And this have ye done again, covering the altar of the Lord with tears, and with weeping, and with crying out, insomuch that he regardeth not the offering any more, or receiveth it with good will at your hand. Yet ye say, wherefore? Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously; yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant. And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the Spirit. And wherefore one? [Why not two or more wives for one man?]—C. S.] That he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth. For the Lord, the God of Israel, sayeth that he hateth the doctrine of the Nicolaitans in the Revelation.

By this language of the “Thus saith the Lord” both polygamy and divorce are condemned. For these and other treacherous sins, their altar of sacrifice was covered with tears and weeping. By these and other sins Israel strayed from God’s ordinances and kept them not. Here we are taught that God’s order of marriage, in order to the raising up of a godly seed, was but one companion for man in wedlock. The language here can not be distorted to mean anything else. God’s ways are one eternal round, neither doth he vary from that which he hath said. He who hated the doctrine of the Nicolaitans in the Revelation John’s day, when some of the sons of God advocated polygamy, still abhor that doctrine and practice.

Now Christians generally do not condemn Noah because some of the sons of God entered into polygamy in his day. Nor do they hold the law given to Israel through Moses responsible for the subversion of the marriage covenant by David, Solomon, and others during the days it was binding from the days of Moses till the resurrection of Christ from the dead. Neither does the Christian world condemn the ancient Christian church, Christ, nor the apostles, because some of the sons of God in John’s day dealt treacherously with the wife of their youth, and followed the false and pernicious doctrine of Nicolas, who was one of the seven chosen at Jerusalem, but who afterward introduced the doctrine of a community and plurality of wives into one of the seven churches of Asia. (See Acts 6, and Revelation 2:6-15.) Now this being true, why should we condemn the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints because Brigham Young and others associated with him introduced and practiced polygamy, in Utah, eight years after Joseph Smith’s death in Illinois in June, 1844, and twenty-two years after the said church was first organized in 1830? Polygamy, and the sermon on which it is based, were born into the world at Salt Lake City, Utah, August 29, 1852. This was twenty-two years after the church was first organized, April, 1830.

But a very small portion of the membership of the church in 1844 accepted the leadership of Brigham Young, or accepted the teachings relating to the sin of polygamy. For over fifty years, or since 1852, the people composing the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with Joseph Smith presiding, have been endeavoring to show, in the spirit of kindness, the people of the Utah church their grave mistake in following after Brigham Young and his successors in office as leaders of the church, and of believing in polygamy.

It may be thought by some that much of this retrospective is too late to be of utility, but remember our announced purpose in this effort. Are the conditions that prevailed before the flood, that Jesus said would be reenacted here in the end of the world, now being inaugurated? They surely are.

How was it in Noah’s day? Our being prepared for the coming of the end depends on our discernment of these things. Answering our question, Jesus says: They knew not in Noah’s day till judgment overtook them. They were so deeply engrossed in the things and sins of the world that they gave no heed to the warning of one hundred and twenty years’ duration, so judgment came on them to their destruction by the flood.

And as it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, [overmarried like some in Utah.—C. S.,] they were given in marriage until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all. Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they built; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed.—Luke 17:26-30.

Here are eight lines of conduct named by Christ that man will be engaged in when Christ comes, every one of which is right, is necessary, when legitimately engaged in. Eating, drinking, buying, selling, planting, building, marrying, giving in marriage. What, then, is the trouble? One trouble is, people are so wholly engrossed in these things that they have no time for service of God. As to buying and selling, witness the unscrupulous speculations indulged in in all departments of trade, and the graft that is being practiced everywhere. Building and planting. Witness the immensity of building, the money unnecessarily involved in immense structures both of a secular and religious character. Why is it necessary to invest millions of dollars in a dwelling-house, as is so often done of late years? It is a prodigal and absolutely sinful investiture of means that ought to be used to bless the perishing, sinful ignorant and poor with. Many are so busy raising corn and cattle and swine that they have no time whatever to give to the service of the Master.

Marrying and being given in marriage. An average of six hundred and twelve divorces in every ten thousand marriages in the United States is the estimate now based on statistics. And at least three fourths of these mean one or more additional unlawful marriages, as judged by the divine law. Then note the awful degree of unnatural affection connected with all this, of parents toward each other and the children. Further, consider what effect this state of affairs necessarily has on society, present and future! What of the life of the forsaken children? And in addition to this, that relic of undeveloped and heathen society, polygamy, is seeking to establish itself in the central boundaries of the United States, and the state of Chihuahua (Che-wá-wá), Mexico.

On this point note the statement of Elder W. M. Wolfe, professor of theology, lately of Brigham Young College, Logan, Utah. Also, let the elders and others take note of the fact that even the younger and more recent converts to the Brighamite faith, scattered throughout the United States, are as well posted on their dogma of polygamy as any point of their faith.

The evils enumerated by our Savior in the above prophecy met their judgment and overthrow in the days of Noah, Lot, of Josephus at Pompeii. And they await their final extinction when the Savior comes in glory, power, and external justice, to “be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts.”

If the recent past has developed these enumerated evils, and the present fails to correct them, what of the near future of the world? C. Scott.

A song of sunshine through the rain,
Of spring across the snow,
A balm to heal the hurts of pain
A peace surpassing woe.
Lift up your heads, ye sorrowing ones,
And be ye glad of heart,
For Calvary and Easter Day,
Earth's saddest day and gladdest day,
Were just one day apart!
Oh, when the strife of tongues is loud,
And the heart of hope beats low,
When the prophet prophesy of ill
And the mourners come and go,
In this sure thought let us abide,
And keep and stay our heart:
That Calvary and Easter Day,
Earth's heaviest day and happiest day,
Were but one day apart!

Easter.

[We greatly regret that we have forgotten the name of our contributor who sent us the following, for while we feel sure of its full appreciation we would be glad to give the writer credit.

—Erroneous.—]

The thought that Jesus lives, that he lives now, and will live forever, should be firmly fixed in the mind, because it will be a great source of strength and confidence in the hour of trial and adversity, and especially in the hour that brings one face to face with eternal realities, when life is felt to be slipping away, and our eyes are about to close upon the scenes of life for ever. Then it is that we need the assurance that the Christ holds the keys of life and death; that he can shut and no man can be able to open, that he can open and no man be able to shut.

We need to make ourselves familiar with the thought that the life which is in the Christ is the life which is in all things; which is in us and all things about us. This is the life which is just now springing into new activity, which is overcoming the effects of winter, and is showing very plainly that there is a power which is able to arouse the sleeping energies of Nature, and to bring forth from the dead those things that were held fast in the embrace of Death.

As in the winter one looks upon the leafless trees of the forest or of the lawn and sees in them an emblem of the state of the dead, he also may see in the returning life of spring an emblem of the rising from the dead; a token and promise of the resurrection of men from the grave. These lessons should be so fixed in the mind that they will be ever present to give us comfort in the hour of discouragement and distress. We should think of them often, so that they will come to us just at the time that we need them, and that they will have such a hold upon our faith that we can not be shaken in our trust and confidence.

Jesus said to his disciples, "Because I live, ye shall live also"; and in these beautiful days of the springtide we have most excellent proof that the Son of God lives, that he still has in his possession the power to overcome the forces of death, and to raise again those that sleep in the tomb, to bring them forth again clothed in the garments of immortal life. This is a grand hope to have and to hold. Let us keep it, cherish it, and foster it with all our hearts, and it will be to us a well-spring of joy and blessing for ever.

In many respects the springtide is the most interesting season of the year. The many living forces of Nature begin to awaken after the long sleep of winter, and the peeping flowers, the springing grass, and the budding trees show that the reign of Death, for the time being, is over. However, the time allotted to this paper will not permit a recital of all the beautiful things that have been said and sung about the praises and glories of bright sunshine and twittering birds. We are now to deal with those higher things of which these outward signs are the mere symbols.

Easter is a festival in memory of the rising of Jesus from the dead; and because he has risen we have hope that we, too, shall rise; that we shall awaken from the slumber of death to a new and immortal life. We are therefore interested in the special lessons that we may learn from the works of God as we may see them all around us, and as it was the same God that made us that makes all the things that we see, and that also provided the plan of redemption, the way of salvation, and as he is always like himself, we may be sure there will be some likeness and similarity between his work in creation and his work in redemption. So if we will study his work in making the things we see around us, we may be able to learn some things that will be useful to us in studying that part of the gospel that relates to the rising from the dead, or what is called the resurrection.

When the Savior was in the world so many years ago, he told the ones he was teaching to consider the lilies of the field; and he told them this because there was something to be learned by it. He wanted them to know that God cared for the lilies, that he cared enough for them to give them very beautiful clothes; and besides that, we may see, though the lilies and other flowers die when the cold weather comes in the fall, he brings them to life again when warm weather comes in the spring. These facts should make us think that if God loves the flowers enough to give them such beautiful clothes, and to bring them to life again after they die, he loves us enough to do the same things for us.

He promises us in his word that if we will always do what is right, he will give us everything that we need in the way of food and clothing; and that he will bring us to life again after we die. But there will be this difference between us and the flowers as we know them in this world; after the flowers are brought to life they die again; they die every fall and are brought to life again every spring.

When through the power of Christ we are brought to life in the resurrection, we will not die any more; but we will be like the angels in heaven, we will live always; and we will not be afraid of being again parted from our friends by death. This will make us very happy and joyful, and the hope that such a good time is coming for us should make us very happy now. It is a good thing to think about very often, for the thoughts that make us truly happy also make us truly better. The truly happy are the truly good; and in the good time coming we are to be happy simply because we will have learned to be good. What we have to do now is to learn the right way and walk in it.

A year ago the trees put forth their leaves and during the summer they were clothed in a mantle of beautiful green; but with the coming of fall, its chilling winds and white frosts, they put off their garments as we do when we retire to rest at night; and now these same trees are putting on fresh raiment, and soon will be arrayed in all their glory, because the life which was dormant during the winter has awakened to new activity under the influence of genial sunshine and refreshing showers.

As the sunshine and the rain bring new life to plant and flower and tree, so does the Spirit of the Lord, the spirit of life from God, bring us into the new life as we rise from the dead, and we are clothed upon with immortality and eternal life. It was by the Spirit of the Lord that Jesus was raised from the dead, and it is by the same Spirit that we must be raised. This is the Spirit we receive when we obey the gospel and keep the commandments of God. We are told in the Scriptures that "if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."

When Jesus stood near the burial-place of Lazarus he said, "I am the resurrection and the life," not I was the resurrection and the life, not I will be the resurrection and the life, but in the present tense, I am, that is, now, not merely in the future, but in the present as well.

Charity in the Sunday-School.

The apostle Paul has been the means of shedding a glorious light on the Christian religion by defining the "bond of perfection"—charity. He says charity suffereth long, is kind, envieth not, vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth. As Jesus has bid us be like a little child, we may believe that little children have the elements of charity within themselves. The Sunday-school or, more definitely, the teachers are those who accept the work of developing and cultivating in the child that divine principle. The editors and teachers of our Quarterly have undertaken an important task in arranging and teaching Bible-stories from the prophecies. The subject—resurrection and the life," not I was the resurrection and the life, not I will be the resurrection and the life, but in the present tense, I am, that is, now, not merely in the future, but in the present as well.

Charity is the Sunday-School.

The teacher can influence the mind of the child to be charitable to others by pointing to the life of Christ. He brought comfort and strength to the weary and sick, peace and joy to the troubled and broken-hearted, light and truth to the darkened in mind, hope and confidence to the fallen and erring ones.

"He was so gentle and so mild He would have listened to a child."

Charity is not only the source; it is the stream. It thinketh good and not evil, it doeth good and not evil. "Doth not behave itself unseemly." Charity is divinity expressed. The power of the Sunday-school reaches from infancy into eternity. Every word uttered by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit is a divine seed sown in the soul of whom Jesus said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Mortals fade and pass away; the word of the Lord endureth for ever. If we sow with the Spirit in our Sunday-school work, we will equip the child with the armor of truth, the sword of the Spirit, the shield of faith, the helmet of salvation, the means to do good unto all men. Charity like other things can often be better understood by its contrast. "Charity covereth a multitude of sins"; it does not absorb them, make fun of, or ridicule them; "it rejoiceth not in iniquity." Simplicity is necessary in our work in the Sunday-school; it gives strength and confidence to the young mind and is the greatest safeguard against error and the cunningly devised fables of "Babylon."

The Sunday-school—how beautiful
Its lessons and its songs of praise,
Its stories old and wonderful.
I love the place; my heart is filled
With gratitude, and fervent prayer
That life of mine may always yield
The fruits of peace and charity here.

Letter Department

LITTLE SIOUX, IOWA, March 16, 1906.

Editors Herald: In reading the Herald I often see letters from those I have met with in the past at different places and it makes me rejoice to hear from them. I am still alive in this great work. In looking over the past I can see many mistakes I have made, and can see many pitfalls that the Satanic power has laid to destroy my usefulness in the Master's cause. At times Satan has endeavored to cause me to give up and quit trying to overcome my weaknesses, but I know what I would lose if I listened to him, and when the good Master has come to my rescue and given me the victory, I have renewed my energies with a determination to press on. I realize, as I was told in my blessing, that God has been very merciful to me. He has at times given me his Spirit in power to enlighten my mind and to quicken my understanding and also to enable me to speak words of cheer and comfort to others.

I could relate many instances of God's goodness to me, but will forbear. I can testify truly that God has restored his church and gospel to earth with its gifts and blessings.

The work in the Little Sioux District is moving on. Our last district conference was a success, I think, in every respect. We began the conference with a prayer and testimony-meeting, and the Lord spoke to us and said that he was well pleased with our prayers and he would bless us. Two prophecies were given at that meeting, telling the Saints to come out from the world and he would bless them, and also giving the ministry encouragement and telling them to push out into new places where he had many souls to be gathered into his kingdom. Bro. Charles Derry received a message encouraging him in the labor that he had done and also concerning the future. Sunday morning the Lord poured out his Spirit both in prophecy and tongues, and he would bless them, and also giving the ministry encouragement and telling them to push out into new places where he had many souls to be gathered into his kingdom.

Bro. Derry's sermon was highly spoken of, both by the Saints and others. His subject was "Heart purity." It was one of the grandest sermons I have ever heard.

May God bless his people is the prayer of Your humble servant in Christ,
D. A. HUTCHINGS.

DIMONDALE, Michigan, March 25, 1906.

Editors Herald: I bear testimony of the many blessings I have received of the Lord in the past. We have no branch here but I have my meetings with the Lord, and will testify to some of the things that I have received by his Holy Spirit. In 1906, early in the fall, it was shown to me that we would have a mild winter, different from any in the past. Just as it was given, so has the Lord brought it about, and it has been talked about all over the country. I do praise his holy name for the blessing. It has been good for the poor in both city and country—less expense for fuel.

I had another manifestation early in 1906. I was in a large field covered with corruption, and another person and I were sweeping the rubbish up into a pile. We got it all swept into a pile on the south side of the field ready to be gathered up, when I awoke. I believe this means something and would like to know what it is, as I do not understand it. On the 13th of March I beheld a field of potatoes and corn. Insects were eating the potatoes and had nearly destroyed them. I crushed some of the horrible things by stepping on them. It seemed that on many fields that had produced big crops, nothing was left to gather. If the Lord should fulfill this it will be hard for the farmers. It may be fulfilled in these parts. I doubt not that it will be somewhere, for iniquity is abounding, excess of pride and vanity, even among those claiming to be the children of God. Is it a wonder that a famine should come down by the chastening hand of a just God who wants honor and praise to his holy name? If the people would put away iniquity he would take away the pestilences.

I desire to honor and praise my heavenly Father for what I receive at his hands, and that I may be a help to his cause is my prayer in Jesus' name.

S. WHITE.

NIANGUA, Missouri, March 25, 1906.

Dear Herald: Being isolated now after so many years where we could be with the Saints every Sunday when able to go, I often ask why is it we are here. My husband, being in poor health for many years, thought the change might be a benefit; besides we had a daughter in this part. But to be among strangers and not one Saint is very trying after being with Saints so long.

It was in the summer of 1877 that I heard and obeyed the gospel at Webb City, Missouri, and fourteen-year-old daughter being the first ones to be baptized. The gospel was not new to me, for I was cradled in the arms of a sainted mother and father, but the church being broken up and scattered, father dying when I was young, and many being deceived, I stood aloof, waiting but hungering for the truth. I went to God in solemn prayer and with tears I ask him if my father's faith was the true church and if he had a people on earth that it might be made known to me.

About two weeks from that time the way was opened and Bro. A. J. Cato came to Webb and preached the third sermon. He bore testimony to the truthfulness of the restored gospel and there was a light shone upon him and he was made to know the light was the same as Paul saw and was told that it was now for me to accept or reject. But I thought I would treasure all this up in my heart and wait and see if there were not some one else that would go first; but the next morning the elder came to our house and said, "What do you think of the gospel now?" and I said I always believed Joseph Smith to be a prophet of God. He said, "I had a dream last night and I thought I caught a fish and thought it was you. Now if you have had a testimony of this work it is your duty to obey it, for before this you did not come under condemnation." I had not told him of what had been shown me but I thought, The Lord has revealed it to him for he surely doeth nothing except he reveal it to his servants; but I said, Convert my husband and I am ready to go. He said, "I can promise you that your husband will follow." That was enough, and I obeyed the heavenly message and am here to-day, a living witness of his goodness and mercy. Although I have passed through many trials I have also received many blessings and my life has been prolonged, and it has been told me there was yet a work for me to do.

It has always been my greatest desire to cause others to see the true gospel and I have tried to present tracts and other reading-matter to the people of this place, but it is all new. Some seem to think it all right while others seem afraid. Bro. Baker came and preached several sermons and some are inquiring as to when he is coming back. One man asked my son why they did not get the Baptist church—said he was one of the trustees and that they could have the church, which makes me feel to thank the Lord, for I have prayed that the way might be opened and that we might not be alone in this place, as there are good, kind people here and this is a very moral place.

There are no saloons—no intoxicants sold here; there are three churches—the Methodist Episcopal, Christian, and Baptist; a canning-factory, flour-mill, etc. The land is not the best, but people live and have good houses for a village. There is good sale for poultry and cattle, as they are shipped to St. Louis.

If there is a work to be done here I am glad we are here to be a help in that direction. There is one lady who seems to understand the gospel and has talked in favor ever since I talked to her, yet she has heard only one sermon.

May the Lord help us to live worthy is the desire of your sister, Mrs. R. M. Bradley.

Lincoln, Nebraska, March 3, 1906.

Editors Herald: It is now more than seven weeks since I left home and loved ones to care for my fever stricken son, Daniel. Weeks have seemed as months, but the day came at last to leave St. Elizabeth Hospital with all its environments, and we are now carefully sheltered in the home of our aged Sr. O. A. Hubbard, 1621 Poplar Street.

Here have had a good home for three weeks and each Sunday I have tried in my humble way to instruct and edify the few who are trying to serve the Lord. I feel sad and almost discouraged over my effort in this place. I say effort, for indeed I did make a strong effort to use my time to the best advantage possible. I soon discovered that it must prove a financial loss. I also saw by an eye of faith that it was possibly heaven-ordained; nor can I yet believe otherwise. And as I am writing these lines I am reminded of Paul's voyage towards Rome; of their fourteen days' fasting; of the terrific storm, and how the angel of the Lord appeared to Paul, telling him of the shipwreck, but that all of the passengers were to be saved, as found in Acts twenty-seventh chapter. This chapter affords instruction spiritually, which has caused me no little sorrow, and I can say with assurance that I have grown more and more affectionate toward each other, Christ insmuch as he can turn bread and wine into the actual body and blood of Jesus Christ. Well, well; is it possible that mankind can be so blind?

I am just about forced to the conclusion that they are wrong on all cardinal points of Christ's doctrine. Now this being true I should like to know what virtue or authority so-called Protestants can obtain from Romanism or the "mother of harlots." And who can not see the necessity of Jesus Christ taking on a body in heaven and in earth? Who will deny that he has not the power, since it is written, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth."—St. Matthew 28:18. Further, who will deny the possibility of God's church playing the harlot, and she certainly did. All reform movements or Protestants speak as it were in tones of thunder that it is only too true.

Now, under such conditions, what honest, God-fearing soul would not welcome the message that God and his Son Jesus have again restored the true church as early as the sixth day of April, 1830. I would like to know what more evidence the world needs. Did not Joseph Smith say in 1827 that the early and latter rains would be restored to Palestine? And did he not say that the Jews would return to their own land? And did he not prophesy the rebellion of South Carolina, etc., in the 26th of December, 1822? Who is that man that can successfully deny it? And who is the man that can successfully refute the fact that Joseph Smith did organize the true and only church of Jesus Christ on the sixth day of April, 1830? I will frankly confess that in my humble judgment no man has ever yet succeeded.

For the first time in my life I attended Jewish worship to-day. It seemed strange indeed. There were about twenty-five Jews present. All wore hats, caps, or turbans. They are quite devoted in their worship I believe. None knelt for prayer. They wore large mantles or vestments while at worship. During worship they brought out of an encasement or ark, the five books of Moses. These are like long strips of white wall-paper fastened on two rollers. They are of great interest or value to the Jewish worshipers, for I noticed that several kissed the outside of the rolls. They manifested much interest while the rabbi or priest read therefrom. Several would gather about him and listen attentively. I noticed that there was not a woman present, so I asked the priest about it, and he said they did not come much to worship. I also noticed that the house was quite cold, and when the little Gentile fire-builder came in the priest told him to keep up a better fire hereafter.

I visited with the priest a few days since. He received me courteously in his private room, for I desired to have a good talk with him about their beloved Canaan, the Zionist movement. The first thing he did was to put on his turban (cap), and light his cigarette; then he seemed ready to converse about Israel's God and the Jews. This gave me a very bad impression, and I was badly disappointed, for he seemed to know less than we know about these things. He has lived several years in Jerusalem and says that the city has some fifty thousand Jews and that the land is very fruitful. I have visited many places of interest since I came here of which I can not write. I have attended several places of worship, both of Protestants and Catholics, but I seemed to feel more of the Spirit of Christ in the penitentiary worship than any other place. Truly "Christ came into the world to save sinners," and not the self-righteous. I attended Dunkard worship and have called three times at the elder's house but was never invited indoors. While I have been here I anointed six persons, one a member of the church, the others nonmembers. I can not speak of the ultimate results, but I do pray God in Jesus' name to extend his mercy to all. I visited all the Saints here that I could hear of. They all speak very kindly of each other. May God help them to grow more and more affectionate toward each other, for "love is of God." In the bonds of the gospel,

POND CREEK, Oklahoma, March 14, 1906.

Editors Herald: I write to let you know what we are doing in this far-off land. Elder A. V. Closson preached at the Christian church three evenings, and one Sunday afternoon at eleven o'clock; subject: Sunday, and why we keep it. It was fine. I heard several comments in favor of it. Some are inquiring and want to hear more. He preached once on the "Apostasy of the church," touching lightly on the restoration. Some of the preachers spoke highly of it. One very intelligent lady, a Amian preacher, told me it was fine; said he differed every point. We closed the services on account of other services at the Christian church and at other churches. A lady has been lecturing on temperance. She is a worker for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Bro. Closson is now out in the country holding meetings seven or eight miles southeast of town. We expect him back this week and he may preach again at the Christian church.

The Presbyterian preacher here advertised in last week's paper that on last Sunday evening he would lecture on Mormonism. Mr. McCullough and I went and took notes. He commenced with the rise of the church, rehashed the same old Spalding romance, Sidney Rigdon, protracted meeting, Joseph Smith's "peep," big gold plates, Joseph Smith trying to walk on the water like Jesus Christ, and when some boys took the kegs out he went under, etc. He also said that Joseph Smith told the people the Book of Mormon was true, and to prove it he would ask God to strike a certain tree with lightning and if he did they would know the Book of Mormon was true. The tree was shattered and the people, many of them, were excited and confessed that it was true, but some one did not believe and went and examined the tree and found there had been powder used, etc. He is to lecture next Sunday night and will continue, no doubt, but he will try to make Joseph Smith the author of that foul doctrine out West in Utah. He says he has the books of the Christian or Campbellite Church and they have many sworn testimonies. He has lived in Utah some time. He stationed himself near the door after the lecture and when he shook hands with us and invited us to come again I pleasantly said, "Brother, will you discuss that question?" He said, "Yes, yes." I said, "All right; you know there are always two sides to every question."

This preacher, Harris, called to see us last summer. I told him what church I belonged to; told him the difference between the Reorganized Church and the Utah church, and gave him quite a number of tracts, but when he returned them to get more I was not at home. He told me of the wicked doings of the Utah people. He told me the Book of Mormon was gotten up from the Spalding romance. I told him it was a mistake. I had a copy of the romance and there was no similarity between them, and that the original manuscript was now in Oberlin College, Ohio. It had been lost with an amount of printed matter from the old printing-office, and the Lord had it hid for forty years at Honolulu, but it was found while looking over old papers by accident by one not a member of the church, so they would have to hatch up some other lie now. He is a young man and may believe what he says for all I know. He has, so far, quoted what he has heard or read from Campbellite books. I hope Bro. Closson will be here to attend the lecture next Sunday evening.

I received a letter from my sister, Mrs. Ida Gillham, No. 828 Twenty-third Avenue, Seattle, Washington. She stated that she heard there was to be a tent-meeting of Latter Day Saints at Seattle, and would like to attend; asked me where and when, but I do not know where the meeting will be held or please give me the facts in order to explain the difference between our church and the Utah church? If some of the sisters would make her acquaintance and have her attend meetings I would be so glad. They are building and may move. Please go soon.

Some time ago, after I wrote to Herald and spoke of the Christian Science belief, I received a letter from a person, a man I suppose from the handwriting, who was very much offended at what I said. He says if I want to have a letter published to see that I do not misrepresent them, but give all they have said in full and not pick out a little here and there to comment on. And further says, "Don't take unfair means, for mind, your enemies will be willing to give both sides. I do not want to go to an enemy to get justice done me."

Now, I am sorry they think I am an enemy to them for I am not. I have friends who are Christian Scientists. I had made a study years ago of Walthamism, spiritualism, and allied sciences, and came near being deceived by them before I came into this church. There is a law governing everything. I have sought to find where the dividing line was between the full gospel as taught by Jesus and his disciples and other forms accepting some and rejecting other parts. I believed the Bible and saw that in Moses' time they had a power not of God that performed miracles, Simon the sorcerer, witch of Endor, and others. "And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming: even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."—2 Thessalonians 2:8-12.

I believe the Bible when it says Jesus was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world; that he shed his blood for us and without the shedding of blood is no remission of sin. The plan of salvation is so plain that I was looking for the pattern before I came into the church. I felt like speaking of it to the Saints. Satan will work harder as the time approaches to the end and there will be many trials and temptations, but we have the blessed promise that the Lord will never leave nor forsake those who put their trust in him, and will not suffer us to be tempted above what we are able to bear, but God will have a tried people.

Pray for us that we may be faithful and fill the little niche God has assigned us, and that he will in his own good time gather us home to Zion.

The person who wrote to me signed the initials K. M. J. It was postmarked, Peoria, Illinois. If he will write to me, I will answer and show him that I am not an enemy but a friend. Your sister in hope of eternal life,

MRS. EPHIE J. McCULLOUGH.

LIVONIA, Missouri, March 20, 1906.

Dear Herald: Mother and I were baptized into the church October 23, 1905, by Bro. Tanner, and were confirmed under the hands of Brn. J. A. Tanner and W. S. Macrae. There are just three other members besides us that we know of and there is no church any nearer than Polok. We do not get to hear the gospel preached only twice a year and sometimes only once. Will all of the Saints pray that we may gain in number and strength in this neighborhood? I am greatly pleased with the latter-day work, and I feel that I have been blessed in it. We read the Zion's Ensign and the Herald, and feel that we could hardly get along without them.

ANNA JOHNSON.

GRAVELEY, Arkansas, March 30, 1906.

Dear Herald: I wish to correspond with some of the Saints in St. Louis, as I desire some information and wish some would write to me. The work is very dull here. We have the Campbellites to contend with. I have distributed tracts all over the surrounding country and have created some interest.

Yours for Christ,

C. C. CHISMAN.
Murray, Kentucky, March 21, 1906.

Editors Herald: I am still in the faith and never felt more determined to do my duty than I do now. I find a great deal of work to be done in this country of late, but I have come to the conclusion that the Lord does not want me to do all the work I can see ought to be done, so I shall content myself with doing just my part of it and leave the rest with him and others that he may choose to do that work. It is often said by some that they may choose to do more than they can, leaving the impression that God was requiring them to do all the work they could see ought to be done. Now I never have read in any of the three books where Christ ever complained of finding more work than he could do; neither do we read of any of the servants of God in other times complaining of finding so much that they could not do it. It is true the harvest was great and the laborers were few and they were commanded to pray the Lord to send more laborers into his vineyard, but nothing said about more work than they could do. They were willing to do all they could and that was all that was required of them.

I am glad to say the chances were never better for work in this district than at present. There is no trouble in getting a place to preach and a crowd to preach to. I was elected at the last conference to preside over this district the next year and take this way of asking all the officers in the Kentucky and Tennessee District to assist me in the building up of the work in this district. I do not want to impress this upon you, but only that you should give me a vote of confidence, that on you depends largely the care of the branches. You are expected to labor in and around the branches under the direction of the district president. I want to meet with all the local officers as soon as I can to consult with you concerning the present year’s work. I hope you will do all you can in the way of Sunday-school work. Also see that the church meets often in prayer-meeting. I want all that can do so to hold meetings every Sunday. Do not think it is the duty of the traveling ministry to spend all their time laboring in the branches. You are to take oversight of the branches, to feed the flock to which the Holy Ghost has made you overseer. I hope you will all come to the front of the battle and work manfully for the advancement of the work in this district. I will try to arrange with the missionaries to assist you some during the year. I do not want the missionaries to think I am dictating to them, as I shall leave that altogether to the one in charge of the mission. I simply want to say I will confer with the missionary in charge when it becomes necessary for some or all of the missionaries laboring in the district to spend any time in the branches. I do this that you may know that we do not aim to keep you from your fields of labor in new places, and it will relieve you from traveling around in the same old ruts as has so often been done.

I would advise all the local force to study the word, that you may be able to feed the Saints on the bread of life, for how can you feed the Saints if you do not first eat of that bread yourselves? I have known Saints, even elders, who were more anxious to investigate other books—books that taught another gospel—than they were to investigate the three books that the Lord says shall govern the church. I have in mind some who are out representing the church who have never posted themselves much on the books that are accepted by the church, and when they have come in contact with some new or strange doctrine that is being preached in this country of late they get their literature and post themselves up on that doctrine and finally conclude the new doctrine is better than what they have, and so get weak in the faith of the Latter Day Saints. It is all right to investigate all kinds of doctrine, but let me suggest to you, brethren, first investigate the doctrine of the Latter Day Saints, contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. Then you will not be so easily carried about by every wind of doctrine and the craftiness of men.

It seems strange to me to hear Saints stand up and tell the people that they know this latter-day work is the work of God, and then turn right around and say, “I stand open for conviction. If anybody has anything better I am willing to lay this down and accept theirs.” We should be careful to think before we speak. It has been said of me, and truly too, that I am too quick to speak up, but will try to avoid such serious mistakes.

Let us all strive to represent Christ in our lives. Hoping that the Lord may ever direct his people, and that we may soon come to a unity of the faith and a knowledge of the truth, I am, as ever, a friend to truth and fair play.

C. L. Snow.

Editors Herald: I have never for a moment regretted the step I took on the fourth day of June, 1905. I was baptized by Elder Amos H. Higdon, and confirmed by Bro. Isaac M. Smith. Bro. F. M. Slover preached the first Latter Day Saint sermon I heard. I thought, How much more of the Bible and more plainly he preached than any other sermon I had ever heard.

I am young in this great work, and I want all the Saints to pray for me, that my faith may increase, and that I may learn more of this restored gospel.

Bro. R. T. Walters and Bro. Mannering were here and held a series of meeting. We had good crowds and good interest. They baptized six, one being my brother, Isaac Goodin. I was so glad when I saw him buried in Christ in baptism. The Saints organized a Sunday-school at Bellair, March 25, 1906, and we will have Sunday-school Sunday, for the first time.

I will relate a dream that I had on May 28, a week before I was baptized, and I do believe that that dream has meaning. I dreamed that Sr. Mary Ferguson and mother and I were at some place, and all at once Sr. Ferguson went straight up. Mother thought that she would go also. They got up all right, and never had a bit of trouble.

I thought that I would go also. But the way was so rocky and steep that I could hardly get up where they were, but I kept on trying until I got up to the top. Then I could feel myself falling, and I could look down and see that if I did fall, I would be dashed to pieces. Then I thought that I never could get to the top again. I looked up and saw mother. I asked her to help me. She said she could not but for me to let loose with one foot, and take hold with the other. I did so and got up all right. I could see Sr. Ferguson, mother, and others enjoying themselves, but I felt slighted. It seems to me that we will have to do some things for ourselves, and not depend on others to do all. For we can not save one another’s souls.

If Bro. Amos T. Higdon sees this letter I wish that he would send me a certificate of baptism as I never got any. Pray for me that I may ever be faithful, I remain,

Your sister in the one faith,

MERTIE GOODWIN.

Dear Herald: As there has been so much written of late in regard to the spirit of fatherhood, it is sent to every man and woman born into the world and teaches them to know good from evil, commending them when they do right and condemning them and making them feel guilty and ashamed when they do wrong; teaching them of sin and of righteousness and of a judgment to come. It comes to all men regardless of time, place, or environment, but its work is outside the church.

1. The Spirit of God is the spirit of fatherhood; it is sent to every man and woman born into the world and teaches them to know good from evil, commending them when they do right and condemning them and making them feel guilty and ashamed when they do wrong; teaching them of sin and of righteousness and of a judgment to come. It comes to all men regardless of time, place, or environment, but its work is outside the church.

2. The Spirit of Christ is the spirit of sonship, or reconciliation. It intercedes with God for man, and pleads with man, that he be reconciled to God, his Father, pleading by pointing out to them all the blessings. God gives to the just and unjust alike. Hence, they must receive the Spirit of Christ—sonship.
or reconciliation—before they are proper subjects of the kingdom of God, but its work is outside the church. Then when they are born into the church by baptism comes the birth of the Holy Ghost, the spirit of citizenship in the kingdom of God. Its work is to the church exclusively, for it guides them into all truth and is that Spirit that is the testimony of Jesus—by which, and only by which, men can know that Jesus is the Christ. It brings them into perfect harmony with God if they heed its teachings at all times. Two will live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God. It will perfect their citizenship by obedience to the spirit of citizenship. They are one in perception and teaching of truth, but otherwise are as distinct as the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost of the Godhead. They are the spirit of each person of the Godhead and each one has distinctly different work to perform.

Your brother in Christ,

D. S. BAUGHMAN.

Dear Herald: I have been reading over again Bro. Gilbert's article, "We must gather to Zion," in HERALD of January 17. What a grand piece it is! Oh, how it makes my heart rejoice and fills me with a desire and a willingness to lay my all on the altar of such a loving Father, who has so wisely provided for his children and is willing to take every one of us into partnership with him to establish Zion! Dear Saints, are we willing to enter into that partnership? If not, why not? He has promised us many blessings in this life, and in the next celestial glory—what more can he say or do? Will all the dear Saints get a HERALD and read Bro Gilbert's article, especially on page 63 where he says, "What would be the results if every member should give to the redemption fund even twenty-five cents a week? It would amount to fifty thousand dollars each month. In twenty months one million dollars." Only think, Saints, what we could do if we would make up our minds to do it. How many of the Saints will join with me and give one quarter of a dollar per week for the redemption of Zion? It may be a little hard sometimes but what would that little hardship be compared with what Christ endured for us? If some can not give twenty-five cents give what you can—only give something. Remember the widow's mite. We have got to make sacrifices for this work if we ever expect to receive any reward, because God has said so; and the sooner we humble ourselves and do so the more of the Spirit we will enjoy and the more of the Spirit we enjoy the better we can prepare to gather to Zion. Oh, there is something that fills my soul with delight when I read or think what a blessed time we shall have with the pure in heart in Zion! Yes, each will love his neighbor as himself. Dear Saints, do join with me at once and see what we can do. We only need unity in this and we would be surprised at the results.

I have been urged on by the good Spirit to pen these few thoughts and think good will come of it. If it does, to God will belong all the praise, for I have put them away several times thinking I would not send it to the HERALD; then again I would feel under condemnation in not sending.

Extracts from Letters.

J. F. Curtis, Independence, Missouri: "We moved here from near Bellair, Illinois, last December and are very much pleased with our new home in Independence. We enjoy the association of the faithful Saints, and the Sunday-school and church privileges, which we were deprived of to a great extent at Bellair. We enjoy reading the HERALD and hope its pages will be filled with good conference news for a few weeks."

General Conference
APRIL 10.

Morning prayer-service in charge of George W. Blair and F. M. Weld.

Preaching at eleven o'clock by D. A. Anderson assisted by L. G. Holloway.

Assembly called to order promptly at two o'clock; President F. M. Smith in the chair. Hymn No. 64 sung, prayer by A. H. Smith. Report of the committee appointed to draft resolutions reporting the services of the retiring Church Recorder was read, as follows:

To the Presidency and General Conference Assembled: We your committee appointed to draft testimonial of appreciation on the retirement of Henry A. Stebbins, beg leave to report as follows:

TESTIMONIAL OF GRATEFUL APPRECIATION.

To Elder Henry A. Stebbins Upon His Retiring from the Office of Recorder of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints:

Beloved Brother: In granting your request for release from official service as its Recorder, the church desires to formally express its appreciation of the faithfulness that has characterized your thirty-two years of labor in said capacity, whereby a system and a degree of perfection thereunder has been acquired in the records deserving of gratitude and admiration. Upon the lines of those valued books prepared by you we see the evidence of care and efficiency clearly detailed, and between those lines we see as unmistakable evidences of devotion, of patience, and of love. Hence this testimonial from the body you have thus so well served is offered with a prayer that your future days and labor, in whatever capacity employed, may be equally fruitful to the church’s good and to the Master’s praise.

R. Etzenhouser, Duncan Campbell, T. W. Chatburn, Committee.

April 10, 1906.

The report was adopted unanimously.

Reports from the Second Quorum of Seventy and Fifth Quorum of Elders were read.

Report from the trustees of Graceland College was read in which it was stated that the running expenses have been fully paid, leaving a small balance of cash on hand.

The First Presidency’s report was read. List of officio members read.

A communication from the delegates of the Pittsburg District authorized by their district to bring before the General Conference the question as to who should preside over district conferences, was referred to the First Presidency to report to this body.
Report from the First Quorum of Seventy regarding the H. L. Holt matter referred to it was read. A motion that in case the defendant was not satisfied with this report he be privileged to appeal to the High Council of the church prevailed.

A communication from the Israelite House of David, etc., asking that they be given one or two sessions in which to discuss the differences of faith with one of our representatives was read and referred to the missionaries in charge of Missouri and Michigan, that they take action, with the recommendation that if the discussion takes place here, the discussion of the same questions shall take place before the society of this people at Benton Harbor, Michigan, also.

By request W. W. Smith, A. B. Phillips, L. E. Hills, and other Book of Mormon specialists were appointed to hold a Book of Mormon service Wednesday evening at a quarter of eight.

President Joseph Smith stated that although the High Council was convened early, they had not succeeded in disposing of all the cases brought before them up to this time, and as a consequence there had not been as yet the opportunity desired to meet with the other quorums. In addition he made the following statement:

One morning after waking, before I left for the conference, I passed a period of three hours, and I never expect to be happier or more contented in the Spirit than I was during that three hours. Certain matters were presented to me, and among them, and principally, was this: We appear before the world as advocates for what are called signs of the gospel, the gospel signs, the accompaniments of the gospel economy as instituted by the Christ. A great deal of comment has passed among our elders, and among our membership, very largely, in our large branches, as to why it is that there are not more persons healed by the administration of the oil and the laying on of hands than there are. My observation leads me to the conclusion that there are a great many more healings occur than are taken notice of, or than we are given credit for, while there are a great many that are lost as a matter of course.

The thought which was presented to me was this: that we ought as a people to take this kind of a step, to establish here—and I hope these Independence people will not go wild over it, because I saw it, and it was presented to me—what might be called a sanitarium or a hospital—call it whatever word you like—that shall be under the supervision of some earnest, upright, and spiritual-minded officer of the church; and that this sanitarium shall be a place where our sick who may not be properly treated at their homes may be treated by the laying on of hands, by the nursing as provided for under the law, and by such careful treatment as medical knowledge within the province of our own membership may give, and thus see whether or not we may try the spiritual forces, for which we have been so long contending, and at last put our hands and our sacred honors in juxtaposition and say to the world, We are willing that it shall be given a trial, an open trial. And I was assured, in that three hours of spiritual exaltation, that there would be a fulfillment of the prophecy that the faces of Jacob's children shall not wax pale.

To me this is one of the things that shall mark the hastening-time. And we surely are sufficiently strong to give this matter our careful consideration. Nothing venture, nothing have. If we do not put ourselves to the front, and make up our minds in this regard, we will be struggling along for a while yet. But it must come sooner or later. I may not live to see it. I hope I may. But to be honest with you, I never came nearer being thoroughly discouraged as to this temporal life than I did this last winter. I hope never to be put to such a trial again. I suppose it may be good discipline, and it may be a wise one. That is beyond my province to say. I suppose no rogue ever took the whip with a real sense of its justice; and I may not have taken this affliction with the proper consideration of a sense of its justness.

What we want now is for the present. I present this thought to you as having been presented to me in the Spirit for the consideration of this conference. I give it to you now in this early time. I had hoped that we would get through rapidly; that nothing would occur that would hold us together beyond a certain period. But if we can do something, and do it cheerfully, I believe the good Lord stands ready to help our elders and our nurses and our physicians that may have given this matter thought and consideration, and who are ready to devote their lives and their labors in an institution of this kind.

We have a home for the extreme indigent, and we have a school for our children, for those of us that choose to make use of it. The college has had a hard struggle, and unfortunately it has met with some opposition that it seems to me to have been very unkind and very ungenerous; and that is, when speaking of it, a contemptuous shrug of the shoulder, or an ironical smile barely escaping a sneer. This ought not to have occurred after what had been done in reference to it. It is unfair and unkind, and we never can have a proper degree of confidence with each other when we as quorums, or we as individuals even, disparage the efforts of our contemporaneous brethren, whether in the majority or minority, by acts of that kind.

It is unbecoming of a minister to speak derogatorily of the fellow men in the field. And it is equally so to find fault with the men of the quorums over that which they do. If they do not that which is right there is the constitutional method of approaching them. This ought to be preferred instead of using the other.

I hope that you will take this matter under advisement, and I do not object to your praying over it. I fully believe that to many of you there will come a degree of manifestation that will satisfy you in this regard.

Moved that this matter referred to by the President be referred to the joint council, the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric for consideration and report. Carried.

Preaching in the evening by R. C. Russell assisted by E. Rannie.

APRIL 11.

Morning prayer-service in charge of G. E. Har­rington and W. A. McDowell. Preaching at eleven o'clock by J. W. Peterson assisted by J. W. Gilbert. Business at the usual hour, President Joseph Smith in the chair. Hymn No. 110 was sung; prayer by John Kaler.

Daughters of Zion presented the following:

By personal observation and inquiry, the Daughters of Zion are convinced that the present condition of affairs indicate the necessity for a home for children. There are in the church and in the world to-day children without parents, children who have lost one parent, children who have been deserted by parents, and children of unfortunate parentage, who are appealing to us for a home.

As a result of these observations the Daughters of Zion present the inclosed petition for a home, recognizing the right of the church proper to establish and determine the working details of such a home—whether it shall be a home-finding stitution, an industrial home, a permanent home, or a temporary home.
For the past two years the Daughters of Zion have given special attention to this work, and with the counsel and cooperation of the Bishop have succeeded in securing about seven hundred dollars in cash as a nucleus for this purpose. In accordance with this action the Daughters of Zion present the following petition:
To the Latter Day Saint Church in Conference Assembled:
We, the Daughters of Zion in convention assembled do hereby petition the church to establish a home for children, and to sanction the efforts of the Daughters of Zion in its behalf.

MRS. B. C. SMITH,
DORA YOUNG,

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, April 11, 1906.
This report was referred to the joint council to whom was referred the matter of a sanitarium, for report.
Reports from the Board of Auditors, First Quorum of Seventy, and Third Quorum of Seventy were read and received.
A communication was received from the Eastern Michigan District asking the conference to decide as to the constitutionality of a resolution adopted by that district to the effect that a failure of any of the priesthood to report to the district conference once a year would forfeit their license. It was moved that the resolution adopted by the Eastern Michigan conference at Port Huron, 1903, be the opinion of this conference. The motion was lost.
The proposed amendments to the Articles of Association as published in HERALD for January 17 were taken up and discussed. Vote being called it stood 168 for, 92 against. Since it required two thirds majority to carry, the motion to amend was lost.
A motion to reconsider was also lost.
I. W. Allender and R. M. Elvin were nominated and chosen to succeed themselves on the Board of Trustees of Graceland College.
Albert Carmichael was chosen to succeed himself on the Board of Auditors.
It was moved and carried that College Day be changed from the first Sunday in September to the first Sunday in October.
A motion to the effect that the press committee use their influence with the reporters for the Kansas City dailies to cease using the terms Mormon conference, Mormon Prophet, etc., and use instead the proper name of the church in their reports, was carried unanimously.

of Priests and the Second Quorum of Elders.
A newly organized quorum of elders, the Eighth, reported the effecting of their organization by G. T.
Griffiths and U. W. Greene. L. M. McFadden was chosen president of the quorum, H. W. Hattemy first counselor and E. P. Cook second counselor; S. A.
Burgess secretary.
The joint council to whom was referred the matter of the hospital or sanitarium reported as follows:

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, April 12, 1906.
To the General Conference: At the joint council of the First Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric held this morning, the following action was had on the matter referred to this council by action of the conference on April 10:
Whereas, The president has advised the conference that light from God has been received, or is available, bearing, among other things, upon the establishment of an institution for the care of the sick, and Whereas, We look with favor upon such a proposition and are desirous of moving in harmony with the will of God regarding it,
Resolved, That we welcome the intimation referred to, and present ourselves before the Lord in fasting and prayer, that through the Prophet he may favor us with instructions which may relate to this and other matters wherein the church's present need is revealed.
Resolved, That we request the President to direct us as to time and manner of carrying out the above, and the conference be asked to join in what exercises may be appointed.
Respectfully submitted,
FREDERICK M. SMITH,
FREDERICK A. SMITH,
Secretaries of Council.
The above was unanimously adopted.
By motion Friday afternoon, the 13th, at fifteen minutes past two in the afternoon, was fixed as the time limit for the introduction of new business.
President Joseph Smith, chairman of the committee, reported that the Committee on Revision of Church History had had nothing to do, therefore nothing to report.
The report was adopted and the committee continued.
Bishop E. L. Kelley, chairman of the committee, reported that the Committee on Incorporation in Canada had not been in a situtation the past year so that they could take the matter up and look into it on account of Bro. Hilliard being detained at home.
The report was received and committee continued.
Patriarch A. H. Smith, chairman of the committee, reported that the committee to confer with the Church of Christ adjourned at their last meeting subject to the call of the chairman of the committee and Elder Hill of the Church of Christ. There has been no conference between the Chairman and Elder Hill, and no call has been made for the meeting of the committee.

Report was received and committee continued.

No objection being made the Church Secretary was permitted to add to his report that the present rate to the conference was concurred in by the Eastern Canadian Passenger Association territory, running from southwestern Ontario up to Montreal, New Brunswick.

Bro. Charles Derry offered his resignation as a member of the Committee on Revision of Church History. It was accepted, and a vote of thanks tendered for his services upon the committee in the past.

F. M. Smith was chosen to fill the vacancy.

The following was moved and seconded:

Whereas, Many of the Saints desire to know the views of the Presidency relative to secret, oath-bound societies, and

Whereas, Their ideas were clearly defined in an editorial in the SAINTS' HERALD for June 15, 1889, therefore be it

Resolved, That this conference request said editorial republished in SAINTS' HERALD before May 15, 1906.

Moved to amend by adding, "and that the editorial of 1906 upon the same matter be published in connection therewith; and that thereafter we have no more publication upon the question through the HERALD."

Moved to amend the amendment by striking out the last clause, "and that thereafter we have no more," etc.

A motion to lay the whole matter on the table prevailed by a vote of 212 to 99.

The following was moved and seconded:

Whereas, One of the most notable events in the history of the missionary work is that of President R. C. Evans and others recently in Toronto, Canada, and

Whereas, The same did not appear in the Historian's report to this conference, therefore

Resolved, That this body order it embodied in this report.

The Historian stated that his report did not include events occurring after the end of the year 1905, and that an account of this matter would rightly come in next year's report.

A motion to lay on the table prevailed.

President R. C. Evans disavowed any knowledge of such a resolution to be offered, and thought the reason for it was that the framers thought the matter had been overlooked, as similar work performed at the same place by the same person last year was omitted, as other things.

The Historian stated that there was no intention of overlooking anything, and if it was overlooked it would be incorporated gladly when his attention was called to it.

The following resolution was introduced:

Inasmuch as the church has declared itself with reference to the law of consecration, and the traveling elders are sent out to teach the law by example as well as by precept, therefore be it

Resolved, That hereafter no elder be given an appointment who has not made an inventory to the Bishop.

Moved and seconded.

A motion to lay on the table prevailed.

By request, the Presidency appointed another meeting for the continuing of the Book of Mormon topics to be held in the basement Thursday evening, F. M. Sheehy in charge.

A request that an evening be set apart for a symphony on the best methods of street-preaching was granted, and the appointment made for Friday evening, in the basement, F. A. Russell and O. H. Bailey in charge.

President Joseph Smith made the following statement:

You have noticed that the report from the joint council this morning provides that there shall be time and manner presented in which there may be a uniform action asking for light in regard to this contemplated sanitarium, and in connection therewith a children's home. Now, if the body present, and the different quorums and councils that are to meet on the morrow, will spend the hour between nine and ten o'clock in prayer, fasting, we will have discharged our duty at all events, and leave the matter in the hands of Him who doeth all things well.

Preaching in the evening by Paul M. Hansen assisted by E. B. Morgan.

APRIL 13.

Morning prayer-service in charge of A. H. Moore and A. S. Cochran.

Preaching in the forenoon by C. E. Crumley assisted by D. L. Morgan.

Business-session called to order at about five minutes after two in the afternoon with President R. C. Evans in the chair. Prayer by F. A. Smith.

Additional report was read from the Daughters of Zion. The outlook for the society seems better than ever before, and they are hopeful for a successful year. They report seven hundred and sixty dollars in the children's home fund. Members of the advisory board for the coming year are; Mrs. B. C. Smith, Mrs. Callie B. Stebbins, Mrs. F. M. Smith, Miss Dora Young, Mrs. T. A. Hougas, and Mrs. M. H. Hulmes treasurer.

First Quorum of Priests reported the resignation of their president, J. J. Luff. They recommended for ordination as president J. W. Gunsolley, and those whom he had selected as first counselor, A. L. Lightfoot, and second counselor Jesse A. Roberts. The request was granted.

Additional report was received from the First Quorum of Elders, also reports from the Third and Fourth Quorums of Elders.

The committee to whom was referred the petition from the Northern Michigan District asking for division of the district reported, recommending that it be divided into three districts, naming boundaries of each. The report was adopted.

SOME OBJECTIONS TO THE BOOK OF MORMON.
CONSIDERED IN THE LIGHT OF HISTORIC AND SCIENTIFIC FACTS.

When Lehi and family journeyed from Jerusalem to the Indian Ocean through Arabia, it is urged that the Book of Mormon makes huge blunders in its record of the itinerary. Page 4, paragraph 14, states: “And it came to pass that when he had traveled three days in the wilderness, he pitched his tent in a valley by the side of a river of water. . . . he called the name of the river Laman, and it emptied into the Red Sea; and the valley was in the borders near the mouth thereof.” The objector says: “There is no river emptying into the Red Sea from the eastern or Arabian side; Arabia being a desert, has no river system.” While Arabia is a desert region, it has a large number of dried-up watercourses. Instead of a river system, there is a system of wadys—great receptacles for the water brought down by the mountains. There is a possibility that the rivers then running through the country may have sunken and disappeared by upheaval. The Bible Dictionary says: “The land at the head of the gulf has arisen. The sea has receded gradually since [that time]. The sea has receded many miles.” Besides, hear what the encyclopedia says: “Of the rivers of Arabia, none are navigable; few are perennial or reach the sea. Some such, however, have been marked by the travelers, Wellsted and W. B. Harris. Glaser would identify the Wady Hund, first traced by Doughty, which traverses the Hijaz and flows into the Red Sea.”—Dictionary of the Bible, vol. 1, p. 132. The New International Encyclopedia says: “The Wady Rumen is the longest river, traversing under different names the entire country from west to east.”—Volume 1, p. 691. This river is in the northern part of Arabia, and about three days’ journey down the Arabian shore of the Red Sea.

Again: In following “the directions of the ball,” the family “came to a place which we called Bountiful because of its much fruit.” (Book of Mormon, p. 36, pars. 17, 18.) “There,” says our opponents, “is a fatal account.” Why is it fatal? “Because Arabia is a desert, a desolate, howling waste; nothing produced.” Well, largely so; but what will you do with the following: “‘Arabia Felix’—the southern coast, —Hadramanta—‘here are found all the fruits of temperate and warm climates, among which the date, the fruit of the palm-tree, is the most common, and is, along with species of grain called dhourra, the staple article of food.”—Encyclopedia Biblical Literature, vol. 1, p. 180. If the above is insufficient, what of the following: “Arabia Felix”—the most southern district of Arabia—“was rich in gems and gold,” (1 Kings 10:10; Ezekiel 27:22) “in spices and odoriferous shrubs and fragrant gums. Among the vegetable products are the manna of commerce, nutmegs, dates, cocoa, banana, sugar-cane, tamarind, coffee, melons, pumpkins, all of which are indigenous, or have grown in the valleys from the earliest ages. With these grow lavender, wormwood, jasmine, and other scented plants, likewise the fig, vine, pomegranate, orange, lemon, quince, plantain, almond, apricot, acacia, caster-oil plant, senna, white lily, aloe, sesamum, all kinds of grain, tobacco, indigo, and different dye-herbs, with numerous sort of fruit and vegetables. To these may be added spicery, balm, myrrh, besides frankincense and many other aromatic gums.”—Imperial Bible Dictionary, vol. 1, p. 112, article “Arabia.”

All of this just north of “Irreantum”—Indian Ocean, —where Lehi and family pitched tent. Is it any wonder they called the name of the place “Bountiful”? And, too, the Mountains of Arabia trend from northwest to southeast, and this would leave the fertile valleys on the borders of the Red Sea, widening out as they approached to Indian Ocean. While residing in this “bountiful” spot Nephi was commanded of the Lord to construct a “ship,” and was given information how to do so. He asked the Lord where he would find the “ore” to make tools to build the ship. Also, Nephi “did go into the mount oft, and prayed unto the Lord.” (Book of Mormon pp. 36, 41.) Here, we are told, “are two fatal blunders.” What are they? “There are neither ‘ore’ nor ‘mountains’ in southern Arabia.” Now, let us see what standard authority has to say: “The elevation of the mountains in the extreme south of the peninsula is estimated at thirteen thousand feet.”—New International Encyclopedia, vol. 1, p. 691. The Britannica says: “Some have been calculated to be five thousand feet in height, and trend from northwest to southeast.”—Page 237. As to the existence of mountains, any one who will look upon the map will find it girdled with mountains on three sides, and as I now look upon the map of Arabia as drawn in Rand, McNally & Co’s. Unrivalled Atlas of the World, I see the name of “Shamah Mountains,” and “Mount Dahura.” This latter mountain is registered “8,000 feet.” These are found skirting the inland shore of Indian Ocean in Hadramanta. Yes, there are mountains in southern Arabia.

Now for the “ore”: “The mountains consist of porphyry, jasper, quartz, sandstone, alabaster, basalt, marble, limestone. The minerals are blue alabaster, agates, cornelia, tourmalines, the emerald, the onyx, gypsum, salt-peter, sulphur, naphtha, asphaltum, iron, lead, and copper. Mines of iron, lead, copper, and rock-salt, are still wrought.”—New American Encyclopedia, vol. 1, p. 738.

“The southern portion of Arabia, the coast land, is low, the interior dry, and broken with ranges of mountains, and hills. . . . The country affords fine horses, camels, wool, dates, gums, and grain. Cop

"Among the minerals of Arabia, may be mentioned iron, copper, lead, coal, basalt, and asphaltum."—International Cyclopedia, vol. 1, article "Arabia."

I guess now, when this evidence is presented, the supposed blunders become harmonious truths, and the objections themselves vanish. We find both mountains and ore on the plat stated by the book as the place where Nephí built the ship.

From the time Jeremiah warns them to get "out of the reach of the king of Babylon," to "dwell deep"—go secretly, unobserved, down the borders of the Red Sea, into the wilderness, down to the place called "Bountiful," all the objections, so far, are swept away by standard authority. We change the nature of the objections just a little. But allow us to state that upon the map of South America, as given in Rand, McNally & Co.’s, Atlas, there is a river flowing down out of the Andes Mountains, into the Amazon, or into a branch which flows into the Amazon, having its origin in that country where Moroni fortified cities to protect against Lamanite invasion, and on the modern map published in 1904 the name of this river is "Morono River," the final letter "i," changed to "o," being the only difference between the name of the man in the Book of Mormon, and the river which has its rise in Ecuador. (See page 94, of the atlas cited.) This discovery led me to wonder if the Utah Mormons had been in South America and changed, or given names. Again, on page 329 of the small edition Book of Mormon paragraph 16 says: "And there were some who died with fevers, which at some seasons of the year were very frequent in the land [Ecuador, Peru, Columbia]; but not so much with fevers because of the excellent qualities of the many plants and roots which God had prepared, to remove the cause of diseases to which men were subject by the nature of the climate." The atlas cited says the traffic in roots, herbs, and drugs is yet carried on in that same country. "The natives gain a subsistence by the sale of sweet herbs, roots, and drugs, and have been known to traverse on foot the immense wilderness east of the Andes to offer their wares in the capitals near the Atlantic coast. The Bolivian forests are the home of the calisaya, and other rich varieties of cinchona plant." These little points "chink in" sometimes, and fill the niche which otherwise would be vacant.

As the practice of engraving, or writing on brass, by the Israelites, has been questioned, and as the Nephite colony claim to have possessed such material both on the Eastern and Western Continents, please allow me to present the following: "The books of Moses are the most ancient, being written between fifteen and sixteen hundred years before Christ. At first men used to write on tables of stone, lead, brass, etc. Afterwards on the films of the papyrus or paper reeds."—Brown’s Dictionary of the Bible, p. 42, article "Book."

"Anciently, men wrote on tablets of stone, lead, wood, and brass, etc. In the days of Ezra, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Zechariah, the form of books was in rolls."—Pronouncing Dictionary of the Bible. Yortson & Virtue, p. 36, article "Book."

"The metals also are mentioned as a material for writing, as lead, brass, gold, and stone. In all ages it has been customary to engrave on metal and other durable material with the view of securing the permanency of the record."—Imperial Dictionary, p. 1108.

In speaking of the Hebrews, Smith says: "They (the Hebrews) were moreover acquainted with the art of engraving on metal and gems. Wood was used on some occasions, but inscriptions, and documents intended to be permanent, were written on tablets of brass."—Smith’s Dictionary of Bible, p. 1081.

"Books of papyrus and of parchment were generally made in one long, narrow piece and wound around a wooden roller just as a wall-map is rolled up. Books of this kind were used by the Greeks and Romans, and by all other ancient peoples, but they also had books made of bronze, and other metals."—Encyclopedia Common Things, article "Book."

The Babylonians practiced the art of writing on brass, and the practice was in vogue about the time Lehi left Jerusalem for "the promised land," 600 B. C. "The writings used in Babylonia from the earliest period down through the times of the Greek supremacy was of the pictorial form, which in course of time became linear. The writing is commonly known as cuneiform—i. e., wedge-shaped. While clay was the ordinary material for writing, for recording commercial transactions, the earliest inscriptions of a votive or commemorative character are on stone and metals—gold, silver, and bronze are employed, and have been found in later times."—International Cyclopedia, p. 318, A. D. 1903.

"The Babylonians and Egyptians traced inscriptions on sheets of wood, ivory, and various metals. . . . For the most important purposes, the laws and edicts, they employed ivory, bronze, and other metals."—New American Cyclopedia, vol. 3, p. 495.

"Books are mentioned as known as early as the days of Job. They were written on skins, linen, and papyrus. Tablets of wood, lead, and brass were also employed, the latter of which was considered most durable."—McClintock and Strong’s Encyclopedia, vol. 1, p. 851.

"The metals are also mentioned as material for ancient writing, such as lead, gold, and brass."—McClintock and Strong’s Supplement Encyclopedia, vol. 2, p. 996.

"The materials of which books have been composed have differed much in different nations, and in different stages of civilization. Plates of copper and stone were anciently employed for this purpose.”—Johnson’s New Universal Encyclopedia, vol. 1, p. 554.

“Various have been the materials and implements used for writing. Moses hewed out of the rock two tables of stone on which the commandments were written. (See Exodus 34:1.) After that the Jews used rolls for their sacred writings. They also engraved writing upon gold plates.”—The Popular and Biblical Encyclopedia, vol. 3, p. 1736.

“Before the invention of paper or other light substances for the record of events, public acts, devo­tions, and other documents were inscribed on bronze. . . . Gold plates were inscribed and placed in foundations under the temples. The exequaturs of consuls among Greeks, and the discharges of the soldiery among the Romans, were inscribed on bronze tables.”—International Encyclopedia, vol. 8, p. 39.

Ought not this to be sufficient to for ever explode the objections to the Book of Mormon? But we can cite many more if necessary. The only code of laws, the first code of laws in the Roman Republic, was “engraved on thick sheets of brass.” (See World’s History and Its Makers, vol. 1, p. 199.) This event occurred 452 B. C.

Having cited so many authorities on ancient writing material, let us ask how such material was preserved. What was the practice of ancient nations in the preservation of their records?

“The materials generally used by the ancients for their books were liable to be easily destroyed by the damp, when hidden in the earth; and in times of war, devastation, and rapacity it was necessary to bury in the earth whatever they wished to preserve from the attacks of fraud and violence. With this view, Jeremiah ordered the writings which he delivered to Baruch to be put in an earthen vessel. [See Jeremiah 32.] In the same manner the ancient Egyptians made use of earthen urns or pots of a proper shape for containing whatever they wanted to inter in the earth, and which without such care would have been soon destroyed. We need not wonder, then, that the prophet Jeremiah should think it necessary to inclose those writings in an earthen pot which were to be buried in Judea, in some place where they might be found without much difficulty on the return of the Jews from captivity.”—Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, p. 255.

This custom of burying records, by the Jews, in Judea, reminds one of the “plates” “hid up” in the earth on Cumorah by their kindred about A. D. 420. The custom seems to be kept alive by their descend­ants around the Great Lakes, and is practiced in modern times. We quote:

“The Ojibway Indians had three depositories for sacred records near the waters of Lake Superior.

Ten of the wisest and most venerable men of the nation dwelt near these and were appointed guardians over them. Fifteen years intervened between the opening of these records. If any vacancies had been caused by death, others were chosen in the spring of the year; and in the month of August these were called to witness the ceremony. As they were opened, all the information respecting them was given. After this the plates were closely exam­ined, and if any had begun to decay, they were taken out, an exact copy was made and placed in its stead. The old one was divided equally among the wise men. It was very highly valued for being deposited; every fiber was sacred, and was considered capable of endowing the possessor with wisdom. These records were written on slate-rock, copper, lead, and the bark of birch-trees. It is claimed they contain the transcript of what the Great Spirit gave the Indians after the flood, which has been transmitted by the hands of wise men to other parts of the country ever since. There is a code of moral laws which the Indians call a ‘pathway made by the Great Spirit.’ They believe a long life will result from obedience thereto. The records contain cer­tain emblems, which transmit the ancient form of worship, and the rules for the dedication to the four spirits who alone are to expound them. In them are re­presented how men lived before death entered the world, and the path he then followed marked out an example for those of the present time.”—Prehistoric America, by Reverend S. B. Peet, vol. 1, p. 244.

The foregoing statements favor the idea of an Asiatic origin. Eastern nations of ancient date buried their important records, and the custom was followed on the Western domain. The efforts to-day by the opposers of the Book of Mormon are to discon­nect the Western peoples of antiquity from an Eastern or Israelitish origin, but so far the evidence is against this theory ethnologically, sociologically, and in almost all points essential to the success of such a theory.

The American Antiquarian, volume 27, page 289, A. D. 1905, contains an array of facts, a part of which we insert. The editor, Mr. S. B. Peet, is an able antiquarian, and author of two volumes on the Mound-builders. But the article cited is by H. L. Stoddard under the title “Phallic symbols in America.” In endeavoring to connect the prehis­toric inhabitants of America with Asiatic nations, he says:

“The principal design of the yoni [a symbol adorn­ing the stones over the portals of the ancient temples of Yucatan and Peru.—Scott] was one that was known under the name asherah, which is translated and referred to in the Bible as the ‘grove’ or ‘groves.’ This image was a symbol of Ashtoreth, or the union of Baal and Ashtoreth, the male and female procreate deities of the Assyrians, and is equivalent to Chemosch, Moloch, Nana, and Astarte the abominations of the Zidonians, Amorites, Moabites, and Hittites after which Solomon strayed off. This symbol was regarded preeminently as the 'door of life.' Designs of this image frequently occur in the sculpture of Babylon and Nineveh.” We learn from the Old Testament how intimately the “high places” and “high hills” were associated with the devotions of apostate Israel to this feminine deity. I quote one of the most eminent authorities, Theopholus G. Pinches, F. R. A. S., Department of Egyptian and Assyrian Antiquities, British Museum, London. He says: “The Phcenicians in common with the Canaanites, Philistines, Moabites, Edomites, and Amorites, worshiped Baal and Ashteroth as their principal deities. The meaning of Baal Aram [“Baal” in Baal-ze-bub] is ‘lord’ and designated the sun. The Bible names are ‘Moloch’ and ‘Milcom,’ both meaning king. Baal, like Ashtoreth, was worshiped under many different forms, each of which could be regarded as a different deity, as was also the case with Akkadai polytheism of Babylonia and Assyria. This worship with that of Ashtarte or Ashtoreth, constantly led Israel astray, partly on account of their speaking their language, partly because of living in continual communication with those who practiced it. This worship had, moreover, all the seductions of a sensual nature worship. Baal is called in the inscriptions Baal Solaris—sun-god—and regarded as chief. Though fundamentally the same as the Babylonian Bel merodach, the sun-god, the worship differed from that of Bel in being of a far grosser nature; hence the severe punishment meted out to those who had joined in the worship of Baal Peor.”

Yes, “Israel joined himself unto Baal Peor: and the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel,” and Moses was commanded to “take all the heads of the people—the leaders in this abomination—and hang them up before the Lord against the sun.” (Numbers 25:2, 3, 4.) And in Deuteronomy 4:3 Moses says: “Your eyes have seen what the Lord did because of Baal Peor; for all the men that followed Baal Peor, the Lord thy God hath destroyed them from among you.” When Israel apostatized on the Eastern Continent, they went into idolatry, worshiping the picture of the “sun toward the east.” They did the same on the Western Continent as the numerous sun-symbols on the exhumed temples abundantly show. Besides Moloch, the sun-god was called “Malcom” as Jeremiah 49:1-3 reads in the marginal.

In the Twentieth Annual Report, Bureau of Ethnology, is the account of the finding of a sun-dial in Menard’s Mound in Arkansas. The Report says: “On the reverse side of the dial is a perfect analogy of the yoni emblem depicted upon a water-bottle. The sun-dial is divided into thirty-six divisions of ten degrees each, as Ahaz’s sun-dial, ten degrees being spoken of five times.” Ahaz was a worshiper of high hills, high places. His sun-dial is the first one there is any record of in the history of the world. The American dial must necessarily be of an age 570 B. C., as “hours” are not spoken of prior to Daniel’s captivity. The first hint of the word hour in the Bible, is in Daniel 3:6. It is reasonable then to suppose that the Jews borrowed this mode of dividing time from the Chaldeans. Mr. Stoddard continues:

“It appears, however, that some advancement toward a more regular and artificial division was made before the captivity, as such an instrument as the sun-dial appears to have been used first at Babylon for royal service and convenience, and was carefully preserved for many years. Ahaz reigned 742 B. C. He died 713 B. C. Isaiah turned the shadow back ten degrees on Ahaz’s dial 713 B. C. [2 Kings 16:20.] It is an evident fact that the stone dial (found in Arkansas) was wrought before the division of time into hours; hence it is a replication of Ahaz’s sun-dial or else the original. The dial antedated the time ‘hours’ first began to be used, inasmuch as three hundred and sixty degrees are subdivided decimally.”

Hours are not spoken of previous to 570 B. C., and as Ahaz’s sun-dial was divided into divisions of ten degrees each, the correlation is complete. A more eloquent, though mute, witness could not be found than the dial found in Arkansas. It is not possible to ascertain the time on the American dial by any other system than the Ahaz sun-dial system. Question, How did it find the American continent?

“Dial” is an instrument for the measuring of time by the shadow of the sun. They are not mentioned before the days of Ahaz, nor “hours” before Daniel’s captivity in Babylon. The emblem (yoni) on the reverse side of this dial,—a symbol of the sun-god worshiped on “high hills,” would stamp it as being Israelitish, for the Hebrews supposed that sacred rites performed on elevated places were peculiarly acceptable to the Deity, and they were accustomed to offer sacrifices upon mountains and hills, both to idols and to God (see 1 Kings 3:4), and to build chapels there (see 2 Kings 17-29.) And so tenacious of this ancient custom were the Jews, that even after the building of Solomon’s temple, notwithstanding the express law in Deuteronomy 12, they continued to erect such chapels on the mountains around Jerusalem, and to offer sacrifices in them.

When Israel departed from God, they constructed images to worship: “And they left all the commandments of the Lord their God, and made them molten images, and worshiped all the host of heaven and served Baal. And they caused their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire and used diversions and enchantments.”—2 Kings 17:16, 17.
Again, “For he [Manasseh] built again the palaces, and reared up altars for Baalim, and worshiped all the host of heaven, and served them. And he built altars for all the host of heaven in the two courts of the Lord’s house.”—2 Chronicles 33:6.

On page 186 of Ancient America, Mr. Baldwin says: “There was sun-worship in America, and the ceremonies existed in some places in the time of Cortez. Humboldt was sure these symbols came to America from the Old World. But whether we adopt his explanation or some other, the traditions on both sides of the Atlantic are without meaning unless it be admitted that there was communication between the two continents in times of which we have no history.”

The pyramidal form of the mounds scattered all over Central and South America, also Mexico, show the “high places” where worship was offered to the sun-god. Professor Leon, head of the section of anthropoogy and ethnology of the National Museum of Mexico, says: “As a rule every four of the pyramids surround a court.” Also, “All the pyramids were found to be quadrangular, and to have been built with especial reference to the cardinal points.” (Records of the Past, vol. 2, p. 224. A. D. 1903.) The Temple of the Sun at Cuzco, Peru, is in evidence. It was the most resplendent with gold and ornaments of all the public edifices of Peru. “The most striking object in the interior was a huge golden sun, represented by a figure of the human face, surrounded with rays. This was so placed as to receive the first beams of the rising sun.”—Brownell, Indian Races, p. 603. Of the temple in Mexico, which was destroyed in the time of Cortez, the same authority says: “The colossal figures of the sun and moon, covered with plates of gold, the hideous stone of sacrifice, and the terrible sound of the great war-drums, are mingled in the description given by early chroniclers.”—Page 51. Again, page 124, relating the discoveries in San Salvador: “The first is a temple consecrated to the sun, chiefly excavated in the solid rock, and having its entrance toward the east. On the Archway of Entrance are carved representations of the sun and moon.”

How this seems to link the Israelites on the Eastern Continent with these people on the Western. Listen: “Then, said he, turn thee yet again and thou shalt see greater abominations than these. And behold, at the door of the temple of the Lord, there were about five and twenty men, with their backs toward the temple, and their faces toward the east; and they worshiped the sun toward the east.”—Ezekiel 8:15, 16. “And he [Josiah] put down them that burned incense unto Baal, to the sun, and to the moon, to the planets, and to all the host of heaven.”—2 Kings 23:5.

Note the sun-worship of both these Israelites branches—the attitude was “toward the east.” The characteristics appear in five points: 1, attitude of worship; 2, molten images of sun, moon, and heavenly host, the object of worship; 3, the building of “high places”; 4, setting up idols; 5, burning of incense, mingled with incantations, enchantments, etc. The idols were not only constructed of stone, but “finely wrought gold.” Many of the idols of gold finally reached the Jews’ banking houses, and were converted into coin. Israel, when in darkness, adopted the worship of the idolatrous nations and “set up” the same system in America. For instance, “Ammon” is represented on the hieroglyphic monuments of Egypt as the deity, and sits on a throne holding the symbol of life and power, and wearing a crown with a peculiar ornament of two feathers and a band falling behind and hanging down to his feet. Note the comparison: “In Central America, the Inca symbolized the sun. He had a peculiar head-dress with two feathers upright.” “Ammon” equals “Ra,” equals “Osiris,” equals the “sun,” hence the analogy between “Ammon” and the “Inca” is, to say the least, strikingly clear, and can not be accidental. Doctor Latouche Treville in the American Review of Reviews for February, 1904, presents Aztec pictures of their deities and adds: “If one were as skeptical as Voltaire he could not help being astonished at the similarities, and could not believe they were accidental. Ancient Mexican architecture is strongly suggestive of an Asiatic origin. The statuette described in the Antiquities of Tennessee (page 350) and the deities found in Aztec countries, are copies of the idols of the East.” He supplements the above statement with the following: “Mexican folklore proves beyond a doubt that there are oral traditions among the Mexicans in which figured white men in long, white robes, who talked to the people in a language of goodness, and preached unto them peace, self-control, unselfishness, and righteousness.”

The American Anthropologist for 1905, volume 7, page 256, contains the following: “The authorities of Guamanga who wrote the report on Reportamiento Los Rucanas Antamarces, dated January 27, 1586, says: ‘The old Indians say that they have notice from their forefathers that in very remote times, before the Incas ruled them, there came to this country people whom they called viracochas, not many of them; and that the Indians followed them, listening to their speech, and now the Indians say they were saints. In showing this relation to Eastern nations, however, we must keep in view the idolatrous stage on both hemispheres. As to masonry and architecture, the consensus of opinion of scientists seems to rest on the conclusion that it stands related to the Egyptian; a thing denied by the opposers of the Book of Mormon. The People’s Encyclopedia of Universal knowledge, volume 1, page 484, states: ‘‘Copan,’ a ruined city of Honduras on the borders of Gautamala, in Central America; the remains extend two miles along the river and comprise a temple six hundred and twenty-four feet in length. Various pyramidal structures and sculptured idols similar to those of Egypt."

The Earth and Its Inhabitants, by Elisee Reclus, a native Peruvian, volume 1, page 339, says: ""Cuzco," from the archaeological standpoint the eminence overlooking the city is fully as interesting as the city itself. On the first terrace are seen the ruins of the Campata place, attributed by traditions to Manco Capac, first of the Incas, reputed civilization of the Quichuans. But however this be, the remains present extremely curious architectural features, particularly in their recesses and doorways resembling the pylons of the Egyptians."

Of the great cathedral at Cuzco, the American Antiquarian, volume 25, page 155, quotes E. G. Squier as follows: ""Cuzco is built on acivities more or less abrupt, and the ancient architects were obliged to resort to an elaborate system of terracing. The terraces were faced with walls slightly inclining inwards, of the kind called cyclopean. The monotony of the front is generally broken up by the countersunk niches resembling blind windows. These niches were always a little narrower at the top than at the bottom, as were all the Inca doors and windows resembling the Egyptian style of architecture."

Of the gateway to the cemetery at Tiahuanacara, Squier continues: ""It is a most remarkable monument. This is formed of a block of stone somewhat broken, and defaced on its edges, but originally cut with precision; 13 feet 5 inches long, 7 feet 2 inches in height above ground, and 18 inches thick. Through its center is cut a doorway 4 feet 6 inches high and 2 feet 9 inches wide. Above the doorway as it now stands, on its southeast side or front, are four lines of sculpture in low relief, like the Egyptian plain sculpture, and a central figure immediately over the doorway sculptured in high relief.""—Ibid., p. 63.

Of the ornamentation of walls at Cuzco, S. B. Peet in American Antiquarian, volume 11, pages 220 and 221, says: ""In this there are some remarkable resemblances between the architecture of the New and Old World. We first refer to one peculiarity which has impressed many writers on architecture—the imitation of woodwork which is found on the stone structures. This was first noticed by Ferguson in Assyria. It, however, may be seen in Egypt, and is very common in America."

""At Cuzco the walls are of extremely hard rock, such as diorite, porphyry, and great blocks of brown trachyte, carried from quarries twenty-two miles off. These blocks are carefully squared, and joined together by means of a mortise about one foot deep by one and one half feet in diameter, into which fitted a tenon of nearly the same size hewn out of the upper block. The walls were kept in place by their weight alone, for Squier [L. C., p. 435], after a careful examination, declares that no cement was used."" He adds: ""All modern masonry whether executed in Europe or in America is inferior when compared with that of the ancient capital of the Incas. In certain characteristics this architecture recalls that of the Egyptians.""—Prehistoric America, Nadaillac, p. 411.

""At Chichen Itza, Doctor Le Plongeon discovered under a heap of rubbish twenty-six feet thick, the finest statue of Nahua art now preserved in the museum of Mexico. It is the effigy of Chac-mool—the tiger king—reclining on his back and looking toward the right; the features are quite regular, and the head is adorned with fillets in the Egyptian fashion. The simple majesty of this statue stands in striking contrast to the figures, overcharged with barbaric ornaments, which are met in so many temples of Mexico, Tobasco, and Chiapas.""—The Earth and Its Inhabitants, vol. 2, p. 168, edited by A. H. Keane, B. A., member of council Anthropology Institute, corresponding member Italian and Washington Anthropology Society, author of Asia, etc.

The same author of translation of Elisee Reclus says: ""Southwest of Palenque, about midway on the road to San Cristobal, capital of Chiapas, in an upland valley watered by a western affluent of the Usamacinta, are grouped the houses of Occingo, whose name has been assigned to an ancient city lying five miles further east. By the Indians this place is called Tonila, that is, 'stone houses.' Amongst them was discovered a plaster carving, whose perfectly Egyptian expression greatly surprised Stephens, Catherwood, and Brasseur de Bourbourg. It takes the form of a medallion with large wings spread out above the porch of a palace.""—Ibid., vol. 2, p. 163.

The editor of the American Antiquarian, volume 2, page 215, after comparing the pyramids of the Old World with the New, and describing those at Uxmal, Copan, and other points, writes: ""It would appear from this, that the pyramids in America combine the massiveness and solidity of the Egyptian, the terraced form of the Chaldean, the walled and palace-crowned quality of the Assyrian, and at the same time embodied the carved specimens which resemble the sphinxes of Egypt, and sustained on their summits temples and palaces which remind us of the Median and Persian."" Of the building of walls, and other structures in Colorado, he writes, page 219: ""The masonry of America is in this respect in strong contrast with that of the oriental countries, especially that of Egypt; the peculiarity of which was the massive blocks used."

Of a Peruvian vase now in the British Museum, Natt and Glidden say: ""We behold an exquisite terra-cotta head found in the region of Lake Titicaca..."
(both male and female). The male head compares advantageously with works of Egyptian artisanship, while preserving the character of the Indian race."—Indigenous Races of the Earth, 1857.

The Recent Origin of Man, by Southall, page 41, presents the following: "The pyramidal architecture of Egypt is recalled by the pyramids of Mexico and Central America, and this Doctor Wilson dismisses as of no significance; but it is more difficult to dispose of the fact that the sides of the American pyramids are all orientated as in Egypt and Mesopotamia. The great pyramids known as Xochicalco—"The house of flowers"—is scarcely distinguished from the ordinary type of those in Lower Egypt."

Reverend S. B. Peet, volume 1, page 351, writes: "The point that we make is that back of the Indians' comparatively rude condition was the higher condition of the Mound-builders, but back of the Mound-builders was a civilization which so closely resembles that found in historic lands as to give rise to the idea that it may have originated in those lands. We do not undertake to say how it came into this far-off region, nor by what routes, and it does not seem possible that the resemblance could be so great unless there was a filtering at least of these old time honored conditions. The routes may indeed have been from different directions—the pyramid-builders from the far southwest, and originally from the distant Asiatic Coast; the serpent-worshipers from the distant east, and originally from the European continent; yet whatever route, and howsoever distant the original source, we can not fail to see close analogies."

"A curious and unexpected confirmation of the Asiatic source [of ancient Americans.—Scott] is the compressed crania furnished by Mr. J. Judson Barclay in 1856. Mr. Barclay is an American traveler. He furnished an artificially compressed skull from an ancient cavern at Jerusalem, and presented it to the academy of sciences of Philadelphia. Placed in the same cabinet with the American crania collected by Doctor Morton, this skull presents some of the most striking characteristics of the artificially modified crania of the New World. Seen there without any clew to the circumstances of its discovery, it would be pronounced a Natchez skull. Shown to Doctor Tschndi, even in a European collection, it would be assigned hesitatingly as the spoil of a Peruvian grave. Doctor Meigs, who made it the subject of an elaborate communication to the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia, expresses his conviction that the head has been artificially deformed by pressure applied to the occipital region during early youth; and thus recognizes in it an indisputable proof of the practice in Asia Minor of the same custom of distorting the human head which was long regarded as peculiar in America."—Prehistoric Man, by Doctor Daniel Wilson, vol. 2, p. 219.

S. B. Peet says: "Professor Davidson says he has seen arrow-heads from the Eastern Hemisphere exactly similar to those of the Western. Other implements found here are exactly such as are described in use by the ancient nations of the Orient. If the natives of the South, when De Soto first invaded them, were dwelling in houses built on mounds, with wooden stairways, supports, and so forth, and having large stores of corn, of oil, of honey, as well as of woven fabrics, of copper and of pearl, and if some of them have traditions and picture-writings, writings of long wanderings, and various settlements, is it not within the limits of probability that their ancestors were once from the Old World?"

The Jaredite civilization employed the use of several large animals, as described in Book of Mormon, page 517. Among the list mentioned, we find "elephants, cureloms, and cunoms," the two latter belonging to the megatharian species and now extinct. A supposed formidable objection to the Book of Mormon is here persistently advocated. It is argued that the mammoth and mastodon were not contemporaneous with man. One class of objectors argue that they were, but that this contemporaneousness was at the close of the glacial period, and this period ended about 8000 B. C., and if this be true, there is no place for the Book of Mormon civilization to come in. This theory is one of evolution, and the same dates used to destroy the chronology of the Book of Mormon will overthrow the chronology of the Bible. But scientists tell us that where these huge animals "mire down," the deposit is too recent to sustain the glacial period theory. The glacial period is but conjecture. It is based on the theory of "eccentricity," which theory has failed to command general assent in the face of difficulties involved. Doctor James Croll of Edinburg, was the author who followed a suggestion of Herschel. According to this theory, an ice age must occur during every period of twenty-one thousand years in times of high eccentricity; but here is the great difficulty, the evidence failing to establish during the ice age so rapid an alternation of glacial and temperate conditions.

But let us note the evidence which the archaeologists adduce with respect to "man and the mastodon." "J. B. Holden says: 'In nearly every State west of New England portions of this creature have been disinterred. And every year there are several found, in a state of more or less complete preservation. The circumstance of several skeletons having about them evidences of man's work is extremely interesting. On one account it brings the date, though greatly indefinite, to man's existence. We are therefore able to say man and mastodon are cotemporaneous.'"—Prehistoric America, vol. 1, p. 40; 1894.
Again: "Doctor Holmes in 1859 made a communication to the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences in which he described the fragments of pottery found on the Ashley River, South Carolina, in connection with the bones of the mastodon and negathirium, both of them extinct animals."—Ibid., vol. 1, p. 13. In fact, they were so recent an animal that the contents of the stomach are so preserved that they can be analyzed and classified: "Professor Barton, of the University of Pennsylvania, discovered the bones of a mastodon at a depth of six feet, and in the stomach of the animal he found a mass of vegetable matter, composed of leaves and branches, among which was a rush common in Virginia."

Winchell says: "The ancient lakelets of Michigan inclose numerous remains of the mastodon and mammoth, but they are sometimes so near the surface that one could believe them to have been buried within five hundred years." The mastodon found near Tecumseh lay but two feet and a half beneath the surface. The Adrian mastodon was buried about three feet. The Newberg (New York) mastodon was just beneath the soil in a small pool of water.

Professor Shaler says: "Almost any swampy bit of ground in Ohio or Kentucky contains traces of the mammoth or mastodon. The fragments of wood which one finds beneath their bones seem to be of the common species of existing trees, and the reeds and other swamp plants which are imbedded with their remains are apparently the same as those which now spring in the soil. They fed upon a vegetation not materially different from that now existing in the region."

Professor Hall says: "Of the very recent existence of this animal there can be no doubt. The mud-beds and muck-swamps, where these remains occur, are the most recent of all superficial accumulations."

Doctor John Callet says that in the summer of 1880 an almost complete skeleton of a mastodon was found in Iroquois County, Illinois, which goes far to settle definitely the question that it was a recent animal and fed upon the vegetation which prevails to-day. The tusks were 9 feet long, 22 inches in circumference, and weighed 175 pounds. The lower jaw was nearly 15 feet long. The teeth weighed 4 or 5 pounds. Each of the leg-bones measured 5½ feet, indicating that the animal was eleven feet high. On inspecting the remains closely a mass of fibrous matter was found filling the place of the animal's stomach which proved to be a crushed mass of herbs and grasses similar to those which still grow in the vicinity. A skeleton was found by excavating the canal, imbedded in the peat near Covington, Fountain County, Indiana. When the larger bones were split open, the marrow was utilized by the bog-cutters to grease their boots. Chunks of sperm-like substance occupied the kidney-fat of the monster. (See Geological Report of Indiana, 1880, p. 384.) These discoveries convince us that the mastodon survived the glacial period, and may have been cotemporaneous with the Mound-builders."—Prehistoric America, vol. 2, pp. 40, 41, Stephen B. Peet.

The native Peruvian, Mr. Elisee Reclus, in his able and elaborate work, the Earth and Its Inhabitants, translated by Mr. Keane, says: "There can be no doubt as to the antiquity of man in the present territory of the United States. The finds already made show that he was cotemporary with the great pachydermati and the prehistoric horse. The skeleton of a mastodon discovered by Koch on the bed of a swamp in Missouri was surrounded by flint arrow-heads and other stone projectiles which had doubtless been hurled against the animal; large heaps of cinders, some no less than six feet high, also show that he was ultimately dispatched, or perhaps cooked, by means of fire. In California and Louisiana explorers have also picked up several worked implements mixed with the remains of huge pachydermata."—Volume 3, p. 21.

"In 1886 Professor J. M. Clarke found the bones of a mastodon in Attica, New York, four feet below the surface of the ground in a black muck. Twelve inches below this he found pieces of pottery and thirty fragments of charcoal."—Records of the Past, vol. 2, p. 253, A. D. 1903.

The Lenape Stone has attracted wide attention. This stone was found in 1872, in Bucks County, Pennsylvania. It represents an encounter between a mammoth and four men. It is thus described by H. C. Mercer in his book, The Lenape Stone, or the Indian and the Mammoth, (New York, 1885,) as follows: "In the sky overhead, and as if presiding over the event, are ranged the powers of heaven; forked lightning flashes through the tree-tops, and from between a planet and a crescent moon, beyond which we seem to see a constellation (represented by a series of crosslines) and two stars, the sun's face looks down upon the scene. Four human forms confront the monster; the first holds in his right hand a bow, from which the arrow just discharged is sticking in the side of the enraged beast, and in his left, if it is not planted in the ground, a long lance; a second warrior with head-dress of feathers, stands farther to the right; and still farther, and near what may perhaps be called a rock, a third sits upon the ground, apparently smoking a pipe. A fourth figure is easily distinguishable, trampled under the fore feet of the mammoth."—Records of the Past, vol. 2, p. 253. This work is published at Washington, District of Columbia, under the auspices of "archæological, historical, and ethnological minds. It is the Records of the Past Exploration Society, with Reverend Henry Mason Baum, D. C. L., editor. Devoted to archæology and ethnology in all the world." In this number cited is an article by its...
assistant editor, Frederick Bennett Wright, entitled, "The mastodon and mammoth contemporary with man," in which he very satisfactorily establishes the point, presenting photographs of Lenape Stone, elephant mound in Wisconsin, and Mexican headdresses which bear resemblance to mastodon and elephant heads. It would seem that the proposition favoring the Jaredite animals has been strongly established by the scientists. But one other animal named in the list offers a huge "stumbling-stone" and that is "the cow." Cow is defined to be "the female of the bovine genus of animals," and while scientists have been very sparing of the term "cow" in the accounts of "findings," they have used the name of her calf, the "ox," and "oxen." Johnson's Natural History, two volumes in one, page 508, says: "North America has been the home of several species of bovine quadrupeds. The ox has left its bones mingled with quaternary deposits [quaternary includes the era of man, the so-called glacial period, and all subsequent time.—Scott] in Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Georgia, South Carolina, Mississippi, Texas, and California." Of course we can all see how "the ox" could have a "home" in North America without "the cow"!

Doctor Nicholas Leon, sub-secretary of public instruction of Mexico, discovered a remarkable group of ruins in the state of Pueblo. In the Mexican Herald he makes the following statement: "As head of the section of anthropophy and ethnology of the National Museum, I accompanied Senor Rodriguez to the scene of the ruins." After describing a "series of pyramidal constructions in a range of small hills, guarded by elaborate trenches and connected, for purposes of communication, by wide avenues which were set off at intervals by sloping acclivities, platforms, and stair-cases," he then says: "There is one avenue in particular which absorbed our attention. It started at the peak of the highest hill in the locality, and sloped with moderate declivity down the hill. As it was evidently intended in remote times for the conveyance of loaded wagons drawn by oxen up and down the hill, it was necessary to commence the construction of it at the hill-top by giving to it an elevation of a few feet above the hillside, and increasing the height rapidly above the hillside as it approached the vale below."—Records of the Past, vol. 2, pp. 223, 224. Doctor Leon uses the plural form—"oxen." Webster says: "Oxen, in the plural form, comprehends both the male and female." These testimonies give force to the Book of Mormon record of the animals on this continent at the time of their civilizations upon it. But where would Doctor Leon get his "oxen"?

These points are strongly contested by members of the "Anti-Mormon Association," referring the existence of these animals too early in the quaternary period to be recent, and too recent to correspond with the Book of Mormon dates. But scientific facts explode their theory. Why, just think: John Fiske in volume 2, page 303, of Ancient Americans and the Spanish Conquest, even coming down to the Nephite civilization, and looking the chronology square in the face, writes: "Peruvian tradition handed over to the Spanish historian the names of sixty-five kings belonging to the dynasty known as the Piruas. Allowing an average of twenty-five years for a reign, which is a fair estimate, these sixty-five would cover thirteen centuries. As there was a further tradition of a period of disintegration and confusion intervening between the end of the Pirua dynasty and the time of Manco Capac, Mr. Markham allows for this interval about four centuries—then the series of sixty-five kings, ending about the ninth century of our era, would have begun in the fifth century before Christ."

This problem can be solved with a little more exactitude, but is it not solved by Mr. Fisk, quite closely, without the Book of Mormon entering into it, or the Bible either? It does appear that scientific conclusions based upon the excavations of this country are sweeping away the diminutive objections to the Book of Mormon. Even Mr. Peet explodes the theory that the Indians built the mounds of this country. He says: "It may be asked why no remains of masonry and stone-work are to be found among the ruins of mounds in the Central and Southern States. The answer is, that a pastoral people were not hewers of stones, and for the reason that their sites were in agricultural lands and they would not be where stone-quarries were available. In this country wood in abundance was at hand; but when the settlements were at length abandoned it would decay, and if bricks were used, they too would crumble into dust."—Volume 2, p. 314. On the subject of "resemblance" he continues: "It was customary in Asiatic countries to build the cities on an elevation, the whole city surrounded by an embankment and a deep ditch; sometimes only the palace, the temple, and the important buildings were elevated. When Layard first found Nineveh it was only a varied accumulation of mounds. . . . Many a mound that marked an ancient dwelling has been tramped over unnoticed by the armies of the successive nations that have held sway over the great belt of central Asia. Here (Southern and Central States) then, a pastoral people came to dwell, and to imitate, in their way, and with available means, the dwellings of their own old lands or of the haughty nations in the midst of whom their ancestors had lived. Only the wild native and the wild nature had in their fitful moods obliterated by degrees the tangible proofs of such existence and left only the mounds of earth in their place." How does this sound in the face of the petty objections that "savages constructed the mounds of this country," when scientific men draw such close analogies between their builders and the scientific and intelligent civilizations of "Asia Minor"? The Records of the Past agrees with the antiquarian, Mr. S. B. Peet, that back of the Indian lay a civilization which built the mounds, and back of the Mound-builders' civilization lay a superior civilization, and their emigration to the Mississippi Valley was from the "southwest." Now when so many scientists agree with the Book of Mormon theory, how does it look for a small class of objectors to get out to one side and take issue against religious facts and truths backed up by scientific facts and truths, and oppose at all hazards for the sake of sustaining "Great Diana of the Ephesians"?

We now submit the foregoing citations to the consideration of the ministry who are called upon to defend the "stick of Joseph" from such standpoint, believing we now participate in the event of the latter days—"the marvelous work and a wonder," and that "in the time of the end, many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." One avenue of "knowledge" is through the record of Joseph, for it is to show unto the remnant of the house of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off for ever"; this record "to come forth by the gift and power of God unto the interpretation thereof," in the days of Israel's last restoration, and "a little while" before Canaan is touched by the restoration finger of God, and "turned into a fruitful field." "In that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book," and in this restitution period—the latter days—"there is nothing secret, that shall not be revealed; nothing hid, that shall not be uncovered." Hence, the wonderful efforts of the civilized governments, sending out exploring and excavating societies throughout the world, lifting the lid from the bones of a slaughtered civilization on the Western Continent, uncovering the stony remains and blowing the breath of life into the slabs, monuments, walls, archways, and images, and causing them to speak their origin, and hear witness to the "strange act" of God—the restoration of the gospel by angel ministration.

A Robin's Egg.

Only think of it—love and song, The passionate joy of the summer long, Matins and vespers, ah! how sweet, A nest to be in the village street, A red breast flashing in happy flight, Life's full ecstasy and delight Thrilling God's ministrals through and through— All of them packed in this egg of blue! Would you believe it, holding dumb Lime and pigment 'twixt finger and thumb? Would you think there was love within Walls so brittle and cold and thin? Such a song as you heard, last night, Thrilling the grove in the sunset light? Out of the casket in which we dwell What may issue?—can you foretell? Can you say, when you find outspread Bits of our egg-shell, we are dead? Can you think, if this shell be crushed, All that was in it is cold and hushed? ADOLESCENCE. PHYSICAL SIGNIFICANCE.

The period of adolescence may be considered to be the years between fourteen and twenty-one, although its beginning may be several years earlier than fourteen and its prolongation for some years after twenty-one. Puberty is the marked entrance into this land of adolescence, or youth, and its average age is fourteen. Before this, the individual is a child, and, if natural in his development, will not manifest the mental or physical characteristics of sex activity. In truth, the normal child is of the neuter gender. Little boys and girls, if left to themselves, will play together with no recognition of difference. They will quarrel as readily with each other as will boys with boys or girls with girls. The boy will manifest no chivalry, the girl no coquetry. If children have these impulses, it is because of some education in that direction.

We are now speaking of children who are perfectly natural, who have not been trained to do certain things because they are girls, or have been excused for doing certain things because they are boys. We little realize how early in life we begin to put the burden of sex on the woman-child, and to teach the liberty of sex to the man-child.

We are now speaking of children who have grown up with no suggestions from elders or superiors which would tend to make them conscious of sex, and we find that the boy is no more gentle and considerate of his girl companions than of the boys with whom he plays, and the girl no more shy nor sentimental than he. But as they approach the boundaries of that mysterious land of the "teens," there comes a change. Without in the least understanding why, the boy begins to feel embarrassed when with girls. A new timidity takes possession of him and, at the same time, a new pleasure in their companionship. He begins to desire to gain favor in the eyes of the very girls whom he has treated most cavalierly. They seem new and wonderful creatures, and in an awkward and embarrassed way he endeavors to show some courtesy and gallantry.

The girl, also, is becoming self-conscious and shy. Her manner loses much of its crudeness and it is seen that she is spontaneously changing from the hoden to the lady.

If the adults who surround these youths are wise, they will comprehend the gravity of all these signs, and will conduct themselves accordingly; but, alas, too many who should understand these portents fail to do so, and by their unwisdom precipitate natural developments and thereby produce deplorable results, from which the young people suffer and for which they are unjustly blamed.

In order to act with wisdom, parents should understand the physical, mental, and moral significance of adolescence, should realize that it is a crisis of grave import to boy or girl. Most mothers do recognize that this is to the girl a critical time, and they watch with much anxiety the physical unfolding of their daughters, guard their health, have patience with their moods and tempers, and overlook many perversities with the feeling that “she will be better by and by.”

So rapid is the physical growth that there is not vitality enough to keep pace with it, and the child manifests an unwonted indolence of both mind and body. Sometimes the muscles grow faster than the bones, and awkwardness ensues; or the bones grow more rapidly and stretch the muscles, and there are so-called “growing pains.”

Along with these evidences of development there are new fluids secreted and eliminated, and unless the boy or girl is wisely instructed, a needless terror is experienced, a terror which sometimes leads to unwise conduct that may result in invalidism; or a curiosity which, seeking the broad of true knowledge, is given the serpent of sinful instruction, and destruction—physical and mental—follows.

Each child should receive from parent or friend the instruction which will prepare him for adolescence and will make clear the physical significance, so that he may escape the dangers which lie in wait for the unwary and ignorant, and will give him the comprehension of his true value to the race.

MENTAL SIGNIFICANCE.

Every observant parent knows that the physical changes are not the only accompaniments of adolescence. The child who has been amiable and docile, perhaps, now begins to manifest perversity and willfulness. He is strangely restless, and perhaps morose at times, at others irritable. The girl is peevish and petulant, the boy unamiable and impudent. They have before this been confidential and communicative. Now they withdraw themselves and seem inclined to keep their own counsel. They become opinionated and do not hesitate to express their ideas in the most egotistical way. They are hard to please, hard to govern, hard to live with in any way. The parents can not understand this. What should have changed this sweet, loving child into a youth so awkward, opinionated, fault-finding, and perverse? The conditions at home have not changed. Everything is as pleasant as ever, and, in truth, everybody is making more effort than ever before to placate the child with new powers. He is receiving a wondrous gift.

He is now to be endowed with the power of transmission of life, a wonderful and holy gift which should sanctify this young creature in our eyes and in his own. Think of this sacred period, when the youth receives from the almighty Father this gift of creative power, the greatest power of God himself, and let us bow in silent awe before this miracle of transformation.

The development of reproductive power in the individual is also the endowment with new life for himself. In the first years of this process, the child takes on a wondrous physical growth. All the processes of life are quickened. Not only is there increase in height, but in fullness of outline and in breadth of figure. The voice deepens, the eye takes on a new luster; in the boy, the beard starts, and in both sexes the body changes to its distinctive masculine or feminine contour.

Just at this period of children's lives many mothers suffer greatly with the feeling that everything is going wrong, their children do not love them any more, and they really lose their hold on these growing inmates of their homes simply because they fail to understand the mental significance of adolescence.

In his early life the child imitates. He learns through imitation. He accepts the ideas of those about him unquestioningly, and follows the path marked out for him. But with the new gift of life-power which comes to him at puberty, his own self awakens. He begins to realize that he is a unit, an integer, an individual. He realizes this only in a blind way. He does not comprehend that these new and strange feelings of rebellion are the strugglings of his individuality for expression. Those about him do not understand it, either. They fail to see that these traits which seem so objectionable to them, are, in truth, the struggle to attain that selfhood which will make him of real value to the world.

The individual who in maturity is only a childlike imitator of those about him has very little value to the world. If he is to amount to anything, he must have “a mind of his own,” must be able to think for himself, to judge for himself, to act for himself, and this is what the adolescent is beginning to do. In himself he feels the awakening of his individuality. He is somebody; not merely an appendage to parent or teacher; not merely an imitator of others; not merely a reservoir for the ideas of others. Their ideas may be good, but how does he know until he has thought for himself? So he discards your carefully studied beliefs, your “anciently received opinions,”—not because of any newly discovered lack of faith in you, but because of a newly discovered faith in himself. It is a wonderful thing, this discovery of self. It should arouse our respect. Instead of snubbing the crude and dogmatically expressed ideas of the growing boy or girl, we should see in them the dawning of individuality and rejoice.

It is far better to think wrongly at the outset than not to think at all.

Crude and faulty ideas are more desirable than no ideas.

If encouraged to go on thinking, the probabilities are that the husks of thought will fall off and the sound, ripe kernels be found to have matured within.

While not obliged to receive without contradiction every unripe idea of youthful minds, we can still show a courteous recognition of their efforts at thinking, and by polite queries more quickly than by sneers and snubs lead them to see their errors. The boy who at home learns how, courteously, to discuss a subject, how to pay deference to his antagonist, how to differ politely, how, gracefully, to accept defeat, or how, generously, to acknowledge the justice of his opponent's arguments, has had a training the value of which can scarcely be measured.

And the father who accords to his son or daughter the right of an individual to think, has taken the surest way to maintain his influence over them.
The awakening of individuality in the adolescent mind is the secret of the apparent withdrawal from the parental confidence which so often troubles mothers more than fathers. The child has been so confidential, so free to bring to mother all little griefs and joys; why should he now seem to desire less of confidence and sympathy? Why does the girl consult her mother less about the details of her toilet, or why does the boy seem to shun the sweet hour of sympathetic intercourse? In all probability it is simply the growing individuality which makes the youth feel that he must now take charge of his own life. It is not that he trusts mother less, but he wants to be himself, to assert Ego. If the mother can understand this and sympathize with it she will feel less troubled for she will know that this is only a turbulence which will eventuate in a clarifying of the mind and a strengthening of confidence. If she can only be wise enough to let go with the arbitrary hand of parental authority and grasp with the gentle hand of friendly sympathy, she will find the grasps firmer and surer and grows stronger with the passing years.

The mental significance of adolescence, then, means the awakening of individuality, the coming into the possession of self. With this fact in mind we shall better understand the youth who is reaching out after a knowledge of his own powers and who needs our wise sympathy in his struggles to gain possession of God's great gift of selfhood. —Doctor Mary Wood-Allen, in American Motherhood.

Two Ways.

"Late, as usual," growled Mr. Hanson as he looked up from the breakfast table at a slim lad of fifteen who was entering the room hurriedly.

"It seems to me, Arthur," spoke Mrs. Hanson from the lower end of the table in a fretful voice, "that you might get up in time for breakfast. You really are getting very lazy."

"Doesn't earn his salt," grumbled his father. "I tell you what it is, young man, you will have to do better than this, or you will have to go to work for a living." With a sullen face the lad seated himself at the table, making no reply to the remarks of his parents.

"Art's getting to be quite a dude," said the elder sister, with a half sneer. "Look at his hair and his necktie! I should think, Art," she continued, "that you would know enough about the fitness of things not to try to wear a light blue tie with your black eyes and hair and grimy complexion. How much time did you spend at the looking-glass this morning?"

"I guess Art put in most of his time counting the hairs in his moustache. They are a little uneven, aren't they, Art?" laughed the elder brother. "It seems to me you have lost one on the right side."

The boy's face flamed angrily as he heard these words and the laugh which greeted them.

"What is the use of your pitching in," he complained. "It's mean to strike a fellow when he's down." This sentence began in a bass tone and ended in a squeaking tenor, at which moment his father spoke: "Sit down, boy; don't make a fool of yourself because there is a little harmless pleasantry on your account. Go on and eat your breakfast."

The lad resumed his knife and fork in silence.

As Mr. Hanson was drawing away from the table, Mrs. Hanson spoke. "Can you give me some money this morning, John?"

"I can't give you any now," replied Mr. Hanson, "but I can send you some from the office, if Arthur will go down town with me before school; but he will have to hustle—I can't wait for any lazy bones! Come on," he exclaimed, taking his hat and leaving the room.

"Go quickly, now," said Mrs. Hanson, "you won't have more than time enough to go down and get back by school-time."

The boy followed his father, and walked about half a block behind him all the way down the street. As he returned to the house, he was met by his mother on the door-step, with the urgent appeal, "Hurry up, hurry up, Arthur; it is nearly school-time. Oh, dear! I never did see such a laggard."

"I am not going to school," said Arthur, sullenly.

"Indeed you are!" exclaimed his mother. "You go right along at once, and let me hear no more such nonsense from you. Hurry up, now," she continued, as the boy started toward school with a lagging step, "and mind you have your lessons. If I hear any bad reports from your teachers I shall tell your father, and he won't stand much nonsense, you know."

The noon meal was a repetition of the breakfast. Everybody had some sort of a joke to make at Arthur's expense.

"I say, ma," piped up little Tommy, "Art's got a best girl. I see him walking home from school with her every day."

"Oh, ho!" laughed the elder brother, "that is the reason why he is paying so much attention to his ears and fingernails. I say, Art, you had better wash an inch farther under your chin. We can still see just how far you apply the water."

"It is perfect nonsense," exclaimed Mrs. Hanson, "to talk about 'best girls.' A boy that does not take any more care of his personal appearance than Arthur would not be looked at by any girl."

"Well, I will look after him," exclaimed Mr. Hanson, "if he does not pay more attention to business. Don't you forget it, young man!"

At tea-time Arthur had a little respite as there was a guest. He was not introduced to her, however, and was allowed to silently partake of his evening meal until, unfortunately for himself, his interest in the conversation incited him to make a remark. "I think," he began, and continued the expression of his somewhat crude ideas with self-confidence natural to a boy of his years.

"You think!" sneered the father. "Well you had better have something to think before you attempt to tell it. I tell you, Miss Blake," he said, turning to the guest, "if there is anything you want to know about, just ask Art. He understands just exactly how business should be conducted; what studies a boy ought to take at school; and just how the government of the nation should be conducted. Oh, I tell you there is nothing like the knowledge which a boy of sixteen possesses."

Arthur's head sank before the sarcasm of his father, but no word was spoken by any one in his behalf. As the family left the table the suggestion was made that they proceed to the parlor for some music. The steps of all, except Arthur, turned in that direction. He started out-of-doors.

"Come on, Art," called the mother quite genially, "Miss Blake is going to play for us."

"I don't want to hear any of her music," growled the boy, laying his hand upon the knob of the outside door. At the same moment his father's hand was laid, not gently, upon his shoulder. "You come into the parlor and behave yourself. No boy of mine shall ever treat a guest uncivilly, as you have done."

Without a word Arthur followed his father into the parlor, and seated himself in a corner where he sat silent during the music. It was eight o'clock when the little group broke up and Arthur started up-stairs.

"Where are you going?" asked his mother.

"To my room," replied the boy.

"Well, you see that you go to bed early," she commanded, "and be up in time for breakfast to-morrow morning."

Making no reply, the boy proceeded up-stairs. A few days before he had asked permission of his mother to take dancing lessons. "Indeed, you shall not!" she exclaimed most decidedly. "No boy of mine shall go to a common dancing-school, associating with all the riff-raff of the place.

You can just make up your mind to that."

"But, mother," pleaded Arthur. "All the nice boys and girls are going."

"I don't care; you shan't go. It will keep you up late at night, and you are bad enough now about getting up late in the morning. So just set your mind to rest. I have said it and I mean it."

Arthur had apparently accepted the decision, but when he went up to his room on the evening in question, it was not to study, nor to go to bed. Hastily changing his dress he climbed out of his window down to the porch and from there easily slid to the ground. Fifteen minutes later he was one of the merry company at the dancing-school. It was not difficult to reach his room by the same route on his return.

All during the winter he attended the dancing-school without the knowledge of his parents. Finding it so easy to elude their vigilance, he began to take the same method of meeting the boys at places more questionable than the dancing-school; and when, at the age of seventeen, he was arrested with a number of others for some criminal offense, his parents were astounded at the disclosures which followed. They were heartbroken over the knowledge of his parents.

Watching the mother break into a giggle.

"But, mother," pleaded Arthur. "I ought to hire out to Barnum and Baily as a whole family."

"I can never get that 'throw-this-end-over-you-shoulder' beautiful."

"You will if you move briskly," said the mother, "and you know I am very anxious about your record in school this month."

"Mother, I wish I could leave school. It seems to me I am big enough to go to work."

"Big enough, to be sure," said the mother, looking up fondly into the face of her big boy, "but are you quite sure that you know enough?"

"No mother, I am not. I suppose I ought to stay in school a few years yet, but it does seem such poky work."

"I know, dear; but you won't be sorry in the end if you yield cheerfully to the wishes of your father and mother in this respect. You know how proud your father is when your standing in school is up to the mark."

"Yes, I know, mother, and I will try not to make him ashamed of me," said the boy brightly as he ran down the steps.

At the dinner-table the conversation was full of general interest, and Billy's remarks were listened to with the same consideration as those of the other members of the family.

"Say, ma," spoke up little Harry, "Billy's got a best girl. I see him walking home from school with her every day."

"That accounts for his clean ears and finger nails," began Margaret, but again the warning look of her mother checked her, and she continued: "Billy is such a nice looking boy. I am glad to see him taking more care of himself."

"Why, yes," said the mother, "we all knew that Billy would soon begin to have the pride of a young gentleman, and I am better pleased to have him associate with nice girls than with rough boys. But you know, Harry," she said, turning to the smaller lad, "we don't talk about 'best girls' in our family. My children have friends among both the boys and girls, and they leave questions of 'sweethearts' and 'beaux' until they arrive at the age of maturity."

"I can well remember," said Mr. Meredith, "when I was about Billy's age, that the society of good girls was a very great help to me in becoming more gentlemanly. Of course I know that Billy's mother and sister are treated by him with thoughtful consideration, but I think that sometimes a girl outside of the family can do more towards 'licking a cub into shape' than even the best mother or sister."

A look of mutual understanding passed between father and son, and Billy arose from the dinner table feeling himself more of a man.

There was a guest at supper to whom Billy was introduced with the same care and consideration as had been shown the older son and daughter. During the early part of the meal Billy made no attempt to join in the conversation, but, at length, becoming interested and aroused, he spoke up with all the assurance of the adolescent boy:

"I think ... ," he said, continuing his remarks to express an opinion decidedly opposed to the views which his father had maintained.

No one interrupted him, and at the close of his remarks Mr. Meredith said genially, "Well, my boy, I am glad you think, even though you do not think along the same lines that I do. The objections that you raise cover so wide a range of thought..."
that it seems to me best for us not to continue the discussion here and now; but sometime, when we are both at leisure, we will discuss the subject together, and perhaps will find ourselves more nearly of one mind than we seem to be just now."

The boy had been silenced, but in no unkindly manner and with no hurt to his self-love. In fact, he had an added feeling of self-respect from the fact that his father had treated him as if worthy of consideration, and with a willing mind he accompanied the family to their evening of music in the parlor. He had a little feeling of regret that he had not been permitted to buy a ticket for a term of dancing-lessons, the first one of which was given that evening. When he broached the subject to his mother, she said:

"I suppose you know, Billy, what my feelings are in regard to your going to dancing-school."

"Why, yes, mother, but all the boys and girls are going, and it makes one feel so odd to be shut out altogether from the fun in the Meredith parlor for social entertainment, and Billy found one number of Billy's companions began frequently to congregate in the Meredith parlor for social entertainment, and Billy found that he had not missed all the fun by missing the dancing-school.

It was a proud and happy father and mother that greeted Billy on his graduation from college, and heard him say: "I am so thankful I did not leave school when I was fifteen as I wanted to do. I know I shall be worth more to the world because I have a better education."—Doctor Mary Wood-Allen, in American Mother.

Mountainville, Maine, April 9, 1906.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I have looked into the articles in the HERALD, especially those by Bro. L. A. G. While this brother has been criticised on some of his writings I must say that I do not believe that all have fully understood his articles. They have been a source of good to me and I have heard others say the same. I am glad to see so many taking an interest in the "all things common" plan. I believe that it is all right for us as a people to advance our ideas along this line so that, if possible, we may come to a more perfect understanding.

We are the only Saints living in this neighborhood so we do not get to meet with those of our faith very often. Bro. James Yates preaches at our schoolhouse once in a while and we enjoy hearing him. He is humble and full of love, and I believe could do much good if given a mission. There is one family here that is investigating our doctrine and I believe will obey soon.

The United Brethren have Sunday-school at our schoolhouse and have a Methodist preacher to preach for them. He told them last Sunday that it did not make any difference what church they belonged to just so they were sincere in their belief, but when one of our preachers comes here to preach they say it is a sin to go to hear him. One lady said we did not preach repentance. This same lady read in their Sunday-school the thirteenth chapter of Corinthians, trying to impress upon the minds of the people that prophesy should fail and so on and of course forgot to read part of the next chapter which says, "Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy." In Matthew 15:8, 9 it reads like this, speaking of the hypocrites, "This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me. But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."

Dear Saints, let us one and all work together for the upbuilding of God's cause.

Your brother,

C. L. ARNEY.

St. Louis, Missouri, April 7, 1906.

Editors Herald: We very seldom see a letter from the St. Louis Branch in the HERALD, so will say that we preparing to have the church-building dedicated to God May 20, 1906. We have a good Sunday-school and Religio, as those who attended the conventions this year noticed, also shown by the minutes of the aforesaid conventions.

Apostle U. W. Greene of Mission No. 2 was with us a few days on his way to General Conference, together with Brn. Ettenhouser, Waiters, and F. J. Ebeling, the last named coming a week later, preaching for us twice. Apostle Greene instructed the priesthood on tract work, giving us a system that, personally, we think an effective and efficient one. The only trouble will be in getting the Saints to distribute. If they would get out and bestow some of that "surplus joy and gladness" on the honest-hearted souls who must make up the kingdom of God in the future, they will not be likely to be compelled to participate in that great "prayer-meeting" (?) of the wicked, which Elder Ebeling spoke of; and will have an increase of temporal prosperity (which is sorely needed) and spiritual development. What this branch needs is another high priest, (Bro. Archibald is fine but he is handicapped and it is better that he remain in his present position,) a high priest who is a good city worker, willing, energetic, capable withal, and one who is "touched with the feeling of all our infirmities." We have some in the priesthood here who are sorely in need of development and who need mostly to have some one show them how to help themselves. We are not trying to dictate to the appointing power, only indicating our present situation. It seems St. Louis has been left to take care of itself in the past few years, save a few spasmodic periods when an appointee was sent here, but there has been nothing like the number of outside accessions to the church that there ought to be in a city like this. I believe we voice the sentiment of the majority when we state that St. Louis ought to have missionaries! We are by no means despairing, for if something does not move one way look at the other ways to be used!

I would like to say that in my possession is a book published in 1851 containing the Pearl of Great Price, "O. Pratt's works," "John Taylor's discussion," and numerous other pamphlets, including the book of Abraham and travels of various men of the "early" church. Will dispose of the volume (bound in leather) to leading or efficient debaters and lecturers in the church if they will correspond.

THAMESVILLE, Ontario, March 25, 1906.

Dear Herald: I am a young Latter Day Saint. I was baptized last summer by Bro. S. G. St. Johns and I am not sorry for the step that I have taken. All of our family belong to the church of Jesus Christ but my youngest sister, who is just four years old. There is no church around here but we have Sunday-school at our place and oftentimes preaching and I am glad we have. There are one or two who believe in the church and I think if they were to hear the elders once or twice more they would come into the church. My father is very ill. He has been sick for about a year now—so bad he could not get out of the house alone. I ask all the Saints to pray for him and I trust they will.

Your sister in Christ,

(Age twelve years.)

MATILDA PERRITT.

An Experience From a Young Recruit.

A babe in the church, though not in Christian service. Once a stranger to the "angel's message" but now, a happy, rejoicing Saint. To use old phraseology, I was converted at an early age, was brought up with the Bible in my hand (so to speak) and right from youth until my genesis into the church was a worker with the Methodist believers. My father is the head of a large mission in the town where I, too, spent years of active service. Yet all the time I was with those people I did not hear of such things as "principles of the gospel" (see Hebrews 6), which are the foundation teaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I have come out from a people whose teaching is disjointed, jumbled up; vital truths hidden or forsaken as of no practical application for to-day; who talk about the "love of God," but not so much of the "laws and commandments" that we must obey if we are true followers of Jesus Christ.

"Once I was blind but now I can see." Light was dim and ears were dull to see the glorious truths of the gospel and to hear this glad message; but thanks be to God, I see—not a human scheme, planned out for men's own convenience but a divine scheme, or plan, for the redemption of his creatures in their simple state and a glorious version of future happiness and joy, a foretaste of which we make claim to and enjoy, conditionally given to all those that obey and do. My soul has at last anchored itself in a haven of rest and peace, freedom and truth. Truly Satan has blinded the eyes of the people out from whom I have been rescued. Truly this gospel of "early days" given to us through our departed leader, Joseph Smith, is a gospel that is free and unfettered from traditional error. Men have changed the gospel, but we have it preached and obeyed as it was in the days of the apostles of the early church.

I was not brought to see the gospel of the kingdom, God's unchangeable law, through a sermon, a book, or a tract, but through wayside talks in casual meetings with an elder residing in this town. We conversed freely from time to time, but could not agree. One remark of mine was that "we were as far from each other in our beliefs as the sun is from the moon." I fought against the light with all the powers of my nature. I said that no book brought me to see this gospel. I do not include the Bible, as Bro. Ecclestone led me to the "word," for a remark of his so often repeated was, "The word says so," and any man can handle the word. (I confess now, I was beaten.) Then the powers of the evil spirit worked on me, but the good Spirit of God was mightier than he. Oh, what bitter experiences were mine; what dungeon times I had till I said yes to the whisperings of the Spirit of God. I became unsettled and anxious, but thoughtful, for the voice seemed to say "Come up higher; more blessing and light for more obedience"; for I saw that it meant cooperation with God for my personal salvation. But say, O ye elders, that I had not the Spirit of God before baptism? Certainly I had in a measure, for I was obedient to the amount of light I had then. What was it that forced me to take this step? Not human persuasion, but a power, a force, unknown and yet known, for I believe it was the Spirit of God; and when I had told my mind to the brother a great joy flooded my soul and for days it was with me. I felt that I was in the seventh heaven of delight. Nothing daunted me, nor could extinguish this flame of holy ecstasy; and all this before baptism. Working for my father, of course I came into contact with him, and when he had heard what church I was going to join he was much embittered and enraged towards me; threw nasty epitaphs at me, and tried to bruise my body with an umbrella and kicked me, too. But I bore it all "like a Christian" and answered him in meekness, for I knew that he had made himself an instrument (as it were) for the evil one, and I forgave him. I do not regret this step, but feel rather to rejoice that I am counted worthy to have a share in this grand and glorious gospel.

This is also the sentiment of my dear partner in life, who is a sister in the church. I am still going through the fiery furnace of trials, though I have been a member now with you about twelve months. My parents were not altogether on friendly terms before I came into the church; but now they are far worse towards me. When baby died just after we joined the church, I asked him to bury the child, but he would have nothing to do with me; for he said that "I was nothing to him. He had washed his hands of me. My creed was not his creed," etc. Of course I have got no creed now so that I can say, His creed is not my creed. Loss of friends, enmity of parents and family ties, unsettled prospects are rather hard to bear, yet easy, if we will only yoke ourselves with Christ in the plow, for he will carry the heavier share of the burden. Our faith is yet firm and strong, resolute and unwavering, unshaken in him. Thank God for his unspeakable goodness. May the fruits of grace abound in us, be lived out in our lives; and men seeing our good works shall glorify our Father which is in heaven. We can't all be great, but we can all be good. We can not all be recruiting sergeants, seeking in the interest of the church, some to meet with their quorums, or to attend to the business of the church, some perchance to visit the Saints, while others are leisurely repairing to the dining-hall for a sociable conversation, and some to meet with their quorums, or to attend to the carrying on of the necessary material work connected with this important gathering, some perchance to visit the Saints, while others are leisurely repairing to the dining-hall for a sociable repast; but the large majority's interest is in "the next meeting." The general assemblies of the youth of the church, first the Territorial, then the Sunday-school, convened just before the opening of conference and evinced the fact that however slow it may be—while some of the older ones, weary and worn from long and faithful labors may now and then desire to step out of the ranks—the march of the flower of the army is steadily onward.

