esteemed among men, [legitimate, lawful] is an abomination in the sight of God."

We are challenged by the brother to present something better if we have it and as fast as we do so they will accept of it, etc. Now that is just what we have been doing. Experience has always proved that God's way of meeting difficulties in life is much better than man's way; and we have been calling attention to the direct commands of God on this subject, contending that we are not at liberty to continue applying the same old standard that man has been using for ages.

All this talk about borrowing money at a high rate of interest to invest in something that does not pay the expenses (or even if it does), for the sake of helping the poor to employment, sounds very much like saying, "Here, Lord, we don't think you quite understand the situation down here among our poor. This idea of 'consecrating' of our 'properties for the benefit of the poor' is not practical. Land is too high here around Independence, and so many industrial enterprises have failed here that we think it is better to invest in bank stock, where there is less danger of loss."

I care not how many difficulties may be apparently confronting us in the matter of redeeming Zion, I verily believe if the Saints will trust in the Lord's plan, go just as far with it in every particular as we possibly can, then ("man's extremity is God's opportunity") he will clear the way for us to do the rest.

Weigh the following in the light of the above:

Behold and consider: If my weapons are not sufficient for your faith, shall these things give them increase or shall ye add that which is carnal to make effective the work for which my Spirit hath been given? . . . and men within and without my church shall yet learn that but one pattern hath been given by which we shall build. If I shall accept your answer, it is one line hath been given by which to measure; and whosoever shall not gauge himself thereby and crucify himself to the world, shall yet be gauged thereby and shall lose his all.

Now in conclusion: We are willing to admit that under present social conditions, a bank is a great convenience to the people of any community. We are willing to admit that most of the stockholders and officers of our banks are honest and honorable men and women. But we are fully aware of the fact that the evil one can more easily lead us his way by mixing in a generous portion of truth with what he presents for our acceptance. And we are very sure that no evidence has as yet been presented, nor can there be from the word of God, ancient or modern, to show that the taking of interest or profit is in harmony with the divine plan.

Finally, to sum the matter up in a few words, we have shown that usury (interest) was forbidden among the Israelites in the Mosaic law (and by the way, a careful search of those scriptures will reveal the fact that not a single prohibition in that law bearing upon the relation of man to his fellow man of any importance but is inculcated in the higher law of Christ).

It is presented as a bar to an inheritance in the holy hill of Zion, by the sweet singer of Israel, in the fifteenth Psalm.

Since the banking system invariably breathes "the spirit of speculation," it is condemned by the last revelation to the church.

Since money invested in bank, or other stock, that has the element of profit or interest to the stockholder in it, does not require the service of the holder, it is really surplus, and under the law of consecration it belongs to the Bishop for the benefit of the poor, etc., and should be placed in his hands.

The opposition have claimed that because of conveniences which the banking system serves to certain classes of people in a community, it is therefore justifiable. We have shown that these conveniences are largely of a character ministering to the selfish interests of the individual, and rendered to persons who themselves are out of harmony with the celestial law.

They have claimed for the parable of the talents a material and literal application to justify the taking of interest. We have shown by comparison with other parables, and by reference to the modern expression, "a talented man," etc., that this parable is intended to teach the necessity of improvement upon our mental or spiritual qualities or opportunities.

Lastly, those reflections upon the sanity of the writer, and the proffered "sympathy and pity" for the same, and the complaints about having private business criticised, are in themselves unwitting confessions of the weakness of their position. If theirs is the truth it will only stand out the more apparent by virtue of the investigation.

Therefore we are more than ever convinced of the truth of our position, that "Consecration under the law" does not permit of holding bank and other stock from which interest or profit is derived; and we are again led to exclaim, Is it any wonder that Zion languishes, and that the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit are withheld from us?

What we have always seen done one way, we are apt to imagine there was but that one way.—Bentley, Silent But Sovereign.

A very beautiful illustration of how quietly God's most mighty physical and spiritual forces work, is given by James I. Vance, D. D., in his excellent book, Royal Manhood. He says:

"In a certain city a bridge was to be built across the river. To secure a solid foundation, piles were driven in the bed of the river. One day they could make no headway, and, on examination, found that they had struck an old, forgotten, unused water main left in the river bed.

"But one thing was to be done. The main must come out. Encircling the main with immense cables, they harnessed them to a locomotive on an improvised track. The engineer opened the throttle and the engine started forward, only to be thrown back on the track by the cables. More steam was turned on, only to rebound again. Then the mighty locomotive rushed forward with tremendous power, the throttle and the engine started forward, only to be thrown back on the track by the cables. They pulled and plunged and churned the river into foam, but the main was unmoved.

"We shall have to give it up," said the workmen.

"The location of the bridge will have to be changed," said the city authorities. 'But a quiet man came thither one day, and, after looking on a while, said, 'I can lift it out.' At once the contract was his. He brought two old mud-scows and let them rest just above the stubborn main. The cables were tightly lashed to huge beams laid from one scow to the other. 'What are you going to do?' they asked him. 'I have finished,' was the quiet reply. 'He then climbed upon the bank, and, folding his arms, waited for the tide to come in. The scows rocked and tossed, they tugged and stormed, while the man cried: 'Come up! come up! You must come!'

"Then there was a mighty upheaval that shook the river from bank to bank, and the tide had the victory."

God's strength flows into human life as the tide. There is no noise, it is scarcely perceptible, but it is sovereign. —Selected.

Editors Herald: After reading the church papers of this week, I thought I would write a few lines to the Herald, so you would know we are not dead yet. This finds the Saints well, as far as I know, except in a spiritual sense. Our district is not up to the standard, but we are praying and hoping to see it in better condition sometime.

We, as a people, have much to learn before our work will be all that could be asked of it. I think Bro. Lewis in his article on "Let every man stand in his own office," has told us some things worth thinking about. It applies to the church from head to foot. We must have a head, arms, hands, and feet. It is hard to do a man's work unless we have them.

Dear Saints: Inasmuch as my name and that of my daughter have been mentioned in the Herald perhaps an explanation by me would be in order. I have been working since March at the Miltown Lime Works. July 4 I received a message from near Birds-eye, Indiana, that my daughter, Mrs. Lizzie Biggery, was dying. The train had just gone so I had to wait till night. I posted Elder Harpe and wife, and other Saints. Knowing that her husband and his people were opposed to the doctrine of the Saints, I was at a loss as to what to do. We agreed to unite our prayers for her recovery. When I got there the yard and house were full of people. They had Doctor Luckett. Her baby boy was born the 8th of June. Two weeks afterward she had a felon on her finger and hand. Her husband took her to Birds-eye to get her finger lanced. One doctor was not in proper condition to handle edged tools, so refused to lance it. Another doctor said it was a spider bite (though it was not), and doctored for that. In a few days her arm became inflamed, she very nearly had lockjaw. By this time blood poison had set in,
and she was raving wild. It took three to hold her. The doctor got her quiet, lanced her hand, then came back in three days, but found her very little better. Her other arm was in the same condition. After it was lanced she began to recover. After she had been sick three days her husband said, "Lizzie, do you want one of your elders to come and pray for you?" She said, "Yes, I do," so I telephoned to Elder Harpe. He came forthwith and administered to her, her husband taking part in prayer. When all thought that she could not last more than two or three hours, she revived and said, "Now I want you to tell that I died in the faith. Tell pa; write it down. Make a record that I died in the faith. You all know how I have been persecuted, and how you have tried to get me to leave the church." She then almost seemed to be gone for a while, then spoke up and said, "Oh, I am so happy here, though I must come back to my baby," then survived and got better. After she began to get out of danger, her babe got very sick. She worked with it all one day and night, till it was better. I believe they will both get well. Sr. Kendal stayed with her all she could. We have done the best we could, under the circumstances; and almost everybody says the doctor cured her; though Lizzie, Sr. Kendal, Bro. Harpe, and myself believe that the Lord should have the most credit. To say that I thank the Lord, does not begin to express my feelings. Although I am not well, hardly able to go, yet for all that I believe I am the happiest man in the county. To God be glory, now and for ever. I will try to serve him the balance of my days.

Brethren and sisters, pray for me. Pray for Lizzie and her five little boys.

Yours truly,
JAS. A. FERGUSON.

Editors Herald: I am at present holding forth in the park at this place, and am having really good crowds and splendid order; and the good Master has greatly blessed me with liberty in presenting the word. But my throat is bothering me, and I fear that I will soon have to close my meetings for that reason. This open-air work is hard on the throat and lungs; and for that reason there ought to be at least two working together, speaking alternately. Thus relieving one another.

I have been quite busy since coming to this place, July 17. I opened up a new place twelve miles southeast of here, by the assistance of young Bro. Earl Robertson of this place. I would to God that there was that desire manifest on the part of all our young people everywhere that Bro. Earl Robertson manifests. It would assist so much in the spread of the work; and as a consequence they would develop spiritually so much faster. But we have a noble band of young Saints here, as also older Saints, who have manifested their faith by their works. From here I will go eastward in the field, and remain in that part of the field until after our reunion at Nebraska City. The work in this field is moving along fairly well, the need of consistent local helpers is manifest almost everywhere. And I can see the necessity of the missionary having the new openings he makes almost under constant supervision, that the work effected may not be lost to the church. If I had a horse and buggy at my command, I could save many dollars to the church; and I am sure do a more permanent work, saving in some instances Saints who are but of young growth in the church. I hope and trust that the Saints may everywhere be blessed.

Editors Herald: We are here, we know not why; but hope for a wise purpose. We came here from Sylvan February 11. It would be impossible to write the things that we have suffered this year; but my purpose in writing is to warn others who might fall into the snares of Satan as I have. Last October I was called and ordained to the office of priest in the Northeastern Texas Manchester Branch, and the way was prepared that I might fulfill my call; but on the other hand I was offered so many good things to come here that I was blindedfold, and led away. And now we are receiving our just reward for our disobedience. Hatred, persecution, and almost starvation, in which we have had to work day after day without anything to eat, only a little parched corn. And oh, how sad to hear our little ones, when we would come in, crying for bread. Saints, is not this enough to humble our proud hearts and our high thoughts? You may say, I will never come to that. I thought that too. But do not deceive yourself. If you disobey God when he has so clearly shown you, time after time, what he wants you to do, and has shown the consequence of disobedience, you will not escape. But we thank God for all he has done, for we know it is for our good. He sent two of his servants to us a few days ago to strengthen us, Elder P. B. Buseniel and E. A. Erwin. They came and went so quick it seemed like a dream. On the morning when they would depart, we were called to prayer by Bro. Erwin, led by Bro. Dunn. When the service was closed, Bro. Erwin spoke by the Spirit to me and promised me that it was faithful in the performance of duty the Lord would lead me out of my trouble. We thank God for the message. Saints, remember your brother, and pray the Lord in our behalf, that we may share his glory.

Your brother still in the faith,

LLANELLY, South Wales, July 27, 1906.

Editors Herald: I have not grown weary in this beautiful work in which we are engaged. The added years bring added joy in the service of the Master divine. Hardly a day passes but that I feel to exclaim with heartfelt words, "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me bless his holy name." I learn to love the precious gospel more and more, as its rays of light shade their beams across my mind. It was indeed a happy day when I fixed my choice and became a child of God by adoption, nigh sixteen years ago. I hope to retain that blessed relationship now and evermore. Five years and nine months ago I responded to the call to leave the States and occupy in the British Isles Mission. Since then I have been to various parts of England and Wales. I believe now that the varied experiences which I have passed through have been for my highest good; and in spite of my defects and failures I have sought to persevere, doing the best I could under the ever-changing conditions. Leaving Plymouth last March, I labored some at Exeter, where I baptized three, namely, Sr. Mary Ireland and her two sons, Samuel and Arthur. My next stopping-place was at Nantyglo, in Wales. I was kindly received by the Saints at those places, and my needs well looked after, thus welcoming the "least of these my brethren," and they know just how to make one feel "at home." It was Jesus who said, "He that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth me and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me" (John 13:30), and it is precisely the same as that given September, 1832: "And whoso receiveth you there will I also. . . . Whoso receiveth you receiveth me, and the same will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money. And he who feeds you or clothes you or gives you money shall in no wise lose his reward: and he that doeth not these things is not my disciple: by this you may know my disciples." Our conference at Nantyglo, June 9 and 10, passed off pleasantly; the social-meeting on Sunday being marked with the presence of the Holy Spirit. Elder Thomas Jones is undoubtedly doing a good work in that region of country, as was seen by the ingathering of souls who were confirmed at said conference. I am now making my home with Bro. and Sr. Evan Davies. Of late the tin-plate works have been slack here at Llanelly, causing considerable distress in the town. Teacher Arthur Edwards is the only resident officer here now, and he is

so impaired in health that he is confined to his house. The removal of District President Henry Ellis and family to Llan-amlet is being keenly felt in this branch; but we trust that it will be for the upbuilding of the work there. Only a month ago the greater part of South Wales was visited by a shock of earthquake that caused much fear and consternation for the time being; but happily the damage done to property was slight. This is a town of numerous, flourishing Welsh and English denominations, whilst the little Saints' chapel in Island Place is hardly noticeable. The few Saints continue to hold their meetings within its sacred portals, and the good Spirit is there to cheer and bless. I am having enjoyable conversations and dialogues on the gospel at the homes of the people, seeking hard to get them interested in the angel's message to Joseph the Seer. I talk to them in Welsh and in English as the occasion may demand. Sometimes we have animated and lively times, and, though alone, the good Lord helps me out wonderfully. I feel well and happy in the effort, and my heart's desire is that men and women might courageously obey the truth of heaven.

Our late missionaries, Gomer T. Griffiths, William Lewis, John Davies, and E. B. Morgan, are well spoken of and kindly remembered by many of the citizens of gallant little Wales. I conclude with the following Welsh lines written by a good sister in "Udgorn Seion":

"O frollyr a chiworydd eu
Mor hoff iw cwrrd mewn hedd
Ar sawl a fedd galon iach
All ddangos siroli wedd."

"Yr hwn a fynwesra drais a brad Nis gall e fywn'r gytw
Na rhyngu bodd ein nefol Dad
Mae'n uffern iddo'i hun."

Editors Herald: Perhaps a few words from the committee on arrangements for the Nauvoo Reunion might be read with some little interest by those who could not avail themselves of its blessings and enjoyments. With a very few exceptions everybody seemed to enjoy themselves greatly, and were not slow to express their appreciation of the privilege of seeing Nauvoo with its historic places and scenes of beauty. The program, too, was enjoyed by all, and every part was interesting and entertaining. I do not write this as a stereotyped expression one comes across in newspaper accounts, where editors desire to please everybody for the sake of their advertising and subscription. I did not hear one single complaint or adverse criticism on the program; but on the contrary it was remarked often in my hearing that the program was very interesting. Being interesting, it was of course instructive and beneficial. Our one difficulty was lack of attendance. We made calculations on a much larger attendance, and consequently the financial side of the reunion was not so successful as the spiritual and social. If forty more families could have attended we would have been far ahead financially. However, by close watching, we saved the convention fully three hundred dollars on board and lodging, and while that did not appear on the surface, the convention attendants got the benefit, and the committee feel that complaints from those thus benefited come with poor grace. The committee heard few complaints—not half a dozen—but everybody seemed to enjoy themselves, and a vote to recommend the holding of another reunion next year showed not one dissenting vote.

It should be held the last week in August, however, and no local reunions should interfere with that date. Our experience this year demonstrated that fact; but owing to so many reunions the last of August or first of September, our date this year could not have well been at another time. Happening so soon after the midsummer holiday, and harvest hardly over, and thrashing already begun, together with two or three chautaus on or near at hand, our attendance of the local membership was greatly diminished. However, everybody who came had a good time, and we could only wish that many more could have availed themselves of the blessing. The order was most excellent. The friendship of the people of Nauvoo was all that could be expected, and more than some of the Nauvoo people anticipated. The special police appointed for the occasion were not needed, which speaks well for Nauvoo. Our people feel more kindly than ever toward the people of Nauvoo, and they in turn have no reason to think less of us. Some said to the committee afterward: "If we had known that your people were so highly respectable, we would have taken them to board." Those who did take boarders were well pleased, and some even delighted with their associations. Altogether it was one of the most congenial gatherings I ever took part in. Naturally, those who wished to charge a high rate of board, not for friendship but to make money and failed to get any guests, feel a little put out; but no one is to blame but themselves. We had the list before those who came, and naturally they selected the cheapest places first.

The excursion down the river was enjoyed by all, and was a financial success. With the experience of this year, next year's gathering should be a greater success. Nauvoo greatly desires the reunion next year. But in my opinion somewhere between Independence and Lamoni would secure a larger attendance. However, I hope that we may sometime be permitted to assemble again in beautiful Nauvoo.

Very kindly,

J. W. PETERSON.

Dear Herald: We, as a little hand, are still trying to do our part to help the good work along. We are scattered, and it is hard to get together. We try to meet here at our house once a month. Yesterday there were nineteen Saints here. Our branch president, Bro. L. F. Johnson, preached for us at eleven o'clock. We had prayer- and sacrament-meeting at two o'clock. Last month Bro. and Sr. M. F. Gowell were in Downs; had the tent there. Those that have heard Bro. Gowell know what a good talker he is. We heard some fine sermons, and I believe much good was done. One lady was baptized. Bro. and Sr. Gowell are worthy people and I believe will do good wherever they go. From here they went to Worland, Kansas.

Ever your sister,

(Miss) MYRTLE COOP.

SCAMMON, Kansas, August 7, 1906.

Editors Herald: One year ago in July we, Bro. Riley and I, put up tent and began operations. We baptized four. Meetings removed much prejudice. In the past there has been much prejudice here. On July 21, now past, we shipped tent to Scammon again. Had some trouble to get ground, so did not get tent up till Monday. The writer preached two discourses in I. O. O. F. Hall, with good turnouts and splendid liberty. Monday night we began in tent; and I occupied till Bro. Lee Quick, my son in the gospel, came to assist. Since then we have been preaching alternately. We started here under great opposition. Apostolic Church had been holding meetings about six weeks. People in a fever-heat of excitement, they having had the gift of tongues on the street-corner and in their hall where they hold their services.

After being on the street last night, two of their brethren had a quarrel in their service, one that had the gift of tongues night before, and ran all over the hall, speaking in tongues, frothing at the mouth, his face looking like that of a maniac. They have a mourners' bench. They have speaking in tongues, yelling, crying, groaning, praying, all at the same time. They pay no attention to Paul’s instruction in 1 Corinthians 14:33: “For God is not the author of confusion,” also fourth verse, “Let all things be done decently and in order.” They have no interpretation of the tongues. On the street they speak in tongues, then in English a few words like this, “Come to Jesus.” “I am saved.”

The calm influence of the Spirit has been with us in all of our preaching. Sunday, August 5, the writer led seven adults into the water. We are having a fine turnout, many interested, more will be baptized next Sunday. Satan is raging with some. We are happy in the angel’s message. A noble band of Saints here; all are a credit to the work. No branch as yet, thirty odd members now. The Saints here are willing to sacrifice for the work.

August 13. Yesterday, we led five more precious souls into the water: three men and two young ladies, making nineteen the writer has baptized here in the last twelve months. I enjoyed having Bro. Quick with me. He is a man of God. We closed last night with the largest crowd of all, and I enjoyed great inspiration from beginning to end of the discourse. God speed the gospel plow. Respectfully,

F. C. KECK.

Dear Herald: Your valued columns come to us, like the Argosy of classical times, freighted with the good things of the life to come, while the Argosy was freighted with the good things of the life that now is. I believe, moreover, that those ancient Greeks were by no means bad judges of what constituted “good things.”

The Heralnd just to hand is strikingly rich in thought-compelling and soul-satisfying matter, both of a spiritual and intellectual nature. The leading editorial on “Oneness” strikes an exalted, and I may add, a much-needed strain of contemplation, which will certainly repay a careful perusal and reappraisal. While reading these trenchant and searching sentences, I could not help the reflection crossing my mind, If the Saints have not yet as a body attained to that organic oneness (or unity) to insure absolute success to those schemes recently, and, I may ungrudgingly add, ably advocated in your columns, is that not in itself prima facie evidence that the schemes are, at least for the time being, premature? Several other articles warmly commend themselves to my judgment in the current Herald; also Bro. Nathan Lindsey’s letter with its honest and unequivocal testimonies of divine healing was made a blessing to my soul and spirit.

The financial account succinctly evidences a large and widespread desire on the Saints’ part to live up to the temporal law as taught in the Lord’s Book of Doctrine and Covenants. But as one among your many general readers, may I be permitted to inquire if the insertion of a number of little letters between the person’s name and the amount paid and received is not, to say the least, confusing? I can well understand that in a voluminous report, such as the present one, abbreviations are indispensable, but should there not be something at head of the report to indicate what the abbreviations mean? such as: o-offering, t-tithing, etc. [These abbreviations are explained on page 36 of the Bishop’s report.—Editor.]

My thoughts have of late trended in the direction of “progressive revelation,” viz.: the principle of “line upon line; precept upon precept; hence a little and there a little” (Isaiah 28:10, 13), as required by the exigencies of the particular case or the particular person. (See also Book of Mormon, large edition, pages 30 to 33.) If so, then it would necessarily follow that a revelation which had been fulfilled years ago, is no longer in force; such, for instance, as the revelation about Martin Harris’ journey to Professor Anthon in New York, or the command for the elders to go to the Ohio, or to preach to the Shakers. (See Doctrine and Covenants.) Of the same category appears the revelation concerning the women’s dresses to be “plain” and the “work of their own hands.” Many of our young sisters of the present day are employed in shops or stores or offices from early morning till late at night, and so could not really make their own garments without giving up their employment. Does the revelation really apply to these, or to the sisters it was given to more than seventy years ago?

Yours seeking for light,

F. R. TUBB.

NAYLOR, Missouri, July 15, 1906.

Editors Herald: In the last two weeks of June J. D. Erwin and J. T. Davis held meetings in the town of Naylor. At first the crowds were small and shy, and they would take the back seats; but they kept increasing. You could hear them saying, “Those fellows know the Bible by heart.” “I never heard men use so much Bible before in all my life,” and “They are not drawing less than $1,500 a year.”

On June 30 we organized a branch with ten members; and baptized two on Sunday, July 1. I was ordained an elder. Bro. Thomas Lucas is priest of the branch, Bro. Samuel Potter teacher, Bro. W. I. Hopkins deacon, and Sr. Hopkins clerk.

April 27, 1905, I wrote to Joseph Smith in regard to something in one of the tracts, and asked him if it would be any offense to him for me to advocate the doctrine of the church to the best of my ability, I being then an elder in the General Freewill Baptist Church, and this is his answer:

“We shall be pleased to aid you in your investigation in any way that we can, as we believe that honest investigation can result only in good to those who make it, that the Lord will assist those who honestly seek to know how to serve him and become acquainted with his doctrine. It will be no offense to us for you to advocate the doctrines of the church to the best of your ability wherever you are inviting the people’s attention to the doctrine; and if you succeed in getting an interest excited we shall be pleased to have some of our people come to you; and to this end you may get into correspondence with Bro. I. N. White of Independence, Missouri. Yours very truly, Joseph Smith.”

I announced my intentions of joining the Latter Day Saints, and Elder J. T. Davis came down to preach. The schoolhouse was locked, so he preached out under a sugar-wood tree. On Sunday, May 14, I was baptized, and was confirmed on the bank of the river. The next week he preached in the schoolhouse, and to my surprise I was ordained a priest May 21. What gave me still greater joy was that the following day five more were baptized.

The Lord has been with me so far. I had a bad accident last fall—fell and broke my leg—which caused me great pain for a short time, but I asked the Lord to remove the pain and it was gone; and I thank the Lord for his goodness to me. I ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may hold out faithful to the end, that I may magnify my calling, and that the Lord may give me wisdom to accomplish the work that is assigned to me.

Yours truly,

H. V. BRAUN.

LOS ANGELES, California, August 9, 1906.

Editors Herald: It is painfully unfortunate that Bro. Hilliard, holding the position he does, should evidence either his ignorance of the scriptures, or biased conception of what the scriptures teach. In referring to the parable found in Matthew 25, and touching particularly upon verse 27, he has the Lord commanding, “Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers.” He has the Lord commanding “the first two servants, who invented their talents, traded with them, speculated on them, and doubled the amount of their investment.” He has the Lord commanding “usury.” He says, “Our Lord commends trade, and business, and the taking of lawful interest, for the use or rent of money."

To make his scriptural rendition more flagrant and reprehensible he says, "Jesus said the third ought to have done the same thing, and condemned him because he did not do it, took the talent from him and gave it to the man that had the ten, evidently because he could and would use it."

Not one statement made is applicable! They are worse, being both untenable and untrue.

1. This was a parable. It represented an earthly lord or nobleman who was talking to his servants, and not the Lord from heaven. The Lord from heaven never commanded or condemned the taking of usury. Invariably when reference was made to it he condemned it. The Lord last spring placed an eternal ban upon speculation.

2. How could a man, with the book before him, put into the mouth of Jesus the utterances of this carnally-minded, selfish, earthly nobleman? Jesus was only uttering a parable. He was noncommittal as to the right or wrong of the acts of this nobleman.

3. The Lord never commended trade as known in the business world to-day. There is no scriptural, lawful interest. There is no secular national basis of interest. Take the scriptures, and draw the line if you can.

It seems to me about time that Bro. Hilliard should cease treating those who do not agree with him as children, meritizing either censure or "profound pity," or both. I assure you others are capable of thinking for themselves, and it is mere begging the question for him to say, "I presume when the Lord wants a different class of men to run his affairs he can easily find them."

"Pray tell me, Who are running God's affairs? I have always been given to understand that if there was any running about it, by mortals, it was the voice of all the people, or at least a majority of them, which determined the policy of the church, I am wrong? Or are only a few running the affairs of the church, and the man who dares venture a negation a subject of profound sympathy?" I suggest that the brother keep his sympathy, and use not his official position to intimidate or cow others into submission. If he has the truth, it can be maintained without recourse to either of these measures. As I understand it, every officer in the church is a servant of the body. Is it not then decidedly bad taste to arrogate to one's self, or to others, the privilege of running God's affairs? Remember this is the stock argument of Utah Mormonism: "The leaders of the church can do no wrong."

I would here remark that the editorial on "The parables," is quite illogical and contradictory. Unfortunately the only point made was in touching upon the extreme position of Bro. Derry, when he said that "the parables used by Jesus Christ two thousand years ago do not apply in any sense to Latter Day Saints of the present age." I understand what Bro. Derry meant. Unfortunately his language failed to convey his right thought. The Savior did not say, "The kingdom of heaven is as a man taking a fair journey." Please read the Inspired Translation. While I agree with the Editor that it does the text violence to say that the talents referred to were mental or spiritual, and moral capabilities, yet I think it little short of heresy to endeavor to make a literal application of the parable to justify usury, banking, speculation, etc. If because of the word talents representing money in the parable, we are warranted in conveying the identical meaning to the lesson sought to be conveyed, then the same application made of all the parables places God in a paradoxical and uneunivjous position. The Lord did not soliloquise. He did not take the man at his word, and try him by his own measure. He admitted the imputation made that "I reaped where I sowed not, and gathered where I have not scattered."

I would suggest to Bro. J. D. B. that pointing out the dishonesty of other lines of business in no sense gives evidence of divine approval on that which you advance. We are opposed to banks and banking because they take from the general public, and do not render a complete equivalent. They create no real value as I have shown in my article, "Afraid of our own shadow." We are opposed to any kind of business which thrives on the same basis. I herewith affirm that the golden rule together with the teachings of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants inerminizes all kinds of business predicated upon the taking of profit, i.e., taking more than you render an equivalent therefor. I wish to assure Bro. Briggs that we have no anxiety over converting "the wealth and lawful belongings of others." The holdings of any man, rich or poor, is of little consequence to the Almighty or the church. The man with a million dollars is of no more moment to the church than the veriest beggar. Both are beggars; nothing more. We are not in any wise desirous of either ourselves or seeing the church get its fingers on the holdings of any man. What we object to is the effort to bolster up the present social inequality in the world, and incidentally compromise the Almighty by making him a party thereto.

Yours for the right,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

Chattree, Ohio, August 13, 1906.

Editors Herald: I came into this part of the State the 6th of July, and have been quite busy every since, preaching the gospel in two places to fair crowds. At this place I have had the best of attention, and some are believing, and no doubt will unite with us at no distant day. The work was introduced in this country by Bro. T. J. Beatty. He baptized a number, and the Saints and friends remember him with great kindness. He did a good work here.

Bro. R. Ettenhouzer has labored here, also Brn. Ebeling and Long. All are remembered kindly by the people here.

I labored for a while in Covington, Kentucky. There are a few Saints there. While there I organized them into a Sunday-school, with Elder William Damon as superintendent. They have their weekly prayer-meeting. There I encountered a minister of the Charles Russell's church, but the attack was of a pleasant character. I passed on from here to Middletown, Ohio, where I preached for a time in connection with Elder James M. Baggerly. The Saints of Middletown are quite an enterprising people. They have quite a nice chapel, and I think it is about paid for. Brn. Ren and H. Countryman, and Roads, are the officers of the branch. They are alive to the work.

From there I passed on to Dayton, one of the finest cities of the State. We have a branch of the church there presided over by J. M. Baggerly, John Davis, and Charles Warn. I do not believe I ever saw such workers for the church as these men are. There I had my first experience in street-preaching. It seemed to me like preaching to moving pictures. I guess I am too old to make much of a street-preacher. While there I had the pleasure of baptizing a jewelry man. I do not remember his name now. I hope he will become useful to the church, and a power for good among his nation. He is a German and quite intelligent. Was brought up in the Lutheran Church. I also preached the funeral-sermon of a Brethren lady—her request, I believe, before she died.

I have felt well in the ministry so far this year. I will go on from here to attend the reunion of this district at Wellston, which begins the 17th of this month, after which I am due at Brig, Kentucky.

The word of the Lord to us through Joseph Luff was a wonderful thing to me. But it certainly commands itself as being truly the word of the Lord. I hope I may be able to conform to its requirements.

In bonds,

I. P. BAGGERLY.
Dear Herald Readers: The time has come again when the work that is being done in Graceland College should have the attention, at least for a time, of all the Saints and friends.

The new year with its sacrifices, its trials, and its blessings is about to open. When we realize what great good comes to our young people through the educational influences, we are willing to undergo the sacrifices and the trials for the sake of that benefit. The success of last year gives us new hope and aspiration as we enter the new effort; and though gratified with what we accomplished last year, yet we ought to double the enrollment in the academic and collegiate departments. An additional teacher has been added to the corps of instructors, and therefore the scope of instruction has been extended. We believe in a practical education, but an education that is intelligent and serviceable to mankind as well as remunerative to the individual. The new equipment of typewriters in the commercial school puts Graceland College in the very front rank in this department. Development and extension have been manifested in all the work of the school.

The correspondence department asked for by several General Conferences has already been provided for. Any course given in residence may be taken by correspondence, provided there is sufficient demand for it. Any one desiring work should write me at once concerning it, as all correspondence courses should open with the residence work in September. I ought to have twenty or thirty more applications within the next thirty days. At the rates of tuition charged in these courses, an excellent opportunity is afforded those who cannot take the work in residence. All work done and accepted by correspondence is duly accredited in the college.

It is not necessary for me to urge the vast importance of the "college day" offering. Much of the new life manifested last year was due to the initial offering made last September. Since 1904, when I first became identified with Graceland College, I have been surprised often at the great amount of good work accomplished on such a small outlay of money. The present Board of Trustees is certainly to be congratulated on their business sense and ability. I am sure that all moneys placed at their disposal will be properly used. At present there is a great demand, on the part of many of our worthy young people, for scholarships and help in general. I need three or four scholarships right away. Who will volunteer to send one? Such young people ought to receive our attention, for they will be the leaders of the day near future.

The ministry of the church have an excellent opportunity to help us during the coming few weeks by announcing the opening. The cooperation of all the friends everywhere will be greatly appreciated. The opening will occur Tuesday morning, September 25, the registration and enrollment will begin on Monday.

Thanking the good people throughout the church for the valuable assistance in the past, and desiring a continuance of mutual confidence and effort in this part of the great work of the church, I am,

Yours for service,

R. M. Stewart, President.

Lamoni, Iowa, August 15, 1906.

Independence Items.

The Saints here as usual have, during the last three weeks, been blessed with excellent instruction through the efforts of Elders M. H. Bond, D. S. Crawley, E. L. Kelley, F. M. Smith, and Ammon White, and last Sunday morning R. J. Parker gave fine tribute to the worthy labors of President Joseph Smith, and also a synopsis of church history which enlisted marked interest and satisfaction.

Bro. Parson's lecture on social purity on last Monday evening was well received, although not so many young people were out to hear it as he desired, and he told some plain truths in regard to social conditions generally existing, speaking with earnestness concerning prevailing vices, including those of the liquor and tobacco habit.

Woman, with her kindly influence, her lofty mental and moral attainment, and her power to mold the character of youth, was extolled, the speaker not forgetting to mention her skill both in "catching and keeping" her mate and her offtime serious fail­ures (though with good purpose) through marrying a man in order to reform him.

His thought regarding a school for the education of parents, and which is no new one to the Daughters of Zion, was appreciated; and after commending the exalted principles of honesty, firmness reasoned with love, and love of home, and regretful reviewing of the dangers that lie in the pathway of the young, our brother closed a truly profitable lecture, and all realized that he was an added effort put forth to aid the Saints toward a higher moral and physical development.

No new idea was given birth, no great thought newly discovered, but as Mark Twain says, "An intellectual nugget appeared from under the dust of a field many a brain-plow had gone before."

Here in the center place, on these sultry Saturday nights, promenading on every street, appear many bareheaded ladies, dressed all in white, with dainty suits, slippers, belts, and elbow mits, like one may see in Gotham's Fifth Avenue, and the final touch of relaxation is added by the general unbending on the court-house square, where loungers on the lawn sit listening to the stirring music of the city band, or languidly move away to partake of ices at the popular parlors and saloons; and, by the way, in the Star of August 1 we read this notice:

"The Independence band, which is giving a series of free, open-air concerts, has a woman member. One of the cornets is played by Mrs. John Robinson. Her husband is also a member of the band and plays the saxophone"; and we may add that our talented young brother and sister are with us again, where in days past their work in church and Sunday-school has been appreciated. Speaking of the band reminds us of the almost universal taste for music, and hence is heard in all the churches the sweet harmonies of the organ in offertory and anthem, and in the Sunday-schools the dulcet notes of the piano with the flute, clarinet, and stringed instruments of the orchestra.

It turns out, nevertheless, that not only are there those who would even desire "to squelch the anthems and pipe-organs of the church," but also that some of the rich members of Rockefeller's church, who are tired of melédion's numbers, are trying as they say "to pass the summer in New York in peace and quiet."

But unfortunately inharmonies sometimes greet the ear. Some of our business-meetings here of late have seemed to be of a disquieting nature, yet they have been of considerable importance and perhaps require reviewing. Our branch business-meeting of August 6 was calculated to exert a feeling of depression on the minds of lovers of harmony, several important matters having been brought forward, and the result being mistakes and misunderstandings to be rectified. Some matters to be settled by arbitration, while others were referred to a committee, and in the midst of all this division we thought of the advice that Jack's father gave him on starting out for the Holy Land, "Be polite and obliging to all, and considerate towards every one's opinions, failings, and prejudices," and we opined that it would, if heeded, serve as well on land as on sea.

On the 5th also we heard inharmonies at the business-meeting of the Willing Helpers, the discordant crash sounding forth mostly when it was moved and sustained that the reports of the secretary and treasurer "be accepted and spread upon the minutes," for in their cash footings they were much at variance. We read that on the 5th instant two hundred janitresses were on strike; and like those "window-washers and sisterhood of waste-basket emptiers" of Chicago we officers did feel like

But some of us are not so susceptible to insanities as others, and the last meeting of the Daughters of Zion left no heart-burnings, only some of us caught a strange sounding note in the reading of the Leaflet called ‘Our Boys.’

Is it not a mistake for Saints to treat the subject named from any other standpoint than that our youth, having been blessed, baptized, and confirmed through the power and influence of the Holy Spirit, receive strength and assistance from the church as well as from the parent, and by the instructions contained in the three books (not husks of hard words and empty forms as Professor Du Bois says) are helped by the Spirit, and so are brought up and nurtured in the fear and admonition of the Lord?

Of course the misplacing of a line, page 5, of the leaflet is a mistake of the printer, and can easily be remedied by the reader; but Du Bois and the Revised Translation, to some of our works, especially those containing the past history of the Latter Day Saints, give occasionally an uncertain sound.

Due notice was given, at the close of the session, of a meeting of the Daughters of Zion to be held on Thursday, September 6, at the reunion of the stake at Furlow Grove, situated about three miles from Independence.

Among the late visitors to the Temple Lot were James E. Nowlin, professor of languages in the Latter Day Saint University, Salt Lake City, Elder and Mrs. Peter S. Barson from Clarkson, Utah, (the latter a cousin of our Bro. R. Warnock,) and F. Tout from London, England, with his daughters, including Miss Nannie Tout who not long since sang before Queen Alexandria and sat with her at Buckingham Palace.

Yesterday Elder John O. Edwards while here spoke of the publishing by our people of the Book of Mormon, and remarked that our method of a proposed new division of paragraphs was taken from that adopted by the Utah church.

Speaking of books, there is, we note from reading Coffin’s Building the Nation, great need nowadays of newly revised works, especially those containing the past history of the Latter Day Saints.

Churches Carleton Coffin says in his historical work, chapter 32, on ‘Mormonism,’ for the profit and learning of American youth, concerning the martyred Prophet, ‘Proud, boastful, arrogant, Smith asserted his authority. He claimed to have a revelation from heaven that an elder might marry as may wives as he pleased; for the manner of Abraham, Jacob, David, and Solomon.’ This slip of the pen volume tells how ‘Mr. Smith claimed to be a wizard, and Mrs. Smith pretended to tell fortunes. The boys were vagabonds.’

And then this misinformed historian, like the blind leading the blind, repeats before the crouded, unwary boys and girls of his country the old, old story of ‘the Manuscript Found or the Book of Mormon.’

We are thankful that by the side of such tomes as Building the Nation, there may be found a few good books, priceless gems like that of the Vaugeois Missionary.

‘A wonderful pearl of exceeding price, Whose virtue shall not decay, Whose light shall be as a spell to thee, And a blessing on thy way.’ — Abbie A. Horton.

Extracts from Letters

Mrs. Hannah Lawrence, Warnelands, Bjarneberg, Sweden: “For me to be without the church papers would be hard indeed. It is lonely enough to be without the association of the Saints; but the Herald and the Saints are like dear friends to me, and their weekly visits looked for so much, and it happens sometimes I miss one or the other. They are a great help to me, both to reprove and to encourage, and also to bring news from God’s children in other places. May the Lord hasten his work.”

D. Smith, Macedonia, Illinois: “The debate between David Smith and R. P. McKinley of the Christian Church is a thing of the past, Bro. Smith baptizing six after it was over; and the work is moving, others are investigating, and we are hopeful.”

L. M. Pruden, “Palm Knoll Farm,” Napa, California, R. F. D. 1: “Any of the ministry traveling in the vicinity of Napa, Napa County, California, will find a welcome at our home, and will be met at depot in Napa if we are notified of their intention to call, and the date.”

A. B. Purpúrt, Hilo, Hawaii Territory: “This moment I finished reading the article by V. W. Gunsolley in Herald of June 27, which reached me only yesterday afternoon by way of Honolulu. I can not but congratulate him for his masterly exposition of the glaring wrongs perpetrated by the ‘banking system.’ How anybody that claims to be in possession of the light of God’s law can look upon the essence of that system in any other way, I must confess I am unable to understand. It needs just such articles as this to show that ‘interest, profit, and rent’ form the very foundation of the ‘Devil’s gospel, or the competitive system,’ which system creates in the hearts of men that ‘love of money’ which is the ‘root of all evil’ indeed. God’s gospel, as we know, proclaims and commands the system of ‘cooperation’ to be practiced, because this system will produce only that ‘brotherly love,’ that love for our fellow man, without which our faith amounts to nothing in the eyes of our heavenly Father, and of Jesus Christ our Savior; for by these fruits ye shall know them holds in any and every instance. Oh, when can we learn to live in doing the will of God? This must not, nor can there be any kind of compromise between God’s plan of cooperation and the business system of the world. It is evident that we as a people are not yet willing that Zion shall be redeemed, or we would make haste individually to do God’s will instead of our own.”

By INDEPENDENCE COAL MINING COMPANY

In order to develop and open up the new coal-mining interests at Independence and also make necessary preparations for homes for miners-workers, it is necessary that sufficient capital be secured within a short time. The amount sought for is very small compared with the capital of other coal-mining interests and, for various reasons, the directors of this company desire to keep the working and controlling power with the church members, if possible. The opening up of an undeveloped coal field of the edge of a densely populated community of 20,000, population is a matter of considerable consideration, as the product is part of the necessities of life, with freight rates practically cut off, making this enterprise an exceptional one.

Five hundred and sixty-nine acres have been leased for fifty years and one hundred and fifty-four parcels, amounting to seven hundred and twenty-three acres of coal land in one body, on the line of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, two miles east of Independence.

The company already has coal-mines at Napoleon, Missouri, in operation and a successful and prosperous retail business, making this a bona fide, paying business.

Money seeking investment can find no better place, and will bring the best kind of satisfaction, as it will bring good returns to the investor and results that are much sought for, also benefiting the unemployed, scattered, pressed-down poor church members by placing them in a position to help themselves.

This 51 acres are intended for homes for miners-workers, to be sold at a reasonable price, and we solicit the co-operation of miners to purchase stock, according to their ability.

The promoters of this company are not working for any selfish interests. There is no watered nor fictitious valued stock. The company is incorporated under the laws of the state of Missouri. Capital stock, $200,000.00, payable in fifty-foot lots; 10% interest; amount paid up $20,000. The capital stock must be increased to the amount needed. Parties sending money can do so by bank draft. Further particulars apply to W. A. Hopkins, cashier.

WHY, THE PARABLES AGAIN!

Is any one authorized to say that the “teaching of the Savior” in the parables is no part of what he commanded his disciples to teach in all the world? If so, who is he?

The Editor seems to have stirred up a hornets’ nest by affirming that the teaching of the Savior in the parables was for the “instruction and benefit” of us who are accounted representatives of the gospel in these last days. We can not help it that a brother chooses to differ from us; that is his privilege; but his differing does not change the situation nor the facts in the case.

Jesus said as plainly as Matthew and Luke could write it, that what was confided to the several servants was “goods,” by Matthew; and “money” by Luke, so far as the confidence in the unfaithful servant. The amount, or value of the goods, chattels or money was computed in talents. A talent is 187 pounds, 10 shillings, about $935, of our money. Matthew wrote “talents.” Luke wrote pounds. Neither talents in Matthew, nor pounds of Luke, can mean ability or capacity; for the nobleman intrusted the goods or money according to every man’s several ability. Their capabilities were known to the nobleman beforehand, and when he came to reckon with the men he found two had proved trustworthy; the third had not.

If Jesus did not intend to teach the value of being faithful in the things of this world, why should he have chosen one which showed unmistakably a reward for being diligent and faithful as the relation of the story goes; two received reward, one did not. Why? It was in direct keeping with the statement found elsewhere:

If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches? And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man’s, who shall give you that which is your own.—Luke 16:11, 12.

It may be said, Oh, well, a parable is only fiction; that is, it is not true, and we ought not to indulge in fiction. If this is said, it may be answered by the query, Who is ready to charge Jesus with stating a falsehood to teach a truth?

The primary meaning of the word parable is “A placing beside or together; a comparing; comparison; to throw beside; to compare; from beside and to throw. A fable or allegorical relation or representation of something real in life or nature, from which a moral is drawn for instruction."

In the parable in question, Jesus chose a transaction in real life to teach the moral of faithfulness, and he did it in direct relation to the kingdom of heaven:

Watch therefore; for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh. For the kingdom of heaven is as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants, ... Is it competent for us now to say that Jesus did not mean what he said; that he only intended to indulge in a bit of fiction to those who were willfully blind and deaf, and would neither see nor hear?

We have believed, and the text seems to warrant the belief, that Jesus was talking to his disciples. Verse 1 of chapter 24 so states, and there is no break in the narrative to indicate that he was discoursing to the unbelieving Jews. It is not until the opening of the twenty-sixth chapter that there appears a change in the relation. It came then only after "Jesus had finished all these sayings," that is, what had gone before touching the "destruction of the temple and the end of the world," treated of in chapters 24 and 25, that he called their attention to the feast of the passover and his betrayal. The disciples could not have failed to understand him; nor the intended application of the parable; for the closing verse of chapter 25 is positively clear: "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal."

We nowhere said that the parable was a part of the gospel, but we did say that the "teaching" of the Savior in the parables was a part of the gospel economy, and is applicable now for us who are representatives of that gospel in these latter days.

The talk about the love of truth, etc., thrown into this discussion, or any other, for that matter, has neither attraction nor terror to us. It is rather a covert way of saying, I am honest in what I say and write, but you who differ from me, must either be blind and cannot see, or you are dishonest and will not see. We confess that whenever a writer comes back at us with a flourish of the pen, "It is only for the truth's sake that I oppose," and winds up with, "A lover of the truth," we somehow see in those expressions a more than half said, "You don't know the truth when you see it, and don't love the truth as I do; or you would not do and write as you do."

The saying, "I love the truth," is, we sometimes think, a very much misapplied term. Very few men are sufficiently honest with their fellow men and themselves to apply the words "I love the truth" in its abstract and broad form. It usually means, "I love what I see to be truth," "I do not see as truth what you who differ from me see as truth, therefore I do not love it." We usually love what favors us as truth, though it may condemn others.

DOWIE AND VOLIVA IN AGREEMENT.

From what appears in the press the intervention of the courts will result in bringing about an agreement between Doctor John Alexander Dowie and Albert Glenn Voliva, to the effect that Doctor Dowie will continue as the First Apostle and in charge of the spiritual affairs of Zion City, while Overseer Voliva will look after the financial and economic matters of the settlement. It is to be hoped that the agreement may give peace to the troubled community so far as contention is concerned; but who pays the court costs and lawyers' fees? This is the query of the outsiders.

TROUBLES BY LAND AND SEA.

Any one who has recollection of the prophecies of the Seer, and has taken note of the destruction wrought at San Francisco, California, last April, and the later terrible disasters at Valparaiso and Santiago, Chile, South America, a quarter of a year later by earthquake and fire, will hardly need to be told that these dread events have not cast spiritual shadows before them.

There was but a few short months ago a terrible tidal wave which swept over the South Sea Islands, burying some of them fathoms deep in destruction-dealing water, rooting up and overthrowing the cocoanut-bearing trees, on which the inhabitants depended for food. Our own people at Papeete suffered the loss of their house of worship and the missionary house at Tarona. Now, again the same region has been swept by a second wave, less destructive than the first, but again terrible as an instance of the sea heaving itself beyond its bounds.

The island of Hawaii also has been visited with a similar wave, from what local source of power who can say?

Not long since an upheaval in the southern ocean world put a new island on the navigators' charts, and rumor now says that the island of Juan Fernandez, 420 miles off the coast of Chile and belonging to that republic, celebrated by the story of Robinson Crusoe, so much read, has been destroyed by the same underground turmoil and upheaval that has wrought so disastrously at Valparaiso, Santiago, and other Chilean coast cities and towns.

Some lives were lost at San Francisco; but the chief losses in that entrepot of the west coast were in business houses and homes, aggregating hundreds of millions of dollars. In this later visitation in Chile there is an estimated loss of thousands of lives and $300,000,000 worth of property.

The trouble in Chile is more than at San Francisco, for the reason that in the latter instance there was but one focus where the destruction took place, and the center was within reach of succor real and prompt. The sympathy of a prosperous nation went out to their fellows in an abundance of supplies. The sinews of commerce and transportation were hardly disturbed for a day. But in this southern repetition of disaster, nearly all means of communication are cut off, lines of railway, telegraph lines, and other ways of transportation are broken and deranged. Towns near by and remote along the coast are suffering, and the end not yet.

PATRIOTIC HANDS.

A lawyer by the name of Wilson in a discussion in Kansas City in the evening of August 21, assumed to "roast" George Washington, "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen." He called him "names so suggestive as to make women blush." This did not sit well on the minds of those who heard him, and Bro. O. E. Hands, of Independence, filed complaint, case to be heard August 22, before Judge Kyle.

Rather bad taste and dangerous to attack the "Father of his Country" in the presence of Americans. Good for Bro. Hands.

CO-OPERATION AMONG FARMERS.

The following named States, Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Alabama, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, Kansas, and South Dakota, have joined in a call for a co-operative congress of farmers. Time and place of convening not agreed upon as yet, though it is likely to be in the West somewhere.

A united movement among the farmers, and a proper co-operative plan will, undoubtedly, help the farming class, and secure better prices for certain agricultural products; but, if so, how will it affect the consumers? for surely the middle-men now in control will not abate their hold on either prices or markets. We believe in co-operation. Carried to an extreme it is likely to become as dictatorial as any other monopoly.

STILL IN TERROR.

The following brief dispatches are latest news from the earthquake-visited region in South America to August 22, taken from a Kansas City Journal:

VALPARAISO, August 21.—The loss of life by the earthquake of Thursday, August 16, probably will not be short of three thousand, while the property destroyed is estimated at one hundred millions, and possibly is far in excess of that sum. Order is being maintained with the utmost severity by the military, police, and armed citizen patrols, who are empowered to shoot looters on the spot. The authorities are showing the utmost energy in the protection of property.

With the first terrible shock of the earthquake buildings collapsed, their walls falling with a tremendous noise. The inmates in many cases were unable to escape. The shock was followed almost immediately by a fierce storm, the wind prostrating walls that had been weakened by the earthquake, and these broke trolley-wires, which flashed incessantly. The second shock was even heavier than the first.

Five minutes afterward fires started in every direction and immediately the whole town, which had been momentarily in darkness, was illuminated by gigantic flames. The firemen made a desperate fight, though there was but little water, as most of the mains had been broken by the early tremor. The Victoria theater (opera-house) and the Naval Club were utterly destroyed by the earthquake, and the National theater succumbed to earthquake and fire.

The Club De Setiembre, the church of La Merced, the buildings of the French fathers, the navy department building, the city hall, and many other buildings were destroyed by the earthquake. The destruction by fire, however, was infinitely larger, and probably eighty per cent of the commercial houses were totally ruined. In Brazil Avenue alone nearly thirty blocks of buildings from three to five stories high were destroyed.

SANTIAGO, Chile, August 21.—The population of Santiago was thrown into a condition of extreme alarm last night as a result of the circulation of false news that the observatory had announced a second horrible catastrophe to be imminent. People would not sleep indoors, and large numbers spent the night on the streets and in the squares. The alarm originated from some persons declaring they had seen the black flag, the sign of danger, flying from the observatory, which is situated on San Cristobal hill. The shrieking of steam sirens announcing danger also added to the alarm and the police, instead of calming the people, lost their heads and added to the terror.

There have been a number of exciting scenes around the public slaughter-house and meat-market here on account of the increase in the price of meat. The troops had to be called upon to restore order. Later a movement was started among the people not to buy any meat until the price was reduced. This caused the mayor to take steps to punish the butchers. He established meat depots in various parts of the city and meat will be sold there to the people at the regular prices. The prices of all articles of food have gone up, but the action of the mayor is likely to prevent any further extortion.

QUITO, Ecuador, August 21.—A heavy shock was felt to-day at Quito. The inhabitants ran from their houses in great alarm, fearing a repetition of the Valparaiso disaster.

ASSUMES THE BLAME.

To the HERALD readers we wish to state that whatever blame may attach for the publication of an item in HERALD for August 22, beginning on page 786 and ending at the top of page 787, properly belongs to the assistant editor, L. A. Gould. No blame whatever rests upon anybody else. L. A. G.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. J. W. Wight reports fifty-one baptisms in the field over which he has charge, for the past quarter, ending June 30.

It is refreshing to think while we of the middle west in the American Continent are sweltering in the heat there is coolness somewhere.

VIENNA, August 20.—There were severe thunderstorms and hail storms yesterday and to-day in many parts of Austria and Hungary. Heavy snow fell in the lower Alps and many tourists are snowed up in shelter huts there."

Ten indictments have been returned against the oil trust, containing 6,428 counts. It is to be hoped the matter does not end there.

Wonderful stone work: Ony one who has not seen the wonderful carving in stone that was done a few centuries ago can realize the skill with which those artisans wrought. Those who have seen the almost gossamer work in the ceiling of some of the smaller chapels in Westminster Abbey will appreciate the following:

QUERETARO, Mexico.—From the beginning Queretaro was a city of churches. Except Celaya, which lies in the Valley of Laja, not more than twenty miles away, there was no city in Old Mexico where the power and grandeur of the church attained more picturesque proportions than in Queretaro. Fifty great churches and sixteen convents still exist, after war, confiscation, and vandalism have done their worst. Some of them are of genuine interest. The Teresitas, which Maximilian and Mendez were imprisoned together for a short time, is a vast pile, now the dwelling place of three hundred friars and students.

The federal palace occupies a part of the convent of St. Augustine and is renowned throughout Mexico for the beauty of its architecture and the richness of the superbly carved stone galleries surrounding the courtyard. The old church of San Francisco, which in 1863 was created the Cathedral of the diocese, was founded almost immediately after the Spaniards acquired possession of the town. As it stands today, a quaint and lovely old structure, it represents the result of many decades of patient labor; for though pronounced complete in 1698, it was frequently repaired and altered, the last time in 1727.

The beautiful choir, a mass of carved oak, now black with age, inclosing a tall music rack full of enormous volumes of ancient music, was added only a century ago. In fact an article might be written about the churches of Queretaro alone, especially as through various fortunate circumstances the religious orders seem to be recovering their prestige in the old city, along with some of their former possessions.—New Orleans Picayune.

Some prison statistics: Eighteen Kansas counties have no prisoners in the penitentiary. All the counties are in the western part of the State. They are Cheyenne, Garfield, Comanche, Grant, Gray, Greeley, Haskell, Hodgeman, Kiowa, Morton, Lane, Ness, Scott, Seward, Sheridan, Stanton, Trego, and Wichita. Wyandotte County has the largest number, eighty-nine, and Leavenworth County is second, with fifty-three prisoners, Shawnee has fifty-two, Cherokee thirty-six, while Sedgwick has only nineteen. But the trouble in Sedgwick, says George Burroughs, seems to be that the police don't catch the fellows who ought to be in prison.

DARBY, Pennsylvania.—Showing but little evidence of decay, and with its giant branches reared proudly to the sky, the oldest tree in Pennsylvania, which for three hundred years has defied the elements, is a striking example of arboreal longevity that would be difficult to duplicate. The tree is an oak, well clothed in foliage, despite its age, and is as big around the trunk as a hogshead. It is only a few yards from Darby Creek, a stone's throw from the bridge, and adjoins a new extension of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company, which runs from Darby to Chester.

A hundred years ago it was spoken of by local historians at that time as an ancient tree. Within a few yards of its overhanging branches one warm Sunday, August 24, 1777, passed General Washington at the head of his army on his way to meet the British under Sir William Howe at Chadd's Ford.

Visitors have been known to come hundreds of miles to see the old tree. It is older than the famous "Treaty Elm," on the Delaware River, under which William Penn made his celebrated treaty with the Leni Lenape tribe of Indians in 1682, and which was blown down during a storm over eighty years ago.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

NEW HAVEN, Connecticut, August 27.—In his desire to "avoid even the appearance of evil," William J. Bryan has declined the use of the palatial private car of President Mellin, of the Hartford & New Haven, which was tendered him for the trip from New York to this city and return. . . . In a letter declining the proffered courtesy, made public to-day, Mr. Bryan says: "I do not think it would be wise to accept favors from the railroad. Let me pay my fare and ride as I usually do."—Kansas City Journal.

ARE WE AWAKE?

God has said, through his servants, that the church has been sleeping on her rights, that he can proceed no farther till she awakes—comes up higher. How shall we be awakened? By earthquakes, cyclones, plagues, sickness, distress? Oh, may we become wide, wide-awake, soon, lest peradventure we find ourselves hemmed in by the forces of the adversary, until we can see no way of escape!

Already the way is far more difficult than five or ten years ago. Oh, let us arise, shake off this lethargy of waiting for a more propitious time; "till the people are ready," "till things are favorable." Let us talk, write, discuss, plan, do as well as watch and pray.

Oh, worshipers of the omnipotent God, why sleep ye when the opportunity of the ages lies at your feet, when the children of earth are crying aloud for succor?

Listen. God commanded us to "read all good books"—learn all that the wise and great men of earth could teach us. Think you he did this merely for our general culture? No. He did it knowing that in so doing we should train our intelligences so as to fit us to meet and solve many of the difficulties and problems confronting us, and perceive the traps set by the adversary. Had we realized the deep significance of this advice, we could not have been under the reproach of "sleeping."

Ah, how completely descriptive of our condition that word is! Sleeping! One who sleeps is unconscious of all that surrounds him, knows not if danger threatens, neither thinks, reasons, talks, or works. Remember, though some have not slept, the condition of the church is determined by the state of the majority.

Let us arise, use every atom of intelligence which we possess, and never rest an hour, a minute, till we can say to the world: Behold, a city of refuge prepared by our God, through us, his humble children; herein find redemption, spiritual and temporal. None shall cheat you here, or take away your home in any manner whatsoever; honest, useful work is assured all who enter here. Enter, find rest for your weary souls, and peace and joy in the worship of the most high God.

Again we are told, "He that waiteth to be commanded in all things is a slothful servant." We have slept. I believe we are awakening. Let us not therefore add to our list of wrongs that of being slothful. Doctrine and Covenants 58:6: "Verily I say, Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves."

Therefore let us arise and prove to our God the depth of our sorrow that we have slept by bringing about much good. We can, for he has said it.

Now, no great work was ever brought about by man without talk, study, discussion, and planning. First, let us look about us and find how things stand in the world. See the distress of nations, wars, rumors of wars, a mighty battle for freedom, bloodless in some nations, running rivers of blood in others. See the craft, cunning, and power of the wicked is growing, steadily, day by day. They defy the power of the courts of our own land. Men are arrested, hurried under cover of darkness to another State, contrary to the law, refused appeal to the courts, hurled into prison with condemned criminals, and proclaimed by the wicked in power as guilty without a trial. Conditions in our own land are worse than is generally known; the capitalist-controlled press of the land dare not tell all. In fact they are sometimes forced to publish lies as ordered by their money source—the large advertisers and capitalists.

Listen, hear the cries of the poor, who work year in, year out, whenever it can be had; homeless, heart-sick, discouraged in body and soul, they see no hope this side the grave.

In Russia, the blood of men, women, and children cries from the ground.

In India, countless thousands of people are starving, while countless thousands of dollars are being expended in entertaining a prince!

Arouse! Awake! The day hasteneth when all who will not take up arms against his neighbor in the terrific struggle already begun must flee to—where?

I firmly believe that at this very moment scores of the pure in heart are dwelling on the exact spot where Zion, the city of refuge, is to be built.

Time after time I have sat and listened to the declaration, "Zion is the pure in heart." In one sense, yes. But let us use our intelligences. Zion is a city or place of refuge. In other words, Zion is a people, pure in heart, the inhabitants of a city whose foundation is the golden rule, whose financial laws permit of no single instance of injustice, where land is not sold but treated as a gift from God, each to have a spot whereon he may dwell, the remainder to be held in trust for future needs. Zion must be a place where all, physically able, shall do useful work, where no evil thing abides, where in boundless love for each other they show forth their love for God.

Behold, the world cries out with ten thousand thousand voices for this City of Peace and Righteousness. Shall we not try to bring about the much good our God has declared our ability to do?

How shall we make a start? First, by casting aside the Devil and his works. How may we know his works? "By their fruits ye shall know them," says our Lawgiver.
Now, we can not establish Zion by using the financial system in use in the world because by its fruits it is proved to be of the Devil. What shall we do then? In the reading of the good books commanded, we find one by a good and wise man, George De Bernardi, in which he outlines a system whose fruits could not be otherwise than equality and justice. Let us study his book and adopt his system or frame a better.

"Come out of her, O ye my people." Out of what? Her wickedness. And of all the wicked, evil-producing things, no scheme of the Devil could beat the financial monetary system in use by the world to-day. All over the world good men and true are lifting their voices against its evils. Therefore, let us obey our God and use the intelligence he gives to adopt or devise one whose fruits shall be good—not evil.

Second, having chosen a new system of exchange or barter, let us then again look about us. A most admirable business project, proved by its results, was that of the wicked though brainy leaders of the polygamy church—a church farm. Let us study their plan and method, adopt all its good and right features, add others and so make a beginning. Buy land as cheaply and as suitable as possible. Use all idle workers to labor on that farm, paying them in checks as explained by DeBernardi, in his Trials and Triumphs of Labor.

Let such as can, farm; carpenters, build; brickmakers make brick; anything useful that any one can do will add to the wealth in store.

Why, do you suppose if all the race of men and all their works were destroyed from the face of the earth, except our church membership, that we could not build up a creditable city? Give our workers freedom from the howling of the wolf, near or distant as the case may be, and shorter hours of toil and I predict you will see such talent and capabilities develop as few dream exist in our ranks.

How many men in Independence, Missouri, think you, would thank God to-day if they knew at any time they were thrown out of work they could work on the church farm, get a check, and receive as an equivalent whatever they needed of the fruits or products of that farm? What if they could not get an immediate return? A just return for their labor would be assured, for the farm being owned by the workers themselves, and controlled by common consent, no one could cheat or defraud them.

In Prescott's History of Peru, he gives a detailed account of their system of exchange and barter; and, to our shame be it said, it is much superior to that in vogue among so-called civilized nations to-day, in that its results or fruits were much nearer the just and right. There, all the fruits and results of labor not used for immediate needs were placed in store-houses.

They did not need hundreds of merchants, clerks, etc., to keep things spread out in hundreds of stores where they could obtain them if they had the wherewithal. No, they all labored at useful and productive work, and all shared the results according to their needs. Let us study their methods, hold fast that which is good, and put it in practice.

Solomon inquires in Proverbs 6:9-11, "How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard? When wilt thou arise out of thy sleep? Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep; so shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth, and thou shalt as an armed man."

Solomon advises in Proverbs 6:6-8, "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise: which having no guile, overseer, or ruler, provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest."

Now, it is an established scientific fact that the ants are co-operative in the fullest sense of the word; therefore, according to the wisdom of one of earth's wisest men, if we would be wise, successful, and happy, as even the ant, we must co-operate in our work, not compete.

Inasmuch as God has declared in Doctrine and Covenants that the spiritual and temporal are one, with prayer and fasting let us study, plan, and develop until we fulfill his command to be equal in obtaining earthly blessings, that we may be equal in obtaining heavenly blessings.

Praying that we, one and all, may have so wrought that in that day when we meet our Lord and Savior face to face it shall be with the joy of obedient servants, and not the sorrow and shame of the disobedient, Edith Garrett Caldwell.

SENTIMENT OR SACRIFICE. WHO WILL GATHER?

In the competitive world, ambitions lead man to assume undertakings and responsibilities, exacting courage and executive ability of the highest order. Many who have a modest competence will freely venture it if the outcome promises individual gain many times greater than the temperate wants of life demand. The indulgence this added wealth confined to self affords, proves, too often, to be the labyrinth where self in a nobler sense is lost.

The methods and sentiments that find favor and gain currency in the social and economic system this fosters, is the burial-ground of the pure and the good. Few of the unregenerate will separate themselves from the letter and spirit of the teachings modern society has imposed upon the votaries of wealth and fashion. The lives and characters molded along these lines are in keeping with natural law; like begets like, and finds its fullest interpretation in its practical application.

The pioneer who indulges the hopes and desire of creating better things for himself and his own, in the material blessings of life, makes a clear-cut separation from many things that required a sacrifice (not only in sentiment but in fact), conscious of its necessity if a new order of things was to be secured. This relates to time only, to the one outside the gospel, and has within it the seeds of its own dissolution. These limitations are not embodied in the gospel scheme, but insure a continued heritage to the believer, who honors the law in its fullness.

Here comes the parting of the ways: the purposed plan of the Redeemer of mankind saw wisdom in a full separation from potent influences born of illegitimate business policies and social shams. A community of purpose, in a collective sense, can not abridge the law of its creation and expect continued favor. The master builder knew the value and worth of lessons learned in the school of practical experience. The truant child, who dislikes the discipline needful for changed and better conditions, usually wanders with the crowd, seeking the enjoyment of undisciplined desires, evading a sacrifice, a conscious duty involved. The pulse of life beats slowly where the inspirational ideas given lack fulfillment in the wide field of human endeavor planted by the hand of divinity.

The human mind has been prolific in the birth of schemes, having its root-idea in the beauty of the well-ordered home where brotherhood and sisterhood bind, with loving ties, the common weal, the contending elements born in human nature having been buried one by one in new-found graves.

The problem of more equal conditions in life is still "a white man's burden," evidenced by a newly awakened public conscience rudely jolting the cold-blooded contentedness of the winners in the race for wealth, who reap where they have not planted and gather where they have not sown, uncaring for the many, widening the span between luxurious comfort and impoverished life often washed in human tears.

The question has been raised by recent writers in the HERALD, "Can the business ethics of the world be made to do duty under the celestial law?" Man's legal rights as interpreted by law now, perhaps, would come in conflict with his moral obligations to his fellow. With all due respect to the power and efficacy of the gospel, there exists inborn qualities native to the individual that do not need the lash of law or the force of public criticism to evince that spirit reflecting the character that make men saviors of their kind.

The American tradition is the experience of the world over. There is Washington and there is Hamilton, gently born and gently bred; but the heart rather turns to a Franklin and to a Lincoln untouched by the pride of birth or the love of social caste, as of more hope to the common man God made so many of.

In the many-sided character of the world, whose untutored mind in belief of present revelation would perhaps justify the thought expressed by some, God has never revealed himself to man, but reveals man to himself. The world is not destitute of the apparent character of this thought. Man's humanity to man stands out in noble examples of the individual who, conscious of his native ability and more fortunate circumstances, is willing to use them in lifting his less fortunate fellow to higher levels in the beautiful economy of life mapped out by the law of righteousness.

It is doubtful to assume the thought that the many will inaugurate the Zion to be, a legitimate child, a full-planned structure, with gates ajar, for the Prince of Peace to enter. The history of past movements, epoch-making in the life of the race, shows they had their inception by the few, who planted the standard of their purpose, while many of its so-called friends stood aloof, a pleasing fancy to them, but a doubtful reality with the character sometimes called "building castles in the air." Some writer has said, "It's a good thing to build castles in the air." It presumes ideals and a fertile mind; but put foundations under them afterwards. Man will not be absolved, yet, from that law written in human life, "by the sweat of thy brow." Its correlative is, physical health, moral growth, and spiritual life.

History repeats itself. The birthright of many will be given "for a mess of pottage." The spicy flavor of the things the world offers will tempt the thoughtless, and the indifferent, seeking enjoyment of present desires and idle wishes.

The castle of Zion is still in the air, awaiting human efforts to build foundations under it. The gospel believer, laying claim to direct intercourse with creative intelligence and belief in the injunction, "If any lack wisdom," can not consistently confess a want of knowledge for the work purposed.

The sectarian believer builds foundations under the castle of his hopes, in fidelity to his church-going. The children of light may say like the young man, "All these things have I kept from my youth up," but turn away sorrowfully from their splendid birthright, that would bring swift messages of hope, thoughts unspoken, and crown with glory and with gladness the future of their being.

"In the beauty of the lilies, Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in his bosom, that transfigures you and me,
As he died to make men holy, let us live to make men free."

MISSIONARY WORK, OR HOW TO REACH THE PEOPLE.

"How to reach the people," has been interesting reading the past year to those who have been reading the church publications. The writer having had some experience, and having observed a great deal, will venture a few opinions on this important matter.
Missionaries are messengers, and they have a message to deliver “in all the world for a witness.” That message is the gospel which has been restored after a long night of spiritual darkness. There are two ways we can deliver the message: by preaching and with our literature. It is a fact that must be apparent to all observers, that most of the time and preaching of our missionaries is spent in the branches, and this seems to go on without any diminution, notwithstanding the law says, “the twelve and seventy administering as those prosecuting the work of preaching with the warning voice, baptizing, organizing, and setting in order, then pushing their ministry into other fields until the world is warned.” (Doctrine and Covenants 122:8.)

How is it possible for us to escape the conclusion that we can never, no, never, reach the people unless our missionaries leave the branches and go into the world?

The question can be asked properly, Why do the missionaries fail to observe this instruction? Surely it can not be because of ignorance, or lack of desire on their part to do so. We all partake of the environment in which we move, and the new missionaries are bound to be influenced by their predecessors and associates; and if we can not find a stopping-place, the present method must continue indefinitely.

Under present conditions the missionary is practically barred out of the towns and cities, because he has no money to pay hall rent; and every year the missionaries are going through those places without any opportunity to “reach the people.” In the writer’s field there are about one hundred towns and cities, and he has succeeded in holding meetings in only a few of them. It does not seem possible that God will give us a command and then block the way of accomplishing it by giving another one that throws obstacles in the way of carrying it out. He knows we can not get places to hold meetings unless we pay for them; and we must go without “purse or scrip.” Is it reasonable to expect that strangers are going to furnish us money when the church that sends us will not do it? To say that the early missionaries did that without this assistance will not answer the question. We are dealing with present conditions, and we must meet them as they exist. Is it not possible that we have a wrong conception of the law on these matters? We have been mistaken in some other things, why can we not be in this?

While it is true we can not supply the demand for missionaries, the work might be carried on more successfully by calling in the elders that are adapted to local work, keep those that are good missionaries out in company with the seventies, and the means so saved could be used to aid those that were in the field to better prosecute their work, and those called in render good service as local workers in the branches where they are greatly needed.

The public are ignorant of us because we do not give them the opportunity to read our literature. There are no practical methods in use by which they may know of its existence. We ought to have colporteurs to canvass the country to sell our publications, and give away what was intended for free distribution. Men and women that are adapted to that kind of work, placed on a ministerial basis, could greatly increase the sales of our publications, especially of the Book of Mormon, and indirectly aid the missionary to open up new fields.

In the time of Paul, he could meet the public on “Mar’s Hill,” or in the “market place.” Times have changed, and if we want to let the public know of public meetings, we must use the methods in use in our own day, and every missionary should be furnished with sufficient advertising-matter to aid him in his work; and it would seem that this ought not to be an expensive matter with two printing establishments owned by the church. In advertising our meetings we are not up to date. The public do not know that they are held—one reason why they do not come. We are properly entitled to the cognomen, “back number.” It is fair to presume that each one from his view-point is trying to do the best he can according to his knowledge of things; but if we would more carefully reflect on these matters, and not anchor our ideas to the dead past, we would gradually emerge into more practical methods with better results, and feel a greater degree of satisfaction in the results of our work.

LIFE INSURANCE.

As a lay member of the church, and having a desire to make my living by keeping my conscience as pure and holy before God as possible, and, further, having been a close student of the life insurance problem, and knowing that it is one of the most methodical problems of economics, and based as much upon the natural law of God as the course of the luminaries and the stars and the return of seasons and the growth of plants; never having found a minister of the gospel who could find a text in the scriptures that would condemn life insurance when interpreted from a rational standpoint, although many with a wiseacre look, stand and ask the question that the Devil asked Christ in the wilderness, as well as when standing on the pinnacle of the temple, “Are you afraid the Lord won’t provide for you?” They want the Lord to command the stones to become bread for them. And likewise they want the angels to take charge of them, and their hands to bear them up, lest at any time they dash their foot against a stone; or in the words of this day and time, Satan so delights to ask the question, “Are you afraid the Lord won’t take care of you?”

We do not desire that these words should be taken in the sense of ridicule; for we too well know the injunction of the apostle Paul to admonish and rebuke in all meekness of spirit; but we know no other way to express ourselves, and we either desire to show the brethren that there is no wrong in life insurance, or have them show and convince us by God's words, that we are wrong. Outside of a rare instance, now and then, where we believe it is impossible for people to pay for it, and these cases are generally more assumed than real, we have found the spirit of selfishness or jealousy to be the foundation of the stereotyped expression of, "Are you afraid the Lord won't take care of you?"

"When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Colossians 3:4. The whole third chapter of Colossians teaches us how we shall live with regard to things in this dispensation. I would further request a study of 1 Timothy, chapter 5, and especially the sixteenth verse; also Titus 3:8, James 2:15-17, and in fact the whole chapter. We learn that even immediately after Pentecost, the way the Lord provided and directed was as described in Acts 2:44-47.

Now all these quotations are simply given to prove that God has given man wisdom and talents to direct their material wants in all the dispensations of the past, and we are not sure but we will have to continue to use the same wisdom and talents even during the millennium, and until the new heaven and the new earth are set up only under Christ's direction.

We are also told, and can easily discern by reading a few verses one side or the other of the many quoted, that we are to be obedient to the just precepts of even men and kings, and in many cases to the unjust conditions existing.

He that provideth not for those of his own household is worse than an infidel. Does the book say he that provideth not until death, is worse than an infidel? No.

Now, I desire to bring this to a close for the present, and will say that it has been discovered that man dies according to a certain average, and until it is proved that Latter Day Saints do not die according to the same average, we will have to concede that it is one of God's immutable laws that will continue at least until the next dispensation of time if not beyond.

Instead of a few Jews in Palestine giving up and holding all things in common, which did not seem to last long, man, to-day, has or can take advantage of God's immutable laws unto the millennium at least;
call all mankind his brothers as Christ commanded, and pay his allotment according to the average discerned by the table, and provide for his own, instead of leaving his beloved family to be provided for by Saints, many of whom bewail themselves as too poor to pay tithing. And it is about the only way that these poor ever will be able to pay a farthing of tithing, by paying it out of the practical charity God has provided for them by virtue of obedience, and taking advantage of this just law which only differs from the old Jewish distribution of dividing all the land every jubilee or fiftieth year of the old Mosaic law; whereas, in life insurance, the average would be only thirty-three years—the average life of man—and a man's family would receive when most in need.

If we can not trust God to help us provide by blessing our honest efforts without robbing him of tithes, how foolish it sounds to me to trust God to provide for my loved ones when I am too selfish myself to make provision for them, and ask God while I am living to help me make the provision.

I really desire that some good Saint, sincere and devotional, in prayer and thanksgiving, and capable of forgetting how he used to think, will use the scriptures and prove that life insurance is a sin, as they say; and of course if it is wrong to carry it, why, it must be a sin.

The tithing fund would be greater by $35,000, at least, if every Saint carried only $1,000 insurance, and the poor would or could be paying their tithing.

FAITH WITHOUT WORKS.

Though a man say he hath faith without works, can faith save him?—James 2:14.

There has been much said and written regarding the Saints having or not having faith to be healed by the laying on of hands and the administration of oil, as given by James 5:14, which, when we read carefully, shows that the word faith applies more directly to the administrator than to the one administered to.
Again and again we hear the question asked, Why are not the promises made in verse 15 more often received? It is just possible we may have fallen into the same error on some points that may be very important, that we are accusing our sectarian brethren of, namely: to make a fair use of a portion of the apostles' and the Savior's instructions, while other portions we leave nearly or quite unheeded.
The command of James in 5:14 we are, as a rule, quite prompt to obey; yet when we come down to the first point in the sixteenth verse we seem quite as prompt to disobey. We would ask, Who is to be the judge of which of the two is the more essential?

We would now ask the reader to turn to the instructions given us by the Master himself, in Doctrine and Covenants 86, and read and meditate thereon, and discover if you may, which of those instructions the Saints as a rule are quite strictly regarding, "To be sent greeting, . . . not by commandment or constraint, but by revelation and the word of wisdom; showing forth the order and will of God in the temporal salvation of all saints in the last days. Given for a principle, with promise, adapted to the capacity of the weak, and the weakest of all saints, who are or can be called saints."

"Behold, verily thus saith the Lord unto you, in consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days, I have warned you and forewarned you."

What is it those evil-designing men are going to do in these last days for the sake of getting gain? Experience, one of our best teachers, has taught us that they have not only adulterated, but poisoned what we so greedily use for hot drinks; and the Lord has faithfully warned us that they are not good for us, and we are told that we should live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord. (See Deuteronomy 8:3; Luke 4:4.) And we are told in John 14:23, 24: "If a man love me, he will keep my words. . . . He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings."

If the Lord has so faithfully warned us, and we have not paid heed to the warning, when affliction comes why should we murmur or complain? We were also warned and forewarned of its approach, Luke 12:47: "And that servant, which knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes." We can not make the excuse that we did not know the Master's will. He has taken great pains to reveal his will to us, and also exactly how to prepare ourselves to escape those stripes, with the promise that "all saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, and marrow in their bones, and shall find wisdom, and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint."

It seems to be strictly a matter of choice with us whether we receive the above promised blessings, or take the stripes, leaving an important question for each one to answer, namely: Are those stripes in accordance with justice?

Notwithstanding the above, when we take up the Herald of April 18, our eyes are greeted with the following: "But to be honest with you, I never came nearer being thoroughly discouraged as to this temporal life than I did this last winter. I hope never to be put to such a trial again. I suppose it may be good discipline, and it may be a wise one. That is beyond my province to say. I suppose no rogue ever took the whip with a real sense of its justice; and I may not have taken this affliction with the proper consideration of a sense of its justness."

"Faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone."
—James 2:17; also verse 24.

Now what we want is to resurrect our faith by placing our works along by the side of it, and keeping them thereon until we have so prepared ourselves by doing the Master's will, that we may not only escape the stripes, but may in their stead receive those glorious promises, as we are told in a late revelation: "My covenant with Israel is not forgotten, nor is my will slow to perform; but to whom shall I speak? and by whom shall my counsel be observed?"—HERALD, June 6, page 535.

The Lord requires of us the observation of his counsel if we expect to receive a promise.

All the apology we have to offer for the above may be found in a late revelation in SAINTS' HERALD, June 6, page 535. A LOVER OF TRUTH.

THE PARABLES.

In the SAINTS' HERALD, No. 31, under the above heading, the Editor makes this statement: "We have always been taught that the teaching of the Savior in the parables was a part and parcel of the gospel for our instruction and profit as representatives of the gospel economy of these latter days."

We can not say we agree with the Editor, because in the three standard books of the church established in 1830, we find no record where Jesus Christ authorized the apostles of his day to teach, or in any way to use the parables he had spoken in trying to teach the Jews the gospel. So far as history records their preaching and teaching in the New Testament, they seldom if ever mention parables. Jesus said to the apostles at Jerusalem, Go ye into all the world; preach the gospel to every creature; teach them that believe to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. A command is a law; a parable is fiction. The parables were spoken to a people that had eyes, but they closed them; they had ears but refused to hear. They said, We have Abraham to our father.

We ask, What benefit can Saints derive from reading, or elders from teaching any or all of the parables? It is the moral found in the parable that affords instruction. As the Editor states, It is what is in the parables. The parable was no benefit of itself; it was the meaning that was intended to benefit the disciples. And they so understood it, and asked him, when alone, to explain to them the meaning of the parable of the wheat and tares, and of the sower. (See Matthew 13.) After listening to so many, and such a variety of parables, they surely thought there was something more intended than "wheat," "tares," and "talents," "money and goods." They became anxious to know in what way the kingdom of heaven could be likened to a man sowing good seed. When Jesus told them, The good seed are the children of the kingdom, the field is the world, he that soweth the good seed was the Son of man, and the tares represent the children of the wicked one, this explanation presented food for thought. They began to understand that the words of Jesus were both spirit and light, something more than goods and money. This interpretation by Christ varies a little from section 84, Doctrine and Covenants: "Verily thus saith the Lord unto you, my servants, concerning the parable of the wheat and of the tares: Behold, verily I say that the field was the world, and the apostles were the sowers."

During his mortal life, Jesus the Son of man was the sower. When his mission among the Jews was filled, he said unto these apostles next in authority, whom he had chosen to represent the gospel to the world, As my Father sent me, so send I you; go ye, therefore, and teach all nations. The apostles in this way became the sowers of the good seed. Upon the apostles rested the responsibility of teaching all things that Jesus had commanded. Whether the parables Christ had used in his teaching among the Jews were intended as part and parcel of the gospel system is uncertain, as they do not appear, or are not mentioned in the teachings and doings of the apostles in the New Testament. They are not to be found in the new covenant, the Book of Mormon. There is scarcely any mention of a parable during the ministry of Christ among the Nephites. Very few, if any, parables were quoted by the early apostles of this dispensation. They had received the Book of Mormon, containing the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, for their standard and guide. History does not show that parables form any part of the gospel message, only one parable given, Doctrine and Covenants 98:6, unless a people can be found having eyes that do not want to see.

If it is found among all the parables spoken by Jesus Christ, that some or any of them have a spiritual meaning or purpose, that some of them have been explained to the disciples as having a spiritual intent by Jesus Christ, can a valid reason be given by any one, why all the parables do not have a double or a spiritual meaning? In the Old Testament scriptures we find a similar mode of teaching, all showing a double purpose, or a spiritual meaning, as in the case of David, king of Israel, and Uriah. David had dealt treacherously with Uriah, but it did not appear on the surface as a crime. But the Lord was displeased with David, and he sent Nathan the prophet with a parable. David heard the parable, and was ready to deal out punishment to the man that had taken the poor man's ewe lamb; did not hesitate to pronounce him guilty and worthy of death, and further assessed the damage on the lamb to be returned fourfold, because he had manifested so much greed and selfishness, while he had a flock of sheep of his own. David accepted the parable as presented, never thought of anything but the poor man's lamb. But the man of God gave David to understand there was another side to this picture. This "poor man's lamb" has a double meaning. And, David, you are implicated, in other words, "Thou art the man." This parable (see 2 Samuel 12:6; 1-13, Inspired Translation), like all the parables in the New Testament, has a double meaning, as we believe. It deals with motives, intentions, and all unlawful desires, scheming, and trickery that may possibly have a fair and legal outside appearance, to get the poor man out of the way, that he could take advantage.

We ask, How can the parable of the man taking a journey into a far country, and calling his servants and giving unto them his goods, to one he gave five talents, to another two, to another one: which the Editor says meant money, and not mental ability (as stated in same Herald, page 721). We ask if there is no spiritual intent to this parable, wherein can it be likened to the kingdom of heaven; for the kingdom of God is not meat or money, or goods alone. If this parable forms part and parcel of the gospel system, it must of necessity come under the following rule, Doctrine and Covenants 28:9: "Verily I say unto you, that all things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal, neither any man, nor the children of men."

If the parables are part of the gospel, they are of spiritual intent, or why did the apostles ask their meaning. "For my commandments are spiritual; they are not natural, nor temporal, neither carnal nor sensual." Hence, we believe that the parables, as they are given in both New and Old Testaments, in order to be of value to Saints in any age, must have a divine interpreter, as shown in both records. We dislike to run counter to them that teach; but truth, harmonious truth, is what we are in search of, not notoriety or publicity.

Respectfully submitted,

MIRACLE—WHAT IS IT?

Answer: "An event or effect contrary to the established constitution or course of things, or contrary to the laws of nature known to man."

Can this be a correct answer? Let us see. Nature is "a word that comprehends all the works of God. The universe" (Webster), and the definition of contrary is, "acting against."

So God created all things; man calls all created things nature, which of course includes the law by which all created things are perpetuated. Men and devils oppose and obstruct God's plans, which brings misery to the world. God's servants, while seeking to rectify matters, appeal to him for help, he hears their prayers, removes the obstruction, which brings about a normal condition of things. Then man says God has done something opposed to "nature." Do you see the point? Logical, is it not?

To illustrate: God ordained the laws governing

the rains in their season. Satan obstructs the supply, and brings a drought. The Saints pray for rain. God hears their prayers of faith, removes the obstruction, and the rain descends. It was a miracle. Then man says, God has done something "contrary to nature."

God made man in the generic sense, and pronounced them "very good" creatures; strong, healthful, athletic, and joyous: Nature's best product. Apollyon sends one or more of his spirits who enter a man; the man at once becomes a maniac. We pray to God in the name of Jesus Christ, and the Devil is cast out. God has done what man alone could not do; it was a miracle; and man says it was "opposed to nature."

Again. The channels of a healthy person become obstructed with waste matter from within, and with poisons from without; the result is sickness. The person calls "for the elders of the church," who "pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord, and the prayer of faith" saves the sick; for "the Lord" removes the obstruction through natural channels, and thus "raises him up." It was a miracle; but man says the Lord subverted nature.

Do you see the logic? I do not. And from the fact that such conclusions are not legitimate, we pronounce this popular definition of miracle a far-fetched and false philosophy.

To make the matter more simple, if possible, we say, A man forms a watch that keeps perfect time. A boy buys the watch, and opens it in a sand-storm to show its beautiful wheels to his friends; the sand lodges between the bearings, and stops the watch. The maker removes the foreign matter, and the watch again keeps good time. Question: Has the maker done anything contrary to the watch, or to the law by which the watch runs?

Certainly not. So with God and his work that we call nature.

It is the folly of sin, the works of Satan that are contrary to nature, that oppose the works of nature, that obstruct the even course of God's law, that subvert the natural course of the universe, that are responsible for all unpleasant features in this world. And when by faith we cooperate with God, he answers our prayers, and by miraculous power, by his own power removes hard obstacles, and lets nature glide smoothly along her own course, he has not done something contrary to nature. But he has done something squarely the opposite of that. He has by natural means removed that which obstructed nature. He has assisted nature.

When by faith we cooperate with God, and he does something for us that we could not have done by ourselves, it is a miracle; and though we may or may not search out and understand the means by which it was done, as long as we are unable to handle the agencies independent of the direct power of God, it is a miracle. We are not denying that there may possibly be exceptions to the rule; but in this paper we are dealing with the natural methods by which God intervenes in behalf of his faithful sons and daughters, and in answer to their prayers of faith removes hindering obstructions out of their way. The blind may lead the blind, and they may fall into the ditch together; but God is not blind. He has ordained nature to move along certain lines; he permits men and devils to subvert and oppose, and suffer the penalty of broken law; but the vain philosophies of men can never wheedle God into deflecting his course, or cause him to work contrary to his own established laws.

We may not know how God straightens things out. Is that any reason that we should charge him with the folly of opposing his own work? When nature is not molested, her works are perfect. Transgression of her laws bring imperfection and misery. Does God work contrary to nature to bring about natural results? Can men by opposing nature cause her to produce more natural results?

Romans 1:20 should be a rebuke to such reasoning: "For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made."

We are asked, "If God's power is manifest in the blessing of the food we eat, is it not contrary to natural law?" No, it is not, for "natural law" provides for the food to nourish us; and if he should oppose that law his act would be a curse and not a blessing. Every time natural law is opposed, deflected, controverted, or reversed, it is a curse. When God cursed the earth in consequence of sin he may have worked contrary to nature, or, what is more plausible, he may have removed fixed restrictions and permitted Satan to do his worst. Until we can minutely explain how God has done anything that we call a miracle, it will be impossible to prove that his act was "contrary to nature." So, when we see that he has aided nature, do not charge him falsely. D. R. BALDWIN.

A HINT.

Till Zion is actually established, there will always be "Lions in the way," ever seeking whom they may devour, as is their nature; meanwhile it is a healthy sign that the Saints are not afraid to reconnoiter the danger and compare notes. The ideal city is a favorite meditation of mine; have collected much that treats of its various aspects, and the following may contain a hint that some of your correspondents have not yet touched upon. In Pato's dialogue, "The republic" (400 B. C.), Socrates is describing a model city, the inhabitants of which subsist on a simple table-fare, such as the Word of Wisdom prescribes for us to-day. His listener, like some of us, does not see the bearing of such counsel on the subject under consideration; then follows:

Socrates.—We shall need quantities of cattle, then, for those who may wish to eat them, shall we not?

The grumbler Glaucion.—Of course we shall.

Socrates.—The country, too, I presume, which was formerly adequate to the support of its then inhabitants, will now be too small, and adequate no longer. Shall we say so?

Glaucion.—Certainly.

Socrates.—Then must we not cut for ourselves a slice of our neighbor’s territory, if we are to have land enough for both pasture and tillage? while they will do the same to ours if they, like us, permit themselves to overstrep the limit of necessities, and plunge into the unbounded acquisition of wealth.

It must inevitably be so, Socrates.

Will our next step be to go to war, Glaucion, or how will it be?

As you say.

It is interesting to note that the great philosopher traces the origin of both war and disease, and all the human ills, to the partaking of flesh-foods in preference to the bounteous provision of “things without blood” which a gentle and merciful Father has given us.

One other note: “Much of the poverty and distress so prevalent to-day is a direct result of the depopulation of the rural districts and the congestion of the cities, which is largely the outcome of the increased acreage devoted entirely to grazing. No country which allows its agricultural interests to decay can be prosperous. It is absolutely necessary that a greater portion of our country should be put under cultivation and made to produce the fruits of the earth in due season. Food reform means that this be brought about, and employment of a natural and healthy kind will thus be provided for tens of thousands who to-day are simply surplus population, and a burden to the state as well as to themselves.”

Spending so much of my life in the employ of a “trust,” in a factory of several hundred “hands” (modern name for girls of fourteen years and up) every one trying to make money—from the directors and stockholders, jeopardizing their honor on close deals, to the three-dollar-a-week girl doing the same thing that she may wear as fine feathers as some more stylish girl—I often deplore that we are so loth to discard the false standard of living of to-day! I long for the day when every MAN shall sit under his vine and fig-tree; when there shall be none to hurt or destroy or make afraid. Meanwhile I am living as near to that condition as I have learned how, and still have a healthy appetite for more knowledge, “the great treasures of hidden wisdom” promised us in the law.

The Children’s Home.

(Hello the facts of the following story are true. After a lapse of twenty-three years the minor details may be supplied from imagination as well as memory.)

It was an evening in the early fall; not one of those warm and balmy evenings that invite you to a seat on the lawn or a stroll in the moonlight; but a cold, rainy evening when a “little fire” to ward off the “damp” is agreeable, and one is constrained to remain indoors unless necessity calls him out.

But the weather made little difference to the inmates of a cozy cottage in Iowa—what did they care for rain or cold? In fact that state was in keeping with their feelings, for the mother of the family had just left them, left them never to return.

The husband and father was stunned by the blow—he knew, of course, she was sick—but that she would die had not entered his mind. So overcome was he that the loud grief of the children standing around the bed seemed unheard by him; unheeded it certainly was.

Three days passed—she had been laid to rest, and they were facing the problem of the future. He “could not stay there.” A letter from a brother in the West urged him to come to the mines and forget his trouble; but there were the children, five of them; who would care for them?

Of course he loved his children in a way, while she was there to care for them; but the best love was given to her, and she was gone.

“Uncle John,” who lived in another State, said he would take the eldest boy (nearly ten); his family were all girls and a boy would be “handsy about the place.”

Tom Green, who kept store in a neighboring town, would take Jim, the second boy, aged eight.

Next was Mollie, a timid little blue-eyed girl of five; Aunt Mary said she would take her—having all her family married and gone from home, she thought a child would be “nice to have around.” Eddie was a rosy, dimpled boy of three whose eyes were hardly dry since “mamma’s gone,” and Mrs. Handy (the woman who had nursed his mother) said she had a sister who had lost her own baby a year before, and would be glad to have Eddie to fill the vacant place.

Then the baby—a wee mite, scarce three weeks old—what could they do with the baby? Clearly no one wanted the responsibility of taking an infant to raise, and a foundling home in an adjacent State was suggested as the only good way of disposing of the youngest.

Think of it, mothers, whose infants are so very precious, and above price to you. Imagine nobody wanting your baby! Then Jane Blank, the daughter of a neighbor, came in. The baby’s mother had been her dearest friend, and her heart ached for the little sleeping baby. All the mother instinct, which is strong in every true woman, awoke in her, and she said, “Let me have the baby.”

Astonishment was clearly written on every face; for although nearly twenty-nine years old she was unmarried, and was it not strange for her to take a baby to raise? Her parents being willing, and no other home offering, the baby was given to Miss Blank.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
So the father was free to sell off his stock and go West. His children were given away, scattered perhaps never to see each other again, certainly only at long intervals.

And the baby, Lottie, is the only one, so far as we can learn, who was brought up in the church, and she married a Latter Day Saint minister.

Though her foster-mother was afterwards married and had a family of her own, the baby girl she took to raise, in spite of the jeers and unkind remarks of some, is a credit to her raising, and a valuable helper in the gospel work.

The sequel to all this is that after more than twenty-three years, the mothers of the church, urged by Sr. Walker, have awakened to the need of a home for our orphaned little ones, where they may be kept together, and receive the loving care their tender years demand and be taught the gospel as it was taught by Christ.

The Bible tells us, "to obey is better than sacrifice"; but why not sacrifice and obey as well? Let every man, woman, and child in the church sacrifice something, if only a necktie or handkerchief, and give the money thus saved to build a home for the children, and by so doing obey the command of our heavenly Father to provide for the orphaned little ones.

If I had permission to do so, I would like to tell you of one sister past seventy-two, who is helping to raise a patch of potatoes, working with her own hands that she may be able to help raise this fund. I guess as I have not given any name she will pardon me. Can not the rest of us do as well? From a membership of 60,000 Saints, if each one could contribute only ten cents, we would have five thousand dollars to start the enterprise. Is it not easy—on paper? Let us all work to make it easy in fact.

E. B.

Why Not?

Dear Sister: As it has been some time since I wrote for your Column, I thought a part of this Sabbath day spent in writing would be spent for good. I enjoy the letters written by the sisters, for there is always food for thought, and I wonder why more of you do not write for our church papers. God has blessed us all in many ways, and we never should neglect to praise him. Some time ago I read a letter in the Column from Sr. Braidwood on "Home training of the boys," and I enjoyed the same, and thought I would add a few thoughts along these lines. While I have not had the blessed privilege of raising children, I have always been my nature to study the disposition of children, and often have I found myself asking the question, Why is it thus and so?

In traveling around as I have done the last three years, and being in many homes, and seeing many children, also many ways of training them, I find it true that where there are several children, even in the same family, there are hardly ever two with dispositions alike. Hence the parents must take various ways of ruling the home. It is true, also, that we can not do anything without love in the home, any more than we can serve our heavenly Father without pure love. The first thing, therefore, is to try to create love in the home. Some think we can not correct or punish and have that love that we should have. But we read that the Lord chastens those whom he loves. (See Hebrews 12:6.) Why does he do this? Because he wants us to do right. So it ought to be with the family. Chastise because we love to see our dear ones do right. What can be pleasanter than to go to a well-ruled home, where there is order and the children honoring their parents as well as the command of God, obeying because they love, and not through fear of punishment?

Our heavenly Father does not want us to obey him because we fear him, but because we love him and desire to do his will. The home is only a type of that heavenly home which we all wish to enjoy when we have to give up this earthly home.

Often we hear the question, "Why is it so hard to keep the boys within bounds, as well as the girls?" That is a question hard to answer; and I have often asked why our Sunday-school does not have the attendance of boys that it should; and when we attend church, where are the young men who should be there. As a rule the young women are there, and in the Sunday-school, class after class is composed of little girls and young ladies—the very ones who want purity. Why is it more enjoyable than to see so many girls formed in their classes to study the word of God? (To see just as many boys taking the same interest?)

I have often asked myself the question, Is there the same interest taken in the boy as in the girl? and am sorry to say I have in many cases had to say, No! We often may think boys do not care to be made much of, and have dainty little things fixed for them, like the girls do; but what a mistake! And it is right here where a great mistake is made, and we find one thing that keeps the boy so far from home. How often I have seen the dear little girls start for Sunday-school dressed in their pretty little dresses, nice ribbons on their hair, fancy little hats on their heads, and I have thought the angels could not look prettier; but where were the brothers of those same little girls? Running the streets somewhere, with an old pair of overalls on. Now, the question is asked, Why could not a boy be brought up with the same love and care for his spiritual welfare as for his temporal welfare but that he will go right along with his sister.

Not long ago I attended a children's-day exercise, and what a beautiful sight! Thirty or forty girls all white, seated on the platform. Where were the boys? A few were seated down on each side of the platform. Now it should be so; for the salvation of a boy's soul is just as precious as the girl's; and we should try to hold the boys in the home just the same as the girls.

Where is the boys' room, and how is it kept? Do they have just as good as the girls? Mothers, look over your homes, and see if the same interest is taken. Do you bow and pray with your wayward boy? Is that good-night kiss given by the mother with a look of love for his welfare? Oh, yes, you have good desires for the boys; but do you neglect to think that boys' wild oats must be reap'd as well as those of girls, and the less sowed the less to harvest? A mother once said to me, speaking of her boy, "Oh, he is only a boy! If he were a girl I would do thus and so." Do not think for one moment I felt backward in telling her that her dear little boy was just as much to her as if he were a girl, and had just as grand a work in this life to perform as a girl would have, if he was only properly trained and cared for.

True, a sweet little girl tidied up is an emblem of purity, and lovely to look upon; but we must not forget that our boys are in the image of our heavenly Father, and have a grand work to perform in the world, also the church, and will be ready to step in the footsteps of their fathers and carry on this grand work which Christ has placed in their hands, if only we lovingly train them in the way that they should go. And why should we not?

As ever,

in contact with some of his "words," his admonition where he is telling the Saints what would be for their help in becoming perfect and altogether pleasing unto him—and these requirements would cause us to discard something that we crave in the way of dress, coffee, tobacco, or anything that it might be, are we not just about as quick as the outside to conclude that such scripture is out of date, has lost its meaning, or at least does not apply to us; or even if it does, "we know there is no harm in doing these little things." Where are such thoughts from? As one of the preachers said, "When we step upon easy ground, as it were, to our own nature, it is good evidence that something is out of the 'good way.'" It is such an easy matter for us to look to the world to see how to dress, and set our plans to amuse the world, court their favor in different ways; but we want them to pay the compliment by obeying "our doctrine." Well, if our doctrine does not cause us to walk straighter than they do, what better off are we than they? There used to be a people who would say, Lord, Lord, but did not.

Jesus, when he took the "cup" and blessed or gave thanks, gave it to the disciples and they drank, evidently all out of the same cup. But now the followers (professed) of that poor Nazarene, are so holy and so clean, some of them who live in the midst of Mrs. Babylon's high places, that they can not afford to sup out of the same cup, but must have a separate mug. We hope that if any of this class should come to the South, they will bring their little cup with them, so that in case the embelishments of our humble Redeemer be set before them, they would not have to use the same cup as their brother or sister in Christ. Oh, is it not good to have the world to set an example, when we are so fast and so proud that we can not follow the one Jesus gave? How desperately some people try to mis-construe the scriptures when they want their way to be God's way! But, as I said before, none have yet been able to turn him to the right or to the left. If a man is in the banking business, he will likely try to prove that God is cooperating with him in that kind of work. Because he taught that we should work out our salvation by adding to our faith (and this should be evidenced by giving no room for the adversary to accuse or cast suspicion. And this can be kept out by every man strictly keeping himself in his own place, an maintaining a proper attitude toward the opposite sex), and knowledge, temperance, patience, etc. God did not aim to teach that we should charge our brother interest at a national bank. No, but him that would borrow of thee, "turn thou not away," and loan, hoping for nothing in return. And if you loaned, without any profit for its use. Does not matter how high we rank, even if we have faith to remove mountains, and speak with the tongues of angels, and many other things, and have not "charity," we are nothing. Charity seeks not her own, much less that which belongs to the other fellow. Praying that God's kingdom will soon come, when his will can be done on earth as it is in heaven, when we shall come out from under the rule of commercialism, and dwell under the rule and reign of the holy Christ, I am, still in the faith of Christ.

McLOUD, Oklahoma, August 9, 1906.

Editors Herald: I have been a a subscriber to the Herald for about three years, but have never before written to your columns. Some ten or twelve years ago Brn. W. S. Macrae and R. M. Maloney dropped in here, built them a little brush arbor, and began to preach, and baptized three or four. All told, I think there were six or eight members. Then, this being a new country, they began to move, and left only one poor lonely German and wife to bear the name of "the only Mormons in the country," being hardly able to explain anything in English, and hearing no preaching for several years, yet through all this remaining firm believers in the restored gospel. This brother's name is Klemm. Five years ago the writer moved from Tennessee to this place and bought a little farm joining Bro. Kлемm's. I was not a member of any church at that time. Pretty soon the brother found out that I would listen to him, and read his Ensign. He visited me often and would bring an Ensign along for me to read him.

About that time Bro. W. P. Pickering found out that Bro. Kлемm lived at McLoud, and stopped in to see him, and preached a few sermons in the schoolhouse. Consequently I asked him home with me, and there I learned some more about the Latter Day Saints, and soon after went fifty miles to a reunion to be baptized. There I met Bro. Aylor, and after reunion he came to my place and baptized my wife and stepmother. Since that time we have been having preaching occasionally, and now number twelve members, and have a nice little Sunday-school.

I often think about a little spark of fire, and what it will grow to be when you fan it a little. So the Campbellites are after it with a big fan now, and the more they fan the more it will burn. We built a little brush arbor in somewhat of an out of the way place (but the best we could find), and Bro. Aylor preached for us and attended to the Master's cause the best he knew how. And the first thing we knew a Campbellite brother had a couple of his preachers in his wagon driving around over the country, hunting Bro. Aylor for a discussion. They finally succeeded in finding him, about two o'clock in the afternoon, and arrangements were made to commence that night in the schoolhouse three and one half miles from McLoud.

We met about two hundred people there the first night and the battle began—eight sessions. Mr. Searey was to defend his church the first two nights, and Bro. Aylor the next four nights, and Mr. Searey the last two nights, making four nights for Mr. Searey's proposition, and four for Bro. Aylor's. After the second night nothing would do Mr. Searey and his brethren but to move to McLoud, where they could get more hearers. We were not willing on account of having to pay for the hall, two dollars and fifty cents per night. But he said, "No need to mind about the expense, we will bear that. It won't cost you anything." And one of his brethren rose up and said it was already settled for; so we agreed to go. Now these next four nights, Bro. Aylor had to defend our church, which he did like a man, and I never heard a man abuse anything as much as Mr. Searey tried to abuse Joseph Smith and his family. He was so anxious to impress this upon the minds of the people, and darken them against the truth, that they became disgusted with him, and lots of them would get up and leave the room when he would get up to speak. He would go over to Bro. Aylor and pop his hands, and ask him all sorts of questions, when he was writing; and because Bro. A. would not answer him, would call him a religious moral coward, and would say "Here is one of the Seventy. I will kneel down by him and say, 'Now, sir, if you have got power to give the Holy Ghost, confer the Holy Ghost on me.'" He would say this at the top of his voice four or five times, also offered him money for the Holy Ghost, saying he would give it to everybody he met.

Bro. A. met all this trash with the scripture, where it says, "Thy money perish with thee," and so on. But the last two nights were on his church. When Bro. A. pulled him out and began to expose him, oh, it did hurt, especially when he read about Campbell going out on a root and dashing his candidates' heads under the water.

The last night neither Mr. Searey nor his moderator could keep his seat while Bro. A. was speaking. It was hard for Bro. A. to say much when Mr. Searey and his moderator were jumping up and down so much, and the crowd cheering Bro. A. every few minutes; but the words were right to the point, and they cut like a two-edged sword. It was right funny the way the Campbellites paid for the hall to get a good thrashing in. Consequently we have removed lots of prejudice and gained lots of good friends, so you see the more they fan that little spark the larger it gets. After the close of the debate, the congregation came up to congratulate Bro. A., telling him that he had won a Campbellite victory.

KIDDER, South Dakota, August 15, 1906.

Editors Herald: In scanning the columns of the Herald I have not noticed any items from this region for a long time, so rather from duty than any other motive I write you these few lines.

Dakota's broad fields are now covered with the golden harvest, and dotting here and there may be seen the reapers busily engaged in gathering for the winter. One unaccustomed to the change would hardly imagine the contrast of the scenes of these beautiful fields now and in six months from now. And I have wondered if the change in the harvest-field of life will not be just as great when the reaping-time is over. But how few will have sown and reaped to themselves a goodly supply of the golden grain that perisheth not, though ages come and go. The Savior said, "For the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light."—Luke 16:8. How wisely and faithfully the children of this world labor to prepare for the winter, and how carelessly and unwisely they labor for the harvest which is to give them eternal life or eternal loss.

The North Dakota reunion held at Leeds was, considering the scattered condition of the Saints of this field, well attended, and some splendid meetings were enjoyed, both preaching and prayer and testimony, and many of the Saints received both instruction and spiritual uplifting and went home better prepared to fight the gospel warfare than ever before. Brn. H. C. and H. O. Smith and J. A. Gunsolley gave some fine instruction along the line of gospel and Sunday-school work. Others also did well. Quite a number of young Saints in attendance gave evidence that the Lord's work in this Northwest is not to lack laborers when the old ones have filled their missions. So we pray the Lord may crown the labors of all with many blessings, and widen the field for greater usefulness to all.

After the reunion the writer with wife and two little boys started for Clitherall, Minnesota, there to establish our home (for a time at least) among an earnest little band of Saints, and among the beautiful lakes and groves of oak timber,—and dotted among these are the beautiful fields and pleasant homes. While procuring and locating a home of our own, we were kindly cared for at the home of Bro. Lurrette Whiting and family, and thus while enjoying the kindness and association of the Saints we felt as if we had found a little Zion, till one day a couple of Brighamite elders came to town and began to tell us and the people that we were apostates from the faith of the early Latter Day Saints. We were soon engaged in exposing Utahism and defending "the faith once delivered to the Saints." The Utah men took one evening and the writer the next, and thus we continued two evenings each, the Utah men leaving early the morning after their second evening. It was the writer's first experience in debating along that line, yet I never enjoyed better liberty in defending the truth of the Lord's work. We may say, however, that we had no malice against Utah or her people, and our only reason for entering into discussion with them was that we were not willing for them to predicate polygamy, Adam-god worship, and other false doctrines on the faith and teaching of Joseph Smith and the original church of Latter Day Saints. I am indeed thankful to our heavenly Father that he furnishes strength and evidence to vindicate the truthfulness of his work all along the line, and is bringing us onward and upward.

Editors Herald: I have been very busy since the reunion at Pilot Oak, Kentucky. I have preached to—a quite a number in new fields, so tell Bro. E. W. Nunley, of Texas, that I am not doing as he says the missionaries are doing out there. I was once like Bro. Nunley. Was always at the missionaries for spending all their time in the branches; but I have learned better now. I have learned it is the one in charge that should look after the missionaries and see where they labor. It is about all I can do now to look after C. L. If I keep him in the proper place I will have just about all I can do. Besides, I think a man that will not mind what the Lord has said about pushing out into new fields, and leaving the branches to the care of the local officers, would not mind what I would say about it. So I just get down off the fence, and shall leave that altogether to the one in charge to look after such men.

Well, the way is opening up here for work very fast, and I want to make another appeal to the local force here in the Kentucky and Tennessee District to assist all they can in branch work. The missionary as a rule who spends so much of his time in the branches claims he does so because the local force are not doing their duty. So let me say to the local officers in the Kentucky and Tennessee District, that I want to meet with you all at our conference at Oakland in October. Be sure to attend the conference, as I want to counsel with you as to the future work here in the district. The work is moving nicely here, and we should see to it that we keep pace with it. There is room for improvement all along the line. So let us labor together in love, cease to find fault one with another, and pray always lest we fall into temptation.

As ever in the faith,

C. L. SNOW.

Dear Herald: As I am one of the isolated ones I want to bear my testimony through the Herald to this glorious work. I know it is of God, and that if we are faithful in doing his will he will bless and reward us for every good deed. I want to be one of the faithful ones. I can not get to church; have heard only one Latter Day Saint sermon in five years. I am suffering with stomach trouble. The doctor said he could give me only temporary relief. I ask the prayers of the Prayer Union that the Lord will heal me, that I may be spared to see my children come into the church. I have two boys. One is married and has three little girls. I do hope that the Lord will soften his heart and enlighten his mind, and that he and his wife will come into the church and raise their little ones in the way they should. My other boy is near the kingdom, and I hope that the Lord will bless him, and that he will be baptized before long, and be a valiant soldier in the army of the Lord. Pray for my husband and me, dear Saints, that we may hold out faithful to the end.

"O for a faith that will not shrink, Thouched pressed by every foe."

DOW CITY, Iowa, August 22, 1906.

Editors Herald: On the 24th ult. I called at Coalville, Iowa, where we have a body of warm-hearted Saints, too liberal, perhaps, for their own good. I remained with them a few days and was called upon by their president, Bro. Samuel Jordison, to ordain Bro. John Jordison to the office of priest. He is evidently a very worthy young man.

Sometimes I think, even where Saints have a church-house, that a few cottage social meetings held at the homes of the aged and infirm, where both men and women, young and old, could take an active part, would prove a source of great spiritual strength to the body; they would at least encourage and help those who are not able to attend regular church services.

By request I attended a social given by the Ladies' Aid Society of Gallands Grove and spoke at eleven o'clock and at three o'clock for them in their church, though it was a busy time, and the middle of the week. I am glad to note that the real social itself was held in tents in the shade not far from the church. I hear they did quite well, as indeed they always do at Gallands Grove.

The two-day meeting at Salem on the 11th and 12th inst. was quite well attended, and all seemed to enjoy the services. Bro. Fredrick Hansen presided and Bro. D. Parish and the writer did the preaching. I learn that two were baptized by Bishop C. J. Hunt at Deloit, Iowa, on the 12th., and at the request of the president of the branch, Bro. William McKim, I baptized three at the same place on the 19th.

The Deloit and Dow City Saints have good Sunday-schools and it is encouraging indeed to see so many young people interested in the Lord's work. Forty-seven additions to the Deloit Branch within a few months indicates that the Lord and his servants and handmaids are at work for the betterment of mankind and the salvation of souls. Think of forty-seven new members having put on Christ and taken hold of the work with zeal and persevering in well doing; what a spiritual awakening there should be; what a shaking up of the-old dry bones, so to speak. I trust that their social services may be to them a feast of fat things. May the good work at Deloit and all other points continue.

My granddaughter, Velma Baker, was baptised this spring, which afforded the writer much pleasure; and I hope the little girl may live the life of a faithful Saint. On the 9th, I had the pleasure of witnessing the marriage rite nicely performed by Elder Charles Fry in the Saints' church at Omaha, Nebraska, by which my granddaughter, Miss Helen Schafer, and Bro. Turner McCosig were made one. The attendance at the services and the wedding presents indicate the high esteem in which these young people are held by their relatives, the Saints, and friends.

The crops in these parts are quite good, and so far as I have noticed farmers seem to be in good spirits. May the good Spirit continue with the Saints, that much good may be done in the name of the Lord, is the prayer of your brother and colaborer for Christ,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.
HURON, South Dakota, August 17, 1906.

Editors Herald: I wish to say to the Saints whom I met at the Nauvoo reunion, that I am still alive, both physically and spiritually, and am using every spare moment in delving into the great truths of the restored gospel. At times I get very lonely, as there are no Saints near here; but I am trying with all my mind and might to prepare myself for some work that the Master may have for me to do. There is much prejudice here to battle against; but I thank the Lord that he gives me the “sword of the Spirit” to fight with; and I am not confounded. Although I may not convince any of the truth, I hope to show them by word and deed that I am in the “straight and narrow way,” and am trying to keep therein. One of my neighbors, a man by the name of Thomas (I call him doubting Thomas), seems to take a great interest in my soul’s welfare. He loaned me a book, New Light on Mormonism. In return I let him take the Book of Mormon, and Manuscript Found. The other day he brought over The Golden Bllue by M. T. Lamb. He took home The Divinity of the Book of Mormon Proven by Archeology, and Three Bibles Compared. He claims he is seeking for light and wants to “prove all things”; but when I talk with him I find that he does not recognize the light when he sees it, and is only trying to prove to me that my faith and my church are only whims that I have accepted. I find it hard at times to have patience with a person who will not see; but the Lord is very kind to me and will lead me if I let him.

Hoping that I may meet many of the Saints again that I met at the reunion I am,

Your brother and comrade in the fight,

ERWIN E. WILLARD.

Editors Herald: I have been in this town one week, among relatives. I think I have been able to do some good, but there are very few who seem to give religion any serious thought—living just for the now seems to be the order of things. Guildford lies thirty miles southwest of London, and is a most delightful spot of perhaps thirty-five to forty thousand population. Twenty-seven years ago I had charge of the shoe department of Cable & Son, West Surry House, who still carry on the same business of dry goods, outfitters, shoes, etc. I gave them a call, but found only the old gentleman who is far advanced in years. The son was on his way to Egypt. Many changes have taken place since I was here last. The night of the 2d this town was visited with the worst storm I ever experienced; and nothing like it was ever known before—so state the papers. Heavy black clouds gathered about eight o’clock in the evening, with very vivid lightning and rumbling thunder. Most people about that time were heading for home, as the indications were for a coming storm; but no one thought it would be as terrible as it was. At half past eight large drops of rain splashed on the pavements. There was not a breath of wind, and it had been the warmest day of the season. Suddenly the wind began. No, I will not use that word, for it came as in a moment, and with it a drenching rain, and then hailstones large as marbles were hurled with mad violence against the windows, as if everything breakable would be destroyed. The awful roar of the wind and hail drowned the noise of the thunder, and the disturbance was indescribable. The water from the hills rushed in torrents through the streets and flooded cellars everywhere. Chimney-stacks were hurled to adjoining roofs, smashing them in and flooding the houses, and spoiling the household effects. Huge elm-trees were broken off and uprooted as if they had been but blades of grass. Such a scene of devastation I never saw.

In one spot on the Woodbridge road, more than forty huge trees were broken off and uprooted, tearing up with them earth which stands as a wall upon their roots sixteen feet high. On this estate it is stated more than one hundred crows or rooks were picked up dead, showing with what violence the hail fell upon them. Two young men were killed, and one woman has since passed away.

The storm lasted only about half an hour, but its peculiar features bore distinctive marks of a western cyclone. I thought amid the roar of the disturbed elements, Surely the hour of God’s judgment had come, and who should escape. I heard an old man say he never witnessed anything like it, and never expected to again. I thought, These are but the beginning of sorrow.

I leave here in a day or two to return to Hitchin and neighborhood, where my brother Tom is trying to get a chapel for me to preach in. I hope he will be successful; but “there’s many a slip,” etc.

I have put in some work while among my friends and relatives there, and my old employer is reading Bro. Joseph Luff’s Old Jerusalem Gospel sermons. I hope to do good there. I have written twice to Bro. Rushton, but have received no reply as yet. I fear there has been some delay in the mail, or I have the wrong address. I addressed them to 36 Bellbrook Grove, Harehills Lane, Leeds, the address given me by President Joseph Smith. We have had delightful weather with the exception of the storm mentioned. Warm for England, but quite comfortable for me, the glass not registering more than eighty-two degrees at any time, unless right in the heart of London. Evenings lovely and cool.

I miss the association of Saints; but have an abiding appreciation of the gospel and the wonderful work of Joseph the Seer. Thirty years ago I was looking, longing, and hungering for light, and a knowledge of God. To-day I have more than I ever expected to have in this life, of that which satisfies soul-hunger, and unfolds the realities of the great plan of redemption. Thank God for his unspeakable gift.

RICHARD BULLARD.

BREMEN, Georgia, August 16, 1906.

Editors Herald: We bade adieu to Saints at McKenzie, Alabama, and boarded the train early on morning of July 18 for above address, arriving at one o’clock in the afternoon the following day. We were soon safely housed in the comfortable home of Bro. and Sr. Freeland, one mile from the new town of Bremen. We are now domiciled in two rooms of their house to stay awhile. They treat us with every degree of kindness, and are anxious for the good people to hear the true way of salvation.

We soon had a lengthy notice in the town paper of our meetings at Bro. Freeland’s house for Saturday night and Sunday. We hold fasting and prayer Sunday morning, also Sunday-school. So far we have been able to comfortably seat all, and some seats to spare.

Bro. and Sr. Freeland were baptized last summer by Bro. Kelley. No other Saints near that we know of. The people here appear to be friendly; but not so sociable as the good Saints at McKenzie, who so freely administered to our necessities ere we took our departure from them. God bless them all, and all the good Saints in Florida, and every other place where we labored. They all treated us kindly, and showed their faith by their works.

If there are any Saints or friends living in Georgia or North or South Carolina who would like to have the old Jerusalem gospel introduced in their homes, or among their friends, please write Elder D. E. Tucker, Box 133, Bremen, Georgia, and we will try to respond.

Fraternally,

D. E. TUCKER.

Editors Herald: I have indeed been passing through severe trials the past year; but it seems I can see that they were all necessary for the accomplishment of God’s will, as I am one of those that firmly believe that when I place myself and family in God’s care, asking him to direct our footsteps, then God’s will and not mine is being carried out, no matter how strange things may seem to me.

While reading the article, "The home," on pages 773 and 774, it seemed to me that, beginning with, it was a parable, and as I considered the time at which it was given, the people to whom it was given, and the condition of the people to whom it was given, I was capable of seeing that there was nothing inconsistent in the language or the terms and judgment meted out; and, as it seems to be pretended to me, it is a parable that should be brought home and given, I

the kingdom of heaven is to be established on earth, hence Christ's prayer, thy kingdom come, thy try."

This I was with the Jews and was to be with them for a time. He knew he was to leave them and be gone from them into a far country for some time. The kingdom of heaven is to be estab-sended to me, is a parable that should be brought home and made a very pertinent issue with each individual that has a desire to be part and parcel of the people to whom it was. given, I was with the Jews and was to be with them for a time. He knew he was to leave them and be gone from them into a far country for some time. The kingdom of heaven is to be established on earth, hence Christ's prayer, thy kingdom come, thy try."

given, I

This I was with the Jews and was to be with them for a time. He knew he was to leave them and be gone from them into a far country for some time. The kingdom of heaven is to be established on earth, hence Christ's prayer, thy kingdom come, thy try."

In choosing I will say that we poor in the church must not forget that the Lord is indeed a hard man, and requires the full use of our pennies just as faithfully as he requires the rightful use of the rich man with his thousands, whether they be spiritual talents or material talents.

The article on Mr. George's book should be food for our spiritual talents, and the law of tithing and consecration should be food for material talents, with serious contemplations by rich; but more particularly the poor, who should be the sinew of the kingdom.

As one of the poor in the church, I was able to make a consecration last year that compared very favorably with tithings of many of my brethren in better circumstances and great financial means. Therefore, brethren, let us pray for one another, especially us poor in the church, that we may forget that there are any rich; and that if Zion is ever redeemed, we poor will have to do nine tenths of the redeeming, and unless we consecrate our pennies as the poor widow did, Zion will never be redeemed by this generation. We can and must do it.

A BROTHER.

DECKERVILLE, Michigan, August 22, 1906.

Dear Herald: It is nearly two months since I commenced work in the Eastern Michigan District. I was laboring with Bro. C. E. Grant, during the month of July, then we parted.
He went home with the intention of visiting his son in the Northern District, and I in company with my wife and our son David went to the Shabbona two-day meeting, where we met with many of the dear Saints and friends, many of whom we have known almost ever since we came into the church. And it seemed good to meet them, and also to form new acquaintances.
There I met Bro. J. L. Sweet, and he said he was just about ready to start out in the ministry, and wanted some one to go with him, and I could not well refuse, as Bro. Sweet has a good horse and rig, and it is a nice way to get around from place to place, especially for us old fellows.

We started at the McGregor Branch, and are working our way north into Huron County. Have had meeting every night but one since leaving home; but the weather is very warm, and people are very busy in harvest, and in many cases going to church is the last thing to think of. We feel sad when we go through places where there has been such faithful labor done, and see so many of the Saints so indifferent to the covenant they made with God. Some are trying to do all they can; and all are very kind and good to us; and I hope they will not lose their reward. But I would like to see them live worthy of greater blessings here, hence greater rewards when the Master comes.

So few of the Saints have the church papers, so they can not tell anything about the progress of the work, and do not get the instruction that often comes through the church papers, such as the epistles that are written from time to time, as that from Bro. Joseph Luff in HERALD of June 6, also the communication at the same time.

We have been trying in our weak way to impress the thoughts contained in the communication on the minds of the Saints, and the Spirit has attended our effort; also tried to get them to take church papers, and have succeeded in getting three subscriptions for the HERALD, and one for the Glad Tidings.

On Monday evening, as we were gathering for services in the little half-finished church in the St. Thomas Branch, there came an awful thunder-storm, and wind which threatened, as we thought, to tear down our little church; but the Lord protected us. But just about eighty rods east there was a large barn, full of hay and grain, struck and burned to the ground. It did seem hard to see the family cry over their loss; but these things are coming; and will the Saints, as admonished, stand in holy places? Please pray for us, dear Saints.

WM. DOWKER.

BALDKNOB, Arkansas, August 18, 1906.

Dear Herald:—We feel thankful that we have more good news to help fill your welcome pages. Brn. J. W. Jackson and Jesse Simmons arrived here the 21st of July and began a grove-meeting on the same evening. Bro. Simmons assisted Bro. J. W. with the meetings here a few days and then went to Judsonia to preach some for the rest of our little flock as they live across the river and it is inconvenient for them to meet with us. There were nine more precious souls added to our branch, five of them at Judsonia, baptized by Bro. Simmons, and four here baptized by Bro. Jackson. Nearly all were promising young people and there were several others deeply interested. Bro. W. P. Pickering will be pleased to hear that the precious seed sown by him has been watered and begins to grow. Bro. Pickering, if you see this, write us and we will give you a little history of the progress of the work here, as we feel you would be glad to hear how we are getting along, and we would all be glad to hear from you.

Now concerning the debate between Bro. Jackson and F. M. Stricklen, we claim a complete victory for the truth; but what else could we expect with the whole truth for our weapon and two humble, faithful, God-called servants to defend it? Two young ladies (Catholic in faith) said the Saints would not send out just any one to preach, meaning that we did not send out any but able men. One of them was our postmistress. The Saints are all well pleased with the Arkansas missionaries this year. Shall be very glad to have them sent back here next year.

I have been sorely afflicted with rheumatism ever since about the 25th of June. I still feel strong in the faith and determined to press on and do all that is in my power for the advancement of the truth, and I am very thankful that I did not have to miss any of the meetings. When I would wake in the morning I would be so sore and stiff I could hardly move, but in a short time after I would get up the soreness would wear off so that I could cook for ourselves and the elders, and with my husband's and Old Dan's (our mule's) assistance I managed not to miss a single time at the meetings. I earnestly ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that if it be God's will I may continue to improve until I can enjoy perfect health once more.

Your humble sister in the one faith,

BEULAH JOHNSON.

Editors Herald: I beg space through the columns of your paper to bear testimony to the divinity of this great latter-day work—the angel's message. I am one among the thousands who can bear testimony with a sure knowledge that this work is divine and can not be overthrown. The writer after being a member of this church for over eight years, after having the knowledge of this being the work of God by having things revealed to me through dreams, all of which came true, also being healed by the prayers of faith by the laying on of the hands of the elders; I say after being healed of this dreadful disease, consumption, and after receiving many other divine evidences of being the only work of God, being young in years at the time, I was led to stumble and fall by the wayside by some of the elders who represented themselves to be servants of God who afterwards proved to be impostors. I drifted with Utahism, also skepticism, but during these few years of my apostasy from the church I never was guilty of becoming associated with any of the sectarian churches. I still had a certain portion of the Spirit of God that strove with me, and I remained in good health; the healing blessings remained with me, and finally I was led by the Holy Spirit to turn from my ways. One night in a dream I saw myself reuniting with this church, even before I had any such intentions, although I was impressed all of the time that I ought to turn from my ungodly ways and get back into the fold of God again, and on the 13th of last May I was rebaptized by Bro. Sparkling in Springfield, Missouri. Was reconformed at the prayer-service of the church the following Wednesday night by Brn. J. W. Quinly and A. M. Baker. I received no new testimony of this being the work of God, but the testimony I received, and still have, is a confirmation to the former testimony received when I received my first baptism and confirmation. This testimony is that I know that I was healed by the prayer of faith from this incurable disease, consumption, when I was so far gone that my friends believed it was just a question of time to see me pass from this life to the life beyond. I could do no work; could eat but little and spit up blood. I could not sleep a night, sitting all night, but am proud to say that after being healed my health is so good that I can not only do hard work, but I have passed the strictest and closest medical examination, and passed for life insurance in three of the largest and most popular life insurance companies in the United States. I know that this is the work of God by the promises of the Spirit that the Lord would reveal his will to me in dreams. This promise still remains with me and I have avoided great dangers and difficulties by being warned of the Lord in dreams. I know that this is the work of God by the Lord blessing me temporally as well as spiritually. I know that this is the work of God because the Saints are prospering spiritually, more so than other religious bodies. I know that this is the only true church because it is the only church that has all the apostolic offices and gifts. I know that the Prophet and Seer, Joseph Smith, was an inspired prophet of God, for all his predictions have either been fulfilled or are in process of fulfillment. Israel is gathering home. The sealed book has spoken. The blind have seen and are seeing out of obscurity into the marvelous light of God. The Lord is doing a marvelous work and a wonder. The wisdom of the wise has perished, and the understanding of the prudent is being hid. Gog and Magog are being gathered together for the battle of the great day, after which the Savior of men will appear and set his foot upon Mount Olivet, and all of his people will live and reign on earth a thousand years. I ask the prayers of all the Saints everywhere, that I may so live that I will be prepared to have part in the first resurrection.

In the only true gospel fold,

QUINCY ANDERSON.

OZARK, Missouri, July 9, 1906.

Editors Herald: I have just been reading the late Herald that came to hand Monday, stating Bro. Ebeling had nervous trouble. May God bless and restore him to health again, that he may be up and at the post of duty.

I desire to see this work grow and prosper. I love to talk about this restored gospel; for, in the language of Paul, "it is the power of God unto salvation unto every one that believeth." I have been aripple living in the eleventh hour, in the last gospel dispensation. As to the time Christ will come it is not for us to say; not even the angels in heaven know the day or the hour. We have to stand trials and persecutions; but let us not mind that. The more you rub gold, the brighter it gets; and the more we are persecuted, the more we must pray for them. Jesus prayed for them that crucified him. He said, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.

One man who lives about a mile from us says the gospel has been preached to all nations, and the end has not come. If the gospel has been preached to all nations, that would make Christ's teaching false. We find in Romans 10:18 something like this: But I say, Have they not heard? yes, verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world. The apostle knows that this was not the true gospel of Christ. We notice in Matthew 24:14 something like this: And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come. The end of the nations. This is the gospel that Christ referred to. It was to be the gospel of the kingdom. Paul knew that there would be false doctrine and teaching springing up from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. This refers to anybody. There is a great responsibility upon those who preach.

The apostle Paul saw there would be a time when the people would follow after fables of men. It surprised Paul that they went so soon, but, dear Saints, when this gospel of the kingdom is preached, the end will come. There are many so-called gospels; but it was the gospel of the kingdom of God to which the Savior had reference. As it is impossible for God to lie, the end will come when the time is up.

There are, I believe, some people who will not be convinced until Christ comes in the clouds, and then they will come and ask admittance into the kingdom, and then he will say, Depart, ye never knew me. Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things I command you?

Some will say, We don't need preachers. We have Bibles to read. If Bibles to read will do, why did not the people in this country have Bibles to read when the people in the second century had reference. As it is impossible for God to lie, the time is up.

The writer feels thankful to Bro. T. J. Beatty for bringing this gospel of the kingdom into this part of the country. In fact he was the first elder that came here.

Elder J. P. Baggery was here about two or three weeks ago, and did some good preaching. He sowed good seed, and it will bring forth fruit in God's own due time.

Kentucky and Tennessee Reunion.

The district reunion was held at Filot Oak, Kentucky, from July 28 to August 5, 1906. Bro. F. A. Smith was chosen president, T. C. Kelley assistant, A. V. Clouson secretary, J. R. McLain chorister, Sr. Nola Myers and Sr. Gertie McLain organists. Thirty-four meetings were held and were well attended, both day and night, and good order was had throughout. I think the meetings did much good, for the outsiders seemed to take as much interest in them as the members did; and from the present outlook I think a number will obey the gospel there in the near future. Three were baptized during the meetings by C. L. Snow.

At the business-meeting held on the 4th, a resolution was unanimously adopted that the district hold another reunion in October, 1907, during the light of the moon. Chalediate Springs, near Paris, Henry County, Tennessee, was the place chosen to hold said reunion. The following were elected to act as committee: Scott Shupe, A. Griffin, and Ross Shupe. The preaching was done by F. A. Smith, T. C. Kelley, E. L. Henson, A. V. Clouson, J. R. McLain, and C. L. Snow. A vote of thanks was tendered to the school board for the use of the schoolhouse; also to the owner of the land on which the tent was pitched; also to the Saints and friends for their hospitality in caring for those in attendance, also to Bro. Shupe and family for the music furnished.

A. V. Clouson, Secretary.

Southwestern Oregon Reunion.

The reunion was held in a beautiful grove of myrtle-trees, at Myrtle Point, Oregon, July 28 to August 5, 1906. The interest and attendance was splendid, the district tent being crowded every evening. Elder J. C. Clapp gave a number of forceful and logical sermons, Elders E. Keeler, D. E. Stitt, and N. T. Chapman, and Priest Edgar H. Smith of the district all preached in a very acceptable manner. Prayer-meeting was held each morning of the reunion, and from two to three preaching-services daily, except on Friday and Saturday, the days set aside for the Sunday-school convention and the district conference.

A collection of twenty-six dollars and thirty-five cents was taken up for the defraying of expenses and helping the missionaries. A vote of thanks was given to Bro. and Sr. E. Keeler by the Saints of the district for their services in the past, as they are called to another field of labor, also to Bro. J. C. Clapp for his services at the reunion.

F. L. KEELER, Secretary.

Extracts from Letters.

J. E. Talley, Alden Bridge, Louisiana: "There has been very little missionary work done since 1902; as it seems that the missionaries do not like this part of the vineyard, and we can not much blame them, as the Devil keeps on a full force at all times. But knowing that this gospel is of God, and knowing it to be true, we are enabled to endure the opposition so often rises against Christ and his followers, and follow the teachings of the Savior in the fifth chapter of Matthew, to love our enemies, and do good to them that despitefully use us."

G. H. Graves, Leavenworth, Kansas: "My work is onward here. I am preaching every night on the streets of Leavenworth, Kansas."

Possible History.

A copy of the Helper, the misnamed organ of the Anti-Mormon League, had just arrived in New York.

The inhabitants were reading it with pleasure and profit; but Ananias was observed at one side weeping.

"Why do you weep?" said Sapphira. "Is it because of the inequality of justice? I, myself, fail to see what will be done to these people when you and I died for a single whopper."

"It is not that," replied Ananias. "It is the keen competition that I fear. I have been reading Mr. Neal's editorials and I am afraid that shall lose the race."

"Shall There be a Duty on Hides?"

is the title of the third document of the Congressional campaign of 1906, issued by the American Protective Tariff League. The pamphlet is a reproduction of the speech of Honorable Francis E. Walker, United States Senator from Wyoming, before the United States Senate. Send postal card request for free copy. Ask for Document No. 86. Address W. F. Wakeman, Secretary, 539 Broadway, New York.

Jack London's pen and Homer Davenport's pencil have been enlisted in the crusade against child labor conducted by the Anti Child Slavery League through the Woman's Home Companion. To the September number of this magazine the brilliant young author contributes "The apostate," a story of child labor. Herein he exposes the forces of which he is in part due to the writer's personal acquaintance with the conditions that he so vividly portrays; while the great cartoonist furnishes us "An industrial success"—two full-page line drawings, which in their rugged Almost too near the grim literal truth to be classed as satire. Further in this connection, Samuel McCune Lindsay discusses the question, "Why a national crusade against child labor?" Owen R. Lovejoy describes child slavery in Pennsylvania "in the shadow of the coal-breaker," while a series of photographs of the children released from bondage illustrates the "Practical work of the Anti Child Slavery League." The advantages to the household of "free alcohol" are set forth; there are timely articles on the preparation of pickles and condiments, fashions, rug-making, and embroidery.

In all his educational work, Doctor Brown has been peculiarly sound and trustworthy, letting practice wait upon well-con sidered strength and effort. Arriving at a position to shape the possibilities of practice. He has written and published much,—but not too much,—always with a certain clarity of style and soundness of reasoning which has been attractive and convincing. His personal qualities have made him friends everywhere, and there is every prospect that the continuity of the work of the Bureau of Education and the spirit with which this work has been carried on by Doctor Harris will be practically unbroken under the present administration. Of Special Interest to Women.

It is doubtful if any other newspaper in the United States offers so much that is of interest to women and of value in the home as does the Chicago Record-Herald. In the daily issues are to be found a daily pattern suitable for home dressmaking, the daily bill of fare, chatty society news, and Mme. Qui Vive's daily feature of answers upon beauty topics. On Monday appears "Martha's Management," devoted to household and economy topics, while on Friday reading for the whole family is always found on the editorial page. On Friday appears Doctor Withrow's comment on the Sunday-school lesson, and Sunday work will be found upon reviews of the new books. In the Sunday issue is a separate section devoted to women, containing Mme. Qui Vive's beauty page, "Hints for the Home Dressmaker" by Jeannette Hope, Marion Harland's page, Dame Cursety's "Novelties in Entertainment," society news, and many special articles of interest to women. The Sunday Magazine of the Record-Herald is full of good stories, interesting articles on timely topics, clever verse, wit, humor, and miscellaneous, with many beautiful illustrations. It has the real magazine flavor.

By INDEPENDENCE COAL MINING COMPANY

In order to develop and open up the new coal-mining interests near Independence and also make necessary preparations for homes for mine-workers, it is necessary that sufficient capital be secured within a short time. The amount sought for is very small compared with the capital of other coal-mining interests and, for various reasons, the directors of this company desire to keep the working and controlling power with the church members, if possible. The opening up of an undeveloped coal field at the edge of a densely populated community of 40,000 population is a matter of considerable consideration, as it is part of the necessities of life, with freight rates practically cut off, making this enterprise an exceptional one.

The company already has coal-mines at Napoleon, Missouri, in operation and a successful and prosperous retail business, making this a bona fide paying investment.

Money seeking investment can find no better place, and will bring the best kind of satisfaction, as it will bring good returns to the investor and results that are much sought for, also becoming unemployed, scattered, pressed-down, poor church members by placing them in a position to help themselves. The 1st acres are intended for homes for mine-workers, to be sold at a reasonable price, and we solicit the co-operation of miners to purchase stock, according to their ability.

The promoters of this company are not working for any selfish interests. There is no watered nor fictitious valued stock. The company is incorporated under the laws of the state of Missouri. Capital stock, $400,000, 6,400 shares, $100 each; amount paid up $35,000. The capital stock must be increased in the future and more needed. Payments on account may be made by bank draft. Further particulars apply to R. MAY.

The 1st acres are intended for homes for mine-workers, to be sold at a reasonable price, and we solicit the co-operation of miners to purchase stock, according to their ability.

The promoters of this company are not working for any selfish interests. There is no watered nor fictitious valued stock. The company is incorporated under the laws of the state of Missouri. Capital stock, $400,000, 6,400 shares, $100 each; amount paid up $35,000. The capital stock must be increased in the future and more needed. Payments on account may be made by bank draft. The following is from a clipping from the Stillwater Gazette:

"WOODWARD, Oklahoma, July 5.—An ancient memento of early times, or something supernatural, is puzzling people about here just now. The cause is the finding by O. F. Stead on his farm southwest of town, of a ball of brass or copper, perfectly round, weighing two pounds and containing a hollow center in which a small body or substance may be heard to rattle when shaken.

"Mr. Stead found it in his corn-field last week and numerous dents or gashes indicate it being struck by a plow point or hurled with terrific force against some opposing substance.

But whatever it may be, no one is brave enough to risk drilling into it, as it is feared to contain explosives. Its peculiar color, size, indentations, and gravity baffle every suggestion so far.

at the turning, or farthest point north. On the explanation that the earth is hollow, the needle worked just as it should have, and if it worked differently, would have been wrong.

2. The appearance of the aurora borealis, which he claims arises from one of three causes, active volcanoes in the interior of the earth, great forest or prairie fires in the interior, or to the reflection and re-reflection of the sun as it shines into the opening at one pole and is reflected out at the other. He says:

... in connection with what has been known for hundreds of years; that the surface of the earth or ocean can be, and is, reflected in the sky so correctly that whalers have long depended upon the reflection to tell when open water, ice, or land lies ahead. Men who embark upon dangerous pursuits, such as hunting seal, walrus, whale, and bear, never attempt to advance unless the conditions be favorable: that is always determined by what they see in the skies. If the sky acts as a mirror wherein can be noted the conditions of the ice, water, etc., would not a great fire, like the aurora, be reflected equally as clear? ... Suppose a hunter, accustomed for years to locating musk ox by the reflection in the skies, should see a herd of reindeer some morning in the same way, what would he do if he wanted a shot at them? Would he take his gun and start out to stalk them, or would he say: 'What a strange phenomenon! I wonder what it is!' then wind up by calling the reflection by some other name? No; he would know what it meant. The strangest thing of all is that the explorers and writers on this subject did not know what the aurora was when they saw it. ... In Bernacchi's story of his Antarctic exploration, one reads: "Owing to the great reflection in those latitudes, flames appeared to dart across the horizon, and resembled a mighty conflagration." ... "At 500 o'clock in the evening of June 24 an exceedingly grand aurora was visible," continues Bernacchi, "it was a dazzling and incomparable spectacle, and first manifested itself in the usual manner by a luminous display in the north. This, however, was only a transient phase, for the flow of streamers gradually faded away, and the whole display lost its brilliancy in about an hour, leaving a glow in the sky like the dying embers of a great fire." He then proceeds to quote from other explorers to show that the aurora is nothing more than the reflection of great fires, active volcanoes, etc.: "The Northern Lights were wonderful. However often we see this weird play of light, we never tire of gazing at it; it seems to cast a spell over both night and sense till it is impossible to tear one's self away. It begins to dawn with a pale, yellow, spectral light behind the mountain in the east, like the reflection of a fire far away. It broadens, and soon the whole of the eastern sky is one glowing mass of fire. ..." —Nansen in vol. 2, pp. 446, 447.

... an auroral display which remained continuous during the greater part of the day. It first appeared in dim patches, in the northwest about 15 degrees above the horizon, which gradually brightened and took the shape of a regular cone, which lasted for five minutes or more, while from its well-defined summit ascended luminous auroral clouds with a whirling or curling motion. These clouds emanated apparently from the summit of the cone, in the form of sharply defined, spasmodic puffs, such as are seen at times issuing from the smoke-stack of a locomotive. ... "—Greely, App. 13, November 19.

"... The best idea that I can give of its formation or movement is about like the smoke ascending and curling up from the crater of a volcano, being discharged in puffs and floating away in a luminous mass."—Greely, App. 13, November 20.

The author after making numerous quotations comments as follows:

Were it not that the aurora has been the subject of thought for our greatest minds for thousands of years, so much space would not be devoted to it. Yet it is difficult to pass by without comment such descriptions of the aurora as Greely gives in his Appendix.

Electricity is never found acting like the puffings of a stationary engine, or a burning volcano, its smoke rising and slowly drifting away.

When one attempts to give the reasons why the aurora could not be the result of electricity, they multiply so rapidly and are so convincing that it seems a waste of time to give them at all.

Before concluding the chapter on the aurora, I wish to assign one more probable reason why the latter is seen more frequently in the Arctic regions in the winter, and brighter than in summer. The sun shines through the earth from the southern opening into the interior of the earth. The rays of the sun strike the ice, snow, and frost, and act as a mammoth kaleidoscope, re-reflecting the sun's rays many times, and sending forth a most dazzling effect. That the reflection from the sun can appear only in winter, because summer at one pole is winter at the other. It is the only season, therefore, when the sun shines directly into the opening at the south pole, and this condition would apply only when the interior of the earth was free from clouds, ... magnetic pole, thus showing that the opening to the southern entrance to the interior of the earth is fifteen hundred miles in diameter, while it is only one thousand miles at the north pole. That would make the sun's rays more powerful at the north than at the south. To illustrate the point, take a tin horn, and hold the big end to an electric light, then turn the little end to the light. The difference will be observed very quickly.

3. The fact that the explorers so often found rock, gravel, sand, and coal on the ice. No possible way for it to get there except by volcanic force. No volcanoes on the outside of the earth from which they could come, hence they must come from the interior. He likewise explains the great numbers of meteors and "shooting stars" seen by explorers to be the rocks thrown out by volcanoes from the interior of the earth. The explorers found these rocks in pools of water, which they explained must have been caused by the drawing of heat from the sun; but Mr. Reed argues that since the sun had not shone for months, it is more than probable that the rocks were hot, since they came from a volcano in the interior, and thus caused the pool of water.

4. The great amount of volcanic dust composed of carbon and iron, which Nansen found so annoying that he exclaimed: "The years are passing here, and what do they bring? Nothing but dust, dust, dust, which the first wind drives away." "Let us go home; what have we to remain here for? Nothing but dust, dust, dust." Where could this dust come from except from the interior of the earth? No volcanoes on the outside in that region.

5. Another evidence was the open water found at the farthest point north in the Arctic regions, and the farthest point south in the Antarctic. After passing a certain point, the explorers found the climate getting milder as they neared the poles, and vegetable and animal life more abundant. Nansen sailed fifteen days in that northern sea, supposedly straight north, at such a rate of speed as should have taken him 1,200 miles past the pole, and yet never reached it. How far into the interior did he go? The water was so warm that Nansen began to think he had passed the pole and was in the region of the mouth of the Lena River. He said on page 227: "Saturday, September 16.—We are keeping a northwesterly course (by compass) through open water, and have got pretty well north but see no ice, and the air is dark to the northward. Mild weather and water comparatively warm, as high as 35 degrees Fahr." On page 228 he said: "We might have been hundreds of miles away in a more southerly the interior of the earth. The same as the ducks and geese of our lands migrate north in summer, but go south in winter.

6. Musk ox and great flocks of birds abound in arctic regions in the summer months. Where do they go in winter? Not south. They must go into the interior of the earth. Mr. Reed concludes that it must have come from the interior of the earth. Nansen thought that the driftwood must have come clear across the open polar sea from Siberia. Why, then, could he not sail across to Siberia?
9. Evidences of previous human occupancy was discovered far north. Abandoned slate houses, in which were found combs of walrus ivory, fish-hooks, bone needles, and a number of worked articles of bone and wood, the use of which was unknown to the Eskimo guide. The huts seemed to have been occupied about two years. Whence did they come, and where did they go? The interior of the earth, possibly.

10. Colored snow covering vast areas, sometimes red, green, or yellow, and sometimes black. The black was found to be caused by carbon and iron. The red, green, and yellow were found to be caused by vegetable matter, which was believed to be the pollen of plants. Where did these plants grow? It would require millions of acres of flowers to so color such vast quantities of snow. Did it come from vast fields inside the earth? If not, where did it come from?

We have but briefly sketched the evidences advanced by Mr. Reed in support of his theory. His explanation of the formation of icebergs and tidal waves are also made to support his views. And taking into consideration the fact that no place has been found on earth where icebergs can form, or, so far as is known, where they have ever formed, there is room for his theory that they are formed at the mouths of great rivers coming from the interior of the earth, which have not yet been discovered. Glaciers are formed by falling snow which accumulates through the centuries and forms by its weight a great ice river. But at the foot of the glacier the snow or ice passes away in water, not in icebergs.

While Mr. Reed’s theory is only a theory as yet, it is one that is entirely within the range of possibilities, and one which doubtless lies within the power of man to demonstrate.

Some may question the propriety of taking up space for a theory. To this we say that we do not urge it as a part of the gospel, till proved true. The gospel of course embraces all truth. And if this theory proves to be a true one, a consideration of its possibilities will prepare us for its acceptance. And so far as actual demonstration is concerned, we have as much ground for believing that the earth is hollow, as Mr Reed claims, as we have for believing that it is solid at the poles—although the latter is generally accepted without demonstration, and is taught as a scientific fact.

Columbus would never have proved the earth to be round, if he had not first formed a theory in regard to its shape by studying and observing certain things which could be explained only upon the hypothesis that the earth was round. So it may be in this instance.

The demonstration of this theory will certainly be of interest to all Latter Day Saints, because if found to be true it greatly extends the possibilities of the fulfillment of scripture. For instance, the prophecies in reference to the lost tribes of Israel. Some have already begun to doubt the possibility of their fulfillment, at least in the way that it has been advocated they will be fulfilled. They have argued that the explorers have reached such extreme northern latitudes, and found no habitable land, no place where a nation could exist, and have narrowed down the unexplored area to such small proportions, according to the usually accepted theory, that it is not possible that within the Arctic Circle can be found the home of the lost tribes. Other countries are known, and the lost tribes can not be located. And so some have given up hope that they will ever be found in a new land or that they exist as tribes.

But what do the prophecies say? On page 106 of the Book of Mormon, small edition, the prophet Nephi says:

For behold, I shall speak unto the Jews, and they shall write it: and I shall speak unto the Nephites, and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto the other tribes of the house of Israel, which I have led away, and they shall write it; and I shall also speak unto all nations of the earth, and they shall write it. And it shall come to pass that the Jews shall have the words of the Nephites, and the Nephites shall have the words of the Jews: and the Nephites and the Jews shall have the words of the lost tribes of Israel: and the lost tribes of Israel shall have the words of the Nephites and the Jews.

The words of the Nephites we understand to be the Book of Mormon. The words of the Jews we understand to be the Bible, or New Testament. The words of the lost tribes have not come to our knowledge yet. Where are they, and the people who have written them? Not in any known land. They have been led away, we are told. Is it not possible that they inhabit the interior of the earth? If birds and animals may migrate to the interior, as Mr. Reed holds that they do, if the farther the explorers go into the interior the more abundant life they find, and the milder the climate, is it not possible that a human race could also exist there? If the lost tribes are not there, where are they? Well, at any rate they are lost. With the thought in mind of their possibly living there, Isaiah 43:6 is significant, “I will say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back: bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth.” Also Doctrine and Covenants 108:6:

And they who are in the north countries shall come in remembrance before the Lord, and their prophets shall hear his voice, and shall no longer stay themselves, and they shall smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down at their presence. And an highway shall be cast up in the midst of the great deep. And they shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim my servants. And the boundaries of the everlasting hills shall tremble at their presence. And then shall they fall down and be crowned with glory, even in Zion, by the hands of the servants of the Lord, even the children of Ephraim; and they shall be filled with songs of everlasting joy. Behold, this is the blessing of the everlasting God upon the tribes of Israel, and the richer blessing upon the head of Ephraim.
rain and his fellows. And they also of the tribe of Judah, after their pain, shall be sanctified in holiness before the Lord to dwell in his presence day and night for ever and ever.

The tribes of Israel are to come from a north country, a land of ice—or through it at least. They will come on a highway cast up in the midst of the great deep. This is speaking of the tribes of Israel, separate and apart from Judah. Some have said it may mean the Jews coming from Russia, a land north of Jerusalem; but that is certainly untenable. The Jews are to be gathered back to Jerusalem. The tribes of Israel are to come to the children of Ephraim in Zion and by them be crowned with glory in Zion.

We have not presented this for acceptance any farther than it shall prove to be true. But as we said before, it greatly widens the possibilities of the fulfillment of prophecy. We believe it will be appreciated by some, who, like us, may be more interested in things pertaining to the globe on which we dwell than in some dark or light body several hundred thousand billion trillions of miles away in space—so far that were we to travel with the speed of a bullet from a gun an eternity would hardly suffice to get us there and back again. We do not even know that we would care to take the journey,—at least not until we had learned all we could about this earth and its mysteries.

But whether the earth be hollow or not; whether the lost tribes be inside the earth or on the outside, we need not doubt that all the Lord has spoken will be fulfilled. And the main question with us should be, What are we as Ephraim doing to prepare for the reception of the lost tribes, what are we doing to make ourselves worthy to receive the “richer blessings” promised Ephraim and his fellows, and to be accounted servants of the Lord sufficiently endowed to crown with glory the people of the north who “shall come in remembrance before the Lord”? MISSOURI A STATE OF NATURAL RESOURCES.

The following editorial report taken from the Kansas City Times for August 28, shows Missouri to be a State of wonderful natural resources:

It has often been said that a wall could be built around Missouri so as to imprison all of the inhabitants and that all would live as well and luxuriously as now. It remained for the State Labor Bureau to prove that such is really the case.

The 1906 report of this department shows that the farmers of Missouri raise more than enough of all the necessary food-stuffs to feed the inhabitants, and also a large variety of commodities which are classed as luxuries.

Enough wood is clipped and enough cotton raised to furnish all the necessary clothing, and enough hides and pelts sent to the market for shoes and all other leather goods. For real cold weather the game of the State annually supplies enough fur for muffts, gloves, and heavy wraps, with some to spare for fur rugs and other similar house furnishings.

The forestry products are sufficient to supply the demand for everything in the way of lumber, including tar for roofs and woodenware for the kitchen. The southeast counties can supply enough cottonwood and willow for paper for the printers and all others needing this article.

TRACES OF GOLD AND SILVER, TOO.

The supply of coal is almost inexhaustible, and the same can be said of zinc, iron, lead, and other minerals. There are traces of gold and silver in the State, and every variety of stone is found. Lime and cement are turned out yearly in immense quantities and the material which forms these commodities will last for half a century, if not longer.

Every vegetable, root, and herb needed in compounding ordinary drugs can be and is grown here. Sufficient tobacco is raised to supply the demand for smoking and chewing, and for those who who want a pipe there is the famous “Missouri meerschaum,” made from corn-cobs.

Many do not know that alfalfa is raised in the State, but there is an abundance of it. According to the statisticians, Nolen and Edmonston, one county, Pemiscot, alone in 1906 shipped out 2,000 tons, which sold for $21,000, and it kept enough at home to last until the next crop.

EVEN POP-CORN IS ABUNDANT.

Pop-corn is grown plentifully, and more than supplies the demand of the State. The surplus in 1905 was 86,249 pounds, which sold for $1,264.

The minerals of the State and the clay, kaolin, barytes, and tripoli supply everything needed for brick, pottery, and paint. And there is cobalt to color fancy glass and chinaware.

Pearls found in the fresh water clams of the upper Missouri are in great demand and often bring fancy prices. Green County supplies all the wood needed for lead pencils. There is wine and natural mineral water to meet all the demands, and terrapins, frogs, turtles, and crawfish for those who demand something out of the ordinary in their diets.

Silk worms are being experimented with in Mississippi and Bollinger Counties, with more than an even chance of success, as mulberry-trees grow there in abundance.

CELIBACY OF ROMAN CATHOLICISM. AND POLYGAMY OF SOME PROTESTANT CHURCHES.

Generally, a downright fact may be told in a plain way and we want downright facts at the present more than anything else.—Ruskin.

In preparing an article on the above subjects for the readers of the HERALD, we hope to present some evidences of their great evils which may be used to expose their teaching and practice. While presenting the dark and debasing doctrine of those so-called Christian churches, we shall give the God-ordained law of marriage, which is plain, comprehensive, and corrective. That blessed law is taught by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and if heeded it will rectify the soul-destroying principles of celibacy and polygamy.

CELIBACY OF CATHOLICISM.

This great evil is upheld in The Question Box, a standard book of the Catholic Church, by Reverend B. L. Conway of the Paulist Fathers, with preface by Cardinal Gibbons. Weexcerpt the following, which is a glaring misrepresentation of the teaching of Christ on the law of marriage:

MEN HOLDING PRIESTHOOD NOT TO MARRY:

Celibacy originated by Christ’s appointment, and flows naturally out of the Christian sense of the dignity of the priesthood; and voluntarily entered upon in apostolic times, it became the law for the Western church [Roman Catholic] in the beginning of the fourth century.—Page 491.

Until the fourth century, there was no strict law enforcing celibacy, and therefore many married men received orders.—Page 494.

Celibacy is a question of discipline, not of dogma, so that the Eastern churches that are united to Rome—for instance, the Maronites—are still permitted a married clergy.—Page 497.

What an admission! What a contradiction and exposition is seen in the above! The very elasticity of their so-called law of celibacy is proof of their insincerity in it. They admit that the Maronites “are still permitted a married clergy,” but the ministers in the Western church are denied such favors. The poet may have had the Paulist (?) Fathers (?) in mind when he wrote:

Who practice [teach] wholly to deceive.”

The popes not only forbid many of their ministers from marrying, but the heartless priests persuade thousands of innocent women to become “nuns” or “sisters,” thereby robbing them, by false covenants, of their God-given rights. In order to bolster up their unscriptural doctrine of celibacy, the following is found in The Question Box:

WAS THE APOSTLE PETER MARRIED?

He undoubtedly was, yet tradition declares that he did not live with his wife after the divine call . . . ; the words of St. Peter to Christ are plain: “Behold we have left all things and have followed thee.” [Douay Bible.]—Pages 492, 493.

Every true husband and every devoted wife in the Catholic Church ought to resent such a malicious misrepresentation of the life-work of St. Peter. (See Mark 10:1-31). Every student of history knows that under the guise of Christianity, the world has suffered untold misery from the teaching and practice of wicked men. First in line are the popes of Rome, and second, Brigham Young of Salt Lake City, who was the sole author of plural marriage in America, and who counseled his men to marry all the wives they could support. Here is contrasted two great extremes—Catholicism with her celibacy, and Brighamism with their polygamy. Both wrong.

The blessed message from heaven on the marriage question is, “And the Lord God said, It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him an help meet for him.”—Genesis 2:18.

Jesus said: “But from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female. For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife; and they twain shall be one flesh; so then they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.”—Mark 10:6-9.

The foregoing scripture testifies against the man-made doctrines of Catholicism and Brighamism.

The evils of Catholicism continued to multiply and that, too, without seeming restraint. Of the gross evils, no doctrine met with a heartier reception by that church than the selling of indulgences, which doctrine gave license to her followers to indulge in the greatest crimes known in the catalogue of crimes.

According to a book called The Tax of the Sacred Roman Chancery, specific sums were levied for the pardon of such horrible offences as “robbing,” “murdering,” “defiling a virgin,” “lying with a sister, mother, etc.,” “keeping a concubine.” (Buck’s Theological Dictionary, p. 191.)

John Tetzel was the champion salesman. History says, “in 1507, he [John Tetzel] gained in two days at Freyberg 2,000 florins . . . . No means came amiss to him to fill his coffers. Lifting up his voice and giving loose to a coarse volubility, he offered his indulgences to all comers, and excelled any salesman at a fair in recommending his merchandise. As soon as the cross was elevated with the pope’s arms suspended upon it, Tetzel ascended the pulpit, and, with a bold tone, began, in the presence of the crowd whom the ceremony had drawn to the sacred spot, to extalt the efficacy of indulgences . . . . ‘Draw near,’ said Tetzel, and I will give you letters, duly sealed, by which even the sins you shall hereafter desire to commit shall be all forgiven you. I would not exchange my privileges for those of Saint Peter in heaven, for I have saved more souls with my indulgences than he with his sermons. There is no... sin so great that the indulgence can not remit it, . . .
But more than all this: indulgences save not the living alone, they also save the dead. Ye priests, ye nobles, ye tradesmen, ye wives, ye maidens, and ye young men hearken to your departed parents and friends, who cry to you from the bottomless abyss: "We are enduring horrible torment! a small alms would deliver us;—you can give it, and you will not!" . . .

The very moment," continued Tetzel, "that the money clinks against the bottom of the chest, the soul escapes from purgatory, and flies free to heaven." (History of the Great Reformation by D'Aubigné, p. 68.)

That prominent Catholic writer, Reverend Conway, has put a very dark cloud of suspicion on the principle of indulgences, praying for the dead, the merits of the mass, etc., in his book, The Question Box, with preface by Cardinal Gibbons.

Of purgatory and praying for the dead the author says:

The word Purgatory is not found in the Bible; . . . The strongest argument for the existence of Purgatory and the practice of praying for the dead is the universal and constant witness of divine tradition as voiced in the writings of the Fathers.—Pages 562, 563.

Of mass and its merits the same writer says:

We do not pretend to know how far God applies the infinite merits of the sacrifice of the Mass to either the living or the dead.—Page 454.

Query: Catholic teachers having admitted that there is no Bible proof for their purgatory, praying for the dead, and "do not pretend to know how far God applies the infinite merits of the sacrifice of the Mass to either the living or the dead," where does the benefit of their indulgences come in? Certainly not to the living or the dead, but to the hireling priests only.

In a standard Catholic book, The Faith of Our Fathers, by Reverend James Cardinal Gibbons, the author says: "Pope Leo X determined [in the sixteenth century] to bring to completion the magnificent church of St. Peter [at Rome] . . . the grand cathedral." If Mr. Gibbons could have told the amount of wealth furnished that pope by John Tetzel and other faithful indulgence sellers, towards the building of that "grand cathedral," it would be an interesting chapter. While there may be some devout Catholics who hold that their church does not teach nor practice the doctrine of selling indulgences, yet the facts are that visitors to Rome, Italy, find inscriptions in Latin on their church-buildings, which when translated into English read: "Full Perpetual Indulgences Daily for the Living and the Dead."

The reader will find an able article by Elder R. C. Evans on some of the evils of Catholicism and Protestantism, entitled "The mother of harlots and her daughters," in the Saints' Herald for April 9 and 16, 1902.

THE LUTHERAN CHURCH.

Martin Luther was an Augustine monk. He presented the transfer of the sale of indulgences from the Augustine Friars to the order of the Dominicans. The Pope's ministers having transferred this employment, supposing that they had found out illicit methods of secreting the money. Pope Leo X wished the money to build St. Peter's Cathedral at Rome. Luther began to show his indignation by preaching against their efficacy. —Goldsmith's History of England, SAINTS' HERALD, April 9, 1902.

Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, quotes Bossuet in Variations, volume I, as follows:

Luther and his colleagues, Melanchthon and Bucer, permitted Philip, of Landgrave of Hesse, to have two wives at the same time.—The Faith of Our Fathers, p. 473.

The Landgrave had in mind a published sermon of Luther, 1527, in which he said: "It is not forbidden that a man should have more than one wife. I could not forbid it to-day. But I would not advise it."

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

Of John Wesley, the following is quoted from A History of the United States by Willey, published in 1830 in New York:

He was accused of diverting the people from labor (while laboring as a missionary at Savannah, Georgia) of fomenting divisions, of claiming high and unwarranted ecclesiastical authority. His conduct towards a niece of one of the principal settlers (a Miss Williams) was highly resented by her friends. Thirteen indictments for alleged offences were found against him; but before the time of trial he returned to England (left under cover of his friends at night), and there for many years pursued a successful and distinguished career of piety and usefulness.—Presidency and Priesthood, pp. 233, 274.

On the marriage question we have an interesting item to present from Doctor N. J. Plumb, who was a prominent representative of the Methodist Episcopal Church at their general conference, held at Omaha, Nebraska, in May, 1892. He petitioned the great assembly to sanction polygamy in the church in all countries where the laws of the land permit it. The London Advertiser, of May 12, 1892, says:

N. J. Plumb, of Foo Chow, presented a resolution, asking that in countries which permitted a plurality of wives the marriage tie need not be dissolved in order to enter the church; also, that a bishop be required to reside in China. Both referred.

The conference denied the petition for polygamy, yet the noted representative favored his district by asking for it. Will the request be repeated? Time will tell.

Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Baptists, and Congregationalists sanctioned polygamy by passing resolutions at a general conference of the Bengal Protestant Missionaries held at Calcutta, India, September, 1855.

The Baptists had eighteen missionaries (we omit giving their names) at the conference, the Episcopalians eleven, the Presbyterians eight, the Congregationalists four, the Kirk of Scotland four, the Cathedral Mission one, making a total of forty-six.
Of this celebrated meeting Reverend James L. Barton, D. D., Boston, wrote:

A report of this conference was published on the Baptist press of Calcutta, the same year. It is out of print. The report gives copies of papers that were presented.

In order to get a copy of the resolutions adopted by them favoring polygamy, we wrote to the Library of Congress, Washington, and secured the following:

The Calcutta Missionary Conference, consisting of the missionaries in that city and its vicinity, after frequent consultations and much consideration on the subject of polygamy as it exists in India, were unanimous in the following opinions:—“1. It is in accordance with the spirit of the Bible and the practice of the Protestant Church to consider the state as the proper fountain of legislation in all civil questions affecting marriage and divorce.

“2. The Bible being the true standard of morals, ought to be consulted in everything which it contains on the subjects of marriage and divorce, and nothing determined contrary to its general principles. . . .

“5. If a convert before becoming a Christian has married more wives than one, in accordance with the practice of the Jewish and primitive Christian churches, he shall be permitted to keep them all; but such a person is not eligible to any office in the church. In no other case is polygamy to be tolerated among Christians.”—Allen’s India, Ancient and Modern, pp. 601, 602, published 1856.

Listen! “After much consideration on the subject of polygamy as it exists in India” they voted unanimously in favor of the foregoing resolutions befriending it.

If the following extract from the Fergus, Canada, News-Record, March 16, 1899, represents the Presbyterians correctly, they are still standing by the ruling of the Calcutta conference:

PITTSBURG, Pennsylvania, May 27.—The last day’s session of the Presbyterian General Assembly opened this morning with a crowded docket. An overture from the synod of India, asking for a reply to the memorial on the subject of baptizing polygamous converts, was considered. The Mohammedan was admitted to the church and he was allowed to retain both wives and house. . . . Doctor Morrison representing the synod trial cases and special legislation, held that the recognition of polygamous marriage by the church in India was an absolute necessity; “any other rule,” said he, “would rule David out of the church.”—SAINTS’ HERALD, May 16, 1906.

We now present Reverend Solomon Spalding, a devout Presbyterian (claimed by his friends to have been a graduate of Dartmouth College) who advocated polygamy in his “famous” work, Manuscript Found. Listen to his direction:

Let thy citizens be numbered once in two years, and if the young women who are fit for marriage are more numerous than the young men, then wealthy men who are young and who have but one wife shall have the privilege, . . . to marry another until the number of the single young women and the single young men are made equal.

The writings of Reverend Spalding are lodged in the Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, and the Protestant ministers of Amity, Pennsylvania, have erected a monument, at the latter place, to his memory.

Some prominent Congregational ministers are still sanctioning plural marriage as is evidenced from the following extract from India and Christian Opportunity, a book published in 1904, the author of which is Harlan P. Beach, M. A., F. R. G. S., Educational Secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions. Treating on the general subject of “Problems connected with new converts,” the author on page 222 says:

Polygamy: One difficulty in the way of receiving a professed convert, though affecting only a small percentage of candidates, is a most perplexing one; it is that of applicants who have more than one wife. As Hindoo or Mohammedan they have entered in good faith into marriage contracts with these wives, and if a man puts away all but one, what provision shall be made for the rejected, and on what principle shall he decide as to the one to be retained? While it is a question easily answered in missionary society councils at home, it is a more serious problem at the front. Some good missionaries hold that where the husbond is living the Christian life in all sincerity, it is better to receive into the church such a candidate—though not eligible to any church office—than to require him to give up all but one wife and thus brand with illegitimacy his children by them, as well as occasion the wives so put away endless reproach and embarrasments.”

This far-famed preacher and instructor of young ministers for foreign missions calls those who defend polygamy in India “good missionaries,” and those who practice that soul-destroying doctrine “living the Christian life.” Will the poor heathen ever be lifted heavenward while their so-called Christian teachers continue to make such leagues with Satan? No, never.

We now present John P. Jones, D. D., also a Congregationalist, of India, A. B. O. F. M., author of India’s Problem, Krichna or Christ, which was published in 1903. The author in dealing with the question of polygamy says, on pages 239 and 230:

In the consideration of the problem many things must be kept in mind. None more important than the claims to a cordinal source from the church of any man who, in true faith and Christian earnestness, seeks admission. If it be demanded of the man that he put away all but one of those wives taken in heathenism, then we ask whether it is Christian, or even just, to cast away one to whom he was solemnly and religiously pledged, according to the laws of the land, and with whom he has begotten children? And if he is to put away one or more of his wives, which one shall it be? . . . It is not easy—on Chris­tian grounds—to decide such a problem as this, nor is it very Christian to put a ban upon any woman who—in accordance with their religion and their country’s law—has formed this sacred alliance with a man and has lived with him for years. Nor can it be right to brand with illegitimacy the children born of such a wedlock.

I would not allow such persons, received into the Christian Church, to become officers of the church. But I can not see why there may not be an humble place in the church of God for such and their families.

We only give space for the mentioning of Charles T. Russell, of Millennial Dawn fame, and the self-styled Elijah, John Alexander Dowie, who are both being convicted of advocating polygamy (see SAINTS’ HERALD, May 9 and July 18, 1906.)

Take courage, dear reader, for there has been given to this sin-cursed earth plain and holy laws which not only correct the long-cherished evil—celibacy of Roman Catholicism—but also declare against that dark and degrading doctrine of polygamy.

The great need of the blessed laws we have promised to give are emphasized in a letter to the writer, July 11, 1905, by Reverend James L. Barton, Congregational, secretary of American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Boston. We extract the following from his communication referring to polygamy. He said:

There is no question, I think, which has been more widely discussed by missionaries in China and India than this. It is a question which they are not able to settle to their own satisfaction. There are so many things to be said upon both and all sides, that it is hard to settle it and be sure that it is settled right. . . . It is a pretty hard question, and one which missionaries pray about more than almost any other, for enlightenment.

While Doctor Barton denounces, in his letter, the practice of plural marriage in strong terms, he freely admits that their missionaries are not able to correct the evil and give the new converts to their religion as plain and positive a scriptural law favoring monogamy as they would like to do.

We take pride in assuring the Doctor that when the Protestant missionaries get the "enlightenment" he says they are praying for, they will be directed to the divine teaching found in the Book of Mormon, commanding the doctrine of

ONLY ONE WIFE.

Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord, . . . Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord; for there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none. For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women.—Book of Jacob, chapter 2.

The Lord, in 1831, said to the church through Joseph Smith:

Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else.

Whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.—Doctrines and Covenants, sections 42 and 49.

The foregoing God-ordained instruction on marriage is so plain that Catholics and all others who have favored the evils of celibacy are counseled that "it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh"; and Protestants, Jews, and heathens who have sanctioned polygamy should learn that "there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."

This great and glorious gospel light will in time be "preached to every nation" (Revelation 14: 6, 7), which work was commenced April 6, 1830, when the church was organized by direction of the Lord; and that work is being carried forward by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

The religious world must be converted to the pure and holy laws this church of Latter Day Saints teaches before it will be in harmony with the statutes of their Creator. Take courage, dear fellow workers; cry aloud and spare not; for the self-righteous people with their boasted light have so far perverted the holy teachings of the blessed Redeemer that it is necessary for their salvation that they be properly instructed; and this church has been intrusted with the coveted panacea which will cure all religious disorders.

May the glorious time be hastened when darkened India, China, Spain, etc., can have the great X-ray light—the pure gospel—contrasted with the tallow dip of Catholicism and sectarianism.

Now, dear reader, if you are not a member of the true church of Latter Day Saints, we advise you to write to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, for a catalogue of their books, tracts, papers, etc., which give proper instruction on doctrinal and historical questions. Their publications are indispensable helps to all seekers after gospel truths.

THE COMING OF THE LORD.

In John 14:1–3 we have a very definite statement from the Lord himself as to what we should believe, also that he was going away. He also tells us his object in going, which we find was to prepare a place for his followers. And he has promised to come again and receive us to himself, that where he is we may be also. How plainly he puts it! It seems impossible to be mistaken as to its meaning; and the assurance he gives us in the beginning of the first verse: "Let not your heart be troubled"; that is, do not worry, no matter what others may say. I know they will try to discourage you, and will say, Where is the sign of his coming? but you believe in God; believe also in me.

Now to make this so we may all grasp its full significance, we will suppose a case of this kind: Here is a man that through no fault of his own has been unable to accomplish that which he wishes, and that which he realizes he is capable of in the place he is located, as it is impossible for him to gain the confidence of his fellow man. And so he says to the dear ones that are dependent upon him, Now, dear ones, do not be discouraged or troubled on account of the action I am about to take; for it is necessary for me to go away, as I am confident that if I go, I can prepare a place for you so far superior to anything we can ever hope for here, that you will be well repaid for the discomforts you may be called upon to suffer on account of our temporary separation. So let not your hearts be troubled; you believe in God, believe also in me, because I know I have his divine favor; hence failure is impossible. Now rest assured, dear ones, that if I go away, I will come again, that where I am ye may be also.

Now, remember there is no set time for the return, but be sure it will not be delayed longer than is absolutely necessary. Now what about those that are left behind? Do you think they, after a short time, will begin to say to one another: Oh, well, he did not mean that he would really come back to us while we live; but should we die, why of course he would come then. And if they did say so, what consolation do you think they could draw to themselves from such a statement? Would it not show on the face of it that they did not believe him after all that he had said and done to convince them that he would return? And what about him who is away—how do you think he would feel should he hear of the construction they had placed upon his plain statement? Do you not think he would feel terribly hurt to say the least? And yet this is practically the condition of a large majority of those that call themselves his followers at the present time, in spite of all that he has said; and we are told that his word is truth.

But what about these that do believe he will return, as stated? What position do they occupy? Why, they scan every letter of his carefully, to see what he himself says in regard to it. And at last they find one wherein he says that when the leaves appear on trees, and the early flowers bloom, he will return. Do you see how anxiously they watch for the signs that he has spoken of? And long before the first bud shows itself, they have everything prepared for his coming. Not a corner of the old house but that has been thoroughly overhauled. No unsightly places are allowed to remain. Everything is cleaned up, and in its right place, after which they begin to watch for him who has promised to come. Never before was there such a looking for the signs of spring. Ask them why they look so anxiously for the evidence of spring, and they will tell you the story of the One who has promised to come again; and he said that when you see these things come to pass, why, know that the time is nigh, even at the door; and although you extend to them an invitation to attend a grand wedding, and they may have invitations to dinners and parties for months to come (see Matthew 24:36, 39), yet they are joyfully declined as their only pleasure now is in watching for his appearing.

"Yes, I know; but you could see him just as well from there as any place, or they could let you know, and it would be all right anyway," they tell you. But the watching and waiting ones will tell you they have seen in one of his letters that there is a good deal of mystery in regard to how long he will stay when he comes, and so that you may be sure of seeing him when he comes you prefer to give up the so-called pleasures, and continue to watch. (See 1 Corinthians 15:51, 52.)

Now, friends, to which of these two classes do you belong? Are you of those happy ones that are looking with joyful expectancy for his appearing, or are you of those that think his coming means at death? If you belong to this class, please give me some passage out of his word, wherein he has hidden us to prepare for death; for I have to admit I have failed to find any such teaching. But on the contrary I find it abounding in passages pertaining to life, and that more abundantly. We also find he has left us instructions as to the position he now occupies, as well as the way we are to see him return (see Matthew 26:64), confirmed by his angels to those that watched his ascension (see Acts 1:9-11). Here we find he was visible only to those that were looking steadfastly toward heaven. We are also told he shall come in like manner. This being true, it is very evident he will be seen only by those that are looking for him. Therefore we ought to be continually on the watch, if we are indeed his believing ones.

In 1 Thessalonians 4:13-18 we have an account of those that shall see him, as well as the salutation he will extend to his loved ones. It is impossible for him to restrain himself till he meets with them; but seeing them long before they see him, he gives a shout to attract their attention. Friends, can you imagine the thrill of pleasure and great joy that runs through every one that is looking for his appearing? Yes, at that shout do you wonder that those that had died in this blessed hope should also hear and arise from their graves, so that they may be for ever with the Lord? The apostle Paul, realizing the grandeur of this glorious promise, adds the following: "Wherefore comfort one another with these words." Yes, indeed, there is comfort in these words for true believers always. To be "for ever with the Lord" is a promise that should be incentive enough to cause each one of us to make greater efforts than we have ever put forth before.

But some one says, "I read in the fourteenth verse of Jude that he is coming with his saints. You have spoken of his coming for his Saints. Do you mean to say there are two comings referred to here?" No, friends, I do not say so; neither do I understand it as such. In the first place I find he meets his saints in the air. They are then together for a while; and it appears a very reasonable proposition, too, as we are told they are to reign with him in righteousness. We can readily see how necessary it would be for them to receive special instruction on this line.

Again, we have the promise that his people are to be hid away while the indignation be overpast, or in other words, the day of tribulation, or the great and terrible day of the Lord, after which Jude 14 can be understood when verse 15 is added to it. We here see how he has cared for his own during this awful time, and he now returns with these to carry out his judgments upon the ungodly and those that are continually talking against him.

This brings us to the point where we should know just how we each one of us stand; and whether we are truly of those that are watching for his appearing. I can say with Paul, in Thessalonians 5:4-6, "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness, therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober." And then he says, Hold fast that which thou hast; for behold I come quickly.

Now may each of us be able to say from the very bottom of our hearts, Come, Lord, and come quickly. Amen.

does anything affecting the people of the earth, then we must admit that God does reveal his will, or that he has changed. But, according to the Bible, he does not change; for "I am the Lord, I change not." (Malachi 3:6.) And again, James 1:17 shows no variableness nor shadow of turning. If these passages have any significance whatever, they are certainly indicative of the fact that God neither changes nor varies. This being true, he will continue to reveal his word and laws to the people as long as they remain upon the earth, and live so as to be worthy of heavenly communications. But if it be true, as is claimed, that God revealed his word only up to the days of Jesus Christ and the apostles, and that for nineteen centuries he has not spoken by his Spirit, neither by prophet, urim, or dream, then he has decidedly changed. And as Peter perceived, afterwards, that God was no respecter of persons, but that in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted with him (see Acts 10:34, 35), we think that when we have feared God and worked righteousness, we are to be accepted in the same sense as were men anciently; and in Acts 17:25, 26 we learn that God has placed all men upon an equal footing, with equal opportunities: made them all of one blood, designated the bounds of their habitations, and made the promise that they, all alike, could find him by seeking and feeling after him. But we are told by the objector that we live too late in the world's history to obtain any such favors; that if it be true, as is claimed, that God revealed his word only up to the days of Jesus Christ and the apostles, and that for nineteen centuries he has not spoken by his Spirit, neither by prophet, urim, or dream, then he has decidedly changed. And as Peter perceived, afterwards, that God was no respecter of persons, but that in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted with him (see Acts 10:34, 35), we think that when we have feared God and worked righteousness, we are to be accepted in the same sense as were men anciently; and in Acts 17:25, 26 we learn that God has placed all men upon an equal footing, with equal opportunities: made them all of one blood, designated the bounds of their habitations, and made the promise that they, all alike, could find him by seeking and feeling after him. But we are told by the objector that we live too late in the world's history to obtain any such favors; that if we had lived in the days of the prophets and the apostles, we might have received these things. But we are here now, and all the blessings and favors which the ancients received will not benefit us. The mere history of a people being well-fed, and partaking of all the luxuries of the earth, will not benefit the man who is dying of starvation. In order to receive real benefit, he must be so situated as to partake of the real necessaries of life.

Latter Day Saints believe that God is the same to-day as in former ages. They believe that God is; not simply that God was.

ORGANIZATION IS TREND OF THE TIME.

There are three conceptions of the social order, and they are in radical conflict. The first is autocratic government—the rule of the many by the few; the second is individualism—no government, or the least possible government, with every man free to do and think as he likes; the third is fraternity—the organization of society on the basis of mutual obligation, mutual service, mutual helpfulness. In the Middle Ages the first was the universally accepted theory of society; but, when this theory was broken down by the Puritan reformation in England and the French revolution on the continent of Europe, there was ushered in the second era of individualism, as it was also understood by those who migrated to this country. In that era we acted on the assumption that by each man looking out for No. 1—taking care of himself and family—all the other numbers would be taken care of, and political as well as industrial justice would be done.

Now that epoch, though not quite gone, is passing, and we are entering into the third epoch of fraternalism, which is characterized by the saying, "All ye are brethren." Observe that the notion which insists that government shall confine itself to protecting the individual against the wrong-doing individual, and the nation against the wrong-doing nation, is a great advance over the old repressive theory of government, which left it in the hands of the few to manage the affairs of all. But there is something still better. It is the notion of a government which is an organism, which has a reason, a conscience, a judgment, and a will; it is the notion that to this will, judgment, conscience, and reason all members of the organism shall contribute.

Yet there still are in America belted men who belong to the Middle Ages and believe that democracy is a failure and want to go back to autocracy, and there are other men who are doing what they can to make democracy a failure by trying to substitute another kind of oligarchy for the oligarchy which has been abolished. There are yet other men who are afraid of any extension of the powers of government—afraid of having government do more things in the present than it has done in the past.

But over against all that I want to put before you this notion of fraternity—the idea that society is not a mere aggregation of individuals; that government is not a mere protective shell within which industry and life can be carried on; that the church is not a mere voluntary body of men who want to do their own thinking and live in their own way, but that society is an organism, a person—a unit; that government is also a distinct organism, with its intelligence, conscience, and will that you, through public opinion and public spirit, are going out into the world to help to make. The age of competition all around you is giving place to the age of cooperation and combination. It is vain for men to try to prevent people from organizing—the whole trend, sweep, and current of our time is toward organization. It is a movement ever forward, upward, and toward a larger, better, and nobler life. So it is in religion, for religion is not a mere relation between the individual soul and its God—it also is a relation of man to his fellow man—and we are moving not toward a church united by a common creed but toward a church animated by a common dominating purpose.

peace conference will be united by no common set of formulated beliefs, but by a common spirit and a common aim. For the spirit of the twentieth century is the recognition of the brotherhood in religion, brotherhood in industry, and brotherhood in politics.

This nineteenth century has been an age of energy and enterprise surpassing in these respects all other ages; but it has had its vices, and some of these still are among us. The first vice of our American life is our ambition to accumulate, to struggle each man only for himself and his own, and then to measure his place in the world by his success in accumulating. Our second vice is the lawlessness of self-will—the putting of self-will above the law, which is the will of the community; and the third is the false standard. I am not condemning men, remember, because they have amassed fortunes. I am not attacking multi-millionaires. It is better to be a multi-millionaire than to wish you were one and not have the ability to get there. The evil of the multi-millionaire is the concentration of wealth with a sordid aim and a false standard.

The remedy for the ambition to accumulate, for the self-will and the false standard, is recognition of the fact that society is not a mob of individuals struggling one with another, each caring only for himself and his family to see what he can get out of the common pile, but an organism, a personality, in which every man is to serve every other man, in which the common interest is to be the supreme object of every one's endeavor. There must be recognition of the commonality of the nation, the personality of the nation; and every citizen, instead of voting and working for his own interests alone, must put forth his energy for the national welfare. Such men we have that belong to no party—Folk in Missouri, Jerome in New York, Colby in New Jersey, Roosevelt in Washington. You may not agree with their policy, you may criticise their party; their temperament may not be favored by you. Yet you can not but believe that these men, or men like these, are recognizing that there is something else to be done in the state than to make the government subservient to individual interest or a protectorate over individual interest. As the state must be recognized as an organism if we are to have a remedy for our political troubles, so the remedy for the stripes of Christendom will come through respect for humanity out of reverence for God.—Lyman Abbott in Chicago Tribune, August 19, 1906.

HOW TO CURE CONSUMPTION; RULES TO BE OBSERVED.

MONTREAL, Quebec, August 16.—[Special.]—Nine commandments for the person afflicted with consumption were given to-day by Doctor W. A. Evans of the University of Chicago in an address before the National Fraternal congress now in session in this city.

In addition Doctor Evans prescribed "nine commandments" for the community in which the "white plague" is rampant, and nine rules for the management of sanitariums.

Doctor Evans' nine commandments for the man afflicted with consumption are:

1. Live in the open all the hours of all the days of all the years.
2. Eat abundantly of meat and bread and milk and eggs.
3. Demand an early and accurate diagnosis.
4. Be candid with your doctor, yourself, your family, and the community, and demand candor from them.
5. Be controlled and guided by those in knowledge and experience superior to you.
6. Guided and controlled, seek that climate which best suits you, remembering that climate with control is helpful, climate without control is harmful.
7. Intelligently see the thing to do and conscientiously do it. Be not despondent or hopeful, buoyant or misanthropical, but grimly determined, with malice toward none, with charity for all.
8. Seek a medical man who knows medicine and has a personality.
9. Neither poison yourself or others with your sputum.

RULES FOR COMMUNITIES.

The nine commandments for the government of the community are:

1. There must be no promiscuous spitting.
2. Educate the people through the health departments, the lecture platforms, the pulpits, societies, lodges, unions, and other organized bodies.
3. Build hospitals, homes, and supervised quarters for the late cases and sanataria for the early cases.
4. Learn of all cases of consumption and exercise some supervision of them and of their environment.
5. Disinfect all infected premises.
6. Reward research into the causes and cures of the disease.
7. Live better, eat better food, drink less alcohol, and provide against unusual economic demands.
8. Live in better homes and work in better work places. Hygiene and cost of construction are not synonymous.
9. Salvation will come through simple living.

HOW TO RUN SANITARIUMS.

Taking up the question of sanitariums and their management Doctor Evans said:

"Shall you have a sanitarium and how shall you run it? In the cure of consumption it has been estimated that climate is worth about ten per cent. It is assumed that the sick man is to be properly controlled in the new climate. The great majority of those who seek drier climates and higher altitudes lose by the change. They exchange comforts, security, and associations for a potentiality which they do not know how to use.

"Consumptives intelligently handled do and will get well in any State in the Union. But if the intelligence of control is the same everywhere there will be found variance in results by reason of the advantages of certain climates. The Adirondacks, the Catskills, the Blue Ridge, and Allegheny Mountains are all good. California, Colorado, Wyoming, Arizona, Utah, and New Mexico all have points of advantage.

"But there is no place in this or any other country which is better than the region around Las Vegas, New Mexico. There are certain people for whom the altitude is not suited. Others prefer more of vegetation. No climate or no environment suits everybody—this one suits the maximum number of people.

NINE SANITARIUM RULES.

"I will give you my estimate of the requisites for the proper conduct of such an institution:

"1. You must have the proper head. He must be one who can make the sick fight on, confident of their general.

"2. Cases must be properly selected and classified. My judgment is that early prefebrile tuberculosis should not be sent away from home. They can be cured in any climate and without great cost. Climate is of most service in those septic cases in which there is still moderate vitality. It is poor humanity to send any man within ninety days of death. Assuming that the patient has come, you can not refuse him admission; then set aside some place called your waiting hospital, in which every patient must remain for thirty days or longer for classification.

"3. There must be discipline and control. When a man is febrile he is tractable. When he is feeling better he is another proposition. The function of this sanitarium is to take members, keep them for a while, and then turn them back into society as producing members and as educators, teaching consumptives how to get well, and teaching the well how to stay well.

"4. There must be a proper financial policy. In my judgment, the first year you should charge ten or twelve dollars a week to be borne in part by the family or friends and in part by the supporting lodge. At the end of the first year you can judge better what the cost of maintenance should be, and your charges can be adjusted accordingly.

"5. You must demand earlier and more accurate diagnosis. This is imperative. The average case of consumption is not diagnosed until there is not 20 per cent of chance for cure.

"6. You must feed scientifically as well as abundantly. The ration must be balanced. Feeding should be primarily for digestion, secondly for strength, and thirdly for fat.

"7. Exercise must be judiciously controlled for each group of cases. In the fever days, when proper treatment and the climate are fighting sepsis, the only exercise must be massage in bed. When the fever is gone exercise must be judiciously increased until the patient is well and his muscles are hard and trained to do the work of a man or woman.

"8. Those diseases for which there is no specific require the maximum medical skill. You will always require practitioners of medicine of grade.

"9. Every educational institution, to be well balanced, must have a research department. If you make use of the freely given discoveries of other men you assume a moral obligation to attempt to solve some problem which will benefit those who have helped you.

"I feel that no one need tell you to-day that consumption is a curable disease. In the United States hospitals in New Mexico of proper cases they report two thirds apparently cured."—Chicago Tribune, August 17, 1906.

Life in a Hospital.

[Just at a time when a great effort is being made by our people to establish a sanitarium of our own, as the Lord has commanded, the following letter from Sr. "Priscilla" will be read with much interest.—EDITOR.]

Perhaps to one that has never experienced it, "life in a hospital" sends a shudder when mentioned. But I say, Thank God for such institutions in our fair land, where thousands of poor sufferers find relief, and some find health under its roof. Though suffering untold lies behind its walls, what would the result be if the same suffering must be endured in our homes, which are so little prepared for sickness or surgical operations? And, too, one that has experienced hospital life (as the writer has) even though the memories of the fearful suffering in my hospital life are very keen, yet there linger pleasant memories of the white bed and white-robed nurse bending so tenderly over me night and day when pain was nearly past human endurance. Then, too, the pleasant, low voice murmuring tender, loving, sympatizing words, and the bright, cheery smile of not only my own nurse (who, God bless her, did all she could to care for my room. And this beautiful morning my heart goes out in thanksgiving for it all, though it has been three long, weary months since I entered the hospital door, and am now able to walk only a very little with the aid of crutches. Life at the hospital is a monotony. Every hour in the day, the same work is done by the same nurse; and no matter what life is going out to the "great beyond," or what fearful operations are going on, each nurse must be at her post. No thought can be given to other than her own work.

As I lay there day after day, and watched this wonderful piece of human machinery, I wondered how some of us could stand the strict discipline these nurses are under? One little incident will show what self-control they must have. One nurse had a friend brought to the hospital one day, and after her special nurse left she was given charge of her friend, and bestowed for weeks such tender care, love, and attention as only a friend can give. When the friend was to be taken to her home (a distance of some fifteen miles), after getting her ready to be moved from her hospital bed to the ambulance bed, the nurse was promptly ordered to her other work without the privilege of seeing her friend safe for her journey, and without a word pressed a kiss on the lips of her patient, a tear on the white face, and left her to the care of the bed nurse and the doctor. No matter how unjustly, or how much a training nurse is misunderstood, she must never reply by even an explanation to her senior. And from my heart I say, Thank God for the noble women who will sacrifice so much to be able to help and administer to suffering humanity.

"As Unto the Lord."

She was only a poor, plain, freckled woman, whose clothes were of the fashion her mother might have worn, yet, day by day, as she husbly plied her iron, many a humble neighbor would stop by her door and listen to the quaint old hymns she sang so vigorously.

"My good woman," said Mrs. G——, who had called to engage her services, "how can you stand all day in this hot room, always ironing, and yet sing so cheerily?"

"Ah, my dear lady," she replied, "the Lord has given me this work to do; so, when I'm tired and out of sorts, I say to myself that verse about doing things heartily, as unto the Lord, and try to think how I'd feel if I could see him standing by my side and knew I had an unwilling heart for his tasks. Then I sing my brightest hymns, and while my iron smooths out wrinkles in the clothes, I'm planning how to smooth out the rough places in my neighbor's lives.

"There's poor Granny Jones, left alone all day. She's crippled with rheumatism, and nearly blind, too. When I sing, it cheers her a bit, and she feels as if some one cared for her.

"Little Tommy Green in the room above me has a weakness in his back, and lies on his cot bed from morning till night. His mother works in a factory and doesn't come home till dark. When he's lonely, and sick with the pain, he pounds on the floor with a stick, and I sing the hymns he likes best, and he lies quiet and hums them over to himself till he falls asleep. Then once in a while I slip up with a cup of water and bits of picture-papers that come wrapped around the clothes, and give him a pleasant word. Ah, ma'am, the Lord's so good to me I must try to help them that have few blessings."

And this thankful woman lived in a little hot room, spending her whole life ironing and smoothing out wrinkles for others. What shall we render unto the Lord for all his mercies to us? —Selected.

"No home of a child of God is ever forgotten or neglected by the loving Father of all. Whatever shadow is on it to-day, there is brightness for it yet to be revealed. However gloomy may be the present state of the church of God, its best days are in the future. And even the best things that God now gives, in the home or in the church, to those who are dear to him are but an earnest of still better things to come to others hereafter. There is comfort in this thought—comfort in dark days and comfort in bright days. It is good to have hope for ourselves. It is good to have hope for those who come after us. It is good to be the receiver of blessings. It is good to be the messenger and forerunner of blessings." —Selected.

Editors Herald: An editor has been gathering some opinions on the tobacco question, and I would like to make a few suggestion as to what it should contain. I would like to have it contain the name of the man who can truthfully say that the first tobacco he placed between his molars tasted good; also of the mother that advises her sons to chew tobacco. I want to hear of the physician in good standing who recommends his children to use tobacco. I should like it to contain, also, the name of the young man who would prefer a bride with a pipe in her mouth. Also the name of the young man who has good sound sense, and has used tobacco ten years, who has not wished himself clear of the habit scores of times. Please have the name of the man inserted whose breath is improved by the use of tobacco. And kindly insert the name of the man who would consider his wife or sisters respectable, that would have a tobacco cud in their mouths in his presence, or in the presence of company.

Dear Herald: It seems to me I can see more God in the work of the Reorganized Church than ever before. It is certainly a progressive work, and he or she who labors therein with an honest zeal for the upbuilding of the kingdom of Christ and the Father, can not feel otherwise than that they are coworkers with God. With this thought uppermost in our minds we should ever strive to be like him. If we strive lawfully we will find no time to complain of our brethren, but will improve every opportunity to hold each other up and counsel sweetly together for good to the work that we are or should be earnestly engaged in.

Brethren, the work God has intrusted to us is no plaything. We have got a fight to make (the enemy is upon us), and we are not to use powder and lead; neither the sword; but our ammunition must be a bountiful supply of love and in the spirit of prayer. Thus a bountiful supply of wisdom will be bestowed, and we will be able to meet the enemy of all righteousness with success. Fear not, brethren, our cause is just. In the end we will conquer.

About the last of June I took leave of friends and loved ones in Independence, Missouri, and Argentine, Kansas, strengthened in the faith of our Lord and Savior through what I had heard in the efforts of the General Conference, what I saw in my travels in Nauvoo and other places, and the good preaching of our brethren. Especially was I strengthened by the efforts of Bro. E. L. Kelley from the stand on the last Sunday that I was in Independence. Came directly to San Antonio, Texas, and was much comforted to find the Saints of that place working in harmony, the branch in charge of Bro. J. P. Neal, and the Sunday-school in charge of Bro. Ed McCrae, both prospering and working in harmony, hence coworkers with God. And, too, I am very much encouraged in the mission work here. Our two missionaries in this part, Brn. D. S. Palmer and William Mannering, are earnestly and zealously at work. The local ministry, also Bro. O. D. Johnson in the western part of the settled district, are doing what they can for the work. I preached a few times in San Antonio, and went to Bandera County for a short time. It was a bad time, raining quite frequently, and my feeble condition rendered it impossible for
The manifestations of the Spirit have been frequently given here to the brethren. On one occasion the Spirit spoke to the congregation through Sr. Terry, who with her husband is such a help to the church. I can not tell all she gave on this particular occasion, but it is so true that great power accompanied her words. She closed out part of this message, as she could have been felt, being present at the meeting where it was given. The words were these, and I wish that the Saints could feel what I felt when it was told to me: "Gird the armor of a little closer, Saints, and come up higher." These blessed words were repeated three times to the Saints, and were gladly accepted by them, with rejoicing that God has spoken the gentle command to draw nearer to him, and the beautiful promise that greater blessings and greater power would be given them.

I am glad to note the forward movement of the work all over the various fields of labor, and that God has chosen such a band of workers to carry to the nations of the earth the glad message of life; and that the wall of prejudice is beginning to crumble before the mighty power of truth. But as the ground is broken up, the seed must be sown, the cultivation-time must not be neglected; and hence as the fields widen, there must be more laborers to keep up the work; and how glad we should be, Saints, that in the vineyard of the Master there is something for us all to do. There should be no sleeping soldiers, no idle hands, that every field might yield an abundant harvest. And that the Saints of God everywhere may labor to help make the yield a hundredfold to the honor and glory of God, is my earnest prayer. Pray for me, dear Saints, that I with you may find work to do and not fail to meet you in Zion where the pure in heart shall dwell.

Your brother in the gospel,

Thomas P. Cook.

Dear Herald: All is going along much better than could be expected in this city. It is really marvelous the progress that has been made since the calamity befell us. Work of clearing away rubbish, cleaning brick, rebuilding, and reconstruction of all kinds, is being pushed at all hours day and night. New buildings, mostly temporary, are being reared all over the burned district. Many firms have had the courage to open up for business, right in the midst of ruins. And quite a number are already building large permanent structures on their old sites, regardless of their dismal surroundings. Quite a number of blocks are already rebuilt with one-story buildings where a short time ago six to ten stories stood. The numerous ruins—enough to make one's heart ache—are fast being hidden or torn down, and at the rate we are now working will soon disappear. The courage and grit of our citizens is really surprising. In the span of life, we lost heart only for a moment. For that short time we were helpless, starvation stared us in the face, and having no shelter was discouraging. But without a moment's delay, the large heart of our fellow man opened to the necessities of all, and the much-needed relief was furnished us. Immediately the life-blood rushed anew through our veins, and we sprang forth into life and activity and are now fast regaining our old standing, and rebuilding our new San Francisco.

Van Ness Avenue, once filled with palatial residences, is now lined with stores, on both sides of the street, miles in length, and, though they are only one- and two-story buildings, they are really beautiful. The light in them is perfect, the show-windows large and roomy, and handsomely dressed. The stores in this city never looked so pretty as they do now. All the goods are new. No old goods are here—they were all burned up. Everything is nice and neat and fresh. It is sad that at such a time as this there should be a clash between capital and labor—but such is the case. Several strikes are on but regard-

less of this we are still forging ahead, and everything is progressing. Filmore Street, once in the far western part of the city, is now the principal business street. Thousands upon thousands of people throng that thoroughfare continually. It is almost impassable, and the business done there is simply immense.

Oh, no, San Francisco has not lost her grip. To-day we are doing more business through the clearing house than any four other cities in the State. "For the week ending Thursday noon, August 9, 1906, the clearings were $38,648,876.98 as against $38,455,890.98 for the same week of 1905. This shows an increase of 18 per cent for this week."

So you see we are not idle in business, though hampered by disaster and the ruins. Our hall at Twentieth and Guerrero Streets has been refitted, the broken windows replaced, and we hold our services there every Sunday, where the gospel story is told in the same old way. Like our city, it may be clothed anew and dressed according to new ideas to the ordinary mind, but it is the same old story which is ever new and inspiring. We had good attendance last Sunday, and many of the Saints met for the first time since the earthquake. None have lost faith—but many are stirred up to greater diligence, with determination to serve the Master better. Possibly we were not the only ones who needed a little shaking up. May God keep us in the right, and preserve us is my prayer. GEO. S. LINCOLN. 242 B Street.

SKINNERTON, Alabama, August 20, 1906.

Editors Herald: I have felt edified many times in reading your columns. Those who have opportunity to entertain the Herald readers have not written in vain. I enjoy reading letters from the brothers and sisters. They cheer and encourage me to press forward to the prize that is given to the faithful at the end of the race. My greatest desire is to live faithful in this life, that I may enjoy the life which is to come. Eternal life! What a happy meeting that will be, when Christ will reach forth his hand and bid us welcome home. I long to meet my Savior first of all, and be permitted to enjoy the heavenly blessings. This life is only a preparatory state, and life is short; and whether we are prepared or not will not prevent the coming of Christ. We learn by studying the word of God that we are living in the last days when false Christs shall arise and "show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, he that observeth not his prayers before the Lord in the season thereof, let him be had in remembrance before the judge of my people."

And a commandment I give unto them, that he that observeth not his prayers before the Lord in the season thereof, let him be had in remembrance before the judge of my people."

—Doctrine and Covenants 88:4. Beloved, God sees it is necessary for us all. The judge does not always know, nor the officers either, whether we are observing our prayers in the morning, noontide, and evening; but God does.

Other questions present themselves which we often have to meet: Do we pray aright? Are our prayers presented with sufficient humbleness? Do we recognize we are only the receivers of what God in his mercy chooses to give? Do we go thinking we have a perfect right to command God to give us what we like, then grumble because we do not get it?

Now in regard to testimony. This comes only through prayer. How often our testimonies are very weak. Is it not because our prayers are very weak also? How many of us are in a condition to say, "Come, Lord Jesus, come," in reality? How many of us are praying that the heavens might be opened and that the Christ would be revealed in flaming fire? These are thoughts which each can best answer for himself. I heard Apostle J. W. Rushton speak of how many homes he came to during his travels here, that were without their Bible-reading and praying. Saints, let us arise ourselves; be not the time far spent; there is little remaining." Let us use the time to the best advantage. Let us draw near with a true heart unto the throne of grace. Let our Sabbath-day worship be true, with plenty of energy. I believe the words I once heard: "The Sabbath is a text; the week-day the sermon we preach from it"; but if we throw all our week away in pleasure, staying up late at night, falling out in the morning just because we have to, what are our Sabaths like? Instead of being bright and cheerful, we want to rest. Yes, not enough strength left to serve God with. We go to sleep in the meetings instead of listening to God’s word. "The Lord said our Sabbath was to be a day of rest," says one. Yes, but we are not to wear ourselves out in six days so as to be half dead on the seventh. God never intended this, for he says, "Retire to thy bed early, that ye may not be weary; arise early, that your bodies and your minds may be invigorated."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:8. Against the advice God has given us, how long will we continue to neglect our duties? If we are weary in body surely we can never serve God as we ought. No, our prayers will get weaker until they are no more prayers, but vain babblings. The form may be there, but that soon goes... after the Spirit departs. Dear Saints, let us remember the loving words which, if carried out, will bring the best and richest blessings: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy mind, and with all thy strength and with the whole pattern at all, so at the close of the meetings he had converted most of the Campbellite members.

My mind is called back to a letter in a recent HERALD, written July 23, from Cooke's Point, Texas, in regard to inconsistency of missionaries teaching members to avoid the use of tobacco and coffee, which is good advice, but not complying with the Doctrine and Covenants which tells them to leave the branches and get out into the world. Now as to the missionaries in Central Texas, I think they do well. They hardly ever come into the branch where I live; but when they do they certainly edify us. They always come with the Spirit of the Lord, and do everything they can to build up the work. They never come in the spirit of jealousy; are never talking about some missionaries who are trying to kill their influence with the people; are not talking about some fine thing they have seen in the city; but are always talking about what good there is in the work, and instead of finding fault with some missionary's preaching and trying to show some defect in the Doctrine and Covenants, they are trying to get the people to believe them. My prayer is that all the missionaries in the field will be as humble as those in Central Texas. I desire and request the Saints to pray for me and my family that we may hold out faithful to the end.

ALBERT VAN CLEVE

FALL RIVER, Massachusetts, August 20, 1906.

President Joseph Smith: I attended the Massachusetts reunion held July 28 to August 6. I did not advertise myself as I saw in the HERALD that Father Squires was expected to be there. I left home in company with my wife, and son Ephraim and his wife and two children, and several of the Saints; and we arrived in New York City in time to take the boat for Fall River. Here we met quite a number from Philadelphia whose faces all gleamed with joy. We arrived at Fall River at about eight o'clock in the morning, and just as the boat was being made fast we saw Bro. F. G. Pitt coming with a small boat to take us all across to the camping ground. After about half an hour we arrived at the ground. Here we met Bro. R. C. Evans and F. M. Sheehy, and many others whom we had never seen before. We were glad to get acquainted with them.

We were soon preparing to fix our tent and arrange for the night; for we knew it would come. So after we had prepared all that we could for the time being, we thought we needed a little refreshment, so we went down to the large tent where the tables were all being loaded with things needful for the body, and here for the first time I saw the need of exercising what is called in the revelation the duty of being a "father." I saw there was some little confusion, as the brethren had been so busy getting things ready; but as all was not quite perfect, we were a little inclined to complain. But we soon got over that. Now as it was my first experience at reunions, I thought I would keep as quiet as I could and learn. But I was soon discovered, and before the camp was closed there were about fifty, as near as I can judge at present, came to me and asked for their patriarchal blessings; and as I was called to be a servant to the church, the body, I had no desire to refuse, so went to my work with a cheerful heart, and did the best I knew how. Here I would say that the brethren were very kind to me. Bro. F. G. Pitt, Bishop Hilliard, Bro. Christy of Philadelphia, President R. C. Evans, and Walter W. Smith assisted me with their kind and effectual prayers.

On the morning of the 8th we broke camp and prepared to make for our homes. I came to Fall River and bade good-bye to wife and the few Saints going to New York. I found my way to Doctor John Gilbert's, and was made comfortable. With kind regards to all,

JOSPEH SQUIRES.
Editors Herald: Closed a five weeks' tent-meeting in the city of Des Moines last Sunday night with some interest that will not be lost on the part of two or three families, and much prejudice has been removed. The five that have been mentioned in a previous article as being baptized since the beginning of these services were all that were baptized; but there were a few of the Saints who expressed being instructed and much edified by the meetings, and none but what showed due respect. After the departure of Bro. and Sr. Reiste for other parts, after aiding me for about three weeks, my daughter Ruth came to make me a visit and to assist in the musical part of the services, and the young sisters of the branch who are gifted in music assisted in vocal solos and duets that were very edifying to both Saint and sinner. The Lord supported me in the efforts made till at times my soul was filled with joy to be permitted to represent a theme so glorious and so soul-satisfying.

Last Friday a week ago the Methodists started a tent-meeting about two blocks from where our tent was located, and continued only till last Sunday night. While they disclaim running opposition to us, yet it has a shadow of that appearance. After they began their meetings some of their number were absent from our meetings that had previously been regular attendants, so that they accomplished that much to their satisfaction, if nothing more. We were intending to attend a few nights, if they had continued after we closed. We are intending to secure the tent again after the reunion and locate it in another part of the city, and in that way warn the people. The Religio has arranged to place another literature box in the street-car waiting-room, and keep it supplied with literature. Through this means the people have been warned of some things at least. The branch has decided to purchase a mimeograph and will use it for sending out circular letters to the Saints where visitations can not be made by the branch officials,—and to this branch belong many such. There is some thought of starting a weekly paper in the interests of the local work, but this has not been finally decided. While all are united in the thought that much good could be accomplished by such a paper, yet there exists with some a doubt about such a move being made a success, or advisable just at the present time, and further consideration will be had. Wisdom is shown in the efforts to advance; and haste is not considered a correct principle to govern in some things at least. The sick of the branch have been great sufferers during the last few weeks, and it has been a source of great trial to the Saints; but unwaveringly do they continue to petition, and deeper humility pervades the lives of God's people. Two are now lying very low, and are living only by faith; and why their lives are prolonged does not appear; but we walk by faith that the future will reveal why, and we hope that through the providence of God their lives may be spared free from their present sufferings and the cause of it. We ask the prayers of all who trust fully in the Lord as the source of all power to render supplication for these sorely afflicted ones of the Des Moines Branch. The president of the branch is not suffering any pain from the fracture of his limb; but suffering much inconvenience on account of needing his work so much; but he is enduring his affliction quite uncomplainingly, and the heavenly Father is favoring him to a large degree.

For the next two weeks the city will be wholly or almost wholly given by the branch to the entertainment of the State Fair, and we anticipate seeing several of the Saints from the different parts of the State. I trust if they are in the city they will appear in their proper place at the Sunday services, and we would be very much pleased to see them, too, at the Wednesday evening service. All will be welcome.

I notice that the Hindu psychologist is contemplating building a temple in the city, his patronage being so great demands it. This but emphasizes the fact that the people are running to and fro after all kinds of spirits that promise to do something for them without asking that righteousness be the basis of action; but that they are willing to pay for it. It is argued that any spirit that gives relief from some real or supposed trouble, no matter in what way received, is of God, and even some of the Saints are allured with that kind of bait. All this is based upon the erroneous theories that "what is, is right," or in others words, "all that is, is of God," and that there is no Devil, no source of evil nowadays like as in days gone; that devils do not possess the bodies of the human race like as in the days of the New Testaments; and are ascribing all derangements to nervous or physical weaknesses. This is one of the deceptions that will and does deprive those possessed from the privileges of the gospel. If Satan can possess a body, partially or wholly, and deceive the party possessed, or those who should exercise faith for their deliverance so that they are not willing to acknowledge the trouble, and the source of it, he will retain possession. Satan does not attack the children of men or of God when they are strong or where they are strong; but when he sees a weakness in them will take possession of that weakness, and then make it appear that it is but the natural malady that must be attacked by the authority that will dispossess him, and thus will continue with the individual till there is a recognition of the true conditions by those who are suffering from the results of the trial, or God sees fit to exercise mercy. God wishes his people to trust in him by keeping his commandments and doing those things that are pleasing to him, and not to trust in him by trying every spirit and every claim made by men through which a blessing may be obtained, pay the man well for his pretensions, and if a blessing is obtained ascribe it all to God, thus giving encouragement to others that God works through means that contradict his power, or set a very small valuation upon it, and lead them to try God that way instead of trusting him unwaveringly, and patiently abiding the results. The result in every case where God's children have put unwavering faith in him has been good, though in appearance it may not have seemed to be so. Too many judge by the appearance of things, and not by the word of God.

Many would be much better pleased with some articles in the HERALD if there were less of personality engaged in, and the subject wholly treated upon principle. It is very poor argument to assert surprise at the position of another, or to say that the sentiments of another are or are not the sentiments of the writer. It seems to some that usury of words are being used by some who are contending strongly against the use of usury, and think that all should agree with them as to what usury is. We can all agree that usury is an excess of some things, and why not he be a usurer who uses an excess of words? Why not? Just because all can not agree that the taking of legal interest is usury, or the taking of interest is usury, depends whether the law of the Mosaic economy is binding upon the Israel of the free born, any more than some of the other laws governing what to eat and drink, or what should be done on the Sabbath day, is yet binding or not, or whether cities of refuge should be now established for the innocent murderer, or the one who has committed manslaughter in no more accidental manner than did Moses in the land of Egypt. Let proof be adduced that taking interest on the use of money is usury under the gospel economy. The Lord has seen this grievous sin, if such it be, for years, and yet has not given a word of reproof for it, even when the church through its authorized officers to look after the temporal affairs of the church has both taken and given interest. It has never been publicly charged that illegal interest has been urged by them. In such case they would not be worthy to stand; and if men did not know of it the Lord would, and he certainly would apprise those who have been given the responsibility to look after such things. Farmers are at the present time selling their produce so that they are making in some cases as high as fifty per cent on the money invested, and the labor used, and they are taking only the legal price offered them by those who buy. One would think that a mechanic or workman would be very foolish to refuse to accept a raise of ten per cent in the price of his product if it should be voluntarily offered to him, but if a man takes ten per cent on the use of money or real estate that is the result of their past labor, then it is severely condemned. Until we are placed in the complete control of a land, as was Israel of old, and the constitutional as well as the statutory laws that govern us are given of God, and we have the unquestionable right to execute them without the breaking of the law of the land, and to make every one who abides with us in that land live in harmony with such law, we had better delay. Perhaps for our good. We might have felt exalted should he have put forth his hand at once in our behalf. I certainly feel sorry for any man under such humiliation as the one who swore to this petition. May the Lord prosper his work and bless us all, is the prayer of

Editors Herald: I am encouraged in the work. The prospects look brighter here now than for a long time. The parties who were foremost in putting an injunction on the schoolhouse, in the district in which I live, eighteen years ago, are now being held up before the public in ridicule, shame, and disgrace. I have a copy of petition certified by the clerk of the county, which I think ought to go on record in the church as persecution. This injunction was petitioned for on the ground that any one tax-payer could object, and close the schoolhouse against any one from using school property for other than school purposes. Does the church keep a record of such matters? I feel that I have been deprived for eighteen years of rights and privileges as an American citizen and tax-payer that others have been permitted to enjoy. It would take a long time to tell all the particulars; but is seems to me this was an unchristian, un-American, ungodly affair, beneath the dignity of a gentleman. While he has posed before the public as a Christian gentleman, and an honorable citizen (untill now), he has held me up before the public and in the county courts as a disreputable citizen for eighteen years, unworthy the same rights of other citizens. I feel that the Lord had taken the matter in hand. I believe he has said that no weapon formed against his work should prosper. But some one might ask, Why so long a delay? Perhaps for our good. We might have felt exalted should he have put forth his hand at once in our behalf. I certainly feel sorry for any man under such humiliation as the one who swore to this petition. May the Lord prosper his work and bless us all, is the prayer of Editors Herald: I will send in a few lines to the Herald that the Saints may know we are still living in the one true faith, and are not ashamed of the name we took upon us, though we are still isolated from any church privileges.

We ask the Saints everywhere to pray for us that, if it be the Lord's will, we may have a home in the land of Zion near Independence, where we may be with other Saints.

Dear Saints, pray for us that we may live up to the laws of God, and endure to the end.

In the one faith.

Editors Herald: My experience the last three months and a half in my field of labor (Texas) has been varied. I have done labor in the following places in connection with Bro. E. A. Erwin and Bro. John Harp: Avery, Midway, Bozelder, (vicinity), Manchester, Waxahachie, Red Oak, Dallas, Elam, Granbury, Martin, Hearne, Macy, and Cookes Point. I first associated myself with Bro. E. A. Erwin, and later I linked fortunes with Bro. John Harp. I also formed an acquaintance of Bro. Bussiel, also S. R. Hay and his son Johnie, and Bro. D. B. Higginbothom, who are endeavoring to keep the campfires blazing as best they can. I was in attendance at the Central Texas District conference. This meeting, lasting about a week, was well attended by Saints and outsiders. I think lasting good was done at this meeting, and our work better understood. Bro. Harp baptized two while there.

I have no apologies to make for being in attendance at meetings of this character, even in branches. In so doing I feel certain I have assumed no prerogative not rightfully belonging to my office and calling. Any time and opportunity I have to proclaim the truth of this work, I expect to use if the Lord is willing. I am not prepared to admit as one writer does in Herald of August 8, that "the Utah elders are doing better missionary work" than we are doing. True, they go from house to house and teach, but what do they teach? They teach Brigham Young to be a prophet. They have gone to the other extreme, and but very seldom you hear them preach publicly.

Our yearly reports show a greater per cent of baptisms from the world than the Utah people have ever shown in one year, nevertheless they have a much larger number of workers in the field. The same writer says, "Of course it is nice to visit branches and district conferences and preach to them a week or ten days at a time." Who said it was nice? I do not say so. Far rather would I preach to the world. Necessity and force of circumstances, because of the low condition of the work, spiritually, in branches, and the necessity of spiritual work to be done, is the reason why I have spent some of my time in this direction. Not but what I would gladly recognize the local forces and the proper authorities; but the trouble is the work has not been done and there is necessity for it to be done; hence to maintain the integrity of the cause, the missionary resorts to it as the last extremity. Would to God the conditions specified in Doctrine and Covenants 122:7, 8 would be complied with to the very letter in the Texas field as elsewhere. We shall live in hope that the conditions will grow better, and never again shall there be any necessity to have the missionary come to the rescue of the work locally to keep the work in proper condition. This is a co-operative work, a work of love; not a work of hatred, malice, and jealousy one toward another,—a work that we are all concerned in equally. Why not think more of the work to be accomplished, its magnitude and greatness, the spirit of moderation that should be exercised to one and all in its accomplishment, instead of so much parade about infringement on others' rights, when nothing of this kind is intended?

The seventies' especial duty is to proclaim the gospel to the world. The high priests' duty is to take care of the flock and to preside over districts. Should the latter fail in the performance of this important work, no law prohibits the seventies from so continuing and doing, for they have this right to regulate. (See Doctrine and Covenants 104:13.) The high priests also have the right to act as missionaries, when occasion requires. (See Doctrine and Covenants 122:7; 107:42.) The especial duty of all is to create peace, harmony, and love, building up the work, restoring confidence, instead of eternally criticizing some one because he does not do as we think he ought to do, calling in question some other man's work because he has done something we could not do in the missionary field. As a missionary, I think I shall continue to act and labor as wisdom may direct, and if I see a greater possibility of doing good in building up the work in branches, and also through these branches reaching a greater number of the outside world by preaching to them, I will continue to do, for the best I have this right to regulate. Many times when branches are in good condition spiritually, a work can be accomplished through this means by the missionary in reaching the public that could not be brought about otherwise by months of labor. I do not say this should be the only policy, by any means; but many times by right-living the Saints are respected, and the world will listen, by virtue of that fact, and where they are not known they will not always do so.

At Elam, nine miles east of Dallas, our work had been slandered a number of times during the past year by the Campbellite pastor at that place, whose name was G. W. Campbell. This led to our defense and called forth the presentation of church propositions which were duly signed and a debate scheduled for fourteen meetings, seven on each proposition. At this same place Bro. T. J. Shepherd met one of their representative men several years ago. Still smarting under the crushing defeat then given, they at this time were over anxious to recover the ground they had previously lost. Having great confidence in their man, they felt certain of victory this time. A large arbor was prepared especially for the occasion to accommodate those who might come.

Before the debate commenced Bro. John Harp and I had the same dream, the same night, indicating that all would be well in the conflict. Also Bro. Standafer dreamed he saw me in this debate with Mr. Campbell, and that I during the contention for the truth deliberately took off one garment after another of my opponent's clothing until he was nearly nude. The evidence we received in humble prayer that God would be with us strengthened and assured us that the outcome would be all right. We led off the first night by showing the organic form of the ancient church, its laws, practices, doctrine, etc. This he did not deny but contended that that order of things was not destined to continue. We endeavored to show if his position was true, certainly such an important thing as a change would have been revealed. Also if his position was true, then God had changed. We presented an especial argument showing the apostolic office was perpetual, using the usual proof-texts to sustain it. We also corroborated this with authentic history. This position he never touched. He came forth with an argument showing qualifications of an apostle,—that they had to see Jesus Christ. This we easily met, showing his rule faulty in the extreme. Then he quoted Paul on the "signs of an apostle," and this I showed was duplicated in latter days by one of the Lord's apostles, as well as others. This well-established fact (see Marvelous Manifestations, page 90) was met by great scoff and ridicule. He wanted to know if I had power to give the Holy Ghost. I showed that they as a church occupied similar ground when they claimed to baptize for the remission of sins, that they could not forgive; God recognizing the official acts of his servants forgave the sins. So in giving the Holy Ghost. He did not meet my argument on apostasy and restoration in latter days. I showed from three proof-texts (see Zechariah 2:1-4; Malachi 3:1; Revelation 14:6, 7) that an angel was to come; this was met only with ridicule. He took the peculiar position that at the end of the Jewish Age the world was burned by fire; then was the end of the world, etc.; that in the days of Christ and the apostles was in the Jewish Age. We showed the Jewish Age ended with John. (See Matthew 11:15.)

If any one point was clearly settled in the minds of the people there present, it was that the end of the Jewish Age was not burned with fire. His Biblical evidences failed him shortly, and he could do nothing else but ridicule God's prophet, etc. This we expected, so we were prepared for him on that line. I found he was no amateur as a mud-slinger. The usual slush and filth that is generally used was used here, and I never was endowed with greater power in making a defense of this gospel work and the grand, good man, Joseph Smith, than I was at that time. I am thoroughly convinced that there is not a scrap of evidence in the world that would be accepted as legal testimony, that would condemn Joseph Smith as being bad. He used Brighamite history instead of our own, and made quite a "spiel" for its acceptance. We showed his deception on this; and if he is satisfied with the way it turned out God knows I am. On the identity of his church, I showed its complete lack of harmony in every way. In pressing him on different points which were necessary to be brought out to show his identity to the New Testament, he would fly back on my church and go to ridiculing that. I called for a ruling of the chair on this point two different times. He decided he had a perfect right to do so if he wanted to. I submitted, knowing that with thinking people his policy would lose out, and sure enough it did do that very thing. The closing speech of the debate, I proved thirty indictments against their church. I never saw a more sick set of people in my life than they were at the close. I do not care how the outcome of the right; and I desire to give him the praise for this victory.

We left many thoroughly convinced that our claims were true. Whether or not they will ever enlist in the cause, time only can tell. We trust God will lead them by his gentle hand, and give them the moral courage to obey and see the marvelous light of this great latter-day work.

I came home to rest up two or three weeks, and to attend to other business matters needing my attention. The brethren here put me to preaching on the streets of Knobnoster. So far I have preached two times to nearly two hundred people, with good liberty and attention. Will occupy again to-night and to-morrow night also, the weather permitting.

Those desiring to reach me in correspondence can do so at my permanent address here, Box 175. I hope to again be in my field by September 10.

Hoping, praying, and working for success in gospel work.

In bonds of love,

What the Russian Duma Actually Accomplished.

While the outside world can not help admiring the self-restraint, the moderation, and the capacity for self-government evidenced in this appeal of the Duma to the Russian people, it remains evident that, by the irresistible logic of events, it was necessary for Emperor Nicholas to dissolve parliament. He had no option but to surrender part of his power or disperse by force the representative assembly which insisted upon sharing that power. To his majesty and all the partisans of the autocratic regime, the Duma was only a revolutionary club, which, Premier Stolypin declared, had wasted its time in talking and discussing and accomplishing nothing. Indeed, it is a fact that the freedom of speech permitted in the Duma, and the wide publicity given to its debates by the press, really made it a national organ of revolutionary propaganda. Millions of peasants throughout the country watched the struggle for land and liberty as reported in the press, and, by hundreds of telegrams, addressed to resolutions and proclamations, cheered on parliament in its work and appealed for further advance. These documents and communications were also published abroad. Russia began to find herself. In the words of a Liberal writer in the Nachura Zhit (Our Life), of St. Petersburg, "One third of the people understand the situation now. Give us two months more and we will enlighten the other two thirds. It may possibly predict that the Russian people will never return to the autocracy. Early Habits.

The most important years, the years that give the trend for life, are the early ones, when the little dimpled hands are stretched, when the baby soul is reaching forth and receiving impressions, when the young minds are formed and habits have their beginnings. To leave the babies to irresponsible hired hands and lavish care and expense on half-grown children is the blinded of those who are ignorant or inexperienced as to vital issues.

President King, of Oberlin College, in his admirable treatise on Rational Living, has this to say to young people, and I commend it to mothers:

"Where they are the physical and social completely interwoven as in the phenomena of habitat. The mind's intensive content only comes in, but it is as constantly seconded by the nervous system. The time-limit in habitats is one of the strong evidences of the close connection of body and mind. It is a startling fact to face that a man's personal habitats are largely fixed before he is twenty; the chief lines of his future growth and acquaintance are fixed and confined before he is twenty.... We are becoming bundles of habitats. With every young person one must, therefore, continually urge: Are you willing to retain just the personal habitats you have now? You can not too quickly change them if you wish to make thorough work. From your early morning toilet, through the care of your clothing and the order of your room, table manners, breathing, tone of voice, manner of speaking, pronunciation, gesture, motion, address, study, to your very way of sleeping at night— all your habitats are setting like plaster of paris."—Margaret E. Sangster in Woman's Home Companion for September.

LIST OF STOCKHOLDERS.

$25,000.00 NEEDED

By INDEPENDENCE COAL MINING COMPANY

In order to develop and open up the new coal-mining interests near Independence and also make necessary preparations for homes for mine-workers, it is necessary that sufficient capital be secured within a short time. The amount sought for is very small in comparison with the capital of other coal-mining interests and, for various reasons, the directors of this company desire to keep the working and controlling power with the church members, if possible. The opening up of an undeveloped coal field at the edge of a densely populated community of 60,000 population is a matter of considerable consideration, as the product is part of the necessities of life, with freight rates practically cut off, making this at surprise an exceptional one.

Five hundred and sixty-nine acres have been leased for fifty years and one hundred and fifty-four acres purchased, and an eleven hundred and twenty-three acres of coal land in one body, on the line of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, two miles east of Independence.

The company already has coal-mines at Napoleon, Missouri, in operation and a successful and prosperous retail business, making this a bona fide enterprise.

Money seeking investment can find no better place, and will bring the best kind of satisfaction, as it will bring good returns to the investor and results that are much sought for, also benefiting the unemployed, scattered, pressed-down poor church members by placing them in a position to help themselves.

The 154 acres are intended for homes for mine-workers, to be sold at a reasonable price, and we solicit the co-operation of miners to purchase stock, according to their ability.

THE BOYCOTT.

For some time past we have been looking for the testing of the boycott as instituted and applied by the trades and labor unions throughout the country. The test of the question whether any number of men, laborers or otherwise, could band together by oath, contract, or agreement, to force other men into association with them in organizations for the accomplishment of purposes for the bettering of supposed unfortunate conditions, was necessarily bound to come; it must come in time, and now is an opportune time.

No one can justly censure the laborers for endeavoring by lawful means to better their condition, increase their wage, and shorten the hours of their labor. We believe it has been justly decided that a man may refuse to labor for any other employer than himself; and that he may protest against wrong usage, unjust discrimination, and even quit work with others in an endeavor to secure better conditions for himself; but it has not been decided as yet that men have the right to prevent other men working for the same or less wages than they themselves receive, if these other men choose to do it.

And it is fair to presume that when this question is called into court it will be decided as heretofore in favor of the individual right to labor when, where, and for whom, and for what wages he may choose. It is wrong for men to assume by means to dictate to others the sort of labor and amount it to be done, the kind of work and the wage to be paid, and it must be unlawful for men to so attempt to do.

This is what is in process of development in the labor world, and all are anxious for a noble adjustment to be accomplished.

The following taken by us from a Kansas City, Missouri, paper is in point:

RACINE, Wisconsin, August 28.—Union labor was dealt a heavy blow by the decision of Judge Chester A. Fowler in the boycott suit for twenty-five thousand dollar damages brought by a baker, Otto B. Schultz, against the Trades Labor Council, Benjamin Dressen, and others.

By the decision the contract exacted from the boss bakers by the union men, in an effort to enforce the closed shop, is held illegal; the Trades Council and the individual members are enjoined from using the "unfair list"; the boycott is declared... an actionable conspiracy to accomplish a criminal or unlawful purpose. Baker Schultz is allowed to recover damages of twenty-five hundred dollars for the loss of profits from the time of the commence­ment of the boycotting acts up to the time of the trial, and thirty-five hundred dollars in damages for the amount of injury to his business and property in relation to its selling value.

The decision in part follows:

"All boss bakers of the city signed this agreement except the plaintiff, who has steadfastly refused to do so. Upon the plaintiff’s refusing to sign, concerted attack upon his business was begun by organized labor with the object and purpose of compelling him, against his will, to sign the contract, and has been maintained with more or less vigor up to the present time.

"The plaintiff has suffered a permanent and all but destructional injury to his business, which has been caused by the combined acts and the attitude of organized labor.

"An injury to one’s business and trade is on the same footing as an injury to his tangible property, and the law furnishes a remedy for one as well as the other.

"The acts complained of are, in my view, plainly in violation of section 466A, Wisconsin statutes of 1898, as construed by the supreme court. This statute makes any two or more persons who shall combine, associate, mutually undertake or concert together for the purpose of willfully or maliciously injuring another, his trade, or business, by any means whatsoever, or for the purpose of maliciously compelling another to do or perform any act against his will, guilty of an offense punishable by fine and imprisonment.

"This contract was in itself an illegal contract, in that it would by its terms obligate the plaintiff to employ union labor only as distinguished from nonunion labor; it would obligate him to maintain a ‘closed’ as distinguished from an ‘open’ shop.”

DIVORCE.

Independence is the county-seat of Jackson County, the county in which Kansas City, Missouri, is situated. There is a report published daily of court proceedings and scarcely a day passes in which there are not applications for divorce. It would be amusing, if it were not pitiful and bordering on wickedness, to note the causes alleged and relied on, all too successfully, for the disannulling of the marriage bond, all the way from the only scriptural cause to often the most trivial displays of temper and meanness.

A late inquiry made in New York is given below in a dispatch for the daily press, and shows the lax conditions prevailing in the divorce proceedings in the older States, strongly indicative of what might correctly expect to be repeated in the newer States of the West. One is fairly startled, however, if he notes the number seeking release from obligations so wonderfully cheerfully assumed in life’s heyday, and under conditions understood to be sacred and prescribed by Deity as appertaining to the marriage state.

What a situation the following report as stated presents. Surely the Seer was right when he said, "The spirit of adultery will be poured out upon the world." It is a terrible prediction to be realized; but who is so blind that he can not see the evidences in the conditions referred to?

NEW YORK, August 21.—Amazing irregularities in many of the divorces granted in New York within the last twenty years have been discovered. So far there is a flaw in one divorce out of every five examined.

These defects were found by William H. K. Jarvis of the census bureau and his corps of fifteen "divorce girls" sent from Washington for statistics of divorces. If made known they would make bigamists of many couples married in good faith and illegitimatize many children. How much and how many of these discoveries will be made public depends largely on action to be taken by Mr. Jarvis. If he applies to the court for necessary data in thousands of cases, an order may be granted to "unseal the papers."

The fifteen examiners from the census bureau have reached the year 1887 in their examination and compilations. Already they have found that nearly 20 per cent of the papers filed away are incomplete. They do not contain any final award or decree signed by a judge. Without this they are invalid.—Kansas City Journal.

INFLUENCE OF DEVOTED EFFORT.

The story of the "Last Fight" in the Coliseum, A. D. 404, which we give below, shows what the spirit of devotedness to a righteous intent will accomplish.

All hail to Him who is the champion for the human race, and who will assuredly banish fighting and bloodshed from the earth, the heritage of man—Christ Jesus the Lord!

The grandest and most renowned of all the amphitheaters is the Coliseum at Rome. It was built by Vespasian and his son, Titus, the conquerors of Jerusalem, in a valley in the midst of the seven hills of Rome. Within, the galleries of seats projected forward, each tier coming out far beyond the one above it; so that between the lowest and the outer wall there was room for a great space of chambers, passages, and vaults around the central space, called the arena, from the arena, or sand, with which it was strewn. When the Roman emperors grew very vain and luxurious, they used to have this sand made ornamental with metallic filings, vermilion, and even powdered precious stones; but it was thought better taste to use the scrapings of a soft white stone, which when thickly strewn made the whole arena look as if covered with untrodden snow. The multitude, who poured in early, would watch the great gladiators arrive and take their seats, greeting them with either shouts of applause or hootings of dislike, according as they were favorites or otherwise; and when the emperor came in to take his place under his canopy, there was one loud acclamation, "Joy to thee, master of all, first of all, happiest of all! Victory to thee for ever!"

When the emperor had seated himself and given the signal, the sports began. Sometimes a rope-dancing elephant would begin the entertainment by mounting even to the summit of the building and descending by a cord. Then a bear dressed up as a Roman matron would be carried along in a chair between porters, as ladies were wont to go abroad, and another bear, in a lawyer’s robe, would stand on his hind legs and go through the motions of pleading a cause. Or a lion came forth with a jeweled crown on his head, a diamond necklace round his neck, his mane plated with gold, and his claws gilded, and played a hundred pretty, gentle antics with a little hare that danced fearlessly within his grasp. . . . But the Coliseum had not been built for such harmless spectacles as those first described. The fierce Romans wanted to be excited and feel themselves strongly stirred, and presently the doors of the pits and dens round the arena were thrown open and absolutely savage beasts were let loose upon one another—rhinoceroses and tigers, bulls and lions, leopards and wild boars—while the people watched with savage curiosity to see the various kinds of attack and defense. Almost incredible numbers of animals were imported for these cruel sports, and the governors of distant provinces made it a duty to collect tigers, lions, elephants, ostriches, leopards—the fiercer or the newer the creature, the better—to be thus tortured to frenzy to make sport in the amphitheater. However, there was daintiness joined with cruelty: the Romans did not like the smell of blood, though they enjoyed the sight of it. and all the solid stone-work was pierced with tubes, through which was conducted the steam of spices and saffron boiled in wine, that the perfume might overpower the scent of slaughter below.

The carcasses were dragged off with hooks, the blood-stained sand was covered with a fresh, clean layer, the perfume was wafted in stronger clouds, and a procession came forward—tall, well-made men in the prime of their strength. Some carried a sword and a lasso, others a trident and a net; some were in light armor, others in the full, heavy equipment of a soldier; some on horseback, some in chariots, some on foot. They marched in and made their obeisance to the emperor, and with one voice their greeting sounded through the building: "Ave, Caesar! Mercurius te saulatans!"—"Hail Caesar! Those about to die salute thee!" The gladiators—the swordsmen trained to fight to the death to amuse the populace. Fights of all sorts took place—the light-armed soldier and the netman—the lasso and the javelin, the two heavy-armed warriors, all combinations of single combat, and sometimes a general melee. When a gladiator wounded his adversary, he shouted to the spectators, "Hoc habat!"—"He has it!"—and looked up to know whether he should kill or spare. If the people held up their thumbs, the conquered was left to recover, if he could; if they turned them down, he was to die; and if he showed any reluctance to present his throat for the death blow, there was a scornful shout, "Recipe faurum!"—"Receive the steel!

Sacred vestals, tender mothers, fat, good-humored senators, all thought it fair play and were equally pitiless in the strange frenzy for exciting scenes to which they gave themselves up when they mounted the stone stairs of the Coliseum. Privileged persons would even descend into the arena, examine the death agonies of some especially brave victim. Gladiator shows were the great passion of Rome, and popular favor could hardly be gained except by ministering to it. Even when the barbarians were beginning to close in on the empire, hosts of brave men were still kept for this slavish mimic warfare—sport to the beholders, but sad earnest to the actors.

Christianity worked its way upward, and at last was professed by the emperor on his throne. Persecution came to an end, and no more martyrs fed the beasts in the Coliseum. The Christian emperors endeavored to prevent any more shows where cruelty and death formed the chief interest, and no truly religious person could endure the spectacle; but custom and love of excitement prevailed even against the emperor. Mere tricks of beasts, horse and chariot races, or bloodless contests were tame and dull, according to the diseased taste of Rome; it was thought weak and sentimental to object to looking on at a death scene; the emperors were generally absent at Constantinople, and no one could get elected to any office unless he treated the citizens to such a show as they best liked, with a little bloodshed and death to stir their feelings; and thus it went on for full a hundred years after Rome had in name become a Christian city, and the same customs prevailed wherever there was an amphitheater and pleasure-loving people.