Near the opening of conference the sermon delivered by Elder J. R. Lambert was full of encouragement and good practical doctrine. He presented Christ not only as a teacher but as an example, and among other words of counsel he said, "We can do without many things, and we ought to dispense with the thought that entertainment must be the reward for giving for the benefit of the Lord's work."

And speaking in derogation of secret societies he said "secret combinations are condemned by the revelations of God; we see the evidences of good in all the instructions of God: let us have faith."

In all the sermons of the brethren, which were excellent, the Saints were exhorted to diligence in service. The sacrament-meeting on April 1, also the meeting of the following Sunday morning when Father A. H. Smith preached on the subject of "The ministration of angels" were memorable ones on account of the large number present and the enjoyable character of the occasions. The former was conducted by the stake presidency assisted by Bro. F. G. Pitt, and fifty elders were on the platform. Bro. R. C. Evans was also listened to by a large concourse while he preached concerning the coming of Christ.

At the Sunday-school on the following Sabbath there were ten hundred and fifty-four present including three hundred and ninety-three visitors.

President F. M. Smith held forth on the morning of the 1st, taking for his text "If any man preach any other doctrine," etc., a sermon full of force and logic and which was edifying to the Saints.

Overflow meetings were held on the 8th. On Monday two children, Marie C. Riggs and C. Earnest Munro, also Mrs. Edith M. Garde were baptized in the hall font. Our young Bro. W. W. Smith, held the attention of a large audience in the basement on the evening of the 8th, and the beautiful song-service by a junior choir of girls,—using Zion's Praises,—conducted by Brn. Chase, Russell, and Bailey was indeed an appreciated feature.

The business-sessions are fraught with a spirit of deepest interest in every question thus far presented. To pursue a few matters need a little further consideration,—as to the conference personnel. Those wholesome precepts often given for our guidance in the way of church etiquette, dignity of speech, personal adornment, etc., of the privileged delegates are salutary and come well recommended. On one occasion during the conference the choir director felt called upon to request the audience to remain quiet during the opening voluntary, thus giving us to understand there is a spirit of levity with us and of forgetfulness of church amenities. But what do they say when they hear such expressions from one presiding at a business-meeting of Saints as "You fellows who differ," "These other fellows entertaining a different opinion," etc.?

Bro. C. G. Lewis touched in the sermon mentioned below upon the thought of our influence with each other who are endeavoring to sanctify ourselves through a godly life and conversation, and a young man from Michigan stated a day or two ago in testimony that he desired "to put on the character of Christ." This thought agrees with that expressed by Bro. Joseph Luff, who, in a stirring sermon on the subject of the identification of Christ, said not long since, "We need more living Christs."

But words fail us and grief seizes the tender heartstrings when we think of the cruel slaughter of the sweet songsters of glade and garden—lovely in hue and superb in form to please our vanity and satisfy our pride. Shall we, the fair daughters of Zion, while thus in rebellion against the revelations of God's will, wear these insignia of cruelty and at the same time petition for the erection of a children's home where they may be nurtured in the gentle ways of the tender Shepherd? Perish the inconsistent thought!

The Daughters of Zion met on the 10th, passed a few good resolutions, and elected officers for the ensuing year. As the general business-sessions advanced the reports grew more interesting. Those of the missions were listened to with satisfaction and the optimistic view of the work presented by President Joseph Smith imparted a deep interest throughout the conference. The readings by the secretaries were given clearly as usual, and the kindly words embodied in reports of the labors of the patriarchs and missionaries struck a responsive chord of rejoicing in all hearts.

As to the sermons, all were instructive and edifying. Said Bro. C. G. Lewis in last Monday morning's discourse: "We have no right to give the cold shoulder to the brother who does harm against us; we must have a perfect love in our hearts; there is no need of iniquity in the church, for the law is plain and through the word we may come to a unity of the faith."
He also spoke of the evils of the tobacco habit and the fashionable habit in regard to dress, and another thought of his was, "words should be sung that they may be heard."

Bro. Russell in a discourse on the 10th spoke of the many ways in which we may show our faith in God, one especially, that of "giving of our means for the carrying on of the work and sending the gospel throughout the world." "How many," he said, "are hungry for the bread of life and yet are living on the husks." He referred to the sacrifices made by many of our young people in Toronto lately in order that the famishing may be fed; also spoke of the great need of ministerial work in foreign lands. The religious world is teeming with erroneous doctrines: last evening five or six members of "The House of David," from Benton Harbor, Michigan, collected a crowd and set forth on the Temple Lot their peculiar views, to which Elder Sheldon ably replied. With their abundant hirsute adornment they made a picturesque appearance while traversing our streets.

Our brethren's time is well occupied. There was a discussion on "Economic righteousness" held in the chapel across the way on the 10th and last night one on a Book of Mormon topic held in the basement which was well attended.

The prayer-meetings are full of life and interest and the heartiness of the singing, the earnestness in prayer and testimony and the exercise of faith in the gifts all attest the truth and stability of the work, that it is God's own work and as was shown in vision is like the block of purest white marble which was embedded in the solid granite of eternal truth.

The following communication was received from J. W. Wight of the Quorum of Twelve:

LAMONI, IOWA, APRIL 5, 1906.

To the General Conference; Greeting; Having at last given up all hope of being able to be present and on account of existing conditions, I have thought it well to communicate with you.

After four weeks of suffering, at times the pain being of the most excrutiating nature, I have been led to feel that it is at least possible that my days are about ended so far as anything like physical endurance is concerned. It may be well to say first that so far as the gospel and its economy and final accomplishment are concerned I believe myself to be "in faith." The perplexing question with me is as to whether I shall be qualified to fulfill the duties of my office and calling. Feeling this way, that is, having a doubt as to the ability to so perform, I deem it not only proper but a duty to place the matter fairly before you. Of course, if the Lord shall speak and release me from further obligation that should be the end of opportunity for controversy. Without such revealsment and leaving the settlement thereof to human wisdom, permit me to say that when the time of sustaining comes and my name is before the body, that shall the conference feel it to be for the best good of the work not to sustain I shall submit with pleasure.

Trusting that in all your deliberations the Lord will guide, I remain,

Your collaborator and in gospel bonds,

J. W. WIGHT, per Cyril.

The matter of the disorganization of the Northwestern Texas District was considered and it was by motion declared disorganized.

The request for more shelf-room in the Librarian's report was referred to the Bishopric.

This cleared the table of business, and while he Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy withdrew to consider matters to come before them, the assembly was profitably entertained by song and reminiscences of F. G. Pitt, John Shippy, Bro. Newton, and E. C. Briggs.

Preaching at night by Holmes J. Davidson, assisted by A. E. McCord.

In the lower auditorium Brn. F. A. Russell and O. H. Bailey conducted a session devoted to street-preaching methods, and means of going to the people, or getting the people to come to us. The service was highly instructive and entertaining.

APRIL 14.

The morning prayer-service was in charge of J. A. Tanner and M. M. Turpen; preaching by John Kaler assisted by John Condit.

The business-session opened by singing No. 21; prayer by R. C. Evans.

Reports were received from the High Priests' Quorum and the Third Quorum of Elders. The latter quorum reported that their president, W. H. Harder, had resigned, and presented to fill the vacancy H. J. Thurman and his selection of W. D. Bullard first counselor and C. E. Guinand second counselor, recommending their ordination.

The request was granted.

Reports were read from the Eighth Quorum of Elders and First Quorum of Seventy.

President Joseph Smith reported for the joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy which met yesterday afternoon, that they had a spirited session, but were unable to agree, and further time was asked. The report was received and the committee continued.

The Third Quorum of Seventy and First Quorum of Teachers reported.

The latter was newly organized by G. T. Griffiths and U. W. Greene with C. D. Carson president, Lester Brackenbury first counselor, and M. M. Leaton second counselor.

At this juncture President Joseph Smith stated that matter had been placed in the hands of several of the quorum for their consideration and action, and thought it wise that these quorums be permitted to retire and take the matter under consideration.

He also stated that it would be understood that when anything comes before the church for examination it was to be passed upon by the three quorums of Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy. If it passed these quorums it would then be given to the other quorums for examination, and finally to the public in open conference.

These quorums accordingly withdrew while Bro. F. G. Pitt was placed in charge of the assembly. The remainder of the time was pleasantly and profitably spent in song and five-minute speeches from church-workers; A. H. Parsons, Marcus Cook, J. M. Baker, Preaching in the evening by Joseph F. Burton assisted by J. W. Peterson and J. W. Gilbert.

Owing to nonarrival of report of conference proceedings for April 15 and 16, we copy, without comment, from Kansas City Journal of 17th inst. the text of the revelation given to the church and adopted by conference at its session of the 16th, as follows:

Thus saith the Spirit unto the church:

First—It is the will of the Lord that a sanitarium, a place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted, be established by the church at Independence, Mo., as My servant, Joseph Smith, has already stated to you. This should be done as soon as it is found to be practicable and without unnecessary delay. The presiding bishop and his counselors and the bishopric of the Independence state should take counsel together in locating and establishing this sanitarium.

Second—It is also expedient that they should be assisted by the advice and counsel of one of My servants who is acquainted with the laws of health and the practice of medicine, and who may have charge when the institution is established. It is in accordance with the instructions given to My servant, Joseph Smith, that My servant, Joseph Luff, who has been giving his attention to the study of medicine and has been preparing himself for usefulness in this direction, be associated with this sanitarium as a medical director and physician to the church and be put in charge, that he may be an assistant to those who seek the aid of this institution of the church, in his spiritual office and his calling as a physician, with those who from time to time may be called to administer in laying hands upon the afflicted and sick, where they may be removed from the influences and environments unfavorable to the exercise of proper faith unto the healing of the sick. And this My servant Joseph Luff may do and retain and exercise his apostleship.

Third—There should also be a home for children established, and the efforts of the Daughters of Zion should be approved and carried unto completion as soon as is consistent with the necessary demands of the work of the church in other directions.

Fourth—In the establishment of the sanitarium and the home for children debt should not be contracted, nor too large nor expensive buildings be built at the outset. Those to whom this work is assigned should exercise the necessary degree of wisdom that the work be effectual for the intent and purposes designed.

Fifth—It is necessary that some one or more be sent to the South Sea Islands. The heaving of the sea beyond its bounds has been trying to the faith of many of the saints in that faroff region. They should be visited and comforted and encouraged. Some one of experience and knowledge of the situation should be sent, accompanied by another, who should be prepared to make a stay of years, if necessary, in the mission to those islands. My servant, Joseph F. Burton, though aged, will be an efficient officer and representative of the faith, and, choosing some one to go with him, may be intrusted with this difficult mission.

Sixth—It is the will of the Lord that the mission to Utah and the West should be continued, and suitable representatives of the church be sent and maintained there under the conditions prevailing at the present time. It is essential that the church have proper representatives there.

Seven—As the saints have heretofore been instructed in reference to the gathering, they are now again admonished that the gathering must not be in haste, nor without due preparation, and must be done in accordance with the revelation given to the church upon Fishing river and in accordance with the counsel and advice of the elders of the church whose duty it has been made to counsel and advise the saints. The spirit of speculation, the exhibition provoked for gain is unseemly in the saints and officers of the church, and should be avoided. It has the appearance of evil. Heed should be paid to the admonitions of those who from time to time preach and write upon the gathering to remove the principle of selfishness from the hearts of the saints and especially from those upon whom rests the burden of the church and its administrations abroad.

Eight—Inasmuch as misunderstanding has occurred in regard to the meaning of a revelation hitherto given through my servant, Joseph Smith, in regard to who should be called in case my servant should be taken away or fail by transgression, it is now declared that in case of the removal of my servant now presiding over the church by death or transgression, my servant, Frederick M. Smith, if he remain faithful and steadfast, should be chosen, in accordance with the revelations which have been hitherto given to the church concerning the priesthood. Should my servant, Frederick M. Smith, prove unstable and unfaithful, another may be chosen, according to the law already given.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., April 14, 1906.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. J. B. Young, Beloit, Ohio: "Will some of the Saints in the high coal-mining districts of Illinois please write me, telling of the conditions and prospects of the same?"

Sr. Mary Furgison, Bellair, Illinois: "Bro. R. T. Walter and W. H. Manhuring have been here preaching for a few weeks, and have done much good. The people seemed to enjoy attending the meetings and six were baptized. They also preached at Annapolis. We would be glad to have any of the Saints write. Would like very much to go to General Conference. My desire to do right is as strong as ever, and I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may live faithful and not be overcome by the adversary."

She came to Iowa in 1848 and settled with her parents in Mills County. Was married to Robert H. Coster December 10, 1861. She was the mother of nine children, eight of whom survive her, all being present at her funeral with the exception of Effie, who died at the age of 10 years. Members of his post of Grand Army of the Republic also held their service—simple but impressive. He leaves a wife and three sons.

Anthony Hope’s New Story.

“SOPHY OF KRAVONIA,” SAID TO BE MORE THRILLING THAN “THE PRISONER OF ZENDA,” TO APPEAR SERIALLY.

Good news for lovers of stirring romance! Anthony Hope has written a new story in the style of “The prisoner of Zenda,” and even surpassing it in interest. It is called “Sophy of Kravonia” and is to appear exclusively in the Sunday Magazine of the Chicago Record-Herald, beginning April 22.

The mysterious country of Kravonia lies in the same romantic region of southern Europe as Zenda, but the new story has no connection with that of the famous Rudolph Rassendyll. Its central figure is a still more interesting person—a courageous and beautiful heroine, who rises from lowly life to the throne. Sophy de Gruche is her name, and she loves the brave but unfortunate Prince Serghius, as she proves in the most exciting events in modern fiction. Her trials and triumphs are due to the existence of two factions in the court. One is loyal to the true heir apparent, Prince Serghius, and the others seek to place upon the throne Countess Ellenburg, the king’s morganatic wife. The conspiracy leads to many dramatic scenes, one of the most thrilling being that in which the old king discovers the guilt of the countess and drops dead at a moment when things are in a perilous condition for Serghius and his bride. How Sophy comes out of this turmoil of intrigue, battle, tears, and joy, Anthony Hope reveals in his own inimitable style.

The first installment of “Sophy of Kravonia” will appear April 22. On account of the great demand for this fascinating story it will be wise to order your copy of the Sunday Record-Herald well in advance.

San Francisco, California, April 23.—[Special.]—The work of rebuilding the new San Francisco on the ruins of the old began to-day in earnest.

Thousands of men were set to work clearing debris from the streets in order to make room for piles of building material. Tottering walls were razed with dynamite. . . . Temporary trolley poles and wires were strung in Market Street.

In fact, the people are beginning to think of something else besides feeding and housing the homeless, burying the dead, and caring for the injured. These problems have been solved. Order has been restored and men are no longer hysterical.

Still there are drawbacks. Last night a cold, drenching rain fell upon the thousands of shelterless refugees in the open-air camps. The rain caused indescribable suffering among the people camped upon the hillsides and open places.—Chicago Tribune, April 24, 1906.

The deriving of vast sums from the bitter sufferings and grinding pauperism of the people is a terrible offense.—Canon Wilberforce.

The General Conference.

The conference which has just passed has been noted for its peaceful character. From the first it was apparent that the delegates and members were intent only on accomplishing what was necessary to be done, and the propositions presented were more for the purpose of eliciting information and what was best to be done than for the success of any favorite measure upon the part of those presenting them.

The word received was indicative of progress and was met with a spirit of reception and a desire for the accomplishment of that which is good. It is evidently a step in the right direction, as if we keep pace with the events of the times we must avail ourselves of the facilities which are offered to us for the taking care of our own people in our way as well as in the ways of the world.

The settlement of any agitating question among our people is a step in advance, for as we are relieved of opportunity for contention or strife of opinion by any understood settlement or decision, it narrows the area of our inquiries and makes progress more rapid.

The effort put forth by the Independence people to care for the hundreds, and we may say thousands, of visitors, was a great success. There were furnished to those who were visitors good substantial meals at the nominal cost of fifteen cents. It is true that for such a sum guests could not have luxurious dishes of any kind; but the food provided was plain and substantial and well cooked as a rule. We visited the hall some five or six times and each time we were furnished with an excellent meal, sufficient in quantity and wholesome in quality. It was served under shelter and within walls where we were not disturbed by rain or winds, nor would we have been if the weather had been stormy. The weather during the session was good, for the greater part of the time quite pleasant. A day or so of raw winds and slight rains was the only exception.

The attendance at the conference was large, more so than at any conference held by the Reorganization heretofore. The questions presented and discussed which came to a vote were all of them decided without an appeal to the yea and nay, which is rather remarkable. One proposition failed, that of amending the Articles of Incorporation of which notice was given in January, though a majority of the votes cast were in its favor, it requiring two thirds vote—failed because the two thirds vote was not forthcoming.
There seemed to be no disappointment or chagrin entertained in reference to it, it being one of those cases in which it seemed that the conference was in its favor, it requiring two thirds vote-given in January, though a majority of the votes
ing. There seemed to be no disappointment or chagrin entertained in reference to it, it being one of
there will be no preventing providence.
There was an accession to the ministerial force, of the Seventy, and at the close of the session there was an apparent intention of at once getting into the field and at work by those who were appointed.
By the advice of Bro. Rushton in charge of the British Mission, no one was sent from America, Bro.
Rushton being satisfied that for the time being at least they could manage with the local force. Conditions prevailing in England, Scotland, and Wales are peculiar and the difficulty of accomplishing much seems to have increased. Bro. Rushton was hopeful, however, of good results.
Bro. Burton will return to the Islands, it being found that this was the will of the Master, and Bro.
Charles H. Lake was appointed to accompany him.
These appointments are good ones and we trust that there will be no preventing providence.
Bro. J. D. White's appointment to the Hawaiian Mission we think will be productive of good. Bro.
Waller being pressed with difficulty with his business affairs, needs help and relief. Bro. White is well calculated to take charge in Bro. Waller's absence, after he becomes acquainted to some extent with the field.
It was deemed not best to make any change in the ministerial appointments in the leading general ministers of the church, the Traveling High Council, for the reason that the best seems to have been done in the different fields the past year that it was practicable to do, and in our business as well as in other lines of care and anxiety it is best to let well enough alone.
The net increase as reported by the Recorder—1,923 members—is an encouraging feature of the year's work. We hope that the memory of it will give vigor to the forces now sent out.
The vote to sustain the various quorums and departments of the church in their several places was perhaps the most cordial and unanimous that we have ever had, at least for several years in the past.
Confidence between brethren seems to have been more fully established and recognized, which is very encouraging. The closing lines of hymn No.
216 may well be adopted as the watchword for the coming year:

"We'll praise him for all that is past,
And trust him for all that's to come."
of suffering. Joseph Luff preached the sermon, assisted by E. L. Kelley.

The business-session opened by the singing of No. 34; prayer by Earl Bailey. President Joseph Smith in the chair.

Reports read from the Fifth Quorum of Elders and from the Seven Presidents of Seventy.

The latter presented the following resolution, which had been concurred in by the three quorums of Seventy and the Quorum of Twelve: "Resolved, That it is the opinion of this council of Seven Presidents, that a seventy when superannuated, is thereby released from the quorum."

At this point Bishop E. L. Kelley was called to the chair, the Presidency retired, and the revelation of April 14 was taken up.

William H. Kelley, president of Quorum of Twelve, stated that the Quorum of Twelve adopted a resolution indorsing the communication for what it purports to be, a revelation from God.

The quorums of Seventy reported: "The first three quorums of Seventy met according to the request of the Presidency of the church to consider and report upon the communication received by him, and the following without one dissenting vote was the action of this joint assembly composed of eight-seven men of the Seventy: 'Resolved, That we approve the communication presented to us by the Presidency of the church, and accept it as instruction, direction, and revelation to the church from God.'"

Quorum of High Priests reported that they had indorsed the revelation without a dissenting vote.

The Bishops, through Bro. Hilliard, reported that the Bishops accept the revelation for what it purports to be, willing to accept it and abide by it.

Order of Evangelists reported: "Resolved, That inasmuch as there is not present a sufficient number of the evangelists to act upon items of business as an order, we prefer to act upon the document as presented as individuals before the body or conference."

Elders in joint session reported: "Resolved, That we indorse the revelation of April 14, 1906, as the will of God to his people."

Quorums of priests, teachers, and deacons reported: "Met in joint session and indorsed the communication without a dissenting vote."

The revelation was then read. [See supplement with next issue. Owing to delay in the mails this copy came too late for last week, and the reprint from the Kansas City Journal contained a few typographical errors.]

 Moved that the revelation be adopted by standing vote of entire assembly.

A motion to take up by paragraphs was lost. After quite lengthy discussion the revelation was accepted by rising vote.

Motions to the effect that we authorize its insertion in the Doctrine and Covenants; that it be published in suitable form to be pasted in the Doctrine and Covenants and sent out as supplements to Herald and Ensign prevailed.

Song 258 was sung; Presidency returned to the auditorium, and President Joseph Smith took the chair.

It was moved that the resolutions of condolence by the Seventy concerning the demise of Sr. G. H. Hilliard be acquiesced in by the conference. Adopted.

By motion the opinion of the Seven Presidents of Seventy that placing a seventy on the superannuated list releases him from the Quorum of Seventy was adopted, after a motion to defer until the conference of 1907 had failed.

A motion to consider the names recommended by the Seven Presidents separately, prevailed.

President F. M. Smith took the chair.

Action on the following names was deferred: Lee Quick, Samuel Reiste, W. P. Robinson, and Elmer E. Long.

An ordination-meeting was appointed to be held in the basement at half past seven to ordain those present whose ordinations were indorsed.

The ordinations of those not present were referred to the respective missionaries in charge.

President Joseph Smith addressed the assembly as follows:

I feel to express to you—to the conference, all of you—gratitude for the confidence that you seem to have placed in me this day. I have now been forty-six years in the ministry the sixth day of this month. I preached my first sermon on the 15th of April, 1860.

I had no personal ambitions then to gratify, other than to lift the cloud of obloquy which had rested upon my father's name, and the religion which he had presented, and as a consequence clear the family escutcheon from shame and implied disgrace. I have had no other ambition; I have served no other purpose, but to clear the name of a professed believer in Jesus Christ, in the man... ner and form as conferred by the angelic mission to Joseph Smith and others, to keep that clean from shame, obloquy, and disgrace.

I have lived as long as I had anticipated I should. And now at the close of this conference—or nearing its close—I ask you to consider what a spectacle it is for a united people, believing in the efficacy of prayer, by their quorums and individually to ask God for light, for instruction upon that which he in his wisdom sees necessary for the occasion, and then to witness a reflection either upon him or the channel through which this revelation must come by the acknowledged records and acknowledgment of the church, of a motive to deceive. I acknowledge the safeguards thrown around the church. I believe them to have been done wisely and well by the Almighty. I have always pleaded against priestcraft—domination of priestcraft. I have no sympathy with the right of kings to rule and much less for priestly autocrats to rule. Like you, I acknowledge no authority that is infallible except the authority of God, and Jesus Christ the Revealer. And when I have reason to believe that they speak, I bow to the mandate. I have never given you a thought or an expression that I have not indorsed from my soul as a communication from God, to me, for the people. I never expect to do it. I have no ambition that drives me to such a course as that. No dollar of the church's money has ever found its way into my hands that has not been able to be traced out. I have carried the interests of the church wherever I have been. I never permitted the flag to be lowered in my presence, or by me. I do not intend to do it now, if God gives me power and strength.

So, you can see that I come before you and can honestly thank you for the confidence which you have this day renewed in me as an agent between the Master and his people. I know that some of you—I trust a great majority—realize the situation, and I am grateful that you do. Therefore I can say unto you, as fellow laborers in Christ, God give us fellowship and standing and spiritual force till the conflict we have waged is won. And if we continue, steadfastly occupying the positions to which we have been chosen, and occupying before the world as we have done, with persistent grasp upon the rod of iron, as spoken of in the Book of Mormon, we shall continue to win our way, and the years that are to come (unlike the years that are past) will witness less warfare between us as brethren, less misunderstanding between us as men and as quorums, and give us a more extended triumph in the world.

I do not know whether you men have taken the pains to figure it out, but by information from the Recorder our net gain this year has been 1,928; after all the loss that the branches may have passed through, the net increase has been 1,928.

I am pleased to be with you. I am pleased that my health is returning, partially at all events, and there may be a year or two of fight in me yet. But I do not like fighting my brethren. I do not mind fighting outside forces; but I do not like to fight with brethren. If they enjoy it, all right.

But I thank you for the kindness and the good nature, and the honest expression of opinion. I like an honest man though he may not think as I do. I do not like a hypocrite, a time-server. I think more of a man who frankly differs from me accepts a thing because I say it.

Preaching in the upper room in the evening by H. O. Smith assisted by L. E. Hills.

APRIL 17.

Prayer-meeting in charge of A. Carmichael and C. A. Parkin.

Preaching in the forenoon by E. C. Briggs assisted by Fred Johnson.

Opened for business at the usual hour by singing hymn No. 3; prayer by E. L. Kelley. President Joseph Smith in the chair.

Report from the Sunday-school Association was read as follows:

To the General Conference: The General Sunday-school Association met in its fifteenth annual convention at Independence, Missouri, April 4, 1906, at ten o'clock. One prayer-service and six business-sessions were held.

The past year has been a year of progress in the Sunday-school department. While our numerical increase has not been as great as some years, the desire of teachers and workers to qualify themselves for the work intrusted is on the increase, and consequently better work is being done. There is yet much room for improvement and with the periodical that the association is now publishing to assist in this preparation better work is expected. The publication referred to is

"THE SUNDAY SCHOOL EXPONENT," which was issued by order of the convention of 1905. The first issue began with January of the current year. Since the convention the officers of the association have reduced the subscription price to fifty cents a year, with a desire to make it possible to enter the home of every Latter Day Saint. This price will be maintained if the subscription list will increase so that the expenses of publication may be met. The general superintendent has acted as editor-in-chief. He was assisted by Bro. J. A. Gumsolly in charge of the Normal or teachers' training department; Sr. Christiansa Salyards on additional notes and information on the current lessons. She has been assisted by Sr. Callie B. Stebbins and with special contributions from Brm. J. W. Wight, Heman C. Smith, and Duncan Campbell. Sr. Lucina Etzenhouser edited a page on library work; Sr. T. A. Hougus on the work of the home department; and D. J. Krahl on the business affairs. The same arrangement of editors has been made for the ensuing year.

THE "GOSPEL QUARTERLIES."

The association has continued to publish the Gospel Quarterlies in four grades, the total circulation being about 22,000 copies per quarter. The present year there will be only three grades issued. The First Primary will not be published longer as a Quarterly, but in permanent form. The Senior Quarterly will be sent free as heretofore to all missionaries who forward their field address. Sr. Christiansa Salyards will continue as editor.

FIELD-WORKERS.

The field-workers appointed for the past year were Sr. D. A. Anderson to the Kirtland, Ohio, District, Sr. R. O. Self to Western Nebraska and Black Hills territory, and Sr. D. E. Tucker to the Southeastern Mission.

NAUVOO CONVENTION.

It was decided to hold a gathering of Sunday-school workers in connection with the Religio Society at Nauvoo, Illinois, in August, 1906. A committee was appointed to have general charge of this meeting, and the missionary in charge of that field is requested to act on said committee with the superintendent of the association and the president of the Religio Society.

FINANCIAL CONDITION.

The treasurer's report showed a balance on hand of $3,139.35. The church treasury was designated as the depository for Sunday-school funds without interest charges.

MARGINAL REFERENCES TO INSPIRED TRANSLATION.

The officers of the association were authorized to confer with the Board of Publication to have issued the Inspired Translation of the Scriptures with marginal references, and to take such steps as necessary to have the work done.

The officers selected for the year are: Superintendent, T. A. Hougas, Henderson, Iowa; first assistant superintendent, M. H. Seigfried, R. F. D. 1, Ferris, Illinois; second assistant superintendent, A. F. McLean, 52 Foxley Street, Toronto, Canada; secretary, D. J. Krahl, Lamoni, Iowa; treasurer, John Smith, Lamoni, Iowa; librarian, Mrs. E. Etzenhouser, Independence, Missouri; superintendent of home department, Mrs. T. A. Hougas, Henderson, Iowa; revising committee, Elders R. S. Salyards, John Smith, and Duncan Campbell.

For the assistance rendered the Sunday-school work by the missionaries in the field, the officers of the association are grateful. We trust that no one will slacken his efforts in this line but be as diligent in this as he should be in all lines of church work. Any one needing assistance in the organization of a Sunday-school by the way of advice or supplies will find the officers ready and anxious to serve them.

Respectfully,
D. J. KRAHL, Secretary.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, April 16, 1906.

Additional report received from the Second Quorum of Elders; also from the Fourth Quorum of Elders. The latter reported that owing to the ordination of C. G. Lewis to office of seventy they were without a president, and recommended that F. T. Mussell be ordained president, with his selection of A. C. Silvers, first counselor, and D. R. Baldwin second counselor. The ordinations were provided for.

The council of Seven Presidents reported a renewal of their recommendation for the names of Elmer E. Long, W. P. Robinson, and Lee Quick, and asked that the matter deferred relative to their names be again taken up for consideration. The report was adopted, the brethren named signified their willingness, and their ordinations were provided for.

The following from the Presidency was read:

To the Conference: In the matter committed by you to the Presidency as coming from the Pittsburg District, in regard to the question as to who shall preside at district conferences, we report:

1. The primary right to preside at district conferences belongs to the district president.
2. The courtesy which should exist in all organized bodies of the church, and respect for the general officers of the church, seems to point to the recognition of such general officers who may be present at district conferences, and would require that one or more of these might be chosen to preside, either at the request of the president duly chosen or appointed, or by action of the body given or obtained through motion and vote.
3. It would seem that though the right to preside primarily inures to the one who may have been chosen by the suffrages of the people of the district, a regard for the general organization of the church and its officers would justify the president to recognize any general or missionary officers of the church who might be present to take the chair to preside, or to place the matter before the assembly for their vote. This usage seems to have obtained. But it does not warrant, as we think, an arbitrary setting aside of the chosen president by a visiting officer or missionary of the church.

Respectfully submitted,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY, Per F. M. Smith, Secretary of Presidency.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, April 14, 1906.

Moved to adopt. After some discussion it was moved that further consideration of the report be deferred. The motion to defer was lost.

Moved to amend by inserting in the first line of the third paragraph, after the word courtesy, the words and right, and to strike out the word which. Amendment lost; original motion prevailed.

It was moved that the matter on jurisdiction, referred to the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, be deferred until the conference of 1907. A motion to lay on the table was lost. The original motion prevailed.

The following was adopted:

Resolved, That nothing in the report of the Presidency on the subject of local presidency just adopted by this body is to be construed as in antagonism to the action of the General Conference of 1884 as set forth in General Conference Resolutions, No. 279.

The chair announced as committee on compilation of resolutions to date: R. S. Salyards, F. B. Blair, and J. A. Gunsolley.

Preaching in the evening by F. M. Sheehy, assisted by W. E. LaRue.

APRIL 18.

Report was read from the organization of bishops, counselors, and agents, and from the council of Seven Presidents. The latter recommended the ordination of T. C. Kelley to fill the vacancy caused by J. C. Foss being placed on the superannuated list. The recommendation was approved and the ordination provided for.

Report was read from the Second Quorum of Seventy, also from the Third Quorum of Seventy.

The Committee on Archaeology reported as follows:

To the General Conference: None regret more than ourselves that we are not able to present a more substantial report for your consideration at the present time. We have reached that point where it is necessary for our members to meet and spend some time together. Should we be able to take ourselves from our several fields of work for a sufficient period in the year that is before us, we shall have a different word for you next spring.

Very respectfully,

W. H. KELLY,
WM. WOODHEAD,
R. ETZENHouser,
LOUISE PALFREY,

The appointments were adopted and made the order of the conference.

The question was asked if the patriarchs who were placed on the superannuated list were deprived of the right to act as patriarchs in giving blessings, etc. The chair answered that it did not affect in the patriarchal office at all; they are to be placed on the superannuated list were deprived of the right to act as patriarchs in giving blessings, etc.

The following was received:

C. A. CARROLL.
J. B. MCDONALD.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, April 18, 1906.

President Joseph Smith then made the following address:

In the appointment and the establishment of a sanitarium at Independence, here, there will be quite a number of things that will enter into a consideration. It is in the hands of the Bishop.
opric, general, and of the stake, at as early a day as practical to secure necessary land and building. It ought to be borne in mind that we must not get excited, or go to an extreme. It is a necessary institution. It is not an indorsement of any special system of medicine, not intended to be that by the church.

And the officer who will have charge, Bro. Joseph Luff, having been led up to the consideration of this question, to which I myself have been informed from time to time, and I might say privy to it, will take great pains, undoubtedly, to see that the interests of those who will place themselves in this institution for treatment shall receive that which is best calculated for them. If any one wants the services of any other physician (if they want a physician at all) that privilege will certainly be accorded them, just the same as it will be accorded to them not to take any medicine at all.

The object of this is to secure a place, if practicable, where our people may be treated by their own faith, persons of their own faith, free from harassing and embarrassing conditions, and also free from the environments by the returning to which

of many of our sick we have lost them.

I want to call the attention of the elders to the fact that some while ago I suggested to them and advised them that I believed we were living below our privileges, and that we did not strictly render in our practice the meaning of the words anoint them.

I am more than ever satisfied that this “anointing them with oil” means more than the pouring of a few drops on the forehead or head, and that it means literally the anointing of the entire body. In cases where women are to be anointed, it should be done by some faithful woman of the faith. It is not seemly for the elders to do that, as you are all aware; and I hope that you will be careful to observe the rules of propriety, if you take this I am now giving you as advice under consideration.

In cases of fever, and a number of diseases, the anointing with olive-oil, without even a prayer, is a benefit. I give you this to think of. I believe that we have lost more than we need to have done by failing to observe this recommendation. I call your attention again as I did, I think, at Kirtland: I notice that elders will be called to administer to the sick, two more of them. One will anoint with oil and indulge in a long prayer while he is doing it. The others stand by and see it done.

Now, I suggest that it is just as efficacious for you to pour the oil on, and then both of you to lay your hands on and ask the blessing, because the one standing by, after a while, lay hands on with the other, and why prolong it?

Sparrowgrass once said that good common sense was a good thing to have in the house. It is a good thing to have in the head—if it is a serious subject. We believe in healing. Let us make an endeavor this year to put ourselves more nearly in touch with those powers which are at the command of the Master, and which can be reached by the exercise of proper faith.

And as we have put up our hands to sustain the Church Physician, it may seem to some of you to have been an entirely new departure. I remember that there were physicians to the church in an early day—that early church, or that which immediately preceded this. I think the Book of Covenants—perhaps in history—informs you just when he was ordained. When I do not know, but I do know that Archibald Patten was ordained to be a doctor and physician to the church. He was a very successful man in administering to the sick, especially in administering to children.

Therefore in securing this that we are looking for, with proper management, I believe that we would secure not only favor of God to the establishment of it, but we will obtain the aid and assistance of the Spirit that should be with us, all of us if we administer in the right spirit.

I believe that Bro. Luff has been led. I can see nothing derogatory to his ministration as a member of the apostles’ quorum in undertaking this work, having the oversight of it.

Therefore I believe that we should exercise steadfast faith in God and in each other, that we may have what we are asking for and expecting.

I call attention to the fact that the History is being written by Bro. Heman C. Smith as Historian. I know my name is associated with him. He has done the work. I have been only a secondary help. I do not want to take credit that does not belong to me. I am on the Riving Committee, or was, and I have done what I could to aid him and assist him, and he has consulted with me when it was necessary. He feels that he stands in an anomalous position, occupying the place of an ap­ stle in the field and also occupying as the Historian. And now, you know the Lord has told us that when we are assembled at the conference we are to do such business as is necessary to be done. That is authority for everything that in our wisdom and in his direction he tells us to do. When the highest authority in the land authorizes a thing to be done, that is an order for its accomplishment, and everything necessary for the carrying it into effect goes with the order. That is the way in God's economy. We need the History. We need it to be kept. We need just such a man as Bro. Heman C. Smith to look after it, a man that is qualified. Therefore I am satisfied that while he is serving us in that position he is serving the church; and he is serving the interests of the work when he goes out into the field, of course, taking charge of his mission. He will do what he can. He has proved faithful in that also.

I would suggest to the Presidents of Seventy—if they will pardon for referring to it—that the law requires that in seeking for those who shall be chosen into the Seventy, and ordained therein, they shall seek for men who are able and willing to travel constantly. I hope they will not forget that. That is the object of calling them into the Seventy—not to fill up the Seventy, but for the purpose of securing in that quorum men who are qualified and are willing, and who can travel constantly.

That is the object of it.

The question of authority in certain instances has been brought before us. And I certainly trust that in the year that now is before us of conference work we will strive to come as near as it is possible to standing by the Master's side, and saying, Let the work be done; never mind who does it, let the work be done. And unless wrong comes to the body, let us be very careful how we exercise our authority. Joseph Smith wrote, I believe in a letter from the jail, that he who attempts to lord it over his fellow men in any degree, that is to be come­ to his priesthood. That admonishes us that in the exercise of our authority, whatever it may be, we must do it in a kindly recognition of those we come in contact with.

In conversation with a reporter this morning, who was questioning me in regard to revelation—now I could not explain to him all the peculiarities of revelation in my own experience.

But he remarked to me that it was a singular thing; he had been among the people, and he says, 'Your people here are all a strong, healthy, clean people. There is no evidence here of that kind of disease that we suppose usually goes with trances such as catalepsy and the like.' He looked at me and asked my age, and I told him. He said I did not look like a man that could be overcome in that kind of way.

I never was taken in trance or ecstasy; but the influence of revelation upon me has always been to quicken, to make vivid and clear.

And my understanding of revelation as we have it, is that every man stands before God upon his. individual responsibility, and his individuality never will be taken from him unless he himself consents to it. And if he does, he opens the avenues of his soul for the incoming of a spirit that will ruin him.

I would like to repeat that so you will understand it. The inspiration of the gospel of the Son of God, and the inspiration of his Spirit quickens, revivifies, and puts a man nearer to the influences of life, nearer to his Maker and the Savior than in any other period or periods of his existence. And every man standing before God and receiving of this inspiration, whether it is in the stand, or wherever it may come, or upon what occasion, his increased vitality and vigor of life spiritually is before God and his identity, his individuality, will never, never be taken from him unless he willingly opens the gate to the incoming of other spirits. And if he does that he does it for his ruin.

Now, to make a part of this plain to you, you may have noted—some of us have read it—an effort made by the scientific men to account for Mormonism upon the hypothesis that the Smith family were a family of cataleptics. In other words they were subject to cataleptic fits. I am seventy-four years nearly, and I never had a cataleptic fit, or any other fit (unless I was angry) in my life, and I do not know one of the family that ever had.

That is what science has undertaken to do for us. But the plain common-sense facts of the principle of light and instruction, and the fervor of God’s Spirit given to earnest men, honest men who are engaged in an honest avocation of spreading the gospel of peace among mankind, secures them against such a thing as that.

Now, our brethren of the High Priests’ Quorum, exercising in their right, provide wherever they are; but when they are annumon missions and become missionaries, they are subject to the missionary rule as a consequence. We have not yet reached the period when we can carry into its fullest execution the requirement of ordaining high priests over districts and setting them there. And one of the reasons for that seems to be that our brethren fail to find the requisite material, as they speak of it—they can not find presiding material. I want to tell you something here that it seems to me we ought not to lose sight of, and that is this: We pray for God to send men into the ministry. We pray for him to send the spirit of inquiry abroad, and we baptize people, get them into the church. Now why not use the element that God puts with us in the offices in the church, and take the consequences if they do not happen to preside just up to the notch? Why not do it?

Polished stones have sometimes been made of rough ones, and we have put men in places where they have been trusted, and they have developed wonderfully. And when we talk about experience, if he is an inexperienced man, throw him into the stream, and he will get experience. I got mine hard, hard. I have learned a good deal of it by being severely rubbed. And if it is of any value at all it is of value because it has been made applicable. I would not give a cent for a man with a head full of knowledge and no ability to use it, with a heart full of impulses and no wisdom to guide him. But give the men a chance. Try them. See what there is in them. Watch over them as well as it is possible to do. But let the Spirit of the Master go with the calling, and he will qualify a good many men yet for this work.

I told you the other day that I had lived as long as I expected to live at one period of my life. I have. I have lived to see accomplished what I desired when I set out in the work. I have had noble help. I have not done it alone. I have had noble help. I have been thankful to God for it. I have had men that were not afraid to stand by me when I was right, and to reproved me when I was wrong. Sometimes I thought they reproved me a little unnecessarily, but then that is all right. It goes in for experience as well.

But what I have tried to do is this: I have tried to so conduct myself and so help the general cause that if the time should come that I should drop out of the work by death or by transgression, the church should not go to pieces and become a prey of quarreling factions in the church. I hope that this may never come.

I get a little amused once in a while, and I am a little amused to-day. The word superannuated means “over age.” I am pretty near superannuated. I do not know but I might be put upon the retired list, but what in the name of goodness would you do with me? I hope you will not do it unless I get worse off than I am now.

I congratulate you upon the year’s work. I believe that we have done excellently well. I went to Washington, having been subpoenaed there as a witness before the senatorial committee in the Smoot case. You know that for the last year and a half or two years considerable speculation has been indulged in, that the Reorganization ought to have been represented in that inquiry. And some have said that I should be chosen, and should be sent there. Well, there is a proverb somewhere on record that is about to this effect—not exactly in these words but this is the effect of it: He that meddleth with a quarrel not his own is like one that taketh a dog by the ears. And it is a principle of law and legal logic that if a man intervenes in a quarrel as the third party, he is likely to get ground between the other two parties and accomplish no good.

I was subpoenaed to appear before that senatorial committee. In conversation with some of the brethren I invited the Bishop, Bro. Alexander H. Smith, Bro. Heman C. Smith, and Bro. Edmund C. Briggs to accompany me, not with any expectation that they would be called before the committee; I did not know, personally, that I would appear, though I was summoned there. But I believed that it was essential to the good of the work itself that I should not go to that place alone, but that I should have the moral support of the church, and get it from its representatives whom I might take with me. I tell you that the influence that that delegation had, though no one of us was called to the stand, was good. It was recognized that the Reorganized Church was there. It was there by its representative men. It was there to take the chances of the fight, if it was forced upon us. We found Bro. F. M. Sheehy there in the city.

It cost the church something. I have wondered that somebody has not found fault with it. I do not know but they will find some fault with the amount of expense incurred. But we did a good work, and I believe that the moral influence that was exercised in the matter, and the moral effect was worth every dollar that was expended in it. I believe that.

Now, I have detained you long enough for the present; have spoken of these things that are present with us; trust that I have not wearied you.

The Bishop stated that the trip to Washington cost the church only about three hundred and twenty dollars.

Bro. Joseph Luff made the following statement:

I want to say to the church that I have sensed very keenly for the past seven years that I was an object of criticism, occupying by the calling of God a place in the Quorum of Twelve, and yet entering upon the study and practice of medicine. I want to say further that so far as the conditions that led to my decision in that direction are concerned, they were not of my choosing. It was a matter of coercion in a physical sense. I was absolutely disqualified for the work of preaching. The way opened before me, or suggestion came to me after my last mission in the East, and I began to consider this new movement. I believed that the thoughts within my mind were stirred by the divine Spirit. If they were not, and if my leadings in connection with what has developed since then have not been those of the divine Spirit, I am not capable, nor have I ever been, of telling what the leadings of the divine Spirit are.

I have with upraised hands, fearing my own weakness and folly, asked God to keep me in his protecting hand. I sought neither money nor power nor place, but simply to be an agent in his hands, so recognized by the church, to go wherever and do whatever he might suggest, and I was ready to take whatever consequences might come from my pursuing that which was pointed out by him.

I wrote to the President of the church. I obtained his answer. I stated in my letter to him that I hoped he would think carefully over the matter, because whatever his advice to me should be I should follow it. That advice came in accord with what had been my own impression, and with the statement in it that he had received divine assurance that it was right, and hence advised me.

Since then, in the prosecution of the work, I have sought for grace to occupy, not knowing what the ultimate might be, and have believed myself all along to be led, not only in the selection of the school of medicine; but in the attitude that I should assume in distinguishing between some things that were right, and others that were wrong, in the course to be followed there. In entering upon the new work which you have by vote declared to be appointed of God, I can carry with me nothing but the knowledge I have acquired or may acquire. I can not represent anything else than that order of medical science or philosophy that I have been educated in. But as the President has said, so far as my influence may extend, and my right of directing shall be continued or exercised, no man or woman shall ever be denied the right of saying for themselves what school of medicine shall be represented in the treatment they shall receive, whether it be allopathic or homeopathic, whether it be in eclectic or physio medical, or in the line of electrical therapeutics. No person’s rights will be abridged by me; but so far as my responsibilities shall extend, they must be limited within the range of the information and skill or power that I have acquired in studying as I have done, and let it be demonstrated in the course of events whether or not what I have claimed in the past have been the leadings of the Spirit, have been such or not.

I want to say further, and then I am done, that in the years past, as I have been informed some who have been selected in the old church unto similar work have been ordained, and I presume that if ordination carries with it an endowment of power, and that power is to be of God, the calling being of God, there is no position that a man has ever occupied in this church, or can occupy, where that power is more needed than in this dual capacity or service. If any man needs the benefit of the church’s prayers, if any man needs the benefits of an endowment, of divine power, it surely is the man who is taking the first step in the introduction and execution of what will be considered by so many of the body as an innovation. And if course that settles it (?). But this testimony is only a bluff, and is only resorted to in the absence of any ability to maintain their cause by argument or evidence.

I once talked with a young elder of the Utah church who evidently had more zeal than knowledge or wisdom, and with much emphasis he called me an apostate, and when I pressed him for evidence to prove his assertion, he flew to the old stereotyped testimony and wound up by warning me that that testimony would meet me at the bar of God. Of course that did not alarm me for I had heard too much of that kind of boasting and I knew that part of the testimony was false and I believed that the whole thing was prompted by a false spirit. (See Acts 16:17.)

A good many years ago I held a public discussion in San Bernardino, California, with an elder of the Utah church by the name of Crosby. We had signed an agreement for a six night’s debate, but the second night Elder Crosby broke completely down and refused to continue the debate any longer, but as a finishing touch bore his testimony in the old way. The elder wrote to the Deseret News that he had met a Josephite and a glorious victory had been won and, said he, “The Josephite was very anxious to continue the discussion but I had borne my testimony and thought that was enough.”

Now while I have a great respect for many of the people of Utah, (having been raised among them,) and for the latter-day Seer, (and a most ardent love for the work that he did,) I confess I have no respect for such testimony. To me it is folly—it seems like foolish bombast—just as well testify that Jeremiah

Our Father, we look to thee as the author of our lives and the shaper of our destinies, the One to whom we are looking for strength, for wisdom, for life here and hereafter. And at the close of our conference we look to thee and place ourselves under thy divine protection and care, and ask thee to so strengthen us for the duties that are devolving upon us that we shall be able to faithfully carry them out as thou hast intended we should.

Be with us in our parting. Be with us in our labors. Be with us under every circumstance and exigency of our missions and our callings. May our lives be precious in thy sight, and when the time shall be past, and thou shalt demand of us an accounting for our stewardships, may we be able to give them to thee in such way that thou wilt approve of them. We ask it in Jesus’ name. Amen.

APOSTATES—WHO ARE THEY?

I am not fond of controversy, especially with our friends of the Utah church, for my experience with them has taught me that they, as a people, are hard to reason with, and that when you have entirely overwhelmed them with evidence against their position, instead of a manly yielding, they will fly to their last resort and testify, “I know that Joseph Smith is a true prophet of God, and that Brigham Young was his successor.” And of course that settles it (?). But this testimony is only a bluff, and is only resorted to in the absence of any ability to maintain their cause by argument or evidence.

I once talked with a young elder of the Utah church who evidently had more zeal than knowledge or wisdom, and with much emphasis he called me an apostate, and when I pressed him for evidence to prove his assertion, he flew to the old stereotyped testimony and wound up by warning me that that testimony would meet me at the bar of God.

Of course that did not alarm me for I had heard too much of that kind of boasting and I knew that part of the testimony was false and I believed that the whole thing was prompted by a false spirit. (See Acts 16:17.)

A good many years ago I held a public discussion in San Bernardino, California, with an elder of the Utah church by the name of Crosby. We had signed an agreement for a six night’s debate, but the second night Elder Crosby broke completely down and refused to continue the debate any longer, but as a finishing touch bore his testimony in the old way. The elder wrote to the Deseret News that he had met a Josephite and a glorious victory had been won and, said he, “The Josephite was very anxious to continue the discussion but I had borne my testimony and thought that was enough.”

Now while I have a great respect for many of the people of Utah, (having been raised among them,) and for the latter-day Seer, (and a most ardent love for the work that he did,) I confess I have no respect for such testimony. To me it is folly—it seems like foolish bombast—just as well testify that Jeremiah was a true prophet of God, and that Mohammed was his successor. It would be just as reasonable to me.

I do not offer my own testimony or personal experience as evidence in this case, although I think it would have as much weight as much that has been offered. But I will say that I was born and raised in the church and have always lived at what might be called headquarters of the church.

More than twelve years of my life were spent in the city and vicinity of Salt Lake and very early in life I became acquainted with the laws and customs of that church. In Far West, Missouri, I was blessed by the martyred prophet—as I have been told by my parents hundreds of times, and while under his hands he placed his own name and the name of his brother Carlos upon me and delivered a prophecy—a part of which was that I should bear the gospel banner, and that many thousands should hear my testimony, and that many thousands should hear my testimony and rejoice in my labors, and even upon the islands of the sea I should lift up the standard of truth. This has been literally fulfilled. Although I claim nothing for this, it is a comfort to me in my old days to know that I have been able to fill a part at least of the destiny marked out for me by inspiration. But the personal experience or testimony of any individual is not sufficient to guide the church of God. The Lord has provided something better—a more sure foundation.

"To the law and the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isaiah 8:20. So in our efforts to answer the question at the head of this article I shall appeal to the law.

In the short space I hope will be allowed me, I can not take up and discuss all points of the law which might be properly applied to the question; I will therefore select one or two prominent features of it and test the matter by them, for it is true that if even one condition of the law has been abandoned or renounced—that is apostasy.

Before proceeding further let me ask, What is meant by apostasy or apostate? Webster says: "Apostatize—to abandon one's religion, to forsake principles or faith which one has professed."

Then if a society or church is organized upon certain laws and principles, and agrees to be governed by certain rules, whenever they forsake those rules or laws and set up something else in their place they have apostatized, and if there be but one man or woman that hangs onto the original principles, he or she has the right to all the privileges and property that belonged to the society or church—for the others have forfeited their rights—they have apostatized.

There is perhaps no organized church or society in all the land that has been built upon better defined rules, or with a better understanding of the laws by which it was to be governed than the Latter Day Saints' Church, and if there ever had been any doubt upon the minds of any they must have all been dissipated at a meeting held in Kirtland, Ohio, on the 17th of August 1835, called the General Assembly. As a prelude to this meeting the Saints had been told to go to the Ohio and "I will there give you my law," etc.

At this General Assembly the Book of Doctrine and Covenants was presented and discussed and by unanimous voice was received as the law of the church. That is, the Lord gave the law and the people accepted of it and agreed to be governed by it. W. W. Phelps then read an article on marriage and it also was received by unanimous vote. After it was received by all the quorums of the priesthood it was laid before the body and received the universal indorsement of the entire church. It thus became a part of the law and was ordered printed in the book, which was done.

It was like it was when Moses brought the tablets of the covenant down from the mount, and told the words of the Lord to the people: "The people answered with one voice, saying, All that the Lord hath said that will we do and be obedient."—Exodus 24:7. So the whole church entered into a solemn covenant to keep the law of God.

And as the article on marriage formed a very important part of the law I will select one or two paragraphs from that article and present them here: First. "We believe that all marriages in this church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints should be solemnized in a public meeting or feast prepared for that purpose," etc. Second. Both of the contracting parties to agree to be "each other's companion" and to "keep themselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during their lives." Third. "Inasmuch as this church has been reproached for the crime of fornication, and polygamy: we declare that we believe that one man should have one wife; and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again." A divergence from these rules is apostasy pure and simple, and no one can evade it; and it makes no difference how many or how few do it, they are simply apostates.

I open the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as published by the Reorganized Church and I find the article on marriage just as it was published by the original church nearly three quarters of a century ago. Yes, here is the same ceremony to be used in the solemnization of marriage that I have used hundreds of times when I have married people both as a civil officer and as a minister. I found it to be the most concise and complete of any I knew of and so I have always used it. It has always been the custom of the Reorganized Church to use it and to emphasize that portion especially where it enjoins upon the parties to keep themselves wholly for each other and from all others, etc.
It is also the custom in the Reorganization to celebrate marriages in public and before competent witnesses. So we most emphatically deny the charge that we are apostates and will venture that the curses hurled at us, like chickens, will go home to roost.

It is a well-known fact that the Utah church has been practicing a plurality of wives for many years and that right in opposition to the Book of Covenants published by themselves. I have before me the Book of Covenants published by the Utah people in Liverpool by S. W. Richards in 1852.

I can not imagine how the people could regard the Book of Covenants as the law of the church and at the same time be living in direct violation of its teaching, but such was the case. In all of their copies of that book the article on marriage was published until 1876. But as the book must have been a continual menace to them, Brigham Young undertook to harmonize things by introducing what he called a revelation on celestial marriage, which not only justified them in the practice of plural marriage, but threatened with damnation any one who refused to comply with it or who rejected it. I was fortunate or unfortunate enough to be present when the document was presented and heard what purported to be the first public discourse ever preached on the subject. It was delivered by Professor Orson Pratt. I also heard President Young, in speaking on the same subject in the afternoon of the same day mention the doctrine as being so elevating, prophesying that it would ride triumphant over every opposition, and he then said, "The doctrine has been believed for years although it has not been practiced by the elders," etc. If I had ever had confidence in Brigham I would have lost it all then, for I knew that he was telling an untruth and there were more than a thousand people before him who knew that he was lying. Although I was but a boy I have ever since looked upon Brigham Young as a falsifier.

This document was never laid before the people for their indorsement as all revelations should be, but was simply thrust upon them and no man dare say, No! It was simply making public what they had been practicing in secret for seven years to my certain knowledge.

The document was so full of absurdity and contradiction that it is a wonder that an intelligent person could be found to believe such a mess of absurdity, bombast, and contradiction. Yet it became the most important doctrine of that faction which was led by Brigham Young. From that time for several years there was ten times as much preaching about women as there was about Jesus Christ. In fact the three leading topics for the pulpit were—get more women—pay your tithing—obey counsel and ask no questions. Instead of performing marriages in public meetings as the law directs they repaired to the secret chambers of the Endowment House.

But here comes a puzzle. Formerly when they were reproached with the crime of fornication and polygamy they could deny the charge and repeat that part of their creed which says, "One man should have one wife; and one woman but one husband." But now what will they say or what can they say? Oh, they do not consider it a crime now but a great virtue. And not only so but it soon came to be that a man's worthiness was measured by the number of his women and the amount of his prosperity. But the puzzle is not worked out yet. The law of the land forbids more than one living companion. The law of God requires that neither man nor woman should have more than one living companion at one time.

Now comes this polygamy revelation and says you must not obey either the law of the land or the law of God—if you do you will be damned. Yes, that is just what it amounts to for it says that all that reject it will be damned. What are they to do? It is damnation whichever way they turn—"As if a man did flee from a lion and a bear met him; or went into a house, and leaned his hand on the wall and a serpent bit him."—Amos 5:19.

Uncle Sam began to take notice of their rebellion against the Government and the people were a little restless, but Brigham soothed them by telling them that no mob would ever come here to abridge them of their rights. He called all who rejected the new revelation apostates and said, "Rather than that apostates should flourish here I will unsheath my bowie-knife and conquer or die."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 7, p. 83. Brave man that he was, I can imagine that Brother Brigham would make about such display with his bowie-knife as Don Quixote did when he made his attack on the wind-mills.

The Book of Covenants with its law of monogamy must have been a continual menace to them, for they knew they were living in direct opposition to its teaching. So they simply took out the law of marriage and put in its place the reputed revelation on celestial marriage. This was done in 1876. So here is a willful turning away from the law of the church and the adopting of something else that is not only opposed to the law of God but also to the law of the land. And this practice is so persisted in that the language of the celebrated Robert Aitken would apply to them: "Apostasy, apostasy, it is written on the very front of all your houses of worship." So I think I have discovered the guilty party.

The Government officials began a vigorous prosecution of those who were living in violation of the law until it became necessary for President Woodruff to publish a manifesto denouncing the practice and admonishing the Saints to discontinue it. Just simply to disobey the celestial law and be damned, of course. Oh, what a crooked thing it is! Now if I could believe that God was the author of all that jumbled-up mess of contradiction, I might believe that Brigham Young was Joseph Smith's successor.

The Utah people are posing as being loyal or law-abiding, but their Book of Covenants says you must obey the celestial law and President Woodruff says you must not. Would it not be good policy for them to change their book again? Almost any kind of change would be an improvement on it now.

The Court of Common Pleas of Lake County, Ohio, says "you have departed from the faith of the original church." The Circuit Court of the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri, also finds that "you have strayed away from your original faith and forfeited your rights as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

Mrs. Stenhouse in her work, Tell It All, says, "Although Brigham Young hates apostates so much, he himself is an apostate. He apostatized when he left the Methodist Church to join the Mormons and he certainly apostatized when he left original Mormonism to accept of what he now is. His change from Methodism to Mormonism was not half so great as his change from original Mormonism to what he now is. So of all apostates Brigham is a chief."

I have only presented a very small portion of the evidence of apostasy that I find in the Utah church, but even this I believe is sufficient to defend us against the charge and to locate the charge of apostasy where it belongs.

I know that this will be scoffed at by many of those who were once my friends and whom I loved, but at the risk of being scoffed at and hated I say to my friends of the Utah church that what our fathers used to pray for has come. What we were taught in regard to the power to lead the church has taken place. Will you accept of it? Is there a man near my age who has been raised among that people who has not heard or been taught that the posterity of the Martyr was to lead the church? If there is one he must be deaf. Is it not true that when we played with "little" Joseph that we regarded him as the future president of the church? Yes, you know that I am telling you the truth, and where is the disputers of these things?

Do you not recollect President Young saying after we got to Utah that it was Joseph's place to lead the church and that he wished he would come and relieve him of the burden for he was tired of it? I think I know what was the matter. When Joseph came out he found they had gone astray from the ordinances of God and instead of falling in with it he in a most powerful proclamation called upon the people in the name of bleeding Zion to return to their allegiance to God and the laws of their country and to remember the new covenant—even the Book of Mormon. This struck right at the roots of their pet doctrine—polygamy. The new covenant forbade it—the laws of their country forbade it, and they were so deeply entrenched in it that they would not humble themselves and return but totally disregarded what they had hoped for and prayed for so many years. But oh! how appropriate the proclamation of Joseph the son of the Martyr, "Arise and shake off the lethargy that has bound you and lay hold anew of the rod of iron which surely leads to the tree of life."

Now, dear friends, when you are in possession of the spirit that prompts this writing you will be in a condition to be led out of the darkness and bondage of priestcraft into the light and liberty of the restored gospel. Do not reject the counsel of God against yourselves, but accept the truth for the truth's sake.

Your friend and well-wisher,

J. C. CLAPP.

"COME OUT OF HER, MY PEOPLE."

"BE YE SEPARATE."

This is found recorded in the past, long gone by, doubtless contemplated by the Savior as an essential part of man's salvation in the gospel scheme. Its teaching is closely interwoven in all the history of the church, and it is a conspicuous feature in the presentation of the plan. From the viewpoint of failure as an established fact, perhaps it is coming to be looked upon as a time-worn subject, a story twice told. Nevertheless, it remains a part and purpose of its teaching to-day as much as ever. No believer in the latter-day work would wish to separate it, as it carries with it the best conceptions of life formulated by the divine mind.

It is a very human feeling to desire associations inspired by the same hopes, the same purposes, the same ends sought for, when loyalty to the better instincts of our lives prompt us to occupy on a God-given plan.

The earlier movements of the church have afforded a chart, marking the rocks and shoals, comparatively destitute of means. No favor in the eyes of the world. Tedious and long journeys were assumed, yet were undertaken in that spirit of belief that expresses faith in its highest sense—not only to believe but to do.

A large part of the army of believers, and the probable ones that will be, belong to the class: "The common people heard him gladly." To meet the needs of life in world competition, and the manifest injustice of economic laws in the industrial life of the times, is a serious problem to confront from a temporal standpoint, a poor school for youth to graduate in, harder to solve every succeeding year. As long as selfishness continues to be the ruling instinct in the rank and file of life, they are conscious of conditions. President Roosevelt sounded a note when he said, “Every man should have a square deal.” Finite wisdom sees the swelling tide that needs a change of course to afford an anchor-ground of safety.

The economic laws of the present, and the exactions of modern life are calling out men from the ranks of the world, preaching the gospel of temporal salvation, telling the people with no uncertain sound to save themselves from the verge of a vortex that will surely engulf them later if not heeded. The ballot and political changes are presented as means of change of course to afford an anchor-ground of deliverance. They are told if they do not use them, the reason is expressed in two words—ignorance or indifference.

Three fourths of a century has elapsed since the inception of this latter-day work. During all the years of its active life a self-sacrificing ministry have been untiring in their labors, carrying the message from sea to sea, to isles and continents beyond, fixing in the mind of the obedient hearer the teachings of the Christ, and a conscious knowledge of their duty as children of the kingdom. This is an intensely practical age. Truths continually presented in the abstract lose their significance if they never reach the concrete form. Man does not want to wait till he passes the portals of this life for all the blessings promised. The laity have a missionary field to work; hence the need of a gathered condition to truly teach the saving ordinances of the fullness of the gospel, mutual helpfulness, shelter from economic insecurity, the righteous distribution of the fruits of productive labor, and the better opportunity to the laborer for mental and moral development. The teachings of the lowly Nazarene would be honored indeed. Separate and divided conditions are not the expressions of the pure in heart; Utopian thoughts of ease and opulence and all the fads and fancies of modern life can not be indulged in by the true children of the kingdom who will establish the Zion of the latter-day and make its redemption possible.

HOLY GHOST: HOLY SPIRIT.

In the HERALD of November 22, on page 1117, appears an article under the above heading; and the brother asks others to give their understanding of it. I am only a babe in the church compared with others and have never written any articles for the HERALD or any of our other church papers, but this seems interesting and of great importance, and I would like to learn all I can about it. Jesus says in John 14:15-17, “If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.” (Was not in them.)

And again, Philip preached to the Samaritans, and the Spirit of God, the Holy Spirit, did draw them to obey the gospel. “They were baptized both men and women,” and Peter and John went down and “prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (for as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus).” If God is not partial, then the disciples of Jesus and the Samaritans had the Holy Ghost and did not at the same time, or else there must be a difference, or why did Jesus say that the Father would send another one? Why another, if there is no difference? The Samaritans received a great joy, and the Father had drawn them to obey the gospel.

All seem to agree that it was and is by the Spirit of God that God draws men and women to obey. The spirit that the brethren had manifested to them while members of other churches could not be the Holy Ghost, for Jesus says the world can not receive it because they know him not. Therefore no man can have the Holy Ghost and not know Jesus. The apostle John says, “Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God. . . . Hereby know ye the Spirit of God [Holy Ghost]: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God: and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God.” Then when the brethren belonged to those churches, did the spirit of those churches confess that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh in this latter day? Did the spirits of the churches believe in Jesus that he would be in man as found in Doctrine and Covenants, section 46? and in 1 John 3:23, 24: “And this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son, Jesus Christ, and love one another, . . . and he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, [Jesus Christ,] and he [Jesus Christ] in him. And hereby we know that he [Jesus Christ] abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us”?

I do not believe that the Holy Ghost exists in the churches outside of the church of Christ, or will be given without the laying on of hands, first, because God does not acknowledge them as his, and second, it would do away with the God-given principle, laying on of hands, and no man can have the Holy Ghost without to know that it is the Holy Ghost. See Book of Mormon, small edition, page 536: “Wherefore take heed, my beloved brethren, that ye do not judge that which is evil to be of God, or that which is good and of God, to be of the devil. For behold, my brethren, it is given unto you to judge, that ye may know... with a perfect knowledge, as the daylight is from the dark night. For behold, the Spirit of Christ is given to every man, that they may know good from evil; wherefore I show unto you the way to the gospel, and that they could stand with the Church, and yet admit that because their former faith was incorrect. (Read 2 Timothy 3:5.) Try the spirit, brethren, and if the spirit or spirits agree and produce the same gifts and power, faith and assurance, that the three books bear witness of, it is the Holy Ghost. And the spirit or spirits agree and produce the same gifts and power, faith and assurance, that the three books bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost because Jesus says the world can not receive it, and because there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, they are not one, but agree in one. When Jesus was baptized the heavens were opened and the Father spoke from heaven, and the Holy Ghost between heaven and earth, and the Son in the water. (See Matthew 3:16, 17.) There must be a difference between the Father and the Son, or Jesus would not have stated in John 14:28, “I go unto the Father: for my Father is greater than I.” He must be greater in power, and the Holy Ghost is that power of the Father. John bare record that “he was called the Son of God, because he received not of the fullness at the first... And he received all power, both in heaven and on earth; and the glory of the Father was with him, for he dwelt in him.” (Doctrine and Covenants 90:2.) Now see how he dwelt in him. John 17:20-22: “Neither pray I for those alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one.” “The Father and I are one; the father because he gave me of his fullness,” (not the fullness, but of the fullness).—Doctrine and Covenants 90:1. Now Jesus received by degree and gave by degree, and the disciples had received one comforter, else not another, and if there is no difference what need was there of another? One comforter that does not abide and another that abides are not the same, as the Father and the Son are not the same person, but of each other. Read Doctrine and Covenants 76:6: “The presence of the Son, but not of the fullness of the Father.”

Much more could be said but this will do, and it is not written for the sake of controversy but because I was impressed to do so. If any good can be received from it well and good, and if I am in error I will gladly accept correction. JOHN H. HANSON.

Signs of Summer.

When the lark is singing carols from his viewless place on high,
As the sunshine hangs its banners crimson tinted o'er the sky;
When the hum of busy insects answers back the linnet's song,
When the mists have veiled the mornings.

And the rocks peep out in gladness from their drapery of vines;
And the grain-fields change their shadows like the billows of the seas;
When the leaves are all a-tremble 'neath the passion of the earth;
And the blossomed boughs are nodding to the pilgrims as they pass;
And the dawned sun is lighting up the landscape with its noonday flame;

As it waits to clasp the streamlets dancing gaily down the hill,
And the mountains blend their grandeur into softly molded lines,
And the season spreads its gladness and air;
And the clouds are fleecy whiteness, when the atmosphere is bland,
And the season spreads its gladness and its plenty o'er the land;

When the lakelet drinks the sunshine—while its mirrored gold is still—
As it waits to clasp the streamlets dancing gaily down the hill,
When the lark is singing carols from his viewless place on high,
When the lark is singing carols from his viewless place on high,
When the lark is singing carols from his viewless place on high,
When the lark is singing carols from his viewless place on high,
When the lark is singing carols from his viewless place on high,
When the soul responds in gladness and the earth is drunk with joy,
While the heart intones its anthems, joining Nature in her praise,
And perfection meets perfection in a thousand wondrous ways, Summer’s come!

With strong affection, and humanity of heart, and gratitude to that being whose code is mercy, and whose great attribute is benevolence to all things that breathe, true happiness can never be attained. —Charles Dickens.

You remember the famous line of Robert Browning, “God’s in his heaven, all’s right with the world”? That was the one source of the optimism of Browning; but the optimism of Jesus went a great deal deeper. It was the fact that God was in his earth, so that the ravens were fed and the lilies were adorned, and so that the very hairs of a man’s head are numbered—it was that which gave a radiant quietude to Christ. —G. H. Morrison.

There are occasions when speech is golden rather than silence, and when an encouraging word would be of more real value than the richest material gift. Some persons are far too much afraid of the effect of a little generous and well-timed praise. They would keep all their flowers in an ice-house. Letting in a little sunshine upon them at times would not be amiss. How lavish was the wise and large-hearted Paul, with his words of commendation, whenever they could be honestly spoken or written! —Doctor A. Thomson.

Politeness is an evenness of soul, which excludes at the same time both insensibility and much earnestness. It supposes a quick discernment to perceive immediately the different characters of men, and by an easy condescension adapts itself to each man’s taste, not to flatter, but to calm his passions. In a word, it is forgiving of ourselves in order to seek what may be agreeable to others, but in so delicate a manner as to let them scarce perceive that we are so employed. It knows how to contradict with respect, and please without adulation, and is equally remote from an insipid complaisance and a mean familiarity. —Selected.

TULARE, California, April 1, 1906.

Editors Herald: For the benefit of the scattered members of the branch of the church located at Tulare I write the following letter. Bro. C. E. Crumley, missionary in charge, made a visit to this locality in December last and found that there was opportunity for work being done here. There were only a few Saints located so as to be able to attend church; but those few, by their faithfulness and perseverance, had kept up the meetings as best they could with the president of the branch some fifteen miles away and with only an occasional visit from the missionaries.

On February 24, 1906, after due notice, a business-meeting was held at Sr. Walker’s—then the place where all services were held. At this business-meeting the branch was reorganized and the name of Lone Branch was changed to Tulare Branch. The following brethren were chosen and ordained to the offices given: Bro. John Walker, priest; Bro. Edwin Walker, teacher; Bro. A. M. Glines, deacon. New officers were elected for the ensuing year: Bro. C. W. Earle, of Los Angeles, president; Bro. John Walker, priest; Bro. C. W. Deuel, assistant branch priest; Bro. Edwin Walker, teacher; Bro. A. M. Glines, deacon; Sr. Dora Glines, secretary and chorister, with power to choose the organist.
After careful consideration and feeling the necessity of having a public place of meeting in order to place our position properly before the people, a committee was appointed to solicit means to build a chapel here. This may seem quite an undertaking for a branch so few in number, but we feel that by a faithful determination we will succeed. In the meantime we are holding meeting in a hall—room 14, first stairway west of Farmers’ and Merchants’ Bank of Tulare. The order of meeting is as follows: Sabbath-school, 10 a.m.; preaching or social service, 11:30 a.m.; Religio, 7:30 p.m., Friday; Ladies’ Aid Society, 1:30 p.m., Thursday.

A feeling of unity and good will prevails among the Saints here. Bro. Crumley baptized two and others are interested. Ever looking forward to the accomplishment of good work and ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. DORA GLINES.

CHELSEA, IOWA, MARCH 7, 1906.

Editors Herald: I have been here with the Saints all winter. We have meetings on Sunday. Have lately made a change in the presiding officer of our branch, Alexander Shimel being chosen president, and we hope for an improvement in the conditions in the branch. There are some faithful Saints and when we meet the Spirit of God meets with us and we are made glad and are edified. If all would come with the desire to worship in spirit and in truth and give obedience to God’s law they too would be benefited. The law is plain and easily understood: “Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church; and he that doth according to these things, shall be saved, and he that doeth them not shall be damned, if he continues.” — Doctrine and Covenants 42:16, Lamoni edition.

In the New Testament we will see what Jesus and the apostles teach: “We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren” (1 John 3:14); “In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil: whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother” (verses 10); “Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer: and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him” (verse 15); “And this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, as he gave us commandment. And he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, and he in him. And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he has given us” (verses 22, 24); If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God loveth his brother also” (1 John 4:20, 21); “And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother’s eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother’s eye” (Matthew 7:3-5); “For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you: But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses” (Matthew 6:14, 15).

Perhaps some one will say, “Well, I know all this.” Well, then, give heed to it and all will be well, for it is not he that says Lord, Lord, that is saved, but he that doeth the will of the Father which is in heaven; for I have said nothing but what is contained in the law of the Lord, which is perfect and converteth the soul and maketh wise the simple. — N. STAMM.

Editors Herald: Thinking of the many blessings received since stepping with my Savior nine years ago to-day into the waters of baptism thought I would pen a few lines in regard to the same.

How well I remember the day. Beautiful as it was the thought came to me, How sweet to live a Christian life; but I did not realize the duties, trials, and sorrowful days that were in my path. I have never regretted the step I took, though since then I have failed many times; but I can see wherein God has kept me these years for his service. To-day I realize that it takes every moment of watchfulness to keep in the right way. Not being privileged to meet with the dear Saints in worship except a few times in the year, one soon feels his weakness and only those of like circumstances can realize the earnest desire that one has for the meetings. In these years I have seen affliction, yet at every time I have seen God’s healing hand raise the afflicted ones to health and strength, for which I thank him.

I rejoice each day in this glorious work and pray that I may live in a way most pleasing to my Master and he kept thinking of the warnings that have been given that God is pleading with his children to come up higher and be pure in heart. I have found that these can only be obtained by fasting and prayer.

It is my earnest desire and prayer that this gospel may be preached all over the world to young and old, and that there may be many more souls brought within the fold. So often my heart goes out in prayer for the ministering servants who are daily sacrificing for this work. God only knows how the loved ones at home watch and long for news of those who are perhaps miles away. As this time is set aside for General Conference, my prayer to God is that much good may be done and that the instructions given will sink into the hearts of the dear ones gathered there, and on their return they may impart to others the good words they have heard.

I know of an assurance that this is the true gospel. I have proved it for myself and now I rejoice and am happy—thankful to God that he ever called me, and that the kind care of a loving father and mother were mine to enjoy. How well I remember when a mere child of the dear sister and brother (now in the sweet beyond) coming to our home to worship God and what grand meetings were theirs to enjoy, and how the Spirit was there to own and bless the few who gathered in our heavenly Father’s name.

I pray that I may yet tell to others more about this work and that my life may show forth the reality in the sweet service of the Master.

My prayers are for the Saints and the advancement of Zion.

Your sister in Christ,

JENNIE A. HOCKNELL.

BURLINGTON, COLORADO, APRIL 16, 1906.

Editors Herald: You will note by the above address that I have changed my location from Far West, Missouri, and taken up my abode here.

There are several families of Saints here and they are in sore need of a shepherd. Nearly all are related to me by marriage. Bro. and Sr. Inman reside on a claim near here and Sr. Sloan of Lamoni, Iowa, who worked for Sr. Emma Smith two months, has been here visiting.

My wife’s father, Mosiah Winegar, succeeded in getting the Methodist Episcopal minister here to let me occupy his pulpit on April 1, which I did with pleasure. The greater part of my time in this effort was used in showing the difference between the Reorganization and the Brighamite organization, quoting largely from evidence given in the Temple Lot Suit and Students’ Edition of Chamber’s Encyclopedia. It was the evening service and the house was filled.

I am anxious to learn the conference appointees for Eastern COLORADO so that I may confer with them and arrange for tent-meetings here this summer. They will be provided for. If they need this, would be pleased to hear from them.

We expect to take up our residence four miles and a half north of town and "prove up" on a claim of one hundred and sixty acres.

FRED B. SHUMATE

MINDEK CITY, Michigan, April 1, 1906.

Dear Herald Readers: This Sabbath morning as I was reading the encouraging letters in the HERALD I thought perhaps a few words from this part of the Lord's vineyard would be appreciated by some at least.

I do not attend Sunday-scholl and sacrament- and prayer-meeting this morning as it was my turn to stay at home with our only babe, Fern Elizaabeth, who was one year and a half old last Friday. I love to attend meeting and especially the Sabbath-school so I will be happy when the warm weather comes so we can take the little one which the dear Lord has given to our care with us. I sincerely ask an interest in your prayers that we may teach her for her salvation. She seems to be interested. How grand it would be if all parents would go to Sunday-school with their little ones. How much more it would encourage them, and how much better the children would be if father and mother were more concerned and interested about them and their affairs; but so many of the older people think there is nothing for them to do at Sunday-school. To my mind it seems like a mistake.

My husband holds the office of priest, and is superintendent of our Sunday-school, also takes charge of our Religious on Friday nights. We have prayer-meeting after Sunday-school each Sunday now, and preaching by Elder Barr at half past seven in the evening, when he is at home, though he is declining in years and was not very well last Sabbath; still did not fail to fill his appointment. We live one mile and a half from our church.

The 16th of March it was fourteen years since I was baptized.
I was sixteen years old then and have never regretted the step I then took, but am more than thankful that I obeyed as soon as I understood the teaching of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Elder William Davis of Uby was the first elder that preached in this locality and he baptized nearly all of our family. I have three sisters and three brothers; all of the family belong but the youngest brother, who is now thirteen years old. I am truly thankful for the many, many blessings I have enjoyed from my heavenly Father and am also thankful that I have always felt to trust him in the trying hours of life, and many times when earthly friends seemed few I felt I had one true friend to whom I could tell my troubles, and he has never forsaken me. I hope to live a life of devotion to God in the future, and overcome the errors of my ways, that when Christ shall come he may own me as his true child.

When I started this letter I thought it would be a short one, and though it has been written in weakness I trust it may help at least one soul by way of encouragement, and I hope that all who may read this will kindly remember us in prayer that we faint not, that we may be humble and prayerful.

Your sister in Christ,

SHARON, Pennsylvania, April 20, 1906.

Editors Herald: Last Sunday, April 15, my only child died.
It was born the 17th of July, 1905, and blessed by Bro. Charles E. Harpe, August 1, 1905. My wife died when it was only two weeks old, leaving it in other hands for care. I lost my mother, my first wife, and my second wife and child, all since February 15, 1902.

I spent last Sunday with the Saints at Wheeling, West Virginia, and, for some cause, telegram did not get to me until Wednesday the 18th, at New Castle, Pennsylvania, after my dear one was buried.

I found the faithful ones of God's Saints at Wheeling, West Virginia, striving hard for the advancement of God's cause. If we take into consideration how our heavenly Father is warning us day by day, in his many ways, to serve him, we can not help but be happy in the thought that we arc members of the great body,—Christ its head—think of the awful situation in San Francisco with its thousands of homeless and panic-stricken people! No wonder we are commanded to work out our salvation with fear and trembling, for well we might, as we have no assurance when God will demand of us an answer as he did of Job. We do not know why these things are, neither have we a right to ask. All things belong to God; they are in his

I find a nice little chapel erected by the Saints at this place, and will enjoy spending Sunday with them. Still, in my meek way, striving for higher things spiritually,

Resolutions of Condolence.

We, your committee on resolutions upon the death of Sr.
George H. Hilliard, respectfully submit the following:

WHEREAS, After long illness and suffering, endured with saintlike patience and fortitude, while cared for with assiduous and loving care, Sr. Rebecca B. Hilliard, the beloved wife of our brother, George H. Hilliard, has passed from the companionship of her choice in this condition of mortal existence to the great beyond: Married to Bro. Hilliard in November, 1883, she seemed once impressed with the duty of witnessing that which he advocated as the right; and devoted of her means in tithing thereto, before identified with the church by membership; baptized October, 1885—a helpmeet indeed. Our sister has been faithful in life—faithful unto death—willing and ready at all times to respond to the call of every duty under the covenant of peace; be it therefore Resolved, That we offer unto our Bro. Hilliard our heartfelt love and respect, and that our prayers may ascend in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

Respectfully submitted,

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, April 14, 1906.

Attest:

This is to certify that at a regular meeting of the High Friebs’ Quorum, held at the old Exeûn Building, Independence, Missouri, April 14, 1906, the above resolutions were adopted, and the secretary instructed to furnish the Herald with a copy thereof.

In bonds,

ROBT. M. ELWIN, Secretary.

Whereas, The dispensations of God have permitted the taking away of our brother, J. B. Lentz, he having been killed by a shattering blow from heaven while in the performance of duty, as a minister for Christ, dispensing the word of life, at Carson, Iowa, March 25, 1906, therefore be it Resolved, That, as a quorum, we feel that our brother’s departure is to us a real loss, by reason of which our hearts are made sad, but our sadness is made more tolerable by the thought that our brother was prepared to enter into conditions of rest and joy far greater than this earth affords. The church militant has lost a worthy member and faithful minister of the gospel of Christ. That the country has lost an honorable and honored citizen, and society an excellent member, who will be missed by many. That far greater than the loss of others is that of the family who have lost a kind husband and loving father, a faithful companion, and true friend. And be it further Resolved, That we, the Second Quorum of Seventy of which our brother was a member, tender to his bereaved widow our sympathy in her great affliction, with a prayer that God may ever bless, care for, and sustain her and her children.

Resolved, further, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the family of the deceased, and also a copy to the Saints’ Herald and Zion’s Ensign.

Respectfully submitted,

C. KELLEY,
F. J. CHATSRUN, FREDERICK GREGORY,
Committee.

A $150,000.00 Series of Novels.

The foremost literary novelty of the century has been secured by the Des Moines Sunday Register and Leader. Twelve of the best-known living writers—six Englishmen and six American women—have each written a new novel which will appear serially in the Sunday Register and Leader during the next twelve months.

The American women novelists represented are Anna Katharine Green, Mrs. Craigie (John Oliver Hobbes), Amelia E. Barr, Mary E. Wilkins Freeman, Mrs. Burton Harrison, and Gertrude Atherton.

The six English novelists are Ian Maclaren, Max Pemberton, Eden Phillpotts, Robert Barr, E. F. Benson, and Cuthliffe Hyne. Each novel can supply no more famous contemporary names than the foregoing, and the novels they have written for the Sunday Register and Leader are examples of their highest and most brilliant work. Each novel will run serially for one month, beginning with the first and concluding with the last Sunday.

The first of this great international series will be “A Rock in the Baltic,” by Robert Barr, which begins in the Sunday Register and Leader Sunday, May 6.

The April Arena will be especially attractive to friends of the Single-Tax, as it contains a very interesting and lucid chapter on the Single-Tax by Mr. John Z. White, and also a full-page half-tone portrait of Mr. White. An extended editorial considers... the admirable letter recently addressed by Mayor Johnson to the Cleveland clergymen in response to their criticism of him. In this editorial Mr. Flower makes an appeal to the clergymen of America to act on the Mayor's suggestions and engage in an earnest crusade for the bettering of social conditions. In view of the crusade inaugurated by certain Cleveland clergymen against Mayor Johnson, after he had addressed the letter to them, the editor of the Arena addressed communications to Horace E. C. Hove, Rev. R. H. Corrigan, and Professor Edward Bemis propounding questions relating to social conditions and other points at issue. The answers from these three distinguished gentlemen also appear in this issue of the Arena. Professor Bemis has written some of the most extended and forceful of his essays in his answers to Mayor Johnson, after he had addressed the letter to them, the editor of the Arena, Mr. Flower. The book-study of the month is an extended review of "The Menace of Privilege," by Henry George, Jr. Among other features of this number is one of the most striking, forceful and informing papers on the insurance situation as it exists to-day that has appeared in print. It is written by the well known New York journalist, Harry A. Bullock. Other articles of interest are: "College cooperative stores in America," by T. C. Cross; "Regulation of railroad rates," by Professor Frank Parsons; "America in the Philipplines," by Helen M. Gougar; and "Judging Lindsey a typical builder of a nobler state," (with portrait of Judge Lindsey) by B. O. Flower; "Main currents of thought in the nineteenth century," by Professor Robert T. Kerlin, A.M.; "W. A. Rogers: the cartoonist of civic integrity," (with portrait and eleven illustrations); "The color-line in New Jersey," by Linton Satterthwait; and "Divorce and remarriage," by Henry H. Harris. It is a strong number.

To us the lands and countries about the Caribbean Sea are of the greatest interest and importance. Our people will be locating there with more and increasing frequency, and all the while the ties of international cooperation will become stronger. That from some localities they may be removed hereafter, such regions will not deter us very much, for one has abundant faith that it is not going to happen to him, and a good many of our people are locating directly in range of the volcanoes, happy and prospering along with the natives.

The region is not so very far away. A few days on the steamer and one is in the tropics. That bit of yellow seaweed pilot boat, last seen at home, is on the beam and the natives, from the others was probably brought by the Gulf Stream from the Caribbean regions and carried to our shores by a southerly wind. Surely it is not a far-away country that we are considering, and it is very beautiful, sunshine and flowers; green savannas and towering mountains; torrential rivers; clear lakes, and snow-covered peaks.

The region is so vivid, and because it is beautiful, it is overgrown with the disease of travel and has become a great pest, a disease of travel and has become a great pest, and may be assured the full enjoyment of their privileges unmolested, every effort will be made by the Government to encourage the lamb抗震，但并不意味着因此而忽视对它们的保护。大西洋的狼和狮子并不是真正意义上的狮子，但它们仍然是珍贵的动物，因为它们的存在对当地的生态系统和文化具有重要意义。
Electric Traction Versus the Steam Locomotive.

Transportation problems continue to occupy a large share of the attention of the engineer. Whether it be for merchandise or passengers, the railroad is the mainstay in the transformation of motive power or the reconstruction of old routes and the opening of new ones, the best efforts of the engineering profession in all parts of the world are directed toward the application of scientific methods to this means of transport. Nearly every method of conveying goods or men from place to place appears to be in a state of transformation, and systems considered well-nigh perfect but a year or two ago are already falling into disuse for the coming of the automobile.

Thus, in railroading, electric traction is passing from the uncertainty of the experimental stage into the intermediate stage in which the question is rather the choice of system than the solving of the continuous problems of continuous currents, of single-phase or poly-phase motors, demand attention, while the desirability of replacing steam by electricity has almost passed beyond discussion. This is not because the steam locomotive is an especially wasteful machine. The recent trials of modern locomotive engines in connection with the testing-plant of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at the St. Louis Exposition demonstrate for the forest. Yet the practice has been to plant individual trees rather than groves, and the relation of the single tree to the economic and ornamental plantings have been largely unsuited for either economic or ornamental planting in the past. In this way much of the educational value of Arbor Day is lost. By leaving the work to the nearest farmer for the children to plant may be chosen. Such exercises as are desired may be accomplished by noncondensing stationary engines.

—Henry Harrison Suplee in the April-June Forum.

Scope and Use of Arbor Day.

Arbor Day was instituted in Nebraska in 1872 by Honorable J. Sterling Morton, afterwards Secretary of Agriculture, and has since made its way from State to State until provision for its observance exists in almost every State and Territory.

The central idea of Arbor Day is the intelligent and appreciative planting of trees by school children. The planting is usually accompanied by exercises, which are intended to impress the children the beauty and usefulness of trees and thus to lend to the work the value of a bit of nature study. Arbor Day has undoubtedly done much to inculcate a love for trees, and this is a most important movement for the better knowledge and the wiser use of forests.

Yet there is no question that Arbor Day can be made more practical than it has been; that it can be brought into closer touch with forestry by being made the opportunity of impressing the children with the truth of the old saw that "if the sawdust is stealable, the soil is beyond the reach of any thief." Still more common causes of failure have been the lack of sufficient care in doing the work, and neglect of the trees after they are planted. In this way much of the educational value of the work is lost. By leaving the trees unprotected from animals, insects, and other destructive agencies the intended good example is turned, for want of a little care, into a negative one.

But even when the planting has been well conceived and wisely carried out, there is often lacking in work of this nature, all reference to the larger aspect of forest-planting. The ultimate aim of the day might well be to prompt, and encourage not so much a sentiment for trees as a sentiment for the forest. Yet the practice has been to plant individual trees rather than groves, and the relation of the single tree to the forest has not been pointed out. Talks on Arbor Day have not dwelt enough upon the economic side of forestry, or have tended to give more importance of a public demonstration of the cruel cutting of trees. The effect of this has been actually opposed to the forester's teachings.

Arbor Day is the time for disseminating sound, practical knowledge regarding forestry in its broader aspect. The more active set of a few trees, without reference to the commercial utility and the protective value of forests, is but a small part of the work of the day.

That the proper season for planting is not everywhere the same. South of the thirty-seventh parallel, especially in the more humid regions, fall planting is perhaps preferable, but north of this the winter comes on so quickly that the trees have scarcely time to become established. The spring and the planting is therefore more advisable. The right time to plant in spring is when the ground has ceased to freeze and before budding begins. Evergreens may be planted somewhat earlier than deciduous trees, but the use of frost is almost as important as the season. Sunny, windy weather is very unfavorable; cool, damp days are the best. For this reason it is well to leave the date for Arbor Day unfixed, so that the best opportunity may be seized. Such exercises as are desired can follow when the planting is done.

The careful selection of trees for a specific use and situation is essential to success, and proper planting is equally important. There are numerous fistulous and fibrous roots upon the soil, trees can not be set in a rough soil at random and then expected to flourish. They should be planted without allowing their roots to dry out from exposure to the air. When delay between procuring the trees and their planting can not be avoided, the roots must be kept moist by standing them in a "puddle" made of earth and water mixed to the consistency of cream, or "heeled-in" by nearly burying them in fresh turf or compost before setting them in the earth. If it is possible to make three inches deeper than they stood originally, and to spread the roots and pack the soil firmly about them. Two inches of soil should be left very loose, to act as a mulch to retain the moisture.

Large trees are by no means always the best to plant. Small seedlings may be secured easily and cheaply, and are much more likely to live. If they are set out in good numbers after the pattern of a commercial plantation they will become in due time a true forest on a small scale.

If only a few trees are planted, as is usually the case, it is still possible to make plain the true relation of such work to forestry. No matter how few the trees, they may be made to illustrate planting for commercial or protective use.

The scope of Arbor Day planting may sometimes be broadened to a demonstration of the practical benefit of a soil inspired or near-by farmer for the children to plant a small block of trees on his land. This could be made a practical demonstration of how much work is done on a large scale.

Outside the scope of ordinary planting, it is well to bear in mind that Arbor Day is not the only day on which trees deserve the intelligent thought of the children. They need care throughout the year. Watching the planting thrive under their care, and the community to the early results of this labor, will make plain the true relation of such work to the work of the school days.

The Awakening of American Conscience.

Whether municipal corruption was worse then than now I cannot tell. That is a question which history, not a boyhood reminiscence, must answer. My impression is that the stealing under Tweed was more gross, flagrant, and direct than under Croker; but whether skill covering robbery makes it any better is questionable. It may, however, perhaps be assumed that "honest graft," at least recognized the reality of a public confidence which dishonest graft does not. And in this seems to me a chief difference between the ethical standards on this subject now and half a century ago. There was then no such universal protest against corruption as is now manifested; the question has considered principally the economic and commercial Economic Importance of Food.

Food science is founded upon and involves principally three distinct sciences,—viz., political economy, physiology (especially nutrition), and chemistry. The objects of study in the animal and vegetable substances used for food, briefly known as food chemistry. The first named, with a few references to the others, concerns us here.

From the first laws up to the present time, pure-food legislation has considered principally the economic and commercial aspect of the question. The earliest laws dealt with the adulteration of wines, beers, tea, and coffee, these being among the most important commercially, and frequently also from a revenue standpoint. In very few cases were the inert, worthless foreign ingredients added, or the substitutions made harmful from a hygienic standpoint, and this is even more generally true to-day. The whole subject of food adulteration and its control is almost entirely an economic and commercial ethical revenue standpoint. In very few cases were the inert, worthless foodstuffs, the product from report, reveals practically no substances that can be considered poisonous or directly harmful to health in any sense of the word. The nearest approach to such a possibility is in the present undesirable tendency toward the unrestricted use of certain antiseptic preservatives whose hygienic effect is still a subject of scientific debate, especially when used in bulk. The frequent reference, in the reports of untrained, prejudiced, or corrupted food-inspection officials, to such an admirable, wholesome, and valuable food product as glucose, for instance, or the many harmless coal-tar colors as "poisonous," "harmful," "deleterious," etc., arouses only disgust and antagonism among the better informed.

Considering the alarming extent to which the adulteration of foodstuffs is practiced, it is indeed fortunate that the character of the adulteration is generally harmless, except from the very important economic and moral standpoint. Were the case otherwise, the damage done to the public would be incalculable otherwise, the damage done to the public would be incalculable for April.

Fair Oaks Ave., F. P. D. No. 1.
Bro. Preston S. Morrison, at the age of ninety-three, has renewed his covenant by casting his lot with the Reorganized Church. He was born March 11, 1813, on the Atlantic Ocean, twenty days out from Scotland, and was baptized at Kirtland, Ohio, by Jared Carter in 1842 or 1843. He desired rebaptism, however, having lost his certificate, and was baptized May 1, at the Saints’ Home.

You can not feed the saints by running the church into a kitchen.—Ram’s Horn.
appointing his son, Frederick M. Smith, counselor and presiding officer of the conference now in session.

In his address on Tuesday the venerable president spoke of the establishment at Independence of a sanitarium “where our sick who may not be properly treated at home may be treated by the laying on of hands, by nursing as provided for in the law, and by such careful treatment as medical knowledge within the province of our own membership may be had.”

This, in its relation to the Reorganized Church, is a progressive utterance. “Young Joe Smith,” as the leader of the church has been familiarly called for forty years, sees, as in a vision, a sanitarium where his people will be treated as are other people at modern sanitariums. He sees his fight against polygamy won, and away out in Utah sees his cousin, Joseph F. Smith, president of the other Mormon church, reorganizing his council to exclude polygamists.

There are many who hold all Mormons to be a deluded people, and who denounce the Book of Mormon as a fraud. But not one of these will question the sincerity or the devoutness of Joseph Smith and his followers. There have been many to question the loyalty of the Utah Mormons, but there are none to question the loyalty of the Reorganized Church, which sent a delegation to Salt Lake last year to protest against any church organization being dominated by priestcraft or placing religious vows before the general law of the land.”

This is the doctrine preached by Joseph Smith, patriarch of the anti-polygamous Mormons.

“THREATENED STRIKE,” ETC.

I see in the Herald of March 21, 1906, page 287, an article entitled “Threatened strike of the coal-miners.” The writer says he has but little to say in the matter, but says a great deal in a few words, and calls our attention to what he calls plain facts. Let us see if the brother knows what these plain facts are. In the first place a miner does not average the year round $1.50 per day. He gives $28 per cent of all the coal he digs and loads to these barons for nothing. He gives 571/2 pounds of every ton of coal he sends out for nothing. All of the fine coal for which you pay $1.00, $1.50, $2.00 a ton, we do not get one cent for mining. We have to give those honorable men (as our brother would have them) twenty-eight per cent for nothing. Slack, pea, and nut coal is all filled for not one cent to the miner. We only get paid for what coal goes over a 1½ inch screen, 6 feet wide and 12 feet long. So you see we are only paid for choice lump.

Do you think 53 cents a ton is too much for a man who goes down into the bowels of the earth and works under dead-falls all of the time, not knowing whether he ever will see his family again or not? If so, I hardly think you understand plain facts. And Mr. Roosevelt is fully acquainted with the miner’s situation, and the plain facts, that the barons are robbing both the miner and the consumer. The miner, at present prices, is paid 48 cents per ton, less 571/2 pounds, which practically is about 38½ per cent, run of mine. These are plain facts in the case.

FLOODWOOD, Ohio.

G. W. HULL.

The writer of the foregoing letter misapprehends the intent and purpose of the editorial referred to by him in the Herald for March 21. The intention was not to take side with either the “coal barons” or the miners as a class, but simply to call attention to the fact, which is a fact, that the consumers are the ones who must necessarily meet the cost of producing the coal and putting it upon the market, no matter what its quality.

It is natural that the coal operator should not mine his coal for the public and sell it at less than the cost of its production. He must necessarily put a price upon his coal that will cover all the expenses and leave him a margin greater or lesser. It is also true that manufacturers who use coal as a source of power must necessarily put the cost of their coal upon the price of the article which they manufacture and make the consumer pay for it in the price of the article purchased by him. It was with no intent to find fault with the miner that the editorial was written, and we give place to the brother’s letter to indicate that we had no desire to find fault with the miner for striving to secure the best price for his labor that he possibly can. It is little enough, and in many instances altogether too little, that he gets for his toil, laboring as he does in danger at the risk of life at all times.

There were but two facts of any particular importance in the article, and those were that whatever might be the rise in the price of coal produced by the miner, the operator puts that rise on the coal he offers to the public for sale. The second fact was, that it was the consumers—those who use the coal, whether they be rich or poor—who pay the price and meet the expense.

We trust that right and just measures will be adopted by which both parties to the controversy may reach a conclusion for peace and not strife. Our sympathy is with the poor man, whatever his condition in life may be.

AGAINST SMOOT.

The following is the latest in the Smoot case:

Senator Burrows, chairman of the committee on privileges and elections, is preparing a report on the Smoot case, which will declare Senator Smoot disqualified and his seat vacant. The chairman expects to command eight or nine votes for his report—a majority of the committee. If he does there probably will be two minority reports, one holding that the Utah senator is not disqualified, and another, by Mr. Bailey of Texas, holding that the Utah senator can not be excluded by a majority vote, but must be expelled by a two-thirds vote. It is reported that the Democrats in the committee to a man are in favor of ousting Smoot. A majority of the Republicans are supposed to favor his retaining his seat.—Chicago Tribune, April 25, 1906.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We have received a copy of the Daily Dispatch, of Manchester, England, issue of April 16, 1906, in which there appears about a half-column article under the head of “Revival by Latter Day Saints,” in which the difference between the Reorganized Church and the Utah Mormons is clearly pointed out, showing that polygamy is a characteristic of the Utah Mormons, while it has always been repudiated by the Reorganized Church or true Latter Day Saint Church. The Dispatch speaks of the annual conference of the Manchester District, at which Bro. Rushton was present. Bro. Rushton has evidently given the Dispatch reporters some pointers on the true history of Latter Day Saintism. We are glad to see the difference of the two churches continually pointed out.

GRACELAND NOTES.

The trustees of Graceland College are ready to consider applications for positions on the faculty of that institution for the year 1906-1907. There will be some vacancies to fill, and it is desired that those who are in a position to assist in the educational work of the church communicate at once with F. B. Blair, secretary, Lamoni, Iowa, and full information will be furnished. The College has done splendid work the past year, and every effort will be put forth to maintain the high standard that has been reached.

CORRECTION.

In the list of appointments published last week the appointment of C. H. Lake read “Eastern Mission,” whereas it should have read, “Society Island Mission.”

The name of W. D. Bullard was omitted from the list of appointees by an oversight. Bro. Bullard was appointed to labor in the Far West District, Missouri.

Lord, when shall Zion be redeemed,
Her children gathered home?
When shall her splendor be revealed,
Her glory on earth be shown?
When shall the weak and waiting poor,
Receive their just award?
How long shall they their pains endure,
As exiles from their Lord?

When shall the wolf and trusting lamb,
Enjoy a safe retreat?
When shall the cow and bear combine,
In harmony complete?
When shall the serpent lose his sting,
The child in safety play
Where now it is a dang’rous thing,
To tread where reptiles lay?

When shall the world find its repose,
Its creatures dwell in peace?
When shall the heavens their light disclose
That sin on earth may cease?
Thou hast declared in ancient days,
That wondrous works thou wouldst display
To bring millennium’s morn.

The earth has lain for ages past,
Beneath its load of sin;
But rest, thou saidst, it shall at last,
Then Christ shall reign supreme.
Oh, hasten, Lord, the welcome time,
When Zion’s light shall shine,
To bless and comfort all mankind—
The glory shall be thine.

JOHN D. BENNETT.
LAMONI, IOWA, JANUARY 1, 1906.

The hours of Matthew 20 stand for so many Gospel dispensations.

It was not necessary that there should be a parable to explain that people could become religious at different times or periods in life; even the irreligious are easily aware of that.

Christ foresaw the modern fallacy, world-wide in extent, that the gospel had its origin with the Christian era.

To correct this error the parable of Matthew 20 was furnished.

The fall in Eden made the gospel necessary as the plan of redemption, hence the laborers of the early morning.

Successive failures on the part of man made occasion for the successive gospel dispensations.

So long as subjects are treated by writers or speakers from the standpoint of a minor phrase or statement, speculating, or using the speculation of others, getting away from the main subject and the related evidence, bewildering results will confront the investigator who should be furnished better things.

Not only now but in the past some find their greatest difficulty relative to this parable in the statement, “Why stand ye here all the day idle.” It should be realized, at once, that in the human realm no life of labor is without limit, the life of Christ not excepted. At twelve years of age he said, “Wist ye not that I must be about my Father’s business?”

His earlier years of childhood were not so occupied, neither can those of any child be. All who live to the time that age disqualifies are limited a second time. It is self-evident, then, because of incapacity in childhood, and again in old age to those that reach it, limit is placed on every earth life, its entire span can not be covered by labor, physical or spiritual.

Why, then, make “why stand ye here all the day idle” mean an utter and literal impossibility, as related to earth-life’s span; then assume besides it means the whole span of the race?

Doctrine and Covenants 18:2: “Again, it is written eternal damnation; wherefore it is more express than other scriptures, that it might work on the hearts of the children of men.” Why not let this principle apply that “ why stand ye here all the day idle” required the whole time of ability to labor to be faithfully occupied?

That is just what it meant and no more.

The “penny a day” has been philosophized upon as unfortunately betimes. It means a penny for every one who does the penny’s worth of work, no matter when.

“They murmured” has troubled others. It represents a human element, like the strife among the apostles as to who should be greatest. All these are minor incidental statements.
"Laborers!" This means more than any of the foregoing and is easy to be defined from the Savior's works and words. He was the chief "laborer." He said, "As the Father hath sent me, so send I you." He was sent, empowered, commissioned. He so sent the twelve and other seventy. He said to them: "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest." Had all the men, women, and children of the church been laborers, "are few" would not have been nearly so significant.

The priestly office was never vested in woman, or its functions in children in their childhood.

In John 4:34-38 this same parable story is told in principle in another way. "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me and to finish his work." He was finishing rather than beginning. The fields were white, the harvest future. He closes with, "I sent you to reap that whereon ye bestowed no labor: other men labored, and ye are entered into their labors." "Other men labored." No women or children in it, you see.

Mark 12:1-9 gives it in still another way, and unmistakably clear. Matthew's early morning laborers we will call the first; third hour, second; sixth hour, third; ninth hour, fourth; eleventh hour, fifth and last.

"A servant" of Mark 12:2 corresponds to early morning, one. Another servant of verse 4 corresponds to Noah third hour, two. "And again he sent another," of verse 5 represents Moses, sixth hour, three. Having yet therefore one son, his "well beloved" Christ, (could mean no other,) ninth hour, four. "Kill him," and "killed him," of verses 7 and 8, tells just what happened him. That the husbandmen (Jews) were destroyed, verse 9. "And will give the vineyard to others," also of verse 9, tells of the eleventh hour, five. So the count of Matthew and Mark agree exactly.

Luke 20:9-16 presents precisely the same count. Christ in Luke is mentioned as "my beloved Son." If this does not mean Christ, it does not mean anything. Since it does mean him, he and others who were commissioned men were the laborers of the ninth hour or fourth dispensation, three having preceded as the count shows, and one to follow; described thus: "It is the eleventh hour and for the last time that I shall call laborers into my vineyard."

—Doctrine and Covenants 32:1. So by revelation the restoration time is the eleventh hour and last time laborers are called—sent. If the restoration time is the last time "laborers" are "called," "sent," where is the Latter Day Saint so dim of vision who could not tell the previous one, ninth hour, Christ's time, and so on back to the morn of time?

Reverting back briefly to "laborers," "call a solemn assembly, even of those who are the first laborers in this last kingdom; and let those whom they have warned in their traveling . . . ponder . . . a little season."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:19.

The "first laborers" in the restoration laboring, "in their traveling," were all men, no women and children sent out. We see, then, laborers are still men called and sent of God.

The eleventh hour is a time in the world's history, the restoration time, last dispensation, and not the period of old age of individuals.

That the times between the stated hours of Matthew 20 vary so much has been another difficulty. Well, while there is humanity there will be difficulty, but one like this is not very serious. God does not always conform to human ideas of exactitude. The seven cattle and seven cornstalks of Pharaoh's dream did not (in themselves) represent the same time, size, shape, weight, substance, or color, but were both acceptable to God to represent the conditions of two periods of time of seven years each.

Modern critics in the barren field of speculation could find many crumbs of comfort (?) if choosing that for a subject. Christ taught of shepherds and sheepfolds, fishermen and nets, sowers and fields, etc., for a purpose. He hardly expected a net and a sheepfold to look just alike, but to represent the same thing. Why not divisions of time be a little awry sometimes, though called year, day, or hour?

There used to be (and somebody will no doubt be at it again) much speculation as to whether Christ was just three days and three nights in the tomb, as he himself said Jonah was in the whale. Many other time difficulties can be discovered, and easier than settled.

Whether Enoch or Abraham was in one or the other dispensations, is of little moment. God still cares for them, Elijah and others too.

Noah tided the race over the flood, or God did, Noah being his human agent.

But for Moses, who wrote the early history of the race we (according to the record we have) would not have known of his illustrious predecessors Christ said, "Moses and the prophets." Let us abide the history we have till something better comes to view.

In conclusion, if this does not represent the facts on the subject written upon, the best correction would be the straight facts rather than a review of this. I have tried to write of the facts as related to errors in comparison, not referring to any article or writer. If there is something better let it be furnished by whom it may. Let him who may respond consider the subjects, "Eleventh hour" and "Antiquity of Christianity," by Joseph Luff in the Old Jerusalem Gospel.

That leaves speculation out. Neither does it include the Hebrew or the Greek to settle some direct and fundamental gospel fact, else we are no better off than before the restoration.

All good books are to be appreciated and used in their ratio of usefulness; but, when it is a case of last resort to the dead things of the past where one or all of the three books of the restoration affords evidence, it might well be classed a fascinating vagary of the sort Paul would call "so-called science." Wandering just that far has been in our columns in regard to the Holy Spirit.

May the blue pencil and waste-basket have their mission enlarged, even if this article suffers thereby. "Let us walk in the light," so we can show it to others.

"THE FORMER AND THE LATTER RAINS."

In behalf of things as they are, and to incite a more careful investigation, I submit the following thoughts and extracts on the climate of Palestine:

The names Louis Van Buren and Hugh Stowel have become very familiar to Latter Day Saints. It is stated that Mr. Van Buren wrote (to some one, I presume) in 1867, that, "in 1853, the former and the latter rains were restored [to Palestine], to the astonishment of the natives." Some years later, writers on the foregoing subject quote the language of Mr. Stowel as given by the Scottish Presbyterian Magazine, of 1853: "The 'latter rain' returned last year [1852?] to Mount Zion."

I have been unable to secure a copy of the magazine in which this statement is published. If Mr. Stowel is correctly quoted, he does not agree with Mr. Van Buren, who says the "latter rain" was restored in 1853. Of course, in this case, the matter of one year makes little difference, but I find that both statements are not in harmony with the published observations of others.

I wish to emphasize the fact that I sincerely believe in Isaiah 29:17: "Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field"; and in Joel 2:23, "He hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month." But does this term, "the former rain and the latter rain," refer to a literal rain that is to be restored to Palestine in 1853? or, does it, in harmony with the marginal reading, mean a dispensation of God's favor? Is it a specific statement which when generally applied, refers to both physical and spiritual blessings that are to be poured out on the Holy Land?

I believe that the old theory of a miraculous restoration of "the former and the latter rain" to Palestine, in 1853, must be relinquished in favor of a position that can be clearly proved by scripture and historical fact.

The prophecies teach us that the Jewish nation was to be rejected and sifted as corn among all people; that the beloved city was to be trampled under the Gentiles' feet; the sound of rejoicing give place to mourning; thorns and briars spring up; famine and pestilence lay waste the land, and, because of neglect, desolation was to extend over the face of Palestine. And after this condition the scene changes and Lebanon is "turned into a fruitful field"; the "land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden"; the plowman overtakes the reaper.

But what is to bring about this remarkable change in the Holy Land? Why, cultivation. Will corn or wheat grow if never planted? Does the grape-vine yield a luscious harvest if no attention is given it by the husbandmen? So we read that God is to gather Judah and Israel to the land of Palestine, and they are to build up the waste places, repair the wells, plant vineyards, cultivate the soil, and by natural means cause the land to yield her increase. Simply cause and effect. Well did the prophet say: "Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field?"

Much has been written on the Jew question. I ask permission to quote the language of M. A. Beck, History of the Jews, published in 1843, pages 285 to 288:

Of late years, there has been a remarkable confine of the Jews towards Palestine. But ever since 1832, when Mehemet Ali took possession of Syria, there has been a remarkable flocking of the Jews to Palestine. . . . The period is not very distant when the Turkish law permitted no more than three hundred Jews to reside within the walls.

Joseph Smith received the "sealed book" in 1827; it was published in 1830, at which time there was only a handful of Jews in Palestine; a very few hundred in Jerusalem. The physical conditions of the land is described in the Edinburgh Encyclopedia, conducted by David Brewster, edition of 1830, volume 16, page 274, article "Palestine:"

The beauty and fertility of the Holy Land, so much celebrated in ancient times both by sacred and profane writers, are scarcely discernible in its present desolate and neglected condition. The culture of its finest plains has long ceased. Its springs are buried beneath heaps of rubbish. The soil of the mountains, formerly kept up by terraces and covered with vines, is washed down into the valleys. And its eminences, once covered with woods, have been stripped bare, and parched into barrenness. This melancholy change is not owing to any deterioration of the soil or of the climate, but to the degeneracy of the inhabitants, who groan under the most intolerable oppression, and are exposed to every kind of pillage.

It is true, however, that neglect and waste on the part of its inhabitants would modify the climate somewhat; the absence of forests diminishing the rain and offering no resistance to cold winds; but as the editor of My Bible says:

Inasmuch as the climate in its essential elements remains unchanged—capitol, industry, and good government could yet repair the waste and neglect of centuries, could utilize Palestine's highlands and lowlands, with their climate varying from sub-Alpine to the subtropical, and make the "desert springs of water" and the "wilderness blossom like a rose."

As we know, this work is now going on. Thousands upon thousands of Jews are gathered to the land of their fathers; the silent heart of Jerusalem has been touched by the finger of Providence, and the warm influence of life is spreading over the body of Palestine.

In the late thirties, Mr. Robinson spent some time in the Holy Land. He published a book entitled Travels in Palestine. The North American Review, in its July issue, 1841, volume 53, reviews Mr. Robinson's work as follows:

The climate of the mountainous tract on which Jerusalem is situated differs from that of the temperate parts of Europe and America, more in the alternations of wet and dry seasons than in degrees of temperature. The variations of rain and sunshine, which in the West exist throughout the whole year, are, in Palestine, confined chiefly to the latter part of autumn and winter: while the remaining months enjoy, almost uninterruptedly, a cloudless sky. The autumnal rains, the early rains of Scripture, usually commence in the latter half of October or the beginning of November; not suddenly but by degrees; which gives opportunity for the husbandman to sow his fields of wheat and barley. During the months of November and December, the rains continue to fall heavily; afterwards they return only at longer intervals, and are less heavy; but at no period during the winter, do they wholly cease. Snow often falls in Jerusalem, in January and February, to the depth of a foot or more; but does not usually remain long. Rain continues to fall, more or less, during the month of March, but is rare after that period. During April and May, the sky is usually serene, the air mild and balmy, and the face of nature, after seasons of ordinary rain, still green and pleasant to the eye. Showers occur occasionally, but they are mild and refreshing. In ordinary seasons, from the cessation of showers in spring until their commencement in October or November, rain never fails, and the sky is usually serene. If, during the winter, there has been a sufficiency of rain, the husbandman is certain of his crop; and is also perfectly sure of fine weather for the ingathering of his harvest. The high elevation of Jerusalem secures it the privilege of a pure atmosphere; nor does the heat of summer ever become oppressive, except during the occasional prevalence of the south wind or s'irocco. In autumn, the whole land has become dry and parched; the cisterns are nearly empty; the few streams and fountains fail, and all nature, physical and animal, looks forward with longing to the return of the rainy season.

Doctor Barclay gives the following average of rainfall at Jerusalem during seven seasons: 1846-47, 59 inches; 1847-48, 55 inches; 1848-49, 60.6 inches; 1850-51, 85 inches; 1851-52, 65 inches; 1852-53, 44 inches; 1853-54, 26.9 inches. This gives a general yearly average of 55.5 inches, which is 25 inches above the rainfall in England, and within one inch of that in Keswick, Cumberland, the wettest part of England.—City of the Great King, pp. 417, 428; Whitly, Water Supply of Jerusalem, p. 194.

In closing, much could be said; little need be said. The student of the great latter-day work is requested to carefully study this point, and draw his own conclusion. If we build on fact, no opponent can ever tear down our structure; but error will some day be manifest.

In harmony with the prophecies, and proved by history,

1. Palestine became desolate; neglect the chief cause.
2. The Jewish race scattered over the earth.
3. Isaiah 29:12 fulfilled when Joseph Smith received and translated the Book of Mormon.
4. After 1830, Isaiah 29:17 began to receive its fulfillment, because
5. The Jews commenced to gather home and enter upon a cultivation of the land, and
6. Since 1830, about three hundred thousand Jews (some of whom have died) have settled in Palestine.

RALPH W. FARRELL.

THE BEAST AND THE IMAGE.

In the HERALD for October 11, 1905, appears a well-written article from the pen of Bro. Alexander McMullen under the above heading, parts of which I desire to briefly notice, not with a view to criticise or discuss the matter, however, but merely to present it as it presents itself to me, believing that an interchange of ideas relative to scriptural subjects is profitable providing it is not allowed to degenerate into bitter discussion and strife for the mastery.

On page 973 of the HERALD the brother makes this statement: "I believe all will readily admit that this commotion took place when Lucifer rebelled against God in the early morn of time." The "commotion" here referred to is that recorded in Revelation 12, where the war with and the casting out of Satan is spoken of.

For one I can not readily admit that the "commotion" here spoken of "took place in the early morning of time." I believe it took place in what is called the "meridian of time," when Christ conquered the Devil in the flesh, and his faithful followers overcame him "by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony." True, the things here recorded are spoken of as appearing and as taking place in heaven, but they appeared "in the likeness of things on the earth." Undoubtedly the Michael mentioned in verses 6 and 7 is Christ. He came conquering and to conquer, in his efforts to take possession of that which was created for and by him, and establish thereon heavenly conditions. He called himself "the Son of Man who is in heaven" (John 3:13), and says: "The prince of darkness, who is of this world, cometh, but hath no power over me, but he hath power over you."—John 14:30. By reason of this power over them the Devil had acted as the accuser of the brethren, but Michael overcame him, and the brethren also conquered by the word of their testimony; for they loved not their own lives, but kept the testimony even unto death. Thus the dragon, the "accuser of our brethren," conquered not, but was cast down. (Revelation 12:6-12.)

www.LatterDayTruth.org
The dragon fought the work of Christ and the church through the seven-headed and ten-horned beast—Rome. Concerning this power Daniel says:

And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven [the people of God]; and it cast down some of the host [killed some of the saints] and of the stars [leading ministers] to the ground, and stamped upon them. Yes, he magnified himself even to the prince of the host [Christ], and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down.—Daniel 8:10, 11.

I am aware that Lucifer, in order to become the Devil, must have rebelled against God in some way; but this event must have taken place before the earth was inhabited. Whereas, when the “casting out,” or “casting down,” recorded in Revelation 12 took place, another voice is heard afterwards saying:

Woe to the inhabitants of the earth, yea, and those who dwell upon the islands of the sea: for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time.

Again:

For when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth, he persecuted the woman [the church of God] which brought forth the man child.—Verses 12, 13.

It is my opinion then that the events recorded in Revelation 12 relate to the redemptive work of Christ, and the history of the church and kingdom of God from his day till the apostasy.

On page 975 reference is made to the papacy as fulfilling 2 Thessalonians 2:4, which reads:

Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God.

In verse 3 this individual is called that man of sin and the son of perdition. This man of sin is the Devil. And to me it seems more reasonable that this passage refers to that spiritual power of antichrist who opposed the work of Christ from the beginning, and not to the popes. He was to sit in the temple of God, which is, or should be, man. (See 1 Corinthians 3:16.) It may be said that this spiritualistic power is the foundation of popery. We may grant that; but we still have the Devil as the power behind the throne, as the one who reigns in Christ’s stead in the hearts of men. In the explanation of the parable of the wheat and tares this matter is presented thus:

Behold, verily I say that the field was the world, and apostles were the sowers of the seed; and after they have fallen asleep, the great persecutor of the church, the apostate, the whore, even Babylon, that maketh all nations to drink of her cup, in whose hearts the enemy, even Satan, sitteth to reign; behold, he sowereth the tares, wherefore the tares choke the wheat and drive the church into the wilderness.—Doctrine and Covenants 84:1.

The establishment of popery, or making the bishop of Rome the supreme ruler, may be said to be the climax or the completion of the work of setting up of the “abomination that maketh desolate,” but the commandment thereof dates back to the “sowing of the tares.” This spirit of antichrist was quite active in the days of John (see 1 John 4:3), wherefore he admonishes the Saints to try the spirits. (See verse 1.) And Paul says:

For the mystery of iniquity does already work, and he it is who now worketh, and Christ suffereth him to work, until the time is fulfilled that he shall be taken out of the way.—2 Thessalonians 2:7.

I think the brother is mistaken with reference to the period of time between 538 and 1798 constituting the night “when no man could work.” (HERALD, page 977.) The church went into the wilderness—of darkness and apostasy—it is true; but there was a remnant left, which although devoid of priesthood authority, yet in a sense was the church, and must have been such by reason of a measure of righteousness, small though it may have been. The Lord recognizes this fact in the following statements:

In this, the beginning of the rising up, and the coming forth of my church out of the wilderness.—Doctrine and Covenants 5:3. And my vineyard has become corrupted every whit; and there is none which doeth good save it be a few; and they err in many instances, because of priestcrafts, all having corrupt minds.—Section 32:1, 2. And there are none that doth good except those who are ready to receive the fullness of my gospel, which I have sent forth unto this generation.—Section 34:3.

In John 9:4, Inspired Translation, Jesus says nothing about the night coming when no man can work. But we have the following statement in the Book of Mormon:

This life is the time for men to prepare to meet God: yea, behold, the day of this life is the day for men to perform their labors. . . . For after this day of life, which is given us to prepare for eternity, behold, if we do not improve our time while in this life, then cometh the night of darkness, wherein there can be no labor performed.—Alma 16:30.

As to the deadly wound, inflicted upon one of the heads (forms of government) of the beast, a great deal of speculation has been indulged in, and various opinions presented; and so long as we have no authoritative interpretation of the matter, one man’s interpretation may be as good as another’s—we may all be wrong. But then we can take comfort in the thought that our salvation does not depend upon it. To me it looks as if it must have been one of the heads of pagan Rome that was wounded, because papal Rome, which may be represented by the two-horned beast, arose to prominence later and had but one head or form of government. Besides, the statement is made concerning the last, or two-horned beast:

And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast whose deadly wound was healed.—Revelation 13:12.

This seems to make it clear that it was the first beast that was wounded. Pagan Rome was divided, was wounded unto death, destined to dissolution. The Christianizing (?) of those divided elements, which may be represented by the seventh head, did not heal the wound. For:
Whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men; but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay. —Daniel 2: 43.

But the two-horned beast, representing the papacy, appears, gains supremacy, and heals the wound—restores to Rome her lost power and prestige. "He exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him."

On page 978 the question is asked, "Do not you know that the mark of the beast is that rite [sprinkling] . . . ?" I know that several have presented that claim; but, to my mind, no unanswerable argument in its support has ever been advanced. The Seventh Day Adventists' claim that Sunday-keeping is the mark of the beast has as good, but no better, foundation. Both applications of this peculiar passage of scripture are, I think, too narrow.

In Revelation 20: 4, we are informed that those who have not received the mark of the beast in their foreheads or in their hands will rise and reign with Christ a thousand years. Will anybody claim that among that vast number there will not be some who have been sprinkled, or kept Sunday? I am of opinion that there will be quite a number, and that many who have been immersed will "turn up missing."

To my mind it would be more reasonable to say that "sin" is the mark of the beast. Its location in the forehead and hand may be accounted for in this way: that man's intellectual or thinking organs are located in his forehead: the hand being that member of the body which does the deed. Then, if we say that the man who thinks and commits sin has the mark of the beast, we can not misapply that scripture; for we have reasons to believe that sinners will not have part in the first resurrection.

I do not claim that my ideas are altogether right, but present matters as they appear to me. Perhaps others can turn on more light.

Peter Anderson.

HOW SHALL WE REACH THE PEOPLE?

This question is an important one, and worthy of our careful consideration. We do not believe, however, that any one rule of procedure can be laid down which will apply to all cases. A method which may prove successful, in introducing the gospel, with one individual, may fail with another. The rule that circumstances alter cases must also apply to this question. One man may be qualified for an aggressive campaign on the crowded street, another may be just the right man to stand back of extensive advertising and speak to the throng from a majestic theater, where others would fail. Still another, perhaps, would do better work in some other line, where he could only fail in others, and so on, every man to the place for which he is best adapted. This being true, a treatise upon this subject would perhaps do well to commence further back than the immediate course of procedure after the missionary enters upon his active work in the field.

A magnificent building requires a substantial foundation upon which to rest. Successful winning of men to the gospel of our Lord requires a careful preparation as a foundation for the beautiful building of a successful life's work,—successful insomuch that the evening shades of eternity, falling over the harvest-field of the world, shall kiss with restful touch the weary form and happy brow of the sheaf-laden laborers.