Meantime the enemies of Rome were coming nearer and nearer, and Alaric, the great chief of the Goths, led his forces into Italy and threatened the city itself. Honorius, the emperor, was a cowardly, almost idiotical boy, but his brave general, Stilicho, assembled his forces, met the Goths at Pollentia (about twenty-five miles from where Turin now stands), and gave them a complete defeat on the Easter day of the year 409. He pursued them into the mountains, and for that time saved Italy. In the joy of the victory the Roman senate invited the conqueror and his ward, Honorius, to enter the city in triumph at the opening of the new year, with the white steeds, purple robes, and vermilion checks with which all of old victorious generals were welcomed at Rome. The churches were visited instead of the temple of Jupiter, and there was no murder of the captives; but Roman bloodthirstiness was not yet allayed, and, after all the procession had been completed, the Coliseum shows commenced, innocently at first, with races on foot, on horseback, and in chariots; then followed a grand hunting of beasts turned loose in the arena, and next a sword-dance. But after the sword-dance came the arraying of swordsmen, with no blunted weapons, but with sharp spears and swords—a gladiator combat in full earnest. The people, enchanted, applauded with shouts of ecstasy this gratification of their savage tastes. Suddenly, however, there was an interruption. A rude, roughly-robed man, bareheaded and barefooted, had sprang into the arena, and, signing back the gladiators, began to call aloud upon the people to cease from the shedding of innocent blood and not to requite God's mercy in turning away the sword of the enemy by encouraging murder. Shouts, howls, cries, broke in upon his words: this was no place for prechings; the old customs of Rome should be observed. "Back, old man!"—"Oh, gladiators!" The gladiators thrust aside the meddler and rushed to the attack. He still stood between, holding them apart, striving in vain to be heard. "Seditio! sedition!"—"Down with him!" was the cry, and the man in authority, Alypius, the prefect, himself added his voice. The gladiators, enraged at interference with their vocation, cut him down. Stones or whatever came to hand rained down upon him from the furious people, and he perished in the midst of the arena. He lay dead, and then came the feeling of what had been done. His dress showed that he was one of the hermits who vowed themselves to a holy life of prayer and self-denial, and who were greatly revered even by the most thoughtless. The few who had previously seen him told that he had come from the wilds of Asia on pilgrimage to visit the shrines and keep his Christmas at Rome; they knew he was a holy man—no more; and it is not even certain whether his name was Alypius or Telemaetus. His spirit had been stirred by the sight of thousands flocking to see men slaughter one another, and in his simple-hearted zeal he had resolved to stop the cruelty or die. He had died, but not in vain. His work was done. The shock of such a death before their eyes turned the hearts of the Goths, they saw the wickedness and cruelty to which they were prone, and they blindly surrendered themselves, and from the day when the hermit died in the Coliseum there was never another fight of gladiators. Not merely in Rome, but in every province of the empire, the custom was utterly abolished; and one habitual crime, at least, was wiped from the earth by the self-devotion of one humble, obscure, almost nameless man.—Charlotte Mary Yonge, in Kansas City, Missouri, Times, August 28.

WOUULD LIKE TO KNOW.

The following presents a query that is in the minds of a good many Saints, and we publish with the thought that it may serve to bring out the information necessary to enlighten those who are troubled in mind in regard to it. The satisfaction or the dissatisfaction of these minds may mean the success or the nonsuccess of the movement to build a sanitarium:

Editors Herald: In Bishop Hilliard's call for the sanitarium he says that ten acres of ground are required, which will cost ten thousand dollars. Why is so much ground needed, incurring such an expense for that item alone? Of course, there must be a nice ground for the convalescent get out in in the summe-time, but why would not an acre or two furnish ample room for a pleasant lawn, flower-beds, and shady walks?

Mistakes have been made in the past, and we have overreached. Mind, I am not condemning the present proposition under consideration, but I do not understand it, and should like light on the matter. We should be careful to try to avoid making mistakes in the future, and we ought to know what we are doing this time before we venture. I know a number of other Saints who are in the same state of mind as I am, and possibly we represent a large number in the church of the class who think for themselves.

As the membership of the church is expected to contribute the means for the establishment of the sanitarium, and all good Saints are surely willing to help to the extent of their ability when assured that the plans are in harmony with the Lord's admonition to observe moderation, I should like to ask that the committee in charge of the matter give us an explanation, through the columns of the Herald, as to why so much ground should be needed for the sanitarium.

Very respectfully,

ONE OF THE MEMBERSHIP.

We learn from Bishop May's call in a late Herald, that comparatively very little has been received thus far for the sanitarium fund. Is it not just possible that this query in the minds of the Saints prevents a willing compliance with the request for donations? Simply stating that ten acres are needed for the sanitarium, at such a great expense, is certainly not enough to satisfy the minds of those who want reasons rather than assertions. And have not the Saints, upon whom will devolve the responsibility of furnishing the means, the right to ask a question in regard to the why and the wherefore? Certainly, they have the right to an assurance that the admonition of the Lord is to be heeded, that the expense is to be kept within reasonable bounds:

In the establishment of the sanitarium and the home for dependent children debt should not be contracted nor too large nor expensive buildings built at the outset. Those to whom this work is assigned should exercise the necessary degree of wisdom that the work be effectual for the intent and purposes designed.

Some are of the opinion that if these instructions are carried out a suitable building "at the outset" (with all the ground necessary for present requirements), could be erected for about the same, or very little more than is proposed to invest in the ground alone.

The city of Omaha has ten hospitals, occupying, some two lots, some a half block, some a block, and one isolation hospital outside the city limits, for consumptives and other contagious diseases, fifteen acres. But we do not understand that the Lord contemplated building a pesthouse.

We all know, as the writer above states, that we have overreached in the past. The college to cost eight or ten thousand, grew to nearly twenty-five thousand—possibly more, we are unable to learn exactly. The same tendency is noticeable in the local efforts of some branches. And is it to be wondered at that at last the people want to know something for themselves?

Now, why would it not be a wise plan for those who are running the affairs of the Lord and the people, to realize that they are servants of the Lord, and that they occupy and administer by the consent of the people? Why not, for once, put the whole matter square before the people; tell them what it is proposed to do, and why? Let them know beforehand what is expected of them, and the reasons for it; and if time and opportunity permit, the propositions could be presented to the people for their consideration and acceptance or rejection. Let the people decide whether they are willing to incur such expense or not, let their decision be followed to the letter, then we would have the general and united co-operation of the people without continual urging and prompting to remembrance of duty. The people being alone responsible for the proposed amount of expense, would feel an interest in it then, more than being merely the ones who furnished the means, blindly and in the dark.

We are satisfied that a course of that kind will do more to establish confidence, make willing workers, increase love and good will, and insure the success of the sanitarium, than any other one thing.

ITEM FOR MEMORY.

Some others of the States have laws which the courts may construe as prohibitive of both boycotting and blacklisting. It is probable that in time the question in regard to the laws referred to will be brought into court for decision, and decisions similar to the one referred to in Minnesota in this issue will follow the test in court.

Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, District of Columbia, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Montana, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Porto Rico, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin, Wyoming have an eight-hour day's work provided for by law. The national government's day's labor is an eight-hour one.

J. R. McClain, writing from Hickman, Kentucky, says that himself and Bro. A. V. Closson are holding forth there with the tent, are having large crowds, and had baptized one. Another was to be baptized.

Let those who thoughtfully consider the brevity of life remember the length of eternity. — Bishop Ken.
LIFE INSURANCE.

On the battle-ground of human thought, truth and error have ever clashed, throughout the program of history, for the settlement of the differences between the two contending forces. Back over the dim pages of the past we peer, and afar in the receding distance we see through the rifting clouds of contest, as year by year time unfurls her scroll to succeeding generations, error never tiring in her assault on the citadel of truth. Truth marshals her forces and rallies forth, the din of the conflict heightens, we hear the roar and feel the deep, rumbling shock of tumult, the conflict shifts from field to field, till, worn and exhausted and beaten into submission by her relentless foe, too often we see truth relegated to obscurity, while error parades victor over the ingloriously won field. But there is no defeat for him who fights on, and rallies as often as beaten, springing on the foe from an unexpected quarter, or marching forth in bold array. Thus has truth ever contended with her archenemy, and we are living in an age when the conflict is deepening into unparalleled thunders, and error is losing position after position maintained with unbroken supremacy for centuries.

At present there seems to be an unusual amount of agitation in the church concerning not one question alone, but many important matters pertaining to the temporal and spiritual welfare of the church politic. There ought to be some definite means at hand for the permanent solution of the questions over which this unrest has arisen, and every one set at ease as to the proper course to take, where so many are pointing in as many different directions.

The subject of life insurance is up again, and it is a question which I have given much sincere thought. I never did come to the conclusion that I would take out a policy, of any denomination, under any consideration; nor have I seriously objected to others doing so. To me, it has always seemed a cowardly surrender to the selfish principle in man. Others may feel differently, and see the matter in altogether another light from what I do. Such is the case in many other questions, and why not in regard to life insurance?

I know of no better means of bringing facts and reason to bear upon this question, than to offer a few of my personal objections to life insurance, and it shall not be in the spirit too often indulged in by our brethren, to swell up and caw over those who may differ with me, slap a chip off my shoulder, step out in the "big road," and toe the scratch, and "dare any of yez out," and accuse you of showing the domineering if you happen to exhibit the proper spirit, and refrain from "shedding blood." Nor shall I delve with learned lore into "much scripture"; for, though I believe there is sufficient written to justify a scriptural review of the subject, and it is because of scriptural ATTITUDE that I am aloof and shall ever remain so from all fraternities, of the lodge and insurance character, it is very difficult to bring forth the best and most convincing argument, by basing a strong conclusion upon an obscure and controllable passage of scripture.

The great trouble with Christianity is, I fear, a failure to sense the spirit of life insurance. My son, if you invest in a life insurance policy to the sum of $1,000, to be paid at the death of the wife of your youth, and she should be taken from you on the first installment of the policy, you would clamor for the full amount called for in the contract, would you not? Why, of course you would. The company had agreed to pay it, and if there was any "hang fire" about the matter you would go into the courts, you would hire the best legal adviser to be had, you would prate of justice, and go on bended knees before the Lord, and look up with solemn supplication and beg that you be protected in the rights of your contract. Yes, my son, that "thousand" would look big about then, and you would become very zealous in the matter, and gloat up in silly expectation of getting a big thing. Why, you would almost want to marry again, you would rejoice and be so exceedingly glad. But suppose that the contract should be waived on the ground of a petty violation of some hair-strung "stipulation" stuck down in one corner of your policy, in the middle of a long, ambiguous sentence, then you would return to your grief and lamentation, would you not? You would see again the bride of your youth, clothed in pure white and trusting innocence; you would see her standing by your side in the time of trial and breathing sweetness and cheer into your troubled heart when misfortune had turned her gnashing teeth upon you; you would see her snow-white hand tilt the cradle that held the treasure of your heart, your first-born, the pride of a father's worshipful devotion; you would hear her sweet voice singing back from the realms of paradise. And you would still think of that "thousand" which you had been cheated out of. The little trick put in the policy was of no importance in the terms of the contract, and virtually had nothing to do with it, but the tricky old wheel turned one peg too far. You had it for a moment, but—but—oh, phew! it slipped one peg too far and you lost your bet, and the other fellow won!

Now, my son, come along, you have lost there. Let us go to the races to-day—I think—that "Dandellion" is going to win; and we will stake a small sum, as there are heavy odds in our favor, and I am so sure that we will win. I have a tip that is worth hundreds to us, and I can not see the harm in it. No one loses very much; but there is big gain for those who stake their money on the unexpected winner. Back again and we have won! I knew it!
Brother John lost his wife, and there being no "hitch" in the policy, got every cent of the contract, without a word; but he staked his money on "Picket" and lost. They signed insurance contracts the same day, and for the same sum; one lost and the other won. They went to races the same day; one bet on the winning horse, and the other on the losing.

For instance: it appears to us as a people that "as and so" is well founded upon scripture, and that nothing could be plainer; but how often are you able to make open- and fair-minded men understand what to you is the direct mind of the Lord given to govern in such and such matters? I can find plenty of scripture to keep me out of life insurance societies, etc., but would despair in searching for that which would get me out, were I once in, and wrapped up in the spirit which impels others into so ardent a defense of the "divinely appointed" and honest means of providing for one's needs in case of extreme exigency.

1. I object to life insurance because it appeals to me as the lowest form of gambling, a speculation on life and blood, a barter for the spoils of the race. I do not like the idea of taking what I have not earned, nor allowing my death or the death of another to decide the points of a contract in which there is to be paid a certain sum agreed upon, knowing that this means loss to some one else.

2. I object to life insurance, because its maintaining surplus must come from relapses; must come from the unfortunate ones who pay in their hard-earned money to pay death benefits to those who were unfortunate enough through life to keep up their payments.

3. I object to life insurance, because it is a game at which the rich can play with certainty of winning, and which "winning" must come out of the pockets of some one, hence those too poor to withstand the stroke of misfortune are severed from the society, and never pick up courage to renew. (This is true with some orders.)

4. I object to life insurance, because I believe the system to be at fault with the best means of providing for the "hereafter," and I have begun early in life, a competition method, or that which I am satisfied will prove more to me in the end than a fat policy, and that is a careful saving of every surplus cent and consecrating it to the Bishop. I believe the system to be that of the gambling nature, and I can not understand how it can be denied; I think the system out of harmony with the Lord, and I never could content myself to mount the Devil's sidewalk to keep out of the mud.

5. I object to life insurance because it is a system originated and fostered by cute business men of the world, who through the system have become rich, and powerful factors in the nation's politics; so much so that laws have been framed against, and to govern them. At their head have sat, and do sit to-day, the most rascally and thieving bunch of criminals ever escaping the confines of Sing Sing, who are regulated and held to public justice only by the most rigid system of State and Federal laws.

If it were right for honest Christian people to invest in life insurance, it would follow that the insurance system was a thing approved of by the Lord; but if on the other hand it can not conscientiously be maintained that the system is in harmony with honest, equitable principles of social economy, it follows that the Lord, whose sense of right and justice is so far in the advance of man as to scarcely be comprehended by him, disapproves.

What is the difference in getting $1,000 for $250, in a life insurance contract, and getting $1,000 for $250, in a horse-race? I had to give up college because of my absolute inability to handle figures, so will some adept please figure this out and let me know?

The money-changers who sat in the temple, and for some reason got up quickly and walked out when the Savior came in, might have been insurance agents. The record is not clear. If they were, of course they did not want to have anything to do with that fellow whom the Jews were trying to kill, for he would be a losing game. From the awful threats they had heard, they knew that he could not last much longer; and as he was an able-bodied man they would be compelled to take him on application, which had too many disadvantages to trap these wily Jews. So they got up and went out.

An insight into the insurance system ought to sicken any one against it. A year ago, the leading officers of the big insurance companies were receiving all the way from $150,000 down to $20,000 salary a year. President John McCall of the "New York" took unto himself the starvation sum of $150,000. James Hazen Hyde, the semi-French dude and society squirt, race-track fiend, pal of the Belmonts, and servant of Tom Ryan, high officer in the Equitable, was compensated for his unrequiting labor in the interest of the company the sum of $100,000 a year. Who paid it? Who carpeted the floor of the offices of these dummies with $2,000 rugs? Who paid Chauncey M. Depew $25,000 a year to allow his name to be connected with the Equitable? I guess they must have found the money. Who pays the officers of these insurance companies a larger and fatter salary to-day than the president of the United States gets? Oh, well, that makes no difference; perhaps they ought to have more. Poor fellows, you can see the strong lines of poverty which want (to get more) has written in their faces.

One brother, writing in a recent issue of the HERALD, quotes the well-known passage which has worried the sluggard and would-be preacher and anti-insurer, from the time Nimrod turned hunter and left his wife to struggle with the cold realities of the world to the present day. "He that provideth not for his house is worse than an infidel." The Lord requires that the husband be the head of the house; and all teaching, so far as the directing of the house is concerned, should be done by him, and for which he will be held responsible. If life insurance is legitimate, then he should by all means advocate it. If it is false, and he "provides" his "house" with a stock of error, he will likewise be held responsible. I have given the passage referred to very careful thought, and can not see where it can be applied to the man who fails to take out an insurance policy. If it can be so applied, will some one explain as to what its bearing is and will be upon an invalid "provider" whom the insurance agent would not allow? In that I think I am asking a fair question.

I have stated my objections to life insurance, and especially the present system, in as plain a manner as possible, and present to the reader the thoughts suggested without expecting to influence any one. For it is not likely that we are going to change our opinion on the subject, as it is so near our temporal needs. Neither is it likely that we will be convinced and persuaded to the system, for the reason that we have long ago fixed our determination not to do so. Thus as a race we are made up very much of a certain strata of set convictions. It is natural for me to hate insurance, being of an extreme radical mind, and democratic to the core, while others being constituted differently can not help but see the question in an altogether different light.

O Truth! thou veiled goddess who stands before the world enshrouded in mystery, unveil thy face to thy supplicating children, let thy brilliancy illuminate our existence, until the clouds of ignorance and blindness are lifted from the human heart, and a knowledge of things as they are dawns in full glory over the pathway of benighted man!

POLYGAMY AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Under the above heading the Literary Digest dated June 16, 1906, discusses one of the peculiarities of the marriage question that has been met in foreign lands by one of the religious bodies, and especially it gives account of the way one of the missionaries of that sect views the situation. His view of the matter shows how men hold that they are compelled by circumstances, in the prosecution of their proselyting work, to advocate certain allowances and to tolerate the customs and practices of people which they would look upon with great horror under other circumstances. And perhaps they would make no allowance if the same conditions were met by other proselyting bodies rather than by themselves.

The Digest editor says that because Mr. Smoot's church has practiced polygamy, therefore good Christians have demonstrated, also have petitioned Congress to cast him out, and that some of these people "may be interested in learning that foreign missionaries are receiving into their own churches people who are guilty of the same practice, and are allowing them to continue in such relations." Then the editor quotes the words of the Reverend H. H. White, a Presbyterian missionary in China, who boldly advocates such allowance in the following words:

"Inasmuch as when one in ignorance of the law of God has the responsibilities of a husband to more than one wife or concubine, to retract his course would be more sinful than to remain in it; therefore, in the case of apparently genuine repentance on the part of such a one, he should be received into the church with due instruction as to the heinousness of his sin, warning as to the future, and being reckoned as ineligible to hold office in the church."

Thus Mr. White advocates receiving such men into his church but with the instruction as to the sinfulness of polygamy and with the warning that they marry no more. But he goes further and says that for the polygamist to dismiss his wives "is to make him a liar and a violator of solemn covenants," and as for the women and children he says "it involves them in sorrow, disgrace, and ruin in this life and well-nigh inevitable damnation in the world to come."

For this statement he gives the following reasons:

In taking these women as wives or concubines the man assumes responsibility for their welfare which he can not evade without sin, and sin made more grievous by the awful consequences thereof. What can he do with her? Send her back home? He will have all he can do to escape the vengeance of her family for disgracing her, without expecting them to assume the burden of her support and the odium of her disgrace. . . . Can he not set her aside on an alimony, some American will say. And then what is she? Not a wife, nor a widow, not a maid; what but a helpless, defenseless, tempted, degraded, embittered woman, a bit of humanity at the mercy of the unprincipled.

But in advocating the course he does Mr. White claims that it is only temporary and that it does not condone the sin, nor would it open the way to greater evil to admit the few cases until the people having those customs become acquainted with Christian laws and ideas as to marriage and moral conduct. He says:

Nor is there any practical danger of its setting a precedent or lowering the standard of the church in China. The cases are few, and even when they are admitted, so stringent is the sinfulness of the relation impressed that the isolated cases are a warning rather than an encouragement.

The question might be asked as to what would missionaries of the Reorganized Church do if they were brought in contact with such conditions in foreign lands. What would our General Conference do, if the matter were referred to the body after such experiences by our ministry?

The following quotation from Mr. White shows that he takes like ground with us as to the polygamy of Abraham and other ancients, for he writes like this, saying:

We believe that polygamy was a sin in Old Testament times as in New Testament times, yet God accepted and honored the faith of Abraham, Jacob, David, and other polygamists. He did not thereby justify their polygamy, but accepted them as true men in spite of the fact that through ignorance or weakness they had fallen in with prevailing custom. God did not exclude them from the church, and we have the word of the Lord Jesus Christ himself that these polygamists are now in the kingdom of heaven. Shall we be wiser than God?

Thus he does not leave any real comfort to the latter-day advocates of polygamy, as to its continuance among civilized people, those who have complete opportunity of knowing what is right as to conduct and doctrine, who have not the excuse of ignorance, nor because of centuries of tribal custom in lands where Christ was never heard of until in recent years. PERFECT WILL OF GOD.

Be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God.—Romans 12:2.

It seems from this that God has a "perfect will," and that there must come to man a "transformation" of the mind, from the ways of the world, in order that he may understand and be willing to apply it to his own life. "Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." This is from the Lord himself and tells the same thing—that God's will is to be done "in earth." It points to the fact that God's will is done "in heaven."

The ways of the world are contrary to the will of God, hence lead men away from God's plans, which must be detrimental to man. Hence the necessity for a transformation from the ways of the world to an acceptance and application of God's will.

If we compare his works with man's works, we see at once their superiority, which bespeaks the magnitude and grandeur of his mind; therefore the product of the superior mind will also be the better method, having for its result to make man understand the divine will. He comprehends the "end from the beginning." "The works were finished from the foundation of the world." The plans were laid, prepared, perfected. A perfect means was designed, the product of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. They planned it, designed it, knew just what would occur. That plan must be applied, or they "labor in vain who build."

Jesus Christ came to save his people from their sins. They were made his by accepting him—his methods. For "as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God." (John 1:12.)

By walking "in the light as he was in the light," does his blood cleanse us from "all sin." (1 John 1:7.) We understand "walking in the light" to mean, doing "his will," keeping his commandments, making a practical demonstration of his commandments.

We have a fearless demonstration of his love for us, when he consented to come to this world and meet all the adverse conditions which he knew awaited him here, for he was "as a lamb slain from the foundation of the world." He was "delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God." (Acts 2:23.) He knew that many would not receive his message. He knew that he would be slain, but he also knew that some would receive his message and become the accepted sons of God, and he knew there was not then, nor has there come since, any other means provided for man's perfection. He was God's sample of what he would have us be. He brought the way, the truth, and the life to men. His command was: "Be ye perfect." By what standard of measurement? Surely none other than the gospel, if it is the "power of God unto salvation." "That which is to be hath already been." No benefit can come to us, only in the way designed of God. (See Isaiah 58:1-12, also Psalm 1:1-12.) "Therefore, receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls."—James 1:21.

In the gospel law is contained all that relates to man, physically, mentally, and spiritually. "If ye would enjoy my intelligence, be ye mine and mine only." You have the privilege of doing otherwise.

To have the benefits of divine purposes we must comply with the terms or fail. All who desire celestial glory, must observe celestial law. They may make other choice if they wish. "And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:5.

"If ye are prepared ye shall not fear." "That which is governed by law, is also perfected by law, and preserved and sanctified by the same."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:8.

"Ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's."—2 Corinthians 6:20. If ye bring forth fruit then is my Father glorified. (See Luke 3:5-18 inclusive.) St. John 15:2: "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away." So we belong to God, body and spirit. "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein."—Psalm 24:1.

We brought nothing into this world; and surely we can take nothing out. God gave us all we have, that is, he made us stewards over it, and demands that we render an account of our stewardship in time, as well as in eternity. (See Doctrine and Covenants 72:1.) "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, might, mind, and strength" and "thy neighbor as thyself." Upon these two commandments hang "all the law."

This, then, clearly calls for a consecration of self, with all we have, for the purpose of carrying out the divine will. "The law of the Lord is perfect." The Lord works by law. "He does not walk in crooked paths" nor adopt any uncertain methods. "It must needs be done in mine own way."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:2. "It is wisdom in me; therefore a commandment I give unto you, that ye shall organize yourselves, and appoint every man his stewardship."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:2.

This was given to the church, the body of Christ, to be executed by the body through the head. God honors his own law. "It must needs be done in mine own way," I repeat. "This is the way, that I, the Lord have decreed to provide for my saints: that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low"; or, in other words, he proposes to make them equal, not that each one shall have the same amount, but according to "their wants and needs, if they are just."

I think this law will be put in operation through the channel designed of the Lord, namely—the Twelve and the Bishopric. "Unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to."—Doctrine and Covenants 126:10. Yes, and just as fast as the people of the church comply with the law, as asked for by the Bishopric, more details will be given, but be assured that God will not make us run if we are not willing to walk. Let the Saints everywhere live up to the law as stated by the Bishopric, be pure in heart. Oh, that means a great deal!

We can be Zion—a part of it in California just as well as at Independence, Missouri. If we are Zion in heart—in deed, and of a truth—we need not fear. This is the preparation God wants us to make. The parts of the great temple fit, they were designed to fit; if we are wedded to God and to his plans for us, when we come together we will fit, every one in his own place in the great building of Christ. If the law of Christ has redeemed us, it will perfect us and no other will. If we go to the place of Zion and we are like the man at the wedding—without the wedding garment—the righteousness of saints, being at the place will benefit us NOTHING. "What shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world and lose his soul?" "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God."

"In observing the law of God, we have no need to break the law of the land."

The law of the land demands a statement from each person, once a year, of his financial standing. Why is this? there is a need for it. There is a need for it in the church, as often as we have gains or losses, that those in charge of this department of work may be informed as to the standing of the church financially; then if all are integral parts of Zion the Bishop could make a call for so much funds—to do a work commanded of the Lord—and be sure the work would not be hindered. We need have no fear, if we are the pure in heart, built up on the commandments of God. "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise."—Doctrine and Covenants 81:3.

Let us do according to what "is written," that we may be accepted of him no matter where we are.

"Zion and Her Law."

When Zion is built up and "her law" fully carried out, none will have occasion to complain of the oppression of the present competitive system of finance or the greed of monopolists; for these will have passed away. Until that time, there is likely to be suffering and dissatisfaction imposed upon Saints and others by worldly methods of financiering.

So the children of Zion are longing for the execution of "her [Zion's] law." But, like the children of Israel in Egypt, they may have to wait awhile yet for their deliverance. They may be compelled, respecting the execution of this law, to "stand still and see the salvation of the Lord." Difficult task. But the Lord has said: "And let those commandments which I have given concerning Zion and her law be executed and fulfilled, after her redemption."—Doctrine and Covenants 102:10.

No execution and no fulfillment of those commandments "which I have given concerning Zion and her law" until after her redemption.

Manner of Redemption.

Zion's "redemption" means the restoration of the land to its rightful owners. Proof: "This is the blessing which I have promised . . . your redemption and the redemption of your brethren; even their restoration to the land of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 100:8. And while the Lord had said, "Purchase all the lands by money which can be purchased for money, in the regions round about the land which I have appointed to be the land of Zion"; also, "Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now" (Doctrine and Covenants 102:2); yet the redemption of Zion will finally be completed in this manner:

Behold, I say unto you, The redemption of Zion must needs come by power; therefore I will raise up unto my people a man, who shall lead them like as Moses led the children of Israel, for ye are the children of Israel, and of the seed Abraham; and ye must needs be led out of bondage by power, and with a stretched out arm; and as your fathers were led at the first, even so shall the redemption of Zion be.— Doctrine and Covenants 100: 3.

If there is not a display of power in the redemption of Zion very similar to that which occurred in the Mosaic dispensation, the above comparison is unfortunate and misleading; nor is there much consolation in the language following:

Therefore, let not your hearts faint, for I say not unto you as I said unto your fathers, Mine angel shall go up before you, but not my presence, but I say unto you, Mine angels shall go before you, and also my presence, and in time ye shall possess the goodly land.

Query: Will we ever possess the “goodly land” for our occupancy as a people, until the Lord displays the power promised?

The Fishing River revelation provides that the Saints shall overcome selfishness and learn obedience (paragraph 2); wait for the redemption of Zion until the elders receive a “great endowment,” with repetition of the promise that the Lord will “fight your battles” (paragraphs 3 and 4). But first the Lord’s army is to become “very great and be sanctified” (paragraph 9).

The late revelation says of the gathering, that it “must be done in accordance with the revelation given to the church upon Fishing River.”

Very well; if it “must be done” in that manner, our duty is clear. We should labor diligently that the Lord’s army become “very great”; that as individuals we may become “sanctified”; as elders, prepare ourselves to receive the “great endowment” promised; and, as a people, be prepared to “possess them [the lands] according to the laws of consecration” which the Lord has given in Doctrine and Covenants 102: 8.

But is it not also written in the Fishing River revelation that “Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom”?

The language, “built up,” evidently refers to the city of Zion. Such language would hardly apply to the people of Zion, “the pure in heart.” Such a people must be had before Zion, the city, can be “built up.” Of course, “her law” could not be “executed and fulfilled” until the city is built, or in process of construction.

HOW ZION WILL BE “BUILT UP.”

For the gathering of his saints to stand upon Mount Zion, which shall be the city New Jerusalem; which city shall be built, beginning at the Temple Lot.— Doctrine and Covenants 83: 1. Verily, this is the word of the Lord, that the city New Jerusalem shall be built by the gathering of the saints, beginning at this place, even the place of the temple.— Doctrine and Covenants 83: 2.

The building of the city of Zion will begin, therefore, by the erection of the temple.

WHEN ZION SHALL BE “BUILT UP.”

As the building of the city will be cotemporaneous with the erection of the temple, the time for the accomplishment of this work is indicated, approximately, by the following language, from the revelation quoted above, viz.: “Which temple shall be reared in this generation; for verily, this generation shall not all pass away until an house shall be built unto the Lord,” etc.

As the Lord has promised to reveal the exact date for the accomplishment of this work, the above approximate intimation of the time ought to be quite satisfactory. “It shall be revealed unto you from on high, WHEN the city of the New Jerusalem shall be prepared.”— Doctrine and Covenants 42: 3.

The only thing that need concern us is that we obey all laws that are now operative and discharge faithfully every known duty. In this way, we may hasten the time when Zion shall be “built up” and “her law executed and fulfilled.”

WHERE ARE WE AT?

A great deal has been said in the Herald of late about gathering, consecration, parables, shadows, lions, banking-stock, etc., until the mind becomes almost bewildered, and we are led to ask the question, “Where are we at?” To whom shall we look for a true rendition of the law which should form the true basis upon which to proceed and base our actions in order that we might be in harmony with the spirit and letter of the law? One thing, however, is gratifying to see; that all parties are permitted to be heard who may vary in their views, thus additional light be given.

The suppression of anything which may be out of harmony with the editor’s view is certainly not very commendable, to say the least of it. For an editor to say that a minister sent out by the voice of the church, and in whom the church has placed sufficient confidence to be a general representative of the church, empowered and delegated with the responsibility of being an exponent and advocate of the faith—for him to say that he is unqualified to give expression to the principles of truth in writing, but is authorized to do so in preaching, is somewhat bordering onto inconsistency.

I am somewhat inclined to believe that all writers on the above-named subjects have taken more or less extravagant views of the questions under consideration, and unless the act of suppression is again exercised in my behalf I desire to be heard through the columns of the Herald on certain points, which may have been unnoticed.

The banking system has of late been the subject of severe criticism, hence will notice that first in comparison with other institutions set up for profit and gain; if one is wrong the others are. One writer says that, "so far as the matter of bank stock is concerned, there certainly is no evidence presented that sustains the claim that banking is a legitimate business under the law."

While I may to a certain extent agree with the brother, yet I should have to take the position that it is nowhere pronounced illegitimate.

The legitimacy or illegitimacy of any institution conducted on honest principles, and by honorable methods, is nowhere spoken against in the scriptures; but it is the dishonest and disreputable that are condemned. Just because one institution may be of the latter class is all of that caliber. I believe it is conceded by most writers that the banking system is a means of convenience. So is the grocery or dry-goods store, or departmental store. Would you expect a man to invest his means in the grocery or dry-goods business, pay heavy insurance, big store rent, hire a number of clerks, and all work hard just for your convenience, and without any profit or return for service done you? Certainly you would not; but you would expect a banker and his clerks to do it, eh? One is a convenience and accommodation; so is the other. One is sanctioned and indorsed, yea, even commanded by the Lord in Doctrine and Covenants 57:4, in order that he (Sidney Gilbert) may obtain money to buy lands and other necessities for the good of the Saints, thus recognizing the individual responsibility of men; and if true of one institution, why not of others, if conducted without "fraud," and for the benefit and convenience of the church, as well as self, for the purpose of making an honest living, and to add to the comfort and convenience of others?

The question of usury as quoted so frequently by the writers is a very difficult question to handle, when considered in the sense that one writer gives it, "anything taken for the use of." Let us look that question squarely in the face. A man invests all his money in setting up a bank in order to accommodate the public; and this does not mean the poor alone but the rich also. Supposing Mr. A has a chance to buy a piece of property, either through a forced sale or otherwise. He goes to the banker, or perchance to the Bishop, and asks for a loan that he may buy this property, because it is way below its actual value, and he sees an opportunity to gain something in the transaction. Is that dishonest or fraudulent? Certainly not. Yet that banker must loan Mr. A the use of his money and get nothing for the use of it. While Mr. A is making a big thing out of his deal, the banker must stand behind his counter, accommodate Mr. A and others, get some bad customers on his hands, and some trouble in making his collections; all this he must do, but must take nothing for his work.

Let us take another. A man invests his money in a mercantile institution and to guard against loss by bad accounts, insurance, clerk hire, and other inci-dentals, he appraises his goods at a fair margin, so as to have some left for his own living after his expenses are met, and this also to accommodate the public. Nothing is said against this kind of usury, and yet to me it appears to be the worst of the two. What you buy in the store, you buy for consumption, and can make nothing in return by it. The other you have the opportunity of making a profit and increase by.

We can still go on with our illustrations. We may hire two day-laborers and pay each one dollar and fifty cents per day. One of them will take an interest in his work, and earn his wages by doing a good day's work; the other will simply be longing for quitting time to come, and does not care a great deal how much or how little he does. Is he not receiving something without giving an equivalent? It is worse than usury. We may hire a mechanic to do a piece of work at a good salary; but when done, it is only half done, the material is wasted and the job spoiled. His pay is worse that usury. Hence, the belief that the poor are equally guilty if not more so in taking that which is worse than usury.

Let us consider this side when we talk and write of usury and speculation. Then let us pass on to land agencies, whose purpose it is to advance the prices of land, and extract fictitious prices from the poor tiller of the soil, in order to enrich their own pocket, without giving value received, and whose aim is to conceal the true qualities of the land or property to be sold, and thus prey upon the ignorance or confidence of the purchaser. Why! the banker with his usury does not begin to compare with this class.

Then let us look with modest astonishment upon the lawyers and doctors who are authorized by law to charge exorbitant rates for their services, and all the rest fall into silent insignificance, and usury is no name for it; and yet these things are all carried on by those who profess to be followers of the meek and lowly Jesus.

Then let us take a hasty glance, because more than that would sicken us, at those who, either rich or poor, take advantage of the law of bankruptcy in order to escape paying just debts, and thus defrauding their creditors, and which we were reminded of in an editorial in HERALD for July 4, 1906, which says: "Congress has enacted a general law of bankruptcy, by which the unfortunate debtor is enabled to free himself from the burdens of his debts, if he finds that he can not recover his fortunes and pay his debts. It is the equivalent of the year of jubilee freedom under the old law."

Whether this is intended to indorse such actions is not stated; but if not I fail to see the force of it or its application, and hope that none who have entered into covenant relation with God will be found guilty of such action, and disgrace themselves and the church too.

Is it any wonder that the Lord should speak to his servant Joseph Luff and tell us that, "My covenant with Israel is not forgotten, nor is my will slow to perform; but to whom shall I speak, and by whom shall my counsel be observed?"

The day is fast approaching when the pure in heart will be manifest and a dividing line drawn; and we should learn to discriminate between evil and that which leads to evil, and that in which there is no evil in itself only so far as men may abuse their privileges and their individual responsibility before God.

INTENDED HELPS TO THE MINISTRY.

"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

This text has lost none of its force by the lapse of time. It is applicable to every deacon, teacher, priest, and elder in the church of God to-day. The priesthood conferred is honored, and the office held magnified only as each occupant meets with divine approval. And necessary to divine acceptance it is quite essential that those chosen to act should do their utmost by study to qualify themselves for the work.

We believe some have in the past foolishly supposed there was no necessity at all for an elder to study in order to become a preacher. Inspiration took the place of study so that there was no need for the latter, it being all inspiration. From our viewpoint it requires both study and inspiration to make a successful preacher, and we believe this is the general impression. God will inspire when we "open our mouth," other things being equal; but when we omit the "other things" the inspiration is lacking. No telling how many have been disappointed and given up the work of the ministry, to which they were truly called, because they thought there were but two requisites to preaching, namely, ordination and the opening of the mouth; and failing to preach fluently in the language and power of angels, they began to doubt their calling and wondered why they could not preach. Simply because they had no message. The knowledge necessary to the production of the sermon was conspicuously absent. Preaching is based on intelligent knowledge. The inspiration of the Holy Spirit promised is, "He shall bring all things to your remembrance." Unless the knowledge of truth is stored away in our mind there is nothing for the Spirit to work on—nothing within our memory to recall.

With these introductory remarks we desire to offer a few suggestions for the consideration and benefit of the inexperienced, hoping to aid some struggling fellow laborer on to greater degrees of success.

Years of experience and observation create within us a sympathy for the newly-ordained deacon, teacher, priest, or elder; as also the discouraged ones, who, laboring as best they know, yet feel themselves inefficient workmen. Gradually their zeal slackens and many die for the lack of help in the hour of need. Others, more courageous, hold on, and meet with fair success. The credit, however, is especially due to the courage of the individual.

We regret the absence of the school of the prophets. If such an institution existed, our ministry from the highest to the lowest officer would receive thorough instruction, removing the incompetency now existing. Such a ministerial house of learning is provided for, and until it is established we see but little chance for any great improvement. We can not suppose the Lord has designed some other means of bringing about the perfection of the ministry. Consequently we shall hail with delight the day of its establishment. In the meanwhile we must plod along as best we can. As it is, the church is doing nothing to educate its ministry. Each one is left to educate himself. We believe the church owes this duty to her ministry, and until such a "school" is established incompetency will exist.

Coming now directly to our purpose, we take it for granted that every officer in the church believes it his duty to preach when occasions demands. We have heard elders as well as deacons say they were not called to preach, but they make a mistake. If God called them it is their duty to preach as best they can, as much as to perform any other part of their work. If God did not call them, then they are excused of everything, but to refuse to use our priesthood in preaching the gospel means that we are unfaithful insofar as we refuse. We are supposed to discharge all the duties of our office, unless physically disabled; then we should be willing always to do our best, which, when done, will never dishonor the office nor him who holds it. The will to preach is the first essential with many of our local men. Success is impossible where the desire to succeed does not exist. Finding the will one is almost sure to find a way.

We now draw attention to some few things, which, if observed, will materially aid professional as well as amateur speakers in the making and delivery of a sermon.

First, you must establish the truth in your own mind before you can hope to tell others about it. One can not teach others what he does not know himself. Familiarize yourself with the word of the Lord. Commence with the principles of the gospel. Study them thoroughly. Then take up the Christian conduct, the organization of the church, the apostasy, the restoration, prophecy, and every other subject associated with the redemption of man.
Investigate separately and be sure to understand what you say about any one subject. Have your proof at hand always. Leave vexed or unsettled questions alone. The simplest preaching is the best.

If a beginner, do not start out with the idea of doing something astonishingly great. Be content to accomplish the ordinary, and do not imagine that you have to talk an hour and a half to preach a good sermon. When you enter the stand, be sure you have something to say. Use your best judgment and pray for light in the selection of your subject. If led to speak differently after entering the stand follow the Spirit's leading, but do not leave your subject unless you are sure it is the Spirit's leading. In any event, when you have exhausted your store of knowledge, do not repeat, but sit down regardless of the clock. The notion of preaching big, exhibition sermons is always fatal. It haunts you all through the discourse and almost invariably produces confusion of mind, which destroys freedom of utterance. There will come great, or at least greater, sermons in every elder's career, sermons that stand out for vigor and beauty, distinctly above his ordinary sermon, but they come without any undue pressure, the offspring of happy moments which found his powers at their best. Hunting away in strange corners of the Bible for some curious text is a bad habit; the same also of the reading of a lengthy chapter prior to commencing the sermon. The latter indicates fear of speaking upon the part of the preacher, and unconsciously he advertises what he laboriously tries to hide. Do not attempt to make a big spread. Use commonplace language and speak as if you were addressing children from five to fifteen years of age, without recourse to baby talk.

Do not try to imitate another speaker. There is no need for it. Speak what you know in the way you know it. If you hear some speaker advance a good idea and you sense it, you may adopt it. If you do not sense it clearly enough to express it in your own words you had better leave it alone. No man has a patent on ideas, so all are at liberty to gather what they can intelligently use. Be sufficiently independent to use your brains and follow your own judgment. If you had no brains there would be good excuse for imitating others, but in that case such a one would need to abandon forever the idea of becoming a preacher. Reading, thinking, and observing are essential to the making of a good preacher. He who does neither and pretends to preach is a mere parrot.

Speak slowly and distinctly, just loud enough to be heard nicely. Many sermons are rendered unintelligible because of the loud, boisterous manner of the speaker. Others talk with such rapidity that it is impossible to distinguish one word from another. Liberty of this kind is not appreciated, and no speaker should allow himself to become boisterous or speak so fast that his talk becomes a senseless jumbling of words. Most people desire to hear, and appreciate clear utterances. Again, do not key yourself up to a monstrosely high pitch. It is painful to listen to a speaker who has formed that habit. Speak as you would in ordinary conversation in a moderate tone, raising and lowering the voice as may be necessary. Avoid speaking in a singing manner. Some have that habit, which is a most disagreeable one. Speakers addicted to any one of these curious freaks may not be conscious of their bad effects, but such things are readily noticed by the people, and their pleasure in listening is marred by the peculiarity of the speaker, which does not need to exist.

Stereotyped phrases and hackneyed expressions should be avoided. Whenever you have occasion to repeat a thought add variety by at least an exchange of words. Study synonyms and enlarge your vocabulary if necessary, rather than repeat set phrases. They are objectionable to the sensitive ear since they do not command the thought of the people, and are of no practical benefit whatever to the speaker. Indeed the tendency is to harm. Speak as correctly as you know how and avoid exaggeration. Many public speakers have contracted this dangerous habit, and find it hard to correct themselves. The story is told of a young minister being severely reprimanded for exaggerating in a most ridiculous manner. Acknowledging his guilt and expressing himself as very sorry he added in all seriousness: "My mistake has indeed caused me to shed barrels of tears." Exaggeration is not necessary. It misrepresents rather than emphasizes.

Illustrations are helpful when not too numerous or drawn out too long. They should be strongly suggestive, and vividly portray the desired truths. But little gesture is required, according to the best authorities on oratory. Too much gesture makes the speaker more attractive than the truths he utters, thus defeating the very object of preaching. Reminiscences are also to be used sparingly.

Preaching has in it two elements, viz.: Truths and personality. In no case should the personality of the speaker exceed the power of the truth to attract. Do not forget that you are preaching Christ. The latter requires the stronger emphasis, and for that reason gesture, reminiscences, humor, etc., are to be used sparingly.—Editorial, Canadian Messenger, September 1, 1906.

THE HOLY LAND AWAKENING.

William T. Stead would have more interesting conditions to describe were he to write "If Christ came to Palestine" than he had when he wrote "If Christ came to Chicago." The Holy Land is now experiencing an industrial revolution, and having slumbered for some eighteen centuries is awakened to its commercial possibilities.

Much that has preserved for Palestine its inexpressible charm has lain in its utter disregard of the world’s progress. It has taken no note, until quite recently, of the passing of years and centuries, remaining to all intents and purposes in virtually the same condition which marked the life of Christ.

But a decade has been sufficient to create a new Palestine. The railway from Jaffa to Jerusalem was opened in 1892, since which time the upward gaining strength each year. Recent consular reports prove the present commercial activity. Twenty years ago the revenue of the customs house at Jaffa was $50,000; last year it was $300,000. The exports and imports for Palestine for the past year aggregated $4,047,000, an increase of $308,000 over the previous year. The imports alone aggregated $2,258,000. The exports of oranges increased ten per cent, the value of this export last year being $558,000. Watermelons, grapes, and wine also figured extensively in the exports. The Palestine imports embraced for the past year hardware, petroleum, cotton goods, sugar, and building materials. The latter go almost exclusively to Jerusalem and Jaffa, showing that both cities are increasing in population.

Nor is the awakening confined to these two cities. At Gaza the government is to build a sea jetty for the protection of shipping. With this improvement that city, now numbering forty thousand souls, thinks it will radically gain both in population and in wealth. Beersheba at present has but fifty dwellings, but its people believe it has a future and the governor is doing his best to encourage building. A carriage-road has been constructed from Beersheba to Hebron, and these points are connected by telegraph. A carriage-road is being constructed from Jerusalem to Nablous, the ancient capital of Samaria, to be completed within a year. An easier, though slightly longer road than the present one, is being finished by the close of this year. It will for the most part follow the ancient roadway, the scene of the parable of the man who went down from Jerusalem to Jericho and fell among thieves.

The railroad locomotive has opened the way for improved farming machinery until to-day the turbanned Bedouins look on in wonderment at American mowers and thrashers. For centuries the grain has been gleaned by hand, following the manner depicted in the book of Ruth, but the picturesque custom is being supplanted by the occidental method. The railroad is now prosperous and earning a good return on the capital invested. In 1904 the receipts were $171,000, of which sixty-one per cent was profit. The number of passengers conveyed was 9,555 first-class and 84,569 second-class. Twenty-five thousand tons of merchandise were hauled.

The Americanization of the Orient has begun in earnest, at last. The next ten years should find even greater changes. Students of history and theology may wish the old order to have remained, but commercialism has seen the opportunity to make another dollar, and such opportunities are never rejected.

Preachers’ Children.

I wish it was not always quoted,
That a preacher’s boys are bad—
Even worse, some love to have it,
Than that godless skeptic’s lad.

I’m a preacher’s child, it happens,
And I’ll try to half explain
How, when he’s at work for others,
That the children play the game.

First he must do some deep thinking,
Fill with Bible truth his mind,
And condense to picturesque language
The chains of thought as they unwind.

And while busy sermonizing—
Bang!—a chair-back strikes the floor.
He looks up both vexed and startled,
But the scuffle takes the door.

‘Stop it now!’ but there ’tis ended,
For his thoughts are caught away.
He must keep right at his subject,
For to-morrow’s preaching day.

Now his thoughts come clear and striking,
Text recalled with stirring force.
Slam!—the door goes; fixings jingle,
The romps forgot again, of course.

‘Now, then, children, you must mind me,
And I’ll see you later on.’
But they know he’ll not remember,
They have learned the old, old song.

For the children watch the signal
Which they see in father’s eye,
While he’s looking they’ll obey him,
And be naughty on the sly.

So the preacher’s ear is deafened,
Like a sawyer’s at his mill,
Even sleeping while it’s singing,
But will awaken if it’s still.

Boisterous children bring a weakness
To the preacher’s sermons deep;
For the people see his slackness,
And for want of interest sleep.

“In subjection have thy children,”
Is the Scripture’s strict command.
If we swerve from this we’ll suffer
As so many through the land.
Why did judgment come to Eli?
Why did God’s wrath kindle hot?
“His sons are vile,” God spoke to Samuel,
“And the priest restrained them not.”

Take the rod, and, using wisdom,
Who can find a better plan?
’Tis the way that God has given
In his message sent to man.

Our Trip to Tiona.

Dear Sister Walker: So many of the Saints in America, especially in the East, have asked me to write my impressions of things here, that I thought I would try. I send this to you, and if you think it worth publishing, all right. I find, though, it is one thing to receive impressions, and another thing to write them down. This mission has had such an able correspondent that I feel loath to attempt it. But to keep my word I will try this once, anyway. I do not plan, however, to take up that part of the work until it devolves upon me. Probably what I would write has already been written, anyway. But still I know when the word came of our appointment to the South Sea Island Mission, I tried to piece together all I knew about the Islands, and I found my knowledge was very meager indeed, notwithstanding so much has been written about them. So if I should chance to repeat some things it will do no harm and possibly it may be new to a few.

I hardly know what to choose to write about. Everything here seems so new, strange, and odd to me. The trees, the flowers, the birds, the fish, the houses, customs, people, and language, all are so different from those I have been accustomed to. But since Sr. Emma has written of our arrival at Papeete, I will try to tell of our trip to Tiona.

Tiona is the native word for Zion, and is a Latter Day Saint village about five miles out in the country from Papeete. We had been looking forward for a week to the outing, as an opportunity to see more of the island, and also to see how the natives lived when away from the restrictions of the city.

The brethren had sent word that they would furnish our food, but if we needed dishes to bring them along, as they had none. So early Saturday afternoon we had our grips packed and were all ready when our “span” drove up. I do not think this account would be complete if I did not mention our “team.” The carriage was an ordinary two-seated surrey; but, oh, the horses! Such scraggy, scrayny, little, half-starved things as they were. Every bone seemed almost protruding through the skin, and they were not larger than a one-year-old colt should be, though we were told that one was four and the other twenty years old. I am sure had there been an agent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals around we never would have been allowed to take that ride!!

On the way we stopped for a short call on a native princess who had sent word she wanted to see us. Although her parents had been deposed when the French took possession, she was still called “the Princess.” We found her very cordial, and much interested in the welfare of the natives, helping to locate many of those who had been rendered homeless by the recent tidal wave. She spoke English well, also French; but when describing the storm would sometimes lapse into her native tongue. Her tale of the sufferings of some of the natives from other islands was pitiful indeed; their homes; clothing, food, everything, washed away. In some instances whole islands had been submerged, and the people barely escaped by climbing tall coconut-trees. When the water receded it carried away even the soil, thus killing the trees and cutting off the food supply. Here the people remained for a long time in a half-starved condition, subsisting on fish, until a boat was sent and brought them to Papeete, naked and hungry. I could have listened to her talk all the afternoon with pleasure; but we remembered that our “prancing steeds” were waiting, so accepting her invitation to “come again” we were soon on our way.

I would like to have driven slowly and enjoyed the ride; but no, there is one thing the natives will not submit to, and that is to keep horses that have to walk. Ours were kept on the “dead run” as we would say, up hill and down dale until we got to the place of stopping. The only time they stopped before this was when one of them shook his wisened little head clear out of his bridle. So all that I saw of the island was a fleeting view of the ocean on one side, and tall mountain peaks on the other, their tops hidden in the fleecy clouds. On the slopes of the near-by hills were large groves of cocoanut-trees, and along the road were patches of bananas and sweet potatoes. We passed a few bungalows, and a few nice cottages. One pretty spot was a Chinese vegetable garden; and the summer residence of the American ex-consul, Mr. Doty, was pointed out to us as we whizzed by. An old cow landed high and dry close beside the road, a few fallen trees and debris scattered around, were gentle reminders of the recent storm. But for the most part a high bank running along beside the road prevented much damage from the water.

It was not long before the dripping horses were pulled up, and Uncle Joseph said, “Here we are. This is Tiona.” Nothing but one lone Chinaman’s house in sight. We found the rest of the journey was to be on foot, for this was Mount Zion, and the Zion part was on the mount, and it was quite too steep for a carriage; but when we reached the top we were reminded of these words:

“Ye who would behold the beautiful and the grand Minglest in harmony on Nature’s face, Ascend our rocky path.
Let your foot fail not with weariness, for on their tops
The beauty and grandeur spread wide beneath Shall make thee to forget the steep and toilsome way
By which thou camest.”

The path wound up the hill between the tall coconut-trees until we came to the village, the view from which was beautiful. We could look across the groves of coconut-trees, through which we had just passed, to the ocean beyond. Near the shore the water was shallow, and here and there were fishermen wading about catching fish. Then came the coral reef, which is so dangerous to boating. The waves were breaking over it with a thunderous roar. Beyond the reef the water is very deep, and of a deep blue color. At quite a distance from the shore could be seen the mountainous island of Moorea, the white fleecy clouds resting in the ridges far below its highest peaks.

The village consists of a dozen or more bungalows, or native houses, scattered among the trees. The Saints, men, women, and children,—yes, and I might add cats, dogs, hens, and pigs, were all out to meet us! I never in my life saw such a hospitable people. One family had turned themselves out of their house, bag and baggage, for us; and it was plain to be seen that the whole village had been ransacked for the two beds, the chairs, table, and curtains that it contained.

All the houses were made of plaited cocoanut branches, laid over a wooden frame. On the outside the long ends left hanging gave them a very rough, sort of pig-sty appearance; but on the inside it was all smooth and seemed just like living in a house made of brown matting—ceilings, walls, and floor. They have no windows or doors, but for a door prop up one section of the wall.

How nice and cool and shady it all seemed, after the hot, dusty drive! Something of the same feeling came over me as when entering the reunion camp-ground at Silver Lake, Massachusetts. A sort of glad, happy, homesick feeling, that Saints have when they get together. One could not see greater love and happiness among any people than that which beamed from the faces of the natives as they squatted around on the ground in front of us, as we sat rocking by the open “wall.” They seem to think everything of “Josepha and Ema,” as they call Uncle Joseph and Aunt Emma; but they try to be very careful to show no partiality between us. We have learned to love their dark, swarthy faces already. One could hardly help it, they are so kind-hearted and ready to do anything for you. Soon one of the brethren brought a couple of water-cocoanuts. Talk about “water to a thirsty” soul; it does not compare with a water-cocoanut. That is a luxury people in America can not have, as they will keep good for only two or three days after picking. But what is more refreshing, when one is warm and thirsty, than to whack off the top of one of these, and drink one's fill? For, strange as it may seem, no difference how hot the climate, the water or milk in a coconut is always cool.

DEN MOINES, IOWA, September 3, 1906.

Dear Herald: The reunion season of 1906 is soon past, and the many reunions held have been of value to those who have attended. The gathering at Nauvoo will not soon be forgotten by those present there.

Our Des Moines District reunion closed Sunday, September 2. The outlook during the summer and at the opening was not encouraging; but those present at the close were unanimous in favor of holding another meeting in 1907. The meeting opened on Saturday, August 25, on the same ground at Rhodes occupied by the camp three years ago. Herman C. Smith was present during the first part of the week, and James McKiernan remained throughout. The attendance was not large, but the meeting a success in every way. Several of the aged ones of the district were present: these were Bro. and Sr. W. C. Nirk of Rhodes, and Sr. Rachel Smith, who came into the church in 1868, and Sr. Paulina Park who came in 1877. Each bore a strong testimony, the same that they have borne so many years, and these testimonies have much weight with the younger ones. The missionary force of the district present were, Elders M. H. Cook, J. S. Roth, W. Christy, and S. M. Reiste. The prayer-meetings were much enjoyed, and the voice of the Lord in one of them was that the work of one of the brethren would be in the north country. This was a new thought and at present is not understood. Some effort was made in the auxiliary work by the district officers present.

The committee on location, time, and arrangement of the reunion of 1907 is, E. O. Clark of Des Moines, C. M. Richeson of State Center, and W. Christy of the missionary force. Eight were baptized during the week, these the fruits of the Sunday-school work in different parts of the district. As the parting time came all expressed the thought that the associations of the week had been most pleasant.

This week witnesses the change of the loving associations with the Saints where the surroundings lift one up to a higher life, to the home duties and the contact of those who in many cases are ungodly people.

In our capital city the one great event of the past week was the Iowa State Fair. In several ways the exhibits were the finest ever seen in the West, and an exhibit of this kind shows the wonderful development of the resources of these times. The attendance at the fair was the largest gathering ever held in the State. Des Moines, a city of nearly one hundred thousand people, was taxed to almost her limit to accommodate the very great multitude of the good people of the State who centered here during fair week. Several members of the church were in the city during the week.

The event of all-absorbing interest was the ascension of the airship. This aerial monster was under the perfect control of the operator, ascending, traveling, and alighting at his will. At some risk the operator used a camera and made photographs from the clouds, as it were. Navigation in the air has thus begun; who can see the end thereof?

The six weeks’ missionary effort with the tent in the city but further shows how hard it is to interest people in a large city. The effort was made with little visible results. The effort will be continued with the tent so long as the weather will permit.

Editors Herald: Whilst taking the present opportunity of thanking you for the kind insertion of my letter last week (August 22), may I be permitted the further courtesy of your columns to elucidate just one point in my argument which I now perceive that I did not render quite so plain to your numerous readers as I earnestly hoped and desired to have done?

While reasoning the point concerning progressive revelation,
I omitted to state that, owing to our present condition of human limitations and terrestrial environments, all revelation is, from the very essence and nature of the case, merely partial and tentative, or, as the sublime prophet Isaiah expresses it, (28:10-13,) "precept upon precept; line upon line; here a little and there a little"; and, as our divine Lord himself stated to his disciples while on earth (and therefore subject to earthly environment), "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye can not hear them now."—John 16:12.

It follows, therefore (as I intended to more fully demonstrate in my last letter), that a revelation or prophetic message delivered say fifty or sixty years ago to a specified individual, or set of individuals, is no longer of value or of binding force after the death of the person or persons to whom it was specifically written or addressed, as in the case of those elders commanded of the Lord in 1831 to go to the Shakers of Mount Lebanon, or in the case of the elders commanded to go to the Ohio. (See Doctrine and Covenants 49:1; 52:3.)

Nor is a revelation or commandment of any binding force after it has been obeyed and fulfilled by the parties to whom it was given in the first instance. To prove this point I cited your readers to Book of Mormon, pages 30 to 33, large edition, a citation which, besides being somewhat vague, is also inaccurate, for it should have read, page 29, verses 11 and 12, and page 30, verses 30 to 33. But as this conveys very little information except to those of your readers who are in possession of the large edition of the Book of Mormon, will you kindly permit me to explain that it refers to the "round ball, of curious workmanship" and "of fine brass," which "did work according to the faith, and diligence, and heed" which the Nephites gave to it; "and it was written and changed from time to time" according to the changing needs and circumstances of their human environment and situation. Then, if it was changed from time to time, it followed as a matter of course that the preceding commandment was no longer in force: it was "null and void" as shown by the fact of its being entirely obliterated from the exterior of the ball (or compass). For instance, after Nephi had done as the ball commanded him by going to the "top of the mountain" to obtain wild beasts for food, (page 30, verses 35, 36,) and had fed his starving brethren and their families, the commandment to go to the mountain's top was no longer in force (being fulfilled), and he would then have to be guided by some new and altogether different injunction or commandment.

This is why I stated in my letter that I can not see why the revelation of seventy-six years ago to the sisters then living, telling them that they were to pluck and the workmanship of their own hands, is no longer in force; for, in the first place, all those sisters are dead long ago; and in the second place, they fulfilled the commandment itself while they were alive.

F. R. TUBB.

PORTLAND, Oregon, August 27, 1906.

Dear Herald: On May 1 I left Condon, Oregon, my former home, and moved my family to the great city of the West, hoping thereby to assist in building up this work where as yet only a little handful of Saints live, the majority of them being saints indeed, laboring with all their ability under circumstances to keep the gospel banner unfurled to the breeze.

Bro. John Kaler and family came here also, he being appointed at the last General Conference to labor in this mission. But his labors have been somewhat retarded because of the serious condition of Sr. Kaler's eyes, thus keeping him at home. Yet he is not idle.

Some time past the Saints concluded that they were not dealing wisely in paying rent for a small hall wherein to hold their meetings, and the matter of centralizing and buying a lot and building a little chapel was discussed. Of course each had his choice, and each thought his was the best. But after intelligently looking over the matter, and after fasting and praying, the Lord, through his properly chosen officer, directed that the Saints should assemble at "Montavilla," a suburb of Portland. So a committee was chosen to look out a site, which we found, and have bought, and now will endeavor to erect a small, neat chapel upon it. We hope to have it for winter services. But while all seemed well along this line, sickness came among us. My little girl (Nellie) was taken with sore throat, and after doing what we usually do, it still grew worse. We called Doctor McLainw in, who pronounced it tonsilitis. He gave her medicine, and yet she grew worse. I called another doctor in, but after examination he pronounced the disease membranous croup, or a mild form of diphtheria, and said he could not take the case; but I would better call some one else. I then called Doctor Gullette, a man of large practice. He and Doctor McLainin consulted, and Doctor Gullette called the disease diphtheria, and advised Doctor McLainin what to do.

Next came the city health physician, Doctor Wheeler, who in short order pronounced it diphtheria, and ordered Doctor McLainin to inject four thousand units of antitoxine. At about six o'clock in the evening he gave her an injection, and when I came in I saw the child could live but a short time unless she got help. My wife suggested that I go to the city for Doctor Tucker, one of Portland's leading doctors, being one of the staff in both the St. Vincent and Good Samaritan Hospitals. I went as fast as possible, and at eight o'clock he was at her bedside. I asked him to tell me the worst before he went. He took a good look at her, and slowly shook his head at me, then called me out on the street, and said, "Mr. Goodwin, your child can not live an hour. If she survives fifteen minutes I will be surprised. I have a tube in my pocket which I could insert, but her vitality is so low she could not survive the operation. I would advise to let her die peacefully." I went into the house and sent for Bro. Willie Witherbe. When he came, he anointed himself and wife, Sr. Clark, Sr. Waite, Bro. Witherbe, Bro. Livingston, Bro. Becker, and Doctor McLainin in the house. We all knelt down. I anointed her with oil, and prayed that God would restore her. I was followed in prayer by Bro. Witherbe, my wife, Sr. Clark, and Sr. Waite. In a few minutes the color began to come to her lips and finger-nails, and in a little while she called mamma. I administered to her six times during the night, and in the morning (Bro. Kaler having come home in the night) we administered together. This was on Thursday evening, August 25, and to-day, August 28, she is up and dressed and running around the house. To God be all the glory for his goodness to us. The suburb of Montavilla is all alive, because Doctor McLainin did what the doctors did ever saved the child. I hope we may never fail to do our duty toward a Father who is so gracious to mortals.

Your brother and sister,

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. GOODWIN.

SIoux City, Iowa, August 31, 1906.

Editors Herald: This is the first day of the Moorhead reunion, and we hope that they will all have a spiritual time. I would love to be there, but I am assisting Bro. J. M. Baker in tent-meetings at this place, and we hardly think it wisdom to close yet. The interest is just fair.

I have baptized five at this place. That makes sixty-five this conference year that we have led into the water. Bro. and Sr. Baker have done a good work here, and Sr. Baker has been at the organ for the past seven weeks nearly every night. The Saints have done well in helping the work along, and they are feeling fine, with very few exceptions. We have some promising young men here: Bro. Plum, priest; Bro. Parker, teacher; and Bro. Newbury, deacon and Bishop's agent; and they have the esteem of all that know them. So the good work is moving along. I pray that God will bless us all.

Your brother,

W. A. SMITH.
OAKLAND, California, August 30, 1906.

Dear Herald: It is encouraging to us to notice among the Saints the great love they have for the truth. To me it seems a certainty that those who contribute to the church papers are honest, and love the truth. It is also certain that some who love the truth (in regard to certain conditions) do not know the truth when they see it. Else when they saw it they, knowing it, would love it. It seems that no individual living is free from all error. Therefore, when we write for the public, it is held up in the light of examination and judgment; and if it contains all truth we need not feel bad because others love it not.

Truth is from the Almighty, therefore though it be mistreated, it is impossible to damage truth in any way, for it is like its Father, powerful and almighty. We may cover it with mud, dirt, or with anything in the stable for the purpose of defiling it, but it remains pure, and of great worth to those who find it. Let us, therefore, be worried and have a happy, peaceful life, for we understand all truth is eternal and invincible.

Our twe-day meeting here was not attended as it should have been, and the one the week prior was attended with still less interest, at Leavenworth Branch. This, however, was partly due to the sickness of Sr. Peter Flinn, who since that time has passed away, being a sufferer for almost a month. She was known to many of our elders, and always was ready to do her part to make an elderly friend welcome at their pleasant home. Her departure will be keenly felt by the Saints. She leaves no children to mourn over her departure, but a husband, some relatives, and many friends. She died in the faith and trusted in the Lord until death. She was baptized a number of years ago by Elder George Jenkins. May the God of peace kindly show them a smile.

Dear Herald: I can say that I have not the least regret for the steps taken some five or six years ago. It was spoken by the Spirit when I was confirmed, that if faithful my wife would come into the church, and we would go through life hand in hand. She obeyed the gospel a couple of years ago. It is my desire to do all that lies within my power for God and his work; and I ask the earnest and fervent prayers of all God's people that I may be faithful, and an instrument in God's hands for good.

Your brother,

C. E. Ball.

SULPHUR, Indiana, August 29, 1906.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a few lines from this part may be of interest to you. I do not weary your columns very much, contributing only two different times since being a member of the church.

Our two-day meeting here was not attended as it should have been, and the one the week prior was attended with still less interest, at Leavenworth Branch. This, however, was partly due to the sickness of Sr. Peter Flinn, who since that time has passed away, being a sufferer for almost a month. She was known to many of our elders, and always was ready to do her part to make an elderly friend welcome at their pleasant home. Her departure will be keenly felt by the Saints. She leaves no children to mourn over her departure, but a husband, some relatives, and many friends. She died in the faith and trusted in the Lord until death. She was baptized a number of years ago by Elder George Jenkins. May the God of peace kindly show them a smile.

We have several two-day meetings in the district yet to attend. We find that spiritually the Saints are not up to the standard, taking them as a whole. I find so many Saints who do not take the church papers. This must be the sleeping-time. When will the Saints arise and come forth and shine? We feel well in the message of peace. We were handicapped last year, spending forty-two days in bed with typhoid fever, and it left us in a very weak condition. While I was sick my wife and I were at the home of Bro. J. A. McKinnie and wife, who did all in their power for us; and their kindness will never be forgotten by the writer. They gave up their best room for us; and we thought ourselves fortunate to be at the brother's place. May God kindly remember them for their kindness to us.

We are busy all the time, being elders laboring in this large field, fifty-five counties, and one elder laboring alone, when years past we had as high as six elders. But our loss is the gain of others. We will do the best we can, and wait for results. I notice the question of Zion is still being agitated. When will we all see eye to eye? We hope some sweet day.

Yours in gospel bonds,

Charles E. Harpe.

Editors Herald: A few lines may not be amiss from the lone pine hills of Eastern Texas, the place where I first heard the beautiful gospel and saw my first vision when I was made to drink of that heavenly Spirit that filled my heart full of love for God and all of his creation, and brought within my bosom a star of hope that has ever been a bright light to my feet, to guide me over this rough and rugged path of life. And amid all the trials I have to pass through, that star of hope shines brighter as the days come and go. I can say, like Paul of old, that afflictions await me everywhere. I have been under that hammer for three years; but all the time I keep trying to tell the beautiful gospel, often preaching when I did not know whether I would be able to get out of the stand or not, but thank the Lord that he has always given me sufficient grace to tell the angel's message; and I could see the fruit of my labors. I am willing to bear the cross, that I may obtain the crown.

I had the pleasure last Wednesday evening of leading Doctor John A. Shields, of Wood County, into the waters of baptism. He came one hundred and forty miles to be baptized. He is seventy-two years old. He said he had believed all of his life long that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. We baptized his son last summer; and when we did so the citizens in a little town in Wood County said we were baptizing one among the best men in that county. The good old doctor said he was going back home and tell his neighbors of the beautiful gospel.

I have baptized five men and one woman in the Manchester Branch, who came a distance of twenty-five, thirty-five, eighty, and one hundred and forty miles to be baptized. Four of the men never heard a sermon until they came to be baptized. They stated that the Lord showed them in an open vision to come to this place and be baptized into the kingdom of God.
So, kind readers, you see God is moving on the honest in heart.
And let me say, here, the time is close at hand when we elders will not have to wear ourselves out to get a few men and women to see the light of the beautiful gospel; but one sermon will bring hundreds into the kingdom of God, and multiplied thousands will come from the east, and west, and north, and south seeking shelter and peace under the gospel banner of Jesus Christ. I have seen by the Spirit of God the success of this great latter-day work. And it is going to roll on until the work is accomplished, Zion built up, and Jesus Christ comes to reign with his Saints, when we will have the pleasure of taking our brothers and sisters by the hands in and cold in death for years and years. And, this great latter-day
thousands will come

WAYNESBORO, Virginia, September 4, 1906.
Dear Herald: I have been some time since I write you, not because I had nothing to say, or that I had lost my interest in you, for I think now, as I have always thought, that you are the best paper I ever read. My son and I arrived in Virginia, our mission-field, in the month of June. We at once entered upon our mission work, from house to house, scattering tracts and talking with the people, showing the truth plain and simple.
The people listened attentively, claiming they believed what we taught was the right gospel, etc. We enjoyed our visits with them very much. They treated us kindly, fed and sheltered us all in the very best way they were able to do. We certainly did appreciate their kindness. We did all we could reasonably do to get them to embrace the gospel; but to no avail. Many excuses were made for not obeying the truth.
So we had to leave them, as we found them, outside the kingdom of God. There seems to be the greatest struggle for gain in a financial way that I ever have seen. But little interest is taken in any of the sects. There seems to be division and contention in all the churches in this country. Their meetings are poorly attended, and when we ask the reason the answer is,
The preacher is of no account, and such and such persons I do not like. That seems to be the cry all the time. We have observed in our travels here that there are but a few on good terms with each other. Family differences are plentiful. We tried hard to get them to settle their differences and obey the gospel, but have failed to get them to do so. They admit that it would be the best thing to do. But every one wants it settled his way. I have traveled for over thirty years, and met almost all kinds of people, but these are the most peculiar of all.
We are truly thankful to our heavenly Father for the gift of the Holy Spirit to comfort and cheer us up in our labors of love to the people. We have both of us been greatly blessed in presenting the truth, and defending the divinity of the work of God. We have done work enough to convert at least half of the people we have labored with. We have scattered a large amount of reading-matter, and by a close observance we notice that but few read.
We came here the 29th of August; were met at the train by our worthy Bro. Isaac Coffman and conveyed to his home some five miles in the country. To say we were glad to meet some of our brothers and sisters in the faith is putting it mildly.
Bro. and Sr. Coffman are still trying hard to hold up the baner造成的, and to hold our meetings every night but one since we came here; our attendance has been very small—from two to seven and eight, besides the family.
My health has been pretty good. We have done a great deal of walking, which has been very hard on us both. We never had the heat take such hold on us as it has this summer. What the outcome of our labor in the Old Dominion will be, the future will tell. As far as we can see now, there is nothing for us here. Wishing all well, and prosperity, we are, as ever,

Editors Herald: We are alone here, as there are no other Saints except Bro. and Sr. Frappier and me, but can say I have enjoyed the Spirit here, for our heavenly Father knows his sheep wherever they are. We have been greatly blessed since we moved here from Flint, Michigan. I love to read the sermons in the HERALD and GAZETS, and the letters are so helpful to me. I do love this beautiful gospel, and am praying that one of the servants of God may come here and preach the true gospel. Will some of the Saints at Tawas and Rose City, and Whittensmore, please write by way of getting acquainted; and will Mrs. Hugh Havey please answer this as I have forgotten her address? Greetings to the Saints of Shabbona and Flint, Michigan. Pray for me, dear Saints, as my prayers are always for the upbuilding of this noble cause.
Yours in the faith,

Editors Herald: The two-day meetings at Sage and at Smith Creek have passed into the pages of history, and the results of that which was accomplished (if any) will never be known until the books are opened on the other side of the shores of time. To the writer they seemed to be quite a decided success, both as to numbers and the divine recognition of the great Authors of life. All who were in attendance seemed to enjoy themselves, both spiritually and socially, and we trust a lasting blessing was received by each one that will better qualify him to cope with the unequal conditions and the powers of darkness with which we are surrounded in this present, wicked world.
At Sage, the speakers were G. W. Burt, A. E. Burr, E. S.
White, E. Fultz, and the writer. Three were baptized on Sunday by Bro. Burt, and were confirmed at the evening service.
At Smith Creek the speakers were A. E. Burr, G. W. Burt, T. Goheen, and the writer.
We reared the tent here in the little city of Gladwin last Monday, and have held four services thus far, which have been fairly well attended. What the results may be, time only can tell. Our faith and hope are well founded in the final culmi-amation of the work of our great Captain and King, and we are desirous to accomplish all that is required of us, that we may be worthy to meet him with joy at his coming.
Bro.'Burr and Burt went to Glover yesterday, the former to return to-day; the latter will go to Lewiston to attend a two-day meeting there September 1 and 2.
We hope that all the Saints of Central Michigan District will exert their energies in an effort to assist in accomplishing the work which has been committed to all, so that when the books are opened we may have sufficient to our credit, that the good and just judge may say, You are worthy; enter ye into life eternal.

Editors Herald: On account of the business and many cares of life I have been unable to contribute much to the HERALD lately, but write to say that I am in no wise discouraged in the me so to do.

The work here is progressing quite satisfactorily in many
I wish to say in closing that I am convinced more and more of the need of the help of the Father, as I travel through the road of earth life so thickly beset with Satan's snares; and feel more and more every day I live the wonderful blessedness of the Spirit's power, and the strength which comes in answer to prayer and obedience. My earnest aim and desire—yes, my only desire, is to live a life so good and pure and true that when done here I may be permitted to enter that condition of rest and light reserved only for the Saints of the Most High—the celestial glory. To this end, dear Saints, I desire your prayers. And may the dear Father in return help you and enable you by his grace to overcome, that we may at last receive a crown of life which fadeth not away.

Still in the conflict,

WALLACE A. SMALL.

Editors Herald: I returned to this my native town on the 20th after visiting friends in Guildford and Bournemouth. Through the kindness of my brother "Tom" I was invited to speak in the Congregational church here by the pastor, the Reverend Prior, my brother being a prominent member of said church.

I occupied in the afternoon and felt well in presenting to them the truth. To-night I am invited to address the members of the Christian Endeavor Society at the Baptist church which I attended from my earliest recollection until I was a youth, when with some others I was baptized, but soon after left home. My father and mother were members of this church. My mother, twenty-seven years ago, was buried in the adjoining burial grounds. On Thursday night I have the church for a service, and on Sunday next I am to address the Sunday-school scholars. This privilege has been the dream of my life, so to speak, for the past twenty-two years, and confirms me in the truth of what has been revealed to me, and in fulfillment of a prophecy given me through Bro. George W. Robley eighteen years ago, that I should declare this wonderful gospel to my kindred, etc.

This is a large and beautiful church, and stands upon the spot where preached the famous John Bunyan, Bedford's illustrious tinker, writer of the Pilgrim's Progress. What peculiar memories surge through my mind in connection with my boyhood experiences, and of after-years. My heart-yearnings for some truth which I found not, my pleadings with God for light and satisfaction—these experiences are intertwined in my memory, and deeply impress me. But the angel message through Joseph the Seer came to me after years of longing and disappointment; and now, the way I know. Thanksgiving and praise to the mercy and love of a long-suffering Father.

I am invited by Bro. W. Worth of Stockport to labor among the Saints of this branch. I will cheerfully respond, if favored by the missionary in charge, Bro. Rushon. I have anxiously waited for a word from him, but as yet have not heard from him. What is the reason, Bro. John? I have twice asked that my address be put in the SAINTS' HERALD, and although I have not seen a church paper since leaving, I know my address was in the HERALD because Bro. Worth wrote me through the address he obtained therein. I feel I am "on leave of absence" as they put it on this side, and would like to hear from those who could furnish me with some news of what is transpiring of church interest. I did not wish to convey the thought when I wrote of "not expecting me to write" that I would not answer those who might write to me, for I think I am always considered fairly prompt along that line; but many asked me to write to them as to how I fared, etc., this side of the Atlantic. I thought the easiest, best, and least expensive way would be to write now and again through the church organ, our HERALD. If the Saints of Massachusetts District would sacrifice a few minutes to write me, I should appreciate hearing from them. My reception thus far has been of a very friendly and affectionate character; and I have hundreds of friends who really make my heart glad because of their cordial greetings. What credence they will give to my testimony and gospel message is another thing, and must be left where it belongs, between them and their future judge. I am not trying to force my religion upon any one, but fail not to drop a word wherever and whenever I consider it in season. I am a marvel, however, to most of those of former acquaintance—appearing among them as a minister of Jesus Christ—for the trend of my life was not at all after that order when last among them; for I had almost entirely abandoned myself to pleasure, and had become skeptical. I appreciate true and warm friendship wherever I see it, and am made the object of it. I am known as a Latter Day Saint wherever inquiry is made as to my faith and church—and as an American always; yet, still a lover of my ever beautiful native land.

Our grand gospel has certainly made a better man of me than my old religion has made of many of my former acquaintances—for most of them still indulge in habits which to me are vices, and which are strictly prohibited by the church which has sent me out as its representative. That I should now be able to stand free from such vices is what places somewhat of a gulf between us.

"My kingdom is not of this world," says the great Master, and the farther we remove ourselves from these elements of destruction and spiritual decay the greater appreciation we have of our wonderful transforming gospel. Many of my former companions have passed away through becoming slaves to vice; for this I am sad—yes, very sad—some whose life seemed much more promising of usefulness than mine. Our Father through his infinite mercy and grace has felt after me, sent his holy Spirit to strive with me when I was without God in the world. I feel as I pen these lines an overwhelming sense of gratitude and love for his goodness to me.

My visit thus far has not been in vain. The tear has started for me in the eyes of my kindred when relating some of my experiences, and the blessings of our heavenly Father to me, and they have said, "Dick, I believe what you say." May the good Spirit work with them as it has done with me, and give them a love for the truth, and courage to cast in their lot with the household of faith. To this end, dear Saints, join with me in prayer. I go to-morrow to visit my brother William, a Baptist minister. What will the result be?

Your brother in God's work,

RICHARD BULLARD.

Ten-day Meeting.

There is to be a ten-day camp-meeting near Bethany, Oklahoma, commencing September 28, at 8, and I write to encourage the Saints and friends of the work, to rally to this meeting. They were prevented from attending the good reunion just closed. and we know there is much good received at such reunions. We kindly urge all the Saints who can to come to Bethany, that they may be blessed and encouraged in the work of the Lord. The rush of farm work will surely be over. What will hinder your coming? We often hear people make this kind of a promise: ‘Yes, I will, if I can. Saints, please use these same words in this form: “I can, if I will.” Now repeat that over a few times; make the needed arrangements for your home affairs, etc., and start out for Bethany. How can we expect to grow in the life of Christ, unless we feed upon the bread of life? There will be three or four of the general ministers present, and we hope to have an able leader.

Died.

JINKINS.—William Jinkins, at Valliant, Indian Territory, August 20, 1906; cause thought to be heart trouble. Born in 1832, in Tennessee; baptized by A. J. Moore twelve years ago. Died at Badaxe, Michigan, August 20, 1906. He leaves a wife and four sons to mourn their loss. He always looked after their needs. At his burial a man said, "You are burying the best man in town." Funeral sermon by W. A. Erwin.

SHIERS.—Robert Shierson was born January 22, 1851, at Eldon, Victoria, Ontario; baptized February 27, 1868. At the time of his death he was teacher of the Sunday school at the Varteg and Nantyglo in the district superintendent. Geo. J. Brookever.

JONES.—Mrs. Nettie M. Jones, daughter of Mrs. Helen Tidwell, and wife of Bro. Edmon Jones, born January 22, 1870, near Eldon, Clay County, Arkansas; united in marriage with Edmon Jones, July 31, 1887. This union was blessed with five children, four of whom, "Thy Kingdom Come." Our guide through one of these great breakers was Steiny Bolinsky. He is eighteen years old, and has been working in the mines and breakers since he was twelve. He is a fair type of the fittest of those who survive the drowning effects of this environmnt. The meagerness of his life is the goal toward which the majority of the breaker-boys are hastening. He knew the meaning of "jigs" and "spires" and "bony." "Nippers" and "spraggins" were familiar words, but this technical knowledge was the limit of his education. On his coat were two badges—one the picture of President John Mitchell, the other a small cross. He had seen the "spires" and "jigs" and "bony." "Nippers" and "spraggins." He was absolutely unable to read either expression. When the words "Thy Kingdom Come" were read to him the blankness of his countenance betrayed his utter inability to understand the meaning. When he was told these words were a prayer that right and justice may come; that a man by honest labor may be able to feed and clothe his family; that every boy may learn to read and may not have to go into the breakers when he is ten or eleven years old, and that everybody may be kind to his neighbor—his slow eyes kindled and he answered, "Is that it? That's what I want!" —Owen R. Lovejoy in the Woman's Home Companion for September.

You are a collector of Souvenir Post Cards, and are anxious at all times to add new and different cards to your collection, are you not? I know you will want to add another set to your collection after you have read my little story. It is this. I know a poor old fellow who walk at all hours as we do. One who, though she suffers much, is ever ready to do what she can to help cheer, and send sunshine into other lonely lives. She is an artist with a pen at drawing. Her work is lifelike. Knowing the increasing demand for Souvenir Post Cards, she has had a set made direct from her drawings, full regular postal size. The set consists of six cards, one of which contains a photo of the one who did the drawing for the other five; and she sells them for only 25 cents per set of six, post-paid.

These are the Niobrara, the Dismal River, and the North Platte reserves in Nebraska and the Garden City reserves in Kansas. The Nebraska reserves have responded so well to careful treatment that hundreds of thousands of seedlings have been planted out and millions more are being raised in nurseries for use in other reserves. Thus, for the first planting on the four reserves, just completed, most of the trees were taken from the nurseries in the Dismal River reserve.

The Kansas reserve lies in a region of scattered, barren sand hills, interspersed with prairie on which grass thrives well enough to support live stock. The origin of the hills, in itself interesting, reminds one in a way of that of the sand dunes which encroached from the sea upon the fertile fields of western Europe and laid them waste. In both cases the wind has been the enemy of the soil, for in France wind drove the sand of the seaashore inland, and in the middle-western region of our own country wind drove eastward the sand which the Arkansas River had carried down in floods and afterwards exposed to dry. The sand-hills were formed long ago, and the action of the wind is now largely checked by the spread of the carpet of grass, which binds the sand wherever there is enough moisture to encourage it.

The semiarid conditions of the region necessarily restrict the selection of trees. Right choice of species, the crux of forest planting generally, is here especially decisive. A fence was built about the three fourths of a section in which the planting was done, though part of this area remains to be planted next season. This was to exclude stock. To exclude prairie-fires a fire-guard was ploughed about the plantation.

Okahoma Camp-Meeting of Reorganized Church.

I want to say to all those that want to make a visit at Meade and Seward Counties, Kansas, and Beaver County, Oklahoma, that we would like to have you come on the excursion of September 18. By so doing you can have a few days to look over the country here, then go on down to the camp-meeting which is seventy miles southeast of here. I can furnish two trains for camping purposes. The trip overland will not cost $2.00 for transportation for each person, each one to furnish his pro rata of provisions, except missionaries. I would like for Brrn. Ellis Short, E. A. Davis, Lee Quick, and F. C. Keck to take note of this and join us, and all others that want to see a good time and see a good country. Expect to leave Plains on September 25 for Bethany. Let me hear from you at once if you will go, so I will know how many to provide transportation for. When you arrive at Plains inquire for Maloney's restaurant opposite the depot.

The Confessions of a Monopolist.

This is a book written by Frederic C. Howe, published by The Public Publishing Company, First National Bank Building, Chicago. Price, $1.00 (postage, 10 cents). The monopolist studies law, enters politics, develops a land boom and a street railway and gas company, learns the value of the franchise and of the power of political machine, works a city council, etc. In chapter 6 he enters the coal business, becomes a railway magnate, and discovers the secret of monopoly. He says: "I presume few people understand why it is that certain big businesses have been able to achieve their ends plugging along the ordinary paths of industry end in failure. Some explanation of all this I had learned in my street railway and electric lighting enterprises. I had gotten an insight into it even as the full beauty of the million short cuts to success was revealed to me by the coal business. Up to 1896 my interests were confined to municipal enterprises and the banking business. About this time the United Trust Company, of which I was president, undertook the underwriting of an issue of bonds of the North & River Railroad. Through this I learned the explanation of the growth of monopoly in recent years. It is done in this way: The savings banks, running to the millions, are deposited in the banks, savings institutions, and trust companies. The latter enjoy immense powers under their charters. They can do almost anything. Thus intrusted with the people's money, they become a public by act of Congress, and every dollar of this money they invest is safe. This is what the bank is controlled by its directors. They desire to build a railroad, street railway, or consolidate some industries or coal-mines. They organize a syndicate among themselves. They secure an option on the property. They then arrange to secure a loan on mortgage. On this they issue bonds. These the bank or trust company, which the syndicate really controls, agrees to underwrite, or take off the syndicate's hands at par, or something below par. On these bonds money is advanced to buy the property. Then the trust company sells the bonds to its depositors or customers at an advance, while the capital stock of the railroad, street railway, trust, or coal monopoly, for which it has paid nothing, is retained by the syndicate. The bank has advanced all the money used. And this money was earned by the people, the depositors. Then the people, and in many instances the depositors, buy back the bonds for an advance, leaving the invoices in the hands of the syndicate, which is in fact but the officers of the bank who have borrowed from themselves and kept the stock for themselves.

The next step is to make the stock valuable. This is done by laying up railways, by taking over the property of the railroad, street railway, trust, or coal monopoly, for which it has paid nothing, and which they own as a monopoly, and thereby they control their own and others' big profit, by being compelled to pay monopoly prices for the things they consume."—The Public, September 1, 1906.

By INDEPENDENCE COAL MINING COMPANY

In order to develop and open up the new coal-mining interests near Independence and also to provide necessary preparations for homes for mine-workers, it is necessary that sufficient capital be secured within a short time. The amounts sought for is very small compared with the large amount of other common interests and, for various reasons, the directors of this company desire to keep the working and controlling power with the church members, if possible. The opening up of an undeveloped coal field at the edge of a densely populated community of 400,000 population is a matter of considerable consideration, as the coal is part of the necessaries of life, with freight rates practically cut off, making this enterprise an exception.

Five hundred and sixty-nine acres have been leased for thirty years and one hundred and forty-four purchased, making it all seven hundred and twenty-three acres of coal-land in one body, on the line of the Atchison Pacific Railroad, two miles east of Independence.

The company already has coal-mines at Napolson, Missouri, in operation and a successful and promising retail business, making this a bona fide, paying investment.

MONEY SAVING INVESTMENT can find no better place to put your savings, and bring the best kind of satisfaction, as it will bring good returns to the investor and results that are sure. We are looking for coal-workers to help us employed, scattered, pressed-down poor church members by placing them in a position to help themselves.

The 184 acres are intended for homes for mine-workers, to be sold at a reasonable price, and we solicit the co-operation of miners to purchase stock, accepting their coal as payment.

The promoters of this company are working for the welfare for any selfish interests. There is no watered or fictitious valued stock. The company is incorporated under the laws of the state of Missouri. Capital stock, $80,000; shares, 400 each; amount paid up $80,000. The capital stock must be increased, if needed, to $350,000.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." — John 31, 32

"There shall not any man among you have it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none." — Book of Mormon, Jacob 2:6

In noticing the mistakes in building for the church or by the church with reference to the erection of a sanitarium, it is hardly necessary or fair to note the church-building at Independence, Missouri. The church at Independence was conceived and built by the branch through a committee of its own selection. Whatever mistake may have been made in the erection of it was not the mistake of church officials directed or authorized to act by the church; and it is quite open to question whether it was a mistake as things have later shaped themselves, as under the conditions existing at present the building is none too large to accommodate the church work and is not too elaborate to reflect credit upon the people and to give prestige to the work in what was supposed to be a central location.

The first building that the Reorganized Church authorized to be built in our recollection was the little church at Plano, Illinois, which cost when completed some $6,700. The committee were Joseph Smith, Isaac Sheen, and William Bronson. Of these the only one who had any personal means or property at the time was Bro. Isaac Sheen. The building was erected and turned over to the use of the church without any debt hanging over it, and we do not now remember ever to have heard any fault found with the committee or a criticism upon the building except its lack of a spire. That we could not afford, and we would not go into debt to put it on, though one man refused the payment of his twenty-five dollar subscription because we would not put the spire on it.

The office building at Lamoni was built by implied direction of conference. The committee were Israel Rogers, David Dancer, and Joseph Smith. We do not remember the exact cost, but we believe we have never heard nor seen any extensive criticism upon the building except its lack of a spire. That we could not afford, and we would not go into debt to put it on, though one man refused the payment of his twenty-five dollar subscription because we would not put the spire on it.

The Herald Office was changed from one side of the public square in Plano to the other, out of a rented building into one bought by the church or the Bishop for the church, and criticism has not been manifest.
upon that as a church measure. The Bishopric did what they believed to be right at the time. It has passed into history and was evidently the right thing at the time.

A late writer suggests that the college was to cost $8,000 or $10,000 and resulted in an expenditure of $25,000, and "nobody knows how much more." The repeated report of the Board of Trustees shows that the cost of the college was some $16,000. The excess of this was for running expenses and other apparently necessary costs. The least cost of the college provided for in the donation of the land was to be $6,000. The contract with the architect was for $10,000. The mistake of the committee, if it is accounted a mistake, was the submitting to the principle of ornamentation upon the outside of the college, which did not add to its effectiveness as an institution, but to increase the cost of its construction.

While in Manchester, England, in 1903, in company with Bro. Ernest Dewsnup, we visited the buildings of the college there, a noted institution of learning, and found those buildings strong and substantial and suitable for the purposes designed, with great plainness of outside presentation. They covered ample ground, and were apparently built to last for centuries rather than for the brief period in which American buildings generally exist. We were struck at the time with the simplicity of construction, but found the inside and the rooms through which we passed to be well provided and adapted to the purposes of the university.

It is hardly fair to severely condemn those who may have made mistakes in the past for those mistakes, provided that the efforts which were put forth by them to accomplish the work committed to them by the church were honest and earnest, without selfish intent or purpose, and did not result in any pecuniary or other benefit to those serving as a committee.

We believe it has never been charged that any one of those engaged in this unfortunate college affair, if it is an unfortunate one, have been accused of "graft"; nor do we believe that any one entertains the thought that any of these committees have ever misappropriated a single dollar that has been handled in the prosecution of the college work.

If mistakes have been made by any of the several committees appointed by the church to specific work of a temporal kind, the church as a body have been parties to such mistake in this wise: They have chosen men of reputation and standing for spiritual character in the church, of position or place perhaps, rather than for financial, executive ability, or experience. It may be that the fact is that the church had not any men of experience in the line indicated to appoint, but when criticisms are passed, one element in these criticisms should be stated in fairness to the committees and in justice to the church as a body, to take into consideration what must be obvious to all upon reflection; that spirituality and fitness for a ministerial career, either as a local laborer or a laborer in the field abroad, and the possession of the "priesthood," do not and can not necessarily give qualifications for the discharge of duties in temporal things. For instance, a superintendent of a well-known factory was dismissed by the stockholders and in seeking to supply his place the name of a young man was suggested who had been quite a successful minister of the organization to which he belonged, as it was thought, and possessed of some spiritual and mental ability. One remarked, "Why, how can you expect him to take charge as a superintendent; he does not know anything about the woolen business by experience?"

The reply made by the one suggesting, who seemed to be one in authority, was this: "What is the reason he can not succeed as superintendent; has he not got the priesthood?"

It ought to be borne in mind this thought, that while the priesthood lies latent and inert in those who may be within the province of the statement, "Your lives and the priesthood have been hidden with Christ in God," it is only upon the appointment of the Lord, acquiesced in by the choice of the church, that the priesthood in the individual is brought to light and he invested with the right to exercise in the province of the office in the priesthood to which he is ordained or appointed; and if it be true as we all seem inclined to believe, that God calls to the activities of the priesthood those qualified spiritually for the discharge of the duties devolving upon those called for the carrying on of the gospel dispensation, it does not necessarily follow that these spiritually wise men may be equally wise in temporal things; and if the church should choose these or any of them for work in temporal things and they should make mistakes, the church should be willing to share a portion of the blame which criticism may impose and to assume an equal portion of the responsibility and the results that may follow such choice.

It should also be understood, as we also believe together, that God calls those to duties in temporal things who are qualified for the work unto which they are called as understood by himself. If not, then there must have been a mistake made when the Levitical priesthood was conferred upon Aaron, and we have a right now to expect that there may be those whose birthright involves possession of the Aaronic priesthood, and where one of this family may be found, is qualified to act without counselors; but in order to save not only appearances but the possibilities of mistake, one of the Melchisedec priesthood, called of God and chosen by the church to act in temporal things, may thus conserve the work in temporalities as he shall be aided and assisted by the Spirit of revelation and wisdom. And those who work in temporal things should receive the support and respect of the people whom they serve by choice as authorized and qualified of God for the duties of the office in which they are called to act.

If they make mistakes which are detrimental to the interests of the people of the church, or which bring reproach upon the church among those who are without, the law given to the church has made ample provision by which they may be made amenable to law and be made to answer to the people for the discharge of their duty.

It is not the province of individuals who may feel themselves aggrieved by the action of church officers in temporal things personally to undertake to remedy the possible wrong by a system of public or private criticism, without complying with the law which requires a personal effort to be made by the offended with the offender, which effort, if barren of results toward a settlement, may be taken into the accredited courts of the church for sufficient inquiry and definite action. This includes both agitation upon the street-corners, in the official assemblies, in localities, conversations of the elders in private, or the efforts in the pulpit. If they have grievances and they have not made an effort to secure an understanding with those by whose action they may have been aggrieved, the greatest and grandest qualification within the declaration of the gospel economy as understood by the apostle Paul, the charity which never faileth, is disregarded and outraged. They should exhibit the role of silence as a duty, and not prejudice the minds of those among whom they may labor against those officers who are doing the duties imposed upon them according to the best light within them.

Personal reflections upon the character of those who are serving the church either in spiritual or temporal capacities, where the law has not been complied with as stated above, are entirely uncalled for, are discourteous, and absolutely unlawful to engage in personal gossip against those who may seem to have been offenders.

So peculiarly balanced are the provisions of the law of God as given to the church that no officers in it anywhere can escape a proper inquiry upon proper charges laid before the proper tribunal and investigation follow for either the exculpation of the one charged or his punishment to the limit to which the church may go.

While we do not desire to thunder the anathemas of the law at anybody, as we believe too much of this has been done, we believe that kindness and courtesy would require leniency for a supposed culprit until the heinousness of his erring or wrong-doing has been made apparent; and we plead that this shall prevail. Assertions, invidious remarks, unfortunate comparisions, and illogical statements and arguments are not effective weapons to use either in support of what we believe or in antagonism of that to which we object.

We would ask the readers of the Herald in hereafter examining the questions which they deem to be of vital importance to the church to leave out of their argument and statement anything which may be construed into personal reflections derogatory to the character of those who may not believe as themselves.

AN EXPLANATION.

Let me say to those who have been congratulating me on editorials which they considered good and to those who have blamed me for editorials which they thought bad, that I have written no editorials for the Herald,—either good or bad. Nor have I done any editorial work of any kind on the Herald. If I do at any time take up that work it is my intention to write over my own signature, as that is undoubtedly the best way. People have been speculating constantly for many years as to who wrote certain editorials. It is best that the reading public should know who stands back of a printed statement.

So many questions have come to me regarding my appointment on the Herald force that it might be in order to explain. I received notice during the month of May that I had been appointed upon the staff. Without waiting for my acceptance my name was placed on the list of editors. I was not anxious for the position, but was willing on advice of the First Presidency to labor there; but I was under previous appointment by General Conference to labor in Burlington. No one has yet been provided to take my place there, and I have refused to leave without proper release and proper provision for that place. Nor have I thought it wise to attempt to do any work on the Herald while my time was fully taken up in my field. So the matter rests at this day. It is not my wish that others should do all the work on the Herald and I receive any part of the credit.

It is not best to make many promises for the future, because the future is unknown. I may or may not do work on the Herald. But one thing is fairly sure, if the Herald copy ever does pass through my hands, the man who never writes to the church papers except to "lambast" his brethren will get the blue pencil.

I can not indorse the theory which some hold that the editor has no right to suppress anything. Anything which makes the church paper a strife-maker instead of a peace-maker, an irritant instead of an emollient, ought to be suppressed.

If any man comes into a branch meeting and makes an unwise attack upon any member, the branch president has a right to silence him. It does not matter that the intruder may have been ordained and sent out by the church, thus being recommended as one fit to preach the gospel to the world. Surely the editor of a journal like the HERALD has as much right under similar circumstances as has the branch president.

The church may indorse men as preachers of the gospel but that does not give them free license to stir up needless trouble in some branch; and by the same token it does not give them the right to foment discord and strife through the columns of the church paper,—which takes its message of good or of ill to many branches and to many individuals who some way fail to appreciate the loving hand which habitually wears the brass knuckles.

The right to suppress of course must be used with as much wisdom and impartiality as one man can command, without regard for men or factions, and with the aid of the Holy Spirit; just as it should be exercised by every officer presiding over assemblies of debate or deliberation.

If we are mistaken, and the editor has no right to suppress anything, then we do not need an editor,—what we need is a hopper. Something into which the mail-carrier can shovel every communication addressed "SAINTS' HERALD."

EXPENSIVE HORSE-FLESH.

Dan Patch, a celebrated pacing horse, son of Joe Patchen, also celebrated as a racing horse, lately sold at private sale for $60,000. Some prices for other horses before the sale of Dan Patch are: Adrian, $125,000; Axtell, $100,000; and Director, $75,000. The proverb is correct: "A horse is a vain thing for safety."

What prices these to pay for the gratification of the desire to possess! Three hundred and sixty thousand dollars for four horses; enough to pay the college debt several times over, build the sanitarium, and have an endowment left.

GRACELAND NOTES.

The fall term of the college opens Tuesday, September 25. Registration on Monday. The indications point to a much increased attendance.

Miss Hannah Frank, of the University of Chicago, has been secured as professor in Latin, German, and Spanish. The college has long desired to offer a course in Spanish, and now that it is possible we trust that our young people will avail themselves of the opportunity.

As a result of the devotion and zeal of the Patro­nesses' Society, a cement walk eight hundred feet long will be laid this week, completing the walk from the college door to the foot of the hill. The college is certainly to be congratulated on having such energetic supporters.

A new dormitory of twelve rooms is nearing completion for the accommodation of the young ladies who attend. Room and board, including light and heat, will be $2.50 per week.

A movement has been started to induce two hundred of the former students to contribute ten dollars each to pay for the new dormitory. Several have already responded, and those who have not done so should respond at once.

President Stewart and some others of the faculty have returned to Lamoni and are busily engaged preparing for the opening.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

It may be a satisfaction to some to know that the Editor resident at Independence, Missouri, did on the 7th inst. receive another seal to his ministry by the baptism of his grandson, Arthur A. McCallum, who was baptized and confirmed on that date.

One of the veteran missionaries for Christ in forwarding his offering for the sanitarium and children's home writes: "Some time ago I made up my mind to help in providing the sanitarium called for in the late revelation, also for the children's home. I have been saving as I could to that end. Inclosed find a draft for fifty dollars to be equally divided between the two above-named purposes. Please credit myself and wife with the same, but do not publish our names. You may say 'a brother and sister' sent it without naming us, or the place it is sent from. Hoping that the two purposes will be speedily carried to perfection and God's will be accomplished in their use, I remain one of the weak soldiers for the truth and God."

By letter from Bro. G. J. Waller, dated August 25, we learn that on the 26th five were baptized by Elder J. D. White at Honolulu; one Hawaiian woman who had been regularly attending the services for some months with her husband who was already a member of the church; the other four were children whose parents belonged to the church. Bro. J. D. White was feeling well except that he was affected to some extent by the change of climate, food, etc., but he was endeavoring to be active in the field. Bro. Waller, writing on the 27th, adds: "The individuals referred to [those referred to above] were baptized on the 27th, and we expect that three more will be baptized in a short time. One young woman, a member of the Utah church, is to be baptized next Sunday morning, September 2." Bro. Waller adds: "We are encouraged with the outlook."

HARMONY.

Four fragmentary records of our Lord’s prophetic discourse as he sat upon the mount of Olives, given unto, and in the presence of Peter, James, John, and Andrew, no record of others being present, probably Sunday eve, April 11, A. D. 70.

It will be perceived at once that the “Harmony,” herewith submitted, is arranged after a new method. The design which led to the formation of this “Harmony” made it desirable that all which was spoken by our Lord upon this occasion should be constantly and connectedly before the eye. It is certain that neither one of the three evangelists has preserved all that the Savior uttered; for we find in each, some things omitted by the others. And it is also certain that whatever we find in any of the three—as a part of the discourse—must have been spoken upon that occasion. And it is for our good that we ascertain as nearly as possible the exact order in which the various items of the discourse succeeded one another in the original delivery. This is attempted in this “Harmony.”

It has been our intention to bring into one continuous narrative all that has been recorded by the three evangelists, and also the forty-fifth section of Doctrine and Covenants. Let this ever be borne in mind: The omissions of one and the additions of another, when all are framed together, form a beautiful and perfectly harmonious testimony.

Truly, the words of the Savior upon another occasion are very applicable here: “Gather up the fragments that nothing be lost.” By carrying out this plan, our minds are less confused and we may be more the children of the light, that day may not overtake us unprepared.

The Bible credits the following marginal notes are all from the Inspired Translation, except the one from Mark 13:3, which is from King James. The “Harmony” as I have arranged it as follows:

1 Matthew 24:3, 4.
2 Mark 13:3.
5 Matt. 24:4-6.
7 Matt. 24:8-11.

And Jesus answered and said unto them, Take heed that no man deceiveth you. For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many.—Go ye not therefore after them.—And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another. And many false prophets shall arise, and shall deceive many. And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. But he that remaineth steadfast, and is not overcome, the same shall be saved.

And when ye shall hear of wars and commotions, be not terrified; for these things must first come to pass; . . . Then said he unto them, Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; and great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famine, and pestilences; and fearful sights, and great signs shall there be from heaven. But before all these things shall come, they shall lay their hands on you, and persecute you, delivering you up to the synagogues, and into prisons; being brought before kings and rulers for my name’s sake.

Settle this therefore in your hearts, not to meditate before what ye shall answer; for I will give you a mouth and wisdom, which all your adversaries will not be able to gainsay nor resist. And it shall turn to you for a testimony.

And ye shall be betrayed both by parents, and brethren, and kinsfolk, and friends; and some of you shall they cause to be put to death. And ye shall be hated of all the world for my name’s sake. But there shall not a hair of your head perish. In your patience possess ye your souls.

And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies—the abominations of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, then you shall stand in the holy place. (Whoso readeth let him understand.)

Then let them who are in Judea, flee unto the mountains. And let him who is on the housetop, flee, and not return to take anything out of his house. Neither let him who is in the field, return back to take his clothes,—and let not them who are in the countries, return to enter into the city.—And woe unto them that are with child, and unto them that give suck in those days! Therefore, pray ye the Lord, that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day.— 3 For these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled.—

Matt. 24:18. 4 For then, in those days, shall be great tribulations on the Jews, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem; such as was not before sent upon Israel, of God, since the beginning of their kingdom until this time; no, nor ever shall be sent again upon Israel.—

Luke 21:23, 5 And it shall come to pass that this generation of Jews shall not pass away until every desolation which I have told you concerning them shall come to pass. Ye say that ye know that the end of the world cometh; ye say, also, that ye know that the heavens and the earth shall pass away; and in this ye say truly, for so it is; but these things which I have told you shall not pass away until all shall be fulfilled.— 6 All things which have befallen them, are only the beginning of the sorrows which shall come upon them; and except those days should be shortened, there should none of their flesh be saved. But for the elect’s sake, according to the covenant, those days shall be shortened.— 7 And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled. For these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written [of them] may be fulfilled.

Now these things be spake unto them,— 8 concerning the Jews, [and] the destruction of Jerusalem. And then his disciples asked him, saying, Master, tell us concerning thy coming?

— 1 And again, after the tribulation of those days which shall come upon Jerusalem, if any man will say unto you, Lo! here is Christ, or there; believe him not. For in those days, there shall also arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if possible, they shall deceive the very elect, who are the elect according to the covenant. Behold, I speak these things unto you for the elect’s sake. And ye also shall hear of wars, and rumors of wars; see that ye be not troubled; for all I have told you must come to pass. But the end is not yet.

Behold, I have told you before, Wherefore, if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth. Behold, he is in the secret chambers; believe it not. For as the light cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west, and covereth the whole earth; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be. And now I show unto you a parable. Behold, wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together; so likewise shall mine elect be gathered from the four quarters of the earth. And they shall hear of wars, and rumors of wars. Behold, I speak for mine elect’s sake. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; there shall be famine and pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places. And again, because iniquity shall abound, the love of men shall wax cold; but he that shall not be overcome, the same shall be saved.

— 2 And they say that Christ delayeth his coming until the end of the earth. . . And when the time of the Gentiles is come in, a light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fulness of my gospel; but they receive it not, for they perceive not the light, and they turn their hearts from me because of the precepts of men; and in that generation shall the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

— 3 And again, this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come, or the destruction of the wicked. And again, shall the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, be fulfilled. And immediately after the tribulation of those days,— 4 In the generation in which the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled, there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars;— 1 the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from the heavens, and the powers of heaven shall be shaken,— 4 and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity, like the sea and the waves roaring. The earth also shall be troubled, and the waters of the great deep; men’s hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth.
Verily I say unto you, this generation, the generation when the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled,—in which these things shall be shown forth, shall not pass away until I have told you be fulfilled.—Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away.

—Be not troubled, for when all these things come to pass, ye may know that the promises which have been made unto you shall be fulfilled; and when the light shall begin to break forth, it shall be with them like unto a parable which I shall show you; ye look and behold the fig-tree.—When its branches are yet tender, and it begins to put forth leaves, you know that summer is nigh at hand. So likewise mine elect, when they shall see all these things, they shall know that he is near, even at the door. But of that day and hour no one knoweth, no, not the angels of God in heaven, but my Father only. But as it was in the days of Noah, so it shall be also at the coming of the Son of Man. For it shall be with them as it was in the days which were before the flood; for until the day that Noah entered into the ark, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be.

Then shall be fulfilled that which is written, that, In the last days, two shall be in the field; the one shall be taken and the other left. Two shall be grinding at the mill; the one taken, and the other left. And what I say unto one, I say unto all men: Watch, therefore, for ye know not at what hour your Lord doth come.

—And as I said before, after the tribulation of those days, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken, then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn. And they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. And whoso treasureth up my words, shall not be deceived. For the Son of Man shall come, and he shall send his angels before him with the great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together the remainder of his elect from the four winds; from one end of heaven to the other.—And the remnant shall be gathered unto this place, and then they shall look for me, and behold I will come; and they shall see me in the clouds of heaven, clothed with power and great glory, with all the holy angels. But before the arm of the Lord shall fall, an angel shall sound his trump, and the saints that have slept, shall come forth to meet me in the cloud; wherefore if ye have slept in peace, blessed are you, for as you now behold me and know that I am, even so shall ye come unto me and your souls shall live, and your redemption shall be perfected.

—Let my disciples therefore take heed unto themselves, lest at any time their hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and that day come upon them unawares. For as a snare it shall come on all them who dwell on the face of the whole earth.

—But know this, if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to have been broken up; but would have been ready. Therefore be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh. Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his Lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing; and, verily I say unto you, he shall make him ruler over all his goods.

But if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My Lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to smite his fellow servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken; the Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and shall appoint him his portion with the hypocrites; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

And thus cometh the end of the wicked according to the prophecy of Moses, saying, they shall be cut off from among the people. But the end of the earth is not yet; but by and by.

—And what I say unto one, I say... unto all, Watch ye therefore, and pray always, and keep my commandments, that ye may be counted worthy to escape all these things which shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man when he shall come clothed in the glory of his Father.

D. C. 45:8-11.

Then shall the arm of the Lord fall upon all nations, and then shall the Lord set his foot upon this Mount, and it shall cleave in twain, and the earth shall tremble and reel to and fro; and the heavens also shall shake, and the Lord shall utter his voice and all the ends of the earth shall hear it, and the nations of the earth shall mourn, and they that have laughed shall see their folly, and calamity shall cover the mocker, and the scorner shall be consumed, and they that have watched for iniquity, shall be hewn down and cast into the fire. And then shall the Jews look upon me and say, What are these wounds in thy hands, and in thy feet? Then shall they know that I am the Lord: for I will say unto them, These wounds are the wounds with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. I am he who was lifted up, I am Jesus who was crucified. I am the Son of God. And then shall they weep because of their iniquities, then shall they lament because they persecuted their King. And then shall heathen nations be redeemed, and they that have laughed shall see their folly, and calamity shall cover the mocker, and the scorner shall be consumed, and they that have watched for iniquity, shall be hewn down and cast into the fire.

For I the Lord God delighteth in the chastity of women.—Book of Mormon, p. 110.

Who can restore the blush to the beautiful rose crushed by a careless hand? You answer, It is impossible. Then is it excusable to wantonly and ruthlessly destroy a sister woman's reputation which God has made precious and should be sacred from the poisonous venom of the scandalmonger's tongue?

No language is too strong, no condemnation too severe, against this crying evil in the church of God. Shakespeare the immortal says, "He that steals my purse steals trash . . . but he who filches from me my good name . . . robs me of that which not enriches him, but leaves me poor indeed."

To blast a sister woman's reputation! The man or woman who can enjoy such work knows something of the infernal joy of the devils in the pit. How foul must be the fountain from which comes such degrading thoughts. "The stream can not rise higher than its source."

The foul raven which gloats over its feast of rotten carrion is even one remove higher than the vile trafficker in a woman's good name.

There is no place too sacred for this octopus of evil. It does not confine itself to the outside world but dares to invade the holy courts of the house of God clothed in the garb of a profession of religion. How like a sounding brass or tinkling cymbal our lives must appear to those who are watching our daily walk and conversation, when we so far forget ourselves and what we owe to the gospel as to plant the sting of dark suspicion abroad. Jesus said, "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone." It is no light thing to offend one of God's little ones. God is watching over them and he says, "But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea."

It is not alone the writhing victim of malice that is the sufferer, but the consequences are far-reaching and eternity alone will reveal how many weary, discouraged souls were hindered from entering the fold of God by acts and words that should never have been spoken.

One of the characters in John Bunyan's works is portrayed with a muck-rake busily employed raking among filth while an angel stands by his side offering him a beautiful golden crown, but he is so busy raking "muck" he refuses to see the crown. Those who overcome will obtain the crown of eternal life. "He that overcometh the same shall be clothed in white raiment." That means a terrible fight, a hard struggle; we will have to throw away our muck-rake if we ever get the crown. Our foes are unseen, they prey on our weaknesses, "we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers,

IGNORANT LITTLE BOY.

Not long ago I listened to one of our elders preaching, and in his remarks he stated that God selected a little ignorant boy of fourteen years old to establish his work upon the earth for the last time.

I well remember when I first began to preach the restored gospel, about thirty-eight years ago, that frequently ministers would seem to think that it was a recommendation to them to say that they had no education. Once going home from preaching I was walking behind a man and lady, and I heard him say, "The preacher told one thing that was true—that he was 'ignorant.'" She answered, "Yes, we would all have known that without his telling us."

I do not think that ignorance is any recommendation. And when we say that God selected a little ignorant boy, let us stop and see if this is a fact.

I felt sorry when I (lately) heard the elder make the remark. He repeated it several times; and I thought it proper to write you, dear HERALD, so that this erroneous statement might be corrected. I am well aware that many members in the church mistake just as this elder did.

The last time I saw Elder William B. Smith, brother to Joseph Smith the Prophet, he remarked to me, saying, "I feel indignant when I hear any one speak of my brother Joseph as a little ignorant boy, because I know it is not true." But I will refer to his statements later on.

I have before me a pamphlet published by the church, known as Oliver Cowdery's Letters. I refer to this to show how this error that Joseph Smith the Prophet was only fourteen years old first happened to come into existence. I am well aware that when an incorrect statement goes out in print it is very difficult to correct it; but I hope to be able to get some of the facts before the minds of many in the church, that Joseph Smith was not a little ignorant fourteen-year-old boy when God first made known to him the truth of the religious condition of the world in answer to his prayer, when he asked the Lord which of all the churches was right; and was informed in regard to his duty before God, and of the great and marvelous work that God was about to establish upon the earth.

We read in Cowdery's Letters, which abound with valuable historical facts, Letter 3, page 10:

You will recollect that I informed you, in my letter published in the first number of the Messenger and Advocate, that this history would necessarily embrace the life and character of our esteemed friend and brother, Joseph Smith, Jr., one of the presidents of this church; and for information on that part of the subject, I refer you to his communication of the same, published in this paper. I shall therefore pass over that, till I come to the fifteenth year of his life.

The above, printed in our paper, was read with much interest, and preached by the elders, that he was in his fifteenth year; that is, he was fourteen years old. Thus came into the minds of the members of the church this erroneous belief that Joseph Smith was only fourteen years old at the time of his first communication with and from God.

The objector may say, "Do you think Oliver Cowdery did not know the facts of what he was writing about?" Yes. I believe he did. Oliver Cowdery was Joseph Smith's scribe, and was with him almost constantly. I do not think that any person knew more perfectly about the things of which he wrote than Oliver Cowdery.

Turn to Letter 4, page 12; there we read:

You will recollect that I mentioned the time of a religious excitement in Palmyra and vicinity to have been in the fifteenth year of our brother J. Smith, Jr.'s, age—that was an error in the type; it should have been in the seventeenth. You will please remember this correction, as it will be necessary for the full understanding of what will follow in time.

Thus, dear Saints, we see the whole matter is explained in regard to Joseph Smith's age, when he went out into the woods to pray for God to guide and direct him, which desire was created within him during the union revival meetings being held in his neighborhood. We do not know the month of the year; but as such meetings are almost always held in the fall and before cold weather, it is likely that it was about September or October. Joseph Smith was born December 23, 1805; so these meetings were in 1822; thus we have the age of Joseph Smith to be sixteen years and about eight or nine months.

Let us turn to Elder William B. Smith's statement, who was a brother to Joseph Smith, Jr.:

First, look at me? I am a fair sample of the Smith family in size; six foot tall and weigh about two hundred pounds. I do not know of a small man or woman among all our relatives. My brother Joseph was large for his age from my first recollection; and at the time that God first manifested unto him of the work that was before him, he was nearly seventeen years old, about five feet seven inches tall, and I judge in weight about one hundred and forty pounds. [So much for the mistake of fourteen years old, and being little.]

As far as being ignorant is concerned, no one who knew him could truthfully say that. Joseph was a bright, intelligent boy from my earliest recollection; quick to perceive, with an excellent memory, and a close observer. He was industrious both in school and out of school. Our schools in those days were not like they are to-day, and our opportunities were not like those of the children of to-day. But we had schools in which we were taught reading, spelling, writing, and arithmetic, and in these studies my brother, myself also, were very well versed. But few of our neighbors' and associates' children were better educated than we were. Joseph had a very bright and intelligent mind, and was able to learn very readily; and for any one to say that he was a little, ignorant boy, is doing him a great injustice.
I present the testimony of Doctor W. E. McLellin, one of the Twelve, as he related it to me:

I attended the School of the Prophets, and taught part of the time in Kirtland, Ohio; and as a student Joseph Smith had the brightest mind of any man I ever saw. Sometimes as teacher would present a lesson to the class, and next day he would have his lesson and the subject-matter so perfect, that I had to do my very best to study to keep him from running over me, knowing the lesson better than I did.

I have presented this matter very briefly and hope that those who have in the past thought and said that Joseph Smith the Prophet was a "little ignorant boy" when God called him to do his great and marvelous work, will carefully consider the above, and not do him such injustice again.

Again, the objector will say: "Does not the prophet Isaiah speak of him as one unlearned?" Yes, but not as one who is ignorant. The prophet Isaiah was writing about the translating of languages. In this he was not learned. We have many bright, polished, educated men and women; but when it comes to their translating languages they are not able, because they are not learned; but by no means are they ignorant.

The facts are, Joseph Smith was a bright, intelligent young man nearly seventeen years of age. Not a little ignorant boy; but just as the prophet Zechariah said: "And, behold, the angel that talked with me went forth, and another angel went out to meet him, and said unto him, Run, speak to this young man, saying," etc. —Zechariah 2: 3, 4.

CO-OPERATIVE PROGRESS.

Just before his departure for Birmingham for the Co-Operative Congress next week, Mr. E. O. Greening, founder of the Congress, was seen yesterday by a representative of the Daily News, who gathered from him some interesting facts as to the past, present, and future of the co-operative movement, and the next step before it.

Its progress in less than fifty years has been enormous. "The Rochdale Equitable Pioneers, who were disciples of Owen, started their little store some forty-six years ago; and its turnover to-day," said Mr. Greening, "is £350,000 a year.

"Further, the turnover of all the co-operative societies now is well over one hundred million a year, whereas the whole foreign trade of Great Britain when Queen Victoria ascended the throne was only sixty millions.

"The capital funds now invested are over forty millions, and the net profit for the members ten millions, and there are about two million members."

"Is the desire to make dividends too keen?"

"Yes, unfortunately that is so. It is a feature that has come with success. We must counteract it by developing great ideals. Thus, we want to get the members themselves to realize that there is something in the movement beyond mere shop-keeping; to see that the next great step is the emancipation of labor on copartnership lines; to make the workman no longer a mere wage receiver; we want to make him a sharer in profits, responsibility, management, and also, of course, losses. In short, we want the workshop to be a co-operative commonwealth."

LABOR COPARTNERSHIP.

Mr. Greening, it should be said, founded the Labor Co-Partnership Association in June, 1884; and though it has not increased to the dimensions of the co-operative stores, yet there are now nearly three hundred workshops conducted on those lines.

In the co-operative movement to-day, therefore, there are the retail stores, the wholesale, which is a federation of the shops, and the Labor Co-Partnership Association.

"We must," continued Mr. Greening, "get the shopkeeping members to use their power and capital to emancipate labor by having workshops in which the producers—the work people—have a share. The ideal is that the co-operators should take a real, living, vital interest in the matter—workshops and stores working together. Out of this will come the better housing of the people. I reiterate and emphasize the ideal that the workers must have a share in profits, losses, responsibility, and management."

"Can they do this?"

"Oh, yes, it can be done. It requires patience no doubt. Our difficulty is that our co-operators are timid; they hesitate to invest their capital. They are getting, perhaps, a safe five per cent now, and they hesitate to launch out into starting co-operative workshops."

IDEAL NOT LOWERED.

"Then would you say that their co-operative ideal has been lowered?"

"No; it is scarcely fair to say that. What really has happened is this: We have drawn a large section of the working people into the business side of the movement, and that side has become enormously successful; but the mass of our working people are commercially untrained and inexperienced, and are, therefore, timid and conservative in business matters.

"For instance, the great Leeds Society—which is now the biggest retail society, doing one and a quarter million a year—started as a flour-mill, but when it was proposed they should go in for groceries the members were so alarmed that they threw over the committee, and elected more cautious men.

"People will applaud the co-operative ideal at meetings—namely, that Capital and Labor should be wedded, and that every working man should become a capitalist, and every capitalist be more or less a worker; but it is difficult to lead them to take the steps to realize this ideal."

"How do the cooperative societies at present treat their employees?"

"The eight hours' day does prevail in many stores and in most workshops, but not in all. In a number of stores the condition of employees as to hours and as to wages is not ideal. We must remedy this by raising the sentiment of the store members; further, the employees should become members themselves, and exercise a good influence.

"If only we could get the two million cooperators to take up the labor copartnership branch of the great cooperative movement they could abolish sweating, though, of course, the general public must come in to help them."

"Now I am off to Birmingham for the Congress; the first was held May 31, 1869."

Mr. Greening's remarks as to the sweating matchbox-making will be found in another column.—Daily News, (England,) June 2, 1906.

A NEW BIOGRAPHY OF ROBERT OWEN.

In the preface to these deeply interesting volumes, Mr. Frank Podmore tells us that he supposed himself in the first place moved to add to the number of Robert Owen's biographers by his desire to "treat of so congenial a theme." He began to write because he "wanted to write." "But a subsequent series of coincidences has led me to question whether in following my own pleasure I was not the unconscious instrument of larger forces, and the impulse which I held at the time to be the spontaneous outcome of my own volition part of a wider movement in the world of thought, the existence of which I had scarcely suspected." I quote this passage because there is little evidence in Mr. Podmore's book that the author finds a congenial spirit in his subject, while if there is anything in the world of thought to-day which should move a man to write of Robert Owen, it is a movement and a sympathy which might well inspire a biographer to a greater kindness than is shown in some parts of the present work.

Mr. Podmore puts his hero in a fierce white light, and, perhaps, at too many points in his account of Mr. Owen's long life pauses to dwell upon his personal follies and his economic errors. He concludes by denying that Owen was either a social reformer or a captain of industry. He allows that he was a prophet, but of what? Of a society in which, according to Mr. Podmore, it was to suffice "to eat and drink and be clothed, and therewithal to be content." It is only fair to say that the biographer supplies us with material with which to qualify his censures, and in his final paragraph he says: "And when a later generation shall pronounce impartial judgment upon the men and the forces which worked for righteousness in the nineteenth century a place will be found for Robert Owen amongst those whose dreams have helped to reshape the world." It should be represented to Mr. Podmore that if these words be true, as I think they are, then the denial that Owen was worthy of the title "social reformer," on page 644, and the summary of his gospel as a summons to a Paradise of sloth, on page 649, should not have been written.

OF THE SALT OF THE EARTH.

I am not sure, however, that the severity of judgment to which Robert Owen is subjected in the present volumes does not serve his memory better than would the unalloyed praise of an uncandid friend. Mr. Podmore has set down nought in malice, and the greatness of the man shines through his life story. Robert Owen was of the salt of the earth, and in the dark early days of our factory system his sweet savor was the salvation not alone of those in his own employ, but, through the impetus it gave to labor law, of tens of thousands who never saw the face which, we are assured by Mr. Podmore, with curious insistenee, was more than commonly ugly.

The history of the New Lanark Mills is very faithfully recorded in chapter 5, and may be left to decide whether or not Robert Owen deserves to be entitled a "captain of industry." It was surely no small task, in defiance of established practice, with the hinted disapproval of his partners, and in the face of keen competition, to raise the status of his workpeople, shorten their hours of labor, and even to pay wages when machinery stood idle. It was surely a captain of industry no less than a man of heart who formed a new partnership, and triumphantly purchased the mills in 1814 amid the public rejoicings of the people of Lanark. Mr. Owen "of New Lanark" could not have come to be thus known had he not been captain of industry as well as philanthropist. True it is that Owen failed in other schemes, but this is no rare thing with captains of industry in general. It is given to few men to succeed in everything they touch, and nothing is more remarkable in the careers of great business men than their failures as soon as they leave the grooves in which they made their fortunes. Moreover, the foundation of small model communities is a business of uncommon kind, failure in which should be regarded as the necessary price of all constructive experiments. When so few such experiments have been made, we ought to be exceedingly grateful to those who, like Robert Owen, have embarked their fortunes in them.

Mr. Podmore does full justice to Robert Owen's work in connection with the beginnings of factory law. "It may be claimed for him that he first forced the state to open its eyes to the new duties which the changing circumstances of the time were thrusting upon it; that he was, in fact, the pioneer of factory legislation in this country.” What Owen did was first to show, in his own mills, that regard for the worker was not incompatible with profit-making, and next to convince Peel and others that what was possible at New Lanark was not impossible everywhere. The bill which Sir Robert Peel introduced in 1815 was an embodiment of the suggestions of Owen’s pamphlet of the same year.

Thus also it was with the New Lanark schools. The combination of Owen’s precepts with his practical example had a tremendous effect upon the many men who made pilgrimage to Lanark, and led to the establishment first of an infants’ school at Westminster and then to the foundation in 1824 of the London Infant School Society. We are grateful to Mr. Podmore for dwelling upon these phases in the career of one whose fame in other directions has often obscured his fruitful services in that important cause, the cause of the child.

NOT A FAILURE.

Robert Owen’s socialism, which became the chief work, and not as it would appear on the surface the least successful work, of his life, was a conception of small communes engaged in spade husbandry and manufacturing pursuits, to a large extent self-contained and consisting of some 500 to 3,000 persons. In attempting to realize these communities in practice Owen spent his fortune, dying a poor man. From his preaching of the doctrine of association as the cure for the evils of the competitive system, there resulted, it is true, not one single permanent commune, but there sprang the healthy and vigorous cooperative movement which to-day counts its members by millions, and recognizes Owen as its author. Robert Owen was an old man when, in 1848, Maurice and Kingsley and their fellow Christian socialists began their work. They, too, in their turn, appeared to fail. The workshop of the Christian socialists shared the fate of Owen’s communes, but the influence of both alike fed the great cooperative movement, and will feed a greater movement still.

Indeed, Owen was on assailable ground when he asserted that the progress of science and mechanical invention rendered poverty unnecessary. In an undeveloped land, with few means of communication, dependent upon its own harvests, without tools or machinery, poverty must sometimes be. In a community possessing the means to multiply each man’s labor a hundredfold, and free to exchange its products with all the world, poverty is clear proof of bad organization. If Owen erred in imagining that individuals, trained in one condition of society, could successfully withdraw themselves to found novel conditions in a self-contained commune, he made no mistake in indicating association as the ultimate solution of the social problem. Mr. Podmore complains that Owen’s “solitary economic premiss was that with proper management there was enough and to spare.” Owen’s clear grasp of this axiom is unfortunately not yet shared by his biographer and the public at large, or we should not have to wait longer for that organization of industry which could give us, with less labor than is now put forth, enough and to spare of material things. The educational process is a long one, but the leaven of Owen’s ideal increasingly works in the minds of men.—Daily News, (England), June 9, 1906.

Sometime.

We are going to do a kindly deed
Sometime, perhaps, but when?
Our sympathy give in a time of need,
Sometime, perhaps, but when?
We will do so much in the coming years;
We will banish the heartaches and doubts and fears,
And we’ll comfort the lonely and dry their tears,
Sometime, perhaps, but when?
We will give a smile to a saddened heart,
Sometime, perhaps, but when?
Of the heavy burdens we’ll share a part,
Sometime, perhaps, but when?
Sometime we’re going to right the wrong;
Sometime the weak we will help make strong;
Sometime we’ll come with Love’s old, sweet song,
Sometime, perhaps, but when?—Selected.

Our Trip to Tiona.
(Concluded.)

After resting awhile we all went up to see the leprous woman. She is a sister in the church and was once what they call here a leading woman, and her husband a leading man; but she was stricken with that dread disease, leprosy. When she realized she really had the disease, and there was no help for her, she went to work and made up bedclothes and dresses for herself and laid them away for a time when she could no longer work. They had a little house made for her farther up the hill on the outskirts of Tiona. There she now lives all by herself, year in and year out, waiting for the disease to do its deadly work. When we saw her the ends of some of her fingers were gone, and her face hung in little puffy, dark-colored bags; but otherwise she did not look different otherwise she did not look different from other people. She seemed much pleased to see Uncle Joseph and Aunt Emma. We stood a few yards from the platform and talked to her. All her food is brought to the platform, and she comes and gets it. Poor woman! what a sad, lonely life she must lead!

On the way back we came upon a brother down on his knees before a trough, scraping manila-root preparatory to making poi, the great Tahitian dish, for the feast on the morrow. I had heard so much about poi that I was anxious to see it in all its stages of preparation. We watched for a while, then concluded if we wanted to relish the dish we had better see it only as it was brought to the table. In the evening we all gathered at the chapel for song-service. The chapel, like the houses, was made of woven cocoa branches. In place of the floor the ground was overlaid with the long, dried leaves, and matting spread over it. There were a few benches placed lengthwise of the room. They were occupied for the most part by the men; the women prefer sitting "tailor fashion" on the floor. It seemed odd at first to see the women sprawling around on the ground. The children got in a bunch right in front of us and gazed at us all the time. Their singing would have to be heard to be appreciated. None of them use books, and most of them close their eyes as they sing. They look as though they were half asleep and the music sounds that way, too, sometimes,—and such prolonged holds! I think they could sing: "Yes, we trust the day is breaking" without any difficulty whatever. They end every tune the same way, hold it as long as they have breath, then finish with a grunt. It was hard work to keep from laughing at some of their customs at first; but now we are getting and incredibly possible, others, and are finding some of these same customs superior to those of America.

Even now, when I see them sitting on the ground or on their platforms eating their meals with their fingers out of one dish or trough placed in the center, I can not help thinking, "What a great saving of time and labor," etc., etc.

Well, the next day was Sunday and the camp of Zion was still quite early; for besides the five sessions of meetings there were four long rows of banana leaves laid on the ground, the people in a new and to us a more realistic light than it is breaking. We had promised your kindlings, or darning your stockings, indulge them with the load lightened, the whip laid on, the wagon forced onto their heels, they at last started. When they overtook us we clambered in as quickly as possible so they would not realize they had stopped, and this time we were really off; and they were made to know they had lost time that must be made up. It was on the way home, as we were obliged to stop at certain houses, did we have the self-same performance to go through, until we resolved not to stop again for anything. Once, as on the way going, one of them shook off the bridle, but the driver got out, and hopping along ahead, got it on, and into the wagon again without stopping. And again when reaching town Charlie jumped out, ran ahead, did an errand, and back in again without halting, and so we reached home, having enjoyed the visit to Tiona more than anything else since coming to Papeete.

Your sister,

ALBERTA LAKE.

[We feel sure that our readers will be greatly interested in the above letter from our well loved missionary to the far away islands of Oceania. They will also agree with us that no apology upon her part for sending it was necessary, for while much, as she says, has already been written upon the same subject, yet her graphic description presents both the country and the people in a new and to us a more realistic light than it has ever been presented by any of our previous correspondents. And beside this it surely is time that some one came to the assistance of our faithful correspondent, Sr. Burton, who has so long borne the heat and burden of the day.—EDITOR.]

The Old Souls.

If you would make the aged happy, lead them to feel that there is still a place for them where they can be useful. When you see their powers failing, do not notice it. It is enough for them to feel it, without a reminder. Do not humiliate them by doing things after them. Accept their offered services, and do not let them see you taking off the dust their poor eyesight has left undisturbed, or wiping up the liquid their trembling hands have spilled; rather let the dust remain, and the liquid stain the carpet, than rob them of their self-respect by seeing you cover their deficiencies. You may give them the best room in your house, you may garnish it with pictures and flowers, you may yield them the best seat in your church pew, the easiest chair in your parlor, the highest seat of honor at your table; but if you lead, or leave, them to feel that they have passed their usefulness, you plant a thorn in their bosom that will rankle there while life lasts. If they are capable of doing nothing but preparing your kindlings, or darning your stockings, indulge them in those things, but never let them feel that it is because they can do nothing else; rather that they do this so well.

Do not ignore their taste and judgment. It may be that in their early days, and in the circle where they moved, they were as much sought and honored as you are now; and until you arrive at that place, you can ill imagine your feelings should you be considered entirely void of these qualities, be regarded as essential to no one, and your opinions be unsought, or discarded if given. They may have been active and successful in the training of children and youth in the way they should go; and will they not feel it keenly, if no attempt is made to draw from this rich experience?

Indulge them as far as possible in their old habits. The various forms of society in which they were educated may be as dear to them as yours are now to you; and can they see them slighted or disdained without a pang? If they relish their meals better by turning their tea into the saucer, having their butter on the same plate with their food, or eating with both knife and fork, do not in word or deed imply to them that the customs of their days are obnoxious in good society and that they are stepping down from respectability as they descend the hillside of life. Always bear in mind that the customs of which you are now so tenacious may be equally repugnant to the next generation.

In this connection I say, do not notice the pronunciation of the aged. They speak as they were taught, and yours may be just as uncourtly to the generations following. I was once taught a lesson on this subject, which I shall never forget while memory holds its sway. I was dining where a father brought his son to take charge of a literary institution. He was intelligent, but had not received the early advantages which he had labored to procure for his son; and his language was quite a contrast to that of the cultivated youth. But the attention and deference he gave to his father’s quaint though wise remarks, placed him on a higher pinnacle in my mind, than he was ever placed by his world-wide reputation as a scholar and writer.—Congregationalist.

Letter Department

COLUMBIA, South Dakota, September 5, 1906.

Editors Herald: In writing to you concerning the work in the east half of South Dakota, I will use the pronoun we, because Elder L. G. Wood is associated with me in this mission; we are married in gospel work; we are one.

We met for the first time at Akron, Iowa, at the home of C. H. Anway in the early part of May, and held about seven meetings in their home. On the 12th, we went to the home of Bro. E. C. Dougherty, near Hudson, South Dakota; remained one week, held several meetings, took part in the “home class Sunday-school,” and baptized Bro. Dougherty’s five boys. Rain and a busy time for farmers prevented continuous meetings. On the 20th we went to Brookings and found an abiding-place at the home of Bro. and Sr. L. L. Delaps. Rain, circus, commencement exercises at the public schools and at the agricultural college prevented any public preaching. The writer called on one of the ministers and tried to sell him a Book of Mormon, but he said his time was too precious, he had too much to do to waste his time in reading what he believed to be a humbug. I offered him some booklets explanatory of our faith. He had no time to read them, and so refused to take them. The spirit manifested was to refuse to learn; and at the same time severely condemn us. Query: To what extent is he under condemnation for refusing to listen as compared with the one who listens and then refuses to accept?

From this place we went to Arlington to the home of Bro. A. C. Stone, and on June 6 commenced meetings in a near-by schoolhouse, and found a larger attendance and more interest than is usually found at that time of the year. While there Bro. Eli Hayer came on the scene, and the writer departed for Hecla, and on the 15th arrived there. On Saturday received a telephone message to go to Kidder, twenty miles away, to preach the funeral-sermon of Bro. and Sr. Davis’ infant child. I went to the home of Bro. George L. Barry until July 4, holding eleven meetings in the schoolhouse. From Hecla I went to Columbia, and was gladly received at the home of Bro. and Sr. R. D. Addison, and notwithstanding they had been away from the Saints for about ten years, and had passed through some bitter trials, their faith was unshaken in the divinity of the angel’s message. On July 8 they took me to Sunday-school, and I was invited to preach, and did so, and was very earnestly requested to come again.

Bro. Wood remained near Arlington until July 4; baptized one and then went to Wessington and held several meetings, and we met at Huron on the 11th and remained about one week, making our home with Bro. E. E. Willard (who keeps bath, and we can recommend him as a good housekeeper, but he ought to be married because he is young, and has many other qualities to recommend him; but 1908 is leap year).

While here, after a severe mental struggle we finally got brave enough to go on the street and try to preach. We had a fair-sized crowd, and they were of a much better class than you usually find listening to the Salvation Army. They treated us with respect, and in no way sought to molest us (the people out here eat good eggs instead of throwing them at ineffective citizens). We had neither music nor light, of our own, and this was a hindrance; but possibly the worst was our timidity and bashfulness. We felt like schoolboys making their first declamations; and it was not so easy to talk as in a regular place of worship. Our little experience has taught us that the street is a good place, to reach the public, and especially in a city of that size (four thousand). It is free from the rowdyism of a small town, and the surging masses of a large city. Every corner has a group standing or sitting down, spending their time in a social way. All our elders can not make street preaching a success, any more than they can any other business. It requires a strong voice, an aggressive temperament, well-posted mind on the doctrine and history of the church, quick at repartee, so he can hold his own in debate; those who possess the qualifications of a good street-preacher can make it honorable and dignified in the eyes of the public, and it will be largely relieved of the odium in which it is held because of so much of the fake kind that is indulged in. And let the writer here suggest, is it not a mistake that is too common in our missionary work, that the novice, the inexperienced, the timid, are pushed to the front with the instruction to “open up new places,” while the experienced and well-qualified one is spending his time in branches, districts, and reunions. In war the veterans are given the post of honor and danger. They storm the trenches, and go where firmness is needed and the fire the fiercest, and the raw recruits are their supports.

Bro. E. E. Willard went to the Nauvoo reunion, and we returned to the north, Bro. Wood to remain at Bro. Addison’s to help him in harvest, and preach on Sunday, and the writer to Bro. Barry’s, near Hecla, to engage in the same kind of labor. I went to Newark and Kidder and preached at the former place three Sundays. Having been requested by the Bishop to assist in the financial affairs in this mission, I preached on the temporal needs of the church, and the Saints of the above places have contributed quite liberally; and if the other fifty families do as well South Dakota will have done that which will be very commendable in the eyes of the Lord.

Straubville, North Dakota, was visited and plans made for a series of meetings in the winter-time.

When I returned to Columbia, Bro. Wood was about to finish his contract. His brown hands and sunburned face gave evidence that he had been faithful, and he also had some gospel experiences. He preached each Sunday where we had made an opening in July, and things went lovely for a while; but some one got scared and soon the cry went abroad, "Mormons, Mormons." Some got mad and would not come any more; the minister of one of Columbia's churches was away on his summer vacation. Some of the congregation learned that there was a preacher at Bro. Addison's, and they sent an invitation for him to come and preach to them, which he did, and they invited him to come again. I do not know whether or not they considered the matter of hiring him as pastor; but the following week Sr. Addison received a letter which stated that the janitor and organist were away, and there would be no meeting the following Sunday; and when they wanted him to come they would send a letter—but it has not come yet. How strange! "Good preaching!"; "best I ever heard"; "come again," and similar expressions of approval; but some one whispers "Mormon," and then we are "horrid things."

The Saints and others of South Dakota are typical of Western people, generous and hospitable, open and free-hearted. We have never been any place where we felt more welcome than in their homes.

Those not of our faith have no more interest in religion than people in other communities. They are interested in money-making and pleasure-seeking. It is quite common for the stores to be open on Sunday and harvesting and threshing going on. One Sunday Bro. C. H. Lamport tried to hire a buggy to take me to Newark to preach. None was to be had. All were engaged several days ahead to go to a neighboring town to a baseball game. On one occasion we went to a neighbor's and invited them to come to church. The lady said, "We would like to come, but we can't get away before company comes." Another was phoned to. The answer was, "We would like to come awfully well, but we have company coming." But these things do not discourage us. Missionaries are accustomed to difficulties and disappointments; and in this mission we find more to encourage than to discourage, more to cheer than to sadden our hearts. Several more missionaries could be used to good advantage if we had them.

Since commencing this letter I have come to Letcher and baptized Ruby I. Harvey, eleven-year-old daughter of Bro. and Sr. R. Harvey, a Sunday-school home class scholar. The entire family have now entered into covenant to serve God and keep his commandments; and may they be kept by his love so they can receive their full reward.

Yours in gospel bonds,

Editors Saints' Herald: Another annual Southern California reunion over. "The best in the history of the district," is the general verdict.

We approached the reunion with misgivings. Up to the last week we did not give up looking for either Bro. F. M. Smith or E. L. Kelley or both, and when neither came we were cast-fallen. The chairman of our reunion committee was called east just before the reunion to attend the funeral of his father. This left much for us to do, but by general cooperation we got through nicely. What we lacked in the preaching line, God made up in the social service. What a glorious season it was to us to sit in the assembly of the Saints where nearly every eye was wet with tears, where an uninterrupted series of testimonies interspersed with spiritual manifestations gave evidence of supreme trust in God. The voice of the Spirit was very encouraging. The old pioneers in gospel work were not desirous of recounting the experiences of the "long ago." They voiced the present sentiment. "This is the best reunion we have ever held." The preaching was by Brm. A. Carmichael, A. E. Jones, H. H. Hemingway, and the writer. All of the local brethren cheerfully responded when called upon. There were eight baptisms. This makes twenty baptisms in Los Angeles since General Conference. The other branches made a good showing in this line also. The business of the conference passed off without a jar. All of the officers of the district were sustained for the coming year. The Lord is working with a number of the young men of the church, and if faithful they will soon be called to service. Prospects are bright for the coming year. We must again voice our disappointment because our feeble efforts were not augmented by one at least of the general ministry. While I believe the Saints in Southern California appreciate their missionaries, still you know a new broom sweeps clean, and a change is frequently salutary. Men like change in everything. I never heard a murmur because the brethren did not come, and I wish to assure them that they will be welcome when they do come.

Editors Herald: The condition of the work in Eastern Iowa is encouraging; there having been quite a number of baptisms so far this conference year, and the Saints manifesting an interest that to us is an indication of a desire to reach a higher plane.

Since May the writer has been with the district tent which has been used with quite a degree of success in Center Junction, Baldwin, and Monmouth, being associated most of time with either Bro. J. B. Wilkermuth or L. E. Hils, and preaching to good crowds nearly all of the time.

We find, as seems to be the experience of most of the missionary force of the church, that in the cities and larger towns it is almost impossible, by the use of present prevalent methods, to get a hearing. But in the rural districts, the people are ready and willing, and in many instances eager to hear the angel's message. This leads one to the belief that the time spoken of in the parable, in Luke 14:17-23, is at hand, and that the servants of God will be compelled to go into the highways and byways to get a hearing.

Previous to our going to Monmouth we were informed that the citizens of that place were much opposed to our coming; and sure enough when we arrived and started to erect the tent on the school grounds, having gotten permission to do so from the directors, one of the wealthy men of the town came tearing over and ordered us not to put it up, and threatened serving an injunction if we persisted.

Having seen a great many Iowa wind-storms, we were not to be frightened by a little puff like that; and, leaving his little majesty to storm and telephone to the county attorney, etc., we went ahead and preached to a large crowd that night; thanks to our good advertisement. At every sermon we could see the prejudice melt, and in four days the people who had been so bitter were sending us pies, cakes, and invitations into their homes.

The Methodist minister also did his best to entertain us, the tent being so close that unless he closed his door and windows he was compelled to hear. We furnished him with sermon topics; and the writer having preached on the justice of God and located hell, he announced to preach on the same subject the following Sunday, and those who were present said he had a hard time locating it; but subsequent events caused the suspicion that there was a possibility of his knowing more some day, as he was arrested for assault on the person of his organist, a widow lady. Great excitement prevailed, and a mob gathered threatening tar and feathers, but better council prevailed; and although he pleaded guilty and paid his fine, he was left in peace to enjoy his pleasant thoughts.

He was very bitter against us, warning his flock and telling them to stay away from us. Poor man, retribution was swift and sure.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Now the people there, some of them members of his church, are offering to buy or build us a church, and just begging us to come and take advantage of their offers, and I think we shall.

On August 25 and 26 we had, at Fulton, one of the best conferences I have ever attended, two being called, one to the office of elder and one a priest. They were ordained on Sunday night by James McKerrnan and L. E. Hills. The prayer-meetings were very spiritual and much enjoyed, and all feel that it was indeed good to have been there.

The writer is home to see a sick mother, and get a little needed throat rest.

The organization of a branch at Chattonuga was provided for. It will be a large branch, nearly all new members, the result mainly of the labors of Bro. J. B. Wildermuth and the writer in that vicinity last year, being judiciously followed up by L. E. Hills and writer this year, twenty-six having been baptized since the writing last, and more to follow. Giving to God all the praise, and praying that the good work may go on, I am,

Your brother,

Editors Herald: I beg to be allowed space in your columns for a few words. The following assertion by such a man as Professor G. H. Smith, of the University of Chicago, deserves more than a passing comment from every lover of the true gospel:

"It is easy for us to take up some historical interpretation or theory and put it above our religion. It is so easy, in fact, that we have hundreds of sects in our one religion. Each sect represents some slight difference of theory. These differences have grown so great that nowadays it is a comparatively easy thing for one to be a good member of any particular creed, while it still and always will be difficult to be a true Christian. I say, Away with rituals and creeds, and let us have a true Christian religion."

I respect the words of Professor Smith, "Away with rituals and creeds, and let us have a true Christian religion." The true word of God, as taught in the holy book, is all we want, all we have; and as we see the world awakening to the desire to have this true gospel, can we not see the glorious dawn of the upwards of his truth on earth? God is the same to-day, yesterday, and for ever, unchangeable. None could adore or worship a God who was fickle and changeable, therefore the old Jerusalem gospel preached in former days, hidden for years from mankind, "brought forth from the bowels of the earth," fulfilling the scripture, reorganized, suffering persecution, yet through all, by his divine power, to-day stands witness to his glory. From ocean to ocean, across the raging deep, on the four continents, are hands of God's children proclaiming the truth of his holy word,—the truth as found in Hebrews 6:1, 2.

The inconsistency and hypocrisy as practiced in many of the so-called churches of the world to-day are becoming obnoxious to the deep thinkers, and they are beginning to ask, "Is this the teaching of the Bible? Is this God's commandment and law?" And as Professor Smith says, they want a [the] true religion. Realizing the uncertainty of life, with an eternity before them, surrounded by his Satanic influence, mankind feels the need of a holier dependence, the true word of God. They can not read 1 Corinthians 12:28, they can not read Ephesians 4:11, 13, without asking themselves, "Why have so many churches not accepted these teachings?" But we can best answer this by referring to Matthew 7:15, 16.

Oh! dear Saints, we that have found this glorious truth, how expedient that we live in accordance with his holy teachings, not allowing the little, petty things of life, which in truth are mere trifles, to come into our hearts and take up all the room, so God's Spirit can not enter; but rather let us free ourselves, by God's help, from all uncharitable, all unkind thoughts that we may harbor, remembering always, "It is human to err, but divine to forgive," and that God will forgive us our trespasses only so far as we forgive those who trespass against us. So long as we hold some unkind thought toward a brother or sister, we are only losing some blessings which God is anxious to give us.

My dear brothers and sisters, let us "clean house," let us rid our temples of all rubbish, that our Lord may enter, that we may receive the fullness of God's blessings. The world stands pleading for the true gospel; the harvest is great. God needs each and every one of us in this great field. Let us say, with the words of that beautiful hymn in Zion's Praises, "Master, here am I, send me."

Pray for me, that I may be faithful to my labors in God's vineyard.

Yours in the true gospel,

MYRTLE ROSE STEWART.

Saints' Herald: I am often cheered by the joyful news which comes to hand from time to time of the progress of the work in different parts of the world. It does one's soul good to read the testimonies of the Saints, of God's goodness to them since they obeyed the gospel of the Son of God. And I am sure, if we still remain humble, with the same confidence in God we had when first we obeyed the truth, that his goodness will still be with us.

I often wonder why so many grow cool and indifferent after a few short years of sojourn in the work, and almost forget that they were baptized into the church of the living God. What a sad condition to get into! May we never do anything to cause them to stumble. I long to see the day when the church shall be endowed with that spirit that will keep each one alive and more anxious about the work.

We can not boast of great things in this part of the world, as we have to meet with many discouragements. It seems that the people have no desire to come where we are. The ways of God they seek not after. But we still continue to meet together, and rejoice with joy unspeakable. I hope to continue in so noble a cause. It is now twenty-four years since I obeyed the gospel, those many years of blessing to my soul. I want to remain faithful to the end. Kind wishes to all Saints.

In the one faith,

WILLIAM ECCLESTONE.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, September 2, 1906.

Dear Herald: Much has been said lately about the gathering to Zion and many other things; but it seems that we are drifting farther and farther away from the original plan of God; to establish the kingdom of God or the kingdom of justice on earth; and imitate more and more the other sectarian churches.

The writer himself was present at the reunion in Nauvoo, when arguments were raised against all kinds of innocent amusements, against drinking of wine and beer and everything; and he thought it rather strange to raise such arguments in a place where the Latter Day Saints once were driven out and persecuted, and now, where the population had changed their views and treated them cordially, to again stir up ill-feeling and prejudice. Those elders and officers that brought up those arguments forgot that they were in the midst of a population who make their living by raising grapes and making wine; and certainly those people will not be favorably impressed with such arguments, which soon will be the cause of ill-feeling once again.

Christ made us free, and the Pharisees, when his disciples were accused of violating the Sabbath, as they picked a few ears of corn and ate them, walking through a field on the Sabbath day, were rebuked by him, telling them the Sabbath was made for men, and not men for the Sabbath.
And he said of himself, St. John came, did not eat and drink, and they said, he has the devil; the Son of Man came eating and drinking, and they say he is a wine-bibber and a gluttonous man, and a friend of the publicans and sinners. Christ should be authority for us. For instance, why did Christ select the wine as a symbol of his blood in the Lord's supper? and he did not use the unfermented grape-juice, but the pure fermented wine. For what reason? To remind his followers when drinking of the wine, just as the wine first gets pure by working and fermentation, so the newly born, of the water and the Spirit, shall get pure by the working of the Holy Spirit; that the impurity of the former life will be cast out, and a new and pure life will be established. Therefore no water for me, or boiled raisin water and so-called (impure) unfermented grape-juice at the Lord's supper.

But the main argument is, What have we to do with the outside world, especially as long as we must live among them and depend on them for our living? Our only duty is to obey the law of God, to proclaim the doctrine of Jesus Christ as the doctrine of eternal justice, and to try to do what is in our power to help establish the kingdom of justice, or the kingdom of Jesus Christ on earth.

That reminds me, when myself and my father-in-law, the late Bro. Bauer, offered all our possessions about thirty-five years ago to the church, to commence to fulfill the plan as commanded to the church, it was refused to us, and we even had to suffer from the church. Nearly thirty years ago I had bargained for a piece of property on the southeast corner of the square opposite the court-house in Independence, and had paid one hundred dollars on said property to bind the bargain of three thousand dollars—a three story brick house; but it was impossible for me to raise the purchase money in due time, and I lost the one hundred dollars.

At that time, Kansas City was a city of only a little more than forty thousand inhabitants, and the property in Independence could have been bought very cheap. But now the entire situation is changed. Kansas City is now a city of several hundred thousand, and the property in Independence has a high valuation and it is almost impossible to obtain land around Independence at a reasonable price. And land is the first thing that we must obtain to establish a prosperous community.

Further, it is all right that Independence is established as a stake of Zion; but we must not flatter ourselves that we will turn the great city of Kansas City in our favor at once. On the contrary, we soon will arouse the petty jealousy of those people, stirred by a prejudiced, fanatical clergy, which will only cause trouble and persecutions.

Still the time has come that we must get out from among the wicked and unjust, as the pressure gets greater from day to day. But where shall we go? What shall we do, if we do not have the proper means in our hands? It is all right that the Lord will provide for us in due time; but we also shall use judgment and wisdom. For this reason I wish to bring the following matter before the Latter Day Saints.

By accident I received on offer of some large tracts of land in Mexico, and especially one tract fell favorably into my notice. It is a tract of 1,376,395 acres; the greatest length is about ninety-seven miles, and the greatest width about forty-seven miles, and it lies along the Arizona border; and it seems to me it must be a part of the Land of the Nephites. The price of this land shall be twenty-five cents per acre, and the land is adapted for grazing, farming, tropical fruit, coal, and rich mineral lands; just the land that a gathering of people needs. Even the poorer classes would be able to buy a one hundred-acre tract for the small sum of twenty-five dollars, and at once there would be a few thousand families located, as soon as the proper arrangements would have been made.

Here is a plan that is feasible to be executed; and if the Lord gives his blessing can only result in success.

I wrote to the parties that have said land for sale, and they are willing to give further particulars, and that there is a perfect title to said land; but of course caution would be necessary, and a thorough investigation, that we should receive a just and square deal.

But here is a chance where a great deal can be done with comparatively small means. And for this reason I wished to bring the matter before the Saints at large. I myself am not a friend of much talk. I would like to see action and energy without individual selfishness and greed which is the curse of our present generation, and must bring destruction in due time.

Talk is very cheap; but it takes money to buy land; and it takes money again, brain, and energy to be successful in any undertaking. And then it commands honesty, justice, and perseverance to accomplish, and in united strength lies the power to accomplish. This we never should forget; but self-justifying and petty jealousy can result only in disharmony and destruction. We have no right to judge other people. "Judge not, that ye be not judged," said the Savior. This means every one of us. Every one has to work out his own salvation. Our main commandment is to strive for justice. Everything else then will come to us.

A. N. RICHTER.

A Dream.

On the night of November 18, 1904, I had a dream, and intended to send it for publication. I read it to some and was advised to do so, and though two years have gone I now send it, believing that there is in it a lesson that is applicable not only to the people living in the neighborhood mentioned in the dream, but all can examine themselves and see if they are living within their means, not only the families but the brethren in the missionary field.

Let me say one word to my brother missionaries: Are you not a little extravagant with means placed in your hands? Why is it that some can go just as far from home, their field of labor is just as expensive, and yet they spend only from $75 to $100 a year, while others pay out from $300 to $500, and some from $550 to $450? Now I do not refer to brethren in charge of missions, for it takes money to travel, and those in charge are expected to cover the ground once, and some parts twice a year. In writing this I do so that we may try to be more equal. Much has been said lately on the subject of equality. While we wish to have the Saints observe the law that brings us to that condition, let us who are in the ministry curtail expenses. While I admit some can get along with less expense than others, I do believe that many who are out can get along with much less than they do if they will try.

I have in mind three brethren who went to the same mission. They had charge of the work in separate parts. The expense to reach the field was nearly the same. Bro. A's expenses for the year were $90; Bro. B's were $180, and Bro. C's $408. Their expenses should have been about the same in those three places. Bro. B's expenses were more than double the amount of Bro. A's, and Bro. C's more than twice as much as Bro. A's, and more than four times as much as Bro. A's. The family of each received their allowance; family of A, wife and child, $29; family of B, wife, $204; family of C, wife and child, $276. My reason for referring to the families is that it may not be thought the families' expenses were included in the missionaries'. It may be that the missionary paid some to his wife for board. If so, Bro. C could do better to his than A and B, and if he did pay $10 a month, which is what the Bishop allows, he then had $189. Bro. A paid his wife $50 for board, so he had only $34.75 for expenses. I do not know what arrangement was made about Bro. B, whether he boarded at home or not. Now there are many just such cases that could be mentioned, and I hope that the above will cause each one in the field to resolve that he will live within his means, and be saving, so that the church can send more missionaries into the vineyard. I assure my brethren that I do not want them to go poorly clad nor hungry, nor to sleep in hovels because lodging is cheap there; nor do I think it is right to ask them to stay away from their families a year for the sake of saving $30 or $25. But I do believe from past experience that when a missionary spends from $200 to $300 a year that there is not the proper effort made to be saving. Let us try to do better.

I will now relate the dream, and it certainly has a strong bearing along the line I have been writing:

I dreamed that I was sent to collect some money from Bro. --- that he had owed for some time. I was directed to go to and gave him a $25. But I do believe from past experience that when a missionary spends from saving. Let us try to do better.

As I turned to go I said, "Young man, you have no manners and no respect for others or you would not answer people in the way you do. You lack much of being a gentleman, much less a Christian." As I went through the building in search of Bro. --- I saw that on each side of the long, narrow room were tables. I walked down the aisle that extended lengthwise through the center of the room but did not find Bro. ---. On my return I noticed that the tables were surrounded with brethren, most of whom I knew in my dream. Some I still remember. They were all standing, and they had several kinds of meat on the table—roast beef, pork, mutton, and veal. I paused about midway of the aisle and looked around the room. I remarked to myself, "Well, those men, who I thought were missionaries, and some of the local brethren, are living beyond their means. They certainly can not afford to have all this rarity of meat. I then remarked, 'Are you not living too fast? How can you have so much when your income is not large enough to justify such high living? Why not live within your means?'" I at last found Bro. --- and gave him a statement of his account and asked if he could pay it. 'Well, he said, 'some of the account is old and I owe it all; but I can not pay the old debt. I shall try to pay the last.'" "Well," I said, "Bro., ---, do you know why you can not pay this account?" He said he did not have the money. I said, "You have lived too fast. You have paid $90 to $90 a month rent; you have had a servant girl for years; have given your children college educations; have dressed in the height of fashion, and your table is spread with all the market affords. Had you done as many of the brethren have, whose families are larger than yours, lived in a house that cost $12 to $15 a month, given the children public school educations, done your own housework, when you could not afford to have silk and satin, dress in calico, live on bread and butter when you did not have the money to get roast beef; had you lived within your means there would be no need of my calling on you to-day with this account." I then called his attention to those in the building, that they were living beyond their means, that their tables were spread with all the earth and water produced. As I now look around in the world I see that many in the church and out are not so careful about living within their income as they should be. Let us pay as we go, is the safe policy, and see that the money we pay is our own and not somebody else's. The man who borrows money to carry on business once in his lifetime and makes a failure so that he can pay his creditors only fifty cents on a dollar, he himself going out into the cold world penniless, will have the sympathy of fair-minded people, but when he borrows money time after time to carry on his business on the farms, in the bank, creamery, or store, and he himself draws a high salary, lives as the brother above referred to, on other people's hard-earned money, in costly homes, and then fails, certainly that party has no one to blame but himself, and he should be censured, for he has spent money not alone in pushing his business but in living high on people's money who had lived on one third of what he has been or is now living on. I forgive those who are in debt to me who, because of circumstances over which they have no control, can not pay; but those within or without the church who get in debt and will still live in expensive homes, dress in the height of fashion, have the best the market affords, and be just as careful in keeping down expenses when using the funds of the church as if we were drawing from our own bank account. For one I shall try to live within bounds and not spend $90 a year when my brethren spend only $100, when their fields of labor are just as expensive as the one I am in. True economy strengthens confidence; a spendthrift will destroy it. Let the authorities see who are in line with the first, and retain them.

Tomlinson, now of Bethune, Saskatchewan, did such a good work last winter. We called in person on the Mr. Parker who had lectured against us, and invited him to a public defense of his attack made in the absence of any one to reply. He verbally accepted; but refused to enter into any documentary arrangement until he heard $300 a year when my brethren spend only $100, when their fields of labor are just as expensive as the one I am in. True economy strengthens confidence; a spendthrift will destroy it. Let the authorities see who are in line with the first, and retain them.

that you are to follow me." "Thank you," I responded, "and I will appreciate it if you will make the distinction between the two churches." "I will," she quickly returned.

She fulfilled her promise to the letter, and for once I had a crowd right from the opening of my address. In my address which followed, I was interrupted by a Presbyterian minister, who raised a point of objection to some remarks we made relative to the apostasy of the church. Other questions and objections were disposed of as made by different listeners; and later in the sermon the same reverend, thinking evidently that we were of the Utah propaganda, said (after I had denied polygamy): "If polygamy is not an essential feature of Mormonism, why is it that after Roberts had occupied a seat in congress for some time, it was discovered and proved that he had three wives?" I answered, "I can help you, sir. Joseph F. Smith, the president of the Mormon church, admitted not long ago before the Senate Committee in Washington that he had five wives." Then a deep silence reigned, while we went to work and narrated the Utah apostasy, the usurpation of Brigham Young, and the introduction of polygamy. The Utah elders stood there—as some of them had in nearly every street audience we entertained—till we began to unmask their false system when they—their man in charge at least—hid away.

Since, the latter gentleman met me and told me I had "no more charity than a dog on the street" to refer to them as I did. They evidently feel the effects of the blow that they have certainly received in the references to the Utah question on several occasions, and the distribution of hundreds of our tracts and pamphlets broadcast in the city pertaining to the same thing.

To-day I placed in the hands of the editor of the Free Press, the leading daily, a lengthy article on the Mormon aspect, quoting in the latter part from the notorious admissions made by the Utah leaders in the Smoot case. The letter is a statement of facts, with copious references to Utah publications. We stated the leading differences between this and the Utah church as being, first, succession; second, polygamy; third, blood atonement; fourth, their Adam-god theory; fifth, their exclusion of the colored race from the privilege of the priesthood.

With regard to the fifth point, they stoutly affirmed here that such is their practice, based on an item in the book of Abraham, and I have not been in Mormondom sufficiently to know whether they carry it out. Since they teach it, it is a point against them anyway; for the idea of God being no respecter of persons, of there being neither Jew nor Greek, male nor female in Christ Jesus, etc., and then making complexion a matter of qualification or disqualification for the priesthood! The book of Abraham contains some directions about as indicated—but two things: its authenticity must be infallibly established, and then it must be shown that the portion referred to is equally binding to-day. We find that the book of Abraham was no more of a standard to the church in the Martyr's time than the mummies in which, or with which, it was contained.

Recently the writer was summoned to Treherne to administer to our aged Sr. Graham, and we found that the Utah elders had visited among the Saints there; had handed out their literature to our aged Sr. and narrated the Utah apostasy, the usurpation of Brigham Young, and the introduction of polygamy. The Utah elders were standing by when Mrs. Rice made the disapprovals and objections to the brethren's article. They carry it out. Since they teach it, it is a point against them. We supplied the brethren with matter on the other side, and ere our departure took the pains to deliver one sermon on the subject.

Their elders were standing by when Mrs. Rice made the distinction between the two churches; their man in charge afterward said, "I noticed you had been with her." He talked of visiting Treherne to talk to our people; refused to debate in the city; but said he might debate there. He was told that he would be met there if the arrangement was so made as to require a repetition of the performance somewhere where they have a congregation of members.

We have about fifteen members in the city. Brn. Henderbe will keep the commandments of God, and some of these commandments are that we pay one tenth of our substance to the storehouse of the Lord. It may be a sacrifice; but to-day is a day of sacrifice, a day for the tithing of the people of God; and it is of the second time; and it will not be burned; “for after to-day cometh the burning.” (Doctrine and Covenants 64:5.) Again, in Doctrine and Covenants 106:2, the Lord tells us that they that fail to keep this law of tithing and consecration will not be worthy to remain in Zion. Dear Saints, will you take God at his word? Will you rely on his promises? Will you keep his commandments? Remember he has made each one his own steward, and his own judge; yet God has given each one a work to do, and no one can do another’s work; but it is a personal salvation. Now in the Central Michigan District there are about nine hundred members. Will each one pay ten cents per week? If they will, it will make ninety dollars per week, three hundred dollars per month, and four thousand, three hundred and twenty dollars per year. This grand total would soon redeem Zion, as well as send elders to administer to the sick, and fill all calls for preaching. Trusting each one will give this some thought, and do his part to help to carry on the great work we are engaged in, I am,

Your humble servant,

The passage of the free alcohol bill during the last session of the Nebraska Legislature, which will now be used quite freely in the manufacture of alcohol, which was so long sought, is a great stride forward. It is reasonable to expect that denaturized alcohol will be largely used for making such products as varnish, paint, and shellac, but is inferior to ordinary alcohol and is detrimental to the health of those who work with it.

An interesting feature of the September Arena is Professor Frederic M. Noa’s vivid pen-picture of the new law on alcohol. He describes the way in which he republished Mr. Moran’s outspoken declaration of principles. One of the most thoughtful and important developments in this connection is the publication of a book on the subject by Mr. George McA. Miller, Ph. D., entitled “The Farmer and the Future of Alcohol.”

Interstate Live Stock and Horse Show.

The management of the Interstate Live Stock and Horse Show takes this opportunity of announcing that it has been decided to conduct the great Dominion Fair at Toronto, and the fairs at Ottawa, the capital, and at London. They come direct from London to St. Joseph, Missouri, for exhibition at the great Dominion Fair at Toronto, and the fairs at Ottawa, the capital, and at London. They come direct from London to St. Joseph, Missouri, and are exhibited for the first time in the United States.

Every effort has been made to care for them, having a special building with large box stalls for their use, so arranged that the public will have every facility for seeing them. At the Canadian fairs, the buildings where these horses were exhibited were so crowded that it was almost impossible to get near them. Here things are so arranged that it will be easy and safe for any one.

This particular bunch of horses will furnish a great study, as, in their ranks, every age is represented from a suckling colt up to the mature animals of both sexes.

Denaturized Alcohol Promises to Benefit the Western Farmer.

It is a paper of more than passing interest, especially the proposition that the manufacture of alcohol is a great advantage to the farmer, who is in position to profit from the alcohol industry, for alcohol as a fuel is going to do wonders for him. It is freely expected that denaturized alcohol will be largely used for heating, lighting, and fuel.

While it has only about half the heating power of kerosene or gasoline, it is far superior in other respects. For instance, it is much safer and can be easily controlled. While denaturized alcohol is not so pure as the refined product, it is absolutely unlimited, whereas gasoline, for instance, represents only about two per cent of the petroleum refined, and the demands now made on it can only force up the price. The farmer who is to produce corn and potatoes for the manufacture of alcohol is, however, to share even more intimately in the profits, for he can utilize it in his home and on his farm.

Alcohol is now used in small portable lamps which give all the effects of a mantel burner heated by gas. As a motive power, it will be of even greater value, for the farmer can use it to make his butter, grind his feed, pump his water, or turn it to any other use at the farm.

Statistics of the ways and means committee of the House of Representatives show many places where alcohol can be produced at a cost of twenty to twenty-five cents per gallon. Moreover, the refuse now used as cattle feed. When this cost is compared with the (2.20) tax per gallon, the enormous saving in production is at once seen. The natural reduction which comes with all new enterprises, improvements in machinery, and other conditions will undoubtedly reduce this cost, so that alcohol is certain to become one of the cheapest fuels ever produced.

Farmer Understood Finance.

From Newark (N. J.) News: Once upon a time a millionaire in disguise chuffed up to the door of a lowly farmhouse and asked for charity. But the right night was coming and the road lay long to the nearest town.

"Welcome in, stranger," called the farmer, jovially. The traveler descended from his automobile and entered, and after supper sat by the fire with the farmer.

"You seem to be happy here," said the millionaire.

"We are," said the farmer. "There isn't a thing we ask for.

"But you are poor," said the other. "Your children are ill clad, your wife is wearing her beauty away at drudgery, and you toil in the fields the whole year round and have nothing in bank at last.

"Anyway," said the farmer, smiling, "the magazines let us alone.

The millionaire started.

"We don't have to hire private detectives to chase photographers off the place," the farmer continued. "There isn't a college camping on our trail for plunder, and, furthermore, we don't have to stay away from home for fear of attorney-generals.

The millionaire turned a haunted face to the farmer. "Then you know who I am?" he asked.

"Sure, I do; we read the papers. But that makes no difference—you may stay here as long as you like."

After breakfast the next morning the millionaire prepared to depart.

"How much do I owe you?" he asked.

"Five thousand dollars," promptly replied the farmer.

"This is an outrage!" the guest exclaimed.

"No, it isn't. It's monopoly.

"Do you mean to charge me $3,000 for a couple of pounds of corn-bread and a night's lodging?"

"Not at all. I'm charging you for air and water."

"But air and water are common property.

"So are petroleum and coal. But when the air you breathe comes through my windows, and the water you drink comes out of my well, you've got to pay me my price for them.

"No, re a lately cried the millionaire.

"Think again," said the farmer. "I'll admit that it wasn't my water you drank; it belonged to you as much as to me. But the well you drew the water from was dug by myself, and I have the right to make as much profit out of my industry as I can, haven't I?"

"I don't know what you ought to say to you," answered the millionaire, as he wrote a check and handed it over.

"With your dangerous opinions you ought not to be at large in the university?"

"Not for mine," the farmer replied, smiling.

"Then I'll tell you what to do. Organize a company and sell stock in your well.

"And see you crush the business in six months? No, thanks."

A hand of horsemen appearing on a neighboring hill, waving subpoenas in their hands, the millionaire leaped into his automobile and chuffed away.—Appeal to Reason.

Publicity the Remedy.

The effect of wide-spread publicity in reforming evil conditions, be they political or commercial, is proved in the case of child labor. A few years ago but little was heard on the subject; to-day there is a State in the Union without some form of legislation connected with the employment of children. Doctor Samuel McCune Lindsay, secretary of the National Child Labor Committee, believes that the reform already achieved has come about mainly through the airing of public sentiment by the magazine and newspaper press. In writing on this subject he says:

"A shrewd and typical business man, not much given to sentiment, recently was heard to say: "The child labor question, the larger and more important it seems to me. It is fundamental to all social reform."

"The heart of the American people is sounded. There are more disinterested persons whose vision is clear and whose judgment is sound on any social question than there are solicitous, selfish persons who refuse to act because it costs them something. The question is to get the facts before them. The press, with its often large and powerful influence, can, and should, secure a hearing, where it should lead in demanding a hearing for a new important cause. That the child labor problem has secured so able and influential an expounder as the Woman's Home Companion is a sign of voided. No other single publication has undertaken this task on so large and thorough a scale, and in a spirit so worthy of praise.

"How fruitful publicity may be is admirably brought home to us by recent events—political regeneration, insurance scandals, railroads and corporate ethics, beef inspection, and many other things we had talked about in a helpless way, needed but the light of national publicity, and remedies were at once applied. Child labor is no exception; national crusade is necessary and will succeed. The national committee has before it the task of supplying with information, harmonizing and coordinating the efforts and plans of the most powerful factors in, and makers of, public opinion—the churches, educators, organized labor, women's clubs, public officials, and the press. Its files are filling up with necessary data, the experience in each succeeding campaign has its value for the next; its channels of communication with all parts of the country are widening. How soon it may announce that there has been incorporated into the body politic of the entire country a new national standard, a higher regard for the sacredness of childhood, a larger responsibility for the future, a wider appreciation of the value of the holding open the door of large opportunity to the children of the poor as well as the rich, will depend upon the answer to this appeal from each individual citizen, and the extent to which a knowledge of the appeal and the facts upon which it rests is passed on from one to another by all who read and hear the voice of the downtrodden child.

Banking by mail has become one of the popular recognized institutions of our time, and it will continue to grow, because it is a real convenience and meets many wants. This bank has already developed a large mail business which comes from many different states of the Union. We give prompt and careful attention to all business sent to us through the company desires to keep the working and controlling power with the church members, if possible. The opening up of the undeveloped coal field at the edge of a densely populated community of 60,000 people is a matter of conditions to considerate, as the atmosphere of the necessities of life, with freight rates practically cut off, making this enterprise an exceptional one.

Five hundred and sixty-acre tracts have been leased for fifty years; the hundred and fifty-four purchased, making it all seven hundred and twenty-three acres of coal land in one body, on the line of the Missouri and Kansas Central railroad, two miles east of Independence. The company already has coal mines at Napoleon, Missouri, in operation and a successful and prosperous retail business, making this a basis, paying interest.

Money seeking investment can be better placed, and will bring the best kind of satisfaction, as it will bring good returns to the investor and results that are much sought for by companies employing the unemployed, scattered, pressed-down, poor church members by placing them in a position to help themselves.

The 154 acres are intended for homes for mine-workers, to be sold at a price, as the edge of Missouri, population is one body, on the line of the Missouri and Kansas Central railroad, two miles east of Independence.

WHO THINK FOR THEMSELVES.

Lately we have had our attention called to the thought or sentiment expressed in the caption, and we refer to it now for the reason that the manner of its reiteration seems to bear the inference that there is a class of Latter Day Saints who do not think for themselves, and direct appeals are made to a supposed class, few or many, who are supposed to think for themselves. Unfortunately for us, in the application made by the reiteration of the caption we and some others seem to be included in the class who do not think for themselves, and who by inference are apparently charged with doing the thinking for others, few or many.

The constant teaching of the ministry, including as a matter of course those who have been called the leading men of the church, has been to all, that they were to be held responsible before God for the use they make of the faculties with which they are endowed and the opportunities which may be offered them for the accomplishment of good in this life. No exception ever has been made in this effort of those who have preached the gospel to the world, and those who have been taught and have accepted the philosophy of the angelic message, the restored gospel of the Son of God.

Consciously, no claim has ever been made by those who have been called leaders to coerce the thoughts or sentiments of the Saints; nor has any attempt been made to dominate by superior strength those who may have been accounted as weak. No effort has been made by the intelligent to overcome by claimed or assumed superiority the unintelligent or ignorant. We know of none, as above stated, and if there has ever been anything of the kind we have never been a party to it or been cognizant of it. We have an undoubted right therefore to resent any implication that such a condition of things exists, or if existent, is the result of demand or request by those who may have been termed leaders.

The "leading men of the church," the "heads of the church," are responsible to God for the exercise of their faculties, for the acceptance and right use of the opportunities which may have come to them for the work imposed upon them by divine commandment, the same as are all other classes of members.

ELDER D. R. CHAMBERS writing from Bonesteel, North Dakota, the 7th inst., says that he baptized four at Herrick the previous week, and organized a Sunday-school.
in the church. So far as responsibility is concerned, there is no difference between them and their coworkers in the fact that every man is to answer to God for himself. There is this difference, however, that upon these leading men there have been laid responsibilities differing in great degree from those which have been placed upon mere membership, inasmuch as they all have to answer to God for those things which have come to them by virtue of membership in the church; and while all have to answer not only for the opportunities which have been offered them in their call to offices less or great, and the performance of duties imposed upon them by virtue of these offices, these leading men have more to answer for than the mere member who holds no office.

If it be true that there has been no failure upon the part of those who have been credited as teachers, whether of small or great capacity, to teach the world and the Saints the fact of individual responsibility for what may have come to each, and that they were to take into consideration that which was taught them, and upon that responsibility either accept or reject the theory and to refuse to perform the actions which acceptance might impose and take the consequences of such rejection, or availing themselves of the opportunity to accept and obey to perform the acts required and be blessed with the honor, powers, privileges, joys, immunities, and final glory of or resulting from such acceptance and performance of the duties of members of the mystical body of Christ, the militant church on earth; then it must of necessity be by an inference such as we have referred to or an apparent or any apparent imputation such as we resent the implication that somebody does

It is well known that we have always and under every circumstance stood for the rights of the people and against the assumption of the prerogatives and rights of one-man power, and we are disposed strongly to resent any implication that we are guilty of cherishing any thought or intention of attempting to exercise such rights and privileges. We admit that the spirit of resentment is one of the chief causes of contention. We have tried to comprehend the saying of the Master, "But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." This apparently involves the necessity of keeping silent when assailed, whether that assailing be public or private, open or covert; hence we have in the past tried to turn the other cheek; but we have been so frequently smitten in retaliation that we have almost reached the point where forbearance has ceased to be a virtue and resistance a necessity. If in this we err we regret the error; and should this be made apparent we will strive to amend.

It would seem that after forty-six years of constant application to the duties of the office to which we have been called, and the effort to perform those duties incidentally imposed upon us by the will of the people, we should be entitled to the credit of honest intention and purpose in what we have said and written, and should be excused from blame for unjust intention and purpose should we have been guilty of any indiscretion in the direction suggested; but as with our colaborers and associates, we are subject to like conditions, favorable or unfavorable, like disabilities, small or great, we ask no undue leniency nor privilege, but put ourselves before the people in the same attitude that we believe others should assume and are entitled to.

We deprecate the use of trite sayings which, innocent in themselves, may contain a sting of reproach, the harshness of unmerited rebuke, and the insolence of improper frankness; nor can we see the justness of taking advantage of the term "being frank" to use language which is at least harsh if not insulting about those and with those with whom our life-lines lie. All men are entitled to equal consideration, the qualifications and positions held by them being taken into consideration, and that all are entitled to the exercise of that discrimination which appears in Paul's declaration to the Corinthians, "Charity thinketh no evil."

It should be held by every man that the motives of every other associated worker in the same cause are good; and in writing it is unfair to impugn the motives either by alleging that bad motive exists in thought or in fact. If a writer knows any reason why he can not accord to another the charity of right motive, he should adopt the Christian method of personal investigation "between himself and his brother alone," not publicly hold his opponent up to scorn and derision in the church. If the brother is unworthy of confidence, and this unworthiness is of a character to make him an improper representative of the church, and he will not improve from his unworthiness to that of worthiness, the one who is disposed to find fault with him should have him formally dealt with by proper church authorities, and not attempt to destroy him by inadvertent imputation or by public innuendo or unfair criticism.

As we must answer to God separately and alone, so must we also think for ourselves separately and alone, being privileged to secure what aid unto just conclusions we may require by association with our fellows by search and research and by an appeal to the intelligence of the Spirit, which may minister unto all alike according to their standing and ability.

A CHILDREN'S HOME.

As an incentive to thought with regard to the subject presented in the heading, we call attention to the fact that the Catholic Church is building an extensive home in Kansas City for the babies to cost $50,000. This is conspicuously in harmony with the policy of the Catholic Church, which proceeds upon the hypothesis that the education of the man should begin with the child; that as children come into the world as the result of a divine plan for the peopling of the earth, they are a sacred charge, both to parents and to community, and as such their interests physical and spiritual should be conserved, and that the better conservation can be exercised by the church, hence their care.

A late writer upon this topic, suggesting that it is a true saying and worthy of all acceptance, "Take care of the pennies and the pounds will take care of themselves," gives credence to the statement, "Take care of the babies and the boys and girls will take care of themselves;" "Take care of the boys and girls and the men and women will take care of themselves." The same writer says:

Such an institution as that which is to be begun to-day will do an immense amount of good in lessening the work of those whose duty it is to watch out for the interests of the children farther down the road. Every child started and kept in the right path saves society from caring for a wayward boy or girl, and every such boy and girl who is rescued from a career of crime or dissipation leaves a vacant chair at some prison table. The world is coming to see the force of this sort of logic more and more clearly. The sagacity of the Catholic Church in beginning with the child, in regarding every baby born of Catholic parents as a future communicant is not merely doctrinal. There is a vast deal of sociological common sense in it and to this fact is due in no small degree the marvelous vitality of that organization.

But the principle underlying to-day's event is too fundamental to be appropriated by any ecclesiastical body. It goes back thousands of years, back to the twilight of Judaism, when the child was dedicated to the cause of Israel; hundreds of decades before Christ took little children in his loving arms and said that of such were the kingdom of heaven. It is a sardonic irony of human nature that we should pride ourselves, in the early years of the twentieth century, upon being "up to date," in devoting more and more thought and care to the little ones. But better late than never.

The correctness of the statement made by the Master, "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light," is verified every day that passes. And it does seem strange at times that we will continue to debate and discuss propositions calculated for the amelioration of our own and the conditions of others dear to us, waiting for the possible command of God, and then to receive the command with hesitation. The church has had the reputation of caring for its own poor in the different branches of the church; the church has also in its membership aided by contribution and by personal effort the orphans' homes in the different States where the Saints reside. It certainly is not too much to hope for that we may ere long have an institution like the one referred to being built in Kansas City, modest as it may be in size and equipment.

In connection with the foregoing we notice request by a writer that those having the sanitarium in charge be requested to give the Saints a statement of what they are doing and contemplate doing and suggesting that such might be an inducement to the efforts of others. We do not know just how this may appeal to the Bishopric and those who may be called by them to their aid with regard to the sanitarium, but we suggest that we fail to see how that committee may give the details of work to them until they shall have had sufficient time for the requirement and to determine upon a course of action. If in their judgment it requires a certain amount before they can proceed to discuss plans, that is a preliminary work and should be first presented.

We are of the opinion at present, though we have not canvassed the question with any of the Bishopric or with any other leading men, either local or general, that there will be the extremest care to avoid unnecessary expenditure for show and ornamentation, and that the lesson we may have been taught by any mistakes of the past will be heeded, and that the end to be achieved will have due consideration, and the simplest and the plainest buildings, equipments, and paraphernalia necessary for the accomplishment of the design will be the object aimed at and secured by them.

A CASE IN POINT.

Not a great while ago in apparent answer to our statement that much of the poverty of which writers were complaining was due to the drink habit, we had hurled at us the statement that the drink habit did not produce poverty, but poverty produced the drink habit.

We may have been guilty of poorly stated convictions and illogical argument, but we have made no break in either statement or argument so bad as this.

As a case in point we quote the following from the Kansas City Star for Saturday, September 1, 1906:

THE "LID" PAYS DIVIDENDS.

In Minneapolis this movement has manifested itself in a supreme effort for civic purification and the moral and economic effects on the city have been marked. No longer is the farmer who visits the city for the first time to view the sights in danger of being buncoed out of his hard-earned dollars; no longer are respectable women compelled to avoid any of the business or residence streets of the city; no longer does the laboring man spend his Sundays dissipating his week's earnings in the saloons.

In spite of the fact that Minneapolis possesses a much smaller police force than the average city, having only one smaller police force than the average city, having only one

THIRD JUDICIAL IOWA DISTRICT.

In 1882, the year Iowa had the political contest over prohibition, there was a movement in the Third Judicial Iowa district, which was turned down by Judge Day, in reply to a question presented to him by us as to how the adjudication before the courts was affected by the law, stated that it had reduced the litigation fully one half, and had practically eliminated all that class of cases arising from personal injury and violence, and had reduced the expenses of the courts to the county in the same ratio.

What the rich man may eat or drink does not affect the poor man. It may affect the revenues of the government; and take final revenge on the men who drink for dissipation and physical deterioration and death, such as occurs every day in the circles of the rich, both men and women. Does the poverty of the poor man and the hard lines of the working man make it necessary for him to imitate this folly on the part of the rich man, or cause him to deprive himself and his family, if he has one, of the things, few or many, that the portion of his hard-earned wages which he spends for drink, should buy and pay for?

DOWIE'S FAREWELL TO ZION CITY.

The Chicago Tribune of the 17th of September had this notice of a farewell visit of Doctor Dowie to the fock at Zion City.

It is a pity that a few more years of strength and activity could not have been permitted to this strange religious leader.

An indebtedness aggregating nearly $7,000,000, with assets stated at about $3,500,000, would have been a fearful load of responsibility for the "first apostle," he kept his strength; and may prove too much for both Voliva and Deacon Granger, and the rest of those who will stick by the city.

This Zion City, between Chicago and Milwaukee, is hardly the city "seen of old," the towers of which shall "rise above the clouds."

John Alexander Dowie, who, according to general belief in Zion City, is in an extremely low condition of health, yesterday announced a farewell service at Shiloh house for next Sunday. Immediately after this service he will leave for Mexico, if his physical condition will permit, and it is not expected that he ever will see Zion City again.

In a communication from the old leader, which was read at the tabernacle by Elder A. E. Arrington, he advised his loyal followers to remain away from the polls at the election of a new general overseer to-morrow. He said an effort would be made to enjoin Voliva, whose election as general overseer by a practically unanimous vote is conceded, from assuming that office on the ground that Judge Landis did not have jurisdiction over the ecclesiastical affairs of the church.

Reports of Dowie's condition were taken to his wife at her summer home, Ben MacDhui, White Lake, Michigan, and she hastened to Zion City, accompanied by her son Gladstone. They arrived at Shiloh house Thursday night, but were denied admission. Mrs. Dowie came to Chicago yesterday to remain with a friend, and her son returned to Michigan.

A WORD TO THE MISSIONARIES.

What is the thing of most worth to us as a church? Is it not the salvation of ourselves and the human family? And if that be true, what is the proper method to adopt to accomplish that end? I will answer, It is to adopt strictly the rules laid down in holy writ—the written word of God found in the three books which are to govern the church.

We will notice what would be best for us as individuals. Would it not be better for us to adopt the truth in all things? Because we are told the truth shall make us free. So let us when we say anything in the pulpit, or anywhere else, see to it that it is the truth we speak. I often think we are not careful enough along that line. Now sometimes we love to present something new, and that is right; we should always have something new to present to the people. But we should be sure that what we have to present is the truth. The truth is the only thing that will bring us to the unity of the faith. As long as one Saint holds to an untruth, or in other words as long as some teach one thing and others contradict his teaching, there is no unity.

The Saints as a rule are never willing to be corrected. I have seen Saints get "huffy" because others called their attention to where they had contradicted the written word. I remember one time one of our people presented something that contradicted the written word, and when his attention was called to the fact that he had taught contrary to the written word, he blushed a little and called for the reading of the book. When the book was handed to him he read it and said, "I don't care if it does read that way. It isn't inspired." Now it would have been better for that brother to acknowledge the truth. If we claim to be governed by the written word, would it not be better to do so? and whatever our opinion may be, we should be willing to lay it down if it contradicts the written word. Is it not a truth that God has taught us that we should take the things written in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants to govern us in all our work? And are we not commanded to teach the things found in those three books? I will admit the Inspired Version is the one referred to that is to be taught. The book was to be preserved in safety, and when we got it in full, we were to teach it. I mean the Inspired Scriptures. Do we do that? If not, why not? Can we ever be perfect if we do not teach the perfect law? I answer, No. The church was under condemnation and was to remain under condemnation until they remembered the former commandments, not only to say but to do that which was written.

We are all anxious to see the missionary work prosper. That is right; we should be. But do we do according to the written word? Have we adopted the Lord's plan in pushing our missionary work? Let us see. The missionary force is commanded to push out into new fields opening before them, leaving the care of branches and districts to local officers as much as possible. Are we doing so? I answer, No. Was it the truth when God commanded it? Yes. Then are we purifying ourselves by obeying the truth? If not, we ought to do so.

I have been a missionary for years, and pardon me for giving some personal experiences that have come to me. The work has been open here in Kentucky and Tennessee for the last sixty-five or seventy years, and the missionaries as a rule have just traveled in the same old ruts most of the time. We have held eight reunions in Kentucky and Tennessee and we have done very well, I think. But after the reunions are over as a rule the elders will mount the iron horse and speed away to their field of labor, as they call it, passing swiftly by hundreds of towns and thousands of people that never heard the gospel as taught by the Latter Day Saints. They will land in Texas or Oklahoma or Alabama somewhere, where there is to be a conference or reunion, as if they thought it was very important that they should be there. So when the year is past and we look back over our year's work, what can we see? Oh, well, we can see later, of course. We can see where we have led many precious souls down into the waters of baptism. Yes, but as a rule, who are they? The Saints' children or some one that was raised up in the faith that had been living around the branches of the church. But oh, my, I ought not to say anything about that, for we do not want any one to know but that we are doing just as the Lord has directed us to do. All this work mentioned above is work that could have been done by the branch officers. I want to say there never was a man sent here to the South on a mission since I have been a member of the church but what has landed here in the old branches. Some of them have written to me beforehand, as I lived here and have been president of the district several years, and asked me where was the best place to begin missionary work. I have written some of them to begin as soon as they got into Kentucky, and told them names of parties to stop with who would be glad to hear them. But, no; they would come right on until they reached the branches, and of course the Saints were always glad to see the new missionaries, so we would have a week or ten days' meeting in the branch, then on to another one, and so on, till most of the year was gone. Then what? To their homes and to the General Conference to wait the renewal of appointments. Then what? Right back to the same old ruts, if their missions were not changed; and if they were changed, then what? Well, we must go, of course, and hunt up the branches or Saints in the new fields... and set them in order and tell them where the other fellow missed it. Oh, when shall the world be warned? I will admit it is none of my business what others have done, but I have mentioned what I have to prove that the missionary is not doing as he ought to do at all times. Now my object in calling attention to the work of the past is to cause all to stop and think a little. I do not want any grumbling by the missionaries who have traveled in Kentucky and Tennessee. Do not say, "C. L. is jealous." C. L. is only telling the truth, and you can not deny it, and I do not believe you will deny it.

It is true they have done a little missionary work away from the branches, but it is only a little.

Some have adopted a new plan since the Twelve requested us to report the number of new openings. They will branch out to where some elders have been a few years back and made an opening, preach a few sermons and report a new opening made. Well, it is true it was new to them; but the other fellow beat them there. But of course they do not stop to think, and to ask whether there ever was any preaching done by our people there or not. If they were to do that it would spoil their new openings, and they could not report them as new openings. I have been traveling ten or twelve years and it has been said that I have done more in opening up the work in new fields than any other missionary; and I know that is true. But if I were to report the new openings I had made, and tell where they were made, I would spoil some of the new openings that others have reported. So where is the truth? Can it be found? Yes, I think so. But will we accept it when we find it? I used to think I was doing quite well in missionary work and used to think over at times the number I had been instrumental in bringing into the church; but after a while some missionaries would inform me that they were the ones who did all that was done in bringing those people into the church; so I do not think I can call to mind a words of God. Paul says, If I seek to please men I can not be the servant of Christ. I know some will say that the Editor ought not to publish such articles. Well, I hope they will not say so any more. Which is the worst, to have the Editor cover up our mistakes and sins, or let the truth be found on these pages? To my mind the truth can always be told, and we should be willing to confess our faults. I can say that I love the Saints, and I have a warm place in my heart for all our missionary force; but while that is the case I can see their faults as well as mine, and take this method of confessing my faults and telling my brethren of their faults as well. If you say I ought not to have come out this way in the papers, remember the admonition that if we sin before many we should be rebuked before many. You may come after me the same way if you think best. Yours as ever,

SHALL WE CO-OPERATE?

“C. L. is jealous.” C. L. is one who has been called to preach the things found in the books. Christ says if we are sent of God we will speak the words of God. Paul says, If I seek to please men I can not be the servant of Christ. I know some will say that the Editor ought not to publish such articles. Well, I hope they will not say so any more. Which is the worst, to have the Editor cover up our mistakes and sins, or let the truth be found on these pages? SHALL WE CO-OPERATE?

“The gathering,” “Banks,” “Co-operation,” “Life insurance,” etc., have been from time to time the subjects of editorials and articles by various writers; and it would appear to me that in the church there is a spirit of inquiry. Perhaps God is working in this way in the minds of his people for a desire to gather together to a place of safety that they may be free from the machinations of the world, which are devived for the purpose of self-aggrandizement. It is only necessary to take up our daily papers to find out the conditions that would obtain previous to the gathering, all of which tend to prove that that time is not far distant. I believe that the real "lions in the way" are selfishness and jealousy. Both vices are concomitant. If man was not selfish he would not be so anxious to get gain at another's expense; there would be a desire to live and let live. The idea for man to better himself financially is good in the main, but when it is done, and the brother who has helped with his labor finds that his share in the transaction is to be considerably less than his employer's, then is his dissatisfaction increased, and his hopes for Zionistic conditions shattered. I fail to see how any brother can engage in business (apart from a worldly standpoint) and at the end of each financial year have a large surplus after deducting wages for himself and employees—a surplus which ought to belong to the producers according to the work they have severally done. Hence it is my opinion that a movement of cooperation would be a great factor for bringing us into a better condition, which will be helpful in bringing to pass weightier matters in this direction.

Cooperation on an extensive scale would bring all the wants of the Saints at near to cost price. There would be benefits that would accrue from such a movement that would astonish most Herald writers on these subjects.

It would enable us to control our own "packing-houses," and have clean food, groceries, etc. We would be our own bankers. Then we could lend to our brethren at a small rate sufficient to cover loss; that could not be called usury. With the surplus, or part of it, we could buy the land round about Zion. Houses could be built which would be ours. By this means we could afford to protect ourselves from the world, and so avail ourselves of the warning given in Doctrine and Covenants 86:1: "Behold, verily thus saith the Lord unto you, In consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days," etc.

There is no need to follow commercialism on the lines of Dowie and others; but simply to produce for the wants of the Saints. To enter into competition with the world would but hinder the gathering to Zion. There would be no need for us to join any sick or life assurance societies. I know it would give me more pleasure to give what I do to societies in the church, or an institution established by the Saints. What benefits would the Saints who are at present paying sums yearly for themselves and families into insurance and benefit societies—what would it avail them if Zion should be established now? The thousands of dollars accumulated in this way by God's children would ultimately become the property of his enemies.

A land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the saints of the most high God; and the glory of the Lord shall be there, and the terror of the Lord also shall be there; insomuch that the wicked will not come unto it; . . . and it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion . . . . and it shall be said among the wicked, Let us not go up to battle against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible, wherefore we can not stand. — Doctrine and Covenants 45:12, 13.

We will have the humiliation of knowing our foolishness, instead of sending our treasure unto Zion as commanded, if we have been found supplying the enemies of God with riches, whereby in that day of wickedness they will purchase with these same moneys munitions of war with which to invest Zion. Our desire is that provision be made for our loved ones in the event of our decease, or our old age and infirmities, hence benefit societies. How few of us seem to realize that according to promises made, we should not suffer if we would obey him. (See past and present revelations.)

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts [a challenge], if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. [More than the assurance people can offer.] And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts. [No need for bail assurance there. Canadian brethren take note.]

Enough has been said. Revelations have been given. It is for us, brethren, to throw off the yoke of the world and her ways. We need not her help. "Continue to importune for redress and redemption by the hands of those who are placed as rulers and are in authority over you." Then God will fulfill his part. "Prove me now herewith." A. P.

The Saints' Herald

As J. L. Sees It.

I have read with considerable interest the discussion pro and con of the subject of law and banks, and it seems to me several points have been overlooked by the writers, and that some of their positions are decidedly weak.

I believe the word usury is misapplied. Mr. Smith says: "The law strictly forbade any interest to be taken for a loan to any poor person." (See "Loan.") Kitts says:

Usury, an unlawful contract for the loan of money, to be returned again with exorbitant increase. By the law of Moses the Israelites were forbidden to take usury from their brethren upon the loan of money, victuals, or anything else, not, it has been observed by Michaels, as if he absolutely and in all cases condemned the practice, for he expressly permits interest to be taken from strangers, but only out of favor to the poorer classes.

We are under the law in the world now, and conditions are different from what they will be under the law...
when Zion is redeemed. If it is wrong to take interest on money, is it not equally wrong to take interest (or increase) on anything else? Increase on values is interest; and if we get no increase on investments, what would become of those missionaries, and those who labor by the day or month for a living for themselves and families?

The objector says, When the bank charges me three dollars for the use of one hundred dollars, they have taken advantage of my necessities. And further, that money does not earn anything, and therefore banks and banking are wrong.

Let us see. I wish to get a start in sheep, or some other kind of stock. I borrow money at the bank, buy the stock, pay the bank seven per cent, turn the stock out on grass, and at the end of six months the increase amounts to twenty-five per cent or more. Who has done wrong, or who has been wronged?

Again, if I borrow money to buy coal with, pay seven per cent for the use of it to save a twenty-five per cent rise, has the bank done an unlawful act by lending me the money?

Well, but this is usury and wrong, taking advantage of my necessities. Let us go a little further. Suppose my brother wishes a job of work done. He can not do it. I can. I do the work, and charge therefor. I have taken advantage of his necessity by taking interest on my time. If I object to paying interest, I ought to be consistent, and not charge interest, even on time. But, I read, "Thou shalt not take thy brother's garment; thou shalt pay for that which thou shalt receive of thy brother."

Again: I own a farm. I and my family live on and work the farm and live off the proceeds. I have no other resource. I am required to provide for my family. Now suppose I become incapacitated, or superannuated, so I can not till the farm, what shall I do? If I sell the farm and loan the money for interest, that is usury, and wrong. I must not do that. If I rent it for cash or grain rent, I am taking interest. If I take the proceeds of the sale of the farm, and embark in the mercantile business, and sell goods at a profit, the same thing again confronts me. I can see no difference. But I read section 48, Doctrine and Covenants: "It must needs be necessary, that ye save all the money ye can, and that ye obtain all that ye can in righteousness."

Alongside of such reasoning I wish to read some law. God demands that we increase our wealth as already quoted, and the parable of the talents in Matthew teaches, if anything, whether money or ability, that we should occupy to the securing of an increase, call it what you please.

Section 106, Doctrine and Covenants: "And after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually." Here we have the Lord demanding interest, and commanding the same, virtually; and yet these would-be interpreters of the law declare interest to be wrong. Which will you believe? Further, the Lord says if we do not pay this interest we will be "burned." I can see no reason why one can not do an honest banking business as well as an honest business along other lines. I have known of dishonest farmers; but that does not make farming a dishonest business.

I might extend this indefinitely, but think this is sufficient.

"He that heareth him that is sent heareth the Lord who sent him, if he be called of God and sent by the voice of the church."

Read Doctrine and Covenants 127: 7.

THE SANITARIUM.

The Editor having opened up the question of the sanitarium, the writer will express a few opinions. The Saints should be allowed to express their views in the HERALD and Ensign, and a reasonable amount of space should be set aside for that purpose.

It is not fair or honorable on the part of the Saints to say to the Bishopric: "Buy land and build a sanitarium," without any instructions as to cost, and then find fault if it does not suit us. We must presume that they are using their best judgment in the discharge of the responsibility that rests upon them.

It is the duty of the church to instruct them in reference to its wishes, and then hold them to the faithful discharge of their duty. The Saints must pay the bill, and they should know what it is going to be, "and all things shall be done by common consent in the church, by much prayer and faith." (Doctrine and Covenants 25: 1.)

The officers are before us in a dual capacity, servants of God and of the Saints. They must carry out the wishes of both; and in case of conflict it is then the duty of both to submit it to the proper tribunals of the church for adjustment. The fact that one of the Bishopric suggests ten acres, when it is a well-known fact, as suggested by one of the editors, that most of our hospitals in the cities do not have one acre, ought to suggest to the Saints that they should have something to say in the matter.

It is hardly possible that any building can be started before next spring. In the meantime might it not prove satisfactory and profitable if the officers would receive tenders of tracts of land of various sizes, the plans and specifications for a building and its cost, also what it would cost to furnish it, and submit the entire matter to the General Conference of 1907 for its inspection and approval or disapproval? It seems that such a course ought to give entire satisfaction to all.

Ten acres, one or one half mile beyond the terminal of the street-car line, could be made a very profitable investment; one acre for the sanitarium, with allowance for streets, and one lot for a church-building, thirty lots to sell of the size of four to an acre, which would return to the church $7,500 at $250 per lot. This would be a nucleus for the gathering of the Saints to that part of the city; the street-cars, schools, and other needed improvements would soon follow.

Dowie on Voting and Voting on Dowie.

Strange, is it not, that a man should be killed with the weapon which he has most despised? In 1902 Dowie expressed himself like this on church voting:

This church voting is all nonsense. I should just as soon ask a flock of sheep to vote where the shepherd should lead them.

“How do you get on about voting in the Christian Catholic Church in Zion?” you ask.

We never had a vote in it. I will ask the members of this church if we ever had a vote in it?

Voices.—“No.”

General Overseer.—“Have I ruled you?”

Voices.—“Yes.”

General Overseer.—“Do you like it so?”

Voices.—“Yes.”—Leaves of Healing, vol. 9, no. 25, p. 343.

But it seems that since that date a change has come; a vote has been taken, as will be seen by the following Associate Press dispatch:

CHICAGO, Illinois, September 18.—Wilbur Glen Voliva was chosen to-day by the people of Zion City as their leader by a vote of 1,911 to 6 for his opponent, A. E. Bills. The election was held under the orders of Judge Landis, of the United States district court. The action of the Zionites to-day practically makes John Alexander Dowie an outcast from the religious organization which he established several years ago, and which has now grown to large proportions. Dowie, who is in feeble health, refused to recognize the authority of the court in ordering the election and did not present himself as a candidate.

Out of the total vote cast about half were by women of Zion City, who went to the polls singing hymns, cast their vote and then knelt in prayer at the door of the voting place.

“The Holy Land and Its Relation to Prophecy.”

In the Herald for July 4, 1906 appears an article under the above caption, which, if true, is out of harmony with prophecy, and in order for history to be true, if it is a fulfillment of prophecy, it must harmonize with prophecy; if not harmonious either one or the other must be false.

The author of the above named article makes the following statement:

After considerable examination, the author of this thesis concludes that some of the statements that have been made concerning the Holy Land are of an erroneous character; this presentment is therefore made as a result of that examination.

Then follows references to prove the population of Palestine, and that its sterility was only in part, and that it was due to a failure to properly irrigate as before when the population numbered millions and in evidence cites Mr. Cram as follows:

“The popular notion that Palestine is necessarily a barren country, not capable of yielding profitable harvests is a mistaken one.” Then goes on to say:

Another supposition is, that the rains have for centuries been withheld from the Holy Land, and some add that they were restored in 1852-1853. Those who have made the claim were evidently not properly informed, as the following extracts from a few of the many volumes touching on the subject will show.

Then a number of authors are quoted to prove the opposite of what we as a church have been preaching for years, thus informing the church that they have not been “properly informed.”

I presume that none in the church are averse to being properly informed, but on the contrary should seek to be. I do not write this to invite controversy, but to call attention to some of the prophecies relating to this subject which the brother evidently has overlooked, which, if true, history must bear testimony to, by recording their fulfillment, and thus harmony be brought about.

In Leviticus 26:3, 4, the Lord tells his people that if they would walk in his statutes and keep his commandments, he would give them rain in due season (not out of season), and the land should yield her increase, and the trees of the field should yield their fruit; but if they would not thus walk he tells them in verse 20: “And your strength shall be spent in vain: for your land shall not yield her increase, neither shall the trees of the land yield their fruit.”

Continuing along the same line, and under the same condition, he tells his people in Deuteronomy 11:1-17:

I will give you the rain of your land in his due season, the first rain and the latter rain, that thou mayest gather in thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil. And I will send grass in thy fields for thy cattle, that thou mayest eat and be full. Take heed to yourselves that your heart be not deceived, and ye turn aside, and serve other gods, and worship them; and then the Lord’s wrath be kindled against you, and he shut up the heaven, that there be no rain, and that the land yield not her fruit.

And, as if still further to picture before their minds the terrible condition resulting from a lack of rain, he says, in Deuteronomy 28:24:

The Lord shall make the rain of thy land powder and dust: from heaven shall it come down upon thee, until thou be destroyed.

Speaking of his vineyard which had brought forth wild grapes instead of the kind of fruit which he desired, the Lord says, by the prophet, Isaiah 5:6:

And I will lay it waste: it shall not be pruned, nor digged; but there shall come up briers and thorns: I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it.

And by turning over to the thirty-second chapter, fifteenth verse, we are informed how long this condition shall last:

Until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high, and the wilderness be a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be counted as a forest.

I think all Latter Day Saints recognize in this scripture the restoration of the gospel in its fullness.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
with all its gifts and blessings, and until this event should occur and the proclamation of the gathering of Israel go forth, the land should be in the condition as indicated by prophecy. Others of the prophets also understood this. Ezekiel says:

And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, say unto her, Thou art the land that is not cleansed, nor rained upon in the day of indignation.—Ezekiel 22: 23, 24.

Again:

And also I have withheld the rain from you, when there were yet three months to the harvest: and I caused it to rain upon one city, and caused it not to rain upon another city: one piece was rained upon, and the piece whereupon it rained not withered.

Hence the rain was not in “due season,” and that because of their transgressions. The Lord had promised them that on condition of faithfulness, he would send them rain to produce their crops, and it is nowhere indicated that they would have to depend on irrigation, which in a hilly country like Palestine would not be possible only in a small degree. The hills, which no doubt were covered with various kinds of fruit-trees, would be destitute of rains. Isaiah tells us that just a little while after the coming forth of the Lord’s marvelous work and a wonder Lebanon shall again become a fruitful field. The inference is that it had not been fruitful prior to this time; and as that work was set up in the year 1830, we must of necessity look for a restoration of the fruitfulness (and that means rain in due season) to the land of Palestine. Any amount of rain out of “due season” would not help in the least to bring about fruitfulness. We can see that manifest in our own experience. When we had abundance of rain, but not in the right seasons, it has benefited us little.

Again, we may have had a superabundance of rain in season and spoiled our crops. Both extremes may be a calamity and not a blessing.

But the Lord has promised that the regular rainy seasons known as the former and latter rains shall be restored. That will be rain in “due season.” And we have been told by writers, and it has been quoted by our ministers, that this event occurred in 1852–1853. And while our brother has quoted a great many statistics to prove that the average rainfall prior to that year was more than in those years, this does not disprove the fact that the regular rain periods were not commenced in those years. They may have had a great deal of rain out of season which was of no benefit to them.

While crossing the Atlantic Ocean last summer, my roommate was a Methodist preacher from Philadelphia, who had traveled seven or eight months through Egypt, Palestine, and the European countries. When I learned that he had been through Palestine, I asked him if he learned while there when the former and latter rains were restored to that land. He answered, in 1852 or 1853; he did not remember which. He did not know my object in asking him this question; but his answer was corroborative of the testimony of others, which we have been wont to quote, and in harmony with Bible prophecies, which places this event subsequent to the restoration of the gospel; and, if we accept the Bible as our standard, I think we can well afford to take that for the man of our counsel, even if we may not be “properly informed” in such history as conflicts with that standard. I think that experience has taught us that histories and encyclopedias are not always reliable, and that we should not place too much confidence in them, especially when there is a conflict between them and the Bible.

The brother quotes the statement from Isaiah 29: “Is it not yet a very little while and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field,” etc., and then says:

Nothing is said in the prediction about the restoration of rain to Palestine, and the writer does not see that anything of the kind is contemplated.

The expression, “shall be turned into a fruitful field,” certainly means, if it means anything, that prior to this “turning” it was not a fruitful field; but after this “turning” it should be. This language is not ambiguous in the least; but clear and pointed. It has already been quoted as the Lord’s saying, that a lack of rain should cause the land not to “yield her fruit.” It is only natural and reasonable that a return of the rain in its proper season will also cause fruitfulness to return. Hence, Isaiah is in perfect harmony with the rest of the prophets on the restoration theory.

By turning to Joel 1 we learn of a complete barrenness that is predicted which should come over the land; and in verses 18 and 20 we read:

How do the beasts groan! the herds of cattle are perplexed, because they have no pasture; yea, the flocks of sheep are made desolate. . . . The beasts of the field cry also unto thee: for the rivers of waters are dried up, and the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness.

Then in the next chapter we are told that on condition of repentance he will turn away this calamity, and the prophet says in verses 18 and 19:

Then will the Lord be jealous for his land, and pity his people. Behold, I will send you corn, and wine, and oil, and ye shall be satisfied therewith: and I will no more make you a reproach among the heathen.

Verses 21 and 23 say:

Fear not, 0 land; be glad and rejoice: for the Lord will do great things. Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field: for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, for the tree beareth her fruit, the fig-tree and the vine do yield their strength. Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God: for he hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month.

Then we are told that their floors shall be full of wheat, and vats shall overflow with wine and oil, and that they shall eat and have plenty, and that they shall nevermore be ashamed; and all this shall take place before the ushering in of the signs preceding the second coming of Christ as spoken of in the same chapter; and we have already noticed that it must be after the restoration of the gospel. Thus we learn that there is a period between the restoration of the gospel and the coming to pass of these signs mentioned, in which this land shall again be favored of the Lord, and the regular rain periods be established and again bring about fertility. (See Deuteronomy 11:14.)

The prophecies contained in holy writ pointing to the sterility of Palestine through a lack of rain in “due season” are most assuredly beyond a successful contradiction. And what is true in reference to its sterility is likewise true in reference to the return of fertility or fruitfulness, as spoken of by Isaiah, when the regular rain periods return. And if history does not corroborate prophecy, either one or the other must be incorrect.

One other point in the brother’s article I wish to notice. He says:

The following Jewish law may suggest the need for some rule to apply to the Saints, concerning gathering to Zion.

“A husband may compel his wife under pain of divorce, to go with him and settle in Palestine, but he can not compel her to accompany him to another country. The wife has the same right to remove to Palestine, and she may demand a divorce if her husband refuses to follow her.”

It appears to me that any such law is foreign to the spirit of the gospel and the law of Christ; hence I fail to understand wherein such a law could suggest rules which would apply to the Saints without running counter to the spirit and law of Christ.

In closing I shall refer to one more statement made by the brother. He says:

It may be tempting to use specious, though uncertain, interpretation of prophecy to sustain a feature of our work, if some other representative of the faith has thus employed it, but he who does this abuses the divine responsibility placed upon him as a minister for Christ.

Those prophecies referred to need no interpretation; but explain themselves. Hence there is no uncertainty in the interpretation; and it appears somewhat strange that after all the light and inspiration given to the church since its establishment, in applying prophecy, we now have to be told that we have not been “properly informed.” And yet we are told by Peter:

We have therefore a more sure knowledge of the word of prophecy, to which word of prophecy ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day-dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts. —2 Peter 1:19 Inspired Version.

Peter here tells us we have a “more sure knowledge of the word of prophecy”; while the brother tells us that we have “some spurious, though uncertain interpretation of prophecy.” Which do we have, brethren?

I am willing to stand corrected, when I am made aware that I am wrong; and perhaps it would be better then to go to studying encyclopedias and histories, and lay the scriptures to one side wherever there is a disagreement. With desire for more light, and charity for all, and malice toward none, I subscribe myself, Your colaborer in Christ,

S. K. Sorensen.

INTENDED HELPS TO THE MINISTRY.

Bashfulness is a serious trouble with most beginners. They lack confidence in their ability to preach, and start in with an apology. If they have never prepared themselves there is good cause for their inability, and the apology is in order—but if they have a message for the people and go into the pulpit in the fear of God, there is no reason why they should fail. The man who loves his work will find a way to accomplish it. Go onto the rostrum with an object, a purpose, and trust in the Lord to help. Be a man and conquer your moods. consecrate your life to the work God has allotted you, and set about to do his will as if it gave you pleasure. A half-hearted effort at preaching is often the cause of failure. Do not be beguiled into taking no thought as to what you should say, because of enjoying liberty on some former occasion when no preparation was made. Experienced men have at times fallen into this error and suffered intensely for their mistake.

You will not always feel the same in the pulpit. Sometimes the best of liberty is enjoyed, almost of a surprising order. You may have prepared your discourse in a mental way, or you may have taken a new subject and spoken without previous meditation. While at other times having exercised the same prudence, instead of enjoying freedom, there is a clogging of the mental process and all is confusion; the mind wanders and the tongue thickens. The former is much to be preferred, though the latter is often experienced and is most terribly distressing. Whatever the result, prepare as best you can. We shall not attempt any explanation of the cause, either in part or whole: but simply admonish the brethren, whatever the cause, or their suffering, not to speak of it publicly. It would be well to locate the cause if possible, and profit by it. The consciousness of wandering is extremely embarrassing, we admit, but the preacher had better keep his trouble to himself. Many of his hearers do not know that he has experienced any difficulty. Others recognize his inability to preach as well as upon former occasions, but even they do not know the extent of the preacher’s embarrassment.

If you desire to be at your best, do not dine too heartily before going into the stand. Do not converse too freely. You can weary the organs of speech. Go quietly to the place of worship, and be there in good time. Keep the mind calm and your thoughts collected. When in the stand, avoid the use of long quotations. Young ministers especially are likely to fall into this habit, which is on a par with the reading of a long chapter at the commencement of a discourse. Short quotations are much the better, and there should be no time lost in turning to, or otherwise locating them. Use nothing but what can be turned up readily. Then, again, do not overprove. When you have made your point clear there should be no time lost in turning on to another. Congregations are wearied by overproving. Entering into the smallest of details is also a mistake. Usually they are not interesting.

As to the making of a sermon, we offer but little, since what would be a guide to one is no guide to another. Seldom can two persons be found who approach or discourse upon a subject in the same manner, consequently each speaker must be left to arrange the order in which he approaches and delineates upon the subject chosen. Many are benefited by notes, which form the skeleton of their discourse. On the whole we believe this a good practice and recommend it as an aid, provided the speaker has previously meditated upon his notes to thoroughly grasp what is implied. Notes aid in the orderly presentation of a subject and check any tendency of the mind to wander.

Again, avoid long introductions and all unnecessary preliminaries. Comprehend the root idea of the text and get right into your subject without delay. Most people are in great suspense at the beginning of a discourse to know what thought you have to offer. They are almost sure to get interested and remain so if what you say at the outset impresses them. Do not forget that a long, meaningless introduction exhausts their patience and is sure to lessen interest. Put up a strong argument and command their thought; and end your sermon as strong as you begin it. Better begin weak and end strong, than begin strong and end weak. But better still, let it be a strong, forceful continuation all through, interesting from beginning to end. Leave a good taste in a man's mouth and he will praise your dinner, is a trite saying.

Having said so much about preaching, we would like to offer a few suggestions about public prayer. It be reasonable to study before holding converse with men concerning the things of God, how much more important that we study previous to our converse with God, both in private and public. We are of the opinion that too little preparation is given to public prayer. To prepare for prayer is as essential as preparing to preach. We do not mean that the prayer should be written any more than we advocate a written sermon, but we are persuaded previous thought is as essential to the offering of an intelligent prayer to God as in the preaching of an intelligent sermon to human beings. Meditate upon the many subjects of prayer. Select topics suitable to the occasion. Investigate them thoroughly and arrange in an orderly manner when petition is made.

Another item concerning the offering of prayer. We have noticed some of our brethren when assisting in the opening exercises, being asked to lead in prayer, they kneel with their back to the congregation and burying their face in their hands, hurriedly offer prayer; not a word was distinctly heard by the audience. All they could hear was a rumbling noise, to which they probably said, amen, merely as a matter of respect. We think it would serve much better if these brethren would overcome their bashfulness (as a rule manifest in religious devotion only), and when they are asked to lead the congregation in prayer, kneel, or stand if preferable, facing the people, and speak loud enough and slow enough to be heard and understood by all.

We have pointed out a few of the many pitfalls into which almost every preacher is liable to fall. The list is by no means exhausted, yet we deem sufficient has been presented to aid the thoughtful minister in his work. In closing, we would like to impress all young men starting out in the ministry with the idea that preaching does not mean the learning of any set rules or tricks. Method is indispensable, but it comes second in importance. The first and greatest requisite is the consecration of the man to the service of God, for if Christ be not in him, there can come no Christ influence from him. Oratory is not preaching, only in proportion to the amount of saving truth there is in it. The multiplying of words, let them be ever so eloquent, is mere babbling unless Christ be in them. The most potent force in preaching is the Spirit's presence, incontestably proven by both scripture and experience. Be humble, conscientious, and true as a Christian. Walk in the light and you can then magnify your calling; otherwise you can not.

Study to show thyself approved unto God a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. Then open your mouth and rest assured God will fill it according to promise.—Editorial in Canadian Messenger, September 15, 1906.

Every time a new idea or invention comes into the world, a hundred men arise who claim, sometimes privately and sometimes publicly, that the idea originated in their own brain before its promoter ever thought of it. Their claim is usually a correct one. Thousands of men are ready to think, where one is found who will both think and act; and these very men furnish constant proof of the proposition.—Business Philosopher.

Ergo: Preaching heaven in the spirit of heaven will assuredly lead men in that direction.

"The home is the unit of our national life. And from the home where simplicity and honesty and self-denial are the methods, must come the spirit which shall make for righteousness in the government of the nation."—Theodore Roosevelt.

In a recent address delivered at Des Moines, Iowa, by the Reverend Henry Van Dyke of Princeton University, he took for his subject: "Citizenship in the commonwealth of heaven."

Paul in his letter to the Philippians makes this declaration, "For our conversation is in heaven." In the Revised Version of the Bible the word conversation is rendered citizenship, and as this rendering is in perfect harmony with the entire teaching of the scriptures we think no one can object to it.

Using the text then: "For our citizenship is in heaven," the question instantly arises in the mind of each thoughtful parent, "What does it require to fit my boy for that citizenship?" It is most natural that we love our own—love our children even better than we love ourselves. Loving them then, we desire them to be with us, and we crave for them the very best that earth or heaven has to bestow.

This was the desire Christ had for his own—those whom the Father had given him "out of the world." "Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory ... and the glory which thou gavest me I have given them ... And now, O Father, glorify me with thine own self with the glory that I had with thee before the world was."

In view of the wonderful thought that the citizenship of heaven implies oneness with Christ and with the Father, it is not strange that the question repeats itself as to what will fit both me and mine for this most exalted of all exalted positions; for, as Doctor Van Dyke eloquently said: "If it be a source of proud satisfaction and happiness to say without boasting 'I am an American,' what shall be said of the infinite joy of him who may say with faith, 'I am a Christian, a member of the heavenly citizenship.' Think of the heroes and the martyrs, of the women lifted, they also whom thou dost bestow out of the earth and into the heaven our boys need the nourishment prescribed in the words we think no one can object to it.

"Thou must be true thyself if thou wouldst teach; Thy soul must overflow, if thou wouldst teach; Another's soul wouldst teach; It needs the overflow of heart to give the lips full speech. Think truly and thy thoughts shall be the world's famine feed; Speak truly, and each word of thine shall be a truthful seed; Live truly, and thy life shall be a great and noble creed."

Gerald Massey has given us, especially in regard to children, a reason why this is so. He says: "Children have ears like the very spies of Nature herself; eyes that penetrate all subterfuge and pretense. It is good to set before them the loftiest ideals that have lived in human reality; but the best ideal of all has to be portrayed by the parents in the realities of home life at home. The teaching that goes deepest will be indirect, and the truth will tell deepest on them when it is overheard. When you are not watching and the children are—that is when the lessons are learned for life."

Is there not here an important lesson for each parent? A lesson which if perchance we have overlooked or have learned only in part, it will be well for us and our children that we learn thoroughly. It is not enough that we know this truth; it is absolutely essential to our own spiritual growth as well as to the present and eternal welfare of our children that we practice it. "It is a great deal better," says D. L. Moody, "to live a holy life than to talk about it. We are commanded to let our light shine, and if it does we won't need to tell anybody that it does. The light will be its own witness. Lighthouses don't ring bells and fire cannon to call attention to their shining—they just shine!"

Does it seem to the reader that, try as we will to break away from the ever-recurring theme—the influence of parents—to confine ourselves to the subject in hand which is "Our Boys," we are still returning to the same fountainhead, still retracing our steps to the same source? Frankly then, we are doing this and it is because we find no avenue of escape.

So innocent, so helpless was our baby boy when God first sent him to us. And now we are among those reaching out for something to cooperate with us in his guidance! Is not this in itself a partial confession of failure, and if so, what more natural than to seek for the cause of this failure?

And now let us turn to the word of God—the only sure foundation upon which we can build—the only standard to which we can refer as final and binding in relation to the many questions which will arise as we proceed with our subject.

In the year 1839 the Lord said to the elders of his church: "Behold I say unto you that little children are redeemed from the foundation of the world, through mine Only Begotten; wherefore they can not sin, for power is not given unto Satan to tempt little children, until they begin to become accountable before me; for it is given unto them even as I will, according to mine own pleasure, that great things may be required at the hands of their fathers."

Should it seem to parents in this day that little of light is embraced in this revelation, we have but to ask them to stop for a moment and consider, to go back with us to the time when these words were spoken and regard the thousands of heart-broken mothers,—mothers weeping above the graves of their children;—mothers, believing if they were told that their beloved, whose sorely bruised hearts knew no peace day or night. And when they turned for comfort to the minister of God (?), they heard only.

Questions Upon October Reading.

What must be the source of righteousness in the government of the nation? When considering the citizenship of heaven, what question naturally arises in the mind of the thoughtful parent? What similarity is there between the desires of a loving parent for his child, and the desires of the Christ for those who were the Father had given him? What does the citizenship of heaven imply? What feelings does it produce in one who appreciates his country to be able to say, “I am an American”? What of the one who may say with faith, “I am a Christian”? What are some of the thoughts suggested that show how being a Christian surpasses being an American? What comprise the duty and the reward, the desirability of citizenship? Of what must our boys be worthy, and what must they take upon themselves to be fit for earthly citizenship? Is true parenthood satisfied with earthly good alone for its children? What ought to be furnished in the home in preparation for the heavenly citizenship? If each home were purified, what would be the condition of the world? What may we learn from the poem quoted? Do children know whether others around them are true? What is the best idea for a child? What teaching goes deepest? What may we learn from the shining of the light-house? What instruction did the Lord give in 1830 concerning little children? What contrast emphasizes the hope that is offered in a portion of that teaching? What authority is given for the blessing of children? What is said of the time before children begin to be accountable? What is the purpose of the Lord concerning this time? How does a gardener care for a plant in its early life? According to this word of the Lord where does the responsibility rest for the early care of the human plants?

Letter Department

Lower Lake, California, September 12, 1906.

Editors Herald: It may not be uninteresting to the Saints to learn of two more sinners being brought into the fold of “God’s people.”

On the morning of August 19, 1906, Elder William Newton baptized an orphan boy and myself, the former one whom we have taken to raise and educate, aged fifteen years, named Joseph Ballanger Adamson (he took our name). He was formerly a street-waif of San Francisco, his father a French Catholic. He is endowed with a good share of intelligence, and reads a great deal; among his books were Orson Pratt, the Bible, and he also attended some lectures by a Seventh-day Advent neighbor which I also attended, but with little interest until the books of Daniel and Revelation were read and explained in connection with profane history, in which I am fairly informed. In the afternoon of that day we received confirmation, and the sacrament at which Bro. John Graumlich assisted.

I was always very much prejudiced against the “Mormons,” and little dreaming of such a calamity (?) married a Latter Day Saint! During our courtship it never occurred to me to ask to what denomination he belonged, but simply if he were a Christian, to which he responded, “Yes.” I thought he was a “Campbellite.” And again, when he mentioned Bro. Parkins, who married us, saying he was “a good Christian man,” I was satisfied. Soon after the wedding some one informed me that I had married a “Mormon.” I felt very indignant to think I had been deceived, and contemplated leaving my husband of a few days; but after shedding tears, and serious reflection, I concluded not to create scandal, but to make the "best of a bad bargain!"

I had formerly received infant baptism in the "Church of England," but when I grew older I united with the Catholic Church, much to the disgust of my parents, in which I became a very devout member for many years, after which I began to reflect and read, and consequently did not feel satisfied, so gradually fell away, and became strongly non-denominational, trying all the time to do good to every one regardless of creed or nationality, and lead a good Christian life.

A few months ago, after the lectures above referred to, I became very insistent in prayer for light and wisdom, meaning for my temporal life and duties; but it came otherwise to me! I read Orson Pratt, and the Life of Lucy Smith (which I borrowed and read secretly). Then I was ready for the "water." I had made arrangements with Bro. John Graumlich to be baptized a week before I told my husband, whose look of astonishment was amusing! Bro. Graumlich being afflicted with an incurable lameness which prevented his administering the ordinance of baptism, wrote to Elder William Newton, who remained two days at our home instructing and comforting us.

I am now very anxious to bring every member of my family into the true church, and trust that all the Saints who may read this little account will be inspired to aid that end with their earnest prayers, and also that Joseph and I may be strong and faithful to the end.

Yours sincerely,

MARIE JULIE T. ADAMSON.

Dear Herald: The perusal of your pages, together with the Ensign and other church publications evokes an impulse to hazard a few lines with a desire that they may in some measure interest in the Sabbath question, as well as some that are interested: Presently two or three ways with it, and then drop it to be carried somewhere else by others. Presently a strong ant will attack the "big egg" and start off with it, going backward: will come, to a stubble or a blade of grass; but trifles do not bother him, so he backs up one side of it and down the other and tugs and wiggles it through the grass and sand for about ten minutes; finally lays it down about where he picked it up. "It's little fools!"

Perhaps so. But you go there the next day and you will find all that chaos reduced to order, after the manner of an all things common, social condition of things. Ants do not write or speak our language—wish they did; human wiseacres might get some valuable pointers from them—they get busy.

Go to the ant, thou writer. Consider her ways and be brighter.

So according to Professor Reed, this old earth of ours has a hole through it. [Yes, a hole in the bottom and a hole in the top.—ED.] Well, for goodness sake do not let those "combiners" or those "trust" fellows know it, for they would gobble the whole thing. Give them to understand that that hole is not to be "trusted" yet—not until the last tribes get out of it, anyway; then—well, they can have the center, if they want it, and we will occupy the outside. I have been thinking that if that bottomless pit was as hot as Mr. Spurgeon and Edwards have pictured it, there must be some sudden changes of climate in the route via either the north or south pole, and a poor place to manufacture those icebergs that Mr. Reed tells about, unless they have the ammonia process down pretty fine and deep. Do not understand me as ridiculing—not by any means. There are some eight thousand miles in length in the proposition, and that forms quite a basis so far as room is concerned for some big transactions, and a margin to spare for speculation. But these thoughts would naturally pass through the brain of a greenhorn, who never was in any such hole as that.

Jules Verne and Belamy were scarcely considered worthy of a serious contempt at one time. Columbus was abused because he contended that the earth was round. Galileo was persecuted because he believed the earth moved. We should learn a lesson from those things, and not make too big a fuss even if Mr. Reed does find a hole through it, so long as it does not interfere with the appearance of our eclipses—seeing that the hole is crosswise and does not show.

Then again, it might render it a little more scientifically easy to repeat the story of the flood. It was always a little difficult to tell just where all that great body of water went to when it receded to the depth of those mountains. Oh! it has some good points in it, no doubt, so, Brother Editor, keep the hole question there—there may be more than simply "northern light" come out of it.

Who knows but some of those brave explorers whom we thought dead are still alive and among the lost tribes, having told them of America and the present or later condition of the Holy Land, and are now working upon a scheme of migration? You know it takes strenuous efforts to move the Israelites; and according to Ezekiel Pharaoh is there with his hosts and may have some sort of a hold upon them. Then there are John and the three Nephites—you see I am pre-empting that margin left for speculation.

Now to something that I know more about. Am at present at home for a few days, owing to unfavorable conditions in my family. Sickness is still with us; and am not able to report all as hopefully as I would like to.

The gospel, however, has in it features which, if rightly understood and applied, can obviate the major portion of the suffering of mind which naturally comes by virtue of misfortune and the attenuation of life's adversities. There is a bright and sunny side to every cloud though we may be permitted to behold only the silver lining in this life, and perhaps only a very narrow margin at that. However, the lot of many are a hundred times more severe than mine, so there is room to be thankful to the hundredth degree.

THE SAIN T S' HERALD

The branch at Holden is still being increased, both by baptisms and immigration from other parts, and is in a prosperous condition, generally speaking. And may it ever remain so. I very much regret that circumstances have ordered that I shall not be able to get into my appointed field. I am still interested in the work in the far East, and will be glad when the time comes to continue where work has been begun. Will be glad to hear occasionally from the Saints in Maine and Nova Scotia. Address 1422 West Short Street, Independence, for the present.

Yours for the hope of the Saints,

Editors Herald: No doubt some will be anxious to know my whereabouts, so I write a few lines for the HERALD, a paper that should be in the house of every Latter Day Saint, as should also the Ensign and Autumn Leaves; for in them are some very valuable articles written on different subjects, and the interesting letters that come from the various parts of the Master's vineyard relating the experiences that men and women pass through in and for a restored gospel; and so by the experiences of others we learn, gaining courage to press onward and upward in the work that is so dear to us.

I am here in this part of the vineyard doing what I can for the furtherance of the gospel of Christ. Am holding meetings in a schoolhouse near by. The attendance is very good. I baptized two last Thursday. Two more were to be baptized, but when the time came they backed down and out; so we leave the matter with them and their God. Bro. A. B. Phillips was here last fall and baptized several. Some of the people thought a coat of tar and feathers would have been a suitable robe for him at that time; but by this time the storm has passed over. I do not hear anything of it since coming here, so it is likely they have concluded to leave that part alone. One of the main movers in the affair was out to hear me preach three times. He seemed to be perfectly harmless. The sound of this gospel appears to stir all of them to sow the good seed. The branch at Holden is still being increased, both by baptisms and immigration from other parts, and is in a prosperous condition, generally speaking. And may it ever remain so. I very much regret that circumstances have ordered that I shall not be able to get into my appointed field. Editors Herald: I thought a line from Dixie land would not be out of order. Sixteen months' experience in the South has taught me that one must have his mind employed continually, or it, as well as the body, will become dormant in this warm country. I have been alone this year except three weeks that I labored with Bro. J. R. McClain. The work is opening up in the South nicely, and I find plenty to do. I find some noble young people here, while I find others that are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. Two things I find that largely hinder the spiritual development of the minds of the Saints, which are hot, strong, black coffee, and tobacco. We are promised, if we abstain from these things, health, and hidden treasures, which no doubt means wisdom, knowledge, and understanding of the things of God. How long, O Lord, until Israel will learn not only to say but to do? I came here by request of Bro. George Banister to confirm three he had baptized. I commenced meetings on Tuesday night, the 4th; and on Sunday, the 9th, three more were baptized by Bro. Bankes- ter, who is assisting me here. I preached two nights this week at a turpentine still, under the cooper's shed, to fair crowd. Two gave their names for baptism, which will be attended to Sunday, the 16th. I will go over into Mississippi the 17th to make arrangements for reunion to begin some time in October. Ever praying for the success of the work everywhere, I am,

ALMA BOOKER.

OAKLAND, California, September 16, 1906.

Editors Herald: Thinking that perhaps a few items of news from this part of God's heritage might be read with some degree of interest by some of the readers of your paper, I here-with spare a little time for that purpose.

The district conference of the Seattle and British Columbia District was one of the best that I have ever attended. There was a large representation present from the various branches, and those in attendance brought the Good Spirit of the Master with them; hence it was that we had a feast of good things. The Sunday afternoon social service was one that will long be remembered by all who were so fortunate as to be there. The very aged, the middle-aged, and the young all participated in the service. The testimonies that were borne were richly blessed and sweet influence, and tears of joy moistened our understanding. The business-sessions were held without the least jar, and the preaching was edifying and instructive to all.

The Seattle Branch has made wonderful growth during the last year. Numbers have been added by baptism, and many by letter of removal from other places. Bro. Holman, president of the branch, and his assistant officers, namely, Gorbett and Rhodes, have proved to be efficient workers in the Master's cause. Peace and union prevail among the membership.

We have quite a lively interest at Nanaimo, British Columbia, the home of Bro. William Johnson. We now have eleven members there, and two at Wellington near by, making thirteen, ten of which have been baptized in the last year or so; also a fine Sunday-school. While we do not expect to see great numbers unite with the church there, and in other places in British Columbia, we do expect a few now and then to join our ranks. Bro. William Johnson, general missionary and president of the district, is a wide-awake minister, and stands high in the estimation of those who know him. Bro. George Thorburn was making a good record for himself at the time he received the sad tidings that his wife was very sick, and to come home. We sincerely hope and pray that her life will be spared, and Bro. George be able to return to his mission, as his services are greatly in demand. He was but a few months in his field of labor, but while there he endeared himself to all the Saints who formed his acquaintance. He also baptized some, and he doubtless will lead others into the fold when he returns. The work at Castle Rock we found improving. Some changes for the better have taken place here. Bro. John Kaler and family have moved here from Portland, and also Bro. Merrill and family from Hood River, Oregon. We are of the opinion that with the addition of these families and Bro. Cox's family, who moved there some months ago, with the faithful and energetic workers resident there, the work will be given a new impetus. Bro. George Appleman, Davis, and Mashi are substantial as ever.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
I arrived in Irvington, California, the 1st inst. to attend the Northern California District reunion. I found on the ground Brn. J. M. Terry, Charles E. Crumley, James C. Clapp, C. A. Parkin, and Bro. Earl of the ministerial force, with a large number of the local ministers. There were about thirty tents on the grounds, and many boarded and roomed on the Parkin, and Bro. Earl of the ministerial force, with a large ings that it was possible for the Saints, under the influence of the Spirit that actuated the people there, to live together in perfect peace, and have “all things common.” It seemed that the spirit of selfishness and self-aggrandizement had disappeared entirely, and that every Saint was concerned in his brother’s welfare above everything else. During the entire time I never heard any faultfinding or criticisms indulged in, but did hear each Saint speak well of the other, and compliment the efforts of their brethren. Every sermon was graced by the Spirit, and seemingly appreciated by the people. There was a large attendance throughout. Especially in the evenings when the town people turned out in large numbers and paid excellent attention to the preaching. Bro. John Terry, with Bro. Joyce and others of the committee, worked hard to make the affair a success, and Bro. John Driver looked out for the wants of the outer man. They decided to hold the next reunion at the same place, and we think it is a good place for the Saints to meet, away from the noise and bustle of a large city.