Without this required preparation, blank, dismal failure in the harvest-field of the Lord is a foregone conclusion. This preparation is founded upon the principle that he who offers a value to another must have something to give. The ministers for Christ offer to the world the greatest value of all wealth under heaven. So their possession of liberal quantities of this wealth, and a key to the great, bountiful storehouse is an absolute necessity. God has set his hand to perform a marvelous work in the world.

Men are called to cooperate with him in this matter. In other words, to assist. And the Lord has emphatically given us his unerring word that none can assist in this work except he be humble, and full of love. Herein is the most necessary work of preparation,—the acquiring of humility and love, thus placing the sickle of the Spirit of the living God in the hands of the laborers, qualifying them to give valuable, successful labor to the harvest.

Imagine an empty-handed laborer in a literal harvest-field! What could he accomplish toward reaping the ripened grain? He might pull up, trample down, and destroy a great deal; but in order to be useful he must have a sickle. In the gospel field, we must be equipped with the sickle of the Spirit, which can not be obtained, nor retained, in any possible way except we "shall be humble and full of love."

In order to emphasize, and burn this truth into our deepest thoughts, let us repeat the thought by reading from Doctrine and Covenants 11: 2-4.

Behold, the field is white already to harvest, therefore, whoso desireth to reap, let him thrust in his sickle with his might, and reap while the day lasts, that he may treasure up for his soul everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God; yea, whosoever will thrust in his sickle and reap, the same is called of God; . . . Now, as you have asked, behold, I say unto you, Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion. . . . And no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care.

From these words given by Him who is the light and life of the world, we learn that it is a duty to seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion; and that, be our zeal ever so great, and the flourish of our efforts ever so magnificent, we can accomplish absolutely nothing in assisting to establish the cause without the personal preparation of humility and love, and the powerful equipment of the Spirit—sickle—of the Master. The word is, that without these things none can assist.

“Oh,” but we might argue, as an excuse for some unrighteousness which we may know to be in our life, “the Lord will reward every man according to his works, and if I am just a little out of line in some ways, yet I love the work and am helping some, at least.”

Oh, delusive thought! Let us shun it as if it were a serpent; and remember that whole and complete sacrifice is our reasonable service.

Any effort short of this robs us of the possibility of being an assistant in the true sense of the word; for the Lord has said so. Failure upon our part to make a determined effort to perform every known duty works on the same principle as the man who gathers stones from the garden to clear it, and then scatters them over the same ground by throwing them at the crows, and then imagines he is doing a good work. But is he? One chance in a thousand to kill a crow, at the expense of battering down the fruits of the garden.

Again we have the picture of wasted effort in the filling with water a vessel which finally leaks it all out through just a little hole. “Oh, its just a little hole!” Yes, but the laborer who is alive to an understanding of his duty knows better than to overlook such little things.

In our life’s work, a failure to perform every known duty will result in—an empty vessel and wasted labor. A minister might do a good work before the people,—preach a grand sermon, a dozen, a hundred,—and then by reason of having failed to keep in touch with the powers of the world to come, in that humility and love are lost sight of, by one fell stroke of his in wickedness the cause is disgraced through him, and the monument of his former integrity is thrown down; and who shall say that man’s assistance in the cause of Zion has accomplished anything?

Slow progress, at the least, will be made in climbing to the summit of yonder mountain, by climbing a hundred feet and slipping back from ninety-nine to a hundred and one.

“Not to the strong is the battle,
Not to the swift the race;
But to the true and the faithful Victory is promised through grace.”

Speed and sweeping strength, in the conquest of our enemies (error, ignorance, and sin), seem not to properly claim our attention so much as careful, steady, unerring, continuous progress.

“An onward course, and steady pace,

We believe this principle of building carefully and well should enter into our plans as to the best methods by which to reach the people with the gospel, and that a proper effort to do permanent work will yield rich results in due course of time.

And while we labor and wait for the fruit of careful work to be developed by time, our patience is also in the exercise of development; and on, on we are called to press until the forming of a sturdy character, beautiful in all its parts, shall stand out as a living epistle, read of all men, and proving that we have sat at the feet of the Teacher of teachers, and therefore merit his favor.

The fact, however, that the car of truth has ever moved slowly, should not lull us into a false security, or blind us to the cold, unfavorable truth (if so it be) that recent and present progress as a body is at a low ebb. The exact scale of our standing, favorable or unfavorable, in progress is what we need to know. When we can see just what needs to be done we are better prepared to know where to commence and how to proceed.

If we imagine the ship of Zion to be facing a calm and pleasant sea, we may have her unprepared for the angry billows she must encounter. We need to know her true condition in order to strengthen the weakest parts, that she may ride safely the roughest seas, staggered nor surprised by anything, ready for every emergency, and anchoring safe in the haven at last.

If we sum up the results of trying to spread this grand gospel message, and find they are not as favorable as at a former period, it would indicate that some sail is rent or missing, or one of the engines is not doing its part; and would suggest a thorough overhauling, and rigid examination to locate the cause.

Every result can be traced back to a cause. A failure to locate the cause under such conditions would hold us in the grasp of uncertainty, semi-darkness, and doubt, until more serious complications forced us face to face with the grim results of neglect. An intelligent acknowledgment that the flow was there, and the “stitch in time,” would keep the object of our pride sailing grandly on.

This matter of the consideration of the actual standing of the body, the church, the organization, is a proper one, when speaking of the best way to reach the people. Because of the fact that back of the minister stands his personal purity and spirituality; back of these, the church as a body; back of all, the God of Israel. All these forces must combine in one perfect, harmonious whole, in order to produce the best results in reaching the people, or holding them when they are reached; and making them a part of the great, pulling team, ever growing in strength and purity, till the final glorious victory.

The gospel of Jesus Christ is calculated to offer to man the true and only correct solution to every problem of life. When we say every problem, it is without reserve in the least. Past, present, future, spiritual, physical, financial, social, each, all, and every phase of human necessity—the grandeur of the gospel comprehends them all.

Oh, that we could comprehend the gospel! Here within our touch stands this most-to-be-desired of all else under the shining heavens—the gospel. All unseen by the blind and bleeding world and—shall we say it?—yes, not half comprehended by the children of the kingdom! Our narrow and limited vision beholds only a thousandth part of the rich tints of the gospel bloom, its delicate folds breathing a happy prophecy into our thirsty souls, a thrilling prophecy of fruit yet to be, and lo—we close our eyes while the thrill of that vision sweeps every fiber of our being, and we incline to exclaim, "I have seen the gospel." Ah! But eternal truth whispers in accent sweet: "Child, thy raptured glimpse is but a taper; behold the path which is straight and narrow, follow thou on, to the greater light—eternal day."

Stepping back to the subject of this writing, how to reach the people, let us rend the veil of incomplete understanding of Christ's statement of wonderful truth, when he said: "Ye are the light of the world, a city set on an hill can not be hid." We have endeavored to show that careful, personal, spiritual preparation was one of the stepping-stones to a successful presentation of the gospel, which stone can not be left out or evaded. We also wish to emphasize the clearly apparent fact that the body, the church which men are to be invited into, must be demonstrating by actual, practical work, in easy view of the world, that she is able to unravel the knotty problems which so much puzzle the world; able to grapple with the issues of the hour successfully, thus proving her standard to be above all, her light to be greater than all. Not only must this light shine to the extent that it can be found by those who seek it, but it should be so effulgent that it can not be hid." A light which, because of its feeble glimmer or dense inclosure, must be sought out with a lantern will not fill the bill.

Has not the time come for the church to cast off her youthful attire and clothe herself in a garb fitting to more mature strength, as the saving agency among many calamities, and perilous times, sweeping the earth in this the closing epoch of God's great drama of the world?

If the church is to-day unprepared to take or keep her place as the leading light of the world, and lead on through the dark corridors of tumult which to-day stare the world in the face, and, by practical demonstration, prove with a force that "can not be hid" that she occupies a higher plane than all others—if she is not prepared for this, and ready to so adjust herself as to be enabled to invite gathering Israel in from Babylon to a gospel-regulated, financially-

The foundation of every move to establish Zion upon the only foundation which will sustain her in the coming increase of storm—the foundation of—speak it gently, for it grates upon some of our ears—equality under the law. Upon that stone we stand; aside from it we fall, to give place for others. Support the authorities how? In a more substantial way than complaining against them; or stating in testimony that we love the work.

Some one has aptly said that "the people are the ruling power under God"; and that "the Lord helps those who help themselves, therefore God without man never did anything for man." True! And the people of this church must give their leaders—the servants of God and of the church—to understand that they are awake to the needs of the hour, and ready to stand behind them in every measure which will tend to lift us as a people to the plane we should occupy.

What have these matters to do with the question of the best method to reach the people, you say? Simply this: When the missionary turns his course from Zion's center, to face a frowning world, the requirement for highest success demands that he be enabled to point hishearers to an exalted light whence he came, which is throwing an unmistakable ray around the work, and which "can not be hid."

The missionary ought not to have to carry a large supply of powerful magnifying spectacles, and go wondering what is the best way to reach the people and hold them still long enough to adjust the glasses to their noses, while he insists that if they peer closely through the darkness a light can be discerned yonder in the distance. It is clearly seen from the writings of our seniors in church-work and authority that they are not blind to the fact that the church needs to come up higher; but what can they do? Their hands are tied as long as the people do not come to the front and manifest a strong desire to more completely fulfill the will of God, and organize according to the law of the celestial kingdom. The idea has been advanced by some that as Zion has been defined as the pure in heart, therefore we must not expect to be gathered and placed in working order, under the law of equality, until we are developed to that condition of purity. It must be remembered that the gospel is the means by which men are to be brought to this state of purity; by its practical application to the life of man; and that the gospel is not complete when the temporal, or financial feature is left off. The gospel law is crippled and incomplete without its perfect, equalizing regulations in temporal matters; therefore, in that condition it could not exert its fullest power in helping men out of selfishness into purity. Selfishness has been the worst curse on the face of the earth from the beginning; are we to be satisfied or content to live to make men selfish, more and more? Yet, that is just where we stand. Selfishness, sharp practice, competition, educating men from childhood up to another, where does the church stand? There is but one answer. Is not our sin greater in this world than that of the world? They do not. Are we any more exempt from condemnation than others for treating lightly the things of God? We are not escaping the "many stripes" of him who "knoweth his Master's will and doeth it not." The marks of the lash are visible, in that the "abundance" of the manifestations of God's favor is withheld from us. The Lord said to the church, as found in Doctrine and Covenants 83:8, that their minds had been darkened because of unbelief and treating lightly the things which they had received. He said, further, this had brought the whole church under condemnation, and that this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all, and that they should remain under this condemnation until they repent, and remember the former commandments (section 42, among others) not only to say but to do the things which are written, "otherwise there remaineth a scourge and a judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion; for shall the children of the kingdom pollute my holy land? Verily, I say unto you, nay."

Again in section 94, paragraph 5, when speaking of the calamity which is to come upon the wicked in the last days, of Zion the Lord says: "Nevertheless Zion shall escape if she observe to do all things whatsoever I have commanded her, but if she observe not to do whatsoever I have commanded her, I will visit her according to all her works, with sore affliction," etc.

Once more let us read the word. In section 100, paragraph 2, we read the Saints are to prevail against enemies inasmuch as they keep the commandments. "But inasmuch as they keep not my commandments, and hearken not to observe all my words, the kingdoms of the world shall prevail against them, for they were set to be a light unto the world, and to be the saviors of men." But if we keep not the law we are as salt which has lost its savor, and is fit only to be cast out and trodden down.

These scriptures are clear in the evidence that our only safety is in obeying the whole law, and since it is a part of the duty of the elders to see that the law is kept, we would sum up the answer to the question, "How shall we reach the people," and say: Trim up the personal light, replenish the oil; then come together and put our might to work in trimming and replenishing the great central light, the organization; place it, with willing hands, upon the height of yonder hill in Zion, and come on, boys, let's go out and point the people which way to look.

For if we can keep an inspiring ray striking out points from "the city on the hill," bidding skulking shadows flee, we will reach the people, the honest people, the common people; for they are the kind who heard the Savior "gladly," in the days long ago. Let us then give that light on the hill which is to have such magic power; our earnest attention, keep the soot from the globe, burnish the lens, and the battle is more than half won.

"And now, behold, if Zion do these things [keep all the commandments—J. Y.], she shall prosper and spread herself and become very glorious, very great, and very terrible; and the nations of the earth shall honor her, and shall say, Surely Zion is the city of our God."—Doctrine and Covenants 94:5.

TRUE PSYCHOLOGY.

God can be rightly conceived of only as he represents the perfect and true, the highest possible ideals as his attributes. Man's appreciation of them can be had in a full measure only as he also may have the highest qualification that may be possible to human existence physically, mentally, morally, spiritually, and in their relative order. Evil, the opposing power, may have had its beginning in earth-life with the character known as Satan, who was a liar from the beginning.

"God manifest in the flesh is the ideal, the Christ." Whether or not there exists God or Satan, does not matter as to the knowledge of and the faculties of the human mind known to science. The writer believes that the mind, which is the spirit of man, has an individuality that is eternal and may be actuated upon under its own agency, either for good or evil, that man of his own volition may act for good or evil as a statement of holy writ declares: "Man, may do much good of himself and bring to pass much righteousness." Humanity is gathering vast quantities of knowledge; it is well to study carefully from what source it comes. "There are thousands of teachers, but not many fathers." God's highest attribute is intelligence. "Christ, the express image of his person." Man can know God only through emulating his Son. We can know God in any way only through him.

"No one knoweth the father but the son, and him to whom the son will reveal him." The more perfect the physical and harmonious, the greater the mind may be inspired with intelligence. The faculties of the human mind contain same forty-two attributes. They are harmonious as a whole as attested by science knowledge. Science has never contested that the Christ is not one of the most perfect specimens of humanity that has graced the earth since the morn of creation from a physical, mental, and moral standpoint, not entering into the spiritual realm, as science does not allow there is any spiritual realm.

But it still admits that the highest intelligence comes from the most perfect organism. When we look about from a scientific view-point, we may observe that certain ones who esteem themselves qualified as spiritual teachers are fearfully deficient in the lesser attributes. We might notice for a brief space some of the supposed spiritual teachers of the present time who still live in theory and practice.

Doctor Dowie, one of the last of the gods of human invention, some of his abnormal faculties: firmness, self-esteem, approbativeness, very large self-reliance, love of praise, veneration, combativevness, distinctiveness, language, comparison, amativeness, the secret of his power and true character. The ordinary intelligence may observe his class of followers—they lack individuality.

Brigham Young, another man-made god of whom Dowie is largely an imitator, but not an equal, though the mental faculties are very similar. Young being an usurper had largely stolen glory, a large, fine, noble man, superior to Dowie in veneration and spirituality, he became corrupt and vile through power over others by perhaps one of Satan's greatest moves in modern times, the emissary of Satan of great hypnotic power, a character who is undoubtedly spoken of by the prophet Jeremiah 17:5, 6, who besmirched the name and character of Joseph Smith, the grandest type of balanced organism that has graced the present age, physically, mentally, morally, and spiritually, who would belittle the gods of ancient art, and stands alone as an ideal type of modern times, misknown and misunderstood through Satan's master-worker, Brigham Young. Bishop Fallows, in referring to the characteristics of Brigham Young and file leaders in the gallery of immortals in Salt Lake, refers to some of the leading characteristics of these perverted religionists. He designates the animal propensities, noting, however, that Joseph Smith was of a superior type. He in truth has no place in their midst. It is known to science that perverted religion under hypnotic suggestion appeals to the emotional and leads to moral depravity. Hypnotism can not be analyzed on scientific principles. Some theologians study it for application with marked results. It does not appeal to the intelligence and is therefore not a scientific truth. Science is classified knowledge; hypnotism is not, nor ever can be. Reverend D. L. Moody, the great evangelist, had considerable harmony in the temperaments, and is spoken of as being very magnetic—hypnotic. He undoubtedly did a great deal of good in a moral way that may have led to spirituality under cultivation of those of lower organism. He was very blunt in his suggestions as designated in his temperament, mental, vital, and motive, strong. Was very emotional and positive, carrying great conviction to low humanity. Was a great student of human nature, wherein lay his great power. His acquisitiveness gave him good business qualities, but was no doubt detrimental to his spiritual discernment. He had large veneration, was not an investigator, would be as apt to be zealous in the wrong as the right. His predictions proved untrue, being neither prophet nor seer. Men such as Spurgeon, Beecher, Abbott, Gough, Thomas, Hillis, Fallows, and numbers of others have never come in near touch with the infinite to give to the world a direct spark of inspiration, but have relied on past ages and borrowed their testimony. Others in large numbers, who have left their foot-prints on the pages of history of the past decade, might be examined as to temperament, who have had zeal for truth without understanding.

There is no doubt that mankind in their present condition have great opportunity for advancement. The breeding of a better race by careful study and selection—some are even becoming radical and restrictive as to the propagation of certain low types of humanity who must either be assimilated or excluded. America can stand at the head of nations, because of the people's individuality. This faculty should not be discouraged, but carefully guarded. A weaker mind should not be allowed to be bamboozled and toyed with by psychological devils with hypnotic suggestion to bemuddle the mind of the deficient. The United States should abolish the practice as has Germany. There is no motive in it for good. The development of the faculties for harmonious accomplishment and the acquirement of the highest type of Godliness is to enlighten the deficiencies, that the mind may know of the infinite of itself. The spirit of the age is influence and power. What power? Let us take heed we are not deceived. God's power as suggested through the most perfect organism will be the only true teacher in the coming ages. No prodigy will then pose to enlighten. Science then will not be able, as now, to combine certain groups of faculties to designate a certain cult, creed, or dogma, which is positively human or less than human in its intelligence. They will have been abolished, gone with the winds and buried in oblivion. Human advancements shall have produced the perfect soul under God's willing assistance, a balanced organism, with its higher attributes, harmonious heart's love, supreme and magic in an emancipated being fit to dwell on a redeemed and glorified earth, when commercialism has long abondoned the realm of the spirit, because it is no longer possible to make merchandise of God's heritage, when the mythical heaven, the skies, has vanished in the realism that God's kingdom has come and his will done on earth, when we may abide in his presence eternally, when body and spirit, which is the soul, shall have been inseparably connected wherein it receiveth a fullness of joy, perfected by the psychological suggestion (without hindrance) by the most perfect entity that has graced the world since the morn of creation—Jesus of Nazareth. Ages may roll before his work may have been completed, when all souls, who will, may be presented faultless before the throne of the great God.—Synopsis by H. J. Atkins, in Aurora News, June 30, 1904.

THE MYSTERIES OF THE OCEAN-BED.

The disaster which happened to the French vessel Sulley not so very long ago, when it went to the bottom not far from Saigon, has offered the divers intrusted with examination of the submerged ship opportunities for making exhaustive and important explorations of the bottom of the sea. In these fields of sub-aqueous exploration special distinction has been won by a young naval engineer named De Plury, who by the aid of an apparatus of his own invention, succeeded in reaching a depth of more than three hundred and thirty-six feet—a depth which had never before been attained.

De Plury has invented a kind of metal armor which affords him every protection, while by means of a special chemical combination, respiration is automatically provided for. Thanks to this, he has already made over one hundred and fifteen most daring descents with perfect safety. He has thus been able to discover a most marvelous world, hitherto seen by no eye but his; the sea bed is a scene of marvels combined with no small amount of tragic horrors.

"The first sensation experienced," said this intrepid diver at a recent interview with an Italian journalist, "is something like that which is felt on descending into a mine, but you soon get accustomed to it. At a depth of about nine feet medusae begins to be found in large quantities. Seen through the water, everything appears magnified, and they are apparently of enormous proportions. All recollection of the protection afforded by the glass front of the helmet is forgotten, and the first impression is that these masses of horrid flaccid and slimy medusae will adhere to your face.

"At a depth of about 162 feet thick masses of seaweed are traversed; some of these are hair-like vegetable growths, with arms from 20 to 30 yards in length, which, with a kind of horrid vitality, wrap themselves around every part of the body. These algae constitute a grave danger, as they can easily paralyze the diver's movements and, by rising up above and around him, can weigh him down with a weight amounting to several hundredweight—sufficient to break a rope or life-line when hauled on. Below 162 feet there are small snake-like fishes of about three feet in length, and also other denizens of the deep resembling dolphins. These latter hurl themselves violently against the dolphins. If, as already remarked, he is somewhat young at the game, and has forgotten the protection afforded by his helmet, he is still filled with a mortal dread lest they should succeed in smashing the glass front of the helmet despite its four inches of thickness. Of course, should that occur, death would be almost instantaneous.

"Still other and worse monsters are the polypi or devil-fish, who wrap their tiny tentacles round the bold explorer; but although repugnant, these monsters are cowardly, and immediately renounce their attack on coming in contact with the unfamiliar feel of the metal armor of my diving-dress. There are also equally horrible, and much more intrepid, giant crabs. Some of those I have seen have measured as much as three feet in diameter. Due to their strong shells and formidable claws, they constitute a continual menace to the diver, which is by no means to be despised. This is about all that can be said on the score of the deep-sea fauna. The deformation of fish is not very noticeable at such a small depth; by deformation I mean not only change of form, but also of character. This takes place at a depth of about 1,094 yards; here their nature changes entirely, and they assume the forms and constitutional modifications necessary to enable them to bear the enormous pressure to which they are subjected at the depth where they move and have their being.
"Hitherto it has been quite impossible to obtain living specimens of these submarine creatures, as they reached the surface with their volume quadrupled, due to the reduction of pressure. All the creatures are carnivorous, and their capacious maws not infrequently serve as the tombs of unfortunate sailors whose ship has gone to the bottom, and their bodies gradually sink deeper and deeper, while the formidable pressure to which they are subjected in an increasing intensity soon smashes all their bones, and finally crushes the corpse quite flat. But enough; suffice it to say that this awful spectacle is scarcely visible after a depth of thirty feet.

"One curious fact attending these submarine explorations is afforded by the light, which forms a strange blend of green and violet light, the color being a little similar to that of the caverns to be seen in icebergs. At a depth of thirty-two yards the light begins to get more and more diffused, and the sun viewed through the mass of superincumbent water appears like a reddish opaque globe; but—and this is somewhat strange—when sheltered from the rays of the sun (behind a rock, for instance) the stars become visible even at midday.

"One day, just about noon, I saw a never-to-be-forgotten sight at a depth of 129 feet. The sun was right at the zenith. The bottom upon which I stood consisted of fine white sand, and the reflection of the light upon the snowy carpet gave me the impression of standing upon a plain of molten gold. At a depth of 226 feet the obscurity is complete; at 327 feet the darkness is impenetrable, and it is necessary to have recourse to electricity for purposes of vision. I use electric lamps of 10,000 candle-power, but even these can not diffuse their light beyond a radius of 90 feet. A most tragic spectacle is then presented by sunken vessels, broken boats, splintered hulls, gaping decks, and broken masts."

No scenes of horror can be surpassed by the awful panoramas of death and disaster which have been witnessed by Engineer de Plury in the course of his professional experience as a diver.

"In the vicinity of Ostend," he relates, "I was requested once to examine the wreck of a vessel which had sunk not long ago. This was the occasion upon which I was assailed by a veritable horde of those giant crabs of which I have already spoken. They were at the time busy devouring the corpses of the dead sailors. One of these monsters seized me by the leg, which would have been crushed, as if squeezed by a jaw of steel, had it not been protected by the powerful armor of my diving dress. I had a kind of sword in my hand, with which I succeeded in killing two of these monsters, the shells of which I still possess. All objects at the bottom of the sea are covered with a kind of curious powder, and a terrible gloom and silence prevails. What a scene of melancholy! The floor of the ocean is strewn with bones, not a few of them of human origin! A very singular fact which I have observed is that the sea, for a certain period of time, keeps bodies in a perfect state of preservation. I once visited the hull of a vessel which had gone down with all hands. The crew were mostly asleep when the disaster occurred, and had thus passed practically instantaneously from sleep to death. So far they had not been bitten or gnawed by any fish, as most of the hatchways were closed. The men still appeared as if asleep. There they lay, wrapped in a calm and mysterious slumber. I approached, and, climbing down to the hatchways, touched one of the corpses with my hand; the flesh seemed to dissolve and vanish under my hand, leaving nothing but a grinning skeleton!

"And the treasures of the seas! Millions alone are engulfed not far from Vigo. Personally, I have never been there, but one of my men once went down there clad in the old diving dress. This was before I had invented my present dress. The unhappy man died almost directly he reached the surface again; but he had had time to see several galleons lying at the bottom, with the masts still standing, and the timberwork still sound. These, of course, were some of the famous treasure ships; but I do not think it would be possible to recover them. All metals would have been destroyed by rust by now, as they have been below water ever since 1707.

"I have seen personally the vessel which, about 1808, was conveying Napoleon’s treasures to Holland, but it was wrecked in route and sank with one hundred millions of gold on board; of these, fifty-six millions have been recovered, but the remainder, as I have said, is still in the bosom of the ocean. The Prince of Monaco states that he has found near Cyprus a galley still full of objects of art at the bottom of the sea. This is where submarine boats will have such a great future before them, as, by their aid, we shall one day be able to explore unknown deep sea grottoes, rich in unknown forms of life, vaults full of untold wealth, and the tomb of many a poor sailor."—Scientific American.

The Way of the Cross.

I do not know that I shall ever
Be called to do some noble deed and great,
I only know my peace flows like a river,
And I can wait.

In darkest moments though I seem forsaken
By friends, and all that human sense holds dear,
I yet can know, it is the way that Love hath taken To draw me near.

And so I trust and pray, well knowing
My every pang and heartache in the night
Is but the sign attendant on my growing
To perfect height.

Frances Willard.

Frances Willard, founder of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, died February 17, 1898. Her last words were: "How beautiful to be with God!"

"How beautiful to be with God!"—How beautiful to-day it is To mark the pathway that she trod And know that its design was hers. She found her work; she did not know The finding was a wondrous deed; She only saw the deathless glow Of the white light far in the lead; She built, and, building, gave no thought To what was setting mete and bound, Nor that her hands discreetly wrought— She only knew her work was found. It was not toll to her, nor care, It was the duty of each day To find the sunshine everywhere, To speed the kind word on its way. By an unremitting impulse urged She gave herself, her mind, her hands, Until with her work she was merged— Now heart and soul of it she stands.

It must be so, in the work The worker blends with heart and soul The self endures through shine and murk Though the uncounted ages roll. And what she did—the goal she won— Gleams with a rare, increasing light, For it for ever rests upon A woman's soul all pure and white. "How beautiful to be with God!"—We know when now we pause and gaze At the brave path whereon she trod She had been with him all her days.

Night.

Silence.

A struggle for light.

And he did not know what light was. An effort to cry. And he did not know that he had a voice.

He opened his eyes "and there was light." He had never used his eyes before, but he could see with them.

He parted his lips and hailed this world with a cry for help. A cry that God heard, and answered with a smile.

He did not know the language of the inhabitants of the planet upon which Providence had cast him. So he saluted them in the one universal speech of God's creatures—a cry. Everybody—every one of God's children—understands that.

Nobody knew whence he came. Some one said, "He came from heaven." They did not even know the name of the little life that came throbbing out of the darkness into the light. They had only said, "If it should be a boy," and "If it should be a girl." They did not know.

And the baby himself knew as little about it as did the learned people gathered to welcome him. He heard them speak, and play is apt to make anybody cry.

He had never used his ears until now, but he could hear with them. "A good cry," some one said. He did not understand the words, but kept on crying.

Possibly he had never entertained any conception of the world into whose citizenship he was now received, but evidently he did not like it. The noises of it were harsh to his sensitive ears. There was a man's voice—the doctor's, strong and reassuring. There was a woman's voice, soothing and comforting—the voice of the nurse. And one was a mother's voice. There is none other like it. It was the first music he had heard in this world, and the sweetest.

He parted his lips and cried because he could. First he saluted this world into whose citizenship he was now received, but evidently he did not like it. The noises of it were harsh to his sensitive ears. There was a man's voice—the doctor's, strong and reassuring. There was a woman's voice, soothing and comforting—the voice of the nurse. And one was a mother's voice. There is none other like it. It was the first music he had heard in this world, and the sweetest.

By and by somebody laughed softly and said in coaxing tones:

"There—there—there—give him his dinner."

His face was laid close against the fount of life, warm and white and tender. Nobody told him what to do. Nobody taught him. He knew. Placed suddenly on the guest-list of this changing old caravansary, he knew his way at once to two places in it—his bedroom and the dining-room.

Wherever he came from he must have made a long journey, for he was tired and hungry when he reached here. Wanted something to eat right away. When he got it he went to sleep. Slept a great deal. When he awoke he clamored again, in the universal volapuk, for refreshment. Had it and went to sleep again.

When he grew older the wise men told him the worst thing in all this world, of many good and bad things that he could do, was to eat just before going to sleep. But the baby, not having learned the language of the wise men, did this very worst of all things, and, having no fear of the wise men, defiantly threw it upon it.

He looked young, but made himself at home with easy assurance of an old traveler. Knew the best room in the house, and demanded it, and got it. Nestled into his mother's arms as though he had been measured for them.

Found that "gracious hollow that God made" in his mother's shoulder that fitted his head as pillows of down never could. Cried when they took him away from it, when he was a tiny baby "with no language but a cry." Cried once again, twenty-five or thirty years afterward, when God took it away from him. All the languages he had learned, and all the eloquent phrases the colleges had taught him, could not then voice the sorrow of his heart so well as the tears he tried to check.
to do. He never cried unless he wished and felt just like it. But he learned to laugh many, many times when he wanted to cry. Grew so that he could laugh with a heart so full of tears they glistened in his eyes. Then people praised his laughter the most—"It was in his very eyes," they said. Laughed, one baby day, to see the motes dance in the sunshine. Laughed at them once again, though not quite so cheerily, many years later, when he discovered they were only motes. Cried, one baby day, when he was tired of play and wanted to be lifted in the mother arms and sung to sleep. Cried again one day when his hair was white because he was tired of work, and wanted to be lifted in the arms of God and hushed to rest. Wished half his life that he was a man. Then turned around and wished all the rest of it that he was a boy. Seeing, hearing, playing, working, believing, suffering, and loving, all his life long he kept on learning the same things he began to study when he was a baby. OMEGA. Until at last, when he had learned all his lessons and school was out, somebody lifted him, just as they had done at the first. Darkened was the room, and quiet now, as it had been then. Other people stood about him, very like the people who stood there at that other time. There was a doctor now, as then; only this doctor wore a graver look and carried a Book in his hand. There was a man's voice—the doctor's, strong and reassuring. There was a woman's voice, low and comforting. Somebody at his bedside wept. Tears now, as then. But now they were not tears from his eyes. Then, one morning over him a had said, "He came from Heaven." Now, some one stooping above him said, "He has gone to Heaven." The blessed, unfaltering faith that welcomed him, now bade him Godspeed, just as loving and trusting as ever, one unchanging thing in this world of change. So the baby had walked in a little circle, after all, as all men, lost in a great wilderness, are said always to do. As it was written thousands of years ago—"The dove found no rest for the sole of her foot, so she returned unto him in the Ark." He felt weary now, as he was tired then. By and by, having then for the first time opened his eyes, now for the last time he closed them. And so, as one who in the gathering darkness retraces his steps by a half-remembered path, much in the same way as he had come into this world he went out of it. Silence. Light.—Robert J. Burdette in The Word and The Way. Prayer Union. Sr. M. A. Christy, Akron, Iowa, desires the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed, if it be God's will. She has been sick ever since the first of March. Bro. William Plain, of Elmwood, Oklahoma, has set aside the first Sunday in June as a day of fasting, and desires prayers in behalf of his wife, who is so afflicted that she is made to drop anything she may have in her hands.

"The wise man begins to reform the world inside his own heart's door."
Quimby of this city. Bro. Quimby has been investigating for some two years or more, and fully understands the doctrine. He is a noble man, and will be a help in a ministerial way.

The Saints here seem to be doing fairly well, and the presence of the Spirit is in our meetings.

The Saints feel real glad to learn that their little preacher was returned to them, and that the writer was permitted to stay close enough to visit at times.

The Saints’ cooperative store is doing fairly good business. One brother put in two hundred dollars of stock to-day, and still there are more to follow.

We have a fine location, and good Saints are behind the counter, such as Bro. Bucky, clerk, Bro. Thayer, butcher, and Bro. Parley Plumb, solicitor and delivery boy. Prospects seem good.

"WHEN DEATH RIDES BY.

"'And I looked, and, behold, a pale horse, and his name that sat thereon was Death."

"'And power was given unto them to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death. ... And I beheld, and lo, there was a great earthquake, and the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman and every freeman hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains.'"

"So wrote the seer of Patmos, before whose vision drifted the days of wrath that were, and those that were to come. Had he been upon the scene he could not have more fittingly portrayed the San Francisco horror, about which the world is thinking.

"Yesterday we were feeling sorry for the stricken thousands under the fiery wrath of Mount Vesuvius. To-day the pale horse and his rider are nearer home, and it is impossible that with it all there should be no questioning as to the part taken by some reasoning intelligence far removed from us.

"To deny this is to do away with prayer in the time of disaster. But it appears that men and women prayed in the streets of San Francisco just as they prayed under the fiery deluge of the great Vesuvius.

"Science will of course explain the disturbance along the theory of 'fault lines' and the slipping of the earth's crust. The contention will wax warm as to the probable influence of Vesuvius, but the simple-minded—and sometimes they are found among the very learned—will hold to the belief that some great intelligence employed these mighty forces to teach man his helplessness, and possibly to awaken a greater reverence for Him in whose hands we are as naught.

"Having once accepted the possibility of this discipline, the call to civic righteousness sounds loud—nor can any man foresee when or where the next bolt will fall.

"The destruction of property in San Francisco is said to be enormous. A great city—and proud—is in ruin. But far and away beyond property value is the loss of life—and the mental and physical shock to those who trod the furnace and will never again be their former selves.

"At this distance it is a mighty reminder that when Death rides forth there is no distinction of classes. The high and the low, the rich and poor, huddle together, unmindful of the scornful look and the caste which made them strangers in time of prosperity.

"Perhaps the world needs such visitations to keep alive the chord of sympathy about which Abraham Lincoln talked. Anyway, the proof is abundant that the world knows, not only how to be sorry, but to take the injured ones to the 'Inn,' and pay the bills.

"It goes without argument that this horror will serve as an arrest of thought to thousands who have been careless about God. Some are reading now who have determined to live different lives—to be less selfish and to so order their conduct that the approach of death by whatever course, or in whatever guise, shall find them unafraid.

Editors Herald: I wish a little space in the columns of your paper to make public acknowledgment for the wrongs I have committed against the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Being at one time a member of the church, I apostatized by denying this to be the true church, and by writing up articles against it in sectarian papers. The wrongs I have committed have been against the church in general, and not against any individual. For these wrongs I ask the church, its members in general, for forgiveness, believing as I now do that this is the only true church of Jesus Christ, and expecting to reunite with same in the near future.

QUINCY ANDERSON.

Dear Brother Joseph: One week ago to-day our city was visited by the most serious calamity of modern times. At 5:13 a.m., just after daylight, we were awakened by an earthquake too terrible to describe. I will try to give your readers some idea of its horrors. The earth and everything upon it shook in every direction imaginable, in circles, in squares, up and down, and every other way, and continued to do so for forty-seven seconds. You can realize how long that is by counting forty-seven slowly. It seemed to me like it would never stop.

My wife and I jumped out of bed and stood in the doorway, where our two daughters joined us; and there with our arms around each other we waited, calling upon God to save us, while the deafening noises of the earth's rumbles, falling furniture, breaking crockery and glass, the cracking of timbers, and falling plaster and chimneys, filled our ears with a medley of sounds never to be forgotten. One picture on our wall shifted twelve inches; another was turned completely around and left facing the wall; our heavy piano moved three feet; one bookcase facing north had all the books thrown out on the floor. Two cases facing the west were thrown on the floor, broken, shelves and smashed, chairs and tables upset, and things scattered in train-loads. Los Angeles citizens have acquitted themselves in relief cause.

The kitchen stove was thrown off the shelves on the floor, where food, crockery, the bills.

The gas sprung a leak; and when we made a rush from the house we found the front door was jammed, and opened. We retraced our steps and ran out of the back door in dressing neighbors in the street, some in nightgowns, some in nightgowns, some in

underclothes, some with a shoe, some with a hat, one carrying only a pillow, others a blanket around them, etc. As soon as we realized it was over we returned to the house to dress and view the ruin.

This brief account of our experiences is about what would be told by all our citizens, for we all suffered about alike from that terrible shock, the only difference being that we got off very easily as the ruin wrought in other parts of the city was a thousand times worse than ours. Many houses were thrown down, turned half way around, tipped over, crushed, etc. Hardly a house retained its chimney. Nearly all plate glass windows were torn out and broken from the stores, and all the streets filled with debris. Many of the streets and sidewalks were cracked and broken. Deep crevices were left all over town. I saw some over an inch wide. Out in Golden Gate Park I saw crevices eight inches wide, hundreds of feet long, and no knowing how deep. All our city was left in ruins. And then, to add horror to the scene, fire broke out, and to the dismay of all it was found that the water mains had been broken and we were left without water, and no means to put out the fire which continued to increase with great rapidity until three-fourths of our beautiful city was consumed, at a loss of $225,000,000; and 300,000 people were made homeless. The fire burned and raged four days and nights, sweeping everything in its track—all the banks, wholesale houses, commission merchants, and in fact all the business of the city was consumed. We were left without any communication with the outside world, for several days. We had no telegraph, telephone, or mail service; no electricity or gas; no street-cars. The city is now, and has been for some time, under martial law. We are really a large army camp. Soldiers are patrolling everywhere. They are in control. We have no lights in our houses after eight in the evening. We can have no fires, only on the streets, or in our empty lots, plazas, hillsides, Presidio, Golden Gate Park, etc. The words were hardly out of my mouth when a shock came, not a common one, but as heavy a one as we have had, generally speaking, for years. We were out of bed again in an instant, but when we realized that it was over we went back again, and yielding to the demands of nature on our exhausted bodies, we were soon asleep. And so the days and nights are wearing away, and we wonder what next! I leave myself in the Master's hands, but sometimes faith almost fails to quiet fear; and this long stretch of anxiety is exhausting to both soul and body. I am not a coward, but can not always control my nerves; and I am willing to admit that this kind of thing makes me nervous. But I am pleased to say that through it all I was always thankful that I was a Latter Day Saint. May God watch over us all and protect us.

Yours in bonds,

OAKLAND, California, April 25, 1906.

Editors Herald: Being on the ground and having looked over the devastation of the recent earthquake and fire, I write you a line. As to the amount of the loss no doubt you have learned from the press. You may fear exaggeration, but so far as San Francisco is concerned it would be difficult to exaggerate. Seventy-five per cent of the great city burned; 300,000 homeless; add three more ciphers and you have the property loss. The earth has not yet quieted, as there was quite a perceptible tremor yesterday, people running to the streets in fear. I am pleased to state the Saints with one exception escaped without bodily injury. Sr. Minnie Weeldon was badly crushed in St. Agness Hospital, near San Jose, but she is recovering. Bro. C. A. Parkin, J. A. Saxe, R. Davis, John Lund, Fred Lund, Sr. M. Kaigin, Pearl Helwig, A. Haws, Rundell, and some others were burned out and lost in household goods and personal effects to quite an extent. Sr. Pearl Helwig and husband lost their valuable home and business; Bro. John Lund lost his home. Brn. Anthony, Lawn, Lincoln, Julian, Knight, and some others lived outside the fire district.

The Saints are all provided for, for the present, but material loss will come to many by loss of employment and time, etc. Bro. J. A. Saxe has gone to Irvington with family, also the family of Bro. R. Davis, he being here still working for the Wells, Fargo Co., and will probably locate in Oakland. Bro. Parkin has not returned from conference, and it is not known what he will do.

I do not feel at liberty to call for aid, neither do I say aid

is not needed. I know of no present distress with the Saints. The good Government is supplying provisions and tents for the homeless. The scene in the city beggars description. The destruction is so complete and covers seven square miles.

Wife is busy sewing for the homeless and I am doing what I can in behalf of the Saints. All are doing their part well and the Saints are cheerful amid it all and say, “I can see the hand of the Lord in our being saved.”

We are already in our field, satisfied with our lot and are at work with renewed energy. The work here is onward—baptism announced for Tuesday night. Bro. A. Carmichael came this way and stopped over night, requesting us to write.

Yours in bonds,

SANTA CRUZ, California, April 25, 1906.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I have written you. I guess you think I have been asleep. Well, I have tried to keep awake and have been trying to do what I could for the advancement of the cause of the Master. But if I had been sleeping, I believe I should be awake now, since I have had a good shaking up by an earthquake. It was something terrible. The earth not only shook, but it jerked, and twisted; it turned chimneys corner ways, but more were thrown off the houses than stayed on. Once went off, with a crash of shingles. We did not lose anything to speak of, nor did we get hurt. We are all alive, and quite well, and very thankful we have escaped.

Nine were killed a little ways from Santa Cruz, but no one was seriously hurt in Santa Cruz. The earth cracked open in places five and six feet; and at Hinkley Creek, where the nine were killed, the mountain broke off and came down on the camp, burying them under more than one hundred feet of earth.

In places the earth settled down from one to six feet. It has not stopped shaking yet; we feel the earth tremble every few hours.

We are not scared out of California, but think we would sooner be in Independence, where we have been thinking of moving for some time. We two weeks ago preached twice and baptized one man. More are interested, and I hope I may be able to get them to see the need of obeying the gospel of Christ.

It seems by what some of the Saints have seen, and by what has taken place, that the Lord has fully commenced to pour out his anger upon the nations of the earth. Jesus says, “Men’s hearts will fail them for fear, and for looking after the things that are coming upon the earth.” Strong men stood in the city, with tears rolling down their cheeks, trembling from head to foot, almost frightened to death. I hope Zion will soon be redeemed, and we be gathered there; and, under the protecting hand of our Father who is caring for his children, find rest and peace.

Your brother in Christ,

Christian Socialism.

In these days of the wholesale and retail advocacy and proclamation of visionary and wildcat schemes of an illusory and altogether impracticable scheme of socialism, albeit it may be euphemistically termed, “Christian socialism,” and when the church is asked, desired, and requested,—without the visible means or authority of doing so—to erect enormous factories, control large financial enterprises, and altogether without any means of enforcing its dictum or decision—to step in and regulate the vexed question of wages as between master and man, employer and employee, it seems to the writer that a little calm, sober, and common-sense consideration along these lines will hurt nobody, and may even so far clear the mental and intellectual atmosphere as to result in some good to the entire community.

Personally, I fail to see in the Bible, viz.: the “sure word of prophecy,” any commandment to the church to institute or initiate any of the communistic schemes and ideas above alluded to; nor do I find in the Doctrine and Covenants the slightest intention that the church is under condemnation because masters and employers of labor do not pay higher wages to their workmen, although a recent writer to the HERALD broadly hints that the church is responsible for this.

Permit me in closing, to quote from an able and witty writer (Thomas Bailey Aldrich), who has had large experience along the lines of so-called Christian socialism, etc:

“The walking delegates of a higher civilization, who have nothing to do, look upon the notion of personal property as a purely artificial creation of human society.”

According to these advanced philosophers, the time will come when no man will be allowed to call anything his. The beneficent law which takes away an author’s rights in his own books just at the period when old age is creeping upon him seems to me a handsome stride toward the long-looked-for millennium.

Yours for the gospel’s sake,
F. R. TUBB.

Miscellaneous Department

High Priests.

Dear Brethren: Have patience with me while I make my plea and appeal for your cooperation to make successful our efforts as standing ministers in the body of Christ, and for the uplifting of the standard of peace and good will among the people.

By reason of the many changes in our ranks through loss by death, gain of additions by ordination, and removal of residence, it was deemed advisable to issue a new circular letter; so if since submitting your last report to the quorum, by appointment of the late General Conference, or other circumstances, your post-office address has changed, let me know at once. My permanent address is Box 224, Lamoni, Iowa, and no matter where I may labor, this will find me.

When changing residence, there is a necessity upon your part of filing a notice with the post-office, so as to obtain your mail correctly—at the same time, please fire a postal card at me, giving information as to the new address, and in so doing you will be helpful of preventing any miscarriage of such matter as the secretary may have occasion to forward to you during the year.

The many different blanks now in use in districts and missions—monthly, quarterly, and annual—are apt to create misunderstanding and confusion, unless we exercise carefulness in memorandum of ministrations of both word and ordinance.

Some have been in doubt as to when they should make out their report. Would say, if the brethren—with the exception of those in Society Islands and Australia—will make out and mail to the secretary on March 1, it will be amply satisfactory, and give sufficient time for tabulation and preparation of quorum annual report.

Punctuality and accuracy will insure life and success in business—and we should be examples of these qualifications and attainments in our quorum work.

The custom has long prevailed with us, that quorum expenses are self-assessed. Your fellow servant,
April 28, 1906.
ROBT. M. ELVIN, Secretary.

Pastoral.

To the Officers and Saints of the Pacific Slope Mission; Greeting: Having been given the oversight of the above-named mission at the recent annual conference, and feeling the grave responsibility, and realizing the importance and great need of cooperation, I herewith solicit your assistance, that together we may be able to make the coming year a successful one.

In order to accomplish the good we desire in the interest of the church and the salvation of our fellow men, it will be necessary that we work together in peace and harmony, and that we may systematize the work committed to our care we will assign the various laborers to the following-named fields: Spokane District, T. W. and F. J. Chathurn, the former in charge;

Bro. E. Keeler having been selected by the Quorum of Twelve to the office of evangelical minister, his ordination will be attended to as soon as practicable. In the meantime he may labor in Southwestern Oregon District until after reunion. Subsequently, his mission will comprise all Oregon and Western Washington.

In view of the fact that Bro. Henry Spangler has been assigned to the St. Louis District, which makes it impossible for him to preside over the Central and Eastern Oregon District, I, therefore, in harmony with the law as found in Doctrine and Covenants 122:8, place A. J. Moore in charge of said district until the convening of the next district conference, at which time they may choose a presiding officer.

The church having sent a high priest, whose duty it is to preside, we hope Saints will heartyly support him by their faith, confidence, and prayers.

Please direct all matters requiring the attention of the minister in charge, to those brethren of the Seventy who have been placed in charge. The work cannot be advanced with rapidity without financial aid.

We advise that no discussions be engaged in without consultation with those in charge. We feel to admonish the Saints to be punctual to send their tithes and offerings to the Bishops and agents in the various districts, as the work can not be advanced with rapidity without financial aid.

We anticipate good results from the efforts of the efficient force of workers assigned to the mission.

Bro. Joseph Clapp, having been placed upon the superannuated list, has my permission to labor as circumstances may permit in Southern California and Arizona.

Praying God to supplement our every effort in the interest of his cause, I remain,

Your coworker,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

Convention Notices.

Far West District Belng convention will meet in special session at St. Louis, Missouri, Saturday, June 2, at 3.30 a.m., to elect officers for the ensuing year, also to arrange for Belng work at reunion. Locals will please send delegate credentials to district secretary, Sr. Zilla Moore. B. R. Constance, district president.

Notice to First Seventy.

Members of the First Quorum of Seventy who have not already given me their address, I desire to publish as soon as practicable, for the benefit of the brethren the addenda to Circular Letter No. 7, with all the changes in addresses.

J. F. MINTUN, Secretary First Seventy.

Died.

LINDSAY.—Sarah J., wife of Charles A., was born January 20, 1854, and died March 12, 1906. The deceased united with the church in Orting, Washington; was baptized and confirmed by Elder Mathias, was a true and faithful Saint; as innocent as a child. She "believed all things, hoped all things." She died of heart-trouble superinduced by a cold. Funeral-sermon by T. W. Williams, Los Angeles, California.

POOLE.—Suzanna Ann Poole was born near Worcester, England, December 22, 1829, and died April 3, 1906. Together with her mother, brothers, and sisters, she accepted the gospel call in her native land. They came to America, landing in New Orleans in the early forties. Remained there a short time and removed to St. Louis. Her mother, sister, and brother died of cholera. She was stricken with the same, but was saved. They moved to Utah, became disgusted, and finally reached California. She had twelve children; seven are now living. Buried at San Bernardino in charge of A. E. Jones. By request T. W. Williams preached a memorial sermon the following Sunday.

He died Tuesday morning, April 24. He leaves a widow, two sons, four grandchildren, and one great-grandchild to mourn their loss. Funeral services conducted at his home by E. B. Morgan and John R. Evans. Bro. Evans was not a member of the church, but his widow has been for many years, and he was ever kindly disposed toward it, to the extent of giving assistance financially.

THORNTON.—At Rialto, California, March 19, 1906, Sr. Elizabeth Thornton. She was born in Scotland sixty-five years ago. She was residing at San Bernardino. Her death was caused by a stroke of apoplexy. She leaves a circle of friends. Her husband and eight children survive her. The funeral was at San Bernardino, from the Latter Day Saints church; services conducted by T. W. Williams.

She was born at Hebron, Vermont, June 4, 1831; was baptized into the Reorganized Church at Fremont, Nebraska, July 27, 1879, by Hyram Robinson; confirmed by H. Robinson and J. P. Ogard. She had made her home with her daughter, Sr. M. W. Sampson, for nearly thirty-three years, her husband having preceded her to the great beyond that long ago. She died in hope of a resurrection with the just. Funeral from the home of Bro. W. M. Sampson, by E. F. Shupe of Denver. Interment in Lake View Cemetery.

CHESLEY.—At Denver, Colorado, April 15, 1906, Sr. Nora T. Chesley. She was born in Richland County, Wisconsin, November 20, 1863; was baptized at River Sioux, Iowa, May 20, 1884. She had been troubled with goitre for several years, which assumed a more serious form during the past winter, but was not considered dangerous. She had not attended church for several weeks, but thought to meet with the Saints that evening shortly after entering the building she began to choke and was administered to without relief. Funeral from Saints' church, in charge of C. E. Everett, sermon by A. J. Keck.

WILLIAMS.—Thomas R. Williams, at Cleveland, Iowa, February 27, 1906. Although in poor health, his death was unexpected. He had bought a farm in Missouri and was about moving to the new home when he died. He and Sr. Williams were visiting their daughter before leaving, where he died, aged 60 years, 9 months, and 22 days. Was baptized when a young man, at Dixon, Illinois, in 1874. He left to mourn a wife, eight children, four grandchildren, four brothers, and one sister. Funeral-service in Saints' church, at Lucas, Iowa.

How Japan Read England a Lesson.

It has been remarked that history is made very rapidly these days, and nowhere do events move with more dramatic swiftness than in the far East. If any one had predicted even two years ago that Japan would have felt her military position strong enough to advise Great Britain to put her military house in order, she would have been considered a prophet. They brought it up to modern requirements, that prophet would have been scouted as too fantastic to be worthy the respect of serious men. But that is exactly what has happened. In the Japanese House of Representatives, in February, Mr. Oishi, one of the leaders of the progressive party, asked General Teranichi, the Minister of War, in the course of the debate on the military budget, to what extent the Japanese army would have to be increased in view of the obligations imposed upon Japan by the terms of the Anglo-Japanese treaty.

Mr. Oishi added, was not up to the standard of the British navy, and he asked the Minister of War if that fact did not indicate the necessity for improvement in order that there might be no one-sided responsibility between the two governments within the terms of the Anglo-Japanese treaty. The British army, Mr. Oishi replied, that the two governments would confer on the subject, and the matter was then dropped.

This "disregard of the common rules of international courtesy," quoted from the London daily Mail, was sharply criticised by the English press, the general feeling being expressed by the daily News that "it is not an agreeable pill for a proud people to swallow." But Japan has too much at stake to let any false delicacy stand between her and disaster. If Japan has to take part in helping to safeguard India she naturally wants to feel that the sole responsibility is not thrown upon her shoulders; and Japanese statesmen have only to read the English newspapers, follow the debates in Parliament, and heed the warnings of such an eminent military authority as Lord Roberts, to become convinced that Great Britain is as militarily deficient now as she was when she plunged with such light heart into the South African war. Precisely the same is being said of the landstraf away.-A Maurice Low in the April-June Forum.

Peach Crusts.

Roll plain paste one fourth of an inch thick, and cut in circular shapes of correct size to exactly cover inverted circular individual tins. Prick several times, using a fork; place on a tin sheet and bake in a moderate oven. Remove from the tins, arrange on a serving-dish, place half a peach in each case, and garnish cavity with half of a blanched almond. Serve with peach syrup.

Canned peaches are used for this dish. Turn the peaches from the can into a graniteware saucepan; add one third of a cupful of sugar and a half of a blanched almond. Place on a rack, and dry the peaches on a sheet. Place in the center a liberal quantity of stewed fruit, and reserve some for over crusts at the table. In strawberry season this fruit may be used in crusts and served with whipped cream.-Miss Farmer in Woman's Home Companion for May.

How the Greeks Tested the Purity of Coins.

The trial of a Protestant Episcopal minister for heresy, now being held at Batavia, New York, shows a determined spirit on the part of the church to enforce conformance to its doctrines. Meanwhile, there are signs in England, at least, that orthodox religion is threatened not merely by the heretical preachers of one clergyman who seeks personally to interpret the Scriptures, but by a general dissemination, which promises to disintegrate Protestantism.

In a recent essay, called "In peril of change," by an avowed rationalist, C. F. G. Masterman, Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, the situation is thus summed up:

"The old religion, with its affirmations and denials, of Protestant and of Puritan England is to-day visibly dissolving. Within a generation its dominant doctrines have been quietly cast aside. Predestination and Calvinism, in their unflinching way, have practically gone. Even in Scotland, with its relentless logic, the true home of its birth, they are repudiated by the main stream of the Presbyterian tradition. In England they seek refuge in the remoter Christian sects. And the new generation of the natural sciences, with its literalist views of life and destiny, more inexorable and terrible even than the ancient conception of an inflexible directing Will, has not yet entered into the schemes of any of the popular religions. Gone, also, is that doctrine of Everlasting Punishment, which is a link of our material fire, to which are immediately committed at the moment of death all those who have not accepted the scheme of salvation. And going or gone, also, before the labors of a persistent critical method, in that belief in a literal verbal inspiration of the books of the Hebrew scriptures, which invested with the glories of a Divine origin every tangled genealogy; and accepted esoteric meaning for every unphilosophical incident; and discerning the Mosaic code as originating in the writings of the finger of God upon tables of stone, amid the thunders and lightnings of Mount Sinai.

This is not to say, indeed, that the whole fabric of the Protestant religion is impregnated with the errors of the Enlightenment, or that the great nonconformist bodies, in which that Protestantism is most conspicuously vocal, are about to wither into nothingness. It is to say, on the one hand, that an increasing population is driven, by whose influence Protestantism is unbelievable, and the practical worship that is dependent upon these doctrines repugnant; on the other, that within those bodies themselves there is fermenting a large process of change.

But in spite of the difference that might be afforded by the mark of a state or a prince, we find the Greeks applying certain tests to determine the genuineness of the currency offered to them. Peeling was easily detected by jumbling the suspected coin with some sharp instrument. At other times the touch-stone was used. One which was known as the "Lydian stone" was supposed to reveal a proportion of foreign metal as small as a barley corn in a stater. Another test, in the case of coins, was easy detected by juggling the coin, or coins, on red-hot iron. If the metal was unalloyed it remained bright, if mixed with other substances it turned black or red according as it was more or less impure.-From "Greek coins," by Oliver S. Tonks, in the Chaon, for May.

Western farmers have grown rather particular about their indebtedness. One of the commonest requirements of the modern mortgage is that the mortgagee shall accept any portion of the principal at the time of any interest payment. This means that the harvesting of a good wheat crop, or the fortunate sale of a cow, may wipe out the debt, and the loan agent must find another borrower. However, one insurance company has $40,000,000 in Western farm-mortgage loans, and the interest thereon is sufficient to pay all its death losses. Another company has $89,000,000 in these loans, scattered over the Missis­si­ppi Valley. The Illinois National, a Chicago enterprise, holds $72,000,000; Minnesota, with $10,000,000; Missouri, $11,000,000; Iowa, $10,700,000; Ohio, $8,000,000, and lesser amounts in a dozen other States. It places approximately 4,000 farm-mort­gage loans every year, and has in its history loaned $490,632,508, or 27,748 in this way, with practically no losses on this class of investments. Of recent years the value of land has increased so rapidly that every loan, made, as these investments are, on a basis of 40 per cent of the real value, gives the insurance company the best possible security.-From "The Farm Mortgage of To-day," by Charles Moreau Harger, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for May.

Dowie in Chair Addresses Zion.

Physically wrecked, but declaring himself mentally capable of all the old magnetic and controlling powers which he had held, and of performing all the functions of the once prominent and influential institution which he had established, John Alexander Dowie yesterday concentrated his enfeebled energies upon a pathetic effort to reassert himself as "first apostle" of the Christian Catholic Church of Zion. The new apostle was carried to his place in the center of the platform by two negro attendants and placed in front of his great chair at the center of the platform. With a word of greeting to those before him, he sank into it, and remained seated nearly the whole time of the service.

There was one person on the platform. The bright sunlight from the roof windows fell upon his gray head while, perched, as it seemed, on the edge of the great chair which in the old days he had filled so completely, he "lined out" a hymn. His voice was deep and hollow, and reverberated strangely through the almost empty building.

The "faithful" were grouped in the front rows of the vast hall, and hard seats were occupied. He was a dethroned king amidst the ruins of former grandeur.

His dark eyes, deepset and glaring, at times flashed and burned. The audience was stirred by the strain of his emotions and the physical effort levied upon him. At the close of the hymn he raised his voice to its fullest extent to try its power, and called upon an usher at the door to say if he could hear distinctly as he pronounced the words:

"God is good. Jesus is my Savior."

Pleased at an affirmative reply, he took up the reading of the twenty-sixth chapter of Matthew, telling the story of Judas' redemption.

"The awful night had passed," he said, slowly, pausing for a sip of water, "when Christ was left alone. Peter had denounced him, and all had gone away, but when the morning came all was well. He ascended to heaven. Those who have been come to. To some of you the tabernacle may seem empty and barren, but all had gone away, but when the morning came all was well.

"Let me whisper in the ears of my enemies," he said, "that I never have a word to say to the world. I am not going to lose this one. Why," and he laughed silently, "you may be sure of that. I have fought a great many, but I never lost one. I have passed a night in communion with God, and I pray. Now I am happy."

There fully as important, and as grand in its results, was his dialogue with God to witness that he was innocent of all charges brought against him. He declared that he did not care for the judgment of man, as he would be tried only at the heavenly judgment-seat.

In both sermons he hurled defiance at Voliva and his followers.

"I had been saying in the Leavens of Healing for some time that the Tree of Life was within, and when the crisis came I did not hesitate a moment to throw my life into the scale and come up to fight the battle of my people.

"They said I was afraid. Afraid! Of whom? A boy whom I trained, ecclesiastically, who was with me, who ever did know from me alone. He is smooth, slick, but, well, he will end where all smooth, slick men do.

"Would he judge me? The church judge me? Why, I am the head of the church. The church called me, called him the church. The tail cannot wag the dog. Do I look like a deposed man? I shall be the first apostle of the Christian Catholic Church in Zion for ever. Others may come along and be over thrice, but I always shall be here, and if I am not I shall be."

Voliva gathered his followers around him at the college building. The morning service was held in different rooms in the building, but the afternoon meeting was held out-of-doors.

Overseer H. D. Braesfeld read a stenographic report of Dowie's morning sermon, which was severely commented upon, and Voliva announced that this evening he will hold a meeting in the tabernacle for the purpose of making a complete reply to it. Overseer G. S. Speicher, in addressing the congregation, declared that it is time for the people to cease praying for the repentance of Dowie and to begin praying that he, "a milestone around the neck of Zion," be taken away.

"I believe in justice because it is the swiftesst way to secure results. I believe in that kind of industry which takes an occasional vacation. I believe in honesty, not for policy's sake, but for principle's sake. I believe in hospitality, because it puts a roof over every man's and woman's head. I believe in obedience, because it is the only way to learn how to command. I believe in self-control, because I want to influence others. I believe in justice, because I believe in God."

There is a right way to do everything, and the care of the woodlot is not an exception to the rule. The right way, moreover, is often quite simple, the good results which follow being out of all proportion to the time or labor expended. Too many woodlots are simply neglected, and by far the greater number of them are misused for want of foresight or a true appreciation of their value.

The first principles of right woodlot forestry may be summarized in a brief list of Do's and Don'ts by which every woodlot owner may profit with very little trouble.

Don't dispose of your woodlot. You need it for your own use. It can be made to give you fuel, posts, poles, fence rails, even such timber, boards, and shingles as will keep the farmstead and barns in repair. With a little encouragement, its value for home supply will increase year by year. While you use it, it will renew itself, and the price of its products is certainly not decreasing.

Don't turn your woodlot into a pasture. Tree seedlings are quickly bruised and crushed by the trampling of live stock. Hungry cattle browse upon them. The soil becomes packed hard, and unable to retain moisture so much needed for the encouragement of young growth.

Don't thin your woodlot too heavily. If you do, large openings are made through which the sunlight streams in, drying and discouraging the growth of trees, which should never be suffered to replace the spongy humus that forms the natural top layer of soil in a healthy forest. A crown canopy, formed by the leaves and branches, should always shade the forest floor and encourage the formation of branching, short-stemmed trees.

Don't burn over the woodlot. It has been pointed out that the woodlot is not fit for pasture purposes, but even if it were, the burning over of the soil would still do irremediable damage to young growth, consume the litter which ought to rot into humus, and destroy the very conditions which Nature seeks to establish and preserve.

Don't neglect only the best trees in a woodlot which needs weeding. Nearly every woodlot is composed of a mixed stand in which dead and sound trees, weed trees, and sound, useful trees are intermingled. If you select and remove only the choice trees, the rest will grow worse and better, and in time will become almost worthless. An improvement cutting which, even at a little cost, removes the weed trees and those which are dead, crooked, or otherwise of little worth, will give the remaining stand a clear start. The wood­ lot quickly responds to such treatment, improving vigorously under the new conditions. The larger yield of better quality in due time more than repays the labor.
Don’t forget reproduction. In thinning your woodlot, have an eye to the young growth. Spare it as much as you can in felling and hauling the logs. Give the seedlings the chance, and they will seize it and grow into saplings and poles. Saplings and poles are already valuable, and a little later still are themselves grown trees.
Don’t do all your cutting in one spot, just because it is a trifle more convenient to do so. By taking a tree here and there, where it can best be spared or is actually better down, you will secure just as much wood, and at the same time draw as lightly as possible on your future supply. Where the stand is composed only of old trees you may, of course, often make clear cutting to advantage, especially where neighboring seed trees will reseed the opening to a new crop.
Don’t let the carelessness of other persons do the damage to your woodlot by fire which you refrain from doing yourself.
A fire in a neighboring field may creep into your woodlot and burn over it, scorching the trunks of the trees or even setting the crowns ablaze. It is worth while, in the dangerous season, to see that the borders of the woodlot are clear of inflamable material. Especially clear away the leaves so as to form a miniature fire-lane about the forest. Forbidden the careless use of matches and the building of camp-fires, and see that your directions are obeyed.
Don’t be in too great a hurry to realize on your woodlot investment. Be satisfied with a permanent revenue, which is enjoyed by managing the woodlot itself so that the thinnings always bear a wise proportion to the yield.
Meanwhile the steady rise in the value of all forest products will add little by little to the market value of your timber. Years hence, when you need it, the woodlot which has supplied you all along will in all probability bring you far more than at pres­ tent. Or you may leave it to your children, who in turn will find it a most acceptable bank account.

UTAH MORMONS AND POLYGAMY IN HAWAII.

We have received a copy of the Pacific Commercial Advertiser, of Honolulu, date of April 18, 1906, in which the following appeared in the editorial columns:

LATTER DAY SAINTS.

The Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, a convention of which is in progress at Kansas City, is the bitter and tireless opponent of the Utah church. Its president is a son of the discoverer of the Book of Mormon and founder of the new faith, while the polygamists are headed by a nephew of that famous man. Polygamy is the dividing line between the two churches. The original Joseph Smith was not a polygamist though the Utah Mormons, long after his death, “sealed” to him a whole harem of living and dead “wives.” The plural marriage doctrine was invented by Brigham Young to attract converts and to secure a rapid growth of Mormon population. It was purely a business device, got up by a shrewd but conscienceless man who knew human nature in the rough and did not hesitate, for the advantage of his cause, to play upon its baser passions. Had Joseph Smith lived, he would not have permitted any departure from the good old rule of “one man, one wife”; and the Reorganized Church, in the hands of its descendants, has held to monogamy as a basic principle. It even fights the Utah Mormons on their own ground, sending missionaries to Utah to win the converts of the Beasthood to the faith of the Prophet. But its growth is slow as compared with that of the sect which defends immorality in the terms of a sacred revelation.

Here in Hawaii the Reorganized Church has a small foundation which it owes to the energy, faith, and material support of one man, whose position in this community has always been of the highest. The Utah following is very strong and is now being closely scrutinized by the argus eyes of the Federal law. The suspicion is held that polygamy is practiced by some of these island Mormons but the absolute proof, which the statutes require, is said to be lacking. It is known, however, that the sanctity of plural marriages is affirmed and defended by the Utah Mormons here as well as in Salt Lake and that hope is professed that, in future, a revival of the open practice of polygamy may be practicable.

We are pleased to see the high terms in which the editor of the Pacific Commercial Advertiser speaks of Bro. Gilbert J. Waller and his work. We are pleased to know that Bro. Waller’s integrity and sterling worth is appreciated by the Advertiser as well as other Honolulu papers.

As is intimated in the foregoing article from the Advertiser, and as is clearly set forth in copies of the Hawaiian Star for April 17 and the Evening Bulletin for April 17, both of Honolulu, there is a “suspicion” that “polygamy is practiced by some of the island Mormons”; but as is the case with these law-defying polygamists in all parts of the United States, it is difficult to secure the proof that the whole community may be morally certain that state laws are being daily violated by those who are practicing this peculiar feature of the Mormon faith. The editor of the Advertiser is quite right when he says, “It is known, however, that the sanctity of plural marriages is affirmed and defended by the Utah Mormons,” and that the Utah Mormons express the hope that in the future a revival of polygamous practices may be made practicable.

It is the rule rather than the exception that at the funeral obsequies of departed polygamists, either male or female, the elders of the dominant church of Utah are fond of calling attention to the fact that the departed were polygamists, and are fervent in their advice to young Mormons to follow the example of the departed polygamists. It is a fact which has probably not escaped the attention of the astute writer of the Advertiser, though it may not be known to many of his readers, that the book of Doctrine and Covenants issued by the Utah Mormons has retained the so-called revelation on the “Eternity of the Marriage Covenant,” (the document that sets forth the Mormon doctrine of polygamy) up to 1903 or the date of their last edition; and in no edition of the Utah Book of Covenants has there appeared the Manifesto of 1890, adopted by the Mormon church in conference assembled, which was accepted by the people of the United States and presumably by the people of the Mormon church as repudiating the doctrine of polygamy. Besides this, the doctrine of polygamy has not only been continually taught from the pulpits of the Mormon church in the manner before referred to, but it is always stoutly defended by the Mormon emissaries when driven to its defense by vigorous opponents, and it has always been repeatedly taught in the text-books of the Mormon faith placed in the hands of the young and those sent out to teach and propagate the Mormon religion.

One of the text-books of the faith of the Mormon church is a book known as a Compendium of the Doctrines of the Gospel, compiled by Franklin D. Richards, one of the twelve apostles of the Mormon church, and by Elder James A. Little, and now issued from the Deseret News Publishing Company, the official publishing house of the Mormon church. In the latest edition of this Compendium, which bears the date of 1898, on page 125, there occurs this startling statement, which can not be read by any Christian or loyal American without feeling his blood boil: “If plural marriage be unlawful, then is the whole plan of salvation, through the house of Israel, a failure, and the entire fabric of Christianity without foundation.”

What a frightful statement! The whole fabric of Christianity without foundation if plural marriage be unlawful! Shades of the apostle Paul! What would the great teacher of Christianity, the great writer of epistles, which have been the great expounders of Christian religion through ages and ages, think could he see such a statement as this paralleled by his statement to the Corinthians that “if Christ be not risen, then is our faith vain”? Paul based the Christian religion on the great central thought that Christ’s mission reached its grand and glorious consummation when Christ had risen from the dead and had robbed death of its sting and the grave of its victory. Paul’s hope, Paul’s dependence in the gospel rested in the fact that Christ has overcome death. The Mormons here teach that the whole scheme of religion centers in man having a plurality of wives.

This startling statement from one of their text-books of the Mormon faith still stands, and is being put into the hands of their young, and hundreds of this text-book are being sent out from their publishing house. With this statement standing in every edition of the Compendium of Faith since its publication, and with the Manifesto carefully kept from before the world and the Mormon church by being denied admission into their Book of Doctrine and Covenants, a text-book of their faith, we can not but conclude that the Mormons still adhere to the doctrine of plural marriage, and the doctrine, so far as the Mormon people are concerned, stands where it did before the issuance of the Manifesto.

Whether the Mormon leaders in 1890 issued the Manifesto as a political subterfuge, or whether immediately after its issuance to their church and the world, the Mormon leaders proved recreant to its provisions, the effect is the same, and to-day the Mormon leaders stand as defiant violators of a compact with a magnanimous government; and what is so strenuously and persistently taught by the Mormon leaders in their pulpits and in their text-books we can expect they will practice whenever the opportunity will permit, either secretly or openly.

The authorities of Honolulu and Hawaii Territory, therefore, will do well, as will the authorities of the whole United States, to keep several of the “argus eyes of the Federal law” upon what the Mormons are doing in regard to the promulgation and practice of its odious doctrine of polygamy.

DOWIE-RUSSELL POLYGAMY.

It would appear that Charles T. Russell, of Millennial Dawn celebrity, as well as John Alexander Dowie, alias Elijah, self-styled First Apostle, will have some trouble to convince people that they have not been unfaithful to their marriage vows. Both are accused of that which is equivalent to the practice of polygamy. Russell’s wife brought suit for divorce and in her testimony she said that her husband told her, "I am like a jelly fish. I float all around and touch this one and that one and if they respond I embrace them."

Mrs. Russell’s opinion is that as stated in court, that her husband’s head was turned by the adulation of other women. She further stated that any one of a thousand would be glad to have him. This is taken from the Chicago Tribune of April 27, 1906.

John Alexander Dowie visited Zion City on Sunday, the 29th of April, where he was received by a small portion of the Zionites at the afternoon meeting, about twelve hundred in number. It would seem that he was quite feeble and addressed them from his seat on the stage. From consideration of what he has stated in reference to Mrs. Dowie, he may experience some difficulty in getting her forgiveness for charges which he has made against her.

It is believed by some of the Saints that an improper infatuation for other women than a man's lawful companion almost always precedes his downfall or apostasy. It would not be singular if this was true in reference to this religious leader.

DOWIE PROVED SANE.

By newspaper advices we learn that Doctor Dowie’s legal adviser secured the services of three medical experts and had Dowie examined, resulting in a certificate of sanity. This will likely be used in whatever suits may be planted or may have been begun on Dowie’s behalf for reinstatement. It was feared there would be a collision between the followers of Dowie and Voliva, at Shiloh Tabernacle on Sunday afternoon. We have not heard yet whether the fear was realized or not. One thing is certain; it is an unfortunate quarrel in which both parties seem to be in the wrong. We await developments.

HERESY—DOCTOR CRAPSEY.

From what has been appearing in the daily press in reference to the trial of Doctor Crapsey for heresy, we are strongly reminded that there is necessity for a firm adherence to the written word. A writer in the secular press taking note of the position assumed by Doctor Crapsey, that Jesus was the natural son of Joseph and Mary, says that if this is conceded there is nothing left for the nominal Christian but to abandon the entire scheme of Christian salvation based upon Christ the Savior.

As for our own faith, if we discard the story of the birth and life of the Savior as given by Matthew, and as coincided in by other writers of the New Testament, we virtually abandon whatever may have been promised in the prophesies touching the revisiting of the world by an incarnate Lord for the redemption of man.

We can not afford for one moment to deny this New Testament theory of Jesus the Messiah, the Son of the living God, incredible as it may appear to the metaphysical reasoner. It is not half so incredible as the proposed Darwinian theory of evolution, and does not require half the stretch of credibility as does this persistent indulgence in supposition imposed by the evolution theory upon the faculties of man. While man can not account for the creation, or present any reasonable solution of what he does not understand in reference to it, it seems to be an act of folly to throw aside faith in the Christ idea as evolved in the New Testament as being unworthy of credence simply because it is not understandable. It is necessary for us to stand firmly for the faith once delivered to the Saints, which involves the necessity of accepting Jesus as the Christ as the historian gives his birth and life. In this we make no mistake.

HAWAII GRAND JURY ON POLYGAMY.

Under date of April 17, 1906, the Hawaiian Star and the Evening Bulletin, both of Honolulu, Hawaii Territory, have articles concerning the questions of the Mormons and polygamy in Hawaii Territory. Both papers mention report that was made by the grand jury. It seems that the judicial department of Hawaii has been looking into the question of the teachings of the Mormon church on the question of polygamy and endeavoring to determine whether polygamy has been practiced by these people in the islands.

We are pleased to note that in presenting the matter which has been before the grand jury, the papers of Honolulu have drawn the distinction between the Reorganized Church and the Utah church in regard to the teachings upon the subject of polygamy in a manner which is unequivocal. In speaking of the report, the Star says:

The federal grand jury made its final report this morning, and polygamy was the subject most dealt with. No indictments for this offense were returned, but the jury gives the result of its investigations, which were not directed against the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, but against the followers of the Utah church who claim to number 1,600 in Honolulu and who have a considerable colony at Laie.

And the Bulletin in commenting on the work of the grand jury says:

The report of the federal grand jury on the possibility of the local Mormon church’s being in part responsible for the frequent cases of bigamy found here has brought forth the distinction between the two branches of the church which exist here. The actual Mormons are represented here in great number, but, on the other hand, there is also a large congregation of the reformed church of Latter Day Saints, which has decidedly put its foot down against bigamous and polygamous practices.

It may be interesting to the readers of the Herald to read the report of the grand jury as it was published in the Hawaiian Star as it follows:

"Honorable Sanford B. Dole, Judge of the United States District Court, Territory of Hawaii.

www.LatterDayTruth.org"
"Sir: The grand jury empaneled, sworn and charged by you on the ninth day of April, A.D. 1906, having concluded its duties, begs to submit herewith the following report:

"The United States Attorney has brought to the attention of the grand jury several cases, all of which have been carefully investigated and considered, and in eight cases true bills have been found, which are now returned to this Honorable Court.

"Attached hereto and made a part hereof is a list of the indictments so returned.

"The grand jury has devoted considerable time to the investigation of cases involving violations of the laws of the United States relative to marriage. We ascertain that certain doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints relative to plural marriages were being discussed freely within the Territory and in some instances were being advocated in communications in the public press. We further found that certain charges of violations of the marriage laws had been made against prominent members of the church residing within the Territory. These charges were carefully investigated by the grand jury. All of the evidence concerning them, however, was hearsay, and we discovered no sufficient reasons or grounds for returning indictments.

"Several cases before us, however, have led us to believe that for some reason or other the laws of the United States of America relative to marriage are being constantly violated. Whether this violation is the result of the teachings of the church in question, or whether it is the result of other causes, we are unable to say.

"In any event, we urge that the representatives of the Department of Justice of the United States of America in Honolulu, to-wit, the United States Marshal and the United States District Attorney, continue to exercise the vigilance they have shown in the past on these offenses and that they vigorously prosecute all violations of the marriage laws which shall be brought to their attention.

"The expeditious manner in which we have been enabled to perform our duties has been due to the effort of the representatives of the Department of Justice, and we desire to express to them our appreciation of the manner in which their duties have been performed. Jurors as a rule desire expedition in court matters, and always appreciate the efforts of officials to avoid delay."

Judge Dole in discharging the jury spoke as follows as reported in the Evening Bulletin:

"I desire to express my appreciation of the rapid work done by the jury and to thank in behalf of the public for faithfulness and the good work done, not only in cases which were brought to its attention, but also in other matters.

"The cases in regard to violations of the marriage laws are matters of great interest to the representatives of the United States Government in this Territory, and I am glad to have the attention of the Court called to the question of the Mormon faith.

"The Mormons came here in the time of King Kamehameha the Fifth. They asked for permission to exercise their faith here, and were told that as this country permitted the exercise of religious freedom, they would be allowed to do so as long as they did not violate the local laws. With this understanding they were permitted to establish themselves here and they made many converts.

"Since then the government has changed, but the law remains, and if that understanding has been violated, it is a matter of deep importance not only to the United States but also the Territory, and this court will be vigilant in cases of this kind, which may arise. I thank the jury for going into the matter."

Now that conference is over and things have settled to a normal condition again, the thoughts of the brethren will again be turning toward the gathering, and we should be prepared for a great variety if not a great contrariety of schemes and theories regarding it; and if the Saints will patiently read what the different writers have to present they will discover that all can not be correct. They will also discover that while there may be wisdom in a multitude of counselors, there is apt to be unwisdom and confusion in a multitude of varying conclusions.

There should be somewhere, sometime, somehow, some one or more who might be listened to safely in regard to matters of such importance. We have tried to give the Saints good counsel in the premises, and shall continue to call their attention to what the Lord has said, in quietude, let the consequences be what they may.

It is said in the revelations somewhere that the counsel of the elders should be observed in regard to the gathering; and while it must be admitted that the Lord had knowledge of what was and what would be, so far as the events of time are concerned, there has been a very strange and very great change in conditions and whether we will or will not willingly, we are compelled to take cognizance of these changes of conditions in the accomplishment of our work. We believe that this was in the wisdom of the Almighty as well as in the revelations directing affairs, and that in the absence of continued iteration of revelation touching what was commanded under changed conditions, we are under the necessity of using the best wisdom we have and to be guided by the best light to which we have access.

THE GATHERING.

The Herald Publishing House and Ensign Publishing House will be represented at the Chatham, Ontario, reunion which meets June 9 to 17. A full line of books will be on hand affording a splendid opportunity for the Saints to secure the publications of the church.

Elder Daniel McGregor, representing the Canadian Messenger, is expected to be present to receive subscriptions for that paper.

We call Bro. Gilbert Waller's attention to the fact that we have appointed one of our able men to Honolulu; for we anticipate that he will take pleasure in laboring with Bro. John D. White and those who may come with him while he may remain in Honolulu, and may safely trust the work while he makes his contemplated visit for recuperation to his English home.

received upon our original baptism, and those members of the church assembled there who had been members in the days of my father and Uncle Hyrum, received us. And of all the fragments or factions into which the church has been divided and broken since the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, the Reorganized Church is the only one that has not insisted upon a re-baptism of those who made request to enter into its ranks.

That helped me to answer the question of what church I belonged to. I belong to the church that was instituted April 6, 1830; and when this fall in Utah, at Ogden, a gentleman said to me, “What church do you belong to, sir?” I said, “To the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized April 6, 1830.” He shook his head. “Let me tell you, sir, I was baptized by my father. I was confirmed by an elder in the church. I have never denied the faith, have never apostatized from the epitome of faith as published by Joseph Smith in 1842 to 1844, and will you please tell me, sir, what church I belong to?” I do not know that he has solved that question yet.

It may do some of these young ministers a world of good to know that I have stood upon the original platform from the first, with others who have stood upon that platform and who were baptized into the church even before I was, and who accepted the faith as it was delivered to them without those injurious adjuncts and additions which have done so much to bring the faith and the people into dispute. The day that I was received into the church, in making the statement unto that assembled body, scarcely one fifth as many of the membership of the church gathered together in that little hall in Amboy, as hear me now. I made two expressions; at least they were correlates, for which I have been seriously brought in question. One of them was, “I prefer to believe.” And it has been used against me that I “preferred” to believe the sayings and teachings of apostates rather than to accept the teachings of the true ministers of the church. The application that I made of it then as I make of it now is, because of that which results to a man by reason of his belief in the Lord Jesus Christ, I preferred to believe rather than to be infidel or unbelieving. And infidelity offered me nothing. I tried it. The specious teaching of many things that were calculated to disturb man’s faith in the origin of man and the fatherhood of God as taught in the Bible attracted my attention, and I tried them. There was no comfort in them, and, when Graham Carter said to me by the side of the schoolhouse in Montrose, “Brother Smith, I would give a great deal if I could believe as you do,” I said to him, “Brother Carter, my chances are two to your one. If my faith is true, you have nothing to hope for. If yours is true I lose nothing, and as a consequence I prefer to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and that he did come in the meridian of time to offer the gospel that had been originally given to men, and that was reiterated by the angelic messengers who came to Joseph Smith and his comrades in 1829 and 1830, and down to their death." I prefer to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and his doctrine to-night, for precisely the same reason, that it offers me a refuge against that which is untoward and evil and wrong and productive of evil unto men.

The second proposition that I made was this: I pledged myself to that people that I would promulgate no doctrine that should not be approved of by them and the code of good morals. And the enemies of the Reorganized Church, those that were opposed to us, have used that from then until now, saying that I put myself into the hands of a people by telling them that I was subject to their will. I never made such a statement as that. I made the statement to them that I would promulgate no doctrine that should not be approved of by them and the code of good morals. I had a reason for saying that. They had come together because of the faith that they had. They had many of them paid the penalty, had passed through the sorrows of the mob in Missouri. Elder Zenos Gurley was among them, and he was driven out from this country. I knew that if they took their stand, as the faith justified them in doing it, when they had accepted it and continued in its spirit, there could not come to them anybody teaches a false and heretical doctrine or preaching anything that would destroy the faith of men and break up the foundation of the church but that they would be severely reproved and withstood. The saving clause in that statement of mine was this, that whosoever I should promulge among them should be approved by the code of good morals; but they have found fault with that. Now after forty-six years of thinking, after forty-six years of journeying, after forty-six years of a constant fighting forward so far as this work is concerned, I repeat in your presence just the same promise that I made them, that I promise to promulgate no doctrine that shall not be approved by you and the code of good morals. I am prepared to accept the weakness of that statement and to rejoice in its strength, because that just so long as the Spirit of the Master remains with this people there can not be an entry of that that shall so completely destroy houses and disturb and distress as what has taken place in the past. There will be a sufficient number of earnest-minded men who will rise up and they will say, "We shall so teach as we have received from this angelic messenger, and we shall not receive that which is different from that or that which upsets or destroys that." I use a homely phrase, but you know what I mean.

Fortunately for that statement of mine, we have here a practical demonstration of the code of good morals. The ethics of the New Testament Scripture, as enunciated by Jesus Christ, are better than those of the Mosaic economy. And the apostle Paul writing of the latter says that it was a statute which neither we nor our fathers could bear or endure; and also writing in reference to it, using the terms Hagar and a freewoman as types, says that the term Hagar gendered to bondage; but the promise was of the freewoman. (See Galatians 5:24.)

The revelation by the angelic messenger sends to us what has been called the basic principles upon which the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was based or founded, that is the Book of Mormon or revelation. I speak of that which has been accomplished, not that of the last year before us, but all that which has been accomplished.

Though we have been called Mormons in derision, because of our belief in the Book of Mormon, we are not alone in this particular, but recent events have shown to the Mormon people that whatever may have been the religion of Joseph Smith, whatever may have been the matter with his mental faculties, however much he may have been deceived, that which he presented to the world was a code of good morals and the Book of Mormon is acknowledged to-day among intellectual circles as not teaching that abomination which has brought so much trouble out in the far West. That is emphasized everywhere.
Then if my teaching and the teaching of the brethren of the church is in accordance with the New Testament Scripture, and their conduct and their moral teaching and their moral life are based upon the teaching of the New Testament Scripture, they are based upon the morals that Jesus Christ intended should finally permeate the whole leaven of the world and be that which should constitute Mount Zion, the pure in heart. Anything better than that?

A good many years ago there was a prophecy uttered; and it was that the stick of Judah and the stick of Joseph should grow together in the hands of Ephraim. The Reorganized Church has been permitted to put the sticks of Joseph and Judah to­gether and they are to-day in the hands of the thousands of Ephraim,—the thousands of Manasseh and the ten thousands of Ephraim. There will be ten thousands of Ephraim after a while. About fifty-four thousand are worshiping together and here is the bond of their union, in the two records bound together, the stick of Joseph and the stick of Judah, (the Book of Mormon and the Bible). The Reorganization has accomplished that. Very well, we lay this book right on the Bible, not to supersede it, but as a correlative truth that does not belie, nor corrupt, nor invalidate in any sense, what we call the first.

While out in the western country upon several occasions, this last year especially, I met a curious kind of prophecy. It was this: the prophet Joseph Smith testified and prophesied that where the records were there would be the church. I know of no place where that is written. It may have been quoted and passed from mouth to ear until it has become a crystallized truth. I do not know how that may be; but one thing is certain, that when the people have been lulled to sleep upon the idea that where the records were there would the church be, if uttered by the Prophet of Palmyra, there must needs arise the question, “Where are the records, and what are they? What are they, and where are they?” Does it apply to the enrollment of the names of those that belong to the church that we call the record of names? If so, it is a very slender foundation for a prophecy of that character; but let me hold up to you the fact that the record of the Jew, the stick of Judah, that is a record so understood to be; in the Book of Mormon, the stick of Joseph, is understood to be a record. We have the two. If then, we are in accordance with them,—or the people are to be in accordance with the record, with the two records if nothing more, and their teaching and their church procedure and their personal lives conform to that which is found in the records, are they not to be found where the records are? And does it not apply there with a better understanding than it does anywhere else? I so used it, and I believe that the use of it in that regard is correct.

But coincident with the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and the preaching of it abroad, putting it in the hands of the people, there followed one of the most extraordinary things, it seems to me, that it was possible could transpire in the history of religion, and that was this: A set of men or a class of men, said to be illiterate, went out into the world with a crude record called the Book of Mormon in their hands, and carrying the Bible with them; they challenged in every village and hamlet where they went, in every city where they were permitted to preach; they traveled east, west, north, and south, and told the people everywhere that if they would listen to their words and testimonies and receive baptism at their hands, they should receive the testimony of the Spirit of God which should testify to them that Jesus was the Christ. I have contemplated upon that spectacle a great many times. To see a class of men, country-bred, country-raised, taking such a step as that, with nothing but their faith to rely on, going out and presenting to the world, of every class of religious folk, without respect to the nature, name, or to the organization, without prejudice to them, simply telling them that God sent them to do this work, and if they would hear what God told them, they should receive the Spirit of Jesus Christ, which should testify to them that Jesus was the Christ. I do not know how it strikes you men, but I will tell you how it has struck me. It has struck me as being one of the most daring things in church history that can be found anywhere. Think of it a moment! Poor, illiterate men, taking the Bible with them, and taking with them a new record, offering it to the people, teaching from it, simply making a statement to them that Jesus Christ would send his Spirit if they would listen and obey. What guarantee had they that Jesus would send his Spirit? What guarantee had they that Christ would pay attention to what they said? History shows us that hundreds and thousands listened to the teaching of these men and were baptized. And that in every instance where the obedience of their heart had been earnest and sincere and they had been properly taught, in every single instance those men who had obeyed that form of doctrine did receive the ministration of the Spirit like that found testified of in the New Testament Scripture, and they arose and declared in the congregation of the people that Jesus was the Christ.

Who has been deceived? Deceivers, deceived, being deceived, and deceiving! Who has been deceived? Three fourths of a century has passed away and we who are assembled here to-night, who have been holding sessions here for the last eight or ten days, have come together from different parts of the world, from the far-off South, from the far-off North, from the East and from the West, young men, middle aged men, and old men; and we have come together and are testifying to each other that where we have been teaching the people have been receiving this testimony that Jesus is the Christ, through obedience unto the doctrine of the New Testament Scripture. Is it not perfectly safe for us to say that this prophecy of Joseph Smith applies unto the lives and the teachings of these records? I prefer to think so. I prefer to so believe, and as a consequence I am of the opinion that where these records are in the sense that these records form the basis and fill up the measure of men’s faith in God and Jesus Christ, and they conform to their teachings, and arise to the practice of what is herein shadowed forth as a code of good morals, they have deceived neither man nor God. But and if this has been a fraud from the start, it has been an imposition upon God, upon Jesus Christ, and upon men, both by those who have deceived themselves and those whom they have deceived. That is not a supposable case, however. While we might deceive each other, we could not deceive God, for while we might deceive ourselves we could never deceive Christ, for though we might put ourselves into relationship with the spirits that would take captive and take them down to the wrong, we never could deceive that Holy Spirit of promise which Jesus was to shed abroad in the world.

So I congratulate you to-night, my friends, upon having this code of good morals, and I congratulate myself upon putting myself within the province of being tested by it.

This Book of Doctrine and Covenants which I hold in my hand is the testimony of things which have been had. It contains the manifestations by which we were to measure at times the Spirit. It tells us what we may anticipate; paints before us the splendors of the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ and the fulfillment of the promises which he has made all through the ages unto men who would believe.

While out yonder in the West, teaching upon this topic, having been charged with being an apostate, I told them when I was baptized, by whom, by whom confirmed, asked them to what church I belonged, and I made the assertion there that I had never apostatized from the faith, not one single particle of it; had never been tried by any ecclesiastical court for my church membership; had never been charged with sinfulness and cut off for my bad deeds; had never even been approached and charged with heresy and the ecclesiastical machinery of the church set to work to sever me from fellowship with the body. Then I believed that I belonged to that church still, and with those of you who have obeyed the doctrine; and I take courage as I took courage there out in the West; and placing the Bible on the stand, I made the statement that when I should go up unto that great judgment-bar with my present understanding of God's dealings with men, I should place before that august Judge, if permitted so to do, that that we had recognized his word, that that he had told us was his word, that that had been borne testimony to ages ago as his word; and I should place upon that the revelations which he had given to the church in the Book of Mormon through the Palmyra Seer, the conjointure of the two records; I should place upon them this record of the administration of the Spirit unto those who had believed in the teachings of these men, and whose lives should conform unto the moral ethics taught in the Book of Mormon or New Testament Scripture and the revelations to the church, and ask that august Judge if I was not justified in demanding from him a judgment in my favor. Take any human judge in any human court; take the issues of the statute enactments of the state before that judge; take the national laws before that judge, and pleading before him, show what these laws demanded as citizenship, as conduct of citizenship, and ask if that judge could find it within his heart or within the precedents of the past to condemn a member of society for having taught and obeyed them! No judge upon the earth would ever condemn a man under such circumstances as that. No less confident am I that the great God that shall sit in judgment when he comes to take cognizance of things upon the earth and minister judgment and justice unto the line and the plummet and the square, will condemn those who have built the spiritual superstructure of their faith upon that which God has given to the world as revelation from him, the code of good morals. I am trusting it. I have trusted it in the past, my brethren. I am trusting it now. Instead of being a confession of weakness it is a statement of strength. Instead of bringing men, myself or any other, into condemnation because I have made such a statement as that, or they make such a statement as that, it is a source of confident strength and must remain sound so long as the word of God stands sure. That should be a source of strength.

I am pleased, then, to greet you to-night. And by the way, this is the first sermon I have preached since the 9th of November, and I thank you for the wish expressed by many of you that I might speak to you. I speak only as one of the banner-bearers of Christ. I have my own method of presenting what I have to say; but I want to assure you that the confirmation of those convictions of mind touching the co-relation of truth stand with me to-day, and it has furnished me a confident source of strength in this, that when I read the declaration of the doctrine in the New Testament, I know that God's revelation to men wherever found will not deny a single line of that; and when this Book of Mormon came to us and gave us unmistakably the code of good morals, including the domestic relation, I knew that the Bible testimonies must conform to that witness and that testimony, or that its testimony was not true. And when I compare them together from the first of Genesis unto the last chapter in the Book of Mormon and the Bible, I find that the testimony is the same. When I take up the revelations given direct to the church, I discover that God, having cognizance of what had gone before, cites to the people by revelation, and cites to them touching this domestic relation, that which entered into the world before the foundations of the world were laid.

Now, as I said to those people out in the West, I do not care to go any farther back than that. May God give you comfort and peace, and give us the increase as he has promised he would.

TWO SIDES TO EVERY STORY.

BROWN'S STORY.

"JOEL BROWN AND THE MORMONS."

"March 16, 1906."

"A little episode occurred in my meeting at Humbeston, Iowa, which illustrates the power of the gospel preached in love. I was preaching on the basis of faith, showing that different faiths were due to different evidences; that the faith of the Moham medans depended on the Koran, the faith of the Mormon on the Book of Mormon, etc., when a representative of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints' arose and asked me if I was willing to meet one of their representative men in discussion. I told him that we as a people were not in the habit of backing out but that we would attend to the matter at the close of the meeting;"
that we have a skunk-skinner named Clark Braden and if they would meet him we could accommodate them. Then I asked him if he believed that Joseph Smith was a prophet, if the book of Mormon is divine origin, if he accepted the doctrines and the covenants as genuine, and if he believed in direct revelation. He would not say yes or no. I pressed the question till all the people understood it and also understood that he would not answer.

"I went on with the meeting without referring to the matter again. The Saints sent for a preacher, talking over the town courting sympathy, and secured the cooperation of the Congo preacher and a number of his card-playing, dancing Christians. I kept still and urged the membership to do the same. But just when we thought the matter about over, another of their number, I suppose a 'Danite,' arose and disturbed my meeting. I then notified them that if any one disturbed my audience again I would have them arrested. Well, their man came and spoke on Sunday afternoon to a large audience and was compelled to meet the questions I put to their representative of which I have above referred to, and of course he answered in the affirmative which 'killed his goose.' At the close of his harangue he asked if the people wished to hear him again and not a single person except a few mormons said stay. He challenged me to debate. I accepted if he would confine himself to the issue between us and guarantee us that he would not back out if we should go to the expense of arranging for a discussion, paying our expense if he failed to meet us, we doing the same for them if we failed to appear.

"He would not accept these terms so the debate was off. The L. D. S. are never willing to debate unless we will affirm that we are the Church of Christ in every particular as it was organized and conducted during the apostolic age. Thus they draw attention away from the main issue. They know they can not stand a moment if the limelight of truth is thrown upon their position.

"I went on with my meeting. I had no more disturbances. The audiences were larger than before; night after night standing room was at a premium. In the next ten days we had thirty-nine additions and there would have been as many more but I was compelled to close to begin at Deweese, Nebraska, where I am now in a snow-storm. The last night of the meeting I answered them to the satisfaction of all.

"The Gospel must be preached in love and all issues met, candidly, fairly, and manly. I consider Mormonism in all its branches a huge fraud, and Joseph Smith a base imposter. It is a fungus growth and thrives best when given publicity. Its claims must be met but not in debate unless they will confine themselves to the issue of Mormonism that the people may not be confused. Preach the gospel and let them do their own advertising, in that way they will get small audiences and make slow progress.

"JOEL BROWN."

—From the Christian Union, March 22, 1906.

THE OTHER SIDE.

Perhaps it is time just now for the other side of the question to be heard, for it is said that every shield has two sides.

About February 15, 1906, while we were busy preaching the "gospel in love" at Andover, Missouri, we received word from a young Bro. Moffett in Humeston, Iowa, asking us to come to that point at once, as a Reverend Brown, of the Christian Church, who was busy preaching there, had made an unprovoked attack upon the 'faith of the Latter Day Saints, declaring that while the other denominations accepted Christ and the Bible, the Mormons accepted neither, but did accept Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon, etc. To these statements our brother had taken exceptions, asking the Reverend Brown for an opportunity for defense of our claims in a joint discussion. To this request reply was made that they would not affirm for the Christian Church; but if we wanted a discussion they had a "skunk-skin­ner," i.e., Clark Braden, whom they would get to meet us. That we would not meet the Reverend Clark Braden, as we had never met him but two times, but had always backed out, etc., etc.

There was manifestly so much "love" in this reply that there was no need for the Latter Day Saints to "court sympathy," the people of the town manifesting an indignation that such an attack should have been made, and that one who called himself a minister for Christ should call one who happened to disagree with him religiously such a name as a "skunk." The brother was asked to send for an elder to reply, and offers of assistance were freely made. As our work took us through Humeston the 17th, and we would have an hour there, we wrote our Bro. Moffett to meet us at the train, and accordingly were met by Bro. Moffett accompanied by Bro. Lester Smith (both young men of excellent character and repute in Humeston). The result of our conference was that we agreed to return to Humeston the 25th and occupy the opera-house at half past two.

Sometime during the week intervening these dates, the Reverend Brown—in an endeavor to show his hearers that the gifts of the Spirit were done away and not to be expected to-day, that he might nullify the promise of Christ: "These signs shall follow them that believe," etc., made the statement that while some claimed to exercise the "gift of tongues," yet if any one told them that they either exercised or had heard this gift exercised, they might know that they were lying, etc. After this statement the Reverend Brown closed his sermon and began asking for those to come forward who might wish to unite with the Christian Church (without Christ or his promises manifested therein). At this point Bro. L. Smith walked up to the Christian pastor, Reverend Cross, asking liberty to bear his testimony to the audience. Placing his hand upon his shoulder Reverend Cross answered, "Of course you can, my boy."

At this the audience was quiet, and in his stammering way, for he is not accustomed to public-speaking, Bro. Smith quietly bore testimony that he had often been a witness to the gifts of the gospel, and knew that the "gift of tongues" was enjoyed in "the church to-day."

This was the "Danite" that disturbed the Reverend Brown's meeting, and a disturbance it proved sure enough, for at once the Reverend Brown lost his temper and called Bro. Smith an "ignoramus," etc., and threatened him with arrest should he ever venture to bear testimony in his meetings again, etc. Surely there is "love" manifested here, but not "love of the truth." One who loves the gospel is tempted to ask, "Why do the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing?" And the answer in this case would be "Because they receive not the love of the truth." Truth would make their people free, and free their ministers who "preach for hire" from their salaries, and that is enough to make them mad (with love for that salary).

The 24th we reached Humeston and with Bro. Moffett called upon the Reverends Brown and Cross. Of course we met with a loving reception. We were called "butters-in," "Mormons," etc., and told to "attend to our own business," when we requested their presence at the opera-house the next day at half past two. We were also informed that there was not a particle of difference between the Reorganization and the Utah church, that delegates went back and forth from the conferences of the two churches, and that "Mormonism in all its branches, the Reorganization with the rest, is a blot that this Government must put out in some way." Also we were informed that if we wanted a discussion with them we must do all the affirming. They would not affirm their church to be the church of Christ; they did not so believe. They used to do those things when they were younger, but had learned better as they grew older, and if the Lord would forgive them for having done so would never be guilty of doing so any more. Also, that if we wished to enter into a discussion with them, we must put three hundred dollars in the bank there as a forfeit in case we backed out. We were also informed that they would not be at the opera-house to hear our reply. Feeling that we had done our duty by them we bade them good-bye.

The next morning we met the Congregationalist minister, Reverend Putnam, who expressed himself as strongly condemning the course pursued by the reverend. At our request he was present at the opera-house and opened the meeting for us. Fully three hundred people were present to hear us, and among them was the Reverend Brown, notwithstanding his emphatic declaration that he would not be there.

Our liberty and attention was excellent while we answered the statements that had been made, and gave a "reason for the hope that is in us," and also showed the people that the very fact that our "Christian" friends claimed a "restoration" made such claims as much an issue before the people of the world as the claim of restoration by Latter Day Saints. We also informed them that whenever they were ready to defend their claims, we would furnish a man to defend the claims of the Reorganization, and would pay our own expenses and expect them to do the same.

We showed that the spirit that would call a people who disagreed with us such a savory epithet as skunks (and we complimented Clark Braden upon his position among his brethren as a skunk-skinner), and make such a statement or seek to have the Government "put out" an opposing religion for no worse crime than believing in the promises of Christ, was the spirit that crucified the Savior and animated the religious leader of the mob who massacred our people at Haun's Mill.

Then I showed by the teaching of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants that this land was to be a land of liberty, and thanked God that we did live in a land of such broad freedom that even Alexander Campbell and his collaborators could preach a gospel of repentance to the rest of the churches of the world.

When we asked them all to join with us in singing "America," they joined in with a will, and even the Reverend Brown sang in honor of the "author of liberty." We could not help asking, "Is it lip-service on his part, or does he really desire liberty and only fails to understand its meaning?"

Before the benediction was pronounced we stated to the audience that we had purpose, and still did purpose, to come to Humeston as soon as the "revisals" were out of the way; and only the attack upon us had impelled us to come sooner; and as there were already some four or five meetings projected for the evening we would leave it to them to say whether they wished to hear us that evening or to wait until we came up to hold our series of meetings. As they were mostly the regular attendants of these other churches they voted for us to postpone our further services and we did so, deeming that they had voted wisely.

That night the Reverend Brown stated that after his meetings were over he would attend to replying to our lecture. As we could not spend a week waiting, we instructed our brethren to keep us informed, and when the Reverend Brown announced his reply to let us know at once, and we would be on hand to take our medicine, etc. Well, such announcement was never made, but after closing his last meeting he took up the subject and devoted a few minutes to giving us a parting shot, "to the satisfaction of all" who desired only to hear one side.

As for the Congo preacher and a number of his "card-playing, dancing Christians," we have this to say: We found him and them broad-minded enough to delight in freedom of thought and speech, and to condemn such methods of attack as were used by our "holier than thou" preacher, who claims to preach a restoration of the gospel and yet dare not undertake to make a defense of his claims lest the congregation who pays him should open their eyes to the confusion of his claims. It was the very religious Pharisees and Sadducees of Christ's day who persecuted the Master and his disciples, and they have not altered their attitude toward the everlasting gospel. May God grant unto them repentance.

IS THE WORLD GETTING BETTER.

[The following extract from a work entitled Jesus is Coming, by W. E. B., published by F. H. Revel Co., Chicago, is sent us by Bro. Charles Derry, who thinks it is "a complete and masterly answer to those hireling preachers who, in order to curry favor with the world and prop their tottering systems, tell us 'the world is getting better.'" Bro. Derry thinks the extract will be of interest to the ministry.—EDITORS HERALD.]

"It is objected that this doctrine [the second coming of Christ] presents a gloomy view of the future,"—that "it is the philosophy of despair,"—that it stands opposed to the popular idea, viz.: that "the world is growing better," and "if it is true," it is sarcastically said, "we might as well fold our hands and wait for Christ to come." . . .

We would not deceive them with the hallucination that they are growing better; for, as the apostle has said, "We know that we are of God and the whole world lieth in wickedness."—1 John 5:19. And therefore we would tell them in the plain words of scripture, that they are in the broad way that leadeth to destruction (see Matthew 7:13), and that they must repent or perish (see Luke 13:3), and, further, that this same world, once overflowed by the flood, is now "stored with fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men" (2 Peter 3:5, 7).

We rejoice over every one of those who, by believing the gospel, the good news of the coming kingdom, are saved from this awful fate and made "joint-heirs with Christ [Romans 8:16, 17] to an inheritance . . . reserved in heaven for us," and "who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time," and who "hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto" us "at the revelation of Jesus Christ." Surely this positive conviction of coming doom is a mightier incentive to action than can be the quieting fallacy that things are moving on prosperously and that even the world is getting better. And this is clearly proved by the zeal of those who hold and proclaim the premillennial coming of Christ.

It is true that they do not expect the conversion of the world in this present evil age, but they do believe that a millennial age of peace is coming, and they do strive "in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation" to "shine as lights in the world holding forth the word of life," that they may snatch some brands from the burning to increase the goodly company who shall be ready to welcome the bridegroom. Why then should they be so bitterly opposed for proclaiming this scriptural doctrine? Are they not all members of the body of Christ (see 1 Corinthians 12:12, 27), and, as such, do they not merit the warmest sympathy and prayers of the church? Shall they be condemned because like the early church they are holding the traditions of the apostles (see 2 Thessalonians 2:5, 15) and looking for Jesus (see Philippians 3:20; Titus 2:13; Hebrews 9:28)? God forbid! But let us remember that "we be brethren," strangers and pilgrims, whose citizenship is in heaven. And let us speak "the truth in love," be built up in love, and "walk in love," "redeeming the time because the days are evil."

Yes, the days are evil. And we freely admit that this doctrine does present a gloomy future in the present evil age, for this world of sinners, who are full of unbelief and radically opposed to Christ, his people, and his salvation. (See John 14:14; 18:22.) They are rejecting God's gracious entreaties for reconciliation, and rushing madly on toward the day of wrath. (See Revelation 6:15, 17.) But there is no gloom in the future for those "who have fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before us," and "who have received the spirit of adoption," become "children" and heirs of God, and "joint-heirs with Christ"; "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us" (Romans 8:15-18).

There seems to be a prevailing disposition to balance up the good and the bad in the world by a process of general average, in which the triumphs of art and science, the progress in inventions, discoveries, etc., are counted as moral goodness; and it is concluded that the world on the average is growing better. But this is utterly fallacious and, we fear, a grand deception of Satan; for, first, there is no such thing as averaging together the true church and the world. There is no possible consanguinity. The one is "from beneath"—the other is from above. The one is of this world—the other not of this world. (See John 8:23.) They must not be yoked together, for there is no fellowship, communion, concord, part, or agreement between them. They are and always must be separate. (See 2 Corinthians 6: 14, 18.) The true church is in the world, but not of it. (See John 17: 11, 16.) There are three parties in the world, viz.: the Jew, the Gentile, and the church of God. (See 1 Corinthians 10: 32.) As the Jews were a separate, called-out, and peculiar people (see Exodus 19: 5, 6), so is this true church a separate and peculiar people (see Titus 2: 14; 1 Peter 2: 9) called unto cleansing and holiness (see 2 Corinthians 7: 1; Ephesians 5: 25, 27); sealed by the Spirit of God, unto the day of redemption (see Ephesians 4: 30); no longer darkness, but, “children of light,” and exhorted to “have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness” (Ephesians 5: 8, 11). They are of God while the whole world lieth in wickedness. (See 1 John 5: 19.) There is an irrepressible conflict between them—no possible harmony exists. On the contrary their principles and tendencies are absolutely opposite. It is therefore entirely inconsistent that they should be spoken of as forming one general mass.

Second, the triumphs of art and science, the progress in inventions, discoveries, etc., by no means argue an increase in godliness. Many of the acknowledged leaders in science and philosophy of to-day, yes, even those who rank the very highest among them, are positive infidels. And very many more, who disclaim absolute infidelity, deny the divinity of Jesus Christ.

It is strange, indeed, that the Christian optimists, in their noisy trumpeting of the strides of science, should lose sight of this momentous fact. And history bears a similar testimony. The power, splendor, and wisdom of David and Solomon were followed by the idolatry and innocent blood shed by Ahab and Manasseh, resulting in the overthrow of Jerusalem and the Babylonish captivity. The temple built by Herod was one of the grandest works of art. It fairly flashed with splendor; and the temple service was conducted on a magnificent scale. The Jews of his time enjoyed great privileges in literature and learning; and yet they crucified the Lord Jesus. The Greeks rose to a pinnacle of triumph in literature, poetry, and art, and yet they failed by wisdom to find out God. (See Acts 17: 23.) See how plainly this is brought out. (See 1 Corinthians, chapters 1, 2, 3.) “For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.”—1: 21. The trouble is not with the heads, but with the hearts of men. No matter how great the learning, man must have a new heart, and this is obtained not by education, but by the operation of the Spirit of God. It was not many wise men after the flesh who received the grace of God in Corinth, but the simple and the despised. “I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth,” said Jesus, “that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent [discerning ones] and hast revealed them unto babes.”—Luke 10: 21. The world then by “wisdom” or “philosophy” (Colossians 2: 8) or “science falsely so called” (1 Timothy 6: 20) can never find out God. Indeed, we have a clear evidence of this, in the rationalism, infidelity, and atheism of our day. No matter how refined and polished their garb or the delicacy with which they may be set forth, still they are only the poisonous deceptions of him who can appear “as an angel of light.” (2 Corinthians 11: 14.) The truth is, that Satan is the archenemy of God, and the world in the present evil age is in his power, so that he besets the people of God with his “wiles” and arrays against them principalities, powers, and the rulers of the darkness of this world. (See Ephesians 6: 11, 13.) Therefore the Christian must “love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world.” (1 John 2: 15, 16.)

Surely, then, this wicked world, which is so radically opposed to God, and under the present control of his archenemy, is not growing better. On the contrary, judgment, fire, and perdition are before it. (See 2 Peter 2: 6–37; Jude 7; Mark 9: 43, 48.) Perilous times are coming. (See 1 Timothy 4: 1; 2 Timothy 3: 1.) “Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived.” The tares, which naturally grow much faster than the wheat, shall continue up to the harvest. (See Matthew 13: 40.) “The mystery of iniquity,” which already worked in the days of the apostles, shall continue in “the man of sin,” the personal antichrist, whom even the Jews will receive (see John 5: 43; Isaiah 28: 15, 22), and who will be so great, and rule with such universal authority, that he is to be destroyed only by the personal appearing of the Lord himself (see 2 Thessalonians 2: 8). There is no hope then for the world, but in the coming of Christ the King. And, praised be God for the promises, the Lord will come at the end of this age. Antichrist will be destroyed (see Revelation 19: 20), all things that offend shall be gathered out (see Matthew 13: 41–43), and the millennial kingdom of righteousness shall be established on the earth. So while there is a gloomy prospect for the world during this evil age, there is a bright and glorious prospect during the coming millennial age.

But perhaps it is still insisted that the world has made great progress in civilization and refinement, in benevolence, in personal liberty, international fraternity, Christian work, etc. In proof of this, the abrogation of slavery cited,— also the cessation of the inquisition and martyrdom,— the establishment of charitable institutions, the great postal and commercial means of communication, built upon the agencies of steam and lightning,— the right of trial by jury, international arbitration, missionary triumphs, etc. Well, first of all we answer that civilization and refinement are not the source of holiness. They may elevate the head while the heart is untouched.

The gilded palace of sin is as certainly the gateway to hell as the darkest dens of vice. The cultured and scientific atheist is as surely in the service of Satan as is the thief or the murderer. Jesus, himself, classed them all together when he said “He that is not with me is against me.”—Matthew 12:30. So it matters not how much more like an angel of light the serpent may appear, nor how civilized and refined the world may be, Satan is the Devil still. And the world is still the world. His manifestations and methods may be changed, but the spirit of darkness is the same. And accordingly, we see that while slavery is disappearing—communism, socialism, and nihilism are lifting their godless, headless forms. And darker are their forebodings than were even the days of the inquisition and martyrdom. Oppressive monopolies, systematic peculation and fraud are paralleled with charitable institutions. The mails, so useful for news and correspondence, afford a most convenient agency for disseminating the flood of obscene literature which is blasting the morals of the young. Trial by jury has too often been proved a farce, in which the criminal escaped. The nation which opened the way for the missionary also forced upon the teeming millions of China the awful curse of opium. While missionary efforts have been greatly blessed abroad (and praise God that they have), infallibility, ritualism, skepticism, and desecration of the Lord’s day have more than equally triumphed at home. And let it not be forgotten that the monstrous assumption of infallibility has triumphed in what was once an apostolic church of Christ, the mother of us all.

The past century has had its full share of war and carnage; numerous, dark, and fearful have been the days of blood up to this very year. In short, Satan is on the alert, and fully up to the times, multiplying his deceptions on either hand, as he will continue to do, until chained by the angel at the beginning of the millennium. (See Revelation 20:1, 3.)

The Merit of Good Work.

The great thing is to produce nothing of which, if it comes into broad light, you will be ashamed, and then whether it does come into broad light or no need not much trouble you.—Mathew Arnold.

“Are you in earnest? Seize this very minute. What you can do, or dream you can, begin it; Boldness has genius, power, and magic in it. Only engage and then the mind grows heated; Begin and then the work will be completed.”

—Goethe.
Youth's 446 general fund; for this work can not be carried on without monthly readings in leaflets for distribution; but with the present number of subscribers means. We must have literature.

Missouri, the treasurer of the general society. many subscribers all take the HERALD, and they have the readings in them.

Leaflets was not for use in the locals, because their members do not need the leaflets in their locals, because their members all take the HERALD, and they have the readings in them. Let me explain again that the primary object in publishing the leaflets was not for use in the local meetings, (though they may be very useful there,) but that the locals or individuals might buy them at a very small cost and use them to distribute wherever it was thought they might do good, especially among those sisters who do not have the HERALD. If any do not wish to send for them each month, they may send for them for six months or a year, as they choose. The price of ten each month for a year would be fifty cents. Twenty-five each month for a year would cost one dollar and twenty cents. All orders for leaflets should be sent to Mrs. B. C. Smith, 214 South Spring Street, Independence, Missouri.

We would like to see a number of new locals organized this year; but we know that in many places conditions are not favorable for organizing locals. But in such places it is more than likely that there are two or three sisters who might furnish the money to send for a few leaflets, and form themselves into a committee to see that they are distributed regularly where they would do good. Do not hesitate to take up this work, dear sisters. You will find pleasure in it.

Sr. Burton was present at our meeting, and presented some articles for the home which were a gift from our sisters in the Islands. They were highly appreciated by the sisters.

One of the subjects brought up at the general meeting for consideration, was the degrading influence of the Sunday supplement and the obscene pictures on bill-boards and in the advertising columns of the newspapers, presented by Sr. Burton. A resolution was passed disfavoring them. Of course we may not be able to do much toward bringing about their discontinuance; but we may keep the supplement out of our own homes, and help to turn public sentiment against such things, and this much we must do if we desire a healthy environment for the morals of the rising generation.

The Greatest Woman.

The work in the city is still prospering, and with the city missionary continued in his work we hope the flock are persistent in their work. The wandering ones are being sought out and cared for, the erring are being brought to justice, and the weak ones being strengthened.

All are hopeful in the work for the coming year. May God's blessing still continue.

Editors Herald: This question of making some provision for taking care of our poor, and furnishing the unemployed with means to support and educate their families should be the first and only question before us at the present time. To do this we must commence the right way, and the right way is the Lord's way; and if I understand his instructions to us it is not by building colleges to fill our heads before there is any provision made to fill our stomachs. We may have our heads crammed full of a college education, and it will not prevent us from starving to death. I do not want any one to think I am opposed to colleges, for on the contrary I am very much in favor of them, and this is why I wish that first of all the Saints should be furnished with conditions whereby they can take advantage of them; and this can only be done by looking to the industrial before the educational. I might be surrounded on every side with institutions of learning, and they would be of no benefit to my children, unless I am provided with the means to pay for the instruction to be had there. When I go to build a house, the first thing I do is to lay the foundation, and then lay the sills upon it, and everything else will come in its order as the building goes on to completion. So with the building of Zion. We must commence at the foundation. All things else will come in their proper place.

We have already spent much money where it can not possibly ever do the very poor any good that could have been put into a manufacturing institution which would have given hundreds of families the means directly and indirectly of giving their children a college education. Let us stop our foolishness and go to work as the Lord has directed us, and prepare to take care of our poor by organizing ourselves in the manner he has outlined; and I would suggest that steps be taken at our next General Conference to formulate plans for an industrial movement, at the same time supplicating our heavenly Father for his divine guidance in the matter. I believe that the Saints are ready and waiting for just such a movement, and will give it their heartiest support, for the only intelligent and rational way is to help the poor take care of themselves.

If this college business ever becomes any benefit to the very poor it will have to be in the way I have outlined. So you see that the leveling plan spoken of by the Lord is not now being industrial before the educational. I might be surrounded on every side with institutions of learning, and they would be of no benefit to my children, unless I am provided with the means to pay for the instruction to be had there. When I go to build a house, the first thing I do is to lay the foundation, and then lay the sills upon it, and everything else will come in its order as the building goes on to completion. So with the building of Zion. We must commence at the foundation. All things else will come in their proper place.

LEAVING SPY HILL, with its numbers augmented by a few additions, its Religio started, its Sunday-school under the able management of Brn. Carter and Clarke, the writer went at the end of December to Rossendale. There the call was so strong to Cypress River that I went there and soon had an interested congregation of Saints and sinners. In February three were baptized. Several more are interested friends of the cause. In my work there I was ably seconded by the prayers and hospitality of Brn. Coombs and Arnold and their faithful partners.

Hearing of some discouraging reports, I visited and remained with the Rossendale Branch for a few weeks during March, preaching in the lumber woods and at the homes of Brn. Venard and Henry, and enjoying their well known hospitality. Brn. Wilson and William Henry have been faithfully laboring for the Adelaide, South Australia. It is completely organized, having a staff of faithful and intelligent officers, who will, with God's blessing, place the work on a solid footing in this city. During the summer we have reached a lot of people by street-preaching, which is to us most interesting work. It is certainly difficult, amid the din of the street traffic, to get our work intelligently before the people, but it, in conjunction with house to house tractizing, is the only effective way of advertising (known to me) under present financial conditions.

It seems that the time is ripe for a definite forward movement on the part of our church to build up Zion. Personally, I have been much impressed recently as to the necessity of practice along those lines in lieu of theory. At the same time we do not want sensationalism; steady progress along any line being safer than rapid advance followed by disaster or retreat.

It seems to me that it would be wrong policy to boom the college business ever becomes any benefit to the very poor it will have to be in the way I have outlined. So you see that the leveling plan spoken of by the Lord is not now being industrial before the educational. I might be surrounded on every side with institutions of learning, and they would be of no benefit to my children, unless I am provided with the means to pay for the instruction to be had there. during the winter, and are doing their utmost to unite the forces of good against all the powers of evil. In this they have been powerfully assisted by the skill and devotion of their zealous partners in life.

For some time during February, Sr. William Henry's life had been hanging in the balance, but God blessed the administration of Bro. Wilson, so that the life of the faithful sister and soldier was brought back from the very gates of death. When afterwards I administered to her, I felt, as I laid my hands upon her head, that God had already answered prayer in her behalf.

On the 9th of April I left Cypress River for the home of Bro. Nelson Wilson, having received an invitation to visit Saints in Winnipeg. Sr. Predetta Wilson, the pioneer Saint of the Treherne Branch, had departed for the far West to visit mother and friends in Oregon. The Saints of Rossendale and Treherne will miss you, sister.

Ministered to for a day and a night by Bro. and Sr. Week Wilson, who have experienced the truth of Matthew 10:35, 36, but who have always been faithful in word and in deed, Nelson Wilson and myself left for a short visit to Winnipeg. Here we spent a few days tramping hither and thither in search of Saints, and were hospitably entertained by the families of Bro. George Wilson and A. F. Henderson. Your humble servant preached on two successive evenings in the home of the latter, leaving Elder Wilson to continue the services.

Away on the 14th, two hundred and fourteen miles along the Louris and Estevan branches of the Canadian Pacific Railway to Gainsborough, Saskatchewan, twelve miles north of Uncle Sam's domains. Here Bro. Braden met me and regaled me during our six and one half miles' ride in the darkness with the narration of his deliverance from death under the administration of Elder Knisley, who spent a few days here last fall.

What a change from the hills and dales of Cypress and Rossendale, the woods and sheltered roads, the wire-fenced farms of the latter, the noisy, bustling, bustling, inquiring multitude of the growing Chicago of Manitoba, to the quiet, dreamy plains of Gainsborough! Here you travel for miles without the sight of a sheltering tree, or the interposition of a fence. But there is noise. Not that of street-cars, nor that of automobile-s, but made by the rush of human immigrants, but Uncle Sam's wild fowl linger here by thousands, enlivening this vast wilderness by their screams, swinging hither and thither in unequalled evolutions above our heads, as though to mock at the foolishness of would-be aërial motors.

What of the work? It lies before us everywhere. To dig, to intrench, to undermine, to plant the dynamite of God's eternal truth where it will best scatter and level down the mountain of skepticism and stubborn adherence to the old, fabulous ideas of God, hell, and the church.

Finding the impracticability of conducting week-night services in Cayuga district after repeated trial, I have moved westward to the region north of Carievale, meanwhile retaining a Sunday-night service in Cayuga school, where I have been visiting outsiders, distributing tracts, and talking gospel. Several in Cayuga are interested in our work. Last Sunday evening the Baptist elder attended our services and at the close indignantly asked: "Why don't you keep to the gospel?" by which he evidently meant "faith in a man-imagined God." He is one of the old endless torment, literal-fire adherents, who does not believe that Christ visited the spirits in prison. (See 1 Peter 3:18-20.)

Two weeks ago I opened a new appointment at the Seymour school, eight miles west of here, preaching first in Bro. John Braden's home; but receiving an invitation to a larger house, occupied by a friendly outsider, I moved the week-night services, with marked success, as I soon found a goodly number of interested listeners. Last Sabbath morning the Seymour schoolhouse was secured as a preaching-station. The two families of Saints are nine miles distant from each other, so I am trying to conduct services in both neighborhoods, there being three Saints in one neighborhood and two in the other.

One thing has struck me forcibly during my winter's work. What can we do for the isolated Saints? All over this great Northwest they are found by twos and threes, separated by many miles of traveled road, for months without the preached word, sometimes enduring the odium bequeathed to us by the Mormon seceders, beset by worldliness on the one hand, and by false but alluring systems of creed on the other! The work of "keeping what we have" is almost, if not quite, as important as "getting more." Everywhere the cry is: "Elder, when can you visit us?"

God help us to be faithful to the trust imposed in and on us. Yours in the one faith, ALFRED DORSETT.

DAYTON, Ohio, May 2, 1906.

Dear Herald: It has been some time since I have read a letter from this part of the Lord's vineyard. General Conference is over, and Saints are rejoicing over last year's results. The work is growing here as well as elsewhere. About six years ago there was one Saint here, and now there are about seventeen, although they have not all been baptized here. Some have moved in from other parts. We have a branch with two elders, two priests, and one teacher.

We expect to commence street-work as soon as Bro. Baggery, our missionary and branch president, arrives from conference. I have a brother living in Xena, a town of about ten thousand, just east of us about fifteen miles, where there are some of the Utah faith. As yet none of the brethren have been there to introduce the truth, that is, to my knowledge. Two Utah elders were here last year and said they had a convert from the Church of Christ (Campbellites) by the name of Hull in that place who wished to meet us in discussion but as yet he remains quiet about it. I hope the work will soon be heard in that city.

These few lines leave us trusting God and knowing that he doth all things well, and according to our faith in him.

Your brother in bonds,

JNO. E. DAVIS.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, May 4, 1906.

Editors Herald: As some of the Saints may wish to know the extent of the damage to the church and Saints of the South Sea Island Mission by the great storm and "the heaving of the sea beyond its bounds," I will copy from letters lately received, which will inform you of the trouble there.

From Metuaro: "A word concerning the tempest which fell on the Tuamotus and Tahiti. Alas! Alas! for the South Sea Islands which have done so evilly this year. In Anaa ninety-five people were drowned, of whom sixteen were members of the church, one of the sixteen being Pai Derrien, son of Peter and Rebecca. His body was not found. In Faite five were drowned. Three vessels are lost at sea, the Aimeo, the Vahine Tahiti, and the Tuariri. Two of the sailors of the Tauturu left to some of the wreckage of that vessel five days before they drifted near the shore at Tahanea. The sea swept over the Tuamotu Islands and washed away the houses; clothes, boats, and all their property is destroyed. The brothers and sisters of Anaa are in Tahiti now. They will not return, for there is no land there, but rocks only; no food, no houses."

From Varoa's letter: "A great storm arose here. The sea and the wind were very strong on February 8, which destroyed the Tuamotus and a part of Rarotonga. On some of the Tuamotus Islands not one house left nor any property of the natives; the rocks only left of the islands. On some of the islands no people were drowned, but on Anaa were ninety-five; sixteen of them were members of the church. On Faite five, Marekau seven, Hikuera six, Motutunga seven, and most of the people..." on the three vessels that are lost, altogether over one hundred and sixty persons. And the islands that are swept of houses and property are Taharoa, Takapoto, Manih, Ahe, Arutua, Apataki, Kaukura, Makatea, Rairoa, Tikahau, the half of Moorea, and a part of Tahiti, and other smaller islands were destroyed."

I received seventeen letters from those during conference from which I extract the above which is confirmed in the other letters. Therefore not only were the houses of the Saints destroyed in Tararua—twenty houses altogether—but in the Tuamotus the houses were generally destroyed, including the Catholic, Protestant, and other chapels, as well as other buildings, government houses, traders' stores and goods.

Metuaoe, Varou, D. M. Pohemiti, and in fact the most of those writing, wish to be kindly remembered to the officers and members of the church in America, or as Pohemiti says: "Peace be with Joseph Smith, his two counselors, and the whole assembly of Saints who gather together in the conference, and in America. Peace be with you all."

Upon receiving the news of the loss by the storm in March, the Saints of Southern California collected one hundred and twenty dollars and sixty-five cents, and the San Francisco Saints sixty dollars and fifty cents, and sent out to them. And the Bishop sent them three hundred and twenty-five dollars to pay off the mortgage on Tararua land as the late storms have hindered them. And concerning this Metuaoe writes as follows: "I received your letter with surprise and gladness, and I informed the Saints on Sabbath of the contents of that letter, and they had great joy and delight to know that in their trouble their brethren had remembered them, and they send their kind thanks and blessing by you to all the Saints there. And tell the Saints that we received their gifts with great delight, and it causes our hearts to go out to you all in strong desire, and in the love which is according to all true Saints. Peace, peace be with you all."

Thus does the love of God in our souls make all nations of one kindred—one people—and the love of the brethren in that mission for their brethren here is as pure, holy, and fervent as is ours for them. And the recognition by the brethren of Joseph's land of the distress of the children of Manasseh in the Islands of the Pacific is a tribute strong and certain of equality on earth.

Since this great storm in the islands of the sea, the earthquake and fire have been manifested on Joseph's land also, and many have been made to mourn; and these voices of earthquakes, and tempests, and the waves of the sea heaving themselves beyond their bounds, when the Lord said formerly, "hitherto shalt thou come, but no further" (Job 38:11), is sufficient testimony that we are in the last days, and God is speaking to the nations otherwise than by the elders' voices. May God protect and bless all his Saints, and in these troublous times let his peace be upon all Israel.

Your brother in Christ,

JOSEPH F. BURTON.

Dear Herald: The good people of Gladstone arose in their might at the ballot-box and shut the saloons out of our town last evening, the 4th. We had two Utah elders with us. They preached on the street, and showed by chart Lehi talking to the people in old Jerusalem before starting to the promised land, and their wanderings in the wilderness, and after they landed here; and proved the Book of Mormon by ancient American archaeology. Elder Nathan Glazyman was the leading spokesman. The other elder was Young Woodruff. They distributed tracts and sold the Book of Mormon and the Voice of Warning to the people. They had quite a crowd on the street to listen to them. The elder called on me several times to confirm what he said about the Book of Mormon, but he did not call on me to confirm what the prophet Jacob said about polygamy. If the acts of David and Solomon were abomination before the Lord in their day, it looks like the same old abomination exists in the days of Utah.

We have had Bro. Elbert Smith with us to administer to our daughter, Bertha Essex. She seems to have been benefited thereby. The manifestation of the good Spirit was very apparent, for which we all feel very thankful. I have read Sr. Louise Palfrey's book on ancient American archeology. It is a marvel and a wonder in the way of testimony to the divinity of the Book of Mormon. I have loaned it to our United Presbyterian preacher and wife to read. I loan all the church literature I receive to people to read who will read, and am trying to hold the fort the best I can in my weak way. But the good Lord is able to make the weak strong. Will be glad at any time to welcome any of the elders who may call on us.

Your brother in the faith,

JACOB L. RUST.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, May 5, 1906.

Editors Herald: After the conference closed some of those who had attended it from other places desired to visit Liberty, and so, on the 19th of April, we visited that historic town where the Lord designated to the church through Joseph Smith the Seer and Revelator of those days who should be his successor, and pointed it out as plainly as did that successor by revelation of April 14, 1846, settle the question as to who his successor should be. Our party were very kindly received by the citizens of Liberty, and after viewing the old floor and door of Liberty jail we met in the court-house several citizens of the town, among them the mayor, and Captain John R. Storey who had met the Prophet, and who gave a good description of his form, appearance, and good life, and the Honorable D. C. Allen delivered a splendid eulogy of Joseph Smith and his teachings, especially of his loyalty to the United States Government and his love of liberty under the law, and liberty of conscience in religious matters; and without fulsome praise or flattery he spoke eloquently and grandly of his public teachings during the troublous times in which he lived; and the representatives of the Commercial Club of that city welcomed us to their city in very beautiful and clear addresses, to which Bro. John Smith who was in charge of the party replied, as did Brn. Chatburn, Salyards, Berve, Etzenhouser, and others. And Sr. Audrey Anderson spoke very feelingly of the work of her father, who as a boy was blessed and thus appointed as the successor of Joseph the Martyr in that town so long ago—and who did determined to rid his father's name of all obloquy wrongfully placed upon it—and now in the declining years, the sunset of his life, the radiance of that accomplished work is shining upon his elderly brow. And thus the day at Liberty is indelibly fastened upon the mind of at least one of the visitors to Liberty, Missouri.

On Tuesday, April 24, Emma and I went to Lamoni, and at the home of Sr. Rossegurie and Sr. Walker and Sr. Mary Banta we found a very quiet and restful abiding-place. And the Saints of Lamoni made our sojourn among them a very enjoyable visit indeed. I never in memory's field have passed such a week of pleasant and fond recollections revived, and pleasant communings with the children of our Master as in the week of our visit there. The only alloy to our happiness was the afflictions which rested upon a few of the brothers and sisters of which the spirit of healing from the Lord did not fully relieve them. Yet the Master has notified us that "Our light affliction, which is but a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" (2 Corinthians 4:17), and our healing comes from him, and we therefore are enabled to say to him, "Thy will be done."

Rambles and Meditations.

Editors Herald: The past few weeks have showered many blessings upon me. It has transported me from the chillier California to Papeete on August 6.

years: not merely to attend the conference, but to visit my many dear cousins in the church in Kansas City whom I had never seen. They had heard and embraced the gospel in Michigan and Kansas City, and our family had done so in Ontario; and this entirely independent of each others' knowledge or influence. I have now upwards of twenty cousins in the same in Kansas, some still in Michigan, one in Buffalo, New York. Glad indeed was I to find their ebb of spirituality so high, to have such an attachment for the work, to be beyond the danger-point so far as doubting the work's divinity is concerned. Pleased beyond expression was the writer to see one of them so highly favored as to be a common spokesman of the Lord and to deliver in his presence prophetic utterances intended to allay and dispel the ardor of suspense and unrest as well as to lift up spirits drooping and recumbent.

But, oh! Nauvoo and Carthage! Can it be possible that I have just had a visit there; that I have looked upon the scenes we have read so much about, where the best people under the heavens once dwelt in peace for a little season and then faded away from the haunts of civilization whither they were wafted by a cruel and jealous breeze? Can it be that I have at last beheld the old beleaguered city, born so hastily to die a six-year-old? Am I to recollect it as a reality that I sat in the old stone jail of Carthage where the Prophet of the Nineteenth Century gave his life for the cause he loved? Yes, indeed, for I have just returned from said places, where I saw the Mansion House and was in the room "where the two martyrs lay"; where I was in the house of Brigham Young; where I was in the house of Heber C. Kimball; the old arsenal; the Nauvoo House where Joseph and his seed were to have place from generation to generation, and where the weary traveler was to have a place to set his foot; the house of Wilford Woodruff, the house that was said to have been occupied for some time by Sidney Rigdon; the house of Joseph Young, Brigham's brother; the house of Almon W. Babbitt. I saw the tomb of Emma Smith, the "elect lady"; I walked around the house of John Taylor (now tenantless) who was successor to Brigham Young; saw the place where the Expositor was printed, no building there now. I was at the foot of Main Street where baptisms were performed, regular and for the dead. And on the lot where the beautiful temple, burned in 1848, once overlooked all that region of country, I had the satisfaction of preaching twice, assisted by Elder Mark Seigfreid, whose family lives between Nauvoo and Carthage, and who very accommodatingly helped me from place to place.

By the kindness of said brother and his family I reached Carthage yesterday and had about three hours there viewing the old jail and interviewing old citizens.

A gentleman asked me, in Carthage yesterday, if our people were ever coming back to Nauvoo. My answer was that we surely will, that Nauvoo will again be in our possession, but that it will be by purchase. If there is any doubt about Nauvoo, it is equally doubtful about the whole business. If Zion must be rallied, must be built up because it is prophesied, Nauvoo must be built up for the same reason. At present Nauvoo is industrially at the bottom of the hill. It has amounted to nothing since the Saints were driven away from there and never will till they return. An acre of land with splendid buildings and the choicest soil can be bought for one thousand or twelve hundred dollars. With church privileges, it would be a delightful place to live, but a mighty bad place for pickpockets and thieves to buy land to make money out of and gull their brethren. An item in the late revelation touching on this was to the point. Soon I expect the Stake of Independence to be my home, my headquarters. But no Mormon speculator will double on me. The item in the late revelation intended to restrain that evil and avaricious spirit is as much imperceptible, as binding, as any other revelation ever given, and those who henceforth go heedlessly in the land-mongering in Zion are positively under condemnation. They are mud on the wheels of progress. The church is better without such wretches. The early church at Nauvoo became waterlogged with just such an element as that, and when the tempest came she went down—into disorganization. The early church had its John Bennetts and other aoudredirs who came to Nauvoo to fleece the flock, and it is not improbable that a few should creep into the Reorganization. Saints should uniformly come to Zion to impart, not to absorb. Then Zion will flourish. But some old fox says, "I have not enough to keep me unless I speculate a little." Then get it like an honest Christian or starve. It is better to starve yourself than some other. Your low speculation scheme is unmistakably portentous of starvation: the only trouble is it is some one else that has to starve.

To return to Nauvoo and Carthage let me say that as I visited those places made sacred by the memories of the past, I imagined I could see the great events in the rise and fall of Nauvoo. I thought I could see Brigham Young and others of the Quorum of Twelve, when they were yet good men, tear away from the embraces of their wives and children who looked long after them as they set out on their famous European Mission about 1840, in the midst of much sickness and the most trying circumstances. I could see the Prophet at the head of the church in the flush of life sitting beside his wife Emma. I saw him haunted and provoked by prowling mobs and bands of marauders. I saw the swell of agitation that troubled him on the appearance of the Expositor bearing to the thousands of Saints and to the world its revengeful lies and wicked falsehoods. I saw the council meet, saw the order of destruction go forth, and saw the types, pressess, etc., of the Expositor scattered to the winds.

Behind the scenes, there stood Brigham, Bennett, and others, scheming, plotting, conspiring. They were gradually yielding to the pressure of the million demons loitering around Nauvoo to accomplish the destruction of the virgin church; they were determined that she should go into adultery.

I saw the toilers on the temple, the men in the quarries; heard the sound of chisel and hammer, saw that sacred edifice lift itself foot by foot above the hills and command the attention of the Gentiles and passers-by. There it stood at last with its fount on carved oxen, its thirty suns on hewn pilasters, its tower in the heavens sustaining the angel trumpeter. Yet, like the Nauvoo House, it is yet unfinished. There it stood, until eventually the hand of the incediary applied a torch and the flammable portion of it was eaten away. The sad sight! to see that monument of so much sacrifice and toil go up in smoke.

But before this we could see the Prophet in Carthage jail with his saintly brother, where treachery and wickedness had Concerning the Martyr, may I say this: that I regret the "wildcat" bank; I regret his generalship in United States army; I regret the pin with the square and the compass; I regret the destruction of the Expositor; I regret the running for the Presidency, yet when I reflect on the perils of his life, his wonderful achievements in so short a time, the good that he did, I think that he did well, and I almost wonder that he came off with as few flaws as he did.

CHICAGO, Illinois, April 28, 1906. ALVIN KINSEY.

How Shall It Be Brought About?

In the Herald of February 7 appeared a letter under the caption of "The Gathering" in which are a few statements that I think the brother and myself do not look at in the same light. He says he felt a sting of rebuke when one of those helpless wage-earners, said, "Your own missionaries gloat over the opportunities given them to vote for Teddy, under whose administration the great culminating touch is being placed upon the trusts. Your own church, with its official organ, the editor-in-chief standing at the head, has all the time held its foot on the bleeding necks of the helpless wage-earners."

I think that if any one would talk that way to me, I would simply consider the source, and not give the matter a second thought; for, in my opinion, Theodore Roosevelt is doing as much as any man of his day to relieve the burden that rests on the shoulders of the laborers. And as far as the church and its official head trampling on the necks of the wage-earners, he would have come nearer the truth if he had said it is the demon that lurks in the keg and the bottle. For I think that the church, and its presiding officer, have always stood for the cause of justice and suffering humanity. And I believe that one class of wage-earners, the coal-miners, can, with a set of tools that cost only a trifling sum, in a third less hours, make more money than can an uncomplaining tiller of the soil, with hours of work in the blazing sun and blinding tempest, and an investment of thousands. Of course there are exceptions in both classes. And I think that other classes of laborers, who are willing to work, have no occasion to starve, provided of course that they are able, unless they are bound by the ties of intemperate habits, in which case they can blame no one but themselves. They could complain far more justly of the closed shops, where no man, unless he is a member of the labor union, is permitted to work. Does it look reasonable, that the all-wise Creator could look with any degree of favor on any institution that denies to its fellow man the right to work, when, where, and as long as he pleases? And, when such is the case, where is the boasted freedom that our forefathers fought for?

The brother also speaks of the noble work that Mr. Wayland is doing with his three million copies of the Appeal to Reason that find their way to all parts of the world. I would suggest that at the next General Conference he will make a motion to dispense with the missionary force entirely, and in its place substitute another paper, built on the same foundation as is Mr. Wayland's. It would be self-supporting, provided the subscription list could be built up to as large a number as is that of the Appeal to Reason, and I think that the church would receive a modest income besides; and the money that is consumed in keeping the families of the missionaries could be used by the Bishop in purchasing land and preparing for the gathering. And I happened to know that a few years ago, when Mr. Wayland boasted that his publishing house was worth something like $125,000, that Editor Wasser, of the Girard Press, was mean enough to look the matter up, and found that Mr. Wayland paid tax on an assessed valuation of about $6,500. Quite a difference between the value when the assessor was around and when he was not. Hoping for ultimate triumph, and the speedy gathering, I am,

JOHN W. JONES.

CHEROKEE, Kansas, February 17, 1906.
To the Saints in Wales.

After nearly three years' sojourn among the Saints in the Welsh Mission I am made to feel ties of friendship and fraternal bonds that prompt me to express to each and all of you my most sincere gratitude for every act of kindness done by you to me, although in many instances it was either directly or indirectly service done that effected good for the interest of the church. And as one of its representatives I was made glad that your interests were intertwined with mine in the onward march of the latter-day work.

My father was a missionary in this work in the forties, and on into the fifties. He traveled and sacrificed much for the work, and endured persecutions, and was a faithful minister up to the winter of 1852-3, when the church taught and practiced polygamy. He then stopped work, realizing that the church had made a departure from its former declarations. His missionary work extended from Hereford, Herefordshire, to Carmarthenshire. He united with the Reorganization in 1866, at New Tredegar, and presided over that branch for years prior to his death. However, he had hoped that God would raise up men to put the evil down within that body until he heard of the Reorganization, and that Bro. Joseph had come to take the presidency of the church.

The early missionaries of the Reorganization did a noble work. Brn. Jeremiah Jeremiah, John T. Phillips, Thomas E. Jenkins, John D. Jones, John E. Rees, and John T. Davies were the early missionaries to Wales from this country, from 1883 to the early nineties. The work in Wales, left unsupported for quite a number of years, resulted in a continual falling off in numerical strength. There did not seem to be any desire for missionaries from America to augment their forces. However, very little was done in the way of putting a missionary force in Wales. So the work went down and down until the time that Brn. G. T. Griffiths, J. W. Gillen, John R. Evans, and David Richards went to Wales in 1892. The work at that time had little better than a nominal existence in Wales. From that time to now the progress has been very slow and gradual. The work for the missionaries has been hard and the conditions unfavorable. The opposition to having missionaries sent from America, with a view of getting local talent only, is spirit in opposition to the law of God that provides that the Twelve and Seventy are to go into all the world. The traditional practices carried over from the Brighamite church in church government, and other conditions that could be referred to, attest the practicability of sending men out from this land to all other countries so far as it is possible and practical to prosecute the work. While those who hold such views form but a small percentage, yet that percentage is all-sufficient to make the missionary feel sensitive and oftentimes fearful that his best efforts will be misunderstood, hence misrepresented. I look back with satisfaction that my association with all who are missionaries in England and those who were missionaries in Wales, Brn. Jones, Jenkins, and Evans, could work harmoniously together and enjoy strong ties of friendship. In a word, I may say that their cooperation was a great strength to me.

Bro. Rushton was very companionable and congenial to me. In trial, I found a sympathizer in him, and a counselor. He gave encouragement and support to all that he thought was right.

Our Western Wales district conference, held at Aberdare, January 20 and 21 of the present year, was a grand success—the most largely attended conference held in the district for many years. The arrangements were perfect, ninety-seven of us ate dinner together, and over one hundred drank tea together. After all expenses were paid there was three half-pence of a balance in hand.

The editor of the Aberdare Leader attended our social-services and gave us very favorable notice through his paper. He also permitted that we should give an account of our conference, also that Bro. Rushton should give an article setting forth the history of the rise of the church and its doctrine in the epitome form. He cordially invited us to call at his office the next time we came to Aberdare. After the conference, Bro. Rushton and I traveled together in the mission for five or six weeks. We were well received everywhere by the Saints and outsiders. He asked me repeatedly to stay in the mission for another year at least. However, I felt justified in returning home, and did so. We had a rough voyage. Some three or four days of the voyage we were seasick. We reached home March 26. We have found welcome by Saints; and persons not members of church show us ample welcome.

I attended the General Conference held at Independence, Missouri, remaining till its close. There was a very peaceful and orderly spirit pervading the various assemblies. The fasting and prayer was observed quite generally. The earnest pleadings with God for light and such guidance as he in his wisdom might feel we needed, will not soon be forgotten. Some may be dissatisfied with what was presented as a revelation from God. It is folly to expect that all will be able to accept a revelation unrestrained. The wonder to the writer is that as many as do are able to do so. Instead of faultfinding as some do, because there are those who need time to analyze and think, and possibly get some divine assistance before accepting, we should feel safer that there are those who think for themselves, and are not carried away with emotion nor sentimentality. To present a false revelation to the church is quite possible. It may be said that God would not deceive his Prophet. That is verily true. But while God would not do so, there may be other causes that would. The confidence we have in the instrument that has occupied as a Prophet, Seer, and Revelator to the whole church for the last forty-six years still remains; his character being unimpeachable, gives strength to his inspiration, and to our confidence at least. There is danger in being too slow to accept what God may give, and thus lose a blessing. God will bless the honest, sincere soul with light. It may come slowly, but it will come to the confirmation of truth. The Lord has promised it.

I am appointed to labor in the Lamoni Stake for the present conference year. I wish the Welsh Mission every good possible, and shall always feel interested in the success that shall come to your work.

I have not mentioned the English missionaries who have visited Wales from time to time, such as Brn. Charles Derry, Jason W. Briggs, Josiah Ellis, Mark H. Forscutt, John S. Patterson, and others whose names were appreciated, as those of the early missionaries and pioneers of the work in Great Britain. I hope to remain.

Extracts from Letters.

Mrs. Belle Chappell, Swink, Indian Territory: "I do wish, if it be the Lord's will, that some elderly would come this way. Pray for me that I may be faithful in the gospel. My husband is not a member of any church, and I am the only Latter Day Saint in this vicinity; but I know the gospel is true, and I never have regretted the step taken. The Lord has blessed me many times."

Rufus Culp, Ohio: "I was once a tobacco-user. One day it came to my mind that I was not perfect. I earnestly besought the Lord to make me perfect, and a whisper came to me saying, If you would be perfect lay up your pipe. We can not be pure and use tobacco."

Nellie Creveling, Madison, Kansas: "There are no other Saints here that I know of. I never realized that it would be so trying to be away from the privileges of going to hear the good sermons that I have heard in the Brick Church at Lamoni. It seems sometimes, as though I can hardly stand it. I would be glad to hear of some elder coming here to hold meetings; we would gladly receive them."

   INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, May 5, 1906.

   Pastoral.

   To the Beloved Household of Faith of the Spring River and Northeastern Texas and Choctaw Districts: As your district bishop and servant in Christ, I desire to submit a few words of comfort and suggestion to you.

   You have doubtless seen the report of the work accomplished by the church during the past year, which is certainly very gratifying, and is recorded as being one of the most profitable that we have ever come to the church, both in spiritual and numerical gain.

   We believe this condition is resultant in part from a more united effort upon the part of the people to honor God by the keeping of his law relating to temporalities, and by such obedience they not only hold up the hands of his true servants and ambassadors, but they gain promised merit and favor from him for being both willing and obedient. Such, the Lord has declared, shall eat the good things of the land of Zion. (See Doctrine and Covenants 94.)

   The Saints of the above-named districts have been forward, with few exceptions, in the discharge of their duties in tithes, offerings, and consecrations.

   As we now enter upon the duties and responsibilities of the new conference year, we trust it is with renewed courage and a deep, abiding faith and confidence in God, and also with a strong personal determination to perform our duty to both God and man, always remembering that we can not perform our whole duty unto God without a performance of the duty of our duty. It is necessary for us to give every thought and effort unto us, “Let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishing of the work intrusted to all.” (Doctrine and Covenants 19:4.)

   The ministry have their work to perform; likewise the Saints who labor in temporalities have their part of the work to perform. Both are alike necessary for the success, development, and salvation of those engaged, and for the world of mankind.

   The General Conference just closed was one of the most important that has come to the church. General unity prevailed, and if any considerable amount of division is in the church it was not manifest. So we hope and believe that the outlook for the spread of the gospel is highly encouraging.

   The ministry assigned to labor in our districts are tried men. They have been faithful and diligent in the past, and we feel we can trust them in the future. With the assistance of the local authorities in the branches and branches, and the usual aid and assistance of the membership, we feel that we are upon the threshold of a profitable year.

   To accomplish the general forward movement of the work described, we have individual conference teams in every part of our brethren must not be neglected while the husband and father is going forth to proclaim the wonderful message of peace and salvation. Neither will they be, for I know the true and noble hearts that have in the past so nobly responded will not be found wanting to their duty in the future.

   The following-named brethren in the Spring River District act as my agents and are authorized to receive for tithes and offerings: O. P. Sutherland, Webb City; James A. Graves, Joplin; Curtis Randall, Pittsburg; J. T. Riley, Fairland, Indian Terri­ory; W. E. Westervelt, Angola, Kansas; E. D. Bailey, Tulas, Indian Territory.

   In the Northeastern Texas and Choctaw District: J. W. Jackson, Arkansas; E. A. Erwin, Texas; T. J. Sheppard, anywhere in the district; Peter Adamson, Jr., Wilburton, Indian Territory.

   Hoping God will abundantly bless and protect you, I am, your brother, Ellis Short.

   To the Saints and Friends in the Southern Mission, comprising what has been known as the Southeastern and Southwestern Missions; Greeting: Having been appointed to preside over this mission for another year. I hope the work of the past year has been such as to obtain your confidence and hearty cooperation while I shall be associated with you.

   It is a very large field, and we have a reduced missionary force; this will necessitate every one who can perform and is ready to assist in every way he can to push the work.

   We urge all the local ministry to arouse to the need of activity on their part. Every elder and priest who is not engaged in active branch duties on Sundays should make appointments to preach where he lives and keep them up, and thus help to warn his neighbors.

   Branch presidents are requested to report promptly to the district presidents on the first of July, October, January, and March; and district presidents are requested to have their reports in the hands of the minister in charge by the 10th of the months named above, and neither of them should need to be reminded of this duty every quarter. Brethren, try to remember this.

   There should be no jealousies or friction between the local and traveling ministry, but they should work together in unity; for we all have the same interests at heart, the same hope in one faith. With unity and cooperation on the part of the ministry, there is no reason why we should not be able to show some good results at the end of the year.

   The following have been appointed by the Kirkcaldy Missionary Board as assistants in charge: T. C. Kelley, 1115 West Electric Street, Independence, Missouri, in charge of all the Southern Mission east of the Mississippi River; H. N. Hansen, Council Bluffs, Iowa, in charge of the Western Division, Oklahoma, Indian Territory, Arkansas, and Louisana west of the Mississippi River; S. S. Smith, Knobnoster, Missouri, in charge of Texas, Southwestern Division.

   The missionaries will please send their reports to the assistants in charge of the fields where they labor on the 1st of July, October, January, and March. Be prompt in this so the assistants can get their reports to the minister in charge by the 10th of the months named.

   Where it can be done I would advise that the missionaries work two by two, especially in new places. Where there are local elders or priests that can be secured to assist, they can separate, getting the locals to help them.

   Debates: It is best to consult those in charge whenever it is possible or practicable to do so before entering into arrangement for debate, and they will furnish all the assistance they can to all. If ever they are not present at once, in meekness and humility defend the faith. Let your preaching be affirmative all the time, and let some one else do the challenging, if he is not so disposed.

   One of the special duties of the missionary is to warn the world, and we should make it our special effort to push the work into as many new places as we can, and do justice to the interest for the missionary should manifest an interest too soon, but use wisdom in our work along this line.

I have selected as my associate ministers in charge brethren whom I trust will receive your unqualified support, and with whom I expect to counsel regarding all matters pertaining to our department in their respective fields, and who will be ready and willing to act in all matters belonging to the mission in charge in my absence.

All reports should be forwarded to them promptly on the first days of July, October, January, and March.

There is no specific form of report required, but the items provided for in the blanks adopted by the Quorum of Twelve and the General Conference at the late sessions should be furnished with accuracy, also any other items thought to be of interest to the work.

The associate ministers are as follows: James McKiernan of Farmington, Iowa, for Eastern Iowa, including the districts of Eastern Iowa, Des Moines, and Nauvoo; Eli Hayer, of Lamon, Iowa, for the district of Western Iowa; with whom have associated: Pottawattamie, Little Sioux, and Gallands Grove. Chambers, of Magnolia, Iowa, for Nebraska, and those portions of North and South Dakota lying west and south of Missouri River.

I hope that these brethren and all others of the missionary force will receive the moral, spiritual, and financial support of the Saints and friends of the cause. The missionary force is not expected to draw on the Bishop for traveling, clothing, or living expenses unless emergencies demand it. I mention this not because of any unnecessary demands made by them in the past, for I think they have been commendably careful, but I speak of it to remind the Saints and friends of their duty toward them. Many of the fields of the ministry have been supplied very well; in others they have suffered for want of necessities and have been hindered in the accomplishment of their work. So do not wait for their wants to be seen; if you see them coming, do not fail to tender your ready aid. As the brethren will use the means wisely and you will have the satisfaction of knowing that you have contributed to their comfort and to the success of the work.

The superannuated ministry are again invited to cooperate with us to the extent of their ability and circumstances.

The superannuated ministry are again invited to cooperate with us to the extent of their ability and circumstances.

fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God: Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints—Ephesians 6:13-18.

What a mighty defensive and offensive armament! One that will fully equip us to successfully wrestle against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. We are laborers together with God. Recognizing the strength of our position, and the power of our support, let us each one move out shoulder to shoulder in the accomplishment of our several duties, remembering the fact that the number of God's kingdom is called to labor together with God. Some one may ask, “What can I do to help advance this great work, which we all profess to love?” I want to suggest one way that some of you can help. In the work of the Church. We have these large, fixed tents, all equipped for service; and I suppose we can have the men to successfully operate them (while the tents are in charge of the Bishop's agent and district presidents, placed there by action of district conference, and the men in charge of a subdivision placed there by minister in charge).

While I see no special barriers in the way, I think it is a mistake that ought to be rectified at our next conference, by placing the tents in the hands of the subministerial in charge of the district work. But as regards the work you can do, write me at Lamon, Iowa, as soon as possible, and let me know if you have or know of any new openings where a tent could be successfully located. We want to get to as many new openings as possible, and you who are isolated have an opportunity to do something by helping to secure places to preach in, either schoolhouse, church, or grove under the tent. Remember, too, that we can not all have it at once, say the most favorable time. Remember that there are only a very few weeks in the year when all things are favorable; so let us occupy at once. See who can be first to make a new opening, and see how hard we can work these missionaries this year. Let’s get busy together, and all feel that the success of the work depends on our doing our part, small or great. If you can not find a place for preaching, send us preaching a dollar to help us in some new opening, where there are possibly one or no Saints to help bear expenses and support the missionary.

Another thing: let us not forget that we are to have a district reunion, to be held at Rhodes, Iowa, in the latter part of August; and I hope all the Saints will take an interest in this reunion. They are very beneficial to all, so let us begin now to arrange to attend our next reunion. We have always had a splendid time at Rhodes. We have been kindly received, and the attendance at our preaching-sessions by those not of the faith, has been better than at any other place where we have held a reunion. Make up your minds now to attend, and write to Bro. W. C. Nirk, Rhodes, Iowa; Charles M. Richeson, State Center, Iowa; or W. Christy, Lamon, Iowa, for any information you desire. I am quite sure if I could get a number of our own tents, I could get a better rate. Let me hear from you if you are thinking of attending, so I can get an idea of what we will need. Some will say, “Too soon.” You are mistaken; never put off till to-morrow what you can do about what we will need.

We want to get to as many new openings as possible, and you if you are thinking of attending, so I can get an idea of orders for tents, you if you are thinking of attending, so I can get an idea of what we will need.

Addresses.

J. M. Baker, 313 Palmer Street, Sioux City, Iowa.

Died.

Baker.—Elizabeth Baker was born in Champaign County, Ohio, November 14, 1813; died April 30, 1906, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Malinda Dodd, Baxter, Iowa, at the age of 92 years, 5 months, and 16 days. Was married to Shelby Baker June 14, 1830. To this union were born fourteen children, of whom eight survive her. Sr. Baker was religiously inclined from early youth; was a member of the Baptist Church until 1866, when she heard G. E. Deuel, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ preach, and was baptized by him. Services in charge of William C. Nirk.

Hancock.—Bro. John E. Hancock was born at Oveston, Tockington, Gloucestershire, England, November 6, 1827. In 1841 he married Eliza Bradbury in Bristol, and came to America in 1846. He united with the old church in 1847 in England and with the Reorganization in Utah, September 28, 1884, upon which date he also received ordination to the office of priest. They lived at Wathena, Kansas, from 1865 to 1903 when they came to Lamon, Iowa. In 1866 he received a blow on the head from an unknown assailant, and for days his life was despaired of. He largely recovered however, but with age and a paralytic stroke his mind became affected and it was deemed best to send him to the State Hospital at Clarinda, Iowa, where he died March 31, 1906, at the age of 78 years, 4 months, and 25 days, having been in the hospital just one year. Funeral was conducted from the Saints’ Home April 3, sermon by E. E. Long, Internment in Rose Hill Cemetery. He leaves his wife to mourn his departure.

We give it room in the HERALD notwithstanding it has been noticed in the Ensign, for this reason: A sort of anathema has been uttered against Missouri and a sort of prediction made concerning the State, that if she did not make some effort to redeem herself from the deserved condemnation of all righteous people because of the persecution of the Saints in Jackson, Ray, and Clay Counties, and their final expulsion from the State without just and sufficient warrant, she should "sink disgraced and degraded down to hell." This episode points to the fact that the present occupants of Missouri in the counties from which the Saints were expelled are either not the same class who so persistently fought the Saints in the days that are past, or are their enlightened successors, with whom the exhibition of a better philosophy has taken the place of religious persecution and hate. It is a striking evidence that there has been a change of opinion and that the effort which the Reorganization has made in the years that are past and is still making to prove to the world that Mormonism does not necessarily mean polygamy and bad conduct in its devotees, but that it is, as originally held by the Saints, a doctrine calculated to make intelligent citizens whose conduct shall be above reproach from their neighbors, is seen and noted. The courtesy shown our people by the present dwellers at Liberty is strikingly in contrast with the supposed action of Generals Clark and Lucas under the direction of the Governor of the State, to march the prisoners, Joseph and Hyrum Smith and others, to the public square of the city of Far West, at nine o'clock in the morning and there shoot them to death; and against which order Colonel (afterwards General) A. W. Doniphan so effectually plead, when he said to the commanding General: "It is cold-blooded murder. I will not obey your order. My brigade shall march for Liberty to-morrow morning, at eight o'clock; and if you execute those men, I will hold you responsible before an earthly tribunal, so help me God."

When Bro. Alexander H. Smith and the Editor waited upon General Doniphan at his home in Richmond, Missouri, several years ago, we remarked to him, that we scarcely saw how it happened that he should have taken such strong ground under the influence of the excitement and the feeling that existed at the time, to which remark he stated that he came of a long-lived race; that he was but a young man and he felt that he could not afford to go through his life with the blood of his fellow men unjustly on his hands. The threat made by him that his troops would march at daylight and that he would hold the commanding general morally responsible before the public for the act if it was perpetrated, saved the lives of Joseph and Hyrum Smith and others who were afterwards incarcerated in the jail at Liberty.

We believe that if the fact was generally known throughout Missouri that when Joseph and Hyrum Smith and others escaped from the custody of the officers while being transferred from one county to another they were being held upon an unsigned mittimus without legal process, they would exonerate the memory of the men from anything like the stain of being fugitives from justice. They were not. When judicial officers condense to deal with their fellow men in a judicial way and have not the courage to properly sign the papers which may be issued against them by the courts, it shows a failure to assume responsibility that is in itself criminal as well as neglect of duty.

We learn by those who were present that Captain John R. Storey paid rather a glowing tribute to the character of the Prophet Joseph Smith, which we are pleased to hear.

We would have been pleased to have been permitted to have been with this little party at Liberty, but we regard it as having been a very pleasant and marked episode incident to the conference of 1906. We do not fail to give credit to these men who thus welcomed the little band of visitors on that splendid April day.

A recital in the HERALD will give many others the wish that they had been there as well.

A HUMANE INSTITUTION.

Great calamities like the recent San Francisco disaster stir the sympathies of the world and crack the shell of selfishness with which we are wont to think the world has encased itself. Cities, States, and Nations hasten to the rescue, and thereafter the world congratulates itself upon its liberal and open-handed contributions to the suffering.

But why should the world wait for a great catastrophe of this kind? There is ever present with the world, (and nearer home, too, than any foreign nation; nearer home than any distant city,) disaster and calamity by which hundreds and thousands are left in the sink-hole of despair. As much as we appreciate the generous response to appeals in behalf of those made destitute by a sudden and unexpected cataclysm, yet we believe there is daily opportunity to exercise as great if not greater qualities of unsel­ selfishness and magnanimity toward the destitute and needy, that are too often passed unnoticed. We have watched with interest the development of a movement in Chicago, according to press reports, which, while its work may not be sounded abroad to any great extent, will, if successful in its mission, do as great a work in aiding suffering humanity as that which may gain greater notoriety. It will be as great because it will cheer as many hopeless hearts, and relieve as many destitute; it will be greater insofar as it will be shorn almost entirely of inducement to be generous for the sake of popularity, and will appeal more directly to the sympathies of the human heart.

This movement in Chicago has taken the form of an employment bureau to assist the lame and halt and aged to secure employment where now they are ruthlessly brushed aside in the struggle of life. We take the following from the Chicago Tribune for May 9, 1906:

It was like the last muster of a shattered, beaten regiment. One after another they hobbled haltingly through the swinging doors to the office of the bureau of charities in the Unity Building and gave their names to Eugene T. Lies and Mrs. Collar, the bureau officials appointed to receive them. They did not ask charity. All they wanted was an opportunity to earn an honest living. There was only one impostor among them, and he was quickly ushered to a down-going elevator.

Most of the applicants confessed that they were outcasts—that none would give them work, that everywhere they had gone they had been told that their days of usefulness and service were ended, that the working world held no place for them.

The first one of them came in the early morning before the doors to the office of the bureau had been opened. The last halting straggler came at dusk—she came with the marks of tears around her eyes and she went away smiling.

During the day employment at good wages was found for twenty of the lame and the aged. The others went away happy with the assurance that everything possible would be done to find work for them, and some said it was the first gleam of sunlight that had come into their lives since they crossed over from "manhood" into "old age." Men of forty-five confessed that employers had told them that they were too old to be of service; the women applicants for work put the age limit at fifty-five. Those for whom steady employment was found catalogued their infirmities in "the book" as follows: 1 deaf, 6 artificial legs, 1 heart failure, 2 left arm off, 1 slow in motion, 1 poor eyes, 1 left leg off, 5 reached or passed age limit, 1 paralyzed partly, 1 feeble-minded.

The man with heart failure was given employment as an attendant in a physician's office, three of the one-legged men were given jobs as watchmen—two at factories and one at new buildings for a large contractor. The feeble-minded lad discovered that he could fold paper in a box-factory and was employed at that occupation. One of the men whose right leg was missing was employed at work in a factory in which the hands alone were used, and one of the men whose left leg was missing was intrusted with the work of operating a small machine, which is run with one pedal. The man who said he was "slow in motion" was given a place as "information bureau" in a large wholesale establishment.

THE FEELNESS OF MAN.

The following from an editorial under the above caption in the Chicago Tribune forcibly portrays the limitations of man's power and ability:

When elemental forces break loose no human power can control them. The volcano, the earthquake, the tidal-wave, the tornado—and fire, when it is unconfined—serve to remind man how helpless and insignificant he is in the presence of a great convulsion of nature.

This generation is wiser than its predecessors in many ways. It has unraveled some of the mysteries of the world. It has learned how to divide, direct, and to utilize on a small scale many of the forces of nature. It has for many purposes made electricity the handmaid of man. Give the modern engineer money enough and he can remodel the face of the earth. He can turn great rivers into new channels or divide them up into tiny rivulets. He can harness Niagara. He can lower the level of a great lake as easily as his grandfather could that of a pond. No army officer of an earlier generation would have proposed to prohibit a city from taking from Lake Michigan all the water it might need. It never was imagined then that Lake Michigan could be hurt.

When the earth is at rest men can do as they please with its surface. When the day of unrest comes engineers, scientists, and captains of industry are as helpless as infants. They can stop up an oil-well but not a volcano. They can check an ordinary fire, but they are powerless when they face a great conflagration fanned by high winds and find themselves, as at San Francisco, without a supply of water.

How accustomed we are to think of the surface of the earth as being stable! How seldom we realize that it is a mere crust or shell which is only thick in comparison with the little creatures who dwell upon it! We consider it firm, because it is firm to us, except in some few places or on infrequent occasions. When it is disturbed and there is a dislocation of only a few inches, the works which man has laboriously piled up on the area affected tumble into ruins. A sudden or a lingering death may be the fate of thousands.

The great convulsions of nature appear to men to be uncommon and infrequent. That is because the span of human life itself is so short. The life of the oldest man does not encompass many fearful volcanic eruptions or earthquakes. Comparatively few men have personal experience of any of them. But they are occurring almost uninterruptedly at some point on the earth's crust. They differ only in degree, not in kind.

These blind outbreaks of nature are among the perils which are forgotten speedily when they are not seen or heard. Each generation forgets what another has suffered, or trusts that nature has worn herself out for a time and will be at rest until he has passed from earth.

The brevity of life, the transitory nature of human greatness, and man's heedless disregard of the dangers which surround him on all sides are graphically pictured in the old hymn:

"Lo, on a narrow neck of land
Twixt two unboundless seas I stand,
Yet how insensible!"

Man is, indeed, insensible to the dangers that environ him, but if he were not he would spend all his days in the shadow of impending disaster and take little comfort in life. It must be owing to his reliance on some comforting theory of chances he has worked out that he can persuade himself that he has even a reasonable expectation of a long or happy life. There is great cheer for man in the assumption that he will escape the calamity his neighbor has suffered; that his life will be marked by felicity, and that he will sleep with his forefathers without knowing more of sorrow than they have known. A false hope too often! As intelligence is more widely diffused and news is more carefully collected, the troubles of the whole world come closer to every one than they formerly did. What our friends, neighbors, and fellow citizens suffer we must in larger measure than before take to our own hearts and feelings and suffer ourselves.

But we can not alter or affect the results when the great forces of the universe are in motion. Then we can only admit the frightful weakness of man and proclaim his submission to the decrees of a higher power. —Chicago Tribune, April 20, 1906, UNSOLVED PUZZLE.

The following was published in the HERALD for July 8, 1903, and is republished by request.

A PUZZLE.

The following are extracts from two resolutions which the Presbyterian Church is circulating among congregations of various denominations, asking that they be affirmed:

“Resolved that we earnestly petition the Fifty-eighth Congress to submit an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, to the legislatures of the several States defining marriage to be monogamous and making polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, under whatever guise or pretense, a crime against the United States, punishable by severe penalties.”

“Resolved that we earnestly request the United States Senate to investigate the charges against Apostle Reed Smoot, of the Mormon church. If it be found that he is a polygamist, we ask that he be expelled from the Senate on account of unlawful practices.”

While the following is an extract from the Fergus, Canada, News-Record, March 16, 1899:

“PITTSBURG, Pennsylvania, May 27.—The last day’s session of the Presbyterian General Assembly opened this morning with a crowded docket. An overture from the synod of India, asking for a reply to the memorial on the subject of baptizing polygamous converts was considered. The Mohammedan was admitted to the church and he was allowed to retain both wives and house. . . . Doctor Morrison representing the synod trial cases and special legislation, held that the recognition of polygamous marriage by the church in India was an absolute necessity; ‘any other rule,’ said he, ‘would rule David out of the church.’”

Consistency is said to be a jewel. The puzzle is to locate the jewel in the above.

THE ARK OF THE COVENANT.

A brother sends us the following which will prove interesting to HERALD readers:

WHAT BECAME OF THE ARK OF THE COVENANT?

The prophet [Jeremiah], being warned of God, commanded that the tabernacle and the ark should follow with him, when he went forth into the mountain where Moses went up, and beheld the heritage of God. And Jeremiah came and found a chamber in the rock, and there he brought in the tabernacle, and the ark, and the altar of incense; and he made fast the door. And some of those that followed with him came there that they might mark the way, and they could not find it. But when Jeremiah perceived it, he blamed them saying, Yea, and the place shall be unknown until God gather the people again together, and mercy come; and then shall the Lord disclose these things, and the glory of the Lord shall be seen, and the cloud.—2 Machabees 2:4-8.

GRACELAND NOTES.

Sr. W. C. Roth, Weatherby, Missouri, writes as follows, May 11, 1906: “We enjoy meeting with the Saints here, and are trying to live up to the light we have received. The Lord has blessed us many times. We enjoy reading the HERALD. Inclosed please find ten dollars to help pay the debt we owe to Graceland College. May God’s blessings be with our college that it may soon be free from debt.”

Somewhere...

Somewhere the things we long for exist on earth’s wide bounds; Somewhere the sun is shining when winter nips the ground, Somewhere are flowers blooming, somewhere the corn is brown And ready to the harvest, to feed the hungry town.

And thus, I thought, ’tis always, in this mysterious life, There’s always gladness somewhere, in spite of pain or strife, And somewhere sin and sorrow of earth are known no more; Somewhere our weary spirits shall find a peaceful shore.

Somewhere the things that try us, shall all have passed away, And doubt and fear no longer impede the perfect day, O brother, though the darkness around thy soul is cast, The earth is rolling sunward, and light shall come at last.

“Jesus Wept.”

“Jesus wept” at Lazarus’ tomb, Moved by Mary’s grief and gloom; His kinship proved by this, when he Shed tears of tender sympathy.

“Jesus wept,” oh, wondrous thought! The act with deepest meaning fraught; Joy to the heart it brings to know That Christ’s in touch with human woe.

“Jesus wept,”—those blessed tears; They give us hope, dispel our fears, Break down the bars of senseless pride, Let in the light, our coldness chihe.

“Jesus wept,”—may we, too, weep When love’s ones fail the law to keep, And leave the paths they’ve trod so long To join the homeless, giddy throng.

“Jesus wept”—in his great heart May we for ever claim a part, Won by his love, his tears, his cross. We gladly count all else but loss.

Trust.

The Lord is my shepherd, no want shall I know He’ll feed me and clothe me wherever I go. He leads my soul the still waters by; He’ll strengthen and help till the day that I die.

He makes me to feed in the pastures so green; He gives me rich blessings both seen and unseen; He restoreth my soul, when I wander away; He’ll lead me aright that I go not astray.

Though I walk through the valley and shadow of death, No harm shall befall though he taketh my breath. For thou wilt to be with me to bear me along; Thy rod and thy staff shall be ever my song.

My table is spread though there’s enemies near; The anointing thou givest will comfort and cheer; Thy goodness and mercy shall mine be through life; My soul rest secure, when is ended all strife.

SHALL WE GATHER HOME TO ZION?

There has come to the notice of your writer a mutual discussion on the gathering of the Saints of Zion, within the arena of the church papers, and to his mind there could not be taken a much better subject to discuss or write upon. So I desire to present my ideas and understanding in addition and in connection with what has already been said or written.

I find in Doctrine and Covenants 28:2 these words:

Ye are called to bring to pass the gathering of mine elect, for mine elect hear my voice and harden not their hearts; wherefore the decree hath gone forth from the Father that they shall be gathered in unto one place, upon the face of this land, to prepare their hearts, and be prepared in all things, against the day when tribulation and desolation are sent forth upon the wicked; for the hour is nigh, and the day soon at hand, when the earth is ripe; and all the proud, and they that do wickedly, shall be as stubble, and I will burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts.

Now what we want to know is, What one special place does God refer to, wherein he says: "Wherefore the decree hath gone forth from the Father that they shall be gathered in unto one place upon the face of this land"?

We find in Doctrine and Covenants 57:1 these words:

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, saith the Lord your God, who have assembled yourselves together, according to my commandments, in this land which is the land of Missouri, which is the land which I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the saints: wherefore this is the land of promise, and the place for the city of Zion. And thus saith the Lord your God: If you will receive wisdom here is wisdom. Behold, the place which is now called Independence, is the center place, and the spot for the temple is lying westward upon a lot which is not far from the courthouse; wherefore it is wisdom that the land should be purchased by the saints; and also every tract lying westward, even unto the line running directly between Jew and Gentile. And also every tract bordering by the prairies, inasmuch as my disciples are enabled to buy lands. Behold, this is wisdom, that they may obtain it for an everlasting inheritance.

God has designed that Missouri shall be the special place, and Independence the center thereof. And he also says that it is the land of promise, and the place for the city of Zion. That being the case, we find in Doctrine and Covenants 63:9 these words:

I, the Lord, am angry with the wicked; I am holding my Spirit from the inhabitants of the earth. I have sworn in my wrath and decreed wars upon the face of the earth, and the wicked shall see the wicked, and fear shall come upon every man, and the saints also shall hardly escape; nevertheless, I, the Lord, am with them, and will come down in heaven from the presence of my Father, and consume the wicked with unquenchable fire. And, behold, this is not yet, but by and by; wherefore seeing that I, the Lord, have decreed all these things, upon the face of the earth, I willleth that my saints should be assembled upon the land of Zion; and that every man should take righteousness in his hands, and faithfulness upon his loins, and lift a warning voice unto the the inhabitants of the earth; and declare both by word and by flight, that desolation shall come upon the wicked.

So we find God desiring the Saints prior to the fulfillment of the decreed desolation of the wicked, or when fear shall come upon every man, to gather unto Zion or the land of promise, taking in his hands righteousness, and faithfulness upon his loins, lifting a warning voice unto the inhabitants of the earth, declaring both by word and flight that desolation shall come upon the wicked. And Christ says, Doctrine and Covenants 28:2, that his elect were going to be gathered to this special place in time to prepare their hearts and be prepared in all things, before the day when tribulation and desolation should be sent forth upon the wicked. So we see he has emphatically decreed that they shall be gathered before desolation or tribulation are sent forth upon the wicked.

Next we want to know what this desolation or tribulation consists of. We find in Doctrine and Covenants 105:9, 10, these words:

Behold, vengeance cometh speedily upon the inhabitants of the earth—a day of wrath, a day of burning, a day of desolation, of weeping, of mourning, and of lamentation—and as a whirlwind it shall come upon all the face of the earth, saith the Lord. And upon my house shall it begin, and from my house shall it go forth, saith the Lord. First among those among you, saith the Lord, who have professed to know my name and have not known me, and have blasphemed against me in the midst of my house, saith the Lord.

The Lord says that his vengeance shall begin at his house first, among those who have professed to know his name, and have not known him, and have blasphemed against him in the midst of his house, or when they were with the saints. And from them, it was to go forth upon the wicked inhabitants of the earth. And again, Doctrine and Covenants 45:4, speaking of the restoration of the gospel in these last days:

And when the time of the Gentiles is come in, a light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fullness of my gospel; but they receive it not; for they perceive not the light, and they turn their hearts because of the precepts of men; and in that generation shall the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled; and there shall be men standing in that generation that shall not pass until they shall see an overflowing scourge, for a desolating sickness shall come over the land; but my disciples shall stand in holy places, and shall not be moved; but among the wicked, men shall lift up their voices and curse God, and die.

It is an evident fact that these disciples who are going to stand in holy places, are those whose hearts shall be prepared, in all things, but they who have professed to know his name, and have not known him, and are not his disciples, shall be numbered among the wicked, partaking of the desolating sickness, and, if living in the land of Zion, be cut off and sent away, with weeping, mourning, and lamentation, cursing God, and dying.

I do not understand that every man or Saint should declare both by word and by flight that desolation shall come upon the wicked by fleeing to Zion without being prepared, for we find an instructive admonition given to us in Isaiah 52:10-12, which says:

The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God. Depart ye, depart ye, go ye out from thence, touch no unclean thing; go ye out of the midst of her; be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord. For ye shall not go out with haste, nor go by flight: for the Lord will go before you; and the God of Israel will be your rearward.

Now we find God explaining what and who he referred to here, in Doctrine and Covenants 108:1, 2.

Harken, O ye people of my church, saith the Lord your God, and hear the word of the Lord concerning you, the Lord who shall suddenly come to his temple; the Lord who shall come down upon the world with a curse to judgment; yea, upon all the nations that forget God, and upon all the ungodly among you. For he shall make bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations, and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of their God. Wherefore prepare ye, prepare ye, O my people; sanctify yourselves; gather ye together, O ye people of my church upon the land of Zion, all you that have not been commanded to tarry. Go ye out from Babylon. Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord. Call your solemn assemblies, and speak often one to another. And let every man call upon the name of the Lord; yea, verily I say unto you again, The Lord will go before you, and the God of Israel will be your rearward.

I wish to add here in connection with the law of God, a vision given to my mother when I was a child, and it was surprising how fast money came in, being earned by the strength of my own back, fulfilling my lame back which I had felt in the vision. And the three girls who took their share out of my lap in the vision was fulfilled, as I had to pay there fare here to the land of Zion. And the two older girls, who the messenger said could not come with me, came later on. I told the vision to but a few of the Saints, outside of the family, and in whom I had confidence, who are living now in Michigan and can bear record to the truthfulness of my words. And two nights before my coming to Zion, one of my sisters came to see me, who was not in the church, and wanted to know why I was going away, leaving my two children behind, as I was well enough off where I then lived. She gave me a general censure or rebuke. So my husband spoke up and said: She was commanded of God to go. And that evening a voice said to me, when in my bedroom, which voice I knew was the voice of the Indian messenger whom I had seen in the vision years before, I told you not to tell anybody of that. Then was brought to my heart remorse and sorrow.

The fulfillment of it was like this: The war that I heard was fulfilled in the Cuban War, for at the commencement of that year I started to prepare, having an evidence that that was the war I had first heard in the vision. God provided, and opened up the way by giving me work: and through of the people. But they can go later on if faithful. But if this is made known, you shall have to go to the station below or above here, so the people of this town will not know of your going.

So in the eleventh verse of Isaiah, he is exhorting the Saints to depart from Babylon. But in the twelfth verse he says, "For ye shall not go out with haste, nor go by flight." And again, in Doctrine and Covenants 108:4, he says: "Let not your flight be in haste, but let all things be prepared before you." And in Isaiah, "For the Lord will go before you, and the God of Israel will be your rearward."
Israel be our rearward. As touching the buying of homes here in Zion, I wish to refer your minds to some valuable instruction to the first Latter Day Saints, which we can apply to our day, given by the Seer, found in the Church History, volume 1, page 381, wherein he says:

Let your sufferings be what they may, it is better in the eyes of God that you should die than that you should give up the land of Zion, the inheritance which you have purchased with your moneys; for every man that giveth not up his inheritance, though he should die, yet when the Lord shall come he shall stand upon it, and with Job in his flesh he shall see Zion.

So we see the necessity of desiring a home in Zion, and also near the New Jerusalem, paying for one where the Saints of the old organization have not previously bought, that we may be enabled to stand or live upon it in the millennial reign. I wish to add, in connection with the instruction of Joseph, another vision shown to my mother, being an eye-witness to its fulfillment, which happened like this:

In the year 1899 just prior to our leaving, we were corresponding with Bishop Hilliard in regard to the best location, and he advised us to come to Kingston, Missouri, near Far West, where so many of the Saints were massacred. We shipped our goods there and sent money to rent a home, so all things would be prepared before us. After the departure of our goods, I was again confronted with a vision. I saw the country around Far West, which was opened to my vision. And a guide stood by me. There were hills before me, and he asked me if I knew what they meant. I told him, No. He said, Look again. And I saw coming over the other side of a large hill, multitudes of people, all dressed like farmers, some being very poor looking, and mixed, being all ages. The guide asked me if I knew what that meant; and I said, No. Then he said, Well, this is the resurrection, and these people have bought this land and paid for it with their own money; and in the resurrection this is theirs, and their inheritance. You have no right here, and you must go back out of here. I saw the justice of it, and was perfectly willing to back out.

In fulfillment of the vision, we arrived at a little town named Hamilton, near Kingston, Missouri, residing there for a short period. My husband contemplating buying a farm in Kingston, went to examine it, and found it not suitable to his wants. The people in Hamilton tried to entice us to stay with them, telling us there were nothing but negroes living in Kingston, and other things to discourage us. So God in his wisdom worked things in such a way that we were led to Kansas City, Missouri, and bought a home upon land which we believe belonged to Indians at the time the Saints were driven from these parts, and we have occupied it since our arrival here, with the exception of a month and a half.

So let us remember the encouragement given to us of God, Doctrine and Covenants 88:4, which says:

Therefore, let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion, for all flesh is in mine hands: be still, and know that I am God. Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion.

Also, retaining in remembrance that the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days, we read in Micah 5:7-9, these words:

And the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many people, as a dew from the Lord, as the showers upon the grass, that tarryeth not for man, nor waiteth for the sons of men. And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people, as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep; who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver. Thine hand shall be lifted up upon thine adversaries, and all thine enemies shall be cut off.

And again in Micah 4:13, we find these words:

Arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion; for I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs brass; and thou shalt beat in pieces many people, and I will consecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their substance unto the Lord, of the whole earth.

Now we find Christ explaining, applying, and referring these words to the Indians in the Book of Mormon, Nephi 9:48-51, and in Nephi 9:88-90.

So we see God is going to use the Indians as an instrument to scatter the Gentiles, and to give to the obedient the gain, substance, or good of the land of Zion in these last days.

THE GATHERING.

Ye are called to bring to pass the gathering of mine elect for mine elect hear my voice.—Doctrine and Covenants 28:2.

As early as September, 1830, the church was called to bring to pass the gathering: “The decree hath gone forth from the Father that they shall be gathered in unto one place.”—Doctrine and Covenants 28:2.

I presume that most of the Saints understand that the gathering of the Saints was one of the duties required of the old church; but very few, I believe, realize it was one of its privileges. There is a principle underlying the gathering, which principle God has revealed to the church, which, when made use of by the church, the gathering will be a natural result. None but the pure in heart will be governed by that principle, hence none but the pure in heart will gather.

And let me here state (and, Saints, while I do so please think the matter over carefully and see if I am not right) that the pure in heart can not exist in a scattered condition among the Gentiles, where they must be governed by present social conditions. The pure in heart love their neighbors as themselves. One of you just live that commandment in all your dealings with your fellow men, and when you do you soon will not have any money to pay tithing with, or even if you could hold your own (which you know you can not), I would have you pick up Saints’ Herald, No. 7, present volume, and carefully read the illustration of Bro. Gilbert’s concerning Bro. A’s load of wheat, then ask yourselves the question whether the pure in heart can uphold such a foolish system and still stay pure in heart, and will they thrive under it. If you conclude that they can not exist under the present social system, only in poor-houses, then please follow me as far as I follow the Lord, in the investigation of his word, and let us see if there is not a way out.

First, let me say that while there are many evils in the Gentile world, they are generally all based on the one evil, viz.: competition, which is war. “Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God.”—Matthew 5:9. We compete with our fellow men for wealth, and it can truly be said that we verify the statement made by the apostle Paul, viz.: “The love of money is the root of all evil.”

Now remove the incentive, by making or obtaining individual wealth through competition impossible, and you are at once creating an atmosphere in which the pure in heart can thrive. And inasmuch as wealth is a blessing, the pure in heart, I opine, would go to work and unite in producing (not swindling their fellow men out of it) as much as they could make good use of, and when they had done so they would stop for recreation, and they would get recreation, because the average year’s labor under the present wasteful system does produce wealth to the amount of at least $1,000 to the man and possibly $2,000 (reliable statistics prove that plainly), and the pure in heart in a gathered condition would at least double the amount with the same effort.

Now to illustrate: When they build the city of Zion according to the plat (see Church History, vol. 1, p. 297), they will lay out the level land for farming, the rough for grazing purposes. They will fence all the rough in one pasture, and turn all their stock into it. They will give three men and a team charge of a steam-plow, who will plow as much ground in a day as twenty men and twenty teams would when following present mode of farming, which would relieve seventeen men, who would create wealth in other industries, which industries would also be run in a labor-saving manner. They would not be afraid of over-production, because overproduction would not mean to them hard times; but to the contrary it would mean recreation, education, refinement, and, in short, all the things which go to make up a higher state of civilization. The Lord said, January, 1831, I “deign to give you greater riches, . . . the land of your inheritance . . . and ye shall possess it again in eternity.” (Doctrine and Covenants 38: 4.)

The ground has been pretty well covered by late writers in regard to the need of making consecrations for the benefit of the poor and needy; but it seems that some of them did not understand that there would be no poor and needy in Zion. “Visit the poor and the needy, and administer to their relief, that they may be kept until all things may be done according to my law.”—Doctrine and Covenants 44:3, February 1831. When all things are done according to law, then there will be no poor to visit. One of the reasons why the Lord called his people Zion, was because there were no poor among them. (See Doctrine and Covenants 34:2.) You know that the inhabitants of Zion are the pure in heart, who love their neighbors as themselves. If there could be one poor they would all be poor, because they would all be alike.

Notice: The good things of earth are “ordained for the use of man”—“in abundance, but it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin.” (Doctrine and Covenants 49:3, March 1831.)

So you see that at least one of the sinful things in the world is that one possesses that which is above another; and that, we think, is the main reason why the pure in heart are called out of the world.

Listen: “In your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld.”—Doctrine and Covenants 70:3, November 1831.

Again: “That you may be equal in the bands of heavenly things, yea, and earthly things also, for the obtaining of heavenly things.”—Doctrine and Covenants 77:1, March 1832.

“But,” say some, “there are so many lazy, good-for-nothing people, and they would take advantage of a system of equality, and impose upon their brethren.” But I think I am well enough acquainted with human nature to know that when three or four hours’ work each day would bring not only all the necessaries, but also all the luxuries that any one would care for, then labor would no longer be dreaded, but would be sought for, as it would appeal to man’s patriotism to do his share the same as it now does to defend his country. When men must work from sun to sun, six days out of the week all their life, just to keep soul and body together, and then not be able to educate their children, some of them become discouraged. Wise men know they will. Foolish men think they should not. If, under the conditions in Zion, one will not work he is to be dealt with.

Listen: "The inhabitants of Zion, also, shall remember their labors, ... in all faithfulness; for the idler shall be had in remembrance before the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 68:4. The idler is not the only one who shall not impose upon the inhabitants of Zion for, mind you, in Zion the people are the rulers; their officers are reduced (or exalted) to the ranks of servants. Listen, let the Lord speak:

The inhabitants of Zion shall judge all things pertaining to Zion; and liars, and hypocrites shall be proved by them, and they who are not apostles and prophets shall be known. And even the bishop, who is a judge, and his counselors, if they are not faithful in their stewardship, shall be condemned, and others shall be planted in their stead.—Doctrine and Covenants 64:1, 7, 8, September 1831. He that is greatest among you shall be your servant.—Matthew 23:11.

You will notice that in Zion it will be the greatest possible honor to serve the people; and that fact will be an incentive to faithfulness in all kinds of labor.

Equality, then, seems to be the ruling principle in Zion, in responsibilities as well as enjoyments; and we need not worry about how the inhabitants of Zion shall thrive under such conditions; for they will be well qualified to carry out their own affairs. Jesus said, "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." Perhaps when they see him he will speak to them and instruct them.

Notice: "That my covenant people may be gathered in one, in that day when I shall come to my temple. And this I do for the salvation of my people."— Doctrine and Covenants 42:10, February 1831.

Now it looks quite reasonable to some of us, that when all the pure in heart have gathered and have built a temple unto the Lord, and he comes unto them there, that he will tell them just how to govern affairs if they do not know; and it also looks quite reasonable that Jesus had this gathering in view when he pronounced that blessing upon the pure in heart, viz.: "They shall see God."—Matthew 5:8.

Now, if equality is the governing principle in Zion, would not that same principle when put in force in the gathering select out just the right ones? We think so. In that line the law of tithing is strictly to the point, and it was given at a time when the Saints were needing counsel. Four days prior to the date of the revelation on tithing the corner-stone had been laid at Far West with appropriate ceremonies, Joseph Smith being president of the day.

And, brethren of the Reorganization, please notice that this gathering at Far West was a gathering in the regions round about. So this law of tithing is in force in the gathering in the regions round about, which we are commanded to do. (See Doctrine and Covenants 117:11, March 1873.) It seems that the Saints were desirous to know just exactly what the Lord required of them as a tithing, and the Lord gives it to them in very plain language. Listen:

I require all their surplus property [he says what they are to do with it] to put into the hands of the bishop of my church in Zion [he further instructs as to what the bishop is to do with it; he is to build the temple and lay the foundation of Zion, etc.] ... all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you. And I say unto you, If my people observe not this law, to keep it holy, and by this law sanctify the land of Zion unto me, that my statutes and my judgments may be kept thereon, that it may be most holy, behold, ... It shall not be a land of Zion unto you; and this shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 106, July 1868. (Italics mine.)

There seems to be a question arising in the minds of most of the Saints as to what a surplus really is; but we think that none need be ignorant, for when we consider what it is to accomplish, viz.: the building up of Zion, or in other words the building up of a community in which perfect equality of opportunity shall exist, it seems to be self-evident that it would take about all but your clothes that you wear. If it were not so that which is left in your hands would interfere with the bringing about of equality of opportunity; and, if this law really means that, it would indeed be a good instrument by which to select out the pure in heart.

Let us search for more light on the subject:

Let all the churches gather together all their moneys; ... And let honorable men be appointed, even wise men, and send them to purchase these lands; ... if they will hearken unto this counsel, they may buy lands and gather together upon them, and in this way they may establish Zion. There is even now already in store a sufficient, yea, even abundance to redeem Zion ... were the churches, who call themselves after my name, willing to hearken to my voice.—Doctrine and Covenants 98:10, December 1833.

In paragraph 9, same section, we learn that this was a commandment to gather in the regions round about which is binding on us. Notice: The churches are to work cooperatively in an all-things-common way, gather all their moneys, select wise and honorable men, send them away with this money to buy land and prepare for the Saints to come to it in an orderly manner. Now, Saints, do not think that the gathering is a secondary matter, for it was really the first thing that the Lord saw fit to reveal unto us through our present prophet. Please turn to Doctrine and Covenants 114:1, October 1861. You will read: "As a means of fulfilling the law, the twelve will take measures in connection with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing." We have already examined the word of the Lord in regard to what the law of tithing is, and what it is for, and neither it nor the Lord has changed yet.

Thinking that some of my readers may not have access to a Church History, it would perhaps be well to quote a bit of history treating on the building up of Zion, Church History, volume 1, page 297:

June 24 [1833], there was a conference of the elders held, at Westfield, when the following plat of the city of Zion was adopted and ordered sent to the brethren in Zion. ... all the squares of the plat contain ten acres each, being forty rods square. . . . the lots are laid off alternately in the squares; in one square running from the south and north to the line through the center of the square; and in the next, the lots run from the east and west to the center line. . . . there is one half of an acre in each lot, . . . no one street will be built on entirely through the street; but on one square the houses will stand on one street, and on the next one on another, except the middle range of squares, . . . The lots are laid off in these squares north and south, all of them; because these squares are forty perches by sixty, . . . and by running all these squares, north and south, it makes all the lots in the city of one size. The painted squares in the middle are for public buildings. The one without any figures is for storehouses for the bishop, . . . Figures for the use of the Presidency; the circles inside of the square are the places for the temples. You will see it contains twelve figures, two are for the temples of the lesser priesthood. It is also to contain twelve temples. The whole plat is supposed to contain from fifteen to twenty thousand people; you will therefore see that it will require twenty-four buildings to supply them with houses of worship, schools, etc. . . . On the north and south of the plat where the line is drawn, is to be laid off for barns, stables, etc., for the use of the city; so that no barns or stables will be in the city among the houses. . . . On the north and south are to be laid off the farms for the agriculturist, and sufficient quantity of land to supply the whole plat; . . . When this square is thus laid off and supplied, lay off another in the same way, and so fill up the world in these last days; and let every man live in the city, for this is the city of Zion. . . . No one lot, in this city, is to contain more than one house, and that to be built twenty-five feet back from the street, leaving a small yard in front, to be planted in a grove, according to the taste of the builder.

Now, reader, if that conference knew what they were about, we have something here to guide us in building up Zion. We have no history that I have seen of the Saints heeding these directions at the time when given, and the Lord hath said: "Ye call upon my name for revelations, and I give them unto you; and inasmuch as ye keep not my sayings which I give unto you, ye become transgressors, and justice and judgment is the penalty which is affixed unto my law."—Doctrine and Covenants 81:1, April 1832. We believe that the foregoing will be in force now, and if we do not keep his sayings, we may suffer the penalty of the law as did the old church. Now a few points about that city:

1. "This is the city of Zion." When it is finished lay out another, and thus fill up the world in these last days; and let every man live in the city. Now, if the world is to be filled up with such cities, then that will be the kind of a city we must build when we gather in the regions round about.

2. The pure in heart will be an intelligent and church-going people; for it will require twenty-four buildings to supply twenty thousand of them with schools and houses of worship.

3. They will have easy access to church and school, as well as the Lord's storehouses, inasmuch as a row of squares is reserved through the center of the city for those buildings.

4. They will have a clean city inasmuch as no barns or stables of any kind are to be found inside the city limits. (We predict good health.)

5. The streets of the city will be most beautiful, as in front of each house will be a strip of forest-trees about twenty-five feet wide of a variety comprising probably all kinds of forest-trees known to man.

6. While it would necessarily take a cooperative commonwealth to build the city, still the taste of the individual is carefully consulted, inasmuch as the occupant has a right to choose the kind of trees, and how they shall be planted. In all probability he will have a right to say how his house shall be built, and of which material, brick or stone; for this will be his home in time and in eternity; and no doubt the good Lord and the pure in heart would want him to be satisfied with it; and they are the only ones he will have to deal with. And inasmuch as he is also pure in heart, he would not be hard to deal with.

We might notice a great many more excellent points about the city, but this article is getting too long. Suffice it to say that it seems to us that the mind of the Lord is plainly visible. It is left for the inhabitants to arrange how their stock shall be cared for; also how their industry shall be carried on. And we think that they will be quite competent for the task, hence let us just leave that for them to do. Our task is to establish that kind of a community, and we can do it if we will strictly follow the Lord's directions. We are sure to fail doing it, when we fail to strictly follow his directions, for the Lord always reveals just enough and never too much. It is because he is perfect. "Be ye perfect even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."—Matthew 5: 48.

HACKBERRY, KANSAS.

N. LUND.

We look forward to its final redemption with joy and gladness, expecting the time to come when the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man will be felt by God's people more plainly than ever before. The true idea of evolution should be to come in such close touch with the infinite One as to be able to receive instructions, and to become like him. In latter-day revelation the church has been exhorted from time to time to "come up higher." There seems to be an idea prevalent in the minds of some, that the redemption of Zion consists simply in the gathering of the Saints. While we believe it is necessary for the Saints to be gathered in Zion, to the place selected by the Lord for the gathering of his people, there are other things that are of such importance in the way of preparation, as the gathering together in the land selected as the place of gathering.

We read in Doctrine and Covenants 94:5, "For this is Zion, the pure in heart." We also read in 2 Corinthians 13:5, "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith." In making this examination we should do it for the purpose of bringing ourselves into harmony with God's laws, if upon examination we find ourselves out of harmony with his divine will. How can we become pure in heart, if we keep only a part of the law—that which suits our fancy—and neglect a portion that is just as binding and just as necessary as the part we keep?

"But," says one, "when the time comes for us to keep all the law, then we will keep it." We are willing to admit that we must advance step by step; but to admit the Lord made a mistake in giving the law before it could be acceded to would be accusing the framer of ignorance in what the Saints did need, and burdening them with something that was of no value to them at the time of the giving of the law.

We have heard the statement made, "We should sell all we have, and give it to the poor; and if one man has a dollar more than his brother he is in sin." While we believe in equality, this would not be equality, but really poverty. The law was made universal in character, and we read that the Lord will bless Israel in temporal things; and would it look wise for a Saint to sell all he has and give the money to some person or persons outside the church? "But" says one, "give it to the Bishop, and let him divide it equally, so that each member in the church may have an equal amount of money." I wonder what some of us would do with our share after receiving it?

Still another might suggest, "Divide it equally among the families." This would not be equality, for some need more than others, according to the size of the family. The proper thing for us to do in the way of preparation, is to place in the hands of the Bishopric an inventory of all the property we possess, and be willing to impart of our means for the carrying out of the instruction given in Doctrine and Covenants 98:10.

The plan for the final redemption of Zion is a practical one from every point of view; and we should strive to do our duty faithfully. Are we so selfish as to care only for ourselves, and not to help our brother? We must remember that some have made and others are still making a sacrifice in the interest of fallen man; and if we are enjoying the blessing that comes through obedience to the gospel, we should not lose sight of the fact that the work is not finished. And we should be willing to help to push the work on until the Master says, "It is enough." In doing this we become pure in heart, and thus become a part of Zion.

It is not the vast number that will be saved, but it is the quality that counts; and the individual that makes himself pure, that part of Zion is redeemed. And then he will be in proper condition to receive of the endowment which the Lord will bestow upon his people.

When we consider the importance of receiving this special help, given for the purpose that we may be able to endure the trials and temptations of life, those things that the church will necessarily have to pass through, as declared in holy writ both in ancient and modern revelations, we should strive to prepare ourselves and make ourselves worthy to receive this great blessing. Those that are not keeping the law will not be ready to receive this endowment when it comes.

We must also remember that in Zion we will have to labor for our temporal wants, as well as for our spiritual needs. The idler will have no place among the people of God. The Lord admonishes us "not to be in haste in moving to Zion"; but we do not want to get the idea that he desires us to be slothful. We want to begin purifying ourselves now, and in that way begin making preparations for the gathering and the redemption of Zion. In this way we may hasten the time.

In section 102:2, we are told that Zion "might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I required at their hands." By reading the entire section we see there are many things that we need to do before we are pure in the sight of God.

In the recent revelation given to the church, we are again admonished to pay heed to the instruction given in this revelation. How often will the Lord have to remind us of the law he has already given for the direction of his people? The parent that is compelled to repeat time after time the advice he gives to his child after a while grows impatient, and will be compelled to adopt other methods so that the child may learn obedience, even by the things he suffers. We are always anxious to receive divine communication, and we should be just as willing and anxious to pay heed to the instruction when given as we are to receive it.

In looking back upon the history of the church, we see that the Lord blessed his people when they did what he required at their hands. And again, we see when they disregarded the law and ignored the instruction given, they were sorely chastised and afflicted. We as a people should take lessons from these experiences, and profit by them. May we as individuals prepare ourselves, no matter where we may reside, make ourselves worthy to receive of the Master's choicest blessings, and in so doing make ourselves worthy of an inheritance in Zion, and be permitted to dwell with those who love their neighbors as themselves. L. G. HOLLOWAY.

Laws for the liberal education of youth, especially of the lower classes of people, are so extremely wise and useful, that, to a humane and generous mind, no expense for this purpose would be thought extravagant.—John Adams.
Mothers’ Home Column

How To Develop Self-Control.

A few years ago I was spending a summer in a cottage at a pleasant seaside resort. One morning I was called in great haste to the home of one of my summer acquaintances. I hurried after the messenger, and found the whole place in an uproar. The four-year-old boy, it seemed, had, in a moment of uncontrolled excitement, stuck the scissors in his mother’s eye. Her sister had hastened to treat the wound with a hot application, leaving, as she supposed, the dish of boiling water out of the way of the child. He managed to reach up, however, and pull it over upon himself. His burns were treated and he was left for a few minutes, supposedly in perfect safety, but he managed to get hold of the bottle containing some carbolic acid, which he proceeded to drink.

Let me relieve your fears at once by assuring you that the boy lived; that kind usually does. But this recital of one morning’s happenings shows that there was something the matter with that boy. What was it?

I was once in an incipient panic. A great crowd had gathered, and near me was a mother holding her little child by the hand. Suddenly the crowd began to push; I was lifted almost off my feet, and my thoughts turned to that poor mother. Near her, however, stood a man who grasped the situation instantly. “Stand back!” he called, in a voice that could be plainly heard above the tumult of the mob. The words were spoken with such calmness, such power, that the crowd obeyed instinct.

Wherein lay this man’s power?

He could control the crowd at the moment of excitement because he was self-controlled. He had the mastery of self.

To reach such self-control is the aim of every life; how to attain it is the great question.

A keen observer of our national life once said that Americans needed to organize a “society for the repression of self-activity.” We do not know how to remain quiet. We are always doing something; tapping our fingers on the arm of the chair, rocking vigorously and constantly,—in some way giving expression to our uncontrolled feelings.

Froebel, in his philosophy, constantly urges freedom of activity for the child; but it must be remembered that Froebel wrote concerning German children who were constantly repressed. He would doubtless write differently were he here to-day; he would counsel American parents to develop quietness and self-control.

The child is like a feather blown about by every wind that plays upon it. Getting control of self is an inner fight, and one that he should early be led to enter upon.

The first step to this great process is for the child to learn bodily control. His first muscular activity is uncontrolled,—spontaneous, we call it. His first lesson is to learn to direct his nervous energy into certain channels, and so bring about the movements he desires. For instance, the babe in the first few weeks of life tosses his arms and legs about aimlessly; later he learns to direct their activities; he reaches after objects that please him; in time he learns to control the muscles of his legs so he can creep; and, later, can walk.

But after he has learned to bring about desired results through muscular activity, he still has a lesson to learn; that of eliminating unnecessary movements. Watch a child trying to get his ball. Every part of his body is either in motion or is held tense through the activity of his interest. If he is to be a self-controlled adult he must, as he grows older, learn to energize only those muscles essential to the matter in hand.

This is a task in which parental assistance is most essential, and one of the precautions that must be observed is to procure the kind of playthings that will serve as an aid to the development of self-control. Playthings that call for direct muscular activity, such as building-blocks, or, later, a few tools, are aids in the right direction.

Training children in habits of neatness is also a training in self-control. Too many mothers think that it is too much trouble to begin with the four-months’-old baby and teach it not to soil its napkins. But it is not a question of the mother’s comfort; it is teaching the child the first great lesson in inhibition,—restraining the natural tendencies of the body and so getting them under control.

The mother has two great fundamental lessons to teach her child—the very foundation of self-control.

The first great essential to self-mastery is the power to predict the ability to see what will be the effect of a given action. No one can calculate the number of lives that are wrecked for want of this power to predict. The cashier robs the bank because he failed to see farther than the immediate pleasure which will follow the possession of the coin. His mind stops short of discovery and the consequent punishment. The woman abstracts the dainty laces from the counter because her prophetic insight is limited; her vision is blinded to the real consequences of her act by the immediate apparent pleasure.

It is not enough, however, to have the power to predict; one must be able to act upon the result of that prediction. In other words, the mother must teach her child to substitute; to replace a lower desire with a higher, a shorter pleasure with a more lasting one, a physical enjoyment with a spiritual one.

One mother I knew, desiring to teach her little one the power to predict in one particular, left the radiator at just the right heat so it would not burn, but would still be hot enough to frighten. The child was then allowed to follow her desires and touch the bright pipes; of course she cried upon feeling the hot surface—but she never touched it again. She had learned to predict that following her desire to touch that bright surface would come discomfort.

Another child, not yet old enough to talk, was observed by a guest to be holding out his arms to the bright coffee-pot. Fearing pain to the little one, she called, “Look out! The baby’s going to touch that hot coffee-pot.”

The members of the family smiled. Said the father, “You couldn’t get that boy to touch the coffee-pot, even though it were cold and you tried all your powers of persuasion. He touched it once when it was hot, and that was enough for him.”

It was most interesting to watch the struggle of the two forces that took place in the little one’s mind. The brilliant, reflecting surface offered so many joys that involuntarily the little arms were stretched out in eager longing. Then came the prediction, founded upon previous experiences, that discomfort, not pleasure, followed the possession of the desired object, and, consequent upon the prediction, came the withdrawal of the reaching arms. He was learning self-control, to refrain from a desired action because of the results that would follow.

Many a mother, when her little one begins to creep, puts everything out of his reach because, as she says, he will break or spoil her possessions. But by so doing she is depriving him of useful lessons in self-control, which should be taught as soon as he is able to propel himself about the house.

One mother, when her little one reached this age, looked despairingly at her dainty tea-table whose white cover hung within reach of the tiny grasping hands. “Will I have to put away all my dainty cups and saucers,” she said to herself, “to save them from being broken?”

The more she pondered the question, the more anxious did she become to devise some way by which her little one could be taught to let the tempting cloth alone, rather than to be delivered from all temptation.

At last she thought she saw a way. She took everything off but the cloth and a tin cup of water. Then baby was allowed to creep toward the hitherto forbidden plaything, and to pull upon the overhanging spread with all his might. Suddenly a flood of water poured upon him from above. Of course he cried—more from fright than injury—but the table might henceforth be set with the most fragile china without any fear of the despoiler's hand. That child had learned how to predict and how to control his impulses.

Whenever we can follow the example of this mother and cause a natural punishment to follow a wrong action, we give the child an idea of cause and effect and thus teach self-control.

Even in such a matter as allowing a baby to suck a rubber nipple—a so-called “soother”—the question of self-control is a factor. It is giving full swing to the desires of the body, the pleasure of the senses, and is, therefore, a step towards sensual indulgence. (It may not be amiss in passing to call attention to the fact that this so-called “soother” causes indigestion, gas in the stomach, and loss of saliva.)

In the first period of life the child must be controlled by the mother, but in such a way as to be helped in gaining self-control. The child must learn that punishment will always follow misconduct. A little boy, whose mother insisted upon clean hands and face, persisted in coming to the table with them dirty, although each time he was sent away to make himself presentable.

“Why do you come to the table with dirty hands and face,” she asked one day, “when you know you will be sent away?”

“Well, you see,” answered the boy, “I thought maybe you would forget.”

We must take this tendency of the child into account. He will always be hoping that we may forget, and, of course, if we do occasionally overlook an offense, he will be encouraged still more frequently to overstep the bounds.

I overheard my son conversing with a comrade one day and so heard what I considered one of the greatest compliments I ever received.

“Maybe your mother will forget this time,” said the companion.

“She never forgets,” was my boy’s reply.

It is important in this training of the children for self-control, never to interfere when interference can be avoided; but when you do find it necessary to step in, if your action is to be beneficial it must be absolutely inflexible.

One little girl, whose mother was wise enough to be inflexible in her government, was asked by her companions if she had teased her mother for a certain permission—and the child did not know what “tease” meant.

The child should be brought up to be a healthy animal, and should be encouraged to desire health. If he has a stomach-ache, teach him that it comes from eating the wrong thing. Predict decayed teeth from too much candy; boys are easily reached by the prediction that they will not grow up to be strong men if they choose to form unhygienic habits.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton taught her children the laws of life, telling them that the stomach was the mill for grinding the food. “No miller,” said she, “keeps his mill working all the time, as he knows that will wear it out;—so we must take good care of our mills.” One day as she was entertaining a caller, a very grave and dignified man, one of the children rushed in crying, “Mother! Mother! Mag will die, she will; she works her mill all the time.”

In this great effort to gain self-control we must give the children all the assistance in our power. The first aid of the child is the self-control of father and mother.

A professor of Harvard was walking along the street one day when he observed to his horror a woman suddenly bend over and bite the ear of a little child she was leading by the hand. It was more than the professor could stand. Rushing up to the woman, he demanded, “Madam, whose child is that?”

Drawing herself up in resentment at his intrusion, the woman replied, “This is Professor Boyle’s child and mine.”

In that possessive pronoun she doubtless found justification for her act. But it was very evident that she had not gained that calm and peaceful demeanor which is the expression of a controlled personality.

The other day I saw a mother, whose child had fallen, pick him up and strike him on both sides of his face. How could such a mother hope to develop self-control in her child?

It is not necessary, however, that the parents should be without temptation to anger. One of the strongest lessons in self-control ever gained by the pupils of a school which I attended came from a professor with a violent temper. Every once in a while something would arouse this temper; we would see him tremble and grow white, then turn his back on us and look out of the window. We knew what those signs meant, and can you measure the effect on us when, in a few moments, he would turn back and quietly go on with his work? To see him thus control himself was a wonderful lesson to his pupils.

The family, the school, society, friends, the church—all should be aids in the great struggle to gain self-control. But, through all, the mother is the guiding power, the constant help in the inner fight.

To use the boy’s language, the mother “holds the bat” and turns the ball of life and spirits into right channels. The mother helps the child to substitute.

Too often the parents stand in the way of the child’s own good. They want him to hold a conspicuous place; they fail to see that subordination is good for him. Team work, which enters into so many boys’ games, is a splendid developer of self-control; the boy must learn to subordinate personal ambition for the sake of the team, for the reputation of the school.

Girls’ clubs are good things, for they teach the girl, in her turn, that she must be subject to law and order.

Children must be taught order, system, punctuality, not alone for the value of these good habits, but for the sake of the self-control which accompanies them. One of the chief values of manual training is that by its means the children are learning the elements of good character.

We are now ready for the definition of self-control. We have already considered the two elements which enter into it; the power to predict and the power to substitute.

Plato likens a man lacking self-control to one driving very spirited horses, which run from side to side, and finally dash over the precipice; while the self-controlled man is one who, driving equally spirited steeds, keeps them steadily in hand and guides them to the goal.

Paulsen says that self-control is the power to guide life by purpose and ideals.

But, after all, the definition given by the little girl is sufficiently comprehensive. She was told to remember the minister’s text, and came home eager to recite her new lesson.

The sermon had been on “I keep my body under.” When asked for the text, she proudly recited, “I keep my soul on top.”—Mrs. Walter L. Hervey, in American Motherhood.

To him who murmurs that his days are sad
Go whisper that in sadness there is sweetness;
For one who hath been altogether glad
Is but half made,—his poor life lacks completeness,

Sorrow hath value all its own for thee;
Make loss possession,—giving is receiving.
Alas for him who is too blind to see
That there is something more in grief than grieving!

DELA, Colorado, April 30, 1906.

Editors Herald: Being across the Rocky Mountain range in the western part of Colorado, it was a long time before we got the news of the last part of General Conference. After long waiting, it came on the 29th, and we feasted our souls on the contents of the Herald and Ensign. "As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country." Although not privileged to attend the conference, I could readily see from the church publications that a spiritual time was had there. It seems that you were not troubled with the vexing question of Graceland College as at other times, for which I am thankful. It seems that unity of sentiment prevailed largely in the business- and quorum-meetings, which is truly a cause for rejoicing, not only to those present, but to the absentees as well—those having the work at heart.

It further appears that the Independence Saints cared well for the delegates and visitors, for which they are to be congratulated.

The revelation given through the President of the church was certainly grand, and just what the church needed. I, for one, have long desired a sanitarium or hospital for invalid or sick Saints to be established at Independence; and now that it is to be, and that too by revelation, is a cause for rejoicing to me.

As my name appears among the list of superannuated ministers, some of my friends may say, Now Bro. Spurlock will lose his zeal in the work of God. I hope not. I want to do all I can. I truly sympathize with the missionary force and their families at home. I wish to say to the children of missionaries, Be brave while your father is away preaching. Remember that he is in the cause of Christ and that you can also help the cause by helping mamma and being good and kind while papa is away. Now, boys and girls, will you do it?

No doubt Elder Joseph Luff is the proper one to put in charge of the sanitarium when built; and as we can use the system of medicine we choose, we certainly should use roots and herbs as directed by the Lord.

Hoping and praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain, as ever, Your brother in Christ,

CHAS. J. SPURLOCK.

Editors Herald: We are pleased to inform the readers of the Herald that the young men of Detroit Branch are alive to the opportunities which the church affords each of us.

One of the greatest problems the world has to deal with is how to govern properly. Undoubtedly a government of the people, by the people, is the most successful and satisfactory, or else God would not have established this system in his church and kingdom.

The only way in which we as Saints can ever reach perfection in the governing of the church, is to become familiar with each detail of the laws provided for our government. Much evil and hard feeling among the Saints has been caused by an improper conception and knowledge of the laws governing the business-meetings, both in conferences and branches. Much unfair and illegal business has been transacted in both branch and district conference business-sessions, not because we desire to do wrong to accomplish our own ends, but because we did not understand fully the laws we should be guided by. If we can not govern ourselves outside of Zion, how can we hope to do so in Zion?

The young men, here, fully appreciating these facts, recently organized a club, naming it "The Young Men's Government Club," organized to study parliamentary law, as well as church government. Of course it is a new thing, but the few who have set themselves to the work are hopeful that in the near future many more will see the value of taking advantage of this opportunity to prepare to do business for the Lord in the proper way.

Many refrain from taking an active part in branch government because of their lack of knowledge of the law; so we feel that the value of this study can not be easily overestimated. The club has decided to meet just after the Religio, on Friday evenings, thereby drawing some to the Religio who might not otherwise attend.

Truly our franchise is a holy one. It turned the Devil out of heaven; so why not use it to turn him out of the church as much as is possible?

So we are pleased to note the spirit which is operating on the hearts and minds of the young men.

* Yours for success,

VERNON, Texas, April 25, 1906.

Editors Herald: I have for a long time thought of writing you and since reading the little piece in regard to the building of the children's home, I became more anxious to write that I may thank the many dear brave soldiers for their perseverance in doing good. It seems there is help for both the aged and the youth, and also the children. Kind hands are extended to gather in.

I would be glad if we could all realize the necessity of being up and doing as we should at all times, that when our field of life should be standing full of the golden heads as a reward for our labor here, we will not have occasion to look back with regret at seeing here and there so many little patches of wild grain mixed with the good,—envy, pride, tale-bearing, saying things to hurt others' feelings, yet thinking in our hearts we are entitled to forgiveness even seventy times seven, and that the Lord is merciful and will forgive us. It is true we should forgive many times, yet the offender will reap a reward according to the seed he or she is sowing. We cannot expect a very good crop of corn when we have sown thistles. It is true that the Lord is merciful, and when we lay aside fully all these foolish things, he will forgive; but, as I heard one of our elders say, years ago, there is a waste of time and material after all. We must remember the Lord is just, as well as merciful, and will reward us according to our work. We can not expect a grand passport into the kingdom of life on the merits of just a few good deeds, any more than we can to do a few days work here, and then sit and hold our hands the rest of the time and have a comfortable living the rest of our lives. I want to send in my mite for the building of the children's home when our chickens and turkeys are sold. Owing to poor health I have not been able to read the church papers as I desired. My health became so poor it was only by the aid of the children that I was able to get my work done, but I am thankful the Lord is gradually restoring it to me.

Bro. S. W. Simmons met with us in our late conference. We were certainly pleased to meet him. He preached some excellent sermons for us. I have seen him at his best, and he was indeed a fine preacher. We have no such a man here. He was kind to all of the brethren and was kind to the children. He is a very good man. He is a good preacher and a good man.

Odessa, Missouri.

E. E. HOLLING.

Editors Herald: Many years ago I once went to church in Iowa. It was a hot, sultry day in June. The elder said he would not keep us long, so he gave us that old tradition of the elders on the twentieth chapter of Matthew; and as I walked home I could not help but think I had had my walk in the heat.
for nothing. But when the elder comes in our part to preach, all good Saints are expected to get out and listen. And many times have I walked home in the night, wet up to the arms with dew, and asked myself, What have I got for all this trouble? And I would answer, Nothing except a lesson on the "foolishness of preaching."

Now if the word hour means "dispensation," to me the question arises, Why did not the Christ say so, and Matthew so write it? If the Bible is so obscure that we must have such explanations as "dispensations" for hours, why find fault with them who tell us baptism means "sprinkling," and the word water does not mean "water," but means "word"? To me it seems the good elder who changes the word hour into "dispensation" should not find fault, and yet he is the very one who does so, and helps the masses of men to make a laughing-stock of the Bible. And it is because men give us their opinions of that word, and not the word as it is written; for surely there is no more beautiful parable given by Christ than that one about the laborers, shorn of the opinions and comments of men. It tells us that there will be men whom Christ called as laborers to labor for him, who in the day of rewards will find fault with the Christ because of the way he will give his rewards; and it would seem to us that the selfishness and conceit of men will be there as here; hence he adds, "Many are called but few are chosen." It would seem that men should not be echoes of the past, as men of God; for in so doing they give us the sayings of men. Give us the word as it is written, then men will know what they mean, and whether they stand for Christ and his teaching, or the wisdom of men. Let us have more facts, less opinions.

THE DALLES, Oregon, May 6, 1906.

Editors Herald: We live five and one half miles from The Dalles. We have lived here three years. There was no schoolhouse here when we came but there is one now; and when it is convenient we would like to have some of the elders visit us and preach in our schoolhouse. Mr. Cook, the Christian minister, preached a sermon here once a month last season, but he did not preach doctrinal sermons, therefore they did not carry much weight with them, although his talks were very good, and his singing excellent. As there are elders traveling in all the States, and are supposed to go wherever requested if it is possible, I earnestly wish some of the elders traveling in Wisconsin would visit a little girl I have been corresponding with, Nellie Carolyn Nichols, of Solon Springs, Wisconsin. I send a little leaflet she sent me containing some testimonials concerning her little book, Shadows and Sunshine. She served her Maker in the last sensational. From there to the depot, also on Third and Fourth Streets, some fifteen blocks, in fact all the business part of our city, was in ruins and on fire. I had read of earthquakes and was aware that the prophets had testified of them, and fully believed we would have them; but I will confess my sympathy was never stirred to its depths before as when I looked at the hotels and lodging-houses leveled, with the streets choked with their brick and mortar, and many souls dead and dying in their ruins, and fire added to the horror.

Many men came to the rescue and all day long the good work went on. Many injured were taken out. A man who works with me saved a woman who begged him to kill her if the fire forced him to leave her. Soon one could see the dead laid in the front yard among the roses,—those who but a few hours before had retired for the rebuilding of the body, but now they were still in death. And as we who know the truth know also that it had not made them free, our sorrow was increased. We have indeed been a stricken community. We consoled ourselves as best we could with the thought that it could not have happened at a better hour; for if the people had been up, and had their fires kindled, we would have fared worse. And if it had happened after eight o'clock we would no doubt have had from five hundred to one thousand dead on our streets, as people would have been at work in the stores, and the men of the various professions would have been in their offices. This certainly would have swollen the present number which is known to be over eighty, and some believe the total number of dead here will be nearly one hundred, as there were many strangers in the hotels and lodging-houses on the night of the disaster.

There was a large number of injured. From the ruins some who have since died. Martial law was proclaimed, and the church on Fifth Street where the Saints are wont to meet was made military headquarters. We experienced no panic.

SANTA ROSA, California, May 2, 1906.

Editors Herald: I thought I would write in regard to the earthquake that visited this place on April 18, at about 5.10 a.m. As some of the ministry have labored here they may feel somewhat interested in our welfare. We were awakened at the hour mentioned by the violence of the earth's trembling, and naturally appealed to Him whose power we doubt not to cause the earth to be still. Our dwelling-place was almost thrown off its foundation, but aside from a broken stove and some broken dishes, with the brick chimney thrown down, that was the extent of the damage. But our fears were aroused for the safety of those who dwelt in brick structures, and after clearing away our wreckage, the first we heard was a man telling some others that it was fulfilled prophecy; and as we journeyed toward the business part of our little city I heard a man, who was riding a wheel, say, "There are dead all over town."

My gaze met frame buildings twisted, and some thrown down with scarcely a chimney standing anywhere. And alas! when we came to D Street where the post-office stood, our worst fears were confirmed. From there to the depot, also on Third and Fourth Streets, some fifteen blocks, in fact all the business part of our city, was in ruins and on fire. I had read of earthquakes and was aware that the prophets had testified of them, and fully believed we would have them; but I will confess my sympathy was never stirred to its depths before as when I looked at the hotels and lodging-houses leveled, with the streets choked with their brick and mortar, and many souls dead and dying in their ruins, and fire added to the horror.

"Shadows and Sunshine, is truly a wonderful little book. It deals with facts which are stranger than fiction, and yet it is not in the least sensational. It is unique in its simplicity."

"There is sufficient material in the plot to make a book of six hundred octavo-pages, and yet this little child-author has condensed it into less than two hundred. One must read between the lines almost all the 'shadows,' because the sunny character and cheery disposition of the author has made it impossible for her to even hint at the horrible ordeals through which she has passed and which none but her devoted mother realizes."

"Doctor F. W. Epley."

All the citizens of the town remained calm, and the work of reconstruction has already begun. There has been much relief sent here, but a mistake has been made by those contributing in sending perishable food in the form of baked bread, instead of sending flour; but it shows the charity of those who have sent the relief. May God grant that our brethren in the great city of San Francisco, who have been left homeless if reports be true, will be patient and faithful in their affliction; for God is our refuge and strong tower.

GEORGE DALLEY.

RUMBEY, Minnesota, May 10, 1906.

Dear Herald: Your weekly visits containing so many encouraging letters from the brothers and sisters help to comfort and cheer us on. Satan is endeavoring to do his best here to overthrow the work of God, insomuch that he has caused some to have dreams and visions through which they are warned to keep away from the Latter Day Saints. They have seen the Devil dragging us down to the depths of hell. They do not believe in dreams and visions usually, yet are ready to believe them when they come from this source. They are trying to warn us, but we tell them Satan always stands ready to deceive those who are seeking after the truth.

The Presbyterians have been having preaching meetings here last winter and spring, and a religious fever is raging high. The Methodists and Baptists met with them and organized a Sunday-school in the same schoolhouse where we occupied for our Sunday-school, and thought they could force us to give up if they took all the scholars. It seems my mission work is to give up the cause we so dearly love it made them angry, and their Sunday-school superintendent wrote a letter to us (after reading some of our literature which we had loaned him) saying the Latter Day Saints could not prove to him that their church was any nearer right than any other. And we think they are a little troubled about something. We answered his letter and told him we could not only prove it but had done so many times to all who would listen with unbiased minds. We also told him he would be welcome any time he wished to visit us, but he would not find the Latter Day Saints sleeping. What the result of this letter will be we do not know. Their minister told the congregation if they could not get the people any other way to get them mad, and as they have not made us mad we do not see any show of their getting us.

We are going many times when we go to all we can to get our elders here to preach for them, and they will not come to listen. Yet our hope of the future is still bright, and we know not what a day may bring forth; for it has been said the darkest hour is just before day, and it is a poor rule that will not work both ways; and while they are trying to get us mad, we may win the battle. I once heard a sister say they were not persecuted; she thought it would be better if they were. This thought has been with me many times the past few months; and I think so too, now, only I hate to have them too numerous. I have felt the Allwise power many times during these trials, protecting us; and though we are all alone here in the faith, we seem to draw nearer to each other, and our children seem more willing to listen to our devout teaching. Oh, how I long to dwell in Zion, that our children may have the society of Saints, and more of the church privileges. I was disappointed in not being able to meet with the Saints in General Conference; but hope to be present at our district conference.

After reading the report of the late General Conference, and pondering over it, and picturing to myself what a glorious time the Saints have when they meet in an assembly of this kind, I wondered. If the Saints who can thus meet together in large numbers ever think of the loneliness of the isolated and scattered members. During my meditation I received what to me was a most welcome letter from Sr. Barnhard who moved from here to Missouri last October. It came to me as an answer to prayer. Oh, how it did make my heart rejoice, and I answer, Surely God is watching over his lonely children. I hope if she sees this letter she will know that I intend to answer it, and she also knows I am cumbered with many cares. When we can feel the presence of and know that God's Holy Spirit is with us, how much better we can stand the fiery darts of Satan when they are hurled at us.

One more blessing which has been granted unto us I would also like to mention. Our little nine-year-old daughter, who has great faith in prayer, was troubled with nervousness. Sometimes she would almost have hysterics. She also had eczema very bad. We gave the case into God's hands, requested the elders to administer to her, and their prayers were not in vain. To God be all the glory. It has now been seven months, and neither ailment has showed any signs of returning. Can we doubt this work, when such blessings are bestowed upon us? And can we not afford to humble ourselves prayerfully before Him who doeth all things well; and when trials are brought upon us, bear them patiently? The Saints here will be glad to learn of our having a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Endicott, of Weyburn, Northwest Territory, Canada. They lived here over twenty-five years. They are not with us in the faith, but help rather than work against us. They speak well of the Saints there, which makes our hearts rejoice. They said they would be pleased any time to have the Saints visit them, which I hope some of them will do. They will find them to be honest people.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that we may live worthy of the blessing God sees fit to bestow upon us. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,

Dear Herald: I feel to thank God, our dear Father, for an answer to prayer. I have plead with him to shake up sinners to a knowledge that there is a God. I heard a Saint say, "Do you think God would stop an engine for a Latter Day Saint,—hold it when it was time to go?" I said, "Yes, if God wanted him to go on that train." I saw so little faith. I prayed for a shaking up. We got it, and I lay on my bed so happy. Not a little grief fell in my path. My bed was not easy to hold it when it was time to go, and I was rejoicing, so happy that God was speaking to the people. Then my daughter called me, as her room was in commotion, vases breaking, bricks falling, etc.

I got breakfast, then another shock came. My daughter said, "Let us get out." I said, "Where shall we go?" No answer, for we heard the earth was opening here and there. We fed the firemen, as their house was next door, and we felt safe from fire though it was raging. We also went out on the street three hours talking with the people; and we had lots of time all day and that night to move all our things, but I was so happy, looking for these things, I had not the least spirit to move until the firemen said, "We go, and you go." I was not willing, but the rest said I must. I read a chapter, and we had prayer where to go, and we moved out a foot, though, while I was rejoicing, so happy that God was speaking to the people.

Then my daughter called me, as her room was standing in its broken, broken, broken state. I asked for the Holy Spirit, and she also knew I am cumbered with many cares. When we can feel the presence of and know that God's Holy Spirit is with us, how much better we can stand the fiery darts of Satan when they are hurled at us.

Dear Herald: I always look forth to the coming of the Herald with joy, expecting to hear good news from the ministry. I was baptized the twenty-sixth day of September, 1897, by Peter Anderson. I have never regretted the step taken. I am proud that I am a Latter Day Saint, and am trying to live as near right as I know how. The good and always merciful Lord has blessed me many times in sickness; and he has also heard my prayers in behalf of sick and afflicted friends and relatives, and raised them up when all hope had vanished. But the Lord's power shall never vanish; no, never. Is there no work for us sisters? Yes, and plenty of it, if we only will. I have often heard women say, "Oh, women do about as they please; the Bible doesn't say much about women." Dear sisters and children, read Deuteronomy 31:12. Why were they commanded to gather together? Of a surety it was that women as well as men might be prepared to observe to do all the works of the law (read Joshua 8:35). We can not excuse ourselves in doing nothing, for that is evil. My prayer is that all may see their folly, and turn from their evil ways while it is day; for when night cometh no man can work.

Iron, and dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. He teaches us that the kingdom of heaven must come like the sunlight, in silence and in power. May we all be worthy to enter in and obey the true gospel of Christ. We received our patriarchal blessings when Bro. Kemp was here two years ago this June; and I can say for one that I very much enjoy reading mine. I know God's hand is over me, and I can say for one that I very much enjoy reading mine. I have many dark trials, and many afflictions; but I know God's hand is over me, and I know that this work is true; and I know that if we are an aggressive missionary force, and are not "playing at the game," but are in real earnest.

The local branch has purchased a tent, and within the next few weeks we expect to launch out in a new direction. With a force of valiant workers, a portable church, and a printing-press with which to advertise it, the tent venture should cause our concern and delight. But are we not in this great city.

I wish to say that so long as the Lord requires me to serve him in the printing trade, I am willing to do that work along with my other ministerial duties, on a ministerial basis. When he does not require me to do this (and there are those, I am aware, who believe that my work lies more in the spiritual direction), I have sufficient confidence in him to believe that he will furnish some one to relieve me of this work, and free me for the other duties. I shall then step out in obedience to his call. I have stepped into the breach because, as one of the promoters of the Gospel Standard, I did not wish to see it fail, and I felt impelled by the Almighty to do so. I believe it possible that ere long he may require my services elsewhere in his great field; and when the call comes, and the man is furnished to take my place at the type-rack, I shall step forward without hesitation. The Lord is directing this work. He is controlling my destiny, and I let the matter rest with him. I shall endeavor to serve him faithfully, whether in the Standard Office or in the mission field; and I hope always to be ready to act in obedience to his call. Ever praying that the cause of Zion may prosper in every land, I am,

SAN JOSE, California, March 8, 1906.

Dear Herald: As I did not see any word in your columns from San Jose, I thought I would write you a mild description of the work the earthquake did here. Many of the business-houses were wrecked. The large stone post-office was partially shaken down. Hotels, including the Vandone, churches, private houses, mostly brick buildings, were laid in ruins. Numbers were killed, but not near as many as were at first reported. A good many were dug out of the debris alive, and are rapidly recovering. Business is reviving.

There is quite a branch of the church here. None in the city were injured. Several had their houses damaged, but will, we hope soon have them fully repaired. My daughter Minnie was second matron at the Agnew's State Asylum, which was, with its surrounding buildings, wrecked. She was on the fourth floor, and was buried under fifteen feet of debris. She was there over three hours. Had a collar bone and shoulder blade broken, and seemed to be bruised all over, with the exception of her face which escaped with only one bad bruise. She is up now and is walking about.

New buildings are rapidly going up. It is now a tented city. About one hundred and twenty were killed, including attendants and patients. The hearts of the Saints are turning Zionward. The parting with California's gentle breezes and delightful climate will be gladly welcomed by many, to obtain a home appointed of God for the safety of his people, if they will keep his commandments.

Hoping and praying that I, with my whole household may be soon numbered with the Saints in Zion, I am

Editors Herald: Once more we undertake to pen a few lines for your columns, as we sit and reflect upon the work that is before us. And realizing that our success will be only what our effort shall merit we should make every effort possible for the spread of truth and the accomplishment of good amongst our fellow men. And while we are called to pass through trying ordeal at times, we should yet take courage in the fact that the Lord is remembering our part of the field, and has declared unto his servant that the mission here shall continue. Let us therefore rally to the voice of the Spirit and discharge the duties resting upon us wisely, and in such unison as will become followers of the meek and lowly Nazarene.

And now as we are entering upon another year of service for the Master, let us remember that we are called to be colaborers together for good; both he that labors in the ministry, and also those who toil in the affairs of men in business and of work; for if the machinery is not properly geared together it will not properly operate.

While the harvest truly is great and the laborers few, we should the more determine to exercise every means placed beneath our control for the final triumph of Zion and the pure

And while in the economy of God all are provided for, it yet rests upon us severally to do our part. And while the mis­ preaching deliverance to the captives, the laity should be bringing their tithes into the storehouse of the Lord that there might be meat therein for those who are making a sacrifice of their companions in order to have the glorious gospel of our Lord reach those who are in darkness.

We therefore ask all those in our district who love the truth and the spread thereof, to stand by us in the coming year by sending in their tithes and offerings so that those who are dependent upon us for support (while their companion is crying

THE SAINTS’ HERALD

SPOKANE, Washington, May 9, 1906.

Editors Herald: We are still trying to hold on to the "rod of iron," in order to make our election sure. Our trials are many, our temptations strong, and our strength feeble; but we feel sure that the Lord is on our side, and this gives us courage to labor in his cause. We have regular services here in our city on the Lord’s day. We have a good live branch, and some good workers, a good Sunday-school in fine condition.
We are glad that T. W. Chathurn is returned to us again, as he is considered a very able man, and a good and willing worker. As the field is white to harvest, and the laborers are few, we feel that T. W. is the right man in the right place.

The Saints in this place seem to be learning their duties, and depend on not only their duties, but they seem to understand their obligations to God better, and show a willingness to live more in conformity to their obligations. I think the work in this place is gaining some (but slowly). We believe we are gaining more prestige, with the public in general. Our position is getting to be better understood, while prejudice is gradually on the wane; and the people know that the Reorganization does not teach or practice, nor will they countenance polygamy in any stage.

My wife and I have been in the church about three years;
have tried to make ourselves workers approved of our Maker, and our desire is to go onward and upward and do all that is in our power for the Master’s cause.

I would like to hear from Mr. J. W. Roberts and D. E.
Powell. I have relatives at or near Boyd, Kentucky, and I would like some of our elders to call on them. I have a brother in Covington, Kentucky, by name of F. R. Bell. I do not know his address. Would the Saints there kindly look him up, for I believe he would be glad to receive the word if taught it. Would like to correspond with Bro. Metcalfe, of Louisville, Kentucky.
Would like to have him carry the good tidings to those that from childhood are dear to us.

I am a locomotive engineer on the Northern Pacific Railway and run one of the big S4 class of engines, and many a time when in the cab on dark and rainy nights when one can not see ahead, I have been blessed by our Father in many ways, for which I am very thankful, and I ever call on him for help.

It is very dry here this spring and very dusty, and if rain is not forthcoming crops will be very short.

In regard to this country for farming, I would advise all Saints to consider well before coming to this country. Land is very high, from ten dollars to two thousand dollars per acre. Wages are fairly good, but one's living more than makes the difference, as everything in the way of living expenses is very dear.

The Herald, Autumn Leaves, and Zion's Ensign are welcome visitors at our home. My desire is that I may live faithful, and above the law, and be clothed in charity; and that each and every one may do something to advance the truth, and for the upbuilding of Zion.

Your brother in Christ,

High Council.

In harmony with notice and appointment of the President, the Standing High Council of the church met at Independence, Missouri, April 2, 1906, at 10 a.m., at 1214 West Short Street, the residence of Bro. John D. White, and continued from time to time. The closing session held the afternoon of the 26th.

There was a manifest earnestness and patience during the long and tedious examination and investigation of the several causes under consideration.

At the opening session there were present nine of the regular council and high priests. Joseph F. Burton, Duncan Campbell, and Albert Carmichael were chosen to fill the vacancies of absent members.

Herewith is submitted the findings and decisions as follows:

Fairview Branch, near Delta, Delta County, Colorado, versus Eastern Colorado district.

On appeal by Fairview Branch.

This case comes to the High Council by way of appeal taken by certain individuals styling themselves the Fairview Branch against the action of the Eastern Colorado District disorganizing the Fairview Branch, the appellants holding such disorganization illegal and irregular, and citing five specifications in substantiation of such appeal.

1. Branch claims the right to decide worthiness of members for fellowship.

2. District had no right to deal with the matter till the missionary in charge had ruled on certain points of law on which his opinion has been asked.

3. Missionary in charge, W. H. Kelley, had by admitting certain missionaries at district conference recognized as legal the action of meeting of certain members of branch held on August 27, 1905.

4. Instructions, preamble, and resolution adopted at meeting of August 27, 1905, were read at district conference, thus recognizing action of said meeting.

5. That all actions of the district against R. H. Wight and the Fairview Branch were illegal and irregular, and all action in the branch against R. H. Wight was the result of coercive measures by the district under threat of disorganization.

It appears from the evidence produced before the council that the action of the district officers (later sustained by district conference) in declaring Fairview Branch disorganized was had because of friction which had been engendered within the branch and which would not yield to other than drastic measures.

It appears that on August 9, 1905, the district president declared the branch disorganized, and on September 2, 1905, his action was approved by the district conference. Reasons assigned by him were, (1) illegal transactions of business, and (2) disregard for the action of district conference.

In regard to the first claim of the appellants, viz.: the right of branch to determine worthiness of members for fellowship, we hold that the urging of this claim in this case is to a great extent irrelevant and hence can have little or no weight. What bearing this claim might have in this case, hinges, as do claims three and four, on the meeting of August 27, 1905, held by some as representing the branch, but the evidence shows this meeting to have been irregular in call, place of assembling, and in procedure, and hence its doings were not authoritative or legal.

Claim 2 of appellants is not sustained as the evidence fails to show that the action was in any way contingent on such decisions of the missionary in charge.

Claims 3 and 4 are not sustained, as evidence shows that the district did at no time and in no way recognize the legality of the meeting of August 27, 1905.

Claim 5 is not sustained, as the evidence fails to show that the district or the branch organization recognized by the district had any action against R. H. Wight, or the so-called branch organization headed by Wight and Schmid, which was irregular or illegal. The evidence also fails to show that any action had was the result of coercive measures instituted by either district or branch authorities.

We therefore find that the appeal is not sustained, but that the action of the district authorities in disorganizing the Fairview Branch was legal and must hold.

Chicago Central Branch versus

Smith D. Yendes.

Appeal.

This case came up for examination before the High Council April 7, 1906, according to appointment and notice, duly given in SAINTS’ HERALD.

This cause came before the High Council in appeal made first from the branch court to the bishop’s court, then from the bishops’ court to the High Council.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
The claims of appeal set forth by the defendant are:

1. That President C. J. Clark appointed an elders’ court to hear charges in this case at a time and under conditions such as to cast doubt upon the hearing of the case.

2. That the elders’ court illegally appointed the time when and the place where it would sit.

3. That the procedure of the elders’ court was illegal, in that it is restricted as are elders’ courts, etc., and hence can not be held to the same extent as the court of appeals, which has the power of reaching a decision with all the weight of judicial authority which attaches to its determination of the case.

4. That the court appointed the time when and the place where it would sit, which was not at the time and place fixed by the chairman of the court.

5. That the court was not vested with the power of suspending the defendant from membership in the quorum and remain a minister in the church.

6. That the court was not vested with the power of suspending the defendant from membership in the quorum and remain a minister in the church.

7. That the court was not vested with the power of suspending the defendant from membership in the quorum and remain a minister in the church.

8. That the court was not vested with the power of suspending the defendant from membership in the quorum and remain a minister in the church.

9. That the court was not vested with the power of suspending the defendant from membership in the quorum and remain a minister in the church.

10. That the court was not vested with the power of suspending the defendant from membership in the quorum and remain a minister in the church.

The defendant has frankly admitted his guilt as charged. The evidence before the former court proves his guilt as charged, but the appeal comes to us on technical points in the manner of procedure.

The defendant is at fault in this for “it is not sufficient to show that there has been some irregularity in the procedure of the case, but further that such irregularity was specially prejudicial to the defendant and that the findings of the court were contrary to the law and evidence.”

While we are of the opinion that there were methods of procedure that are questionable, and we believe the court was lax in its manner of procedure, and we find that court acknowledged before us that they were minded to adjourn the case because of some irregularities that obtained; yet the defendant waived all objections to these irregularities and acknowledged his guilt as charged.

We therefore find that we do not sustain the appeal, and hereby return the matter to the Central Chicago Branch with the recommendation that the appellant be given thirty days for the presentation of this decision to the said branch to make suitable apology and restitution as shall be acceptable to said branch, and that if he fail to do so, that he then stand excommunicated from the church.

The next case entertained for trial was as follows:

First Quorum of Seventy versus

Hiram L. Holt

On appeal to High Council.

This case comes to the High Council by way of appeal from an action of the First Quorum of Seventy taken by Hiram L. Holt, who had been dropped by said quorum from membership in the quorum, and also by way of appeal from action of the conference. The action of the First Quorum of Seventy, it appears, was based on their own findings as well as the findings of several committees appointed by the conference, the missionaries, etc.

It will be noted in examination of this case, that the various committees which have acted upon the matter have been committees of investigation and in their work they can not be restrained from coming to different conclusions, etc., and hence can not be held to a rigid adherence to the “charges” which may have been lodged as a basis for their action; hence the contention of the appellant in this case that the committee did not “try the case” on the specified “charges” lodged is not well grounded, as these committees in their search for information for report to other bodies, such as the conference or quorum, could not be held to “charges” but were at liberty to follow any line of inquiry which they thought might throw light on the general question of Bro. Holt’s qualifications to represent the church as a general officer or missionary.

The action of the First Quorum of Seventy, therefore, can readily be seen to be void, and the defendant has been excommunicated from the church.

The evidence before us points to the fact that Bro. Holt has personally held to and at times privately advocated an idea or belief in what has been termed “sexual affinity.” However mildly we may be disposed to speak of this matter so far as Bro. Holt is concerned, the evidence shows it was the means of disturbing domestic relations, and at its best is a dangerous “doctrine” for married persons to expound or dilate upon.

It is pernicious and dangerous, likely to promote domestic discord, and is a favorite theme of free-lovers, polygamists, etc., and hence is an unmitigated evil and advocate by one claiming to represent a church rigid in matters pertaining to the marriage relation.

Our decision therefore is that the appeal from the action of the High Council is not to be admitted. The action therefore of the Seventy is sustained, and Bro. Holt remains excommunicated from the First Quorum of Seventy.

The Independence Stake being in session in special conference April 19, 1906, at the Stone Church in Independence, Missouri, their principal place of business, for the purpose of perfecting their organization. A question arose as to the proper method of selecting two men for the office of high priest, to fill vacancies in the council; a resolution prevailed to refer to the Standing High Council, and the members of the stake council to confer with them in making the choice.

These councils withdrew from the conference, and met in the lower auditorium of the church, and at 3.30 p. m. entered upon their duties with Frederick M. Smith as president, and Robert M. Elvin secretary.

All of the above-named persons answered roll call. Opened with prayer.

Motion prevailed, that the presidency of the stake withdraw, that they confer, and suggest names for nomination. Presidency of stake withdrew.

Remaining members of the stake council withdrew.

Stake council returned and presented three names from which to make the selection of two. Due consideration was given, and speeches were made by H. R. Mills, W. R. Pickering, F. M. Smith, M. H. Bond, W. H. Garrett, and G. E. Harrington.

Ordained high priests and counselors, respectively, to the stake presidency was filled by the appointment and ordination of William E. Garrett and George E. Harrington, being named by Standing High Council, and those present of the stake high council, thus completing the Independence Stake high council.

The following was authorized as our report to the special conference:

"April 19, 1906. The President's Council and the Stake Council meet in the Independence Stake high council, beg leave to report the following names for ordination to the office of high priest and members of the Independence Stake high council, Brn. William O. Hands and John W. Layton were recommended for ordination to the office of high priest, and members of the Independence Stake high council. Appointment of Missionary.

To Whom it May Concern: This is to notify that by the concurrence of the First Presidency and Bishopric, Elder Joshua T. Hackett has been appointed to labor in the Northwestern Illinois District during the present conference year, and is hereby recommended to all with whom he may associate.

J. W. WRIGHT, Missionary in Charge.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of Central California District: Greeting: At the beginning of this, another conference year, I desire to announce, in the midst of this marvelous latter-day work, which is dear to the heart of every true Saint, that I am still prepared to receive tithes, offerings, and consecrations, promptly acknowledging and receiving all moneys thus intrusted to my care; and would say, Let those who may not be called to go out bearing the gospel banner, sacrificing the comforts and privileges of home and society of dear ones, still be laborers together with God, by sacrificing of their means and expenditures, denying themselves little and indeed more and more to the Lord's storehouse, realizing that God requires a people made pure by sacrifice, feeling that all have a part of the burden to bear.

To quote from the instruction given to one of the brethren not in the ministry: "It is not every one that is called to the front. It is not every one that possesses the capabilities to stand like a pioneer, to be like unto the pillar, mighty and strong in defense of the work. But every one can labor so as to perform his part in the great work of God. And the work of God can not be carried on by the few; it must be carried on by the many. All are not preachers, but all may work for the cause of Christ. Those who are not qualified to preach can labor to obtain the necessary of life for the church, means by which they that are qualified can preach. I bid thee perform thy part along these lines; and inasmuch as thou wilt do this thou shalt receive spiritual aid and comfort; thy mind shall be enlightened, and opportunities for doing good shall be multiplied unto thee, etc."

As God is no respecter of persons, this applies to all who are not called to preach the gospel. Then let none fall in their part, but bring of their means cheerfully, rejoicing that God grants unto the humblest and weakest of his children opportunities to help in this stupendous work that is going so rapidly in this present passing time, remembering that the Lord accepted with commendation the widow's mite.

Yours, in the desire to see the work speed onward,

ALBERT PAGE, Bishop's Agent.

SAN BARTO, California, May 4, 1906.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Eastern Mission: "Zion prosperous. All is well," is an appropriate sentiment with which to begin another year, in the great work of establishing the righteousness of the Zion of latter days. All should esteem it a privilege to be so associated with the work. Every member of the church is occurring to keep fresh in our minds that our calling and work is according to the purposes of God, as expressed in his spiritual economy. The late General Conference marks an advance along the line referred to. Let renewed vigor and courage be ours for the coming year.

The following assignment of the men granted us by the General Conference is the best I can see at present:

Bro. Davison will attend to the work in the Maritime Provinces, which he already has well in hand. Bro. R. W. Farrell will accompany him.