Have held forth a few evenings this week in the Oakland chapel with good interest so far. Have spoken once in the city of San Francisco. The appearance of the city is horrible to behold, and must be seen that the extent of the disaster which has befallen her may be realized. However, we may form a slight idea of the awful destruction by the following items: Burnt area, 469 blocks, covering 5,750 acres; estimated loss, $350,000,000. The general verdict among those with whom I have conversed (and I have spoken to many in the city, who passed through the sad and trying experience of the earthquake and fire) is that all of 5,000 people lost their lives in the calamity, notwithstanding the reports of the officials to the contrary. We are surprised at the cheerful spirit that seems to prevail among the people; they seem to be good-natured and full of enterprise. Many buildings are being erected upon the ruins of the former ones; may the good work go on. I leave in the morning for the Central and Southern California Districts.

Bro. Keeler was ordained to the office of an evangelical minister at the conference at Seattle. He and Bro. Enge are busily engaged in that part of the vineyard. With best wishes to all God’s children, I remain,

Your colaborer and brother,

Gomer T. Griffiths.

LEWISTON, Michigan, September 4, 1906.

Editors Herald: We have just returned home from a twoday meeting at Lewiston, where we had a spiritual feast, and were encouraged and strengthened in this great latter-day work. This is the third two-day meeting we have held in Lewiston, and each one is better than the last. Although Lewiston is in the Northern Michigan District by the new division the Comins Branch of the Central Michigan District come over the line and hold these meetings with the help of a few of this district. There are only three or four Saints living in Lewiston, and the most of us are from fifteen to twenty miles away; but we go there and hire a hall for preaching, and houses to eat and sleep in, and have a splendid time.

We had Saints with us this year who drove sixty miles to get there. Elder C. G. Lewis, president of the Northern District, was placed in charge, assisted by Elder G. W. Burt. There were ten of the priesthood present. Elder Lewis was sick most of the time, and preached only once. We had social meetings on Friday evening, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday mornings. The Master poured out his Spirit upon us from first to last; giving us counsel and strength by a gift of prophecy during our last prayer-meeting. This two-day meeting, so o’ershadowed as it was by the Holy Spirit, will be one of the bright spots in our lives that will be long remembered.

We had splendid interest from outsiders, and good crowds. One nice old lady was baptized, and others seem near the kingdom. We are encouraged to press onward and do all that we can for the advancement of the work.

ARTHUR E. STARKS.

Editors Herald: I thought, perhaps, you would like to know that we are still alive in London—what there is left of us. Our branch is in rather poor condition, so far as numbers are concerned. We have recently lost three through death; some have crossed the water; others, I am sorry to say, have fallen asleep, spiritually, so it leaves just a few to carry on the work now. But I am glad to say that the work of God is just as dear to us as it ever was. I am thankful that God has not left us, and I believe that his work will have some success in this city yet.

We are glad to say that Bro. Richard Bullard came to London a few days ago and preached twice, on Sunday, September 2, and we appreciated very much his preaching. He was indeed guided by the Spirit of God, and at the close of our sacrament-service the gift of prophecy was made manifest through our brother to the strengthening of one and all present. We are glad to have met our brother, and hope that God will make him a power for good in this land. We are expecting a visit from our esteemed Bro. Rushton, president of the mission, next week. And we always look forward to these times as times of refreshing and strengthening from the Lord, as it sometimes seems that we local ministers can not make the impression that the missionary can among the Saints.

The work of the branch officers is very often anything but encouraging, through the existing circumstances; but still we hope for better conditions in the future. We are looking forward for a time when this great city will be more fully warned than it is at present; for the writer believes that there are thousands of people who do not know that there is such a people or church in existence; and we ask the question, When can it be done, and how? God only knows. We can do one thing towards it, and that is to pray for it, and show God we are in earnest about the salvation of his creatures. We are glad to hear and read of the success the church is having in some places. The last communication from God through his prophet to the church was indeed good, and made us feel very thankful that God is still caring for his people, that he is still the same loving Father. Oh, may we have the courage to continue faithful, that we may have the privilege of truly representing our Master while we have the opportunity of so doing. We need the prayers of the Saints of God in our behalf in this great city. We will try to do what we can in our sphere to build up the work of God, by his help and guidance.

Your brother in the one faith,

J. W. WORTH.

ARTHUR, Ontario, September 14, 1906.
Dear Herald: It has been some time since we wrote a letter for your pages. We enjoy very much reading the many articles and editorials on the subjects so strongly debated of late. One thing I notice with our people in the church, that is the independent liberties, rights, and thoughts of each member, and that we have no pope rule. Another thing: our people are a very positive people. It is a good thing to be firm and positive in our debates, if we are right, but a bad thing if we are wrong. And let me say to some of my brethren who write—some of you ought to be more careful not to insult one another in debate. As for me, I think all our people who write believe they have the right view of things, and I also believe a number of probably our wisest and greatest men have not as yet spoken all they want to say on subjects so hotly discussed of late in the HERALD, and I hope to hear more on such subjects as, “The gathering,” “Selfishness,” “Speculation,” etc.; for as yet with me I have no conclusion on the gathering; and believe “Bobby Burns” hit it right when he said, “Where ignorance is bliss, ‘tis folly to be wise.” But when we talk about “The spirit of speculation and greed,” “Selfishness,” and “Usury,” I have long since settled a theory for myself. I look upon “usury” in this way (what I mean by usury is lending money and charging a rate of interest on it): If I have a few hundred dollars to spare laid away in a bank and my poor brother in the church is hard up, and he wants the loan of it to help him over a hard place, and I have reason to believe him honest, it is my duty as a brother to loan it to him and charge him the interest at 5%. This is true, as stated in the late revelation, “the Spirit inspired me to give, not to be a miser”—I confess I was one of the guilty ones, and am trying to get back to where I was when I was baptised with the Holy Ghost twelve years ago; for I should have one or more of these gifts or talents and fail to use them, should hide them away, surely the Lord would take them away and give to another who would use them, and call me a slothful servant, too.

I understand from good source that Bro. Jerinigan and family will all come back to the church at conference, which commences next Friday. I shall be glad if the time will soon come when we can have regular meetings. Bro. Tucker, if you chance to see this, write me how you are getting along, as I do not know your address. In conclusion would say that I enjoy reading the many good pieces in HERALD once a week.

J. L. Mizel.

SHABBONA, Michigan, September 17, 1906.

Dear Herald: It has been only three years, this month since I came into the church, and six years since I heard the first gospel sermon preached by Elder Cornish. I did not know what to think of it then; but, dear Saints, I know now that it is the gospel of Jesus Christ, and I am thankful that God has revealed it to me. Let us do all we can for Christ and his cause. I love to see the young come into the church. Let us do all we can to help them, for they need our help and our prayers.

We had a two-day meeting at Shabbona about the first of last month, and had a good time. The Spirit was with us. One young brother has since been ordained to the office of priest, Bro. J. H. Meade. My prayer to God for him is that God will bless him, and that he may be a blessing to many.

The writer feels her weakness, and asks an interest in the prayers of the Saints. I desire to be found faithful to duty, in the cause of Christ, till death, be the time long or short. God’s will be done.

In the one faith,

MRS. E. H. MCCLAREN.

ALEXANDER, Kansas, September 15, 1906.

Dear Herald: Our reunion and conference of the Northwestern Kansas District convened at Bazine, August 23, and continued until September 2. We had a very enjoyable reunion. Quite a number of the Saints were in attendance.

On September 2, at three o’clock, Bro. W. E. Peak preached the dedicatory sermon, Bro. James Teeter in charge, Bro. John A. Teeter offering the dedicatory prayer, for the dedication of the Bazine church.

There were two baptised at the reunion. I think this reunion will do good among the outsiders as well as encourage the Saints to strive harder to come up higher. Bro. John Teeter was ordained an elder at our conference. Four children were blessed.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
We are trying to do the Master's work but fall short, oh, so many times. Bro. Teeter preaches in Alexander every two weeks. They do not seem to care for the gospel here.
Dear Saints, pray for us that we may come up to the standard, and that we may have His Spirit to guide us in ways of truth and righteousness. Your sister in Christ, Eva Teeter.

HITCHIN HERTS, England, August 26, 1906.

Dear Brother Joseph: Inclosed you will find a picture of the chapel where I attended from childhood until I left home. I was baptized there by the Reverend John Aldis, in 1809, but left home very soon after. It is a notable building, and the largest chapel in the town. My mother is buried in the rear of the building.

Yesterday I was permitted to preach twice and address the Sunday-school there—and if ever poor weak man was blessed in his effort it was I. Many of my relatives were there and many of my old acquaintances, and it was certainly a red-letter day in my history.

The kind Father was pleased to hear my earnest prayers to him to stand by me in the hour of need, and my soul was aflame with the holy fire which you so well know comes when the Lord has a message for the people. The calm quietude of its holy peace pervades my soul this morning, and I am filled with praise and thanksgiving to him for his goodness. I was permitted to fill the place of the Reverend Williams of Aberystwyth, Wales, who was taken sick and could not fill his appointment. The regular minister has been silenced for imbibing too freely in the fluid which demoralizes, and some few are preaching their trial sermons with an eye to the position he has been forced to vacate. I have not yet heard from Bro. Rushon. Am anxious to hear, as I have some invitations to labor among two branches, and do not wish to do so without his consent. I have found many willing to listen, and have tried to sow the seed wherever I felt it wise to do so, among my relatives and friends.

I feel exceedingly well in the work; but my health has not been quite as good as usual; but this may be attributed to change of climate and food. It has been an ideal summer—very warm for England but very enjoyable to me.

I have met with the Saints only once since coming to England; that was in London the first Sunday after my arrival.
I am hungry for a good meeting and Saints' association.

Trusting the work is prospering, and you are well, also Mrs.
Smith and family, I am, dear brother,

13 Church Yard.

Yours in the Master's cause.

Richard Bullard.

Harlan, Iowa, September 8, 1906.

Editors Herald: Just one hour before midnight, on Thursday last, the immortal spirit of Mrs. Eliza Dennett, one of the faithful pioneer Saints at Harlan, took leave of her diseased body. She was baptized by Bro. John H. Lake thirty years ago. I conducted her funeral from the Saints' church to-day.

As bishop and assistant president of Gallands Grove District, I have visited, since April, all the branches except Salem, and it is truly gratifying to be able to say that I have heard but one member oppose the fulfilling of the Lord's direction to build and put into operation a sanitarium and children's home.
I have mailed hundreds of printed letters to members of this district calling attention to the urgent necessity of heeding the divine call for funds to assist in erecting the buildings, also that every member is kindly requested to contribute to the tithe and offering fund.

I had the pleasure of preaching eleven discourses in the
G. A. R. Hall in Cherokee, Iowa, where an energetic and spirinterested to during the reunion. Bro. J. M. Stubbart did a good work for the Herald Office, but I think the Saints will reap the most good, for they received value for their money. He secured twenty-five or thirty dollars for books and publications. Our Sunday-school was so weak that it made no attempt for any extra work, and the Religion received almost a death blow, being knocked out of two sessions, whether caused by the ones in charge or its officers—I would rather think the latter. But I hope it will recover and not suffer loss. A. A. Weaver, L. G. Sellers, and J. E. Wiggins were chosen a committee for next reunion to be held here, commencing July 29, 1907. The preaching was by T. C. Kelley, J. M. Stubbart, E. L. Henson, and J. N. Hawkins. We hope that all have taken new courage and greater zeal, and that by the time for the next reunion we will be better prepared for a better reunion. May the Lord be with you all till we shall meet again, is my prayer.

M. S. Wiggins, Secretary.

Madison Reunion.

While my name has never been found upon your pages, I feel led to write you somewhat briefly of our late reunion in Madison, Wisconsin. The committee was quite successful in securing a beautiful piece of ground in one of Madison's beautiful suburbs, directly on the car-line, and but a few blocks from the pretty Lake Monona.

The weather was perfect, and though conference convened with but a mere handful of Saints, before the ten days were over, over one hundred people were encamped on the grounds, and a time of great rejoicing was had. We had with us, besides our own missionary force, Brn. W. A. McDowell, from Chicago, C. H. Burr from Plano, J. W. Wight, Patriarch J. J. Bailey, his daughter, Sr. Maud Wilson, and Sr. Jennie Campbell of Michigan.

Our meetings had been well advertised about town, and we were pleased with the number of outsiders who were present. Four were baptized during the reunion, and many who had never before been so privileged were given their patriarchal blessings through Bro. Bailey.

Our nine o'clock prayer-meetings were well attended, and we were cheered and strengthened by beautiful messages from the Master. Though encouraged, we were truly saddened by the thought that had we only been more faithful, truer to our covenants, we might now have been reigning with Christ. We, as young people, were made to feel more deeply the heavy responsibilities now resting upon us. True, we must soon take up the heavier burdens of this great work, and we must begin now to prepare ourselves for it. Oh! that we may indeed heed the admonition of the Spirit to "come up higher," doing each day all we can to help advance the work, and qualify ourselves for the greater work. Surely there is much that we can do; avenues for service are about us on every hand; so let us not be idle, but be up and doing while the daylight lasts.

Several mornings we young folks, and a few of the older Saints, arose early and held six o'clock prayer-meetings. It seemed so fitting to open the day in this way—to thus consecrate our lives to his service; and we were greatly blessed and strengthened. How often during the year when we are tried it seems to lend us new courage to look back to these early morning meetings and to realize that those friends with whom we were so closely associated are praying for us. Truly there is much in prayer.

While each day during our reunion seemed quite full, yet we found time between services to go bathing in the lake, and on those hot August days it seemed to be just what we needed. Several jolly trips were made across the lake. My brother, O. M. Carpenter, owns a pretty little launch which will accommodate about sixteen people, and it was delightful to take with us a lunch, cross the lake to some pretty, shaded spot, land, eat our lunch, and return home in the silvery moonlight just in time for evening service.

But the last Sunday evening came all too soon, and we were forced to bid each other good-bye with the hope of meeting in the same place another year.

Many who had never before been able to attend a reunion were with us, and though an attendance now was gained only through considerable sacrifice, all went home feeling that they were well repaid, and were determined, if possible, to come again next fall.

We left Madison on Monday, September 3, for Janesville, where we stayed till Friday, when we came on to Kenosha. We must now be numbered among the isolated ones for nearly a year, but we are happy in our work here and trust that ere many years shall have passed some may be brought to the light.

Several of the young men now seem somewhat interested, and, as we are now located, we hope some day to have some preaching done here. We do not feel at all discouraged: for we know that this work must go on, and the Master's promises of help mean much to us. The church literature affords us much good reading, and we think we can see many opportunities for doing good. We hope to prove faithful and true.

Yours for the good of the cause,

LENOIR CARPENTER WOODSTOCK.

470 South Chicago St., KENOSHA, Wis., Sept. 11, 1907.

The Piedmont Reunion.

Our reunion of the Oklahoma District was held at this place and has just closed, leaving the pleasant memory of ten days' association with those whose delight is in the law of the Lord, and whose pride is in the cause which for grandeur has no equal, for depth no comparison, for height and breadth no bounds, and in entire scope is limitless. What wonder that we should rejoice in contemplating such a work, and having the happy assurance that our hands are truly set to the forwarding on of such a magnificent work among men?—and more, the assurance that life, or death, or powers, or things past, present, or to come can never, never, bring defeat to the soldier of this war, who keeps his face to the foe—such assurance has been, and is ours; what wonder then that we rejoice? During this meeting the Saints have earnestly worshiped the Lord and thought upon the plan of his infinite mind (the gospel) and of course have been blessed.

The meeting was held in a pleasant grove owned by Bro. John Minium, who, with his wife, did all he could by labor and liberality with money and produce to make the meeting a success; as also all the other Saints in this locality so far as we know. Bro. H. K. Rowland was harnessed in as a "wheel-horse" of the committee work, also Bro. George Vansickle, who presided at boarding establishment with perfect satisfaction, and nobody balked. The cost of meals to those who boarded clear through was eight cents per meal. And meals were served nearer to the word of wisdom standard than at some other such meetings in the past, very little meat being used and no great amount of tea and coffee. We believe such an example is commendable. There was an absence of sickness in the camp, prayer-meetings were spiritual, and the preaching good. Speakers present numbered five or six, which gave a variety of methods in presenting the one gospel.

Six of the "Hopes" of Israel were baptized on the last day of the meeting, and one adult, Bro. Albert Irvine, a noble, earnest man who will make a worthy brother in the bonds of the gospel. Some young men and maidens from Terlton, and elsewhere, added to the interest and profit of the meetings by song and example—worthy testimony; and to the merriment and entertainment, by their polite jests (and who would have youth to be all sedate?) and moonlight serenades at an hour usual for sleep. But the would-be sleepers cared but little that their slumbers were molested so long as the hills resounded through... the quiet evening air the mellow tones of youthful voices chiming in the hymn, "Silent night, holy night," while the singers now halt, now march, till they compass the camp of the Saints. Thus with all conducive to pleasant dreams the campers again recline reluctantly to plan for next years' reunion at Richmond, Oklahoma, in July, and the other one in the eastern part of the district, at Rippy in August. Then the sleep, the early rising to meet the morning trains, the hustle and bustle of breaking camp, the raising of the tented village as if by magic, the cluck of wagons loaded for short and long trips—the "good-bye," "good-bye," so short and quickly spoken, yet many times meaning so much; "good-bye" in smiles, and "good-bye" in tears—smiles that sometimes mean more than pleasantness, tears which express love and affection rather than mourning; "good-bye" with kisses between the sisters, and hand-clasps between the men. Thus they scatter, till soon, where once all was activity, the lingering last in the broken camp may observe the timid squirrel again taking possession of his own domain to gather up the fragments and bits of crumbs while his blinking eyes seemingly wonder what those noisy mortals meant by carousing the forest by day and by night, and leaving it again to silence.

Independent Items.

Although during the entire month of August the weather was unusually warm, the interest in church gatherings was unabated, and the majority of the young people continued to pay exemplary attention to their part of the work by faithful diligence at Sunday-school and Religio.

Among the sermons preached, we call to mind one on the morning of the 19th by E. T. Atwell, which was well suited to a very warm day, being quite short and full of spirit and intelligence, the choir music also being very animated and inspiring.

At the chapel over the way Mr. and Mrs. Albert Blakely, of Chicago, occupied the stand at the close of the regular service, he by reading a revelation on "The gathering of Israel," a duty which had been assigned to him, and she by bearing testimony to the divinity of this mission. Quite a number of our people went over to listen to the visitors. At a business-meeting on the 20th the report was read, showing a branch membership of sixteen hundred and sixty-four which was added to at the end of the month by a net gain of eighteen.

Bro. Holmes Davison has been with us and favored the Saints with an instructive discourse on the subject, "There is therefore now no condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit."

The brother at the opening said that humanly speaking he greatly desired there might be one in the church "to infallibly interpret the scriptures," and explained, "to that degree that we walk after the Spirit we are under no condemnation."

Bro. Joseph Luff discoursed on the evening of the same day. Bishop Hilliard was with us on the 29th, but we missed him and others at the stake conference on the following Saturday, also at the reunion held at Furlow Grove, three miles from Independence. The nine peaceful days of the reunion, from September 1 to September 10, have come and gone, and we all feel that everything was done to make the occasion a pleasant and profitable one, and that many happy hours were spent with Him who, as Wagner says, "has been in all good fights whose heart bears the scars of all blows at truth and justice," and with a company of heroes, both old and young who, returning, met together to tell again the old, old story of the cross.

It could be seen that the auxiliary societies are still lending their aid to the general interest, but "the church" marches on in the beauty and dignity of its all-comprehensive work, and the halo that shines around the angel message still glows in the humble lives of Saints who are faithful to the principles laid down at the beginning.

Neither do the disciples, judging from the character of the sermons preached, despise "the decided bent for scientific research," and as the Saints listened to the words of Bro. Joseph and Frederick they rejoiced in the belief of "the mystery that opens in the flower, shines from the stars, pierces the conscience, obrongs in our tears, sleeps in the cradle, and hides in the grave," and we call to mind a sermon preached on the 9th inst. by Bro. F. M. Smith,—an excellent discourse on "the good that is obtained from an accumulated knowledge of the universe and what it contains;" and among the sentiments expressed he said, "The truth that there is in this work can not be changed by all the truths that can be added to it."

Bro. Alexander Smith also delivered a grand address on the morning of the 7th on the mission of the angel, and, prefacing his remarks with the words, "We are engaged in solving the greatest problem that ever blessed the earth," he presented the thought of the goodness of God "who hath fulfilled his promises and filled the earth with abundance and beauty."

The glorious vision shown him was related by the venerable patriarch,—"the beautiful, undulating country, the building of the city with its busy workmen, angels of God working side by side with them bringing material." "I had thought," said he, "I would never see this work done, but when I saw the angels working I realized the work would be done speedily."

This was an inspiring occasion to all present, as also were others, especially when the Presidency of the church, and some of her leading minds, Bishop Kelley, Leonard Scott, F. A. Smith, and others, discoursed on the grand blessings and scope of the latter-day work.

Also, some of the young men and women of the church had a message for us, and Brn. Will Pitt, S. A. Burgess, and others presented visions of thought, newly opened up before the Saints, the former giving useful hints for public speakers on such subjects as verbal expression, gracefulness, the capacity of the human voice, modulation, quality, pitch, etc.,—all woven so as to impress to the best advantage those who may hear.

None present could but accede to the belief that efficiency in the work of a public speaker may be enhanced by applying the principles of elocution and oratory to his service.

Our Bro. S. A. Burgess of St. Louis provided food for thought as he presented for our consideration some of the faiths and philosophies of the great minds of the past,—among them the believers in Brahma, Socrates, and Aristotle, and even the lofty ideas embodied in the ancient worship by the heathen world.

There was also the excellent lecture by President F. M. Smith on mental culture, which seemed to be highly appreciated by a fairly good audience, although there were many who were expecting themselves of hearing these fine Chautauquan lectures lost a valuable opportunity of acquiring much information on the lines discussed.

The speaker advocated earnestly the reading of "all good books," and thought the time had not yet come "to lay aside the opportunities of education placed before us in the curriculum of the colleges."

The classes held from time to time during the reunion under the supervision of Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, associated with the stake presidency, were helpful and full of interest.

The Sunday-school work, with its teachers' meeting, the Religio with its Book of Mormon class-work, also the Daughters of Zion with its program of entertainment, all merit due consideration by every advocate of spiritual advancement and consecrated service to the Master.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. Joseph F. Burton, writing from Papeete, Tahiti, August 16, says: "The Saints will have to have some help to rebuild Tarona, the chapel, missionary house, and fill up the land some; it is all a terrible, desolate looking place now. I was up to see the Governor to-day, Bro. C. H. Lake with me. He received us very kindly, and thought it a good plan to fill the land of Tarona, and said he would help us all he could if we would build on sanitary principles, with drains suitable. He said we might feel ourselves free so far as missionary work was concerned, to obey the laws, and that he believed from what he had heard that I not only would keep the laws myself, but would assist others to do so.

"We have in contemplation the building of a new missionary house, for the rent, eight dollars French money, is quite a tax on the natives, and there is some lumber and corrugated iron roofing from the old house, and some of the lumber will have to be bought here, and the price is about one hundred and twelve dollars Chili money, nearly fifty dollars American, per thousand feet. Lumber is very high also in San Francisco, so we could not do much better there. A number of the brethren will be here this afternoon to see about it.

"We have had to decide about rebuilding on Tarona, and as the leading men of the church here are so very strongly in favor of it, we have decided to do so, and in the doing of it we will try to avoid debt, which has been a great trouble to this mission. We therefore must be very slow in our rebuilding arrangements; and to fill up the land, which probably will take from six to eight hundred dollars, American money, we will have to help; and if we do not have help to build our chapel, either in lumber, roofing, or money, we will be quite a while without one excepting the one we now use, built out of the refuse lumber after the storm, and not a desirable one either. The brethren from the different islands will divide among themselves the work of building the wall around the place. The wall will be about six feet high in some places; after the land is filled in there will be places for about twenty houses, including the missionary house and chapel.

"Bro. and Sr. Lake are busy wrestling with the Tahitian language, and are making themselves acquainted with the customs and peculiarities of the natives. They are very well received by the brethren here, and wish to be kindly remembered to you and your household."

Jasper O. Dutton, Valley Junction, Wisconsin: "Our Southern Wisconsin District reunion from August 24 to September 2 was the best ever held in Wisconsin. Many great and precious blessings were enjoyed, and promises given through the Spirit. One in particular was that God would bless our reunions from year to year inasmuch as we were faithful, and the Saints remembered to pay their tithes and offerings. The weather all through was all that could be desired, and all present were caused to rejoice in this great and good work of the latter days. May his Saints be faithful." Elizabeth Wickiser, Greenup, Illinois: "If any of our elders should be passing near here we would like to have them call and see us, as we are isolated from the Saints and deprived of church privileges. We live south of both depots, about forty rods."

William H. Mannerings, San Antonio, Texas: "Seven young persons were baptized here since September 1, the fruit of continued Sunday-school work, aided by mission labor recently conducted at 1017 North Salado Street."

J. M. Stubbart, Calhoun, Florida: "I came to Florida yesterday to help in the Master's cause. Conference convenes here next Saturday. We are anticipating a good time. Several from Alabama expect to attend. Some expect to unite with us, and others expect to renew the covenant during the conference. My health is good, and I find plenty to do. In the last eighty-nine days I have preached eighty-nine sermons. I have baptized four, and confirmed, besides these, several others. I am ready to baptize at a moment's notice."

Brevity is the best recommendation of speech, whether in a senator or an orator.—Cicero.
Graceland College Day.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1906.

What will we do to help the church in its educational work the present year?
The first Sunday in October is the day set apart by General Conference for this work and all should earnestly seek to make the day a memorial one in the history of the College and church.

As the Lord has prospered us, let every one unselisftly, hope­fully, and cheerfully perform his or her part and the work will be well and fully done and the credit due to all.

The bishops and Bishop's agents, and presidents of branches are specially requested to see that the matter of taking of the college offerings is clearly presented to the Saints in their respective fields and localities, and may the Lord bless and prosper the doers of the work.

Very respectfully,

E. L. Kelley, Presiding Bishop.

Notes.

To the Saints of Northern and Central Districts of California:

Our last meeting, under the influence of the good Spirit, by vote authorized the committee to ask of the Saints and branches a donation to build a house on our ground in Irvington suitable for a storage-house and which could be used during reunion as an eating-house. The committee concluded to build part of the house now and add to it in the future. The part built will cost nearly one hundred dollars and we depend on the generosity of the Saints to meet the expense. Kindly respond at once, either as individuals or branches, as the building is now in process of construction. We had a blessed reunion, and we wish to begin to prepare for a more blessed one in 1907, at the same place. Send money to E. S. Chase, Irvington, California, or to me.

J. M. Terry, chairman committee, 1257 Union Street, Oakland, California.

To the Branches and Local Officers of the Pittsburg District:

Do not forget the date fixed upon for the reporting of branch and local officers. Be prompt to forward reports the first of October, 1906, that I may have time to get them promptly in the hands of the missionary in charge. James Craig, presi­dent, Glen Easton, West Virginia.

By INDEPENDENCE COAL MINING COMPANY

In order to develop and open up the new coal-mining interests near Independence and also give the necessary preparations for homes for workers, it is necessary that the capital be secured within a short time. The amount sought for is very small compared with the capital of other coal-mining interests, and for various reasons, the directors of this company desire to keep the working and controlling power with the church members, if possible. The opening up of an undeveloped coal field at the edge of a densely populated community of 60,000 population is a matter of considerable consideration, as the product is part of the necessities of life, with freight rates practically cut off, making this enterprise an excellent investment. Five hundred and sixty-nine acres have been leased for fifty years and one hundred and fifty-four purchased making in all seven hundred and twenty-six acres of coal-land in one body, on the line of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, two miles east of Independence.

The company already has coal-mines at Napoleon, Missouri, in operation and a successful and prosperous retail business, making this a bona fide, paying undertaking.

Money needed for investment can find no better place, and will bring the best kind of satisfaction, as it will bring good returns to the investor and results that will make a successful institution; also benefiting the ones employed, scattered, pressed down poor church members by placing them in a position to help themselves.

The lots are intended for homes for miners, workers, to be sold at a reasonable price, and we solicit the co-operation of miners to purchase stock, according to their means.

The promoters of this company are not working for any selfish interest. There is no watered or fictitious valued stock. The company is incorporated under the laws of the state of Missouri. Capital stock, $25,000.00; shares, $100.00 each. Amount paid up $25,000.00. The capital stock must be in full to justify the promise. Parties wishing to invest in this company should come and be present. For further particulars apply to:

CO-OPERATION.

That cooperation among the Saints would be beneficial, judged merely from a human standpoint, is essentially true; but so far as the Saints are concerned we are not left to judge whether it would be beneficial or not through the exercise of human wisdom alone; for from New Testament scripture, and modern revelation as well, we are admonished to be workers together with God.

If we are left to decide the question by human wisdom, that would be sufficient to warrant the Saints, so many as might choose to cooperate together, in forming a business association on such terms as they might agree upon and engage in any enterprise which offered themselves and others employment and returns adequate to the continuance of the enterprise and the labor of those who might engage in it.

There were commandments given to some members of the church while the church was yet in Missouri and Kirtland, Ohio, which have not been specifically reënacted and their successors along the same lines commanded; they have not been reiterated or recomended. How far we may be warranted in taking them for a basis of action upon the hypothesis that they were intended for perpetual guidance and government, has not been officially decided. Sufficient has been given in the general law to the church regarding its finances to show, as we believe, that men of enterprise and energy may enter into association together under the corporate laws of the State where the Saints may dwell and carry on business such as they may elect and which is legitimate under existing laws. We believe that not only one but many of these associations may be entered into; and indeed we are impressed with the thought that they should be, and that they might continue until every integral portion of the body, referring to the church, had a sufficient interest in them to have share and employment therein.

We can not disguise from ourselves the fact that should the Saints engage in manufactures of any sort, the product of which must be sold in the open markets of the world, they would have to engage in active competition against similar enterprises already existing or to be put into operation subsequently.

The Herald Publishing House has the last thirty volumes of the Saints' Herald for sale. Who wants them?

C. Bertelsen, 1061 East Sixth Street, North Portland, Oregon, desires to learn the whereabouts of a brother, Frederick Bertelsen, who was for a long time a member of the church at Boston, and when last heard from was living in South Boston. Can any one furnish the information?

Peace, if possible, but truth, at any rate.—Martin Luther.
The Saints themselves do not furnish a sufficient market for a great number of articles which could be manufactured and offered for sale, as their number is too restricted. This element we would be obliged to deal with in almost anything we might undertake, and unless there could be found a disposition in the major part of the church or in all of them to live lives of repression and isolation similar to that condition which has been afforded by the Oneida Community, the Shakers, and other communist organizations, the Saints would be under the necessity of continuing to live in the world among the people thereof, while they might not be and should not be of the world. We believe that there is a sufficiently great number of honest men who would be likely to become participants in such enterprises to make sure of an upright and honest administration in cooperation.

We have watched the development of these communist experiments closely, so far as we were able to study them from what they themselves have said about them and their principles and also by what the secular press has had to say of them. Fourier, Cabet, Noyes, and others succeeded for a time; as long as the leading men remained at the head, patient, and vigorous to dictate, direct, control, these institutions flourished or appeared to. After the departure of these leading men there seemed to have come a serious falling away; while there is much integrity which has remained in some of them, they have gradually died out for want of the infusion of new blood by the accession of adherents, devotees to the theories, conversant with the practice, and partakers of the common fate of all.

It must be understood that we are not antagonistic to cooperation, meaning an active unity of the energies of the people for the accomplishment of beneficent designs calculated to benefit others as well as those engaged directly in them. We do not fear the drifting into anarchistic socialism, for against that the common sense of the people will offer a sufficient bar. Neither can we say that we fear the result of unwise enthusiasm dictating and pursuing erroneous systems. We have noticed one element and tendency among those whom we have met holding to some of the phases of socialism that we sincerely regret; that is, the idea that when men are engaged in an associated movement guarding against encroachments of employers, syndicates, monopolies, millionaires, plutocratic bondholders, and so on, it has been assumed by some of these men to whom we refer that they had a right to prevent others from doing the work which they had done and in behalf of which they quit labor in what are known as industrial strikes. We once heard a brother, a good man we believe, say that the striking unionists had a right to use violence towards those men who not belonging to the union offered to take employment and did so from the employers against whom the strike was being urged, upon the hypothesis that it was a war between capital and labor, and that all was fair in war. The courts of the land do not so construe the associational compact, and we think it is a dangerous theory in the philosophy. Unlawful violence is to be deprecated, hence our strong regard for law and the proper enforcement of which we believe should be found characterizing all classes of community, without respect to position or wealth in society.

Organizations among the Saints must be in themselves orderly and in relation to society should be characterized by good citizenship; for unless the religion of the Saints sufficiently develops the needed goodness which God has planted in every man who cometh into the world, there will be no becoming fitted to dwell with the good on earth in Zion and in the world to come.

That it is possible for Saints to live in the world and not be of it, we fully believe. This is the task that is set before us. This seems to be the central thought in every modern commandment coming from the Lord; this seems to be the motive for every effort among the men and women whom we recognize as good, having been taught of the Spirit. To live uprightly, deal justly, live within our means, occupy faithfully in the spheres in which we are called to act; to set a good example ourselves and by our children to reflect credit upon the religious philosophy that we have espoused, gives us ample scope for the employment of every faculty with which God has endowed us. Adding to this the duty to teach the redeeming graces of the gospel of the Son of God to a fallen world, affords a scope for cooperation that is as wide as the universe.

It is essential in carrying out the great scheme of redemption that man shall be properly educated in the gospel economy, and while engaged in this great spiritual work—there is scope and necessity for the exercise of those talents by which the treasures of earth may become the treasures of the people of God, to be used for the purposes and designs which the Lord has had in view in reviving his work in these last days. In securing these treasures the admonition of the apostle Paul, "Provide things honest in the sight of all men," is but a reflection of the commandment given to the Saints in these last days to do this work in accordance with the will of God.

The enemies of the church, both those who have assailed it from without and those who have gone out from the church and have afterwards assailed the church, have twisted the revelation in which this statement occurs as giving warrant to dishonest practices. This is untrue, and unless those who thus attack the work can show that theft of any kind may be committed according to the will of God, they have failed in their premise and their statement and argument based thereon necessarily fall to the ground; for the statement is specific, that while they were set to provide for the church, whatever they did must be in accordance with the will of God.

The Saints are willing to concede that "the cattle upon a thousand hills" belong to the Lord; and they may still further concede that the Lord may take when he pleases, and that he can levy fearful tribute upon both the righteous and the ungodly, as is shown by the terrible destruction by land and by sea, earthquakes bellowing beneath the ground, the waves heaving themselves beyond their bounds, the elemental destruction wrought by fire and flood. He has at no time and in no place given commands which authorize his saints to disregard the laws which should govern in lands where they dwell.

Cooperation is one means by which the Saints can accomplish the gathering together of such things as are essential to the complete development of the Lord's people, and as long as they shall remember the poor, consecrate of their substance for the work which has to be carried on and the sustenance of them who need, they will be prospered in their undertakings.

We may anticipate that should there be a failure on the part of those who are expecting temporal blessings to flow to those who are expecting association and cooperation, those blessings will be withheld and there be a consequent failure of the enterprises in which they may engage if they fail to keep the law both of God and of man. Whatever is done in this line of work should be done cheerfully and heartily upon the principle announced by the apostle wherein he says: "Fervent in spirit, diligent in business."

THE PASSING OF JOHN ALEXANDER DOWIE.

It is a pitiful thing to see a man who is not yet an old man in years, but who by reason of decrepitude has passed the period of his usefulness, slighted, ignored, or thrust out of the places he may have occupied in the days of his manhood's prime and strength, and the places thus made vacant by his being ousted therefrom, occupied by younger, stronger, and more aggressive men. Such a spectacle is presented in the person of John Alexander Dowie, late of Zion City, Wisconsin, who after posing as a healer succeeded in winning a following variously estimated at from 20,000 to 50,000, founded a city which he christened Zion City, and which still is in existence, but the spiritual and temporal control of which he has by vote of the people been ordered by Judge Landis of the United States District Court deposed from by a very large majority; out of a total vote of 1919, of which Wilbur Glen Voliva received 1906, one Bills received 6, seven votes of the entire number being defective and not counted.

This election was ordered by the judge in order to put the affairs of Zion City into the hands of some suitable representative to be chosen by the one-time followers of Dowie to represent them, and to prevent further waste of the enormous amount of money and property which had been gathered together by this First Apostle.

As a matter of course, Doctor Dowie denies the validity of the election, holding as he does that the church organized by him was a theocracy and could and did exist independently of the secular government, and should so continue to exist. But a number of others who have had dealings with Doctor Dowie and Zion City were of the opinion that the time had come for the intervention of the federal courts to prevent a continuation of lavish and ill-considered expenditure of the moneys belonging to the people.

The man Wilbur Glenn Voliva who was elected to succeed Doctor Dowie may be a better man in some respects than Doctor Dowie, but we are persuaded that he will lack considerably the incisive force and astonishing personal power over men exercised by his predecessor the First Apostle.

A statement has been made in the press that the indebtedness of Zion City as a body amounts to something like $7,000,000, and that the assets foot up less than $4,000,000, which if it be true, leaves a tremendous task for this man Voliva who has taken the place of the celebrated Doctor.

It is understood that on Sunday, September 23, the appearance of Doctor Dowie before the congregation of his people in Zion City is to be his last appearance, after which he will retire to Mexico to spend the remainder of his days, be they few or many. It is rumored that he is very ill and may not be in condition to be moved or to travel to Mexico.

We have heretofore been impressed with the thought that sooner or later this peculiar organization led by this man who did not hesitate to name himself the Lord's Overseer at the beginning of his career, subsequently to tell his people that he was the Elijah, and at last to style himself the First Apostle, and to arrogate sole decisive power to himself, must necessarily go to pieces. Of this we have before expressed the thought, so again we do, though we regret this for the reason that in some respects this man set an example of what might be done if certain methods were pursued. It could not fail, however, to reach the end to which all movements of the kind inevitably trend, destruction from that which was found within its constitution,—the love of power, the irresponsible caring for and handling of the people's money, gathered by one upon the plea that he was the Lord's servant set for such business.

Why is it that men in the secular world strike so even a balance in judging of movements of this kind? Is it a further evidence of the truthfulness of the Savior's words that "the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light"? Or is it because they are capable of taking unbiased observation of what is transpiring in the religious world? As a predicate for this question we cite an editorial from the Kansas City Journal for Thursday, September 20, which, while it passes a severe judgment upon the methods employed by Doctor Dowie, strikes a strong blow at the peculiar fanaticism that made such a movement as this of Doctor Dowie a great success for a time:

An election was held in Zion City the other day in which the issues were fairly drawn between John Alexander Dowie and Wilbur Glen Voliva, his former pupil, friend, and devoted adherent. The result of the balloting was an overwhelming repudiation of the founder of the organization and the official elevation of a young adventurer who has usurped the leadership of the religious cult.

This marks the end of one of the most unique careers of modern times. The curtain has been rung down upon Dowieism, which to most of the world was a comedy, but to those deluded ones who have suffered through fanatic adherence to the mountebank methods of the bigoted old impostor it was a terrible tragedy. It was Dowie's last stand in Zion City. Henceforth he will be a wanderer never again to enter the city of his founding. He will make a protest against this summary expulsion, but he has lost strength and heart and those he has deluded for years have little faith in him. Dowie acknowledged after the election that his course had been run. He will retire to Mexico to pass the remainder of his days.

If one could forget the unfortunate victims who have died awful deaths because of blind faith in Dowieism; if one could blot from the memory the cries of agony that fell unheeded upon Dowie's ears and the multitude of shady transactions in which Dowie has been involved, the end of this old man would possess elements of pathos. But Dowie is not a proper subject for sympathy or commiseration. He has come to the inevitable end and the world will be better and happier for it. He will sink into oblivion unmourned except by a devoted few. That he has escaped criminal prosecution which would end his days in prison is extremely fortunate for him.

The probable dissolution of Zion City is a matter of speculation. For many months a lively row has been going on among the leaders of the organization and many things have come to light that have served to expose the fraud and greed of Dowie and the others. The humber members who have paid the bills gradually had their eyes opened to the imposture that has been practiced upon them and hundreds have deserted and returned to their old ways of living. Others who have lost faith in the whole scheme are still dwellers in Zion from necessity. That the entire fabric will fall and Zion City become only an unpleasant memory is the opinion of some of the best informed of the colonists. With the shattered delusions of Dowieism may come a fortunate end to one of the most colossal religious frauds ever conceived in modern times.

We are reminded by this failure of Doctor Dowie of the failure in communism under Monsieur Cabet at Nauvoo, Illinois. This was something after the order of Fourierism, and started in France, made a settlement in Texas, and from there drifted north into Nauvoo and purchased the Temple and site, at one time there being something like one hundred and fifty or more adherents to the philosophy, of whom Monsieur Cabet was the president, which existed for a period of years, made another settlement in Union County, Iowa, and finally was settled by the courts in a similar way to this of John Alexander Dowie. We are now prepared for the next, though we feel a measure of pity in considering the passing of this celebrated character.

JOSEPH F. SMITH.

We find this in the Chicago Tribune of September 12:

SEEKS ARREST, FOR BIGAMY, OF HEAD OF MORMON CHURCH. President Joseph F. Smith Named in Detective's Application for Warrant Charging Unlawful Relations. SALT LAKE, Utah, September 11. [Special.]—A warrant for the arrest of President Joseph F. Smith of the Mormon church for sustaining unlawful relations with one of his wives, Mrs. Mary T. Schwartz Smith, has been applied for by C. M. Owen, a detective. Owen made his application to Assistant County Attorney Lyon, who delayed action owing to the absence of County Attorney Parley P. Christensen. President Smith is now in Europe, but is expected to return in time to preside over the semiannual conference of the church which meets in October.

CASE OF JOSEPH F. SMITH.

It would appear that Judge Armstrong, of the District Court in Utah, to whom application was made for a warrant for the arrest of President Joseph F. Smith, refused the application of Charles Mostyn Owen for an order compelling County Attorney Parley P. Christensen to issue a warrant for the arrest of Joseph F. Smith, this refusal being based upon the technicality that the complainant Owen did not set forth that Mary Schwartz Smith was not the legal wife of President Joseph F. Smith. The complainant Owen is a persistent fellow and promises to take other steps to compel issuance of the warrant referred to.

GRACELAND NOTES.

COLLEGE DAY.

What will we do to help the church in its educational work the present year?

The first Sunday in October is the day set apart by General Conference for this work and all should earnestly seek to make the day a memorial one in the history of the college and church.

As the Lord has prospered us, let every one unselfishly, hopefully, and cheerfully perform his or her part and the work will be well and fully done and the credit due to all.

The bishops and Bishop's agents, and presidents of branches are specially requested to see that the matter of taking of the college offerings is clearly presented to the Saints in their respective fields and localities, and may the Lord bless and prosper the doers of the work. Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

SANITARIUM AND CHILDREN’S HOME.

The interest in these two institutions as manifested by reports from all parts of the church is gratifying, to say the least. The sentiment touching both of these undertakings is almost universally in their favor in all parts of the church, together with the disposition manifest to assist as shall be just and proper. The Bishop has no complaint to make, but feels that the Saints are equally interested as he is himself in each performing his or her part. This is all we can ask and all the Lord will ask. It may be that many could do more than they will do by making an extra effort, but each one must answer for himself as to this, to an unerring Judge.

There has been no cause known to this office for intimating that the Saints were not willing to sustain these institutions, neither have we found cause for anybody to stumble over anything that the committee may have done in the matter, unless they were trying to find an excuse for failure to perform their part.

Our attention has been called to statement made by Counselor Hilliard, touching purchase of ten acres of land for the sanitarium: the trouble seems to be that somebody wants a too particular explanation of the matter. There is none of the committee that proposes to use ten acres of ground to locate the sanitarium, but the committee desires to purchase at least that amount of ground. They did not wish to be in a position where the real estate men could close up on each side and run prices up and make the poor Saints pay double price for a little home at a later date. The committee in considering land for sanitarium purposes thought that it would require from two to four acres. We desire, however, to be in a position to handle properly the institution and immediate adjoining property, and while the cost at first on this will be considerable, as stated by Bro. Hilliard, this money will be paid back into the sanitarium fund as the land is used to aid in building. “A word to the wise is sufficient.” The committee figured to get more land, but when prices were out of our reach we did not purchase; nor does the committee propose to purchase until it is done in wisdom and discretion, as was left to the committee by the revelation appointing it.

Too many explanations neither bring help to anything of this kind nor assistance to parties who are trying to locate it. This is the reason we have committees to do the work, and it is to be regretted that any one would feel he should help direct the performance of this work, although the Lord named other parties to do this part of the work.

Whatever of insinuation or aspersion cast with reference to errors or wrong-doings on the part of the church in the past, no one has ever pointed out a single step in the financial work by the bishopric as yet, that can be justly said to be against the good of the work.

The trouble often with writers is that they are a little like the self-appointed herald of tidings to King David. They do not wait until they are advised. They run without tidings. Nothing is seen or known but a little “commotion” and, of course, it must be heralded; it fails either to inform or satisfy the people, however. But what of that, the noise has gone out. How much better it would be if all of us would just wait until we have true tidings.

It is to be hoped that Saints and friends will continue their good work towards the sanitarium and the children’s home, and will not let anything either discourage or slacken faith in the success of the church and its institutions. There is no worthy undertaking to be accomplished by the church without effort and courageous work. It is to be hoped the Saints will keep this in view when reflecting upon the institutions now being arranged for, and others of like interest in the future.

Saints will note that in forwarding means for the children’s home, all funds raised for the children’s home under the call of the Bishopric should be sent to the Bishop, or it may be paid into any bishop’s or agent’s hand, or to the counselors of the Presiding Bishop, which is equal to paying into the treasury. Money raised by the Daughters of Zion, that society has charge of, and should go to the treasurer of the Daughters of Zion. If money is sent to the Bishop, raised by the Daughters of Zion, they will duly get credit for what they have done in this matter. We ask that funds, together with names of parties, be sent as directed, that proper accounts and lists may appear in the publications, and the Saints be satisfied.

In the interest of the gospel work, which means helping every gospel institution, I am,

Very truly and respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, September 21, 1906.

THE BUILDING UP OF ZION.

How can it be done?

In the consideration of this question we must consider our environments and the conditions under which we labor. We all agree that individual righteousness is the first great prerequisite. This must be determined by a comparison with “the law of the Spirit of life,” which is “the perfect law of liberty,” “Ye shall know them by their fruits.” We are all expected to labor together with God to accomplish this end.

“Seek first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness,” was the admonition of the Savior. This applies to all. “All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toilleth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

This makes it clear that all, ministers and members, are to labor alike according to their ability, in their several different occupations or callings. Each is a steward under God. The Bridegroom is gone away with the promise to come again. He commits his work (or his goods) to his people. Each is expected to improve on his talent. Talent here means ability in whatever work we are called to perform, as I understand it. If a minister, he must be diligent and studious, improving on what he had to begin with, developing, becoming more proficient, doing better work; hence doing more to build up the kingdom of God. If laboring in any other line of work, the same rule applies, and by experience and application to business we learn to accumulate and save money, and in this way do our part in building up the kingdom, the object of all being the same. The one gathers in the members, and teaches them their several duties in the church; the other gathers in the dollars necessary to buy lands, build up industries, and carry on business of all kinds, turning over all they can spare above their necessities to carry on the Lord's work.

If we are properly educated in the gospel philosophy "greed for personal gain is eliminated, and we will seek to excel" in building up the kingdom. Our ambition will not be to get glory and praise to ourselves by our preaching and work along spiritual lines; but to glorify God, who has made it possible for us to do good along those lines by working with him. And the same desire should exist along temporal lines; each working with God. The farmer plowing, planting, and sowing, gathering, reaping, and mowing; the Lord furnishing the land, the sunshine, and the rain, both working together, the same as the spiritual; both must have the Master's help or fail in their effort. We need helps along both lines, and they are almost indispensable under the present conditions.

The minister must have books, maps, and charts, according to what he is doing or can do; and sometimes he can use a stenographer and typewriter to assist him in his work. So with the business man, mechanic, or farmer; all should have whatever may be necessary to carry on his work and expedite his business. The Lord said:

It must needs be necessary, that ye save all the money that ye can, and that ye obtain all that ye can in righteousness, that in time ye may be enabled to purchase lands for an inheritance, even the city.—Doctrine and Covenants 48: 2.

And again, verily I say unto you, Let my servant Sidney Gilbert plant himself in this place [Independence], and establish a store, that he may sell goods without fraud [not without profit], that he may obtain money to buy lands for the good of the saints, and that he may obtain whatsoever things the disciples may need to plant them in their inheritance.—Doctrine and Covenants 57: 4.

This was not to sell goods at the lowest cost price, but to make money to buy lands and establish the Saints.

He was also instructed to obtain license and send out clerks (or traveling salesmen) to enlarge his business to make more money to provide for the Saints and spread the gospel. Here is improving on talents along temporal lines, by trade and speculation or profit. Gilbert had ability in trade and commerce evidently. Hence his calling to work in this department. He had to buy from the world and sell to the world and compete with the world; as well as to sell a little to a few Saints. And if Saints did pay a profit on their goods, it went to the church in the end, and the Lord knew who earned it; and they would get their reward, for the Great Judge will do right. Gilbert could not have two prices, one for the Saints and another for outsiders. That would be ruinous to his business. Conditions are just the same to-day in this respect.

We have to deal with and compete with the world; and should make all the money we can honestly to help the church and turn it into the treasury every dollar possible above our necessities. A preacher is not a producer, any more than is a teacher; but he is necessary. A merchant or his clerks are not producers, but they are necessary in carrying on business. The men that buy, ship, and sell cattle, sheep, hay, grain, and produce are not producers, but are necessary.

One of the best, cheapest, and most convenient mediums through which to transact business is the banks through which we do this work. Indeed, under present conditions they seem almost indispensable. The merchant does not have the danger of carrying his money when he goes to buy goods, but deposits and draws on the bank; and this is true in all lines of business. It may be said there is danger of the banks failing and losing your money that way, or the cashier or some bank official getting away with it. Such instances are the exception and not the rule. And there is but little danger when you can select your own officers. The laws may not be all they ought to be in every respect, but they are the best our wisest legislators have been able to make so far. Condemn the dishonest men, not the bank. Men in all kinds of business fail and prove dishonest; in such cases we should not condemn the business, but the man only.

Telegraph and telephone companies many times make money and could be dispensed with, but they are great conveniences, and we could hardly get along without them; so with banks; let us have this great convenience. It saves the church hundreds of dollars every year. Instead of paying thirty cents for a money order we have the Bishop's check for one hundred dollars without cost generally, and even our own personal check for a small sum if we are known goes without cost; or the bank where you do business will give you a draft or sell it to you for ten cents where the post-office would charge thirty.

Now let us take courage and go to work with a will and preach the best we can, doing all we can to bring properly instructed people into the church, not being jealous of those that can preach better or do more than we can, and do our part to build up the kingdom. And along temporal lines, let every man be placed where he may improve upon his talent and gain other talents; yea, even an hundredfold, to be cast into the Lord's storehouse, to become the common property of the whole church, every man seeking the interest of his neighbor and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God. (See Doctrine and Covenants 81:4.) For "talents" read "dollars" here as in section 101; for this is evidently the meaning, as a man can not cast his mental powers into the treasury, but he can serve God with honest dollars (which are necessary to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and place the children of the covenant on the land of Zion where they can live according to the laws of consecration) as acceptably as with honest preaching or praying. I hope to see every institution owned by church-members run in the interest of the church, to build up the kingdom of God, the same as every individual should work; and I am trying to work to that end.

It will require education along those lines, and time and patience are necessary. Can we help, and patiently wait? I am willing for any one to speak or write as they choose, no matter how much they may differ from me. What I object to, is for a man to judge another thus, he is assuming the office and extend sympathy which we think would be justifiable. I deny having at any time intentionally or knowingly used my office to intimidate any one. If I do that I should be dropped from the office and a faithful man put in.

Desiring that the best men to accomplish the Lord's work in his way may be chosen, and that I may be worthy to do something to assist in its accomplishment, I hope to remain a worker in some place, wherever the Lord can use me to the best good of his work and the glory of his name.

In hope of final triumph for right and truth, I am, as ever in the conflict.

G. H. HILLIARD.

GATHERING—CONSECRATION—STOCK COMPANIES.

GATHERING.

First we will notice the principle of gathering. Jesus said, "How often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" Has the gathering-time come? We verily believe it has. Then what? It is required of every man who gathers to comply with the law governing the gathering; and it is as essential to obey this as it is to obey the first principles. It is not now necessary for us to waste time and fill valuable space in citing proof that America, state of Missouri, Jackson County, is Zion, or Independence, Missouri, the center stake of Zion. It must be conceded that when special reference is made to Zion as a location, it means Independence, and the country round about.

God, seemingly, had a purpose in establishing Zion of the last days, and it seemed to be in his mind from the beginning, for he told Enoch:

And the Lord said unto Enoch, As I live, even so will I come in the last days, in the days of wickedness and vengeance, to fulfill the oath which I made unto you concerning the children of Noah. And the day shall come that the earth shall rest. But before that day the heavens shall be darkened, and a veil of darkness shall cover the earth; and the heavens shall shake, and also the earth. And great tribulations shall be among the children of men, but: my people will I preserve; and righteousness will I send down out of heaven, and truth will I send forth out of the earth, to bear testimony of mine Only Begotten; his resurrection from the dead; yea, and also the resurrection of all men. And righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out mine own elect from the four quarters of the earth, unto a place which I shall prepare; an holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and may be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle, and it shall be called Zion; a New Jerusalem.—Genesis 7:67-70, 1. T.

Zion will be a place of safety, a place of refuge for the pure in heart. Others may prosper there for a time but Christ said:

For in that day before the Son of Man shall come, he shall send his angels and messengers of heaven. And they shall gather out of his kingdom all things which offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them out among the wicked; and there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

With an unalterable decree it has gone forth from the Father that those who gather must gather in God's way and keep his commandments or we will not be able to abide in Zion.

"Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." Then it is by sacrifice we are required to make our covenant with God, that we may be permitted to dwell with the people of God, when the heavens and earth shall tremble; the wicked shall slay the wicked and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel; when great tribulations shall be among the children of men, and the people of God will be preserved.

To the very first members of this church who collected on the land of Zion in 1831 the Lord said:

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, give ear to my word, and learn of me what I will concerning you, and also concerning this land unto which I have sent you; for verily I say unto you, Blessed is he that keepeth my commandments, whether in life or in death; and he that is faithful in tribulation, the reward of the same is greater in the kingdom of heaven. Ye can not behold with your natural eyes, for the present time, the designs of your God concerning those things which shall come hereafter, and the glory which shall follow, after much tribulation. For after much tribulation cometh the blessings. Wherefore the day cometh that ye shall be crowned with much glory; the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand.

“And again he said, Behold, blessed, saith the Lord, are they who have come up to this land with an eye single to the glory of God according to my commandments.” Therefore it will be useless for us to come to Zion with any other motive in our hearts than to do just what God requires of every man who comes.

Here is one of the first and all important conditions required of every man who comes to Zion:

And now I give unto you further directions concerning this land. It is wisdom in me that my servant Martin Harris should be an example unto the church, in laying his moneys before the bishop of the church. And, also, this is a law unto every man that cometh unto this land, to receive an inheritance, and he shall do with his moneys according as the law directs.—Doctrine and Covenants 58:7.

This instruction was given about the time the land of Zion was dedicated; this was to be a pattern to every man that came to this land, and every man that expects to stay must follow suit. Who are prepared to stay?

We have had some experience in meeting and corresponding with Saints with reference to Zion and locating here, and it is but the minority that, in our judgment, really sense the conditions, and that are willing to fully comply with the law appertaining to the gathering. And, while I have not made a special study of men writing or coming from different locations, yet I have noticed that from certain locations there is an apparent difference, and I attribute it to the kind of teaching they receive with reference to the gathering and duty to the church.

The gathering should not be in haste. The rich and the poor are alike with God. The rich are those who are able to, but should not make a rush without due preparation; and the last thing that should employ their minds is that they are coming to buy up land to hold for a rise in price, to make themselves well fixed at the cost of their brother. If they do like Martin Harris, as they should do, there will be no chance for speculation, as condemned in the last revelations to the church. All Saints who contemplate moving to Zion should correspond with either stake or general church Bishop.

CONSECRATION.

Consecration is the setting apart of anything that we may have to the service of God and the carrying on of his work. If we consecrate our life and all we have, then we have done it all. There will be no question as to how much is proper to consecrate under the law for the building up of Zion.

“Therefore, seek not the things of this world; but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.”—Matthew 6:38.

The statement made here by Christ ought to be first and foremost, in every movement of our life, “seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness.” That means, not our glory or aggrandizement in this world, but God’s glory and honor and the establishment of his kingdom on earth, and his promises are sure: all that will be needed will be given. It matters not whether a mechanic, farmer, preacher, lawyer, doctor, business man, or laborer of any kind, they are all included in that statement.

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toilth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119:8.

Every man in the church should consecrate his life service, ability, and success to the establishment of God’s kingdom, and no man should possess any more than another for his individual benefit, for this is forbidden. The Lord has said that he will not be mocked in those things that were commanded to be organized and established as an everlasting order for the benefit of the church and the salvation of man. How long? Until I come. They are now in force, and it would be better for us not to have been born into this world than to turn a deaf ear to the revelations of God in this regard.

Verily I say unto you, my friends, I give unto you counsel and a commandment, concerning all the properties which belong to the order, which I commanded to be organized and established, to be an united order, and an everlasting order for the benefit of my church, for the salvation of men until I come, with promise immutable and unchangeable, that inasmuch as those whom I commanded were faithful, they should be blessed with a multiplicity of blessings; but inasmuch as they were not faithful, they were nigh unto cursing. Therefore, inasmuch as some of my servants have not kept the commandment, but have broken the covenant, by covetousness and with feigned words, I have cursed them with a very sore and grievous curse; for I, the Lord, have decreed in my heart, that inasmuch as any man, belonging to the order, shall be found a transgressor; or, in other words, shall break the covenant with which ye are bound, he shall be cursed in his life, and shall be trodden down by whom I will, for I, the Lord, am not to be mocked in these things; and all this that the innocent among you, may not be condemned with the unjust; and that the guilty among you may not escape, because I, the Lord, have promised unto you a crown of glory at my right hand. Therefore, inasmuch as you are found transgressors, ye can not escape my wrath in your lives; inasmuch as ye are cut off by transgression, ye can not escape the buffetings of Satan until the day of redemption.

If this latter-day gospel is going to save this world, it will not be done by high-toned preaching, it will not be done by beautiful singing, nor by building fine and expensive churches; but it must be done by the Saints getting down to where God intended,—keeping the whole law. If we are going to save the world for Christ, it will cost us something. How much do you think? It will cost us all we have. All our pride; all our selfishness; all our false modesty, all our means; all our powers; we must lay it all on the altar, if we expect to conquer.

What did it cost Christ to redeem the world? It cost him heaven; he left the glory he had with the Father. Then it cost him home; he had nowhere to lay his head. It cost him earthly relations, and companionship of his disciples. It cost him suffering, first in the garden and then on the cross, and, at last, his life; but he was, at last, crowned with victory.

Christ said, “Come, and follow me.” “Zion put on thy strength, put on thy beautiful garment.” If we will but stand in line, every man in action doing his part, marching on, the whole world will tremble at our tread, and every promise given to the church relative to the redemption of Zion will be fulfilled, and we will wonder how easily it was done.

We sometimes boast of our latter-day work, and tell of the great blessings that God has bestowed on us. If great, glorious, and superior, what are we doing to benefit mankind? Yes, it may be said that we are sending a few missionaries into the world. How much money do we put into the church treasury, compared with what we spend building up self, aggrandizing ourselves with useless ornaments in our homes and on our persons, and building fine homes; and some of our poor brethren, and poor widows and children are destitute for the necessary means to sustain life. Let us remember that God will try every man’s work. The widows’ and orphans’ cry may come up before God, and condemn us in the great day of judgment.

The ability to accumulate is not condemned, but severe condemnation comes for not doing our duty according to the laws of the gospel. And every man in the whole church should love God, and keep his commandments, and remember the poor, and consecrate of his property for their support, and lay it before the Bishop of the church, like Martin Harris did, for the purpose of purchasing land and building up of the New Jerusalem.

The Lord called our attention to the Fishing River revelation. What was the reason why the Saints were driven out of Zion in 1833? Was it not the very same cause that we have among us to-day; or have we better virtues than they had? If not, we are standing on dangerous ground. We have not yet learned to be obedient to the things which the Lord requires at our hands; but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart our substance as became Saints to the poor and afflicted among us. Have we done our full duty on that line? Are we united according to the law of the celestial kingdom? If not we better be for the Lord said that “Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself.” The word otherwise in this connection means that we could build a city and pretend it to be Zion, but it will not be accepted of the Lord; and to us will come, as promised in this revelation, chastisement after chastisement, until we learn obedience by the things we suffer; and Zion will not be alone in this suffering, but the whole church. Many Saints abroad, said in 1833, when Zion was in trouble, We will keep our money; or, in other words, What do we care for Zion? Where is their God? which brought the whole church under condemnation, and it will remain until we learn to do and not to say. We may boast with eloquence about the beauties of this latter-day glory, and the angel’s message to the world; it will profit us nothing, if we are simply making a noise just to be heard. As Paul said, it would but be as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal, which will be without the proper harmony required by the gospel law, which is to love and obey God and love your brother as yourself.

The gospel, restored to the earth, cannot propagate itself without it is preached. Therefore, the Savior said, Go unto all nations, and preach the gospel to every creature. The gospel factor of the world’s progress will change the conditions that existed through the Dark Ages. The gospel agency is sufficient to produce that which God intended for the salvation of the race.

Mankind has gone through different spiritual eclipses. Some of them have been very long and dark. Man’s vision has become very obscure by reason of those dark times when men, like brutal brute beasts, took the advantage of his weak fellows and devoured him, which was acknowledged by kings and sanctioned by governments. This made serfs, slaves, aristocrats, and demagogues.

The earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.

What an awful statement; and passed upon, who? And now the sunlight of the gospel again is beginning to shine to set no more. Can we appreciate it... and comprehend its full meaning? If we do not, our carcasses will fall in the wilderness unredeemed like the rebellious children of Israel, who refused to occupy the goodly land; when similar arguments were used then, as such are used now, We can not possess it, because of the conditions. What the gospel was to Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, and the prophets it is to us; and as taught by Christ and his disciples, they made no distinction between the temporal and the spiritual.

Consecration means inheritance. How can the Bishop give inheritance unless the Saints consecrate as the law directs? The Saints made the excuse, Land is too high. The church can not get possession of the land in Jackson County and in the counties round about. Have we faith in God's ability to carry out his own purposes?

We are told that the gathering must be done in accordance with the revelation given to the church upon Fishing River, etc. The Fishing River revelation says to purchase all the land that can be purchased in Jackson County; and in a former revelation, given after the Saints were driven out:

Observe the commandments which I have given concerning these things, which saith, or teacheth, to purchase all the land by money, which can be purchased for money, in the region round about the land which I have appointed to be the land of Zion, for the beginning of the gathering of my saints; all the land which can be purchased in Jackson County, and the counties round about, and leave the residue in mine hand. Now, verily I say unto you, Let all the churches gather together all their moneys; let these things be done in their time, be not in haste; and observe to have all things prepared before you.

Seventy-three years have passed away since these instructions were given. The church has not been in haste. Has the time come for us to act, notwithstanding the price of land? That is the all-important question. The church has been moving, step by step, by special direction and revelation. As the Lord saw our advancement he encouraged another step in advance, retaking hold of the very principles of God by the old church. The First Presidency was filled; the Quorum of Twelve filled; in time, a patriarch appointed, together with other archbishops; bishops selected; stakes organized; all this being a more complete carrying out of the law, and calling our attention to the original command given on Fishing River, concerning our attitude, with reference to the gathering, and consecration.

There never was a movement undertaken by the children of God in any age, where all were agreed in every particular; in a general way they may have been. Moses led the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt. They told Moses before they left Egypt, Let us alone for it is better that we serve the Egyptians than that we die in the wilderness.
Some of them reluctantly moved, and even though God manifested himself and sealed his approval of the move by going before them in a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night, yet they rebelled against Moses. When the Egyptian army came close up to them, this was God's opportunity to further show that he approved of the move. Humanity is the same. Can not we see the same trait of excuses in us to-day that was in them? Where is our faith in God?

STOCK COMPANIES.

Who has the right to say that there will be no stock companies and enterprises for profit when Zion is redeemed, and our laws are fully carried out?

We notice that the most, if not all of those who have written upon this question have steered clear of some of the revelations and instructions given to the church on these lines. To destroy enterprise is to destroy commerce; to destroy commerce is to destroy the building up of any community. We are told that we must build up Zion; it is to be the joy of the whole earth. The temple and other necessary buildings will be erected, such as stores, schools, colges; and hotels for the travelers are necessary means to traveling; also industries of every kind.

Men will have their inheritances and stewardships.
There will be of necessity all kinds of mechanics and workers of cunning art; and we need not think because we are the people of God's choice that he is going to do with us like the birds in the nest; if he does he will take away our individuality. If we need gold to gild the temple, we must get it in a commercial way, or dig it out of the mountains; if we get col coal we must buy it with money, or go down deep in the earth and dig it out; for I assure you that it will not be thrown out on the surface for us to pick up.
There is one thing certain, we must have commercial interests or labor exchanges, and of necessity, and in either case, there must be a standard medium of exchange: you can call it money, if you please.

What difference does it make which line of industry may be our calling.

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toleth in the affairs of men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.

We must all work together with God; every man on an equal basis, the minister, or the toiler, or the business man, and for the benefit of the church of the living God, that every man may improve upon his talents, that every man may gain other talents;
yea, even a hundredfold, to be placed in the Lord's warehouse, to become the common property of the whole church, every man seeking the interests of his neighbor, and doing all in his power with an eye single to the glory of God.

What is a corporation? It is the legal uniting of a body made up of different individuals competent to transact business. What difference does it make if two or more incorporate and do business under one head or company, if they find that it would be more to their advantage than it would be if they severally

www.LatterDayTruth.org
run an individual business, if they are working to the same end—the building up of the kingdom of God? It might answer some brother's purpose better to invest his stewardship in a corporation than in an individual enterprise, and it should be left with each individual to act on his own free agency, to invest where he could do the most good to himself and the church. I believe that this idea is in accordance with the example given in Doctrine and Covenants 101:9:

... and they shall be organized in their own names, and in their own name; and they shall do their business in their own name, and in their own names; and you shall do your business in your own name, and in your own names.

The Nauvoo House was commanded to be built, and the Lord directed that it should be built by a company of individuals known as stockholders; the limit of stock was from $50 to $15,000; contributing parties to be benefited, they and their generations after them, as long as they did not sell their stock, which was to be of their own free will and act. (See Doctrine and Covenants 107:18-20, 24.)

It has been said that money of itself does not make anything, neither will a man if he sits idly by; but man's energies and money set in motion together will each help the other, and we know by experience that to be without money is very inconvenient.

We should make no war with the man that has talent to make money, if he makes it honestly and uses it to good purpose. It has been said, "Woe unto you rich men," in many of the articles that I have read in the HERALD; but did you ever hear, "Woe unto you poor men [who have the wrong ring to their spirits]"? If you did not I will quote it to you:

Woe unto you poor men, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, and whose bellies are not satisfied, and whose hands are not stayed from laying hold upon other men's goods, whose eyes are full of greediness, who will not labor with their own hands."—Doctrine and Covenants 56:5.

The spirit of selfishness and greed is as wrong in the poor man as it is in the rich; and it is generally the indolent that ride hobbies who are the more anxious that the other fellow shall divide up with him. The man who comes to Zion with any such ideas in his mind will be disappointed. The law of God never contemplated any such method. The idler, the wasteful, the unfrugal must abide the consequences of his own folly; the willing and obedient shall be crowned with success, every man in his own order. God is just. Every brother's energies will be encouraged, but the idler shall not eat the bread nor wear the garment of the laborer.

I am partly responsible for the incorporation of two of the enterprises undertaken by the Saints at Independence—the Independence Coal Mining Company, and the Independence Manufacturing and Mercantile Company. These are the only ones that I am now connected with. I would have said nothing about them, if they had not been loudly heralded by the columns of our church papers, and by those who have no interest in these corporations, that I know of. These two companies were organized for a good purpose, and in the best possible way, in the absence of something better; and should we lie idly by and do nothing until everybody is converted to the idle whims of everybody else? If we did, there would never have been anything done, from everlasting to everlasting.

We have seen our brethren idle on the street-corners for want of employment, and for ten years prior to the time of these organizations we advanced the idea that to give labor and put people in a position to help themselves was the best possible way to build up any community; and the concentration of capital, a little from here and there could do better than a little could do separately. The officers of these companies have labored hard to carry out their desires, to see these enterprises properly maintaining themselves, and be a profitable investment to those who invested their means; and that, without any compensation. And not only that, but many among the promoters are willing that their part of their investment's interest should go to the church coffers.

Should we at Independence sit idly by and see all our money and earnings go into the hands of outsiders, trusts, and monopolies who continue to fleece us? Would we not be a poor lot of down-trodden people, next to slaves or worse than slaves to allow ourselves to be shoe leather for the Gentiles? What kind of standing would we have in the community? The hue and cry has been raised because we have stock companies and corporations. We are following in the ways of the world, trampling on the poor man, and depriving him of his rights and privileges, etc. From our personal knowledge, the very opposite of this is the intent and purpose of the most, if not all, of those interested in the stock companies organized at Independence by our people.

I will name them. First, Independence Foundry Company, managed by Bro. William Crick,—a stock company. Most of the men employed own stock, or nearly own all the stock. They pay themselves scale wages, and the profits are divided at the end of the year. They pay to the church its portion, and then they either use their individual portion for their own use or place it back in their corporation treasury and add to the building up of their enterprise. I wonder which the Lord is the most pleased with, this kind of business, or with the individuals away off at a distance who try to make artificial thunder!

Jackson County Bank, another corporation. Can we get along without banks? This is the most approved and modern way of assisting in doing business, and can not very well be dispensed with. When the necessity comes that business men must have money (and it is very necessary at times, and very convenient) on the spur of the moment, that money must be had, the bank is the place where the money can be most conveniently obtained. Is it not better to pay for the accommodation to those who in turn will help the church, if doing their duty, than to pay tribute to outside banks, run by those who have no interest in our welfare?

But the objector will say, We should not pay interest (usury, if you please). Is it any more illegal for a bank to charge legal interest than it is for an individual? Or for a brother who has money to buy a farm, house, or horse, and rent them; or a man or individuals or a corporation to manufacture or sell goods at a profit? The only precaution that the Lord puts on business, is, as he said to Sidney Gilbert, “to sell goods without fraud.” Then it is legal in the sight of the Lord to do business, if it is done without fraud. Fraud means unlawful or unfair advantage, deceit.

The objector will also say, All business will be done under one head, the church. I challenge the statement. Does it not say in Doctrine and Covenants 42:14:

Tho shalt stand in the place of thy stewardship; thou shalt not take thy brother’s garment; thou shalt pay for that which thou shalt receive of thy brother; and if thou obtainest more than that which would be for thy support, thou shalt give it unto my storehouse, that all things may be done according to that which I have said.

I am a full believer and advocate of these principles, that every man in the church should live up to this law faithfully, and thus make the Bishop the treasurer of the whole church, every man laboring in his stewardship. Even if he is a banker, or farmer, or storekeeper, or at the head or laboring for a corporation, or any other vocation in life, he comes under the same rule. This is the law of the celestial kingdom, and Zion can not be built up in any other way. And this applies to all members of the church, in all the world; and if we fail to do this, the condemnation found in paragraph 16 will surely overtake us.

The Independence Manufacturing and Mercantile Company and the Independence Coal Mining Company, both corporations. There has been considerable said about them, and by whom? Did they fully know what they were talking about? I know something about the organization of these two companies, and believe that I am fully competent to defend their merits.

I have lived in the land of Zion since 1875. I have been connected with its financial department from 1891 to the present. Located at Independence, as I have been, I believe I ought to know something of the conditions that have and do exist. I have never seen the time, since I united with the church in 1876, that I could separate the temporal from the spiritual, nor how a church-member could be a saint in very deed unless he could work together with God in his business and all that he had of the world’s goods to the betterment of his brethren and the work of God in general. This is the spirit and the motive that prompted these organizations for the benefit of the church, and of those connected with them; and, if they should ever fail, it will be because they have not the proper and needed support.

The question may be asked, What are these corporations doing that is of any special benefit, and different from other corporations outside the church.

The great cry against corporations is that they enslave the wage-worker and enrich themselves, and no opportunity is given to the poor man to get him a home, but they make him trade at the company store and sap out the laborer’s full earnings. This is the very thing that these endeavor to avoid, and have tried to put in operation a system that will build up and put every man employed on an equal basis, and that working men may get the benefit of the profits on their own labor, as well as receiving the full scale wages. The money earned by the wage-worker in other corporations or companies goes to aggrandize and build up the operator.

The Independence Coal Mining Company offers an opportunity, such as never has been offered by any other coal-mining company that we know of. They are endeavoring to make it possible for church miners to become partners or stockholders, be their own masters (not prevent any from getting labor without taking stock), and gather together where they can have better association for their children and make themselves homes; and if a store is established it will belong to the company; that means, it will belong to the mine-worker and all who have interest in the company. It can not be then justly said that one or two make money off their fellow brother, and pay largely to the church, and get credit for what his poor brother ought to have credit for under fair and just conditions. Every man is to esteem his brother as himself.

Do you now see any difference?

Holding the position that I do as bishop of the Independence Stake, I have felt it my duty to open up opportunity for those who need assistance, and for the welfare of Zion and not for any personal advantages. All I have is pledged to the interest of this work without reservation, and we will always be satisfied with the arrangement made by the church for the providing of its ministry.

Praying always that Zion and all her interests may prosper,

"TO REMOVE THE PRINCIPLE OF SELFISHNESS."

God requires his Saints to comply with his law governing in temporal things for two apparent reasons. First, to incline men to remove the principle of selfishness from their natures. Second, that means may be accumulated for the carrying on of God's work, and the establishing of a Zion where is to be no poor.

Any interpretation or construction placed upon the revealed law which thwarts or curtails the accomplishment of either of these two great purposes is a mistaken one.

No harder blow was ever struck at the monster root of selfishness, no stroke is more keenly felt by men of possessions, and no point in the perfect law of God calls out more inclination to evade, than the plain teaching, of which follows a sample: “Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property . . . and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people.”—Doctrine and Covenants 106:1.

Many noble men have met this issue, performed their duty like faithful servants of God, and as a result are less selfish than before, and have received a great measure of the hidden joy, strongly spoken to the soul by the Spirit of the Most High, which joy ever follows in the wake of duty well done. But alas, others, their numbers not a few, have (like the young man of Matthew 19:22) gone away sorrowing.

Candidly now, what inclination in a man is it that inclines him to modify the “all your surplus as a beginning” law, and make it mean only one tenth of all? Is it from so strong an inclination to be free from all selfishness? Where in all the revealed word of God is there anything more clear as to what God requires as a beginning of tithing? Where would be the foundation for our excuse, should we claim we were justified in paying only one tenth of all as a beginning?

True, Abraham gave tithes of all the spoils when returning from the slaughter of the kings; but where is there one line of evidence that he had not previously complied with the perfect law which requires all surplus first? Who did the Lord say was expected to make this kind of a beginning? “My people.” And this should be a standing law—how long? “For ever.” Where? In “the land of Zion” and “stakes of Zion.” Anywhere else? Yes, section 51, paragraph 4, speaks of the same law, giving of surplus into the hands of the Bishop, etc., and paragraph 5 follows thus: “Behold this shall be an example unto my servant Edward Partridge, in other places, in all churches.”

Again, in section 72 the Lord in giving directions concerning the same law, God’s one and only law revealed, governing the management of finances, speaks of sundry duties pertaining to disposal of moneys thus paid in to the bishop, and follows in the latter part of paragraph 4, thus: “And now, behold, this shall be an example for all the extensive branches of my church.”

Once more I cite to establish this point section 70, paragraph 2, which speaks again of the same law, giving of surplus, which is in this reading called “that which is more than is needful for their necessities.” Immediately following these things, in paragraph 3, we have this: “And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God.”

Those of us who have confidence in the saying that “but one line hath been given by which to measure” can see the application of that rule in this matter of the temporal or financial law. In the unfolding of this law, God has acted like himself and given “line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little”; but because of these different revealed statements of different parts and bearings of the one law, covering a period of years, we mistake if we conclude that there are two or more separate and distinct laws intended to govern the people of God with regard to finance.

Soon after the Lord began the establishment of his church in this last dispensation of the gospel he gave the people some of his words to ancient Enoch; and in speaking of the happy obedience of the people of Enoch, it is said, “There was no poor among them.”—Doctrine and Covenants 83:2. Quite a hint, therein, as to what would be pleasing to the Lord, and of the greatest good to his people; but no definite command.

Again in January, 1831, section 38, paragraph 5, a parable is given which indicates that the Lord has no pleasure in the inequality of his people; but still no command.

Then in February, same year, commandment is given: “remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support,” etc. (Doctrine and Covenants 42:8.) Here, that surplus giving is spoken of, but not specified or defined as to the amount required. Also the second consecration, which is to be made when a large surplus has again accumulated, is spoken of; but in this instance nothing is said of the regular annual tithe. But by the “line upon line” system of God’s work, that tithe feature is explained later. After the revelation of February, 1831, (see section 42,) follow other instructions concerning the same law, in May of same year (see section 51), again, more in December (see section 72), and so on, until finally the Saints at Far West, Missouri, with all these instructions before them, seem either to be somewhat confused over the matter, or else the requirements of this beautiful celestial law were striking such a desperate blow at the foundation of their selfishness that they were inclined to stand back and have the Lord say it over again, so as to be real sure; so they inquired: “O Lord, show unto thy servants how much thou requirest of the properties of thy people for a tithing?”

Then the Lord speaks again, to answer the “how much” question, and thus explains the matter, and leaves the people without excuse, and says: “Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus."

"And this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them for ever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord."

Why is it to be a continuous standing law? Because it is the one perfect, celestial law. Wherein does this differ from the law as stated in section 42? Only this: those former revelations mentioned the consecration or surplus, but said nothing of the annual tithe of all the balance of their interests. They also mentioned the following consecrations which are to be made after the lapse of time, during which they have "proved" the Lord by bringing "all the tithes into the storehouse," and he has poured them out such a blessing that there is not room enough to receive it (see Malachi 3:10), which results in another surplus to be consecrated.

This last mentioned revelation (section 106) speaks of the surplus, and the tithe; but does not go on into the details of the second, or further accumulating surplus. How could we, then, consistently interpret these teachings to mean two or more separate laws, intended to govern under different conditions? It is clearly one and the same, harmonizing with itself and all other parts of the gospel, and binding upon all who would have the Lord call them "my people." Shall we permit our selfish propensities to cause us to try to hide from our whole duty (severe sacrifice though it be), and crouch behind the flimsy screen of an excuse, that God does not require all our surplus as a beginning, but just simply one tenth? Shall we wrest and divide the law of the Lord into two divisions, one with a rather mild appearance, the other appearing severe to our deflective vision, because of its keen thrust at our selfishness, and its requirements that we come clear to the line? Shall we thus divide, and then allow our natural selfishness to dictate that we choose the easy end of the task, then stumble along congratulating ourselves that we are serving God and doing our part, when the fact is we are carrying a load in our stumblings which might be exchanged for greater freedom and more rapid progress? As it is so clearly shown from all the revelations touching to any length upon the financial law, that the surplus is required, if we can now decide "how much" it takes to constitute our surplus, we then have one point of duty clear.

Now there are at least two ways to interpret the meaning of that term surplus. Let us, here, line up those two till we can have a look at them. One goes direct to the line, as it was stated publicly by one of the Bishopric at the late General Conference, which is as follows: "Surplus is that which a person can spare above what he needs for his family and his creditors." The last three words could be stricken out without doing damage to the statement, for what a man owes to another is not properly his, and need not enter into this consideration. But there is another way to interpret the meaning of surplus, which, if we are not careful, we will find ourselves drifting into; for this one caters a little to the selfishness inherent in man, and upon which we must make war at every point. This interpretation, dictated by the spirit which leads us to evade being hewn to the line, is whispered to ears all too ready to hear it. This surplus means that which a man can spare above what he needs for his family, and the carrying on of his business. In other words his business needs his capital to keep up the working basis of his business, therefore (since he is a man of financiering ability) his surplus would be that which he did not need to broaden and strengthen the working basis of his business—equaling a free-will offering,—or, nothing. An offering, large or small, may soothe the conscience for a while and call down a degree of God's blessing; but it will never redeem Zion, nor bring to us the "abundance" of God's favor. When you define surplus to mean all above what a man needs for himself and family, then add, "and the carrying on of his business" then include a consideration of his financiering ability, you have given such latitude to the natural, selfish inclinations that you cripple the law, making it impotent for the very work intended, and the whole thing appears before us lame in every joint; and instead of being the means to bear us up to the plane of equality, it would prove to be a hydra-headed monster, drawing us into stronger meshes and deeper entanglements.

Well, but we sometimes think, "It will never do to cripple a man's business, nor destroy his working basis." True, but how large a business does this surplus law allow him to operate when he makes his beginning by paying all the surplus? And how much of a working basis will he be justified in retaining when he counts out that surplus? Let the Lord answer, and let us abide by that. "And again, let the bishop appoint a storehouse unto this church, and let all things, both in money and in meat, which is more than is needful for the want of this people, be kept in the hands of the bishop."—Doctrine and Covenants 51:4. Clearly then the working basis intended to be left in the hands of the individual would be that which would supply all that was needful for his family; and no more. Should a farmer own two farms, and the proceeds from one of them would supply his family for the year, the other farm is surplus, notwithstanding the thousand excuses which would creep into his mind to make him think it would be crippling his business and thwarting his ability, if he should turn the other farm over to the Bishop. If there were a little less fear of crippling the individual business, and a little stronger determination to capitalize God's "working basis," Zion might have been redeemed (and purchased) even now. If it cripples a man’s business to comply with God’s law, the sooner that business is crippled the better. The Saints are to be equal according to their families, circumstances, wants, and needs (see Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1), and not according to their ability.

Example: Two men join the church, each having a family of six. A has an income of three hundred per year; B three thousand. A calculates that by the three hundred will supply his family, having no surplus; but sacrifices some for free-will offerings, and his name appears before small sums in the Bishop’s report. B concludes (after a hard tussle), that the law really requires the surplus as a beginning, and that “surplus” means that which a man has above what is needed for his family, and his business. He also has half a notion to ignore the surplus clause, and simply pay one tenth of all because the Bible says that Abraham did pay one tenth of all. But again, seeing no way to dispose of that law which calls for the surplus in so many places, he accepts it half-heartedly, and then concludes that his family can hardly get along with less than six hundred or a thousand for the year. Then he looks at the balance of his income, two thousand dollars, and says: “If I turn that all over as surplus, I am afraid it might be needed to strengthen the working basis of my business—but then, maybe I can spare one thousand dollars.” So he pays the one thousand dollars, calls it surplus, which leaves him seven hundred dollars more for his family than the other brother to be used for luxuries which they can not afford, puts his name on the list as a heavy payer to the Lord, and leaves him one thousand dollars in pocket to be used as a leverage to pry down upon some other man’s necessities when a business opportunity presents itself to his financier mind. Puzzle: Find the equality between the two brethren.

Find the equality, or shadow of the possibility of ever coming to equality, if we interpret the law to mean: Pay one tenth of all as a beginning, and do not bother about the surplus. Let that be a mild, good-natured challenge to any who would take such a position. Find the possibility of ever coming to anything in the semblance of equality, if we will have “surplus” to mean more or less than the law specifies, viz.: all above our needs.

If the position be sound, that men under the gospel law are to be permitted to have, hold, and control property in amount, according to their ability as financiers, we have no further concern about introducing the gospel teaching upon this point, for that is what the world has right now. In the greedy grab of the world, those who have the ability get the goods. Let us run the meaning of that ability to a clear definition. Two men stand side by side in the arena of the world. One is shrewd enough and keen enough to get an insight into a business deal in which he can take advantage of the other’s necessity. He grabs his opportunity and is the winner, accumulating more goods than his fellow. The value of these goods is represented by money which he holds, and next opportunity he has for a grab he not only has his superior insight to help him get the advantage, but he has the working power of the money accumulated to use as a powerful lever in his favor. This operation is repeated as often as possible, and it is said, “the man has ability—is a successful financier.”

Does this kind of ability create or produce wealth; or is it not a fact that it simply manipulates, controls, and accumulates?

There is a manifestation of about the same kind of ability in the corral at feeding-time, when the belo­lowing stag, with his glossy sides and dignified bearing, uses those long, polished horns to throw an unfortunate calf over the fence, and gore a poor weakling into a corner, then stands triumphantly over the feed, master of the situation—“according to his ability”—the strong preying upon the weak. But the world could get along just about as well if men could be persuaded that they were created for a higher purpose than to imitate the beasts of the field; and conditions will be as good as they are, when some of this ability shall have been relegated to the rear.

The kind of ability which deserves the good of the land by right, is the ability to go into the field and produce something, into the shops and produce something, into the mills, factories, mines, or any avocation which produces something, or is necessary to add to the comfort and convenience of men. Ability to do these things is legitimate and deserving of the luxuries of life; but the ability to manipulate, control, and accumulate large interests for personal gain, is the personification of a parasite upon society and will never find any justification under the gospel law.

Because one man has had the levers of fortune placed in his hands, either by inheritance or victorious scramble and push, and thus has the ability to run a railroad, and another man, born under the crushing pressure of the capitalistic lever, has only acquired the ability to run a wheelbarrow, is no consistent reason why he should be compelled to toil ten hours in the ditch in overalls, go home to a place unworthy the name, eat, sleep, and return to repeat the operation three hundred and thirteen or fourteen times in a year, while the man of the upper crust with the ability fares sumptuously every day, and scorns the other man as being beneath him.

Of course no one who understands and believes in the gospel of Christ would uphold such things as being right; but this condition obtains in the world; and the church is not yet entirely free from these things.

Then what do we lack? The practical application of the only rule which ever has been given to men to establish equality.

This is no plea for a dead level equality insomuch that every man's coat must be cut alike, and cost the same to the penny; or every woman's apron contain the same number of green stripes or blue checks. But that ditch-work must be done; it takes a muscular man to do it. After the heat and toil of the day why should he not be entitled to lay off his work clothes in a well-equipped bath-room, and enter a comfortable home to partake of the abundance of the land? The wheelbarrow must be run to move the bricks and mortar with which those beautiful dwellings are built, and why is not the man who has the ability to run it entitled to the privilege of hearing his daughter make melody upon a costly instrument in his own home; or the privilege, time, and means to take a trip abroad, whether he has the scheming ability to master some sharp practitioner or not? Why?

It can be so among God's people, when they learn to call into action the nobler impulses of their natures, which labor for others besides self, and crucify selfishness by nailing it to the cross with the hammer of the law of the Lord. No other hammer will drive that nail—the wood of the cross is too hard; no use to peck at it with sticks, and we will drive that nail—the wood of the cross is too hard; no use to peck at it with sticks, and congratulate ourselves that we are at work, for time, to our regret, will reveal our blunder.

We have shown that there is but one method by which to bring about equality, namely, to reduce our living expenses to as near a given standard as possible, and retain a working basis adequate to produce that amount, then give all the balance to the Bishop, and tithe all other interests annually. If the uniform living expense be set first, about upon a ministerial allowance basis, it could soon be determined whether that be too much or too little, and the amount which could be spared for living expense of each family all the way around could soon be changed to suit the income, thus all have alike and receive alike.

This is a simple matter and could be made practicable if men would. But before we laugh too much at the idea, remember that the Lord has said, "It is not given that one man should possess that which is above another, wherefore the world lieth in sin." And again, "In your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld." There are some of the commandments which God has given concerning Zion and her law which are to be executed and fulfilled after her redemption. (See section 102:10.) But this requirement to keep the temporal law and come to an equality is not one of them; for this is in force now. "None are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God."—Doctrine and Covenants 70:8. (Also see section 112:6.)
ing done his duty, than he could have experienced in years of selfish gratification of his natural greed.

Also we can imagine those poor men who have been given a chance and a blessing—how zealous they are, regular missionaries, advocating their religion everywhere they go, writing letters to the folks back home and telling them that they have found a religion which is no mere pretense, but actually helps poor people out physically, spiritually, financially, and all.

Then when this manner of a union begins to be established, how the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit will once more begin to flow! Then Zion indeed will rise and shine.

Let us hesitate, then, no longer, but do with our might what our hands find to do, spreading the truth, and keeping its precepts. James Yates.

PROHIBITION NOT UNDERSTOOD.

Prohibitionists stand for principles. They stand for civic righteousness, justice, truth, fair dealing between man and man, the enforcement of law, and the supremacy of the will of the people. They stand for all their constitution guarantees, and would prohibit the spoiler who, with polluted hand, would touch the magna charta of our protection of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. They stand against any man or combine of men who proclaim themselves higher than the Government. They would prohibit the usurpation of power, either by President or Senate. They oppose all legislation which would enrich men and corporations by making the laborers and children sink deeper into serfdom. They would stand in the way of the down-treading of the brawny and the brain of our country by a bloated aristocracy who have grown fat on the blood and tears of the masses of our people. To prohibit is not to coerce, but to restrain.

When the waters enswathed all the earth, rendering it unfit for habitation, God set a limit on the sea by his perpetual decree: Thus far shalt thou come, and here shalt thy proud waves be prevented. So it is to-day. God is now looking on the face of the earth as he did then; he sees all the earth covered with slime and sin, rendering it unfit for the abode of mortal souls. The decree of the Almighty has again gone forth that the waves of drunkenness, debauchery, and oppression, with their license to deal in the souls of men and women and boys and girls, with all that degrades humanity, shall be driven back into the smoke and blackness of hell, and shall there be restrained from stalking forth in their hideousness.

You say Prohibitionists have but one plank in their platform. You are mistaken. It is true that the emphasis has been placed on the liquor traffic, but it is as broad as the eternal throne of right, and God's own right arm is underneath it. God is speaking to the men and women who advocate the prohibition of crime. He has given the right of way to the hosts of the righteous. They shall go on and prevail.

You accuse them of politics. It is not true in the sense in which you have spoken it. Our aims are for the good of the human race. There is no true Prohibitionist who would not give up the thought of political preferment for ever, if thereby the principles he holds dear might prevail. His life would not be counted dear if by laying it down the curse of the liquor traffic might be swept from the face of the earth. Show me that the giving up of my life would redeem our great state of Indiana from the demon monster of the saloon, and I am ready this moment to be offered up. Could it be so it would usher in a glad day. When the sacrifice should be made and my disenthralled spirit should take its flight from the altar and sweep upward to the glory land, I would listen earthward long enough to catch the shout of victory from bleeding-hearted mothers, wives, sisters, fathers, and brothers; and while earth's glad shout was still reverberating against the jasper walls of the city of God and should be taken up by the angels in glory, I would ask no more than to hear the plaudit from the Master: "Faithful unto death."

We are not an office-seeking people. Let any party put in true men, good men, law-enforcing men, men who stand for civic righteousness, and we will be satisfied. But I tell you now that the people are coming—the fathers and mothers of the ruined boys and girls are coming to avenge the wrecked souls of the loved ones whom the saloons have lured away from God and heaven. An aroused public are coming, and woe to any man who is found over on the side of the enemy of souls. The saloon, the gambling den, the house of debauchery, the trust octopus, the combine or company who have heaped up millions for the purpose of oppressing the laborer in his wages, with all the wages of iniquity, shall have a fearful reckoning from a long-suffering people to whom God is speaking.

We often hear Saints talk and see what they write in regard to the redemption of the land of Zion. Yes, we see that they are striving to get to the Zion land. But alas, when they get there conditions are not as expected. Why? Because they themselves are asking God to do something that they actually refuse to do. Three times our presidential chair has been cleared by drunken anarchists. Yet we as members constituting the body of Christ have not the moral courage to say with our ballot that we will show the world where we stand.

"But, Father, we are frail and weak,
And often from thee stray;
But now that we do knowledge seek,
Oh, cast us not away."

Dear Lord, give us strength to withstand all worldly vice, so that we may be fit to abide in the land of Zion on that great celestial morn, is ever my earnest prayer.

The Answer.

Restless and unsatisfied,
“Of what use is life?” I cried;
“All my wishes are denied.
“All my duties trivial seem;
I have energies, I deem;
What I could be, oft I dream.”

Then a voice was at my side, “Let my conduct be thy guide.”
’Twas his voice, the Crucified.

“Law and prophets to fulfill
Was my life devoted still,
For I came to do his will.
“What will? The Scriptures saith,
Thirty years of Nazareth,
Three years of public life,—then death.

“Thirty years, unknown, I tread
Galilee’s sequestered sod,
Yet my life was known to God.
“Daily work at Joseph’s call,
Dally life ‘mid duties small,
Yet I was the Lord of all.

“Daughter, if thy life be true,
Thou a blessed work shall do,
Though unseen to mortal view.

“I shall know it, I shall see,
When, with willing heart and free,
Thou obedient art to me.

“All thy quiet life I know,
For I planned it long ago.
Wouldst thou that it was not so?

“I have given all for thee,
Live thy quiet life for me,
So shall it transfigured be.”

Dear Sister Frances: In answer to your request in “Home Column” (July 25), “Shall the children help,” I for one will be thankful to help them, and the children are willing to earn their Christmas Offerings.

It calls to my mind two little girls (not little now) who had a few cents saved for their offering, but wanted to make it more, so asked me what they could do with their money to make a larger offering. I told them to buy material and piece a cover for a quilt. They did so, and soon their little hands had it done, and they then started out to make a sale of it, but could not.
They were highly praised for their good work done on it, and one dear sister said she had some pennies saved for little ones that wanted Christmas Offerings, so they were not entirely disappointed (may the Lord bless that sister).

Some time after that I told the girls I would pay them for their work when I could spare the money, and last year it was sent in to the Jubilee Fund. I have not regretted it, but wish I could help them more, and truly there could be no grander work for the little ones than to help roll on the Master’s cause. It is a comfort to me to watch my children save up their pennies, and see the sacrifices they make.

If these few lines will give a little cheer or encouragement I shall be well paid. With loving remembrance to the Saints in near Lamoni, and best wishes for the “Home Column,” I remain,
Your sister in the faith,

MELISSA B. WOODS.

[Indeed, Sr. Woods, your letter has brought encouragement to the editor if to no one else. It is so rare to have an answer to any of our appeals that, strange as it may seem, we are almost surprised when one does come. But what matter if the personal answer does not come. Pleasant as that is, we can forego it, if only the answers roll up to the Bishop when the right time comes. Dear mothers and teachers, do not fail us then. You never have failed us, but this year we want the children to outdo themselves in working and sacrificing for the home God has commanded his people to build for his homeless little ones.—EDITOR.]

Harp did the preaching, except one sermon. Bro. E. A. Erwin joined us on Wednesday and preached once, remaining and assisting through the meeting. It was an interesting meet­ing, and one that will be long remembered both by Saints and our friends. The house was filled with Dame and attendance. The preaching was of the highest order, and never was a man in a strange place given better attention, or treated with more kindness and respect, than was our Bro. John Harp. He has made friends, and will be long remembered, and never forgotten by the good people of this country. In the evening of the last day, he led two persons into the water, one of them being one of my brothers four years younger than myself; the other a daughter of Bro. Bayless. So the work rolls on, and one by one the honest in heart are brought into the fold.

Bro. Harp is at Manchester; will possibly preach a few times, and then on with Bro. Erwin to his appointments to labor with him for a few weeks in this part. Bro. Harp is a noble worker, and is calculated to do much good. May the Lord’s blessing be with him, and all the workers and coworkers whom God has called and sent, until the work is accomplished.

As one brother wrote, “If it took inspired men to write the Bible, it would certainly take inspired men to teach it correctly.” But I can not always discern the Christ Spirit in all the articles during the past few months. Saints, why not take reproof and correction kindly? There is little hope of forsaking a fault until we are first made aware of possessing it. Let us all use charity. Elder J. F. Mintun’s way of handling the knotty problem—or rather his advice as to the best way, found in last HERALD is fine: let us all read it again.

We who are the scattered Saints need the literature of the church; for the sermons therein are about all we hear, save for an occasional reunion we may be privileged to attend; and we like the wise counsel often found; and it makes one feel acquainted with the great body of Saints, and in a degree it helps make up the loss of their present association. Sisters, do not think you have not the time to read them together with the Bible and all other good works in or out of the church. What is our time here for?

Let me relate: Two years ago to-day, my sister passed from earth, and left McPaul, and I suppose because of the rumors that had gone out of our intention of holding tent-meetings in that place the United Brethren got busy, and thought they had better hold a protracted meeting. But instead of meeting with success, as the minister told me himself, they had failed to make a single convert. It was not for the lack of hard work on their part. They did their best, I believe. We commenced our meetings on Tuesday, notwithstanding the stormy weather, and we held over two Sundays. While there we baptized four into the kingdom. We would like to have stayed longer but because of an appointment we already had for another place we pulled down the tent, Bro. Dow kindly taking it and the preachers to Bartlett. Bro. Eli Stedman came into McPaul and preached four sermons for us. We also felt grateful to receive help in the musical part of the meetings by the assistance in that direction from Bro. and Sr. James Wight, Sr. Sigler, and Sr. Arber, who is visiting in Iowa. We reached Bartlett on Monday and commenced operations the same evening. Our crowd was simply innumerable—the mosquitoes were in the majority by the thousands. We held forth for over a week with increasing crowds each night, while the interest was good; but having to part with the tent for camp-meeting purposes, we had to leave this place before we felt justified in doing so. Three were baptized here, in the Missouri River.

In this place as in McPaul the Christians became so intimately acquainted that they thought that they must send off for a preacher and they, too, had to hold a protracted meeting. I have been a little amused at these different organizations being so stirred up when the Latter Day Saint elders come around; it is an evidence that we have a system of religion that causes them some discomfort.

With some reluctance of feeling we left Bartlett as we had left McPaul with the promise to return sometime about October. We went west to Crescent in the Pottawattamie District to attend conference there. A grand time was enjoyed, I believe, by all, as I heard some one express the opinion that it had been one of the best conferences ever held. There is a noble band of Saints in that place. Upon request of Bro. John A. Hansen, president of the Hazel Dell Branch, I went and preached for them Sunday and Monday nights. They treated me very kindly, and I would have liked to remain longer with them, but as our camp-meeting at Henderson had already started we had to hasten thither.

Bro. John A. Hansen drove us from his home to the camp-ground, which was a lovely spot, Bro. Badham having kindly loaned his grove for that purpose. While there we made many new acquaintances and renewed old ones. The weather was all that could be asked for, just ideal, with the exception of the last day—Sunday. It commenced storming about fifteen minutes of nine, when the Sunday-school was to have held their session. A number came into the large tent but not so many as otherwise would have done. They were very courageous and courl full of zeal, nothing daunting them. That is the spirit we all should have that engage in such a grand and noble cause.
When the superintendent arose and announced the opening hymn, I could not help but smile when we sang heartily, "Sunshine and rain," from Zion's Praises. The rain during the school-hour was there all right, but the sunshine was being enjoyed by some one else. To see both teachers and scholars with umbrellas up was a little unusual. However, by eleven o'clock the clouds had lifted some and we were now enjoying a few rays of the sunshine that we had been longing for hours before. All seemed to enjoy the meetings and felt like having another reunion next year. I baptized two there, both promis-ying young men. The preaching was of a high order, being by Brn. Heman C. Smith, E. L. Kelley, Henry Kemp, M. M. Tur-Much credit is due the committee, and especially Bro. A.
Badham, who did his best to make every one feel comfortable, supplying them with milk and potatoes, fuel, and other things they needed and made no charge for them. That is the kind of Christian love we are in much need of.
The missionaries were well cared for, and all we parted feeling renewed and spiritually built up. The Sunday-school and Religio were also well represented by Brn. T. A. Hougas and Joseph Roberts, Srs. Lentz, Hougas, Olive Beecroft, and Ethel
I. Skank. I came on to this place and held two meetings in their next church, which I believe is now clear of debt and is to be dedicated on Sunday, September 23. I also baptized Bro.
Charles Goode's oldest son, Fred, and Bro. H. O. Redfield's youngest boy, Clarence. I trust they will grow up to be bright and shining lights in the kingdom of God. This makes eleven I have baptized since August 1. I expect to go home for a little while to fix up for the winter.
My prayers are for the redemption of Zion and for the advancement of the cause of Christ in the world. May the blessings of God be upon his Israel everywhere.

Editors Herald: In reading of William Reed's theory of the globe from a standpoint of view, it looked very reasonable to me that the interior of the globe is hollow. His theory seems to harmonize with the scriptures. Job says, "Thou hast stretched out the north country over the empty place." What could be the empty place, but the opening to the interior of the globe? Also see Isaiah 66:6-10; 49:20, 21; Jeremiah 23:7, 8. It should not be an incredible thing, if the globe be inhabited on the interior, when there are so many evidences pointing that way. A tube is stronger than a solid rod made of the same amount of material. The bones of all animal creation are hollow. The prophet Jacob, in the Book of Mormon, speaks of the nethermost part of the vineyard, or world. What about the globe being hollow so much as I am about my head being hollow and not filled with knowledge. What little I do know only makes me hunger and thirst for more knowledge of the wonderful works of God. In charity remember me.

Editors Herald: I thought a word from Wales would not be amiss.
I attended the mission conference in August, and will say that our Saints' fellowship meeting was a good spiritual feast, and I am hopeful in anticipating that through such intercourse and commingling of Saints our spirituality shall increase. I feel more and more the deep need of our lives being conformed to that which our Lord and Savior desires.
I learned while there that the patriarchate of our isles are about to provide for shorthand writers to be present when blessings are to be conferred upon the children of God. May the All Father bless them in that work.

While in the conference, and surveying in my mind's view the past, my mind ran to the statement contained in the revelation of 1901, section 125, paragraph 13: "For prosecuting the work in two of these missions, this is offered and directed: Send the bishop to England with my servant Gomer T. Griffiths, to aid in arranging the affairs of God's servants in that land. Some of the work was done­ or at least we will say it was all done. In 1902 we had about eleven missionaries, as far as my memory serves me; in 1904 we had a falling away, and also 1905; thus it continues up to 1906.
The decking off has just got us one missionary in Wales. We had Brain Evans for some months in company with Bro. E. B.
Morgan in 1905. In England there are now two besides our missionary in charge of British Isles. There is no doubt that I shall be treated charitably in the expression of things as I see them.
The determined needs of 1901 by those two brethren sent of the Lord, brought us about eleven missionaries in 1902 from local and our American talent. The fluctuation in force of mis-ionaries since then has been twisty, besides the varied expe rience the church has had in those delegated to this land. What I mean by these comparisons, is that when the Lord directs men to determine the help necessary, the church should know how to act without the varied disappointments the British Isles has experienced on the whole with conference appointments.
I am sorry there ever has been any distinctions made of local or other missionaries in the past, because we must feel grateful all the world over in the fact that finance, and sacrificing laborers, have been found to proclaim the angel's message in all the world, so to speak, from Joseph's land.
I look on the church as God's, and its moneys, which are far too small, as the property of the whole church, whether it may be donated in England, America, or Australia; it is all used for the common salvation of such as will believe in all the world.
Wales needs help to-day. In my judgment these fits and starts are not the stuff to build up the kingdom of God. I am aware that finance, tithes and offerings, control the output of laborers. But here we are: there are signs of progress, I shall be safe in saying, practically all over Wales, and I with others would be encouraged to see some good workers devoting all their time in the vineyard to the proclamation of the gospel.
I know what it is to labor, as most of our brethren elsewhere know, and what it is to preach, yes, alone on the highway.
I would like to help the work more, but I can not. We conduct our services four miles from home every Tuesday at Abertillery, and have done so nearly two years; also every other Sunday.
This year we have five baptisms there, one at or from Blaina, and one at Lydney, my wife's sister, who was one time opposed to us. Sometimes, she had to have a whole joint taken out of her back at the infirmary at Bristol, and is now just able to go around slowly with a stick. Bro. Griffiths of Lydney and myself had the pleasure of baptizing her. It took both because of her helpless condition. But what a faith she manifested, in her condition, to obey the Lord! She has not met with the Saints since we confirmed her; but it was told her by the Spirit that the assurance God would give her of his work would be great. I received a letter the other day full of thanks for her ever having met the Saints, rejoicing in the fact that God has revealed himself to her.
I would say, too, that I learn that some have given their names for baptism at Cardiff. There are other parts that need help for a while, to educate our young men up to being equal to be ministers of the truth, to be led and guided by the Spirit of our Master. I have had dreams about the future of the work for Wales. I have labored against the stream, without much results in souls for the labor, as a young man almost alone; but God will verify his promises if we are faithful. Too much of the desire for reward in the form of converts has discouraged the work. If any of you are afflicted, let him call for the elders of the church. But the brother said that the Baptist members feel sorry for the way he spoke. They tell me that he is improving, and we hope all will do their part, and all pull together for final victory. Our district has done well for the sanitarium and children's home; not one that I asked refused, but gave or signed willingly. What will it be when the temple shall be built? Let us all help heartily then.
This is a nice country; no bluffs, as in Jackson County, Iowa; about all around here belong to some church, and can not comprehend the need of the restored gospel. I can not see an immediate good done in speaking here, only that the people immediate good done, I can not see any immediate good done in speaking here, only that the people listened attentively, and some asked questions. There is only one brother and his daughter here, about seven miles from Arbela.
May we all live pure, honest lives, so that the world will see that we are indeed the light of the world, and the salt of the earth.

Your brother,

JOHN HEIDE.

Editors Herald: Will you please allow me a little space in your columns to express a few thoughts? I have been a victim of the terrible disease called "rheumatism" for a long time; and am very well known in my own country and by some of the principal members and officers of the church at large. And by reflecting over past life by what I have seen, and what has been told me (about my affliction), it seems that the apostle James (5:13) made a mistake when he told (or exhorted) the people that if any of them were afflicted, let them pray. It seems that this is the conviction of the Saints, that he ought to have said, If any of you are afflicted, or sick, let him call for the elders, and let them anoint them with oil, etc.
Now, to be better understood: I have never in all my afflictions been exhorted to do as the apostle directs, "Is any among you afflicted? let him pray"; but I have been exhorted and impressed with the idea, and that by one of the most prominent officers, too, that I must go to a doctor and be cured. And in all my acquaintance, I have not met with that brother or sister yet that advised me to do as James says; but they very often instruct me as to verse 14: "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church. But the brother or sister says, Why do you not be administered to? Dear Saints, it appears to me that it is the lack of "faith" in the Lord, and patience in your afflictions. You want to be administered to and get well at once, or go to a doctor and get cured. The Lord tells us to be patient in all things. Do not get in a hurry for something you can not get, until the Lord sees fit to let you have it.

Once, at a reunion, the Saints held a special prayer and fast day for the writer, and others also, which was very good and edifying to those so afflicted. But it was very astonishing to

www.LatterDayTruth.org
the Saints, and even the elders, when I would not be administered to. I am sure their effort would have been more appreciated had they said, Be of good cheer, pray without ceasing, be patient, and the Lord will hear your prayers; but, without faith, they go here and there seeking relief from some source or other. In one thing I can find relief, and that is in James merry? let him sing psalms." I have never heard this preached from the stand, nor advocated by any one; but still, it does not destroy my faith, patience, nor confidence at all, in the admo-nition given for our profit and learning. I can truthfully say that James knew whereof he spoke, and that I "do" know his plan to be true. When one is "sick," he is not able to pray; but one afflicted is. So let those afflicted take courage and pray without ceasing, day after day, year in and year out. Ask others to pray for you, and when you get where you can not pray, be administered to. The Lord has given you a way here to go by; and why not follow it out? It is life everlasting to do his will. Do not put all of his commandments into one, and try to observe them all at once. I have spoken very plain, but I know whereof I speak. "If we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel," let him be accursed.

Yours as ever in the faith,

L. F. JOHNSON.

DONIPHAN, Missouri, September 21, 1906.

Dear Herald: I have until now neglected taking the church papers, when I ought not to have done so. I was attending a Methodist meeting, and I got so disgusted I thought I would send for the papers and get some truth. My wife and I are the only ones in this part of the Lord's vineyard of the Latter Day Saints. I received the literature before the meeting closed, and presented one of the leaders of the meeting with a tract on the "atonement of Christ and final destiny of man" and he returned it as soon as he looked at the heading, and said, "I don't want to read such stuff"; and I just had to say to him, "Satan has not been asleep; for he has poisoned your mind against the truth. May God bless you," I ask the prayers of the Saints in our behalf, and especially for my wife and children; for my wife is trying to live right, and I am so cold. But I ask the prayers of all.

BELVIDERE, Illinois, September 24, 1906.

Editors Herald: I feel so glad, that I wish to tell others how the cloud of darkness has been raised from my understanding by obeying the gospel; and I am so thankful to the blessed Lord for so enlightening my home, as he has the last year; for I was baptized in September, 1905, and my wife in June, 1906, and we both feel so grateful since obeying; also a neighbor was baptized a few weeks ago. We had Brn. J. Arthur Davis and Charles H. Burr, and had some real good meetings, and had the Spirit quite liberally at times, with a good attendance most of the time. We held meetings in our house part of the time, some on the street, and some in schoolhouses.

There are only five Saints in this place at present; but we are doing all we can to get more, and hope we will have the elders with us soon again that we may keep the gospel before the people. May the Lord bless every effort put forth, and may we all grow in grace, day by day, and increase in knowledge, and come up higher in understanding.

Pray for me and I will pray for you.

QUERY CONCERNING ZION AND ITS SETTLEMENT.

We are asked by a contributor to the Herald a series of questions, which he evidently thinks are pertinent and needing a categorical answer. This we do not propose to make, for the following reason: The writer asks us to state the position of the leading men of the church in regard to the topics on which the questions bear. We do not propose to state what are the opinions of the leading men of the church until such time as a consensus of the opinions of these men has been obtained and a definite understanding be had as to the men referred to under the head, "The leading men of the church."

We give the questions as they are sent to us. Whatever we may have to write in regard to them will be the expression of our own views as Editor of the Herald. It should be evident by this time to those who have been reading the Herald that there is a wide divergence of opinion, or appears to be, upon questions touching the establishment of Zion:

1. Are we to understand that the same laws and conditions must obtain in establishing Zion as will subsequently exist after Zion is redeemed?
2. Will the Lord condone or sanction the application of a principle or rule of action in establishing Zion which would be reprehensible after Zion is redeemed?
3. Is financial remuneration essential to individual growth and expression? Is the accumulation of the things called "mine" a necessary culmination of individual effort?
4. Would not honor among the brethren and the consciousness of having contributed good to others be a more effective factor in the expression of individual powers than personal advantage, privilege, or possession?
5. If we eliminate every opportunity for personal advantage, or possession, would this in any sense deter individual effort among Saints?
6. Is the golden rule applicable now? If so, how can either an individual or the church engage in any enterprise wherein they receive and do not render a complete equivalent?
7. Will money or individual holdings have any particular advantage for those so holding in the building up of Zion? Will a man's capacity to make money by speculation or in bartering in the necessities of men be of any avail in Zion?
8. What will be the necessity of perpetuating the profit system; the wage system as known among men to-day, interest, rents, etc., in the building up of Zion?
9. You affirm that we are not warranted in contending that certain moral commandments given through Moses are applicable now. If under the Mosaic rule it was displeasing to the Almighty for brethren to exact interest one of another, could he consistently allow it under the higher and better law?

10. Is it not a fact that every essential moral prerequisite in the law given to Moses finds a larger and better expression in the gospel?

11. Is it not a fact that the distinction between usury and interest is only a modern interpretation?

12. Taking the sacred books of the church, can you establish any legal rate of interest or indicate when legitimate interest ends and usury begins?

13. What did the Lord mean when he condemned "the spirit of speculation" and stated that "the exhibition of greed for gain is unseemly in the saints and the officers of the church and should be avoided"? In what sense can you harmonize this statement with your editorial wherein you say, "And further if the Lord in commending those to whom he had given the five talents which they returned, he in so many words justified the putting out of his money to the 'exchangers,' the bankers of that day, that he might receive his 'interest,' when he came back from his journey, nor is it well to forget that Jesus was teaching upon the affairs of the kingdom of heaven, and the conditions to obtain at the end of the world?"

14. Do you consider a bank operated by brethren a necessary auxiliary in the building up of Zion?

15. Are stock companies, organized for the purpose of earning dividends for stockholders, one of the means to be used in establishing Zion?

16. When Zion is established, will men buy and sell as they do to day? Will the profit system be in vogue then? If so, wherein will Zion differ from the world? If not, how can God accept our service in building up Zion, if we resort to these means, which will be in contravention of that which will eventually exist?

17. I think it is admitted that none but Saints will be in Zion. If all which men make above their legitimate "wants and needs" will be turned into the treasury of the church from time to time, wherein exists the utility or common sense to perpetuate a system demanding the constant attention of those engaged therein, and which has for its object the transferring of values from one to another in the process of trade?

Whatever may be the understanding of others, it is ours that what is understood as the latter-day work was instituted by the Almighty in this land of America under the laws and institutions known as republican laws, and that as these institutions existed under a constitution framed by wise men raised up for that very purpose, that God knew the conditions of the people, knew the laws which had been instituted and which he gave commandment concerning, that he who kept the laws of God need not break the laws of the land. Whatever the conditions by which the Saints may be surrounded and which govern all citizens alike by reason of their being citizens of the state and of the republic, will apply to the Saints as well as to others; and with this view we are of the opinion that there will be of necessity laws and conditions existing during the effort to bring forth Zion and establish her righteousness that will not continue after Zion is fully established, the land redeemed, and Christ reign as King of kings and Lord of lords.

The command to seek first to bring forth the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness is akin to every law and commandment received by the church through direct revelation, and as we have from time to time called the attention of the Saints to the fact that no specific detail of all the processes which are to be employed has been enumerated or given.

General laws and commandments have been given, and what has been called the gathering has been placed within the scope of men supposed to be wise in their administration and things are to be done in this relation according to the counsel of the elders by direct revelation. If any specific detail of all the processes had been given and was accessible on the part of the people, there could not be all this divergence of opinion nor this controversy which has been going on. We do not care to perpetuate a wordy discussion, nor to engage in a lengthy controversy between the Editor and those who may differ from him in regard to Zion and the processes of its being built up or established.

As to what the Lord may do in regard to the application of the principle or rule of action in establishing Zion, we do not care to say, as we are not sufficiently within his counsel to answer. It appears that in the times of the ignorance of the Jews anciently God winked at certain transactions or failure to comprehend and live according to his will, and it was not until Christ came that they had no cloak for their sins. That he will bear with modern Israel in their efforts to accomplish what has been set for them, we have reason to believe. There certainly was a difference between Israel as a nomadic nation and Israel gathered within the shadow of the temple. The rules of conduct applicable in the desert and in the prosecution of the avocation of shepherds could not obtain in the city under municipal rule.