Brn. Rich and Brann will associate in Eastern Maine in tent-work.

Brn. Bullard and Phillips will start the new tent in Massachusetts District.

The tent in New York and Philadelphia Districts can be operated by Brn. Lewis and Farmfield.

Brn. Kelley and Brown will report to me at once, so arrangements can be made for them.

Bro. Squire is at liberty to follow his calling in any part of the mission he may select.

I have been detained in the West to attend to committee work assigned me by General Conference, but will soon leave for the East.

My permanent address will be 104 Sycamore Street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts.

Sincerely and fraternally yours,

F. M. SHEELEY.

To the Saints of Lamoni Stake; Greeting: We have just entered upon another year, with many things to encourage us, especially the late quarterly conference, but still there is much room for improvement. We should, however, enter upon the year's work with renewed courage and energy, and be sure that no part of the work committed to our care proves a failure because of a nonperformance of our part. This should be made an individual question, and it should be intelligently answered by every member in or belonging to the stake: How much can I help the work? Not, How little can I do and be justified under the law? For it is a slothful servant who waits to be commanded in all things; yet I fear that there are many plain commandments that have been given to us as a people which are slow to be done. As an officer I desire to labor the law to the Saints, and urge upon them the necessity of obeying

the whole law, as far as it is applicable in their particular cases.

There is no limit to the Saints doing all they can. This statement is not to be construed that in any sense we would be justified in neglecting in any sense we would be justified in neglecting or rejecting any portion of the law. But we are privileged to do more than the law requires if we are able and willing. Here come in the laws of consecration and surplus, but we are not permitted or warranted in failing or neglecting to honor the law of tithes and offerings under any circumstances. To justify ourselves before God we must honor his law in every condition of duty that we must undertake. A disposition to stand still because things do not always turn out as we think they should be a natural one, but it sometimes proves a disastrous one to our peace and faith, and all intelligent Latter-day Saints know they cannot afford to lose faith in God and his work.

As far as the Saints in this stake are concerned, I have no disposition to find fault with them as a class, for, considering all things, I think they have done well. I sincerely hope they will continue to make records, which, when reviewed, will cause them no regret. I am of the opinion, however, that all moneys paid to the church by members of the church should be turned over to the bishopric, as the church, as expressed at last stake conference, wishes to have full control over all of the funds that come to him.

Now in regard to our stake organization, I desire to say that in 1907 we organized the organization of the Lamoni Stake, and it remains to a great extent with the people whether the purposes of stake organization shall be a success and blessing to the people or not. As far as God is concerned, he meant it for our good, and any condition of failure on its part, or that our heavenly Father will authorize some other move that would have a tendency to destroy his purposes in our stake organization, is not worthy of intelligent Latter-day Saints. We can not afford to lose faith in God or his work. Man sometimes proposes, but God disposes of things so that they work out for the good of those who put their trust in him. Let us learn to work with him and we will be able to trust him better, and enjoy a peaceful, contented, and happy life.

Desiring to do what I ask of others, I remain,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

Wm. Anderson

For the Lamoni Stake Bishopric,

Working on the Erie Railroad at Nauvoo as a stone-cutter, he heard and embraced the gospel. Soon afterwards he became acquainted with Mary Ann Morey whom he married in 1843. To them were born ten children. Six predeceased him. His wife died in 1888. He leaves forty-eight grandchildren and thirty-three great-grandchildren. He was the first of our brother's family to leave this world, but we do not mourn as those who have no hope. He had been afflicted for years, but bore his affliction bravely until the end came. Was baptized by Elder M. H. Forset in the NE Missouri District. Funeral services were held in the NE Kansas District. Buried at the Methodist Episcopal Church, after which the remains were laid to rest in the Hamilton Cemetery there, to await the hope of a glorious resurrection.

"The Arena" for May.

The Arena for May is strong, bold, and thought-compelling. No magazine of our time goes more unsparsingly and searchingly to the root of social, political, and economic evil conditions than does this leading twentieth century magazine under its present editorial management. In the opening paper in the May issue Albert Brandt appears in a powerful contribution in which he gives a striking survey of the Armstrong Committee's investigation and a detailed account of the workings behind the scenes in the now famous committee appointed to investigate the Mutual Life Insurance Company, but which, when Stuyvesant Fish insisted that there be no shielding of the guilty, aroused such a storm of opposition from the dismayed Standard Grill element that the work was practically abandoned by Mr. Fish's resignation. Mr. Brandt gives many little-known facts in relation to this abortive investigation while using the whole subject for a strong appeal to the conscience and honor of America. He urges an unceasing war be waged against the criminal rich who have thrown the old ideal of common honesty to the wind and are undermining the foundations of our government and the integrity of the individual.

Scarcely less notable is the Honorable J. Warner Mills' powerful paper on the Railroads of Colorado. The "Primer of direct-legislation" is another feature in this issue that will appeal to many people who are tired of corporate domination and corrupt practices rendered possible through machine and boss-rule. Mr. Flower's extended editorial on "Direct-legislation in Oregon," and partly entertaining book-study of "The city and government" by Mr. Forscutt, will also appeal to all persons who hold that we should get the Government back into the hands of the people. George Wharton James contributes a charming paper on the famous American marine-painter, Charles H. Grant, which is superbly illustrated with half-tone reproductions of many of Mr. Grant's finest pictures. Professor Noa writes entertainingly and informingly of Bolivar, the hero-liberator of northern South America. William Dick, a well-known Scotch writer, contributes an excellent descriptive paper on "The British Labor Party: Its aims and aspirations." Ex-congressman Robert Baker writes in his well-known vigorous manner on "The value of an immigrant." Edwin Davies, "The Saxons," discusses Mr. Bussey's work on "The Saxons," in a deeply thoughtful manner "What our universities are doing for American literature." "Why we favor municipal ownership" is the title of an extended editorial by Mr. Haynes. Here also is an account of his popular editorial department, "In the Mirror of the Present." Altogether the May Arena is one of the strongest and most virile issues that has appeared.

While various articles are being published from the pens of able writers, treating of different phases or from different view-points upon the subject of equality, man's duty to his fellow man, the gathering to Zion, etc., may we be pardoned for dropping a few thoughts along these lines? The relation of man to man in his dealings with those around him is a topic that has unfailing interest to us. We know that many designate it as a secondary matter, incidental in a sense, and consider that our first thought and attention is demanded by the spiritual. This may be true. Nevertheless it is also true that while the temporal is but secondary, it is so closely connected with the spiritual that it serves as an index or a thermometer by which may be determined the development of the spiritual. The spiritual development may be gauged by the desire and willingness manifested to carry out the law pertaining to temporalities.

In the world to-day business affairs are allowed to dominate and dwarf the spiritual. The first thought is to make money. The question is, How can this be reversed, and the temporal be made subservient to and controlled by the spiritual?

In Doctrine and Covenants 49:3 we read: "That which cometh of the earth, is ordained for the use of man, for food, and for raiment, and that he might have in abundance, but it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin." Also section 101, paragraph 2: "The earth is full, and there is enough and to spare."

It is apparent from this that man has been amply and abundantly provided for by the Creator. There is enough in the earth so that all might have in abundance. It was not the intent and purpose that a dozen should have a superabundance, and a thousand eke out a miserable existence. But man was given his agency, and through the exercise of that agency he has so manipulated and legislated that he subverts the intentions of the Creator, and the millions are plucked to furnish the luxury of the hundreds and satisfy their selfish ambitions. It is because of this that the world lies in sin. And it is obvious that the world will continue to lie in sin as long as it continues to carry out the principles that foster these conditions.

The competitive system is a merciless thing at best, and yet until the rights of the people are safeguarded to a greater extent than at present, or until the spiritual reaches that plane where it shall direct aright the use of the temporal, there will be need of competition. The trusts and combines of to-day are an unfortunate outgrowth of the principle of competition. Competition is selfish. Its purpose is to crowd out others and build up self. True, in the crowding process the people are oftentimes benefited for the time being; but when the competitors have been crowded out, then the people suffer. Therefore competition can not solve finally the economic problem.

We have asserted before, and now repeat it, that no man has a right morally to conduct a business in such a manner that he is enriched by the labor and produce of others, while they remain in poverty. To illustrate: Bro. A goes up into the Minnesota pineries. He starts a logging-camp, puts up a saw-mill, furnishes labor for hundreds, and pays the going wages. At the same time he runs a store at the camp, sells goods at about double their ordinary retail price, and it is expected that his employees shall purchase their supplies of him. It is tacitly understood that if they do not, their services will be no longer required at that camp. What is the result? Bro. A piles up hundreds of thousands in the course of a few years, the product of the labor of his hired hands, who not only paid the expense of the business by their labor, but paid the investment made at the outset, the interest on borrowed money perhaps, the expense of their support, and piled up a few hundred thousand surplus. This all goes to Bro. A, and he may build himself luxurious apartments, buy city property paying handsome incomes, take stock in thriving business institutions, and continue to increase his revenues from the product of labor. What did his brethren get that went from Lamoni, or any other branch of the church, to labor for him? They got coarse bread, soggy potatoes, and wormy prunes three times a day, enough to bring them home at the end of the season, and enough almost to pay up the family store bill.

This is not a very badly overdrawn picture. Hundreds and thousands in and out of the church can testify that it is a very good description of their experience in laboring both for members and non-members.

The question is, Has Bro. A the right morally to enrich himself at the expense of those who produce the wealth, and of those who buy the finished product whose wealth was produced in much the same way, while those who are directly instrumental in producing it are left penniless? The Lord says "it is not given that one"man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin." If a business policy of this kind will plunge the world into sin, how about the church? A sin in the world will not be a virtue in the church, will it?

"Well," says one, "Bro. A furnished the money to start the business, and the increase belonged to him." Where did he get the money? By being thrifty in business, no doubt. The same kind of thrift that enabled him to confiscate the produce of his brethren in the mill business. Then it did not belong to him. Perhaps he started with borrowed capital. Then labor paid the loan, not Bro. A.

"Well," says another, "Bro. A had the talent to manage a business of that kind." If you call it talent we admit that he had it. Heartlessness is a better name for it, and there is many a poor man who would not be poor to-day, but for a lack of that qualification.

Now what is the duty of Bro. A under the law of Christ? To us it appears that he is morally bound, as a son of God, to conduct his business in such a way that those who labor for him, and those who buy from him, are benefited and enriched equally with himself. Is anything less than that justice to humanity?

"Well," says one, "Bro. A under the law could consecrate what he had above his needs, and that would make the matter all right." No. It would help some, but it would not make it all right. Why? Because a proportionate share of that increase or surplus belongs to each producer of it, and he should have the right to consecrate it to the church in his own name; so a full consecration by Bro. A under such circumstances could not make the matter all right.

We have considered Bro. A's ability to manage his business affairs to make a "success." How about Bro. B? Bro. B's talent runs in a different direction. While Bro. A has ability to increase his riches by evading the moral law and the claims of humanity, Bro. B has a knack of evading the law of the land, taking possession of other people's property by stealth. Suppose he should go all around through Iowa and filch a little from this poor man, pick a pocket here, grab a purse there, steal a horse from one producer, a cow from another, and be successful in accumulating a store of treasure. His conscience hurts him no more than Bro. A's. He took only a little from each one's necessities the same as Bro. A did. What would be the difference morally? None. There would be a difference legally, because men have agreed upon the laws which restrain Bro. B, but they have not yet made any to restrain Bro. A. That is the only difference. One has committed as much of a crime against humanity as the other, but the state has not got along far enough yet to recognize the fact, perhaps. Possibly so far as the world is concerned, it never will. But we are nowhere restrained from living above the law of the land, and in some instances, especially in business affairs, there is opportunity to live far above it. While Bro. B is a transgressor for having violated the command to keep the law of the land and the law of God which says, Thou shall not steal, Bro. A is a transgressor for having violated the law: "It is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world [and he too] lieth in sin." Both are moral criminals.

What is true of the mill business will apply to any other business, such as coal-mining, merchandising, manufacturing, banking, farming, stock-raising, etc.

While it is not designed that one man shall possess that which is above another, our economic system will produce the results if we propose to remedy this evil:

I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens, and built the earth as a very handy work; and all things therein are mine; and it is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine; but it must be done in my own way; and, behold, this is the way, that I the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints: that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low; for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare.—Doctrine and Covenants 101:3.

The sin, then, in which the world and the church lies because of inequality, must be removed in the Lord's way. "And, behold, this is the way, that I the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints; that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low." Who will be so blind as to say that when the Lord's plan is carried out, things will remain just as they are now, one brother possessing a hundred thousand, another twice as much, or more, and another nothing, comparatively, but his labor, and the produce of that is added to the possessor of a hundred thousand, while he himself gets a scant living?

There is some more to that third paragraph of section 101, but it is too good to quote here so we will let each one look it up for himself. It is the last sentence.

We are of the opinion that when we see the Lord's plan begin to be put into operation, we will see the beginning of the leveling process, by which the rich are made low, by turning over their surplus wealth to the church, while the poor are exalted to the extent that they shall have a home, a stewardship, a living; and all will have an abundance, for there is enough and to spare.

It will be necessary, of course, to carry on business in its various branches after this leveling process, but that is provided for. We have not space to speak of that now, however. L. A. G.

The spirit of speculation, the exhibition of greed for gain is unseemly in the Saints and officers of the church, and should be avoided. It has the appearance of evil.—Doctrine and Covenants 127:6.
suffer? Had Adam fallen from a high rock upon rocks below, would his body not have been hurt, and pain and suffering, if not death, ensued? Or would the laws of gravitation have been miraculously suspended for his sake? And the same with Eve? Their physical organization was not immortal or spiritual, but mortal, and under the same physical laws as ours, and susceptible of pain as ours from similar causes.

Adam and Eve were inherently mortal, for if immortal, they would have possessed one of the attributes of God. The penalty placed upon Adam was spiritual death—the separation from God. This was the penalty Jesus had to suffer for us, with all its inconceivable horrors, and was not his soul passing under this pang when he cried, “My God! why hast thou forsaken me?”

Reverend George Porter, a young revivalist who has been conducting meetings at Lucas Ridge, Indiana, for several weeks, is reported to have been egged and chased for a mile recently. Conduct of that kind is to be deplored, and is wholly indefensible. It is alleged that Mr. Porter was too outspoken in reference to the shortcomings of the people, and had said the Bible was a “dead letter” among them. What they hoped to gain by testifying to the truth of the preacher’s words by their acts is a mystery to us. The Bible certainly was a dead letter among them, and they have proved it so.

The Presbyterian General Assembly, lately convened at Des Moines, took what is considered an important step, when it authorized the organization of a brotherhood within the Presbyterian Church which is to include all men’s organizations now existing or hereafter to be formed in connection with local congregations. The object of the organization as stated is “to secure the organization of the men of our churches, with a view to spiritual development, fraternal relations, denominational unity, the strengthening of fellowship, and the engagement in works of Christian usefulness.”

Bishop E. L. Kelley wrote to President Joseph Smith from St. Louis, Missouri, May 21, giving an account of the dedicatory services held there, in which he and President F. M. Smith participated. They were to attend and take part in dedicatory services at Belleville, Illinois, on Sunday, the 27th. He says: “Bro. Fred M. Smith and I arrived here on Saturday evening and, as per arrangements, carried out dedicatory program yesterday. Many would have preferred your presence, but Fred M. filled the niche in a very commendable effort, and it was well received. I did the best I could with my part, and by the way the work was received the Saints were entirely satisfied. Brn. J. A. Tanner, Henry Sparling, and J. M. Stubbart were present and with Brn. S. A. Burgess and Russell Archibald of the local force aided the efforts, while the song-service in charge of Bro. E. C. Bell was admirable. The church was filled from door to gallery. The papers this morning give quite good notices of the dedication. My address here will be, care of Sr. Roberts, No. 2905 Dickson Street. Will be here holding meetings each evening during the week.”

Shortly after their return from the General Conference, President Joseph Smith and wife were quarantined with their children, the youngest having scarlet fever. A day or two after the quarantine was lifted the two older boys came down with the disease, and the family still is under quarantine. The quarantine will run until about June 1, when, all going well, the flag will be taken down and the family released from what to them has been a long and tedious imprisonment. The children had the disease in rather light form and, happily, now are apparently fully recovered. President Smith’s health has steadily improved since the conference.

And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom, even that of a terrestrial kingdom, or that of a celestial kingdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 88:5. Speaking concerning the church, and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer.—Fishing River revelation, Doctrine and Covenants 102:2. The Saints . . . are now admonished that the gathering must not be done in haste, nor without due preparation, and must be done in accordance with the revelation given to the church upon Fishing River and in accordance with the counsel and advice of the elders of the church whose duty it has been made to counsel and advise the saints.—Doctrine and Covenants 127:7.

We believe that the appointments made at the last conference were well considered, and that there was a large degree of the spirit of wisdom and revelation directing the counsels of the brethren. We have been frequently assured that the different quorums had seasons of the most harmonious contemplation and action that they have ever had. We trust sincerely that the spirit that prevailed during conference will continue.

THE BOOK OF MORMON IS NOT ANOTHER GOSPEL.

Some Latter Day Saints may think it unnecessary to ask the HERALD to publish an article under the above caption, but we assure them that there are many people who have, either ignorantly or willfully, contended that the Book of Mormon is another gospel, just because it claims, among other precious things, that Jesus Christ did visit the Western Continent after his crucifixion, resurrection, and ascension to heaven, and that he taught his people who were of the ancient civilization here the same glorious gospel principles he gave to the people in Palestine. The people he came here to visit and teach at that early period were Israelites—posterity of Joseph who was sold into Egypt. (See Genesis 48: 8-22; 49: 22-26; Deuteronomy 33: 13-17; Jeremiah 49: 30-32; John 10: 16; Matthew 15: 24.)

The Bible strongly indicates that God has a people in "the land of the north" (see Jeremiah 16: 14, 15; 23: 7, 8; 2 Kings 17: 6-24, etc.) called the "ten tribes" (see 2 Esdras 13: 39-50) or nine and a half tribes of Israel.

If that be true we believe the following question to some prominent ministers, and their answers regarding a book which may be found in their (the ten tribes') possession, will show conclusively that if it taught the same blessed gospel of Christ as the New Testament does, and it would be considered wrong to call it another gospel, then it would naturally follow that the Book of Mormon should never be called another gospel, but either or both records should be received with gladness by all Christ-loving people as companion volumes to the New Testament, and as historical and doctrinal witnesses of the great mission of our Lord and Redeemer.

Question: If the much-talked-of Wellman expedition to discover the north pole should find "the ten lost tribes of Israel" spoken of in the second book of Esdras 13: 39-50 (Apocrypha, Old Testament), and find in their possession a book that claimed Jesus Christ had visited them, and which contained the same gospel principles recorded in the New Testament, would that book be another gospel or would it be another witness or account of the same gospel of Christ?

Please note the answers carefully. Reverend W. T. Moore, M. A., LL. D., who is one of the most prominent preachers, lecturers, and writers of the Christian or Disciple Church, replied to the question from Columbia, Missouri, February 8, 1906, as follows:

Of course, if the book found taught the same gospel principles contained in the New Testament it would undoubtedly be the same gospel and not another. It might be another book, but it could not be another gospel, if it taught practically the same gospel that is in the New Testament. . . . Whatever is the same is the same, and if any book should teach practically the same gospel found in the New Testament this would certainly not be another gospel, though the book might differ in every other respect from the New Testament. [Emphasis Mr. Moore's.]

Reverend O. P. Gifford, D. D., of the International Sunday-school Lesson Committee, made the following reply from Buffalo, New York, March 22, 1906:

Supposing such a book to be found should it be another witness of the same gospel.

Reverend George Batchelor, Unitarian, editor of the Christian Register, Boston, replied February 10, 1906, from which we quote the following:

I should say, . . . that the imaginary documents that you describe would be another version of the same gospel.

Reverend D. M. Möhler, a minister in the German Baptist Brethren (Dunkard) Church, answered from Warrensburg, Missouri, March 11, 1906, from which we quote as follows:

If it is just like the New Testament gospel it would not be another gospel.

Reverend James D. Moffat, Presbyterian, president of the Washington and Jefferson College, Washington, Pennsylvania, replied February 10, 1906, from which we quote:

If all the conditions were fulfilled and the book were found, there would probably be considerable discussion as to the meaning of its contents, on the answer to which its appropriate designation would depend. It is hardly conceivable, however, that anything more than confirmatory evidence to our present gospel will ever be discovered in the future.

Most assuredly, a book found in the possession of "the ten tribes" would not be another gospel, nor is the Book of Mormon another gospel; it contains another account of the same gospel of Christ as does the New Testament.

In 1 Thessalonians 1: 5, St. Paul wrote of the gospel as follows: "For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." The reader will observe that the apostle divides the gospel into four parts, viz.: "word," "power," "Holy Ghost," and "much assurance." We earnestly contend that the "word" is a necessary part of the gospel, as are also the other three portions named.

Will the enemies of the Book of Mormon please take notice that the words of the Lord and his chosen prophets found in that book testify that thousands of the ancient civilization of America did enjoy the same gospel in "word," "power," "Holy Ghost," and "much assurance" as the saints did at Jerusalem?

We hope the time will soon come when the ten tribes of Israel will be discovered, or make themselves known, and their sacred book be placed with the Bible and the Book of Mormon, which will make three witnesses of the great works of God, and the mission of Jesus Christ.

Some opponents of the Book of Mormon have said that the wrath of God would fall upon the Saints for presenting the book as a companion volume to the Bible, because St. Paul wrote: "If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed."—Galatians 1:9. We can indorse every word of that warning, and still retain a firm belief in the Book of Mormon, for it is not another gospel. It might be well to inform such faultfinders and accusers that Paul's epistle to the Galatians was written as early as 58 A. D., and that according to the chronological arrangement of the sacred writings of the New Testament, as given in the Sunday School Journal and Students' Magazine (Methodist Episcopal) for October, 1901, (see SAINTS' HERALD, October 25, 1905,) fifteen of the books were written after the apostle wrote the Galatian letter. Would it be wisdom to discard those fifteen books just because they were written after the year 58? No! Let us welcome their precious teaching, and voice the sentiment of the poet who wrote:

"All truth is one,
And in all lands beneath the sun
Whoso hath eyes to see may see
The tokens of its unity."

WATER BAPTISM—IS IT ESSENTIAL TO SALVATION? All Bible-believers admit that baptism in water is a divine command. This being true, it surely is essential to salvation for the very good reason that God does not command that which is nonessential. Baptism is one of the all-important ordinances of the house of God called the church. It is the third in order of the principles of the doctrine of Christ (see Hebrews 6:2), and the doctrine of Christ is essential to salvation. So read:

Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee.—1 Timothy 4:16. Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.—2 John 1:9. Jesus answered them, and said, My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.—John 7:16.

The doctrine of Christ, then, is the doctrine of the Father. Jesus Christ came into the world the duly authorized representative of the Father to carry into effect the plan of eternal redemption. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3:16. This only begotten Son of God is by his Father made heir of all things. Man by being adopted into Christ, becomes a member of the family of God, and an heir of the eternal inheritance in Christ Jesus. (See Hebrews 1:2; 1 Peter 1:4.) "In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will."—Ephesians 1:11.

God's purpose, counsel, and will is that by obedience to the gospel we are adopted into the family of God, thus being made "heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ" (Romans 8:17), "heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him" (James 2:5).

But when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons.—Galatians 4:4, 5. He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name.—John 1:11, 12.

To those who believe on Jesus is the power, ability, and right to become the sons of God guaranteed. Belief, or faith alone, does not constitute one a child, a son of God. How, then, is man adopted into the family of God? How become sons? What are the conditions of adoption? Obedience to the gospel of Christ. It is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith; as it is written, The just shall live by faith." (Romans 1:16, 17.)

When the apostles of Christ were commissioned to go and proclaim the gospel to the nations, they were commanded to baptize those who should believe. This baptism must have been water baptism, since no man was ever authorized to baptize his fellow man with the Holy Ghost. Baptism, then, must be a principal element of the adoption into Christ. The inheritance is in Christ, and out of him we have no promise, "For all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him, Amen, unto the glory of God by us."—2 Corinthians 1:20.

There is no statement in holy writ that man can believe himself into the Christ, nor that he can believe and repent himself into Jesus Christ. Yet he can not be transplanted from the world into the Christ without gospel faith and repentance. But these bring him to the gate, that he may enter the Christ, the divine fold, and be secure in the promises.

Baptism is one of the seven principles of the doctrine of Christ. (See Hebrews 6:2.) A principle of any system is a fundamental basis, a necessary truth. It is eternal in nature; is immutable in character. To separate a fundamental principle from a system, an organized system, is to render such system inoperative. Deprive the universe of its law of gravity, or the sun of its diurnal motion, or its centripetal force, and disorganization would ensue. Deprive the gospel of one of its principles, and who could assure us of salvation by it? Baptism is a principle, an ordinance of divine establishment in the gospel, a law of adoption into Christ, a means of justification before the Lord.

To the Galatians Paul wrote:

For ye are all the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.—Galatians 3:26·29. Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?—Romans 6:3.

The faith that pleases God (see Hebrews 11:6), and genuine repentance from sin, based on a sorrow toward God, followed by being baptized into Jesus Christ, constitutes a legal adoption into the family of God, consequently an heir of God.

Jesus the Christ was at once the Son of God and the son of Abraham. (See Hebrews 2:16; Matthew 17:3.) “And if ye be Christ’s, then are ye Abraham’s seed, and heirs according to the promise,” for, by adoption into Christ, we enter Abraham’s family, and Abraham was made the heir of the world. (Romans 4:13.) Individual obedience to the gospel, and nothing less will constitute us children of Abraham, the friend of God. (See Matthew 3:9-12.)

The righteousness of God is revealed in the gospel. (See Romans 1:17.) Jesus when requesting baptism of John, enjoined it necessary to the fulfillment of righteousness. (See Matthew 3:15.) To fulfill is to observe, to do.

Thy righteousness is an everlasting righteousness, and thy law is the truth.—Psalm 119:142. The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple.—Psalm 19:7. But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves.—James 1:22.

Jesus being baptized of John, exemplified the obedience to the perfect law, which David declares to be the truth. Of John it is said: “There was a man sent from God, whose name was John,” and he testifies that God sent him to baptize with water. (See John 1:6, 33.)

John the Baptist was the prophet of the Highest, sent to prepare the way of the Lord, “to give knowledge of salvation unto his people by the remission of their sins.” (Luke 1:76, 77.) He was more than a prophet, he was the restorer of the path to walk in, the Elias. (See Matthew 11:9.)

And all the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him.—Luke 7:29, 30. The counsel of the Lord standeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations.—Psalm 33:11.

THE ESSENTIALS OF A VALID BAPTISM.

Four things are essential to a valid baptism into Jesus Christ.

1. A proper administrator.
2. A proper subject.
3. The proper formula of words must be used.
4. The proper action made.

Should any one of these necessary elements be lacking, the ordinance is not valid; is of no avail with God. A proper administrator must be a member of the kingdom, also a divinely called and commissioned minister of the kingdom. How could a man baptized any one into the church of Christ, and the act be acknowledged of God, who is not a member, and an authorized minister of that church? Could a foreigner to your government adopt other foreigners into your government? Can a private citizen adopt foreigners into his own government as citizens? A man must be called of God to entitle him to perform the sacred ordinances of God’s kingdom. So far as it relates to the salvation of man, all authority in heaven and in earth is vested in Christ. (See Matthew 28:18.) Every man, therefore, who is authorized to minister in his name must be called by him. Hence, throughout all Bible times, it is noted that every man who ever did a work for God was called by him to do that work. To this there is no exception. No one of God’s servants ever presumed to go without authority. In the kingdom of heaven, the authority to act officially in his name must come from the King. The commission or call of one man in God’s church is never a call to another man, or class of men. And as “all power” is vested in Christ, it is evident that every man who is called must be sent by him. The call must come either through angels or the Holy Ghost.

A man not authorized of God baptized twelve persons at the city of Ephesus in Paul’s day. But they had to be baptized again. (See Acts 19:1-6.) Why was this, if baptism be not essential? Every minister of Christ whose name is mentioned in the New Testament was called and sent by Jesus the Christ. (See John 1:33; Mark 3:13, 14; Acts 13:3, 4; 1 Corinthians 12:28; 1 Timothy 4:14; Titus 3:5, 6; Romans 10:14, 15.) They were not called by the voice of the people. All are called of God by revelation to act in their respective ministerial offices. (See Romans 12:4-8.) And such is God’s design in his kingdom in all dispensations to the end of the world, as illustrated in the parable. (See Matthew 20:1-16.) A man called of God by direct revelation from God is a proper administrator of the ordinance of baptism.

A proper subject of baptism is a penitent believer of the gospel. So Jesus, entering upon his ministry, came “preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel.” (Mark 1:14, 15.) As the apostle Peter preached the gospel with the Holy Ghost resting on him as a lambent flame, a convicted multitude cried out,—“Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.”—Acts 2:37.

Philip, the evangelist, went down from Jerusalem “to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them, and the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, but when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." (Acts 8:5, 6, 12.)

After Paul had been blinded by the light more brilliant than that of the sun at noonday, that shone around him when on his way to the city of Damascus, and had been arrested in his mad career of persecution of the saints, he inquired whose voice had addressed him; and he was informed that it was Jesus of Nazareth speaking. He asked: "What shall I do, Lord?" He was answered: "Arise, and go into Damascus, and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do." He obeyed, and fasting and praying in deep, heartfelt contrition, awaited the Lord's further command. God's servant was made ready to wait on Paul, and after three days by special direction waited on Paul with the heavenly message, thus:

The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldst know his will, and to declare it to others. He was to be "a minister and a witness" of the revelations of God to him. (Acts 26:16.) God, by him, would turn men "from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among" the sanctified by faith in God. Paul was a penitent believer, a proper subject of baptism. Knowing now God's will, and fulfilling his mission, he, too, recognized that the proper subjects of baptism were penitent believers. When inquiry was made of him and his fellow ministers, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" he answered, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." And that the Philippian jailer and his house might understand and be converted, he "spoke unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house. And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway. And when he had brought them into his house, he set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house." (Acts 16:30-34.) The jailer and his house believed the word of the Lord; he and all in his house obeyed; he and "all in his house" rejoiced. All were proper subjects of baptism.

Paul preached at Corinth; "and Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing, believed and were baptized." (Acts 18:8.)

The gospel antecedents of baptism are thus set forth by our Savior in the great gospel commission:

Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures, and said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem, and ye are witnesses of these things.—Luke 24:45-48.

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.—Mark 16:15, 16.

Hear the gospel, believe it, repent of all sin, then be baptized, and saved, saved from all past sin, be justified. The Savior places this salvation beyond faith, beyond repentance, beyond baptism.

On the third essential to a valid baptism, the proper formula of words to be used by the baptist, we need offer but a few thoughts.

The apostle Peter, who was sent by special revelation to the house of Cornelius, a devout Gentile, preached the gospel to the household of Cornelius (see Acts, chapters 10, 11), declaring that "in every nation he that feareth God " and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." An angel had previously visited Cornelius, and instructed him to send for Peter, "who shall tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved." (Acts 11:14.) Peter, becoming convinced that the Gentiles would be accepted of God by gospel obedience, exclaimed, "Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord."—Acts 10:47, 48.

"Baptized in the name of the Lord." "When they heard this they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus."—Acts 19:5. No man would have a lawful right to baptize "in the name of the Lord Jesus," unless he is authorized by Christ to do so, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ," said Peter. (Acts 2:38.)

The commission says:

And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.—Matthew 28:18, 19.

Baptism, like repentance, is in universal demand by all nations, hence, provision is made for all nations to have opportunity. "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them." "Preach the gospel to every creature, he that believeth and is baptized."—Jesus. The universal provision made for the baptism of the nations is evidence of its essentiality to salvation.

Some assume that we must be baptized "into" the names of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, instead of "in" the name, etc. Now we can be baptized "in" the name of, or by the authority of the powers named, without taking the names of those parties to be our names, but we can not be baptized into the name of a person or thing, without assuming that name. One can not well be baptized “into” a church without taking the denominational name of that church, as Methodist, Baptist, and Christian. In the commission, Christ is addressing and giving authority to the administrator. He is to do his official work “in the name of,” or by authority of, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. We may be adopted into the church or family of God without adopting his name, or assuming the name of the Son or the Holy Ghost. We may be baptized “into” Christ, into his “body,” in that sense, for the Church of Christ is his mystic body (see Colossians 1:18), and thereby take and wear the name given to its members by him. The name given by God to his children, is “saints,” “sons of God.” (Genesis 6:2; Deuteronomy 33:3; Job 1:6; Psalm 30:4; Daniel 7:27; Zechariah 14:5; 1 Corinthians 1:2; Jude 14.) The sanctified in Christ are “called to be saints.” “Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God.”—1 John 3:1.

Baptism in water, alone, will save no one, but can man be saved with the gospel salvation and reject baptism? Water alone will not perpetuate this life, but can we prolong our lives and refuse to use water? Water is all essential to our life here, and so all God’s gospel appointments are essential to salvation hereafter. Men are baptized into Jesus Christ, by a ministry whose authority bears the insignia of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. The principle involved in all gospel administration is, “Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth me; and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that sent me.”—John 13:20.

BAPTISM, ITS MODE.

As to this, the fourth element essential to a valid gospel baptism, Biblical evidence shows it to be immersion, a being born of, a burial in water. Let us now hypothecate briefly.

The word baptize, the word used by the Savior to indicate the action of this ordinance, is an anglicized Greek word. Bapto, in Greek, is the radical, from which the baptizo (baptize) is derived. It is invariably translated to dip, or to plunge. Bapto is never used by the sacred writers to indicate this ordinance. Baptizo is never translated by stain, color, or dye. Baptizo with its derivatives is the only word used by the New Testament writers to indicate the action of baptism. This word not having any necessary connection with water, or any other liquid whatever, indicates a specific action, can have, as a consequence, but one meaning. No doubt this is the reason why our Savior appropriated this word to express the action performed in administering this divine ordinance. Of thirty translations of the New Testament, dating from the second to the sixteenth century, seventeen translate baptizo immerse. Six give the word dip. The Coptic, third century, plunge, and immerse. The Icelandic and Ango-Saxon give us cleanse. Seven translations representing mainly northern European languages, give from the root or word kerestiti the word cross. Consider the following Greek words, as translated.

_Lano,* to wash the body. (See John 13:10; Acts 9:37.) _Plano,* to wash properly, as clothes, by plunging them in water. (See Revelation 7:14; Exodus 19:10; Numbers 8:7; Leviticus 11:25.) _Nipto,* to wash partially, or parts of the body. The hands (see Matthew 15:2; Mark 7:3); the feet, (see John 13:5, 6); the face, (see Matthew 6:17); the eyes, (see John 9:7). _Ekcheo,* to pour out, as the Holy Spirit. (See Acts 2:17, 18, 33; Acts 10:45.) _Brecho,* to wet, to make wet. (See Luke 7:38, 44.) _Rhantizo,* to sprinkle. (See Hebrews 9:13, 19, 21.) _Baptizo,* to dip, or to plunge in the water. (See 2 Kings 5:14.) _Bapto,* to plunge, dip, or immerse. (See John 13:26.)

Now we ask the question, With a language so rich in its variety as the Greek, and the number of its words, and especially words used in connection with the element of water, why did our Lord pass by all these words, and choose the word baptizo, whose meaning is always, firstly, to dip, to indicate the ordinance of baptism or immersion? Further, all the leading translators, linguists, annotators, commentators, and lexicographers without exception translate and define the word baptizo, dip, plunge, and immerse. Their record attests this to be true. Moreover, Justin, 140–170 A. D.; Tertullian, 204 A. D.; St. Cyprian, 250 A. D.; Gregory Nazianzen, 360 A. D.; and St. Jerome, of the fifth century, all bishops of the church, testify that immersion was the act of administering the holy rite of baptism in their age. Much more testimony could be presented on this subject, but this is sufficient, from history.

Bible testimony in point now follows. John the Baptist was sent of God “to baptize with water.”

Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins. And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him.—Matthew 3:5, 6, 16. And there went down both into the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, and the eunuch saw him no more.—Acts 8:38, 39.

Baptized “in Jordan,” “in the river of Jordan,” “baptized of John in Jordan,” and “straightway coming up out of the water,” are phrases positive in character, and strongly determine the action, indicated in baptism, to be immersion. Why go down into the water in the river with the minister of God to submit to the divine ordinance of baptism unless it be immersion? And again, “much water,” or “many waters” were essential to baptism. Jesus tarried in the land of Judea “and baptized.” “And John also was baptizing in Enon, near to Salim, because there was much water there: and they came, and were baptized.”—John 3: 22, 23.

The likeness of baptism in water to a birth, by the Savior, renders it quite certain that baptism is immersion. To the question of Nicodemus, “How can a man be born when he is old?” regeneration being Christ’s subject to him, “Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God.”—John 3: 4, 5. This is a most positive statement, and many seek to evade its force by suggesting that the word water here used does not mean water, but Spirit. That would make the text read peculiar. Thus, born of Spirit and of the Spirit.

Jesus anticipated that some would hardly accept his word here. He says, “Verily, verily, I say unto thee, We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; and ye receive not our witness.”—Verse 11. Paul’s command is:

Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word.—Ephesians 5: 25, 26.

And having a high priest over the house of God; let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water.—Hebrews 10: 21, 22.

But after that the kindness and love of God our Savior toward man appeared, not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost.—Titus 3: 4, 5.

Peter says:

Baptism doth also now save us, (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ.—1 Peter 3: 21.

If immersion in water is not referred to here by Peter, why make reference to “the filth of the flesh” at all?

Baptism saves us “by the resurrection of Jesus Christ,” that is, by virtue of the atonement. The blood of Christ ratifies the everlasting covenant or gospel. The blood gives saving power to all the conditions of that covenant. To reject any one of the conditions of the covenant, is to reject the blood of Christ by which the heart is sprinkled from an evil conscience. Can we reject the conditions of the covenant of salvation, and not reject the blood that seals them? In view of this truth, can we reject baptism and have a clear conscience before God? Baptism saves.

By faith man comes to God. By repentance man turns away from the world, from sin. By it he dies to sin, ceases to live longer in sin, and renounces all his sinful ways; and being dead to the world and sin, it becomes essential that he be buried, and rise to a new life, not in the world of sin, but in Jesus Christ, in the kingdom of God.

And so we are taught by Paul:

How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein? Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also, being raised up from the baptismal death.—C. S.] should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection: knowing this, that our old man [past life of sin] is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin.—Romans 6:2-7.

To the Colossians Paul wrote of their adoption into Christ:

And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power: in whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ: buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead. And you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses.—Colossians 2: 10-13.

THE PURPOSE OF BAPTISM.

By obedience to God and acceptance of Jesus Christ, man seeks the pardon of his sins. He comes to apprehend that he can not be saved in his sins, and hence seeks release from them; seeks a condition of justification before God. To this end he makes the inquiry, What shall we do? It will be seen that Paul told the Colossians, that having been quickened, or aroused to action in their own interests, and having by faith in God been buried with Christ in baptism, and risen therefrom, he had forgiven them all their trespasses. Of John the Baptist it is recorded:

And thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the Highest; for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord, to prepare his ways; to give knowledge of salvation unto his people by the remission of their sins.—Luke 1: 16, 77.

The people of Judea and the regions of Jordan “were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins.” (Matthew 3: 5, 6.)

The manner in which John was to give to the people knowledge of salvation “by the remission of their sins,” is thus set forth:

The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God; as it is written in the prophets, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee. . . . John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.—Mark 1: 1-2, 4.

Anna and Caiphas being the high priests, the word of God

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Confession of sins, baptism for the remission of sins, believing on him that should come after, that is Jesus Christ, brought the sinner into a state of justification from past sin, with God. Under the great commission given of Christ, the apostles preached the gospel which enjoined, with faith, repentance and baptism as equally essential to salvation.

On the great day of Pentecost, when the Holy Ghost came as a rushing mighty wind, and filled all the house where they sat, Peter preached the gospel under its enlightening influence. The vast audience were convicted, pierced to the heart, and cried out in the earnestness of their souls, “Men and brethren what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.”—Acts 2:38.

The death, burial, and resurrection was declared by the ministry of Christ to be the doctrine of the atonement. (1 Corinthians 15:1-4.) The form of doctrine also being taught for obedience on the part of all believers in Jesus the Christ.

By faith, men approach unto God. (See Hebrews 11:6.) By repentance they turn away from, forsake sin, turn to God, and die to the world, to sin. By these the character is changed, but not their relation. In order to change their relation, break off their relationship to the world, and be adopted into Christ, form the relationship of children to sons of God. To do this they are buried with Christ by baptism into death, then rise to “walk in newness of life,” they are then made free from sin, by obeying from the heart that form of doctrine delivered unto them. (See Romans 6:3-17.) To Paul at his conversion, it was said, “And now why tarriest thou? arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.”—Acts 22:16.

In the light of all these statements of holy writ, we can not but conclude that baptism is a gospel ordinance, is immersion, is a burial with and into Christ, is one of the necessary ordinances connected with the means of adoption into Jesus Christ. In baptism we arise to walk in newness of life. Proceeded by gospel faith and repentance, and when administered by a divinely authorized, called minister, it constitutes the being “born of the water.” It is necessary in order to have a good conscience toward God, being ratified by the blood of Christ, being one of the conditions of the new covenant. To reject it is to ignore the blood of the covenant of Christ.

Justification from sin follows obedience to the gospel, and does not precede it. Baptism is the washing of regeneration, precedes the renewing of the Holy Ghost. (Titus 3:5). It is in order to the cleansing from sin. It is “for the remission of sins.” It is, therefore, essential to salvation.

CONTINUED REVELATION.—DOES GOD REVEAL HIMSELF TODAY AND HOW?

In treating upon this subject, we are aware that it is largely misunderstood by very many. And for this reason we write; that the people may understand that God does and will continue to reveal his word to-day, and in the future as he has done in the history of the past. The teaching that revelation has ceased, is everywhere prevalent; and people are taught to believe or think that divine communication is a thing of the past. We desire to bring forth reasons predicated upon the word of the Lord to prove that God is willing to, and does reveal his mind and will to-day, on like conditions, and under like circumstances as in days of old. As the prophet says, “To the law and the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.”—Isaiah 8:20.

We go, now, to the word to learn in regard to the doctrine of “continual revelation”:

Surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.—Amos 3:7.

The foregoing indicates that God is a God of revelation; that whatever he does, or whenever he works, (as pertaining to the people of the earth,) he reveals that “secret unto his servants the prophets.” If we admit that God works to-day, or does anything affecting the people of the earth, then we must admit that God does reveal his will, or that he has changed. But according to the Bible he does not change, as the following will show:

For I am the Lord, I change not.—Malachi 3:6. Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom there is no variability, neither shadow of turning.—James 1:17.

If these passages have any significance whatever, they are certainly indicative that God neither changes nor varies. This being true, he will continue to reveal his word and laws to the people as long as they remain upon the earth and live so as to be worthy of heavenly communication. But if it be true, as is claimed, that God revealed his word only up to the days of Jesus Christ and the apostles, and that for eighteen centuries he has not spoken by his Spirit, neither by prophet, urim, or dream, then he has decidedly changed.

Again we read:

Then Peter opened his mouth and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: But in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him.—Acts 10:34, 35.
If we say that God has ceased to speak, would we not make him a “respecter of persons”? If we say that for over four thousand years God from time to time, and upon various occasions, gave revelations in the way of dreams, visions, ministration of angels, etc., and that he will not bestow any such blessing upon people to-day, do we not make it appear that he is a “respecter of persons”? We think so. Is the promise of acceptance by the Lord limited to any one people or nation? No. The promise is, “that in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted with him.”

We are in a nation, and if we observe the proper conditions, will be accepted. What are the conditions of our acceptance? Answer: That we “fear God and work righteousness.” Nor do we think that when we have feared the Lord and worked righteousness that we will be accepted in a limited sense; it is plain that we will be accepted in the same sense as were men anciently. The following substantiates the idea:

And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us.—Acts 17:26, 27.

We learn from this that God has placed all men upon an equal footing, with equal opportunities; made them all of one blood, designed the bounds of their habitation, and made the promise that they, all alike, could find him by seeking and feeling after him. Now it is plainly seen that this does not refer to any one nation, but to all nations. “He is not far from every one of us.” By this we learn that he would be just as near to the people in America, Australia, or the islands of the sea, as he would be to the people in Asia. We may safely conclude that if men in one age of the world, or upon one part of the earth could, by seeking and feeling after the Lord, obtain divine revelation, then so could the people in any future age, or upon any other part of the globe, obtain the same, upon proper observance of the same conditions. “All men” being “made of one blood,” are equal in the sight of God.

All will admit that the privilege of receiving revelation from God was a grand favor, and one that was beneficial to those receiving it. But we are told by the objector that we live too late in the world’s history to obtain any such favors; that if we had lived in the days of the prophets and the apostles, we might have received these things.

Now if we only stop to think, we find that we had nothing to do or say concerning the time of our coming into the world; but we are here now. All the blessings and favors which the ancients received, will not benefit us. The mere history of a people being well fed, and partaking of all the luxuries of the earth, will not benefit the man who is dying of starvation. In order to receive real benefit, he must be so situated as to partake of the real necessities of life. So it is in regard to revelation. In order to be blessed as they were in olden times, there is need of our receiving the same blessings to-day. If the teaching that the day of revelation is past (as many do teach) is true, and we could have had our choice, no doubt we all would prefer to have lived in the days of the first apostles, or when Jesus was among men. But such teaching is not true. And finding ourselves on the earth at this particular time of its history, we want to carefully examine the word of God and see if we are justified in making the claim that God speaks to-day. Latter Day Saints believe that God is the same to-day as in former ages. They believe that “God is”; not simply that “God was.”

We will now examine some of the objections that are urged against present revelation. The leading one is this: That in the New Testament is contained the plan of salvation in a system of universal truths, and it contains enough to save all men; hence it contains all that God ever revealed to man, and all that he will reveal. We admit that the Bible contains a record of the gospel or plan of salvation, which will save people if they obey it. But if there is no revelation to-day, they can not obey it; for there would be none having authority to administer, as we will show farther on.

The scriptural objection (so called) is as follows: “For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add to him the plagues that are written in this book.”—Revelation 22:18.

To the first we have this to say, The New Testament does contain a record of the gospel or plan of salvation; but there is nothing in the book to indicate that it is the last revelation from God to man. There is nothing in it by which we could infer that the Lord could not, or would not, again reveal the gospel, or confirm it by revelation. To the last we reply, that John was not, as many seem to think, writing the conclusion of the Scriptures, this language having direct reference to the book of Revelation. This book was written 96 A.D., and we find that in 97 A.D., John writes his gospel. So we see, if it meant as our friends apply it, that it would bring John under that curse. We refer the reader to Deuteronomy 4:2. There it is said, “Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you.” If the position of our friends be correct regarding the application of Revelation 22:18, then it is, or would be correct here; and then all that purports to be the word of God given since the days of Moses has simply been “added.” But the opposers of present revelation do not want to admit this; they say God has spoken since the days of Moses. So we say God has spoken since the days of the apostle John.
Now then, let us carefully examine John’s statement. To what book or prophecy did he have reference? To the book of revelation—the book he had just written. Who was it that was not to add? Does it say, If God shall add? No, but if any man add, God shall add to him the plagues, etc. Any one with a fair understanding of language can see that it was man who was restrained from adding to God’s word. Man has always been forbidden to add; but God has always added, and will continue to add as seemeth him good, and when he pleases. So these objections fall to the ground.

REVELATION IS NECESSARY FOR FOUR SPECIAL PURPOSES.

1. To give a knowledge of God and Jesus Christ.
2. To give a knowledge of the doctrine of Christ.
3. To reveal the things of God.
4. To call men to the ministry.

We will endeavor to examine this subject under the four heads above named, each in their order.

TO GIVE A KNOWLEDGE OF GOD AND JESUS CHRIST.

“All things are delivered unto me of my Father; and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him.”—Matthew 11:27. We see by this that exclusive of revelation, man knows neither the Father nor the Son.

We next refer to the conversation of Jesus with his disciples when he asked the question, “Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am?” And having learned what the people thought concerning him, he said to the disciples, “But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.”—Matthew 16:15–17.

Here Jesus is particular to express the thought that Peter did not obtain this knowledge through any human agency, but from the Father in heaven. “And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent.”—John 17:3.

The foregoing will teach us that in connection with eternal life, the promise of a knowledge of God and Jesus Christ is given. We turn to Paul’s Second Epistle to the Thessalonians 1:7–9, and we find it there declared, that at the coming of Christ, those who have not this knowledge shall be destroyed by “flaming fire.” Let us now examine Paul’s testimony.

Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed; and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.—1 Corinthians 12:3.

The Holy Ghost was to teach the disciples “all things,” etc., therefore it is evident that Paul meant that the knowledge of Jesus being the Lord was revealed through the Holy Ghost. It can now plainly be seen that, if we deny present revelation, we deny the only way by which the Lord has promised a knowledge of Jesus Christ. If there is no longer any revelation, then the world is without a knowledge of God and of Christ.

TO GIVE A KNOWLEDGE OF THE DOCTRINE OF CHRIST.

Jesus answered them, and said, My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.—John 7:16, 17.

What is the doctrine of Christ? The law or the teaching that Christ taught. It is synonymous with the gospel. Now, the promise is made that any one complying with the will of the Father “shall know of the doctrine.” How, and by what means shall he know? By the manifestations of the Holy Spirit. Jesus said:

Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, he will speak: and he will show you things to come.—John 16:13. He shall testify of me.—John 16:26. (See also John 14:16, 17.)

When Paul wrote to the Galatian saints, he said:

But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ.—Galatians 1:11, 12.

The gospel was taught to Paul by revelation; and thus wherever the gospel is preached, the spirit of revelation accompanies it. Can we not see the beauty and excellency of such promises? God never intended that his children, those who obey his law, should be left in doubt and insecurity, to grope their way in darkness. He has said “he shall know,” and this knowledge comes by revelation.

TO REVEAL THE THINGS OF GOD.

Without revelation man would be ignorant of the things of God. Paul writes thus:

But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit; for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God.—1 Corinthians 2:9–11.

It is here clearly shown that, although a knowledge of these things does not exist in man, yet they may be revealed unto him by the Spirit of God. Again, by the same author to the Ephesians, we have the following:

How that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery; (as I wrote afore in few words, whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ,) which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it

Thus we see Paul was careful to instruct the Ephesians as well as the Corinthians regarding the doctrine of revelation.

We read in Daniel 2:28 of a statement made by Daniel when the wise men of Babylon were about to be destroyed because they could not tell the king's dream with the interpretation thereof; after Daniel had presented the matter before the Lord, and the king's secret was revealed to him in a night vision, he said: "But there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets." Daniel's faith in God was that he would speak and reveal secrets according to the necessity of the occasion. God so operated then; and why should he not so operate to-day?

TO CALL MEN TO THE MINISTRY.

A careful examination of the Bible will convince all that revelation was the means that God has always used to call men to labor in his vineyard. Paul says, "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron."—Hebrews 5:4. He evidently referred to the ministry: as the reader will notice, he was speaking of priesthood. By priesthood is meant the authority or office of a priest. A priest is a preacher, or clergyman. If Paul told the truth, then, no man is allowed to take this honor unto himself. How was Aaron called? The Lord spake through Moses, who was a prophet, and designated this particular work for Aaron: "And take unto thee Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him, from among the children of Israel, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office."—Exodus 28:1.

Now, here we have the pattern. Aaron did not, within himself, assume this work; neither did he enter into it by simply being "impressed that he ought to preach." God called him by revelation; not by speaking directly to Aaron, but by speaking to Moses the prophet. Does God call men after this manner to-day? We reply that he does, if he calls them at all. If the Bible contains all that God will ever reveal to man, how can the ministry be called? Let those who deny present revelation answer. Examine the Old Testament, and there you find that all of God's ministry, including the prophets, were called by divine revelation. God did not change his plan in the days of the apostles, as we learn by reference to the New Testament record. The ministers of the church were selected by Jesus himself; and that, too, after he had spent a night in prayer in order, no doubt, that God should direct him in selecting men for such important work. (See Luke 6:13-16.) Jesus said to the apostles: "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain."—John 15:16. So we see that the apostles did not "take this honor unto" themselves, nor did they of themselves choose the ministry; but Jesus chose them. At another time Jesus said to them, "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."—Luke 10:23, 24. He did not hold forth the idea that men could volunteer in this work, but that they should look to the Lord for an increase of laborers. After Jesus had ascended he still called his ministry by revelation through the Spirit. For, after Judas had fallen by transgression and death, it seemed needful that the vacancy be filled:

And they appointed two, Joseph called Barsabas, who was surnamed Justus, and Matthias. And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou hast chosen, that he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place. And they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles.—Acts 1:23-26.

Thus we see that the Lord, and his direction, was here sought, when the apostles desired to make good their number. Barnabas and Saul (Paul) were called by revelation:

As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away.—Acts 13:2, 3.

Again Paul says, in speaking of the apostasy that should occur in the church, speaking to his brethren in the ministry:

Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers.—Acts 20:28.

Paul in writing to the Romans still holds forth the idea of being called or sent of God:

How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent?—Romans 10:14, 15.

But the time was to come when the people would disregard God's plan, and would make teachers of their own:

For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables.—2 Timothy 4:3, 4.

This prophecy has been, and is being fulfilled in our own day and time. They do heap (gather together in quantities) to themselves teachers, or preachers. God has no hand in the matter; in fact the most of them say that he will not speak to-day. Their ears are turned away from the truth (God's word is truth) and are turned unto fables. A fable is a story that is not true. Fables are what these men-made teachers preach.
AUTHORIZED MINISTERS.

Anciently, when men usurped authority, we find they were often punished. When David was bringing the ark up from the land of the Philistines, upon a new cart, the oxen shook it; and Uzzah put forth his hand to stay the ark, and the Lord smote him that he died for his error. (See 2 Samuel 6:6, 7.) What was his error? Usurping authority. Only the priests, the Levites, were allowed to touch or handle the ark. Another case we refer to, is King Uzziah's attempt to offer sacrifice in the temple of the Lord, (which the Levites, were allowed to touch or handle the ark. Their ministrations are for the object of money. Their heads of the house of Jacob as follows: "They build up Zion with blood, and Jerusalem with iniquity. The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire."—Micah 3:10, 11. Those whom God does not call have not the honor and glory of God in view, neither the benefit of their fellow men; but they labor for the things of this world; their ministrations are for the object of money.

Having seen that revelation is necessary for four special objects, we now desire to ascertain how God has promised to reveal himself—what means are used.

How is revelation received, or obtained?
1. By the Lord speaking to men.
2. By the visitation of angels.
4. By visions and dreams.

BY THE LORD SPEAKING TO MEN.

In the beginning God spoke to, and conversed with, man. He spoke to Adam in the garden of Eden and also after his expulsion from the garden. God spoke with an audible voice to Noah, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; to Moses and Aaron; and to many of the old prophets. When Jesus was baptized, the Father spoke audibly from the heavens, saying, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."—Matthew 3:17. At another time when Jesus was contemplating his death and speaking of the cause for which he had come into the world, he said: "Father, glorify thy name. Then came there a voice from heaven saying, I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again."—John 12:28. John, the beloved, heard the voice of Jesus Christ when he was on the isle of Patmos. (See Revelation 1:10-20.)

BY VISITATION OF ANGELS.

Angels have appeared to individuals to reveal the mind and will of God, on many occasions. The following are some of the many instances: An angel appeared to Hagar (see Genesis 16:7-12; Genesis 21:17, 18); to Abraham (see Genesis 18:2); to Lot (see Genesis 19:1); to Balaam (see Numbers 22:23); to the Israelites (see Judges 2:1-4); to Gideon (see Judges 6:11-18); to Manoah's wife (see Judges 13:3); to David (see 2 Samuel 24:16; 1 Chronicles 21:16); to Elisha (see 1 Kings 19:7); to Daniel (see Daniel 8:16; 9:21; 10:11); to Joseph (see Matthew 1:20); to Mary Magdalene (see Matthew 28:2, 7); to Zacharias (see Luke 1:11); to Mary (see Luke 1:26, 27); to the shepherds at the time of the birth of Christ (see Luke 2:8-12); to Peter in prison (see Acts 5:19; 12:7); to Philip (see Acts 8:26); to Cornelius (see Acts 10:3); to Paul (see Acts 27:23).

The foregoing is sufficient to show that angelic ministration was one of the means that God used in communicating his will to man. But it is now popularly taught that angels do not appear to men to-day, as in olden times, and that they will never again administer to people in this world. However, we are prepared to show from the word, that the day of their visitation is not past.

ANGELS TO BE SENT IN LATTER DAYS.

Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord.—Malachi 4:5. And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come and restore all things.—Matthew 17:11.

These passages clearly indicate that Elijah, (who is, no doubt, now an angel,) will come and restore all things; and his coming is to be "before the great and dreadful day of the Lord." We ask, Has Elias come? If not, then he will come before the day of the Lord. Again, Jesus says, in speaking of the end of the world and of his second coming:

And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other.—Matthew 24:31.

We will refer to one more remarkable prophecy of the appearance of an angel, to come in the last days, as seen in a vision, and recorded by John on the isle of Patmos:

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.—Revelation 14:6, 7.

That the angel, here spoken of, was to come in the last days, is shown by the statement that "the hour of his judgment is come." And again, by reading the remainder of the chapter, it is seen that the coming of the angel was to be a short time before the harvest, or reaping-time, or the end of the world. Read from verse 14 to 20. In the face of all this evidence, we can not say that the day of visitation of angels is past.
BY THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Jesus, in portraying to the disciples the office-work of the Holy Spirit, said:

And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.—John 14:16, 17. But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you. —John 14:26. But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, who proceeds from the Father, he shall testify of me.—John 15:26. Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come.—John 16:13.

It is clear that the Holy Ghost was to reveal the mind and will of God. It was to show them "things to come." That would be revelation. If God is unchangeable (and we are told that he is) then so is the Holy Spirit. If the Holy Spirit testified of Christ, brought his words to their "remembrance," and showed them "things to come," anciently, we think that it should produce the same effects to-day. How, then, can individuals claim to receive the Holy Ghost and yet deny the fruits thereof? They may receive a spirit and call it the Holy Spirit; but if it does not produce the same effects as anciently, we are safe in concluding that it is not the Holy Spirit. The Lord has never at any time said that the Holy Spirit would operate differently in future ages from the manner in which it operated in former ages. If we claim the Holy Spirit, let us not deny the fruits thereof, which include revelation.

Paul tells how the mysteries of God were revealed to the apostles and prophets:

How by revelation he made known unto me the mystery; (as I wrote afore in few words; whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ,) which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit. —Ephesians 3:3-5.

We see by the foregoing that the Holy Spirit is a revealing medium. (See also 1 Corinthians 2:10, 11.)

BY VISIONS AND DREAMS.

Many are the incidents on record in the Bible showing us that God has often manifested his will to his children by visions and dreams. We will now examine some of the promises regarding this subject, as set forth by the holy prophets:

And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions: And also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit.—Joel 2:28, 29.

If the reader will carefully notice the entire chapter, it will be seen that these things were to transpire in the last days, after the Lord begins to bless and restore the "land." It was to be just before the "sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood." Those who claim to receive a manifestation of God's will through visions and dreams, are in harmony with Joel's prophecy. Note the following:

For God speaketh once, yea, twice, yet man perceiveth it not. In a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed; then he openeth the ears of men, and sealeth their instruction.—Job 33:14-15.

The foregoing is plain enough without further comment.

And he said: Hear now my words: If there be a prophet among you, I the Lord will make myself known unto him in a vision, and will speak unto him in a dream.—Numbers 12:6.

The Lord spake to Joseph, the son of Jacob, in dreams, and the word was filled. Jacob received God's will in a dream. (See Genesis 28:11-16.) God communicated to Daniel by dreams and visions. (See Daniel 2:19, with seventh and eighth chapters; 10:2-7.) Joseph, the husband of Mary, received dreams. (See Matthew 1:20; 2:13, 19.) God spake to Peter in a vision. (See Acts 10:9-17.)

Now, in the face of this array of evidence, who can successfully claim that the day of revelation is past? We are told by Isaiah the prophet that "the word of the Lord was unto them precept upon precept,... line upon line,... here a little and there a little." (Isaiah 28:13.) This would indicate that God gave his word, not all at once, but just as there was need of it. Jesus said, "Ask and ye shall receive." And, further, that our heavenly Father is more willing to give good things to them that ask him, than earthly parents are to give unto their children.

Thus saith the Lord, the Holy One of Israel, and his Maker, Ask me of things to come concerning my sons, and concerning the work of my hands command ye me.—Isaiah 46:11.

Why should we deny the very things the Lord has told us to ask for, and has promised to give us? People in this age are very much, in one respect, like the people who lived in the days of Jesus Christ. They said, "We know that God spake unto Moses: as for this fellow we know not whence he is."—John 9:29. Yes, they had unbounded confidence in Moses, because he had lived a long time before their day. So with people to-day; they say, "We believe, and know that God spake through Christ and the apostles, but we do not think that God speaks to any one to-day." So history repeats itself. People are more willing to believe that God spoke to the people a long time ago, than that he speaks to the people of to-day. To expect more revelation is not unscriptural. Much of the foregoing evidence shows that there will be prophets, and revelation, in the latter days.

Jeremiah 31:31-34 speaks of a new covenant being made with the house of Israel. In order for God to make a covenant with any people or nation it is necessary that he speak to them; his plan in the past was to speak through his "servants the prophets."

To those who claim that the Bible contains all that God ever revealed to man, and all that he ever will reveal, we would say: Study the Bible carefully and without prejudice, and see if the promises of God regarding revelation, as well as other blessings, are not made to all men alike. "God is no respecter of persons."

Then we find there are many books mentioned in the Bible, which the Bible itself does not contain. The following are some of the books mentioned but not found in the Bible: "Book of Jasher" (Joshua 10:13; 2 Samuel 1:18); "book of the wars of the Lord" (Numbers 21:14); "book of the manner of the kingdom" (1 Samuel 10:25); "book of Nathan, the prophet" (1 Chronicles 29:29; 2 Chronicles 9:29); "visions of Iddo the seer" (2 Chronicles 13:22); "book of Gad the seer" (1 Chronicles 29:29); history of Uzziah (see 2 Chronicles 26:22); A former epistle to the Corinthians (see 1 Corinthians 5:9; Jude's previous epistle (see Jude 3). Others might be mentioned, but this is sufficient to show that the Bible does not contain all; yet we can not say that these books did not contain the word of God, as well as those books now in the Bible. If we only stop to think, we must confess that all of the teaching of Jesus is not found in the Bible. John says in concluding his testimony:

And there were many other things which Jesus did, the which if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written.

Yours for gospel truth,

RUINS IN YUCATAN.

Following are some extracts from Rambles in Yucatan; or, Notes of Travel through the Peninsula, including a visit to the remarkable ruins of Chi-chen, Kabah, Zayi, and Uxmal, by B. M. Norman. Copyrighted in 1842, published in 1843:

Preface:

A portion of the ruins which are noticed in detail in the following pages had never been visited, to the author's knowledge, by any modern traveler before his arrival. He ventures to call the readers' attention to the chapters which include the ruins of Chi-Chen, of Kabah, Zayi, and Uxmal, of which cities, the last only excepted— to which Mr. Stephens devotes a few sentences, near the conclusions of his recent popular work upon this subject—no other published accounts, it is believed, have appeared. If the public shall through its aid [the book] eliminate one new ray of light to illumine the dark story of its subject, the author will...

Whatever diversity of origin may have existed among the races of Indians whose remains are the burden of our speculations, one thing is certain, that the builders of the ruins of the city of Chi-Chen and Uxmal excelled in the mechanic and the fine arts.

Almost all the Indian tribes, even to the Charibs, have a traditionary account of the deluge and of the creation; and, what is more singular, relate it as occurring in or near their present locations upon this continent—leading to the supposition of an antediluvian existence in America. They also have their great supernatural benefactors. The Brazilians have the Payzome, the Tamanac race their Amalivaca, the Chilians their Them, the Muycas their Bochica, the Peruvians their Manco Capac, the Mexicans their Quetzalcoatl, and the Chiapasans their Votan. The collection of materials was made by Augustine Aglis, who edited and published it in London, in 1830.

When pins were introduced in the sixteenth century womankind so treasured them that they became favorite New Year’s gifts to women, and money used to buy them was first called pin money.
And leading them captive in that dark, evil hour,
Till the whole world was sunk in the darkness of night,
And there scarcely remained one pale glimmer of light.

Other scenes now appear; John is made to rejoice
As he hears the sweet strains of that glorious voice:
While its music sublime swells the heavenly dome,
As the harpers are harping before the white throne,
'Tis the song of the faithful who bow'd not the knee
To the dragon or beasts but in Christ are made free,
And with their dear Savior in glory now reign,
And swell the glad chorus to the lamb that was slain.

Long ages now pass 'neath superstition's dark sway.
"Forms of godliness," many, but powerless are they.
"Lord, Lord," they cry loudly, but heed not his word;
Save a few who are anxious to honor their Lord.
E'en these grope in darkness but with earnest desire
They see precious light their souls to inspire.
Shall they seek it in vain? Will their pleadings be spurn'd?
From infinite love a deaf ear to them turned,
When the heart is consum'd with a holy desire,
And to know, love, and serve him their whole souls aspire?
Nay, his word has gone forth, "They that seek me shall find,"
When you earnestly seek me with whole heart and mind,
The promise thus given he will surely fulfill,
He flies not from his word, nor reverses his will,
See, their pleadings are heard; divine love is made known;
And the portals of, heaven wide open are thrown;
And the angel John saw flies commission'd to earth,
Bringing with him a message of infinite worth,
It's the glorious gospel of Jesus our Lord,
In its richness and fullness to earth now restored,
To lead out his people from Babylon's dread thrall
For her judgment's at hand, and dire is her fall.
All his precepts unchang'd show that wonderful love
That brought the dear Savior from his bright throne above,
To redeem all our race from the thraldom of sin,

That his glorious kingdom we might enter in,
Secure from all sorrow, all sickness and pain,
And with him in glory eternally reign.

Blessed ensign of truth which the angel unfurls,
The gift of God's love—the most precious of pearls!
To be preach'd to all nations and kindreds and tongues,
That all may fear God and repent of their wrongs—
Worship him that made heaven, the earth, and the sea,
And no more to dumb idols bow the suppliant knee—
Give all glory to God, to whom glory belongs,
For surely the hour of his judgment is come.
Would you learn the glad tidings the angel has borne,
To comfort the outcast and rejoice them that mourn?
Ev'ry precept's a gem, most precious and rare,
With which no diadem on the earth can compare.

'Tis a life-giving power to those who give heed,
And bow in obedience as God hath decreed.
Faith in God stands the first of those precepts divine.
It softens the heart and illumines the mind;
It enables us to see that measureless love,
That gave his beloved from the bright realms above
A lost world to redeem from sin, death, and hell,
And prepare us with him in his glory to dwell.
It leads to repentance, and humble contrition,
When we truly behold our fallen condition.
Thus repentance stands next in the order of God,
By which we forsake crooked paths we have trod,
And determine to walk in the straight, narrow way,
Which alone leads to God and that glorious day
Wherein there's no sin, neither sorrow nor pain
But where all the righteous in his glory shall reign.

Of his blessed example did you never read? When the heavens bent low to acknowledge the deed? Divine approval was sealed by the voice from above, As the Spirit descends in the form of a dove, Thus the Father acknowledg'd this act of the Son, And from heaven proclaimed him, as his beloved One. Shall we spurn this example, then boast of our love, And still proudly claim we are born from above? Can we follow him, and his plain footsteps avoid? Can we love him in truth when his word we make void? Nay, the test of true love is unchangeably set As a gem in his word that we may not forget. "If a man truly love me my words he will keep." "He that knows not my voice is not one of my sheep." Christ's word is the rock, wouldst thou build thereupon, And for ever be safe from the floods and the storm? Then spurn not his example, but honor his word Not a stone of thy house shall be moved, saith the Lord. The wind and the tempest beat around thee in vain, When thou truly dost honor the Lamb that was slain. The new birth by the Master was plainly set forth To the ruler of Jesus, who came seeking the truth. His answer came forth with no uncertain sound, No word more emphatic in God's record is found; And with it all his teachings in harmony he And that of his apostles we clearly can see. The birth of the Spirit is as plainly declar'd, Without which, for his kingdom we can not be prepar'd. His authorized servants do with water baptize, But the birth of the Spirit is the work of the Christ. This is sought for by prayer and laying on of the hands, That his power divine may upon us descend; And make us new creatures in Christ Jesus our Lord, And seal us his children in accord with his word. The signs that were promis'd to all them that believe As gifts of the Spirit will be surely receiv'd, By those who are faithful every word to obey, And continue to walk in the true narrow way. Yea, his promise is sure, because God does not change, And his word doth not vary from age unto age. Resurrection of the dead is plainly set forth In the message the angel brought down to the earth. Not as hirelings in man-made traditions have taught, That the good and the bad must together be brought From their long silent slumber within the dark tomb And together be judged before the dread throne. But each in his order as Paul plainly declar'd, For the Father in wisdom the way has prepar'd; Christ is the first fruits from the regions of death, And his power rent the rocks and shook the whole earth; Having conquer'd the powers of hell and the grave, Giving proof of his Godhead and power to save, He triumphant call'd forth the then righteous dead, Who for ages had slumber'd in their cold, silent bed, And gave them the right with their Redeemer to stand, And crown'd with glory at his gracious right hand, The ungodly were in chains of darkness reserv'd Reaping the dread wages of him whom they served Until the last judgment in that terrible day When their doom will be fixed for ever and aye; For Christ truly taught the resurrection of all Both the rich and the poor, the great and the small. To a life that's eternal the righteous will rise, When our Lord in his glory descends from the skies, And the faithful and true then alive on the earth Shall be changed in a moment when the dead have come forth, And enjoy with the Savior a thousand years' reign, When the knowledge of God o'er the earth shall obtain, When Satan is bound by God's eternal decree And peace, heavenly peace, universal shall be: But the rest of the dead will no more live again— In their dark dismal prisons they must surely remain, Till the blest thousand years shall fully expire And Gog and Magog are consumed in the fire. The terrible majesty of God will be known As he appears in glory on the great white throne.
Then the sea yields its dead; death and hell, too, disgorge
Their prisoners all bound with the chains sin has forged.
In the flesh they must stand to receive their reward;
Justice blending with mercy metes out the award.
To each one according as his works shall be found;
Whether good or evil, their reward will abound.
The glory of the sun for the faithful and true,
Has been given to those who have been born anew,
Who a part in the first resurrection obtained,
And with Jesus in glory a thousand years reigned,
But those who have slumbered through the long dreary night
Can never attain to the sun's glorious light.
Some heard not the gospel, hence its power have not known,
But God's loving kindness unto them will be shown.
For the heaven is hid in three measures of meal,
And the whole will be leavened as Christ doth reveal.
So the glory of the stars for some is reserved,
As befitting their works the full measure deserved.
As the stars in the heavens do variously shine,
So the glory of the latter, the scriptures define.
These are they who would not the gospel receive,
Neither Christ's testimony nor the prophets believe.
Whoremongers and liars, who have never known God,
But his word 'neath their feet they have wickedly trod,
Till the fullness of times his dread wrath they must bear,
Until they confess, and true allegiance shall swear.
To Jesus the Savior as their sovereign Lord,
And bow with due meekness unto his sacred word.
But where God and Christ dwell they never can come;
No, not worlds without end, thus the vision has shown.
And others before the white throne must appear,
And the final dread sentence will tremblingly hear.
These are they who have tasted the good word of God
And in his best footstool joyfully trod;
His soul being enlightened by his power from above,
They had drank from the fountain of infinite love.
But alas! like the dog to his vomit they turn'd,
And the dear, loving Savior they cruelly spurned.
They had spurned every offer of mercy and grace,
Impugned divine justice as the foe of our race.
They blasphemed his dear name, and his power defied,
And the power of the Spirit they basely denied.
As a fitting reward for their rebellious strife
Their names once enrolled in the Lamb's book of life
Are for ever expunged—Oh, how fearful their doom!
In the dread lake of fire that does not consume,
With Satan and his angels for ever they dwell
But the end of their torment no mortal can tell.
These are the only ones who will not be redeemed
In God's own due time, through that wonderful scheme
Of salvation, wrought out in the wisdom of God,
And secured unto all by the Christ's precious blood.
Thus judgment eternal is most plainly set forth
In the plain gospel message of justice and truth;
Nor are Mercy's just claims to the sinner denied,
When in humble contrition he casts sin aside,
And meekly confesses God and Christ as supreme.
For so great is the power of the great gospel scheme
To save to the utmost all who truly do come,
Humbly pleading for mercy before the great throne,
Those cast out might have stood with the glorified throng,
And joined the glad measure of that rapturous song,
Had they but been true to their covenant with God
And in the Redeemer's steps thus faithfully trod.
Christ now having triumphed over sin, death, and hell
Sweetest peans of praise from the ransomed shall swell
Because he alone the great wine press hath trod
And subdued every foe to our race and to God.
And the kingdom he bought with his own precious blood,
In meekness he yields to his Father and God.
With the crown of his glory he then shall be crowned,
And praises eternal to our God shall resound.
From choirs celestial, through his boundless domain,
To Christ our Redeemer, the Lamb that was slain.
All shall swell the glad chorus, the great and the small
Of praise to the Father, who is all, and in all.

Dear reader, would you with the redeemed ones stand,
Crowned with glory eternal at Jesus' right hand?
Reject not the message the angel has brought,
Which with life and salvation for mankind is fraught,
In infinite wisdom it was truly devised.
And shall it by vain mortals be spurned and despised?
Art thou wiser than he from whom all wisdom flows?
Is it thine the grand order of life to dispose?
To set an example for the whole human race,
Thus fulfilling God's word and securing his grace?

Do not, like the Pharisees and lawyers of old,
God's counsel reject as a tale that is told.
Nay, rather, as the publicans justified God,
Believing, repentant, were baptized in the flood,
Thus securing from him their sins' full remission.

As promised by John when they yielded submission,
"Go thou and do likewise," with full faith in his blood
Who gave himself a ransom to bring us to God.

When we humbly comply with his most holy word
Our sins are forgiven, as the Scriptures record,
Then we are entitled to the Spirit divine
To gladden the heart and illumine the mind
As the seal of adoption to each precious soul—
The revealer of truth, purifying the soul
As a Comforter, he will for ever abide In the hearts of the contrite whatever bo tile,
If the heart is kept pure and unsullied from sin,
And thus aid us the crown of bright glory to win.

With an unsparing hand precious gifts he bestows,
As were promised by Christ, so the word plainly shows—
To strengthen the weak and encourage the faint,
And to aid in perfecting each humble saint;
That each one may bring forth those rare fruits divine,
Which in the life of the Master so brightly doth shine;
That we may be prepar'd our Redeemer to meet,
And with joy and rejoicing his presence to greet.

Not as those who reject the great message of love
Which the Father in mercy hath sent from above,
They persist in their folly, corruption, and pride,
While the precepts of Christ they scorn and deride;
But their obdurate hearts with dread terror will quail,
Their once scornful faces with fear will turn pale,
As they cry to the rocks and the mountains to fall
And hide them from his face, but in vain will they call.

"O Israel, O Israel! in all your abidings, Prepare for your Lord, when you hear these glad tidings!"

Missouri, Kansas, and Southern Illinois District: By agreement between the missionaries in joint charge, the above field has been divided and officered as follows. The names are of those placed in charge of the missionary work in the fields named: Central Illinois, R. T. Walters; Southeastern Illinois, David Smith; Nodaway District, W. E. Haden; Far West District, T. J. Sheldon; Northwestern Missouri District, W. S. Macrae; Clinton District, George Jenkins; St. Louis and Southern Missouri Districts, (exclusive of the city of St. Louis), also the fifteen counties in Southeastern Missouri, now unorganized territory, Henry Sparring; City of St. Louis, J. A. Tanner; Spring River District and that portion of Kansas south of Northeastern and Northwestern Kansas Districts, which is known as "Southern Kansas," E. A. Davis; Northeastern and Northwestern Kansas Districts, W. E. Peak; the two Kansas Cities and their suburbs, A. H. Parsons; "Southern Missouri," as the words are used in the appointment of Ammon White as general missionary greatly needed relief. Elder I. N. White is in very poor health, and in order to his full recovery he must be involved and report only such items and conditions to the general ministers in charge as they can not of themselves manage or control. Thus the burden of oversight and management of the entire mission will be so distributed as to give the active general missionary greatly needed relief. Elder Joseph Luff has his hands full of other church responsibilities, and can only aid his associate by counsel when called upon. Let every man feel that upon him a sacred obligation rests by Heaven’s appointment, and so proceed, bearing the honors and making the sacrifices that the Christ characteristics shall appear in all his work. Let love impel our course in its relations to God and mankind. The gospel is God’s invention for a world’s uplifting. The authority to handle it has been intrusted to us—a divine treasure in an earthly vessel. Let its effect, theoretical and practical, be the divine epistle or handwriting in us, so clearly inscribed and so unimmed by self or sin that “he that runs may read.” Less than this is unworthy of us as followers of the Nazarene. God is at work—justly at work—in nations and conditions everywhere, and ready to environ us with all that is physically or otherwise necessary, as fast as we “line up” with his purposes, and can be trusted therewith. Cooperation with God can occur only when we work in his way. Let mankind, therefore, have, if possible, a better view of Christ through us than ever before. So praying and hoping, we are your coworkers.

PEACE IN "ZION CITY."

It would appear from the following notice of the affairs in "Elijah" Zion City, taken from the Chicago Tribune for May 24, that a ground for settlement of the controversy between the "First Apostle" and Overseer Voliva in regard to the temporalities of the Dowie movement would be reached in the secular courts:

A final adjudication of the affairs of Zion City is expected to-day. A stipulation agreed upon yesterday by the attorneys for the Dowie and Voliva factions will be presented to Judge Landis of the federal court this morning. After the stipulation is offered a final order in the case may be made by the judge.

By the agreement Judge Landis will be asked to decide upon the ownership of the property, and his decision will put an end to the suit to dissolve the injunction proceedings now pending in the circuit court.

The Voliva faction contends that the Zion City property constitutes a trust estate and that it has reverted to the real owners. The attorneys for Doctor Dowie insist that his title is clear and that all the property he holds was given him without reservation.

It is not so long ago as to be in that forgettable realm known to the law "that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary" since this "Elijah," "First Apostle," openly reviled, rebuked, and denounced the courts as vile, and the judges as commodities to be bought and sold. He doubtless little thought then that his heyday of rule might need the moral recognition of the same judges and courts he so pitifully belittled. But secular law—the law of the land—has ever been coexistent with the ecclesiastical since God gave Israel a king in his wrath, so that from time immemorial in the history of the church more than one otherwise irreconcilable ecclesiastical quarrel has been adjudicated at the bar of the civil (secular) courts.

And it is well the courts ever have had a wholesome dread of priestcraft since the people wrung from kings in the halls of justice their constitutional and chartered rights.

What of the contention? If Dowie's position is right then is the condition of those from whom he received his finances worse than we thought, as by his statements in Leaves of Healing, the official organ... of the Catholic Apostolic Church, he only claimed that five per cent was his, the remainder, ninety-five per cent, he held in trust as the working capital of the church. This is the contention of the Voliva wing of the "Zion City" followers, that Doctor Dowie was but a trustee for this ninety-five per cent, and could legitimately claim but the five per cent. Of course the lawyers for Doctor Dowie will claim all that human cupiditiy can cover, and rely on the want of nerve or shrewdness of the legal talent of the Voliva faction to make good their case.

However the case may end in the courts, it is an end of Dowieism as an ecclesiastical or spiritual movement claiming the sanction of the Savior's Spirit. Who is the next?

WOE TO HIM WHO MAKES AND LOVES A LIE.

Missouri to the front. The Supreme Court of Missouri, in deciding a case lately tried before it, handed down a decision which will demand and receive the approval of all right-thinking people.

"We are aware of the extent to which some courts have gone in announcing the rule that it is no part of the duty of a court to interpose and protect the unduly credulous who are willing to give credence to the assertions of parties seeking to acquire money or property. If the rule is to be announced that money or property may be obtained from a citizen of this State by another by means of false or fraudulent representations and with a design to defraud unless the party to whom such false and fraudulent representations are made makes an investigation, we confess that such a rule would approach the abolishment of the true purpose and spirit of the provision of the statute.'

"Quoting a New York opinion Judge Fox declared:"

""The statute is designed to furnish protection of those who from undue confidence in others or inexperience are liable to become victims of dishonest or designing dealers."

THE SPIDER IN HISTORY.

For those who have not read, or having read have forgotten, the following item of German history lately told by Cora Roche Howland in "A trip to Europe in an armchair," Chicago Tribune for May 15, will be of interest.

The spider often has been cited as exhibiting qualities of skill and perseverance remarkable enough to attract the attention of the thinker and philosopher. If correctly stated the instances stated below of the German Emperor and the Bruce of Scotland might be considered providential interference in history:

In the palace of Sanssouci there is a curiously decorated ceiling which shows a spider's web of gold, that recalls how the Great Frederick was saved from assassination by poison while the Seven Years' War was raging. One morning when the king was about to drink his cup of chocolate a spider dropped into it from the ceiling where it had just woven a web. The king took the insect out with his spoon, and placed the cup down on the floor for his dog to enjoy its contents. He did not ring immediately for another cup, and presently he noticed that the animal seemed ill after lapping up a little of the chocolate; almost immediately it dropped dead. The king summoned at once an officer of the guard, had the cook arrested and brought before him, and obliged the man to confess his own guilt and to name his accomplices. Thus in German history, as in Scottish, was a nation saved by the intervention of a spider.

QUEER DISTINCTION IN SENATORIAL QUALIFICATION.

J. Ralph Burton, one of the two United States Senators from Kansas, has for nearly two years occupied his seat in the Senate, nominally a member, drawing his salary, but not busying himself in the affairs of that body, by reason of the fact that he has been tried and convicted for an offense which will land him in the penitentiary. Convicted in the lower courts, the verdict has been approved by the Supreme Court, and the attainted Senator is allowed sixty days to perfect an application for a new trial which it is thought will not be allowed.

The Senate patiently has waited the termination of the trials of Honorable Burton, while it has been thought that he long since should have resigned for the sake of decency if for no other reason. He has remained in his seat and drawn his pay; and likely will exhaust the patience of the courts in seeking a rehearing of his case, which will leave the matter to run into October after Congress adjourns. If he fails to make his case for a rehearing the Senate probably will expel him. It is, however, the province of the Senate to deal with its own members, and it may just let the time pass without any further action, and thus permit the term of Burton's membership to expire by limitation, as it begins now to look is to be the result in the Smoot case.

There were some extremely curious things about the Burton case from the outset, and not the least interesting has been the decision of Justice Harlan which was handed down recently. Senator Burton was tried and convicted of having accepted a fee of five hundred dollars a month for five months from the Rialto Grain and Securities Company of St. Louis for services rendered that company by means of his efforts to prevent the issuing of an order by the post-office department restraining the company from using the mails because of fraud.

THE "NORTH COUNTRY."

The traditionary teaching of the church concerning the lost tribes of Israel being hidden in the "north country" is strangely revived or seemingly supported by the periodical references to a northern land, etc., which appear in the public press from time to time. We have heard of Captain E. K. Kane's Arctic discovery of an "open polar sea"; of cereals taken from wild fowl on the Pacific coast which sailors have identified with that taken from Arctic fowl; of green vegetation seen in the polar currents, etc. A book,
Beyond the Verge, Home of the Lost Tribes of Israel, by De Witt C. Chapman, has been published to illustrate some such theory. And now in the Chicago Tribune for May 22, 1906, we find the following:

Ernest D. Leffingwell of the University of Chicago and his companion, Captain Mikkelsen, started on their trip to the far north yesterday in search of a possible seventh continent and frozen lands.

University professors expect much from this unofficial expedition to the Arctic seas. Both men have figured in dashes for the pole, but they believe what they will find will be of greater benefit to science even than the discovery of the pole. The expedition will sail north from Vancouver. Whalers blown out of their course have reported a body of land there, and the explorers believe their chances of finding it are good.

Mr. Leffingwell will pay particular attention to the geology of the country. He expects to discover a number of islands and possibly a continent.

TIME, TIMES, AND HALF A TIME.

A reader sends us the following, clipped from the Washta Journal, Washta, Iowa:

PROPHECY FULFILLED.

Jerusalem taken by Mohammedans 637 A. D. First Zionist congress 1897 A. D., 1260 years afterward.

"Blindness in part is happened unto Israel until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in."—Romans 11:25.

"For it is given unto the Gentiles and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months."—Revelation 11:2.

TIME INTERPRETED.

Forty-two months—1260 days each day a year, thirty days to a month—1260 years. Time, 360; times, 720; half a time, 180; total, 1260.—Daniel 12:7.

The "time, times and half a time" refer to this, no doubt. Improvements in Jerusalem and Palestine indicate that the trodden-down condition has in a measure ceased.

MILTON JENNESS.

DATE OF CRUCIFIXION.

Bro. D. R. Baldwin sends us the following clipping from the Toledo Blade, June 4, 1905, which seems to him to be the most authentic of anything yet advanced on this subject:

DATE OF THE CRUCIFIXION.

Please give me the date on which Christ was crucified.—M. C. C., Easton, Ohio.

The question is one on which there has been a vast deal of research. Professor Achelis, of Konigslburg, a German scientist, working on the basis of a series of most exact calculations made by the Royal Astronomical Institute in Berlin, has established with what seems to be a high degree of historical accuracy the fact that the date of the crucifixion was April 6 in the year 30. How Professor Achelis arrived at this result he explains in a paper published in the proceedings of the Royal Scientific Society of Gottingen. The four evangelists, it is pointed out, agree that our Lord died on Friday, and, according to St. John, the day was the 14th of the month Nisan, when the passover lamb was being prepared; but according to the three other evangelists Christ had already partaken of the passover meal and was crucified on the first day of the passover—that is, the 15th of the month Nisan. The year is nowhere mentioned, but it was during the governorship of Pontius Pilate, who was appointed in the year 26, and removed just before Easter in the year of 36. From the material supplied to him by the Astronomical Institute, Professor Achelis found that during these ten years the 15th of Nisan never fell on a Friday, but that the 14th of Nisan fell on a Friday twice, namely, according to our reckoning, on April 6, in the year 30, and April 3 in the year of 33. The precise data given in Luke 3, and the fact that the statement in John 2:20, could only have been made in the year 27-28 prove that our Lord's ministry ended in the year 30.

From this agreement of astronomical calculations with the Bible record we have, concludes Professor Achelis, good grounds for accepting April 6 of the year 30 of our era as the date of the first good Friday.

Bro. M. R. Shoemaker, Beardstown, Illinois, lost his photograph gallery, some of the fixtures, and three cameras by fire recently. The cause of the fire is not known. The loss is about two thousand dollars, with insurance against it of one thousand. Bro. Shoemaker intends to rebuild, we understand.

“A petition signed by one hundred of the prominent citizens of Independence was presented to the city council last night asking that a committee be appointed to inquire into the feasibility of annexing Independence to Kansas City, and that the council take the necessary steps to secure such annexation.

“Mayor Prewitt appointed the following committee to make the investigation and report on the advisability of the proposed annexation: Aldermen O'Brien, Martin, and Hickman, and Austin Mindrus, S. B. Smith, S. I. Workman, Frank C. Wyatt, and Judge E. P. Gates. To this committee was added Mayor Prewitt and City Counselor L. James.

“The sentiment in Independence is strongly in favor of annexation except on the part of a few who do not fully understand the advantages they would receive by becoming a part of Kansas City.”—Kansas City Journal, May 25, 1906.

“BERLIN, May 18.—Discovery of a hitherto unpublished letter containing a description of Jesus Christ by an officer of Pontius Pilate writing to the Roman emperor has caused a sensation in ecclesiastical circles here. The document has recently been unearthed by the Lazarist fathers at Rome.

“Christian churchmen have set to work to prove the authenticity of the writing.

“The letter purports to have been written soon after Jesus Christ had begun to preach in Judea. Its text follows:

"I have learned, O Caesar, that you desired some information regarding this virtuous man called Jesus the Christ, whom the people consider a prophet.

"It is a fact that every day one hears wonderful things told of Him. To be brief, He makes the dead rise and He heals the sick.

‘‘He is a man of medium size, Whose appearance indicates both great sweetness and dignity.

‘‘His hair is of the color of ripe walnuts and hangs down on His shoulders. It is parted in the middle, according to the fashion of the Nazarenes. His beard, of the same color, is parted in the middle.

‘‘His eyes are rather severe and shine like the sun; it is impossible for any one to look Him long in the face.

‘‘When He scolds He inspires fear, but very soon He Himself begins to shed tears. Even in His most severe moods He is affable and benevolent. It is said that no one has ever seen Him laugh, and that He sheds tears very often.

‘‘Many believe that He is a God, and others assert that He is thine enemy, O Caesar.’’—Omaha Daily News.

Under the caption ‘‘Wanted—a new morality,’’ the Chicago Tribune, May 27, says some good things: ‘‘Contemporary developments in the United States show that the most urgent need of this country is a new morality. There is no need of new principles. The precepts of the Christian religion, which most of the worst sinners profess to believe in, can not be improved upon.’’ It declares that ‘‘morality is a condition of heart and mode of life, not a profession,’’ and measuring by this standard brands many American business men as ‘‘ ruthless savages.’’ It portrays their utter lack of sympathy manifested by the crushing of competitors ‘‘by the most lawless and cruel methods,’’ and the ‘‘pitiless robbing’’ of widows, orphans, and poor, of the funds placed in their hands in trust. But the public is blamed as well as the high financiers, because it has worshiped material success, and has encouraged rather than restrained the growth of the belief that might makes right in high finance.’’ President Hadley, of Yale, is cited as proposing ‘‘social ostracism as a remedy for the evils of trusts,’’ and the Tribune recommends ‘‘ostracism in its widest sense—ostracism which would not only send the possessors of stolen wealth to prison but would make all ill-gotten wealth a social gibbet instead of pedestal.’’

Count Up Your Blessings.

When you’re weary and sad, and troubles invade,
When joys all too fleeting in bitterness fade,
Take courage, don’t fret nor your sorrows deplore,
Just ‘‘count up your blessings,’’ and murmur no more.

If you’ve entered the path that is narrow and straight,
And expect to arrive at the beautiful gate,
Let nothing deter you, each duty perform,
Just ‘‘count up your blessings,’’ and press through the storm.

When friends whom you’ve thought were both loyal and true,
Deceive and forsake you, as often they do,
Remember that Jesus was treated the same,
Just ‘‘count up your blessings,’’ and trust in His name.

Yes, ‘‘count up your blessings,’’ and cease to complain;
They drop from the heavens like the dew and the rain;
As your day and your needs God’s favors descend,
So ‘‘count up your blessings,’’ and be true to the end.

Then let us remember as each of us should,
That ‘‘all things will work together for good,’’
And though trials be many, whatever befall, God’s blessings will surely outnumber them all.

[Companion piece for ‘‘When’’ Herald No. 18, page 411.]

When the strong and mighty one,
With pow’r and love divine,
Shall break each yoke and leave undone,
Each sinful wrong that binds:
When Zion shall be truly cleansed,
Her children pure in heart:
When rich and poor can freely blend
And each one do their part,
When mortal man has turned to God,
As God’s dear Son revealed—
And tread the path which Jesus trod—
Zion will be redeemed.
When earth shall be restored again,
And thorns and thistles cease;
’Tis then the land in its domain
Shall rest in joyous peace.
When it is known there is no poor
Within the Savior’s fold;
That none shall want or grief endure,
Like Enoch’s band of old;
And when the reptile sting shall fail,
And nations cease from war,
Then Zion’s glory will prevail—
Her fame be known afar.
’Tis then the cow and bear will feed,
In pastures broad and green;
Their little ones repose in deed,
And crown the blissful scene.
When earth and sea shall yield their dead,
At Michael’s trumpet-call,
Then death and hell shall lose their dread,
And Christ reign Lord of all.
And when each mystery is unsealed
Old things have passed away,
Then Zion’s splendor, full revealed,
Will merge in endless day.
But—when, O Lord, shall these take place—
Those dates unknown to men?
We fain would know that year of grace,
But—echo answers, When?
God’s promises for Zion’s cause,
Her people shall enjoy;
But they must keep his holy laws,
Lest sin their hopes destroy.
Then patient be, to watch and wait
For that auspicious day,
And God will surely compensate,
All sifting’s on the way.

CONSECRATION UNDER THE LAW—DOES IT PERMIT OF HOLDING BANK AND OTHER STOCK?

(Read before the High Priests’ Quorum.)

By the request of the president of the High Priests’ Quorum I endeavor to offer a few thoughts on the above subject.

Consecration, as set forth in the law of God, requires every Saint to consecrate himself with all that he has to the service of God; but as we live in the world and must do business with the world, we must be subject to and in harmony with the law of the land; and of necessity we must have all kinds of manufacturing establishments, also banks through which we transact business, as this is the best and most convenient way to do business.

Consecration leaves every one in possession of his own property (and does not mean common stock), or that which he receives by consecration, sufficient for himself and family, free to act as stewards under God. (See Doctrine and Covenants 42:9.) We must not forget, however, that while we will hold property in our own name, yet we are the Lord’s with all that is intrusted to our care as stewards. ‘The earth is the Lord’s, and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.’—Psalm 24:1.

Now, as all kinds of business must he carried on, somebody must carry it on, and do it in harmony with the law of the land as well as the law of the Lord. Banks and manufacturing plants must be organized according to the laws governing such institutions; hence they are stock companies. A number go in together, take so many shares of stock each, and start a bank or manufacturing plant; and this business must be done in the name of the institution through its officers, the law of the land prescribing just how it shall be done. Banking or manufacturing is just as legal and right as stock-raising. A tract of land could be purchased by a number of brethren and they could go into the cattle business, each one owning such a part of the land and cattle; hence so much stock he owns as his share. All on the same principle. Like the Nauvoo House, Doctrine and Covenants 107:19:

Behold, verily I say unto you, Let my servant George Miller, and my servant Lyman Wight, and my servant John Snider, and my servant Peter Hawa, organize themselves, and appoint one of them to be a president over their quorum for the purpose of building that house. And they shall form a constitution whereby they may receive stock for the building of that house. And they shall not receive less than fifty dollars for a share of stock in that house, and they shall be permitted to receive fifteen thousand dollars from any one man for stock in that house; but they shall not be permitted to receive over fifteen thousand dollars stock from any one man; and they shall not be permitted to receive under fifty dollars for a share of stock from any one man, in that house.

I have quoted this part of the paragraph to show that God directed the organization of a stock company; and a man that could not raise fifty dollars could not get any stock in that company, and one man might hold fifteen thousand dollars in stock. It also shows further on in the paragraph that they could sell their stock if they so desired, and could find a buyer. This company must be organized according to the state law where it exists.

In Doctrine and Covenants 101:9, in giving a pattern of the order of the church as it was given to Enoch, they are to do the business in their own name and in their own names. I see no other way provided in any law for God’s people to do business. The trouble or wrong is not in owning the stock in any of those institutions, but in failing to turn over into the Lord’s storehouse all the earnings of the institution above their necessities, like the elder in the field. (See Doctrine and Covenants 70 and 72.) Joseph Smith and others were appointed to take charge of the literary concerns of the church; and they were to have their necessities supplied out of the earnings of their business, and the balance was to be turned or given into the Lord’s storehouse or treasury, for the benefit of the inhabitants of Zion.

Paragraphs 1 and 2 make this plain. Now, listen to paragraph 3:

Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed, or shall hereafter appoint unto any man. And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God; yea, neither the bishop, neither the agent, who keepeth the Lord’s storehouse; neither he who is appointed in a stewardship over temporal things; he who is appointed to administer spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire, even as those who are appointed to a stewardship, to administer in temporal things, yea, even more abundantly, which abundance is multiplied unto them through the manifestations of the Spirit; nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld.

This makes it very clear that every man in the church, no difference what his avocation may be, whether president or apostle, bishop or elder, banker or miner, farmer, minister, or mechanic, is subject to this law, and should turn over into the Lord’s storehouse all his earnings above that which may be necessary for the support of those dependent upon him, and sufficient to operate his business, whether large or small. And it is just as lawful to own stock in and operate a bank or manufacturing plant as it was to own stock in the Nauvoo House, or any other hotel where the weary may find board and lodging. We need not expect the time to come when we shall have common ownership of all things; each one will have his own inheritance, and his own stewardship, when the Lord’s plan prevails; and each one will turn over all above his necessities unto the Lord’s storehouse, and that part becomes the common property of the whole church; and each according to his needs has equal claim on that.

that which a man has above his necessities. His necessities are to be determined according to his family, his occupation, and his ability in business. Every one, receiving so many talents according to his ability, is to occupy as the Lord's steward; and we are to render an account of our stewardship in time, as well as in eternity. (See Doctrine and Covenants 72:1.) Hence, when a Saint files his inventory with the Bishop, if he be a farmer, and has no more land than is necessary for his family, and no more stock and implements than he needs to operate that farm, he has no surplus, but may by making sacrifice consecrate something for the Lord's storehouse or treasury. But if he has lands, stocks, or money, more than is necessary in his stewardship, that would be "surplus" and should be turned over to the Bishop and become the common property of the whole church, and together with the consecrations, made by sacrifice, be used as the law directs in Doctrine and Covenants 42:10.

Again, when a man files his inventory, if he contemplates going into business at once, of any kind, (whether banking, manufacturing, merchandising, mining, farming, gardening, or mechanism of any kind,) he should so state, and then by an agreement with the Bishop keep what may be necessary for that business, and invest in land, dry goods, groceries, manufacturing, or bank stock, the same as he might have done before making his inventory,—with this difference, he now has rendered an account of his stewardship, in time, to God (through his own appointed officers) and has God's approval through those officers; hence giving in this way, and working in this way, is in harmony with the law of the Lord; and without making his inventory and in this way "laying all things at the feet of the bishop," he is working after the manner of the world; and he becomes a law unto himself if he refuses to comply with the law of the Lord after being properly instructed. When we give in this way to the poor, through those officers, the Lord counts it giving to the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid up in the Lord's treasury all we make above our necessities, whether banker, manufacturer, merchant, farmer, miner, or minister. (See Doctrine and Covenants 42:10; 51:1-3; 70:2, 3; 72:4; 81:4.)

Each alike is required in his calling to labor for Zion, and our ambition should be to do all we can to build up Zion, and this can not be done unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom. (See Doctrine and Covenants 102:2.) For if we labor for money in Zion we will perish. (See Book of Mormon, Second Nephi 11:15, small edition.) Much might be written and studied with profit to us all on this subject. I have not had time, neither am I in very good condition, to write on any subject at the present time, having waited on an almost helpless sick wife, day and night, for eleven months. The few thoughts presented, however, may stimulate some to study the subject and in this way do good. G. H. Hilliard.

IF A COMET SHOULD STRIKE THE SUN.

PREFACE.

Marvelous to the utmost confines of credibility are the achievements and revelations of astronomical and astrophysical science, there is absolutely no branch of the entire field of astronomical development and enterprise more enthralling than the subject of which the following paper is a brief but (as far as it extends) an accurate outline and descriptive synopsis.

Strange and startling to many minds as the title may appear, the subject, nevertheless, belongs distinctly and strictly to the domain of sidereal astronomy, so called from the Latin sidus (a star), in contradistinction to solar physics which treats of the sun; and lunar astronomy which deals exclusively with astronomical facts and data relating to the moon.

To those who might be disposed to consider the strange and wonderful sequence of events narrated in the ensuing pages as far-fetched or highly imaginary in their subject-matter and coloring, nothing would be easier (were we addressing an astronomical or mathematical audience) than to adduce scientific reasons for every detail that has been introduced into the following essay, did the exigencies of space at disposal permit of our doing so.

Nothing is more strikingly impressive—we had almost said solemnly impressive—to the average mind than the calm and matter-of-fact way in which science (especially astronomical science) speaks of the most tremendous and stupendous things; and the most gigantic events taking place amongst the

mysterious millions on millions of worlds and suns scattered through the regions of everlasting space; and then brings those vast events and those startlingly far-reaching possibilities and facts and probabilities "home to our own heartstone," as it were, by demonstrating with the most perfect and modern and expensive spectroscopes and telescopes, backed up by page upon page of figures, statistics, and calculations of the most tremendous extent and import—that there is truly "nothing new under the sun"; that what has been is now, and will be again; and that the fate of other suns and other worlds may be the final fate and destiny of our sun and our world, also.

And when these tremendous possibilities and potentialities are pointed out with absolutely unerring emphasis and insisted upon with almost ominous reiteration in the oldest and best of all volumes, the Holy Bible, the entire subject becomes invested with a new importance, a hidden meaning, and an alluring atmosphere which, as it were, compels the mind to pause and bow reverentially before entering this noblest and most important vestibule of all Nature's vast and mysterious "Chamber of Mysteries."

Nothing is more pertinaciously baffling and bewildering to the human mind than well ascertaining some of the facts, of a most marvelous nature, proclaimed by astronomy in the most matter-of-fact terms, and demonstrated altogether beyond cavil or contradiction by phalanx upon phalanx, army upon army, of unerring figures,—figures, too, that have been scrutinized and tested, again and again, so repeatedly and so searchingly that the possibility of error is reduced to an absolute non possumus.

IF A COMET SHOULD STRIKE THE SUN!

The well-nigh stupendous ignorance of the great majority of the human race concerning the vast and marvelous probabilities and possibilities latent among the heavenly bodies is such that it forms subject-matter for the intensest wonder and surprise.

Many persons imagine, for example, that the possibilities of a comet striking the earth are vast and imminent and numerous; and their first thought, their first fear upon beholding the fiery-winged comet messenger from afar is, What if, with its vast magnitude and stupendous velocity, it should rush into our earth!

One seldom, if ever, hears the exclamation, "What if it should dash into the sun!" Yet, if there is any truth in science, any veracity in astronomy, the latter probability is many thousands of times greater than the former.

The interesting object of our paper is to demonstrate what would be the result of such a collision, should such a catastrophe occur as for a comet to dash into the sun. But the fact may probably astound no small proportion of your numerous readers when we assure them upon no less an authority than that of the learned professor, S. Newcomb, of Chicago Observatory, that there are in addition to those brilliant objects to which the same comet is universally applied—a large number of comet-like bodies revolving within the confines of the solar system, and beyond it—whose distinguishing characteristic is that, being opaque bodies (and therefore dark), their presence is unknown and unsuspected until illumined by the solar rays.

It must be borne in mind during the perusal of this article that the comet whose flight we are about to trace belongs to this latter very numerous class of celestial bodies.

It might be mentioned in order somewhat to "clear our way" (so to speak) that the learned French astronomer and mathematician, M. Arago, in his interesting and world-wide "Essays upon Meteorology," distinctly names many instances where persons, also animals, such as horses, cows, and sheep, have been stricken and killed by lightning in which not a ray of light was visible. We are, therefore, face to face with the strange and startling fact, established upon altogether undeniable evidence, that there is not only bright lightning, but dark lightning, also.

I have merely adverted to this striking analogy that your readers may be the better prepared to follow me in this article when it is necessary to bring before them evidence of the existence of dark stars as well as bright stars, dark planets as well as bright planets, dark comets as well as blazing comets.

Upwards of five hundred nonluminous bodies are known to revolve, as competent elements of the solar system, between the orbit of Mars at a mean distance of one hundred and thirty millions of miles from the sun (though only about thirty-two millions of miles from the earth), and the planet Jupiter, at a distance of no less than four hundred and ninety-five millions of miles. However, it is not only of these "planetoids" that I wish to speak. None of them are of such dimensions as to cause any appreciable disturbance were any of them to reach the sun.

The danger arises from another and (for the most part) entirely unsuspected quarter. The researches of modern astronomical science have established one fact, the vast and far-reaching importance of which has, till very recent years, been all but entirely neglected and overlooked. Of course, many and marvelous facts undoubtedly have been brought to light, owing to the vast fertility of invention for years past in the field of mathematical, optical, and astronomical instrument construction. But the one vast and crowning fact, preeminent above all others, is the fact of there having been discovered immense numbers of large dark bodies amidst the stellar deeps, the vast and absolutely gigantic magnitude of which simply transcends human imagination and baffles all human investigation.

Researches as entirely dissimilar in their nature as the photographing of a nebula, or the observation of a comet's flight (with a view to the determination of its orbit) have contributed their quota to the discovery I have alluded to, viz.: the presence of immense dark comets, or opaque bodies scattered throughout endless space, not simply within the limits of our own solar system (as has been already suggested), but far beyond that point, in space where our sun appears to sink, owing to the vast distance, to a small star of the ninth or even the tenth magnitude.

When we speak of the distance of the farthest known planet of our own system, viz., Neptune, of a vast span of more than two thousand three hundred and ninety millions of miles, we are speaking of vast distances which nothing of a terrestrial nature can help us to fathom or understand; but beside of such gigantic distances as the stars Capella or Betelgeux or Myra or Aldebaran the vast distance of Neptune is as the journey performed by a little child's toy locomotive engine compared with the entire length of the grand trunk of the Canadian Pacific Railway which spans the entire continent of North America, from east to west, from sea to sea, from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean.

Vast spaces which a cannon-ball could not traverse in a less period of time than five thousand, six hundred and thirty years have been, time and again, penetrated by means of the newest, grandest, and best equatorial telescopes in the great observatories of Europe and America; and in all this incomparably vast region evidences have been discovered of myriads of dark bodies of a size and density that not one planet in the entire solar system furnishes any adequate standard of a comparison as to size and density (or specific gravity), the sun himself being but a unit of comparison; for vast numbers of these bodies exceed him in volume and density in the ratio of hundreds—nay, even thousands to one.

It is, in fact, perfectly impossible to obtain a photograph of the great nebula in Orion, or of Messier 8, or Messier 13 or 17, or of the beautiful and sublime nebula in Alpha Centauri or surrounding Alpha Centauri, without being forcibly and distinctly aware of certain dark and well-defined spots where the light of those brilliant stars composing that portion or those portions of the galaxy are completely hidden and blotted out by the presence of intervening dark comets, or bodies of enormous magnitude and size and volume.

How vast those objects are, of course, be but approximately ascertained, owing to their vast distance; but when it is discovered that myriads of these vast sums together shine at this distance only with the luminosity of a fifth or sixth magnitude star, your many readers may form some slight idea of the vastness of an opaque body capable of altogether obscuring and blotting out the light of myriads of stars at a distance exceeding 28,000,000,000,000 miles. Nor is this by any means an isolated phenomena.

There is scarcely a solitary nebula in the entire heavens, north or south, east or west, but this marked characteristic is observed; and indeed it is so very prominent as to compel the notice of the chief or presiding astronomers of the observatory, wherever it may be situated.

A very singular and startling confirmation of this fact is found in tracing the comet of 1839 (Holmes' comet, it is generally called). This singular object, after being followed by telescopic means to a distance of many millions of miles beyond the solar system, exhibited, in the lapse between one night and the next, the extraordinary phenomenon of having been violently disrupted or broken up into two distinct portions, showing that it must have encountered in its flight some immense and solid body, for no star was visible in that portion of the firmament for a distance extending over many hundreds of millions of miles.

A precisely similar fate overtook a well-known comet which appeared in broad daylight in the year 1845, but which at its next return in 1852 was found to have been broken up into two distinct comets traveling parallel to each other, and with a singular band of light-like substance reaching from the higher (or more northerly) to the lower (or more southerly) comet of the pair. This was known as Biela's "double" comet, from the circumstance of the comet's having been first observed by the Austrian astronomer, Biela, and it being an unvariable practice of the astronomical world to name every comet (so far at least as can be accurately ascertained) from the first person who announces its discovery in such and such a longitude and celestial latitude of the heavens.

Another very remarkable instance of the presence of dark bodies in the far, far distant heavens is evinced by the observations and recorded calculations of the star Myra, which at certain times is all but entirely eclipsed and obscured by a dark companion-star which, revolving at a distance from him, periodically shuts off a large proportion of his light from observers at the earth's surface.

The star Algol is another and very remarkable variable star of a similar kind and character. It has been carefully computed that any dark body capable of obscuring three fifths of the entire light of the great star Algol (as this one does) must be no less than 1,736 times the size of, not only Jupiter himself, but of all the planets of the solar system combined into one huge, stupendous globe. When the fact is borne in mind that Jupiter alone is 1,150 times the earth's size and dimensions, your many readers may perhaps be enabled to form at least a faint idea of the size of a globe 1,736 times the size, not only of Jupiter, and of Saturn also, (which is 874 times the earth's dimensions,) but of the entire mass of all the planets of the solar system combined into one vast homogeneous planetary orb or globe.

Human imagination simply shrinks from the vain endeavor to realize or form any adequate idea at all of the dimensions of such a body. Mathematical calculation discloses the astounding fact that such a sphere would be about 1,472,150 times the earth's dimensions, and would very closely approximate—even if it did not exceed in bulk—the orb of day himself, the only difference being that the huge planet would be a dark body, reflecting only the rays which might fall upon it from another sun or suns (Algol in this case); while our sun is, of course, luminous, i.e., shining by his own inherent power, light, heat, radiation, and electric luminosity.

Having prepared the way by demonstrating, as it was our duty to do, the presence of numerous dark bodies of a cometary or planetary character throughout the fathomless regions of illimitable space, we now come to the more immediate purpose of the present article, by endeavoring to describe what would be the effect were one of these vast objects, detached from its gravitational control, to dash into our solar orb; a catastrophe which, from the very nature of the case, and from the immensely greater attractive power of the sun, is greatly more within the bounds of probability than that such an object should rush into the earth, a catastrophe which is wrongly but popularly supposed to be the more likely of the two.

When we speak of a dark comet, or nonluminous object of a cometary or planetary nature, dashing into our solar luminary, we do not wish to be understood as implying that the planet or comet (though intrinsically dark) would appear dark to the observer himself, the only difference being that the huge planet would be a dark body, reflecting only the rays which might fall upon it from another sun or suns (Algol in this case); while our sun is, of course, luminous, i.e., shining by his own inherent power, light, heat, radiation, and electric luminosity.

Similarly, the verb dash is used in making the expression as to the comet "dashing" into the sun, we do not mean to insinuate that to an observer at the earth's surface the comet, however great its angular velocity, would really appear to be "dashing" or "rushing" into the sun, owing, of course, to the sun's vast distance of 91,876,000 miles from us, and to the mathematical fact that the speed of any given moving body appears to diminish in velocity at a ratio proportionate to the square of its angular distance from the observer.

We have an instance of this in the familiar example of a railway train, which the close observer knows to be running in reality at a high speed of, say, sixty-nine miles an hour. But let the spectator's position be one in which for a number of miles he can watch the train's progress. Scarcely one mile will have been run before the train will appear to have very materially decreased its rate of velocity, while at five or six miles distance the train will appear to be crawling along at a rate of barely ten miles in an hour, or even much less; though the observer himself knows that in reality it is maintaining the very same high ratio of speed which it exhibited when it passed the point at which he stood, close to the railway line itself.

In describing, as I am now about to do, the comet's appearance and its subsequent immersion into the sun's photosphere, it must be well borne in mind that we speak in reality and not of the appearance. The first intimation that something unusual was taking place in our solar system would be, strange to say, not from any ocular evidence to the inhabitants of the earth itself, but from an apparent abnormality and discrepancy in the revolutions of Jupiter's satellites, the effect of a real and actual displacement of the earth in her orbit around the sun.

Thus, the first intimation of danger comes from a distance of not less than 495,000,000 of miles, and would at first be apparent only to mathematicians and astronomers. Later on the evidences of what was actually taking place would become so apparent as to attract popular attention. A new star appears in the heavens. It at first commands but little notice or attention, except, of course, among astronomers and scientists. But as week after week passes by and the new celestial object gains in power and prominence and in brilliancy, public attention is aroused and inquiries are made from the officials at the astronomical centers of Europe by numerous applicants from all parts of the civilized world, east and west, north and south. To respond to these letters and inquiries is, of course, no easy task to the learned men of the observatories and universities throughout the civilized world, for while on the one hand their reputation for scientific accuracy and veracity is at stake, on the other hand it is highly undesirable to add in the least to the condition of prevalent fear and uneasiness which has already begun to agitate the public mind; for the results of a panic may prove calamitous and disastrous in the extreme, as history has only too conclusively shown upon many and memorable occasions.

Reassuring messages are, therefore, sent in reply, and subsequently posters are exhibited under the government seal and authority, calculated to minimize and allay the growing excitement among the populace. The new object is therein represented as being but one of the numerous family of small celestial bodies known as "planetoids"; and that it is merely approaching its perihelion passage around the sun, and can cause no danger or menace to the earth or its inhabitants. Popular excitement and trepidation being assuaged by these and similar announce­ments published broadcast throughout the length and breadth of the land, things begin to resume their normal course, while business and pleasure continue their progress, hand in hand as heretofore.

We will now imagine that we have reached the end of the month in which the new planet (or comet) first became visible.

Strange and somewhat startling changes have taken place, and developments of a totally unforeseen and unexpected nature have now arisen to intensify the increasing alarm and to altogether neutralize the effect of the official pacific proclamations before alluded to. The celestial stranger has now assumed dimensions altogether inconsistent with the theory of its being but a small planetoid or any such object, while the earth's electrical and atmospheric conditions have now become such as to diffuse wide-spread consternation and dismay.

Sudden bursts of thunder and lightning on the finest days, and without the least warning or intima­tion, were among these manifestations. Unusual and unprecedented electrical phenomena become alarm­ingly frequent. Atmospheric conditions and weather characteristics have become not simply altered, but absolutely reversed to such an extent that whether it is summer or winter can only be decided by the calendar (or almanac). Swarms of the most brilliant and blazing meteorites appear, many of them even in broad daylight, and in the blazing rays of the noonday sun, whilst at midnight these objects appear terrifying and alarming in the extreme.

Night after night vast crowds assemble in the streets and avenues, many with telescopes and opera­glasses to watch with apprehension the progress of the immense comet without a tail toward the sun, for it is now obvious to the least observant among those crowds, firstly, that the stranger is no mere "plane­toid" but a dark body of enormous dimensions, and, secondly, that its course is in a direct line toward our solar luminary, and that its speed toward the sun is increasing in an alarming proportion.

Another month has now elapsed and the popular agitation and consternation have reached the dimen­sions of an all but universal panic.

The government again issues reassuring posters and pamphlets written by well-known names in the scientific world, but all to absolutely no purpose whatever. Law and order are set at complete defi­ance, and "mob rule" reigns universal, the authori­ties sharing so entirely in the popular alarm at the portentous appearing of "things heavenly" that their exertions in the direction of preserving and maintaining public tranquility and safety are simply paralyzed, a fact which is taken advantage of to the full by the loud and rougher elements in all the large cities, and those who, having nothing to lose, have become daring and reckless in the extreme. These being met by armed bands of the more respectable inhabitants banded together for the protection of life and property (the government being absolutely pow­erless either for the protection of the innocent or for the punishment of the guilty) scenes of indescribable bloodshed and violence are of daily—nay, hourly—occurrence; and the main thoroughfares are so blocked and barricaded with fighting and insurgent mobs on the one hand and government troops on the other that little short of a "reign of terror" ensues, which spreads confusion and dismay amongst the peace-loving and law-abiding populations of all the large towns and cities upon each side of the Atlantic Ocean. Incendiary fires of mysterious origin break out in many places almost instantaneously and attain alarming proportions within a few hours, owing to the complete disintegration and disorganization of the civic and municipal fire departments of the large centers.

A few brave and noble men valiantly stick to their posts and seek to extinguish the ever-mastering and ever-threatening flames; but the noble exertions of these faithful souls are neutralized and counteracted by the rapacity and greed of organized gangs of rowdies and roughs of the very dregs of society, who hamper and frustrate the authorities in their valiant efforts to subdue the conflagrations, so that, in the prevalent confusion, they may lay hands on property of any and every description saved by the owners of the destroyed and burning buildings on every hand. Should the law-officers succeed in arresting any of these thieves and depredators these rough gangs immediately surround the police, and by sheer impudence and force of numbers rescue the pris­oners in the very teeth of the officers of the crown. Thus, disorder and disaster march hand in hand, panic reigns rampant, and society so to speak, turned completely "topsy-turvey." Riots of furious character and alarming dimensions break out on every hand. The government buildings are attacked, and in the cases of all but the very strongest, reduced to heaps of ashes and smoldering ruins. Prisons are burned and prisoners are released, while the angry mobs in their insensate rage (as if the astronomers and men of science were in some way responsible for the prevailing dreadful state of things) proceed to attack and demolish the observa­tories, wrecking and ruining the telescopes and other instruments of priceless value, and all but irreplace­able in their respective fields of investigation and research.

Meanwhile the alarming and portentous nature of the comet's appearance grows hourly more pro­nounced, mightily more terrible and disconcerting, for as it more and more closely approaches the solar orb, its immense size becomes daily and hourly more apparent to the anxious and terror-stricken multitudes lining the streets by day and in no small number of cases by night also; for sleep seems by this time to have fled, and to have forsaken all but the most callous, hard-hearted, and indifferent. "Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking upward for those things coming upon the earth, with distress of nations and great perplexity," are the leading characteristics of these "perilous times" as our gracious Master long since foretold. (See Matthew 24.)

The sea rages and roars, while billows mountain-high break upon our coasts, to the annihilation and destruction of well-nigh everything in the nature of steam- or sailing-vessels throughout the world of commerce. The scientific reason of such tremendous tidal waves is, of course, the tremendous swaying or liberation of the moon in her longitude, arising from the intense solar gravitation, owing to the proximity of so large a foreign body in the immediate vicinity of the sun himself.

Winds and cyclones of appalling violence, and of altogether unprecedented velocity and fury, create unheard-of and unimagined desolation and destruction by sea and by land, insomuch that to venture upon the ocean deep is to at once sacrifice all hope of again seeing home or native land, friends or dear ones. The still faster and more furious rush of the dark comet toward the sun causes that luminary to appear black as midnight, while the moon seems as if turned into blood (or to the color of blood), owing to the presence of vast quantities of dark gaseous matter in the earth's atmosphere quite foreign to its natural and normal constitution and element. Many spurious prophets, religious fanatics, and false Christs arise, and by "lying signs and wonders" (Revelation 13:13, 14) deceive almost the "very elect" themselves, owing, of course, to the general consternation, confusion, and alarm. Many portentous appearances excite attention, and many wonderful signs which the brief limits of our present essay prevent our dilating upon, but all, either directly or indirectly, relating to the approaching shaking of the powers of heaven (see Matthew 29:29), or, in strictly scientific terms, the disturbance in the sun's center of gravity, and (by consequence) the earth's also, the moon's and all the planets' centers of gravity.

At last the veil of night settles upon the scene, and many draw the breath of relief and consolation to think that, although they had beheld on the preceding evening the comet bury its immense dark body in the solar rays, there is as yet no appreciable increase in the heat of the earth, but this satisfaction is, alas, too short-lived, for by noon the sun has assumed a most fiery and formidable aspect, and the heat has suddenly become unbearable. Conflagrations, as sudden and apparently as spontaneous as if ignited by electric means at some vast and immense central battery, burst out on every hand and in totally unconnected portions of the vast centers of population and habitation. Fire alarms multiply with ever-increasing frequency and intensity to the all-absorbing bewilderment of the fire departments in every city of the world, who find themselves increasingly powerless and increasingly helpless to deal with so terribly alarming an aspect of affairs. It soon becomes apparent that the vast number of apparently spontaneous conflagrations on every hand arise from the intensity of the sun's rays igniting the roofs of factories, churches, warehouses, and dwelling-houses in constantly augmenting numbers. Ever and anon a terrific and deafening explosion announces the ignition and destruction of a gun cotton- or pet rolite-manufactory or a gunpowder-magazine, thus augmenting the universal terror and alarm. Language even of the most eloquent, oratory of even the most exalted fails ignominiously in attempting to describe or portray such scenes as now begin to transform first the Eastern and then the Western Hemisphere into scenes of such altogether unprecedented and indescribable a nature and character as to simply baffle all description. Night comes again, and, though it brings darkness, it can hardly be said to afford relief from the all-torturing, all-consuming heat and burning.

It is now seen that both Venus and Mars (the planets nearest to our earth) have assumed strange and altogether alarming configurations and proportions. Especially is this so in the case of the former of these two bodies, it being, of course, much nearer to the sun. Venus, in fact, appears already nearly eleven times her usual apparent diameter and circumference, besides having assumed a dull red (or rather orange) tint or coloring, very distinctly observable. The whole northern heavens is ablaze with blazing and scintillating or flashing streamers of glowing light from the sun, somewhat resembling the aurora borealis or northern lights, only immensely more lurid and pronounced; while toward the south and southeast the sky is literally ablaze with meteors and meteoric showers. Sleep is, of course, out of the question, even were the heat far less penetrating and far less all-pervading that it is. The entire population crowds the streets, squares, and public thoroughfares, watching the angry, vehement, and palpitating fires on every hand which punctuate the silent watches of the night and make the darkness all the more visible and asking one another with trembling lips and blanched faces, What shall be on the morrow?

Impelled by the all-consuming terror and all but paralyzed with the universal fear many, alas, seek ways and means of putting a period to their earthly existence, while multitudes, alas, find a watery grave in every river and every sea. Caves and underground cellars or subterranean passages command palatial rents; for the rich, feeling that safety alone is to be found in such places of refuge, are offering the owners fabulous rents for the privilege of occuping an underground cellar, no matter how dark, how damp, or how mildewy, as the only refuge from the, alas, only too tropical heat that shall accompany the sun's next rising.

Morning at last dawns, angry, lurid, red, and menacing in its terrible furnace-like temperature, accompanied, strange to say, with a series of cyclonic gales and hurricanes from every opposite point of the compass; but these winds, alas, like the "ignis fatuus," do but mock humanity with a hope of respite from the all-pervading heat; for the sun is no sooner above the eastern horizon than these gales and cyclones blow with the hot blast-like breath of the previous day defied description, the aspect of respite from the all-pervading heat; for the sun is menacing in its terrible furnace-like temperature, seethe and boil like the craters of geysers or burning mountains, while a hundred conflagrations start up on every hand to one of yesterday, and the authorities, now utterly paralyzed and demoralized by the awful extent of the universal disaster, have abandoned the work of even attempting to extinguish the multiplied and multiplying conflagrations, or even to save life or to rescue property from the all-devouring element. Ships reach the docks and harbors blazing from stem to stem, while even freight-and passenger-trains, traveling at a high rate of velocity, take fire on the roads and reach the depots blazing wrecks and burning heaps of ruins, in which the strident and ear-piercing hissing of escaping steam mingles with the crash and crackle of burning cars and coaches, and the terrified shrieks and screams of imprisoned passengers.

Even the wild and carnivorous animals herd together in flocks and droves, side by side with the lambs and the sheep and the goats and the oxen (their long-time natural prey and victims) too terror-stricken by the one dread incubus menacing both to think of hate or vengeance.

At last when wave upon wave of the devouring and devastating element, raging terribly and triumphantly aloft, threaten the engulfment and annihilation of earth's myriads of children, one universal prayer, the burst of agonized supplication arises from earth's myriads of tongues, and, swift answering, the atmosphere is filled with flying white-robed beings, who, with unheard-of velocity and undreamed strength, gather into their powerful arms vast multitudes of the supinating mortals; and I heard, methought, a voice, as of a trumpet, crying out,
"Then shall he send forth his angels and gather his elect from the four winds of heaven." Thus were they catched up into the air, away and away, beyond the blazing torrential heat and lo! they beheld, and saw the earth and the surrounding elements thereof pass away with a great noise, and the elements melted with fervent heat.

Nevertheless, methought another angel stood and cried with a loud voice, saying, "When the earth is purified by fire of the sins of her children and of the blood of the apostles and saints which has cried aloud unto the Lord for vengeance, lo, these many years [ during which time of burning the righteous shall be with the Lord in the air] then the 'ransomed of the Lord shall return' to the new earth and their purified habitation, and 'everlasting joy shall be upon their heads'; sorrow and sighing shall flee away, and there shall be no death, neither sorrow nor sickness nor pain nor fire, for the 'former things are passed away,' and Christ shall reign in the midst of his people, and their abode shall be with the Lord of hosts in Zion, and with the Holy One of Israel in Jerusalem; for in Zion and in Jerusalem shall the word of the Lord go forth unto the ends of the earth, and the whole earth shall be filled with his glory as the waters cover the face of the mighty deep, and it shall be a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness for ever and ever."

Then I awoke and, behold, it was a dream.

THE MARK OF THE BEAST.

Many writers have told us what the mark of the beast referred to in Revelation is, or at least what they think it is. All but one are wrong, undoubtedly, and possibly that one with the rest.

Were I to hazard a definition, and should it also prove wrong, the rest will forgive me—if it should prove right, I do not need to be forgiven.

Any definition that must necessarily apply to any one class of people, in any one age, such as sprinkling for baptism, keeping of the first day of the week, Masonic grip are in my judgment too local and insignif-ient. It should be of a nature that can be indulged in or partaken of by any individual in any age of the world—in any place on earth, or under the earth for that matter, inasmuch as it was or is to be a feature of the judgment that will concern people out of every kindred, tongue, and nation.

Sin in itself is universal enough to fill or answer the interpretation, yet I think the language with its symbolism calls for something more specific, that is to say, some distinct, well-defined species of sin.

It may be true that the dragon of Revelation may represent a local power in a certain age. But I understand that to be only a representative power for the age in which he lived and figured, such as Pharaoh, Laman, Herod, and others in their respective age all filled with the spirit of persecution. This spirit was manifested in Cain, but was not in Abel in the beginning of the history of religion, and may or may not be indulged in by any individual where-ever there is a religion of any sort or description, and perhaps where there is none if there ever was such a condition upon the earth.

As the chief sin of the beast was persecution, it is but natural that his characteristic mark would be the spirit of persecution. I have had this thought for a number of years, and have not met anything in my researches to antagonize that conclusion. If any of the brethren have valid objections, they will be appreciated.

There is one thing sure: The spirit of persecution is a mark of the beast—a well-defined and significant one at that, even if it is not the one referred to by the revelator.

And here, may I be pardoned if I remark that an incident occurred during the time of the late General Conference that indicates that though we are striving to be tolerant and magnanimous, we are not all of us entirely free from the spirit which the elders continually meet in the world; and for which we have no love when manifested against us? It is the kind that put the Savior to death, though of course in much more modified form.

A POSSIBLE CELESTIAL CATASTROPHE.

The elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up.

This fearful prediction in the Second Epistle of St. Peter does not, perhaps, excite the same terror to-day that it did when every word of the Scriptures was accepted as divinely inspired. But curiously enough modern science, while pronouncing some of the historical events recorded in the Old Testament to be contradictory to the laws of physics, has discovered that such a fiery finish for the earth as St. Peter describes is entirely within the limits of scientific probability.

Recently Mr. J. E. Gore, the English astronomer, has called attention to the fact that a distinct prediction of the destruction of the world by fire exists also in the great Sanscrit epic, the Mahabkarata, and, impressed by this coincidence, he has been at the pains to examine anew the astronomical evidence of the possibility of so vast and dire a catastrophe.

The instrument of the world's destruction by fire would, in all probability, be an immense dark body rushing out of space to the embrace of the sun. Evidence is continually accumulating of the existence of such bodies lurking invisible among the stars. In order that the destruction should take place within such a limit of time as was clearly intended by St. Peter and by the Hindoo writer, it is necessary to admit that the dark body in question is now very much nearer to us than any of the stars.

Assuming its existence, we can tell in what quarter of the heavens it should be looked for. It is that toward which the sun with all its planets is flying at the rate of, say, a dozen miles per second. A conspicuous landmark in that part of the sky is the brilliant white star Vega, at the edge of the Milky Way, in the north.

If the hypothetical dark body bearing the fate of the earth in its viewless flight is assumed to be of equal mass with the sun and equal density with the earth, then Mr. Gore's calculations show it must have a diameter of a little less than 550,000 miles, and it must become visible as a star of the ninth magnitude when 15,000,000,000 miles away, or more than five times the distance of the planet Neptune. At that distance the sunlight reflected from its surface would render it visible as a speck of light in a three-inch telescope.

Astronomers would quickly be able to differentiate it from a new, or temporary, star as well as from a comet. A suspicion of its true character would not be long in entering their minds, and from that moment it would be the most absorbingly interesting phenomenon within the ken of humanity.

But between the time of the first appearance of the destroyer as a ninth magnitude star and the occurrence of the final catastrophe, mankind would have about fifteen years and three months still to exist, in helpless contemplation of their on-rushing fate. The sun would hurry to meet the invader with the same speed at which the latter approached.

This speed, slow at first, would rapidly increase toward the end. For instance, Mr. Gore shows that nearly ten years would elapse between the first appearance of the body as a ninth magnitude telescopic star and its arrival at a point 9,000,000,000 miles away, when it would become visible to the naked eye like a star of the fifth magnitude.

From that time it would be possible for everybody to see the coming destroyer. But it would be so insignificant a speck among the stars that it could hardly excite the terror of the multitude even if they were informed of its significance.

Within about four years more, however, it would steadily increase in brightness until, arrived at the distance of the planet Uranus, it would equal the great star Arcturus in brilliance. But the character of its light would be different from that of any star—steady, staring, untwinkling; an eye of doom!

And now events would begin to move with vertiginous speed. In another twelve-month the body would be as near as Jupiter, but four times as bright as that great planet ever appears, and every eye would be drawn to it, and the terror of its presence would strike every heart. Every night from now on it would perceptibly grow and brighten. At its nearest probable approach to the earth it would resemble the full moon in size.

In eight days more the Destroyer and the sun, rushing to meet one another, each with a velocity of more than 400 miles per second, would collide, a vast gush of heat would sweep outward over the planets, the elements would melt with fervent heat; the earth also and the works that are therein would be burned up.

Such, in brief outline, is the sketch that Mr. Gore’s calculations present of the possible approach and the inevitable effect of a great dark body encountering the sun. If, instead of being as massive as the sun itself, the body were only as large as the earth, its fall into the sun would still produce a sufficient outburst of heat to destroy all life on our planet. But in that case its approach could be known only a few months instead of a considerable number of years in advance.

In view of all these things, if a suspicious-looking star should at any time appear near the star Vega, it might cause some astronomers to prick up their ears. Mr. Gore would evidently be one of them, for he avers that he has already carefully examined the region around Vega, but up to April last had found no star visible there that was not already well known to astronomers.—Garrett P. Serviss in Daily Examiner.

Living Water.

"I was once stopping," says a lady, "at a village on the Welsh coast, where the people had to bring all their water from a well.

"Is this well ever dry?' I inquired of a young girl who came to draw water.

"Dry? Yes, ma’am; very often in hot weather."

"And where do you go for water then?"

"To the spring, a little way out of town."

"And if the spring dries up?"

"Why, then we go to the stream higher up—the best water of all."

"But if the stream higher up fails?"

"Why, ma’am, that stream never dries up—never. It is always the same, winter and summer."

"I went to see this precious brook which ‘never dries up.’ It was a clear, sparkling rivulet, coming down from the high hill, not with torrent leap and roar, but with soft murmur of fullness and freedom. It flowed down to the highway side. It was within reach of every child’s little pitcher. It was enough for every empty vessel. The small birds came down thither to drink. To the sheep and lambs had trodden down a little path to its brink. The thirsty beasts of burden, along the dusty road, knew the way to the stream that ‘never dries up.’"

"It reminded me of the waters of life and salvation flowing from the ‘Rock of Ages,’ that brought within the reach of all men the gospel of Jesus Christ. Every other brook may go dry in the days of drought and adversity, but this heavenly spring never ceases to flow!"—Selected.

Just as you now play a piece without the music and do not think what notes you strike, though once you picked them out by slow and patient toil, so, if you begin of set purpose, you will learn the law of kindness in utterance so perfectly that it will be second nature to you and make more music in your life than all the songs the sweetest voice has ever sung.—Frances E. Willard.
True greatness is in the character, never in the circumstances. No matter about wearing a crown; make sure that you have a head worthy of wearing a crown. No matter about the purple; make sure that you have a heart worthy of the purple. No matter about a throne to sit on; make sure that you life is regal in its own intrinsic character—that men will recognize the king in you, though you till in the field or mine or serve in the lowest place.—Reverend J. R. Miller, D. D.

For at the heart of womanhood
The child’s great heart doth lie;
At childhood’s heart, the germ of good,
Lies God’s simplicity.
So, sister, be thy womanhood
A baptism on thy brow,
For something dimly understood,
And which thou art not now,
But which within thee, all the time,
Maketh thee what thou art;
Maketh thee long and strive and climb—
The God-life at thy heart.—George MacDonald.

Help One Another.

We could make life much easier for one another if we would. For instance, some people have conveyances and some have none. It would cost nothing, but a little trouble, to go with your carriage and take an aged or infirm saint for a ride some week day, or perhaps to church on communion Sunday, or, may be, round to “God’s acre,” where a green sprig or flower might be laid on the grave of a precious one. Yet, how much a breath of air during the drive would invigorate, an hour in God’s house would refresh, or a few moments in the cemetery would sadly but surely comfort. And we, doing this kindness without cost of a cent, would turn homeward listening happily to the song some angel would sing to our hearts.

This is but one way in a countless multitude, showing how in city or country we could relieve the hard monotony of life to which our neighbors are often subjected. A visit, a letter, a token sent, some little bit of tempting food—in ways past mention we could lift a burden, let in a ray of sunshine, brighten a home and bless a heart. The cost would be nothing or next to nothing, and the result would be better than silver or gold. Add to these helps, that cost so little, those that demand some outlay of money or substance, and it will be seen that our state­ment is as true as truth—we could make life easier for one another if we would.

Why do we not do it? Surely we are [not] indifferent to our neighbors—we are willing to help them. Some may not care, do not care, but others do; and yet few sit down to think how they can render a helpful kindness. People do not think. To pursue our instance—owners of carriages do not realize the condition of those who do not keep them. When they need a conveyance they have it. They do not put themselves in the place of those without the luxuries so common to them. So it probably is with the kind hearts of other good people. They do not realize what their neighbors lack.

We write to awaken thoughtfulness. Do, brother, sister, sit down and think how you can better the life of some one near you. They are at hand. Do not for a moment suppose that there are none you can help. If you fail to recall one, talk it over with your pastor, or with some one. And when you find your opportunity thank God for it; ask him to give you tact to do the right thing in the right way, and then bear ye one another’s burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ.—Southern Christian Advocate.

Mondamin, Iowa, May 16, 1906.

Editora Herald: I am still in the faith and trying to hold the banner to the breeze, that my fellow creatures may find shelter under its broad folds. Notwithstanding the busy season, the interest in my meetings is quite good. Some are near the kingdom, and I think will obey.

I am holding services at what is known as Sandy Point Church, near Mondamin, Iowa. A few Saints live in this vicinity, and it is certainly a treat for the missionary to be permitted to stay with Saints, as the greater part of my missionary tour in the last seven years has been breaking up new ground. The prospects before us in Gallanda Grove and Little Sioux Districts bid very fair for an ingathering this year. I am glad of the prospects before us as a people. I love to labor in a cause that has for its final consummation the gathering together of the faithful in all ages in the “grand reunion.”

In reading the recent revelation, and the reports of conference, it seems as if the curtain is being lifted, and we are being led on to more extended fields of usefulness; and as a people we ought to be glad to step forward in the line of spiritual progress.

The Western Iowa reunion which will be held at Moorhead, Iowa, August 24 to September 3 is looked forward to by the Saints in these districts as a spiritual feast, and we trust will be to all who come.

The opposition the gospel message is meeting at the present time is very cunning. Our enemies, after a few conflicts and defeat in public debates, have concluded the best way to meet us is to use unfair methods by canvassing neighborhoods, and pleading with the people to stay away, and telling them a few yarns about some dead man, thus proving themselves to be cowardly.

I love to preach the gospel of liberty, and its truth will stand the test of the most bitter opposition. May the good work move on and latter-day Israel be prepared for final victory.

Your brother in bonds,

Oscar Case.

Colton, California, May 18, 1906.

Editora Herald: Because the news from the Islands this mail indicates that there is a necessity for some one to be there as soon as possible, we are trying to get off on the next mail-boat which leaves San Francisco on the first day of July. This will hurry us up very much, but seems to us to be a prudent step, considering the circumstances.

I think it proper to copy a few items from the letters received on the 15th inst. from Papeete, and lay aside for a while whatever delinacy a person may rightly have, and, for the work’s sake, write a little of self.

Varoa, an elder, says: “Tei hau roa’tu i te iteraa i te hoi fahou mai nei orua i teitei paseu, mea maere rahi ti Jehovah ohipa i rotou i to ‘na etaretia.,”' a free translation of which is, “very great indeed is the knowledge (we have) that you two will return again to this mission, most wonderful is that which Jehovah works in the midst of his church.” “And it is very good that we shall meet again,” he says in another part of his letter—so sure is he.

Turatahi, the assistant secretary of the mission, says: “It is the thought of us, thy brethren of this mission, that you two will return again to this mission, most wonderful is that which Jehovah works in the midst of his church.” “And it is very great weakness which is in our midst.”

Tapu, an elder, says: “It will be a good thing for you to come and see us for yourself, and learn what like are the letters which have come to you. Joseph and Emma, come and meet us.” Tapu is one of the presidents of the faction that is Metuanu says: "Very great is the desire of the Saints that you two should return to this South Sea Island Mission again."

Hiti Temanava writes a letter signed also by Luis, Tapu, Pori, Tuteirihi, Taneterau, Tekakahu, Neri, and Keahuri, in which they say that "because of the trouble which has come to pass in this mission among a portion of the Saints, come you to us; come and stay." These all are among the dissenters.

D. M. Pohemiti writes, and after telling of their poverty and hunger, says: "You are the one my heart is trusting in, and also those of Papeete, and the white men; we all hope that you which they say that "because of the trouble which has come to pass in this mission among a portion of the Saints, come you to the necessary that some one or more be sent to the Pori, will receive the Master's approbation."

And thus the counsel of the Master was correct: "It is necessary that some one or more be sent to the South Sea Islands." And so the conference chose two missionaries, who, with their wives, will try to perform the duties intrusted to them. May God give grace, faith, and hope to them, that they may so labor there that when their mission shall have ended they may receive the Master's approbation. May God's blessing rest upon all the Israel-of God. In the bonds of love, Editors Herald: I was glad to have the opportunity to attend the General Conference. I met many old-time friends, and made many new ones. I think the way the people were cared for was fine. It certainly gives the sisters a better chance to attend the meetings. I enjoyed the prayer- and preaching-services very much, and the short talks given on the Temple Lot Sunday, the 15th, by a number of the brethren between the two o'clock and right preaching. When I have such feasts as these, I think of some of the brethren and sisters of my home branch, and wish they would come to the feast. Certainly, I mean some that are financially able, as many of them are.

I am glad to know our brethren W. E. Haden and Arch E. McCord are sent to the Nodaway District again. They have done well in the past and have the good will and wishes of all the Saints in the district.

We have been blessed lately in our meetings and Sunday-school sessions. But the trouble here seems largely to be that we are in a scattered condition, and carelessness on the part of too many of us hinders the work. It is to be hoped that now as the summer is coming, we will all unite our energies for the good of the cause of Christ. Praying for the spread of truth, I remain,

Your sister,

Martena Nelson.

Editors Herald: In reading your paper, the HERALD, as it has been "donated" or is the gift of a friend to me, I feel as though I must thank the one who has been interested in my behalf and trust you will find room at least in your valuable paper to allow me to say that your efforts for doing good are appreciated, and are greatly enjoyed by myself and children, who always seemed to be deeply interested in anything concerning the early days of the church, as their grandfather was one of the many who passed through those trials. And although the HERALD is not a new paper to me, having seen it often in my father's house, I think it just one of the best gifts, for it is filled with such nice sermons, and genuine good talk—and the many letters written by the members of the church telling of trials. It seems to me that it is indeed a comforter and must be received by many in that light. There is only a small branch of the church here, but much less prejudice than in former years.

A Latter Day Saint minister calls to see us occasionally, and it is a common saying that the rest "can not hold a candle to him in a discourse," and he generally draws large crowds. They listen very attentively, for of course they expect they may hear something very different from the Bible teaching. And I have often heard the remark, "Why, he talked from the Bible, and he is a Mormon." And good gospel talk it is, and I do wish we might enjoy more such privileges.

Before closing my letter, I will explain to the readers who I am. Hope they will remember Uncle William B. Smith. I am his daughter, and would be pleased to hear from any sister of the church who may choose to write to me. I have written to thank the one who is interested for my sake.

I will not write any more for the present, but may come in the future. Myself and family are not members of your church, though, being closely related, have a very kindly feeling for the members. Yours respectfully,

Mrs. Mae Bolsinger.

Thamesville, Ontario, May 15, 1906.

Dear Herald: I love to read the letters in the HERALD. I am a young Saint, twenty-four years of age, and superintendent of the Sunday-school here at Thamesville. My father is very sick to-night. I am sitting up with him. He has not been able to walk for over a year. He was a priest in the church, but like many others has not always done his duty. Bro. Taylor of Wabash was here three weeks ago to preach, and he spoke in tongues concerning father, but the Lord did not make any promise that he would get well. But I ask for the prayers of the Saints for him, and for the rest of us as well. Remember also our little Sunday-school.

Our family all belong to the church, except my youngest sister, who is only four years old. I love this work, and I know it is true. My heart is in it, and I hope I shall be faithful even to the end. To this end, I pray for all the Saints.

George E. Perritt.

Flagg Center, Illinois, May 16, 1906.

Dear Herald: I am living where I can not hear the gospel preached. If any of the brethren come here I think they may get the schoolhouse, as the Methodists preach here nearly every Sunday in the schoolhouse. We sent our letters to the Dekalb Branch, but have no chance to go. I and my two children are the only Saints here that we know anything about. We are poor, but if any of the Saints come here we will try to treat them the best we are able. I have received many blessings from the Lord in answer to prayers, and I ask the prayers of the Saints, for my children who seem to be going back into the world, and that the trials that seem to be around may not overcome us, that my husband may be brought into the church. The Lord has answered Bro. H. A. Stabins' prayer when I was confirmed, for I have not seen so many trials since. I ask prayers especially for my daughter, that the Lord may keep her from temptations.

Your sister in the one faith,

Mary E. Samms.

Editors Herald: During a recent visit to Coalville and Cherokee I found the Saints still in the faith and willing to show their faith by their works, hospitality, and love; though perhaps in some more zeal might be beneficial.

At Coalville I found Sr. Elizabeth Teasdale quite ill, but she so far recovered before I left that she was out to Sunday services on the 13th inst. Sr. Hilly Bennett is ill at the age of seventy-six, at the home of her son, Bro. Ferd Bennett, near Quimby, Iowa. I called on her the 19th inst. and administered to her, and gave a blessing in the name of the Lord, and was assisted by the Spirit in doing so.
I had a pleasant visit with Bro. and Sr. William Leonard and family, who live some six miles north of Cherokee, Iowa, and gave their sons, John and Earl, their blessings, and feel that I was assisted in so doing by the Spirit.

The afternoon of the 19th, I received a phone message from my brother, James L. Butterworth, stating that his wife, Sr. Edna, had "passed quietly away." Yesterday at half past two in the afternoon, Father Charles Derry preached her funeral-sermon to a large audience in the Methodist Church at Dow City. The sermon was good, and the audience attentive. Thus enters into her eternal rest a true Saint and one of the best of women. May God bless and comfort the husband and daughters. They have the sympathy of all who know them.

We are still in the faith, so far as we understand it, and expect to remain so as long as it shall please God to continue our days.

In gospel bonds,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

Editors Herald: In the Herald of May 10 I read the poem, "Somewhere." It brought to my mind another poem, the title of which is, "Something we'll understand." It is an old Sunday-school song written by Maxwell N. Carlyle, D. D.

I think the words are grand, and I wish it were in our Hymnal. I will inclose a copy.

Editors Herald: On last Saturday, one week ago to-day, I landed in Salt Lake City, and the next day began my year's work in the Rocky Mountain Mission. My permanent address is 807 West Kansas Street, Independence, Missouri, and the present address, for the present, is care J. D. Wilson, 349 South Sixth East Street, Salt Lake City, Utah. But I expect to be here only for a short time, until some one else arrives to take up the work here in the city, and then I expect to get out in the field. And this field is certainly a very large one for the number of men assigned to it, and much of it must necessarily be neglected, notwithstanding the fact that the Lord has specially referred to this mission, in the late revelation, and has said: "It is essential that the church have proper representatives there." It is to be hoped that arrangements may be made to increase the ministerial force in this field, and that, too, with "suitable representatives." But, whether that can be done or not, we hope to be able to do our duty and to at least hold the ground already gained. Forces are at work here that seem to be for good; but it must be remembered that one extreme is often followed by another, and that, in pulling up the tares, there is danger of destroying the wheat also. That "no one can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care" is a truth which should be specially recognized by those laboring in this mission; and, in fact, it should be recognized by all who are laboring for the emancipation of men and women from the bondage of error and superstition. "Faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work."

Hopefully,

ISAAC M. SMITH.

Editors Herald: This is the third week we have been holding meetings at Roseland—new place so far as preaching the gospel of our faith is concerned—a coal-mining town. We are occupying a public-school building; large crowds and the best interest I ever saw in a mining town.

I am enjoying wonderful liberty in every sermon. I have not preached a sermon since general conference that inspiration has not been with me to a marked degree, for which I am thankful to God. Bro. W. S. Taylor and Bro. R. E. Martin have ably assisted me in these meetings. I must not forget to mention our choir from Scammon comes out and does the singing. Sr. Guy is organist. She used to belong to the Christian Church; was baptized by the writer last summer, with others, who are noble Latter Day Saints. One outsider, Mr. Adams, a fine man, takes a wagon-load out to Roseland.

Brethren and sisters, you can do so much good in making a sacrifice to help in song-service. People gathered to the building before sundown to hear the good singing. Several are tak-
Dear Herald: I returned home Thursday on account of sickness. The hand of affliction has been on Sr. Self again. At this time she is much better, and I hope to return to my work in a few days. We wish to express our thanks and gratitude to the dear Saints and friends of Western Nebraska and Black Hills Mission for their kindness to us while traveling among them. While we entered the field three years ago somewhat blue and discouraged, we had every reason to feel glad and to rejoice that we had the privilege of meeting and traveling among you. We have felt encouraged and strengthened, and hope our work among you has been of such a nature that it has been a source of comfort and spiritual strength. While we did not accomplish all we wished for the good of the work, our desires were good and we shall always rejoice to hear good news from that district. There are many who are interested in the gospel message who have not obeyed, and we trust that before 1907 is ushered in they will make their peace with God, and be obedient to his will, realizing that whatever is bound on earth shall be bound in heaven, knowing that when we stand before that throne of God we must give a reason for not obeying the gospel while here.

We hope to have the privilege of mingling our voices in prayer and praise with yours again, and of rejoicing under the Spirit of God as we have in days past. After meeting and forming acquaintance with the Saints and friends, parting and going to other parts is one of the hardest features of missionary work. As the hymn reads,

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

And how happy will be the time when parting will be no more. How we hope we may live up to the gospel standard, that we may all be worthy of the welcome plaudit, Well done. We will be glad to hear from all those whom we have corresponded with, and as time permits we will answer. We have not decided what our mission address will be. Will publish it sponded with, and as time permits we will answer. We have that we may all be worthy of the welcome plaudit, Well done. The late General Conference was one that inspires one to go onward and upward. How good it was to see the spirit of one-ness among the children of God! There was no room whatever for the spirit of contention; hence he had to take his departure for other fields. Yours in gospel bonds,

R. O. SELF.

Editors Herald: I have been corresponding with a minister in Central Point, Oregon, who is interested in our faith. Will some of the elders call on him? His name is C. A. Walruff. Central Point is in Jackson County, on the Southern Pacific Railroad, three hundred and twenty-five miles south of Portland. It would be well for an elder to call on him. One of the Brighamite elders sent him B. H. Roberts' work on succession. I have just sent him Bro. Heman's work. May God bless all the honest in heart.

SPRINGFIELD, Missouri, May 21, 1906.

Editors Herald: As there has been some inquiry from Saints in different parts of the country about our cooperative store here, we take this method of giving information to those that wish to know. About the 1st of March last, we opened up what was and is intended to be a cooperative grocery-store for the benefit of the Saints in general; but as yet we have not got onto the true cooperative plan, on account of the Saints not taking stock as they should; and as we are almost all in limited circumstances, financially, we are moving slowly.

Our intention was to have each Saint put in an equal amount, and start on a true cooperative plan. We called a meeting for that purpose, but could not get a sufficient number to subscribe stock. A few of us concluded to raise what we could and start the ball rolling. I believe our books show eight stock-holders; their holdings are from one dollar to four hundred dollars each. Those that have stock are willing to take more if necessary, or they that have the most stock will reduce their stock when a sufficient number comes in to make it a true cooperative plan, if necessary.

We aim to carry a full line of all kinds of goods as soon as we can. We will also carry feed and fuel, also building-material, such as lime, sand, and cement; and we want to run a general all-around work-shop, to give our mechanics employment in the way of contracting and building all kinds of buildings, so we can make our people independent of the outside world; for we realize it is time that God's people should begin to gather in the regions round about Zion, and to cooperate together.

We employ three Saints that are heads of families in our store at this time. Neither of them is a stock-holder yet, so we feel that our effort is a help to some already. Our object is not to speculate and get gain from each other, but to be a lasting help to each other. Let us say that we intend, with God's help, to make cooperation a success. We are in a good country, and have a beautiful little city of thirty thousand people, a fine climate noted for good health. Our city is called "The Queen City of the Ozarks." Our county is called, "The Land of the Big Red Apple."

We are in the vicinity of the largest fruit-farms in the world; and the fruit is yet in its infancy. And the best is that we are within less than two hundred miles of the city of Zion, with two main trunk lines of railroad, and two branch roads, and another one building from the south, which will be running cars into the city soon. The two large railroad shops and other manufacturing plants employ some three thousand men, or more. Our city is building up rapidly, and bids fair in the near future to be a model city. We have as fine schools as can be found anywhere, and just recently the city voted sixty thousand dollars to build more schoolrooms. The Saints have a nice little church-building; and in our last business-meeting we voted to make improvements on the building to the amount of thirty and fifty dollars. We have a membership of one hundred and seventy-five. Some are nonresidents. We are still gaining... slowly but surely, and we are doing what we can to spread the angel's message among the children of men.

Recently we have been holding services on the streets, nights and Sunday afternoons, with a good hearing.

For further information about our store, address Springfield Co-operative Company, 536 East Commercial Street, Springfield, spiritually. This should not seem strange, when we realize the fact that the Holy Spirit which is promised to those who obey the gospel, to lead them into all truth, is the source from which all intelligence flows. Hence, if we are enjoying this holy influence, the natural result will be advancement. We will become better citizens, more kind, more gentle, and more righteous.

This is the result of obeying the gospel. Will it not speak louder than the loudest thunder, and be the greatest testimony we can offer as to the divinity of the work in which we are engaged, and be a light that can not be hid? I realize the necessity of making a closer application of the gospel to my character. I feel that the hastening time is upon us, the eleventh hour is drawing to an end. The shadows of midnight are setting in; the events spoken of by the prophets are rapidly drawing to a close. We are living in a momentous age, in an age in which the prophecies concerning the times just prior to the second coming of the Son of God are being fulfilled. (See

I am truly thankful for the many blessings I have enjoyed from my heavenly Father, and am also thankful that I have always felt to trust him in the trying hours of life; and many times when earthly friends seemed few, I have felt that I had one true friend, to whom I could tell my troubles, and he has never forsaken me. I hope to live a life of devotion to God in the future, and overcome the errors of my ways, that when Christ comes he may own me as his true child.

I often hear people wondering what is the cause of so many earthquakes and storms. Oh, if they would just get their Bible down off the shelf and read some of the predictions spoken of by the old prophets, they could see the last days are drawing to a close.

And as it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man. They did eat, they drank, they mar-rried wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and the flood came, and destroyed them all.
Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all. Even thus it shall be in the day when the Son of man is revealed."—Luke 17:26-30.

Dear Saints, the San Francisco earthquake was only another “bail” on the “fig-tree.”

MARION, Indiana, May 24, 1906.

Dear Herald: The 22d and 23d of May, just past, I spent at the state prohibition convention of Indiana, being a delegate of same. This goes on record as being the largest prohibition state convention of any ever held. Tomilson Hall, the largest hall in Indianapolis, was filled; the name of God was used and cherished throughout the entire convention. There was no smoking, chewing, swearing, no whisky-bloats, but a house of honest, conscientious, upright, patriotic, praying, American citizens. The convention unanimously was in favor of overthrowing the saloon by abolishing the license traffic, upon which the highest supreme court of the land has so justly rendered decision, that we have no right to license away the morals of our citizens.

The convention decided against the practice of co-operating with the Utah church, as is done by both the old parties for political favor, but gave unanimous consent to drive out and abolish the abominable practice of polygamy, which is practiced by the Mormon church in Utah, without fear or favor, and to put men in office free from any aid through such sources.

Dear Saints, I was glad that I was able to show over five thousand people that that was just what we as a church were in favor of; but I was sorry to say that hundreds of our members were continually voting for the sustenance of parties which were not free to speak against such evils, but continued to allow such people to occupy chairs in our general assemblies.
Is it not a shame that we are so weak, and have not yet the manhood and womanhood to arise in our strength and take sides with right? But no, we are also seeking political favor. One elder told me he knew that it was wrong to sustain such cor-rup tion, but it might cause him financial loss to give up voting corruption. Another elder, also of our church, said, “Bro.
Zahnd, God knows you’re right, but you will never win.” So he also stays with a party that allows stealing, drunkenness, graft; and polygamy, and then sings,

“Jesus, I my cross have taken,
All to leave and follow thee.”

Shame! Shame! Shame!
The Methodist Church has decided that one could not license wrong without sin. Shall we be behind her? If so, better quit and begin grafting. I am glad I am free to speak, at least.

Sketch of the Work at Spokane.

Dear Herald: By request of authority we herewith submit for your columns the following bit of history:

The Spokane Branch was organized December 12, 1884, by Elder H. L. Holt, at the home of T. A. Hicks, 412 Washington Street, Spokane, near where the Great Northern Depot now stands. There were present at that meeting, H. L. Holt, seventy; William T. Hicks and Luke Story, elders; Bro. and Sr. Hooker, Bro. and Sr. Tripp, Phillip and Nelly Tripp, and Bro. and Sr. T. A. Hicks.

Elder William T. Hicks was chosen to preside” over the destiny of the new branch, Elder Luke Story presiding priest, and J. M. Hooker teacher, he being ordained to that office at this meeting, under the hands of H. L. Holt and William T. Hicks.
Bro. T. A. Hicks was chosen as clerk.

Thus amid the snow-capped mountains of Eastern Washington, under favorable auspices, was launched the Spokane Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

The first missionary was Bro. John Davis, followed by H. L.
Holt, who organized the branch,—J. C. Clapp, N. V. Sheldon, D. E. Powell, J. W. Roberts, G. W. Wingar, F. J. Chatburn, and T. W. Chatburn in their order. Joseph Luff and G. T.
Griffiths of the Twelve have presided over the Northwestern Mission, of which this district is a part.

This branch has existed under varied conditions and circumstances, lived through severe and adverse conflicts, Satan being determined to destroy it while yet in its swaddling clothes. As is usual, many of its conflicts arose from jealousy, and ignorance of the law that governs.

William L. Hicks held the office of president until April 20, 1903, when Benjamin R. Turnbow was chosen to preside, hold-
The Spokane District was organized December 26, 1903, by Apostle G. T. Griffiths. G. W. Winegar was chosen to preside, O. L. Ferguson secretary, and J. M. Puckett recommended for Bishop's agent.

The district comprises the following territory: In Idaho, all the counties in the panhandle, which are, Kootenai, Latah, Shoshone, and Nez Perce; also the following counties in Eastern Washington: Stevens, Spokane, Lincoln, Whitman, Adams, Asotin, Garfield, Columbia, Walla Walla, Franklin, Ferry, Okanogan, Chelan, and Douglas, comprising all the counties east of the Cascade Mountains in the state of Washington, with the exception of the counties of Yakima and Kittitas.

The present officers of the district are, T. W. Chatburn, president; W. W. Fordham, priest; Evan Richards, teacher, and William Atkins, deacon.

Respectfully submitted,

Spokane, Washington.

Extracts from Letters.

F. C. Keck, Scammon, Kansas: "Closed our meetings at Roseland. Three were baptized by the writer to-day, adults, all heads of families. One man who last July, when we were here holding tent-meetings, was tending bar in a saloon, is now, with wife and sister, rejoicing in the truth. The brother's father is a holiness preacher. An unusual degree of the Spirit was present in the confirmations; many were in tears."

M. J. Mather: "I would very much like to see published in the Saints' Herald a sermon on 'Predestination.' I have some Presbyterian friends who hold tenaciously to the doctrine of election, quote Romans 8:29, 30; 9:15, 16."

H. A. Case, Piedmont, Oklahoma: "Our missionary work has begun, and prospects are fine for this new year. Bro. Yates lately baptized two, and I replied to one Reverend Collins who took occasion to class us with the Utah Mormons. I also organized a new Sunday-school last Sunday."

Mrs. Susan Miller, Cabery, Illinois: "I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may be faithful, for I am trying to serve the Lord aright. There has been some preaching of our faith here, and now I want to get Bro. McDowell from Chicago to come here."

P. W. Atkins, Jewell City, Kansas: "We would be pleased to have the elders stop with us when passing this way, as there is a branch at Osborn, also one at Scandia. We are on a direct route between these two places."

MAGNOLIA, IOWA.

D. R. CHAMBERS.

To the Saints of South Dakota East of the Missouri River: Please take notice that I am one of the missionaries to your part of the State, and I have the privilege of your knowledge of conditions and opportunities in your respective communities in reference to gospel work; and as about forty families are represented, and only two to do the work, we do not want to come where it is not desirable to do so. Please respond, and express your desires; also, the best time to come, and we will make an effort to reach you. Bro. L. G. Wood is associated with me. Address me at Omaha, Nebraska, 3218 Taylor Street.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

EDWARD RANNIE.

To the Ministry and Saints of Oklahoma, Indian Territory, Arkansas, and Louisiana west of the Mississippi River: Greeting: Having been appointed to labor in above territory, and given the oversight of the work therein, I desire to hear from all the ministry, and from the Saints who can furnish me with information in regard to the needs and condition of the work. I shall endeavor to be with you in the field, somewhere, as soon as practicable, but in the meantime let me hear from you. All General Conference appointees are requested to furnish me their permanent addresses, and district and branch presidents may send reports.

I trust we may all fully sense the great responsibility imposed upon us, and that with faithfulness and diligence in the Master's work find acceptance of him. It is a grand opportunity to labor together with the Lord. May we have grace to so occupy our work that our may stand approved.

To the Ministry and Saints in Southern California and Arizona: Elder G. T. Griffiths, president of the Pacific Slope Mission, having appointed the writer in charge of the work in Southern California and Arizona, I write you briefly at this time mainly to give notice of my address.

The missionaries in the above named territory are all men of experience, and I think, all well acquainted there. The writer is wholly unacquainted there. The missionaries, therefore, will not wait for, expect, or need advice from him. He needs information and advice more than any, and is ready to receive and accept the same.

Until June 1 address me as below; after June 1 my address will be Bisbee, Arizona. Please send reports July 1 to the latter place.

May the Spirit of the Master direct us all and give us ability to endure. For it is only he who 'endures' that wins "the pearl of great price," eternal life.

Your brother,

WILL S. PRENDER.

To the Household of Faith in the Spokane District, Washington: Greeting: As your servant for another year I submit the following for your consideration:

www.LatterDayTruth.org
From the reports published you will notice that last year was the best in the church's history in spiritual as well as numerical strength, brought about by united and consistent effort in keeping the laws and tithes both spiritually and temporally; and thus the church has gained favor by being willing and obedient.

As we enter the new year let each one of us commit to memory, "Let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toil eth in the affairs of men of business and of work, labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.

We have a very large district, and our missionary force has been cut down for which we are sorry. And since the condition are such, to which we humbly bow, it will devolve upon priesthood and laity to be ready and willing to assist as much as possible in the care for the work. Therefore, we urge all the local ministry to make appointments to preach, and allow no Sunday to pass without an effort to warn your neighbor, not necessarily entering into discussions or conflicts without proper cause, but being ready at all times to do what is right. Therefore, should our faith be assailed by responsible men, or an emergency arise, you are at liberty to act at once in defense in the spirit of meekness and humility, and we feel sure the Lord will be with you. If assistance is needed notify us at once, and we will come to the rescue.

All scattered members will confer a favor and materially aid us, if they will write us of opportunity and willingness to care for the work. Remember while he would try to interest their neighbors in telling the gospel story.

I earnestly appeal to every officer and member in the mission to assist with his might to make this a successful year.

The address is 2007 East Pacific Avenue, Spokane, Washington, where all inquiries may be sent. Left for my field on the 21st of May.

Yours in loving bonds.

T. W. CHATBURN,

To the Brethren and Saints of Fremont, Pottawattamie County, Iowa: Respecting District, and desiring to have my appointment as missionary in charge, Bro. Heman C. Smith, as missionary over above-named district, and desiring that we may labor together in love and unity, I wish to state my home address is Lamoni, Iowa, and will answer for the present for all who may desire to correspond with me. Shall be glad to hear from.

To the Saints of Ohio District: Greeting: We have ever regarded with great pleasure the reports of the work in the branches there. How the heavens would rejoice to see all God's people wake up for their own redemption. Each branch is like a household, and the work is opening up in all of us. We should put forth a helping hand to carry on this work, but if we do not do our part, he will open the windows of heaven and pour us a blessing, also rebuke the devourer in our behalf. How the heavens would rejoice to see all God's people wake up for the work of the ministry and labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work. How the heavens would rejoice to see all God's people wake up for the work of the ministry and labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work.

S. J. JEFFERS, Bishop's Agent.

To all the Saints in Oklahoma Territory: Having been appointed Bishop's agent by Bro. Kelley, I desire to call special attention to our needs. All who are aware are of the fact that Zion's redemption is drawing near. Shall we be there to rejoice in triumph? I most earnestly urge that good Saints are now on the list of tithers. I hope before this year ends to see every family in Oklahoma on this list.

How the heavens would rejoice to see all God's people wake up for the work! Surely he would open the windows of heaven and pour us a blessing, also rebuke the devourer in our behalf.

Now, dear Saints, let us all feel that we have a work to do in helping to build up Zion. I desire to visit all the Saints in the territory this year if possible. How often the Lord has asked his people to "come up higher," "let all things be prepared before you," "bring your tithes into the storehouse," etc. A willing heart to "go where you want me to go, dear Lord," and "do what you want me to do." Also please report all items for history to the undersigned, such as debates, prospects of the work, miraculous healings, etc. As local historian I have found the brethren a little careless in this line. Let us do our part, if only a small amount. Send it along and God will bless you.

Yours in the faith,

P. E. HAYES.

To the Saints of the Eastern Iowa District: Greeting: Having been permitted to continue with you in my labors as a minister of the gospel, and have desired to continue to advance, I take this method of stirring up your pure minds to remembrance of the duties and opportunities for blessings that lie before us for the coming year.

We work in the year that is past, greatly blessed in some respects; and while we took some steps in advance, there yet remains a great deal to be done before the work will be in the condition that it should.

Many of the members of the various branches of the district have expressed themselves as desiring a series of good meetings, and a spiritual revival in "our branch." Well, Saints, do not think that the elder can do it all. Before you are fully ready for successful meetings you must do some earnest praying; get yourself filled with zeal, and the disposition to do something yourself, and then when the elder comes you will be in position to help him.

Here are a few questions that we might ask ourselves: How much can I do to help this glorious work along this year (do not get it twisted to mean how little)? Is there not some way that I can help my neighbor to an understanding of this blessed gospel restored? Am I (not my brother or sister) living up to my privileges as a child of God? And how near to Christ am I? Am I making room for Christ to dwell within me, or am I allowing the interests of the world to crowd out the work of the Lord? How can I help in a financial way to push the work along? Dear Saints, the Lord wants us to use this in the work, and he will not bestow his blessings with a sparing hand if we only do our part; but if we neglected our part, he will suffer his work to languish, but will raise up others in our stead.

To the priesthood of the district I would say, Brethren, let us be diligent. Upon us rests a great responsibility, and the condition of the branches where we live means much. It indicates whether the elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, in charge or laboring there, is in good spiritual condition and doing his duty or not.

The field is white to the harvest; let us thrust in our sickle and reap while the day lasts. On every hand we hear the cry, "Come and preach to us," and the work is opening up and broadening out in the district in a way that makes us echo the cry for more labors.

Should there be a desire for labor to be performed in any of the branches, and you cannot find an elder easily, or if a two-day meeting is wanted, address the undersigned at Parkhard, or 1707 Seventh Avenue, Marion, Iowa.

The coming year bids fair to exceed the last in blessings; and that it may be the prayer of your brother in Christ,

FRED B. PAKH, President.

The Care of Furs.

One of the spring duties most dreaded by the housewife is the parting at 2 or 3 winter furs, on account of the unsatisfactoriness of so many methods. The May Housekeeper publishes an excellent and tried method for the care of furs, which will be widely appreciated. As spring approaches it is well to be on the alert against the insidious moth, as this is the time of year

www.LatterDayTruth.org
she deposits her eggs. It is the maggot of the moth, and not the little silver-winged insect with which we are all familiar, which is so destructive to furs.

To prevent the ravages of this insect, furs before being put away should be lightly beaten with a thin rattan—care being taken not to break the hair—and allowed to hang in the sun for several hours. They should then be combed with a clean comb, wrapped in newspaper and put in a chest lined with tin or cedar. Unbleached muslin bags are a good substitute when chests are not available. The use of camphor is deleterious, as in the case of the dark furs—sable, for instance—it has a decided tendency to impair the richness of its coloring, and the darker the sable the more beautiful and valuable it is. The printer’s ink on the newspaper is equally effective as camphor in keeping out the winged moth, and will not in the least impair the color.

When it is found necessary to clean the fur before putting it away, the following method, culled from a grandmother’s notebook, has been found most effective:

First, brush with a good, stiff brush. Have ready a quantity of new bran, which has been thoroughly heated. This will require constant stirring to prevent its scorching. When well heated, the bran should be thoroughly rubbed into the fur with the hands. This operation should be repeated two or three times. The fur should then be taken and effectively brushed until not a particle of dust remains.

Ermine, and other white furs, can be cleaned in like manner, substituting flour for the bran, and rubbing against the trend of the fur. If very much soiled, the fur should be laid away for a day or two in a closed compartment after the flour has been well rubbed in.

The American Indians are a doomed race according to the popular ideas of the world. It has been said that the “last Indian” would “soon disappear into the Pacific Ocean on board the last stage coach.”

But according to the Book of Mormon a bright future awaits the remnant of the children of Laman. It is predicted that the gospel will reach them and make them pure and delightsome.

Latter Day Saints are keenly interested in every movement along that line.

That is why Autumn Leaves has secured a report of the work done on the Kettle Point Reservation, Canada.

QUARANTINED!

There are a number of words which are applied to the condition of those set off from communication with their fellow men. "Jettisoned," "marooned," "quarantined," and "imprisoned," all have in one sense a similar meaning. The first two are phrases applied to those who for sailors' reasons are purposely put ashore off vessels on lands or at places where rescue may or may not be readily had by the involuntary victim. The last term every one understands to be being shut up in enforced confinement where one's liberties are more or less proscribed—usually inflicted as a punishment for wrong-doing to a lesser or greater detriment or injury to the peace, welfare, and dignity of society.

The other term applies to those in any society unfortunate enough to be exposed to and contract contagious diseases which contact with their fellow men may communicate to others and thus spread beyond the limit of the family or individual a troublesome or dangerous malady. It is a measure of safety which organized communities deem it to be wise and practicable to enforce against the liberties of the individual to protect the many. It is more or less effectual, doubtless, as a precaution against the spread of contagious diseases, thus preventing them becoming epidemic and virulent.

In these days of scientific research, and, we might almost say, "science-mania," the rules for placing and continuing quarantine are very strict. Whether the possible danger from the bacilli of some diseases marked down as contagious in the statutory regulations is exaggerated, or is but the same conclusion of the medical scientists who direct such legislation may not be said by a layman, but some of them smack strongly of heartless, and, in many cases, unnecessary strictness and rigidity, which absolutely cut off an unfortunate individual or a family from the active sympathy and moral support of neighbors and friends near or remote.

The rules require that the case must be reported by the physician in charge if there is one, or by the family by its responsible head, such report to be made to the local board of health, who are to take active charge of the premises where the case occurs, giving the dwellers written notice of quarantine and the putting up of a legal notice in a conspicuous place warning everybody not in to keep out, and everybody in to keep in, under "penalty of the law." It is also made the duty of the local board to see that proper attendance, care, and sustenance are furnished the sick, and the family if there is one, during the isolation. After death, or recovery, at the expiration of a period of time scientifically considered sufficient to avoid the possibility of communicating the disease to others by contact, the recovered patient, all attendants, and the premises are to be fumigated, or disinfected, by the burning of sulphur, or the use of other efficacious disinfectants, potash formaldehyde, etc., when the final inspection occurs and the yellow flag is removed.

One provision of the Iowa State rules for quarantine is very singular if not ridiculous. It provides that "no public funeral shall be held by any person who has died of any of the contagious diseases named in rule number ——" (giving the rule in which the contagious diseases are named.)

We have heard of men saying something about attending their own funeral but we hardly supposed it to be necessary for a State to forbid a dead person from holding funeral-services over his own corpse. What the solons meant to enact was probably that no public funeral should be held over the remains of any person who may die of a contagious disease by the friends of the deceased, or that no such public service should be held over, or for such person so dying. This rule reminds us that for several years there was a statutory enactment on the Illinois state records which provided that "no person shall ride or drive on, over, or across any bridge in this state under the penalty of a five dollar fine, for each and every such offense." It was intended by the lawmakers to insert the words "faster than a walk" in its proper place, but the printers, or proof-readers, or some one else left these important words out.

Were you ever in quarantine?

Yes; writing for the Editor and his family. In 1899 while the Editor was on a mission with Bro. Joseph Luff in the East, the youngest daughter, Lucy, was attacked by diphtheria. She was at once separated from the rest of the family, and isolation kept up for the statutory period. The Editor was at Plymouth, Massachusetts, that historic spot, when telegraph message reached him. To return at once would be to be shut in with the rest of the folks, and be productive of no special good. A season of prayer, the calm assurance that God would hear a prayer from Iowa and Massachusetts, as anywhere else, and the Editor stayed and finished his mission.

At present writing, May 31, the Editor and his family are passing the last days of a quarantine enforced by reason of sickness from "scarlet fever," the pest and dread of nearly everybody in town, city, or country. The children were the ones attacked, but where, when, or from whom they might have taken the contagion is not known. All the month of May, minus one day, we have been separate from the neighbors.

We have plenty of reason to know how the unfortunate of old were compelled to hide their faces, turn away from the presence and sympathy of their kind, and cry "unclean." Such dread of contagion we had never seen manifested. It may have existed elsewhere along the ways of our life, but we never saw it. We passed through a cholera epidemic in Hancock County, Illinois, and had two cases of supposed cholera in the hotel, one of whom, the mother of a decimated family, died under the doctor's care, the other of whom, a son, lived, under the care of Mother (Smith) Bidamon's administration. Whether the disease was contagious, or not, we did not see such apparent determination to keep out of the "firing line" as developed in this scarlet fever scourge. It may be that in the absence of statutory rules the extreme carefulness now existing was not enforced, nor indeed could be.

We have had a month of absolute physical exclusion from social association with those we call neighbors. The mayor or Board of Health shut us in, and left us to our own devices; only the doctor, one of our own faith whom we called at the outset to determine the nature of the disease, in order to comply with the law, has had access to us, and she has been very guarded; others have kept aloof. One, an elderly sister, whose family consists of her husband and herself, offered to come and stay with us if we needed. Others have come and talked to us, using careful precaution to avoid too near contact. Our supplies have been brought to us, but our money refused. We finally sent out neither letter nor note—all to comply with regulations.

We have now, on the last day of the month, been disinfected, which disinfection will be completed on the morrow, June 1; and, if the board are agreed, we will again be at liberty to greet those around us on free and equal terms.

We have been learning. Our enforced idleness; the long days and nights of watchfulness and care; the peculiar sense of realization of uncleanness forced upon us by the timid fearfulness of those desiring to be friendly; the horrible sensation of being shut out from our accustomed ways and rounds of duty; the thought that if the children, or any one of them, died they would be taken from our roof-tree and buried without ceremony; the being left to bear our burdens separate and alone; all these things gave cause for thought, and we indulged in it. All our thoughts it would not do to write, but we have had the help of the unseen power of good. The attack of the disease was light, and the victims were, so far as we knew, in no great danger. They were prayed for, and two of them received direct relief upon administration.

Whether we shall be able hereafter to hear without regret the lines,

"Where duty calls, or danger,
Be never wanting there."

remains for the drilling processes of time after we are out of quarantine.

If such are the experiences of a quarantine on earth enforced by reason of a sickness of the flesh, what must be the inexpressible horror of the quar­ tantine which God will of necessity enforce against the spiritual sickness which he has enacted in the sentence, "He which is filthy, let him be filthy still."

It took us a good while to reach the moral, but it is here.

WHY DO THEY STAY AWAY FROM CHURCH?

A certain doctor of divinity, made suspicious, we suppose, by the scarcity of men folks attendant upon his services, set out to ascertain the reason why(?).
The result must have been anything but assuring, if one is to judge from the answers which he alleges were received by him. We give them below taken from the daily paper, Chicago Tribune:

CINCINNATI, Ohio, May 29.—[Special]—"Why men stay away from church, as told by themselves," was the subject of an address delivered before a meeting of ministers of the Presbyterian Church to-day by the Reverend Charles E. Walker, of Hartwell.

The Reverend Walker made an extensive canvass of church absentees by mail asking why they stayed away from services.
Each of those who answered, he said, gave one or more of the following five excuses:

"Work six days and reserve Sunday for recreation.
"Church members too cold to make him feel welcome.
"Church members do not show a willingness to pay debts.
"Preachers' sermons are ancient and uninteresting.
"Too many hypocrites in the church."

MAN WANTED.

The foreman in a certain large manufacturing establishment was about to leave the department where he was employed to take a job offered him elsewhere. The manufacturer needed a man to fill the place so made vacant. There were sixty men in that part of the shop; the names of six of these sixty were given by the outgoing foreman to the manufacturer as suitable men for the place. Of these six he made inquiry as to qualification and fitness to take the job. One was too old, not likely to adapt himself to new conditions. Another was of a hot, hasty temper and by this disqualified to deal with other men; two were addicted to becoming intoxicicated occasionally; and so one by one the six were found disqualified for the position. He found one in the shop that fitted the situation, however, by watchful care. Of this effort to replace an outgoing workman with a man suited to the situation and to have charge of other men in a responsible position, he wrote as follows:

Well, I began investigating. I found that two of them were in the habit of getting half-shot every so often. They weren't hard drinkers, you understand. Their drinking had never interfered with their work at all. But I crossed their names off the list the minute I learned that they occasionally let booze get the best of them. Good, sane, clear-eyed, impartial judgment is the greatest need of the foreman, and no man has it when his brain is fogged with drink.

A freight-train on one of the leading railroads of the West was taken charge of by a brakeman and taken into a central railway center, after it had rushed by a number of stations without stopping.
The man who took charge found the engineer and fireman too drunk to do their duty, one of them lying on the floor of the cab drunkenly insensible to the wild rate at which the train was running. Only one thing could result. These men who had given way to the drink would be discharged. This illustrates the business man's conclusion: "Good, sane, clear­ eyed" men are needed and no man has these qualities in use "when his brain is fogged with drink."

The Ensign well has said that the liquor-seller must be the lowest, meanest sort of business man.
There is one sure remedy for the drink evil, and that is abstinence. Stop drinking it and men will necessarily stop making and selling it.

RERAINTS ON PERSONAL CONDUCT.

It has at last dawned on the popular church of the United States that church efforts to prescribe rigid rules for the government of individual members is largely fruitless of good results. The Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches long ago took the rigid bans off, leaving the members just where this action of the Methodist Episcopal preacher, Doctor Forbes, states the matter ought to be—"left to each person's conscience":

SPRINGFIELD, Massachusetts, May 29.—[Special.]—"The Methodist Church has lost thousands of members and millions of dollars because of the restrictions against dancing and thea­ er-going. The quicker such restrictions are removed the bet­ et it will be for the church."

These statements were made to-day by Doctor Robert Forbes of Philadelphia, secretary of the board of church extention of the Methodist Episcopal Church and one of the most prominent leaders of Methodism. He was speaking at a meeting of the Methodist preachers of the Springfield district.

"The question of indulging in such amusements," Doctor Forbes added, "is one which should be left to each person's conscience."

BRO. G. J. BROOKOVER, Richland Center, Wisconsin, June 2: "I am in this city, preaching on the court-house square to a crowd of about four hundred, with intense interest. The weather is fine and I am feeling well and find plenty of friends."

"I observe that the development of strength begins where one turns against the tide."

DENVER, May 22.—Whether a publisher may change a manuscript accepted from the author and print the manuscript as changed as the work of the author, without consulting the writer's wishes and obtaining his permission, is involved in the damage suit of Walter Juan Davis, author and newspaper man, against Harper & Brothers now on trial in the United States District Court. The case is the first of its kind ever brought in the United States and will establish a precedent. It revolves on whether when a manuscript is delivered into the hands of a publisher an implied contract is made that no change shall be made in it without the consent of the author.

A meeting was to have been held this week, but delay was thought best. The meeting will not be a decisive one, but further committees will be appointed and the work of amalgamation with Kansas City will be closely gone into.—Independence Items, Kansas City Journal, June 2, 1906.

The crowning fortune of a man is to be born to some pursuit which finds him in employment and happiness, whether it be to make baskets, or broadswords, or canals, or statues, or songs.—Emerson.

AN EPISTLE.

TO THE SAINTS OF GOD EVERYWHERE; GREETING:

Dearly Beloved: Having, years since, by the will of God been chosen to be an apostle, and having been by the voice of the church sustained in that capacity to the present; and feeling a weight of responsibility upon me, in view of conditions and needs within the body, which by the grace of our Lord and Master have been made to appear of late to me, I address to you this epistle, praying that the Spirit which prompts me may accompany it and give to it within your hearts the place to which it may be entitled. The conviction is with me while writing, as never before, that our heavenly Father desires that the offices held by myself and others shall be more fully magnified; and if corresponding desire, coupled with becoming meekness and devotion, shall characterize the attitude of his people, and faithfulness in seeking to magnify those offices shall be found in those holding them, he will make their significance and importance to the church and the world more clearly manifest than heretofore among us.

In the tenderness of his loving solicitation he has in times past told us that honor belonged to those offices, regardless of the imperfections of their occupants; and again during our recent conference have we by his voice been counseled to give special heed to the preachings and writings of these men, looking to the elimination of selfishness as a necessary preparation for the gathering of the Saints. Herein is an implied intimation that he would inspire those men to write and preach in a way deserving of belief and approval in practice. To rejoice greatly over this expression of a Father's interest in our well-being is becoming in us. To diligently apply what it enjoins will prove us to have been worthy of it. The former is in evidence. The latter awaits demonstration. What will the years ahead of us yield as fruitage from this sowing of truth, in counsel and admonition by the divine hand? This must be answered individually.

It is true that much has occurred in the past, in the experience of the church as well as of individuals therein, that has been enshrouded in mystery. Things have occurred which we would not have allowed, had the ordering been ours; but in this we have been on a plane with the ancients, whom the Lord found it necessary to remind that his thoughts and his ways were not like theirs. His were as much higher than the heavens as higher than the earth. While we are on the hilltop, rejoicing, it is easy to call the world's attention to this fact; but when we drop into the valley, we are sometimes slow to avail ourselves of the succor it formerly seemed intended to convey. It is true, nevertheless, and a God, fully comprehensible, in all his providences to us, must be one not far removed from the human. He who proclaims this latter-day message and its concomitants as a "marvelous work and a wonder" to the wisdom of the world, and yet confesses its simplicity of detail and the reasonableness of all its propositions in the light it leads us to possess, ought not to be surprised if confronted with things marvelous to him all along his climbing and educational experience, until he ceases to judge by the wisdom of the world, and, like Enoch, walks with God, contented, whether in the valley or on the hill, in poverty or wealth, in life or death. Only God knows where the most needed lessons for me or the church can be learned and there he assigns our place. The lesson of chastening is as essential for a church as for an individual, and the church that does not receive it is as surely a "bastard" instead of a "son" as is a simple member. He who would become possessed of the truths which are imbedded in any environment must be willing to abide that environment till those truths are obtained—either by revelation direct or by the digging processes to which he would thereby be constrained. If the Spirit is to guide the church into "all truth," it should not appear surprising that some of that church should be led to the valley often than others, while others were confined to the hilltop or elsewhere. They are to accumulate truth. All truth is not to be found in any one location or condition, hence the finding of Saints in every condition may be taken as of the Spirit's guiding, that they may gather the truths imbedded everywhere. It is also a truth that some trees of desirable fruitage thrive better in the shade, while others cry aloud for almost constant sunlight, and still others demand variety in this regard.

As the heritage of God we are being cared for with reference to the character and extent of the fruit we may bear. "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain," is ture; but so is "Every-branch that beareth fruit he purgeth it that it may bring forth more fruit."

More fruit of the best kind is what calls for the purging that chafes us. Fruit that will remain is the class in divine demand, and it is a self-evident fact that the skilled orchardist knows more about the tree, from root to twig, and of its capacity and requirements, than does the tree itself. His dealings with it are to meet necessities intelligently, and not the experimentation of caprice. To him belongs the sole right of arrangement and appointment. Upon absolute conformity to the environment established by him depends the question of worthy fruitage.

To learn this lesson well is worth all it costs,
whether in money, position, reputation, or health.
To confess, practically, that we are not our own but belong to God, and therefore should have no reserves of thought, ambition, desire, or preference, is the mission of sainthood, and until his thoughts, words, and purposes, as revealed to us, become our life expression to the subjugation of what once characterized us, we are short of our intended measure, and will still need to "come up higher."

Cooperation with God—partnership with the Most High—is too sacred a privilege and honor, and responsibility, to be experimented with or lightly considered. Admitting this, do we sense the great thought involved, viz.: that a continuance of that partnership depends absolutely upon our willingness to work in God's way? A refusal to do this or a determination to ignore even minor details as furnished by him means a dissolution of that partnership in fact whether the roll-book in the chapel reveals it or not. This has more to do with the redemption of Zion than has acreage or bricks or mortar. It is an easier matter for God to turn millions into the church than for him to mold our characters into the Christ-likeness. Our consent and coeoperation is absolutely necessary in the latter. To wipe out a city or nation in an hour is within the reserved and independent right and power of God and reveals the wondrous might of his arm; but to make your character and mine just like Christ's is an impossibility for him without our consent, and, if accomplished, proves us to be in partnership with him; if not accomplished, shows the partnership dissolved. A million in the treasury is a much lighter factor towards Zion's redemption than a living ministry and membership—a transformed people, carrying the God image. God may be with the one—he must be with the other, and where he is there is absolute certainty of success. The question of Zion's redemption is one of expelling self and admitting Christ—the rest comes as a matter of course. How can we expect to be trusted with the essentials for building up the material interests of Zion—a permanent city, a perpetual dwelling-place—in and from which divine glory is to shine and proceed, until our confidence in Christ is so unlimited that we can and do turn ourselves over unreservedly to him to be handled by him and to work in his way? If what little we possess of knowledge, skill, or means is employed only for what it may secure for us or the benefit of our heirs, favorites, or friends, how can we thus become like Him who laid his all at the feet of an undeserving and unappreciating world and only desired its acceptance for the receivers' benefit?
Can we approximate to a standard by walking from it? Zion is to be the habitation of God—not his visiting-place but his home—where he can feel at home, not for a few moments or hours at a time, but for ever. "Zion is the pure in heart." "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God."

We parade our challenges to the religious world for debate. We glory in our weapons and skill to employ them. We revel in the gratifications of victory. We wonder at the action of the world when it fails to acknowledge the superiority of our theoretic, organic, historic, doctrinal, and consistently beautiful faith. We assemble and congratulate ourselves on our achievements abroad in overthrowing antagonism and in our experiences at home, and we indulge in expressions of sorrow over the blindness of those who see not our gospel’s divinity, because of the few who confess that we are the disciples indeed; but too often we forget that there is one grand promise which has never yet been put to the test required to demonstrate its truth and divinity, viz.: “By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another.” The kind of love is explained in the preceding verse (John 13:34): “As I have loved you.” When these terms are complied with self will be out and Christ will be in; we will be living for the good we may do and not for what we may gain, and Christ will be brought to the test of making good that as yet unchallenged prediction. Then will all men—the world—acknowledge us the disciples of Christ and Zion will be here in verity. A very limited fulfillment of this promise would turn in upon us all the physical essentials to build up a land or place called Zion. The lack of heart or character conversion is all that stands in the way. Where these occur the other will soon materialize. The spiritual must precede because the temporal is a consequence.

As the trusted agents of God we are custodians of holy possessions—things spiritual and things physical or temporal. Let us therefore keep them as for God—our bodies and minds free from taint of unholy desire, conversation, and action—places in which the Master will have delight to abide. Let us purge our houses of worship of all unseemly things, allowing nothing to be admitted for gain or pleasure that partakes of anything we could not ask our Lord to participate in, were he here in person. Let our services of song as well as others be in line with the admonition of the Lord, “The song of the heart is a prayer unto me,” remembering that he has also said, “When ye pray use not vain repetitions.” Whether, therefore, our prayer unto him be in prose or set to music, let this counsel be observed, and our devotions in song be characterized by heart-breathings of petition and praise. Let us keep the altars of the churches sacred for the proclamation and defense of the gospel, and free from the intrusions or innovations of things that belong not to the kingdom of our Lord. Let us beware of the lust for gain that makes us blind to the admonition to “love our neighbor as ourselves,” or to “do unto others as ye would that they should do unto” us. Let the sentiment of our pulpit counsels be the governing principle in our business relations. Let us separate ourselves from the world and have no part with societies unauthorized of God or his Spirit. Let us remember that the kingdom of God embraces all of obligation, covenant, duty, or privilege relating to God or man that is essential for us. Let us keep ourselves from vanity, from frivolity, from gaudy or costly apparel, from defilement of tongue or inclination, and give ourselves unreservedly to a service that brings its returns in holiness, peace, and good will here, and divine companionship and celestial estate hereafter.

This lengthy letter, dear Saints, is written under constraint, originating as follows:

Early on the morning of March 29, last, while lying upon my bed, praying, my mind was invaded by a quickening and illuminating agent or power, which, gaining my consent, formulated therein a quite lengthy communication. After receiving it and a second time being led through it, I rose and committed it to writing, whereupon my mind was instantly relieved of its pleasant burthen. In a few days I read it to two of the brethren attending conference—separately, and afterwards kept it, waiting for “liberty” to make it more public. A couple of weeks or more later a portion of one of its paragraphs was vividly brought to mind by the San Francisco calamity, and I recited that portion to a number of assembled Saints. On the morning of May 20, while preaching at Independence, constraint to read it came and I acted thereunder. Since then having subjected it to the inspection of those entitled to such courtesy, with their approval and advice, I submit it for publication. During its reception and writing some points were strongly illustrated within my mind by reference to facts within my knowledge, wherein I saw the altars which had been dedicated to God occupied by advocates of political parties, socialism, secret orders, etc.; houses of worship converted temporarily into theaters for pleasure and gain; a number of Saints wearing and admiring the tinselled regalia of foreign societies, held the Book of Mormon with its wealth of gold and treasure behind their backs, while others were so clothed and engrossed in the efforts to get gain by speculation, close business deals, and taking advantage, that they could not be known from the crowd with which they mingled, except as they occasionally changed their garments and announced themselves to be Saints. The sting of a portion of the charges pierced me personally, because of my having participated in or silently consented to such things heretofore.

Whatever the divine purpose may have been in committing to me this word, I hope it will be fully served to the Lord’s glory in the Saints’ uplifting. In my failure to call attention to certain things referred to, more directly than I have done, I have doubtless been blamable or the admonition and arraignment would not have come. As to the other considerations, let those involved answer for themselves. As for me, I humbly ask my heavenly Father for his forgiveness. I will try to be more jealous of his houses and altars, more faithful to my apostolic trust, to be a truer and more self-sacrificing disciple to the world, to indulge my doubting propensities, to crucify myself more completely, and to get closer to his great and loving heart—to be His and His only. As a consequence I hope to be favored with more of his "intelligence" and thus prove a greater blessing in my sphere. Dearly beloved Saints, will you not join me in this resolve?

Eve yours, in Christ,

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., May 31, 1906. JOSEPH LUFF.

The communication is as follows:

Behold, saith the Lord, I have heard and do hear the petitions of those who are called my people. My ear is not heavy, neither is my arm short. My covenant with Israel is not forgotten, nor is my will to perform; but to whom shall I speak? and by whom shall my counsel be observed? Behold I am wedded to my covenant and am jealous of my agreement with those who are thereunder. Once I have spoken—yes, twice have I declared that the set time to favor Zion has come; but my army is not yet very great, and their weapons, many of them, are yet carnal. Nevertheless my word shall not fail, neither shall my purpose be changed, notwithstanding my people are slow to perceive and the confidence of some has failed.

Dig ye deep into the mountains which centuries have formed and into which my providences are interwoven, and bring forth the witnesses of my forgetfulness or the testimonies of my failure. Reveal unto me wherein the generations have made frail the texture of my ordinances or dissolved the integrity of my promises. Speak! and I will hearken unto you! Declare! and I will give audience! Who hath been able to stand in the way of my accomplishment or hath put fetters upon my hands? Are not cities and nations and villages but as pebbles in my hands? For, behold, on yesterday their magnitudes were thine amazement and to-morrow thou shalt ask: "Where are they?" and shalt declare, "Surely the Lord's hand is in this thing."

Remember, therefore, that I change not, neither in my power nor my purpose, and what I have designed I will execute, and naught shall stay my hand, and my heritage shall not fail.

But who shall be called my Zion?—my habitation? and through whom shall I execute my purpose? Where shall my hand find its weapons of execution and its instruments for performance? Shall it not be among those whose hearts are found pure and whose eyes shall be single? Yea, verily! Stand ye, therefore, in holy places, and if ye will enjoy my intelligence be ye mine and mine only! for such is your agreement.

But ye say, "Wherein have we failed and in what is our infidelity revealed?" Listen! and I will give answer, and shall ye reply whether ye have been silent when evil has been present among you and whether ye have consented thereby to a defilement of mine heritage. For, behold, houses have been builded unto me and have been, nevertheless, reserved for pleasures which do not enrich the soul. Altars have been dedicated unto me and have been shared with other gods. The mammon of this world has been sought by guile and oppression and unseemly desire by some, and because a portion thereof has been given as a tithe or an offering unto me, it hath been imagined that I will wink at these things; some have declared themselves separated unto me and I have chosen them out of the world and made them to be agents unto me; but they have sought out other shrines and made covenant in secret places in which I have no delight.

Behold, and consider: If my weapons are not sufficient for your faith, shall these things give them increase or shall ye add that which is carnal to make effective the work for which my Spirit hath been given? Shall I be content while this evil doth pollute my estate? Behold the brick that is not burned and the mortar which is not tempered; yea, and the material which I have not selected shall not find permanent place with that of my choosing; for my fires shall consume and my floods shall overwhelm, and men within and without my church shall yet learn that but one pattern hath been given by which ye shall build, if I shall accept your labor; and but one line hath been given by which to measure; and whosoever shall not gauge himself thereby and crucify himself to the world, shall yet be gauged thereby and shall lose his all—for "whosoever shall fall upon this stone shall be broken, but upon whomsoever it shall fall it shall grind him to powder."

Live ye, therefore, and labor in love, not so much that ye may obtain, but that ye may make effective my law and exemplify my life. In this ye shall find riches and your peace shall not fail, and thus I shall have delight in those who not only say but do according to the purpose of my gospel.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, March 29, 1906.

THE REORGANIZED CHURCH IN THE CANADA COURTS.

It will be remembered by the readers of the HERALD that some years ago there was quite a remarkable case decided in the courts of Canada, causing considerable comment at the time. Some questions have arisen in regard to the court recently, and the question having been asked whether the decision as found in some of our books and periodicals is correct, we wrote to the Canada Law Book Company, Toronto, Canada, and obtained volume 24 of the Ontario Reports, and find the statement and judgment connected with the case on pages 250 to 254.

It appears that Bro. Hiram Dickout, a priest of the Reorganized Church, did, on May 19, 1893, at Niagara Falls, solemnize a marriage between Abram H. Taylor and Alice E. Vance. He was tried before a magistrate of that town July 3, 1893, and convicted on the charge of unlawfully and without lawful authority, solemnizing a marriage between the parties named above.

The case was taken before the Court of the Queen's Bench, Chancery, Common Pleas Division of the High Court of Justice, for Ontario, before Judges Armour, C. J., Falconbridge, and Street, J. J., November 28, 1893, on the following questions:

1. Is the organization known as "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" a church and religious denomination within the meaning of R. S. O. ch. 131, sec. 1?

2. Are the persons designated as priests and ordained and appointed as such, according to the ceremonies of that organization, ministers and clergymen of a church and religious denomination within the meaning of the section?

J. R. Cartwright, Q. C., appeared for the crown, W. M. German for the defendant. After argument by the attorney for the crown, and without the counsel for the defendant being called upon, the judgment was rendered by Armour, C. J., as follows:

We think it quite clear that this conviction cannot be maintained. The defendant was clearly a duly ordained minister of this religious body, and there is no doubt that it is a religious denomination within the words of the statute. Assuming that Christianity is the law of the land in a sense, there is nothing contrary to Christianity in the tenets of this body. It is true they have some authorized works supplemental to the Bible, but that is the case with every church or denomination. The Church of England has its creeds, and the Presbyterian Church its confession. That does not make the church an anti-Christian one. The statute should receive a wide construction. It does not say "Christian," but "religious." If it said "Christian," it would exclude Jews. The fundamental law of the Province makes no distinction between churches or denominations. Every person is at liberty to worship his Maker in the way he pleases. We have, or ought to have, in this country, perfect freedom of speech and perfect freedom of worship.

Conviction quashed.

We present this as quoted directly from the court reports that those who have been quoting or printing this judgment may take notice, and where it has not been quoted correctly that the errors may be corrected so far as possible.

Respectfully submitted,
Heman C. Smith, Church Historian.

DIVINE HEALING--SPIRITUAL GIFTS.

Mr. Truth Seeker.—"Good evening, Mr. Saint; how are you this evening?"

Mr. Latter Day Saint.—"Why, good evening, Mr. Seeker, I am feeling quite well, I thank you; how are you?"

Mr. T. S.—"Oh, very well; I attended your preaching-services Sunday evening, and was quite interested by what I heard. It was the first Latter Day Saint sermon that I ever heard, and I do not fully understand the subject treated upon, so I have come over to see you and have a chat with you that I might gain more light. I confess that I am very ignorant of your church, its doctrine, etc. I have heard a great deal about your people, and what I have heard has been anything but favorable; but I have determined to try to find out for myself. I want both sides, that I might judge righteous judgment. I am satisfied that you would not knowingly lend yourself to the support of anything of a questionable character."

Mr. L. D. S.—"I am certainly glad to have you come to see me, Brother Seeker, and will take great pleasure in giving you what light I can. As a people we believe in being able to 'give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear.' You have brought your Bible, I see; I will just get mine, and I guess we can talk here as long as we desire without being disturbed."

Mr. T. S.—"You will remember, Brother Saint, that your minister took for his text, Mark 16:17, 18: "These signs shall follow them that believe," etc., and seemed to prove quite conclusively from the Scriptures that the preaching of the gospel should be attended with certain manifestations of divine power, such for instance, as casting out devils, speaking in tongues, healing the sick, and so on."

Mr. L. D. S.—"Just allow me to correct you, Brother Seeker. He did not say that 'these signs' should follow or attend the preaching of the gospel alone, but would attend or follow the belief of the gospel. 'Follow them that believe.' You see there must be a belief or faith in the gospel after hearing it preached, before we can have a claim upon this promise. The gospel might be preached, and we might hear it, but if we did not believe it, these 'signs' would not follow."

Mr. T. S.—"Well, I surely did not understand it that way, but of course you are in a position to know, and I accept your correction; but still there are questions in my mind as to why these signs should not accompany the preaching of the word instead of belief in it. It seems to me that many more believers would be made or secured, if the people could see the signs when they hear the gospel."

Mr. L. D. S.—"Yes, it looks that way to a majority of people; but that it is not the way, I think I can abundantly prove from the Scriptures. First, the inspired apostle in telling us how faith is begotten, says, 'For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent? ... So then faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.'—Romans 10:13-17. 'And when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up, and said unto them, Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago, God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe.'—Acts 15:7. 'Abraham saith unto him, they have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them. And he said, Nay, father Abraham; but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent. And he said unto him, if they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead.'—Luke 16:29-31. In these scriptures we see God's plan by which we are to obtain faith. You will notice that Abraham informed Dives that belief must come through hearing, and not through seeing a wondrous miracle. Although signs were often witnessed by those who were not believers, yet this did not convince them. For instance, John, in speaking about this very thing, said, 'But though he [Christ] had done so many miracles before them yet they believed not on him.'—John 12:37.

Mr. T. S.—"Your argument sounds very good, but you cited me to only four passages of scripture which seem to sustain your position; but you must remember that while signs did not convince some, yet they did convince others, which we may see by what Nicodemus says to Christ, 'We know that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him.'—John 3:2. Nicodemus was convinced by the miracles Jesus did. Again, 'And Peter said unto him, Aenas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole: arise, and make thy bed. And he arose immediately. And he arose immediately. And all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron saw him, and turned to the Lord.'—Acts 8:34, 35. And again in this same chapter the raising of Dorcas from the dead caused 'many to believe in the Lord.' And many believed when Lazarus was raised from the dead, as we find recorded in John 11:45. And many other instances might be mentioned of like character."

Mr. L. D. S.—"Yes, but you will agree with me that truth can not contradict itself, that, therefore, God's word being truth must harmonize with itself always, when rightly understood; so that when we see what appears to be a conflict between certain passages of scripture we must conclude that we misunderstand and misapply one or the other of them, or, if we can not harmonize them at all we can not but conclude that one or the other has been mistranslated, in which case we can easily determine which is wrong by the aid of other scriptures. In other words, if there is one passage of scripture which contradicts six other passages, and which we can in no way reconcile to them, then we should accept the burden of evidence by taking a position in harmony with the six, and ignoring the one which can not be God's word as he spoke it, or caused it to be written."

Mr. T. S.—"I believe that I can agree with you in that, although I have never before openly acknowledged that there were any imperfections or contradictions in the Scriptures. It has always seemed to me that to admit that a hopeless contradiction existed anywhere in the divine record, would of necessity make void our claim and contention for it of inspiration. But between you and me, there certainly are some very absurd statements, and a few, at least, of plain, flat contradictions."

Mr. L. D. S.—"I am glad you take so sensible a view of it. Of course we contend that the Bible contains the word of God, so far as it has been transcribed and translated correctly. But that errors, though but comparatively few, have crept into it is past denying. Some accuse us of making this statement for the purpose of using it as a loophole through which to escape when hard pressed by some of our opponents; and that it virtually amounts to saying that where there is disagreement between us and the Bible the Bible is wrong, has been incorrectly translated, thus destroying its value as a reliable standard of evidence; but this is wrong. Let me now make this matter clear. In addition to what I stated a moment ago, about fixing our faith on the burden of evidence, let me say, we accept the Bible as a whole, except where discrepancies, absurdities, and contradictions are self-evident from the book itself and can not be harmonized or accounted for in any way without robbing words and sentences of meaning. Now we have taken a position, burning the bridges behind us, and made the Bible the great standard of evidence."

Mr. T. S.—"That suits me, Brother Saint; I can indorse that as being fair and reasonable. Now let me remind you that you have not made answer to my scriptural quotations yet."

Mr. L. D. S.—"Very well; we will now take that matter up. I freely admit that there were and are exceptions to the rule, yet who can say that these people referred to in the scriptures that you have quoted had not heard, and given at least passive credence to the preaching of the gospel, and lacked only the confirmatory signs to make them sure that their faith was in the right place, and that God was 'working with them confirming the word with signs following'? (Mark 16:20.) There were people then, whose belief might have been based upon miracles, signs which they beheld, just as there are people now who do the same thing; but it is not proof to me that God ever intended that converts should be made to do his work that way. Indeed it is very unsafe for people to rely upon supernatural manifestations alone for a basis of faith, as I can conclusively prove to you, presently. Nicodemus, it seems, either was not fully convinced of Christ's claims, or was somewhat dull of understanding, for the Savior proceeds to instruct him with regard to what he must do in order to be saved, as recorded in the first twenty-one verses of the chapter; and among other things says, 'Art thou a master of Israel, and knowest not these things?' In Lydda, the second instance referred to, there was a branch of the saints, as you may see by the thirty-second verse of Acts ninth chapter: 'And it came to pass as Peter passed throughout all quarters he came down also to the saints that dwelt at Lydda.' The gospel had been, and was being preached there, and the people had surely been somewhat if not thoroughly instructed in its precepts. The last case was among the Jews where the gospel originated. That unbelievers might see signs or miracles, or have knowledge of their occurrence, is quite probable, but that such is calculated to beget faith in them is erroneous from a scriptural standpoint as well as logical, as I will show. Now, for instance, you are an invalid, or a cripple, or are seriously sick; every one in the community where you live is acquainted with you and your condition, when along comes what is termed a new religion, claiming God as its author, and the Son of God its propagator on the earth, turning the established order of things upside down, boldly antagonizing the popularly accepted beliefs and doctrines right and left, and putting to rout the various champions and defenders of the different creeds, all the while using the accepted 'law and prophets,' 'the scriptures,' as its sole weapon of offense and defense, and promising as part of the 'new covenant' assurances of divine favor, in the form of certain signs to follow the believer. It becomes the talk of the place. It is discussed pro and con. Believers are gained to the new religion, among them yourself. You have faith in the message; it is indeed 'glad tidings of great joy' to you. You obey the message, and, feeling that you now have claim upon God, call upon him for the promised blessing. The servant of God comes, joy to you. You obey the message, and, feeling favor, in the form of certain signs to follow the affliction, it done to make others believe? or to confirm you and in the message; it is indeed 'glad tidings of great new religion, among them yourself. You have faith believer. It becomes the talk of the place. Putting to rout the various champions and defenders

Mr. L. D. S.—"Well, Brother Seeker, that is just where you might make a serious if not a fatal mistake. Displays of supernatural power are not evidence of divinity only when preceded, and accompanied by, the word. The Scriptures give us to understand that Satan has power to work miracles. And then shall that wicked be revealed whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming: even him whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they receive not the love of the truth, that they might be saved.'—2 Thessalonians 2:8–10. 'For they are the spirits of devils working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world.'—Revelation 16:14. 'And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth, by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast.'—Revelation 13:14. Now let us add to these texts the prophetic words of Jesus: 'For there shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.'—Matthew 24:24. Now you can see, Brother Seeker, how easily you might fall a victim to the enemy of all righteousness, if you should predilect your faith on miracles alone. In the history of the past Satan has always opposed God by performing wonderful things such as we find recorded in the seventh to tenth chapters of Exodus inclusive; and Paul referred to this same performance in these words: 'Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth.'—2 Timothy 3:8. If God gives signs to incite faith and Satan also gives signs for a like purpose, how could we distinguish between the signs of God given to confirm our faith and trust in him, and the signs produced by Satanic power, that are calculated to deceive and lead us astray?"

Mr. T. S.—"Well, now, I begin to understand why a belief in the word is necessary first. It is the only way of protecting the seeker after salvation from deception. I see now that it would not be safe to rest our hope of eternal life on signs alone."

Mr. L. D. S.—"I am glad that you begin to see the point I aimed at, but I want to make it still stronger. If you should acknowledge that we were God's people simply because you saw or knew of some one being miraculously healed, or a miracle of any kind being wrought among us, you would, to be consistent, have to admit that all others through whom such manifestations came, were of God; and you know that if that were true, you would have to acknowledge that all of the so-called divine healers of modern times (and their name is legion) were of God. We have witches, wizards, soothsayers, sorcerers, necromaners, etc., just as plentifully as they were anciently, only they come under different names; Satan is an adept in the use of alliances and methods of approaching his intended victims. If he finds a person who is fortified against one name or method, he has plenty of others to draw on, and try, until it would indeed seem that, 'if it were possible he would deceive the very elect.' Some come in their own name as individuals, and some in the name of organizations; but every one of them you will find, if you investigate closely, stand opposed somewhere, to the plain teachings of the Scriptures; all are ready to grant a sign on demand, and those who are the most prolific in signs, are the boldest in their opposition to the Bible.'

Mr. T. S.—''Now that you mention witches, etc., I recall having read somewhere in the Scriptures, a direct command from God forbidding his people to have anything to do with such, but I do not remember just where it is to be found, or the exact language used.''

Mr. L. D. S.—''I think you have reference to Deuteronomy 18:9-12. Suppose you just turn and read it.''

Mr. T. S.—''When thou art come into the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations. There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth diversinations, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or wizard, or necromancer. For all that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord; and because of these abominations the Lord thy God doth drive them out from before thee.' Yes, this is the very scripture that I had in mind.''

Mr. L. D. S.—''That these either possessed, or were the instruments of a power greater than human, cannot be denied. It is not denied in scripture, nor can we deny it to-day; but the Lord declares it to be an abomination, and because of it drove the people out from before the children of Israel. Now if it was an abomination to the Lord then, it must be yet; for God does not change. Saul sought unto a woman who had a 'familiar spirit,' for certain information, but he was a transgressor when he did it, and perished the next day for his follies, this being one of them. So Saul died for his transgression which he committed against the Lord, even against the word of the Lord, which he kept not, and also for asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit, to inquire of it.' And again the Lord speaking to his people through the prophet Isaiah, gives in a few words a test by which they could invariably determine that which was from God, and that which was 'not. Listen: 'And when they shall say unto you, seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and mutter: should not a people seek unto their God? . . . To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.'—Isaiah 8:19, 20. You see that we are informed that if they speak not in strict harmony with that which is written, we are to reject their claims; they have no light; but if they come and speak in perfect accord with the 'law and the testimony,' then we can rely on it and safely accept it as coming from God. We are led to believe by what we hear spoken; and our faith is confirmed by what we see and experience after accepting the gospel. There is no danger whatever of deception if we follow this divine counsel, for Satan could not lead us that way; for it would be leading us away from him. This view ought to give us a broader conception of the meaning of the Savior's words to the Jews: 'Search the scriptures.'—John 5:39. Also the words of Luke in Acts 17:11: 'These [Jews] were more noble than those in Thessalonica in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the scriptures daily whether these things were so.' They did not look for, nor demand, signs in order to determine the truthfulness of Paul's claim, but appealed to that unfailing guide, the law and the testimony, whether these things were so.'

Mr. T. S.—''Am I to infer, Brother Saint, that the gospel now is, or should be exactly as it was in the days of Christ, without change or modification of any kind?''

Mr. L. D. S.—Yes, sir. There is no process of reasoning that I am aware of, by which we can come to any other conclusion. We can hardly impute to God or to his Son the folly of instituting superfluous ordinances or of useless doctrinal tenets in the gospel or in his church for the salvation of man. But on the contrary there is abundance of evidence, logical and scriptural, that the gospel was perfect when given to man, therefore could not be changed or altered in any way and still remain perfect. There is not a particle of evidence in the Scriptures anywhere indicating that God did, or ever intended to make any change in the gospel. The scripture is especially plain in regard to the supernatural or spiritual gifts and blessings. Do you not remember now Bro. X dwelt upon that point last Sunday?''

Mr. T. S.—''Well, I remember something about it, but my mind was so full of questions and doubtings at the time that I must confess I do not recall very many of the scriptures used. But, Brother Saint, does not Paul in 1 Corinthians 13:8 say that these very things should fail, cease, etc?''

Mr. L. D. S.—''Yes, but let us just analyze that statement, and see when they were to cease, and also see what was to take their place. Paul, after dwelling at length on the principle of charity, endeavors to impress upon the minds of the Christian saints its never-ending qualities. He says: 'But whether there be prophecies they shall fail;
whether there be tongues they shall cease; whether there be knowledge it shall vanish away.' So we learn from this that knowledge is to disappear simultaneously with tongues and prophecy, and unless you are willing to acknowledge no knowledge now, you must admit that, according to this scripture, tongues and prophecy should still exist. But let Paul explain a little further: 'For we know in part and we prophesy in part.'—1 Corinthians 13:9. From this we gather that these gifts were only had 'in part'; were not had or enjoyed in their fullness, and it was this imperfect enjoyment of these gifts that was to be done away. In verse 12 this is all made clear to us, also when these things were to be done away. 'But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away.' It seems to me, Brother Seeker, that comment can not make his meaning any plainer; but as if to add emphasis to what he had already made plain he says further, 'For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then [when that which is perfect is come, and when tongues and prophecy in part had ceased] face to face: now I know in part: but then shall I know even as also I am known.'—1 Corinthians 13:12. Now, Brother Seeker, let me ask, if with all the spiritual gifts and blessings enjoyed by those early saints, they could only see through a glass darkly, what must be our condition or ability to see without them? What is to take the place of the things done away? Why, perfect, full, and complete enjoyment of spiritual blessings in that perfect state—future life. This imperfect or limited enjoyment of them to remain until supplanted by the perfect.

Mr. T. S.—"I freely admit, Brother Saint, that you are making a strong case; but it does seem strange to me that the great mass of Christian people are so united in their opposition to your position as a church, and almost all of them with one accord, say that these things are done away; but according to the scriptures you have submitted it certainly appears that the gospel comes not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance.' And unless it be accompanied by manifestations of divine power we are warranted in rejecting it. But are there any other scriptures upon the subject that will add further light and understanding as to the object of these things, and the length of time they were to continue?"

Mr. L. D. S.—"Oh, yes! a number of them; but I will read only a few. First to indicate the object, to confirm the word to the believer: 'And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following.'—Mark 16:20. You will notice that the Lord did not confirm the signs with the word following. Now notice what Paul says they are for: 'And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, ... that we henceforth be no more children tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive.'—Ephesians 4:11, 12, 14. Do you not think we are still in need of being perfected, of being edified, of being established or confirmed so that we can not be tossed and carried about by the great number of winds of doctrine that exist to-day, and is not the work of the ministry still an important factor?"

Mr. T. S.—"Yes, I admit that."

Mr. L. D. S.—"Now let us see how long they are to continue: 'Till we all come in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.'—Ephesians 4:13. In addition to these scriptures the entire twelfth chapter of the First Corinthian Letter is devoted to showing the absolute necessity of all these spiritual gifts in the church,—that one is as important and necessary as another. Now, Brother Seeker, as I have not alluded to it before, I wish now to introduce you to some of the persons who demanded a sign before they would believe in the gospel, in the days of Christ; and see if you wish to be found in that company. In Matthew 4:1-7 Satan in the course of his temptings of Christ said, 'If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread.' In other words, if you are what you profess to be, work a miracle. Again, 'If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down [from a pinnacle of the temple]: for it is written, He shall give his angels charge concerning thee: and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.' You see even the Devil quoted scripture to Christ. Did Christ grant him a sign? No. He simply met him with scripture: 'It is written again, thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.' We are virtually told here that it would be tempting God to make such a demand, or to attempt to grant such a demand. If it should be such then, would it not be so now; and if so now, is not that in itself a very good reason why signs are not to precede and compel belief? A little later some scribes and Pharisees came to Jesus and said, 'Master, we would see a sign from thee. But he answered and said unto them, An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it but the sign of the prophet Jonas.'—Matthew 12:38, 39. Now let us go to the scene of the crucifixion. The Savior is suspended upon the cross. A crowd of mockers and unbelievers are standing and walking around. Epithets and indignities of all kinds are being hurled at him. Excruciating physical torture is being inflicted, and here are some of the things we hear while they wag their heads and revile him: 'If thou be the Son of God come down from the cross.' ‘He saved others, himself he can not save.’ ‘If he be the king of Israel, let him now come down from the cross; and we will believe him.’ ‘He trusted in God, let him deliver him now if he will save him: for he said, I am the Son of God.’ ‘The thieves also, which were crucified with him, cast the same in his teeth.’ (Matthew 27:39-44.)

Brother Seeker, I am sure you do not wish to be found in the ranks of these persons. It certainly was not a righteous influence that prompted them to thus ask a sign, but the opposite.

Mr. T. S.—“No, Brother Saint, I shall certainly part company with them; and I am grateful to you for having shown me where I stood. I assure you that I had no desire to tempt God, nor even a thought of doing so, nor to be found in company with the emissaries of Satan. I have done it ignorantly, and I shall seek our heavenly Father’s forgiveness. But now, Brother Saint, you will remember that I spoke to you about Mr. H and Mrs. D, who are believers, and members of your church; why are they not made whole?”

Mr. L. D. S.—“This point, Brother Seeker, is one in which our own people, I am sorry to say, need instructing. We are so prone to extremes. ‘The gift of healing is nowhere promised as a sure, unfailing result. Why the one that was afflicted would say it was God who gave deliverance, and in this way be deluded into a continuance in that false religion or system, likewise the instrument through whom the ‘healing’ was wrought, and many others who had direct knowledge of the occurrence, when in fact God had nothing whatever to do with it; and if it was a case where no religion at all was required, both healer and healed would say that it was ‘magnetism’ or ‘mesmerism,’ therefore all of these wondrous things are the result of these natural forces, scientifically, though ignorantly employed. The principle involved in all this is the same as was used in the case of the Savior—just ‘worship me’ and I will give you all the ‘kingdoms of the world.’ Just yield yourselves to my plan and you shall be healed; which if we do we become in a measure, at least, his servants and subject to his power, for Paul says, 'Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey?'—Romans 6:16. Another characteristic feature of these miraculous healings is, that they are heralded everywhere: a great blowing of trumpets ensues from the 'healer' and the healed to the neighborhood skeptics, while when one of God's children is healed, we only hear—'see thou tell no man' (Matthew 8:4), 'nor tell it to any in the town' (Mark 8:26), or 'tell no man what was done' (Luke 9:56). And in harmony with these scriptures, the Lord has commanded his servants and church in these last days thus: 'But a commandment I give unto them, that they shall not boast themselves of these things, neither speak them before the world: for these things are given to you for your profit and for salvation.'—Doctrine and Covenants 83:11. We are simply authorized to preach the gospel, and to say, 'These signs shall follow them that believe,' etc., and to testify that we know whereof we affirm, and leave the rest with God who divides these gifts and blessings in the church to 'every man severally as he will.' (1 Corinthians 12:11.) Just why any certain individual member of the church is not healed I could not say. That is a matter between them and God."

Mr. T. S.—"Well, Brother Saint, you have given me great light on many passages of scripture that have been almost a blank to me so far as my understanding was concerned, and I shall give these matters prayerful consideration. But there is one more question that comes to my mind now, and that is, Do we have to depend altogether on our judgment as to whether we are God's children or not? I mean, do we have to pass upon the correctness of the claims made, after comparing them with the 'law and testimony,' and risk our eternal salvation thereon?"

Mr. L. D. S.—"Yes, and no. The Lord has given us intelligence and powers of discrimination to be used. He has given us the scriptures as a guide, and means of determining to a large extent, at least, the true from the false; not only between churches and creeds, but as a safeguard against erroneous ideas and things that might otherwise creep into the church. But we are not left to our judgment alone when it comes to making sure of our acceptance, or the acceptance of the church of God. The scriptures promise us a knowledge—absolute knowledge. Christ says, 'My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me; if any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself.'—John 7:16, 17. God alone can impart this knowledge, as you may see by reading 1 Corinthians 12:3, where Paul says, 'No man can say that Jesus is the Christ but by the Holy Ghost.' Also Matthew 16:17: 'Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.' Peter had received a revelation from God. Hence he knew. That God intends for us to exercise our discriminating powers, to a certain extent, is evidenced by what he said to the children of Israel through Moses, viz.: 'If there arise among you a prophet or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder, and the sign or a wonder come to pass, whereby he spake unto thee, saying, Let us go after other gods, which thou hast not known, and let us serve them; thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams; for the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether ye love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all you soul.'—Deuteronomy 13:1-3."

Mr. T. S.—"Well, Brother Saint, I must be going. I have taken up a great deal of your time this evening, and I desire to express the gratitude I feel to you for the enlightenment I have received through this conversation, and I assure you that I will continue to investigate the claims of your church, and if other claims are as satisfactorily explained and sustained as this topic of our present conversation has been I shall certainly unite with it."

Mr. L. D. S.—"I considered that my time has been well spent this evening; and I have received fully as much pleasure and enjoyment in our conversation as you have. I am glad you came over, and hope it will not be your last visit upon such an errand. May the Lord bless you, and lead you by his Holy Spirit, is my prayer."

Mr. T. S.—"Good-night."

THE ANGEL'S MESSAGE, OR THE GOSPEL RESTORED.

The gospel of Christ as taught in the New Testament is the embodiment of God's will concerning humanity. Paul declares, 'It is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.'—Romans 1:16. Jesus was its great expounder. (See Luke 4:18; John 3:34; 12:44, 50.) After his resurrection he commissioned his disciples to preach it to all the world. (See Matthew 28; Mark 16.) The record assures us that all who obeyed it were made partakers of the blessings promised, and were made heirs of eternal life. But Jesus foretold that 'many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many. And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold.' (Matthew 24; Mark 13; Luke 21.) The apostles also foretold a great apostasy. (See Acts 20; 2 Thessalonians 2; 1 Timothy 4; 2 Timothy 3 and 4; 2 Peter 2; Jude.)

In the above scriptures it is shown that the time would come when professors would 'have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof.' Infinite wisdom not only foresaw this state of things, but made provision to meet it. While John was in the isle of Patmos, he received divine messages to deliver unto the seven churches of Asia, all of whom had more or less departed from the gospel. And in the fourth chapter of Revelation he says, "After this I looked, and, behold, a door was opened in heaven: and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter." In that and succeeding chapters are recorded many stupendous events which would transpire in the future, down to the end of time. Not things which had already transpired, for the voice said, "I will show thee things which must be hereafter."

Among those events, John says,

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.—Revelation 14: 6, 7.

This vision was shown to John about 94 A. D., some sixty-three or sixty-four years after the commission to preach the gospel to every creature was given to the apostles. There could be no necessity for sending the gospel at any time, when it was already being preached in its purity and fullness; and as God does nothing in vain, and his word can not fail, it is evident that a general apostasy was foreseen, and in order to counteract that apostasy it was decreed that the gospel should be restored in its purity, fullness, and power; its commandments, precepts, ordinances, promises, and blessings. With the restoration of the gospel, the church would resume the apostolic pattern, with its ministry as described in 1 Corinthians 12 and Ephesians 4.

Reader, can you find in all Christendom a church organized after the beautiful pattern established by Christ? Are the conflicting creeds of modern Christendom worthy to be compared with the harmonious, life-giving teachings of Jesus Christ? If not, has there not been a general departure from the true order of God? Can any other plan than that revealed through Jesus Christ be "the power of God unto salvation"? Verily, nay! Any departure therefrom leads to condemnation and death. Hence the loving kindness of God in determining to restore the "everlasting gospel," as he showed unto his servant John.

One hundred years ago, (December 23, 1805), a child was born to Joseph and Lucy Smith, in the town of Sharon, Windsor County, Vermont, destined to become the subject of ridicule, scorn, and hate, and finally death at the hands of a cruel mob, because he declared that he had received a message from God to deliver to the world. In his fifteenth year he was greatly exercised about his eternal welfare; but seeing the confusion in the religious world he knew not where to go to find instruction that would lead to the way of life. While reading his Bible, these words met his eye, and touched his heart: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him."—James 1:5. He obeyed; the powers of darkness seized upon him, but a heavenly vision appeared to him, and the enemy fled. In this vision he received instructions from the divine personages that came to his relief. When he told his vision he was treated with scorn by professors of religion, but he knew that God had heard his prayer. He confessed that he afterward yielded to temptation, which brought condemnation, and he sought forgiveness at the hands of God. While thus engaged, an angel of God appeared to him, and among the things he told him was this: "That God had a work for me to do, and that my name should be had for good and evil among all nations, kindreds, and tongues, or that it should be both good and evil spoken of among all people." This personage opened the scriptures unto him, and told him that a book was to come forth containing the fullness of the gospel, as delivered by the Savior to the ancient inhabitants of this continent. He told him of "great judgments which were coming upon the earth, with great desolations by famine, sword, and pestilence, and that these grievous judgments would come upon the earth in this generation."

On the twenty-second day of September, 1827, the plates of the Book of Mormon were put into his hands; and in due time, by the inspiration of God, he was enabled to translate the engravings thereon. The authority to preach the gospel was conferred upon him and Oliver Cowdery. The Book of Mormon was published in 1830, and the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was organized on the sixth day of April, 1830.

Tens of thousands have obeyed that gospel and have received evidence of its truth, and many have been called to sacrifice their lives because of their fidelity to the cause of truth; and among them is the name of Joseph Smith, honored of God, and of all who have, from the heart, obeyed the message brought to earth in these last days. But that name is still held in contempt by the enemies of truth in all the world, as the angel foretold.

Reader, these are strange things to you, and wonderful to all; but search the scriptures and you will find them in harmony with God's dealings in all ages of the world.

Yours for truth, and God,

CHARLES DERRY.

THE TIME OF THE END.

The great teacher of purity warned us of the approaching end as a time of "eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage." Human beings have been doing these things from the very creation, therefore we must take this prophecy as designating a specific time when these would be so out of harmony with God’s designs that to bring his name into such were blasphemy.

While the ministry in general are pointing to earth-quakes, fires, floods, monopolies, wars, and our all-surfeiting “RUSH” as the sure tokens of these latter days, it would be well also to note the unreasonable way we feed these “holy temples,” our bodies, which are simply at the mercy of most contemptible slaughter-mongers, because we ignore the counsel of God, not realizing his provision that we may be a clean people, apart from the world, and therefore not a partaker of its plagues. Are our people honestly warned? Do the ministry “shun to declare the whole counsel of God” because as a church we view an important portion as a latter day “indulgence”—the revelation that promises health, protection, and great wisdom to all who exercise prayerful selection of their food and drink?

Let us believe this counsel was given with no idle purpose! As a people we would be much further advanced in every way did this divine advice receive more honor at our hands, and did we exercise our free agency to the glory of God, rather than lean toward those things that are not expedient—though perhaps lawful in our present condition, saying, “I’ll take the consequences!”

An eminent speaker at the joint session of National Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, and Association of American Physicians at Washington, lately, said the Chicago and San Francisco fires and the Charleston earthquake did not produce as great a calamity combined as tuberculosis alone in one year. He estimated the deaths at fifty times those mentioned calamities—true “the great white plague”; and how are we working together with God that the destroying angel may pass us by according to his promise?

Why not search out this matter before we judge of it? Is not the promised wisdom a goodly prize? Is there in the columns of the HERALD yet a little room for instruction in temporal things that go toward educating the children of God to a higher conception of our every-day need of watchfulness? or will that great and terrible day catch us unaware, praying mechanically for “more light and truth,” and yet blinded to what we already have! What vain repetitions we do make while the voice of the Spirit is still calling, “Come up higher, O ye my people”!

Mothers’ Home Column
EDITED BY FRANCES.

Our Baby.

Adown from the beautiful courts above,
Where the Father, eternal, doth reign,
While myriad angels unceasingly sing,
A dear little baby once came.

As pure as the snowflakes that fall from above,
Or the bright, sparkling dewdrops from heaven,
An innocent soul for our guidance and care,
By the dear loving Father was given.

He came with the earliest flowers of spring;
The fairest sweet blossom of all,
And planted himself in our hearts and our home,
This darling wee baby so small.

We love him? Ah, yes! How we love him God knows
And we pray that to us may be given
Such wisdom to guide his dear feet in the way,
To his beautiful home up in heaven.

An Armful of Joy.

Care is a feather and grief is a bubble—
Armful o’ joy in a world full o’ trouble!
Bright as if skies
Made the blue of his eyes
With red lips that know not the meaning of sighs.

He seeks not the future—he knows not the past.
Yet he knows there are loving arms holding him fast;
His pillow of rest
Is a mother’s dear breast,
And that’s the sweet pillow he’s loving the best.
Blue skies and balmiest blossoms above him—
Roses for playmates and lilies to love him!
Walk, little feet,
In life’s rosiest street,
Till with roses of heaven these earth roses meet!

The Baby’s Eyes.

Listen close, that you may surprise
Part of the secret sweet that lies Buried deep in the baby’s eyes.

Wise is the baby with eyes of brown,
Clutching each little hand,
Wrinkling its forehead into a frown,
Trying to understand.

Sweetest and wisest in all the town,
Thoughtful baby with eyes of brown.

Mischievous babe with the eyes of blue,
Laughing at other folk,
Planning and plotting the whole day through
Some little baby joke.

Laughing and happy and clever, too,
Mischievous baby with eyes of blue.

Calm is the baby with eyes of gray,
Dear little stay-at-home,
Near to the mother in work and play—
Never will care to roam.
More of a comfort from day to day,
Calm little baby with eyes of gray.

Where Babies Are Always Welcome.

The Osage country is a land where baby may always be sure of a large welcome. For one reason, he has an earning capacity from the day he is born, which is often quite as great as his father's. One of the next things after naming the little papoose is to go to Pawhuska, the capital of their nation, and have its name put upon the pay-roll. Once every three months Uncle Sam pays up the interest on the money which he holds in trust for them, and the amount paid to each Indian varies from time to time, according to how many have gone to the "Happy Hunting Grounds," and how many wee ones have come to take their places since last pay-day. The latest little arrival at the newest built wigwam receives just as much as does the oldest grandfather or the most athletic "warrior." So that when Chief Look Out, not long ago, had the happiness to be blessed with twins, he was not only eligible to the usual congratulations due a new father, but at the same time, unlike most new fathers, he found his estate increased by the snug little sum of $23,000. For, until the children reach the age of eighteen, their incomes are paid to their parents.—E. M. Sweet, in the World To-Day.

Getting Good by Doing Good.

On a very cold day in winter two travelers in Lapland were driving along in a sledge, wrapped up in furs from head to foot. At length they saw a poor man who had sunk down benumbed and frozen in the snow. "We must stop and help him," said one of the travelers. "Stop and help him!" replied the other. "You will never think of stopping on such a day as this! We are half frozen ourselves, and ought to be at our journey's end as soon as possible."

"But I can not leave this man to perish," said the humane traveler. "I must go to his relief." And he stopped the sledge. "Come," said he, "come help me to rouse him."

"Not I," said the other. "I have too much regard for my own life to expose myself to this freezing atmosphere any more than is necessary. I will sit here and keep myself as warm as I can till you come back."

His companion hastened to the relief of the perishing man. The ordinary means of restoring consciousness was tried with complete success. And what was the effect upon the traveler himself? Why, the very effort he had made to warm the stranger warmed himself, and thus he had twofold reward. He felt that he had done a benevolent act, and he also found himself glowing from head to foot by the exertions he had made.

And how was it with the other traveler, who had been so much afraid of exposing himself? He was almost ready to freeze, notwithstanding the efforts he had been making to keep himself warm.

And that which is true in the natural world is true in the spiritual.

We can not engage in any work for the good of others without getting good for ourselves. In stretching out the hand to help another, we are increasing our own spiritual strength.—Selected.

Whose Prayers Were Answered?

Robert J. Burdette, writing in the Baptist Commonwealth, preaches an eloquent sermon on prayer. It is well worth consideration for the sake of what it implies, as well as for what it directly says:

"I remember once upon a time, when I was a boy in Illinois, there was a long, dry summer, when it seemed as though the world would be burned up. The Christian people assembled in their churches and prayed one whole day for rain.

"Prayed for rain! One day!

"For cloudless weeks the panting trees of the forest had lifted their curled and wilted leaves day after day praying for rain in the face of the blazing sun. For weeks the brown pastures, crisped to the very roots, had cried and cried for rain. For weeks the drooping corn-stalks, hanging about the stalks, limp and withered, had prayed for rain. The dry bed of the little brook that crossed our farm was one long prayer. The very cattle that with the dumb and touching patience of the brutes came down every day to the caked bed of the dry pond, stood where the bank used to be, and prayed for the pond.

"Pray for rain one day! God's world of meadow and hill and brook and field and woods were praying all the time.

"And one night it rained. Soft as a benediction the drops of blessing pattered on the corn-blades, and on the brown pastures; you could hear the rising wind sigh, as though it was the parched earth drawing a long breath of relief. All night long, and all next day and the next night it rained.

"Did we assemble in our churches, and spend another whole day in thanksgiving?

"We did not. Our pastors thanked God for the rain the following Sunday morning a few days later.

"But, oh, the gratitude of the corn-fields and the pastures and the woods! Lifting their leaves and the long green blades to heaven! And the brook singing all day long—such an anthem of joy and gratitude—whispering a soft little solo through the weeds, and breaking out into such a jubilant chorus when a little runway of rocks gave chance for the cascade to lift up its voice. What a joyous, glad, exultant world it was! And the cattle, standing knee-deep in the pond, as though they would say, 'We knew it would fill up again'; drinking and bending their heads to drink again, and then once more drinking as though they would drain the pond, and then lifting their heads with such a long sigh of fulness and contentment—oh, how glad and how grateful they were!

"And we men said, 'Well, our prayers brought rain.' Every man who had grumbled about the long drought, every man who had murmured against God, and found fault with his weather for two months, and then offered one prayer in that all-day meeting, thought he had brought the rain.

"Whose prayers do you suppose God answered?

"'Your heavenly Father knoweth ye have need of these things.'"

Letter Department

Editors Herald: I have been a subscriber to your valuable paper these last eleven years, yet this is the first letter I have forwarded for its pages, so I trust you will bear with me if I am long in my story. My object in writing is to acquaint you with how the work of the Lord was established here, so that it may encourage the isolated, honest Saints everywhere to renewed diligence, faithfulness, and prayer; also of a debate that has just taken place between our esteemed president of the British Isles Mission, Bro. J. W. Rushton, and Mr. Percy Ward, a leading secularist of this country.

The writer came to Warrington from Manchester, some twenty miles off, in search of employment, the day after I was confirmed a member of the Reorganization, leaving the Plymouth brethren March 3, 1896. I was fortunate to procure work at my trade almost the same day I arrived. About a month afterward I was ordained a priest, being appointed to that office through Bro. Joseph Dewanup, Sr., then district
I have spent some of the sweetest, purest, and happiest hours of my life. It was a task, every Sunday morning, to turn out and go from door to door alone notwithstanding the cares and annoyances of the past week in earning one's livelihood amongst ungodly men; nevertheless as stated I was always blessed and confirmed in the faith from my feeble effort. More than one became interested in the gospel in these parts at the time (and who by the way preached earthly ones in Warrington, a town of some sixty thousand Soul-stirring sermons.

I will mention one person in particular: A young man who became greatly interested and to whom I loaned the Book of Mormon suddenly ceased to further investigate the work, believing it a fraud. Upon informing me as I called round on Sunday morning, and when about to leave him, he gave me a pressing invitation to attend a Sunday afternoon Bible class of which he was a member, stating the privilege would be afforded me to present to the class some aspect of my faith. I accordingly made up my mind to go, and privilege was granted wherein I had opportunity in my weak way to present the gospel on three or four occasions. I grew to love the teacher and members of this class for their kindness towards me, notwithstanding I had clearly given them to understand I was a Latter Day Saint, this young man by the name of J. L. Grundy began to attend, he belonging to a branch men, seeing they had fellowship of a kind and we had no branch privileges. I repeatedly envied, as it were, the street-corner men, and the missionary in these parts at the time (and who by the way preached earthly ones in Warrington, a town of some sixty thousand sweetest, purest, and happiest hours of my life.

Historically, members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (LDS Church) have been known for their witness to the gospel in a non-LDS setting, often through personal conversations and Bible classes. The story of Bro. Grundy, a young man who became interested in the gospel from a mission's visit, exemplifies this approach. Grundy, who was initially skeptical, was later baptized after hearing the missionaries' teachings and continuing to attend Bible classes. This interest led to the establishment of a branch in Warrington, which eventually grew to have twenty-five members. The experiences described here are typical of the faith's early growth in Europe, where missionaries often faced challenges but also found pockets of interest and conversion among those they met.
meet with us. Three last added to our number Bro. Rushton baptized. We make progress, thank God, though slowly. Bro. Mather, district superintendent of Sunday-schools, organized a school here a short time ago which bids fair for real growth, as it is in the care of some young men who are full of energy for the Master, Bro. Chandler having been elected superintendent.

On the 24th and 25th of April, 1906, we had the pleasure of hearing a public debate in Warrington between Bro. J. W. Rushton, president of the British Isles Mission, and Mr. Percy Ward, a leading secularist lecturer of this country. The subject first night, “Was Jesus a wise and moral teacher?” Bro. Rushton affirmed, Mr. Ward denied. The subject second night, “Was Joseph Smith, the founder of Mormonism, an impostor?” Mr. Ward affirmed, Bro. Rushton denied. I think the secularists would not have held the debate upon any other condition than stated price upon entrance, 3 pence, and 6 pence, there was in our judgment a goodly gathering both nights to hear the debate.

Bro. Rushton was fine both nights, to say the least. His exposition of the teachings of Jesus Christ, as found recorded in the fifth chapter of Matthew, “The sermon on the mount,” containing depths of wise and moral teachings, was simply splendid. Mr. Ward in his denial that Jesus was a wise and moral teacher barely touched on the ground. Bro. Rushton went over that and was only upon one point: that poverty was no blessing, alluding to Jesus, saying, “Blessed are the poor in spirit.” Mr. Ward had an impossible task when he endeavored to weaken the position taken up by our brother, consequently he evaded it, which was clearly seen by any unbiased mind, and resorted to his stock arguments against the wisdom and morality of the Master’s teachings, found as he thinks in Luke 19:27, Luke 14:26, and Mark 16:16. He condemned the orthodox view of eternal punishment.

The next night in his affirmation of Joseph Smith being an impostor, he made a big blunder, as he charged Joseph Smith with being the originator of Utah Mormonism. Bro. Rushton removed his ground entirely, showing the distinction between the two churches. Then he (Mr. Ward) played upon the fact that the plates were not to be had that Joseph Smith received and of course treated it lightly.

The debate was fair and honorable throughout. The best of feeling prevailed and the most attentive and respectful audience you could possibly have anywhere. Mr. Ward made mention of the courtesy and respect shown him which he does not always receive from so-called Christians. Latter Day Saints were fairly numerous, many coming from Manchester District.

The secularists, including Mr. Ward, I am sure had no idea that such a body of Christians with such a tenable position as a basis of belief existed before the debate.

That it has done good and will do good to the cause of truth and righteousness I am confident.

Yours in the conflict,

Editors Herald: I feel that I would like to tell the Herald readers a little about the Lord’s work in this far-away place if the Master will give his help. For some years I have been praying to my Father above to send some one of his servants to this place with the gospel, not because there was no preaching here for there is too much of it but it is another gospel and not the gospel Jesus Christ and his apostles preached. Well, the time came when the gospel, the true and everlasting gospel, was to be preached to the people here, and the Lord sent his servant. Bro. John H. Hanson came here Saturday, April 28, and we got permission to occupy the free mission-house on Sunday at five o’clock. Bro. Hanson delivered a powerful sermon to a full house. As that was a new doctrine to all of them, at the close of the service Bro. Hanson asked for permission to occupy each evening for a week or so, which was granted. I was astonished but I was glad. Monday evening came and just as we stood in readiness to go to meeting one of their head men came to tell us we could not have the use of the house except for that evening. Well, Bro. Hanson did not say much but he went to meeting and the fullness of the Spirit, I believe, was given to him in double measure and oh, how he preached! The house was full of attentive listeners, and when he told the people that the house was closed against us it was like a death knell for a few moments and then a whisper, “What for?” “How is that?” “What is the trouble?” But it did not matter, for the Lord opened another door.

Our brother preached the word in much power all week and on Sunday. The evil one began to stir his elements, to be sure. Many people would come to the meetings and they were talking all day long about what they had heard. The Methodist and mission people began to get uneasy and began to cry “Mormons” and the like. I could feel the power of darkness was working against us and I felt uneasy. I prayed much to the Father for help and for him to stand by his servant. One night after coming home from meeting having retired to rest I could not sleep, neither was I restless nor uneasy but peaceful, and the Lord gave me a vision of what was to come. I could not comprehend it at first but I saw it. I saw two groups of people standing together conversing and disputing very much seemingly about Bro. Hanson and his preaching. One of the groups was standing in the middle of the street, the other group was quite a ways from the street. I was one among those standing on the street. I looked up and saw Bro. Hanson going down the street, his hands folded over his breast, going slowly as if in deep thought, and all at once he stood right by us and I heard them say to him, “Who are you or how dare you call yourself a servant of the Lord?” Now I will say to those that do not know John H. Hanson, he is a big, powerful-looking man, and just as plain as could be he heightened himself a little, still having his hands folded, and answered, “I am a servant of the Lord and I have come to you with the everlasting gospel.” They hissed and hooted him and said, “If you say that again we will kill you.” Bro. Hanson stood perfectly still and said, “Yes, kill if you will. I am a servant of the Lord and have come to you with the everlasting gospel.” Then he turned and walked down the street again as before.

The conversation of the group seemed to be in whispers, yet I seemed to know what it was, and sure enough it has come to me a little everyday. Well, the next evening after meeting three of the Methodist brethren attacked Bro. Hanson, trying to make both him and the people believe he had said what he had not, in order to make a fuss, but they did not succeed.

I believe a good many at this place are convinced of the truth although only one obeyed this time. Bro. Hanson baptized this one on Monday, the 7th of May, before he left us to return to Gothenburg. I am so thankful to my heavenly Father for the work done here. When I think of the prejudice among the people and realize what is accomplished only for one week’s campaign I feel to say, Glory be to our Father in the Highest. He doeth all things well.

Your sister in the gospel covenant,

Mrs. Hannah Lawrence.

Corbin, Montana, May 27, 1906.

Dear Herald Readers: As I have never written anything for our paper I will try now, and take the risk of finding the wastebasket, for I realize the Editor must choose the best of what comes to his hands, and all should be willing to step back and let the best take the lead. I came here from the Woodbine, Iowa, Branch, where there is a very worthy band of Saints, headed by our branch president, S. B. Kibler, who by the way is worthy any honor—with some others I could name.
There are no Saints here, but I hope to convince some in the near future that the Reorganized Latter Day Saints' Church is the only church authorized by Christ to bring again Zion in these last days, and if any of the missionary force will correspond with me I will see if we can get schoolhouse or town hall for preaching, advertise his appointments, and furnish the preacher the best we have as long as he finds Montana Saints with a view to becoming acquainted. I would be glad to correspond with any Montana Saints with a view to becoming acquainted.

I have been a member of this church many years, but have never been actively identified with the work, but I see now where I have been wrong and humbly ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints that I may obtain forgiveness for past sins and errors, and be worthy to help hold up the Prophet's hands while he is fighting the Lord's battles, for I feel like David of old when he said he "had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of God, than dwell in the tents of wickedness" (Psalm 85:10), for I know and want to go on record as knowing, that God is working with his people wherever they are doing whatsoever he has commanded them.

Striving for more faith and praying for the advancement of truth,

I. M. DUNGAN.

ROCKWELL CITY, IOWA, May 28, 1906.

Editors Herald: A few nights ago the thought was impressed upon my mind in a dream, I had been neglecting my duty. The words that were given to me were these: "Use those visions and dreams that I have given you, or that which you have I will take from you."

These words have caused me to think that those things which were given to me, even if they were for my own good, might encourage some one else.

Now, dear Saints, those who try to live faithful will surely have those gifts that are promised. I do not say that I have lived faithful, but I can thank Him who rules on high that he has watched over me and guided me even though I am poor, weak, and sinful.

Last autumn it was my desire to go north. I had engaged a position near my own home. I could not go unless I could find some one to take my place. While seeking for such a person, the Lord came to me in a dream and said I should miss the train. I did not give up, however, until I had been told the third that I should miss the train. The last time it was so impressed upon my mind that I gave up going. I can see now that it was a great deal better for me to remain where I was than to go north.

Six weeks before conference-time, I desired to go to conference but I could not plan on going because my contract would not expire until the middle of May and then I had engaged a position which began work at the close of the first contract. About four weeks before conference, I dreamed I was at conference. This dream came to me often but I did not think I could get off to go. Just one week before conference, news came that another person could be hired for the second position, and I then asked for a vacation which I got. I attended conference, returned, and found out that position number two was vacant and I could have it if I wished. I did not want it then.

Does this show that the Lord will care for those who try to serve him?

Another dream was given me while at conference about three days before I started home. I thought I prepared to come home. I started but did not get to the train in time. This dream came to me often as it was similar to the one I had before. I went to Kansas City early, so I would be sure not to miss it. I found I had about an hour's wait, and found a place to rest as I was tired. It seemed that fate was against me as I did not understand the calls and waited a little too long. The train had started, and I remained in the city. These dreams being so literally fulfilled seem to show that the Lord surely remembers those who trust in him and guides those even if we at the time can not see that which is best as does his all-seeing eye.