We do not know that God has given any command or rule of action in the establishing of Zion which is open for us as a people that would be reprehensible even in our scattered condition. We believe that remuneration for services rendered others, society, or the church by individual effort equal to the support and sustenance of the individual who serves is essential; and while saying this we do not mean to be understood that the law of God contemplates an unnecessary individual accumulation of wealth. As we conceive that this question is intended as a strike at what is called the competitive system existing in the world, we state that we believe that this system will largely continue until the coming of Christ, as it is a part of the institutions existent at the time of the institution of the church in 1830, and has continued up to the present. We do not indorse the abuses of the system, nor claim that it is perfect, but that it is necessary for the conservation of individual effort. Take the principle of emulation, self-improvement, and the love for an equality among men out of the consideration of man's effort, and the incentive to labor is lost. This conclusion we have reached through years of observation, and we do not expect any specific and radical change until there has been sufficient advancement in spirituality to eliminate the element of selfishness from the human heart. When that is done and every man seeks another's good as well as his own as stated under the teaching of the apostle Paul, there must be continued an incentive to effort.

Were the whole church a pastoral people only, or were the church isolated from all contact with all others in the world, what might be termed an ideal condition of the people might be created. The efforts to accomplish this ideality in the past have signally failed, and every one of them has failed so far as our knowledge of history goes, because of the cropping out of the innate selfishness within man unrestrained by his religious convictions.

The consciousness of having done good to others brings with it certain satisfaction, but while only the few labor for the emancipation of the whole and these few are met with continued lack of appreciation and confidence, it would appear that to lean upon the existence of honor among even brethren puts a man in the position of leaning upon a broken reed.

We believe that were there no opportunity for personal advantage or possession the incentive to individual effort among men, including Saints, would be removed, and idleness would be at a premium; and as every law and command of God and Christ that we have access to strongly commands and enjoins industry, frugality, and prudence in the handling of the things of this world, we see no reason why the opportunity for advancement, even in temporal things, should be eliminated.

The golden rule is applicable, has ever been applicable, more especially since the abrogation of the Mosaic code, the long roll of enactments which was nailed to the cross. "Do unto others as ye would that men should do unto you," is the rule now, and evidently ever will be, and there is nothing in the present existing conditions of things that prevents the application of this rule to the life of every man who chooses to adopt it. This application is based primarily upon the foundation principle of having a right understanding of what "ye would that others should do unto you," and a willingness to follow the other half of it, "do ye also unto them."

A right understanding of this rule does not remove from it all selfishness, nor create a condition of things which will obviate the necessity of caring for the things of this world within a prescribed limit. Under the influence of the golden rule men may engage in enterprises which involve an outlay of labor or means in order that a partial or complete equivalent may be received in either labor or a commensurate amount of a medium of exchange. It is supposed that about one enterprise in every four succeeds. The three fail for the want of adequate remuneration for the effort put forth in the enterprise conceived and entered into.

It is clear from the parable of the talents, Matthew, chapter 25, that Jesus intended to convey to those who heard him a right understanding of the responsibility which men were under when valuable things were intrusted to their care; and it is immaterial to the understanding of the statement and the argument derived therefrom whether it was money, goods, or talent, using the word talent to mean ability. There was a difference in ability in the lord's servants and the lord took this into consideration. The ability of one man he accounted as worthy the charge of five talents, of another to be worthy of two, and another to be equivalent to take care of one. Two of the three made use of that which had been intrusted to them and gained other talents, two of them to the amount of one hundred per cent; but the third made no effort. His talent brought no return either to himself or to the one who had intrusted him with the talent. He buried it.

We believe that this lesson should have a full meaning with us. The statement made in the Inspired Translation of this transaction gives no sort of coloring to an evasion of the force of the lesson upon the hypothesis that it was the master of the servants and that Jesus had nothing whatever to do with the lesson. The Savior after reciting the story of the foolish and the wise virgins, which carries the same lesson as the other parable, changes his relation and says: "I will liken these things unto aparable;" then follows the statement regarding the man who called his servants and distributed his goods. Two received commendation, one did not. Immediately following upon this parable the Lord proceeds to state what shall take place when all nations are gathered before the Judge and the rewards spoken of are given. The main point in this recital is the fact that the men to whom the goods were intrusted differed in capabilities, the capabilities were recognized, and if we are to take the lesson to heart, the principle still continues.

We can then readily concede that money or holdings in the hands of men qualified therefor will give those men an advantage for usefulness in the building up of Zion. It must be clear too that a man's capacity for accumulation will have more or less to do with the necessities of his fellow men, for these are chiefly the things which men barter, buy, and sell. As a matter of course things outside of necessaries are bought only as luxuries, and the Saints are usually not in condition to deal very largely with them.

We believe that the present system, which some style the profit system, or the "wage system," "interest," "rents," etc., will continue till the building up of Zion, whether it will be after the coming of the Savior or not. Men can not hold anything at present except under the sanction of law, which governs citizenship; and every man who has a desire to advance the interest of his fellows must make use of lawful means by which he may put himself in condition to accomplish the good he desires. If he disregards the rule prevalent in society he misuses his talent and he accomplishes nothing, has no where­withal to benefit his fellow men, nor yet to keep himself beyond the necessity of help from his fellows.

We do not believe that improper speculation or the barter and sale of fictitious values or the things which men have not to deliver is proper now under the golden rule; nor do we believe that this should withal to benefit his own. With the golden rule; nor do we believe that this should continue in Zion. If appeal is made to what existed under the Mosaic law, we find the whole category existing there and laws made imposing the severest penalties for the disregard of the rule governing what is mine and what is thine. Even the landmarks dividing the holdings of the Israelites were to be respected; no one was allowed to disturb these. No man was to take his brother's garment as security. If he did he must return it before the sun went down; for how could a poor fellow robbed of his garment sleep without the cover which his garment afforded him? Judah pledged his staff and ring for a commodity which he found on sale. It was a righteous retribution which was visited upon him. When the ring and the staff were reproduced that caused him to do justice where he had neglected. The money changers in the outer corner of the temple were to a greater of lesser degree necessary to the worship which went on within the temple. Jesus did not find fault with the offering of a dove or a lamb, but it was the abuse of the privilege which these money changers had which caused him to say they had made his Father's house a den of thieves. The foolish virgins were commanded to purchase oil from those who had to sell. They had a necessity for it, and they were censured because they had been careless in not keeping their vessels full of oil and their lamps trimmed. The same thing holds good now.

JOSEPH F. SMITH BEFORE THE COURTS.

The following dispatch was published in the Journal of Kansas City, for October 2, and we presume in others of the public press over all the country:

SALT LAKE CITY, October 1.—The president of the Mormon church, Joseph F. Smith, was arrested and bound over to the district court to-day on the charge of living unlawfully with five wives. The complaint was sworn to by a Mormon deputy sheriff, the warrant was served by order of a Mormon sheriff, and the committing magistrate is also a Mormon.

President Smith reached here two days ago from Europe, and learned that an attempt had been made to secure his arrest for a statutory offense in connection with the birth of his forty­third child.

The county attorney refused to approve a prosecution and was cited to appear in court to show cause why he should not be compelled to act. The court held that the attorney was justified in refusing to prosecute, because the complainant offered no evidence that the mother of the child was not the wife of President Smith.

Joseph Smith, the first president of the Church of Jesus Christ, was arraigned before the courts of the land a number of times on various charges, and as often as arraigned was acquitted, not being guilty, with one exception, so far as we remember the history; this was in an Ohio court on a charge of assault for which a fine was imposed, and on which fine judgment was revived, the temple at Kirtland levied on and sold as belonging to the Seer, and was bought in by Russell Huntley, finally falling into the hands of the Reorganized Church through an appeal to the courts to quiet the title.

This long array of suits at law against the Seer upon the trial of which he was found to be innocent is a record testifying in no uncertain terms to the character of the man who stood in the lead of those called to be banner-bearers of the restored gospel in these last days.

We regret the fact that by this arrest a partial namesake and nephew of the Seer should be prosecuted for an offense against the laws of morality as understood in the household circles of the Republic; an offense which, if he is guilty of it, is a crime against the United States and of the state of Utah, which State he is a citizen of—a crime made more flagrant by a statement made before the Senate Committees on privileges and elections by the man himself that he was at the time living in violation of the law, and intended to continue to do so.

If President Joseph F. Smith is guilty he should suffer the penalty; if innocent it should be made to appear in the court. His standing should not shield him from prosecution.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Which is preferable as an instrument to be used in our churches as an aid in the song-service, the piano, or organ?

The organ is better fitted and more suitable for use in song-service than the piano; some may and do prefer the piano, for use in solo singing, but for all and general purposes the organ is the better instrument. The piano is a costly instrument if an average good one is secured, and needs more care than an organ, and is not so well adapted to chorus work as the organ is.

The great souls are always positive and creative. They probably know a thousand times more of the depths of gloom that underlie life than the professional pessimist; but they also have faith in the light which scatters the darkness, and in the achievement which makes life a reality instead of a lie.—Business Philosopher.
PERSONALITIES.

We call attention to the fact that in the past, occasionally, writers, in presenting their views for publication, have been advised by the Editor to refrain from personalities in controverting views that may have been expressed by some former writer. The advice has, to quite an extent, been unheeded; and we must confess that the editorial columns may not have been so free from offense as they should have been. But it is not too late to mend.

If we will stop to think a minute, we will be willing to concede that it is just as easy to present our views in an affirmative manner, avoiding personality, and frequently without even an indirect reference to what may have been expressed before. Sometimes, no doubt, it is necessary to present the opposite view, before making an affirmation. But to do this it is not at all necessary to say, "In an article written by Bro. So and So, found on such and such a page of the HERALD for such a date will be found the following language," etc.; but it can be done just as forcefully by simply saying, "Some hold that such and such a thing is true," or "We are not ready to accept such and such a thing as true, for the following reasons," etc., or "It is believed by some," etc., or in some such way as that. Very rarely, we believe, will it be necessary to make a quotation, giving credit; and when it is, why would it not be just as well to give "SAINTS' HERALD, page ---," etc., without bringing in the name of the author and belittling him? In this way our views could be presented with equal force and effectiveness, as in the other way.

With equal effectiveness? Yes, and more, for several reasons. One is that where personality is used, all readers who are for any reason prejudiced in favor of the one attacked, no matter how much truth may be presented by the objector, or how strong his position, will resent the attack, and fail to grasp the truth. If the objector's position be wrong, of course he is placed in a still more disadvantageous position. There is another reason, also; that is that a very large percentage of the people will sympathize with the man that is "down" even if they do not indorse his position. The advice to refrain from personal attack is not reiterated here for the reason that it is harmful to the one attacked, so much as that it is harmful to the one who makes the attack. If the one attacked is in the wrong, many times he will have the prejudices of the people in his favor; and if he is right, he will not worry about the attack. But it hurts the one who makes it in either case.

We do not write this with a view to bar any one from the expression of his views on any matter, but rather that a study of this matter in this light shall enable us to present our views in such a way that they can be heard without creating bitterness in the mind of the reader, or arousing to anger. This will extend rather than limit the opportunity to present our opinions and beliefs.

We are not in favor of denying any one the privilege of expressing his thoughts, in a proper manner, with personality left out, simply because some one has previously put himself on record in an opposite attitude. Did we hold a view of that kind, to be consistent we should not send it for publication, because of the fact that some one else had already expressed the opinion that the columns of the official organ should be open to discussion. You see where that would place us. We would be bound not to say a word, no matter how extreme the other's position had been. To take a position of that kind would mean that the Editor must be intimately acquainted with every position taken from the time the HERALD started, and print nothing that conflicted with any of them, and in a very short time the publishing house would have to shut up shop and go out of business, or simply make the official organ a little historical record, giving the few historical news items, and publishing conference minutes, and notices, etc. As far as being a means of education and development of thought is concerned, its days would be numbered.

Human weakness may be so great that we allow ourselves sometimes to take too much pleasure in seeing those who have used personality instead of an affirmation of the truth as they see it to disparage and belittle our views,—in seeing them flyed by some one else with their own weapons. But is that cultivating the brotherly love that should characterize saints?

Would it be unfair or impartial to inaugurate a rule requiring all contributors to refrain from personalities, or their manuscripts would be declined until they were made to conform to the rule? If there are objections to such a rule, we should like to learn what they are.

ENTERPRISES AT INDEPENDENCE.

Since we have been at Independence we have had an opportunity to learn something in reference to two or three of the enterprises in which the Saints are engaged, and are quite favorably impressed with them.

We learn in reference to the Independence Coal and Mining Company that they have secured by lease and purchase something over five hundred acres of land beneath which is lying a considerable body of coal waiting to be mined. The company has not a sufficient amount of money at its disposal to sink the shafts and make necessary preparation for entering upon the getting out of coal. The company through Bro. Roderick May is asking for brethren to take stock, and we understand that the object is to secure enough capital to keep possession of the property and work it with a view to helping those miners who may choose to make the venture.
What we have heard about miners having to pay this coal company one hundred dollars for the privilege of getting work in the mine is not correct. The proposition is that the miner who may choose may subscribe for stock, one hundred dollars to the share, and either pay the amount at the time of the subscription, or subsequently pay it out of the wages which he may earn in the mine, and as he can pay for it. We have not discovered any disposition to take an undue advantage of any one. We do not see why it may not be made a successful cooperative institution in this wise. If those now engaged in the enterprise had sufficient means to sink the necessary shafts and then open the mines for work, no doubt they could get quite a large number of workers; but they have an object in view which we think rises higher than simply a desire to make money, and that is to afford so many of the brethren compensating labor and at the same time to give them a correlative interest in whatever profits may arise from the enterprise; and when it is known that this is the object of the brethren, we fail to see the justice of branding them as being possessed of the spirit of speculation or being overanxious for greed.

It must be clear to everybody who will take pains to investigate the matter, that neither a coal-mine nor a wood-working plant like that of the Mercantile and Manufacturing Company at Independence or anywhere else can furnish work for an indefinite number of people. Each of these enterprises has its counterpart almost everywhere in the world and can not employ an indefinite number of men. And when it is known that but a limited number of men can be employed it seems that suspicion is aroused as to the administration of the affairs of such enterprises. From what we gather of them, these enterprises are so far managed well, and though crippled for the want of sufficient means to open the mine at once, the hope is cherished that it will not be a very great while till the coal company too can be adding its quota of employment to those who care to enter in and occupy.

It seems to us that there is a wide opportunity for men to engage in bringing to pass much righteousness, for the power is in them as it has been stated by the Lord, and people content themselves with small enterprises which can afford labor to but few. Other enterprises might be started in a similar way and carried to successful completion, if men were as really desirous of entering into such affairs as they seem to be when writing or speaking about them.

It is not to die, or even to die of hunger, that makes a man wretched; many men have died; all men must die. But it is to live miserable, we know not why; to work sore and gain nothing; to be heart-worn, weary, yet isolated, unrelated, girl in with a cold universal laissez faire.—Carlyle.
the kingdom of God or the powers of darkness. The question ever remains personal, "Am I pleasing God or Mammon?" "Am I a scandalmonger or a listener?" Remember ever, dear reader, that they are inseparable, for without the listener the speaker would never exist. Let us remember that until we are sure there is no beam in our own eye, we have no right to endeavor to pick the mote out of our brother's. May God bless each and every one of us.

CRITICISM; LEGITIMATE AND OTHERWISE.

Criticism, per se, and of itself, is perhaps one of the noblest, highest, and sincerest forms of protection, the ægis of which can be thrown (like a protecting-mantle) around either the individual or the collective body, to guard and protect the one or the other from either the rejection of a truth or the reception of an error. But it must be clearly and unequivocally understood that, by all the laws of logic, and by all the rules of Christianized and civilized society, criticism (i.e., legitimate criticism) simply concerns itself with the rigid and righteous examination of abstract laws and abstract principles. That species of so-called criticism which—whether in public or in private controversy—deviates from this high and holy and exalted situation in order to fling "flouts and sneers and gibes" at a polemical or political opponent is wholly outside the domain of legitimate criticism, and is, in fact, nothing more nor less than accusation; may, it may even descend to the altogether contemptible and unworthy level of downright slander, and insult, and vituperation; and is, moreover, a direct, deliberate, and decisive infringement upon the legal domain of those officers appointed by the laws of the Lord to investigate and inquire into all cases of evil; or in other language, all cases of unchristian conduct and demeanor.

To demonstrate the true functions of criticism, allow me to instance a case in point. It has recently been asseverated in a certain communication adverted to in the HERALD columns, that our earth, instead of a solid body, as affirmed these many years by the deductions and doctrines of astronomy, is in fact a hollow sphere! Now, it is fairly and legitimately within my sphere of investigation to point out that were this the case actually, the earth could not by any remote possibility revolve at the truly vast distance from the sun that she really revolves, owing to her great weight (or specific density); but would have inevitably in the long, long ages of the remote past, been drawn into and absorbed by the sun; owing to the fact that her centrifugal force would be infinitely less than the sun's power of attraction (or gravitation) over her! It might here be explained (for the benefit of nonscientific readers) that the centrifugal force of the earth (or of any other body) is that power which carries it out and away from the sun into unknown space; and this centrifugal power depends immediately and directly upon the specific gravity, or the weight of the earth or other planet; and it is this centrifugal force—and that alone—which prevents its being drawn into the sun's atmosphere by the sun's enormous power of gravitation.

I might also add that the sun's distance from the earth, and the earth's distance from the sun, is found to be by the laws of mathematics, exactly what it would be if the earth were a solid and not a hollow structure. This is why science in general—or rather one reason why science in general—maintains and affirms—as it has ever maintained and affirmed—that the earth is, in point of fact, a solid body. Furthermore, the writer of the treatise or book in question, in support of the hollow earth theory, asserts that the aurora borealis is caused by the "sun shining through the central aperture of the earth at one end and reflecting his rays out at the further end of it!" But if this be the case, why is not the occurrence of the aurora borealis a nightly phenomenon, instead of, as it really is, a comparatively rare episode in our earth's history? For, obviously, if the earth be really hollow, the sun would shine through the aperture precisely every twenty-four hours, namely at midnight in the longitude of any given place or city; and it follows that precisely at the meridian (the nocturnal meridian, I mean) the aurora would be visible every night, if, as the writer implies, the aurora borealis is the effect of the sun's rays shining through the earth; and not, as science teaches, the effect of rare and mysterious ebullitions of solar electricity and electrical rays—or radiation.

The moon, too, upon this hypothesis, should be hollow also; or her great weight would draw our earth farther and farther from its present orbit around the sun; while the aurora borealis would be a nightly phenomenon upon the moon also,—and distinctly visible to our earth, which is not the case.

All this and much more could be advanced against this particular theory or hypothesis, and I would still remain within the pure bounds and domains of legitimate criticism in making these and similar observations. But the very moment that I step outside of these environments, and hint or insinuate, for instance, that the advocate or advocates of this theory are actuated by either base or sordid or unworthy motives in making their assertions, or that they are deficient in judgment or in intellectual capacity because they do not happen to agree with me, then I am no longer a fair-minded impartial critic; I have degenerated into an "accuser of the brethren," (premising, of course, that I am alluding to the HERALD's columns, and that those in opposition to my theory are in fact my brethren in the common faith).

May I here venture an earnest but courteous and respectful appeal to certain of the brethren who have apparently forgotten or overlooked the tangible fact of the now greatly increased circulation of the Herald, and that consequently observations which would have done little or no harm thirty or forty years ago, when the Herald's readers simply numbered their hundreds, while now thousands peruse its pages, and its beloved and ever-welcome columns now penetrate and permeate cities and nations and climes and countries perhaps wholly unsuspected or undreamed of by many readers, it becomes a matter of very real and vital importance where he may throw it! Another wise couplet says:

"Full many a shaft at random sent Hits straight the mark the archer never meant!"

I earnestly trust, dear readers, that at the last day the necessary regrets we shall all feel at labors undone, time misspent, and opportunities disregarded, will not be further augmented and intensified by the thought that in the columns of our mutually beloved and mutually respected periodical we cast out

"Stings and slings, And arrows barbed,"

at those who in our inmost hearts we love and esteem beyond the meed of any earthly brother in the flesh.

I can not help saying, as I truly feel, that a very great—not to say grievous—responsibility rests upon the shoulders of all who pen articles or letters or items for the Herald's columns,—seeing that thousands read those lines.

I can not but feel in conclusion, that if we as a body in conference assembled, and after solemn supplication for divine assistance, select certain qualified and esteemed men to fulfill a high and holy vocation, whether it be to build a sanitarium and children's home, or to govern the greatly increasing financial affairs of the church, or to edit the well-known and world-wide columns of our own Herald, the very least we can do is to extend to them our utmost confidence and trustfulness and love.

BRIGHTMITEs IN ENGLAND.

In the Latter Day Saints' Millenial Star, August 16, 1906, [published in England,] is found an attack in the editorial columns upon the representatives of the Reorganization, as follows:

ACCUSSERS OF THE BRETHREN.

It is a principle of our religion to allow all men the right to believe what they please, and to worship unmolested "how, where, or what they may." If one man's religion does not infringe on the rights of another, he should have an absolute right to that religion, and no man should by other than kind and loving means try to persuade him from it.

We believe that by preaching the truth men will be made self-convincied of error. Sometimes it may be advisable to speak of false doctrine in order to make more forcible the comparisons with truth; but this should be entirely free from any personal allusions or applications. We do not believe in holding up to view the faults, or supposed faults, of men. A man's doctrine may be attacked, but it is not the business of ministers of the gospel to assault the personal character of any man. Many opposers of the gospel of Jesus Christ do not agree with us on this proposition, and so we have everywhere men who never lose an opportunity, not only to speak evil of the doctrines which the Latter Day Saints teach, but also to try to hold up ridicule and contempt the personal members of the church. As a rule, we patiently bear all these slanderous attacks, knowing that in the end the Lord will mete out to all a just judgment; but when a wolf masquerades in sheep's clothing, and goes as such among the flock, quiet, unspoken patience ceases to be a virtue. The sheep's skin should at least be removed, if it can be done, that the sheep may know the true nature of the beast that bears the assumed covering.

This thought came to us when we read in the Daily Dispatch of August 9, 1906, among a number of articles about the "Mormons," also the following:

"It is time the press in Great Britain became fully conscious of the great danger the public are in owing to the increase of missionaries from Utah, who are insidiously, and in many cases, surreptitiously, going from house to house spreading their dogmas among the unthinking and too credulous public."

There is more of the same kind in this article, but the one paragraph is enough for our purpose. The letter is signed "John W. Rushton, Leeds, August 8, 1906."

Who is this John W. Rushton who thus falsely accuses the Latter-day Saint elders to the thousands of Dispatch readers? He is one of the "Apostles" of the Reorganized Church, commonly known as "Josephites," but who call themselves Latter Day Saints. He has, we presume, charge of the mission work for his church here in Great Britain. He claims to believe in Joseph Smith, the Prophet, and in the Book of Mormon. We understand that he is, to all appearances, a cultured, refined gentleman, well vered, and fluent of speech. To the elders and the Saints he presents an aspect of fairness and liberality, and yet he sends to the British public over his signature that which is not true—shall we say that which he knows is not true? This accuser says that the "Mormon" missionaries are "insidiously" and "surreptitiously" spreading their dogma.

"Insidiously" means, according to the dictionary, a "lying in wait; watching an opportunity to ensnare or entrap; deceitful; sly; treacherous." "Surreptitiously" is "done or made by stealth, or without proper authority; made or introduced fraudulently."

Now, we ask the Saints in Great Britain and all our friends who have become acquainted with the "Mormon" elders, whether they answer to the description here given of them? Are they "sly, deceitful, or treacherous?" Do they lie in wait, "watching an opportunity to ensnare or entrap?" Are they not, on the contrary, the freest, most open-hearted men you have ever met? Do they not court the utmost publicity regarding what they teach and practice? Are they not always eager to say anything about these elders? All we ask regarding these questions is a fair, honest reply from those who know. What think you, then, of men—for there are a few others in the land of Mr. Rushton's faith and demeanor—who would, if they could, bring down on these elders the contumely of their fellow men by such vile means?

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Sometimes these Reorganized missionaries send reports of the work they are doing to their official organ, the SAIN'TS' HERALD, published in America. Do they in these reports tell of how many gospel tracts they have distributed, how many souls they have won by the power of love through the gospel of Jesus Christ? Not usually. Often the burden of these reports is what they have done to discomfit the “Mormon” elders, whom, it seems, it is their special duty to follow up and annoy. Their own acknowledgments on this point are stronger proofs than any arraignment we could make. Here is a sample. We quote from the SAIN'TS' HERALD, of February 28, 1906, from a letter written by one James Evans from Wales. He says:

“I learned that the Utah elders were holding forth in the town. I got the address where they lodged, also inquired from the people where they had been proselytizing, and I began following their course. They had succeeded in getting some interested in the principles of the gospel; but they assured the people that they did not practice polygamy now. The people told me they were nice fellows, so courteous and amiable, they could not withstand them; but I soon let the cat out of the bag. And what an alteration! . . . After this, many began to hoot them on the streets, also blaming their hostess for keeping such men in her house.”

Reorganized missionary Evans must have been proud of such a record. It was a Christ-like thing, wasn’t it, to bring a hooting mob onto the humble elders who were doing their simple duty of preaching faith and repentance? He followed the elders’ course, and tried to tear down what they had erected, although he acknowledges that the elders “had succeeded in getting some interested in the gospel.” Shame, shame, on such actions.

We have devoted this much space to these Reorganizers simply to show them in their true colors, that Saints and friends may not be deceived by them.

The work of the Lord in Great Britain is prospering, and, if we mistake not, we are on the approach to a harvest of many souls. Because of this, the Devil is angry, and he is trying to stir up the powers of earth and hell against the truth. We can but pity those who will let themselves be used for this purpose.

The revelation of the Lord to John told him of one who was called “the accuser of our brethren.” He was cast out of heaven, and his angels with him. Let every man beware how he accuses falsely his brother, lest he too, partaking of the spirit of the first accuser, also partakes of his doom.

The following letters to the editor of the Millenial Star, and the reply, speak for themselves:

SUTTON-IN-Ashfield, Notts, August 28, 1906.

To the Editor Millenial Star:

Sir: I herewith inclose a letter for publication in your paper, also three penny stamps, with the request that you will kindly forward me a copy of the issue with the letter in. I am bold to believe you will not dare to deny me the right of a reply through your paper, when you have attacked me. With very kind regards, I remain,

Yours respectfully,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

To the Editor Millenial Star:

Sir: I have just received a copy of your issue of August 16, in which I notice your editorial criticizing a letter of mine which appeared in the Daily Dispatch for August 9. Will you please allow me the privilege of replying? I respectfully submit in the first place, it would only be an act of justice to me if you would kindly publish the whole of my letter which appeared in the Dispatch. Had you done so, I could well afford to let the matter remain as it is without troubling to reply to your editorial. It is manifestly unfair to extract a single paragraph from its setting, and abuse the author for the use of two words which you complain of, and withhold the body of the letter in which the reasons are very concisely stated for the use of the words for which I am so unjustly attacked.

Might I also be allowed to suggest to you, that it is singularly out of place for you to administer so severe a reprimand to an individual for being guilty of “accusing the brethren,” and straightway proceed to charge the culprit (?) with “lying” and that willfully, “slander,” “hypocrisy,” and with being “possessed of the Devil.” Surely sir, you must have lost all regard for consistence. Then, once again permit me to remind your readers, you have purposely withheld the reasons why I did on August 9, and do now once again, use the words, “The missionaries from Utah are insidiously, and in some cases surreptitiously, going from house to house spreading their dogmas among the unthinking and too credulous public.”

Your definitions of the words insidious and surreptitious are correct. They were especially selected by me as being descriptive of the methods commonly adopted by your ministry; and in a few brief sentences I will relate my reasons and evidence, then I am willing that your readers shall decide whether they were just or unjust.

1. I allege that the elders of your church do willfully in their public services upon the streets in various parts of this country, and also through the press, whenever the opportunity occurs, strive to deceive the people in reference to the question of polygamy. They deny that this “gross crime” is either taught or practiced anywhere, or that it has been since the issuing of President Woodruff’s manifesto in 1890, when they know that the pernicous doctrine is both taught and practiced in the church.

When we are brought into contact with men who in public say one thing and in private say another, choosing words with the intent to deceive, what other description can you give such conduct than “insidious” and “surreptitious”?

I appeal to converts in this country, if they have not been taught “stealthily” and “treacherously,” that while the nations were not in favor of the practice of polygamy it nevertheless was a divine command and ought to be adopted? I ask, Is it not true that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants is presented to the membership of the Mormon church with the express teaching that in this specific book the commands of God are contained? and is it not also true that in this very book, in section 132, there occurs the pseudo-revelation enforcing polygamy and teaching that all who will enter into this criminal relationship will be saved, and all who reject it will be damned?

Now if your church has discarded polygamy, how is it that still your elders are supplied with a small compendium in which there is contained a number of references which are quoted to prove that polygamy was the “Patriarchal Order of Marriage”? How is it that you are still issuing a book purporting to contain the commandments of God, which you teach all your members they must comply with to secure “cestial salvation,” and this very book saves the polygamist, the recognized criminal; and “damn’s” the monogamist?

I submit, furthermore, that the letter of Elder Birchall of Rochdale which appeared in the Dispatch the week after the letter over my signature was written with the intent to deceive the public. It sought to make the public believe that polygamy was no longer in evidence in Utah; and he sought to cover up his identity by “masquerading” in his cast-off Methodist clericalism.

I also submit that your very article, the editorial under criticism at the present, is a “surreptitious” and “insidious” attempt to blind the readers of your periodical as to the real issues at stake.

I respectfully ask, What words shall we use to describe the church which to the public gaze is denying that polygamy is practiced in Utah, and yet in your conferences you are upholding as a prophet of God a man who is living in criminal relationship with five women as "wives" contrary to the laws of the country; which your church swore to sustain when they were granted the right of statehood? In the late investigation at Washington re the election of Reed Smoot to the Senate, Joseph Fielding Smith, the so called "prophet," was charged with perjury because of this very fact. How is it that you vote to sustain as the servants of God eight of your "apostles" who are living in this condition of illicit connubiality? I put it to you, if you do not believe any more in polygamy, how is it you uphold these men in doing the very thing you try to make the public believe you have forsaken? If you do believe it is right for men to live in this state of "criminality" (see Book of Mormon, book of Jacob, chapter 2), why not tell the public so, if you do not believe any more in polygamy, how is it you sustain as the servants of God eight of your own words and here, as we have in public. I need only quote from the Millennial Star itself, and you can select which horn of the dilemma will be most comfortable for you now.

"In an article entitled, "Who is the liar?" Millennial Star, volume 12, page 29:

"12th Lie. Joseph Smith taught a system of polygamy.

"12th Refutation. The revelations given through Joseph Smith, state the following: 'If any commit adultery, they shall be dealt with according to the law of God.'—Page 127. 'He that looketh upon a woman to lust after her; or, if any commit adultery in their hearts, they shall not have the spirit.'—Page 50. 'Thou shalt love thy wife, and cleave unto her, and none else.'—Page 124. 'We believe that one man should have one wife.'—Doctrine and Covenants, p. 331."

At one time, sir, you were as emphatic in denouncing as a "liar" the man that dared to charge the martyred prophet with teaching polygamy, as you now are guilty of upholding those who are perpetrating this foul slander upon a man who is dead and can not defend himself. I submit this incident as further proof that my words insidious and surreptitious were very mild and courteous when contrasted with the nefarious conduct herein described.

"I should like to ask, What can intelligent readers of your pages think of your fulsome and extravagant rodomontade of your ministry? I suggest that if your elders were not deceiving the public, I have sufficient confidence in the native intelligence of my countrymen, as to state that they would not be won over to a system which is so untrue to itself. Your simile, by which you undertake to identify me, is a little unfortunate. It does not "fit." I am not at all ambitious to be mistaken for an elder in your church. In fact it would be the disappointment of my life were I to think that I did not have sufficient force of character to prove that I was not one of the "sheep" of the Mormon church. While I very much regret that this disagreeable work of identification has to be done, yet we intend to be faithful and do our best to enlighten the public as to the truth. In all kindness let me respectfully suggest to you that no man can be an enemy who tells the truth. Thanking you in anticipation, I remain,

Yours for the truth,

John W. Rushton.

Liverpool, August 28, 1906.

Mr. John W. Rushton, Leeds.

Dear Sir: You are again mistaken when you say that you think we "will not dare to deny" you "the right to have your letter printed in the Star. Do you think we would send out to our readers two pages of such slander as you sent to the Dispatch? You complain of being "unjustly attacked." We have not attacked you at all. You have been the attacking party, and we have only defended ourselves by showing you up in your true colors. This we have done by simply quoting from your own words and then asking the Latter-day Saints in this country to judge between what you say of us and what they know of us. We are not around attacking anybody because of their belief. We leave that to those who are in the bearing-down business. The question of polygamy is a threadbare subject, and we do not desire to enter into a controversy on it through the pages of the Star, which the printing of your letter would precipitate. The question has been thrashed out between the Latter-day Saints and Reorganizers. The Saints are satisfied with the result, though it seems you are not.

We have no desire to enter into a detailed reply to your letter. If we did we might call your attention to the fact that the words by which you describe the Latter-day Saints apply nicely to you in your endeavors to prejudice the public against us. You cover up the true situation when you fail to explain the present attitude of the church regarding the teaching and practice of polygamy. You would have people believe that the Latter-day Saints are now contracting unlawful marriages. If you do not know this is untrue, then I must say that you are among those who have eyes but will not see; or is it really ignorance? When you repeat in your letter the falsehood you sent to the Dispatch that eight of the apostles are living in polygamy, what are we to conclude? It must be either willful misrepresentation or dense ignorance. You, as a leading Reorganizer, whose chief duty seems to be to camp on the trail of the "Mormons," ought to be better informed.

I have not seen a copy of the Dispatch containing Elder Birchall's letter. Inclosed find your letter.

Yours very truly,

Nephi Anderson, Associate Editor.

I forward the above for publication. It may be interesting to your readers to know something of the tactics employed by the Mormon church in this country in meeting criticisms.

Bro. W. H. Greenwood and myself have just closed a week's special services in this place, and have had very good audiences, and some are interested. We go from here to Derby, and shall hold a week's services on the streets, and also do some tracting, as we have been doing here. I find there is a great deal of substantial work to be done in this manner; but we need men and money. With kind regards,

John W. Rushton.

Mothers' Home Column

Edited by Frances.

"Life is what we are alive to. It is not length, but strength. To be alive only to appetite, pleasure, pride, money-making, and not to goodness and kindness, purity and love, history, poetry, music, flowers, stars, God, and eternal hopes, is to be all but dead."

By Sacrifice.

"Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."—Psalm 50:5

If we consider closely the words of the Psalmist in this verse, its construction will naturally present to the thoughtful mind two possible conditions in regard to those called to be saints. The Lord commands that his saints, those who have made with him a covenant by sacrifice, be gathered together unto him.
Naturally then we ask, Is it not possible for saints, other than these so particularly described, to gather together and yet—what is of more vital import to the hopes, the aspirations of such—is it not possible that they are not gathered unto him? Vital as this question is to each one who hopes to be prepared to meet the Lord at his coming, and to be found worthy to reign with him upon a renewed earth, it is not our intention to consider it at this time, but to confine ourself to the plain command of God as found in the words of the Psalmist.

The command is: that his saints who have made with him a covenant by sacrifice shall be gathered together unto him. The sacrifice may have been of time, money, influence, the abandoning of earthly hopes, ambitions, or even of life itself. But no matter what may have been its nature or character, the time of its reward has come and the Lord commands that his saints who have done this shall be gathered unto him.

In former articles we have spoken of the alacrity with which the children of Israel, both men and women, obeyed the call to build the tabernacle, and we have pleaded with the mother and friends of the children that they encourage them in working to help build the home God has commanded his people to build for his homeless little ones; and now we are going to plead with you that to this you add a sacrifice. It may not be like the sacrifice laid upon his altar when your covenant with him was made, but can you for one moment doubt that it will be just as acceptable to him, just as worthy of coming into remembrance before him in the day when he shall command you to be gathered unto him?

There are two special seasons of the year when, as families, we meet together to feast and rejoice. We are near to the one, and the other is not far away. It is but a brief time now when our Chief magistrate will issue his annual message or proclamation of Thanksgiving; and Christmas will soon follow this. Upon both of these occasions, there are few among the Saints so poor that their tables will not be spread with abundance of that which the earth in her rich harvest has yielded.

And now we come to ask who of you upon one or both of these festivals is willing to sacrifice some one luxury in which you usually indulge upon these occasions?

Do you say, That is a small thing to ask? Truly it is small, and when we remember how ordinary tables are usually loaded down with luxuries at both of these seasons—so much so that one, two, or even three would scarcely be missed—we are more inclined to agree with you that it is a small thing to ask. But the important point is: Will you agree to do it? Life is made up of small things, and, small as this may seem, if only each one would consent to and carry it out the question of building the children's home would soon be settled. It would surprise you to know the amount which the many small sums thus gathered together would make. At Christmas-time it would be more—much more than at Thanksgiving. Then we could all of us give less to our own, who really need so much less, and more to these needy, homeless ones. Just a few pennies or dimes less on each present we give, and it may be some superfluous ones dropped off our list, and the amount added to this fund of sacrifice. Will you consider it? Will you try it?

"A million in the treasury," says Bro. Joseph Luff in his late epistle to Saints, "is a much lighter factor toward Zion's redemption than a living ministry and membership—a transformed people, carrying the God image. . . . The question of Zion's redemption is one of expelling self and admitting Christ—the rest comes as a matter of course. . . . If what little we possess of knowledge, skill, or means is employed only for what it may secure for us or the benefit of our heirs, favorites, or friends, how can we thus become like Him who laid his all at the feet of an undeserving, unappreciative world and only desired its acceptance for the receiver's benefit? Can we approximate to a standard by walking from it? Zion is to be the habitation of God—not his visiting place but his home—where he can feel at home, not for a few moments or hours at a time, but for ever. 'Zion is the pure in heart.' 'Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God.'"

Yes, we fully agree with you, that what we are asking is very little, but we do ask it with the earnest prayer in our heart that you may not for this reason overlook it or refuse to grant our plea. We are asking it of you as Saints of whom the Lord will finally say "gather them together unto me." The two mites cast into the treasury by the poor widow outweighed all the shining gold of the rich who cast in only of their abundance, and so shall your offerings of sacrifice accomplish more than the almost uncounted wealth which rich men are bestowing upon many worthy enterprises in the world. Just the fragments we are asking—the fragments lying all around you, and God will bless them and multiply them until your hearts shall be made glad and your souls rejoice in the good work which the Lord permitted you to help in establishing. Gather the children in—bring them up in light and truth. Let them feel the sunshine of God's love, the warmth of human sympathy, and you may as certainly look for the blessing of God to be with you as that he will bring to pass all that he has declared concerning Zion. Remember what he has said concerning this work which we are asking you to aid: "There should be a home for children established and the efforts of the Daughters of Zion should be approved and carried unto completion as soon as is consistent with the necessary demands of the work of the church in other directions."

Remember, dear Saints, we are not asking for the loaves or the fishes, but only that you bring to the Lord the fragments—that you make for the good of his little ones some sacrifice of that with which he has so richly blessed you. Will you?

Editors Herald: I write a few lines to let you know that the Lord has been blessing us in this part of his vineyard. In the latter part of July, Bro. J. D. Curtis came here and held a series of meetings at the Chandler schoolhouse, preaching two weeks, and at Heathton part of a week, the people from here making part of the audience there. The towns are a mile apart. The fruits of his labor were five. He baptized on the 30th of July, three: Sr. Emaline Richards, a noble woman, her son, and my son Philip, boys fifteen and sixteen years old. Then the next day, my son Victor, fourteen years old; the next day, Eddie Chapman, ten years old. A few nights before, while coming from the Chandler meetings, Eddie Chapman fell off the railroad trestle about nine or ten feet and struck his back on a large rock. By going to the meeting, he had told Bro. Curtis that he wanted to be baptized. When he was groaning with the pain and shock of the fall, he asked to be administered to, and Bro. Curtis, having oil, laid his hands on him and it was a very solemn prayer that in the darkness of the starlight went up to God, there, for his child. And to him be all the praise. He was able to walk the mile home, Bro. Curtis going to the house with him. He was all right in the morning.

The Sunday before Bro. Curtis came, we had organized a Sunday-school, and are still holding it at my house, Sr. Richards and two other women helping along nicely. Sr. Chapman buried her baby last week, blessed by Bro. J. D. Curtis, and called Leota. Remarks at the grave by Reverend Mr. Simons, of Rockvale. Pray for us. Sister DavieS.

Editors Herald: For some time I have been thinking of writing to your columns. While reading the Herald, and looking over the Bishop's report, I see that many of the Saints are responding to their duty in paying their tithing, while on the other hand I see that some do not have their names on the list, who do owe tithing. Now, this is one of the commandments God has given to his children, that we should observe this law, and by this law sanctify the land of Zion; and if we do not do this, it will not be a land of Zion to us. The Savior says, If you love me keep my commandments. We need not think we can pay our tithing without making some sacrifice. So, then, dear Saints, if we can not pay all of our tithing now, let us commence paying some, and pay as often as we can, and after a while we will have our tithing paid. Then how glad we would see things as do some of the writers in the HERALD concerning still trying to do what little and by this law sanctify the land of Zion; and Christ, trying to heed the admonition ings since obeying the gospel; yet

I am glad to meet and worship, with them, the God who has so marvelously dealt with his children, and to be neighbors again. The branch at Holden is presided over by our very efficient brother, Fred Scarchill. I am told that there are over three hundred members enrolled. And, best of all, as I see it, there is more unity and peace existing in this branch than in most branches within my limited observation. This result is superinduced by a strong effort on the part of the officers in charge to do their duty, and an intense desire and earnestness on the part of many of the Saints to "come up higher."

After our arrival, we speedily secured shelter for the family and things, and arranged for housekeeping and the comfort of the family, which occupied some two weeks, during which time
I occupied in the morning service in the Saints' church on the two intervening Sundays, with fair liberty. On the 21st I started for my "field" (Missouri District). I was met at Bonnotts Mill by our noble brother, George Beebe, president of Vossholl Branch, where I was directed to begin labors by Bro. Henry Sparling in charge. Announcements were out for preaching, so on the evening of the 22d we tried to tell the gospel story, and have continued each evening since, save Friday only, we were rained out. The Saints here are kind and hospitable, but if I were to make any complaint, it would be of a lack of interest and duty in spiritual things. I will remain here over Sunday, then I expect to go to Lyon and vicinity to see what can be done. Will likely get to Belleville and Nebo, Illinois, before the holidays, if the brethren there think they can use me to advantage. Would be pleased to hear from the brethren there on this line. Also, if there are any isolated Saints in the district desiring preaching, and will write me, I will try to serve them. Mail addressed to Holden, Missouri, Box 86, will readily reach me. With loving remembrance of all old friends for aid and assistance rendered to me as a minister of Christ, I am,

PLAINVILLE, Indiana, September 27, 1906.

Editors Herald: Perhaps some of the Saints would be pleased to hear how the two-day meeting at Plainville, Indiana, (which was to be held September 22 and 23,) passed off. Being requested to write to the HERALD, by those present, I will say everything according to previous arrangements; but only to be disappointed on account of the nonappearance of an elder; but on Sunday, the 23d, they again met with baskets and boxes filled with the necessities of life, prepared to have a basket-meeting again, for the same reason as upon the evening before. We then had a nice prayer-meeting, after which we all enjoyed a fine dinner, and had lots left to take home. There were several who were not members, and a good crowd for the afternoon services; but only to be disappointed. We all enjoyed a nice visit together after dinner; and about four o'clock returned to our homes. Writer and wife were much pleased to again be permitted to meet with the Saints here, as this is the place where we accepted the gospel eight years ago; but this is the first time we have met with the Saints for almost five years. There are only a few left here now, and they feel as if they were forsaken by the missionaries. It seemed natural to the writer to go there, and no elder put in his appearance. That has been one of the drawbacks to this branch. Whenever meetings are advertised, and a good crowd is there, the preacher fails to show up. Whether the fault is in the elders, God be the judge. Some have said they will not advertise any more meetings, as they are ashamed when people come and no elders come. We hope they may have more preaching here in the future to encourage the few that are left. We hope the Saints everywhere will remember us in their prayers, that we may remain faithful. Yours in the faith,

I. A. CHAMBERLAIN.

Editors Herald: To-night as I was reading over the HERALD letters I thought perhaps a few lines from our home would interest someone. If it were not for this gospel I do not know what I would do. My whole hope and trust is in my blessed Master. Trials come to me which are hard to bear, but when I take them to my heavenly Father he always gives me courage to go on. I am reminded that if we are the people of God we must be sorely tried; but I know if I am humble and faithful he will not let me be tried more than I can bear. Although my trials sometimes seem very bitter, I am led to say, May it be for some good. The Lord's will be done, not mine. It is nearly a year since I had my blessing, and in it I was told I would pass through many trials; but that if I was faithful I had the promise of an inheritance when the meek shall inherit the earth. Dear Saints, it is the earnest desire of my heart to live in such a way as to gain that rest.

We have a nice branch here, also a Sunday-school. We are getting along nicely. When we meet together that kind and blessed Spirit is with us to own us each and everyone. The Father smiles upon us when we do our part. I am looking forward to the conference for a blessing. Hope we will all be permitted to be there.

I ask you all to pray for me and mine that we may be found faithful to the end. My prayer is that the work may go on and gather up the honest in heart.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

MRS. ADA VINCENT.

Dear Herald: I will give a brief history of my life. I was born in old Alabama in 1877. My parents were of the Baptist faith. I was married when I was fifteen years old. My husband joined the Baptist Church, and a few months later I, too, joined. We remained with them two years, my husband being a minister. He then became interested in the teaching of some people called "Josephites," which I opposed at the time, and was baptized by a priest named G. W. Melvin, and confirmed by one of the Seventy, Kelley [?] by name.

Shortly after this two well-dressed gentlemen called at the farm of my father where he and my husband were at work. When asked who they were they said they were ministers of the gospel—representatives of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, so he invited them to the house to have dinner. After dinner he invited them into another room where they stayed all the afternoon; and my husband, not being well acquainted with the teachings of either church, was made to believe that Brigham Young was Joseph Smith's successor. He was baptized, confirmed, and ordained an elder, and went to preaching the first principles of the gospel. By and by I began to investigate the work, thinking it was surely the work of the Lord. The result was that my friends all turned against me and my dear father and mother were very badly upset. Then I was told that "he that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me." I was earnest and wanted to serve the true and living God, not knowing it was Adam that I would have to look to for my salvation. They never taught any such doctrine. They did not dare to do it; and ignorant of such doctrines, I joined the happy little band of Saints, who were rejoicing to think that the gospel was again restored to the earth, never to be thrown down nor to be given to another people. I thought I had the whole truth and desired to bring my father and mother to see it. A year later my father was baptized and my mother was a miserable woman, about five years, and at last persuaded her to be baptized.

Then I thought I had everything heart could wish. My husband was called to go on a mission and I was left to do the best I could, feeling glad that he was worthy to go out to represent God, and not knowing that the man who claimed to have the keys of the kingdom was violating the laws of God at that time. We are told in the Doctrine and Covenants that a man shall have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh; and at that time the prophet, seer, and revelator (in Utah) was living with several wives, which thing is an abomination in the sight of the Lord as you will find by reading the second chapter of Jacob in the Book of Mormon. "Beware of false prophets who come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves."—Matthew 7:15.

In 1902 we emigrated to the valleys of the mountains to the little city in Utah called Provo. When we left our home there were seven of us—my father, mother, one brother, one sister, my daughter, my husband, myself. That is a day I shall never forget. We thought we were coming to a place prepared for God's people to gather. We arrived here on the 4th of April, 1902, where we lost what they call the spirit of the gospel. The first elder I met, who had been at our home and had been treated as well as he could wish, did not know me, but said, "I do not remember of ever having seen you, but have heard of you." He knew that he had eaten many a meal at our house; but I just walked on thinking maybe he had forgotten me, but I soon found out that he was not the only one that had a poor memory.

We got along as best we could, but not being acquainted with the country we did not know what to do with a hard winter just before us, so my husband and father went to see the stake president to see if he could tell them where they might find employment, but his answer was, "I have no money. I only preach the gospel to the people." They had not asked him for money. We never came here depending on them for money, but expected to be treated as brothers and sisters. We were finally advised to go to the tithing office and the clerk would tell us where we could get work, so mother and I went. The clerk said, "I think one of my wives may have something you can do," and he told us how we might find his place. As we left the office mother said, "Did you hear that man say, 'one of my wives,' as if he had more than one!" We went on until we reached his house. We knocked and a lady came to the door to whom we told our business. She walked out on the porch and showed us where to find a lady who would give us employment. My mother said, "Mr. Beem told us the lady lived here who wanted the work done. What is your name?" "Mrs. Beem." "Has Mr. Beem two wives?" "Yes, ma'am." I can not remember what else was said. Just as soon as we got away from the house mother said, "Did I not tell you all, many years ago, that polygamy was practiced out here, and you would not believe me?" Her heart was broken, and she went down to her grave in sorrow. In less than a month we were called to part with her, which was the saddest thing of all my life. I felt that there was nothing in religion; and so drifted along with my husband, which was the saddest thing of all my life. I felt that there was nothing in religion; and so drifted along with my heart and said, "I don't care what becomes of me. I don't know whether anything is right or not. I tried to fight religion, and said I never wanted anything more to do with it."

One morning my husband said, "The Josephites are going to hold cottage meetings." I said, "I don't know who would let them preach in your house." "I will!" he said. "All right," said I, "I will leave home." So he invited them to preach there, and when they came I went out in the kitchen and stayed, but that same whisper came, "Listen to what they say." So I listened, but there were both the good spirit and the bad spirit to battle with.

They held two or three meetings there, and my husband was baptized. Oh, what a fight I had with old Satan! Elder Curtis would come and explain the truth, but Satan would tear it down as fast as he would build it up.

They decided to hold conference in Provo, near my home. One night I prayed to know whether any church was right, and I dreamed that the Reorganized Church was the only true church on earth, and that Elder Curtis baptized me, but that evil spirit was there for me to contend with. I went to conference and listened to Elder Chase, and I had the worst feeling come over me! I seemed almost frantic. I told my husband I would never go to hear the Josephites again. "Why not," he asked. "Because I don't like Chase," I did not go that night nor the next day, but I was full of the evil spirit. Satan had led me so far that I had almost given up to him entirely, but in the afternoon Bro. Frank Curtis came to our house. I had fully made up my mind not to speak to those elders again but something seemed to tell me to ask Elder Curtis to pray for me; so when he was ready to leave the house I went out to the gate and had a talk with him. There the evil spirit left me and I asked him to pray for me. From that evening I attended conference and enjoyed the Spirit of God. I thought I never heard a better speaker than Bro. Chase, and at the last meeting I asked Bro. Curtis to baptize me. I was baptized and the Spirit of God was manifest while in the water.

I feel thankful to know that the servants of God were sent to me. I am a happy soul. My whole desire is to live faithful and to let my light shine that others may see my good works and glorify God. I pray to be able to assist in saving some poor soul from that awful doctrine as taught by the Utah people. There are lots of honest people in search of the truth and they ELK MILLS, Maryland, September 11, 1906.

Editors Herald: It may interest those who have labored here to hear from this place. The work here has not come up to that high plane where we would like to see it. We could take a lesson from Israel when they were on their journey from Egypt. They traveled in the valley for some time, but as soon as they came up to that higher plane the Lord spoke to them out of the count. The Saints are more united. We can see that the Lord is well pleased when we are in harmony with each other. So said the poet:

"And thou hast promised us thine aid,
When we united be."

We have with us now Bro. Farnsfield. On Sunday he occupied morning and evening with good liberty. We believe that some are near the door of baptism. In the early history of this branch there seemed to be no trouble in getting a man to labor here, but since then this has not been the case. We find the commission the Lord gave to his disciples was, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," We never have had much trouble on account of their staying too long, I do not think the man that is with us now bought a return ticket.

It has been over twelve years since I made my covenant with the Lord. Not all of the time have I been as faithful as I ought to have been; but I have never regretted the step taken, and I want to continue in this work. My prayer is that we may all be true to the trust he has given us that when he comes again we may meet him with joy and not with grief.

In gospel bonds,

W. F. ATKINSON.

RACE TRACK, Montana, September 25, 1906.

Dear Herald: The work is moving slowly in Montana, and the honest in heart are being gathered out. We can not report as many baptisms as some; but are rejoicing that some are accepting the gospel. Having arrived in this field July 1, and not being acquainted with the conditions, it took some time to become familiar with the work here in this part of the mission. On July 18 we opened up in East Helena, and on the following Sunday baptised seven, the result of local labor. Among those baptized was a lady of the Mormon church, also her two daughters. I am glad to say that she is taking hold of the work with zeal, and we hope to see her continue in the fight. After leaving East Helena, I stopped in Deer Lodge, where I remained a few days, but found conditions such that it was thought best not to attempt holding a series of meetings. On August 8 I commenced a series of meetings at Race Track among the Morrisites, or, as they call themselves, "The Saints of the Most High." They are a branch of the Salt Lake church, having left that church under the leadership of Joseph Morris; others have been added to the church since that time. They believe in the plurality of gods, Morris himself claiming that he would become a god and rule over some planet. He also claimed to be Moses reincarnated in the flesh; that he had two bodies; when he wished to appear on earth his spirit would enter into the mortal body, or if he desired to appear in paradise he would use the other body; that there was a place prepared for these bodies, which preserved them; this place they call the chambers of the dead. They profess to believe in the Book of Mormon, also Doctrine and Covenants; but when you confront them with some of the statements found in these books, they will confess that they do not believe them.

Bro. J. D. Stead baptized some of them, and left others interested. After preaching for two weeks one of their best and most active members accepted the truth, and was baptized last Sunday. We hope to see others come into the church.

After closing this series of meetings I went to Corbin, Montana, where Bro. I. M. Dungan (formerly of Woodbine, Iowa) resides. Our work had never been presented in that section of country, and most of the time I had a fair hearing. Some seemed very much interested, and I hope to see them come into the church in the near future.

On my way to Corbin I stayed over night with Sr. Shrader in Butte, who is always willing to lend a helping hand to the missionary. On Saturday I stopped at the home of Sr. Benedict in Helena, who makes an elder feel at home. The next day I preached to the little band of Saints in East Helena, who are always glad to see one of our missionaries.

Bro. I. M. Smith having been sent to Montana, I returned to Deer Lodge to meet him there. He arrived on the 17th. I was pleased to have him with me, as I had labored alone since coming to this field. On the 19th he preached a very instructive and much-appreciated sermon to the Saints of Deer Lodge; also again on Sunday he gave us two more of his forceful sermons.

On the 25th we came to this place and began a series of meetings in the town hall. Just how long we will remain here depends on the interest manifested. From here we expect to visit the Bitter Root Valley. At present we have more calls for preaching than we can fill, but hope to reach many different points this winter. We expect to visit Stewartsville, Victor, and other points while in the valley.

The Saints of Montana are a generous lot of people, who impart of their means for the carrying on of the Lord's work. Many are helping in the building of the sanitarium and children's home, by subscribing of their means.

I have enjoyed a goodly degree of the Spirit in my work, for which I am truly thankful. Ever praying that I may stand approved of the Lord; also for the success of the work,

Yours in the conflict,

L. G. HOLLOWAY.

TUNGURRY, New South Wales, Australia, August 8, 1906.

Editors Herald: For nineteen years the writer has been a reader of the HERALD as it made its weekly appearance, and having also had access to old volumes has perhaps read nearly all that has appeared in its columns from the first. Indeed, the thirty-three years of my life have been spent within or under the influence of "the church of the living God, the pillar and the ground of the truth." I, therefore, feel pleasure in repeating the grateful acknowledgment of David: "O Lord, I am thy servant, the son of thine handmaid." The goodness of God toward me was manifested in the very inception of my life. I was born, as it were, in his house, and dedicated to him in my infancy; and yet how inadequate have been my returns for the benefits I have received from him. I often wonder that I am not more affected by the truth I have so long preached.

By this time I should have been a full-fledged Latter Day Saint; but I am still weak and frail. I have often thought and hoped the time would come when I would feel a certain competency and sufficiency in myself; but I am now as ever like a man who has no money in his pocket, but has the privilege of drawing on an inexhaustible bank for all he requires. "We are not sufficient of ourselves, but our sufficiency is of God."

I read with much interest the news of the San Francisco earthquake. The disaster was well represented in the Sydney papers. "Alas, alas, that great city, that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls! For in one hour so great riches is come to nought." What does it prove? "Here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come." Of Abraham, the father of the faithful, it is said: "He looked for a city which hath foundations [not built on sand or rubbish], whose builder and maker is God."

Soon after I read of said calamity I wrote Bro. and Sr. Terry a private letter regarding the fate of the Saints. The former answered in a lengthy communication, for which he has my thanks. That and the reports contained in the church papers have satisfied my mind concerning our people there. At first my anxiety was so great that it took away my appetite. The information that no lives were lost dispelled all my fears; for I have satisfied my mind concerning our people there.

The revelation was indeed fraught with interest to all Saints. It gave much satisfaction to me, as well as to others, to read the clear, definite instruction regarding the question of successorship. If no positive information had been received, and Bro. Joseph had suddenly passed away, there might have been nearly or quite as much confusion and misunderstanding as ensued upon the death of his father. There are men in Australia ambitious enough to attempt to lead the church, and there are more in America.

The part of the document relating to the gathering is well put, and indicates that selfishness is the chief obstacle that stands in the way of realizing Zionic conditions. There is, we admit, a necessity for writers discouraging the manifestation of this hindering, nullifying trait; but the excessive doubtful theorizing that has appeared in the HERALD could be left out to the profit of all concerned. More has been written than is essential to an understanding of the subject. Do our writers believe the Saints do not understand what Zion is or will be? It is now as of old: "The carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can it be."

This too: "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." It is not a lack of intellectual understanding, but a lack of simplicity and humility which prevents so many from seeing and doing those things which are written in the law of God as with a sunbeam.

The Sanitarium. This was something unexpected by many, and yet it is required, as will all admit. It suggests to us that many have been too narrow in their views. I am sure that few if any expected such an outcome regarding Bro. Luff's application to the study of medicine. I have heard some criticize him for such a course; they considered it utterly inconsistent with his position as an apostle. And yet God says of his work as a physician: "This my servant Joseph Luff may do and retain and exercise his apostleship." Who should be the judge, God or man? The former, of course. In our anxiety to present the gospel in contrast with the creeds and practices of men, positions have often been taken that are not compatible with a complete and harmonious exposition of the sacred books of the church. Said books teach as follows:

"In those days was Hezekiah sick unto death. ... Then he turned his face to the wall, and prayed unto the Lord, saying, I beseech thee, O Lord, remember now how I have walked before thee in truth and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight. And Hezekiah wept sore."

"Thus saith the Lord, the God of David thy father, I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears: behold I will heal thee." How? "And Isaiah said, Take a lump of figs. And they took and laid it on the boil, and he recovered." This blessing was received after God had said: "Set thine house in order; for thou shalt die, and not live." Fifteen years were added to the king's life and that too in the manner described. Of the Nephites we read: "And there were some who died with fevers, which at some seasons of the year were frequent in the land; but not so much so with fevers, because of the excellent qualities of the many plants and roots which God had prepared, to remove the cause of diseases to which men were subject by the witness of the climate. In these latter days we also are taught: "And whatsoever smalleth ye among you sick, and have not faith to be healed, but believe, shall be nourished with all tenderness with herbs and mild foods, and not by the hand of an enemy."

Elsewhere we are sustained in "the use of that which wisdom..."
Why did some of the Nephites die of "fevers"? Evidently because they did not avail themselves of what "God had prepared." The country furnished through divine bestowal the remedies for its own maladies. If we could understand aright we would see that in every instance "God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb." "But," says some one, "we should not receive administration and take medicine at the same time." Why? God sanctions the combined use of human and divine agencies. Those who "have not faith to be healed" are to be anointed and prayed for by the elders, "two or more." So says section 42. And the late revelation teaches the same thing. There is not the least evidence that administration should ever be withheld from any one. It is not our business to judge as to what God will or will not do. The trouble is, we are too prone to look upon administration as an opportunity for miraculous demonstration. God does not view it in that light. It is a matter of indifference to him as to whether we are healed by his power or by some other means. Divine healing is not essential to salvation; it would really be better to testify of continuous health than to bear witness of having been healed.

While we may be curiously looking for some proof that we are the people, and that wisdom and goodness will die with us, God is considering only the ease and comfort of his children, and the real progress of his work. There is as much reason for the use of medicine, as for the study of "the best books." One is as much a substitute for the power of God as is the other. Since we are commanded to "seek knowledge even by study, and also by faith," why not seek health in a similar way? (See Doctrine and Covenants 42:12; 85:36.)

As to medical systems, some may be disappointed in the fact that Bro. Luff practices the homeopathic instead of the herbal method of treatment; and yet he believes he was divinely directed in selecting the school of medicine he did. Does this claim contradict the language quoted above? No. It was not necessarily the herbs as they grew but their "many excellent qualities" from which the Nephites realized such satisfactory results. As a matter of fact many if not most of the medicines used by all the various schools are of herbal origin. This statement applies to the most dangerous and deadly poisons. Bella donna, for instance, is made from the "deadly night-shade." The supposition that vegetable medicines are always safe, and mineral medicines otherwise, is one of the greatest fallacies. All physicians depend, more or less, upon the "active principle" or "extracted strength" in the form of "fluid extract," "tincture," etc. Is this method necessarily more unreliable than the use of herbs in their crude form? No one can prove that it is. And besides, the command to use "herbs and mild food" was partly for the purpose of keeping the Saints out of the hands of unscrupulous worldly doctors. The clause, "and that not from the hand of an enemy," indicates as much. The recent revelation points in the same direction.

But we have now a homeopathic physician, because the medical knowledge within the church has progressed beyond the limits of "herbs and mild food." We should consider, too, the probability that God sanctions modern medical progress including that made since the revelations of 1831. If he ordained and endorsed the mechanical inventions of our time, as we commonly teach, why not some other things no less important? He surely has as much interest in his own creatures as he has in any of the various machines that have been made.

The children's home. This also is an institution indispensable to a church that makes the claim that ours do. We claim to be in possession of the fullness of the gospel. We should, therefore, be foremost of all people in works of humanity. Hitherto it has not been so; hence, we hail this move and the sanitarium as constituting a relief from the monotony of dogmatic theology. No church or society can engage in a more laudable enterprise than a children's home. Why should we not be zealous and active in relieving the unfortunate? Our mission is to raise the fallen, cheer the faint, and invite all to the fountain of life, where they may "wash and be clean." Some one has truly said: "We speak of human life as a journey, but how variably is that journey performed. Some enter the world to walk over smooth lawns and velvet terraces where every gale is arrested and every storm is restrained; others enter it to travel the Alpine paths of life with bare and bleeding feet, jaded, mangled, and chilled." It, therefore, becomes our duty to lessen human misery and thus realize a condition directly opposite to the contract depicted in the above picture. My testimony delighting the heart is, "We have need of several petty officers, healing the afflicted, and sheltering the homeless more than in colleges or works of art. I congratulate the Daughters of Zion on the divine sanction which has crowned their plans. I am sure the whole church will hail the children's home as a valuable reinforcement to the old people's home. May it never be said of any of us that we have neglected to pluck a thistle and plant a flower where a flower would grow.

One of the prophets says, "The watchmen shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring again Zion." Such unity, however, has not yet obtained. Its absence, I am sure, is due to having misunderstood each other. We can not, apparently, fully fathom the motives and teachings of our brethren while sojourning in flesh and blood. We can not, without divine aid, entirely know or securely possess our best friend. We converse together as people in different coaches with the blinds closely drawn. We hear the carriage, and a voice tells us we have a friend within; but we shall know each other better when the Lord shall by death or otherwise open the coach-doors and successively lead the company into the glorious apartments which he has prepared as the residence of those that love him. "What a gathering of the faithful that will be!" The Lord grant, dear reader, that you and I and yours and mine may be "robed and ready when the bridegroom comes."

In gospel bonds,

ALMA C. BARMORE.

STONINGTON, Maine, September 28, 1906.

Editors Herald: Once more I am permitted to write you from the far-famed "rock-bound coast" of the old Pine Tree State. I was assigned to labor in Eastern Maine during the year 1904, and thus far, I have been pleased with my appointment to Western Maine this year. There are advantages and disadvantages in all fields, which we expect to meet; and here a mission has many advantages of the kind to be appreciated. There are some of the real genuine kind of Latter Day Saints here in Maine, as good as I ever have or ever expect to meet; and to associate with them is very pleasant. The brethren who stand in office as branch and district officials are agreeable and ready to cooperate in every good word and work. My minister in charge is affable and generous in his directing powers. After having placed me in the field he says, "Use your own judgment," and keep "pushing ahead." If we were as serene, we might have need of several petty officers to stand guard over us, if for nothing more than to demonstrate the power vested in men of authority; but, as long as we are accounted worthy, as men, to be sent by voice of the church, it is well and proper that we should be given liberty to use our judgment in the work that we are to do, and such treatment should inspire one to do the work faithfully and well.

My time has been fully occupied thus far this conference year, and I have taken much pleasure and satisfaction in the work. The field presents needs and demands along various lines which will keep me busy to meet. I have several calls for labor in various places, which I must endeavor to fill. And, as the winter season approaches, I am reminded of the difficulties to overcome in traveling among the many islands along this coast.

I have been much amused (can not say that I have been edited or entertained to any great extent) in reading some of the peculiar articles which have appeared in the HERALD for some time past. If those who write these articles and give expression to their thoughts and ideas, could realize that they are placing themselves in the limelight of criticism, they might at least select a better class of subjects. In the HERALD we have read about "Life insurance"; and who could form a correct opinion from what has appeared? Who would deny that life insurance has, in many instances, been of great benefit? Is this not a question which may very properly be left to the decision of each individual? We have in the HERALD read about the Masonic order, and the Masons have laughed it to scorn; and, according to the ideas presented, some of our brethren are shown to be in the position, fortunate or unfortunate, of belonging both to the church of God and the church of the Devil!

This is another question which the church has wisely left to be relegated to the individual decision of its members. We have read the articles which have appeared in the HERALD as touching the "Banking system." Are we as a church in position to regulate such gigantic things as this? Will not business men who recognize the need and are benefited by the convenience of the banks, laugh at the folly of our ideas? It is true that banks have failed; and what earthly institution is proof against failure? This banking system question is another issue which is irrelevant to our work, and a matter over which we have no control. "Shall we hold stocks, or take interest?" is yet another immaterial issue which we as a church can not regulate, and it does not properly belong to our work to deal with such questions. Individuals can do as they see fit; and if any have money to loan without interest, they will find a multitude who are ready to borrow. I can not believe that it is wrong in the sight of the Almighty to pay or receive a legal rate of interest in carrying on a legitimate business. Time and space would fail us to note all these various questions, but to cap the climax of all, we have read recently in the HERALD that the earth is probably inhabited by an immaterial race of beings.

What wonderful question may we look for next? In my opinion the HERALD should primarily be an advocate of Christian doctrine and moral principles, and include matter of historic interest and current events concerning the church and its work.

We have noted in the HERALD, for a number of years, the numerous articles on "Zion and her redemption." What a medley of opinions and ideas! What has been accomplished by this agitation? Zion is a problem that has baffled the wisest minds in the world for a solution; and it is yet a problem that will not likely be settled though we should give all our goods to feed the poor, our bodies to be burned, or to continue debating the matter in HERALD. I have read with pleasure and profit that which has come from the pen of ye chief Editor relating to the above questions, and his ideas are wholesome; they are meritorious; they represent good taste and good judgment; they are wise, safe, sane, and sound.

The scriptures speak in an unfavorable manner about "doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strifes, railings, evil surmisings." Some matter along this line is so "subverting" to the readers that many are ashamed to offer the HERALD to an outsider, and sometimes "hide" them from sight. Who will deny this as a fact; and is it proper? This condition of affairs is induced when the "wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ ", are forsaken and we become entangled in arguments and "pervasive disputings"; and we are taught to avoid foolish questions, and contention and strivings about the law; for they are unprofitable and vain. How true! We should ever stand upon the safe foundation of solid principles—that which is recommended by the scriptures, and that which accords with common sense and reason; and not be disturbed or moved by any wild, frenzied, or fanatical sentiment, no matter by whom it may be advanced. There is much in the wonderful gospel of Christ to enrich the mind with wisdom, to fill the heart with reverence and love, to cause us to fill up the measure of our days with the warmth of loving words and the splendor of generous deeds, and everywhere we may find plenty of work to engage the forces of heart, hand, and brain. The "unsearchable riches of Christ" is yet the inexhaustible, resourceful mine from whose depths of the "deep things of God," aided and inspired by the Holy Spirit, we may be well engaged in bringing up to human understanding the precious one of truth divine, and thus interpret in human life the meaning of Christ dwelling in us and in him.

Editors HERALD: I enjoy reading letters from the brothers and sisters. They cheer and encourage me to press forward to the prize that is given to the faithful. My greatest desire is to live faithful in this life that I may enjoy the life to come. We would be glad if an elder would come here and preach some for us; and we have a daughter that wants to be baptized. We have not heard an elder preach since Bro. Grant Gurwell was here five years ago, and oh, he revived us so much. We will try to make an elder feel at home while he stays with us. We live four miles east and one mile north of Rose, ten miles west of Humboldt, eleven miles southeast of Yates Center, and eighteen miles northwest of Chanute. Hoping some elder will see this who will call on us, I am, as ever,

Your sister in the everlasting gospel,

EMILY GURWELL.

Winnipeg, Manitoba, September 26, 1906.

Editors HERALD: I baptized four last Sunday and expect more soon. A reporter for the Tribune, another daily here, called on me yesterday afternoon to receive dictation. His article, which is quite lengthy and which he wrote from my lips, I expect will appear to-day. I think there are seven Utah elders now in the city. They are converging here for their south-bound trip, as the cold is about ready to put a stop to their outdoor work.

One young gentleman here became convinced of the truth of the restored gospel through hearing the preaching and coming in contact with the Utah elders in the old country. The awful prejudice on the part of his family and in his neighborhood prevented him or at least dissuaded him from receiving baptism there, hence he came out to America, destined for Mormondom in the far West, expecting that the new surroundings would make congenial the carrying into execution the honest convictions of his heart. But, fortunately for him, ere he had in honest ignorance carried out his project, he was intercepted by hearing Bro. Evans in Toronto, and secondly the writer in Winnipeg on the subject of succession and the difference between the two churches, so that his unity for Utah is entirely dismissed from his mind, and it is now a matter of accepting this or none. He is satisfied to that extent that the Utah people are in apostasy that he no longer has an inclination to accept of the literature we have directed against them, and it seems to be but a matter of time when he will be one of our members.

Those baptized were Brn. Cee from Manitoulin Island, Clarence Wilson, and Albert and Eva Batsford.

LEEDS, England.

Editors HERALD: There is a disposition on the part of many editors in this country to treat us with increased respect and courtesy. We have had several articles in the papers in different parts of the mission, and by this means we are trying to educate the reading public to the knowledge of the truth concerning the question of Mormonism. Since our mission conference which was held in Manchester, the beginning of August, I have been with Bro. W. H. Greenwood in Clay Cross, Sutton-in-Ashfield, and in Derby. We have had very good meetings, especially at the two last places, and mostly in the open air. Some appear to be interested, and we hopefully look for the growth of the work.

I have been two weeks in London, where I met Bro. Bullard, of Boston, and we have had some encouraging services among the Saints, in London and also in Enfield. We held an open-air service in Victoria Park, in company with Brn. Thomas Bradshaw, the veteran of the work in the great metropolis, also. J. Tankard, J. W. Worth, and Bro. Bullard. We had a very large and attentive audience. The work in London is in great need of about six good men who can do open-air work and go around tracting and conversing with the people. To do this we need not less than three pounds or fifteen dollars per week, so that we can get at the people. This amount every week would give us the privilege of locating two brethren in three different parts of the city for a concentrated effort. We are almost useless without money in this mission. We do not want spasmodic supplies, but a reliable sum coming in regularly every month. And this will have to be supplied, if we are to make any advance here in this land. I believe without any exaggeration, I can say that there never was a more opportune time for the Reorganization than at the present for spreading abroad the work. Bro. Bullard is quite encouraged with the prospects among his friends and relatives at Hitchin, and believes that some good could be done there with a concentrated effort. Bro. W. H. Greenwood is having good open-air meetings in Manchester. Bro. Taylor also is doing a splendid work in Yorkshire. Under the blessing of God we are hopeful of results.

Sincerely,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

Dear Herald: Not having seen anything from these parts for some time I thought I would write.

I once was a Missionary Baptist, and before I ever heard this latter-day message I came in contact with a member of the Saints' church, talking with him of my desire to preach the gospel; but I did not want to preach after any manner that I had ever heard. He looked straight in my face and said that some good could be done there with a concentrated effort. Bro. W. H. Greenwood is having good open-air meetings in Manchester. Bro. Taylor also is doing a splendid work in Yorkshire. Under the blessing of God we are hopeful of results.

Sincerely,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

August 25 and 26, with a very large attendance. A good spirit prevailed. I have over one hundred dollars paid in and subscribed for the sanitarium and children's home. The Saints took an interest in both. Our district is in good standing again, financially, and also spiritually. The work is widening."

Spring River Reunion.

Spring River District reunion was held at Joplin, Missouri, from August 17 to 25, Elders E. A. Davis and F. L. English presiding. Missionaries present were Ammon White, F. C. Keck, E. A. Davis, J. T. Riley, Lee Quick, W. H. Smart. Twenty preaching services, eleven prayer-meetings, four sessions each of Sunday-school and Religio work were held. There was larger attendance of Saints and friends than at any previous reunion of the district. Preaching was of a high character as a rule; prayer-meetings very spiritual.

Auxiliary work in charge of district superintendent and president of Sunday-school and Religio, with the help of other workers of this and other fields; the work was very creditably engaged for each other's upbuilding! We believe that only in reasonable cost.

Resolution passed to retain names of an old members of Evergreen Branch; Bro. J. R. Cozadd, as chairman of the reunion committee was accepted, and we are looking forward to meet at call of district president, at Valley Junction. Rillie Moore, secretary.

Florida.—The Florida conference convened with the Calhoun Branch, September 15, 1906, at 10.30, with W. A. West in the chair. Bro. T. C. Kelley was elected to assist as president of the conference, and B. L. Jernigan clerk, with the right to choose an assistant. He selected Bro. Ernest McCall. The president reported the condition of the district, and B. L. Jernigan, Bro. W. M. Hawkins, and R. F. Wilson, reported the condition of their branches. Ministry reporting: Elders W. A. West, E. Powell, B. L. Jernigan, J. N. Hawkins; Priest W. M. Hawkins; Teacher Joseph Dixon. Calhoun Branch reported. Bishop's agent reported: On hand last report, $4 60; receipts, $38.15; expenses, $38.17. Receipts for sanitarium and children's home, $8.60. District treasurer, J. A. McGinnis, reported: On hand last report, $2.56; received, $1.17; on hand September 22, 1906. $2.57. Resolution passed to retain names of all members of Evergreen Branch on record as members of branch as reorganized.

A recommendation for the ordination of Bro. Archie Hook to the office of priest received from Searles Prairie Branch. It was approved, and said brother ordained. A two-day meeting was appointed near Necedah for November. Conference adjourned to meet at call of district president, at Valley Junction. Rollie Moore, secretary.

Conference Minutes.

Mobile.—Conference met with the Perseverance Branch, September 1, 1906, at 10 o'clock, Alma Booker presiding. Four branches reported: Theodore, Bluff Creek 97, Perseverance 162, and Three Rivers 115. Bishop's agents' report read and accepted: Receipts, $83.50; expenditures, $89.05; on hand, $14.55. Elders reporting: W. L. Booker, G. W. Sherman, Alma Booker, Simeon Cochran, and Oscar Tillman; Priests L. C. Goff and R. M. King; Teachers James Cooper and David Goff. The following motions prevailed: That we, the Mobile District request the scattered members and those not attending meetings regularly to report at least once in each quarter. That the branch officers write to all these members of their respective branches, and tell them of this resolution. That this first report be published in both Herald and Ensign. That the members of the branch try to keep up this correspondence. The resignation of Bro. McClain, as chairman of the reunion committee was accepted, and Bro. Oscar Tillman was elected to fill the vacancy caused by his resignation. Reunion committee reported to the conference, and committee was continued. Bro. James Wilson was recommended to the conference by the Perseverance Branch to be ordained a deacon. The recommendation was approved, and the ordination provided for. The time and place of holding two-day meetings, left with the president of district. Conference adjourned to meet with the Bluff Creek Branch, December 15 and 16, 1906, at 10 a. m. Edna Cochran, secretary.

Kirtland.—Kirtland District reunion and conference was held at Akron, Ohio, beginning August 3, and closing August 13, 1906. The attendance was hardly as large as was expected, mostly accounted for by the rainy weather during the fore part of the reunion. But it was well enjoyed by those present.

Friday, August 10, was given over to the Sunday-school association which held its convention. Conference began Saturday, August 11, at 10 a. m. U. W. Greene was chosen to preside, assisted by G. A. Smith and E. Miller. Secretaries, E. E. Cochran, E. A. Davis, L. L. Allen, E. Stafte, O. Tanber, L. True, A. Kohler, and J. H. Lake. Bishop's agent, E. Miller, reported a total received of $725.60; expended, $741.82; balance due agent, $15.02. A resolution was introduced and carried, that the conference form a board of directors consisting of president, vice-president, secretary-treasurer, and board of directors, membership dues to be one dollar per year. This association was organized by selecting Charles Dalley to the presidency, H. R. Miller, vice-president, E. Miller, secretary-treasurer. These three officers, with Lorenzo Powell and A. R. Manchester, from the board of directors. G. A. Smith was sustained as president of the district, with his counselors, E. Miller and T. U. Thomas. Conference adjourned to meet at Sharon, Pennsylvania, first Saturday and Sunday in March, 1907. E. E. Cozadd, secretary, Shadeland, Pennsylvania.

Washington D. C.—Conference convened at Hagerstown, Maryland, May 30, 1906, by President Daniel Judd. Bro. James Herron, as chairman of the conference, was accepted. A recommendation to form an association to be held in this district of the Sunday-school association, with W. L. Booker, G. W. Sherman, and E. W. King in charge, was received. Bro. J. W. Goodman, as chairman of the reunion committee, was accepted. Proceedings of the conference adjourned to meet at call of district president. Friday, June 9, 1906. Bro. J. W. Worth was therefore elected president of the district. Conference adjourned to meet at call of district president, at Valley Junction, Rillie Moore, secretary.

London.—The London District semiannual conference, consisting of the London and Enfield Branches convened for its business session in London, June 9, 1906, District president, Elder R. Clift; vice-president, Elder J. W. Worth. In his opening remarks on behalf of the district the president said, "Speakers generally tried their best, taking things all round." Both branches reported. As the London Branch by President J. W. Worth who reported that the condition was "fair." Those who attended appeared to have the desire of doing the very best; we have plenty of room for improvement. As to the Enfield Branch, President J. A. Judd's report was to the effect the spiritual condition was "fair," though the last seven months had been rather trying, owing greatly to illness. There were some, however, that did not come up to their duty, but there was an earnest desire on the part of those attending to continue to do their best. Bishop's agent's report was as follows: On hand last report, $27 14s.; receipts, $11 17s. 10d.; treasurer's report followed: Balance from last report, $1. 1d. 1s.; received, $1 7s. 1d.; expenditures, 18s. 9d.

Election of officers for year 1906 and 1907. Elder R. Clift with brethren reelected president. Elder J. W. Worth reelected vice-president, Brn. J. A. Judd and Dover E. Judd reelected to office of treasurer and secretary respectively. A vote of thanks was carried to R. Clift in recognition of services rendered as district president, which was suitably acknowledged. A letter from the mission secretary (European) soliciting financial aid was read and referred back to the branches to deal with. Notice was given that the same action would be taken in reference to the same decree of rule 4 of said district, to the effect that “all ministers in the district shall have voice and vote in the conference of the district in good standing.” Said notice was signed and presented by J. W. Worth, J. A. Judd, and J. Newton. Formal resolution followed, and meeting closed with prayer. Conference met again on the 10th at Enfield, where the minutes were held, and a pleasant day was spent.

Dora E. Juud, secretary.

Northwestern Kansas.—The one hundred and first quarterly conference of the Northwestern Kansas District met with the Homestead Branch, on the reunion grounds, near Bazine, September 1 and 2, 1898, with W. E. Peak and T. E. Thompson presiding, and John A. Teeters secretary. Branch reports: Bridesville, Twin Creek 55, Hill City 17, Homestead 73, Scandia 48. Ministry reporting: Elders M. F. Hewell baptized 2, T. E. Thompson, E. F. Taylor, and L. F. Johnson; Priests E. E. Ebert, John A. Teeters, and David Turner. Bishop’s agent, F. S. Ward, did not report. District treasurer, John A. Teeters, reported: Received since last report, $12.94; paid out, $2.29; balance, $10.24. True balance should be $10.74, showing an error of 50 cents, probably due to misstatements in minutes received from the Rural Dale Branch, asking for the ordination of John A. Teeters to the office of elder, was favorably received and the brother ordained. A request from the Hill City Branch asking permission to ordain a young man to the office of priest, was referred to missionary in charge and the Hill City Branch. Bro. David Turner (priest) was granted a license upon request. Election of district secretaries resulted as follows: T. E. Thompson, secretary, Beeler, Kansas; E. F. Taylor, secretary, Cheyenne, Kansas; John A. Teeters, treasurer, Alexander, Kansas. District secretary making report of recent revision of branch records, said in part: “Since being taken over as custodian of your district records, I have with the assistance of others perfected a complete revision of all branch records, save Homestead, which, by the way, is nearly completed. This has been an arduous, difficult task, and to all those who assisted me in its successful accomplishment I now extend my sincere thanks. Branch reports: Bridesville, Twin Creek, 55; Hill City, 17; Homestead, 73; Scandia, 48. Of these Rural Dale and Twin Creek have forwarded their dues to this office. Scandia advises that amount will be forthcoming soon. Several new branches, with those of Enfield and Twin Creek, remitted to Bro. Stebbins.] Homestead alone has ignored all notices. . . Much credit is due our esteemed Bro. H. A. Stebbins and his efficient assistant, Bro. C. I. Carpenter [now recorder], in bringing about a correct revision of these records, and the least appreciation your honored body can render for the able and painstaking, and praiseworthy assistance, is to extend to them your unreserved thanks, in which, as your servant, closely associated with them in this task, I ask to join. Respectfully, in bonds, F. E. Taylor,” “Sunday, September 2, at 5 p.m., the church-building at Bazine was dedicated to the Master’s service. Adjourned subject of harmony.”

assistance, and are very thankful for it. We desire to continue to merit a continuation of your favor and help, and are willing to reciprocate so far as we can do so; and as one feature we will send the Religio Quarterly to all missionaries who will apply for it, giving your mission address where you wish it sent. This request must be renewed each year after General Conference. You will also be supplied with Constitutions and Leaflets of Instruction upon request.

There is one matter we wish to call attention to which has resulted in some annoyance and no little trouble. The secretary in making an effort to perfect the records, learned of a number of societies which have never received charters; and from the location, it appears that the most of such societies were the result of missionary effort. We are not finding fault with the missionary, but on the contrary, we acknowledge the faults to be in our literature, or our system. The trouble seems to have been caused by our constitution does not mention charter, but Leaflet of Instruction No. 1 gives the instruction about charters; and so the missionary having the Constitution and no Leaflet, did not call attention to the charter.

And again, it has been learned that some societies have never reported to the General Secretary. It would be better where new societies are organized in districts to report to the district secretary and allow the district secretary to report to the General Secretary. Then the General Secretary would know what district the new society belongs to. Of course, where the new society is not in a district, the report should be sent to the General Secretary.

It is very important that new societies send a full list of members, and a separate list of officers, so that charters can be made out, and the records kept straight. A fee equivalent to five cents for each member most accompany an application for a charter.

In these points we earnestly request the missionaries to assist us to a better carrying out of our system; and any help in the matter of literature the missionary needs will cheerfully and freely be given upon application.

Bryan and Roosevelt.

Unquestionably the most unique episode in American politics to-day is the reenactment of William J. Bryan. It is more remarkable than the sustained popularity of Thomas Jefferson, who three times received votes in the electoral college as a candidate for President and who was twice elected. It is more unique than the experience of Andrew Jackson, who was also twice a candidate and twice elected; and it overshadows by far any political event during the present generation. Ulysses S. Grant was a popular idol, who endeared himself to a grateful people by his services as soldier and statesman; but even the magic of his name failed to secure him a nomination for a third term. James G. Blaine was a hopelessly defeated he sank into oblivion. Grover Cleveland, after serving his first term and securing a renomination, retired to private life only to be called forth again to a successful campaign; but his third nomination was due less to a popular uprising in his behalf than it was to the clever manipulation of his friends; and he won the Presidency because the Republican party was badly divided as the result of the sectional differences developed in the Minneapolis convention. In Bryan, however, we find a man who twice led his party to defeat; who was then repudiated and endorsed with scant patience; who advocated doctrines and policies which alienated a very large proportion of his party from him; and whose leadership seemed ended, and yet who is now welcomed upon his return to this country with an enthusiasm as spontaneous and universal as it is devotion.

What has happened, then, to bring about this condition of affairs? The reason can be stated in two words—Theodore Roosevelt. If it had not been for President Roosevelt, the name of Mr. Bryan would not have been to-day upon everybody's tongue. It has been Mr. Roosevelt's great moral courage, his fearlessness, and, above all, his devotion to the rights and interests of the people, that have swung the Democratic party line for Bryan. Mr. Roosevelt's course has been popular in the widest and broadest sense. His positive attitude on public questions, his direct and energetic manner of dealing with everything, his freedom from all problems, and of his freedom from all the vexations of the trusts, are characteristics which find their counterpart in Mr. Bryan more than in any other Democrat who can be named to-day. It is not too much to say that they are not too prominent in any Republican candidate. There is a belief that Mr. Bryan, if he should be nominated and elected, would carry on the work which Mr. Roosevelt has so ably and vigorously begun. In other words, he is regarded as the Democratic candidate who is the ideal of the party which actuates Mr. Roosevelt, especially as these ideas relate to the curtailing and suppression of monopolistic corporations. —Henry Litchfield West, in the October–December Forum.

By INDEPENDENCE COAL MINING COMPANY

In order to develop and open up the new coal-mining interests near Independence and also make necessary preparations for homes for miners, it is necessary that sufficient capital be secured within a short time. The amount sought for is very small compared with the capital of other coal-mining interests and, for various reasons, the directors of this company desire to keep the working and controlling power with the church members, if possible. The opening up of an undeveloped coal field at the edge of a densely populated community of 400,000 population is a matter of considerable co-operation, as the product is part of the necessaries of life, with freight rates practically cut off, making this enterprise an exceptional one.

Five hundred and sixty-acre tracts have been leased for fifty years and one hundred and forty-four purchased, making in all seven hundred and twenty-three acres of coal land in one body, on the line of the Missouri Pacific Railway, two miles east of Independence.

The company already has coal-mines at Napoleon, Missouri, in operation and a successful and prosperous retail business, making this a bonâ fide, paying investment.

Money seeking investment can find no better place and bring the best kind of satisfaction, as it will bring good returns to the investor and results that are much sought for, also large, true returns, as the year 1881 was an unusually good one for the unemployed, scattered, pressed-down poor church members by placing them in a position to help themselves.

The 134 acres are intended for homes for mine-workers, so near the mines as to be at a reasonable cost, and we solicit the co-operation of miners to purchase stock, according to their ability.

The promoters of this company are not working for any selfish interest. There is no watered or fictitious valued stock. The company is incorporated under the laws of the state of Missouri. Capital stock, $10,000, divided into 100 shares of $100 each; amount paid up $8,500. Shareholders are under no obligation to pay more than the amount purchased, and the amount needed to do so can be readily obtained from the bank of deposit. Those who invest need only apply to

Queries Concerning Zion and Its Settlement.

As to whether there is any necessity to perpetuate what is called the "wage system," it is very evident that neither the church nor any persons in it can secure labor, however urgently it may be wanted or needed, unless they are ready to return an equivalent thereof. And the conflict between employer and employee is still going on, and it is not within the province of any man to tell what the wage system will be in five or ten or twenty years from now. We believe that the rule, "Do unto others as ye would they should do unto you," should prevail in this as in any other thing.

We have not affirmed that the moral commandments given through Moses should all be inapplicable. Some of these as foundation principles were reinstated by the Savior. These and the necessary rules based upon them are applicable now. But take the one proposition, that couched in the word interest or usury. The Book of Mormon and the Inspired Translation, and incidentally the King James Translation, are given to us in our own language, specifically so stated. This being true, what does the word usury mean? The first meaning of the word as given by the dictionary in the English language and applicable to us is this:

First, "a premium paid, or stipulated to be paid for the use of money; interest." This is marked obsolete. Two passages of scripture are quoted directly opposite to each other in teaching, one from Deuteronomy, the other from Matthew. The second is, "the practice of taking interest." This also is marked obsolete. The third definition is this: "A premium or compensation paid, or stipulated to be paid, for the use of money borrowed or returned, beyond the rate of interest established by law; illegal interest; exorbitant interest."

A note appended to these several definitions in the English language, the language spoken by us and which was to prevail until the typical pure language is restored, is as follows: we insert it:

The practice of requiring in payment of money lent anything more than the amount lent, was formerly thought to be a great moral wrong, and the greater the more was taken. But for many years this opinion has ceased to exist, or at least has lost much of its legal force. It is no longer deemed more wrong to take pay for the use of money than for the use of a horse, or a horse, or any other property. But the lingering influence of the former opinion, together with the fact that the nature of money makes it easier for the lender to oppress the borrower, has caused all Christian nations to fix by law the rule of compensation for the use of money. Of late years, however, the opinion that money should be borrowed and repaid, or bought and sold upon whatever terms the parties should agree to, like any other property, has gained ground everywhere.

We here have the difference between interest and usury clearly drawn, and it seems to us that it is unwise for us to put an extreme and overstrained interpretation upon the word interest. Usury is oppressive, but a fair remuneration for the use of money, to be agreed upon between the lender and the borrower, is just as legitimate as is any other transaction in which money is paid for the use of any other commodity than money. The lexicographer in giving the derivation and meaning of the word interest gives it thus: "Premium paid for the use of money; the profit present and derived from money lent or borrowed used by another person, or from debts remaining unpaid." It is in this sense evidently that Jesus used the term in the parable referred to.

So far as the moral code commonly called the Mosaic code, the statute enactments written by Moses, being brought into this controversy, it would seem to us that whenever this is done it puts the one who brings it in under obligation to do the whole law; that if we cite any one portion of it and depend upon that, we trench upon the providence of the commandments of the Savior in the beatitudes and place our dependence upon the law, and not upon the gospel economy, the law of righteousness. Peter was of the impression that neither we nor our forefathers could bear these statutory enactments, speaking in the light of the language of his day. It is for these reasons that we object to determining our gospel controversies by the Mosaic code. It is not with a view to speak derogatorially of the law, for it is the basis of the statutory laws of our country; but the gospel ethics are higher, and this question of interest or the taking of remuneration for the use of anything, houses, lands, horses, money, or goods of any other description, justly falls under the rule, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye also unto them."

If money is loaned to a man and he becomes a debtor therefor and misfortune overtakes him and he places himself upon the mercy of his creditor and his creditor oppresses him even by the exaction of the interest or the principal, it is an oppression. Conditions should determine the character of the action to be had. We have an evidence of this in the statement made by the Savior with reference to the unjust steward. Some think the steward traversed outside of his right when he told his lord's debtor to take his bill and write a lesser amount than that which was due the master. We hold a different view. It was his province to direct thus if he saw proper. That his action was not just to his master may be conceded, but that it was within the province of mercy to his lord's debtors to lessen thus their indebtedness, is apparent; he was steward over his lord's goods, liable to be dealt with by his lord for malfeasance. Joseph was the factor of Pharaoh in Egypt and took care of his father's household as such steward. He would answer to Pharaoh for any improper use of that which he had under his charge, if Pharaoh chose to bring him to an account. But his factorship did not contemplate undue gifts or expenditures to his brethren.

It is clearly evident that if inheritances are to be given in Zion the means by which these inheritances are to be given by individuals or by the body corporate will have to be applied and the medium of exchange, the measurement of values of lands, hereditaments, properties, or moneys must continue until the last effort to be made by Israel is successful and the Lord comes and puts a stop to all the wrong-doing and confusion in the economic world.

It may be seen from the foregoing what our objection is to the introduction of the moral obligations supposed to be enacted in the code as written by Moses and why it should not be urgently insisted upon nor imposed upon us in our gospel economy. There is too great a difference between the ethics of the gospel and the moral code referred to for us to assume that these enactments find a larger and better expression in the gospel. The contrast is plain; a few instances: The scribes and the Pharisees justly boasted of their fealty to the law, but the Savior said, "Ye have heard that it hath been said of old times that thou shalt not kill, and whosoever shall kill, shall be in danger of the judgment of God; but I say unto you, that whosoever is angry with his brother shall be in danger of his judgment; and whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, or Rababah, shall be in danger of the council; and whosoever shall say to his brother, thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire." It was written of old time, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, under the Mosaic code; but the Savior said, If a man smite thee on the one cheek turn to him the other also. The basic principles of the Mosaic law find their best expression in the modern statute enactments of the several states and nations forming the coalition that we call sociology; the care of the weaker by the stronger, making all men equal before the law.

There is no doubt but what the spirit of greed, the desire for undue accumulation of wealth, are in their exercise subject to great abuse; and wrong frequently results in the dealing of mankind by those upon whom these attributes have their influence. But we fail to see how the legitimate barter and sale of that which men need is productive of wrong to any. It is the right use of the things of this world that enables men to do good to their fellows and avoid that which is evil and wrong. We have an exhibition of this in the statement of the Savior, “Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that when ye fail they may receive you into everlasting habitations.” This follows immediately after the story of the unjust steward, and it is stated that the lord, that is, the master of the steward, commended the unjust steward because he had done wisely; “for the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light.” Then the Savior, following it immediately up, says: “He who is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much, and he who is unjust in the least is also unjust in much. If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches? And if you have not been faithful in that which is another man’s who shall give unto you that which is your own?”—Luke 16:9-12.

We have used the Inspired Version in these quotations. If we take the commandments in the Doctrine and Covenants, “He that keepeth the law of God hath no need to break the law of the land,” together with the statement that God had raised up wise men to write the Constitution, and that things are to be done in accordance with the law, we have ample justification in submitting to the rules and regulations enacted by the lawmakers for the government in our conduct one toward another in the use of the things of this world.

The theft or an unjust deprivation of the personal or the property rights of a man, though it may be done by legal processes, is a theft and wrong just the same. But that which comes under the supervision and within the meaning of the declaration “Do unto others as ye would they should do unto you,” is permissible, and we may add, justifiable. A proper use of food is wise and commendable, but the unwise use of food is productive of gluttony, disease, and death. The church itself cannot hold property nor handle money except by virtue of the legal enactments of the lawmaking powers by which personal and ecclesiastical rights are conserved. A large portion of the business between men and associations is transacted through the medium of exchange of representative values. These representatives of money value are called in monetary circles moneys of account, and as a silver dollar or a silver bank bill may pay a dozen depts in a short period of time and find a final lodgment in the hand of him who first paid it out, so may other evidences of money values be used in exchange by the medium of banks and never a coin dollar be handled in the processes. We consider banks an essential feature for good in the commercial world, a means of safeguarding the interests of community to an extent; and it is far preferable for us as a people to deal with our own members in this regard than with those of the outside, where conditions are favorable. We do not want any one to understand now from what we say that we would for a single moment defend the unjust usurpations of unscrupulous banks or fail to condemn those who should prove themselves dishonest and recreant to the trust of community, the same as we would any other criminal.

There is that which the exchangers may do legitimately without infringing upon any moral or legal right of their constituents or patrons, just the same as a cooperative cheese and butter factory or any other associated industry may do. In our thinking it is no more wrong for men within or without the church to take the means which they may have accumulated and establish a bank under existing laws and carry on a legitimate banking business, than it is for men to combine and buy a threshing-machine or a wood-sawing machine or establish a plant for the manufacture of doors, frames, flooring, or any other commodity used in the erection of buildings for the habitations of men. It is not more wrong and illegal than for farmers to combine to get the highest price they can for their products. It is not more wrong than for men called laborers, of certain avocations in life, stone-workers, brick-masons, plumbers, or any others of the different trades combining together to get an increase of wages from an employer or shorter hours of labor. A banker who oppresses his poor brother is condemnable, the employer who oppresses the hireling in his wages is condemnable. The wage earner who takes advantage of his employer by slighting his work and doing less than he should, or taking a larger amount for his work than his work is worth in the market, is condemnable. So is the employee who by unfair means, by violence or otherwise, prevents other men from working whose necessities for labor are as great as his; he does wrong if he does this and is condemnable. When these things will be eliminated from society we do not know, but we certainly can among ourselves establish a just medium, exercise a proper discrimination, and reach the golden mean.

THE SITUATION AT "ZION CITY."

Mr. John C. Hately, who was appointed receiver of Zion City affairs by Judge K. M. Landis of the Federal Court, has made a report and that report was published in the Chicago Tribune for September 19, as follows:

The aggregate liabilities of Zion are estimated at $6,125,018. The quick assets are estimated at $372,054, and the slow assets at $2,156,427.

Several of the industries are pressed for the necessary cash to carry on the business, and some of the factories have closed down on this account. This has caused a lack of employment and caused many residents to leave for Chicago and other places in search of work.

Wherever possible the industries have been continued as

STATEMENT OF LIABILITIES.

Among the items making up the statement of liabilities appear the following:

Gross liabilities of Zion on July 27, 1906, including stocks, bonds, and shares outstanding issued by John Alexander Dowie for account of several unincorporated industries, land department, and bank ............................................ $3,851,880
Interest due thereon................................ 316,822
Mortgages on lands and buildings, including interest.. 370,327
Loans, secured and unsecured, including interest....... 555,744 Individual bank deposits, including Mexican plantation deposit, but not industries ................................ 486,728 Annuities of $25,377, capitalized, estimated ............ 500,000
Total liabilities ................................... $6,125,018

The report was made on the valuation as appraised by F. E.
Jennison, official appraiser for the American Trust and Savings Bank.

Ben McDhui, Dowie's former summer home in Michigan, now claimed by Mrs Jane Dowie, is to be listed as an asset, but the title to the property first must be settled. Receiver Hately also says he has found papers which indicate that sixty square miles of land in Gold Coast Africa may belong to the estate.

It is also stated in the same issue of the Tribune that there is to be an exodus from Zion City to Butte County, South Dakota. One R. V. Iverson of Zion City was solicited by quite a number to visit the West and make preparation for a resettlement and founding of a new colony. The reason assigned for this was that many of the residents at Zion City have grown tired of the controversies and bickerings that have been going on since the decadence of Doctor Dowie's power. It is also said that Doctor Dowie will seek an asylum in Mexico where he expects to pass the remainder of his days, be they few or many.
It is feared by some that Doctor Dowie's health will not permit him to make the trip to Mexico as he contemplates. In his last appearance before his followers he denounced his wife and said that he had lived in domestic trouble for the last twenty years and declined taking his wife with him to his Mexican retreat. This speaks ill for the spiritual character of Doctor Dowie. He certainly was not like Abraham, who ruled well in his family. He said:

"It may be that this is the last time that I will look upon the faces of my people. If it were so I would not be sorry. I would go contented. I am not a sick man in many respects.
My disease is a broken heart. I have lived with Mrs. Dowie for twenty-five years a broken-hearted man. She abused me every day. I do not know that I ever shall see her again. I shall be a lonely man, but I want you to help make my lot as easy as you can. If my wife repents I will forgive her, but I never will restore her to her former position.

We perhaps owe the Saints an apology for so frequently noticing this movement of Doctor Dowie's in establishing a city, but it is a matter of no small interest to those who are thinking of quietude and peace as the product of an assemblage to be known as Zion.

ANOTHER RIVAL OF DOWIE.

Another rival for the shoes of John Alexander Dowie has arisen. This time he comes from Topeka, Kansas, and his name is Charles F. Parham, a man who is called "an eccentric religiousman." This man was a promoter of a new religious cult in Kansas and also of a gold-making scheme. We suppose that wearying of both schemes in Kansas and seeing an opportunity to gain celebrity or notoriety in the quarrel at Zion City, he has entered into the arena there with the declaration that he has had two or more visions in which the Lord has commanded him to denounce Voliva as betraying the followers of Dowie into commercialism and with being a false prophet and had sent him there to dispossess him. He has according to report secured some three hundred followers already, and it would appear that he will have an additional following.

The old adage, "A lie will travel from Maine to Georgia while the truth is putting on her shoes," finds application here. An apostle of error can gain a hearing among the class of people called Zionites, while a true religion would go begging for converts or hearers in that now famed city.

It would seem that this was not needed to accentuate the downfall of Alexander Dowie, but "where the carcass is there will the eagles be gathered together." Notwithstanding the extreme debt hang-ning over Zion City, it must be that there will be official opportunities for graft, and this Charles F.
Parham, a wide-awake Kansas adventurer, evidently believes that he may as well have part of the spoil as Voliva to have all. There is now an opportunity for waiting.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

After November 1 next, Bro. Elbert A. Smith, now at Burlington, Iowa, will be at Lamoni, engaged as Associate Editor on the editorial staff of the Herald.
Bro. S. M. Reiste of Lamoni, and now in the field in Central Iowa, will supply the work at Burlington, by direction of Bro. Heman C. Smith, mis-ionary in charge of that field.

Bro. T. W. Williams, of Los Angeles, California, writing under date of September 30, says: "Our reunion was a regular pentecostal blessing. We never have had such spiritual meetings in this part of the country before. I verily believe it presages something. We regretted that neither Bro. Fred M. nor Bro. E. L. Kelley could be present; but we did the best we could, and God supplied the balance.
Bro. Griffiths recently arrived in the Southern District and will remain here some time. I trust that your health will be improved in your new home, and that God will spare you for many more years of active work in the church."
We will read together a few verses out of the sixteenth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, commencing at the twenty-fifth verse:

And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises unto God: and the prisoners heard them. And suddenly there was a great earthquake, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken: and immediately all the doors were opened, and every one’s bands were loosed. And the keeper of the prison, awaking out of his sleep, seeing the prison doors open, he drew out his sword, and would have killed himself, supposing that the prisoners had been fled. But Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, Do thyself no harm: for we are all here. Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas, and brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house. And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house. And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway. And when he had brought them into his house, and had set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God, he set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God, and they feared, when they heard that they were Romans. And they came and besought them, and brought them out, and they went out of the city. And the sergeants told these words unto the magistrates: They have beaten us openly uncondemned, being Romans, and they feared, when they heard that they were Romans. And they went out of the city, and entered into the house of Lydia: and when they had seen the brethren, they comforted them, and departed.

I presume most of us are acquainted with the episode from which we have read these few verses, and all of us know that Paul and Silas were servants of God, recognized as such by all who believe in the Scriptures. And, if we are to credit the account which is given of them in the New Testament, they certainly had the approval of Almighty God in the work and in the labor they performed. The purpose of their preaching, and the object of their adoration, was this man, Jesus Christ, as the Son of God and the Savior of the world. The preaching of Christ and his peculiar teachings brought them into contact with opposing influences in the world, and the teachings that Jesus Christ had announced, and the teachings of these men as they were carried forth emanated, as it were, from God. The opposition and enmity came, strangely enough, from rival religionists, both among the Jews as well as among the Gentiles—for religious contention and religious quarreling was often found then as, unfortunately, it is often found to-day among religionists—and it was then a question, as now, as to what all this religious quarreling could mean; and we are sometimes, as they were, in doubt, as to what course we shall pursue.

Now, so far as religion is concerned in itself, we ought to understand at once that in and of itself it is not of any practical benefit. I submit that it is not sufficient that we shall profess to be religious and believe in a religious life, and then conclude that we have acquired all there is to be acquired by so doing. Religion in itself is but a means to an end, and above all things we ought to keep our minds fixed upon the end in view; and if we are not sure and satisfied within our own minds that the ideal set before us in the religion we have espoused is the highest and truest ideal, then we ought not to be satisfied until our religion has brought us within reach of its ideal, and the thought that I have got in my mind is the very question of this jailer: “Sirs, what must I do to be saved?” The word saved is really what we call a relative term; that means a term that is subject to different interpretations and different definitions—it is not absolute; but the general definition of this particular phrase is, What must I do to escape the legitimate punishment of my sins? What shall I do to escape being put into hell and suffering throughout all eternity with the torments of eternal torment in consequence of their sin and wrong-doing. Many people are satisfied with that definition, and are simply living in this negative kind of religion. The ideal is the escapement of legitimate punishment. In a few words I want to say that this ideal is not the ideal that has been given to us by God.

In the first place we must understand some of the attributes and characteristics of the Almighty, and when we can understand his character, then we can properly base our work and labor upon this conception of God, and be capable of giving truer service and producing better results. Now, to begin with, we all believe that God is loving; in fact the Scriptures tell us that “God is love,” and, therefore, we may safely conclude that whatever God has done for us in order to secure our well-being has been done in his unquestionable and unlimited love for mankind; so that whatever experience we may pass through as the legitimate experience of our religious life, that experience is only what we must pass through in order to escape the legitimate punishment of our sins. People want to know what they must do in order to escape being put into eternal torment in consequence of their sin and wrong-doing. Many people are satisfied with that definition, and are simply living in this negative kind of religion. The ideal is the escapement of legitimate punishment. In a few words I want to say that this ideal is not the ideal that has been given to us by God.
to be good by punishment and by fear, you could not possibly love such an individual as that! and all the service that you could render with this conception of Almighty God would not be the best kind of service. With a God of this kind, you will do only that which will please him so long as you know that he is able to keep his eye upon you, and to keep, as it were, in continual touch with you by means of forcing the weight of punishment upon you. As soon as you thought his eye was off you, you would be doing your own will: but as soon as punishment was brought to bear upon you, you would turn again to God. Undertake to abolish that idea. In the Old Testament Scriptures we have this notion about God, and you will remember that the ideal of their religion was the majesty, the power, and the jealousy of Almighty God. You can take the writings of Moses, and read the prophecies of Isaiah, and the wonderful imagery of Zechariah, of Daniel, and of Ezekiel, and these are the standing features of God, and he was to them like some little tribal God but an ecclesiastical God among people. Almighty God. You can take the writings of Moses, and read the prophecies of Zechariah, of Isaiah, and the wonderful imagery of Zechariah, of Daniel, and of Ezekiel, and these are the standing features of God, and he was to them like some little tribal king who was all the time exercising his providence upon whom he chose.

We meet with the same idea to-day, only he is not a tribal God but an ecclesiastical God among people in this church and the other churches. They really have tried, more so a few years in the past than what it is in the immediate present, to put a corner or a monopoly upon God, and they try to make out that unless they are of this church or that church man can not acquire his favor and beneficence. Now to a large extent there may be a great deal of truth in this; but I want to put away from your minds, individually and collectively, this idea of monopoly. I want to change, mark you, the elements of the idea of God—that instead of being a tribal God, a national God, or a church God, to put him as the universal Father-God that is interested in every one of us as his children; at least just as much interested in us as our earthly parents. This is a radical change in every sense, a change so thorough that it transforms everything in relation to religion—it transforms the ideal, it transforms the motive power, and it transforms the results. In this sense the Old Testament times understood salvation as being an escapement from punishment, from dreadful torment: the displeasure of their Deity.

You remember the message of the angel when Christ was born in Bethlehem many, many Christmases ago. The angel was sent with the message that he (Christ) should bring peace upon the earth and good will towards men. In another way of putting it: the coming of Jesus Christ was the expression of God's good will to the whole earth, and the expression of God's will to the earth must result in the establishing of universal peace. Peace means harmony. You all know the opposite of harmony! It is discord. To illustrate: a person playing the piano expertly by the skillful blending of different sounds, and making the notes synchronize, produces what we call music. This is but harmony of sounds.

A person not skilled in the art of music would produce discord, by which we mean that because the different notes were not blended or synchronized, there would be the unpleasant sensation so familiar to any who have experienced the discordant jangling of the instrument without knowledge or skill. Discord means warfare; then instead of harmony resulting from reconciliation, there is misery, sorrow, and death. These are the inevitable results of warfare, whether among men, angels, or the spheres.

Whenever you have a man or a woman out of harmony with God, with the inward consciousness of being out of harmony with God, that is a condition which God can not deal with. We must deal with evils that obtain within. Jesus Christ came to bring about harmony: "peace on earth" resulting from "good will towards men."

In the first place God is not unkindly disposed towards us. God is unchangeable in his love, unchangeable in his power, and unchangeable in his intentions towards us. It does not matter how much we have sinned, and it does not matter how much faith we may profess to have; God all the time is unchangeable—he is all-wise, all-loving, and all-powerful. God, therefore, being all-wise, all-loving, and all-powerful, it follows as a natural consequence that everything God has done, and everything God has suggested, must necessarily be the wisest, the most loving, and the most powerful that can be; and if God was to change in any detail or in any way whatever, it would mean that God's intention towards us had become inferior or superior to that which was. He can not change. He can not change and still be as loving as he is to us as he would be if he did not change! He can not change, because it would be a challenge to his superlative wisdom, love, and power! When discord and hostility obtained, man got out of harmony with God. God did not get out of harmony with man. Man quarreled with God. God's attitude has never changed towards us since the creation. In Genesis we read (if the Old Testament Scriptures are to be credited) that God would often come down and talk with man, that in the experience of Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden, they were living in a state of continued harmony, and God would very frequently come down and walk and talk with them; but there came a time when Adam and Eve violated the will of God, and in the transgression of God's law was the sin, resulting in discord. The same cause every time will produce the same effect—that is what is known as the law of continuity—the same cause every time will produce the same effect.

In the beginning Adam and Eve were both continuously in touch with God until there came a time into their lives, an experience which changed the circumstances altogether. Now the change did not occur so far as God was concerned. God still came down to seek them, and still waited upon them to have communion with them, but Adam and Eve were missing; and God had to cry out, "Where art thou?" because they had run away from God through the inward consciousness of guilt which made cowards of them as it makes cowards of us to-day. There is nothing in this world that can make us so uncomfortable, and puts our lives in a state of discord: not because of what people say of us, but because of the condemnation within. This was the experience away back there. The inward consciousness of guilt put them out of communion with God. Their life was a discord, and Jesus Christ has been revealed for the express purpose of removing the cause of the discord and establishing harmony between man and himself. God will not adjust himself to us. He never put himself out of harmony with us. His love towards us is still as strong; his wisdom is still as unimpeachable, and is still as matchless, and has never once been questioned seriously. Something in man is wrong, (in ourselves,) and we personally have deliberately done the things which we ought not to have done, or have left undone the things which we ought to have done: this has brought about a quarrel between ourselves and God.

Now let us read a few verses of the fifth chapter of the second book of Corinthians:

For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead: and that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again. Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flesh: yet, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more. Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation, to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.

It means that once a man or woman has really entered into the Christ experience, everything becomes new—the whole environment changes.

Many are anxious to bring about a reformation of the conditions that obtain to-day. All are satisfied that things are not as they should be, and those who are weak are inevitably pushed to the wall, and the poor and simple are the victims of the monied man. Take, for example, the Socialists of to-day. They are trying to bring about an adjustment of the exist-salvation amounting, as it must do, not in escabement from punishment, but the elevation of the individual from the deliberate enactments of wrong to the enactment of right according to the mind and will of God—that is salvation. If a man or a woman will undertake to live and keep in harmony with God's law, then he or she must receive from the hand of God the blessings and benefits that accrue;
but if men and women will undertake deliberately and viciously to violate the mind and will of God, it is impossible that they can escape the legitimate fruit of their persistent rebellion.

We have this salvation put before us in the word of God as meaning an escapement from that which produces punishment, and from that which produces hell. You remember we have a statement made by the angel Gabriel to Joseph in the twenty-first verse of the first chapter of Matthew as follows: "And she [Mary] shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins." If you will allow Christ to save you from your sin, then hell is abolished so far as your individual condition is concerned. There can be no hell where there is no sin, for hell is the efflorescence or the outcome of sinning, and if we stop sinning there can be no hell. You can therefore see the power and the far-reaching influence of Christ in regard to salvation. He strikes at the root of the matter, and he does not undertake to do the will of God by attempting the impossible task of abolishing results, but he gets down to the abolition of the cause, and we must abolish hell by means of abolishing its cause. I do not suggest that this was in the mind of the jailer on this particular occasion. I draw your attention to the fact that the jailer beheld a power that he had never known before. He was a man who had known only of the influence of Roman and Grecian idolatry, which was in vogue in his time, and had seen nothing at all beyond the priestcraft of the pagan hierarchy, but now in the experience with these men he had seen the power of God manifested, and the power of God had made him fearful as it always does. A man or a woman coming into contact with some strange and mystic influence is always more or less terrorized, and this man seeing the power of God manifested on behalf of these two men, had become afraid, and he cried out, "What must I do to be saved?" from this. Not, what must I do to be elevated; no, but what must I do to be saved from the influence of this power.

Now, I am inclined to think that there was no one so well able to answer the question as Paul. You remember the circumstance: when Paul was on his way from Jerusalem to Damascus as an enemy of the Christians, he had warrants in his pocket to arrest men and women in order that he might bring them bound to Jerusalem; and as he got near to the city of Damascus he was stricken down by a light from heaven and he cried out "Lord, who art thou?"
And the Lord said, "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest"; and he again cried, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" How very similar! The jailer could not have selected a man better able to answer his question. Paul had been in exactly the same condition, terrorized by the power of God, and had seen the power of Christ in such a way that he had never understood before, and had known the methods by which he had been saved from it, into it.

"Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" The apostle Paul had known it experimentally: it was not a matter of creed or sentiment, but of actual experience. It was simply a question of telling facts as he had found them, so he replied, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." We must all take this course for the simple reason that no one has had as much experience with God as Jesus Christ had. He came down from the Father. He was with the Father from the beginning, and therefore his word and his dictum upon all questions which relate to the spiritual life of mankind must be referred to Jesus Christ for final analysis and answer; and Jesus Christ therefore was taken by the apostle Paul as being the only way by and through which salvation from the terror of this power could be accomplished. And here is one thing that I want to put to you: that the apostle Paul's experice is our means of salvation. Time has not changed the mind of God. Time has not changed the wisdom of God. Time can not change the love of God. If, therefore, Jesus Christ was the means of salvation away back in the days of the apostle Paul, then Jesus Christ must be the means of salvation for us to-day. The conditions still obtain under which they suffered, which conditions were the results of sin and rebellion. If we want to avoid the results of sin and rebellion, we must of necessity put an end to the cause by which they are brought into being. The conditions that obtain to-day, I repeat, are brought into existence by the means of sin. Sin is summed up very trenchantly in the language of the apostle John, and really is our own creation. Many of us have had an idea that sin really was created by the Devil; that sin really was specially manufactured in hell, that we had nothing at all to do with it. As a matter of fact the Devil can not manufacture sin.
Man makes sin, and sin is not manufactured in hell, but in the heart of man. Sin is manufactured by man, and if man would not sin, sin could not be, but if a man or woman will commit sin, and produce sin, then God himself can not prevent the results of sin.