While at conference, I thought so many times about the pride that has come into the church, as was shown in the dress while there. Since coming home another dream was given me concerning this kind of appearance in the sight of the Lord. It was told to me plainly that it was very displeasing in his sight. This applies to myself as well as others as I probably have gone to extremes in the matter of dress.

While thinking of the many helps he has given me, the questions come so many times: Do we thank the Lord enough for what he does for us? Are we striving with all our might to cheer, encourage and teach each other as we should; or do we let the work rest on the shoulders of a few who are appointed to lead? Are we using our talents in the way the Lord would have them used or are we hiding them for fear they should be lost? Do we consider the things given to us, for ourselves, will help only us, or may they encourage another? Do we always do our duty? As for myself, I think I would have to answer these questions in the negative and in answering these questions I come to the conclusion that I am classified a hindrance more than a help and had better reform.

Hoping these may encourage some one, I am,

Your sister in Christ,

ENVA REYNOLDS.

NECEDAH, WISCONSIN, May 24, 1906.

Editors Herald: As I am writing to have you continue sending the Herald to my address, I will pen a few lines for publication. We live only four miles from the church, but circumstances over which I have no control prevent me from meeting with the Saints as often as I would wish, and I would miss the Herald very much if it did not come to my home every week with its messages of love and encouragement. How I sympathize with those who are isolated from church privileges. I have belonged to the church for twenty-two years and all but eight of those years have been lived in an isolated condition. But I find that God is everywhere, and if we only trust him he will give us strength to overcome; for has he not said that he would never leave us nor forsake us? and he is just as ready to bless one of his children living in the backwoods as he is to bless those who live in the largest branches. So, dear isolated Saints, do not get discouraged; the struggle in this life is only for a little while, but the reward if we are faithful is for eternity.

Many times I have allowed the weakness of the flesh to overcome me, but I have never regretted that I was a Latter Day Saint.

We had the misfortune on the 16th of this month to lose our house and most of the contents by fire; all the clothes we had left were what we had on at the time. But we were not allowed to suffer, for the Saints and friends came to our assistance at once, and although they were poor in this world's goods yet they were willing to sacrifice to supply our present needs. Even the dear children were willing to give of their things to help us. We can never repay them for their kindness, but "He who in his righteous balance

Doth each human action weigh,
Will your sacrifice remember,
Will your loving deeds repay."

Editors Herald: I am at present visiting with the few Saints that reside here, trying hard to keep the fire burning. I left home yesterday thinking I would stay just a few days and then return, but since coming here I feel that I may stay longer, as the work seems to demand some help. The local brethren are all engaged in the business affairs of life and are so tired at times that it is quite a trial to attend and keep up the spiritual part of the work. So I am here to assist these noble souls all I can. I have felt quite anxious at times to move on farther east to Boston and Fall River and other branches, but am not permitted as yet. I hope the Saints will be patient with me and as soon as I can I shall be glad to see them. I am feeling well in gospel work and am being strengthened in my work so I can. Pastoral.

To the Saints and Friends of the British Isles Mission: Having been appointed again to the British Mission, I take this opportunity of thanking all who have cooperated with the work of the past conference year. It will be observed that this year we are attempting to meet the demand for missionary work with the three brethren we have here already without any additions from America, except Bro. Bailey, who understands, is devoting six months of this year to missionary work in Scotland at his own expense.

We have not appointed any of the missionaries to any local work, as this course has met with the success that was anticipated nor has it given satisfaction. We wish, therefore, to give the local ministry every opportunity to develop the necessary supply for the demand, leaving the missionaries, as commanded, free to prosecute their appointed work in opening out in new places.

To accomplish this local work we need organization and concentration and of course finance. We recommend that the districts and branches carefully consider this matter and wherever practicable adopt a system similar to the following:

As many of the brethren as can make it convenient meet together on Sunday morning or afternoon and systematically tract the district where the church may be situated, and also select some good place where open-air services can be held and let as many of the branch members gather together after the usual service in the hall, as can make it convenient, and hold a brief service in which we can be introduced to the congregation and short testimonies or discourses according to the ability or desire of the individual. This local mission work will be very effective if conducted with system and concentration. We especially emphasize the need of concentration in this work, success can not be cultivated by spasmodic effort or hysterical enthusiasm.

Now in any district or branch where there is an opportunity for this kind of work, (personally we do not know of a place where it can not be done,) and there is a desire to have the local effort supplemented by special missionary effort, we shall be pleased to join with you in making a special effort.

We are in urgent need of tracts. The ones we have supplied to us from the Herald Office are not adapted to the requirements of this mission; they are too bulky, and too technical. People will not be troubled to read them if they are not much interested; also they are too expensive to be used as we need to use them. The old method of leaving a tract for a week then calling for it, leaving another, and taking the one printed while another tract is printed in its place, is being generally speaking, the disadvantages are in the preponderance. It may be affirmed safely that in the majority of cases the tract is never noticed any more until you call for it, and more frequently than otherwise it is dirty and torn, unfit to be handed to any one else. Besides it is an unsanitary process to which some righty object. Now, we have the permission of the Presidency to publish our tracts in this country, as we can print them cheaper than we can get them from America, we are in a position to supply a very neat folder containing about 1,200 words with a space left for the name and address of the local church and the services at £1 for 5,000. We propose having a series of this style printed covering the usual topics. We are in need of money and solicit what help can be afforded to secure a good supply of these tracts as soon as possible.

Now regarding missionary work, I desire to put the matter to you as it already has been put to the Presidency and Bishopric.

We have openings that could be entered into with some prospect of success but we are prevented for the lack of means. We have a staff of missionaries comprising the following: W. H. Greenwood, T. Taylor, F. J. Pierce, besides the missionary in charge, and it requires £220 per annum to supply the families of these brethren and an additional £20 for incidental expenses, which will make about £250 per annum expenditure to about £250 per year. This does not leave a penny for the prosecution of missionary work outside of districts and branches. To meet this we have an average income of not more than £150 per annum. This leaves about £200 per year, to which we add about £100 per year, which Bishop Kelley must supply. We are in need of £100 in addition to this in order to prosecute missionary work in this land as it ought to be. It will hardly be necessary to say that this is not enough to support the Saints financially in tithing and offering. It is anxiety to see the work make the progress we believe it deserves that makes us thus bold, and all of us know that we can not accompl... plish much without means. It may seem a lot of money to look at in the bulk; but when you think about it, it is not an extragant sum we ask for. Seven pounds sterling per week will supply for four missionaries and provide for normal distress and poverty, and then leave us £1 per week for missionary work in new fields.
For the present Bro. Greenwood will labor in the Sheffield District, Rev. J. W. Rushton, in the Welsh Districts. It will be understood by these brethren that they are to devote their time and energy to proselytizing, and not to interfere in any way with branch or district matters only as they may be invited to do in the local missionary work as described above. I shall be very pleased to receive applications from the different responsible officers for mis-ionary help and will arrange to meet the demand as best we may.
Bro. Bailey will labor in Scotland in conjunction with the local brethren and will report to me in common with the rest of the missionaries June 30, December next, please. I also ask the district and branch presidents to kindly help me in this matter of reporting and as the blank forms provided are not very complicated, there should not be much difficulty.

In bonds,
J. W. Rushton.

To the Saints of Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, and the Virginias; Greeting: Another conference year is opening under very favorable circumstances and I congratulate you upon the work accomplished the past year and trust that we may continue with the same zeal to advance the kingdom. Now God, having recognized us as a people who have the only true gospel, has given us an excellent corps of missionaries, men who have been tried and are faithful to the trust imposed on them. Some changes have occurred. Bro. M. Smith goes to the Rocky Mountains, and Bro. V. M. Goodrich was released at his own request for business purposes. We commend him to the Saints at Wilburton, Indian Territory, as a faithful servant of the Lord.
We have thought best to appoint the following brethren as submissaries in charge of the following districts: Pittsburg, Richard Baldwin; Ohio and West Virginia, F. J. Ebeling; state of Virginia, J. W. Roberts. Those laboring in the Kirtland District, Rev. L. R. Devore in Columbus, Ohio, and Bro. L.
Devore in Columbus, Ohio, for the present. Bro. L. P. Baggorty will labor in Eastern Kentucky and report through Bro.
Ebeling. Bro. James Baggerly will continue the work opening so nicely under his care in Dayton and Middletown, Ohio.
We are desirous of extending our work in Virginia and will be glad to hear from Saints living there as to prospects for missionary work. We trust the Saints will remember the needs of the elders when they labor and provide for their necessities; also that there are funds in the hands of the Bishop's agents, that the families of the elders may not suffer, and the poor be cared for.
The brethren are requested to report promptly and always comply with instructions for directions. So far as possible the missionaries are to push their work in new fields, leaving the care of branches to those having the oversight thereof.
The spirit of love, unity, and peace should characterize the Saints everywhere. Lay aside personal hobbies and work for souls, seeking divine guidance. The reunions and conferences are so arranged that the minister in charge expects to attend them all, and hopes to have the assistance of one of the First Presidency for a season. Let our watchword be "goad in this may be the most prosperous year of our experience.

Route 2, Willoughby, Ohio.

To the Saints of the Ministry and District of Far West, Missouri, District; Greeting: It has pleased the presidency of this mission to appoint me the subcommittee in charge of this district for the present year, and I desire to address you through the columns of the HERALD. The present year opens with good prospects for the work and we hope to be able to obtain good results. The past year, while not being so successful as we desired, was fruitful, and we expect to reap now where we sowed last year.

Bro. Bullard and Pickering will be associated with me in the missionary work, and we expect to run the tent. If possible to get two tents, so far as possible, as we have no idea of so many places that cannot otherwise be reached. A prejudice against tent-work seems to exist in some localities. This should not arise, as the tent has been used with advantage in opening up the work. Wherever the tent was used last year it has resulted in good.
In two places, we have been able to baptize. The other place friends have been made, so that there is a place for the minister to stay and a little help to him on his way. I state this that you may see there is no reason why this part of the work may not receive support.
Perhaps there are Saints who would like to help us in this work, and if so donations may be sent to address and name given below. They will be used for the work and properly reported. Any surplus will be divided among the missionaries, entered in their expense account, and reported to the Bishopric as their donations. So that every one will get as much as is due.
We desire to correspond with elders and priests, who can give us a week or more of their time to assist in the tent-work (without interfering with branch duties). If a number of the brethren respond with two tent-stands, Far West is a very important field; it lies between the two stakes, is "one of the waste places of Zion," is "in the regions round about, 'a place of refuge';" hence we should put forth effort to build up the work in this field. I ask all help which can. If we understand the prophecies aright, this is one of the places that will be built up again.
Why should the Saints be restless (as some are)? Some are trying to sell property and lands and going elsewhere. Why not be contented? The land is good here, good markets are easily reached, and people can make a good living and every time land changes hands (as a rule) it helps to increase the price, and makes it more difficult for the Saints to obtain the land, which is a disadvantage to us.
Now it is evident that if Lamoni is "in the regions round about," Far West must be, as it is much nearer Independence than Lamoni. Now God having recognized this it is a stake. We are taught to believe "that God is no respecter of persons"; this being true, why should not the same thing occur, if the people are righteous? With a membership of over fifteen hundred, we certainly have a good start, especially when it is where the Lord has indicated his people should come.
Therefore let the Saints be contented, and labor hard to build up the work here. The last revelation tells us that the "gathering should be done in and with the revelations given on Fishing River... and the counsel and advice of the elders," etc.
Here is one part of the Fishing River revelation: "And let all my people who dwell in the regions round about be very faithful and prayerful, and humble before me, and reveal not the things which I have revealed unto them until it is wisdom in me that they should be revealed," etc. A careful study of section 102 might be very profitable to us in the regions round about Zion. Let us all labor together that we may be able to accomplish the work intrusted to us of God, remembering that without divine assistance we can not hope to succeed.
Pray that the Spirit's guidance may be with us all the present year, and our work be such as the Master will approve.

Yours in the one hope,
J. W. Rushton.

To the Ministry and Laity in the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District; Greeting: You are reminded by Apostle Wight's pastoral to Mission No. 3 that I am to act as your servant in charge of the work in this district, my appointed field of labor. I would, therefore, call your special attention to a very few briefs.
1. The work for which we plead a consideration on the part of our fellow men is of God. Each and every one who has named the name of Christ under the banner of restoration has a work to perform in his respective sphere, being 'laborers together with God.' This means that the work must be executed on the lines which divine wisdom has ordered. An attempt to enlist human wisdom in lieu of that which is from heaven, is to invite failure.

2. The enforcement of individual opinion to the sacrifice of the will of the majority, is a slaughter of the principle of craft in church and craft in state. The gospel is opposed to tyranny in all of its forms. The freedom of the "law of the spirit of life in Christ," is the only way to do that which is right, that is, to be honorable, upright, and just, the opposite of which is bondage and sin. One of the first declared principles by Jesus, in the religion of heaven, was: "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do them: for this is the law and the prophets."—Matthew 7:12. This is the organic law of the golden age, and the beautiful millennium,
www.LatterDayTruth.org
to which our eyes and hearts turn with anxious longings, will be the millennium, in our relationship one to another; because such a principle of foundation in that period of time in the church is, and must be, the guiding star. In the concluding section, we have again a fine and solemn address to the ministers of the Church, who held their beloved and respected Apostle. And, finally, the solemn warning—"Qualification before situation." 3. The relationship existing between the church, officially connected with various auxiliary departments is such that mutual help can be expected, and a hand-in-hand march to the accomplishment of good. But one department should not crowd the other out. God set the officers in the church for the perfecting of the church in all things. If the standing ministry (eyes, ears, and the traveling ministry also) are not permitted to magnify their office, God’s purpose is set to one side, and the loss comes to that particular locality. As “the head cannot say to the body, ‘I have no need of thee’; and the body cannot say to the head, ‘I have no need of thee.’” (1 Corinthians 12:14, 15). If the head cannot say to the ministry, “I have no need of thee,” “Nay, much more those members which seem to be more feeble, are necessary.” If the head is left to itself, there is no walking; if no eyes, there is no seeing; if no ears, there is no hearing—but when “they be joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part,” there is an increase in love unto edification of the body, and a growing up into Christ in all things. A consolidation of interests, a long pull, a strong pull, and all pull together, is the motto. 4. The Bishop’s agent, whose responsibility is great, whose work is arduous, is yet willing to express the value of our interest in the latter-day work—our appreciation of heaven’s work—in dollars and cents. The rule of Christian liberality is the rule of Christian obedience. But one department should not crowd the other out. As a body of man has no limbs, there is no walking; if no eyes, there is no seeing; if no ears, there is no hearing—but when “they be joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part,” there is an increase in love unto edification of the body, and a growing up into Christ in all things. A consolidation of interests, a long pull, a strong pull, and all pull together, is the motto. 5. Saints who are scattered, or in isolated places within the district, and who desire the work “opened up,” please address the undersigned of suitable time, prospects, etc. But as our ministerial force is somewhat decimated this year, do not be disappointed, neither discouraged if we can not honor your request “at once.” 6. Let us labor together for the education of the body of Christ as a standing ministry, and push the banner into “strange cities,” and rural districts, as a traveling ministry. And let me repeat that the Lord desires an abundant blessing, and give us a harvest this year in proportion to his name’s glory; that Zion may put on her beautiful garments, and shine in the loveliness of her bridal robes. All mail matter addressed to 76 Daugherty Street, Coldwater, Michigan, will be promptly forwarded to me in any part of the field, and will receive prompt attention.

A Famous Newspaper Man.

William E. Curtis, the famous correspondent of the Chicago Record-Herald, writes a two-column letter for his paper every day in the year without intermission. His powers of sustained work are as great a marvel as his faculty of always making his matter interesting. Probably no other newspaper correspondent in the country is read so regularly and eagerly by so many thousands of men and women as Mr. Curtis. Mr. Curtis has traveled several times around the world, visiting every country under the sun, and writing a larger number of brilliant and interesting letters of travel than were ever before produced by a single hand. Many of these have later been reprinted in book form. Some of his latest expeditions for the Record-Herald was through Mexico, resulting in a series of letters as entertaining as those he wrote a few years ago from India, Turkey, and the Holy Land. His further letters from Ireland, Russia, and Germany will rival in importance and interest any of his previous contributions.

Beginning his career in Chicago as a reporter in 1872, Mr. Curtis rapidly rose to be managing editor. He resigned that position to accept a government appointment as secretary of the South American commission. So brilliantly did he perform the duties of this office that James G. Blaine, Secretary of State, placed him at the head of the American legations in Washington and of many in Europe. It is not strange that the Record-Herald prints Mr. Curtis’ letter every day in the first column of the front page, and that nothing but a California earthquake can displace it from that station of honor.

The Saints' Herald
The Murder Spirit.

On June 1, in Madrid, Spain, the king of Spain, a young man but lately come to maturity, was married to a young woman of English blood. It was made an event of national importance, and was celebrated with all the accompaniments of pomp and grandeur of display for which kingly courts are noted; and the Spanish people were wonderfully pleased with the choice for a companion their young king had made.

But—by what rascally ingenuity of Satanic influence it never may be known—some miscreant, either for political, or seditious and anarchial purpose, alone or with accomplices, threw a bomb concealed in a bunch of roses with the intent to kill King Alfonzo and his wife, but by one of the unseen forces which shape or mar of good and men, the intent was prevented by striking a wire of the telegraph or phone service and deflected from its aim and the king and queen escaped, though some twenty others were killed, and fifty to seventy were more or less grievously wounded. Among those killed and wounded are several of the best and noblest of the nation.

We give below an editorial of the Tribune for June 2, which from citizens' standpoint clearly shows the moral enormity of this act of anarchy, and what should be done with this class of morally and politically murderous madmen.

Let it be understood, we do not stand for the "divine right of kings to rule," but we do for the rule of law and safety of the citizen of every government, and if any discrimination is permissible it must be for those whom destiny, or the choice of the people, makes the rulers or chief representatives of the respective form of government, autocrat, emperor, king, or president. No citizen of the United States can afford to forget the examples of lawlessness written into the history of the republic by the murder of Lincoln, Garfield, and McKinley.

Snakes.

No one blames a snake for being a snake. He can not help it. He was born so. But when he gets in men's way he is killed.

Some bomb-throwing anarchists are of unsound mind for physical reasons. Others are products of wrong training and have no clear sense of right and wrong. Such may be morally not to blame. But they must be cleared out of men's way. More dangerous than snakes because they wear human form and may be mistaken for men, more dangerous because they do not require personal contact in order to destroy, they must be treated as pitilessly as other venomous reptiles.

Those intellectual anarchists who do not use their hands to carry out their teachings, but use their brains to incite other men to do the deeds which they gloat over but are too cowardly or too wise to do, say that they have a right to use violence because they are at war with society. If a state of war exists, by all laws of war their lives are forfeit, because they are traitors in the camp. They live among the members of that society upon which they claim to be making war. They use all the advantages of the scientific advances which that society has made possible and which in turn have made life so much fuller and richer in all grades of society. They accept all that society has to offer, and try to destroy society. If they were sincere they would go out into the wilderness, far away from all the evils of twentieth century civilization. If they were honest men they would not claim the exemptions of the rules of war together with the liberties of peace. If they believe in the rights of man they, the miserable fragment of a minority, would not attempt to tyrannize by force over the majority, who are fairly well satisfied with the world as it is.

The king and queen of Spain are in no way responsible for whatever economic troubles exist in Spain. On the contrary, the royal marriage bids fair to put an end to a national unfriendliness which has existed since Philip II, on his marriage with Queen Mary, took the title of king of England. Nothing could contribute more to the prosperity of Spain than friendly relations with England. A sovereign has a power in Europe, as the people of Norway recently recognized, to help his nation by his personal influence on other courts. The young king of Spain has the power and the will to help his people. It would be an atrocious blunder as well as crime to slay him or his English bride and bring upon Spain the perils of another regency or civil war. The Spanish anarchist may be inspired by envious hate, or he may be sincere but mistaken. It makes no practical difference; he should be suppressed.

The king and queen of Spain are to be congratulated that the plot against them has failed, and that the occasion has brought out demonstrations of the affection in which their people almost unanimously hold them.

CHURCH UNITY OR CHURCH CONSOLIDATION—WHICH?

The Presbyterian (general) Church and the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, at a convention of delegates from each body lately held at Des Moines, Iowa, have agreed to an abandonment of the causes of division which led to the separation some hundred years or so ago, and formed an ecclesiastical union to the effect that the Cumberland branch numbering some hundreds of thousands less than the general body is merged in that, thus losing its characteristic and denominational identity as a church.

This union of these two branches of the Presbyterian Churches, so far as origin and distinctive tenets are concerned, is much like the union of the Catholic and Episcopal Churches might be, though the origin of the Episcopal Church is possibly not so clean as the Cumberland branch was; but the merger would be a great advantage to both of the contending parts, difficult as it might be for the Catholic to forget the part King Henry VIII took in the separation and the cause for it. The claim for paramount authority between Catholicity and Episcopacy, of course, would be sharper and more strongly urged by each, than would be possible between these later agreeing Presbyterian bodies. Unity is desirable to be sure; can it be made sure and will it last? "Is Christ divided?" Was Christ divided when the Presbyterian bodies separated? Is he now united by the joining of these two apparently coalescing churches?

There is a great deal more of uniting required before Western Christianity presents a united front, "one Lord, one body, one Spirit," to the Eastern philosophies, falsely so-called heathen. Methodists of a greatly variety of sorts of beliefs, North and South, Primitive and Wesleyan, etc.; Baptists, pedo and anti; Christians, Age to Come, Advent, Come-outs, Holiness Christian Advents, etc.; all stand badly in need of "a closer communion" with each other, if not with God, before the one Lord will recognize in their parti-colored ecclesiastical coats his bride.

And while the Methodists could lead the way, being the most numerous and popular in the United States, they might make their revised platform wide enough to cheat further division, and gather in the host of separatists like Doctor Thomas, Professor Swing, Doctor Crapsey, Doctor Foster, and a whole lot of others. If not, why not?

W. D. C. PATTYSON AGAIN RESTRAINED.

W. D. C. Pattyson, the man who burned the building on the Temple Lot, belonging to the Hedrickite brethren or Church of Christ, after a term in the insane asylum at St. Joseph, Missouri, was released. We do not know just when, but he was in attendance as a visitor at the General Conference in April, and seemed to be quite rational. He is not a member of the church, having been expelled therefrom in the East, years ago. On Friday, June 1, he went to Bro. Roderick May's office and there stated that he had been commissioned of God to throw down the towers and destroy the works of the enemy on the Temple Lot, and stated to Bro. May that the stone church-building which the Saints had erected would also have to go, as he proposed to make a clean sweep of the entire tract—public buildings and private dwellings all included.

Bro. May tried to dissuade him from this enterprise of destruction, but all to no purpose; he still persisted. Bro. May then showed him by the map that our church-building was just outside of the line of the original sixty-three acres supposed to be the whole of the tract. He expressed himself as glad that such was the case, as he did not wish to be thought antagonistic to the church. Either at his own suggestion or that of Bro. May, he stated he would notify the mayor of the city in order that the people might be prepared and avoid loss of life in that destruction. When Bro. May found he could not dissuade him from his purpose he agreed with the suggestion that he better go to see the mayor. After he left Bro. May's office Bro. May telephoned the mayor and succeeded in having an interview with the latter at Bro. May's office, and told him who Pattyson was and as much about him as he knew, in order that the mayor might be prepared to deal with the situation.

The mayor and the marshal were present at the interview when Pattyson declared his purpose. The mayor tried, as did Bro. May, to dissuade him from such a ruinous work, but finding that he could not, he said to him, "Well, sir, we will have to lock you up." To this Pattyson said, "I am ready." So they locked him up over night. The next morning they took him before the proper authorities, and he was again committed to the asylum for the insane at St. Joseph, Missouri.

He is laboring under the impression that he is Baurak Ale of section 102, paragraph 5, Doctrine and Covenants, and that he is directed by the Lord, through direction to himself, to throw down the tower and clear the tract for the incoming of Saints to build the temple. He is not the first man that delusion has led astray, and we very much regret that at this late date any one can be so misled as to contemplate so serious a wrong to society at large and to individuals in particular as to destroy public and private property, which would be the case if he had carried out his idea; for there are quite a number of innocent purchasers located around the temple tract who would be deprived of their homes by such an act. It seemed quite fortunate that he should have wandered into the jurisdiction of Bro. Roderick May, which resulted in his falling into the hands of the properly constituted authorities of the city.

THE EARTHQUAKE AT SAN FRANCISCO.

The Los Angeles Times, published at Los Angeles, California, in its current issue for May 24 has this to say of earthquake probabilities in its own vicinity. It will be interesting to us of the HERALD:

Many greatly exaggerated reports of the effects of the earthquake of last month have been sent East. The facts are these:

Of the damage done in San Francisco, at least nine-tenths are due to fire, following the earthquake. There was no water to fight the flames.

San Francisco is five hundred miles from Los Angeles—as far as from Charleston, South Carolina, to Washington, District of Columbia. The earthquake was confined to San Francisco, and territory within a radius of about fifty miles.

Up to the date of this earthquake, less than a hundred lives have been lost by earthquakes in California, since the settlement of the State by Americans—most of those through the collapse of unstable adobe buildings. For seventy-five consecutive years the mortality from volcanoes and earthquakes in Italy has averaged fifteen hundred a year. The deaths, every year, in the States east of the mountains, from tornadoes, cyclones, blizzards, and lightning strokes—all of which are unknown in California—average more than the total loss of life from earthquakes in California in a hundred and fifty years.

No damage whatever was done by the earthquake in Southern California. Since the founding of the city, in 1771, not a life has been lost, a person injured, or a dollar's worth of property destroyed, by earthquake, in Los Angeles. The geological foundation here is entirely different from that of San Francisco, and is such as to preclude the probability of any serious earthquake.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Those of the ministry laboring or residing in the vicinity of Jewell City, Kansas, near the Osborne and Scandia Branches, are requested to call on Bro. P. W. Atkins, R. F. D. No. 5, four miles from Jewell City. He will welcome and afford any of the ministry an opportunity to labor.

The law written on the heart is the guarantee of success for the minister and the member of the church. Not anything less than a hungering and thirsting for righteousness will enable one to stand firm and be true and overcome and perform his whole duty. If men from mere policy assume attitudes that are right, it will not avail them anything in the final account with God. The Book of Mormon informs us that unless a man shall act with "real intent," his apparently correct course of action will be accounted as evil. No man can please God and serve the church as it should be served unless in his heart he desires to do right irrespective of opposing personalities, policies, or conditions; "for whatsoever is more or less than this cometh of evil." Men must be genuine in principle and in action, else they must inevitably and finally fail. The gospel is a system of all truth revealed to bring about right conditions. He who measures up to its demands is in a saved condition; he who fails so to do remains in his low estate, hence "can not be redeemed either by mercy, truth, justice, or judgment." The sooner all realize the character of the demands of law, the sooner our work will be done in such a manner as to secure the divine approval and abide the day of test and of burning. "They that are after the flesh can not please God."

Nursing and total abstinence: Every nurse knows that most wards in her hospital would have an empty look if all the victims of alcohol in some form or other were weeded out. Every district nurse sees that one of the chief barriers to even the poorest leading, clean and self-respecting lives is their habit of spending far too large a proportion of the week's earnings in intoxicants. And in the houses of the well to do, in spite of "three bottle men" having departed with the charge in national habits, the private nurse sees that many of her patients are suffering, directly or indirectly, from alcoholism. Only those who have done the work know how much inducement there is to the private nurse to drink. We do not say temptation, for it is not a temptation to one in a hundred, but there is the perpetual invitation to drink. It continually happens that the first greeting at a new house is: "Won't you have a glass of something before you go up-stairs?" and a "little private" suffering, directly or indirectly, from alcoholism.

Two nurses, in charge of a severe case of pneumonia in a suburban hotel, found a bottle of whisky in the bedroom of the elder, but, as they remarked afterwards: "Nurse So and So was put off with a bottle of port; I suppose they thought her a little too young for spirits!"—London Hospital.

Anything new under the sun? "The oldest artificial leg in existence is now in the museum of the Royal College of Surgeons of England. It was found in a tomb at Capua and is described in the catalogue as follows:

"Roman artificial leg; the artificial limb accurately represents the form of the leg; it is made with pieces of thin bronze, fastened by bronze nails to a wooden core. Two iron bars, having holes at their free ends, are attached to the upper extremity of the bronze; a quadrilateral piece of iron, found near the position of the foot, is thought to have given strength to it. There is no trace of the foot, and the wooden core had nearly crumbled away. That skeleton had its waist surrounded by a belt of sheet bronze edged with small rivets, probably used to fasten a leather lining. Three painted vases (red figures on a black ground) lay at the feet of the skeleton. The vases belong to an advanced period in the decline of art (about 300 n. c.)."—British Medical Journal.

A bit of fun. "Thomas A. Edison, the wizard, is something of a joker. A correspondent's eye was caught by a model that looked like a cradle with a telephonic attachment, 'What on earth is that?' inquired the visitor. 'I hope to make my fortune of that invention,' said Edison, gravely. 'It is a motor to run by sound. You attach it to a cradle and the louder the baby cries the faster the cradle rocks.'"

Things useful to know: "In tropical climates the little air bladders which support the seawracks are of great service, for the masses of seaweed are several hundred feet long and of considerable height, having stems the thickness of a man's thigh and branches and drooping stems which support innumerable forms of animal life, such as corals, crabs, worms of different kinds, together with mussels and weeds of the sea, and being besides a place of deposit for innumerable eggs of various creatures. In Scotland the tender parts of the seawracks, known as tanglers, are used as food, and when cooked are considered choice diet for cattle. The stems of a hard, horny variety of the seawracks are used as knife-handles. They are cut in short pieces, and, while still moist or green, the blade is forced in at one end. When the stem dries it clings firmly to the knife-blade. Being gnarled and horny, it resembles buck's horn, and when tipped with metal and fully finished forms a neat, inexpensive knife-handle.

"The rose tangles are higher up in the scale of vegetable life, and their delicate tints render them beautiful. Of these, pulse is an important variety to the Scotch and Irish, who, besides using it as food, both in its raw state and cooked in milk, find it a substitute for tobacco. Carrageen moss is another kind of rose tangle, from which a nourishing jelly is made. The Chinese use one variety of rose tangle as a chief ingredient in their glossing preparations; twenty-seven thousand pounds are brought annually to Canton and sold at from six to eighteen pence per pound."—Washington Times.

NEW YORK, Tuesday, May 15.—A cable dispatch to a morning paper from London says:

Doctors Grenfell and Hart, during continued researches of the ruins of Oxyrhyn cus, whose ancient monasteries some years ago yielded the famous Logia of Christ, found a fragment of a supposed lost gospel, which is now in Queens College, Oxford.

It is a tiny scrap of vellum, perforated by worms and yellowed by sixteen centuries, but the writing is perfectly legible. It is written in Greek characters, which are almost microscopically minute, with scarlet initials. There are about three hundred words. It is certainly a part of an inextant gospel, but its theological value must be left to the theologians. It is unusually well written from a literary viewpoint. It begins in the middle of a speech. Jesus and his disciples have entered the temple and met a Pharisee, who rebukes them for omitting some ceremonial of ablation. Jesus asks the Pharisee what the latter has done to comply with the ceremonial.

The Pharisee's reply minutely describes the process of purification, of which no previous authorities have given details.

Then follows a powerful, eloquent denunciation by Jesus of mere outward purification, he saying that he and his disciples have been purified by the waters of life.

There is also a mention of a hitherto unknown part in the temple called the Hegneuterian, or place of purification.

Theological circles are greatly interested in the discovery, which promises a sensation equal to that created by the Logia of Christ. —Seattle Daily Times.

THE RIGHTS OF A MISSIONARY IN A BRANCH, AND THE USE OF THE CHURCH-BUILDING.

[Written for the First Seventy, and ordered submitted for publication.—Not read before the quorum for lack of time.]

I have never been brought into a condition till now, that there seemed to be a necessity to enter into an examination of the question now under consideration as a whole; and, as yet, I have secured but little evidence from the revelations of God, either of former or latter days, relating very largely upon the nature of his appointment, and because there has been but little occasion for the Lord to speak thereupon.

The rights of a missionary in a branch depend very largely upon the nature of his appointment, and his responsibilities in that appointment, and the office held. The Lord contemplates that at times the “traveling presiding councils of the church” shall be present in branches, and those who occupy membership in these councils are the “Twelve and Seventy” (see Doctrine and Covenants 123:13), who are by virtue of their office missionaries; and when in branches their rights are to “be regarded and considered as the leading representative authorities of the church, and be respected as such,” and it is their right to expect that “their counsel and advice” will “be sought and respected when given; and in cases of conflict or extremity” they are to give “their decision,” which “should be listened to and regarded” (see Doctrine and Covenants 120:4). To my mind this clearly shows that if their right is not respected when counsel and advice is needed in the branch, and there exists “cases of conflict, or extremity,” it is their further right to give a decision, and to determine when there are such “cases of conflict, or extremity.”

While the Lord informs us that there is no conflict in the law in these matters, yet he recognizes there is a possibility of there being a conflict in the minds of the people, and provides for such an emergency in quite clearly outlining the conditions that should be recognized by his people, so that harmony may exist among them, by giving instructions by revelation that “in matters of personal importance and conduct arising in branches . . . the authorities of those branches . . . should be authorized and permitted to settle them.” This suggests that if the authorities of the branch try to burden the missionaries, at least those composing the “traveling presiding councils,” “with their branch troubles relating to “matters of personal importance and conduct,” as is sometimes the case, it is the right of such missionary to authorize the “authorities of those branches” to settle them; and it is as clearly taught that it is not the right of any to take these matters out of their hands, unless it be “where cases of difficulty are of long standing,” and the branch authorities have neglected to act, and yet show an unwillingness to promptly act; then they “may require local authorities to adjust them,” which if they fail to do, then their “office and duty” makes it obligatory for them to “regulate them,” “that the work and church may not be put to shame, and the preaching of the word be hindered,” as in so many cases it has occurred.
(See Doctrine and Covenants 120:7.)

This indicates to my mind that it is the right of the missionary to determine when conditions are such as to put “the work and church to shame, and the preaching of the word be hindered,” as well as where cases are of “long standing.” According to the Book of Rules, page 95, paragraph 158, a case of difficulty that is known to the authorities of branches, and nothing done with it within a year, is of too long standing to entitle one to proceed with, “except in cases of felonies, as provided by the laws of the land, and where the statute of limitation does not run.”
It is the duty, as well as the right of the members of the “traveling presiding councils” to see that every case of personal difficulty, as well as immorality, shall not run along without proper consideration by the authorities of branches more than one year.
This makes it necessary that the missionaries shall acquaint themselves in some way with what is transpiring in branches, whether they are in the branches laboring or not.

According to the present order of the church, the “missionary in charge,” I do not mean the “minister in charge” only, is the one among the missionaries upon whom the special responsibility of looking after such matters and acquainting himself with conditions rests, and whose right it is to act either personally, or to authorize those holding the authority referred to in the law to act.

There is one exception “in matters of personal importance and conduct” in which the “traveling councils” must take cognizance, and that is such cases “in which the law and usages of the church are involved, and the general interests of the church are concerned.” This exception makes it necessary that the “traveling councils,” and especially any one of the members of that body of ministers, whoever he may be, that is appointed in any territory where there are branches, be informed of the nature of matters arising, and determine whether they come under the head of this exception. The information may be obtained in one of two ways: either by the authorities of the branches acknowledging this right and keeping them informed, or by their personal presence in the branches and an examination had. I believe the first means referred to, by which this information is conveyed to the missionary relative to matters arising in branches, is the one considered of first importance in the mind of the Lord, and the one with which he wishes the authorities of the branches to comply. My belief of this is predicated upon the instruction in section 122, paragraph 7, in which it is said to the Twelve and Seventy, "the traveling presiding councils," "together with such high priests as can travel and preach as missionaries," to leave "the branches ... where organization is effected, ... so far as possible." Because of the lack of effective organization, it is not possible to leave the branches as much as is desired; for did they, under present conditions, or at the present time, "the work and church" would be "put to shame, and the preaching of the word hindered," to a greater extent than it is. To effect an organization where it is possible to leave them as fully as desired, and still the preaching as much as is desired; because I do not believe it ought to be there. It seems like human interpolation, and continually involves us in the difficulty of apologizing for an explanation of how the church in a certain or uncertain way was on the earth all the time from Christ's time to the present. That "woman" represented an organism, or it is a meaningless symbol.

That "woman" was "given two wings of a great eagle," symbols of highest flight, "where she hath a place prepared of God that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and three score days." That "woman" flew to that place—"her place"—and was "nourished," not by and surrounded with the serpent, but "from the face of the serpent, that old serpent which is the devil."

Go to Job and learn where you would have to go to get away from the Devil,—off the earth! The result of the feeding and nourishing was that at the end of the "time, times, and half a time," she came "out of the wilderness, clear as the moon, fair as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners" (Doctrine and Covenants 5:3), in its very beginning on the earth in these last days. Would the feeding of lust, passion, superstition, and blood produce that kind of a condition? Of course not.

I ask, Where did the organism, powers, and authority exist during that twelve hundred and sixty years which effected the reestablishing of the church among us in these last days? In the paradise of God, where all its members and officers went ages ago.

"in the wilderness"—"of sin, darkness, and apostasy"? Certainly not. Christ never went into apostasy. Neither did the "woman"—the early church. Men apostatized from it, and created another "woman," arrayed in purple and scarlet colors. The faithful and true went to paradise, taking their priesthood with them.

In the last day, Brigham Young and a host of others apostatized from the church, but the church, the "woman," remains yet. Never did apostatize—never will. She is the Lamb's bride. Do we think Christ made a mistake and chose a bride that would "jilt" him, and he have to choose another? I do not so understand it. H. J. Davison.

THE GATHERING AND RECEIVING INHERITANCES.

The subject of the gathering, and related topics, seem to be much considered by the Saints at this time. The gathering of God’s children being a very prominent feature of the latter-day work, it should engage our most earnest attention, and a proper understanding of the same is very essential. There seems to be a feeling of unrest among the scattered Saints, with the desire that something definite should be done along the line of locating the children of Zion on their inheritances in Zion, according to the declared purposes of God in their behalf in that respect. As to the object and importance, or the necessity of the gathering, we will quote from Doctrine and Covenants. In section 28, paragraph 2, we read:

Whatever ye shall ask in faith, being united in prayer according to my command, ye shall receive; and ye are called to bring to pass the gathering of mine elect, for mine elect hear my voice and harden not their hearts; wherefore the decree hath gone forth from the Father that they shall be gathered in unto one place, upon the face of this land, to prepare their hearts, and be prepared in all things, against the day when tribulation and desolation are sent forth upon the wicked.

This was given in September, 1830, and positively declares that the Father hath decreed that his Saints shall be gathered in unto one place, and for the reasons given in the revelation.

In a general proclamation to all the nations of the Gentiles, given in November, 1831, Doctrine and Covenants 108:3, 4, the Lord said:

Send forth the elders of my church unto the nations which are afar off. . . . And, behold, and lo, this shall be your day, and the voice of the Lord unto all people: Go forth unto the land of Zion; . . . prepare yourselves for the great day of the Lord. . . . Go ye out from among the nations, even from Babylon, from the midst of wickedness, which is spiritual Babylon. But verily thus saith the Lord, Let not your flight be in haste, but let all things be prepared before you; and he that goeth, let him not look back, lest sudden destruction shall come upon him.

In Doctrine and Covenants 45:12-14 we read:

Gather ye out from the eastern lands, . . . go ye forth unto the western countries, . . . gather up your riches that ye may purchase an inheritance which shall hereafter be appointed unto you, and it shall be called the New Jerusalem, a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the saints of the most high God; and the glory of the Lord shall be there, and the terror of the Lord also shall be there, insomuch that the wicked will not come unto it; and it shall be called Zion. And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another. And it shall be said among the wicked, Let us not go up to battle against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible, wherefore we can not stand. And it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy.

There can be no question as to the meaning of the language we have quoted from Doctrine and Covenants. Have we confidence that the same will be fulfilled? In this connection we would ask the reader to read Doctrine and Covenants 1:7, 8 and 2:1, 2.

In a recent editorial in the Herald we read:

It is conceded that there are commandments looking to the fact of gathering. We will be obliged to any reader of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants who will point out to us the prescribed rules which may be called the details of procedure upon which some of these commandments are to be carried out.--Herald, March 14, 1896, p. 242.

To suppose that God would declare a certain work was to be done, and give commandments to men to do it, and not give instructions how to do it—at least sufficiently so that they might go to work intelligently, and make a reasonable degree of progress—would be to charge him with carelessness or neglect, if not with folly in that respect. To suppose that God would give instructions that could not be understood, or that could not be carried out, would be very unreasonable. Then who is to blame if the work is not done?

I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise.—Doctrine and Covenants 81:3.

In February, 1831, the Lord said to the elders of the church:

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, whom I have called: behold, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall assemble yourselves together to agree upon my word, and by the prayer of your faith ye shall receive my law, that ye may know how to govern my church, and have all things right before me.—Doctrine and Covenants 41:1.

In section 42 much was given according to the above promise, including some direction concerning the gathering and the building up of the New Jerusalem. And they were further told to "observe the laws which ye have received, and be faithful. And ye shall hereafter receive church covenants, such as shall be sufficient to establish you, both here [in Kirtland.—J. F.], and in the New Jerusalem." (Doctrine and Covenants 42:18.)

In section 98, paragraph 9, the Lord gave instructions in regard to certain features connected with the gathering, and then adds, "And leave the residue in mine hand."

Taking the Lord at his word, we must believe that he has revealed so much of the details of the work of the gathering that we certainly can, if we will, follow the directions given, and set on foot such measures as will accomplish the work, at least to the extent that the Lord will bless the effort, and, if need be, give further directions concerning the same. When we have done what he has plainly commanded, then we may expect further directions from him, and not until then. God has said, "My law shall be kept on this land."—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 4. He has further said:

Zion shall be redeemed. . . . Therefore, let your hearts be comforted, for all things shall work together for good to them that walk uprightly, and to the sanctification of the church; for I will raise up unto myself a pure people, that will serve me in righteousness; and all that call on the name of the Lord and keep his commandments, shall be saved.—Doctrine and Covenants 97: 4.

Do we believe these statements? If so, will we do what he has already commanded his people to do, as we shall endeavor to show in this article before we close?

Much has been given in Doctrine and Covenants concerning the work of the gathering; but inasmuch as the Lord has again spoken on that subject at our last General Conference, and has there referred us to the revelation given on Fishing River, Missouri, June 22, 1834, (Doctrine and Covenants 102,) we shall not notice so fully what had been previously said as we otherwise might have done, but will give a number of references so that they can be read in connection herewith, and the reader can see that they are all in harmony with each other.

In paragraph 2 of section 102 the Lord informs them why they were not redeemed even then, it being because they were disobedient to his commands, and were "full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself."

God declared that not all were under condemnation, but makes special mention of the churches abroad, many of whom will say, "Where is their God? Behold, he will deliver in time of trouble; otherwise we will not go up unto Zion, and will keep our moneys. Therefore, in consequence of the transgression of my people, it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion."

After giving instructions as to how the Saints should conduct themselves—those who were dwelling in the "regions round about"—the Lord then says:

Now, behold, I say unto you, my friends, in this way you may find favor in the eyes of the people, until the army of Israel becomes very great: and I will soften the hearts of the people, as I did the heart of Pharaoh, from time to time, until my servant, Baurak Ale, and Baneemy, whom I have appointed, shall have time to gather up the strength of my house, and to have sent wise men, to fulfill that which I have commanded concerning the purchasing of all the lands in Jackson County, that can be purchased by money, which can be purchased for money, in the region round about the land which I have appointed to be the land of Zion, for the beginning of the gathering of my saints; all the land which can be purchased in Jackson County, and the counties round about, and leave the residue in mine hand. [Also read paragraph 10 of this section.]

In section 48, paragraph 2, are instructions to save and gather up moneys to purchase lands, by appointing certain ones to purchase them, and to lay the foundation for the city, and to begin the gathering, "according to the laws and commandments which ye have received and which ye shall hereafter receive."

In Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1-4, the Lord gives much information as to the place of the gathering, and the purchasing of the lands for their inheritances, and that Sidney Gilbert was to be an agent unto the church to buy lands for them. Doctrine and Covenants 58: 10-12 speaks of an agent being appointed to purchase lands in Zion. Sidney Rigdon was commanded to write a description of the land of Zion, and that a subscription paper should be presented to all the churches, to obtain money to be put into the hands of the bishop to purchase lands for an inheritance for the children of God, showing that according to God's will the whole region of country about Zion should be purchased as soon as time would permit, and that workmen should be sent to prepare the lands for occupancy by the Saints, and that the bishop or the agent should from time to time make known the privileges of the land, and that the gathering should not be in haste nor by flight, but was to be done as it should be counseled by the elders of the church at the conferences, according to the knowledge which they received from time to time.

Doctrine and Covenants 63: 8, 10, 12 gives much information concerning the purchasing of lands, and the reasons of the Lord for so doing, etc., etc.

From the passages we have quoted and referred to, we learn that God has willed and determined that his saints shall be gathered together at the place appointed, and be prepared to escape the calamities and destructions that are coming upon the world in the near future. (See Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3, 4.) Lands were to be purchased for inheritances. The methods for getting money to do so were given in detail, and to us it seems that there need be no question as to how it should have been done at the time the commands were given. In fact it seems just so that money was obtained in a righteous manner—little or much—and lands purchased for the purposes intended, it was acceptable to the Lord. The Saints were counseled to use wisdom in the matter, and the gathering was to be done as it should be counseled by the elders at the conferences, according to the knowledge they should receive from time to time.

The land at the time the first revelations were given (in 1830 and 1831) was principally unimproved prairie land, and had to have improvements before being fitted for occupancy, hence the need of workmen to be sent to prepare for the coming of the Saints with their families, and the necessity of the elders counseling the Saints as to the gathering, so that too much haste—which would tend to evil—was not to be allowed.

This same principle of not gathering in haste, and according to the counsel of the elders, has again been renewed in the recent revelation, as well as practically it was in 1873, section 117, paragraph 11. That the counsel of the elders must be in harmony with the revelations given of God, needs no argument. Had the Saints lived humbly, and faithfully kept all the commandments of God, including the gathering together their moneys, and purchasing the lands as directed, there is no reason to doubt but that Zion would have been permanently established in due time. But evil was in the church. In 1833, Doctrine and Covenants 95: 4, the Lord told them at Kirtland that unless they repented he would chasten them. But if they would repent he would "turn away all wrath from them." In December, 1833, Doctrine and Covenants 98: 1, 3, the Lord said, concerning those who had been cast out of "the land of their inheritances," that he had suffered it because of their "transgressions," declaring that there were jarrings, and contentions, and envyings, and strife, and lustful and covetous desires among them; therefore by these things they polluted their inheritances.

In June, 1834, Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2,—the Fishing River revelation,—the Lord made some heavy charges against the churches, and said that for those reasons they had not been redeemed even then; and then he renews—as we have already quoted—his commandments as to how they may be redeemed, among other things again commanding them to purchase the lands in Jackson County, etc.

Evidently, then, it was not because God had not given sufficient directions as to how Zion was to be established and the gathering accomplished that failure had resulted, but because they did not follow directions, or did not keep the commandments of God.

Taking into consideration the fact that God has informed us as to why they failed—that it was not because of want of instructions, but because of evil and transgression—is it wise on our part to claim or pretend that there is not sufficient revealed in Doctrine and Covenants for the guidance of the church in that respect at this time? Conditions have changed, it is true; land is worth more now that it was seventy-five years ago; but will it need any different process to raise money now to buy land worth fifty dollars per acre, or even more, than when it was worth only one dollar and twenty-five or two dollars and fifty cents per acre? If money was now gathered together according to instructions given, as we find them in Doctrine and Covenants, and sent to the bishop, or any agent the church might appoint in Zion, could not, and would not, the end in view be accomplished, even though land cost more now than in 1831? We see no reason why it can not be done; and unless we bestir ourselves along those lines we also will fail, not because of insufficient instruction, but because of our failure to keep the commandments of God in that respect.

What is to prevent the churches, not only of the eastern countries as stated in Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10, but in all the world, from complying with the command of God to gather together their moneys, and send wise men—men of business ability and experience—to purchase the lands as God has commanded them to do, with the purpose in view of eventually possessing them as inheritances according to the laws of consecration which God has given? (See Doctrine and Covenants 102: 8.)

Has God ever given us to understand that any other plan than the one he has given, and as we have presented from his word, will be accepted of him? If so, we are not aware of it.

That God has purposed that his saints should inherit the land of Zion, none who believe in the divinely appointed mission of Joseph Smith will doubt. That they must do so in harmony with his will and law—the celestial law—none will question. What that law is in its fullness we may not as yet be agreed upon. But we shall attempt to present some thoughts along that line.

That the Saints will receive their inheritances according to some specific law, is certain. God declared that it was his will that his saints should possess the land according to the laws of consecration which I have given. (See Doctrine and Covenants 102: 8.) Joseph the Martyr wrote to W. W. Phelps, November 27, 1832:

It is contrary to the will and commandment of God that those who receive not their inheritance by consecration, agreeably to his law, which he has given that he may tithe his people to pre-
To Bishop Partridge, he wrote as follows:

I proceed to answer your questions, concerning the consecration of property: ... The fact is this; a man is bound by the law of the church to consecrate to the bishop before he can be considered a legal heir to the kingdom of Zion; and this too, without constraint; and unless he does this he can not be acknowledged before the Lord, on the church book.—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 259, 260.

In Doctrine and Covenants 58: 7:

And now I give unto you further directions concerning this land. It is wisdom in me that my servant Martin Harris should be an example unto the church, in laying his moneys before the bishop of the church. And, also, this is a law unto every man that cometh unto this land, to receive an inheritance, and he shall do with his moneys according as the law directs.

Doctrine and Covenants 72: 3 says that “according to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the bishop in Zion.” Section 42, paragraph 9, says:

Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family.

In a letter to Bishop Partridge, Joseph says:

Therefore those persons consecrating property to the bishop in Zion, and then receiving an inheritance back, must show reasonably to the bishop that he wants [or needs].—J. F. as much as he claims.

Doctrine and Covenants 57: 3 says:

And let my servant Edward Partridge, stand in the office which I have appointed him, to divide the saints their inheritance, even as I have commanded.

Section 58, paragraph 4, says:

And whoso standeth in this mission [bishop of the church; see context.—J. F.] is appointed to be a judge in Israel, like as it was in ancient days, to divide the lands of the heritage of God unto his children, and to judge his people by the testimony of the just ... according to the laws of the kingdom which are given by the prophets of God; for verily I say unto you, My law shall be kept on this land.

Section 51 says:

Hearken unto me, saith the Lord your God, and I will speak unto you my servant Edward Partridge, and give unto him directions; for it must needs be that he receive directions how to organize this people, for it must needs be that they are organized according to my laws, if otherwise, they will be cut off; wherefore let my servant Edward Partridge, ... appoint unto this people their portion, every man equal according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs; and let my servant Edward Partridge, when he shall appoint a man his portion, give unto him a writing [deed—see context.—J. F.] that shall secure unto him his portion, and he shall hold it, even this right and this inheritance in the church.

Note: This latter revelation was given at Kirtland; but by reading the whole section it will be found that it was instruction given for the whole church everywhere.

If we will now let our minds grasp the whole subject, and consider that lands were to be purchased by the bishop and others, for inheritances for the Saints, and that God had declared it was his will that those lands should be possessed by the Saints according to the laws of consecration (see Doctrine and Covenants 102:8), and that the bishop was the one to divide the heritage of God among his children, according to just and equitable laws, and give to them a deed by which they individually were to hold their inheritances, thus making all things sure according to the laws of the land (see Doctrine and Covenants 51:1), must we not conclude that in order that this all might be done, the bishop must first, as the agent of the church, have and hold the legal title to all those lands that had been purchased with the moneys of the Saints, before he could divide them among the Saints as inheritances, and give them deeds therefor?

To the mind of the writer it so seems, for how could any one receive from the bishop that which he (the individual) already had possession of? Section 42, paragraph 9, says we receive by consecration a stewardship. Joseph Smith told Bishop Partridge that those consecrating to the bishop would receive an inheritance back. To W. W. Phelps he wrote they must receive their inheritances by consecration according to the law governing the case. Then, how is this all to be done? To our mind it is thus: The bishop becomes possessed of land in Zion according to directions given in Doctrine and Covenants, holding the legal title thereto as agent for the church. A man goes up to Zion who is worthy an inheritance; he does with his moneys or other properties that he may have as the law directs, which is to lay all things before the bishop—he consecrates all he has, be it little or much. He now becomes a “legal heir to the kingdom of Zion,” and is entitled to an inheritance or stewardship whereby he becomes able to sustain himself and family. (See Doctrine and Covenants 42:9.) The bishop, according to the law (section 51, paragraph 1) now gives him his portion according to his family, etc., etc., and gives him a deed to secure him in his portion or inheritance in the church. He has now received his inheritance according to the law, as Joseph wrote to W. W. Phelps, and his name is now recorded “in the book of the law of God.” If he was a man of limited means, or a poor man, he has doubtless received more than he gave to the bishop when he consecrated or laid all things—money or other property—before the bishop in Zion, and consequently has been exalted financially, as God has said would be the case with the poor when his law was carried out. (See Doctrine and Covenants 101:2.) If, upon the other hand, a man of wealth comes up to Zion and complies with the law, he will receive from the bishop his inheritance upon the same conditions that the poor man did, according to his family, his needs, and his wants, etc., and may receive much less back as his inheritance than what he consecrated; and the rich man will be made low financially, even as God has said would be done when his law was complied with. (See Doctrine and Covenants 101:2.)

Now God's plan is to equalize his children in temporal things, as well as in spiritual things; and no matter how much we may quibble over, or ignore his law, he will not accept of Zion until she comes up to the standard he has laid down for her; even the celestial law. By consecrating, or laying before the bishop in Zion all of their properties, or moneys, the Saints can and will completely fulfill the law of section 106, which requires all of their surplus properties as a beginning of tithing, and after receiving back their inheritances or stewardships, they then pay one tenth of their interest annually as a tithing, as required by the law as stated in section 106.

The writer is fully assured that the terms "law of consecration," and "law of tithing" are strictly synonymous terms, meaning exactly the same thing.

"But," says one, "have not all those who are now living and owning land in the land of Zion, already an inheritance in Zion, and entitled to all the blessings promised to Zion's children?" If so, what means the language of Joseph Smith to W. W. Phelps, where he says:

Bro. William W. Phelps... I have many things which I wish to communicate. Some things which I will mention in this letter which are laying with great weight on my mind... and while I dictate this letter, I fancy to myself that you are saying or thinking something similar to these words: "My God, great and mighty art thou; therefore, show unto thy servant the standard he has laid down for her; even the bishop, the man that God has appointed in a legal way, agreeably to thy law to organize and regulate the church affairs of the same?"

Bro. William... I will proceed to unfold to you some of the feelings of my heart, and answer the question. Firstly, it is the duty of the Lord's clerk, whom he has appointed, to keep a history, and a general church record of all things that transpire in Zion, and of all those who consecrate properties, and receive inheritances legally from the bishop, and also their manner of life, their faith and works. . . .

Secondly, it is contrary to the will and commandment of God that those who receive not their inheritances by consecration agreeably to his law which he has given, that he may tithe his people... should have their names enrolled with the people of God.—HERALD for 1892, p. 761.

If certain things were in 1832 required to give us a legal right to our inheritances, will not the same things now be required? And, if so, we should make careful inquiry and see if they are all complied with, before we rest satisfied that all is well in Zion.

Joseph Smith, evidently, from the tenor of his language above quoted, did not believe that simply going to Zion and purchasing lands was complying with the conditions necessary to give us a legal title to an inheritance in Zion. It will not necessarily require that the bishop should have possession of a great amount of land before commencing to give inheritances to the Saints; for if those who come up to Zion to receive inheritances, bring with them means, and consecrate them to the bishop, he can use those means to purchase more lands, and thus be prepared to give to others inheritances, and thus the work can go on without there being at any one time any great amount of lands in the bishop's hands.

While no doubt more or less friction will be developed before all things will work out, and some may stand aloof, and refuse to fall in line, yet that should not deter us from moving out upon the lines indicated in the revelations that have been given for our guidance. If we wait until all are agreed, we will never start. Had Lot waited till all of his friends were willing to go with him, he would have perished with the rest of the disobedient.

In HERALD for April 11, 1906, is an article entitled "Another view of Zion and the gathering," in which are some statements we wish to notice. The writer of the article says:

We have no precedent to guide us only the historical fact that the Nephites and Enoch succeeded in eliminating poverty from among their people. The details of how they accomplished their work we have no knowledge of. . . .

To say that we have no knowledge of how they accomplished their work, is to our mind a very inconsiderate statement. That the Nephites and Enoch brought about the conditions existing among them by obedience to the commandments of God—the celestial law of God—we think none will question. Then if God has again revealed his law—the celestial law—to us in our day, we certainly can find in that law the details, to a certain extent at least, of that law, and we can not consistently claim that we have no knowledge of how they accomplished their work.

In February, 1831, section 41, paragraph 1, God commanded the elders to assemble themselves together, and that through the prayer of faith they should receive his law, and that thereby they might know how to govern the church, and have all things right before the Lord.

In section 42, paragraph 18, he gave much concerning how to govern the church, including, in part, temporal concerns for the benefit of the poor, and then tells them to "observe the laws which ye have received, and be faithful. And ye shall hereafter receive church covenants, such as shall be sufficient to establish you, both here [Kirtland], and in the New Jerusalem."

In section 44, paragraph 3, they were commanded to "visit the poor and the needy, and administer to their relief, that they may be kept until all things may be done according to my law, which ye have received.'

Does this look as though we did not or could not know anything of how those ancients brought about the conditions that then existed among them?

God ‘called his people Zion, [in the days of Enoch,] because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them.’ (Doctrine and Covenants 36:2.)

They obeyed the celestial law; and, if we do so, we will also bring about the same conditions that existed among them. And, if we do not, we will share the same fate as did the church organized in 1830. Like causes will always, under similar conditions, produce the same effects. God has told us what to do, and to leave the residue in his hands. (See Doctrine and Covenants 98:9.) He has said his law shall be kept on this land (see Doctrine and Covenants 58:4); and that he will raise up a pure people who will serve him in righteousness; and that all that call on the name of the Lord and keep his commandments shall be saved (see Doctrine and Covenants 64:6).

Do we believe these statements? If so, will we do what he has commanded in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants?

Again we quote from article in HERALD:

When the message reaches the world that we have the true Zion and that poverty is not found among us, ... There will be two classes which will flock to Zion like bees to a clover-patch. One is the honest, industrious, and pure-minded who seek to serve God in the spirit of truth and humility. ... The other clan will be those who are after the loaves and fishes. ... Who is going to determine who is worthy or unworthy to enter the church? and when they enter, do they not become entitled to the privileges of Zion, after they have been invited to come?

Certainly, all will be entitled to the privileges of Zion, when they comply with the conditions required. God has given instructions regulating the gathering besides those concerning the purchasing of lands. In section 48, paragraph 2, he says it shall be “as is appointed to him by the presidency and the bishop of the church, according to the laws and commandments, which ye have received, and which ye shall hereafter receive.” In section 58, paragraph 12, we are told:

And let the work of the gathering be not in haste, nor by flight, but let it be done as it shall be counseled by the elders of the church at the conferences, according to the knowledge which they receive from time to time.

In this last-mentioned section and paragraph, the bishop is instructed from time to time to make known the privileges of the land—no doubt to tell how many he can accommodate with inheritances, etc., etc. Certainly here are a number of safe-guards to prevent them “flocking to Zion like bees to a clover-patch.” Yet in addition to that which we have already quoted from the Doctrine and Covenants, God has further instructed that those—elders and members—who go up to Zion to receive their inheritances must take a proper certificate from the officials of the church to the bishop in Zion, before they will be entitled to “the privileges of Zion.” Thus we, upon proper examination, find that the chances for taking undue advantage are very small, as the road to Zion is well guarded by the counsel and commandments of God. (See Doctrine and Covenants 72:4, 5.)

The Lord declared to the elders in September, 1831, that he has set them “to provide for his saints in these last days, that they may obtain an inheritance in the land of Zion, and, behold, I, the Lord, declare unto you, and my words are sure and shall not fail, that they shall obtain it; but all things must come to pass in their time; wherefore be not weary in well-doing, for ye are laying the foundation of a great work. And out of small things proceedeth that which is great.” (Doctrine and Covenants 64:6.)

INHERITED TENDENCY AND ITS RELATION TO CHARACTER-BUILDING.

[This article from the pen of our lamented Bro. J. B. Lentz has been tendered the Daughters of Zion for one of their readings. It is accepted with gratitude by the committee on literature, who feel that its publication can not but accentuate to the church the loss it has sustained in his removal from the scenes of his active usefulness. It was read at a parents’ day meeting of the Fremont District, just a few weeks before his death.]

One author defines heredity as that biological law by which all beings endowed with life tend to repeat themselves in their descendants, or the law of reproduction of like by like. This conception, he says, is purely theoretical, for the phenomena of life do not lend themselves to such mathematical precision. Life grows more complex as we ascend the scale from the vegetable world to the higher animals and thence to man. Inherited tendency can be illustrated by a plant from which as a center radiates a variety of forms slightly varying from the parent.

If one of the extremes of these variations is taken, it is found to become a center of a new set of variations, and by continually taking the extreme in the same direction, an increasing variation in that direction can be effected, until checked by becoming so great that it interferes with the healthy action of the organism or in any other way prejudicial.

Through the operation of this law Luther Burbank, the wizard of horticulture, has perfected a white blackberry, a seedless plum, a cactus with no thorns, and a great variety of other forms of vegetable and plant life.

When we consider the law of heredity in animals, we find it more complicated than in plant life. Nevertheless, the domestic habits as well as the instincts of the lower animals are inherited by their offspring.
A noticeable peculiarity of the shepherd dog is that of running around, instead of at a flock of sheep when first taken out to be trained.

The judicious breeder of to-day recognizes this law when he carefully selects favorable variations to be the parents of his future stock.

When we come to consider this and its bearing upon man, physically and mentally, which of course includes character-building, I do not think it wise to take an extreme view.

If we give the law of heredity too much weight in character-building, it subtracts more than it should from our free moral agency and may be mistaken by some as a license to do wrong, under the excuse that they inherited from their ancestors so strong a desire to do evil that they could not overcome it.

Paul says, "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."

The operation of this law has its proper bearing upon man in the formation of character, and we will now consider it in this light.

In man the first thing that attracts our attention to this law is the heredity of external structure. As a rule, with hardly an exception, when we meet some one who has seen a new baby, we ask the question, "Whom does it look like?" The usual answer is something like this; "I think she looks like her mamma," or "He is just the image of his father."

This law not only operates in families, but its effect is also seen in nations that have originated from one or two families.

We notice that the gypsies of England, France, Italy, and Spain all resemble each other. Their hard, sharp features, jet-black hair, fine white teeth, bright eyes and fascinating glance, also their intellectual peculiarities, go to show that they originally came from one blood. Nothing makes a lasting impression upon their minds; they are as thoughtless as a child and seem to live only for and in the present. The gypsies of all countries are as restless as running water and are supposed to have originated from one or two families of the lowest caste of India. Having been driven from that land, they became nomadic in their habits, which have been inherited by their offspring from generation to generation.

Perhaps the Jews, with their black hair and beard, long eye-lashes, thick, prominent, arched eyebrows, large, dark eyes, dark complexion, and their strongly aquiline nose, furnish us a better example than the gypsy. The Jew also shows an inherited tendency to long life according to the statistical tables of France, Algeria, and Prussia.

In Germany twenty-five per cent of the Christians die before they are six months old, while twenty-five per cent of the Jews live to be twenty-eight. Fifty per cent of the Christians die before reaching twenty-eight, while fifty per cent of the Jews reach the age of the fifty-three. As we step from the physical to the mental, inherited tendency diminishes as it does when we step from the vegetable to the animal, or from the animal to man. It seems to operate through the mental but in a more complicated way.

Among poets, forty per cent have illustrious relatives. A glance at any history of painting, or a visit to a few museums, will show that families of painters are not rare. For instance, in England we have the Landseers, and in France the Bonheurs. In a list of forty-two painters of Italian, Spanish, and Flemish descent—held to be of highest rank—twenty-one had illustrious relatives. This proves that the law of heredity operates through the mental as well as the physical man.

I am acquainted with a bright, intelligent young man, a civil engineer, who has lost several well-paying positions of honor and trust because he has inherited from his father an appetite for strong drink. When I saw him last he was working on a farm for his brother-in-law, away from temptation, trying manfully to overcome this evil tendency. If this boy's father could have looked down through the future years and have seen the curse he was likely to transmit to this boy, perhaps he would have tried with greater force to overcome the habit in himself.

Here we have a practical lesson on inherited tendency and its relation to character-building. Let one and all profit by it.

We can see how a grove of trees, planted in a ravine, where cattle would be permitted to crop off the tender sprouts on one side, but not on the other, could be made to travel up the side of the hill or mountain year after year. So with us. If man would crop off his evil thoughts and nature, and continue to do this year after year, generation after generation, we can see how the human race would gradually ascend the mount of good character toward God.

It seems to me that it was partly on account of this law that Enoch and his band became so righteous that God translated them to a better sphere. It is not impossible, but highly probable, that many of the inhabitants of that Zion were his children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren.

I think the faithfulness of Abraham and this law of heredity was one reason why God chose Abraham's seed as a special people or nation through which he intended to perpetuate his name.

This also assists us in understanding why God sometimes destroys the children of the wicked, with their wicked parents, as recorded in the sixteenth chapter of Genesis and the sixteenth chapter of Numbers.

Seeing then, that children may and do inherit righteous or wicked tendencies from their parents, should we not put forth a greater effort to become pure and holy in word, thought, and deed, not alone for our own salvation but for the salvation of future generations?

In this brief paper I have only touched upon this subject, but I hope these few thoughts will stimulate your minds to deeper study along this line.

Read before the Fremont Sunday-school convention at Tabor, Iowa, February 1, 1906.

Questions on July Reading.

What is a biological law? Do all living beings produce exactly their own like? What is said of the complexity of life as we ascend the scale from the lower forms? By what may inherited tendency be illustrated? In the operation of inherited tendency, how may an increasing variation in one direction be effected? Give instances of what has been accomplished by Luther Burbank in the realm of horticulture through the operation of this law. An account of his development of the crimson poppy from the yellow California poppy is given on the cover of W. Atlee Burpee's seed catalogue for this spring. This will furnish a good illustration of the principle under consideration. What is one noticeable peculiarity of the shepherd dog? Is this an advantage in the care of sheep? In the breeding of sheep dogs, of what benefit is a knowledge of the law by which peculiarities are transmitted? Is it wise to take an extreme view of the influence of heredity upon the character of man? What saying of Paul warrants the belief that inherited tendencies may be overcome? What evidence of the law of heredity do we have in the external structure of man? How do the gypsies and the Jews illustrate this point? Does the law of heredity operate mentally as well as physically? Is the liquor habit ever inherited? Give the illustration mentioned. Have similar cases come under your notice? How may we guard against the knowledge of such instances and the law underlying them? How might a grove of trees be made to spread in one direction? What inspiration does this illustration contain? Do you think the law of heredity had anything to do with the perfection of the people of Enoch's city or with the call of Abraham? Give evidence from your own experience of the effect of heredity and of the overcoming of inherited tendencies.

Letter Department

Baldwin, Iowa, May 29, 1906.

Dear Herald: Knowing that there are many who like to hear of the progress of the work in this part of the vineyard, I write for their information.

The writer came to this place on the 21st, and was rejoiced to find Bro. Wildermuth on the train headed for the same place. A letter had been sent to me to come and baptize some who had been convinced by our preaching last fall and winter, so on last Sunday afternoon, in spite of rain and mud, the writer led four and Bro. Wildermuth one, into the waters of baptism.

Their names are Bro. and Sr. McCumber, Jr., Bro. and Sr. McCumber, Sr., and Sr. McNamee, all heads of families and prosperous farmers.

Then on Monday the writer was again privileged to trouble the water, and Bro. and Sr. Lowe, a prosperous young merchant and wife of this city, were made members of the household of God. This makes in all seventeen baptized in this community since last July and it was then a new place. There are more to follow and we expect to organize a large branch here before long.

We were sorry to learn that our genial and efficient colaborer, Bro. Wildermuth, is to be located in the city of Clinton, for while Clinton needs him, the cry, “Come and preach to us,” is so loud from all over the district that we would like to keep him. Truly the harvest is great but the laborers are few.

Expect to start tent-work this week if the weather is so we can. We have more calls for it than we can fill and could run another tent with profit.

The prospects for the work in the district are brighter than last year and we hope to see much good accomplished. May God bless his people everywhere and his Spirit guide into all truth, is the prayer of Your brother in Christ,

FRID B. FARR.

Otway, Ohio, May 27, 1906.

Editors Herald: I love to read the Herald; it is a source of enjoyment; it is food for the soul. I am away back here in those backwoods trying by the help of the Lord to do what I can for the advancement of his cause and the upbuilding of his kingdom. We have no branch here within reach of us—no place to hold meeting. There are ten Saints in this locality. Strife and persecution run so high here that they will not open their churches for us to hold services in and still they say the Lord has only one church. Paul says one Lord, one faith, one baptism. And again we find in Romans 8:14, "as many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the sons of God," and still they all claim to be led by the Spirit of God. He whom God sends speaks the things of God. (See John 3:34.) I can praise the Lord for the influence of his Holy Spirit—it leads us to repentance and to the waters of baptism and to obey the gospel in full. After hands are laid on we get the gift of the Holy Ghost. We find in Acts, eighth chapter, where Phillip did some baptizing. The apostles were at Jerusalem and they sent Peter and John down, and when they came they prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost, for as yet he was fallen on none of them, only they were baptized in the name of Jesus Christ. Then laid they their hands on them and they received the Holy Ghost. Now there is one witness that is enough to prove that the Holy Ghost is given by the laying on of hands and that witness is Simon, the one that bewitched the people, and when he believed he saw that the Holy Ghost was given by the laying on of hands he offered them money if they would give him the power. Peter told him that his heart was not right in the sight of God to think that the gift of God could be purchased with money.

Your unworthy writer can truthfully testify to this latter-day work. There are lots of people here who think that we teach that the power of giving of the Holy Ghost is in the laying on of hands. It is given in obedience to command, just the same as baptism is for the remission of sins when we obey and fulfill that part of righteousness, as Jesus told John the Baptist it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness—not a part of it. There is no blessing given in full through disobedience. We must come to God’s plan, and he is ready and willing to do his part. We are only instruments in the hands of God—all glory and praise be to him.

I want to do all I can in this grand work. I ask the prayers of all the Saints in my behalf. Dear Saints, stand firm in the cause of Christ. Only those that endure unto the end are saved in the kingdom of God.

Ofttimes when I am out at my work my mind is reflecting back over this work, trusting in the Lord, and the Holy Spirit fills my soul with joy and gladness. There is pleasure in living in obedience to the command of God. God is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. If we do his will we shall know of the doctrine. Jesus said, “Ye are the light of the world.” Then may we let our light shine so the world may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven. If we are the light we should set the example.

I have been reading of the General Conference. That certainly was a glorious time. I would have loved to have been there.

Let us live faithful to the end, stand all persecutions, for Jesus says blessed are ye when you are persecuted. He has promised never to leave or forsake us and that we should not be tempted more than we can stand. Let us not be as the foolish virgins—let us watch and be ready when the Bridegroom comes. May we have part in the first resurrection, and enjoy the thousand-year reign of the Savior here on the earth, when the angel will bind old Satan and put him in the bottomless pit and he can not deceive us any more until the thousand years are finished.

My prayers are for the redemption of Zion and for the advancement of the cause of Christ in the world. May the Lord be with you all until we meet.

Your brother in the one faith,

J. T. MITCHELL.

Editors Herald: Will you kindly permit me, while the subject is fresh in the minds of your readers, to correct one or two verbal inaccuracies in my article entitled, “If a comet should strike the sun.” The errors are not perhaps of importance in themselves; still as they would tend to obscure my meaning here and there, it is as well perhaps to correct them as speedily as possible.

I am only too pleased to find that in a highly technical and unavoidably abstruse subject such as that of my essay, there are so few inaccuracies to be found; and I will ask my numerous and respected readers to kindly reperuse the article in the light of these few corrections, and see whether it does not gain in lucidity and clearness thereby.

On page 511, second column, lines 3 and 4, it says that “there are in addition to those brilliant objects to which the same comet is applied, a number of comet-like bodies,” etc. This should read, “there are in addition to those brilliant objects to which the name comet is applied, a number of comet-like bodies," etc.

On page 511, second column, lines 33 and 34, it says, "Upwards of five hundred nonluminous bodies are known to revolve as competent elements of the solar system." This should read "component elements" etc.

Page 512, column 1, lines 23 and 24, says, "The entire length of the Grand Trunk of the Canadian Pacific Railway." It should read, "The entire length of the Grand Trunk (Railway) -- or the Canadian Pacific Railway."

On page 512, (second column,) line 35, for "unvarnished practice," read "unvarnished practice."

This is, I think, all that requires emendation or correction; but I feel that I can not suffer so favorable an opportunity to pass without saying how deeply I have been moved by the more than kindly expressions which have been made to me, from time to time, both by pen and by tongue, relating to the intellectual good the writers and speakers have derived from essays and articles upon astronomy. These kindly expressions have all the more weight with me, from their spontaneous and altogether unexpected character.

I earnestly trust that when the time arrives when my own feeble pen will necessarily become silent, that other and younger and abler pens will continue the sublime story of the intrinsic loveliness and beauty and grandeur of astronomical research, discovery, and exposition in your valued columns; for if there is a subject under the heavens which forcibly and powerfully demonstrates the utter futility and feebleness of mere written words, as vehicles of thought, that one subject is astronomy.

How, for instance, can I portray or convey to my readers any adequate idea or conception of suns and comets, whether of the self-luminous or bright kind, or of the nonluminous or dark kind,—whose vast density runs into twenty-one figures of tons in weight, or whose angular distance exceeds twenty-nine figures, rising to hundreds of billions, or even to trillions and quadrillions of miles? The whole subject surges with unimaginable vastness, power, greatness, and mystery! How, then, shall "worms of the earth" expound them, or creatures of yesterday understand?

I have only, like the great Sir Isaac Newton said, (though immeasurably his inferior in science,) just "picked up a pebble here and there; (like a child playing upon the seashore,) when lo! the great ocean of truth lies unexplored before me!"

Doctor Parker, one of the most able and eminent divines and orators, now gone to his rest, said at the City Temple, London, England, in one of his discourses: "Man looks at points; but God beholds circumferences!"

This is the real and psychological secret and explanation of man's intellectual littleness and inferiority as compared with the incomparable Deity!

May the grand and glorious time speedily come, when we shall "know even as we are known of him," is the prayer of Your brother,

F. R. TUBB.

HARDIN, Missouri, May 18, 1906.

Editors Herald: Please permit me a little space in HERALD to voice my protest to an advertisement appearing there. On the cover of May 9 is advertised a new idea in COMICS to appear in Chicago Sunday Tribune, "Watch for it and laugh."

Now it appears to me that the HERALD is in hard straits if it has to insert an ad. of this kind, whether the editor is responsible for it, or the Board of Publication. The fact remains that it is very much out of place. I do not believe in being too straight-faced; but there is a medium in all things, and I do not think the "comic supplement" is it. It is laughter-producing; in fact it produces "much laughter."

Now, if it is right to insert this advertisement in the HERALD, it can not be wrong to buy and read the paper, and of course laugh heartily over it. Yet the Lord told us what to do on the Lord's day in Doctrine and Covenants 59:2, 3. And paragraph 4 adds, "And inasmuch as ye do these things, with thanksgiving, with cheerful hearts and countenances, not with much laughter, for this is sin," etc. And yet, our HERALD has become an agency for the producing of "much laughter" through the medium of the Chicago Sunday Tribune.

The HERALD is helping men to sin, and I suppose we will work for the HERALD, try to get subscribers, then pray to the Lord and say, "Suffer us not to be led into temptation!" Is this the way that Zion is coming up higher, becoming pure in heart, and getting ready for the gathering? "Oh, what a gathering that will be!"

Yours in the one hope,

T. J. SHELDON.

[The advertisement referred to is on the advertising page of HERALD, and was inserted as part payment of the Tribune as a newspaper.—EDITOR.]

Editors Herald: About the 16th of May I said "good-bye" to my dear ones, and was off to my field of labor. I must say I was made to rejoice to get my field back again. This will be my third year in this field. The hearty cooperation of all the Saints in this field, I believe, has helped us to do much good, God has blessed us abundantly in the past, and we have great reasons for still trusting him.

I trust and pray that I may be able to live so humble and pure that God can use me for the best of his work in this part. How my heart would rejoice if I could live so close to God that he would direct me from place to place. I feel that I could labor with more zeal, if I knew I was laboring in places where God had sent me.

This work is all to me. I am now at work; have baptized one since I came to the field. Bro. Summerfield was with me. When we bade them good-bye one gave us a dollar apiece and said, "Brethren, I feel happy, and may God bless you." We left them with happy hearts.

We came on to this place; were with the Saints over Sunday; had a good time. Will attend conference at Sweet Home Branch, June 2; anticipate a good time.

According to request in HERALD by Brn. I. N. White and Joseph Luff, I shall now request all who wish to write me in regard to work in this field, to please address me at Clyde, Missouri, in care of E. S. Fannon. This will be my address this year. May God's choice blessings be ours, is my prayer.

Your brother in the great conflict,

W. E. HADEN.

DES MOINES, Iowa, June 5, 1906.

Editors Herald: District conference passed off nicely, as did also the conventions. Brn. Heman C. Smith and James McKiernan remained over. Bro. McKiernan going to Boone to-day, and Bro. Smith going to the same place to-morrow. Meetings held at the church last night and to-night, by Bro. Heman. Papers had a good notice of the Sunday services in last night's issue. The morning paper asked for notes of the sermon, but it was impossible to grant their request in time for their issue yesterday.

Tent-work in the district begins at St. Charles by Brn. Christy, Reiste, and Peters, and at Colo by Brn. M. H. Cook, Roth, and Mintun. The decision is that tent-work will begin in the city in the near future to continue during the summer. Two are to be baptized in the city next Sunday, possibly others. Several inquiries from those who have become interested in an investigation of our claims for reading-matter, and to converse with the ministry. Brn. Cook and Clark met two of the Utah representatives at Sr. Cargill's last week, and it seems that they were not well acquainted with their own faith, or els were willfully ignorant. They make the plea that the court decisions against the Utah church are similar to the conviction of Jesus Christ, simply a matter of persecution. How far from the truth this is, every one can see. Prospects for the spread of the work among the people of the city were never brighter.

death to the chief of police, and secured a permit to preach on the street, and the policeman on the watch where I told him that he would see that I was not interrupted. So we will do the best we can.

There is a big midway show going all this week at the park. That takes a great many off the streets at night. It is very warm weather down here.

I am not very favorably impressed with reaping much of a harvest of souls in Tennessee, with what I have seen of this country and the indifference that is shown by the people. As soon as Bro. E. L. Hansen joins me, I think we will try the country and see if we can get some openings for the word of truth. There are five members of the church in this city, but they are all in business that keeps them all day and very near half the night, so none of them get out to my preaching.

Your brother in the faith,

1719 Seventh Street, LOUISVILLE, Kentucky.

Dear Herald: I love to read the HERALD, especially the letters. I have often received strength and encouragement from them, when I have felt downcast and discouraged. And when I read of the good that others are doing in this great work, I feel stronger to bear my troubles and sorrows, that I must bear my earthly sorrows alone, or nearly so. But I have found that that idea was wrong. It was myself that was so far away from God, instead of he being so far away from me. I would cry to him from the depth of my sorrow-stricken heart to come nearer, ever nearer; and I look back now upon the hours of deepest sorrow as his greatest blessings, and thank the dear Father that he allowed me to be so stricken with sorrow and beset with trials that I should feel so deeply the need of his comfort. As my longing cries reached his ever ready ear, he drew near and brought sweet comfort to my aching heart. No human voice could have uttered words that would have brought such sweet rest to the weary soul; no promise made by human lips could have brought such repose of mind as did the still small voice which spake rest to my soul. I found that he had come so near that I could feel his presence, comforting me as naught else could have done. I called upon him all the more often. I began to consult him upon all occasions, and trust him with all my heart. I began to rely upon him, depend upon him, and consult him on all business transactions, asking his guidance and counsel. I have found him and his Son to be desirable companions every day of my life, smoothing out the wrinkles, helping me to bear my burdens, easing my heavy load as I journey on adown life's rugged pathway, and preparing me for the life to come beyond the grave. In times of peril I ask his protection and feel that I have not asked in vain. He is my all, all I can depend on; and to be for ever in the presence of my Savior would be joy complete. Could I not go to him in my sorrow, how dark and desolate my life would be!

Dear Saints, how thankful we should be that we are the children of a merciful Father, who deals with justice and leniency with all his children, forgiving them their transgressions, and watching over them in loving kindness. Then if we are children of a merciful Father, we should be merciful to each other, forgiving those who despitely treat us,—those who in a thoughtless moment or in a moment of anger should do or say something that did not just suit us. Should we be stern and relentless, and harden our hearts against them, refusing to reason the matter with them? God says, "Come let us reason together." If God is merciful enough to ask us to reason with him, who is able to crush us in the twinkling of an eye, should

we (poor, insignificant mortals that we are) not be willing to reason with a weak brother, or a sister, or a child who has gone astray? Should we deal with a cruel, unrelenting hand with the young, who in a thoughtless moment have stepped aside from the path of right? There are many of us who have reached the age of maturity years ago, that have turned from the straight and narrow way many times in our lives; so it is not to be wondered at that children should do the same. Let us not be too stern and unrelenting; for if God had not been merciful to us we should be lost.

As to the young, I would say that I have seen many a precious jewel inclosed in a rough shell that took much polishing to make it presentable. I do not uphold any one in wrongdoing; but I do know that justice flavored with sympathy and mercy will many times do more good that the most cruel punishment. Not such sympathy as that which will flow forth in honeyed words to the face, and turn to bitter, venomous reviling and scandal behind the back; but a sympathy of word and deed, and kind but stern reproof, that the offender will know that you do not uphold him in his sin, but that you have his welfare at heart, and will be his stanch friend if he will turn to the right, and stand firmly there. Such sympathy is uplifting to the fallen one, and worthy of a saint of God. I have seen enough in my lifetime to know that more souls go down to ruin through the unsympathetic judgment and venomous scandal of a heartless world, than from any other cause. Shall we who are the children of a merciful Father,—we who profess better things, show less mercy and a harder heart than the people of the world who profess nothing? Let us awake to our duty—to lift up the fallen, cheer the faint, comfort the sorrowing, and be saints of a living God, workers in the Master's vineyard, approved of God, that when we pass from this scene of action we will be acceptable with the Father, and loved by the Son.

I ask all the Saints to pray that I may be found faithful to the end, living the word. Ever your sister in the one faith,

Mrs. R. C. H.

Piedmont, Missouri, June 5, 1906.

Editors Herald: This leaves me well, and busy engaged in the work of the Lord. I left home and loved ones the 4th of May, came down to Joplin, Missouri, where I lived one year. The Saints were glad to see me, and to have me preach for them. I held meetings in their church one week; had fine meetings. Bro. Ray Foster suggested that he come with me, to Laclede County. We came to Lebanon, went out ten miles west, found Bro. J. W. Foster and family and began meetings that night. Continued about two weeks in the union church. Succeeded in stirring up the Campbellite people. They sent for J. M. Martin. A debate was agreed upon, to begin July 23.

I thought I would do no debating this year; but I can not preach without debating or running, and I will not run. I referred the debate to Bro. Henry Spencer; but he wrote me I must meet it myself, so I will do the best I can. I left the people in Laclede County waiting until the debate. Came to Springfield; preached one night. The brethren assisted me on my way to Piedmont, Missouri, requesting me to return in July and August and assist them in tent-work, in the city of Springfield. I met Bro. J. T. Davis here June 2. We began tent-meetings in Piedmont Saturday night, will continue all the week, thence on to Dexter, Missouri, with the tent.

We have a small branch here, and a tent to hold meetings in. Another branch needs to be organized at Naylor, Missouri, which will give us two branches in Southeastern Missouri. We hope to raise up a district soon in these parts. The field seems to be ripe for the harvest everywhere now, for the great work to roll forth. I do not see any wisdom or inspiration in appointing a man in charge of this field not assigned to labor here and who knows nothing about it, but we will be submissive to the powers that be. I find Bro. J. T. Davis a congenial man to labor with.

We hope to stir up Southeastern Missouri, and other parts, if trouble does not stop us in our work. We are all subject to trials and troubles; not even the Savior could evade them.

In bonds,

J. D. Erwin.

SULPHUR SPRINGS, Texas, June 4, 1906.

Editors Herald: A few words from Northeastern Texas. I am trying to tell the beautiful gospel story, but laboring under several disadvantages. My health is very poor, and it has been raining in Northeastern Texas from one to three times a week for eighteen months. The farmers scarcely made anything in this country last year, and the people are in hard shape, financially. Bro. S. S. Smith, from Knoboster, Missouri, who has Texas in charge, spent two weeks with us, doing quite an amount of preaching. Bro. Smith is a noble young man, and has a bright future. As I have been appointed by Bro. Ellis Short, agent of Northeastern Texas, to look after the tithes, will say to the Saints of said district, that we know that you are passing through a trial, by crops being destroyed last year; but if you will make a sacrifice, and render to the Lord that which belongs to him; and pray in your homes, and over your fields, and promise within yourselves you will give the Lord his part of the present year's revenue, you will find your fields laden with crops this fall in the place of weeds and grass. Indeed God is marshaling his army for the rescue of his truth. We are all soldiers, and have a work to do. We are living near the sundown of time, and things are soon to take place that will try the faith of the children of men; but if we will keep all of God's commands, and live faithful to the covenant we have made with God, we have nothing to fear, though we walk through the valley of the shadow of death.

I am at present with Bro. C. L. Webb, trying to open up the work in this country. Bro. and Sr. Webb are noble Saints, and are doing all they can to get the gospel before their neighbors. So, asking an interest in the prayers of all the Saints who may read this letter that my health may be restored, that I may be able to do a good work this year for the gospel I love so dearly, I am,

Your brother in the army of the Lord,

E. A. Erwin.

NORTH DEER ISLE, Maine, June 4, 1906.

Dear Herald: As I have been reading the sisters' letters, I feel that I might do some good by writing. I am trying to do what I can, but that is not much. My husband was sick all summer, and last April 28 he died. I feel lonely without him; but God's will be done, not ours. I want to live so that when he comes to take me I will be ready to go. I want all of the Saints to remember me in their prayers, that I may be made strong. I feel weak many times, but I know to whom I ought to look for comfort. Your sister in Christ,

Mrs. W. G. Hardy.

CHICAGO, Illinois June 8, 1906.

Editors Herald: The able and interesting article in SAINTS' HERALD of late by F. R. Tubb awakens new thought on the subject, and I give my view for what it may be worth.

The predictions of Peter do not apply to the whole universe of God, but are pertaining only to this earth, nor will there be years of waiting for the terrible catastrophe when God is ready, or his angels have gone to gather the wheat from the tares.

I recall when in my younger days I wore a fireman's uniform; we were a trained company with the one motto, "Where duty calls us, there we are found." Our horses were never without certain parts of harness, and the remaining necessary... part suspended above the thills, to which place the horses had been trained to jump at the instant of an alarm. The men, also, had each a certain duty. It was mine to engage a few snap-hooks, and leap onto the hose cart; and in less time that it takes to tell it, we were claiming the right of way over United States mail, down streets and avenues; where a moment before all was quiet and serene there is a tumult and scamper to get out of the way. We arrive in time and soon it is all over.

The hosts of heaven are in readiness. A little jar of earthquake, a visitation by fire or misbehaving of the waves of the sea, cyclones, etc., are only the testing of the mechanism of God’s clockwork by his angels, whom he shall make to wind and his servants to flames of fire. If so it be that I understand Jesus right, it will not be only one star colliding with the sun, but several or many; for he says (speaking of the end of the world), “Wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles [mark plural] be gathered together,” also immediately thereafter the sun shall be darkened, and the powers of heaven shall be shaken, and the sign of the Son of Man shall appear. All being darkness now on earth, the sun having lost his light as a blown out candle, Christ may be easily seen in his light; and it is then, Christ says, all the tribes of the earth shall mourn. As this is a day of God’s vengeance only upon this earth, only the “hook-and-ladder company” of heaven arrive with the sound of a trumpet to gather the elect out of the way. We arrive in time and soon it is all over.

Many waved their arms frantically in warning for us not to land. When the ferry-boat neared the slip we were within almost a stone’s throw of two raging fires on the water front, two monster sheets of flame, Smith’s Cash Store and Wellman Peck’s. The ashes and smoke were so dense that I rolled Ruby’s jacket up and slipped it under my working coat so it should not be ruined. We did not land, but returned to Oakland, viewing the burning city as the boat drew away.

The next day we went over to see the ruined city of pleasure, the humbled Queen of the Pacific, burning as furiously as ever. Firemen, with no place to lay their heads after working all the day and night, their bloodshot eyes bearing witness of their untriring efforts, were seen in many parts of the city, some lying on the sidewalks mid the ruined buildings, almost too tired to move. I shall not take the space to describe the scenes of confusion, the dreadful, serious look on the faces of the people, the buildings that were thrown into the street, the thundering of the dynamite explosions as the firemen blew up the buildings, the thousands hastily moving household goods and fleeing from the face of the flames; no, I shall not attempt to write it all, for it would take too long.

But there is one scene that I wish to describe briefly—and that is the appearance of San Francisco as it is at the present time. Imagine some brown, rough hills, and a flat, sloping space that looks like a country place, that pictures the north part of the city which has but few ruins that are not leveled to the ground. Ride up Market Street, the principal street. To view this for the first time is worth going many miles. To see the Palace Hotel, which covers about a square block and thirteen stories high, a complete ruin, although the brick walls are still standing. Tall, very tall walls can be seen in many places and the rest of the buildings destroyed. The only ruins which look alike are those which have been leveled almost to the ground and they are more numerous that the high ruins which are mostly steel frames.

But to conclude. What do California people say caused the earthquake? I talked with many, saint and sinner, rich and poor, and it is the unanimous verdict with those I conversed with that the Lord visited the city of San Francisco in judgment causing mourning and lamentation as Apostle Joseph Luff predicted while under the influence of the Holy Spirit at Sacramento nearly two years ago, which prophecy I well remember. The city of Oakland has taken new life since the destruction (as have also some of the Saints, perhaps all of us) and things are moving along briskly with no want or increased mortgage noticeable. But San Francisco! Well might her people sing the third and fourth lines of the second verse of 290 in the Saints’ Hymnal:

Echoes of the Earthquake.

“Then shall the earth rest?”—Genesis 7:65. Inspired Translation. He had heard the earth mourn, saying—“Wo! wo! is she the mother of men! I am pained, I am weary, because of the wickedness of my children! When shall I rest?” Then Enoch wept and cried unto the Lord. What was the Lord’s answer? Read it in full. Genesis 7:57-75.

Part of the answer is: “Before that day... the heavens shall shake, and also the earth. And great tribulations shall be among the children of men, men’s hearts failing them, looking forth with fear.” That is what the good old prophet was told would occur in the last days,—then during the great wickedness and trouble on the earth the Savior should descend—and then the earth would rest.

On the morning of the earthquake my wife and I boarded the train and took the boat to San Francisco as did many others. It was about ten o’clock in the morning. We met crowds of people at the Oakland mole, they having just landed from the burning city. “Oh, don’t go! Keep away from that place! It’s awful! Come away! Don’t go!” These were the cries of warning from those who were escaping. Half way across the bay our boat met a boat-load of people coming to Oakland.

Pastoral.

To the Saints and Friends of Texas: I wish to offer a few words. I do so because I believe the field I represent has not made much of an impression on your minds. Entertaining a hope for the furtherance of the work of the Lord in this part of God's heritage I essay the responsibility of saying a few things in addition to that written by Bro. F. A. Sisson in his pastoral of May 9, 1906. In this direction I must apologize, and I do, to you, for my work. I have not been able to do all that I should have desired to do in this respect. I have been a little too occupied in the prosecution of our work for the Lord and his government is non-Christian in the extreme. The gospel law and the church papers. Adjourned to meet with reunion if one is held; if not, at call of district presidency. F. E. Taylor, secretary.

We do not wish to pose as an irresponsible agitator for there is some danger in going to extremes, but as we see it there is much need of improvement not only in Texas but in all the western states. I have often heard our fathers reproach their sons for allowing their children to come up higher. Necessity again compels us to insist that we heed this. Civic virtue in the world, like spiritual power and purity in the church, seems to be a matter of slow evolution in the lives of God's children. This should not be. There is no excuse for slowness of perception and action in our day when the gospel the church, and the beneficent gifts have been enjoyed. We should not delude ourselves with the fickle thought that because similar days as a rule register all is well, when we secretly or otherwise assist in the corruption of the church by a polluted and profligate life. Much of the nominal Christian world recognizes that bad citizenship in the government that is non-Christian in the extreme. The gospel law of right reason and God's law. The Father recognized this when he told his saints to "come up higher." Necessity again compels us to insist that we heed this. it carefully that we contribute to make it such. The problems and requirements of the day in this field are to some extent common and must necessarily require a sacrifice. One and all should respond to lessen the burden. "I wish to say that the expense of the missionary should be met by the field in which he labors, by Saints or friends. Extremes should be avoided. Unhesitatingly we should present our condition to the Saints or friends when we need means for expenses. Why should we hesitate and impede our progress and work by shrinking from taking up a collection when necessary?" Many times the people expect it and would gladly contribute if we would but ask them. Why disappoint them? Why restrict them from the glory of reward in the future when they many times would give it gladly? Suppose our missionary companions have gone away from the fold. Is it; is it the extreme; is it that an indication we should go to the other extreme, just because a practical method has been abused? We are anxious that the work be introduced in as many new locations as possible and to encourage this work we desire your solicitation and help. Should you have a point in view for preaching do not wait for the missionary to hunt you up but come direct to me.

The missionaries' addresses are as follows: D. S. Palmer, 341 State Street, San Antonio, Texas; W. H. Manserver, 301 State Street, Kansas City, Missouri.

We are hopeful for a successful year's work. An interest for the Church desire to have an influence for good. The greatest leaders—those who rule over the hearts of men are those as a rule who have gone through the gamut of human sensibilities. He must know the sorrows of death, the pangs of human reverses and pains of the heart and bring comforting words to mankind. A leader of men is he who can touch the heart cords in others and is capable of reaching the depths of the human heart and bring forth its treasure. May we all thus labor unitedly in love and union.

For the welfare of the work and the hope of the cooperation of all for Zion's redemption and the salvation of all the honest heart, I subscribe myself.

Your colaborer in gospel bonds,

S. S. SMITH.
Associate Minister in Charge of Texas.

RIOOAK, Texas, May 28, 1906.

To the Saints in the Ohio and West Virginia Districts: Having been appointed in subcharge for another year, I earnestly appeal to the work by love. We desire you to feel a personal responsibility as a member of the general body. We cannot afford to fold our arms and take it easy. The day of judgment will reveal the folly. The opportunities for doing something for the Lord's work are manifold. We can receive the commendation of the Master only by doing what he said, "Occupy till I come." If you will report the chances for preaching in your vicinity, efforts will be made to reach them. Should you desire any special series of meetings, any church openings or dedications, special efforts will be made to conduct them conduciive to the best results.

By enactment of the Ohio legislature, our traveling expenses in the Ohio District will be increased. In order to reduce expenses to a minimum, and reap more effective results of our labors, I urge that the traveling ministry remain in the locality where they find an interest as long as it lasts, if it is the entire year.

We have some good workers with us this year, hence let us all faithfully strive to make this the banner year.

The reunion will be held at Wellston, latter part of August. Let all begin to prepare for a good outing with the Saints in this beautiful park. Definite notice will be given later.

The brethren have been assigned their places of labor for the present, so will not need mention here.

Praying God's blessing to attend all the workers of Zion, I remain,

Your coworker,

CARMEL, Ohio, Route 1.

F. J. EBLING.
the seed of the kingdom. As you have endeavored to keep this part up in the past we have no reason to believe you will fail to do all you can in the future.

Remember our worthy missionary in charge, I. N. White, in your prayers that the Lord may bless him with health that his work may be blessed. The cause of the Saints. We need his wise counsel and advice.

Ever laboring for the salvation of the souls of men, I remain,

HOLDEN, Missouri, Box 204. GEO. JENKINS.

To Saints of Spring River District; Greeting: Having been placed in charge of the missionary work in Spring River District and Southern Kansas by Apostles J. Luff and I. N. White and requested to publish my address, I write briefly. As the missionary is sent to present the gospel to the world, we expect, and anent the latter as far as possible to that end, that we may fulfill that to which we are called. We will have all and more than we can do to fill the demand in this broad and ripened field.

We solicit the aid of the Saints by obtaining openings for preaching and contributing to the expense of the ministry, remembering the needs of one are equal with that of another, and in this you are helping the Lord's work and not the man.

The missionary force are tried and true men, acquainted with the field, and we are hopeful of a fruitful year.

May it be with us, as with the ministry of the first century, when asked, "Lacked ye anything?" our answer shall be, "Nay."

Believing all are equally interested, we trust in all and in God, above all.

That the Saints and friends may be able to reach the ministry at any time occasion demands, we insert the names and addresses of the appointees of the above-named field. F. C. Keck, Nevada, Missouri; Lee Quick, Mapleton, Kansas; W. H. Smart; and J. T. Riley, Fairland, Indian Territory; Evangelist Ammon White, Independence, Missouri.

Your coworker,

First Quorum of Seventy.

If you expect, or even wish to attend, the committee will be glad to hear from you on the following:

1. When do you expect to arrive? 2. Do you want to rent a tent, and what size? 3. Do you want a gasoline stove, and what size? 4. Do you want to board, at the dining-hall, in a private family, or at a hotel? 5. Do you want to provide board for ladies in private families for all who desire it, if possible.

Families attending should rent tents. Prices of tents will be announced later.

Every Latter Day Saint should sometime see the city of Nauvoo, and witness the greatest battle-ground of truth and error in the history of the church. Here the church rose to its maximum and fell to its minimum; and out of the ruins were reared the chief pillars of the Reorganization. Why not visit the old homes of these men, and contemplate the scenes of the past? The committee is planning a half day to see Nauvoo. This will be something on this order: Hacks provided at a cost of about ten cents to each individual. All will go at once and stop at each historic place, where will be delivered a short historical address relative to each place viewed. These addresses will be by those who are well acquainted with the history of the church here at this place, and with the various characters of those who lived in these houses; also the Times and Seasons building. The Nauvoo Neighbor office, the Expositor. This will certainly be worth the time of any one who is interested in the history of the church. Do you not want to come? and see and hear?

The committee is also planning an excursion on the river. This will consume a day, and will give opportunity to rest from the journey. The committee is planning an excursion which will be practical to those who do not live on or near it; but we want good interest while the program is being rendered, so we are planning this trip to give all an opportunity of resting from their labors. And we want all to enjoy the meetings, and then the excursion which will be August 2.

We would like to know approximately how many to arrange for as soon as possible, so do not put it off, but let us hear from you at once. Let each local school or Religio take hold of the matter, as it is not a district reunion, but one for the whole church under the direction of the General Sunday-school Association and the Religio.

This is the first reunion attempted exclusively by the Sunday-school and the Religio, and above all things it should be made a success. You can assist in making it so by being present. You can make it the largest gathering ever held by these organizations, and from the indications it will be. You can not afford to miss it. We will provide for you, if you let us know what you want, and let us know in time.

On the night of June 24th, the First Seventy met with the city council and got everything they asked for, among which were, the use of streets in which to set tents, seating capacity for twelve hundred people in the park, deputizing of police for mutual protection, and other services necessary to the occasion. Let us now see that their appropriation is not in vain, that their seats are not left vacant and unfilled during the gathering, and that we use the utmost care in establishing mutual good feeling, which can easily be done if the proper methods are pursued.

First Seventy: I am this day sending to each of the quorum the addenda to Circular Letter No. 7 ordered by the quorum to be printed, and to those who did not receive a blank report at the General Conference I have inclosed with the addenda one of those. Any one of the quorum not receiving these reports in a reasonable time after this notice appears there will notify me and I will send another. I did not receive the addresses of Bro. John H. Hansen, and Henry A. Koehler, and when they are ordained will the one ordaining please to send me the items of the ordination, time, place, and by whom, and their addresses, and I will send to them such items as they should have from the quorum. Whenever Bro. Jesse M. Simmons is ordained please send the same items of the ordination as of the others. I have been told that the President will not order a report.

Nauvoo and the Reunion.

The executive officers, in connection with the missionary in charge, have appointed the undersigned committee on arrangements to provide for the needs and accommodations of those attending:

To one and all, I desire to correspond with you; and will visit you as soon as possible. I remain,

Your brother and colaborer in Christ,

First Quorum of Seventy.

BY DIRECT COMMAND, SHOULD BE ONE OF THE PLEASANTEST SERVICES WE CAN RENDER TO ANY ONE, WHICH ANY ONE CAN IN THIS LIFE RENDER. THE FACT THAT DIVINE WISDOM AND THE INSPiration OF THE HIGHEST ORDER HAVE PASSED UPON THE NECESSITY OF A WORK, AND DIRECTED THE PERFORMANCE OF THE SAME, "WITHOUT UNNECESSARY DELAY," AND INTRODUCED THE ACCOMPLISHMENT TO US AS THE "WELL DONE, THEY HAD LABORED FAITHFULLY," SHOULD fill our hearts with the highest sense of pleasure while we labor with our utmost powers to perform.

By and by the souls of the faithful "dozen" will be charmed with heavenly music and the accents of the "Lord's and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many;" and this point fact, taught by Christ himself, makes the duty of each to stand out more clearly touching the work now assigned.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
The revelation of the hour, the resolution thereupon of the body, the church, direct that we move forward and build, and the Bishopric takes pleasure in making an effort to do all it can towards this, according to the direction given, feeling well assured that every member of the body will seek humbly and prayerfully to discharge the duty imposed upon all, with a like ready and keen sense of the responsibility.

Each should at once consider unselfishly the question, How much can I help in this work? What others can and ought to do, let that be with them. Do we resolve to perform faithfully our respective parts; "there is where the honor lies." We should not permit Satan to tempt us by suggesting a consideration of the matter of assisting with the view to determine just how little we can do, and yet have it said we did our duty; if that thought comes up let us say, "Get thee behind me." The Lord should have our heartiest and best service; and if we perform this work as directed with a cheerful and delighted heart, then we will be permitted to perform yet another task, and our chief joy will be in being in fact what we are enjoined by the spool to be, "Laborers together with God," instead of thinking only of self and selfish work.

Will not all be gratified and full of joy, if we shall in the performance of this work, so please God that he will accept and commend the same, and intrust us with the performance of a still greater work? It is readily seen that our joy and life is in the full discharge of duty, and not in the failure to discharge the same.

In determining how much we can do, it is not necessary to forget our obligations in other things. God does not annul or minimize existing duties in calling us to further work. He may justly request us to take upon ourselves other duties and responsibilities, and we also may justly feel gratified that we are mounted on the saddle of duty, but not that we are to be the expense of other necessary work either to the church, to our families, or to others. In the decision let us judge wisely and unselfishly in determining what we can do, knowing the Lord would not ask us to perform, unless it was clearly within our power to do.

The Bishopric therefore ask that each and every one at once determine the amount they can help toward the proper objects and institutions, and communicate the same to the earliest practicable time to the bishops or agents of their respective stakes or districts, or by sending directly to the Presiding Bishop at Independence, Missouri, so that the committee authorized to act in the matter of building may properly move forward in the discharge of duty within the time suggested and urged.

Already some have sent in offerings for this purpose, and we hope within the next sixty days to hear from every place where the Saints reside, so that our advice in the matter may be complete. Remember that if we make an earnest and united effort the work will be accomplished at once, and it will be unnecessary to make any further call upon the Saints to aid in the undertaking.

Special instruction touching the gathering in of the offerings for this work are now being sent out to all bishops and agents, and the ready cooperation of the Saints is asked, so that there may be no unnecessary delay.

Let us, awake to duty and bring forth a worthy offering to the praise and glory of God and the good of his worthy and needy children, and may his multiplied peace and his fruitful hand be extended to every faithful helper.

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

ORDWAY, 116 F. D. No. 1, Pasadena, California.
From a London cable, June 9, to the Chicago Tribune, it appears that John Bull looks upon justice in American courts as being particularly one-sided in the case of big rascals and corporation criminals:—It says in part: "It will be a long time before public opinion on this side of the Atlantic will have any confidence in the genuineness of American corporate reform. One thing, and only one thing, will have any real effect in Europe. When America begins to send its greatest criminals to jail, Europe will begin to believe there is a real standard of public morality in that country.

"The administration of justice in the United States is to-day the subject of open ridicule and contempt throughout Europe. There is nothing an Englishman resents more than the intimation that the American judicial system is similar to England's."

A brother of Pittsburg, name and address not given, sent ten dollars some time ago for the Manchester Branch and the Llanell Branch. This will notify him that it has been received and credited as directed.
About the time that the Bear Flag party were getting ready for action in Sonoma the American naval commander in charge of the Pacific squadron was at Mazatlan. Commodore Sloat had received the most specific orders to occupy California at the first outbreak of hostilities with Mexico. In the harbor of San Blas was the English admiral Sir George Seymour on board the British frigate Collingwood. Sloat feared that Seymour might receive the first news of the Mexican War and thus anticipate him in seizing Monterey; so as soon as he obtained positive proof of the capture of Matamoras by General Taylor he sailed for California. Our navy was then a fair match for the British, especially in speed, and the Savannah could easily out sail the Collingwood; but Sloat took no risks, crowded on all sail, and reached Monterey on July 2. He had the sloops Cyane and Levant at Monterey and the Portsmouth at Yerba Buena (San Francisco) and no British sail had yet appeared. Sloat was a man who dreaded responsibility. He expected to find California peaceful; he even hoped to meet small opposition in raising the American flag. But what was his astonishment to learn that the native Californians were bitterly opposed to any action. He found the British vice-consul, Forbes, supporting General Castro and Governor Pio Pico in their diatribe against the American offenders, while the Spanish vice-consul, Lataille, surpassed all the others in his condemnation of the Sonoma revolution. Sloat accordingly hastened five days before taking possession of Monterey.

On July 7, 1846, Commodore Sloat took formal possession of California in the name of the United States. After making a formal demand for surrender upon the Mexican commandant, which that officer evaded by disclaiming authority to act for Castro, the commodore prepared for action. He issued orders warning the men against plundering or maltreating any of the natives. Under Captain Mervine a force of two hundred and fifty seamen and marines was landed and marched up in front of the old custom-house, which usually bore the Mexican colors. There is a conflict of authority as to whether the flag was flying on this day. The people crowded about, eager to see the spectacle, but there was no hostile demonstration. The commodore's proclamation to the people of California was read. It declared that he proposed to hoist the American flag at Monterey and to carry it throughout California. It was Greek to most of the spectators, who understood Spanish only and received it in silence. Then the Stars and Stripes were run up, three roaring cheers were given, a salute of twenty-one guns was fired, and California thus passed into the hands of the Americans. On the following day the proclamation was read on the plaza at Yerba Buena, and the Mexican colors were sup plant ed by the American flag. At the old Presidio, near the Golden Gate, was the dilapidated Mexican fort with its rusty and useless guns; but over these also the Stars and Stripes were raised—an earnest that this main gateway of the Pacific would now be held against all comers. In the other towns where the American flag was raised there was unbounded enthusiasm on the part of the settlers. The native Californians looked on in apathetic silence. It may be that they counted on British interference; but when Admiral Seymour arrived in Monterey Bay he courteously accepted the announce ment of American possession, as did also the captain of the British warship Juno, which visited San Francisco Bay two days after the flag was raised.

This bloodless transfer of authority could probably have been the beginning and the end of the conquest of California but for the enmity aroused by the Bear Flag uprising and the feud between Fremont and Castro. As it was, the subsequent events of the conquest may be put in a paragraph. Sloat declined Fremont's offer of his Bear Flag battalion; but the chagrin which this caused was speedily forgotten, for Sloat, ill in body and weary of responsibility, turned over his command to Commodore Stockton and departed for the East. Stockton was the exact antithesis of Sloat. Responsibility did not worry him; in fact, he enjoyed it. He promptly accepted Fremont's troops and issued orders for their prompt organization into a regiment. He pushed the campaign vigorously against the native Californians, who were massed at Los Angeles; but when he reached that city he found everything quiet, took possession, and declared the war at an end. He had only just reached Monterey on his return when he was informed that all the South was again in arms. It required six months to subdue this revolt; but the power of the insurgents was broken by General Kearney, who arrived from New Mexico, after one of the severest marches on record. He cooperated with Stockton's marines, and finally the Californians gave up the fight; and the treaty of Cahuenga on January 13, 1847, ended the last stand made by the natives for control of the territory. The Californians surrendered to Fremont probably because they counted on getting better terms than from Stockton; and this expectation was fulfilled, as unconditional pardon was granted to all who had borne arms, with freedom to leave the country, and full rights of citizenship to those who chose to remain.

... Again the partisan debate broke out with increased rancor. Four months of wrangling ensued, ending finally in the passage of the bill for the admission of California, separated from the compromise resolutions. On August 13, by a vote of thirty-four to eighteen, the Senate passed it. Jefferson Davis, Mason, and others would not see it adopted without a last word, so they issued a protest which summed up all the Southern hatred of national sanction of the free constitution of the California settlers. This protest had no effect on the lower house, which on September 7 also passed the bill, by one hundred and fifty to fifty-six. On September 9, 1850, the act was formally approved by President Fillmore, and within the next two days the California delegation was sworn in—not, however, without objections from Jefferson Davis and his small party of irreconcilables. The South had been worsted at every point; but it was a costly victory for the country, for a decade later burst out the pent-up fires of partisan hatred, whose lurid gleams were seen during this long struggle over California.

The California legislature adjourned in April, but it was the 15th of October before news came of the admission of the State. These six months of waiting tired the souls of impatient Californians more than all the previous period of doubt and complaints came from several of the southern counties of burdensome taxes that would fall upon them should Congress admit the whole of California as a State. Among Americans, however, the desire for statehood was so strong that many openly advocated separation from the Union. In no other period of their history, perhaps, was the self-control of the Americans in California more thoroughly proved than in these dreary months. Climate and life, then as now, conspired to rob the settler of patience. He yearned to gain fortune or to compass any purpose at a bound. With a people of less moral stamina disunion influences would have prevailed and the world would have seen the flasgo of an independent state on the Pacific coast. But that rare judgment and foresight which comes with the Anglo-Saxon strain in American blood again prevailed. Some of the old Bear Flag party emerged again and gave vent to their anger in violent language; but these manifestations were merely the froth on the surface. Loyalty to the Union before they formed an actual part of it was as strong as it was eleven years later when Sumter was fired on.

Five weeks after California became a State the news reached San Francisco. The Panama mail steamer Oregon was sighted one October morning by the lookout on Telegraph Hill. He rubbed his glasses to make out what had transformed her familiar lines. Surely she was dressed in all her bunting, and now as she entered the harbor the rapid discharge of her guns

conveyed the long-expected news. Old pioneers can not speak with unmoistened eyes of the scene that followed. Nerves had been strung to so high a tension that the rebound demanded violent exercise. The whole city swarmed to the water front and the hills around it. Merchants rushed to close their stores as they did on that other day, sad and long to be remembered, when the news came over the wires that Lincoln was assassinated. By a common impulse every one ran to the old Plaza. There were cheers, shouts, ringing of bells, blowing of whistles, illuminations, and rockets. By steamer, stage, and pony express the news was carried to all parts of the State. On many roads there was keen opposition between rival stage lines, and this led to lively races to see which should be the first bearer of the welcome news. Crandall was one of the pioneer stage drivers who with Foss and "Hank" Monk made a reputation for dare-devil skill in handling six-horse teams on bad mountain roads. He started for San Jose, the morning after the news reached San Francisco, with his coach decked with flags. Governor Burnett was beside him on the box. Down they dashed through the level Santa Clara Valley, then one wide, tawny plain, unbroken by fence or farm-house. Behind them came the rival stage, its driver urging his Mexican mustang to their utmost speed. As Crandall's coach passed the houses on the road all on board swung their hats and shouted, "California is admitted to the Union!" and the cheers that rounded out this shout were taken up by the delighted people. Ex-governor Burnett is an old man now, but he grows young again when he describes this race, full of excitement to the very end, when Crandall dashed up to the main hotel in San Jose in a cloud of dust, like one of the Homeric heroes, the victor in one of the hardest stage races ever run in this country.

This clearly shows that when President Brigham Young and the pioneers with him descended into Salt Lake Valley, July 24, 1847, the territory was under the United States flag. If there had been any understood intention to filibuster any portion of the territory from Mexican control in order that there might be established an ecclesiastical kingdom therein, this intention was frustrated as we believe by intervention of Providence using the United States Government as the means to its accomplishment.

ARE MIRACLES DONE AWAY?

The following from a Chicago paper for June 17 indicates that some minds are inquiring along the line of what the writer chooses to call "physical miracles." The wonder is that the world does not more universally question the theory that miracles have been done away, because not needed:

Can it be true that the Christian dispensation, which began with the ministry of Christ and his apostles, has been so changed that there is no need in the present day of physical miracles? Is there no necessity for such miraculous works as they and their successors for three hundred years were permitted, nay, commanded by the Master to perform as the initial evidence of their high office to make the gospel of Christ effectual in reclaiming first the minds and then the hearts of men with the truth?

If so, why were such evidences given for three hundred years in making the church so powerful in influencing large numbers to become Christians that the secular king who then practically ruled the world took it into partnership? And why, after such partnership, were such evidences practically withdrawn from the church?

These questions must be answered, and in thinking of them we are reminded of the Savior's temptation from Satan to accept of him all the kingdoms of this world and the glory of them if he would only bow down and worship him who claimed the power to give them to him who himself had made them and owned all. The answer of Jesus was, "Get thee behind me, Satan; it is written thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."

Suppose Christ's church had spurned the temptation in Rome's offer to practically rule the kingdoms of this world with fire and sword, and had gone on in her work of saving men's souls, instead of hankering after the secular thrones which Rome controlled. Who can figure out the results of such refusal in view of what had been done? And who can not now read the results in history of her taking Constantine's sword to rule the world, instead of Christ and his commission to go into all the world and preach his gospel to every nation, to heal the sick, cast out devils, and raise the dead, as the evidence that he had not only sent them, but, as he had promised before he left the world, went with them to insure their success, and did so until the secular power temptation took the place of manifested supernatural power in their great work, up to the time of their yielding to temptation instead of resisting it, as their great Master had done in the beginning of his ministry of supernatural power to reach the minds and hearts of men with himself in the length and breadth of his plans to save the lost?

That history, in practical results, is a comment on their disobeying the orders of the King of kings, as his own officer in the great conflict with Satan for the possessions of this world for Him who made it. Satan transformed spiritual into temporal power.

When the disciples could not answer the request of a father to cast the Devil out of his child, and after they had seen Jesus do it, just after coming from the Mount of Transfiguration, they asked him, "Why could not we cast him out?" And he said unto them, "This kind can come forth by nothing but by fasting and prayer," thus reminding them that out of communion with him, and therefore without the requisite faith in him to work such things for them, they could not do it.

May we not inquire, very humbly, if that is not the reason now why the disciples of Jesus Christ, as a rule, can not give to them such evidences of his willingness to take our sicknesses, as was prophesied of him before he came into the world? If Jesus is "the same yesterday, to-day and for ever," why not expect of him the same manifestations of his power now as in the beginning of his church and for centuries thereafter through his representatives?

Can his witnesses have the same influence over the world now as then, without such evidences being presented by them as by Peter and Paul?

We may be severely criticized by all classes of unbelievers in the supernatural, as well as by church members who do believe in it, as an adjunct of the early church, but not in this "enlightened age" of philosophy and science, for proposing such questions, but they will spring up in the mind which reads the facts of the past and the present in church history as naturally as the sun in the spring creates a resurrection of dead nature into the fact and the beauty of a new life in the natural world.

If the first chosen apostles of Jesus could not believe in his resurrection until they had seen him, and even then dared not proclaim it until endowed with power from on high, how can we, until our faith grasps the actual fact we did not see with our natural eyes in the larger fact of the same endowment of power promised to every succeeding age, and which may be our experience as well as theirs for the asking?

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Are we in the same dispensation that Christ organized in words and deeds and through his apostles, or are we not? This is a great question.

“When the Son of Man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?” was one of Jesus’ questions of his disciples when on the way to Jerusalem to be crucified, in connection with the subject of prayer. (See Luke 18:1-14.)

Young man, never be fully satisfied with your faith until Christ is just as real to your spiritual life in governing its purposes as he was to Lazarus in directing his physical nature after he had said to him while in his grave, “Lazarus, come forth.”—John V. Farwell in Chicago Record-Herald.

“In one particular the opera-house is ahead of the churches,” says Bert Walker. “At the opera-house women are supposed to, and do, remove their hats while anything is going on, while at the churches they keep their hats on all during the services.” Wonder if this is the reason so many men do not go to church?

The Perfect Gift.

(From 1 Corinthians 13.)

Though we should speak with tongues of men
Or of th’ angelic host,
A tinkling cymbal we become,
Or sounding brass at most
Should we lack love.

Although the gift of prophecy
We may perhaps possess:

And we all myst’ries understand
Aha! ’tis emptiness
Should we lack love.

Though we all knowledge should possess,
And though all faith have we,
So that the mountains could remove,
We’re nothing without thee,
Dearest gift—love.

Though we bestow all earthly goods
To feed the hungry poor;
Or give our bodies to be burned,
It profits us no more
Should we lack love.

For love doth suffer long; ’tis kind;
And envieth no one;
It vaunteth not; is not puffed up,— Brings peace and union.

Blessed gift—love.

Love shuns iniquity, for it
Rejoiceth in the truth;
It beareth all things, gives fresh hope,
It guides the humble youth.

Perfect gift—love.

Love not unseemly doth behave,
It seeketh not her own;
It is not easily provoked;
Doth evil overcome.

Perfect gift—love.

Love faileth not—though prophecies
And tongues may fail and cease;
Though vanish knowledge shall away,—
Love ever will increase.

May we seek love.

For now we know, and prophecy,
Yet only ’tis in part;
But when the Perfect shall appear
Th’ imperfect will depart.

O blessed love!

When children, we as children spake,
And likewise understood;
But now that we have men become
We seek a better food,—
Heavenly food—love.

Though we at present may not see
But through a glass darkly:
We soon shall see as face to face—
If we live perfectly,
Guided by love.

We now may know, but ’tis in part,
(But sweeter thoughts we own)
May be so now, but soon shall we
Be known as we are known.

Guided by love.

And now abideth faith and hope
And love—the gifts are three;
But one is greater than the rest—
Love of necessity.

Conquer by love.

A “FATHER’S” EPISTLE.

To the Saints in All the World Who May Be Interested; Greeting:

It seems eminently proper, and, I trust, for the good of the cause we love, that I should send you a few words at this time. May that blessed Spirit, which is so indispensable in the work of salvation, touch your hearts and enable you to receive good therefrom.

I embraced this “glorious gospel” in November, 1863, being baptized at Nauvoo, Illinois, in the Mississippi River. When I first made up my mind to accept this people as my people, and their God as my God, there appeared to me no evidence whatever that another soul in our family would receive the message. So, in the wisdom of Him who doeth all things well, my first conclusion was an independent one; and while some have not been able to approve of my positions and methods, as a whole, (that is, when they were applied to the Saints,) they will, I believe, bear me testimony that I have moved along this line ever since. Many, many times I have disappointed some of my best friends, and much oftener aroused and greatly agitated my opponents. However, some, who were once strong opponents, have become strong and abiding friends, without any compromise on my part.

I have felt, as I feel now, to respect and honor every man in the legitimate duties of his calling; but I have, as I do now, steadfastly refused to follow my superiors any farther than I was able to see, after earnest prayer and investigation, that they were helping me to walk in the light of God.

Did Paul reflect on the work of God’s messengers of salvation when he said: “But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed”?—Galatians 1:8. I do not think so, nor do I have any idea that either God or the angels took any exception to what he said. If, then, the rule is a proper one, and applies to the angels from heaven, as well as to all men outside of the church of God, why does it not apply to every minister whom God has chosen?

If the presumption that every man is doing his duty, is to prevent the application of the rule, then of what value is the rule? And, further, if anybody’s work in the church is reflected upon, and injured, by a proper application of the rule, it must be because there is something wrong with his work, or with the rule.

There is a volume of wholesome instruction contained in the following words which fell from the lips of the great Teacher:

And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God.—John 3:19-21.

So, we are justified in the conclusion that there is no good reason why any true servant of God should object to a proper application of the rules and tests which God has furnished us in his word. These rules and tests are of universal application. Why receive them at a discount?