First and foremost, then, the Devil does not make sin. We make sin! and if we will deliberately and persistently make sin God himself can not prevent hell; for hell is the outcome of sin. Let us read a few verses in the first letter of John to the churches, found in the third chapter:

Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon Sin is the transgression of the law, and we know that Jesus Christ was manifest to take away our sin; the angel Gabriel announced it. But Jesus Christ can not do that by himself, for the simple reason that you and I are free agents. I can please myself, for example, whether I shall be a drunkard, or a sober man. I can please myself whether I will be good, honest, and virtuous, or whether I shall be bad, dishonest, and vicious. I can select for myself my course of living. I have the power to determine my own destiny in this life as well as in the life to come. I may spend my years in persistent wrong-doing; but, when all is said and done, the fact still remains that I must bear the consequences. If I have the power of choosing the influence of love, I have also the power to frustrate the power of God. “I do not frustrate the grace of God,” says Paul. “I do not frustrate the grace of God.”

We already admit that God is almighty, and that his love is matchless, and that his power is unlimited; and we admit his power can never be questioned, and that his word can not fail; yet, notwithstanding this, man has literally the power to frustrate the power of God. It simply amounts to this, that whatever God may be disposed to do for me, I have the power to nullify God’s best intention; and you all know the meaning of the word frustrate is to miscarry or make abortive or nullify, and practically put it; as it were, out of joint. In a word, I can spoil all God’s providential work. You, myself, every individual son and daughter of man have the power to frustrate the grace of God towards us. How can Christ save you if you will not be saved? Salvation, therefore, means more than an escapement from punishment. It means deliberately sacrificing all our selfishness, that God can have his way for the production of his works and designs in and through us. If I will not, if none of us will undertake to let Christ take away our sin, then the mission of Jesus Christ can never be a literal success in the way and manner in which Christ foreshowed it to be. Many of us have run away with the idea that God can save us. God can not save us. Jesus Christ is our Savior in one sense; in another sense he can not be our Savior. All that God has done, all that God can do in us is to supply the power and supply the means by which the power can be utilized by us individually, for the production of salvation; but if you and I deliberately refuse the power and prostitute the means which God has given, then our salvation must inevitably and for ever remain impossible. I am the architect of my eternal destiny—I can either be with God, or I can be against him. I have the power to make God’s saving grace successful, or I have the power to frustrate his saving grace.

“What must I do to be saved?” It means that we really have to give up doing our own will, and earnestly and prayerfully do God’s will. The religious world is trying to reconcile God to man; we are trying to reconcile man to God. God has not changed; never can change: his characteristics are eternal. It is man who has changed; it is man who is out of harmony with God; and man must become reconciled to God. The word must is imperative. If there is to be a cessation of the war, the warfare must cease on my part. God has never quarreled with me. He has never been anything else but loving and kind and gentle and true, and therefore just. If I want to be saved, my salvation must come as a result of the wholesale surrender of mind and will to him. This brings us in touch with what we might call the essential principles of religion, and it is summed up in a few words in the book of Samuel that “Obedience is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams.” To obey is better than sacrifice. God does not want your gold, your silver, or your bank-book, or sacrifice of all your possessions in that sense. He demands, first of all, a crucifixion of yourself to begin with: to sacrifice your selfish nature, and there can be no religion that is of genuine value unless it commences in self-consecration—the sacrifice of self. The apostle Paul taught the Romans in the twelfth chapter of his letter, “I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God. I have known instances where men have spent all their lives in the amassing of money, and have adopted all kinds of methods by which their money has been increased, and the swelling of interest and dividends, which has been the only thing they have lived for; and after they have secured wealth they have sometimes built churches, or endowed hospitals, or erected libraries, or something of that kind, in the assured hope and belief that they will be able to bribe God. It is done with the view of bribing Almighty God, and because of their charitableness they hope to secure the favor of God even if their lives have not been lived as they ought to have been lived—but “because I have been charitable, God will give me his favor.” But will this please the Lord? What does Micah say in reply to a question of the children of Israel?

Will the Lord be pleased with a thousand rams, or ten thousands of rivers of oil? Shall I give my first-born for my transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul? He hath showed thee, O man, what is good, and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?
God will not have your gold or your silver or your possessions. He will not have your sacrifice unless it is a sacrifice with the heart's spontaneous love. There must be a giving up of self, and a surrender of your will. That is the fundamental principle of religion: consecration of self; and unless we learn the art of self-crucifixion, our religion amounts to very little. I know it is a hard doctrine. The disciples long ago found it was a "hard saying."

But the question still remains: "What must I do to be saved?" There is only one thing we can do: that is God's will; and if a man willeth to do God's will he shall know of the doctrine. Here the difficulty arises, for so very, very few are willing to do God's will. Now God can not accept us upon our terms. We are the rebels, the ones who have established the discord and warfare; and if ever the discord and warfare shall cease, it must be because God's will is my will, and God's way of living and controlling has become my way by voluntary acceptance. Latter Day Saints put that down as the fundamental principle of their religion, that whenever God speaks that is the end of controversy. God's kingdom can be established only in this way. "Thy kingdom come," must be the effect of God's will being done in your life as it is done in heaven. We are wanting every man and woman to lead this kind of life. Our religion is a religion that insists upon the supremacy of God: a religion that insists upon the supernal victory of Christ, and puts the word of God as the essential law whereby character is produced; and if men and women will let the principles of God as they are in Christ become the law of their lives then conditions on earth will be such that God will reign among men.

God has commanded faith, repentance, baptism, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, and there should be nothing in our attitude either of doubt or rebellion, but compliance to these laws. All those who refuse any one of them are to that extent out of harmony with God. We can not do without one of these.

Faith means the confidence of love; repentance is the reformation by which we cease the warfare; baptism is the means by which we pass out of rebellion into God's kingdom of peace; and the laying on of hands is the ordinance by which is transmitted Divine Nature, which will infuse us with Godward tendencies.

This is the basis of our religion—the recognition of God's supremacy and the establishment of Christ's claim in our actual life and daily talk, so that our lives become literally and truly the incarnation of the mind and will of God. "What must I do?" I say once more, let God work out his will and good pleasure in you, and you will learn the force of that statement in Hebrews, that Christ has become the author of our eternal salvation unto all that obey him; and if you will disobey him, then you frustrate the grace of God against yourselves.

That we may be willing to be obedient, and live for the establishment of God's kingdom by the abolition of sin in our own lives individually, is my prayer.

A careful survey of the teachings of God to man reveals the fact that his children are supposed to make progress in his service. Progress means advancement. Advancement can not be realized in any avenue until the legitimate means has been adopted and applied. Man being created an active—not a passive—being, it is proper and right to say a Christian life means an active and progressive life. The man who is perfectly satisfied with his condition, who does not desire to become better, and as the ship at sea without a rudder, sail, or compass, floats hither and thither, sometimes driven before the tempests, and at other times lies listlessly in the calms; such a man, whose purpose and ambition is only to do so much and no more, these few lines will not reach, for they are directed to those trying, yet under adverse circumstances, to make progress in divine life.

We may be content, and truly should be, with the sphere the sometimes seemingly austere destiny of God has placed us in; also we should be satisfied with his laws; but to be reconciled and perfectly satisfied with ourselves in our finite condition, is another proposition. As long as we are subject to sin, and we see imperfect results in our lives, so long should we be dissatisfied with our lives, and should strive for nobler realities. "He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand: but the hand of the diligent maketh rich. He that gathereth in summer is a wise son: but he that sleepeth in harvest is a son that causeth shame."—Proverbs 10:4-5. The principle here set forth can truly be designated a proverb. This language may especially have reference to that which is temporal; but the grand fundamental truth of the statement can apply to the acquirement of the graces of the Christian in a spiritual sense. If, as the scientist says, life of humanity in its rational existence means action, then the Christian life means the same. Life indeed is in both conditions, yet the Christian life supersedes the other in grander reality and redundance, yet both symbolize action.

As a people we have an object before us. This object, if attained, must be attained through the application of eternal law, clearly defined and established by God. Progress to final success is wrought out through this means that has been so graciously supplied. The business of life in whatever vocation must be acted harmoniously to this eternal law. We must understand in the hope of progress that in our outstart we must have a clear knowledge of what is to be done. Think of a builder that builds without specifications, rules, and no particular object in view as to the outcome! The ideal character (Christ) stands out prominently as our pattern. Our important work commences when we understand his beautiful life and work, and the indispensable provisions of his law. We can not expect progress until we comply with the legitimate means given. An occupation in life that does not blend with the means or law to a certainty, is an abomination. Our occupation or work to insure success must be natural to this principle. Moral and spiritual excellence is the product of this blending, and these attainments are the very consummate essence of all progress. Personal ambition, if this is all, should be abandoned for this grand and glorious aspiration, where duty commands and leads to triumphs of virtue and right living. In reality, as saints of God, can we say any other life is worth living? We must learn to surrender all, if necessary, for the sake of the right, the duty, and our influence with mankind, which is acceptable duty to God. Christ never expected this condition to be attained spontaneously as the mushroom that grows up in one night’s time; for such insensibility to sin can be brought about only by gradual development—a growth to the divine liking. We should not miss opportunity’s invitation; for its blessings are within the reach of all, and in proportion to our willingness to let this holy duty be our incentive, to the same extent can we predict a stable and material progress. It is within the reach of all to thus strive, and to the extent of this striving the soul will be shielded against the allurements of the world and the enticing sins of the Devil.

We may meet the asperities of rebuke, and the intolerant judgment of the world. The love of kindred may be severed, and the friendship of companions may be averted, and all that the world calls dear may vanish; but the consciousness of noble duty being done is “sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb.” The world’s applause counts for nothing in comparison to a clear conscience, and a knowledge of having done God’s service.

To be able to make progress in divine life, nothing is more clearly taught than the fact that we must cooperate. Not only should we cooperate with one another, but with God; and to the extent of this self-surrender will be measured our progress and ultimate success eventually. This result must necessarily be the product of eternal law. “We are laborers together,” says Paul; but this is not all, for “we are laborers together with God.” So the great work of redemption is a partnership affair, and we are not the only party to the agreement. Neither is God. We are all concerned. A laborer is not an idler, but a worker. Thus we recognize that the religion of Jesus Christ is a grand system; for no man can harangue the church with the words “unemployed” or “out of work.” There is employment given to all. The man that can not find anything to do, is not a true saint; for to make a complete and proper consecration “works” are invariably involved. Can we not see this is the difficulty in too many instances where we fail? We lack complete consecration. No man can expect victory in every conflict here, and success ultimately in the eternity of the future, unless there is a complete consecration of self and self-interests to the will of God. Thus to make progress we can not discard this feature.

Some men work grudgingly, as though they were a machine; and if it were not for the stern necessity and the future suffering for the temporalities of life, they would not work at all. Others work gratefully, doing what they see to be done with a willingness. No work that is legitimately prosecuted but that we can call God to our help in it in every arduous difficulty and in such work cooperate with him.

This gospel work does not require us to condemn everything indulged in by the world. An extremity of this measure presents a strange paradox, for some things adopted and applied by them without any question leads to betterment. We must carefully eliminate the bad (which is the greater part) and hold to all that is good. It devolves upon us to decide questions of this kind, and to act wisely and well in our efforts for progress. An unwise course is pursued by some evidently with no better reason for it than that it is the way of the world. A thing universally accepted does not necessarily vouch for its truthfulness; neither does it reason that because of its universal sanction our deportment in this respect must not be restricted. The law of God condemns everything sinful, whether popular or unpopular. A hint to the wise ought to be sufficient. Wise we may be; yet we might well consider our course and compare it with the ways of the world, and see if there is not greater conformity to the world than to God and his royal way.

We might call up one tendency of the world for illustration that can not be truthfully considered otherwise than extreme, and that characterization is “the yoke of the fashions.” This extreme tendency is of wide interest, and it is not exclusive with the world. The church of Christ should be free from the glitter and pride of the haughty, heartless world. In the world we see this tendency displayed in all its haughty demeanor. We behold revelings unrestricted, pride gratified, for the “debauchery of dress” is carried to an unlimited degree that is appalling indeed. Their gay trappings require millions of dollars in outlay, a sum far exceeding our expectancy. The unnecessary dress-bill of the world in one year would buy homes for thousands and thousands; yes, even a million of homeless poor. A war-vessel becomes obsolete in ten years, it is said by good authority; yet a far greater sum is expended to gratify vanity.

and the pampered pride of the world to keep in "fashion," and the dress of to-day is obsolete in six months. They say this gay motley is Christianized. True, they go to church. Yes, to watch and pray and worship. They watch, and pay close scrutiny to the paraphernalia of others. They worship and pay the humblest kind of devotion to professional hat-trimmers, window-dressers, dress-makers, and the "latest" from Paris in professional fashion. What strange, paradoxical contradiction! We think the tobacco-bill enormous as well as the drink-bill, when we examine statistics. The excessive fashionable dress-bill beats them all in enormous proportions, and brings its share of harmfulness with the rest. A certain degree of disgrace as well as ostracism rests on the one that can not keep up with the procession. Thus is carried to a fine degree the theory of the "survival of the fittest." What folly, what consummate degeneracy to see! because one fashionable person buys a hat or gown, all the rest must proceed to do likewise. "I see," says a noted author, "fashion wears out more apparel than the man." The worst feature of it all, those with less means are unable to cope with those who are better provided, and in their endeavor to keep up they spend much on fashion that could be put to better uses.

Now to the main point in this question: Are we as the church of Christ striving for progress adopting carnal means—the ways of the world—or are we free from worldliness? Certainly there is some room for improvement on these lines, hence it remains for us in our social and spiritual life to curtail all wasteful expenditure, that there may be a greater supply in the storehouse of the Lord for the support of the ministry and the poor of God's people. To make progress and ultimate success in this grand and glorious work of latter days, we must "lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us." A pessimistic action is bound to nullify the effects of the gospel, so we should with cheerful assurance accentuate a holy and true life to right principles. If spiritual life in the church is to be raised to its highest proficiency, the remedy—the gospel—must be applied to these evils. The first thing of magnitude in this respect is the perception and recognition of the evils themselves. While it is true that we are making considerable advancement, yet we lack in many respects from attaining the high standard of moral, rational, and spiritual excellence of our capabilities. The problem now with us is to develop these potencies unrestricted by the world's influence, in an environment free from worldliness.

Individually or as the church we will see success attained by our constancy, fortitude, and perseverance to the great truth of this gospel restored. The least variation is bound to bring some loss to us in some way. The excellency of argument has its place, but this is not paramount among us; for Christ's law from its nature and constituency must sway by love. Our greatest power in the world does not lie wholly in our prestige in this way; but by constant fervency hold the great truth of this latter-day work to the world by excellency of character and a godly deportment. This will count where argument will fail. The all-important truth will have more weight when results are displayed; and the sooner we learn this the better. How can we hope the gospel to sway and move forward, unless there appears visible results in the lives of those who have already espoused it? Has not the world some ground to challenge what we claim to be true, if they see lack of harmony, miserable failure, and atrophy in resolution in our lives? The world needs a religion that can be put to practical uses, and if we can supply and demonstrate it by good works, we have given them a boon divine, and it will create a prestige in the world. Can we indeed win if we call ourselves saints and fail to do what he says? "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say?"

A nation's progress in the arts of civilization is traceable to true motives, good and just laws, honest actions, and a unison of purpose of its leaders for all concerned. This certainly is true in the kingdom of God. Education alone will not eradicate sin and vice. The ancient Athenians and Romans were intellectual, but vice and corruption predominated. Education in the sciences, arts, and true religion has no power to purify and regenerate within itself; but if that education is coupled with true resolve to act in harmony with its principles, we can expect differently. The physician would say a knowledge of a disease would not uproot it from the system; but an application of a true remedy in faithfulness, in accord with that knowledge, would. Knowledge is indispensable to salvation; but this is not all, for good works must follow its acquisition.

In our efforts for better results, we should be impressed with the fact that individual righteousness contributes much to the elevation of the whole church. If we long to see the church assume a more glorious endowment of power and spiritual graces, we should see to it that we contribute our part to make it such. Many times we are the victims of ill feelings, or we victimize one by our ill feelings, and force ourselves to think we are right and the others are wrong; and thus goaded by such broodings we let our troubles grow upon us until by our own unwillingness to do justice to God, to his gospel, and to man, we are ready to let go of the work and ride our hobby-horse back into the world. Many times we are blind to our own faults, but when we look upon others we see readily as though we were looking through a lens that magnified a hundred times. "Love one another as I have loved you," is the law of the master mind. None can say, truly, they love God but those who entertain love for the brotherhood. Love, with the essential elements of good work, carries justice on its wings. The two are close friends and go hand in hand. To love God is to love his creation. Man is the creation of God. Our duty is obvious. If we love the attributes of truth, purity, love, and justice in God, then we can love them anywhere. Our love and justice is many times defective because our faith and love to God is defective. When the spiritual power of the gospel does not permeate us as it should, the fault lies with us. Officers who administer the law can never bring harmony, peace, and love if they act evasively in any way. Technical quibbling in the adjustment of matters of difficulty brings no end of trouble, and unless a strict enforcement of law is had, regardless of who is at fault, will cause much more trouble and impede our progress. Human favoritism, and the nursing of those who are at variance with the law, and are constant, willful, and many times malicious rebels to God, should not be coddled longer. True, there is and should be preference in certain ways in the church; but generally if not wholly when a high and holy calling is given, God works on the basis of merit. I may merit a certain line of temporal work by reason of adaptation, while another may be called to preach the gospel. We are all equal, if we do our respective duty, yet each has his respective capacity. No man should act out of his place given by the Lord. We have seen instances where individuals were out of their sphere of action in the church, for there was no degree of adaptation of the individual to the work, and a lack of success was glaringly apparent in almost every instance. Some may be given a line of spiritual work, and yet in the endeavor to discharge the work the bounds of the law are ignored to some extent, and "pull" and influence is resorted to, and seduces the grand motives of the gospel, and cherishes that which is wrong, and shields the guilty to the detriment of the church. True, "offenses will come," but if the individual who commits the act will not repent to the active and just officer of the law, to the church, and to his God after proper steps of law have been observed, and every legitimate means has been exhausted to get him to do so, then the church contains a graft that is dead, and its growth is impaired if it is retained. If, on the other hand, the offense is followed by repentance, how gladly they should be forgiven! As long as there is a disposition to struggle for the right, there is hope of the salvation of that individual, and he should be given our encouragement. In few words, our hope of progress lies in our allegiance to law in the curtailing of that which is persistently evil, and the retaining of that which is good, and advancing for the truth and right.

Should we not dote on our own petty, and many times great, sins as heartily as we do on others; and should we not condemn our own faults as severely as we do the faults of others? Can and will we do it? The difference of opinion and sentiment that so often arises does not necessarily require you to knock the other brother down to get him to see your point. The law of God, also the common rules of decency, contemplates that you shall not even get angry or use harsh or unbecoming words in such emergencies. Sometimes, because of our petty spite and jealousy, the faults of others loom up to that magnitude that it obscures everything else, including the individual's good traits. The entertainment of such trivial and foolish sentiments is sure to do harm to such a man. To that extent should we attain to righteousness, that we will admire qualities of good, even if there are evil traits as well, in any man, even if he be at enmity with us. Why should not a true man give another his just credit, instead of letting the latter's weaknesses, which possibly are no greater than his own, stand between and obscure everything else that is good? Some would go back to the code of carnal commandments which was given to Israel and seek to carry out "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth," as though somebody else's wrong justified you in committing another by way of retaliation.

In our progress on gospel lines we will see prejudice sink its hideous and cowardly head; we will behold the sunset of class distinction never to rise again; and to our vision will open up the retreat of interests for self and self only. Harmony and equality of the people, with pure religious fervor to God, naturally ostracizes iniquities of the baser sort. We will see social purity, noble endeavor for high thought in theory and in practice, and the enjoyment of personal liberties of conscience, and equality in all legitimate pursuits for good, if the true principles of law are observed that lead to happiness and true progress. Surely in no other way can we build wisely, for if our work be accomplished, and be of good to generations yet future, our only true progress, and that which we have attained be of benefit to them, it must be based on allegiance to that which is right. What material benefits there have been developed in science, the arts of civilization, and in many ways true religion, have evidently come to us in a way by reason of the fact that there was an allegiance to and a strong vindication of truth by our predecessors. These the lasting benefits of the world have invariably been founded on truth. This factor has made emancipation for liberty and civilization in a more stable way than the power of armies in gory war.

The church is the greatest factor in the development of morals. Religious philosophy of the heathen does not produce such results, and the degradation of whole nations is traceable to believing, teaching, and acting perversely to true law. The principles of justice of the Christian religion that have been held prominently before the people, have resulted, in many benefits to civilization, differing widely from the heathen world. Christianity in its right interpretation and application, always has contributed to the progress of the world and the instituting of better governments among men. No evil or detriment to the world can be laid at the feet of the cause of Christ, when the true law has been rightly understood and applied. The infidel may question the validity of the statement, claiming the debauchery and appalling condition of the middle ages are traceable to the religion of Christ. They say the wars and low condition of civilization were started and were invariably the result of men who were enthused with the idea of religion. Admitting religion to be the primary cause of much of the turmoil and strife of those dark, benighted ages, together with the injustice, strife, debauchery, perfidy, and murder, yet we wish to impress the fact that it was not the true religion that did it, but an emasculated Christianity. Seeing, as we do, the great practical results of the cause of Christ, even under adverse circumstances, when its pure principles have so often been imperfectly obeyed by men of the world, with what certainty, then, can we look for grander results when it is carried out more perfectly. As people of God, what an incentive this should be to speed us on to greater sacrifices and nobler action!

Ambition is not always the result of noble manhood. It may be retained by the debased of the world. The one that has it does not necessarily have to demonstrate a Christian life, for ambition can be resident in the bosoms of any who desire fame or power. Aspiration is the only aim of the wise and good. The latter, we might say, is the advanced condition of the other, founded on the principles of justice and truth. Aspiration is the outcropping of a noble ambition; thus when the ambition is noble it is an aspiration and is the crowning glory of all of God's people. When we see noble resolve, determined action, based on strong convictions, and a striving and longing after high ideals with the only purpose of using those acquirements for the exclusive purpose of doing good, and not for the aggrandizement of self, in such a one is noble aspiration. Few have come into this world but that at some stage of their history they have felt the yearning heart-throb for ambition in some avenue. A disposition to do something is all right, but when we let the harsh and unbecoming selfish motives encroach upon our better nature, prompting us to be hard and cruel to others, there is a dissension of that man consequent upon perverse action to true law; hence will follow in his course spiritual doom and destruction to legitimate progress.

What is man without honor and probity? To fight for supremacy and glut ambition by exploiting others, using methods admitted by the world to be questionable, is no way to serve God. God desires a more reasonable service, to the elimination of methods carnal and sinful. We see enough of such methods in the world. We behold its demoralizing effects in every city. The enrichment of the minority to the detriment of the majority is the constant grind that is persistently going on and is tolerated and many times legally permitted. Why should a man of God seek for advantages above his brother, and then seek to crush him should he oppose the wrong-doing? Such methods are only worldly and sinful, and the man in the church seeking to carry out such work should be curbed and disciplined.

A prevailing and evidently growing faith of the world is in money, and we call up instances of deliberate graft in high circles of our own country to prove it. Should such a condition obtain individually or collectively in the church, this shrine of material things for self will direct us from God and his law, and we climb down the ladder instead of up in progress to perfection. These attainments are right, but the acquirement of wealth is to be subservient to the high and grand intent of the gospel. When is used material things for proper purposes and for this intent do we struggle for it then the purpose is a grand one. The lesser should always be swayed by the greater. Whatever attainment we strive for, this object should be our incentive. To act in the acquirement of wealth independently can not bring progress, for the one is only subsidiary and is only a minor part of the constituency of the whole perfect law. In this regard our merit is to be regarded upon the hypothesis of our willingness to conserve the interests of the whole. Indeed it will be an important lesson learned when we show greater love and liberality by disparaging this conservative tendency for self-interests. Spiritual life and progress must include this important factor or else a perfect realization of what we are striving for can not be realized. At this juncture in our history it is clearly evident we need to specialize to secure gratifying results on this important feature of the solidarity of the great brotherhood of man. We must stand for this great truth of Christianity. We are not our own for we are “bought with a price.” Our honest endeavor should be to confer benefits as well as only to receive them. Any man rich or poor in temporal things who seeks only his own ascendancy, whose only ambition is to gratify self, plays the part of renegade and traitor to the brotherhood. We can not preserve inviolate this high and holy requirement of God's law when we traduce its glorious import and make it pander to selfish greed. When self is the center and all else is tributary, it is but idle words to say a love for God dwells in that man. A mere profession of this character is a contradiction. It is correct and but natural to indulge in this illustrious hope; but while we indulge let us not forget the practical side and shut our eyes to the hard work of attainment. Looking at it from a worldly standpoint, wealth or poverty either effects alienation of the two. This is modern, medieval, and ancient history. Wealth seeks classification of its own kind, poverty is forced by reason largely of circumstance to go to the other extreme; hence no union of the brotherhood exists. Under such prevailing circumstances the brotherhood goes to smash. Why should a man because of his advantages and shrewdness mass wealth, live an excluded life from the majority of mankind in a palace, being insensible to conditions of his fellow men who are not so favored? Is this a true and rightful condition in God's sight? Well, hardly, if God's word is of any consequence as evidence. The logic of our true position forces us to abandon carnal weapons. Indeed, can true reciprocity of our duties to humanity exist without each other's cooperation? The only true reciprocity is that of great brotherhood; and each is dependent and needs the other's sustaining hand. Our religion has but one purpose—the salvation of man. In the light, inspiration, and full import of that law it makes for harmony, peace, love, joy, and a oneness of purpose. In reason, how can it be said "I am better than thou," and then seek to feather my own nest and take advantages and liberties just because we can? If God intends us to be equal in spiritual things, why not in temporal things also? God's voice is not silent on this matter. If we have indeed pledged ourselves never to give up to the enemy and the great object of establishing Zion been attained, let us go forth willingly and obediently and do all that is required. Can we expect to mass power and strength by inaction? Can we indeed obtain success unless we do something? Divided we are but weaklings—mere puppets in efficiency; but united and armed with the holy cause of Christ we are invincible.

We have read some of the best thoughts by some of our best thinkers in recent columns of our papers, upon this question so potent, and now before us, on Zion's redemption. Its diversity of principles advocated can not all be right, for two opposites can not be true. In honest judgment, should not those specified by the Lord over this department be the proper ones to be leaders and their judgment better than ours? Some would have us think the body politic should be the only criterion of judgment and then advocate their ideas of the matter as though it were the actual opinion of all in contradistinction to that of the bishop in Zion. What material benefit could the Lord have had in establishing this office if no rights and privileges were connected therewith? Every distinctive quorum of official workers have their especial rights and privileges under the law and should be respected as such, and only when they act perversely to God's way are they amenable to his law. Hence a solution to this great problem will best be worked out by recognizing this principle founded on simple justice. Through the difficulties that environ this important question it is perfectly plain some adjustment must be reached; and that by observing that given by those who are especial workers in this capacity. This does not necessarily mean we are to follow them blindly without any reason for our action. Should a flagrant disregard of law be insisted upon, why in all consistency can not they be apprehended by the law the same as others?

Where shall attainment in moral, intellectual, and spiritual growth end? The profoundities of reason and thought, science, and the deeply imbedded principles of Christian philosophy convey the unmistakable truth of constant progression. We have reached longingly forth for a more stable ground giving us permanency of foothold. We have found it in the eternal word of Jehovah, restored in these latter days, and on this footing every humble Saint must predicate his calculation wisely, and thereupon we will achieve success. Faith, hope, and charity; three priceless treasures of attainment if reached. Faith in God; hope of the future; and charity to God and mankind.

In closing we will say: We are approaching a condition of most magnificent progress. It is now that good habits and sound discipline is most needed and will tell most powerfully upon the life of the church. We must think closely and reason from correct premises. Can we rely on the integrity of our experience and answer the demands now required? Has our past been a growth, shaping itself for this turning-point in our destiny in Zion's redemption? Are we prepared to arise for this mighty emergency, and in the spiritual righteousness now attained grasp the enlarged measures of a splendid opportunity now dawning? The grand chances will be freighted with glorious results if we fail not in shouldering these grave responsibilities. Among us the question of victory and success will be quite generally recognized as a question of will. This opportunity is waiting. Shall we occupy and succeed? The successful ones will do it in the field of effort and stand among heroes. Let us enshrine this glorious object as the ennobling sun of our being, and let God's law be our inner sanctuary for ultimate success over all. For courage in the conflict let Mackay's beautiful lines dwell with us:

"If thou can'st plan a noble deal
And never flag till it succeed,
Though in the strife the heart should bleed,
Whatever obstacle: control,
Thine hour will come—go on, true soul;
Thou'llt win the prize, thou'llt reach the goal."

S. S. SMITH.
THE PARABLE AS I UNDERSTAND IT.

In Matthew the twenty-fifth chapter, we first have the parable of the ten virgins. In this we have the bridegroom and his people, the wise and foolish virgins. Jesus here, after the tarrying-time, comes and rewards the wise virgins, admitting them to the supper, while the foolish virgins were rejected, and left outside. After this, it reads, “Now I will liken these things unto a parable, for it is like a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants and delivered unto them his goods.” His goods here represents the work of the church committed to his servants, and each was required to work according to his ability; the same as it is now. Talent here represents what a man works with, or at, as well as his mental ability in either the spiritual or temporal line. If he works in the spiritual, he is expected to develop and become more proficient, and do better work than when he first begun; perhaps he may do twice as much to build up the kingdom, or even more, according to his capacity for development.

The same is true all along the temporal line: a man should, by experience in any line of work, become more proficient and do better work. Talent may mean intellectual or mental power; or it may mean money, or that which we gain in trade and commerce. We would use the word dollar now, instead of talent in money matters, as explained in Doctrine and Covenants 101:12; 81:4. Here the Lord uses the word talent; but the explanation in concordance to Doctrine and Covenants says “read dollars instead of talents.”

Now this man traveling into a far country is the lord of these servants, and after a long time returns to reckon with his servants. Do not forget, now, this is an explanation of the things given in the first of this chapter, where it calls some one who went away or tarried, son of Man: bridegroom; and at his coming (son of Man); when he comes to reckon and reward; judge; justify or condemn: This is evidently our Lord.

In Luke 19, the parable refers to the same thing, only is worded differently. He gave it because the Jews taught that the kingdom of God should immediately appear. (I use the Inspired Translation.)

Now let us look at the justice in judgment. Surely the God of Israel will do right! Those servants had his goods to use. They had the priesthood, or authority to administer the gospel ordinances and the law of Christ, by which they could induct men and women into the kingdom. They had the work as their field in which to labor. They must sow the gospel seed by preaching the word, they must water it by thoroughly instructing members before admitting them into the kingdom. Then they gather in the grain, or baptize them into the kingdom. Of course God assists them in their work by the aid of the Spirit.

Along the temporal line we have the world to live in, the earth to cultivate, the sun, the rain, and the air to make the earth produce what we need; but we must plow the ground, sow the seed, cultivate, then gather in the matured grain, if we have any. Now, whose duty is it to plow, sow, and reap? The Lord does his part in all things. He furnishes the land, the sunshine, and the rain. God, through natural laws (we would say his laws), works and assists every man that cultivates the soil, or raises cattle, or produces anything for the good of humanity. He gives wisdom to men in all lines of work, by their applying themselves diligently, according to his instruction.

Now, is it right for God to reward men that work and bring many into the kingdom by preaching the gospel, teaching others how to live to gain the best results and living an industrious and godly life? Is it right for the Lord to reward men in other lines of business and work who increase their talents (or dollars) by honest, faithful, diligent effort; and give what they can spare according to the law to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and help the poor to comfortable conditions? I believe all would say, yes! Would it be wrong to condemn a lazy preacher that had the talent to preach, and the authority to administer gospel ordinances but refused to do it when he might have done so, and thus have been a blessing to others and increased his own ability to do still more good? Would it be wrong to condemn a man in any other line of business or work, if he had the physical and mental ability to do business and work and had the opportunity, but refused to do it? I believe all will say it would not be wrong to condemn such a man. He ought to be condemned.

Now, whose duty is it to preach, plow, sow, and reap? When the means are placed in our hands, and we have the ability to do the work and we will not use our talent, because the Lord did not sow the seed and gather in the grain, we let our talent lie idle, wrap it in a napkin, fold our hands, and sit down, when the reward of admission to the supper of the Lamb, or to be a ruler in the kingdom, was to be given for doing that part of the work! Who would say the lord or the nobleman was unjust because he left the idle servant outside after giving him equal chance with the others, and he absolutely would do nothing after agreeing to work, and accepting the talent, thus breaking the covenant and forfeiting his right to the reward of the faithful laborer? Echo answers, Who? Justice is one of God’s attributes, and “mercy can not rob justice.”

Luke says, “Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, O, wicked servant!” The Lord condemns him from his own standpoint. He knew it was his duty to occupy or work faithfully and do his part in order to earn the reward, and he refused to do it. Hence he was unwise, unfaithful, and refused to use the talent he had accepted.

Now let us look at the wise, unjust steward of Luke 16. In this parable Jesus is showing the difference between the ways of the world and the ways of his faithful children. He shows how this man made friends for himself by wrongdoing his employers to help his creditors; but he does not commend this steward as a just man, but commends him as wise, from a worldly standpoint, in making worldly friends that he might get a living here, by favoring those men and placing them under obligations to him. In other words it was what we would call a combined steal in a business transaction. Then he condemns the action and shows the true riches would never be intrusted to such a steward. "He that is unfaithful in little is unfaithful in much." That kind of work debars that wise, worldly steward from ever possessing the true riches.

So we think the parables are all right, and we should seek wisdom to understand and apply them properly. I believe the nobleman is the Lord, and his judgments were just. I think it is clear from what is stated that God expects his children to increase in every line of business and work, and accumulate this world's goods, as well as knowledge and righteousness, and increase in numbers. The Lord directs the renting of farms by Saints. (See Doctrine and Covenants 38:8) "And they that have farms that cannot be sold, let them be left or rented as seemeth them good." It would be no worse to rent money for a fair price than to rent land. The principle is the same. This is in harmony with Doctrine and Covenants 48:2: "It must needs be necessary that ye save all the money that ye can, and that ye obtain all that ye can in righteousness, that in time ye may be enabled to purchase lands for an inheritance, even the city." This is emphasized in Doctrine and Covenants 57:4, 5, where Sidney Gilbert was commanded to establish a store and sell goods (in Independence) that he might obtain money to buy lands for the good of the Saints; and to enlarge his business by sending out clerks or traveling salesmen. Phelps was to sell his publications to the world, if he could, and obtain all he could in righteousness. Again, N. K. Whitney was to retain the store at Kirtland, evidently to make money; for he was to impart all the money he could spare, to be sent up to Zion.

Now, if these men made nothing more than a living, and gave all the profits to their customers in rebates or low prices, where would the money to buy lands come from? Again in Doctrine and Covenants 81:4 it is clearly shown that the Lord expects every man to make all he can in righteousness for the benefit of the church. Any line of business or work that does not degrade the morals or injure the community would be allowable and right. This is in harmony with all we have given on those lines. The statement where "greed for gain" is mentioned, applies where men desire to get gain by improper methods, or for selfish and improper purposes. It is wrong for a man to try to enrich himself. His necessities should be amply supplied, and all the balance given to the Lord's storehouse to advance the interests of his work, in spreading the truth and helping the poor and needy.

It is not greed for gain, if you are trying to make money in a lawful way to help the poor and make them comfortable. You are not laboring for money then, you are laboring for the benefit and blessing of others. "He that labors for money in Zion shall perish."—Book of Mormon, p. 99. The chief ambition of every man in the church should be to see which could do the most with what he has to work with, in either spiritual or secular lines, to build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness. This would be every man improving on his talents according to his abilities; all laboring with an eye single to the glory of God, the object being to build up his kingdom. All those that labor in righteousness will receive the divine approval, and the idler that refuses to use his talent and do his part will justly be left outside.

This is my opinion, formed from my understanding of God's law. Hoping to still try to improve on my talent, be a worker, and finally be found among the wise virgins, I am, as ever,

G. H. Hilliard.

OUR BOYS.—NO. 3.
The Law in Zion.

"Christian education is the only true education. It makes for character, it means to save, to economize, the whole man, to utilize every atom of his potentiality. It puts the whole boy to school."—Du Bois.

"Inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion or in any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands: and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord. And the inhabitants of Zion shall also observe the Sabbath day to keep it holy."—Doctrine and Covenants 68:3.

In our last we found that little children are redeemed from the foundation of the world, and that up to the time when they begin to be accountable before God, Satan has no power to tempt them. But here we learn that there is a work for parents to do during this time—a great work and a work for the doing of which they will be held responsible unto the heavenly Father who has intrusted these immortal souls to their keeping.

We also find that work plainly and clearly set forth—so plainly indeed, that it is impossible for any one to misunderstand or misconstrue it. So no things—like the Word of Wisdom, for instance—have not been given as a commandment; but in regard to the education of our children the Lord declares, “This shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion or in any of her stakes which are organized.”

When our boy arrives at the age of eight years the Lord says “he shall be baptized for the remission of his sins.” Evidently, then, he has arrived at the age of accountability, for baptism is one of the final steps admitting him into the church, and the law says that “no one can be received into the church of Christ unless he has arrived unto the years of accountability before God and is capable of repentance.” (Doctrine and Covenants 17:20)

In his “Natural Way,” under the division of “Nurture by atmosphere,” Professor Du Bois lays great stress upon the value of repetition in the nurture of the child. Nor does he confine this need to the child only, but insists that by this means an atmosphere conducive to the reception of the truth which we wish to impart is created. Doctor Greggs asserts that in the beginning of Christ’s ministry men were brought to Jesus by the creation of a Christ-atmosphere in the community. He says:

“The disciples in the beginning filled the air with the name and works and praises of Jesus Christ. They talked Him into popularity. They repeated his sayings and retold his parables and preached over his sermons wherever they went. They talked of his miracles to all they met and said publicly one to another, ‘When the Messiah cometh will He do greater works than these?’” They took the atmosphere created by living with Jesus and in time baptism followed as a natural result.

It was this: everybody wanted to see Jesus and hear Him talk of them when they sitteth in thine house and when thou walkest by the way and when thou liest down and when thou risest up,” was the instruction given to ancient Israel and if possible this diligence should be coupled in our day when temptations are so multiplied and there is so much to entice the child of ordinary intelligence who is instructed as God would have us instruct our children both by precept and example can not understand.

“You shall teach them diligently unto thy children and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down and when thou risest up.”

How can we interpret the intent of this instruction otherwise than for the purpose of creating in the home the perfect atmosphere by which not only the children should be nourished, built up, and made to grow strong in the knowledge of the one true God, but the people—the parents who under God had founded these homes—should receive the wisdom and guidance, the strength and grace necessary to both exemplify and execute the law which the Lord had given to them?

Now while Israel of old was often called a stiff-necked and rebellious people, yet to this day they stand forth in the sight of all the world as living witnesses to the divine wisdom of this instruction given to parents for the training of their children.

It was but natural, then, to expect that the disciples of Jesus—men who had themselves been brought up and trained in this law of repetition—should go to work to create for the Master this “Christ-atmosphere” to which Doctor Greggs refers.

Nor is it necessary for Latter Day Saints to go back as far as the days of Christ to find an example of this same method of teaching. The are homes to-day—and, thank God, many of them—where this same method prevails. Homes in which the gospel of Christ and its power to save is often—far more often—the theme dwelt upon than any other and to the vitality and power of the influence thus created there are to-day thousands upon thousands of living witnesses. The writer himself is one. On the other hand stand the apostacy whose false teachings and corrupt practices had made the very name of Latter Day Saint odious—a stench in the nostrils of all honest men and women, no inducement was strong enough to entice her to hear the truth defended from the rostrum. But while this was the case it was not a matter so easily accomplished to live in an atmosphere permeated by its subtle influence—to hear it talked of day by day—yes, almost hour by hour—and escape the contagious influence. Little by little prejudice gave way and the desire to hear and learn more became so strong that first attendance at the social meeting and afterward at the public service followed, and in time baptism followed as a natural result.

But now we come to a very important matter and one which deserves the closest scrutiny. It is this: atmospheres. Does it control our lives—transforming them into the likeness of the Christ-life, or is it powerless to mold the heart and control the life? Are our homes living witnesses of the power it has to create in them—“pure speech, gentle manners, sweet temper, strong handling, firm stepping in virtue”? Is there in them the Christ-atmosphere of faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness and charity? If the law which must prevail in Zion or any of her stakes which are organized is being carried out, these must be there for they form a part and an indispensable part of that which parents are required to teach their children during the years when Satan is not allowed to tempt them as well as in all the years that follow while under their care. Analyze these virtues one by one and see if there is in any one of them a principle which the child of ordinary intelligence who is instructed as God would have us instruct our children both by precept and example can not understand.

“You shall teach them diligently unto thy children and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house and when thou walkest by the way and when thou liest down and when thou risest up,” was the instruction given to ancient Israel, and if possible the diligence should be doubled in our day when temptations are so multiplied and there is so much to entice the young into the ways of sin and folly.

“Some homes,” says a recent writer, “are atmospherically poisoned by a critical, censorious, sneering, iconoclastic or burlesquing spirit. They are rife with depression rather than appreciation . . . Again, a helter-skelter, whimsical, disordered, inharmonious, unsystematic, unpunctual, worrying, inconstant household is not likely to be a very healthful present or future influence.

Such homes as these are not homes in which the gospel of Christ has its perfect work—indeed it seems a misnomer to call them homes at all. And yet, that such do exist we know and also that such are found (though we surely hope not often) among the Saints. From homes like these could we expect our boys to go forth into the battle of life prepared successfully to take their places side by side with those who have come from homes so different homes where love reigns supreme and which are surrounded and filled with the life-giving, soul-sati-flying atmosphere of the pure gospel of the Son of God? Surely not, for such expectation would be vain. "If the home life is inharmonious nothing can go well. The root of all, unless this is wholesome and firm, the flower must needs be poor and the fruit bad. Let us learn again the infinite importance of keeping the peace at home and the need of cultivating the noble qualities of mind and heart if this is to be done well."

Earlier in this series we made this statement: The home having been instituted of God and made the foundation of the whole social fabric, it is only natural to expect that he should give special directions concerning it. This we find has been done. The right for our boys to be well born has been specially provided for. In section 49, paragraph 5, of Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord says: "Marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife and they twinship of husband and wife must enter: and from all others during your lives."

Questions on November Reading.

What would you include in Christian education? How long will it put the whole boy to school? How will Christian education utilize every atom of a man's potentiality? How does the word of God provide for the beginning of such an education? Are parents responsible for the use of the time before their children begin to be accountable? For what are they to be prepared by the time they are eight years old? What is the command in regard to this? Should this teaching be put off until just before the time set for baptism? Should it not rather be given "here a little and there a little" through the preceding years, just as the child becomes capable of understanding it? What do you understand by the doctrine of repentance? Is the command, "They shall also teach their children to pray and to walk uprightly" as binding as the other part of this instruction? Of what value is repetition in creating an atmosphere conducive to the reception of truth? Did the disciples of Christ create such an atmosphere? What are the points suggestive that go to make up a wholesome atmospheric influence? Is there need of repetition in these things? or, we might ask, Can parents ever afford to vary from them? How did the Lord provide for repetition in the teaching of the children of ancient Israel? What effect would this have upon the children? What would it enable the parents to do? How were the people of Israel commanded to love the Lord? Is less required of us? Where did the Lord say his words should be? If we have this love and this regard for God's word, will we not from the abundance of our hearts teach it to our children, and nurture them with it in the atmosphere of our homes? Will it not pay us to make a close scrutiny of ourselves and our homes to determine which kind of an atmosphere we are making and to set diligently about securing to our children the good that must come when our lives are controlled by the pure gospel of the Son of God?

SALT LAKE CITY, October 3, 1906.

Editors Herald: Just now we are in Salt Lake City, holding forth on the streets daily, that is, Brn. A. M. Chase, J. D. Stead, and J. Frank Curtis have been, and succeeded in interesting the crowds that came to hear. Brn. Chase and J. E. Vanderwood are now in the southern settlements, while Brn. Curtis is continuing the work here. A few weeks ago when Bro. Curtis was preaching in Provo, he succeeded in making it sufficiently interesting for the Bringhamites to move there to try an effort at defense. So the shrewd, learned, and resourceful judge, Henry S. Tanner, was selected and sent down from this place in order to meet our little representative that was talking loud on the streets. Agreements were entered into, the Provo tabernacle was secured, and a large audience greeted the speakers. Bro. Curtis is young and of short experience, so the Bringhamites, it seems, concluded that if they would send down the cunning, crafty, and experienced lawyer, Tanner, he would make short work of our little Frank, and they could herald forth a great victory gained over "Josephites," and thus insist the feeling of unrest growing in the city of Provo. But our boy met the champion bravely and successfully. The Reorganized folks were satisfied with the defense made; and as proof of the sentiment prevailing and influence of the right among the people, Bro. Curtis baptized eight persons soon after the discussion closed, one of whom had been a Bringhamite elder; and others are interested.

Since the General Conference, the writer has been trying to keep in touch with the field laborers, and the important things transpiring in the mission, a few of which are here noticed.

On Wednesday, August 15, Denver, Colorado, was reached in order to attend the reunion and conference announced to be held in that place. Bro. Sam Brennan met me at the depot, and I was made comfortable at the Brennan home for the night. The following day I moved to Bro. Charles Everett's, where I received a welcome and pleasant home during my stay in Denver. During the day, met with Brn. A. F. Shupe, C. Everett, E. C. Briggs, James Kemp, C. J. Spurlock, and in the evening met with the reunion committee at the church. There seemed to be a want of enthusiasm and lack of confidence in the reunion being made a success. Preparations were lagging, and the outlook was not very rosy.

But the Denver Saints were not of the kind to give up for trifles, so went ahead with the preparations.

Friday, the 17th, tents were put up, and arrangements were made quite satisfactorily, only there was no provision made to furnish meals on the ground. This lack was met, however, by individuals, mainly by Bro. and Sr. Ermayl Curtis, Bro. and Sr. Wren, and the two Putney sisters present of pleasant memory. Also, Bro. Z. Davis made all welcome at his restaurant down-town, who chose to call. So provision was arranged for all. Things in readiness, Bro. E. C. Briggs preached in the afternoon the first discourse of the reunion, which was well received. By Saturday, the people woke up to the fact that there was a reunion in operation. The interest increased. But it appeared there was to be a heavy burden.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
The conference for the Utah District was held on Saturday, and the business was transacted in a very agreeable manner. A reunion was provided to be held again at Provo in 1907. The meetings closed with a feeling of good cheer and contentment inspiring the Saints; all glad that they were privileged to attend the meetings.

After adjournment, a few days were spent with Brn. Chase, Stead, and Curtis, in introducing on the streets of Salt Lake City, which was successful. The church may well prize these fearless and capable defenders of the right. Seeing that the country was safe at this point, Friday, September 21, found me at Hagerman, Idaho, in time to hear Bro. A. A. Baker preach a very good discourse at the close of the Religio and Sunday-school exercises, conducted during the day by Bro. Erwin Condit and sister, and Sr. Addie Condit.

The 22d, the district conference convened at ten o'clock in the forenoon, Brn. John and S. D. Condit, A. J. Layland, A. A. Baker, and Hyrum Grimmer of the missionary force being present: the latter, the president of the district. The business was transacted with dispatch and satisfaction. The other meetings held were good. Sunday afternoon a heavy wind-storm came up and it looked as though our evening services would be defeated (we were occupying in a grove); but the sisters met the emergency by preparing Sr. Condit's tent under her direction, and those present gathered in and about the tent for the evening service, which seemed to be enjoyed. The brethren did not feel satisfied with what they had accomplished during the summer, but were well and hopeful. Bro. Baker was nervous over having to travel so far in order to find some one to preach to. Was tired of looking at land. However, when one starts out fishing he does not always know how far he will have to travel to find a river in which to cast his hook, nor how long he must wait in expectation for a bite; and then it may be just the kind of meddler he does not care to bother with. But in order to succeed one must fish away with steady nerve, take chances as they come.

The meetings closed with a cheerful feeling inspiring the Saints. But this is an ideal place to attend meetings; watermelons and cantaloupes by the thousands, without money and without price; peach-trees breaking down with fruit; pears, plums, grapes, and apples in abundance; all of this out in the desert of Idaho.

Back to Salt Lake City to find Brn. Stead and Curtis continuing meetings on the street, with good effect with some at least. But a cold wind from the north followed by a frost admonishes that this kind of warfare will soon have to close. Encouraging news comes from Chase and Vanderwood. In the meantime difficulties pending at Delta, Colorado, have been adjusted in favor of the church; so peace and harmony reigns all along the line.

This city is rapidly improving in many ways, in the line of city building. The old three-cornered political fight is still on between the American, Democratic, and Republican parties, each claiming to be the one that can be trusted with safety. The Tribune has the Republican and Democratic parties yoked together, and Reed Smoot cracking the Mormon whip over them. The movement against President Joseph F. Smith to have him show cause why he should come out in defiance of law with No. 43, Royal Smith, and have him registered as legitimate; the big October conference at hand; the arrest last night of the chief of police on suspicion of loving boodle, are pointers to show that things are doing out here in this Rocky Mountain Zion, and the end is not yet.

WM. H. KELLEY.

San Antonio, Texas, October 2, 1906.

Editors Herald: A few lines from this part of God's vineyard may not be amiss. There are doubtless many who will be glad to hear from the San Antonio Branch, and to know that a few of the faithful and untiring are still striving to help roll on this great and grand work, under the many disadvantages—when we consider that in our city of sixty-two thousand inhabitants, about sixty per cent are Catholics, twenty-five per cent are Protestant, ten per cent Jews, something less than four per cent that hold to nothing, and less than one and one half per cent Latter Day Saints. Still how grand it all does seem, when we can picture out before us the little stone that was cut out of the mountain without hands, and can hear it rolling onward in thunder tones, and can see in an open vision where it has smote the image, that it is gradually crumbling, and that we can truly say, Babylon is falling, Babylon is falling; that the way is opening up, and that soon the little stone will roll into every nation for a witness before that great and notable day.

We rejoice in this great work. It is truly a marvelous work and a wonder. We have passed through some severe trials; but our future prospects look bright.

We were made to rejoice on the 8th of September, when our missionary, Bro. W. H. Mannering led two into the waters of baptism, one of them being my son Willie. They were the fruits of our Sunday-school. And after a twelve nights' continued preaching in the northwest part of the city by our untiring Bro. Mannering, assisted by Brn. Davenport and Jett of the local elders, he, Bro. Mannering, on the sixteenth day of September led five more into the waters of baptism, three of them being the fruits of his preaching, and two more the fruits of our Sunday-school. Surely the Spirit rested upon him, and he preached the restored gospel in such plainness and fullness that a wayfaring man though a fool need not err therein. Much good was accomplished. Several others are near the kingdom, and one nice old lady says that she is ready to be baptized just as soon as Bro. Mannering returns.

We were all rejoicing in the fact that Bro. Mannering was the right man in the right place, and was by his ceaseless efforts determined, by the help of God, to preach the gospel in the many corners of this great city, where the sound of the pure gospel has never been heard. And, too, his companion, Sr. Mannering, is a great helper to the cause. She is always to be found at her post of duty. We had truly learned to love them, and our hearts were made sad on the 19th of September, when they took their departure for the extreme southeast part of the State on account of urgent missionary work in new fields that he had recently opened up. May God's blessings rest upon them.

Our Sunday-school, of which I have the honor of being superintendent, has grown and prospered for something like two years, with all opposition we may be able to plant the seed of the pure gospel in the hearts of many more precious souls.

We have also recently elected a full quota of branch officers, and I believe they have a goodly degree of God's Holy Spirit that will enable them to carry the work on to victory. Our faithful old Bro. Davenport was chosen to preside, Bro. Jett for priest, Bro. O. G. Davenport for teacher, and Bro. J. P. Neal for deacon. May the spirit of their office and calling rest upon each of them, that they may carry God's work on in this part of the district.

Our district conference and a ten-day reunion will convene October 12, with the Bandera Branch, about fifty miles west of here in the mountains. Quite a number of the San Antonio Saints are fixing to go, and we are looking forward for a good time in general. We expect to go through by team in private conveyances, as there is no railroad running there. The mountain scenery is grand to look at, and though the roads are somewhat rough, we expect to have a jolly crowd, and a feast on the good things of God.

Ever praying for the advancement of God's work, and that when we have ended this mortal existence, we may all meet on the shores of eternity, I am,

ED N. MCRAE.

GARLAND, Alabamas, October 3, 1906.

Dear Herald: I feel thankful to say to the Saints that I love to read the HERALD, especially the letters of the Saints. It makes me feel that I am not doing anything for the Lord. But, dear Saints, my desire is to try to live right, and do more for the Lord in the future than I have in the past; for I believe it is the true church of God, and I desire to live right and raise my children aright in the true church of God. I am thankful that God has revealed it to me.

So, dear Saints, let us do all we can for the Lord our God. When any of my family get sick, the first thing I want is the elders to administer to them. And if we will live right the Lord will hear and answer our prayers.

God is faithful, ever faithful, I will trust him all the way; God is faithful, ever faithful, He will keep us night and day.

My desire is to be found faithful to the work of the Lord.

Independence Items.

During the last quarter there has been an average of six baptisms per month, also eighteen were received by letter, fully that number representing the blessings of little ones, and there were five marriage ceremonies performed.

We regret to report that several of our number both old and young continue sadly afflicted, and a few we have lost by death.

The Saints have been, as usual, blessed in all their meetings of late, and among the elders we have been ministered to by Brn. Bond, Salyards, H. O. Smith, Arber, Hilliard, F. A. Smith, T. C. Kelley, and R. J. Parker.

"Save yourselves from this untoward generation," was the subject presented by the first speaker mentioned, who on the morning of the 16th ult. gave a clear view of our spiritual needs; and speaking of the three books, he said, "It is astonishing the amount of knowledge some people have, but equally remarkable the little some of us know about the books of the church."

In the evening Bro. Salyards, after reading at length one of Saint Paul's epistles, made the statement that "there is a necessity of spiritual power within the church before it can become missionary force in the world"; that "the men and women of the church have a duty to perform and should take a lively interest in the great problems that confront it." In line with the text, our brother, after a sermon replete with earnest thought, closed with the prayer that indeed we may all be "the children of the light."

One of the important lessons of the pulpit was that preached on the following Sabbath morning, the theme of which was "A present salvation as well as a spiritual salvation characteristic of the teachings of the gospel throughout all the ages of the world." The text was taken from section 86, "A word of wisdom," and it was forcefully treated upon by Bro. H. O. Smith. A couple of his sayings may now be sufficient: "Tea and coffee deaden the intellectual power within the church before it can become a missionary force in the world"; that "the men and women of the church have a duty to perform and should take a lively interest in the great problems that confront it." In line with the text, our brother, after a sermon replete with earnest thought, closed with the prayer that indeed we may all be "the children of the light."

Yesterday, October 7, was a lovely autumn day. The foliage had just begun to put on its russet hue, the air was clear and bracing, and the Saints made known their appreciation of the ministering brethren by a goodly attendance at the services. Brn. T. C. Kelley and R. J. Parker occupied to the edification of all, and Bro. P. Anderson of the Twelve assisted at the afternoon sacrament-meeting. (On the Sunday previous, Brn. Hilliard and F. A. Smith held forth.) The attendance at the Sunday-school was five hundred and eighteen, and the interest and deportment were excellent. The average attendance at the Relief Meetings is a little less than two hundred; but those who attend are evidently blessed with zeal and love for the work, and the efficiency of the officers and teachers together with the animated singing and fine talent displayed in the weekly programs bespeak a sure development and final success of the society.

As to news-notes, among the events long looked for was the time-honored service of the practical man over the theorist in the case of the master-skimmer, L. M. Jones, who, having put a boat in the Missouri River, showed on the 24th of September that the old "Muddy" is not only navigable but is "one of the greatest of the waterways of America."

The improvement of the city streets and avenues still goes on, and now River Boulevard is being graded and renovated with the rest. There will soon be a granitoid walk on the east side of the Temple Lot, which already, with its newly-mown sward and trimmed elm-, ash-, and maple-trees, has put on a fine appearance under the skilled management of our Hedrickite brethren, to whom the thanks of all their quiet neighbors are due.

This is the time of fairs and fall festivities, in which the greater part of us seem more or less interested. But lack of space forbids a full notice of the suppers, entertainments, feasts, parades, and carnivals now going on all around us; also of the mighty crowding of the street-cars, the din and dust of the free saloons in town, and the canvas-top beer-wagon that now goes to them unmercifully.

And there are scores of blind horses among them too. Twain says, "If you want to see the very heart and home of cripples go to Constantinople."

But if you would like to witness the stamping-ground of the blind horse, come to Missouri. But as notice was lately given out that Miss Hoffman, the temperance agent, has been appointed to serve as the association may direct, all officers to hold until time, place, and all necessary arrangements left in the hands of the sub-missionary in charge and the district president. The acting district president, J. W. Paxton, and A. C. Silvers, were authorized to dispose of the old tent, and to raise funds to purchase a new one. [Those desiring to assist in this way may forward money to . . .]

We are glad the lady named above is coming; and may she, with her earnest pleadings for the welfare of humanity, do much good.

In favor we quote a late paragraph of Everybody's Magazine: "He who points out the evils of the time, and indicates how they may be remedied; he who points to the good that may be done; he, we believe, has a place in our progressive, active, strenuous, earnest America life, whether he be a man or a magazine.

Extracts from Letters.

Z. M. Santee, Zearing, Illinois: "I have just been reading Isaiah 33:15-23; and I want to live as portrayed there, that I may be permitted to dwell in Zion with the redeemed. I know if we live faithful, and obey every word that proceeded from the mouth of God, we will gain the crown that he has promised. So let us not doubt any revelation that has been given to the church in regard to the sanitarium, or any other revelation, because we all know that if we can not trust God's servants whom he has called in these last days, we will never be able to redeem Zion. Let us all try with might, mind, and strength to obey God in all things, keeping ourselves unspotted from worldly lusts, so that we may all receive the glad promise when the dear Savior comes."

Eli Hayer, Castana, Iowa: "Just closed our tent-meeting. Held twenty-three meetings in sixteen days. Ten baptisms. Several are interested and fully convinced, and may obey sometime, we hope and trust. Bro. Crabb was here before I came, and had held about a week's meetings, so in all we have had over thirty meetings at this place, seven miles northwest of Moorhead. Expect to attend Dow City conference next Saturday and Sunday."

$25,000.00 NEEDED
By INDEPENDENCE COAL MINING COMPANY

In order to develop and open up the new coal-mining interests near Independence and also make necessary preparations for homes for mine-workers, it is necessary that sufficient capital be secured within a short time. The amount sought for is very small compared with the capital of other coal-mining interests and, for various reasons, the directors of this company desire to keep the working and controlling power with the church members, if possible.

The opening up of an undeveloped coal field at the edge of a densely populated community of 400,000 population is a matter of considerable consideration, as the product is part of the necessities of life, with freight rates practically cut off, making this enterprise an exceptional one.

Five hundred and sixty-nine acres have been leased for fifty years and one hundred and fifty-four purchased, making in all seven hundred and twenty-three acres of coal-land in one body, on the line of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, two miles east of Independence.

The company already has coal-mines at Napoleon, Missouri, in operation and a successful and prosperous retail business, making this a bonâ fide, paying investment.

Money seeking investment can find no better place, and will bring the best kind of satisfaction, as it will bring good returns to the investor and results that are much sought for, also benefiting the unemployed, scattered, pressed-down. poor church members by placing them in a position to help themselves.

The 564 acres are intended for homes for mine-workers, to be sold at a reasonable price, and we solicit the co-operation of miners to purchase stock, according to their ability.

The promoters of this company are not working for any selfish interest. There is no watered nor fictitious valued stock. The company is incorporated under the laws of the state of Missouri. Capital stock, $40,000.00; shares, $100.00 each; amount paid up $30,000. The capital stock must be increased to the amount needed. Parties sending money can do so by bank draft. Further particulars apply to R. MAY, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

QUERIES CONCERNING ZION AND ITS SETTLEMENT.

(Concluded.)

We believe that the association of men together for the purpose of establishing industries by which other men are given employment; the necessity existing for these men to have employment, is legitimate so long as they combine according to law under the protection of the statute and secure the workingmen under the same enactments from loss, taking no advantage of them either by oppressive rule or by failure to pay as agreed upon. Stockholding associations were enjoined upon the Saints by direction, and though the Nauvoo House failed, and some others of the institutions that existed prior to the Saints being driven out of Missouri, all failed, the principle of stock companies or associations that might be called stock companies, remains the same; and while it may not be the only method of association by which Zion is to be built up, it may be used as one means for the accomplishment of the design. Stock companies or associations of membership looking only to the benefit of the stockholders, the accumulation of great individual profits resulting from the oppression of the workingmen, are wrong. They are illegal under the law of the land; but why should we condemn a proper means because it is abused?

The love of money is the root of all evil; money itself is innocent, and it was essential in olden time for the carrying on of the affairs of men. Joseph of Arimathea was a wealthy man, evidently. Had he not have been, the prophecy concerning the Savior, that he should make his bed with the rich, could hardly have had fulfillment. Lydia of Tyre sold purple; she undoubtedly gave of her sustenance to the church as well as the poor widow who stood over across the treasury, the one contributing thousands, the other a mite, each entitled to her respective credit; no inequality in the reward. There was none in the giving; they were equal before God.

As to what may prevail when Zion is fully redeemed, what the system in vogue may then be, we are not prepared to say. We believe, however, that when the time shall come for every man to sit under his vine and fig-tree he will be secured in the use of that vine and fig-tree by rules of restriction in personal conduct that will prevent others from encroaching upon his rights. As to whether men will barter and sell for money as a means of exchange, we neither know nor care. If there shall be a means of exchange by which men may procure what they need from others who have to spare, it will be all-sufficient.

The statement of the Savior referred to in the sixteenth chapter of Luke, "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light," is correct. It applies very forcibly to their dealing in temporal things. There is a prophecy on record that the Gentiles shall assist in the building of Zion. If so, then Zion will be environed to a certain extent by a Gentile element until the coming of the Savior, and will to a certain extent be subject to the disabilities of Gentile rule, wherever they may be. But Saints may live in the world and not be of the world. They may live among the Gentiles and be honest, upright, virtuous, intelligent, industrious, and examples for good to all within and without; not partaking of their evils, that is, not abusing that which is intrusted to their care or the opportunities afforded them.

It is wrong for a man to carry a pocket full of money and see his neighbor in want. It is wrong for him to shut his door against the approach of them who need shelter; and the poor man is the poor man's best friend. This does not prevent the man of competence from using his means for the benefit of his poorer brethren. And he who does this, not wasting his substance, but keeping himself so far as he can within the rules of legitimate production and spending his accumulation for the good of his fellow men, but through the law of tithing and the law of private giving by consecration for specific benefactions, he is a benefactor to the race and is to be commended.

We rail at the rich man, but we have never drawn the line between the rich and the poor. How much must a man have to be a rich man? How little must he have to be a poor man? Where is the line to be drawn? According to the apostle Paul not many wise men, not many noble are called, and there certainly is a dearth of rich men in the church. Its membership as a body are poor, comparatively poor. Morgan, Depew, Vanderbilt, Rockefeller, any one of them has a greater aggregation of wealth than the entire church. Who would exchange his condition as a child of God, a member of the kingdom of God upon earth, a free man before the law and before Christ, for that occupied by one of these men? Until we are prepared to say where the line is drawn, who may be considered rich and who may be considered poor, why not deal with each other within the golden medium, and not discourage the men of energy and enterprise by invidious comment and uncalled for strictures? Jesus said of the disciples that they were in the world, but not of the world. They used the tribute money; Judas carried the bag; there were men of possessions among them. And there was a distinction; when Ananias and Sapphira laid down their portion before the twelve there was an element of covetousness exhibited in the transaction, and they kept back a part of that which they should have given. They were punished, but those who had other possessions and who came under the meaning of that declaration, that none called that which he had his own, indicated that there were personal rights and personal possessions which were not laid at the feet of the apostles—all things in common.

The very fact that there was a treasurer who held the purse to contain the contributions of those who gave to the cause, is significant. So is the statement that every man shall sit under his vine and fig-tree. God will accept our service and build up Zion if we make the attempt within the lines of general procedure, and will help us to the details as fast as we can avail ourselves of them; but we certainly can not look for any extreme intervention until that portion of the revelation is fulfilled, "but first let mine army become very great." Our present business is to preach the gospel, to induce men to abandon evil, to cleave to that which is good, to become sober, upright, intelligent citizens, fit for dwelling among those who are good. Let this influence extend as widely and as far as it can.

We are not warranted in depreciating or denouncing our fellow men for disbelieving what we believe, or for failure to see as we see. There are rights and privileges which belong to Saints in their personal capacities, and when they comply with the law as the provisions are laid down clearly and specifically, they neither rob themselves nor rob others, but use that which they have or which is intrusted to their care in a legitimate way. We can not make of the church a vast moneyed institution, putting all the responsibility and care of the aggregated wealth of the church or of the individual members of it into the hands of a bishopric to be doled out by them to the necessities of all. There must be those who are energetic and progressive, willing to labor and industriously to use the means at their disposal, whether of money or of physical force for the accumulation of that which will be needed for the building up of Zion.

It is evident that if a temple is ever built it will need money for the carrying on of the work, the procuring of necessities for those who work for wages. if there is a wage-earner upon it, and the supplying of their necessities if they give their time to labor. The temple at Nauvoo was built by tithing of means, property, and labor. There were those who worked all the time and received pay for their work. There were others who worked the tenth day. See what a work was done by poor people! The same thing could be done again. Though conditions have changed materially, principles remain the same, and we can not by undue stress of sentiment justly lose sight of the common means which the Lord has placed in our hands for the accomplishment of his designs. We are not sure that only Saints will be in Zion. That may be the general supposition. We have no fault to find with it, but if the Gentiles are to help in the building of Zion, what will be the use of antagonizing these Gentiles and rejecting their willingness and their good will to contribute? It is only by careful supervision of our personal conduct, the proper exercise of our rights and privileges, that we will commend ourselves to our Gentile neighbors and secure their cooperation.

One of these questions is evidently intended to strike at the use of accumulated means by men engaged in association such as the Independence Mercantile and Manufacturing Company, or the Independence Coal and Mining Company, or the banks which have been established among the Saints. If those who are engaged in these enterprises shall disregard the law of righteousness and oppress their brethren, they can easily be held accountable. The means which they have put into these enterprises have been as a rule contributed by men who have paid to the Bishopric their quota according to the understanding of the law which has been given by the Bishopric from time to time. Why should they not use that which is left with them under the operation of section 42 of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and give out of that which they may secure by means of their association through proper rules and regulations into the coffers of the church, and still keep up their usefulness as members of the body and as citizens of the State?

It must be borne in mind that we do not pretend to answer these questions categorically, though we believe we have touched upon each of them, and represent so far as we have gone our views. Neither extreme is tenable. We hold no man's person in admiration, no man's position in fear. We believe that the whole should work together, and just as surely as the centurion recognized the power of the Lord of life and glory when he said, "Speak the word and my servant shall be healed," so surely may we recognize that which is good in the world and use it within legitimate restrictions, without making unnecessary warfare on things which of themselves are beneficial but which have been and may be sadly abused.

THE SANITARIUM.

We are inclined to think that one feature of the instruction concerning the sanitarium has been overlooked, or misunderstood; that is, that part regarding the attention to be paid to the practice of laying on of hands by the elders for the healing of the sick. It ought to be understood that in numbers of instances the surroundings of members of the church are such that the sick member, nor the elders themselves, can exercise that degree of faith commensurate with the necessity of the case. The condition of the room where the sick one may be lying may be unhealthy, the air bad for the lack of proper ventilation, the food insufficient or improperly prepared, the clothing of the sick, or the furnishings of the bed and room be in an unclean, unsanitary condition; and it might be that the persons by whom the sick are surrounded, and who waited upon them, are not congenial, or are unbelieving, all of which would tend to make the proper exercise of faith unavailing and ineffective.

These things above referred to, and a number of others which might be named, will be eliminated from the atmosphere of the sanitarium.

It will be the aim and effort of those who will be in charge of and responsible for the carrying on of the work in the sanitarium, to see that every condition and necessary attendant circumstance surrounding the individual and attaching to each respective case shall be of such a character as will conduce to the exercise of the faith to be healed, and, necessarily, to the well-being of the mind and comfort of the body.

It was not, nor could it at any time have been contemplated or considered that medical practices alone would enter into the care and treatment of the sick who might seek the benefit of the institution. It was, however, thought and intended that those who might choose to avail themselves of the benefits of the sanitarium should be administered to, nursed, and attended by those of their own faith, that works and faith might go together, hand in hand, each with the other consistently, faith and works agreeing.

The church should be quite willing that the profession of belief in the efficacy of prayer and the laying on of hands by the elders, as stated by James, should be put to just such a practical test as the sanitarium, if established, will afford. The revelations provide that those among the Saints who have not the faith to be healed shall be attended, nursed, doctorled (if any choose to use the term) by those of the faith; and those of us who have been sick know by experience the wisdom of that provision. It is indisputable, however, that administrations by the elders have been at times ineffective by reason of those administered to being surrounded by conditions that left them to fall back into the habits of living, eating, and drinking as tended in a great degree to bring their sickness upon them. These conditions must be removed or overcome, or our feeble ones continue to be afflicted. The sanitarium offers the opportunity and the inducement to change the conditions and the habits.

If any should suppose that the establishment of the sanitarium was intended to exploit any school of medicine, or to advance any of the medical fraternity, the statement made by both the President and Bro. Joseph Luff, to the effect that any one being treated at the institution would be permitted to choose any school of medical practice, and any individual of the school whom he might choose, should be sufficient to disabuse his mind of such supposition. And in harmony with the statement made above, any one who did not wish to have a physician, but preferred to trust to the administration of the elders only, should be left free to so choose, and the attendance of a doctor would not be forced upon them.

A COURT DECISION AS TO COMMON CARRIERS.

In the case of A. G. Knight, of Trenton, against the Quincy, Omaha & Kansas City Railroad, the court of appeals held that a railroad must accept freight even if it has more on hand at the time than it can handle. In other words, a railroad, being a common carrier, has no right to refuse freight for any reason. Knight had offered a hog for shipment, but the company refused it, saying that it had more freight then than it could haul. Knight sued for damages and got a verdict against the company. The court of appeals says the verdict was just.

This is a decision in the right direction. Railway companies are common carriers, for whom private property and the public domain are alike subjected to legal control and the disabilities of the conditions of their institution, as well as permitted to reap its rewards.

ARE WE CLOSE COMMUNION?

If by this question it is intended to ask, Do you as a church administer to and partake of the sacramental emblems, bread and wine, with other religious bodies, we answer, No.

Our reason for thus answering, is that we are commanded not to let communicants partake unworthily; this unworthiness in part is the failure to discern in the church, the Lord's body; or, in other words, the church acknowledged of Christ as his.

In this we are not altogether alone. There are other religious bodies who believe it to be improper to permit those not of their way of thinking and worship to partake with them of the sacrificial elements.

There is much, in our way of thinking, to justify our position in regard to this sort of close communion. Paul wrote, "Ye are the body of Christ and members in particular." The commandment, "As oft as ye do this do it in remembrance of me," was given to the disciples, the church. If Jesus and his disciples were justified in being close communion at that time, then the church now existent is justified in being close communion now.

As a people we are commanded not to cast any one out of our prayer- and sacrament-meetings; but this does not justify us in giving to them those emblems in the partaking of which we solemnly assure the Lord and each other that we are willing to take upon us the name of Christ, to remember him, to keep his commandments, in order that we may have his Spirit to be with us. Whoever should partake with us in this covenant, by eating and drinking of the bread and wine, would by such act of partaking also be virtually assenting that the church by whose officers the emblems were offered and administered was the church of Christ, and the officers administering were acting in their proper places and authorized to officiate in the name of the church and Christ. This acknowledgment we have not the right to demand or permit them to make without the previous baptism which the word of God requires; hence the wisdom of the church in not permitting those not of the faith into which we have been baptized to partake of the sacrament with us; and as a consequence to decline to partake with them in their love-feasts or sacrament-meetings.

AN IDEA ON CO-OPERATION.

In a speech or interview since his return to America Colonel W. J. Bryan gets off the following as reported. He may have said it jestingly; he may have said it in dead earnest; but whether it was in earnest or jest, it contains the nut of a great truth. In reply to the question with regard to co-operation with others in the campaign which is approaching he said:

"I have not co-operated with anybody thus far. But I want to co-operate with everybody who holds the same views I hold and who wishes to co-operate with me."

This is the saying in a nutshell, and there are many who talk and write upon the virtues and necessities for co-operation who hold to the same sentiment, but who do not express the sentiment in the same outspoken fashion that Colonel Bryan has done.

We remember that upon one occasion when Elder Elijah Banta had listened to a discourse by a brother, and feeling pretty well satisfied with the sermon he heard, he very earnestly remarked, "Bro. —— is sound in the faith"; and then as if the second thought came to him, he said, "Why do I say that he is sound in the faith? It is because he believes as I do." He expressed a similar sentiment as this which is credited to Colonel Bryan, and we presume it will not be hard for any of us, however radical or moderate we may fancy ourselves, to say as Colonel Bryan has said, "I am willing to co-operate with anybody who thinks as I do and who is willing to co-operate with me." How much concession is made by such a statement as this? How much of conciliatory is there to be found in this? Please give it a thought and see if it accords with your philosophy.

JUST A WORD OR TWO.

We have not at any time, or in any place, constituted ourself or the HERALD an advocate of, or apologist for, what is styled by different writers and speakers, "The competitive, or wage system," and those who may have argued upon that hypothesis have made a mistake. Neither have we in our writing charged any one with having advocated an equalization of the condition of the Saints by a wholesale putting of the entire possessions of all the people into one common mass, and then making a dead level of a distribution, each one to have the same, no more, no less. The only thing that we have said that looked like such a statement was the suggestion that the circulating medium of the United States was about $29 per capita; and coupling this suggestion with the query, Suppose that each should receive his respective amount, and one should spend his share for tobacco, whisky, beer, or other things of a similar nature, while another should expend his share wisely and savingly, how long would it take to bring about an equality between these two men? If anybody took this as a charge that any other was urging that sort of a distribution, he mistook both the meaning and the intent of the suggestion.

We have not at any time undertaken to advocate or defend the wicked and unjust methods of business so strongly deprecated by writers on Zion and her ways. We have, however, stood for the practice of equality and justice and fair-dealing, in all classes of business, and among all classes of men, believing this to be not only possible but obligatory upon the Saints; not alone in Zion, but everywhere else.

THE TELEPHONE SERVICE AT GLASGOW, SCOTLAND. A FAILURE.

A bad blow has been struck at municipal ownership of public utilities by the failure of the telephone service in Glasgow, Scotland, to pay its running expenses. True, the shortage for the last fiscal year is but $270, a comparatively small figure for a large business, but far too small to provide for renewal of necessary stock and material. Besides this, complaints are made of inadequate service, and so private enterprise has taken over the plant and will hereafter run the business.

We are sorry, as we had hoped that the municipal ownership idea would be proved in this instance a success.

THE COST OF PUBLIC CHARITIES.

Those of us who are impatient because of the supposed undue expenditure for our charity enterprises, will do well to take into consideration the following statement of F. W. Knapp, clerk of the Kansas State Board of Control, made for publication October 10, showing the cost of the Kansas State charities for six months of this year. There are nine of these institutions, and the cost for maintenance, including repairs and salaries, is as follows:

- Topeka hospital for insane, $75,662.91; Osawatomie hospital for insane, $20,040.41; Parsons asylum, $24,357.40; Winfield school for imbeciles, $26,090.20; Olathe deaf and dumb school, $28,028.48; Kansas City, Kansas, blind school, $12,370.62; Soldiers' orphans' home, Atchison, $17,469.83; Boys' industrial school, Topeka, $22,457.97; Girls' industrial school, Beloit, $14,425.80; total, $322,783.72.

THE ROCK OR FOUNDATION ON WHICH WE STAND.

It seems to me we are not a unit on this subject and it would be a good thing to come to a clear understanding and become united so we may not contradict each other on this point.

The Rock referred to by Christ in Matthew 16:18, upon which he would build his church, it seems to me was the knowledge that Jesus was the Christ. This knowledge had come to Peter from the Father by revelation. The revelation was the means by which the fact was made known; but the fact, made known to us by the Holy Ghost, that Jesus is the Christ, gives us individually and collectively a sure foundation on which to build our spiritual edifice.

Paul says in 1 Corinthians 3:11: "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ"; Christ is the sure foundation on which all our hopes rest. The old patriarch Job said, "For I know that my Redeemer liveth." He evidently had received this knowledge from God by the Holy Ghost; it had been revealed to him. Hence he predicated his hope on Christ, that "living stone disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God and precious." (1 Peter 2:4.) Christ was the spiritual Rock with the Israelites in the wilderness. (See 1 Corinthians 10:4.) Hence Moses had the Christ revealed to him, and he, so revealed, became the foundation and hope of all God's children anciently. So in this dispensation Christ was revealed to Joseph Smith and others. First in the vision to Joseph, then to Joseph and Sidney. (See Doctrine and Covenants 76:3.)

While revelation was the means employed to make the fact known that Jesus was the Christ, and no one can know it in any other way, yet, the Christ revealed becomes the foundation to us as a church, and also individually. We must in some way, through the medium of the Holy Ghost, know the gospel is true and that Jesus is the Christ, or we have no proper foundation, either collectively or individually. I think if we examine this, as we do foreknowledge and foreordination, we will be able to see that the real foundation is Christ, but that knowledge that he is the Christ comes to us by revelation. Doctrine and Covenants 36:10: "I am Messiah, the King of Zion; the Rock of Heaven, which is broad as eternity." "Again I am the good Shepherd, (and the stone of Israel; he that buildeth upon this Rock shall never fall.)"—Doctrine and Covenants 50:8.

"Therefore fear not, little flock, do good, let earth and hell combine against you, for if ye are built upon my Rock they can not prevail."—Doctrine and Covenants 6:16.

The gospel is called the Rock, (Doctrine and Covenants 10:11): "Build upon my Rock, which is my gospel." Christ is inseparably connected with the gospel, so we could not have the gospel without the Christ. I do not look on this as contradicting those other passages. I believe it to be a mistake when others say Christ is the Rock for our elders to contradict them. We should acknowledge it, for the preponderance of evidence seems to fully establish it. Hence no necessity for any controversy on that point as I see it.

Hoping that each and all may find the true Rock, and with proper material build thereon a superstructure that will stand when tried by fire, I am,

'As ever in the conflict,' says the Prophet,

THE IMMUTABILITY OF GOD'S LAWS.

"The invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made."—Romans 1:20.

Inanimate matter: We "look through nature up to Nature's God," and we see the same unchangeable Being that existed thousands of years ago. The same old earth is in existence, heated by the same sun, and clothed with the same vesture that its Creator provided in the beginning.

Not once has that resplendent orb, the sun, refused to perform its function. God placed it there under set rules, from which it can not in the least deviate. Should the sun complain of the arduousness of its task, and attempt to change its function, not only our small sphere, but millions of worlds would be hurled from their orbits and thrown into unthinkable confusion and collision, which would result in death to all the inhabitants—chaos and ruin to the material universe. Every planet is dependent upon every other planet for its existence; thus making it absolutely necessary for every orb in the great universe to adhere strictly to the laws laid down by an omnipotent God. So with respect to inanimate matter, we discover the prevalence of law, immutable and eternal.

Animate matter: All God's creatures, possessed of life, have certain bounds to their actions. The lower animals offer suggestive examples of this. Take the camel for instance. Nature makes it necessary for this creature to sleep upon its knees. Were that animal to rebel against nature and introduce an innovation by sleeping upon its side, the result would be that he could not regain his feet next morning. What is true of the camel is true of every other animal. Law governs their actions. Should they attempt to disobey and transcend the strict laws, disorder and confusion would ensue.

Intelligent matter: Man, in a sense, is a free agent. This, however, does not render him exempt from law and government; for his every action brings either happiness or sadness. Man knows that if he transgresses Nature's law, he must suffer the consequences. Individuals have tried to work seven days a week, all year round; but have they accomplished it? No! Why? Because it is contrary to God's law, as revealed through nature. Is there a man living so devoid of reason as to assert that strychnine will not kill, just so long as you are ignorant of its deadly effects? Would any but a maniac be so unreasonable as to assume that even a slight deviation from natural law can be tolerated by the author of Nature?

Yet there are men so devoid of consistency as to assume that we can deviate from and violate God's law, which treats of the soul, the intelligent, immortal, and inner man,—with impunity. If immutability characterizes the laws of material nature, how much more should those laws, which treat of our spiritual health and salvation, be unchangeable and immutable!

We are told that we can reject a few ostensibly insignificant laws, relative to our soul's salvation, with impunity; but the same wise and consistent (?) logician will inform you that if you swallow a little powdered strychnine instead of pulverized sugar the result is death, no matter how ignorant you may be of the deadly qualities of that drug; and no matter how much confidence you have in the druggist; nevertheless, if you inadvertently take that poison, the greatest change in your existence takes place, viz.: a separation of body and spirit.

Surely we can see the application! How can we help but understand clearly the invisible things of God, by the material creation with which we are continually coming in contact. Why are we so inconsistent as to aver that no change whatever is permissible in the laws governing nature, and then in the next breath decry the doctrines of Latter Day Saints as being too dogmatical, and the elders as being sticklers on technicalities, simply because we teach that "whatsoever God doeth it shall be for ever" (Ecclesiastes 3:14), whether such decrees affect the material universe or the salvation of man's soul?

Naaman, the Syrian, had apparently imbibed the spirit of the twentieth century. (See 2 Kings 5.) He thought any kind of a half-hearted obedience would do. In fact he was angry because the Lord's prophet was so particular about what he considered a little thing; and not until his humble servant called his attention to the fact that obedience in small things was as essential as obedience in large matters, did he obey the voice of the Lord in every minute particular. He readily discovered that a partial obedience was of no avail, but that God requires a perfect service.

There are thousands of honest souls who worship earnestly what they believe to be true. But honesty of motive never saved any man. We can not accuse the heathen of insincerity in his belief, when he throws his child to crocodiles, or lacerates his body, but we can reject and denounce his disgusting, inhuman form of worship. God Almighty never accepted murder under the guise of religion; and he never will accept the efforts of disobedient pettifoggers, who are continually twisting the truth in order to make it conform to their human conceptions of universal benevolence and salvation.

We must worship the Lord “in truth” as well as “in spirit,” or sincerity. (John 4:23, 24.) We may consider the Lord harsh and uncompromising in requiring us to believe him when he said: “teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you” (Matthew 28:20); but one thing we must admit, viz.: such is only in harmony with his unchangeableness of character as revealed to us through “that which is made”—the eternal laws of Nature.

SHOULD WE KNOW?

For some considerable time I have kept silent, and aloof from all the issues under discussion in the church publications, but will now venture a few affirmative, noncontroversial thoughts.

On April 10, the fifth day of last General Conference, the President spoke as follows:

One morning after waking, before I left for the conference, I passed a period of three hours, and I never expect to be happier or more contented in the Spirit than I was during that three hours. Certain matters were presented to me, and among them, principally, was this: We appear before the world as advocates for what are called signs of the gospel, the gospel signs, the accompaniments of the gospel economy as instituted by the Christ. A great deal of comment has passed among our elders, and among our membership, very largely, in our large branches, as to why it is that there are not more persons healed by the administration of the oil and the laying on of hands than there are. My observation leads me to the conclusion that there are a great many more healings occur than are taken notice of, or than we are given credit for, while there are a great many that are lost as a matter of course.

The thought which was presented to me was this: that we ought as a people to take this kind of a step, to establish here—and I hope these Independence people will not go wild over it, because I saw it, and it was presented to me—what might be called a sanitarium or a hospital—call it whatever word you like—that shall be under the supervision of some earnest, upright, and spiritual-minded officer of the church; and that this sanitarium shall be a place where our sick who may not be properly treated at their homes may be treated by the laying on of hands, by the nursing as provided for under the law, and by such careful treatment as medical knowledge within the province of our own membership may give, and thus see whether or not we may try the spiritual forces for which we have been so long contending, and at last put our hands and our sacred honors in juxtaposition and say to the world, We are willing that it shall be given a trial, an open trial. And I was assured, in that three hours of spiritual exaltation, that there would be a fulfillment of the prophecy that the faces of Jacob’s children shall not wax pale.

To me this is one of the things that shall mark the hastening time. And we surely are sufficiently strong to give this matter our careful consideration. Nothing venture, nothing have. If we do not put ourselves to the front, and make up our minds in this regard, we will be struggling along for a while yet. But it must come sooner or later. I may not live to see it. I hope I may. But to be honest with you, I never came nearer being thoroughly discouraged as to this temporal life than I did this last winter. I hope never to be put to such a trial again. I suppose it may be good discipline, and it may be a wise one. That is beyond my province to say. I suppose no rogue ever took the whip with a real sense of its justice; and I may not have taken this affliction with the proper consideration of a sense of its justness.

What we want now is for the present. I present this thought to you as having been presented to me in the Spirit for the consideration of this conference. I give it to you now in this early time. I had hoped that we would get through rapidly; that nothing would occur that would hold us together beyond a certain period. But if we can do something, and do it cheerfully, I believe the good Lord stands ready to help our elders and our physicians that may have given this matter thought and consideration, and who are ready to devote their lives and their labors in an institution of this kind.—General Conference Minutes, pp. 882, 883.

I make no apology for the above lengthy excerpt, but rather urge that it needs to be more than read; it should be carefully studied in its every sentence, not, however, with a view of finding fault or to discover the inspiration of the following:

It is the will of the Lord that a sanitarium, a place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted, be established by the church, at Independence, Missouri, as my servant, Joseph Smith, has already stated to you. This should be done as soon as it is found to be practicable, and without unnecessary delay. The Presiding Bishop and his counselors and the bishopric of the Independence Stake should take counsel together in locating and establishing this sanitarium. It is also expedient that these should be assisted by the advice and counsel of one of my servants who is acquainted with the laws of health and the practice of medicine, and who may have charge when the institution is established. It is in accordance with the instruction given to my servant Joseph Smith, that my servant, Joseph Luff, who has been giving his attention to the study of medicine and has been preparing himself for usefulness in this direction, be associated with this sanitarium as a medical director and physician to the church and be put in charge, that he may be an assistant to those who seek the aid of this institution of the church, in his spiritual office and his calling as a physician, with those who from time to time may be called to administer in laying hands upon the afflicted and sick, where they may be removed from the influence and environments unfavorable to the exercise of proper faith unto the healing of the sick. And this my servant Joseph Luff may do and retain and exercise his apostleship. There should also be a home for children established, and the efforts of the Daughters of Zion should be approved and carried unto completion as soon as is consistent with the necessary demands of the work of the church in other directions. In the establishment of the sanitarium and the home for children debt should not be contracted, nor too large nor expensive buildings be built at the outset. Those to whom this work is assigned should exercise the necessary degree of wisdom that the work be effectual for the intent and purposes designed.—Minutes, p. 901.

The revelation, from which the above is an extract, bears date of April 14, 1906, and was favorably passed upon and received by all the quorums of the church, and by a standing vote of the General Conference. (See minutes, pp. 900, 901.)

Now let us carefully examine analytically that portion relative to the SANITARIUM.

1. It is God’s will that such an institution should be established.

2. Where the sick and the afflicted of the church may receive medical treatment, and saintly care in nursing.

3. God advertises that it is the church that shall accomplish this work.

4. He likewise fixes the location at Independence, Jackson County, Missouri, thus for ever eliminating all possibility of any heat and excitement of contention of those who might favor some particular place.

5. Previous to the giving of the revelation for the direction and guidance of the church, the prophet had been personally instructed, and so recited to the body of his spiritual visitation of about three hours in the ecstasy of divine communion.

6. Not in haste, but in reasonable time this work of charity should be accomplished by the church, for the word practicable grants to those having this work for the word practicable grants to those having this work in charge the opportunity of collecting the necessary means, as also in purchasing needful land and building material.

7. God nominates those who are to be intrusted with the fulfilling of the required establishing by the church the said sanitarium, namely: Edmund L. Kelley, George H. Hilliard, and Edwin A. Blakeslee, also, Roderick May, Alonzo H. Parsons, and Buford J. Scott.

8. This committee of purchase and construction are to have the “advice and counsel” of one who has made “health” and “medicine” a study. And after completion, and the furnishing of the institution so that the sick and afflicted can be cared for therein, the one understanding the “practice of medicine” and the “laws of health,” this adviser to the committee is to be the “medical director” of the institution.

Apostle Joseph Luff, M. D., is to fill that responsible station, and this newly named responsibility is not to vitiate his apostleship.

9. The Lord wisely advises against contracting debt; thus the responsibility of establishing for the vindication of the gospel with its promises of these signs following, and the helpfulness to those who suffer bodily infirmities, rests upon the membership of the church, as the committee can not proceed with their duties, only as the money is placed in their possession for the purpose of establishing the sanitarium.

10. In a kind and fatherly manner are these committeemen admonished to be wise in discharging their especial duties of the providing this much-to-be-desired hospital for the care and helpfulness of our suffering ones.

Whether inadvertently or intentionally, no action of the General Conference was had to either ratify the nomination of the committee, or to instruct them in their labors, so that their appointment stands upon the words of revelation: “The presiding bishop and his counselors and the bishopric of the Independence Stake,” and their instruction came from the same source in the following words: “Debt should not be contracted, nor too large nor expensive buildings be built at the outset.” Thus the committee are left to the exercise of their own volition, judgment, and wisdom until they shall submit their annual report of stewardship to General Conference of 1907, when that body will pass upon their labors.

Another link of paramount importance in this examination, I consider to be the following from the address of President Joseph Smith, made after the acceptance of the revelation, wherein he said:

I am now an old man, represented by the reporters as a feeble old man, one of the sympathetic features of your assembly. I have no personal ambitions to serve now, except to keep the name of a professed believer in Jesus Christ, in the manner and form as conferred by the angelic mission to Joseph Smith and others, to keep that clean from shame, obloquy, and disgrace.

I have lived as long as I had anticipated I should. And now at the close of this conference—or nearing its close—I ask you to consider what a spectacle it is for a united people, believing in the efficacy of prayer, by their quorums and individually to ask God for light, for instruction upon that which he in his wisdom sees necessary for the occasion and then to witness a reflection either upon him or the channel through which this revelation must come by the acknowledged records and acknowledgment of the church, of a motive to deceive. I acknowledge the safeguards thrown around the church. I believe them to have been done wisely and well by the Almighty. I have always pleaded against priestcraft—domination of priestcraft. I have no sympathy with the right of kings to rule and much less for priestly autocrats to rule. Like you, I acknowledge no authority that is infallible except the authority of God, and Jesus Christ the Revelator. And when I have reason to believe that they speak, I bow to the mandate. I have never given you a thought or an expression that I have not indorsed from my soul as a communication from God, to me, for the people. I never expect to do it. I have no ambition that drives me to such a course as that. No dollar of the church’s money has ever found its way into my hands that has not been able to be traced out. I have carried the interests of the church wherever I have been. I never permitted the flag to be lowered in my presence, or by me. I do not intend to do it now, if God gives me power and strength.

So, you can see that I come before you and can honestly thank you for the confidence which you have this day renewed in me as an agent between the Master and his people.

I know that some of you—I trust a great majority—realize the situation, and I am grateful that you do. Therefore I can say unto you, as fellow laborers in Christ, God give us fellowship and standing and spiritual force till the conflict we have waged is won. And if we continue, steadfastly occupying the positions to which we have been chosen, and occupying before the world as we have done, with persistent grasp upon the rod of iron, as spoken of in the Book of Mormon, we shall continue to win our way, and the years that are to come (unlike the years that are past) will witness less warfare between us as brethren, less misunderstanding between us as men and as quorums, and give us a more extended triumph in the world. —Minutes, pp. 903, 904.

For more than forty years my duties as an officer and minister of the church have brought me into association with the President, and I have not a particle of hesitancy of accepting the foregoing as a truthful testimony. Can not the thousands of faithful Saints throughout the world without doubtful hearts accept and unite in this latest, and most charitable work ever undertaken by the church?

A hearty compliance, and a liberal contribution of money will demonstrate the utility of this project for the amelioration of the unfortunate sick and afflicted who shall elect to avail themselves of the privileges and benefits of the sanitarium.

The withholding of their means by the Saints will make nugatory the communication, tie the hands of the committee, and stultify our oft-repeated claim and confidence in present revelation, and the promise: These signs shall follow them that believe.

It would be passing strange if the archenemy of the truth made no attempt to put a sprag in the wheel of our progress in this particular enterprise; put stumbling-stones in our pathway; and he can not be more successful than by poisoning the mind with vile suspicion, and destroying confidence in the Lord's appointed, and his fellow associates.

There is a necessity for unity, and for a harmonious understanding, and the avoiding of too eager a desire to see wrong or evil in others. To illustrate my meaning, I quote:

Some in the past have helped in every undertaking liberally and freely, while some have been slow to help in some things, but said, If God had directed the doing of those things, then they would willingly help; and as we have many sick and afflicted among us, and all have not faith to be healed, the Lord, knowing the wants and needs of his people, has told us that it was his will that a sanitarium be established by the church, at Independence, Missouri, where the sick and afflicted may be "removed from the influences and environments unfavorable to the exercise of proper faith unto the healing of the sick." Under those conditions the Bishop has already called on the Saints and friends to contribute of their means to accomplish this work. And as we are not to contract debt in doing this work, and as it is to be done without "unnecessary delay," we should get sufficient means in a short time to purchase the land and erect the necessary buildings. It is thought by those whose duty it is to carry out the Lord's will in this matter, that about ten acres of land will be needed for this purpose. That means about ten thousand dollars for the land; then enough to erect and furnish suitable buildings to care for the sick properly will require several thousand more. I now write this to stir up your minds, by way of remembrance, to the Bishop's call. We now have no excuse.—Herald, p. 700.

The original article from which the above is an extract was under the caption of "To the Saints everywhere," and over the signature of "G. H. Hilliard, of the Bishopric."

This certainly would lead the average reader to the conclusion that the article was authoritative, and that the author truly was at an agreement with his coassociates in presenting the decision of the committee for the awakening of the Saints to their great responsibility—a kind of a supplement to the previously published call of the Bishop.

Having read and heard the opinion and views of a number was the inspiration and occasion of this paper. Will not try to give their words, but thoughts as expressed in my own wording:

1. If ten thousand dollars is necessary for the purchase of the site, what will be the cost to the church to put buildings thereon equal or commensurate with the high-priced building-site?

2. Is it possible the church expects to run a farm by the labor of those who are to receive treatment at the sanitarium?

3. Surely God knew the high price of land when he instructed the church to build a hospital at Independence, and did not consider a too rigid economy an important factor, otherwise he would have directed the establishing of the hospital at Lamoni, where good land can be had for one hundred dollars an acre, or at Stewartsville, where land is not held at an exorbitant price.

4. Well, God knew the financial ability and resources, and the willingness of his people to meet every demand, so if they fail to furnish the money to build the sanitarium, it will prove that the revelation was man-made and not from God.

These and many other expressions of animadversion relative to the sanitarium have come to my hearing.

Our next will be from an explanation by the Presiding Bishop, and we suppose that it is official. He says:

Our attention has been called to a statement made by Counselor Hilliard, touching purchase of ten acres of land for the sanitarium; the trouble seems to be that somebody wants a too particular explanation of the matter. There is none of the committee that proposes to use ten acres of ground to locate the sanitarium, but the committee desires to purchase at least that amount of ground. They did not wish to be in a position where the real estate men could close up on each side and run prices up and make the poor Saints pay double price for a little home at a later date. The committee in considering land for sanitarium purposes thought that it would require from two to four acres. We desire, however, to be in a position to handle properly the institution and immediate adjoining property, and while the cost at first on this will be considerable, as stated by Bro. Hilliard, this money will be paid back into the sanitarium fund as the land is used to aid in building. "A word to the wise is sufficient." The committee figured to get more land, but when prices were out of our reach we did not purchase, nor does the committee propose to purchase until it is done in wisdom and discretion, as was left to the committee by the revelation appointing it.—Ensign, pp. 6, 7, for September 27, 1906.
This explanation should be amply satisfactory to the most critical, and clearly absolves Counselor G. H. Hilliard from any misrepresentation of the truth as to the number of acres and the value thereof. It also divulges something new, that is: That the committee are considering a work that has the appearance of being an act of supererogation, as the document of their appointment unto a specific requirement, their going into a real-estate business, and the colonization of the people in the immediate vicinity of the sanitarium.

The reason assigned for this seems to be a bit foggy, or else I do not fully understand the Bishop’s meaning, or definition of “the poor Saints.” For it is an unsolved problem of how the “poor Saints” are to be furnished homes, and the proposition of selling naked, unimproved land to the poor of God’s people at more than one thousand dollars per acre (and this must be, for a ten-acre plan would have to be subdivided into lots, and the purchasers would have to pay their portion for streets and alleys) seems to be paradoxical; for whoever is able to pay a thousand dollars or more for a building lot (which carries with it the thought of one to ten thousand dollars for buildings) should not be classed among the poor.

If it is in harmony with the “Fishing River revelation,” and the church is now in a condition to give as an inheritance to every man moving to the “center spot” a home worth from one to five thousand dollars, then I hail with joy this wonderful achievement, and that I have survived the struggle against dire poverty while giving to the church the best days of my manhood, that I have lived to see the time when there are “no poor” and “no rich” among the people of God. O happy day! let all the Zion (pure in heart) sing a pean unto Jehovah.

To return to our caption, Should we know? Without question, we have a perfect right, as members of the integral body politic, to know of what is going on in the church, either for its advancement, or for its disintegration. Well, how shall we find out? In the following manner. 1. Wait for the annual report presented to the General Conference. 2. If our anxiety be so great that we can not contain ourselves, or abide the time of the annual report, write to the Bishop of the church, and he will furnish satisfactory information. 3. We might write a wapish article, and stir up a hornet’s nest, and amidst the contrary expression of opinion have our desire satisfied. 4. Should there be evidence of wrong-doing that would put the life of the church, or any considerable portion of it, in jeopardy, God has provided the means to remedy the evil. (See Doctrine and Covenants 122: 10.)

A few words relative to the “home for children.” The revelation provided the “efforts of the Daughters of Zion” should be “approved.” This was not done by the conference, and no committee was appointed to locate or erect the necessary buildings or carry to “completion” the well-begun work of these faithful Daughters of Zion; in lieu thereof it seems this particular and important enterprise is side-tracked for the present, so as not to interfere with the work of the church in:
1. Caring for the poor.
2. The missionary work.
4. The sanitarium.

These are the regular and important responsibilities now demanding the attention, care, and help of the church.

The home for children I believe to be a present necessity, and I hope the next conference will provide for it.

Selected Poetry

October.

Cease to call him sad or sober, Merriest of months, October!

Patrons of the bursting bins, Reveler in wayside inns—
I can nowhere find a trace
Of the pensive in his face;
There is mingled wit and folly,
But the madcap lacks the grace
Of a thoughtful melancholy.

Spendthrift of the season’s gold,
How he loves to fling about Treasures filched from summer-time!
Never ruffling squire of old Better loved a tavern bout
When Prince Hal was in his prime.

Doublet slashed with gold and green;
Cloak of crimson, changeful sheen,
Opulently opaline,
Of the dews that gem his breast;
Frosty lace about his throat;
Scarlet plumes that flirt and float
Backward in a gay unrest—
Where’s another gallant dressed
With such trickey gayety,
Such unlessoned vanity?

With his amber afternoons
And his pendant poets’ moons—
With his twilights dashed with rose
From the red-lipped afterglows—
With his vocal airs at dawn
Breathing hints of Helicon—
With the winding of the horn
Where his huntsmen meet the morn—
Bacchanalian bees that sip
Where his elder presses drip—
With his every piping breeze Shaking from familiar trees
Apples of Hesperides—
With the chuckle, chirp, and trill
Of his jolly brooks that spill
Mirth in tangled madrigals

By Sacrifice.

As the hart for the water-brook panteth, As the dove to her window flies home,
So the lonely and scattered of Zion Still long for the time of return.

By sacrifice! God has declared it,—The way of our coming must be,
Unselfish the love, strong, indwelling For my brother, as Christ gave to me.
The little ones—God's own dear children—Are homeless and crying for bread.
Our own, oh, how nourished and sheltered! With the best from God's heritage fed.
These little ones out in the cold world, Are tempted, betrayed into sin.
Saints of God who are longing for Zion, Your sacrifice here must begin.

Must—for God now this work is demanding, That a test of your love he may see.
Those who sacrifice now will be gathered When God shall send forth his decree.
Are you longing for God and his Zion? Are you ready with all things to part—All things which may hinder your coming To him—as his own—pure in heart?
Then answer his call for the children, Lay your sacrifice down at his feet, And pledged is his word that in Zion You, the God of the righteous shall meet.

The Bethesda Home of St. Louis, Missouri.

This home was opened June 8, 1889, with ten inmates. The promoters of this worthy enterprise did not wait until they could build a fine house, fully equipped for all the work to be done; but they procured a residence in an old part of the city and began the good work. To quote from their works, or history, one would almost be led to think they had the fullness of the gospel. It reads:

"It was clear from the first that this was God's work, and done in God's way it will never lack for supplies. We have also seen the faithfulness of God in caring for all the varied interests of his servants, who are willing at any sacrifice to follow him in the path of unquestioning obedience."

Is not the sentiment of that last line worthily the support of latter-day gospel believers?

We have said that only ten inmates occupied the home at first; but during that first year one hundred and seventeen inmates were received and provided for. Listen to what their historian says of this trying time:

"From the beginning it was a work of faith, and a labor of love; and the means were provided by the voluntary gifts of God's people." Notice well the next statement: "Never in the conduct of this work has solicitation been used beyond making the public acquainted with our needs." Again they say, "We are the representative of a King who never begged when on earth, and we would rather see the work close than depart from this principle."

"Oh, well," some will say, "in the world at large there are many rich people interested in enterprises of this nature—they probably had abundant support from the first." So I will quote more.

"The fact that from the first the work was accompanied with unspeakable trials, should be no discouragement to any who understand and remember the Master's secret of working, and that trial is the school of faith." The work once begun they had donated, by voluntary contribution the first year, one thousand, six hundred and sixty-two dollars and nineteen cents.

"Miss Alice Funk gave not only one tenth but ten tenths to the Lord, and was the first to dedicate herself to the work," with no other attraction of position or wealth than that she will receive a reward "at his coming."

In 1892 a larger house was secured for the babies, and the former place reserved for aged Christian women.

A number of our Zion's Hope Sunshiners accompanied the Missouri Band in St. Louis under Mrs. Barnhill on a visit to the babies, and in one large room we found between sixty and seventy babies—each in its little white crib, or in the nurse's arms.

Dear babies! perhaps never to know a real mother's love, or to be "cuddled" and rocked to sleep—how our heart yearned over them, and we could not but think of the passage in "Timothy's Quest," where he says he "had once enjoyed all the comforts of a Home with a capital H; but it was the cozy home with a little "h" that he desired for baby Gay."

Still for the dear little unfortunate ones who can not enjoy all the care, simple, every-day accompaniments of the home with the little "h," how infinitely better it is for them to be housed and fed, and kept clean and sweet, and nursed by careful Christian women than to be neglected, and probably abused by an unthinking world.

At the close of the fifth year the home was overcrowded, for during the preceding two years five hundred and seventy-three had been cared for, and five thousand, four hundred and forty-six dollars had been raised; but they must have more room for the babies—more commodious, and better adapted for the purpose.

One can not help wondering what would have become of all the babies, incurables, and aged ones that were taken care of in this short five years, if these Christian workers had not cared for them. Surely there had been much misery and perhaps death averted by their self-sacrificing labors.

A little more than a year later they moved the babies to a larger house, and there they continued until the great tornado which swept South St. Louis and did such inestimable damage to life and property in 1896. The foundlings' home swayed to and fro, windows were dashed to pieces, and the roof was blown off; dust and dirt filled the house,—the Home for Old Ladies fared almost as badly;—but the nurses stayed at their posts,—not one of them leaving the babies, and "the Lord preserved them all."

The children were removed to a temporary home at the South Side Branch of the Y. M. C. A., as this place was offered them to use for an unlimited time; the large gymnasium was turned into a nursery. Here they were cared for until a more permanent place was secured.

During the years 1895 and 1896 seven hundred and twenty persons were cared for. Not all of them were children, for

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Bethesda Home was caring for infants, children, incurables, and aged ones in three or four different houses. In the next two years eight hundred and ninety-two were cared for, and contributions amounted to over eleven thousand dollars. Of this sum two thousand, four hundred and fourteen dollars was invested in a lot for a permanent building to be erected upon. So we see that it was eight years after the beginning of the home before they began building a real habitation where they could feel “settled.”

The same year one person gave five thousand dollars to the home, thus enabling the promoters to finish paying for the lot (two hundred feet) and leaving thirty-five hundred dollars to commence the building. A prominent architect drew up the plans for the building and generously gave his services.

As we realized “how wonderfully God had answered our prayers,” we could see how quietly—day by day—the work had grown and how “he had stretched forth the curtains of our habitations, as it were, in the night, until we can say, He has done abundantly, above all that we have the direct word of the Lord commanding (or should I say urging) us to care for his little ones, and the (still more to be pitied) afflicted of his people.

The gift of fifteen hundred dollars about Thanksgiving Day enabled them to install a heating-plant. The early part of January, 1899, was devoted to moving into their “own home.” Every room was dedicated to God by the voice of praise and prayer. One worker invoked the blessing of him on the work, and on all who were to be gathered within the then empty home. Another began to sing “Praise God from whom all blessings flow.” Thus ten years elapsed from the beginning of the work before a place was won by the society in which to carry on its benevolent work.

One hundred babies and small children were moved into the comfortable quarters, and though the January weather was sleet and rain and mud, within was sunshine and joy over work accomplished.

“We had struggled so long in buildings intended for ordinary families,” writes the historian, “while our most extraordinary family had to put up with all sorts of inconveniences, but now our workers have their own sweet little rooms. Here our babies are so much more comfortable—in the large nurseries with their pretty white cots, convenient kitchens and bathrooms, all so airy and well lighted.”

“Bethesda established a school for nurses so that the care of infants, incurables, and aged ones cost very little; those going to the school giving their services, as a matter of course, for the training and knowledge gained—for where could one get such efficient education as in this practical way—with the best physicians of the city in attendance?”

Why have I written all this about a St. Louis children’s home? Because it seems that we should have greater faith than those of the world—having a greater hope of eternal life.

“Yet, you may say, “St. Louis has a population of about seven hundred thousand, while the church has not much over fifty thousand members,” to which I will answer that “one with God is always a majority.”

Then some may refer to the many wealthy men who helped to build Bethesda, “while we are mostly poor”; and I would say, We are putting our faith in the same all-powerful One as they; and he has the wealth of the world to give us, if we industriously try to obey his commands.

Neither does the Latter Day Saints’ children’s home want to “beg for means”; but we want to give every one an opportunity to “lay up treasure in heaven,” by doing a little “banking business” with the Lord, trusting him to give the increase.

The St. Louis Mite Society, assisted by the Sunshiners, Sunday-school scholars, and RELIGIANS, are arranging for a bazaar to raise a donation for “our” children’s home; and we trust that throughout the church will spread one concerted effort to raise funds and contribute, that we may be blessed in doing the work God has intrusted to us.

Dear Sisters of the Prayer Union: I ask an interest in your prayers for my dear ones, that they may have a strong desire to overcome evil, and that God will give them strength to resist all temptations to do evil. Pray that I may be given wisdom and knowledge, and be strengthened to do my part, for I am very weak.

Editors Herald: My report of ministerial labor for last year did not appear in the Herald. I thought I sent it in February from Port Said; either I did not, or it was lost in transit. I should have attended to this matter some months ago, but it has been overlooked in part, and my record has not been with me. Wishing to be in harmony with the rule governing such matters, I now say that my field of labor was Australia; preached 90 times; attended 93 other meetings; administered to sick 48 times; baptized 20; confirmed 32; ordained 1.

Believing God’s work will triumph, I am, 8017 Melrose Avenue. Paul M. Hanson.

Dear Herald: What a comfort you are to us here, in which we can learn those grand truths which are so inspiring, and to which we can also write of the blessings which the Father hath bestowed on us, which may comfort and encourage some other of the family. I have just been quite sick. Some thought I would die. There was no elder within a hundred miles of us, I think; but the Saints, five in number, came in and held a season of prayer in my behalf, and it was but a short time till the pain was gone, and I was asleep. Last winter I was greatly afflicted with what the wisdom of the world calls an incurable disease, in the last stage. I had set my earthly house in order as near as I could. I had made the mistake which many have done, I had engaged a doctor, one who is called a specialist in the disease, until I had given up hope of living but a short time. By so doing I felt too unworthy to call for the elders. I felt that I had almost forfeited my right to ask the Father to heal me. About that time two elders came, and I decided to call them, with many promises to the Father of greater obedience in the future. They administered several times; but the blessing came with the admonition that I keep humble and faithful. When the elder laid his hands on my head, I was feeling that I would perhaps never get up again (because I could see no improvement at the first effort); but when he took them off I felt as well as I ever did, and went to work right away, and that affliction has not returned.

Once before, when all earthly wisdom had failed, God in his goodness and mercy saw fit to heal me; and at times he has seemed to bless almost before the asking; and I sometimes wonder why he is so merciful to me, when there are those whom I know of that have been asking for a blessing for years and have not seemed to receive it, and who seem many times more worthy than I. But God understands why it is. It seems strange to me; for I am one of the weakest of his children. Still whenever I am afflicted, I seem I can understand just what act of disobedience caused it, and it is always my own fault; a slighted promise, or indulging in a season of rebellion, etc. Such should never be. And with his help, I will keep my promises to him, and serve him better the remainder of my days, whether they be few or many.

And I would admonish the Saints to always appeal to the Father first of all; and do not think because the first administration does not seem to bring the blessing, that it is all a failure. Do we let the doctor off with one visit? No, he comes every day; and if the patient dies, we think he did all he could; and if another one of the family is sick, we get the same doctor and he comes every day. But when God’s servant comes once and there is no effect at that one time, he is called no more. I believe the Lord has rules by which he works, and I do not believe we ought to expect him to have nothing to do but answer us. You know how Daniel, that great old man, prayed three weeks without his prayer being answered. Then the message came that he had been heard from the first, and the reason he had not received the answer, the messenger says, was that the “prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days,” and now he had come to answer Daniel’s prayer.

One good old mother here told me that she was sick nigh to death. The elder had come three or four times, but without effect, and all had become discouraged. As she lay one night with her face to the wall, she saw the shadows of two people on the wall. One was black and the other white. The black one kept saying to her, If you don’t get the doctor you will die. But the white one would say, If at first you don’t succeed, try, try again. So she asked them to go for the elder once more. When they got to the elder’s house another elder had come, and they both came and administered, and she was entirely well at once. Her testimony has given me great strength along this line. She lives here yet, and will not mind her testimony being used that it may strengthen some one else. I beg an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may be humble and faithful.

MINERVA JOHNSON.

ADAMSTON, West Virginia, October 3, 1906.

Editors Herald: On the 23d of September we entered into discussion with Ira C. Moore at Dellslow, Monongalia County, West Virginia, arranged for which had been made by Elder Joseph Maxon of our side and Elder Lawrence Scott of the Church of Christ, commonly called the Campbellite Church. Bro. O. B. Thomas went with me as moderator, but about the commencement of the strife was called home on account of his wife’s illness. Bro. Joseph Maxon acted in his place. The debate commenced on Sunday evening in a tent provided by Mr. Moore for the purpose. I affirmed the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints as being in harmony with the New Testament in organization, faith, and practice. He affirmed the Church of Christ as being the church of Christ in fact, in origin, organization, doctrine, and practice.

On the arrival of Br. Thomas and I. N. Roberts I tendered them the work if they would proceed to the spot at the time appointed; but they excused themselves and Bro. Thomas being sub-missionary in charge said he would rather I would do the debating, and he would assist. When we began, it was understood that we hold five sessions of two hours each on this proposition, and then six sessions on ours. This was, however, reduced to five sessions on each proposition. Beginning on Sunday evening, in a two-hour session, and continuing every night until Sunday, there were held three two-hour sessions which closed the discussion.

We felt well and strong considering age, etc. The Spirit of the Master never failed us. We kept the Christian meekness and humility throughout, which made its impression for good on the hearts of the hearers. The “old man” was many times complimented for his mild and humble spirit.

Mr. Moore was brought to the law and to the testimony, and failed, signally, to set up and establish “the church of Christ.” We are at home again feeling fairly well, but gratified indeed that we can add one more, making eleven debates with that people during our service in the latter-day work. Would like to make it just one dozen before we take our rest to await the first resurrection.

Mr. Moore and his moderator, Elder M. Carey, as also Elder Scott, gave us kindly treatment, and made the announcement that we were in no way connected with the Utah sect. Report of the discussion will be made to the Ensign by Bro. Maxon. Dellslow is on the Morgantown & Kingwood Railroad, about seven miles from the former place. Electric-cars run from Morgantown within two miles of Dellslow, to a large tin-plate plant. Dellslow is a mining and coke-making region, and while it can not be called a city, it is a thickly-settled country, and there is quite a good opening made there now for the gospel. In hope of the promised inheritance, I am ever yours,

D. LEMUEL SHINN.

Editors Herald: Perhaps the Saints would like to know how the tent of the eastern district, and its force, are getting along. Bro. G. M. Shippy and writer just closed a four weeks’ meeting in the town of Marlette on Sunday, September 30. Four were led into the waters of baptism by Bro. Shippy on that date. The weather was very favorable for tent-work, except the last few nights, which were very cold.

Many friends were made to the cause, and it is hoped that in the near future some more will accept the angel’s message. The crowds were not large, but those that came were very attentive, except on a few occasions some of the baser sort tried to disturb the meetings by throwing stones and sticks on the tent, and cutting the ropes.

It was remarked by a certain minister in town that we should be driven out of town with rotten eggs; but it did not happen, for which we are thankful.

This summer is the writer’s first experience in missionary work, and although they may threaten to do violence, yet I will, by the help of God, try to remain faithful to my promise to him. We moved the tent here to-day, as the conference convenes here the 6th of this month. There is a noble band of Saints here under the leadership of Bro. Herman Deim, and we look forward to an enjoyable time at our conference. Asking an interest in the prayers of the Saints, I remain, as ever,

Editors Herald: The tent season closed with us October 7, with tent full of interested listeners. I began tent-work June 16, with Bro. Oscar Case, who continued with me until July 11. Bro. Joseph Lane was with me for a few days, then Elder Eli Hayer took hold, and continued with me to the close.

I enjoyed the company of all the brethren, besides some local help in preaching, and a lot of volunteer help from other brethren, as well as outsiders. The tent expenses have been met, so far as the tent that we run was concerned, without collections from the branches, as heretofore. Have had the tent in four different places, and good interest at all of them; and especially so at Stow Creek, and on the Beaver. Ten were baptized in all, with possibly two others, who came in from the effects of tent-work last fall and this summer.

But I do not look upon baptism as the only thing accomplished in tent-work, any more than in any other preaching-services. The fact is, Saints need encouragement. Sinners need to be aroused to a sense of their obligation to their Maker, as well as to themselves and their associates.

To get some people to see that God can not consistently acknowledge all churches as they now exist, in a conglomerata of unbelief, to be his (God’s) church, is quite difficult, because the hireling ministry have so far united among themselves as to say that it “makes no difference what church you join, just so you are sincere.” Their hypocrisy is detected, however, just as soon as one of their members joins in with the Latter Day Saints. You can hear the wolves howling then for miles around.

Well, I have come out of tent-work for this year, feeling well and strong in the faith. Will go to day to attend district conference at Dow City, and expect the blessing of the Lord to attend all the services.

By the way, Mr. or Mrs. Herald, if Zion could be redeemed on paper, we've just about "got tharr." But I think it is a good deal like the old Dutchman said, "It issh pretty much all veend." But, unfortunately, wind will not redeem Zion or anything else. In fact, if each one of us would live so we could consistently ask and receive the blessings of the Lord to rest on paper, we've just about INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, October 4, 1906.

Dear Herald: It has been a long time since I reported myself through your limited space, yet I read and think of the work you are doing in our large world, and how few there are who read you in the proper light.

July 12, I left my home for a preaching-tour in the east. I was away over two months and a half, and put in good time preaching in Monsapex, Bar Harbor, Kennebec, Jonesport, Beals, and Head Harbor Isles, Indian River, Little Deer Isle, Mountainville, and Stonington, Maine. I also preached in Sommerville and Haverhill, Massachusetts. I had fine congregations to speak to in all those places. Maine is the place of my birth into this world, and where I labored for seventeen years, and brought many to see the glorious light of the gospel. I found people starving for the bread of life, for they have been greatly neglected. Some one should be with and preach to them. The spirit of gathering has come to many of them, and they would like to gather home to Zion, but poverty holds them fast.

Many have homes, but it is hard to dispose of them. Bro. Lewis Farnsworth sold his home, and will no doubt reach Independence to-day. Others will move as soon as the way opens up. I told them we had a lovely country, for it was God's choice country for the gathering-place of his people, Joseph's promised land; and if they came here they must at present have something to help themselves with, and not depend on the charity of others; for that was a very poor article in our Zion market now; but must depend wholly on their own resources, come to stay, and mind their own business, and they would come out all right.

Yours very truly,

J. C. FOSS.

WILMINGTON, Illinois, October 9, 1906.

Editors Herald: Bro. Hackett and I just closed a good meeting at Diselm, twelve miles east of here, in order that we could attend to a small debate we have on hand with a minister of the Presbyterian order. It came about as a result of our preaching on the street earlier in the summer.

I speak of it as a small debate on account of being allowed only two sessions of one thirty-minute speech for each disputant each evening. It is so unfair, and none of his belief goes on trial. But there was no other way that we could get to be heard, so Bro. Hackett tells me, as he had the matter arranged before I came.

The Presbyterian was the challenging party, so at the close of this debate we will see that he debates fair questions or backs down, and the people have a chance to see him in his true light. There are some splendid Saints in this district; but the same question troubles here that does in many other places.

Where are our local men coming from that will feed the sheep proper kind of food, so there will be a spiritual growth that is so needful for the future good of the church and her people? I am rather inclined to believe we should ask the assistance of the "evangelical" men, whose duty it is under the law to be fathers and hold revival meetings.

The duty of the high priests is to preside over districts and large branches, the seventy to preach the gospel to the world. It has been my place to try to keep my work in line with my calling. On the other hand I can not but see that this spiritual growth department is below what it should be. I am speaking of conditions outside of the stakes. And I do not believe high priests or seventies can bring needed conditions about without the above-mentioned men.

Bro. Hackett and the writer will work together for some time, and if any of the Saints in the district see a good chance for work in their parts, and will let us hear from them, we will come. May God bless his truth.

Editors Herald: We moved to this place this week to pick cotton a while. As we were not making a living at Palestine in shops, thought we would try the farm for a while. We left Bro. A. B. Dunnam with the Elkhart Branch to care for it as best he could under the circumstances. If there are any Saints in this part of the country we would be pleased to have them call and see us; and if any of the elders pass this way we would be glad to have them call and stay awhile with us, and we will see if we can arouse an interest in this part of Texas.

BERRY DALE, Florida, September 24, 1906.

Saints' Herald: Some of your many readers, no doubt, will want to know how the battle goes in the "Sunny South."

Since the reunion at McKenzie I spent a week at Flat Rock, where I had the sad rites to perform of preaching Sr. Deason's funeral and laying her to rest.

From there I came to Calhoun to attend the Florida conference. We had a pleasant time and a large number of people got to hear the gospel preached. Brn. T. C. Kelley, E. L. Hensen, and I did the preaching.

After conference, Bro. Hensen and I came to Berry Dale and preached in a schoolhouse till Saturday, when we preached in the new Santa Rosa church which is not yet finished. It is a fine, large building and will be a credit to the Saints who built it and also to the church.

We continued over Sunday, attending Sunday-school, holding three preaching-meetings and baptized and confirmed five. The writer did the baptizing. Others were thinking some of uniting, but failed to make up their minds. I think several others will obey here before long.

We have out an appointment in a schoolhouse two miles south of the church for the rest of this week, till Saturday, when we have out an appointment near Botts. We will likely labor together till the time for conference in the Alabama District, October 27.

The work in Alabama and Florida is languishing for lack of efficient local workers. What local workers there are are congregated in a few places and do but little outside of their branches. Lots of other places get no help only as the missionaries get around once or twice a year, and some places it seems as though we are not going to get to at all. One missionary in each of four States, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, and Georgia, leaves the work poorly represented. The scattered Saints are famishing for the bread of life, but who can supply their wants as they should be? to say nothing of the many places where the gospel has not yet gone.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Even in the branches, where there are local laborers, the presence of the missionary is needed occasionally to keep the work from losing ground. People usually soon get tired hearing only the local talent and need a missionary to revivify them and reach the outsiders. I have spent but little time in active branches outside of conference and reunion times; yet I have not had time to reach near all the places where there are scattered Saints. To my mind, they must be cared for before we can break up new ground where there are no Saints. I have not been losing any time either since coming South. From the middle of June till the ninth of September, during eighty-eight days, I preached ninety sermons, and baptized four. I have baptized nine so far.

If any desire to correspond with me, they can reach me by addressing me at Lamoni, Iowa, or at McKenzie, Alabama.

Fraternally yours,

J. M. STUBBART.

GRANNIS, Arkansas, October 5, 1906.

Editors Herald: I am here by request of the general minister in charge to look after the work, and to attend a debate between Bro. W. E. Peak and Reverend W. M. Hicks, of Dallas, Texas, of the Missionary Baptist Church, which was to have begun September 20. For some reason the Baptists failed to obtain the services of Hicks, and then tried to get Reverend Bogart of Little Rock, this State; but again they failed. They finally secured Reverend W. L. Smith, of Ashdown, and the debate began on the evening of September 27.

It was apparent from the beginning that Smith had run up against something more difficult than he had met in the past. But wherein he lacked in knowledge and in a proper understanding of the Scriptures, as well as history, he was well armed with bombast and ridicule of the most contemptible sort. He seemed to have no regard for the truth, but evidently held the opinion that any method was justifiable in order to down "Mormonism." Bro. Peak maintained and defended our position in an able manner, and we certainly lost nothing by the encounter. The Saints feel encouraged, and the fair-minded and thinking people have no difficulty in discerning the fact that Smith had no scriptural weapons wherewith to meet the claims of the latter-day work. Of course there is a certain class here, as in many other places, who will gladly swallow anything, no matter how unreasonable and unjust, if it only serves as a weapon against the Saints.

It was my intention to have attended the camp-meeting at Bethany, Oklahoma, but my coming here prevented, which I much regret, but trust it was all for the best. The debate closed night before last, and Bro. Peak has left for his field in Kansas. I will remain and continue work in this region for a short time, after which I think I wish to visit points in Indian Territory, as I shall find opportunity.

The brethren of the missionary force in this part of the field, as far as I know, are all engaged, and are striving to roll onward the work. From some parts come quite cheering and encouraging reports, while in other places the prospects are not flattering. We hope to continue the conflict, however, trusting the Lord to aid and direct until victory and final triumph shall be ours.

In bonds,

BELDING, Michigan, October 8, 1906.

Editors Herald: We are busy in the two-day meetings announced for this district. One week ago, we were sounding the gospel trumpet at Grant, Michigan. The services had been announced for Sparta, but the resident Saints thought it wise to move the efforts a few miles away, where the town hall was secured and a fine-spirited, earnest, and eager band of Saints threw their energies together for a splendid meeting, which was enjoyed by all. Four services were held on Sunday: social meeting at nine o'clock in the morning, a goodly degree of the Spirit blessing all present. The three following services were devoted to preaching, the writer discoursing three times with excellent liberty, and convictions that good was there. Our devotions were interrupted by the difference in the bell calling us thereto, and I must say that while the clang of the one calling us to spiritual devotion was pleasing—the tone of the one calling us to dinner devotions was pleasant. The good Saints had the table spread, extending nearly across the hall, and the epicurean dainties did look inviting. A large number did ample justice to the good things, while Saints talked of their hope in the gospel. Mr. Editor, we confess we did not stop to consider whether it was religious or not, but directed our attention chiefly to the good things. I have yet a confused memory of cake, pie, and cookie,—the latter labeled "Mary Ann," and how on taking one an extra jumped out on my "lap." Well, the people were happy and drank in the spirit of worship. I am impressed that good may be performed around the village of Grant. Bro. Field was to administer the ordinance of baptism near there on the 7th of October.

The services at Belding yesterday were also fine—the first opportunity for the Saints to secure a beautiful hall for the efforts. It was appreciated with all of its superb appointments. This hall was obtained through the efforts of the "Sunshine Band," they paying three dollars rent for the two-day service. This "band" numbers twenty-five members, and is doing a fine work here in Belding. The hall is a fraternal home for the Woodmen, the K. O. T. M., and the L. O. T. M. Fine crowds came out to hear the preached word, especially Sunday evening, when the large room was well filled and largely outsiders. Here, as at Grant, they "put us through." But the Lord helped us, and we had attentive and eager listeners. Bro. Granger is well spoken of all through this section, and his absence from the series of meetings to attend his sick wife was lamented. We go from here to Alto to continue the battle.

Hopefully yours,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

WEST HARTFORD, Arkansas, October 15, 1906.

Dear Herald: The spring and summer with their successions of rains and floods, their scorching heat and gentle zephyrs, sandwiched with fierce storms of savagely shaped hail, are like dreams, things of the past.

The only striking peculiarity in our work as missionaries this season has been the unending deadness of our surroundings. The writer has been associated a considerable part of the time with Elder Grimes. (Not the Old Grimes that is dead, that we sang of when a child; but J. F. Grimes who is superlatively alive to every good word and work.) But go where we would, and do what we might, we could not awaken the people to the fact that we were among them with a message from heaven; and in only a few places did it seem that our presence was appreciated. Along this line it has been the most serious experience of a lifetime.

Well, Elder Grimes went home, and the writer went a fishing. His two youngest sons had made him a visit a while we were preaching on Cane Island, and we had tried our luck at fishing on the St. Francis River; but the only thing we caught was a good thorough drenching. But the sight of fish as they played around us, had so sharpened the missionary's appetite that he could not give up the idea of catching a fish; so he visited a son (E. L.) at Hellena who replenished his pocket-book in a substantial manner, and he went on down to Lake View and visited another son (R. R.) who has a reputation for catching fish. Much rain detained them, and the fish were not inclined their way; so he visited still another son (J. N.) at Camdon, his appetite all the time growing keener and keener for fish. Here he procured a first-class rod and reel, and a lifelike minnow bait surrounded with sets of hooks, and marched away to the histrionic Ouachita (Washitaw), as proudly as a boy with new red-topped boots. Stepping to the water’s edge with a great flourish he essayed to span the river; Wh-a-r-r-o-o-o-b. I wish you could have seen that reel. It had run the silkend coil, and the result was a tow-headed mass of loops and knots, links and kinks. The ordinary angler would have “cursed.” The missionary had business back in the shade: a job for a patient man.

Again the amateur stood on the bank, not so confident as before but altogether undaunted. Another great flourish, followed by another short rattle of the reel, ending with another w-h-u-b. What had happened? Why, the line had been carelessly wounded, mostly to one end of the spool, and the intense motion had caused it to telescope, that was all. Only there was another errand back in the shade. To make a long story short, in about forty-eight hours he had solved the problem of winding the line smoothly, to use his thumb to prevent the thing from running away from itself, to stop the reel as soon as the hait struck the water. He had learned to throw out more line than Mr. Anybody who had less than one hundred, yards, and to wind it in with a knowing look, to be patient when tired and hungry and wet with sweat. But he failed to learn how to induce the fish to cooperate with him. And all the time his apprentice grew keener and keener for fish. It is hard to imagine what would have happened if J. N. had not caught a fine string of fish with a silver hook; but so it was; and the writer sat back in the big chair rounded out, full up, and satisfied.

Then he packed his grip and moved on to the extreme western edge of the State, and into Texas and Choctaw Nation to gather up some historical items. We have met coarse, rank opposition in places where the Devil was in no danger (so far as we could see) of loosing ground, had his ministers kept silent.

I attended a part of the recent debate between Reverend W. L. Smith for the Baptists, and Elder W. E. Peak for the Saints, at Grannis, Arkansas.

I have not “fought with beasts at Ephesus,” but after being long in the swamps I found myself confronted by old General Chills, with whom I had a terrible battle. I was bombarded with all sorts of frigid missiles, and exposed to a dreadful torrent of liquid air, until I was almost too stiff to quiver. Chills retreated for some unknown cause; but he was quickly succeeded by General Fever, who showered my old castle with hot dust until near a white heat was attained. I felt the intense atmosphere of the pine hills, while I was tenderly cared for by Bro. and Sr. J. W. Brewer, who know exactly how to make a lonely missionary realize that he is welcome. I was nicely treated also by others in Grannis.

Glancing at my book, I see that I have changed beds over sixty times this conference year. This means that I have been at homes where my heart ached as I watched the nervous tension, and watchful vigilance of the matron queen chasing a single fly from her domain; where every particular square inch of floor was kept clean enough to eat from, and not a particle of dust was to be found anywhere. But my heartaches were not to be compared with the deep humiliation suffered, as I have seen pies and cakes and fruit and preserves and butter and bread and potatoes stand exposed to swarms of flies from one meal to the next, then the well-set periods that were printed on the edges of the dishes wiped into long-tailed coffins, and I invited to sit down and eat.

At some homes I find back porches adorned with ferns and flowers, bud and bloom, rare and odd plants that one never tires of viewing. At another place I found one confusion of all sorts of filthy dishes, buckets, cans, pots and rags, grease and smears.

Some homes have back yards that are things of beauty, a joy for ever, where one is regaled with odor and aroma. And I remember of seeing another (where she that stood for the home-builder had twice the time and double the strength) strewn with straw, moldy rags, cast-away buckets, and jugs, cans, jars, pans, chairs, water-hose, ropes, boxes and barrels, hoops and staves, a perfect breeding-pen for deadly contagion, especially in the South. I have stopped at homes where mothers grappled with grim poverty: half dozen little buds of promise, and not a change of clothes around; not dishes enough to set the table for all. My prayers and tears have gone out simultaneously as I witnessed their desperate efforts to chase the wolf from the door, and keep the little ones clean. At another place where there was but one babe to care for, and the woman furnished with abundance, I saw dollars’ worth of new swaddling clothes and other garments strewn about the yard on the ground in a moldy, deaying condition, and the mother visiting the neighbors.

Upon one occasion, I was eating breakfast at the table alone, and there by the side of my plate lay a very large black comb with a wad of long, brown hair in the teeth. When through my meal I stacked the comb with my knife and fork on my plate, thinking it would arrest the sister’s attention. I was mistaken, for at dinner there lay the comb again with an addition to the tangle of mut-brown hair in it. I noted that the looking-glass was over my end of the table, and I thought, “Tis well that she combs her hair before cooking; and I tried to believe the culinary end of the matter was all right. The biscuits looked exceptionally nice. The antics of the baby attracted my attention, so that I chewed down a good-sized mouthful, before disjecting it. I had made another serious mistake, for my tongue and palate were soon badly tangled. I shall never be able to record the next act in the drama, for I do not know what did happen.

From here I made a long, cold, weary ride home, arriving in the late evening. My family was away visiting our daughter. I pulled the knitted cover from the glistening flue, lighted the well-filled lamp, turned the snow-white cloth from over the neatly arranged dishes, opened the clothes-closet, dropped onto my knees and, while tears of gratitude dropped from my eyes, I thanked God for giving me a neat and industrious wife.

“Ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old times,” “cleanliness is next to godliness”; “but I say unto you, That” cleanliness is an integral part of godliness; for “it is written,” “BE YE CLEAN.”

Lord help us all to come up higher by correcting our individual shortcomings.

I am preaching every night at the home of Bro. and Sr. Chronister, they having moved out and seated the front room for the purpose of saving sitting and our neighbors whom they desire should hear the gospel. The union church and schoolhouse are closed against us. We all attended their meeting at eleven on Sunday, and, counting the preacher, there were eleven present. At night our humble quarters were well filled, and the best of attention given.

My needs are being studiously anticipated and amply supplied by Bro. and Sr. Chronister. Hartford is a lively little mining town, with about half dozen coal-mines in active operation, surrounded on three sides by the Sugar Loaf and Photo Mountains. The weather is damp and chill; the clouds hang low, and float...
Bishop Taylor's report was now read: “In submitting a report of the finances of the bishopric as from January 1, 1906, to June 30, 1906, I have to inform you that my duties as bishop in the British Isles ended on the latter named date. I started the year with a balance of £221 10s. 9d., and have received in tithes and offerings since January 1, 238 5s., and from Bishop E. L. Kelley, £361 15s. 9d., total £191 11s. 8d. I have paid missionaries' families, £155 5s.; to missionaries for postage and other expenses, £29 16s. 9d.; leaving a balance of £7, which I have handed over to C. H. Caton. I am glad to be able to say that at the close of my duties, the mission does not owe a penny to any one. No doubt many of you will have learned from the Herald that I have resigned the office of bishop, which resign- ments was tendered by me to E. L. Kelley. The infirmities of age have made it impossible for me to continue to discharge the duties. In taking leave of those duties and of the brethren and sisters, I feel constrained to tender my heartfelt thanks for the great kindness and generous consideration I have received from all with whom I have come in contact.

Counselors of my shortcomings, it has always been a pleasure and strength to feel that I enjoyed the confidence and trust of those whom I did my best to serve. In looking back on the years I have served one of the chiefs among the various teachers in this country—forty-two years—I am astonished at the progress made. During all these years it has been my happy lot to enjoy the good Spirit to help me to bear through trial and woe my share of the responsibility for the work I have done. I also wish to bear testimony to the faithful services of my counselors, Elders C. H. Caton and Joseph Dewsnup, Sr. They have been a tower of strength to me in the bishopric. The most perfect harmony has existed between us. It is now some thirty years since it was my privilege to attend the city of Manchester, for the purpose of organizing a branch of the Reorganization. Since then many of those who were present at that time have passed into the rest prepared for the people of God. May it be to each of our happy lots, when ours is over, to so obtain. In conclusion I pray for the prosperity and peace of the Saints, and hope the efforts of the past years may be carried onward with increased vigor to a successful issue by those who are called upon to take positions of responsibility. May you have a good time in conference.

I remain, your brother in the Lord, Thomas Taylor, late bishop of the British Isles Mission, per C. H. Caton, Birmingham, August 1, 1906.”

The conference treasurer's report was now presented. Elder Dewsnup, Jr., said he was dismayed when he undertook the work with so much to pay and so small a balance handed over. He was pleased to say that our debts were now paid, and there was a balance in hand. The report of the conference treasurer's committee was submitted.

The report of the committee on district boundaries was read. It was as follows: “36 Bellbrooke Grove, Harehills Lane, Leeds, June 14, 1906. We the undersigned being appointed a committee on district boundaries report as follows: We have not been able to meet together owing to the great inconvenience and expense that would be attached to such a course, and consequently have had to do most of the work by correspondence. We present the suggested boundaries for your consideration and approval. The Manchester District to comprise the counties of Lancashire and Cheshire. The Birmingham District to comprise Warwickshire, Staffordshire, and Worcestershire. The London District to comprise all Yorkshire. The London District to comprise London, Middlesex, Sussex, and Kent. The Eastern District to be comprised of the city of Cardiff, Gloucestershire, and Mon- mout, and that Sheffield be included in the Leeds District. The Western District to comprise Glamorgan, except the city of Cardiff, Carmarthen, Brecknockshire, and Radnorshire. On Sunday, August 5, the services were held in the Cooperative Hall, Downing Street. On Monday, August 6, the session was opened with prayer, shortly after 10 a.m. The report of the Leeds District was presented by Walter Aveyard. The report of the mission book agent, A. Fysh, Warrington, was read. His sales for the year amounted to £14 2s. 6d. He was to send every five successive, one copy on all orders for £1 and upwards. Send stamped addressed envelope for catalogues. The report of the auditing committee on Bishopric accounts was read as follows: "We the undersigned being appointed a committee on the bishopric accounts, have audited the accounts of the bishopric of the above named mission, and certify that the three accounts of Bishop Thomas Taylor, Counselors C. H. Caton and Joseph Dewsnup, Sr., for the year ending June 30, 1906, are correct. Elders E. Mer­dith and J. W. Taylor, auditors." It was now resolved that the report of the auditing committee on the bishopric accounts be accepted and spread upon the committee minutes.

Evans was next read, after which it was resolved that the report be received, and the committee continued, with instruction to complete the subscription list by Christmas, 1906. Evangelical minister, Joseph Greenwood of the Birmingham District, stated that he felt it his duty to help us in our work, and to discern the importance of God's provision. He lacked the means to enable him to travel or employ a stenographer. He had a fervent desire to go forward and help on the great work. He was a steward of the Church, and had been elected to hold a quorum. He asked him in a kindly way to be respectful to this conference.

In answer to a question the chair stated that this British Isles Mission conference would be a legislative body when General Conferences ceased to be held, and a general assembly of the church is held instead. Resolved that a committee be appointed consisting of Brn. Greenwood, J. E. Meredith, J. W. Rush ton, and W. R. Armstrong, in order suitably to write a letter to Bishop Taylor relative to his resignation as bishop. Resolved that the above-named committee suitably remember the two retiring counselors. Elder C. H. Caton read a letter he had received from Bishop E. L. Kellogg concerning the retirement of Bishop Caton and his counselor, Elder J. Dewsnup, on the 1st of July, 1906; also a letter appointing him as Bishop's agent of the British Isles. This appointment was indorsed by resolution. It was next moved that we do not give up the hope of altering or the holding of mission conferences to reunions. A motion having for its object the establishment of a burial society was made by resolution. The auditor's report was next received and adopted. Resolved that the selection of our elders whose duty shall be to have charge of the very basis of the work of God is "cooperation," which involves the true principle of equality, the success of the whole depending upon the efficiency of the unit, not in the abstract but in relation of part to part. Each individual member, in my experience, the greatest danger we have confronting us at the present is the lack of practical unity in our work both in branches and districts, and the mission as a whole. There is an unfortunate spirit of classification which quite "cramps" and impedes the advancement of our cause. The least we hope is, that the prevailing note of despair and weakness. Still I would not come before you with any disposition to evade the causes for anxiety and the menaces of misunderstanding, but with the desire that the Church may think. Such a temper or attitude would neither be wise nor just. The glamour of a general aspect should not be allowed to obscure the dangers which beset every step of the road on which we are traveling. In this annual review and report we must face the facts as we find them, so that we may be able to avoid in our future policy that which retards the work, and conserve those influences which will accelerate its success.

Here the following substitute for Rule 6 of the Mission rules was adopted: "That a financial secretary shall be appointed from among the elders whose duty shall be to supervise all moneys that may be subscribed or collected." Resolved that a committee be appointed to revise the mission rules. It was then resolved that the committee be named by the chair. The committee consisted of members. A motion was made by Elder J. E. Meredith that a committee be appointed to revise the mission rules. It was resolved that the auditor's report on the mission accounts to July 31, 1906, in accordance with your instructions, and certify the same to be correct. J. E. Meredith, J. W. Taylor, auditors. Resolved that the auditor's report on the mission accounts to July 31, 1906, be indorsed. Resolved that the rule relating to the auditing of the bishop's accounts be rescinded. Resolved that the president of the mission appoint a committee of three to audit the bishop's accounts, the rule to be rescinded upon visiting Birmingham. Report of the Seventh Quorum of Elders: "The quorum met at 9.30, August 6. Elder Rush ton was president. The conference had shared a profitable and enjoyable time together, with bright prospects for the future. Elder J. E. Meredith was elected to succeed Bro. George Baty, who had lately emigrated to America. No levy this year. Resignation of Bro. J. T. Girdham (Leeds) received with regrets. A vote of thanks to retiring president for past services was passed. Resolved that Bro. J. Eccleston (Derby) and William Cox (South Wales) be enrolled as members. Brn. W. R. Armstrong and J. W. Taylor were selected as counselors to Bishop Taylor. The election of counselors as an item of business was made. The Sixth Quorum of Priests: "We beg to report that we have held two sessions during conference presided over by Bro. J. W. Green. We had eight members present, and spent a profitable and enjoyable time together, with bright prospects for the future. Our chief item of business was the election of a new secretary, and consideration of reports, etc. Praying for the success of the work which we love, J. W. Green, president; R. W. Smith, secretary." Resolved that the selection of our Bro. J. E. Meredith as president of the elders' quorum be indorsed. Resolved that the selection of Brn. William R. Armstrong and J. W. Taylor as counselors be indorsed. Resolved that the audit of the mission accounts be rescinded. Resolved that Bro. J. D. Howell be released as assistant secretary of the mission. Bro. J. W. Taylor was then appointed as his successor. Resolved that we sustain Bro. Joseph Dewsnup, J. D. Howell, as secretary of the mission. Resolved that the selection of William R. Armstrong as local historian, and Bro. Alfred Fysh as mission book agent. The general and local authorities of the church were sustained by vote. It was resolved that the best thanks of the conference be awarded the deacons, chorister, and organist; also the catering, locating, and other committees. Resolved that the best thanks of the conference be awarded our chairman. At this juncture our financial secretary presented a scheme for the raising of one thousand shillings ($240), which was adopted. We shall have our annual session in various parts of the mission, without being a burden to the local authorities. Resolved that we empower the financial secretary, consonant with the rights of the mission, to make such arrangements as shall be necessary to carry on our business. The recognition of the above-named committee suitably remember the two thing opposed to these qualities to everything involved in them. I beseech you, for the sake of the Christ whom we profess to serve, and the church we claim to revere as our own, let us be to others what we would have others be to us. In our relation to God, his body, that we, as members of that body, will now faithfully perform the functions of which we are capable. Remember our power to lift up our brethren is not only to save him from the error of his ways, if he will listen, but to share in the work of his salvation, if he so may believe. They are possessed by the worst of all devils. Let God cast that devil out speedily. Our conduct is the articulate expression of the inward motives that actually control us. Let us by the power of the indwelling Spirit permit the Holy Spirit to reform us in our doings. Do we not neglect our duty in the spirit of petulance or nonchalance, because of what we think is a fault in others, whatever we may say of our love for the work, for God, or the truth, the fact is, we have deserted God, truth, and the church by the black cloud of selfishness.

Remember, in the language of Frederic Harrison, "Our conduct is the result of the ideal we revere, plus the truth we hold to be good measured by that ideal."

We can not make a man holy or just, but a virtuous life maketh him dear unto God.

In the mission there is a need of more fidelity, love, and earnestness in our local churches. We still insist that while doctrines and organization are necessary, yet to be devoid of the spirit of the gospel, we lack the essential quality of religion. 'True happiness is not a purely intellectual affair; it is a grace of the heart. The opportunity for sacrifice for the good of others. May God touch us this conference and grant us a spiritual resurrection from the bondage of selfishness, and give us the liberty of love!

Speaking from observation, conditions generally are similar to those of about 1,500 years ago. The ideas that many have about this question have not been prepared before you. It is evident that many of our people in this land are suffering under the unjust conditions of modern commercialism, and very naturally are anxious to escape the evils of this industrial competition, and to secure the benefits which they believe to be found in Zion. The ideals that many have about this question are very extravagant, and not consistent with the facts in the case, and some have suffered; and others are inviting painful disappointment because of the ill-advised action in emigrating. Spasmodically it has been a failure. Now in America to those which obtain in this land; in some instances worse. There is a man who is to be found at forty. Many there already find it difficult to secure employment, unless they are willing to work. A large number of the people in Great Britain, Italy, Russia, Hungary, and other states in Europe have been pouring by thousands as unskilled laborers to the States of America, who have proved a menace to the laborers already there. In Independence, which is a small town of about ten thousand inhabitants, as a church we have a membership of about 1,500. There are not any works there over which the church has control; and any going out there must be satisfied to take their chances on securing employment. They are not afraid to have thrown upon its hands a number of people to sustain until they can obtain employment. People have to eat and have shelter in America just as they do here. It rests with them in the last resort if they do not find work. We have people here; and the only way to get it is to work. And before you can work, you must have the opportunity. As a church we do not have a solitary provision for finding employment. Nor until they have the means of any work, what must be the result? A double loss to every one concerned, if not actual distress. The church instead of having a number of good members who to the best of their ability are supporting the church, have them now thrown upon the resources of the church for support. The safest way is to take the advice of President Joseph Smith, "If any are thinking of going to America, if they are doing well or are in a position to go, get into communication with the responsible ministry whose duty it is to give advice upon this matter, namely, the Twelve and the Bishop. I would advise missionary work if you do, through the missionary in charge or through the bishop's agent.

Let me very strongly persuade you not to be influenced by any authoritative advice from visiting brethren, without the necessary confirmation of those whose duty it is to give the advice. This year we have suffered a great deal through this, and we have taken notice of this and in future act wisely. I should like to say there is still need for more diligence in regard to reporting. I hope those who do not see the necessity of this will kindly allow missionaries to do their work quietly, and make an attempt to comply with the request.

I am pleased to say that there is a better spirit shown towards the church on the part of the public than there has been in the past. There is more toleration and sympathy. We have also had quite a number of baptisms reported for various points. In several places where new openings have been effected, there has been quite a number of baptisms reported for various points. In several places where new openings have been reported. We have had good gatherings, and we hope to have some baptisms as a result in the near future. Of course there is still a great deal of prejudice, but generally speaking the public seem disposed to encourage us in our message to the world.

All will be aware that this year we have not incurred any expense in having missionaries from America, and we are doing the best we can to meet the demand for missionary labor by the native talent. We have been favored this year in the generous sacrifice of Bro. James Ballie from Kanas who has spent a holiday in Scotland and devoted all his time to the interests of the work and has been successful in interesting some. We have also spent time in the Virgin Islands where we have a number of baptisms reported for various points. In several places where new openings have been effected, there has been quite a number of baptisms reported for various points. In several places where new openings have been reported. Scapes Goat Hill. I believe good results are imminent. Bro. Pierce labored for a while but it is considered advisable to continue, as the conditions were not all promising. So the few Saints there were left in the care of the deacon, Bro. Riddolls, and they are holding services in Bro. Riddoll's house and striving to keep the work alive. Bro. Smith then put in some work in Exeter, which produced fruit. Since the departure of Bro. Morgan he [Bro. Pierce] has been laboring in Wales with acceptance.

The reports from Scotland are very flattering. In Glasgow the branch once again has become disorganized, owing to the members leaving, and the death of Bro. Hepburn. Bro. Smith is making preparations to go to America, which will create the deacon, Bro. Riddolls, and they are holding services in Bro. Riddoll's house, and striving to keep the work alive. Bro. Smith has called us to be fellow laborers with him.

Since the departure of Bro. Morgan he has been laboring at producing order and righteousness, working to change the conditions. There are no organized places at the moment of correspondence. Akins and whatever disabilities have had to be endured, we have striven to bear them all patiently and without murmuring. In conclusion, I once again appeal to each of you individually for personal consecration to the service of the Master. Do not be discouraged because you are not seeing just what you expected, but in the spirit of triumphant faith keep on working and with the realities until you create out of the things that you do not like the things that you will like. This is what God is doing, and he has called us to be fellow laborers with him. The language of Ruskin, that "wise work is working with God and unwise work is working against God." Working with God is working at producing order and righteousness, work against God is in the spirit of the age. Every man, woman, and boy, who is neglecting duty is working against God. May God bless our gathering together.

Yours very sincerely in Christ,

S. J. W. Rusheton.

Convention Minutes.

Little Sioux.—The Sunday-school convention convened at Logan, Iowa, Friday, October 5, 1906, at 2 p.m., with district officers in charge. Program consisted of the discussion of topics pertaining to the work, and a goodly number being present much interested in the same. The first exchange of books of the circulating library was made, and if each school will do its part the library will not only benefit the few, but the many. We can say the convention was a profitable one to all. Adjoined to meet at Logan, Iowa, in February. Annie Stuart, secretary.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Northeastern Kansas District: Greeting: I have been appointed to labor in this district among the colored people. I hope all will assist me as much as is practicable in getting places throughout the district to preach to my own race; and that you will also assist me in a financial way, for I am very poor and can not do much without more of this world's goods. I am doing the very best I can in this wicked city of Leavenworth, Kansas.

Now a word as to what Bro. N. D. Dunnington has done to help the colored race. He has been laboring with me on the streets for over a month, and the street-work this summer has been very hard on both him and me. He went to Kansas City a few days ago, and bought a new tent costing him about one hundred dollars. It is a beautiful tent, and is lights. We pitched the tent September 4, on the corner Fourth and Pawnee Streets, in the slums of this city, where I have been preaching. It is a beautiful tent, and was not done. A good work. Now, Saints, I want to get my wife from the South to help me in my work here. I may be here all this conference year. That good may be done, and that I may be kept busy in my missionary work, I beg help may be sent. Your brother, E. L. Kelley is doing what he can to help me in paying board, room-rent, and expenses in general. May God bless him and others of the Saints who will help in this mission among the colored people.

THORBURN.—Sr. Alice A. Thorburn was born at Kewanee, Illinois, July 22, 1862; died at Lamoni, Iowa, October 4, 1906. On February 29, 1883, she was married to George W. Thorburn. Of them were born five children, the first being Jessie, now Mrs. W. R. Flemming. Four boys died in infancy. Sr. Thorburn had the birthright of veneration and devotion. She leaves besides her husband, daughter, four sons, three grandsons, and five sisters. She was a devoted Saint, an untiring worker in Sunday-school and Religion, loved by all who knew her. Funeral from Brick Church, Lamoni; sermon by John Smith.

Cancer in the face was the cause of his death, from which he suffered long and with commendable patience. He came down to his grave leaving behind him consistent and faithful member. The funeral was from the church at Mountainville, conducted by W. E. La Rue.

BRAND.—Elder David Brand was born in Golange, Essex, England, in 1814. Was married to Miss Martha Wardley in 1840. He and family came to America in 1856, and followed the Brighamite faction to Utah; seeing the iniquity there he shook the dust from his feet and turned back toward again, and in 1873 was baptized into the Reorganized Church. In 1880 this Union was opened at his home at Mt. Pisgah, Illinois, October 3, 1906. Besides his aged and faithful companion, he leaves six daughters, many grandchildren and great-grandchildren. Sermon by C. H. Burr, assisted by Henry Southwick.

VAN VOLTENBURG.—Mary Van Oman—Van Voltenburg, born March 13, 1845, Quebec, Canada, died October 11, 1906, Coleman, Michigan. July 5, 1863, she married Abram Van Voltenburg, and to this union two sons and seven daughters were born. Her illness was lingering, and on the 20th of March, 1904, she united with the church, covenanted with Christ that she would serve him with a pure heart, fervently, the remainder of her days. This covenant, we believe, she did endeavor to keep. Throughout her life her parents declare that her love for her parents, and for the proprieties of life were such that she never caused them one hour’s anxiety, whether in or out of their presence. Their will was her law, and thus she endeared herself to them, and to all who knew her, leaving an example worthy of imitation; and we firmly believe that angels bore away her spirit to the paradise of God; and there she awaits the resurrection of the just, at the coming of our Lord and Saviour, who, in the sight of her sleeping body shall awake at the sound of the trump, filled with life and immortality, a fit tabernacle for that angelic spirit throughout the endless ages of eternity. Funeral-service held in the Methodist Episcopal church, C. Derry officiating.

RUSSELL.—James Buchanan Russell was born October 20, 1855. Was married to Mary M. Beall, September 19, 1880, in marriage to Mabel Foss. Two sons were born of this union, who, with their mother, mourn the loss of a kind husband and father. Bro. Russell was an infidel when the gospel found him; after a careful study he was baptized by D. L. Shinn, January 25, 1891, was ordained March 11, 1895, to the office of teacher. He was ever firm in his convictions of right and wrong as he understood. Sermon by D. L. Shinn, Joseph Biggs in charge.

Her illness was lingering, and she suffered much, but through it all she was unfailingly gentle and patient. She had no fear of death, but rather expressed a desire to be at rest. “Of such is the kingdom of heaven.” Funeral-services in charge of Bro. Ulrich.

VICKERY.—In Woodward County, Oklahoma, October 3, 1906, Mrs. G. A. Vickery. She was born March 23, 1855, in Arkansas. Was married to Joseph Vickery May 6, 1880. Baptized April 24, 1886, in original church, under the ministry of M. T. Shumway. Services by Elder Westervelt. She was born January 31, 1892, at Matthewson, Oklahoma; baptized August 4, 1903. Her illness was lingering, and she suffered much; but through it all she was unfailingly gentle and patient. She had no fear of death, but rather expressed a desire to be at rest. “Of such is the kingdom of heaven.” Funeral-services in charge of Bro. Ulrich.

Sr. Corless was of brilliant mentality, and was eminently successful in her profession as an educator, both before and after her marriage. She was baptized in 1886, at Quincy, and with untiring devotion reflected the light of Christ. A bereaved husband, two daughters, fat her, three brothers, and a large circle of sorrowing relatives and friends now mourn. Funeral was conducted from the residence by S. W. L. Scott. Burial was made in Oak Grove Cemetery.

NESSER.—Bro. Arnold Nesser died in St. Joseph, Missouri, October 12, 1906. Was born in Switzerland, November 30, 1838. Leaves a devoted wife, six sons, and three daughters to mourn. His last request to his children was that each one should read and study the Book of Mormon, and give heed to its teachings. He received the angel message in his boyhood days in his native land. Went to Utah in 1861, became dissatisfied with the church under Brigham Young, and was baptized into the Reorganization in 1871. Sermon by William Lewis.

Domestic Science as a Profession.

Domestic science, as a special branch for teachers, is as yet in its infancy, and I can not inform you of any college or of any university giving such instruction. Altogether there are loan funds and small scholarships in several colleges with domestic science courses, which will help you to complete your studies if your funds fail and you show that you are peculiarly adapted to them. Also in many of the larger cities, domestic science and domestic arts are included in the free night-school courses of the public schools and are taught in the night classes of the Young Women's Christian Association.

But the woman who has met with reverses and has no funds at her command had best adapt more practical means of establishing herself by her knowledge of domestic science and household economics.

The influence of patronesses and the right persons on boards of directors, she can perhaps secure an opening as matron or assistant matron or housekeeper of a small charity institution, but it requires powerful influence to overcome the feeling that a trained woman should have the place. Here again the personality or determination of the woman, even more than her natural ability as a housewife plays an important part.

If you are brave enough to put your pride in your pocket and enter the linen-room of a hotel, you can study hotel housekeeping at close range and incidentally be in line for promotion. If you are willing to perform the menial duties of a working housekeeper, in a big city, you will learn and you may have the place. Here again the personality or determination of the woman, even more than her natural ability as a housewife plays an important part.

Features in the Philippine Postal Savings Bank.

The Philippine postal savings bank is intended primarily to provide a place for the safe deposit of small savings and is not expected to usurp the business of private banks. There are, however, in the Philippine Islands, as in other countries, well-to-do people, who, by reason either of their distance from private banks or of their lack of confidence in them, hoard their savings and confide them in boxes or basements of their houses or give them in benevolence. This class of people the postal savings bank offers an absolutely safe place of deposit for any amount whatsoever exempt from all government taxes. Whatever proceeds the bank may realize from these non-interest-bearing deposits will accrue to the government taxes. The following are the cost per square yard: 1,400,000 square yards, equivalent to nearly eighty miles of pavement on a street thirty feet wide.

Two main causes have mitigated against a wider adoption of the creosoted block pavement. One has been the prejudice engendered by the former experience with wood. The other is the rising price of the two materials used. The Forest Service recently performed a comparative test of the two materials and concluded that creosoted wood pavement is of much greater practical value than all other cities in the United States. The cost of the creosoted wood pavement is at present comparatively high, averaging about $3 per square yard, including construction and materials. In the larger cities, however, the cost of the pavement has been reduced materially below this figure, and good results have been secured. In Minneapolis, Minnesota, where the city itself lays the pavement, the total cost per yard is approximately $2.50. To attempt to cheapen the price, however, at the expense of thoroughness of treatment or careful construction is, with creosoted wood pavement, particularly dangerous economy. Even at the prevailing price, the excellence of this pavement causes many engineers to regard it as the best general purpose one now in use.

The five cities in which the largest amounts of wood pavement are found are, in order, Indianapolis, New York, Minneapolis, Cincinnati, and Boston. These cities have more than trebled their wood pavement than all other cities in the United States combined. The total amount of this pavement in use in this country at the end of the year 1905 was about 1,400,000 square yards, equivalent to nearly eighty miles of pavement on a street thirty feet wide.

The October Arena is a magazine that all thoughtful Americans should read. Its table of contents is as timely as it is varied, and the papers are for the most part remarkably strong and interesting. Among the contributions of special value we mention the following: "Individualism through Socialism; a reply to the Honorable William J. Bryan," by Professor Thomas Elmer Will, A. M.; "The Anglo-Saxon crime," by Horace Ralph; "The Anglo-Saxon woman; "Give me liberty," by William Restelle; "The university of Berlin and the proposed changes in the German system of national education," by Maynard Butler; "An object-lesson in the solution of race problems," by Frank J. Mather; "Heresy in the Episcopal church," by Katherine Kilgore; "G. R. Spencer: A cartoonist of Progressive Democracy," illustrated; "Socialism and the liquor traffic," by William B. Watts; "Sarmiento: the great South American statesman," by Mary C. Clapp, and "Pearl Harbor," by Honorable George Fred Williams and Winston Churchill as two typical young statesmen in New England who are battling for the cause of civic righteousness and political justice is especially commendable. The editorial deal with "The liquor traffic," by Honorable J. Warner Mills; "Jean Jaures' vision of the Socialist State," by a Book-Story by E. O. Flower. The regular departments are also attractive this month. The editorial deal with "The liquor traffic," by Honorable J. Warner Mills; "Jean Jaures' vision of the Socialist State."
laid in different woods. Also the angles of the courses were varied, one being at right angles to the traffic, another at 45 degrees, and a third between the two, or 67 degrees.

This experimental pavement was laid on a street which carries the heaviest traffic of the city, so that comparative results can be obtained in as short a time as possible. Traffic records have been kept for many years, and the records from these experiments are expected to give an accurate knowledge of traffic conditions.

$25,000.00 NEEDED

By INDEPENDENCE COAL MINING COMPANY

In order to develop and open up the new coal-mining interests near Independence and also make necessary preparations for homes for mine-workers, it is necessary that sufficient capital be secured within a short time. The amount sought for is extremely small compared with the capital of other coal-mining interests and, for various reasons, the directors of this company desire to keep the working and controlling power with the church members, if possible.

The opening up of an undeveloped coal field at the edge of a densely populated community of 400,000 population is a matter of considerable consideration, as the product is part of the necessities of life, with freight rates practically cut off, making this enterprise an exceptional one.

Five hundred and sixty-nine acres have been leased for fifty years and one hundred and fifty-four acres purchased, making a total of seven hundred and twenty-three acres of coal-land in one body, on the line of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, two miles east of Independence.

The company already has coal-mines at Napoleon, Missouri, in operation and a successful and prosperous retail business, making this a bonâ fide, paying investment.

Money seeking investment can find no better place, and will bring the best kind of satisfaction, as it will bring good returns to the investor and results that are much sought for, also benefiting the unemployed, scattered, pressed-down, poor church members by placing them in a position to help themselves.

The 154 acres are intended for homes for mine-workers, to be sold at a reasonable price, and we solicit the co-operation of mine-owners to purchase stock, according to their ability.

The promoters of this company are not working for any selfish interest. There is no watered nor fictitious valued stock. The company is incorporated under the laws of the state of Missouri. Capital stock, $40,000.00; shares, $100.00 each; amount paid up $25,000.00. The capital stock must be increased to the amount needed. Parties sending money can do so by bank draft. "THE MORMON PROPHET'S TRAGEDY."

The HERALD published in the number for June 21, 1905, an article written by John Hay, diplomat, Secretary of State at the time of publication. This article with the caption given above was written and published in 1869, twenty-five years after the death of Joseph Smith, the Seer, whose memory is attacked by certain reiterated charges made by the writer without knowledge upon his part, as he states in the article itself, he was but a boy and could not have had personal knowledge in reference to the things which he affirmed.

He assumes that Joseph Smith had not read Moliere, and incidentally says, "nor anybody else," and so he did not copy "either the language or manner" of a certain hero of the book referred to.

He incidentally charges the prophet Joseph Smith with making improper advances to three women, two of them married women whose husbands were living, and one unmarried woman, all of which he asserts were unsuccessful. One of these, Miss Nancy Rigdon, repeatedly disavowed, in the presence of inquirers, having suffered any wrong at the hands of Joseph Smith.

He uses the Nauvoo Expositor as the basis of his charges; he does not state, however, that Joseph Smith was held to answer to the court for charges of immorality which it was conceded by those who knew him could not be proved, for which reason it was proposed to settle the matter by the unlawful killing which took place. After making these charges without proof, he notices the statement made by the proprietors and publishers of the Nauvoo Expositor, only one number of which was published, and for the destruction of the press of which Joseph and Hyrum Smith and fifteen others were arraigned for conspiracy and were held under bonds to answer a day or two subsequently to June 27, the day of the murder.

What would have been the result the no one has the right now to state, and with that perhaps we have nothing to do. Suffice it to say that those who were at enmity with the Prophet, and who were naturally most interested in the matter not coming to trial, were some of them among his murderers. The writer quoted from the Expositor as follows:

As for our acquaintance with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, we know no man nor set of men can be more thoroughly acquainted with its rise, its organization, and its history, than we have every reason to believe we are. We all verily believe, and many of us know of a certainty that the religion of the Latter Day Saints, as originally taught by Joseph Smith, which is contained in the Old and New Testaments, Book of Covenants, and the Book of Mormon, is verily true; and that the pure principles set forth in those books are the immutable and eternal principles of heaven, and speaks a language which when spoken in truth and virtue sinks deep into the heart of every honest man.

This writer, not content with quoting this language, introduces after the word speaks and before the words “a language” the Latin word Sic in brackets [Sic] evidently with the intention of casting doubt, ridicule, and contempt upon the protestation of the men making the statement, and by doing this he shows the prejudicial animus which he evidently held and is seen in the spirit in which he wrote.

Not content with this, he throws distrust upon the statement of Mr. Hepworth Dixon, who wrote with reference to Mormonism a far more comprehensive and faithful account than almost any other writer outside of the church connection ever has done. It should be remembered that Mr. Dixon did not write until after he had become acquainted with historical facts as he gathered them by actual contact with the written history in and out of the church, and with the people themselves under the rule of President Brigham Young. Mr. Dixon, as stated by the writer of this article being reviewed, had “the convenient faculty of believing everything that is picturesque, and rejecting unmanageable evidence with an airy tant pis pour les faits, represents the system of polygamy as an emanation of the political genius of Brigham Young, invented as a means of government, and accepted with blind faith by the pure-minded elders of Utah.”

Mr. Dixon makes this statement after a personal interview with President Brigham Young himself, and this writer dismisses the testimony of Mr. Dixon with a statement which has been refuted over and over again, that “Smith’s daily life had established polygamy in Nauvoo long before Rigdon had invented his jargon of spiritual wives, or Hyrum had received his revelation to justify it.”

To show the animus of the writer of this article, we quote:

The elders of the church, Brigham and others, clamored rebelliously against the Prophet’s exclusive license, and together they began cautiously to lay the foundation of the new doctrine, which, properly arranged, should prove a strength instead of a weakness to the church. Begging Mr. Dixon’s pardon—they were “liars and hypocrites.”

This writer attempts to show by the affidavits published in the Expositor that Hyrum Smith had read a revelation to them establishing the dogma of a plurality of wives. These affidavits are ex parte, and would not be taken in court as evidence unless a proper foundation should have been laid for them, and the parties to whom were to be affected by them given an opportunity for a cross-examination of those making them. Such affidavits are regarded in the courts with grave suspicion, and are not admitted as proof unless the proper foundation has been laid for the taking of them, of the time and place of which parties affected by them have had due notice.

The writer further states in reference to the affidavits as follows:

It is true that Joe Smith after the publication of these affidavits took fright at the storm of disgust they produced, and desisted from the attempt to elucidate the new doctrine. But he never distinctly denied the authenticity of the revelation. On the contrary, during one of those singular trials in his own municipal court, he stated squarely, “Bro. Hyrum is a prophet of the Lord and when the Lord speaks let the earth tremble.”

In all Smith’s curious history there is no fact more clearly established than this effort to legalize and consecrate his immoral life. It formed the first link of that chain of circumstances which within a few days dragged him to his doom.

This statement lacks the element of truth and defeats the object of the writer. If, as he would have his readers to understand, the revelation referred to emanated from his brother, Hyrum Smith, it would hardly implicate his brother Joseph in whatever the revelation might have stated. That Joseph did not distinctly deny the authenticity of the revelation either before or after the publication of the Expositor is not singular. The Expositor was published on the 7th of June, 1844, and Joseph Smith was immediately assailed by suits at law for conspiracy and other so-called misdemeanors, and was killed on the 27th of the same month, barely twenty days after the issue of the Expositor. There is not a particle of evidence to show that the order for the destruction of the Expositor press was procured from the City Council at the instigation of Joseph Smith. These twenty days intervening between the issue of the Expositor and the death of Joseph Smith were stirring and stormy days. The air was full of all manner of statement and conjecture. Complaints were urged against Joseph Smith and others; they had escaped from service of process by going out of the State, had been persuaded to return, and had delivered themselves up to the officers of the justice’s court to answer for charges made based upon the destruction of the press.

The act of destruction was not justifiable, as we see it. Joseph Smith was mayor of the city at the time. The press was destroyed upon an order from the Council, and Joseph Smith’s complicity in it, if he had anything to do with it whatever, was as an officer subject to the direction of the Council. Had the matter gone to trial, the issue might have been vastly different to what it was. This trial would have taken place on the 29th before Justice R. G.
Smith at Carthage, Illinois; but men impatient of restraint and full of reasonable doubts as to the conviction of Joseph and Hyrum Smith and others, took the punishment of the offense into their own hands, and murder was the result.

This writer makes an unpardonable mistake when he states that no fact in the history of Joseph Smith is more clearly established than this effort to legalize an immoral life. We have repeatedly sifted the evidence that has been offered to support this charge, and we declare without hesitation or fear of successful contradiction that this allegation of fact was never successfully proved, and evidence amounting to proof has never been presented, and we feel assured can not be. The writer put his article before the public twenty-five years after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith and shows prejudiced animus in almost every paragraph of it. He has followed the lead of other writers in assuming that allegations of immoral conduct established the truth of what the allegations affirm. This is a bad principle in law and in logic. Mr. Hay as one of the most successful diplomats the world has had in modern times, years after he wrote this article, knew full well that allegations are not proof, and his method of dealing with public questions shows that he had made marked advancement between the time he wrote this article and the successful employment of his talent in behalf of the United States which gave him prestige and renown in the world's diplomatic courts.

The writer also errs in calling the Nauvoo Neighbor Joseph Smith's official paper. This error is inexcusable. The Times and Seasons was the official paper of the church, but the writer makes the statement that the Neighbor was, in order that he might throw discredit upon a statement made at the close of an account of the proceedings in destroying the press, in the following words:

And in the name of free men, and in the name of God, we beseech all men who have the spirit of honor in them to cease from persecuting us collectively or individually. Let us enjoy our religion, rights, and peace, like the rest of mankind. Why start presses to destroy rights and privileges, and bring upon us mobs to plunder and murder? We ask no more than what belongs to us,—the rights of Americans.

We believe the writer erred in a statement to the effect that when the officer visited Nauvoo with warrants for the arrest of Joseph and Hyrum Smith and sixteen others whom he denominates as rioters, against whom the warrants were issued, they submitted to arrest, but by writ of habeas corpus were taken before the municipal court at Nauvoo and were there tried and acquitted, "of which court the Prophet was judge, jury, counsel, and prisoner."

We do not remember ever to have seen or heard of such a thing having taken place.

To account for the excitement which ensued after this transaction, the writer quotes a sentence from an editorial written by Thomas C. Sharp, editor and publisher of the Warsaw Signal, in its issue for June 12, five days after the destruction of the press:

We have only to state that this is sufficient! War and extermination is inevitable! Citizens Arise, One and All!!! Can you stand by, and suffer such Infernal Devils! to rob men of their property and rights, without avenging them? We have no time to comment: every man will make his own. Let it be made with Powder and Ball!!!

The writer also makes an undue use of the existence of what is known as a municipal court in Nauvoo, a court similar in its character to those existing at the time in the cities of Quincy and Chicago, the result of charters granted to the cities under existing statutory law. He errs directly in stating that this court was used indiscriminately for the protection of thieves and vagrants. This is not true; the true history of the transactions before that court would show differently. The writer says, "The accused Mormon always appealed to this court for protection against the persecuting Gentile, and he always got off scot free." That there were thieves and vagrants and other wrong-doers against society at Nauvoo may be conceded. It was at the time approximately the largest city, having the largest population in the State. The country was new. An extensive banditti extended from New Orleans north to the lakes and east to New York. There is no evidence that shows that all these wrong-doers complained of were members of the church. We personally knew of some of those who were to a greater or lesser extent notorious, and know that at the time they were at Nauvoo they were not members of the church; and as we lived at Nauvoo after the dispersion took place from there, we know that the town had more than a plenty of bad men among what was known as its new citizens, and that the condition of the city in this respect, like the man from whom evil spirits were cast, was worse than before the exodus. We sincerely doubt whether there was a single instance wherein persons arrested for criminal acts against the laws of the State were arraigned before this municipal court as a derriere resort and were set free. It speaks ill for the wisdom of the legislators of the State that a court should be created of such extraordinary powers as it has been claimed attached to this municipal court at Nauvoo. It had legal existence, exercised legal power, but that there was fraud or conniving at crime by the officers of this court, is not true.

The writer makes a statement which may be true for other reasons than those which impelled he gives. He says: "For years scarcely a criminal had been brought out of Nauvoo." There was no open defiance to State laws and no resistance by violence to officers of the law properly accredited by the courts of the county, and it is in justice due to the people that they be given the benefit of the doubt; and the fact that criminals were not brought out of the city was because there were no criminals there, or that the proper officers of the law did not enforce the statutory provisions for the punishment of wrong-doing.

Sr. H. A. Moffit, of Page, North Dakota, incloses post office order for twenty-seven dollars and fifty-eight cents in the interest of the different church funds, together with a list of those contributing these funds and states in her letter: "I earned seventy-five cents of this money by fasting and less selfishness on the part of the Saints would be a wonderful factor towards bringing about the redemption so long prayed for by the Saints. Those who are not willing to sacrifice and labor for the good of the work of Christ." Sr. Moffit is quite right; more self-denial and less selfishness on the part of the Saints would be the statutory provisions for the punishment of wrong-doing.

The same may be said of the work in the field of Bro. U. W. Greene who reports every one who is able to be at work as being busily engaged in the several parts of the mission.

Everybody going to jail: In 1850 the ratio of prison population to population was one in 3,443 inhabitants. In 1860 it was one in 1,647, in 1870 one in 1,171, in 1880 one in 883, and in 1890 one in 757. In other words, in the forty years from 1850 to 1890 the prison population increased nearly five times as fast as population.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

USURY AND INCREASE.

In looking up the word usury, and the manner of its application, we find the following at the head of the column on the "U" in Cruden's Concordance, and give it as we found it, for purposes which will appear further on:

By usury is generally understood the gain of anything above the principal, or that which was lent, exacted only in consideration of the loan, whether it be in money, corn, wares, or the like. It is most commonly taken for an unlawful profit, which a person makes of his money or his goods. The Hebrew word for usury signifies raving, wasting, biting. The law of God prohibits rigorous imposing of conditions of gain for the loan of money or goods, and exacting them without respect to the condition of the borrower, whether he gain or lose; whether poverty occasioned his borrowing, or a visible prospect of gain by employing the borrowed goods.

So much for the definition.

If we are challenged to cite a passage of scripture which favors the taking of interest or usury, we should cite, first, Exodus 22:25: "If thou lend money to any of my people that is poor by thee, thou shalt not be to him as an usurer, neither shalt thou lay upon him usury."

In this passage it is not the act of lending that is prohibited; it is the condition of the person to whom the loan is made that determines the nature of the transaction. If the borrower is poor, then in that case the lender is prohibited from enforcing the interest, or usury, to the distressing of the poor man among the Lord's people.

The restriction laid on the lender of money in this passage shows that it was a custom among the people called in the text, "my people"; and that the giving and taking of interest, or usury, for the use of money was known and legitimately practiced among them. Not only this, but the repetition of the provision in the law against usurers as found in Deuteronomy, is surrounded with such restrictions as show conclusively that the loaning of money, goods, or food on interest or usury was not only known and tolerated, but was lawful. Here are the passages:

Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother; usury of money, usury of victuals, usury of anything that is lent upon usury: unto a stranger thou mayest lend upon usury; but unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury: that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all that thou settest thine hand to do in the land whither thou goest to possess it. — Deuteronomy 23:19, 20.

This shows that lending upon interest, or usury, existed and under certain conditions was lawful.

Taken with the restrictions named in Leviticus 25:35, 37, it is quite certain that the rules supposed to be against usury were not intended to be prohibitive of the practice of borrowing and lending for an increase, but were designed to regulate the practice and prescribed conditions in which to enforce the collection of the agreed upon interest, or increase would be oppressive and for this reason would be unlawful.

What a spectacle the strained construction of the passages cited makes of the Lord! If the intention was to prohibit the taking of usury, interest, or increase altogether, and make any sort of taking increase for money loaned unlawful, the Lord in that case gives license to violate his own direct commandment; for he says money may be lent to the stranger upon usury; and this is made still worse, if the word usury in all cases is to be understood in its hardest and worse sense. If so, then every oppressive measure which the lender might resort to to collect his principal and interest, Shylock-like, is legalized, if—if the borrower (save the mark) was a stranger. If anybody likes that kind of an interpretation he is welcome so far as we are concerned. It is quite too narrow for us.

Second, we cite Leviticus 25:35, 37:

And if thy brother be waxen poor, and fallen in decay with thee; then thou shalt relieve him: yea, though he be a stranger, or a sojourner; that he may live with thee. Take thou no usury of him, or increase; but fear thy God; that thy brother may live with thee. Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor lend him thy victuals for increase.

It does not require any analytical examination of these texts to discover that the central thought of them is the impoverished condition of the brother who has fallen upon evil fortune which has impoverished him: to such a brother lending upon usury was forbidden; not because it was unlawful to lend money or to take interest for the use of money or goods, but because of the poverty of the brother referred to. This is a case in which the exception proves the rule. It was lawful to lend money and to take interest for the use of it, but it was not lawful to lend to such a poverty-stricken man; for the reason that to take usury from one thus fallen into decay and poverty was oppressive; and not because it was against the law to lend money or goods upon increase in any and all cases.

These passages of scripture which we have cited show clearly that under the code the Israelites practiced borrowing and lending for increase, interest, or usury, and that it was lawful; except in the instances described.

It is not a little singular that writers on the topic who have quoted from the old law to prove that it is now unlawful to lend money or goods for hire, should have forgotten that the giver of that code gave no direct commandment reading, "Thou shalt not put thy money out to increase, or usury." But, in Exodus, in Leviticus, and in Deuteronomy the restriction against lending upon interest is made in favor of the poor and those who have fallen into poverty. In Exodus 22:25 the saving-clause is, "If thou lend money to any of my people that is poor by thee." In Leviticus 25:35 it is, "And if thy brother be waxen poor, and fallen in decay by thee." In Deuteronomy it is, "Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother."—"unto a stranger thou mayest lend upon usury."

The assumption that all taking of interest for the use of money lent is usurious, and in every case is oppressive, and therefore forbidden and unlawful, can not be maintained by an appeal to the Mosaic code. To the contrary, the texts supposed to be conclusive against it show that it was practiced and lawful; except in certain cases named and provided for. By virtue of the exceptions it is shown that money or goods might be lent to strangers upon usury. It might also be lent to those not poor or fallen into decay or waxen poor, among the people. It is not so easy to determine just who is meant by the term brother, or the term stranger. According to Cruden it appears that the Hebrews "were allowed to lend upon usury to strangers, whom yet they must not oppress. This law, therefore, in the strictness of it, seems to have been peculiar to the Jewish state, but in the equity of it, it obligeth us to show mercy to those we have advantage against, and to be content to share with those we lend to in loss, as well as profit, if providence cross them, and upon this condition, a valuable commentator says, 'It seems as lawful for me to receive interest for money, which another takes pains with, improves, but runs the hazard of in trade, as it is to receive rent for my land which another takes pains with, improves, but runs the hazard of in husbandry.'"

We caution everybody who may read this article that they do so with the direct understanding that we do not write in defense of the mean and low in trade; the despicable or oppressive in business; or the contemptible and vicious in social intercourse. We do, however, object strongly to such rendition of the old law as puts moral gavys upon our hands and feet, and in a sense discounts the molding of our characters by the influence of the Holy Spirit, and brings us into a secondary bondage to do the things of a law which was nailed to the crosst that the righteousness which is by faith might prevail; and the better ethics of the precept, "As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them," should be the guide.

The exception made in the practice of lending of money upon usury is a plea for mercy on behalf of the unfortunate debtor enforced by commanded precept. This plea we may safely indorse and exem­d. This plea we may safely indorse and exem­...
deluded man like Charles A. Parham. It is not a little significant that the tongues were neither understood as they were spoken, nor were they interpreted by any of the whole "thirty-four exhorters, preaching the gospel according to Prophet Parham." Had the Spirit by which the visit on Pentecost day was made been the authority of those tongues, there would have been an interpreter there; or, better still, those standing by would have heard the message in the language in which they were born, and of their daily life and conversation. However, it is left for the prophet Parham to go among them and tell them what the spirit-message said and meant; which he can do very easily; for if the tongues were from the evil one he will not contradict what Parham may say that the Spirit said, for it is to his interest that the people continue to follow false leaders who say, "You will have to come to me for salvation."

It will be safer for the welfare of the people of that now much troubled city to stand by Voliva as a temporal leader, for he may take them out of their financial night into a day of sound business light; though he may not be so cunning a spirit leader as either Dowie or Parham; he can at least show that he is not desirous to make himself rich at the expense of a stricken and impoverished people while posing as their spiritual head.

We are of the opinion that the report was doctored with an intention to make it sensational; and so wait developments.

TWO NOTABLE DEATHS.

LITTLE ROCK, Arkansas, October 15.—Reverend Sam P. Jones, the well-known evangelist of Cartersville, Georgia, died early to-day of heart failure in a sleeping-car on train No. 1 of the Rock Island Railroad near Perry, Arkansas.

The above brief dispatch contains but a few words, but gives the public to understand that one of the busy men of the nation has laid down the armor of the life in the flesh never to be resumed again. No one who ever heard this remarkable self-appointed evangelist but will be sorry, as sorrow goes, that he is gone. Whatever may have been the impression he made upon those who chose to listen to him, all will regret the cessation of his labors. We heard him several years ago; and while the impression made on us as to the personality of the man was quite unfavorable, we were always pleased that we had heard him. It was at a Chautauqua held at Maysville, Missouri, which we attended as an invited speaker on the subject of temperance. We heard Mr. Jones twice, and it is with great regret that we acknowledge that we never heard so much clerical slang and abuse from either pulpit or rostrum as we heard from this celebrated evangelist on that occasion. But Sam Jones is dead; and it may safely be said of him that the pulpit of the United States will never again see his like. A layman, an editor, voices the public sentiment in the following, which we believe to be a fair estimate of this remarkable man. We make no apology for giving so much space to the passing of this pulpiteer, for with all his peculiarities he was a man among men, and his memory deserves well of his fellows, in the pulpit and out of it.

In all that has been said about Sam Jones, perhaps no one has ever seriously accused him of insincerity. He had methods of exhortation that lacked refinement and he was earnest to the point of fanaticism, yet he left the world better than he found it. His death has served to remind the public that he was still active in the work to which his later life was devoted.

Sam Jones was a unique character. He was a victim of temperamental zeal that hindered him in what he desired to accomplish. Jones preached with a vehemence that was suggestive of mental unbalance. He was a human pile-driver, pounding his opinions into other men's minds and never brooking doubt or disagreement. If one did not entirely agree with Sam Jones, Sam Jones had no patience with him, and he was cast out. This evangelist was a word-painter with an extravagant fancy for the terrible. To him the Devil was an actual personality, and Jones' sermons fairly smelled of brimstone. He always conjured up a picture of hell which he held before the eyes of his audiences. He sought to scare his hearers into repentance, and when they failed to scare as promptly as he desired, then the preacher resorted to abuse. He would work himself into a perfect frenzy during his meetings and at such times the rude epigrams would fall from his lips like fiery cataracts.

Sam Jones was honest, and his devotion to the cause of religion had entire possession of him. He studied a crudeness of expression to which he was not born, but which he esteemed to be the best way to reach the hearts of a majority of the people. What he would have accomplished if he had adopted different tactics is problematical. For several years he had something of a vogue, but people went to hear him largely from curiosity. During the latter years of his life he was not heard from often in the kind of sensational meetings which marked his first series of revivals. But, as before said, he left the world better than he found it and therefore his life was a success.—Leader, Kansas City Journal, October 16, 1906.

The other notable death is that of Mrs. Varina Howell Davis, widow of Jefferson Davis, president of the late Southern Confederacy, who died of pneumonia at a hotel in New York, October 16, just past. Mrs. Davis was a worthy woman, faithful to her husband while he lived, and faithful to his memory after his death.

So pass the actors from the busy scenes of life. It was only yesterday, so it sometimes seems, that we were in the midst of the internal strife, called the Rebellion, in which President Davis was so prominent a central figure on the part of the South and the justly honored Abraham Lincoln on the part of the North. But reflection shows us that more than two score years have passed away since those days, and the terrible nightmare of strife and blood has lifted from the memories of the living, both North and South, and peace is claiming her victories. We may well say with the rest of the great mass of the citizens of a united nation, Let the past be with the past, and Peace be established for ever.

THE WHOLE GOSPEL BRIEFLY SET FORTH.

That selections from, or parts of the gospel, will not answer God’s purpose, is clear, from Christ’s saying: “Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.”—Matthew 4:4.

All else than God’s own one plan is set forth by Christ thus: “But in vain do they worship me, teaching for the commandments of men.”—Matthew 15:9.

The multitude of varying theories as to what the plan of salvation is, is not evidence of unity and right, but of disagreement and wrong, which condition Christ described in these words: “Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand.”—Matthew 12:25.

It is certain that so-called Christianity is divided, and seriously so, for what some affirm most highly essential, others declare to be the merest form only. That no change whatever from the divine plan was ever to be, is clear from Christ’s statement of its source: “For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak.”—John 12:49. How, then, when Christ was so circumspectly circumscribed, can any man dare to call some of that which Christ taught form only? Of any and all variations from Christ’s gospel, Paul wrote: “But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed.”—Galatians 1:8, 9. Paul here forcefully states and repeats that what he had preached and they had received was the only gospel, barring all changes and variations by either angels or men for all time.

It is certain that just what God commanded Christ he taught, and that Christ commanded the apostles to teach that same identical message. Christ said: “As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you.”—John 20:21. Empowered with the same authority, and to present the same message! Accordingly, after his resurrection, when he had conquered all, including death and the grave, and before his ascension, he said: “All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.”—Matthew 28:18-20.

“All things whatsoever I have commanded you,” excluded any changes, more or less. The time limit is also clear: “Alway, even unto the end of the world,” the finite realm of man from which through the gospel he was to be redeemed. Solomon wrote of God’s unchangeable purpose and plan for man’s salvation: “I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him.”—Ecclesiastes 3:14. Who then can justly add to or take from the gospel, or teach it differently from what Christ and the apostles did? In the teaching and practice of the apostles, then, we shall find the “all things” they were “commanded” to teach. Paul gave a summary in Hebrews 6:1, 2. These we examine.

FAITH.

Of faith Christ said: “Have faith in God.”—Mark 11:22. That included Christ in his mission, the Holy Ghost, the gospel, and the whole provision and requirements of God.

Again, Christ said: “Ye believe in God, believe also in me.”—John 14:1. He did not ask belief that he was a man, as infidels, Jews, and Unitarians believe (that they could have seen—known), but to believe that he was the Christ, the Redeemer. He also said, “And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive.”—John 14:16, 17. The twenty-sixth verse explains thus: “But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.”

Paul wrote of faith: “But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.”—Hebrews 11:6. And again: “So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.”—Romans 10:17. The eleventh chapter of Hebrews recites the wondrous achievements of faith from Eden to Christ; they are like unto the healing of the sick, the cleansing of the leper, the lame made to walk, the blind to see, and the spiritually blind to see the light of God, in the gospel of Christ.

If faith pleases God, then the more the faith is intelligently exercised the more he is pleased. Faith is the beginning to man in all things, not in religion only. Explorers, inventors, scientists, all, are moved forward to success by faith. The active principle of faith works everywhere. Its accomplishments are to be reached by its perpetual enlargement. In religion, man is to evolve by it from the sphere of the finite, into the realm of the infinite. Its accomplishments are to be reached by its perpetual enlargement. In religion, man is to evolve by it from the sphere of the finite, into the realm of the infinite, being saved; the process beginning here, and continuing, ending there.
REPTENCE.

As night follows day, and summer the springtime, so repentance succeeds faith, that measure of faith necessary to lead to repentance.

As light, air, food etc., are applicable and indispensable to man, so is repentance applicable and indispensable. Man in the finite realm sins universally, and needs to repent. When he attains the infinite, then translation would take place as in Enoch and Elijah’s cases. Complete sanctification does not then occur, and the subject remain in the realm of the finite.

Repentance is “godly sorrow,” that is “not to be repented of.” (2 Corinthians 7:10.) True repentance is turning from all evil, ceasing to do it or to partake of it, restoring to any we have wronged that which belongs to them, and doing all that is right. Such realization of duty, and determination to do it, fully fills the requirement of, “bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance” (Matthew 3:8), and prepares for baptism. “Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.”—Matthew 3:12. “And that repentance and remission of sin should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem.”—Luke 24:47. Continued repentance, like continued faith, overcomes: “To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life.”

Christ, the pattern in all things, says: “I have overcome the world.” So must we, also, and it requires genuine repentance and is a lifelong task.

BAPTISM.

Baptism is God’s method of remitting, canceling sin. “For the remission of sins.”—Acts 2:38. Perhaps conflicting opinion is more widely extended on this than on any other part of saving truth. Does scripture so conflict? If so our hope is lost! Aside with man’s opinion, and to the Scriptures! Christ taught two baptisms closely related, virtually one: “Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God.”—John 3:5. Strangely enough, some teach the water baptism to the exclusion of that of the spirit, and others just the reverse. Did God or Christ authorize that kind of work? Verily, no! The two were always associated, and the water baptism first.

John taught: “I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me . . . he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost.”—Matthew 3:11. “And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him.”—Matthew 3:16. As to the purpose, Christ said of his baptism at the hands of John: “For thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness.”—Matthew 3:15. And to Nicodemus he said (as quoted above) that without it man “can not enter into the kingdom of God.” Peter on Pentecost said: “Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.”—Acts 2:38.

Baptism had no application whatever to infants, for it was “for the remission of sins.” Of infants, Christ said: “Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven.”—Matthew 19:14. They were already in—“of”—the kingdom.

Baptism was for those who could believe. “He that believeth and is baptized.”—Mark 16:16. Infants can neither believe, nor disbelieve. Christ blessed little children. “And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them.”—Mark 10:16. (See Matthew 19:13-15; Mark 10:14-16.)

THE MANNER OR MODE OF THE WATER BAPTISM.

Christ’s statement, “Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God,” clearly indicates immersion and nothing else. The statement of his own baptism, “And Jesus when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water,” is to the same effect. The occasion of the eunuch’s baptism, also: “And they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him.”—Acts 8:38. It is again clearly indicated: “And John also was baptizing in Eon near to Salim, because there was much water there.”—John 3:23. Much water was the right quantity for immersion. Again: “And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins.”—Acts 22:16. But Paul settles it: “Therefore we are buried with him by baptism.”—Romans 6:4. “Buried with him in baptism.”—Colossians 2:12. God authorized baptism. He alone can delegate authority to administer it.

THE SPIRIT BAPTISM AFTER THAT OF THE WATER.

It is clearly placed in that order in quotations above, John 3:5; Matthew 3:11, 16; also the Pentecost occasion, Acts 2:38.

THE HOLY SPIRIT CONVEYED THROUGH THE LAYING ON OF HANDS AND AFTER BAPTISM.

As man is the human instrumentality in the case of the water baptism so God ordained he should act a part in the baptism of the Spirit. In Acts 8:1-13 we have the account of Philip’s work at Samaria, a number being baptized; then in verses 14 to 19 this: “Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (for as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.) Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost. And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money, saying, Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost."

That this was after baptism and through the laying on of hands no one would care to dispute. Simon saw it so clearly that he wanted to buy the right. Paul found certain disciples at Ephesus of whom he asked: "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost. And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism. Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying, "Ye shall receive the Holy Ghost." And when Simon saw that through laying on of hands and the gift of the Holy Ghost was obtainable; but these "certain disciples" had heard nothing of the Holy Ghost. This led Paul to question their baptism. Their answer, "Unto John's baptism," caused Paul to defend John, and to set aside the spurious teaching and baptism of the impostor who had the hardihood to imitate John's baptism and prophesied."

"Since ye believed," after baptism, was when the Holy Ghost was obtainable; but these "certain disciples" had heard nothing of the Holy Ghost. This led Paul to question their baptism. Their answer, "Unto John's baptism," caused Paul to defend John, and to set aside the spurious teaching and baptism of the impostor who had the hardihood to imitate John's baptism and prophesied."

In Acts 9:17 Paul, who was then called Saul, is shown to have received the Holy Ghost under the hands of Ananias, by Christ's command. Ananias was not an apostle, so the laying on of hands and the gift of the Holy Ghost was not confined to the apostles alone. When the laying on of hands for this purpose was set aside, the gifts of the Holy Ghost ceased.

Gifts of the Holy Ghost.

The Holy Ghost, so received, entitled those receiving it to any of the nine gifts God saw fit to bestow, as seen in 1 Corinthians 12:1-12.

For the Afflicted.

The widely practiced administration to the sick by the laying on of hands by Christ, the apostles, and elders (see Mark 6:13; 16:15-20; James 5:14), was to be coextensive with the gospel, the church, the race; for it was to meet human necessity.

For Ordination to Ministry.

Strangely enough, while all churches now existing, Catholic, Protestant, and others, ordain their ministers by the laying on of hands that the Holy Ghost might be received, for the blessing of children, and for the sick to be restored, it is almost altogether lost sight of. God instituted it for a fourfold purpose; but man set it aside in three of those purposes. In God's plan it remains for the fourfold service. In his church and gospel it is so practiced.

Resurrection.

That man dies, the spirit and body being separated, it is apparent. If man shall live again, as created and placed in Eden, the resurrection must be; for in the Bible we learn of creation, of Christ and the resurrection; and we read: "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."—1 Corinthians 15:22. Again: "That he by the grace of God should taste death for every man."—Hebrews 2:9. In glorious appreciation Paul wrote in consequence: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"—1 Corinthians 15:55. Christ died on Calvary for all and was resurrected from the tomb so that all could be raised. Christ said: "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."—John 5:28, 29.

Resurrection, Literal, Real.

The Christ crucified on Calvary was laid in the tomb and arose from it. So also others arose: "And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many."—Matthew 27:52, 53. Paul says: "For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised."—1 Corinthians 15:16. And again: "But every man in his own order: Christ the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming."—Verse 23. Those attaining the "resurrection of life," the first resurrection, do so through obedience to the laws of life, the gospel. Those resurrected a thousand years later, in the "resurrection of damnation," are those who do not avail themselves of the law of life, the gospel.

The two resurrections are thus set forth: "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."—Revelation 20:4-6. Ezekiel 37:1-15 and 1 Corinthians 15 entire, well describe the resurrection.
ETERNAL JUDGMENT.

Eternal judgment, God’s judgment, just judgment, clearly stated thus: “And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.”—Revelation 20:12. God’s justice is thus described by Christ: “For whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward.”—Mark 9:41.

If so small and slight a service is not to go unrewarded, what then of all the varied services in degree till the greatest is reached? All are to be rewarded “according to their works.” Diversified rewards or punishment, each calls for different conditions, and such the just judgment of God is to afford. The heaven and hell, saved and damned, religious and irreligious divisions as they have been taught and to represent but two conditions in the future life are untrue, unreasonable, unscriptural. To perform the whole gospel requirement will alone bring the best reward, but to perform only a part, though it be completely done, can not bring such reward. Lot’s wife looking back, just seeing what transpired, seems a small violation, but it cost her life. (See Genesis 19:26.) Moses for what seems a small violation, smiting the rock in addition to speaking as the Lord had said, was deprived of entering the promised land. (See Numbers 20:7–12; Deuteronomy 3:23–27.) God does not accept man’s changes of his plan. The slightest right thing will secure God’s approval in the degree it merits, and the slightest clear violation of his plan will defeat the reward promised according to that plan; for by the violation it is changed from God’s plan to man’s plan.

Heaven for the religious, hell for all others, including the men not religious who died upon the battlefields of earth in such struggles as the American Revolutionary War, that civil and religious freedom might be! Those who were martyrs to the cause of human freedom in that called the United States Civil War would not only be deprived of the reward given to the one who gave the cup of water, but also of the reward of those who gave their lives, their all. Such theology would hurl God from his throne of justice.

Matthew 25:31–46 (too lengthy to reproduce here) clearly presents three future conditions. Those on the right hand are to “inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world” (verse 34); because, “inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me” (verse 40). Having given food, drink, clothing, visiting when sick or in prison, is the service recounted.

“Depart from me, ye cursed,” is the announcement to those on the left, because, “inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me.”

Three conditions are clearly provided and in the following order:

1. Christ and his brethren, those ministered to.
2. Those on the right who performed the service.
3. Those on the left who failed to perform such service.

Three classes, you see! That Christ and his brethren, those who have obeyed and kept his whole law (see Matthew 12:50), shall be associated in judgment, is clear. Paul says: “Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world?”—1 Corinthians 6:2. Again: “To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne.”—Revelation 3:21. Again: “And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them.”—Revelation 20:4. To prepare for association with his brethren (those obedient to and faithfully keeping the entire gospel), and the condition they should occupy with him, he said: “Let not your hearts be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father’s house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.”—John 14:1–3.

Here we have Christ’s plain statement of “many mansions” in his Father’s house. Notwithstanding this, and that there was for those on the right, in Matthew 25, a place “prepared for you from the foundation of the world,” he goes to prepare a place for his brethren, that they may be where he is.

PAUL’S BEAUTIFUL, CLEAR DESCRIPTION.

“There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead.”—1 Corinthians 15:41, 42.

1. The glory of the sun, the abode of Christ and his brethren.
2. That of the moon, those whom God adjures to be worthy of it.
3. That of the stars for all the remaining diversified throne; and thus are rewards according to every one’s works clearly provided; God’s just judgment meted out.

CHURCH ORGANIZATION.

While it is a fact that Christ established but one church, yet organizations called churches exist, and are as diverse as they are numerous, both in point of officers composing the organization and in the faith and doctrine taught. All of this disagreement is the result of the substitution of human wisdom for that of God.
The Roman Catholic Church substituted popes, cardinals, etc., for God’s plan of apostles, prophets, etc. The Greek Catholic Church did something similar, yet different. Both discarded a continuation of revelation.

The Reformation also assumed that there was to be no revelation, and in the variety of human choosing we have been furnished the churches as they are.

The New Testament pattern is a rebuke to all this, and stands as the unrepealed plan of God.

God worked through this plan by the medium of revelation with man, when the plan was set aside, and as a consequence, revelation ceased; whereas it was their abandoning God’s plan by which they forfeited the right to such divine favor. All of this is clear in the plan as stated in 1 Corinthians 12:28 and Ephesians 4:8–16, as also the reasons why, or in other words, results to be attained as there stated by Paul. Of the church instituted by Christ he said, “I will build my church.”—Matthew 16:18. That he placed in it first apostles, is seen in Matthew 10:1–5 and Luke 6:13–16. “After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place.”—Luke 10:1. Of the church Paul said: “Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.”—1 Corinthians 12:27, 28. All these were in the church and were to continue while the church existed. Why should any of these be eliminated, or anything else be substituted? In Ephesians, of the time of Christ’s ascension, it is stated: “When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. . . . And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.”—Ephesians 4:11–16.

This was God’s plan of church organization, and was to continue to the end of time. The reasons why and the results to be accomplished, as seen in the above, are:

1. “For the perfecting of the saints,” God’s people.
2. “For the work of the ministry.” Evangelization of the world. Extensive!
3. “For the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.”
4. That humanity be safe and free from being tempest-tossed by varying winds of doctrine so prevalent since this God-ordained plan has been set aside.
5. The “head,” Christ, directing: “The whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth according to the effectual working in the measure of every part.” No part could be dispensed with; God had planned it. “And the apostles and elders came together for to consider this matter” (Acts 15:6), shows that elders and apostles worked together sometimes, and that the office of elder was important, but secondary. Paul addressed “all the saints . . . with the bishops and deacons.” (Philippians 1:1.) All these were included in “the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part.”

But, in one existing church, man has placed as all-sufficient elders and deacons only. Others have bishops, elders, and deacons. In the several man-instituted churches, the variations are many. No one of them fills the pattern, nor do they all put together do so.

GOD’S PLAN OF CHOOSING HIS REPRESENTATIVES.

“And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron.”—Hebrews 5:4. “But as God hath distributed to every man, as the Lord hath called every one, so let him walk. And so ordain I in all churches.”—1 Corinthians 7:17. Without such call none are authorized in any sense to represent God, to preach, or to baptize, etc. Having set aside the New Testament plan of gospel doctrine and church organization, and also the principle of revelation, the medium of God’s direction through the head, Christ, man set out to build churches, and the churches as they are with their varying and conflicting theology is the result. This made the restoration of the gospel necessary. That John the Baptist was a messenger to prepare the way before Christ and taught of him is well understood as prophesied by Malachi 3:1 and certified by Christ, Matthew 11:10, 11. John had also a later similar mission to fulfill, as we shall see.

That the work done by Christ and the apostles was overthrown by decadence into apostasy, is conceded by the Reformation in the variety of efforts to reform or restore it.

The confusion growing out of this miscellaneous human effort made it highly necessary that God should use again his method to again make straight the path.

Malachi said: "Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in the former years."—Malachi 3:1-4.

Here is announced God's messenger to prepare the way for Christ to "suddenly come to his temple." He came to a stable before. "Who may abide?" "Who shall stand?" Everybody did before, when he came as a babe. "He shall purify the sons of Levi . . . that they may offer . . . Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord." This will be very different from crucifying him. For this future glorious coming, God declared: "I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me." The one fulfillment of Malachi's promise, as found certified by Christ in Matthew 11:10, 11, in reference to John the Baptist's mission, was to be repeated. John the Baptist was to return to prepare the way again. This is set forth by Christ himself in the account of the transfiguration, in Matthew 17:1-13. Moses and Elias appeared there. Elias, mentioned in verses 3, 4, 10, 11, and 12, is explained by Christ to be John the Baptist in verse 13.

Speaking of things yet future, "his disciples asked him, saying, Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come? And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come and restore all things." (Verses 10, 11.) John the Baptist, who had been beheaded, was there. The scribes understood of his future mission: "Elias must first come." Christ, confirmed it: "Elias truly shall first come and restore all things."

This restoring "all things" included the priesthood, the right to represent God, the opening of the avenue of revelation from God, which man had closed against himself, denying that God would reveal, instead of asking for needed information.

The varying interpretations of scripture in the scope of the Reformation and the consequent entangling meshes of confusion (for what was affirmed by one of the movements was denied by another) made their lack of wisdom apparent.

God's gracious provision for such necessities was still open: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."—James 1:5.

Joseph Smith, when in great perplexity on the question of religion as to which of the several movements was right, and reading the Scriptures for light, came to this promise through James, and acted upon it. In consequence there was fulfilled to him that promised through Malachi, repeated by Christ at the transfiguration, and again by John the Revelator when on Patmos: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come."—Revelation 14:6, 7.

It was to be at the hour of God's judgment, after the confusion of the Reformation, which made it necessary for God to take a hand so that confusion and error be overcome by light and truth.

Thus aided of God, Joseph Smith succeeded, as a humble human instrumentality that he was, in reestablishing the gospel and church of Christ as reflected in the New Testament, and hereinbefore set forth.

If it shall occur to the mind of the reader that the name of Joseph as it has appeared in history is unsavory, let the reflection occur that Christ was adjudged "the friend of publicans and sinners"; "a gluttonous man and a wine-bibber." It was also alleged that he was "born of fornication." The Savior's measuring-line was: "A corrupt tree can not bring forth good fruit." Joseph Smith by God's guidance reproduced the church and the gospel of Christ in its fullness.

To the wisdom of Solomon the Proverbs stand as a monument, but his life closed in folly and wickedness. David before him had been "a man after mine own heart," says the voice of inspiration, (Acts 13:22); but alas! he became a man of blood and was deprived of building the temple. Folly and wickedness overcame him. Notwithstanding both David and Solomon closed their lives in wickedness, the Psalms and Proverbs are read and cherished. Had Joseph Smith closed his life similarly to what David and Solomon did, should his worthy work not still be considered and esteemed as theirs was? Who dare deny him the right? Fortunately, however, Joseph Smith's lifework did not close in wickedness. Not a line can be found from the beginning to the close of his career subversive to or inharmonious with the gospel of Christ and the high order of morals it represents.
The awful stigma heaped upon the name of Joseph Smith by Brigham Young has been lifted by examination in the courts and the decisions rendered adversely to Young and his work, denying title to and his work exonerated, set out clearly in court decisions separate and distinct from the foul

WORK OF BRIGHAM YOUNG.

After the overthrow of the work by Brigham Young and others who took advantage of the death of Joseph Smith to assume leadership of the church, some initial steps at reorganizing the church were effected by churches who had locally remained permanent in their several localities. Partial organization was effected at Beloit, Wisconsin, in 1851 and 1852.

In April, 1859, at Amboy, Illinois, Joseph Smith, eldest son of Joseph Smith who was killed at Carthage, Illinois, June 27, 1844, was duly installed in his father's place as President or Presiding Elder in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Which church appears as the successful party in the following cases in court.

EXTRACTS FROM COURT DECISIONS.

The following extracts from the Kirtland Temple Case support the Reorganized Church, while they show that the Utah Mormonism departed from the organization of 1830:

"In Court of Common Pleas, Lake County, Ohio, February 23d, 1880. Present: Hon. L. S. Sherman, Judge; F. Paine, Jr., Clerk; and C. F. Morley, Sheriff.

"Journal Entry, February term. 1880."

"The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Plaintiff."

"vs."

"Lucien Williams, Joseph Smith, Sarah F. Videon, Mark H. Forscutt, the Church in Utah of which John Taylor is President and commonly known as the Mormon Church, and John Taylor, President of said Utah Church. Defendants.

"And the Court do further find that the Plaintiff, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is the true and lawful continuation of, and successor to the said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized in 1830, and is entitled in law to all its rights and property."

TEMPLE LOT CASE.

The following extracts, from the decision of Judge Phillips, of the United States Court, for the Western District of Missouri, handed down March 3, 1894, concurs with the foregoing, establishing the legal successorship in another suit, in which the Reorganized Church was complainant for the recovery of the Temple Lot at Independence, Missouri:

"Beyond all cavil, if human testimony is to place any matter for ever at rest, this church was one in doctrine, government, and purpose from 1830 to June, 1844, when Joseph Smith, its founder, was killed. It had the same federal head, governing bodies and faith. During this period there was no schism, no secession, no 'parting of the ways,' in any matter fundamental, or affecting its oneness."

"There can be no question of the fact that Brigham Young's assumed presidency was a bold and bald usurpation."

"Brigham Young's assumption of this office (under the claim of something like a transfiguration) was itself a departure from the law of the church."

"Conformably to the Book of Mormon, the Book of Doctrine and Covenants expressly declares 'that we believe that one man should have but one wife, and one woman but one husband.'"

"It [the church in Utah] has introduced societies of a secret order, and established secret oaths and covenants, contrary to the book of teachings of the old church. It has changed the duties of the President, and of the Twelve, and established the doctrine to 'obey counsel' and has changed the order of the Seventy or Evangelists."

"Decree will go in favor of Complainant, establishing the trust in its favor against Respondents, removing the cloud from the title, enjoining Respondents from asserting title to the property, and awarding the possession to the Complainant."

A TRIAL IN THE COURTS OF CANADA.

On May 19, 1893, Hiram Dickout, a minister of the Reorganized Church at Niagara Falls, solemnized a marriage between Abram H. Taylor and Alice E. Vance. He was tried before a magistrate of that town July 3, 1893, and convicted on the charge of unlawfully and without lawful authority, solemnizing a marriage between the parties named above.

The case was taken before the Court of the Queen's Bench, Chancery, Common Pleas Division of the High Court of Justice, for Ontario, before Judges Armour, C. J., Falconbridge, and Street, J. J., November 28, 1893, on the following questions:

"1. Is the organization known as The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints' a church and religious denomination within the meaning of R. S. O. ch. 131, sec. 1?

"2. Are the persons designated as priests and ordained and appointed as such according to the ceremonies of that organization, ministers and clergymen of a church and religious denomination within the meaning of the section?"

J. R. Cartwright, Q. C., appeared for the crown, W. M. German for the defendant. After argument by the attorney for the crown, and without the counsel for the defendant being called upon, the judgment was rendered by Armour, C. J., as follows:
"We think it quite clear that this conviction can not be maintained. The defendant was clearly a duly ordained minister of this religious body, and there is no doubt that it is a religious denomination within the words of the statute. Assuming that Christianity is the law of the land in a sense, there is nothing contrary to Christianity in the tenets of this body. It is true they have some authorized works supplemental to the Bible, but that is the case with every church or denomination. The Church of England has its creeds, and the Presbyterian Church its profession. That does not make the church an anti-Christian one. The statute should receive a wide construction. It does not say 'Christian,' but 'religious.' If it said 'Christian,' it would exclude Jews. The fundamental law of the Province makes no distinction between churches or denominations. Every person is at liberty to worship his Maker in the way he pleases. We have, or ought to have, in this country, perfect freedom of speech and perfect freedom of worship."

Conviction quashed.

In conclusion, the church restored in 1830 has successfully passed all tests from a Bible standpoint. Its continuation, the Reorganized Church, has also stood those same tests. Forced into the courts on property rights, it has won every time. Its ministerial and Christian rights, being tried in Canada, it has once been triumphant. May the reader consider well this treatise on the true church and gospel.

R. ETZENHOUSER.

MAN'S AGENCY.

While reading an article in HERALD of July 18, the thought was stirred within me—as it always is, when I read or hear men say that God intended that Adam should transgress—to speak a word in defense of the unchangeable God; for the apostle says, "Let God be true," etc. But first will note what the apostle Paul wrote concerning the transgression. In 1 Timothy 2:14 we read, "And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression." She transgressed, it is true; but she was not the transgressor. In 1 Corinthians 15:21, 22, the same apostle wrote: "For since by man came death . . . as in Adam all die . . . "; showing that the man was the transgressor. And why the man, more than the woman, seeing the woman ate first? The following reasons look apparent. God gave the command to the man not to eat of the tree of knowledge, but the woman was formed. The woman had the man's testimony no doubt, for she knew that God had given the command; but Satan came to her clothed in his beguiling powers, and she was beguiled, blinded, and deceived. But the man was not under that beguiling influence, therefore not being deceived he ate knowingly. He pleaded no motive or purpose for so doing, when confronted by his Creator, other than, "The woman . . . gave me of the fruit of the tree and I did eat." But men have claimed for him that he foresaw that unless he ate of the fruit also, there would be a separation, and consequently the designs of the Almighty be frustrated; and, again, that the transgression had resulted in great good to the human family, by giving the knowledge of good and evil.

However this may be, God did not recognize those good motives, or command the act in any way. Nor do our teachers commend wrong acts at the present time, for the sake of good motives. But they affirm that "good intentions are helpful only when supported by right actions." Therefore the good motive does not make a wrong act right.

In Adam's case, it would seem to add the sin of presumption to that of disobedience to suppose that the Creator of the universe was not able to carry out his own purposes, without the aid of his transgression. Nor is it reasonable to hold that God intended that Adam should transgress, when it is written that he positively forbade him to do so: especially when his anger was so kindled because of that act that he cursed the ground for his sake. Such a claim is, to my mind, dishonoring to God. It charges him, in substance at least, with being double-minded, and acting a part that is not godlike.

In all subsequent history of the dealings of God with his people, the transgressions of men have delayed, and frustrated for a time at least, the righteous purposes of God in behalf of his children. And if he is, and was, the same then as now, we can most assuredly believe that the sin of our first parents had the same effect. Yet he is able to carry out his own purposes, notwithstanding the transgression, though the way of the transgressor be hard, and the roundabout road be long.

In Genesis 3:4 (Inspired Version) God said he gave man his agency. That agency given to man in the morning of creation, to the first man, and with the first command, was to be handed down to all of Adam's posterity; therefore it did not in any way annul the first command any more than it would a command given in the meridian of time, or in the latter days, for God said, Remember, I forbid it. We all have our agency, and Latter Day Saints have ever contended that like causes produce like effects in all ages of the world. If, then, a deliberate transgression was good, or productive of good, in the first age of the world, will it not be good now? "Shall we then do evil that good may come?" The apostle Paul answers, "God forbid." Yes, and he forbade it in the beginning.

But what is agency? Is it not the power, the privilege of choosing either way? If, then, in acting upon his agency, Adam had chosen to keep the commands of God, would it have hindered the earth from filling the measure of her creation? If it was the original design that the earth should be peopled through transgression, or if transgression only could bring such to pass, then it was predestination, and not agency.

Believing that the earth and all things therein were created for the use of man, and for the good of man also, and that it seemeth good for the exaltation of the children of men in this life, as well as the life to come, to have a knowledge of good and evil; and knowing by experience, as well as by the word of God, that men and women obtain an increase of knowledge of right and wrong—in others words, good and evil—in this age of the world, by obedience to God’s commands, the writer feels justified in the belief that transgression was not necessary in order to obtain that knowledge. But that God “who withholdeth no good thing from those who walk uprightly,” would have freely given our first parents to eat of that tree also—in his own time—had they kept his commandments; if it was best for them and all who should come into the world. For by transgression, the knowledge of good and evil is only in part, and more of evil than of good. Those who obey the gospel have a clearer knowledge of what is right and what is wrong than those who remain under the darkening shadows of the transgression. The eyes of the former—the obedient—are opened the second time. But all are under the broken law, and no man knows in full good and evil.

In all that has been written and said on the subject, the writer has not been able to admit the thought that God intended that Adam should transgress; but it is reasonable to believe he foresaw that he would, and made provisions for it. True, both Adam and Eve congratulated themselves upon their transgression; but I have yet to learn where either God the Father or our Lord Jesus Christ ever commended them or any other one for disobedience.

DRIVELLING SMART SET.

THE REV. F. B. MEYER PROPHESES THEIR EXTINCTION.

The Baptist Union Assembly of Great Britain and Ireland held the first session of the Huddersfield meeting yesterday.

For his address the president of the assembly, the Reverend F. B. Meyer, had as his subject, “In mid-current.” The speaker opened with a hopeful expression upon the prospects of international peace and the federation of men in a common brotherhood.

“Then the Tsar, if Tsars remain,” he continued, “will be unable to crowd the noblest of patriots into the vilest of dungeons; then inhuman monsters, like the king of the Belgians, will be unable to extort their millions by the slow torture and extermination of 15,000,000 of Congolese; then the word ‘nigger’ will be expunged from civilized language, the long war of color will be ended, and young boys fresh from school will blush to talk of ‘potting’ Zulus.”

The president next reviewed the signs of the times. There was no need, he said, to argue that human society was passing through one of the greatest revolutions of history. It was a remarkable fact that the movement was not identified with the leadership of any one man. It was a movement of the people. Government by party was becoming more difficult.

Men were becoming imbued with the idea of social unity. Collectivism was looking over the shoulder of Individualism; competition was being set aside by cooperation; the spirit of social service was asserting itself on all sides, and whilst the smart set were drivelling their lives away in self-indulgence and extravagance, a new world was coming into being, in which they at the one end and the tramp class at the other would find no place. (Applause.)

The church that was needed to-day must bear a swift witness against the palmistry of Regent Street and the extravagance of Mayfair; against the midnight orgies of Piccadilly and the perpetual sacrifice of young lives. It must engage in a holy crusade, not only against the world, the flesh, and the devil, but against mammon worship, land-grabbing, and false notions of imperialism, aim to secure a better understanding between capital and labor, a wiser method of poor relief than to ship the bone and sinew of our working classes to other lands, and a national standard of righteousness which should make impossible the corruption which recent investigations had exposed. (Loud applause.)—Daily Dispatch (London).

“KIDS.”

The following from an exchange, while it does not deal with the most important of subjects, nevertheless touches up a most senseless expression, and if the reading of this will cause some people to reform their speech along this line, it is well worth publishing:

K-I-D spells Kid, which means a young goat, and we believe that our loving heavenly Father is displeased, to hear any Christian professor call a child a KID; especially when a father, mother, Sunday-school superintendent or teacher does so. It surely would not be right for children to call their parents GOATS.

Were we to read from your Bibles thus: “Suffer little KIDS to come unto me” (Matthew 19:14), “KIDS, obey your parents” (Ephesians 5:1), or “Ye GOATS provoke not your KIDS” (Ephesians 6:4), etc., then you would have a just reason to say we are crazy. Children, as well as their parents, are of greater nobility than kids, goats, or any other dumb

The Barefoot Trail.

Out of the dear front gate it ran
Into the sun and dew and tan;
Traversed the dusty, peaceful street
Arched by maples (in mem’ry sweet);
Crossed the pasture with clover lush;
Entered the copse where trilled the thrush;
Rambled, loitered, and played—and then Turned to mother and home again.

Street and pasture and hill and vale—
Such was the course of the Barefoot Trail; Pausing and veering for this and that—
Now for a game of one-old-cat,
Now for a rollicking butterfly,
Now for a nest hung just too high,
Now for a brookside haunt—and then Back to mother and home again.

Never a sun for this trail too hot,
Never a nook that knew it not.
Twisting and turning from scene to scene,
It checkered the realm of the gold and green.
Passager—courier boyhood, slim;
Passport—whistle and tattered brim;
Province—to beckon afar, and then
To lead to mother and home again.

Many a secret and many a tale,
Ours who followed the Barefoot Trail.
Wonders witnessed and marvels heard;
Kinship of squirrel and hare and bird.
The shortest route to the swimming-hole,
The finny spoil of the swaying-pole,
Care-free triumphs and joys—no then,
(Best!) “the mother and home again.”

By Sacrifice.

Dear Fathers and Mothers: You did not like our suggestion in regard to Thanksgiving Day? You thought it rather a childish affair to refrain from some one delicacy on that day in order that you might have the more to give towards building the children’s home?

We have to ask these questions because no answer—no response comes to us, and we are left in doubt as to how you regard it. If you think best not to respond to our appeal in that particular way, then what do you say to a direct thank-offering? A little box, a glass, or any convenient receptacle could be placed upon your table, and into this each member of the family as well as your guests could put as much as they had to give. Think of it, will you not? and while your hearts are lifted to God in gratitude for the plenteous harvests of another year, give a portion—just a small portion—of those same harvests as a thank-offering to him.

It may be that some would prefer an entertainment or a dinner for the public, given on this day. It so, let it be done.

Only ask that you do not let the day pass and forget the home God wants you to build for the fatherless and motherless children.

A Plea for the Children’s Home.

May I tell you a little story before I make my plea to you whom God has spared to raise and care for your loved ones?

Not many years ago, death entered a dear home, taking the loved mother and leaving the poor broken-hearted father with six small children to care for, and no means only the labor of his hands. The loving mother had seen the helpless condition of the father, and when dying asked that whatever else she did, or could not do, the children should have good religious training. In vain the wretched man did all he could. No home could be found that could take them all. No “children’s home” was near or even could offer the religious training the sainted mother had given and desired them to still have. What could the poor father do but struggle on alone, doing his best under the difficulties he must face? God alone knows the fearful struggle in that dear, loving father’s heart; for he well knew he could give them the watchful care that their tender years needed, being compelled to be from home at his labor.

Time passed and the children grew. The oldest, a sweet, trusting girl, did her best, and remembered her mother’s training, until her sixteenth year, when poverty and want, with the fearful temptations that awaited our loved ones, assailed her, and she fell. (God forgive the tempter of a motherless child!) The next, a bright, beautiful, manly, loving boy, soon learned the lesson from his street companions of the cigarette and liquor habit, and at the age of fourteen was a wreck.

Think of it, mothers who have loved sons! Think of it, fathers who love your trusting, innocent daughters! Think for one moment of all your own precious children left at this tender age to face the cruel world and all its temptations, its evil, and its vice, which they must face if death should call you. Think of your own being tempted and falling and then let me ask, Are not all these homeless children just as dear to God as our own precious ones? And is it not our duty to help save these innocent children from the snares and temptations of the world? If only for the sake of bettering humanity, will we not help?

The world needs them. God needs them. The church needs them; and our children need them for companions and associates.

How different would the end of my story of these dear children have been, if at that time the church could have afforded them a home! The mother was a true Saint, and beneath the roof of a “children’s home,” established, governed, and controlled by the church, religious training could have been had and proper watchcare have been given them! God grant the day may speedily come when no dear children will go to ruin from the lack of proper care and a church home. Oh, mothers and fathers, I plead with you, Help us save these children! Let us awake to the fact of just what responsibilities rest upon us as true Christians, loyal citizens, and as fathers and mothers. And you childless ones, who have never heard the merry prattle of little voices in your own home, open your hearts to their pleading, and help with your means to build this home for the homeless ones. And you mothers and fathers, who have (like the writer) laid away your own bright, manly, sweet, haunting memory, and hope for the great eternity where you may again meet the dear one, to you I say, Take the means God has given you, and that would have been so gladly used for these dear departed ones if they had been spared us, and let it help build this home for the homeless children; and feel sure our own loved ones, safe in God’s dear sheltering arms, will rejoice with us in the blessed work, and our own lonely, starved hearts will feel repaid for any effort we may make.

I would say to the dear fathers and mothers who have no vacant chair, no empty bed, no missing form, no loved voice silent, no lonely, aching void in the heart, but who have all their loved ones safe in their own tender care and home, let me say, Give as a thank-offering to God, that you have them all spared to you, by helping in this grand and noble work. Your reward will be sure. God grant that each of us may do our very best, and that success may crown the efforts of the noble souls who are laboring to this end, is the prayer of Priscilla. AMBOY, Illinois.

[Let us tell you, dear Saints, that the writer of the above letter has already sent in her contribution—has shown her faith by her works—and it is out of the abundance of her own generous, sorrow-stricken heart that she is pleading. Whittier has beautifully expressed the purifying power of sorrow in these lines:

"The heart must bleed before it feel,
The soul be troubled before it heal."

God grant that a noble response may come in answer to the needs of this work, before the deep wells of our hearts are troubled by the visiting angel.—EDITOR.]

Dear Herald: Will you permit me a little of your space? I want to tell a little of my experience for the benefit of those who have been so kind to the invalid. After four long, weary months of "shut-in" and hospital life, when medical aid failed me, my doctor and friends decided a trip to my old native State, Wisconsin, might do much to bring back the health and strength that were so slow in coming. And while yet undecided as to my getting able to stand the trip, one day the Autumn Leaves was brought to my bed, and in opening it my glance first rested on the Religio report of the Minneapolis, Minnesota, local, and instantly I thought if a Religio there, there must be a branch; and if a branch an older; and if I make the Wisconsin trip, I go through there, and could, as God has commanded us to do, be administered to—a privilege I had longed for much, but, as we are of the isolated ones, had not yet had it. Well, that night I dreamed I was in a building, and on looking out 1 saw some people pass, and among them was one that looked much like Bro. Corodin, and I remarked, "There is Bro. Cornish; now I will not have to wait so long to be administered to." Well, the next day I wrote Bro. Joseph Smith for some addresses of the Minneapolis Saints. Bro. Salyards answered promptly, and, not being able to stop off on my trip up, I decided if I got an invitation I would stop on my return. So on August 14, under the faithful doctor's watchful care, I made the trip north to an elder, in a building, and on looking out I seen some people pass, and among them was one that looked much like Bro. Corodin. And, as God has ever done, was administered to me. Arriving at the depot, found again another warm welcome by Sr. Lillian Lundeen; and I never can tell you of the warm, kind welcome waiting in the fine, pleasant home of Bro. Lundeen, with a nice, dainty supper. And then came the treat when they informed me a prayer-meeting, with a short sermon by Bro. McCoy, was to fill up the evening, planned for the poor, hungry heart and soul. Language fails me to tell of it all, and of the dear Saints that gathered there, of the fervent, touching prayers offered. Never will all this be forgotten by the stranger. And never will I forget the feeling of resignation that came over me, as good, kind Bro. Hilton (branch president) and Bro. McCoy laid their hands on the sufferer's head. G. D. truly was there, and I felt to say, "Thy will be done."

My short stay with the dear family of Bro. Lundeen, and all their kindness to the stranger, will never be forgotten by me. Also the acquaintance and kindness of Bro. McCoy. And will say for their comfort, that though I still must use my crutch, the old numbness is much better, and I believe in time I shall walk without it. "In God's own time!" I know they are still praying for me. And may God our Father's richest blessing be on them all, "through life, in death, and all eternity," is the prayer of your sister in the faith.

Editors Herald: Believing the Saints of the districts whereunto I was appointed may have reached a conclusion that I am not about my Father's business, I wish to say that I have been engaged in tent-work since July 5, first at Sioux City, then Orson, Sandy Point, Stow Creek, and Beaver Valley, with the exception of a visit at home in September, where I was needed much in the time because of sickness. In the above-mentioned places we have found some interest, and at some of them very good. The two latter places very good. While at Stow Creek there were no baptisms, yet we felt good was done, and an opportunity for future work with the tent. Some of the best of Saints in those hills I have ever met, as well as those who were not of our faith. May the good Lord reward them for their kindness to us. Have been associated with Bro. J. C. Crabb, which I have appreciated very much.

At this place (Beaver Valley), we just closed a series of three weeks' meeting the 7th. Had good attendance as well as attention. The writer had the privilege of acting the Aposd part of the work in conducting ten into the kingdom. Others are near, but seem to stay out still evidently for reasons best known to themselves. May the Spirit continue to strive with them as they see the need of doing this beautiful October Sabbath day and communion day how I wish I could be at a Latter Day Saint church! I have not heard a Latter Day Saint sermon since I left Sioux City, two years last March, as we came here the first day of April; and it is only thirty miles south-east of Sioux City. Our farm is beautifully located, seven miles southeast of Anthon, and we would be very much pleased to have an elder come and tell the gospel story to the people. We are expecting Bro. W. A. Smith this winter. We hope he will come before corn-picking is over, as there is lots of it to pick, and not much help. And so it is with the gospel; it is much needed, but not preached as the gospel of Jesus Christ, as I have heard it preached by the Latter Day Saint elders.

We are very busy with the farm work.

If any of the elders can come to see us, we can meet them at Anthon, if they will let us know in time. Thrashing is about over; plowing is slow on account of distemper among the horses. Some of the Saints may be glad to know that I have not forgotten them. I take this way of letting you know that I still trust in my Lord and Savior, even Jesus Christ. May we all live so as to have his Spirit to guide us in all ways of truth and righteousness.

Editors Herald: I inclose a clipping from last week's Kansas City Star which I think will interest all believers of the restored gospel:

THE 'LOST TEN TRIBES' AGAIN.

"Chickasha, I. T.—The Indians are the most superstitious people on earth," said a man a few days ago who had taught for years in a Creek Indian school. "They have myths and legends by the score. Some of them are as beautiful and picturesque as the legends of the old Greeks and Romans.

"I boarded for five years with a Creek Indian who had been educated at Carlisle. He knew the Indian legends and used to tell them to me and his children as we sat around the fireplace of an evening. You know the Creeks have a legend that they are one of the lost ten tribes of Israel. This Indian was the son of a medicine man who was once great and powerful in the tribe. All his knowledge of Indian lore came from his father, the medicine man.

"He repeated the tales to me as his father had told them to him, except that the impressiveness of the Indian sorcerer with his long trailing robe of eagle quills, the conjuring wand and the fantastic and the weird surroundings of the Indian, teepee on a lonely plain were absent. The elements must be in the right mood for the medicine man to disclose the secrets of his race.

"This medicine man said that the Creeks were one of the ten lost tribes of Israel. The legend ran that they were once associated with the other tribes and that they had wandered and became separated. They wandered for years far to the north until they came to a sea. There they built boats and embarked. They steered their course by the wand of a medicine man. Each morning he went to his teepee and set up his divining-rod and told them which direction to pursue. They followed this rod from a warm country to a cold sea on which they set sail. The sea was crossed and then they traveled toward the south again.

"The Creeks have a covenant of their tribe which is kept with the chiefs. No one but the elect is ever permitted to see the legends of the old Greeks and Romans.

"Many Bible students and ethnologists believe that the Indians of America are descendants of the 'Lost Tribes of Israel.' What these tribes wandered away from Palestine and were never again heard of. Some believe that they wandered to the west shore of the Pacific and northward along it to the Behring straits, which they crossed to Alaska and then wandered southward and were dispersed throughout America in the ages that followed."

I would like to know if there are any Saints in and around Watonga, Oklahoma. We have been here but a short time, and would like to know.

D. H. Whitsel.

Bethany, Oklahoma, October 9, 1906.

Editors Herald: We have just closed a ten-day camp-meeting at Bethany, where the few Saints who attended enjoyed a good meeting. The attendance was not what we had anticipated, either of the Saints or outsiders. So many were burdened with work at home, and were thus prevented being present. However, the meeting was a good one, and all seemed to rejoice.

That faithful veteran in gospel work, Bro. Daniel Self Crawley, with his aged companion, was with us and delivered some rousing sermons on gospel themes. His labors were well received. Bro. James E. Yates, our assistant, also distinguished himself as a preacher in earnest effort on the temporal phase of the gospel, and also in length of sermons.

Elder J. H. Baker, another faithful servant, from Beaver County, did good work—he is an earnest laborer. Bro. H. E. Moler, the genial "street-preacher," rendered valuable assistance, not only by clear, logical, and pleasant manner of preaching, but with the little organ, and voice in leading the singing. And the writer—well, he did the best he could.

It was a time of rejoicing, and we thank God for such a glorious gospel and the comfort received while laboring in its interests.

One very pleasant and attractive feature of our camp-meeting was a quiet wedding which took place in the tabernacle on Sunday evening, September 30, just before commencement of services. Mr. Clyde Newcomer and Sr. Addie Blakesley were married, the writer performing the ceremony. About two hundred people were present. Mr. and Mrs. Newcomer have many friends here who cheerfully responded to the opportunity we gave for congratulations before the commencement of preaching. We wish for them a long life blended with happiness and peace.

I find the Saints in general over the district trying to magnify their calling as the people of God. But I understand this gospel work to be somewhat like the experience in the schoolroom: when the child first starts to school it takes up the primer—then second book, etc. Suppose if, when they had finished the second or third reader, with other studies to correspond, they did not advance to higher grades, when would they receive their diplomas? The words go on in the gospel work contain valuable thoughts. We must "go on" if we gain the crown.

I am encouraged with the outlook in this part of the field, though there are some things that are a hindrance. Let us be men in understanding and children in malice—little children. For by our observation we see that children do not retain malice or unkind feelings toward each other. They learn to do that as they grow older in years. As we grow older in the gospel experience, let us remain as children in malice and disposition to speak evil or reproachfully of another. "Speak evil of no man," is the word of God to us. Years ago I learned these words from some good poet:

"We none of us know one another, And oft into error may fall; Then let us speak well of another Or not speak about them at all."

To disregard the above teaching, both from the Scriptures and from the poet, is the cause of, and will result in more disorder, difficulty, etc., in the church, in my opinion, than anything else. It requires prayer, faith, and trust in God, meditation and earnest thinking, to cultivate our minds so that they will be changed and become like the "mind of Christ." "God speed the right." Yours in the conflict,

R. M. Maloney.

St. Clair, Michigan, September 24, 1906.

Dear Herald: A week of wonderful experiences is now recorded in the past. Our dear patriarch, Bro. John H. Lake, spent a few days with us, sent by a loving Father to cheer and encourage his band of Saints in this place. The words that were given will never be forgotten, but will echo and reecho in our hearts till we meet on the boundless shores of the eternity from which they came. All day Wednesday the Spirit whispered to me of some wonderful blessing in store for his people. On Wednesday evening a number of God's people met for prayer and testimony at the home of Bro. Wortz. A time never to be forgotten was realized; the Spirit of God burned like a fire. Bro. Lake spoke in the gifts of tongues and interpretation of tongues, and told us of the near approach of the Son of God. Sr. Agnes Shaw of Kimball, Ontario, also being present, spoke in prophecy to a Lamanite brother of his mission to his own people if faithful.

Three were baptized Sunday morning, the 23d. Two of the number were Lamanites. Four Lamanites are now in the branch, all members of one family. The time is near when we will realize the fulfillment of prophecy in regard to this people: "And as many as shall believe in Christ, shall also become a delightsome people."—2 Nephi 12:13. Also Doctrine and Covenants 49:5: "But before the great day of the Lord shall come, Jacob shall flourish in the wilderness; and the Lamanites shall blossom as the rose." A spirit of inquiry is coming among them, and when the Book of Mormon is fully explained to their untaught, darkened minds, they will accept the truth with a childlike faith and simplicity.