“But,” says one, “we do not object to the rules, but to the persistency with which they are kept before the people, and the manner in which it is done.”

Yes, I do not doubt that you have been sorely tried with me (I am only speaking for myself in this article), but I have earnestly sought to be right—have tried hard to acquire knowledge, “by study and by faith,” have used the best judgment I had, both as to demands and the character of my efforts. In this connection, permit me kindly to suggest that, if you do not now see, the time may come when some of you will see that I have not been beating the air to no purpose, but have been making an effort, at least, to perform my humble part of the great work which God has intrusted to his servants and people. As to my manner, it is distinctly my own; and I have no reason to doubt that it has been just about as objectionable to some as theirs has been to me. Nevertheless, I know that my manner has been more or less imperfect. I have been trying, and am still trying to improve it. Wherein this imperfection has injured others, I can only say, I have never opposed any one, within or without, with a desire to injure. My motive has been good, and only good.

It may help some to rightly interpret the words and acts of my official life in the church, to inform them that it has been my practice to say the strongest and most cutting things when I have felt the best toward my opponents. When the love of God fills the soul, and the Holy Spirit touches the heart and enlightens the mind, one may speak and act with safety, if careful, though it will always be “according to the gifts and callings of God unto him.”

Right here I wish to relate an experience had while doing missionary work in the South: In the early summer of 1882, I was sitting on the porch of Bro. L. F. West, near Milton, Santa Rosa County, Florida. I had been reading in the Doctrine and Covenants, and was forcibly impressed with the high and pure character of the precepts and commandments made binding upon the church. A quiet, humble feeling pervaded my soul, and I was in the true spirit of prayer. I had a strong desire for light and heavenly instruction.

As I calmly laid down the book, I passed into a condition of serious meditation; and among other things, these thoughts passed through my mind: "How could a people, with such instruction as this before them, go into that which is vile, and disgrace the holy cause of God?"

I thought of the statements made concerning our people in histories and encyclopedias; and while I knew then as I know now, that they contain much that is false—are loose and unreliable as a whole—yet my thought was, "Where there is so much smoke there must be a little fire."

I was strengthened in this belief by the further thought, that apostasy and evil do not come all at once. They have their incipiency, like other things, and develop gradually. Right here, I found many things to strengthen this thought, among which are the statements of the revelations themselves. I thought about the redemption of Zion, and cried to God for light and understanding, that I might be prepared to do my part.

All at once, the Spirit spoke to me—not in audible tones, but in a way that could not be misunderstood by one who was in the Spirit, and this is what it said to me:

"You go forth and declare the word as it has been delivered unto you. Do not seek to apologize for the wrongs of men. Let the bolt of God's condemnation strike where it may. Preach the word; stand by the truth, and in this you shall be blessed and strengthened."

Like Paul, I did not stop to confer with flesh and blood, but determined, at once, to obey the commandment, relying upon God.

As many of you know, I have had ill health to contend with all along. None but God and myself know, or can know, the number and character of the struggles through which I have passed! But God has been with me. For the good of his work, and for my good, he has delivered me, again and again. I am so thankful that, now, in my declining years, I can say to my children, to my brothers and sisters in the church of the living God, to my enemies if I have any, that never, in all the past days of my ministry, have I been left alone, or without divine support, when in humility and faith I have undertaken to defend the cause of truth as we have received it. Sometimes, yes, many times, I have been left in weakness for a season (perhaps to show me that my strength was in God), but before the conflict was over, God came to the rescue, vindicated his truth, and gave the victory.

In January, 1903, I was in very poor health. I suffered much, but struggled to keep up. On the ninth day of the month, we laid our little grandson to rest. After the funeral was over, I returned home to rest—weak and sick—and, so far as being able to again do ministerial work was concerned, discouraged.

I retired to my bed early, and while seriously meditating upon my condition, these thoughts passed through my mind: "I have tried to be patient and submissive to the will of God, in the past, in the midst of all my suffering. Now, I think I ought to be released. I can do but little at the best, and why not some one else do that little?"

I thought it would be so sweet to pass away in death, and I desired it. But the thought occurred to my mind, "As you have tried to be fully resigned to the will of God in the past, you ought to be resigned to his will now." So, as I lay in the bed I prayed. After prayer, I felt better and soon fell asleep. In my diary, written on the morning of the 10th, I find the following:

"Last night, I dreamed of wading in the Mississippi River. Grew weak, and was afraid I would fall. Got stronger, and did not fall. Fell asleep again, and dreamed I was in conversation with the Lord. Among other things he said: 'Your work is necessary and important. Are you willing to struggle, again and again, that you may rally and complete your work?' I answered, 'Yes, Lord, I am willing.'"

This is an incomplete account of the dream, or vision, which has afforded me so much instruction and comfort. (I now believe, after thinking upon the matter more carefully, that I did not fall asleep after my dream, but while meditating thereon, I suddenly passed into open vision.)

The personage with whom I conversed, I understood to be the Lord. Of this there was not a doubt in my mind. As soon as I saw him I thought, "Well, this is an opportune time for me to lay before him, for his consideration, the thoughts which passed through my mind when I lay down to rest." I did so, with childlike plainness and simplicity, closing my statement with these words:

"Now, this is what I think about it. You can do as you think best, and I will try to be submissive to your will."

He looked towards me, while his countenance fairly beamed with love and thoughtful consideration, remained quiet for a few moments, like a careful person who is about to answer an important question, then answered as above, speaking his words slowly, plainly, and emphatically.

To me, this communication was instructive, (yes, corrective,) confirming and comforting. My whole being was thrilled with the divine Spirit. The good effects have remained with me to the present time, and, I trust, will remain to the end of my mortal life.

The intelligent reader will not be at a loss to see the connection between these manifestations and the prophetic words spoken by Bro. Joseph Smith in April, 1873, when I was ordained into the Quorum of Twelve, as follows:

"As thy heart's desire has been to do good, thou shalt become a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. The blessings of the Almighty and his counsel shall be thine. Be not fearful, although thou shalt not always walk in sunshine, and thy feet shall almost go down; but thy God shall keep thee. There are influences at work which may harm thee, but if thou art faithful, thou shalt be kept.'"

These manifestations of divine favor, instruction, and promise will, perhaps, best represent to the reader the leading elements which have entered into the formation of my character as a minister for God; but, in reality, the workings and leadings of that wondrous "Spirit of truth," in my mind, previous and subsequent to the times when the communications were given, have been, to me, the greater blessing. However, both were important and necessary.

I feel now, as the end of my labors draws nearer, to present my work to God and his people for what it may be worth. One reason why I do this, at the present time, is because there is an urgent demand for greater unity (true unity) and love ("the true love of Christ") among the people of God.

The record made by my feeble efforts, as a minister, is not a large one, but, I believe, with little or no exception, it will be found to be consistent and harmonious. It will, of course, reveal human imperfection and weakness, more or less; but so far as I know, (and for this I am truly thankful to God,) it is un tarnished by an immoral or impure deed.

I regret that imperfection and human weakness have prevented me from accomplishing the degree of good that I had desired, but am very grateful for that which the good Lord has enabled me to do. Wherein my human weakness, faulty methods and manner have injured others, or wounded their feelings, I greatly regret it, and freely ask pardon for the injury done. In the future God being my helper, I will try to be more careful.

At the last conference, held at Independence, Missouri, by my own request, I was placed on the retired list. My purpose in this request, as plainly stated to the First Presidency and Twelve in my March reports, was that I might secure release from the responsibility of definite missionary appointments. I had sought release in another way, for several years, but had failed to obtain it.

While I have been taken from the missionary list and placed with the superannuated, I am, nevertheless, under the same obligations to magnify my office and calling, and labor to the extent of my physical and mental ability, that I was before; hence the church loses nothing, while I am freed from a responsibility which was of no profit to the church and an injury to me.

This provision for a "superannuated" list of ministers originated with the Twelve and was indorsed by the quorum of First Presidency, First and Second Quorums of Seventy, and the Bishopric, before it went to the conference. The body adopted it with one slight amendment.

In the report of the Twelve to the body, we find the following:

The Quorum of Twelve has adopted the following preambles and resolution and hereby present the same to you for your action.

Whereas, The general missionary list has those on it who by reason of age and other disabilities [the italics are mine] are unable to travel and perform satisfactory missionary labor in the active field, and,

Whereas, It is our conviction that the list should be kept up to the best working condition possible, and the Presidency having advised removing from the list those who are not effective missionaries, the Bishop also requesting us to release those who by reason of lack of ability, infirmities of old age, physical condition, or family surroundings, that make it impracticable for them to do the work of an active missionary in the field, therefore be it Resolved, That we revise our list, retiring those who are incapacitated for active missionary work, from the general missionary list. Those aged ones, who by long and faithful services are entitled to our special consideration, should be placed on the retired list, known as superannuated ministers, they to do such labor as their strength and circumstances will permit, under the direction of the local authorities in connection with the minister in charge . . . .—Conference Minutes for 1905, page 791.

From the above extracts it can be easily seen what was intended by the Twelve. Was my request in harmony with the preambles and resolution? I think so.

In a communication from Bro. Joseph Smith, dated at Lamoni, Iowa, March 7, 1906, I find the following:

Your note of yesterday received. I will present the matter to the Presidency and also to the appointing powers. I think your wish may be complied with without any breach of law . . . . I know of nothing that should prevent your request being complied with without hesitation, and so far as it lies in my power it will be complied with.

Whatever weakness and imperfection others may see, or think they see, in my ministerial work, since December, 1866, when I was ordained to the office of teacher, I am confident of one thing, namely, that they will find no basis for a belief that I have ever sought to evade proper responsibilities, or avoid labor which belonged to me, and I was able to perform; nor do I now have any such desire.

It will be seen from the preambles and resolution, the provision applies to missionaries. Therefore, when we compare ourselves with those placed on the retired list, when we ourselves do not belong to the class for which the provision was made, we are apt to reflect and do injury, however good our motive may be.

I congratulate you upon the truth of our holy religion. It is defensible because it is true. It has been tried and found worthy. No man or woman ever obeyed the principles of our faith, as set forth in the sacred books of the church, honestly and intelligently, without being made better thereby. It brings peace and satisfaction in this world, and will surely secure for us eternal life in the world which is to come.

Our opponents point to Latter Day Saints whose conduct, they say, has been anti-Christian and criminal. Let them produce one single case, if they can, where such conduct has been the result of a sincere and intelligent application of the well-established principles of our faith! When they have succeeded in doing this, they have made a point against us; but until they succeed, (of which there is not the least danger,) such efforts as an argument against our faith are a total failure. Can the transgression and ignoring of the principles of our faith, or a departure therefrom, by anybody, or to any extent, change the truth of God?

I am willing to concede that, even among us, there is still a demand that the dividing line between men and principles should be more clearly and sharply drawn. There should be more consideration given to the question, “What has been done?” and less to that secondary proposition, “Who has done it?”

When Jesus sought to convince the Jews of the divinity of his claims and mission, he said:

If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not. But if I do, though ye believe not me, believe the works: that ye may know, and believe, that my Father is in me, and I in him.—John 10:37, 38.

There is a right way and a wrong way of trying to settle divine claims. Jesus presents the right way. He taught the truth; his works were wrought in God; he exemplified the truth, which makes us free, in all the acts of his life; hence he could say more than any other one could say:

If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin; but now they have no cloak for their sin. He that hateth me hateth my Father also. If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had sin; but now have they both seen and hated both me and my Father.—John 15:22-24.

Oh, the depth, the grandeur, the purity, the consistency of the teachings of the blessed Master! May God help us to understand and obey them.

In the past, wherever I have been able to get out among the people of the church, also among many who were not of the church, I have found friends, many friends, whose loving hearts and thoughtful coöperation have made it possible for me to do my work. The fact that large, personal favors have not been lavished on me, I regard as a blessing, rather than a misfortune; for observation shows that, as a rule, to which there are few exceptions, the conferment of such personal favors compromises the recipient, more or less, thus proving an injury both to him and the work.

That my labors have been so greatly curtailed by physical disabilities, has caused me no little regret; but this regret has grown less and less, as I have come to know more about myself and the wise and loving manner in which God was dealing with me. Just how much labor we have performed, and how much good we have accomplished, no human tribunal can determine with exactness; but the principle holds good, and always will, that if we seek that honor which comes from God, we will secure his recognition, enjoy his peace, and our usefulness will be continued and increased.

“Who can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?”—John 5:44.

I am glad that I can say I have had a strong desire to do right, and that desire remains with me. It has been my effort scrupulously to avoid wasting church money and time. I have not considered what I would like to have had, but, rather, what was right under existing conditions. I have believed, as I believe now, that it is below the dignity of our calling to beg for help, either directly or indirectly.

We have been told by the Bishop (and I believe it) that to be a minister in the church of God means something. One can not do his duty as a missionary and at the same time make it a pleasure tour or an opportunity for sight-seeing. My experience has been, with little or no exception, that when I had what appeared to be a splendid opportunity for seeing something which I desired to see, it would require a few days’ time, a little means, and the sacrifice of an opportunity to do something for the benefit of the cause, hence I could not go. I have never felt that I would be justified, as a missionary, in returning home at any given time for the sole purpose of being present on some family birthday, or some holiday; hence it was far more common for me to be in the field on family birthdays, Christmas, Fourth of July, etc., than at home.

I have contracted no debts that I was unable to pay, sooner or later, and usually at the time agreed upon, though in order to do this, I have had to wear the same suit of clothes, through the week and on Sunday, for two and three winters; and up to the present time, I have never had a decent dictionary in the house, though I have many times been asked if I had one. (Do not understand me to be reflecting on the Bishop, or complaining at my lot. This is not my purpose. I have no grounds for reflection of this kind, nor have I made any sacrifice for the cause which I regret.)

I do not believe I was ever rendered unpopular by being poorly clad, either in the church or in the world, and yet from the time I entered the ministry as an appointee of General Conference, in 1873, till now, my clothing (by which I mean everything that I wear) has not cost me more than an average of $25.00 per year! And to make the statement a little more difficult of belief for some, I will state that I have not purchased my clothing at reduced rates as a rule, though I have many times been favored with the minister’s discount. More than this,
I have been placed at a disadvantage by having to have my clothes made to order much of the time, because of being unusually hard to fit. But, perhaps, you would like a little evidence.

For ten years, beginning with 1891, and ending with 1900, the total cost of my clothing was $2,444.75; average per year, $244.475.

It has been expressed by some, that too much and unreasonable opposition has come from Bro. Lambert and a few others. Possibly this is true. But what has he opposed? Did you ever know him to oppose any part of our faith as revealed in the sacred books of the church? For the twenty-nine years that he was a member of the Quorum of Twelve, did he ever refuse to honor the direction and instruction given by the First Presidency to the quorum, or to him individually? Did he ever fail to honor the decisions of the General Conferences? Let me assure you that Bro. Lambert is not now and never was anxious to oppose. He would much prefer to do his duty without such opposition than with it, when it is possible to do so.

I have not been inclined to accept the gospel at any discount. I am not so inclined now; hence I do not believe that the help of any secret order is needed to make our work a greater success, individually or collectively.

As a fitting close to this paper, I quote from two papers which were written for the special benefit of my family, at times when it seemed my life was hanging in the balance. They are addressed to my wife and children, the first bearing date of January 9, 1889, from which I quote as follows:

First of all, I wish to speak with reference to our religion. Many times, God has given me evidence of its truth. I am fully satisfied that it is all that is claimed for it in the three books—Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. The objections which have been and are being so ingeniously urged against the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, by some, are all of the same piece. They will not stand the light of investigation from a Bible and gospel point of view.

All who study these books, intelligently, carefully, and sincerely, will believe in them, sooner or later; and the stronger their belief, the better they become, morally and spiritually.

"A corrupt tree can not bring forth good fruit." All who will place themselves in a position to know may become fully satisfied with regard to these things. But the blessings of God are precious, and in order to receive them, we must throw away our vain and foolish thoughts, together with our selfish and evil desires. Just in proportion to our efforts to come into harmony with God, by the gospel, (which is the only means of divine appointment,) his blessings will flow unto us.

My life has apparently hung on a brittle thread for years. In my great weakness, God has often made me strong, that I might perform his work. He had a work for me to do, and although I have failed in some things, yet I have striven to do his work, and in these efforts have been greatly blessed. Whether that work, so far as this probation is concerned, is about completed, time must tell.

Both of the papers referred to were written at Lamoni, Iowa, and the second one (from which I now quote) bears date of November 2, 1901.

Eleven years have passed away since I penned the above paper, and in the wisdom of God, I am still with you. After rereading the paper, and careful and prayerful meditation thereon, I have concluded to add a few words and then leave it to its fate.

First, I wish to state that I have learned by actual experience and the workings of the Holy Spirit in my mind, that at several different times when it seemed that I would surely pass over the river of death into the better land, I have been spared because of the character of my prayers and desires. God took me at my word when I told him that I was anxious to do more for his work, and for my family, and if needful, was willing to suffer on till I had completed my part of the necessary labor to be done.

The last fifteen years and more, have been full of responsibility and trial for me. Perhaps just as much so for others, but I am best prepared to speak for myself. Part of the time my burdens were all that I could stand, seemingly, and the conflict has been intense and almost continuous. But God has stood by me and with me. Seasons of joy and peace in the Spirit, have greatly encouraged me. The voice of the Spirit to me is, "Be very careful about your positions, but stand firm for the right."

Peculiar conditions in the church, and with a few leading men in the ministry, have been and are seeking for general approval and recognition by the Saints. These conditions I regarded, and do now regard, as contrary to the principles, spirit, and genius of the accepted faith of the church, and hence dangerous in their character, no matter how good the intentions of those who avowed them.

The part I have performed in controversy with some leading men in the church, has been unsought and undesired by me. As every one must do, who is true to himself and to God, I acted upon my convictions of right and duty; and while it would be folly to claim perfection for my manner and methods, I nevertheless believe that I was right on every material and vital point. But, right or wrong, I am happy in the privilege of submitting all to the final arbitration of the infinite One.

This epistle has been written under peculiar physical conditions, a few pages, and sometimes, a few lines at a time. With a desire for the good of all, and with ill-feeling to none, I am, through the grace of God, prepared to testify to all men, that God is, "and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

"Have faith in God."—Mark 11:22.
"Who art thou that judgest man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth."—Romans 14:4.

I am your fellow servant in the truth which God has in his great wisdom and love restored to the people in the last days. Brethren, let us lay aside all our follies and wrongs and do the Lord's work.

J. R. LAMBERT.

LAMONI, Iowa, May 21, 1906.

LITERATURE.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen: I am impressed with the belief that the object of every public address, and of all work both public and private, should be the accomplishment of good. And I shall therefore waive any effort at a scientific treatment of the subject of literature, and select from the rich and vast field which that word opens to us, a few of the more salient points for the purpose of accentuating them, in the hope of accomplishing thereby some good.

I believe that the richest treasure handed by one generation to another, is the treasure of literature. And when we contemplate the fact that our literature, as we now possess it, includes both the grandest thoughts and the grandest expression of thought to which human beings have been permitted to give expression, and in addition to these, and towering immensely above them, the expression of thought that has come to us from the divine mind, this belief finds ample support.

I believe that it is written in the history of the world’s experiences, in no uncertain manner, that the great architect designed that each succeeding generation should rise to a higher plane than the one preceding it. And one of the chief means affording them this opportunity, is the literature which they receive from those who preceded them. Each generation fights its own battles, as each individual fights his. Each age contributes its portion to the great good of the entire race; and the thoughts of one age, and the struggles of that age, the victories, the disappointments, and the realizations recorded in the literature of that age, handed to the next, give to it a greater and better opportunity for rising to a higher plane than was possessed by the age before it.

I believe that the forces of good and the forces of evil march side by side, not in parallel lines, but in convergent lines, which logically means that sometime these forces will come together for a final struggle. And the hope which I desire to hold out to you to-night, the hope with which my soul has become possessed in the few years of life’s experience I have been permitted to live upon earth, is that when the final struggle comes, the victory shall be for the right.

I have, so far as I am concerned, no lingering doubt that right shall be the final conqueror. I have no lingering fear that he who does right shall not at last be successful. Indeed, I believe that there is no success for him who does not do right. There may be the appearance of success. These young people in whose behalf I speak, and to whom I especially wish to address my sentiments to-night, I would like to impress with the thought that there is no success outside of the narrow way. You may be—we all may be, at times—misled by the thought that prosperity of various kinds has come to those who are careless in their conduct; that they are gathering together the riches of the world; that they are attaining unto positions of honor and emolument. But let me charge you to remember that you can not correctly estimate their success by the few years they are under your observation. We can not judge absolutely and correctly by a portion of the time in which the providences of God are extended unto men; and we have every reason to believe, by a survey, not of a few years but of the ages, that real success comes only to those whose chief, whose dominant thought in life is to do right and to do good.

I invite your attention, first, to the literature of patriotism; and I shall do the very best I can to avoid the expression of a thought that ought to give offense to any. I desire to be absolutely free from everything that may justly be objected to; for I recognize that I have been invited by these young people to speak those things that are best calculated for good, and I desire to avoid offending any. And, yet, you who know me best, know that I can only speak my sentiments; I can only say what I believe.

Patriotism, we all say, is the love of one’s country. Now, I desire to impress these young people with a broader thought than that. I know that according to the derivation of the word, that is what it means. But there are several other things necessary in order to a correct understanding of words. We do not coin new words, as a rule, when we wish to express new thoughts. We simply swell the contents of the word already coined, and hence in addition to the derivation of the word we must be acquainted with its history; and in addition to that we must consider the connection in which it is used.

For the purpose of the thought that I wish to impress upon these young people to-night, I recognize that the best minds of the best ages of this world have been the broadest minds. They have looked not merely to the citizens of their own nations; they have considered the brethren of the race. They have been men who have regarded a membership in the race as the chief thought of their existence on earth. And you will permit me to say, and to show you by reference to our patriotic literature, that this is preeminently American sentiment.

The very first utterance of our fathers in justification of their withdrawal from allegiance to the British government, was the declaration that all men are born free and equal. Here, you will observe, is not merely the recognition of their right and our right to freedom and independence; but the recognition of the right of all men. The entire human family was considered in this broad and glorious and justly celebrated declaration of our fathers.

Created! That is, given their liberty of God. And for what purpose? Coupled with liberty is accountability. They are, in fact, inseparable. And it is because God holds every individual and every nation accountable to him, that he has seen fit, in justness and in righteousness, to give them the opportunity of choosing their forms of government. For, let me impress upon you the thought that we are not only accountable to him as members of the race, but we are accountable to him as citizens of our country; and we are accountable to him as a nation, as indeed are also all other nations. Justice, therefore, demands that inasmuch as we are both individually and nationally to be held accountable to him, that individually and nationally we shall have the right to choose our way, and what we will be. And whether we occupy a position low or high in the scale of civilization, our accountability to him demands that we shall be permitted to make that choice.

I therefore urge, as one of the central thoughts of my brief address, that these young people, if they move out in the political arena, shall not confine themselves to the narrow thought that they live for their own country alone. This race is one. This race is the workmanship of one God. All mankind are brothers; and the liberty we enjoy, the liberty that we have for so many years enjoyed, the liberty that we hope to continue to enjoy, is not ours alone. It is for every creature that God has made. And I want you young people to be inspired with this thought—and had I the power I would kindle within the soul of every citizen of this country of ours an unquenchable fire of determination to give his influence, his work, and everything that he can do, to spreading this liberty we enjoy, until the beauteous banner we love so well, that typifies the liberty for which our fathers fought, should wave in mighty significance and power over every foreign shore, not by force, but by consent.

I wish here to digress just long enough to make this remark. One of the chief, if not the chiefest object of literature, as designed providentially, is to afford to mankind an arena of conflict, wherein the battles for truth and right may be fought. Some people become discouraged because of the differences of opinion among human beings; but so long as the chief characteristic of human nature is fallibility, differences of opinion constitute our safety and our salvation. If we, as a race liable to err, fasten upon that which is wrong instead of that which is right, and there is not a soul to object, not a voice of protest to be raised, the world will move on in darkness and error, and no man can tell the end thereof. I point you to the example of the Dark Ages as the best lesson of the evil that comes from union upon error. The world at that time was practically united in upholding the divine right of kings politically, and the infallible domination of the ecclesiastical power religiously. And what was the effect? I need not tell you.

In considering the literature of patriotism further, I invite your attention to the word statesmanship. You young people may some of you be statesmen. I hope you will be. But I hope you will be statesmen of a different order from many of those with whom you are associated and acquainted. Statesmanship does not consist in so manipulating the affairs of the country with which the statesman is connected that, regardless of the evil wrought upon others, his own country is lifted high and made prosperous. Statesmanship in its broadest and best sense consists in so manipulating the affairs of the country with which the statesman is associated that peace and prosperity shall come to his own land, and that land shall be used to contribute in the highest possible degree to the peace and prosperity of every other land. I want these young people to be solemnly impressed with the grandeur of that thought of statesmanship, and never sink to the level of the chicanery and fraud employed too often among those whom we class as statesmen to accomplish what they suppose is some good to their own land, to the detriment and injury of every other land, if necessary.

The thought is too often impressed upon us, by what we see and hear, that the end justifies the means. That what we may accomplish will sanctify the evil that we do in order to its accomplishment. I desire these young people, and everybody else, to be impressed with a different thought. Do not do evil that good may come. Do not expect to act upon the Jesuitical idea that the end justifies the means. Do right because it is right. I wish to illustrate and impress this thought by reference to one of our greatest of American statesmen. Abraham Lincoln, when he began that marvelous career, and, by the way, if I were a hero-worshiper I would bow at the shrine of Abraham Lincoln, before any other American that I am acquainted with. But I am not. I do not propose to bow at the shrine of any man. But Abraham Lincoln, when he began that marvelous fight against human slavery, argued that it was inexpedient. The North was free, the South was slave; and a house divided against itself could not stand. You who are acquainted with the history of those times know well the “house divided against itself” argument upon which Lincoln first depended. But as he moved out into the arena of conflict, as he saw more deeply into the principles of which he treated, as he considered more critically the things by which he was surrounded, he reached a higher plane, and when he prepared his celebrated address which he delivered at Bloomington, Illinois, he abandoned the “house against itself” argument, and based his opposition to slavery upon the thought that slavery is wrong. “Slavery is wrong, and therefore slavery must go.” Lincoln had a very peculiar method of preparing addresses. Some of these young people may desire to copy it. He wore a stovepipe hat, and when a thought occurred to him that he believed was proper to weave into an address, he tore an old scrap from the margin of a newspaper, made a note upon it, and put it in his hat; and as the hat grew full of notes, Lincoln grew full of speech. And this is the way he prepared his Bloomington address.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
But upon this occasion, recognizing that this meeting was far superior to the other occasions upon which he had appeared, he also took the pains to make a brief and carefully prepared draft in writing of the address which he proposed to deliver. And having assembled his political associates and counselors in a barn, he read to them this portion of his coming address, and asked them whether or not, in their judgment, he should deliver that speech. And every single man advised him not to deliver it. There was not a soul among the political advisers of Abraham Lincoln at that time that had risen to the height to which he had risen. Why did they say, Do not deliver it? No argument was made that it was wrong. No single man urged that the principle was not right; but, it will kill you politically, and you should not deliver it. Lincoln listened quietly to each man in his turn, and then arose and said, “That speech will be delivered, whatever the consequences to me.”

Oh! I would that I had the power to impress upon these young people, to impress upon every soul into whose face I look to-night, the grandeur of that sentiment. “That speech will be delivered, whatever the consequences to me.” And that speech was delivered. And a chronicler of that occasion said that whereas Abraham Lincoln was originally six feet and a half high, at Bloomington, Illinois, in the delivery of that grand oration, he was fully seven feet high, and inspired at that. I believe it. I believe that God was in that speech, and with that man.

The thought that I desire to impress by reference to this incident, with which no doubt many of you are very familiar, is this: Each of you will meet, some time in life, your Waterloo, and you will either go down to defeat, or you will rise in glorious victory. The question is, What shall be your course in order to secure a justly-earned victory? Your course should be the course indicated in the reply of Abraham Lincoln: “That speech will be delivered, whatever the consequences to me.” Be sure that you are right, then allow no multitude of counselors to lead you from doing that right.

The literature of patriotism, as we have it in our beloved country, is so full of grandeur to my soul that I hardly dared to enter it. And as I gave it a thought or two, and recognized my own limitations, and my lack of ability, I hesitated to enter the precincts, sacred and glorious to the souls of all who love the right. But I thought like this: While I sat before that vast monument of good contributed to me and to you, and recognized the grandeur and glory of it, I would not fail to call your attention to it, though my calling, my pointing to it, and my effort at treating it should seem so utterly insignificant in comparison to the thing itself, that it should be as nothing.

The literature of love will not be treated by me in the ordinary manner. I desire to say, as an introductory thought, that it is worth more, in my judgment, and according to my experience, to live one day possessed of a controlling desire and wish for the welfare and blessed condition of every human being, without a single exception, than to spend an eternity devoid of that thought.

It is written somewhere that “God is love.” I am not, so far as I am concerned, particular where. The truth addresses itself to me, and I am satisfied it is a fact. I can see it written in the mountain and in the valley. I can hear it in the murmur of the breeze, and see it in the smile of the flowers. “God is love.” Everywhere and by everything that grand truth is presented. If he is, love is not blind. You young people should never accept the thought that love is blind. It sees with the sharpest eyes. It may be, and it is a fact, that there are things mistaken for love, that are blind. But love itself is never, and can not be. And I will show you why. What is the object of love? Why does the mother love her child? Why has God implanted in her a power of love, a wealth of love greater in any other human being? Because it is necessary in the care of that child. Do you think a blind personality is the best provision an infinite God could make for taking care of anybody? Do you think that a personality that is blind is the best guardian angel, whether human or divine; or do you think that he who sees with the sharpest eyes and comprehends with the brightest and broadest thought is the best calculated to accomplish the work that love leads us to do? Never accept the thought that love is blind.

In connection with that, let me urge this thought also. Do not expect the greatest and the best things the world affords without effort. Young people get married. They should get married. That is the design of God, that they should be companioned in that way. But an effort is required for the union and blending together of two lives. And you young people will meet with nothing but the saddest disappointment, if you expect that the sweetest, the best, the grandest of communion that God has provided for man on earth amidst its sorrows and its joys can be attained without effort intelligently directed. A man and a woman united in marriage need not and should not expect to blend together as perfectly as is necessary, without an effort upon the part of both intelligently directed toward that end, with the consciousness that both must make sacrifices, and both must yield, that the blending may be perfect. And I bear you witness that when that effort is made, and in that blending process has accomplished even a portion of its work, that there is not, between the cradle and the grave, a bliss so sweet as that which is attained thereby.

Diplomas should be appreciated. They are evidence, as a friend remarked to me a day or two ago, in regard to public school graduation, of one success achieved. I do not wish to drop a thought to cause any one to undervalue the possession of the diploma honestly and properly earned. It is a written evidence of work honorably and well done, and it should be prized, and highly prized. But there is another side to this. One of our best educated Americans was once congratulated upon the fact that he had received a great many college degrees. He said, “Yes, I have. I have known what it is to be educated. I have experienced the joys of having honors of this character conferred upon me; but when I entered the real battle of life, I found it more expedient to work with my brains than with my degrees.”

Our good Ben Franklin, when representing the American Colonies in Paris, was entering at one time the hall of the senate. The French senators were powdered and wigged in all the glory that they thought attached to that character of ornamentation. Franklin was dressed in the plain garb of an American citizen. A page noticing his peculiar garb, taking pity upon him, approached him and touching him upon the shoulder said, “Sir, have you not forgotten your wig?” Franklin turned to him with a smile that can come only from a heart and intellect like his, and said, “I may have forgotten my wig; but I have not forgotten my head.”

I desire to impress these young people with the lesson there is in this incident. You may at some time forget your wigs; but let me beg you never to forget your heads. They will stand you in stead better than anything else. And the thought connected with this is, that our education in schools and colleges is merely the beginning of life’s education, as we know what education in fact is. Let me give you a definition which has been a favorite with me for some years. Education is the full and harmonious development of every power with which God has endowed us. That is complete education. And we begin that work in schools and colleges, and we should continue it to the end of life. And, personally, I do not think that it ends with life. The succeeding generations of men benefit by the literature which has been handed down to them, receiving the lessons which are taught by the sorrows and the joys of those who went before them; and, making use of the information which they obtain by delving into nature, and by the things by which they are surrounded, move forward to the great common end. But, I am impressed, my friends, with the thought— I can not logically get rid of it, in view of the infinite love of the great Architect—that when all the sorrows and joys of human life are brought together, when everything we know of good or evil has been gathered and placed in the great crucible prepared of God, we shall witness a result of divine love and munificence so far beyond our powers of expression that we can only stand and gaze. And while I was once content with saying that there had been placed before humanity equality of opportunity, (and evidently that is the equality spoken of in our Declaration,) I am no longer content with saying that, and that alone; because the logical consequence and result of conferring equality of opportunity is, that in the divine ministration of infinite love, and the labor of love contributed by man, there shall be wrought out, finally, at last, whenever that shall be, an absolute equality as a consequence of conferring equality of opportunity. If you can conceive of any other object in conferring equality of opportunity, I should be pleased to know what it is.

You and I, my young friends, and my older friends, recognizing the responsibility that rests upon us as human beings and as citizens, must concede that every single act we perform should be directed and dictated by sentiments and desires for good. The introductory thought is my closing thought also in a different form. Men created of God, a race born of Jehovah, a world peopled by divine providential interposition, a struggle from the cradle to the grave; and when all is over, and the sweetest harmonies that our most celebrated musicians have presented to the world pale into utter insignificance before the grand harmony that shall be breathed from the harp of the ages, when its strings are swept by the fingers of the Infinite Hand, shall tell of the glory that God shall bring to men when they are permitted to occupy the exalted heights to which I believe we shall be permitted to come, and view the broad expanse of the ocean of eternity, amid the lifting up of its everlasting billows, and the sweet soundings of its gently flowing tides.

I thank you for your attention.
This life comes to man only through obedience to the law of this kingdom. The first principles of this law are faith, repentance, baptism, the laying on of hands, the resurrection, and eternal judgment. (See Hebrews 6:1, 2.)

Of these six principles, the first four are directly applicable to our lives here, and are mandatory on those who would “enter the kingdom.”

“Except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God,” were the words of the Christ. These are the general conditions upon which men enter this kingdom. But as every law has its bounds and conditions, so this law has its limitations. The limitation of the application of this law is to those who in this life have the opportunity of rendering intelligent obedience thereunto.

For as Paul so aptly asks:

How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they hear without a preacher?

—1 Peter 2:11-16; John 9:41.)

The next citation gives us two classes who are brought forth in the first resurrection. One class (the prophets and those who have kept their words) who “are the first resurrection,” and another class (those who die in ignorance, “not having salvation declared unto them”) who “have a part in the first resurrection.” And “little children” are included in these words, “and little children also have eternal life.” It reads as follows:

And now, the resurrection of all the prophets, and all those that have believed in their words, or all those that have kept the commandments of God, shall come forth in the first resurrection; therefore, they are the first resurrection. They are raised to dwell with God who has redeemed them: thus they have eternal life through Christ, who has broken the bands of death. And these are those who have part in the first resurrection; and these are they who have died before Christ came, in their ignorance, not having salvation declared unto them. And thus the Lord bringeth about the restoration of these; and they have a part in the first resurrection, or have eternal life, being redeemed by the Lord. And little children also have eternal life. But behold, and fear, and tremble before God, for ye ought to tremble: for the Lord redeemeth none such that rebel against him, and die in their sins; yea, even all those that have perished in their sins ever since the world began, that have willfully rebelled against God, that have known the commandments of God, and would not keep them; these are they that have no part in the first resurrection. —Mosiah 8:6.

We will just add one more citation from the Book of Mormon upon this subject. In this the prophet Mormon is making an argument against infant baptism, and places infants in the same catalogue as those who are without law, and declares that “unto such baptism availeth nothing.” Listen to the words of this prophet, for he declares that in the great judgment they will stand against those who fail to give heed thereunto:

For behold that all little children are alive in Christ, and also all they that are without the law. For the power of the redemption cometh on all they that have no law: wherefore, he that is not condemned, or he that is under no condemnation can not repent; and unto such baptism availeth nothing. But it is mockery before God, denying the mercies of Christ, and the power of his Holy Spirit and putting trust in dead works.—Mormon 8:3. Utah edition, 8:22, 23.

In the light of the foregoing citations, does it not appear that those who have been so active in searching the records of the past, and getting the names of their progenitors, who have died without the opportunity of baptism into the kingdom of God, and being baptized for them, were “putting trust in dead works,” and “denying the mercies of Christ”? Unto such we say in the language of Mormon, as he concludes this subject:

Behold, my son, this thing ought not to be; for repentance is unto them that are under condemnation, and under the curse of a broken law. And the first-fruits of repentance is baptism; and baptism cometh by faith unto the fulfilling of the commandments; and the fulfilling the commandments bringeth remission of sins; and the remission of sins bringeth meekness, and lowliness of heart; and because of meekness and lowliness of heart, cometh the visitation of the Holy Ghost, which Comforter filleth with hope and perfect love, which love endureth by diligence unto prayer, until the end shall come, when all the saints shall dwell with God.

But just here I fancy I hear one of my readers ask, “If baptism availeth nothing to those who had not the opportunity to obey that ordinance in this life, upon what basis will they be judged according to their works, according to the desire of their hearts?” This is one bound or condition of this law. Another is, those unto whom it is applicable are only those who have had opportunity to obey the message in this life, and because of conditions surrounding them were blinded and disobedient. (See Doctrine and Covenants 76:6. Utah edition 76:71-79.)

This is in harmony with “justice and judgment” that are the habitation of God’s throne, and does not rob “mercy and truth,” which always claims their own. And this is in harmony also, with Peter’s statement in 1 Peter 3:19, 20, where he says:

By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient, when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water.—[The inspired translation puts it: “Some of whom were disobedient in the days of Noah,” etc.]

What shall we say more? Surely the justice and mercy of God need no vindication at our hands, and while we are reproached by our Utah friends for not preaching this ordinance or principle, we prefer to be in harmony with God’s plan, and await his pleasure.

When he pledged to the church at Nauvoo, that until they had sufficient time to build a temple unto him that should be an accepted place wherein this ordinance should be performed, or until, by their failure to build, or by “follies and abominations” practiced before the Lord, they brought condemnation upon their own heads to such an extent that the Lord would annul the pledge by bringing the “end of the appointment” unto the rejection of the “church with your dead,” that their baptisms for their dead performed in the river should be acceptable, it certainly carried the thought that should that appointment be closed and the temple not completed, that the church rejection would not only be a possible contingency, but an assured fact: And there was no cause save their own willful failure to build, or transgression of law could prevent such a completion of the temple, for the Lord had said, “I grant unto you a sufficient time to build a house unto me.” And if the Lord granted that time, then no other power could interfere between the church and him; for, as Paul says, “There is no power but of God.”

When this appointment was ended by revelation, October 3, 1841, and the temple not completed, then all Israel should have known that they were “rejected as a church” with their dead.

In proof of this read Doctrine and Covenants 107:10, 14. Utah edition 124:30, 33, 47, 48:

For this ordinance belongeth to my house, and can not be acceptable to me, only in the days of your poverty, wherein ye are not able to build a house unto me. But I command you, all ye my saints, to build a house unto me; and I grant unto you a sufficient time to build a house unto me, and during that time your baptisms shall be acceptable unto me. But, behold, at the end of this appointment, your baptisms for your dead shall not be acceptable unto me; and if you do not these things at the end of the appointment, you shall be rejected as a church, with your dead, saith the Lord your God. And it shall come to pass, that if you build a house unto my name, and do not the things that I say, I will not perform the oath which I make unto you, neither fulfill the promises which ye expect at my hands, saith the Lord; for instead of blessings, ye, by your own words, bring cursings, wrath, indignation, and judgments, upon your own heads, by your follies, and by all your abominations, which you practice before me, saith the Lord.

In the light of the foregoing and the revelation of October 3, 1841, already referred to, and found in the minutes of the General Conference of the church in Times and Seasons, volume 2, page 578, it seems as though there could be no question but that the “appointment” closed at that date, and all attempts to practice that ordinance thereafter, until there shall come a new revelation and commitment of authority to so do, must necessarily prove abortive. Hence we are not surprised to see our Utah friends out of harmony with the justice of God, as revealed in his word, in their effort to occupy this, at present, forbidden ground.

This last revelation referred to reads as follows:

There shall be no more baptisms for the dead until the ordinance can be attended to in the font of the Lord’s house; and the church shall not hold another general conference until they can meet in said house; for thus saith the Lord.

It will not do to say that there was not sufficient time given between the dates of these two revelations (eight and one half months) for the building of this house, and hence it could not mean the rejection of the church. There was abundant time for such “follies and abominations” to be practiced, whereby they polluted the holy ground, that the Lord had to declare the appointment closed. And until Zion shall again assemble upon the chosen land, and, in obedience to a direct command of God, proceed to build an acceptable temple, this principle must remain as suspended; and his people should not undertake to perform that which the Lord has forbidden, lest they be like the Israelites of old who insisted in essaying to enter the promised land after the edict had gone forth that “ye shall not come into the land . . . save Caleb the son of Jephunneh and Joshua the son of Nun.” Better, it is, to wait the Lord’s own time and be obedient.

Mothers’ Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

“Be brave, dear heart! hopes broken lie
In sight of land; but there is One Who notes our loss, who hears our cry.
He makes our failures, victories won.”

“In this wide world, the fondest and the best
Are the most tried, most troubled and distressed.
The path of sorrow and that path alone,
Leads to the land where sorrows are unknown.”

“Blindfolded and alone I stand,
With unknown thresholds on each hand;
The darkness deepens as I grope,
Afraid to fear, afraid to hope;
Yet this one thing I learn to know,
Each day more surely as I go,
That doors are opened, ways are made,
Burdens are lifted or are laid,
By some great law unseen, and still Unfathomed purpose to fulfill,
Not as I will.”

SAN JACINTO, California, May 24, 1906.

Dear Column: After a safe and pleasant journey by rail, in these perilous times, one feels like publicly expressing thanks to the Giver of all good gifts, from whom we receive protecting care. Our journey both to and from conference was unusually pleasant and free from accident or anxiety. The return trip was restful indeed; a cool, clean tourist-car all to ourselves with the exception of one young couple, also going to San Bernardino, the husband a Latter Day Saint. And occasionally the conductors took up their abode in the car for quiet. When the sun shone too warmly in one section, we went to another. The porter furnished us with pillows, so we made a business of resting. Such was the beginning of our journey to Papeete; have we any reason to fear for the remainder? It is not for our safe journey only that I am thankful but also for having the privilege of being with the people of God in Zion, and seeing, hearing, and enjoying all that we did enjoy during our seven weeks’ stay among them. I had had some misgivings at first as to the advisability of expending the amount of money that would be needful to do, if I accompanied my husband to conference, since I could not hear the business transactions, neither the preaching. Still I felt that the sight and influence of such an assembly would do me good after so long an isolation, and perhaps I in turn might do some good. In fact, I wanted to go, of course, but did not set my heart or my determination upon it, other than “if the way opens up, I will go.” Well, the way did open up, so easily too, and I went, and was satisfied before the close of the first Sunday that the money had been well spent. The very sight of that gathering, and to be in their midst to see the activity and order of the Sunday-school, the host of little ones, with their eager, happy faces, marshaled through the broad aisles, with their teacher in the lead; and the attention given during class exercises, by both the little ones and those older, were pleasant indeed to look upon. But that was only the beginning of the day. The real solemnity of the occasion was when the congregation came together for divine service. To look upon that throng of people, eager and attentive, then cast their shadows before them in a manner that strikes awe to thinking minds. These together with the instruction obtained through the preaching of the word, and the confirmation of faith by the testimonies of the power and goodness of God manifest in various ways in behalf of his children, made up the spiritual side of our enjoyment of conference.

But there is always another source of enjoyment at all conferences. That is the social side, and it was enjoyed by us very keenly upon this occasion. The meeting, and renewal of former acquaintance, with brothers and sisters in the church, beloved and highly esteemed for their worth, also the meeting of others who were strangers to me but who with a cordial clasp of the hand claimed to have known me for years, even when a rollicking girl (hunting hens' nests and trying to get converted at a reunion); and last, but not least, the very enjoyable visit to my sister’s, Mrs. J. W. Layton, where we made our headquarters during our stay, and where there was quite a family reunion. Mrs. Layton is the youngest of our father’s family, and as everyone knows, the youngest holds the prerogative of being the pet while the oldest has that of being helper and counselor, the second named being Sr. Newcomb, of Delhaven, Nova Scotia. Both the pet and the helper were present, also our brother Holmes, more generally known as H. J. Davison, with his good wife Kate and two of his children. Such a meeting of us, brothers and sisters, had not taken place since we left Nova Scotia twenty-two years ago; and to say that we enjoyed the occasion is putting it mildly.

There was another reunion at that conference in which we had part also, that of the Society Islands missionaries. All who are now living of those were present except Bro. and Sr. Devore. We regretted much that they were not with us.

After conference we paid a visit of one week to Lamoni. There were many reasons for desiring to go there, but with me the principal one was to meet once again our beloved and worshipful Mrs. M. Walker. She and I made each other’s acquaintance through the medium of the pen some thirty years ago while the writer was in Australia, and have kept up an unbroken correspondence ever since. What she has been to me in this work will not be known in this life, and we both desired greatly to see each other face to face once again, having done so but once in all the years of our acquaintance. And though our visit with her (and Sr. Lucy Ressoguie, well beloved) was short, it was all of restful comfort and pleasant intercourse that could be crowded into those fleet hours, since we had many invitations elsewhere. In view of the silence and isolation that awaited us in the near future the kind-hearted Saints of Lamoni vied with each other in making the time of our lingering as pleasant as possible, and crowned it all in giving us a farewell gathering at the spacious, yet homelike, “Banta” homestead where Mrs. Ressoguie, Walker, and Mary Banta dwell together in cozy comfort. Sweet strains of vocal music ringing out upon the evening air, just outside. Upon opening the door to see whence it came, we beheld a large choir of Lamoni singers, and became aware that the inmates of the house were being honored with a serenade, after which the singers were cordially invited to enter the house where the evening hours were most pleasantly spent in friendly greetings and conversation interspersed with music, both vocal and instrumental.

As the evening waned, as many of the company as could gathered into one room to listen to the parting exercises which were an address by Bro. C. Scott in his own earnest, soul-stirring manner with comforting and encouraging words in a heartfelt benediction upon the missionaries who were soon to leave the riches and comforts of this their native land and go to the storm-swept islands to take up their work there among the impoverished islanders, with no other inducement than to do the will of Him by whom they were sent, and to comfort the native Saints.

In behalf of the Lamoni Saints he also presented the missionary with a generous and substantial offering, expressive of their love for the work and the workers. The missionary and wife responded in a brief acknowledgment of the same, and of the self-sacrificing love that prompted the act. They then sang, “God be with you till we meet again,” in the native language, responded to by the company in “Speed away.” And then we all stood as if under the open windows of heaven while our beloved brother, Heman C. Smith, communed with the Father face to face (spiritually), commending those same missionaries to his care, and entreating for them the richest spiritual blessings that humanity is heir to. How we wished there had been a Belle Robinson James present with pencil and paper that those sacredly beautiful words of both the prayer and the address might have been caught as they fell from the speakers’ lips, that we might have carried them with us to refresh and brighten other hours by the inspiration contained therein; but we are assured that both are preserved in the archives of heaven, and trust the influence of them will not only go, but abide with us, and cast their brightness of hope and promise upon the difficult paths of our duty and work in the islands, transforming the otherwise monotonous tasks into a daily pleasure.

On the following day as we were being whirled by rail through a portion of Iowa and Missouri, in a dreamy, happy frame of mind, recounting the social and spiritual feasts of the near past, it seemed to me that just such a transforming power had suddenly shed its influence upon the landscape, clothing the dry and uninviting-looking fields and leafless trees that we had looked upon but a week before, into green verdure, and leafy branches, and arranged the fruit-trees in a mantle of pink and white blossoms, delicate and fragrant. Truly all nature seemed to rejoice and we, too, rejoiced as we feasted our sea- and sand-saturated eyes upon the beauty of the country, enriched with such a variety of scenery stretching away in the distance, and everchanging in its outline. The cattle also in the fields close by, as well as on “the thousand hills,” seemed to rejoice while they made haste to build up their waste places with the abundance of sweet, green grass. “God is Dear.”

A little boy, not yet six, to whom the hours of the Sunday afternoon seemed rather long, was told by his father that he could sit at his desk and read Bible verses. “God is love,” dictated the father, spelling the words slowly as the lad’s fingers carefully printed them on the paper. Not long after the father found that the little fellow had added a “Revised Version” of his own, and had been printing several times over, on different slips of paper and in different colors, the short sentence, "God is dear.

The lad's instinct was right. "God is dear" is the other side of the truth that "God is love." God is dear to us because he makes us dear to him. The Bible recognizes this fact when it says we love him because he first loved us. The great fount of love in the divine nature is the source of all the little rills and springs of love in human hearts.

Yes, God is dear. Childhood feels this truth instinctively and adult manhood as life advances experiences increasing proofs of its fact. God is the dearest of the dear, Jesus Christ his son, who reveals the great Creator to men, is the chiefest among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely. "God is dear." No matter what doubts the Devil may put into your mind regarding God's dealings with you, no matter how cares may multiply or depressions assail, hold fast to that tender thought! God loves to be loved. Let him be to you the dearest of the dear.—Selected.

Editors Herald: The writer, being quite a recent addition to the church membership, was baptized by Bro. P. M. Hanson last September prior to his departure for his native land, whose unassuming manner and modesty won the hearts of the Saints in this locality, and they were sorry to part with such a valiant defender of the faith once delivered. And the writer can bear testimony of the truthfulness of this work, and desires to express gratitude to the office of priest, and John Williams to that of deacon. As for myself, I felt weak and unworthy,—felt so unqualified to fill such a position; but I know that God's promises are sure, and he will qualify those whom he calls.

Our worthy president, Bro. J. Jones, has decided on street-preaching on Sunday evenings, before church service. A goodly band of Saints rallied around him on Sunday night, the 22d, and I am sure good will come of it. It behooves the Saints to bestir themselves, for God's judgments are being poured out with measure. I feel to sympathize with the poor, unfortunate people of San Francisco.

Editors Herald: This leaves me at the above place, where I have been the past two weeks, telling the gospel story, with fair interest and good attendance. We had the pleasure last Friday of baptizing four. Another one has asked for baptism, and others are near the door. We hope and pray that they will see the necessity of obeying.

Yesterday morning our aged brother, Charles Derry, gave us a cheering sermon, and we were blessed. It seemed so good to hear his voice, so clear and strong. I feel that the good Lord will bless us this year. I hope that we will all live so that we may be worthy to have his divine approval.

Your brother,

W. A. Smith.

Editors Herald: As one of God's weak instruments, I felt impressed to write, after reading Bro. Joseph Luff's epistle in HERALD, June 6, 1906. I have so often thought upon those things touched upon. Believing it to be according to the law and testimony, "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called. But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and God has chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty. And base things of the world, and things which are despised hath God chosen, yea and things which are not to bring to naught things that are."—1 Corinthians 1:26-28. Why? Verse 29: "That no flesh should glory in his presence."

I am one of those weak ones; I have many times been made to realize that God did recognize me, and give me much knowledge of his will; and in the presentation of his word he has blessed me, and has given me words to speak, proving to me

that he is able to fulfill his promise, and to accomplish his work in his own way. This has in a measure been an evidence of this work to me, because it is in line with the law and testimony as recorded. But I can see where I have failed many a time in fulfilling all that God required of me; even things that he had shown me I should speak, I have hesitated and not spoken as boldly as I should, because of the surroundings. I have just read the brother's epistle. I read it, read it, and reread it. It seemed to stir the very fountain of my soul. I truly believe God hath spoken by his Spirit for our good. He speaks of things that the Lord did show me, when I first came into this work twenty-two years ago, before and about the time I was ordained. I was given three subjects to preach on. I believe God did so direct me. They were, "Pride and costly apparel," "Secret orders," and the "Unchangeableness of the gospel." I have spoken on those subjects; but maybe not as much as I ought on pride and secret societies; because of the stand that seemed to me the church had taken on those things. The Lord did, I verily believe, show me that sermons on pride, expressly, would not be accepted. It has been fulfilled. It has been scoffed at, and made light of by Saints, and, sorry to say, some of the elders. I was shown that only a few would receive it. Because of this I have not used that subject so often as I should. Much of the instruction given is my belief and has been fulfilled. I always did and do now, think the house of God should be held sacred, and not used for amusements. I believe we should come back to the old standard of 1830 in those things, and seek less to carry on the work by the wisdom of the world, and let God use the simple things to do his work, to confound the wise, so that no flesh can glory in his presence. But the Lord is able to make us wise, if we heed the admonition: Study to be approved, a workman of the Master. He will make wise the simple, and they will do a work to the honor and glory of God, and be a great factor in the redemption of Zion.

I am of a disposition that allows me to become weak by the things I see. It ought not to be so; but it seems I can not help it. Perhaps if I would try harder I might. While I realize this is an individual work, in a sense at least, I do weaken often over what I see. I ought not to, for it is my wrongs that affect me; it is my sins that will condemn me; it is my sins that God chastiseth me for; it is my sins that hinders my communion with God, and my weakness that brings my trials. I have been told as much.

Four years ago my companion was taken home to rest, and the way was so hedged up I had to quit the mission-field, although reluctant to do so. Whether I shall ever be loosed again, I can not tell. I was tried in many ways, and came near passing over at one time, but by God's mercy and love I am here still. While so much trial and sorrow weighed me down, I had a presentiment in that I thought I was relieved of that burden; I felt to rejoice, and it seemed that all my trouble was over. I spoke of it, and a personage whom I seemed had brought me out of this trouble, said, "There are other things in your way, over which you have no control." I knew it was true. That is one of my weak points. I have been since that time trying to overcome, and have to a certain extent.

Some of the things spoken of in the epistle are among the things that have worried me much, and have been a source of trial to me. They are brought up to me is conversation. What can I say? I dare not deny. No. Only yesterday a brother told me of the Brighamites baptizing five here Sunday. He rehearsed all these things to excuse himself for his coldness. He seemed to think the Brighamites were as near right as we are. I often hear those things spoken of. I at one time did belong to secret orders; but since coming into this work I have no need of them, nor have I had "anything to do with them. I have no desire to return to the hole to wallow in the mire, after being washed in the blood of the Lamb.

God is able to take care of his own work, and need not call upon his enemies to help him. He will call upon them, if they will repent and forsake the world; then he will gladly use them, and his people will rejoice indeed. But to cling to the world, and the fashion thereof, causes Saints to mourn, and God to weep. Read Matthew 10:11-14. Verse 14 reads: "And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet." Read verse 15 also. He did not say we must join ourselves to the world in order to get an opening. If God's servants will fully trust him, he will furnish all the openings they can fill.

The Book of Mormon is dear to my heart. It is divine; and all who will try to observe its teachings will be blessed. I think it is plainer and more outspoken against the sins of the people than the Bible. I do think I received a positive evidence of its divinity. I would to God we could all live nearer its teachings. If strictly lived up to, Zion would be here.

I need the prayers of God's people, that I may ever be found trying to step up higher; not in a worldly sense, but in a spiritual sense. May God help all his saints to be faithful to him in prayer. We have no need to be discouraged as I used to see. Of a certainty we see discouraging things now and then; but just stop and think: Are we in this church any more perfect than they were in the church nineteen hundred years ago? No. There were discouraging things in the church then. One of the apostles betrayed Christ. After that, many bad men were in the church, so the Bible tells us. But the leading men were working for the right. So if we do see some that do not as they should, shall we be discouraged and give up in despair, as some would seem to do? No. Are not the principal men and Presidency doing all they can, and trying to keep the ship off the shoals? Yes, I think so; but they can not do it all, any more than we can. They must have the cooperation of all the body. "In union there is strength." If they would have this, then would the wheel roll along. Do we expect these men are perfect, without any fault? We ought not to. Christ is the only perfect one, or without fault; and Paul says he even learned obedience by the things he suffered. So we must not expect more of these men than God does of us. He wants us, when we make a mistake, to repent; then he is just and true to forgive. Our leaders are only human. I believe they are doing their best to prosper the work. If this brother had not been willing, who wrote the epistle, and trying to do right, God would not have spoken to him as he did.

Dear Saints and friends, is it not possible that sometimes our elders are not correctly reported? Is it not possible that we have incorrect reports of the General Conferences, and what is done there? I have known of such, and have been called on to correct it, or did at least so correct. I have been told things that have been done, but found out it was a mistake. May not this be true of others? I think so. There is nothing lost, if we do help to hold up the hands of those God has sent to counsel and direct us, and honor the office at least. I want to do so, if the Lord wills. We must purger ourselves. The body must purger itself, before it ever will be permitted to graft any one. Am I wrong? If I am, I will stand corrected.

But in this purging process, it takes wisdom and care, last when you root up a tare, the wheat also may be rooted up. A simple illustration here: We have a herd of cattle in the field, and the shepherd watches them. So none of them get out or strange ones get in. Suppose one would get in, what would the shepherd do? He would go carefully about so as not to scare and stampede the flock. For that means to scatter and break out, and the loss of some. But he goes carefully around and watches until he gets him separated from the rest, then he turns him out, and no damage to his herd. So with the Saints. Care must be used to separate the strange ones from the rest, and carefully let them out, and no harm to the body. I believe this is God's way. So, if the purging is not done as quick as we want to see it, be content; for God is watching and his time will come, and his will shall be accomplished. May the Lord help us all to be ready when the Bridegroom cometh, to go in to the marriage supper of the Lamb. "O for a faith that will not shrink."

FALL RIVER, Massachusetts, June 9, 1906.

Editors Herald: I arrived in my field of labor May 5 and was kindly received. I found the work in fairly good condition, the local brethren having taken good care of the branch during my absence. I hurried back a few days sooner than I otherwise would in order to be present at the regular branch business-meeting, which convened the same evening I arrived. Considerable business was transacted in short order; a splendid spirit of unity prevailed, and we were able to adjourn much earlier than usual.

The young people are the life of the branch here, and wherever that obtains there is always a live branch. Our Sunday-school usually averages over one hundred and six. Last Sunday there were one hundred and twelve present. Collection, two dollars and twenty-six cents. Besides this was the Christmas Offering which we take up every Sunday. Compare this with some of the larger branches, and I think the result will be largely in our favor.

Like all old branches, we have a lot of scattered members, and some names of members on our record that are lost to us. The secretary informs me there are about one hundred members that we can really depend on; most of these may be said to be active members. We have something like eighty names on our pay list, and our collections amount to something over forty dollars per month.

I think we have one of the best financial systems for meeting branch expenses that I have seen. It is very simple. Every member of the branch is requested to give something every Sunday. Very few have promised to give any stated sum, but the majority have agreed to give something, whether present or absent. They are then furnished with small envelopes in which to deposit their offering. On the envelope is a blank space for date, also the following spaces, Branch fund, For pastor -- Building fund. When the money is put in the envelope, the giver marks on these blank spaces the purpose for which the money is given, and then drops it in the collection basket at the close of the meeting on Sunday. There are always a few who do not care to subscribe to any system, and yet are willing to help; these can drop their offers in the envelope, the giver marking on it the purpose for which the money is given, and then drops it in the basket, independent of the envelope. It is surprising how the little ones take hold of this work. Besides helping to pay branch expenses, it teaches them to give. It has always seemed like folly to me for any one to object to taking up anything for any one to object to taking up collections. There are expenses that have to be met. If I do not do my share, somebody must do it for me, and that is unjust both to me and the party that pays my share. A very little from each one, paid in every Sunday, will usually pay all expenses, and generally more too. When it is remembered that our members are nearly all poor people, many of them mill-hands, whose wages are very small, Fall River certainly sets an example that some others could afford to follow.

There is another problem that our branch seems to be working out, and that is the matter of amusements. I know of no branch that has the number of entertainments, socials, and suppers that we have. There is seldom a week passes that there is not something going on. And strange as it may seem to some, our most active spiritual members are the most active in these matters. Those thus engaged are the ones who attend our prayer-meetings and the active ones in our Sunday-school. We have no trouble in keeping them away from the dance and other worldly amusements. They are so fully engaged in church-work that they have no time for other amusements.

The church is made a part of their very life, almost as much so as their home.

You may have some idea, therefore, how strange some of the arguments which have appeared in our church papers, against all amusements, appeared to us; and some of us began to question if we would care to live in Zion, if we had to be so very solemn there that we dared not laugh a little once in a while, and we could not eat a dish of ice-cream, or a little oyster soup unless we went off in some corner all alone by ourselves to eat it. Our conception of religion is, that it should make one happy. We are bidden to rejoice and be glad. Jesus bore our sorrows in order to relieve us of them. Of course, one may go to extremes both ways. Is not the middle ground, in this, the safest? We think so, and our experience in Fall River seems to prove it.

At the same time I quite agree with a late writer in Herald that we should "purge our houses of worship of all unseemly things, allowing nothing to be admitted for gain or pleasure that partakes of anything we could not ask the Lord to participate in, were he here in person." And it is beat no doubt, when circumstances will permit, that the principal room in the church be used only for religious meetings, and suppers and entertainments generally be held in the basement, or in a place set aside for that purpose.

Our branch is a little peculiar in another matter. In the sacrament-service we use individual glasses for the wine. I never saw them till I came here. And whatever prejudice I may have had against them, it has all vanished since I have seen them in use. Each silver tray contains about forty or fifty little glasses which hold about a dessert spoonful of wine each. In passing the emblems, the administrator hands the one who partakes one of these glasses; after partaking, the glass is handed back, and placed upon the tray, and another glass is handed to the next, and so on till all have partaken. In this way, all have a clean glass to put to their lips.

To some this may seem a little fastidious, but even so, is it not to be preferred to the unpleasantry that one sometimes experiences when he has to put his lips to a glass that has been moistened by fifty other lips, some of which may be diseased, or tobacco-tainted, besides having to drink of wine into which several mustaches have been immersed? We think so, hence do not oppose the individual glass.

Besides Fall River, we have been holding weekly preaching-services in private houses at Indian Town, and have preached several times at New Bedford. In both of these places there is a good interest.

We are already preparing for our reunion, known as the Eastern Reunion, to be held in a beautiful grove beside the salt water, where there is good fishing, boating, and a good place for bathing, besides oysters and clams. Our reunions differ from some reunions in the West; as here an effort is made to combine religion with a little pleasure. This is done to obtain the attendance of our people when they take their vacation. Those who have been shut up in mills and in stores all the year require outdoor exercise. If they did not come to the reunion, it is likely they would go to some seaside resort, where the amusements furnished are not always of the highest order. It would be more than could reasonably be expected that these people who had been shut up all the year would attend our reunions, if they were expected to attend church services all day. So we compromise with them and give them nearly every afternoon for play. As a result, our young people prefer to come to reunion than to any other place. Our morning and evening services seem to be better than they would be, were we in session all day long. We are looking forward to a good time this year. Bro. R. C. Evans is to be with us, besides other good preachers. Weather continues cool and pleasant.

HAMILTON, Scotland, June 1, 1906.

Editors Herald: One month to-day I left home and loved ones to come to the land of my birth to try to encourage those of the household of faith, and do a little preaching, and try to show others what we believe to be God's way of converting the souls of men and making wise the simple. And since coming I have tried to be on the line of duty as much as possible, according to circumstances. But there have been very few dry days; rain nearly every day. This puts me in mind of a visit about sixteen years ago to Portland, Oregon. I stayed ten days in that city, and there was rain every day.

Since coming here we have laid to rest our nephew and worthy brother in Christ, John C. Hepburn, of Glasgow. He was loved by all that knew him, and especially by the household of faith. Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord. He shall arise at the second resurrection. What a promise God has given for all that love his appearing! By request with Bro. James Wilson of Glasgow.

I am very much encouraged to know that God was so kind and merciful to us. How encouraging it is to us to know that God so blesses us. While we bear the persecutions of the world, the Lord is with us and blesses us, and we have witnesses outside of the church to attest the fact.

Miscellaneous Department

Pastoral

As Brn. White and Luff, our general missionaries in charge, have thought wise to place me in charge of St. Louis and Southern Missouri Districts, also those counties in the southeastern part of Missouri, I trust my colaborer will see that we do try to work together to the best good of Zion. I would like to hear from each as soon as possible and arrange with them for the summer's work. God requires our time, so remember we shall be held responsible for how we spend it.

I think I am well known by those of my associate laborers, and I trust our work together will be productive of good. I shall expect to hear from each missionary quite often. Especially try to have your reports in to me in good time. My permanent address will be R. F. D. 10, Box 4, Springfield, Missouri.

Water can be obtained for drinking purposes on the grounds. Cottage-tents will be supplied to all who wish them and who will give notice to the committee in time to secure them; we are not able at this early date to say what the weather will do the best we can. R. S. Salyards, Church Secretary.

Lamoni, Iowa, June 14, 1906.

Died.

WILLIAMS.—Sr. Phoebe Williams died at her home in Neta-waka, Kansas, March 28, 1906, aged 70 years, 10 months, and 14 days. She was born in Pembroke-shire, Wales, and came to this country in 1856. She united with the church at an early age, and lived a faithful, consistent life to the end. She leaves two sons, three daughters, sixteen grandchildren, five great-grandchildren, and many friends to mourn her loss, her husband having preceded her to the better land some eight years previously.

WINEGAR.—Mary Jane Winegar, daughter of Hugh and Belle Hopkins Lytle, and great-granddaughter of Stephen A. Hopkins, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, passed out of this world with pious confidence and a firm and solemn assurance of an everlasting life in Monona County, Iowa. United with the church in early life. Married to Edward Winegar, February 22, 1860. To them were born seven children, four of whom survive, with a son by a former marriage. Her life shone with the characteristics of true womanhood. For a number of years she was a great sufferer, and the Christian fortitude with which she bore it proved she was well trusted.

PEARSON.—Rebecca A. Pearson was born the tenth day of May, 1828, at Victoria, Norfolk County, Ontario. Died March 2, 1906, at her home near Corinth, Elgin County, Ontario, being in her seventy-eighth year. She with her sister Jennett joined the Reorganized Church in 1862, and was baptized by Elder John Shippy in the old organization. The truth of the gospel came to them, not only in word but in power and in demonstration of the Holy Spirit, which enabled them to stand firm on the Rock of Ages, and receive nothing but the pure principles of the doctrine of Christ as restored by the angel to Joseph Smith the Prophet. They were looking and waiting for the “young man,” the present President of the church, to take his father’s place. So when the elders of the Reorganization came with the glad message, they were ready to receive them. On the twenty-fifth day of August, 1863, they both united with the church in the springtime of life, being baptized by Elder John Shippy, and has since been rejoicing in the light of the gospel.

On the same night, and passed away the next day. He was a good, faithful Saint. Baptized May 1, 1859, by H. B. Bond. Funeral-services at the home of Bro. W. H. Shepp, charge of R. Bullard, prayer by John Suttill. Services in charge of R. Bullard, prayer by John Suttill.

FINKEN.—Mrs. Jennie W. Finken, wife of Bro. Louis Finken, died at Nina, Ohio, May 30, 1906, aged 27 years, 8 months, and 27 days. Born near Oak Harbor, September 9, 1878. Husband, mother, four sisters, two brothers, and many relatives are left to mourn. Interment at Oak Harbor, June 2. Funeral-services by C. Scott in First Methodist church, a large audience being present. She was to have been baptized had she lived.

BRADLEY.—James R. Bradley was born in England. In 1849, on his way to Utah, he stopped in St. Louis, and, hearing of the abomination in the West, went no farther. He did not hear a sermon for fifteen years but kept the faith and finally united with the Reorganized Church. His wife preceded him seven years. Before her death she helped him celebrate their golden wedding and two of their children survive. Bro. Bradley died at the Saints’ Home, Lamoni, Iowa, May 17, 1906, at the age of 101 years and 2 months. Funeral-services conducted by John Heide.

Dangerous Fakes. TRICKS TO INTRODUCE ALUM BAKING POWDERS WHICH SHOULD BE EXPOSED.

There has recently been attempted at some of our grocery stores, and also at dwelling-houses, by agents who are trying to sell alum baking powders, to put one of the following questions in the mouth of the chemist in order to make him believe that the substance he is examining is alum, a drug so well recognized by physicians and scientists as injurious to health in that in many countries its use in bread is entirely prohibited! So cheap and inferior are the ingredients with which these baking powders are made that the average person who is just a little bit off the track has not a single pound. No prudent housewife would ever knowingly put such stuff as this into her food.

RULES FOR PERSONAL CONDUCT—CONSTRAINT, OR THE SPIRIT?

The following letter of inquiry has been sent us for reply, of course:

Editor Herald: I notice in Herald of June 6, 1906, page 531, editorial under the heading "Restraints on personal conduct." Tell us plainly. Do you mean to say that you fully indorse the action of those churches referred to—that every one should be left to be governed by his own conscience? If you do not indorse it, why did you refer to it at all? If you do, what are you going to do with the direction in Doctrine and Covenants, found in section 41, where there is a strict law given by which the church is to be governed? Also the duties of elders, priests, and deacons, God-appointed officers in the church, to see that this law was carried into effect? If everything is to be left for the conscience to decide, regardless of what has been revealed concerning the government of the church, tell us where we would find place for the law, or the officers who were appointed to see that the law is kept.

It seems sometimes that no matter how plainly a matter may be stated, or written, there are those who either can not understand it, or do not care to take it as it reads. This is the case in the matter of the editorial referred to of June 6 regarding what certain churchmen had said with regard to putting the ban of their church discipline upon certain matters of personal conduct.

We made no effort to set aside the law, or the commandments of God, nor did we hint at such a thing, but because we did not set out our opinion in specific terms introducing the law the inference is drawn that disregard for the law may have been intended.

It is the belief of the church that "the law" was added to the gospel at an early period because of transgression. And then followed the Tables of Stone and the Mosaic code founded thereon by Moses. That when the Lord came it was for the purpose of introducing a "better hope," by which man might "draw nigh to God," and to nail the "law of carnal commandments to the cross."

Certainly no one will dispute the statement that the carnal commandments are those directing, restraining, and controlling personal conduct. "Thou shalt, thou shalt not" are the burden of the commandments, and every provision of the code is based upon these two, there being but one commandment with promise, "Honor thy father and thy mother that thy days may be long in the land." To secure an obedience to this command various provisions in the code relative to the conduct of children towards their parents are made and declared. Why?

How long did these provisions regarding human conduct exist before bringing ancient Israel to the height of human excellence? Paul answered this query when he wrote to the Romans, “For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did, by which we draw nigh unto God.” He elsewhere characterized this code as a burden which they nor their fathers could bear; “statutes which were not good, which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear.”

Things drifted along among the Israelites until the office-work of the law as a schoolmaster—a thing of rules and regulations with regard to human conduct enforced by penalties—brought them unto Christ, and when He the great lawgiver destined to be the Judge uttered the basic principle it was “Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy might, mind, and strength.” And the second was like unto it, “and thy neighbor as thyself.” These two enactments have not yet been superceded, repealed, or abrogated.

For the hardness of the heart God suffered Moses to write the code, of one feature of which Jesus said distinctly, “For the hardness of your hearts Moses wrote you this precept.” (Matthew 19, Mark 10.)

A constant effort has been made by every church to provide for the purity and righteousness of the body as a whole by a long line of positive (thou shalt) and negative (thou shalt not) rules to govern its members. The men whom we quoted in our editorial of June 6 have but stated what appeared to them as a result to the churches to which they belong of such restraints. Either might have added that it had a tendency to make hypocrites of some otherwise good people as the world goes.

We have believed for some years that obedience to the gospel would bring a man into such a near relation to God and Jesus Christ that he would receive of the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of Christ, the Comforter, in such degree that he would not only “know of the doctrine,” but would be “guided into all truth”; that the things of the Father would be revealed unto him. We have believed all the same years that among the things of the Father there would be a sufficient revelation in regard to personal conduct to admonish a man of what he might do, and not do, and remain in the fellowship of good men on earth, “the spirits of just men made perfect” in heaven, and the Spirit of the Father and the Son, without the constant reiteration and reminding of the law, law, law; but that man would do the things he ought to do, and refrain from doing the things he ought not to do by reason of a second nature begotten, born, and cultured unto the stature of a man in Christ Jesus by that same Holy Spirit.

It is for this reason we have always resisted the enactment of strenuous and rigid rules in regard to personal conduct, which would make of the followers of Christ, men shaped by the code of the law, and not Spirit-made men; things of rule and precept, and not men in whom the Spirit of the Master of Life had wrought a fullness of divine manhood.

The right of conscience is involved in all that the man in Christ Jesus does. Hardly a day passes over our heads but what we are reminded by some one, “It will be useless to dictate to me. I must try what I am directed to do, and if my conscience approves I will do it; if not, I prefer to follow my conscience and answer to God without regard to church enactments, or the dictates of human authority.”

If then the conscience is to be taken in one class of things involving personal conduct, convictions, etc., why should it not be a competent director in the things referred to by these preachers whose opinions as to the effect too rigid rules of restraint has upon the churches to which each respectively belongs.

The best conscience is that of the man who is the most nearly a follower of Jesus. His word, his teaching all go to teach the lesson that a “conscience void of offense towards God and man” is to be obtained not in church enactments directing this or that that men may or may not do, but in the teaching of the “spirit of wisdom and revelation” in Christ Jesus, our Lord.

It is a cardinal principle of our faith as a church that every man is responsible to God for his conduct in spiritual things; in fact, must speak and act with a view to a direct answering to God for what he says and does. If a church-member he must answer to the body for conduct contrary to church rule and discipline, but must even then decide his personal conduct for himself under the law and word of God. The more he is hampered by rules prescribing or proscribing specific acts, the less is the chance for spiritual light and direction; he walks by sight and not by faith.

PEACE GO WITH THEM.

The following is from a letter written us by Bro. C. H. Lake, who with his wife was at Denver on the way to meet Bro. and Sr. Burton at San Francisco, to sail for the South Sea Islands in July. We commend it to the readers of the HERALD for the excellent spirit of hope and courage there is in it:

Dear Brother: Had been hoping to meet you at Independence, when we passed through; but as we did not see you, thought I would write and say good-by. Have been much pleased to hear from different ones, about my appointment, that it was unanimous, and seemed to be the will of the Lord for us to go to that people, and hope that our departure and success while there will prove the wisdom of the choice.

We feel to be favored, in that we are to go with Bro. and Sr. Burton; for, they are not only experienced in that mission, but
The report showed the following facts:

While we are not particularly elated over the appointment, we take it as a part of the missionaries’ life, to go when, and where sent; and say, some one had to go, why not us? We hope and pray the Lord to help us, giving us wisdom and strength to overcome the trials we know will come, and ask for your prayers in our behalf.

I have no fears whatever for our lives, but expect to return to the “land of Zion,” when the time comes, and shall hope to meet you then, and pray the Lord to spare you for many years of usefulness yet to come.

Wishing for you every good thing, I am, sincerely,
Your brother in Christ,
C. H. Lake.

GRAVES OF ELEVEN OF THE APOSTLES.

We are indebted to the Mystic Bell of Denver, Colorado, for June 16, for the following, which will be interesting to our Herald readers:

Church authorities state that the remains of the apostles of Christ are now in the following places:

Seven are in Rome, namely, Peter, Philip, James the Lesser, Jude, Bartholomew, Matthias, and Simon. Three are in the kingdom of Naples, Matthew, (at Salerno), Andrew, (at Amalfi,) and Thomas, (at Ortano). One is in Spain, James the Greater, whose remains are at Saint Jago de Compostella. Of the body of St. John the Evangelist, the remaining one of the twelve, there is no knowledge. The Evangelists Mark and Luke are also in Italy, the former at Venice and the latter at Padua. Saint Paul’s remains are believed to be in Italy. Peter’s are, in the church of Rome which is called after him, as are also those of Simon and Jude. Those of James the Lesser and Philip are in the Church of the Holy Apostles, Bartholomew’s in the church on the island in the Tiber called after him; Matthias are in the Santa Maria Maggiore, under the great altar of the renowned Basilica, so it is said.

Bro. John Schreur, Holland, Michigan, writing under date of June 17, says, “I baptized one to-day, I think the first Latter Day Saint baptized in Ottawa County. We have quite a start here.”

We are pleased to learn that a branch of the church has been organized in Adelaide, South Australia, on January 28, 1906, of which Bro. J. H. N. Jones is president. Bro. William Dyke, the secretary, writing from Adelaide, May 7, says: “The work looks very promising here in Adelaide, and we trust that with God’s help we shall do a great work here. The promise is that we shall if we are faithful. Bro. Jones is starting a series of chart lectures on Sunday, May 13. We are advertising them by means of handbills. We have had five thousand printed and we are praying that God will bless our efforts.”

Original Poetry

Tell Me.

Tell me brother what you know
Of your life work here below.
Is it marked unselfishness;
Is your aim, “Mankind to bless”?
Do you strive with all your might,
In the day and in the night,
To advance the cause of Love—
Tidings from the realms above?
Is your pattern ’mid the strife,
The great and worthy Savior’s life?
Tell me, how did he attain
To his grand and glorious name?
Was it effort, hard and strong.
Loving Right, and hating Wrong?
“Yes, you say, “his efforts won,”
Then let us work till life is done.

More Workers for Christ.

More workers for Christ are needed to-day
Oh! who will respond to the call?
Oh, hasten my brother; no time for delay!
The night will soon come to us all.

More workers for Christ, is what the world needs,
Not seekers for fame or for gold;
But men who will publish their faith by their deeds,
And bring the lost into the fold.

"CONSECRATION UNDER THE LAW—DOES IT PERMIT OF HOLDING BANK AND OTHER STOCK?"

In HERALD for May 30 appears an article under the above heading. The question is answered in the affirmative, but so far as the matter of bank stock is concerned there certainly is no evidence presented that sustains the claim that banking is a legitimate business under the celestial law.

First, let us notice a statement or two which if not impertinent are certainly very unconvincing:

Now, as all kinds of business must be carried on, somebody must carry it on.

Banking... is just as legal and right as stock-raising.

And it is just as lawful to own stock in and operate a bank... as it was to own stock in the Nauvoo House.

The writer in question seems to have simply ignored the possibility of the banking business being founded upon injustice and inequality, the very things that the law of tithing and consecration are supposed to destroy, and takes it for granted that banks are all right and proper.

Now I have never studied the philosophy of banking, and probably do not know much about the business, but there are a few things about it that we can all see at a glance. Let us make a few observations.

Who are the patrons of the banks? 1. Merchants and other business men who desire to make deposits as a matter of safety and convenience. No particular profit to the bank from this. 2. Persons who wish to make payments at a distance remit through the banks, paying a small fee for transmitting. 3. Time depositors, who have more money than they can use, who place their money in the bank and receive for its use a certain rate of interest. 4. Speculators who wish to borrow money to invest in stocks, bonds, or real estate, etc., which yields the investor much larger profits than he is required to pay the bank in interest. 5. Farmers and many other classes, who need money to assist them in their business, and must mortgage their property to secure it. 6. Numerous others who need a loan for a few months to buy coal for the winter, before prices go up, to tide them over a period of sickness, or to pay off a note that is due before they are able to raise the money from their business or save it out of their wages.

Of these six named classes of patrons of the banking system, three of them are persons in need who are compelled to go to the bank for help. Of the other three only one contributes directly to the profits of the bank.

Now let us see where the need of a bank comes in to a live Latter Day Saint. We need not dispose of No. 1, because there is no profit to the bank from this class, and it could not exist for this purpose alone.

2. The post-office department or express companies afford fully as convenient means of remittance.

3. A live Latter Day Saint finding himself in this condition would go at once to the Bishop and turn over his money as a consecration.

4. This class is condemned (see Doctrine and Covenants 42 and 101) in no uncertain tones in the last revelation to the church.

5. With a church composed of live Saints, a person finding himself in this class would, if he availed himself of the privileges of the law, go to the Bishop or treasurer and say, "I have need of this to help me in my stewardship."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:12.

6. With a church of live Saints this class would not be found; but if perchance one should find himself in this condition, he would have the same privilege as the one in class.5.

It should now be clear to the reader that when we exclude from the list of patrons all those whose business is found out of harmony with the celestial law, we find ourselves facing this shameful spectacle: an institution, a stock company, composed of well-known and well-fed Latter Day Saints, living upon, or, it may be, simply receiving profits which they do not need, and which they certainly do not work for, from the hard-earned savings of those in need.

Suppose the stockholders do pay large sums in consecrations and tithing, that does not justify the taking advantage of the necessities of the poor to produce this surplus. (See revelation of Joseph Luff.)

I believe there is a scripture which says, The idler shall not eat the bread of the laborer. In other words, The shares of stock (idle, inert things) shall not consume the savings of the living, breathing soul that earns what it gets by faithful service.

The passage quoted by the brother concerning the Nauvoo House proves nothing in favor of the business of banking, nor of any other stock company which preys upon the scant earnings of the people for its sustenance, the stockholders of which perform no service for the returns they receive.

I believe in stock companies organized for the purpose of producing the necessities of life at the smallest possible cost to the consumer; but I believe in no stock company organized for profit to the stockholder; for equality never can obtain under such conditions. As a fitting seal to the thoughts presented I call attention to the following:

If thou lend money to any of my people that is poor by thee, thou shalt not be to him as a usurer, neither shalt thou lay upon him usury.—Exodus 22: 25. Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother; usury of money, usury of victuals, usury of anything that is lent upon usury.—Deuteronomy 28:19. (See Leviticus 25:36, 37.)

In connection with these statements I need only to refer you to Smith's Bible Dictionary to support my claim that as here used usury means any interest or increase, no matter how small.

This point is the key to the evils of the banking system. The bank can not exist without interest. The Scripture plainly forbids the taking of interest, and debars the taker thereof from an inheritance in the holy hill of Zion. (See Psalm 15: 5.)

Is it any wonder that “the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit” is withheld from us when such plain, glaring facts, and statements of scripture, as I have called your attention to, stand before us as silent monitors urging us to accept the divine remedy for the existing evils in our midst, and still we will not heed, but try to bolster up some man-made theory?

V. W. Gunsolley.

THE GREATEST COMMANDMENT.

Christ speaking to the lawyer revealed the greatest and most perfect way or means of redemption from sin we can find within the lids of the Bible: “Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy mind, and with all thy strength.” Christ says upon this commandment hangs all the law and the prophets.

It seems this commandment is the axis upon which the whole universe turns; that is, the spiritual universe. When these principles are obeyed and allowed to permeate our whole system, there seems but little left to do.

Experience has taught me that true religion begins in the heart. If it does not, there will not be much fruit forthcoming. The religious world to-day teaches us that many have been converted in the head but not in the heart; and I am afraid that if men and women do not come to realize that they are sinners indeed there will be very little progress. We are told in the Doctrine and Covenants not to baptize any one except they are truly humble and meek, and manifest by their actions that they have repented of their sins. It is not enough that they confess that we are conquering heroes indeed, as regards expounding and defending our faith; but the gospel must have an effect upon their hearts that they will feel a desire to love God and serve him. To be converted to us and trust in us because we have given a few able discourses will not do. Because they realize that our church is impregnable will not do either.

Men who come into the church through any other motive than a desire to serve God will not stand long. We must not coax men into the church against their wills. We must preach the duties required of them, and then leave them in the hands of God, he to draw them, and to add to his church such as shall be saved, or such as are fit to come into his kingdom.

Christ mentions the heart in the parable of the sower. He there explains the several conditions of men’s hearts. Some were stony; some had a little good ground in their hearts; some had thorns and briars, meaning sins of an awkward character. Others had good hearts, and when the gospel found a good place it flourished immediately. But not so in the stony and thorny hearts.

What are the evils that are detrimental to the gospel? Christ in Mark 7: 21 says, “For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness. All these things come from within and defile the man.”

These are the principles we must get rid of if we want to be pure in heart. They must be banished every whit. Not one or two of these evils, but every one. The seed that was sown in the stony heart sucked up all the nourishment that was there, and when that was gone and only stones left, it faded and died. So with the thorny ground. It seems in this case that the thorns have the most attention; and although the seed of the gospel was growing quietly, the thorns in the heart were growing much quicker. The result was, the seed of the gospel was smothered. God says, Love me with all thy heart, and not a part of it. Some have thought that, these evils that are in the heart must be got rid of little by little, but nothing of the kind. When we came into God’s kingdom, having repented of our sins, and humbled ourselves, and received the baptism of water and the baptism of the Holy Ghost, we felt we were new creatures. We had been born again. We are beginning as little children to live, not as we lived before, according to the lust of the flesh, but a new life. Our bodies have been washed with pure water, and our hearts from an evil conscience or evil condition, or filthy, if you will. It is our duty now to keep this condition. Keep our hearts pure and not leave evil thoughts; adultery, etc., to enter again. Christ has cast the Devil out by his Spirit; we must watch that he does not come in again. If he does, he will bring seven other devils worse than himself, and you will find it more difficult to clear him out the second time than it was the first. Christ through the birth of the water and the Spirit has put the Devil under our feet, and as you know, when two men fight and one succeeds in knocking the other down, the man who is upon his feet can keep the other down if he likes, because the man on the ground is under a disadvantage compared with the other. Christ has placed us above the Devil, having knocked him down for us. We must see he does not rise again.

Having our hearts purified, we must plant new seed, not evil thoughts as before, but the fruits of the Spirit. Instead of evil thoughts, pure thoughts. Instead of hatred and envy, we must plant love; and instead of covetousness, self-sacrifice; instead of adultery, chastity, etc. Then we may hope to be pure in heart, always remembering that evil must never be allowed to come into our hearts again. If it is, we can never become pure or safe from sin. And as a result, never sure of our salvation in the celestial glory.

The next subject for our notice is the soul or spirit. Here we have to differ from the moralist. There are men to-day who assume that they can put off the lust of the flesh or those evils I have mentioned without the help of God. Even infidels have professed this; but I fear it will be found rather hard ground to tread. At least it seems so to me. My experience has taught me that it is easier to overcome with or through the power of God than without it. The moralist and infidel may watch the emotions of the flesh, and then be filthy still. He will have to use the whip all day, and then his flesh will be as corrupt as ever. God has commanded us to walk according to the spirit, the inner man. And by the Spirit of God bearing witness with our spirit, giving it strength and wisdom, it is able to dominate over the body. No man can serve two masters. If our spirits are taught and strengthened by God and we follow the dictates of our spirit, the flesh will occupy no place. Thus God requires us to worship him in spirit.

Next, God wants the mind. Here we have the knowledge-office, or storehouse, that contains either the matter for life or for death. For life, because it is able to store up the principles which lead to life; for death, because it can contain the principles which lead to death. In this part of man's tabernacle lies the seat of all power. From this station, the heart receives its goodness or evil. We are told by Christ, "If thine eye be single to the glory of God, thy body shall be full of light." I take the eye to mean the mind of man. And if the mind contains nothing but what glorifies God, our bodies shall be full of light. On the other hand, if our minds are filled with those principles which are evil, our bodies shall be full of darkness. My experience has taught me that there is no need to bridle the flesh with its lust. There is a much better way to avoid sin, and that is, to watch the mind. The mind seems to be the door to the heart and soul. If we keep out evil thoughts, which are quite simple at their birth, there will not be much danger of sin overcoming us. We must watch that our enemies do not come in. I have privilege granted me from day to day, after retiring from my daily labor, for rest and sleep. I have the confidence that I can sleep contentedly, after having locked and bolted the doors, knowing that none can enter in order to molest me. The same privilege God has given every man—the power to lock the mind against either evil or good.

Many of us have learned to our sorrow that while the minds of men are prejudiced against us, and filled with evil stories, it is hard to reason the truthfulness of our claims with them, simply because they have locked their minds against us. And as Christ says of the people in his own day, They have ears to hear and eyes to see, but they did not allow their ears to hear or their eyes to see. And like Parley P. Pratt says, "May as well talk to a drunken man or talk amid the roar of cannons as to talk to a man with his mind prejudiced or locked up." God has promised us great blessings if we will but keep our minds pure. He has told us that our imagination shall reach even unto the heavens. How often we have experienced this blessedness when our minds have been set upon the things of God. We have felt an inspiration that has filled us with joy. I have often felt while singing with true reverence to God, and my mind being centered upon God, that the whole hosts of heaven were singing with me. How often have I pictured in my mind the joy and harmony and peace which rules in heaven; and my soul has desired to be there. Many times I have pictured the face of God and Christ beaming with smiles, majesty, and love. Many times I have thought of the love of Christ here below, of his suffering. How in the stillness of the night, when men were retiring to their cozy beds, he saw that the birds of the air had their snug little nests; the fox had his shelter in the holes of the earth, but Christ had no place to lay his head. Tears have rushed down my face; my heart has been stirred with reverence and love for him. I would not part with this beautiful gift for the whole world. The mind must be guarded at all times. There have been times when I have allowed evil thoughts to enter my mind; perhaps a thought of injury received from some person. I have allowed this thought to germinate into a fearful fire, and have felt evil in my heart towards this person. And as a result I felt quite miserable. But I have prayed to God to give me power to cast it away from my mind. Even a little envy cultivated may end in murder. John says, "He that hateth his brother is a murderer."—1 John 3:15. This may seem strong language, but it is quite true. When a person has the least hatred in his heart or mind, he has the seed of the murderer there. It needs only nourishment.

All the evils which we see amongst men began with a thought. We must beware of the little things, and the greater things will take care of themselves. It seems to me the best way to keep evil out of the mind will be to keep the mind continually engaged with that which is good. No man can entertain two thoughts at the same time. Christ was very careful to warn his disciples against evil thought. It was written in the law, "Thou shalt not commit adultery," but Christ rose a step higher, and told them that they were not to look upon a woman to lust after her; they were not to think of such an evil. If they did, they were committing adultery even in thought. Paul gave good advice along these lines. He says, “As a man thinketh, even so he is.” Also he says, Whosoever things are honest, whosoever things are just, whosoever things are pure, whosoever things are lovely, etc., think on these things. (See Philippians 4:8.) If the mind is constantly occupied with virtuous thoughts there will be no fear of evil.

Next, God wants us to worship him with all our strength. In order to have a healthy mind, we must have a healthy body. The greatest musicians and poets of bygone times, such as Beethoven, Handel, Mozart, Milton, and others, while they cultivated their minds, they neglected their bodies. They took no rest for the body and mind during the hours set apart by God. The result was that they lost their sight whilst in the prime of life. Handel was blind for years before he died. Beethoven was both blind and deaf. They also suffered fits of insanity from stress of overwork of body and mind. Milton suffered severe attacks of weakness and lost his sight, a loss which grieved him much. Had these men taken care of their bodies, no doubt they would have accomplished a still greater work. God has given us grand wisdom. He says that some of the ministry were suffering in mind and body because they did not sleep in a proper time, and also get sufficient sleep in order to refresh their whole system. God has given us advice in regard to our diet. Many of us, no doubt, suffer at times from overloading the stomach with that which is not digestible, therefore we suffer indigestion and biliousness. While we suffer these ailments, we are not in a condition to work or study, therefore we are of no use to ourselves or to God. Men who have strong and robust constitutions are able to work, and walk, and accomplish great things. But what can an invalid do for God? Men who are full of disease and are consumptive, can they preach hard, stirring sermons? Can they labor and contribute their increase to the work of God? Therefore, God demands that we love and serve him with all our heart, with all our soul, with all our minds, and with all our strength. And until we can reach this standard, we can not think that we are rendering him perfect service. When these items have been perfectly carried out, then we shall be in a condition to love our neighbor as ourselves. We shall be pure in heart, pure in mind, pure in spirit, and pure in our bodies.

When this condition obtains among all the children of God, then the church will have fulfilled the word of the Lord: “Put on thy beautiful garments, O Daughter of Zion.”

JAMES EVANS, Wales.

“The Other Side.”

In HERALD for November 1, 1905, is an article written under the above caption, in answer to the question: “Will the sons of perdition ever be resurrected,” and at the close of his article the writer gets others mixed up with the sons of perdition, and says: “From this we see there is somebody else besides the sons of perdition who will endure the second death.” But we will examine the scriptures in the light of reason, and see if the brother will not be able to see differently. We have this part of the subject made plain through the latter-day seer. In Doctrine and Covenants 76:4 we are informed in just so many words that the sons of perdition are “the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power; yea, verily, the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the sufferings of his wrath.”

Then we are informed in section 76, paragraph 7, that they of the telestial glory shall not be redeemed from the Devil until the last resurrection, and the sons of perdition are the only ones who shall not be redeemed. Now if any should fail to understand that the redemption is the resurrection, please read Doctrine and Covenants 46:10: “And then shall the heathen nations be redeemed, ... in the first resurrection”; and if this is not sufficient, your attention is called to Doctrine and Covenants 85:4:

Now, verily I say unto you, that through the redemption which is made for you, is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead. And the spirit and the body is the soul of man. And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul.

The sons of perdition shall not be redeemed from the Devil, but all the rest shall be brought forth by the resurrection of the dead through the triumph and the glory of the Lamb. (See Doctrine and Covenants 76:4.) Those of the telestial glory shall not be redeemed from the Devil until the last resurrection; and the sons of perdition are the only ones who shall not be redeemed; hence they will not be redeemed at the last resurrection. Will the brother pray tell us when they will be resurrected? The brother seems to stumble over the statement in Revelation 21:8, “But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death,”—that this has reference to any kind of liars or whoremongers or murderers or idolaters, but this is a mistake; for those of the telestial glory (see Doctrine and Covenants 76:7) are of this class. But these that John has spoken of are those that have tasted the good work of God, and the powers of the world to come (see Hebrews 6:5), for such murderers as we read of in Doctrine and Covenants 42:6 are unpardonable: “And now, behold, I speak unto the church. Thou shalt not kill; and he that kills shall not have forgiveness in this world, nor in the world to come.” Such murderers as Moses and Paul, and those mentioned in Acts 2:36, got forgiveness by repentance; but those of the church had no forgiveness in this world, nor that which is to come, and such are the characters that sin against the Spirit of truth.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Again the brother says: “Now what difference is there between one that does not overcome, and one that is overcome? There is no difference.” Let us try this statement by the scriptures, as we believe there is a vast difference between one that does not overcome, and one that is overcome. We read in Revelation 21:7: “He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God, and he shall be my son.” The statement, He that overcometh shall inherit all things and would be a son of God, would entitle him to the celestial glory; but there are many that fail to overcome, so as to inherit all things, yet are not overcome, for we read in Doctrine and Covenants 76:4 of them that are overcome: “Thus saith the Lord, concerning all those who know my power, and have been made partakers thereof, and suffered themselves, through the power of the Devil, to be overcome, . . . they are they who are the sons of perdition.” These are the ones that will not be redeemed from the Devil. But let us see if all who fail to overcome so as to inherit all things are sons of perdition; for, remember, all that are overcome, who had a knowledge of the truth, are sons of perdition; for we read in Doctrine and Covenants 76:6 of those that make up the terrestrial glory, and among them are those that are not valiant in testimony, thus failing in this, not being permitted to inherit all things (or celestial glory). Again we read in Doctrine and Covenants 85:5: And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom, even that of a terrestrial kingdom, or that of a telestial kingdom. For he who is not able to abide the law of a celestial kingdom, can not abide a celestial glory; and he who can not abide the law of a terrestrial kingdom, can not abide a terrestrial glory; he who can not abide the law of a telestial kingdom, can not abide a telestial glory; therefore, he is not meet for a kingdom of glory. Therefore, he must abide a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory.

From the above we see that if we fail in keeping all of the celestial law, we must step down to a lesser glory. For instance, the law of tithing belongs to the celestial law, and if we fail to keep that law, we can not inherit all things (celestial glory).

Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming); for after to-day cometh the burning.—Doctrine and Covenants 64:5.

Then failing to keep the law of tithing will deprive us of inheriting all things, or celestial glory. But will it make sons of perdition out of all that do not pay their tithing? for all who do not pay their tithing will not overcome, so they may inherit all things.

Again, in the Sunday-school Quarterly, senior grade for December 17, 1905, my position is sustained, where it reads as follows:

Such do not receive the full reward, because they do not continue faithful to the commandments of God to the end. They do not attain a complete development of the spiritual nature; they do not reach the stature of the fullness of Jesus Christ.

The full reward, which is a place in the celestial kingdom, is for those who bring themselves into full subjection to the law of Christ, who “overcome all things.” Those saints who are not valiant in the testimony of Jesus shall receive a secondary reward, a place in the terrestrial glory. (Doctrine and Covenants 76:6.)

But according to the brother’s statement, all that make an effort for celestial glory, and fail to overcome, so as to attain to it, are overcome, hence sons of perdition. We believe that the many passages of scripture that are cited to by the brother are to prove that the atonement of our Savior reached all men; and that, if we believed that the sons of perdition would never be resurrected, it would prove that the atonement never reached all men. But we surely believe that it did reach all men, and all that have committed the unpardonable sin were in a saved condition, and that Christ was crucified for them as much as any one else; but they are the only ones on record that crucified him afresh, and put him to an open shame. Will he make another atonement for them so they may be resurrected?

Now, let us sum it all up. First, they, the sons of perdition, are the only ones who shall not be redeemed. (See Doctrine and Covenants 76:4.) Second, the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul. (See Doctrine and Covenants 85:4.) Third, they of the telestial glory will not be redeemed from the Devil until the last resurrection. (See Doctrine and Covenants 76:7.) Hence, sons of perdition will not be redeemed at the last resurrection; and if the last resurrection means the last, or no more, why should some still contend that the sons of perdition will be redeemed, or resurrected?

Again, the brother says in regard to the quotation in Book of Mormon, page 71, that it does not prove that the Devil is a disembodied spirit, because if our spirit and body should not be united, that would not prove that we were like the Devil, yet we would be disembodied spirits. We read in 1 John 3:2: “It doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him.” In Luke 24:39 we read that Jesus has a body of flesh and bones. Now when he appears we shall be like him. Does not this prove that the Saints shall have a body of flesh and bones? If it does not, how can they be like him? Again the Book of Mormon, page 71, says that if our flesh should rise no more, then we would become subject to the Devil, to rise no more; and our spirits become like unto him, and we become devils, angels to a devil. Thus we see that being disembodied spirits makes one like the Devil. And how could one be like the Devil, and yet the Devil be like Mrs. E. G. White in her early writings describes him, page 24 of “Introduction”: “His eyes were cunning, sly, and showed great penetration. His frame was large, but the flesh Hung loosely about his hands and face.” Now just imagine that you can see seven of these big, loose-fleshed devils being cast out of Mary Magdalene at one time! Again we read in Mark, chapter 5, of the legion of devils being cast out of a man, and they are called unclean spirits; and Jesus says a spirit “hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have.” (Luke 24:39.) Hence devils have not flesh and bones, but are spirits.

SUCCESSFUL SOCIALISM IN NEW ZEALAND.

Since the days when the man of Nazareth first preached socialism to the Galileans, dreamers have dreamed dreams of the millennium of socialist equality, and enthusiastic reformers have preached its glories to the susceptible public, who listen with bated breath to the words of wisdom peculiarly fascinating as they fall from the lips of the logicless orator. Socialism in its fullness will ever be an unrealized ideal, but socialistic tendencies will ever have a place in the political economy of nations. It is not without interest to know that in this colony where socialism prevails to a greater degree in legislation than elsewhere in the world, there is not a poor-house, house of refuge, or almshouse. There is no great or extraordinary wealth, nor is there a “submerged tenth” crying for bread. Pauperism is practically unknown, and idleness is looked upon as a crime. The highways are free from tramps, with the single exception, perhaps, of the nomadic shepherds, who travel from station to station during the sheep-shearing season, carrying their “swag” (a large bundle or roll containing blankets, and such clothing as they need during the season) and a “billy-can” (a small tin bucket in which they boil tea and potatoes while on the road).

There is practically no stealing in the country. Farmers leave their houses unlocked with impunity, and are absent for weeks without the least thought of the smallest articles being taken. Bedroom doors in hotels more frequently have no locks than otherwise, and seldom, if ever, is it possible to find a bedroom door-key in any hotel in the colony.

CLOSER SETTLEMENT.

The dignity of labor is real, and the toiler is honored among men. The measure of man’s worth is based, not so much on what he has as on what he is. Insofar as my observation goes amongst the governments of the earth, that of New Zealand approaches nearest a perfect democracy:—“a government of the people, by the people, and for the people.” To him who would acquire great estates, who would claim the cattle on a thousand hills, who would monopolize some special product of industry; to him who would form a “trust” to enrich a few and oppress the many, the government of New Zealand offers no inducement. The landlord, with the instinct common to the landholder to extort the last drop of the life’s blood of the landless, finds himself encompassed with an influence that forbids oppression.

Nor can the landlord hold vast areas untilled and unutilized that he may later have the profit of the unearned increment, if there be a demand for small holdings for closer settlement in the district where such estates may be. Under the “Closer Settlements Act,” the government may buy the property at an agreed price, or the government may condemn and take the property, and adjust the valuation by arbitration. This land is then subdivided and sold to the many who seek a rural home. Let it not be understood that the government forbids the accumulation of wealth, but it does forbid the oppression of the poor. The result of this policy has been directly to put the people on the land. In a population approaching a million inhabitants there is not a city exceeding 60,000. Unlike the neighboring colony of Tasmania (Van Diemen’s Land), where the landowner is supreme, there are some half dozen breeders of stud sheep controlling the greater part of the arable land, many of the holdings exceeding 100,000 acres, used for no other purpose than for sheep-breeding. The contrast shows New Zealand a land of thousands of home-owners, producing greater surplus of product for export than any other country in the world in proportion to population. An export of 16,000,000 pounds sterling would equal upon the basis of population an export from the United States of the value of $6,400,000,000.

To the immigrant arriving on these shores, the helping hand of the government is at once extended, to the end that the newcomer may become a producer. He is placed upon the land held by the government; his tenure is fixed by a perpetual leasehold, or a lease with the privilege of purchase, or a title in fee simple, if he has the capital to buy a holding. If he is entirely without means, he can at once be employed by the government on its great public works,—railroad-building, bridge-building, highway-construction, bush-felling; or he may go out on a selection, the government giving him aid until he fells the bush from sufficient of the land to produce a crop. In this way I have known hundreds of the prosperous farmers of to-day to have made their start.

THE ADVANCE TO SETTLERS ACT.

This measure was opposed by the conservative politician as a most dangerous experiment. The banks were lending money to the settlers (farmers) at 8 to 10 per cent, forcing settlement at maturity, and conducting themselves very much like the creditor over the mortgager west of the Mississippi. The present government introduced the measure I have indicated, providing that advances would be made to settlers in such sums as would not exceed 50 per cent of the valuation of land and improvements (amended in present parliament to 75 per cent of the land and improvements) at 4 per cent. The settlers by hundreds availed themselves of this beneficent Act. Over 4,000,000 pounds have been loaned out by the government, the money costing it 3½ per cent, represented by an issue of government bonds. The securities now held under this Act are valued at $5,000,000,000. Under the operation of this Act, since its inception a few years ago, the saving in interest to the settlers amounts to 746,000 pounds. The operation of this Act has reduced the rate of interest throughout the colony on an average of 2½ per cent; and upon a mortgage indebtedness on the land of the colony of 53,000,000 pounds, the savings to the mortgagee since the inception of the Act are estimated at 8,000,000 pounds sterling.

WORKERS' HOMES ACT.

Another unique piece of legislation, declared by the conservative politician to be fraught with many dangers, is known as the “Workers' Homes Act.” The occasion for this Act was found in the very rapid increase of rents in the larger towns and cities, because of the rapid increase in the population, and consequent great demand for houses by the working man, landlords in many cases realizing 15 per cent on the value of the property leased. The government held that such extortion was an oppression against which it had a right to enter protest. The Act provides that it may appropriate government reserves contiguous to the town and cities, or it may acquire land suitable for subdivision and subdivide such land into town allotments, and build thereon workers' homes, wooden houses to cost $1,750 each, brick houses to cost $2,000 each, and lease same to workers upon valuation at 5 per cent on the cost value, with privilege of purchase within a given term of years. An Act also provides that the lessee or vendee may take out a twenty-five-year endowment policy in The Government Life Insurance Co. for a sum equal to the value of the property. If he should die in the meantime, the maturing policy pays for the property and the fee at once vests in the widow, together with all accumulated bonuses on the policy at the time of its maturity, or in the event of the vendee or lessee living for the full term of the endowment policy, its maturity pays for the property and vests the maturing in the vendee.

“And who is a worker?” may be asked. Any one, male or female, employed on a salary not exceeding $15 per week, and not the owner of land within the colony.

GOVERNMENT COAL-MINES.

For a time the price of coal to the consumer was little less than prohibitive. The government again interfered, and began the mining of coal on government land with the immediate result that the price of coal was reduced to the consumer, care being taken however by the government not to fix the price below the actual cost of production, plus a reasonable and honest profit to the private operator, that the industry might not perish and the consumer might not be plundered. There is no effort in the operation of the state coal-mines to engage so largely in the production as to cripple private industry, the output limited always to such an amount as will tend to level prices throughout the colony.

In 1870 this government established a life insurance department on lines not unlike the then established life offices doing business in the colony. It has ever been most popular with the people. Since its inception it has paid out in maturing policies 2,792,219 pounds. It has 44,194 policy-holders within the colony, and its new business last year amounted to 3,128 new policies, insuring 851,298 pounds for 23,487 pounds in new premiums. Its machinery for operation is entirely distinct from any corrupt influence the government might, if otherwise constituted, have or declare over the funds of the department.

OWNERSHIP OF RAILWAYS.

In the economy of nations, this subject has commanded more than the usual attention given to economic problems. It is not my purpose to discuss the evils and dangers of private ownership as known in the United States, nor will I do more than refer to the dangerous power held by Hill, Harriman, and Vanderbilt, and some half dozen others who control interests representing a value of approximately $5,000,000,000.

Railways are improved highways for convenience, and as such are creatures of legislative creation wherever they may operate. In New Zealand, with but one exception, all railways are owned by the government, and are directly managed by a member of the cabinet, known by the title of Minister for Railways. Under him is a working organization ranging from general manager downwards. Through government ownership there is no recognition of rebates, no favored shippers. There are no private transportation companies owning their own cars, in the control of which the great corporations enjoy special benefits over the less fortunate. There are no railroad pools, nor are there consolidations of parallel lines for the purpose of oppressing the traveling and shipping public and defeating legislation. There is no incentive to “squeeze” the people. There are no enormously salaried officers to provide for. There is no occasion to earn dividends out of the pockets of the public to maintain stock values for the benefit of the few. There are no reasons to discriminate against one section of the country in favor of another section in which owners of great blocks of stock have a special interest. Government ownership of railways is that system that provides for sufficient earnings only to pay reasonable operating expenses and interest on railways securities, and provide the upkeep of the property. Every citizen in the colony is a stockholder. Every voter in the colony may protest against or approve its management, and its one purpose is to provide a uniform rate to every traveler and shipper in the colony with every other traveler and shipper, all else being equal.

The present minister for railways, the Honorable Sir Joseph Ward, K. C. M. G., has so skillfully handled the great trust imposed on him as to have reduced rates on farm produce in the aggregate more than 50,000 pounds per annum, this saving going into the pockets of the people. There are no stockholders reaching out with greedy desires for great profits. The railways of New Zealand are the people’s highways manned by servants of the people, operated in the interests of the people, and as such present an example to the world of the expediency of government ownership. Imagine, if you can,—you who have been accustomed to pay $1.00 per meal on a dining-car—sitting down to as elaborate a dinner as is served in the best hotels, for a tariff of 50 cents.

LABORER WORTHY OF HIS HIRE.

In this land of socialistic advancement and “experimental legislation,” where every man is the peer of his fellow, where the Prime Minister is popularly known as “Dick,” and where he recognizes his friends as “Bill” and “Joe,” the laborer knows no such thing as “sweat shops,” nor grinding monopoly, the laborer is worthy of his hire, and gets it. Had Thomas Hood lived in New Zealand “The song of the shirt” would never have been written. Had Carnegie emigrated to New Zealand instead of to the United States, there would never have been the horrors of Homestead. He would never have accumulated an unwieldy fortune from the oppression of the helpless poor. He would never have learned the art of legalized stealing through the means of “Company Script,” that he might pose as a philanthropist in his declining years. No one in New Zealand would have denied him the right to have accumulated a fortune, but the government would have interfered if any dollar he accumulated was stained in blood and washed in human tears. He would have found himself in a land where strikes are unknown, because the government holds the scales of justice between the employer and employed, so that every employer in a given industry is on an equality with his fellow, and every laborer enjoys an equal wage with every other laborer in a given industry. Let me quote the average wage in the district where I am writing, and indicate that there is not a variation of 5 per cent from the gold-fields of the north to the fisheries of the south. I will give the rate of wages in United States money:

Farm laborers with board, $3.75 to $6.25 per week.
Farm laborers without board, $1.50 to $2.00 per day.
Female farm servants with board, $3.00 to $5.00 per week.
Shepherds with free house and board, $260.00 to $425.00 per year.
Men cooks on stations (large farms or ranches), $5.00 to $6.00 per week with board.
Artisan labor per day without board—masons, plasterers, bricklayers, and carpenters, $2.50 to $3.50.
Blacksmiths, $2.00 to $2.50.
Plumbers and painters, $2.50 to $3.00.
Servants. Married couples without family, with board, $300.00 to $400.00 per year.
Grooms and gardeners with board, $5.00 to $6.00 per week.
Cooks with board, $3.00 to $4.00 per week.
Housemaids with board, $2.50 to $3.00 per week.
Needlewomen with board, $3.75 to $5.25.
Tailoresses and dressmakers without board, $1.50 to $2.00 per day.
Milliners without board, $4.25 to $8.50.
Clerks in dry-goods and grocery-stores, from $6.00 to $17.50 per week.

ENOUGH WORK FOR EVERY ONE.

These wages are cheerfully paid; labor is in demand. A study of the social conditions of the colony from Auckland to the Bluff—a distance of 1,000 miles—will not disclose a dozen men unemployed, and none need be, if they care to work.

A visitor from one of the great American cities said to the writer recently: “I have been in the city now a week, and I have not seen a ragged boy or a ragged girl.” Another, a lecturer from the homeland, who was to speak to the school children at mid-day, remarked that “the children had all worn their Sunday clothes,” when in truth they had worn their every-day school suits.

Is Socialism popular in New Zealand after experiments covering a period of about twelve years? Let the people answer. At the elections, December 6, the present government was returned to power by the greatest majority ever given to a political party in New Zealand. Not one member of parliament identified with the present government suffered defeat. The parties now in parliament are 59 Government, 14 Opposition, and 4 Independent. The Prime Minister, the Right Honorable Richard John Seddon, is one of the most popular of public men in the British Empire, a man full of human sympathy, thoroughly unselfish in his public life, a political genius, and the ablest administrator in all the Antipodes. —A. A. Brown, in Human Life, June, 1906.

To the Champion of Right.
'Tis not to him, that peace shall come,
Who strains his mind and soul
For wealth and fame; no "Welcome home"
May greet him at the goal
Of life's desire. No selfish ends
Can bring the joys that thrill
The heart of him who best befriends
The friendless souls that fill Life's lowly walks and mutely crave
For joy and glad surcease
From woe, and who but in the grave
May hope for rest and peace?
To him who gives his all to smooth
The paths of toil and care;
To him who seeks to cheer and soothe
The suffering everywhere;
To him who takes the sword and shield
And fights in brave defense
Of justice on life's battlefield,
Of truth and innocence
A greater prize than fame or gold
Shall come when all is done;
Far greater need, a thousand fold,
Will he at last have won.
The need of consciousness that he Has won the valiant fight Against foul greed and treachery,
For honesty and right.
When he shall face life's setting sun
With that grand strife behind,
The crown of life shall he have won
From grateful humankind.

O Heart, Be Strong.
O heart, be strong, in God be strong;
Lift up thy cry, lift up thy song;
Pour out thy heavenly message sweet,
Oh, hear it forth on beauteous feet;
Cry the glad news from mountain height,
Flash through the gloom thy flaming light,
And to a listening world proclaim
The saving power of Jesus' name.

O heart, be strong, though countless foes
Thy march resist, thy work oppose;
Salvation's Captain fights for thee,
It shall thy shield and buckler be;
He shall lift up and shield thy head,
While thou shalt on theadder tread;
And more than conqueror thou shalt be,
Through Jesus who gives the victory.

O heart, be strong, in God be strong,
Thy suffering time will not be long;
Sow on a little while in tears,
Thy harvest is for endless years;
Weep through the night, but soon thy day
Shall chase all grief and gloom away;
And thou with songs of joy shall come
And enter the eternal home.

O heart, be strong, for on the throne
God's only well beloved Son Sways the strong scepter of his might,
And vanquishes the hosts of night.
"Lo, I am with you to the end,
An ever-present, mighty Friend—
All power is given into my hand,
Go on, obeying my command."

My Rosebud's Lesson.
One bright June morning the dear, kind doctor came into my sick-room, where I had been a "shut in" for nearly six long, weary weeks. This morning after a sleepless, painful night, I felt very despondent, discouraged, and a bit rebellious at the slow progress of returning health.

On the doctor's coat was a tiny rosebud, which I admired, and before leaving he kindly placed it in a glass of water by my bed, where I had ample time to drink in the sweet fragrance, and watch the perfect development of its growth. In a few hours I could see the tiny bud had begun to expand, and the fragrance was more sweet. A fresh supply of water was given it, and by the next morning my bud was a half-blown rose. Again fresh water was given it, and I watched with almost childish anxiety all the long day, seemingly seeing each new leaf open up to the light. Slowly but surely it was doing its very best to do and be what God the Creator had intended it to be under all conditions. Though torn from its "mother stem," or as it were its very life-roots taken, it did not give up, but patiently struggled on to do its very best to grow and develop and shed its sweet fragrance for others.

By the following morning my bud was a beautiful (though small) full-blown rose. Time, patience, and persistency had won, and at last it burst forth in all its beauty, teaching the invalid a lesson of patience that perhaps never would have been taught otherwise: the lesson that no matter what our condition or surroundings in life may be, in suffering or in health, God intends us to do our very best to grow and develop beauty, and shed the fragrance of his love and a patient, unselfish cheerfulness upon those around us. God grant I may never forget the lesson taught me by the dear little rosebud.

A Mother's Influence.
No man who retains the memory of his mother is beyond redemption wholly; and many an unfortunate wight, with whom this world has gone wrong, finds in that memory a solace for his sorrows and an inspiration, perhaps, to renewed efforts in the battle of life. A poor vagrant—possibly rendered such by inability to find work—was brought into a B—police station the other day, and among the things found in his possession was a well-worn portrait of a woman's face. Asked whom the picture represented, the unfortunate man said:
"That is my good old mother. I've carried that picture around with me for twenty-five years, and would not part with it for all I am worth. If I had followed the course she marked out for me, I would be better off to-day."

There is a whole sermon in these words, and a more eloquent one than is often preached from the pulpit. The youth who starts out in life determined to walk in the paths counseled to him by his mother, is morally sure of avoiding dangers and pitfalls and of attaining happiness if not competence. Could the failures and wrecks of humanity be asked what cause had contributed most to their present plight, the chances are that the great majority of them would acknowledge that failure to follow their mother's advice was the primary reason of all their misfortunes.

A mother's influence is always directed towards her children's good, and a mother's advice is generally so wise and salutary that the son or daughter who follows it through life is morally sure of temporal blessings and spiritual satisfaction and happiness. —Selected.

Prayer Union.

Sr. Bertha E. Day, Stockport, Iowa, desires an interest in the prayers of the Prayer Union, and of any other Saints, that if it be the Lord's will she may be fully restored to health, (she is afflicted with lung trouble and other complications,) and that she may have strength and courage to overcome all temptations, and live as becometh one of God's children.

Editors Herald: I was baptized some thirteen years ago by Henry Kemp. The first sermon I ever heard preached was by D. M. Rudd, at a schoolhouse near here; and as he poured forth his soul in portraying the justice of our heavenly Father in rewarding all according to their works, he gave us the narrative of the man who killed his poor wife that was unprepared to die, and she went down to the regions of the lost while he, the guilty murderer, had time, during the progress of his trial, to repent, get religion, and went into the abode of the blessed. This made a lasting impression on my mind, although I, being a Methodist, had been taught, also believed, that any one might have obeyed the angel's message, my heart has been made to rejoice, oh, so many times. God has been with us in sickness and distress. And as we read in the HERALD of our dear President being quarantined, our minds were made to recall the time when we were locked in from the world with the same disease (scarlet fever). Ah, how we prayed and trusted for our children to get well! But with one of them, the darling and baby of our home, the dreaded malady seemed to linger; and wife and I being left alone by her little crib, witnessing her intense suffering, with our hearts all torn and bleeding as it were, we earnestly prayed for our kind Father to please let her pass over in peace and be free from pain and suffering. Ah, those were times that tried our faith. But, thank God, she was left with us after all, and we are only too glad that our last bitter prayer was not answered. No, we are only his little children. May we learn to do his will, and day by day be thankful to him for his blessings.

During April last we had the blessed opportunity of attending several sessions of the General Conference. Having been associated with the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, we were privileged to draw a comparison. And as we looked at the different quorums of the church, each in its place, and knowing the earnestness and veracity of each to an extent, this thought came vividly to my mind: Here is the noblest band that can be assembled on the face of the earth to-day. But they might be better. I seemed to be drawn nearer to the active ministry than ever before. And as I looked upon our dear Bro. Joseph's countenance, as he recounted to us his desire to accomplish fully the one great purpose that he had striven for so long, it seemed that we could almost discern some of the scars that mark the place of the wounds which he has received while standing at the battle's front. May our kind Father bless and sustain him yet the while.

Since General Conference the work in this field (Nodaway District) seems to be opening up, and bids fair to be a fruitful year. On May 27 Elder A. E. McCord called us to come to Workman Chapel near Burlington Junction, where seven noble souls were led down into the waters of baptism. These were the first in that immediate vicinity to obey, and at the confirmation the Spirit was present in power, so that others were made to say, "I know this work is of God." We learn that Bro. McCord baptized two more before leaving for district conference, making nine in all. These people seem to be thoroughly converted, and we hope for a branch there sometime in the near future.

Our district conference, on June 2 and 3, was a feast to all, Bro. George H. Hilliard being with us; and while explaining the law regarding temporalities he made some of us feel good and some bad. However, we hope for a brighter day, and are willing to give a helping hand. Dear Saints of the Nodaway District, let us try to make this a "banner" year in the work here. Let us try to show our appreciation of our request being granted by the Quorum of Twelve in sending our two noble, faithful missionaries back to labor with us for another year. Let us help them with our means, so that they may find others who are hungering for the bread of life. Let us try to work unitedly, and thus assist our Creator in doing the work designed for us upon the earth.

During the last six years, while acting as your president, I hope that I have not been a hindrance to any one. I am willing to continue on till the end, if God wills. May he give us his Spirit so to do, is my prayer.

In gospel bonds,

E. S. Fannon.

Dear Herald: As I have become your sister in Christ, I feel like telling what the Lord has done for me. One year ago last spring I had a shock, and a second one last fall; I lost the use of my tongue and my left hand to an extent. I was a Methodist for thirty-seven years, and thought I was right; could not think there was any other church. A friend in East Helena, whom I visited often, told me about the church, and said that God had only one church, which I thought was very strange. But after a few calls on my friend, I asked the Lord to show me the truth and he did so. I told him if he would spare my life till spring, or until an elder could come, I would become one of his adopted children. He gave me the use of my tongue in a few days, and my arm is all right, and my health far better than for a long time. So I have much to be thankful for.

Last March Bro. Stead came to East Helena, and five others and I were baptized. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

Mrs. Eliza Ann Cox.

Dear Herald: Before leaving Laman, June 3, I contemplated making a visit to Nauvoo, and after leaving Laman the desire grew stronger until I decided in my mind to make the trip. On the 8th of June I left this place enroute for that historic city, on board the Santa Fe, reaching Ft. Madison about one o'clock in the morning, and through somebody's carelessness, I was not unloaded until I crossed the river to East Ft. Madison. However, the agent kindly took me across the track to a boarding-house, where I rested till morning, ate breakfast, and returned to the city, walking leisurely over the bridge in the cool breeze, and looking at the Father of Waters flowing gently on in search of the land I so dearly love, the sunny South. During the day, visited friends, and promised to preach for them on my return from Nauvoo. At five o'clock in the evening, went on board the steamer Eloise and down the great river to Nauvoo. In about one hour we rounded up and landed at the old landing. Before leaving the boat I could see and recognize the place where our house stood sixty-five years ago, the home of my childhood. After an absence of sixty-two years, I now behold the playground of my childhood, but the house is gone. The old stone house at the landing, except a dilapidated basement, is gone. The towering cottonwood-tree is gone. A small pile of waste from the removal of the house chimney is the only mark of the old home. The little bald prairie hill is there, covered with grass, weeds, and beautiful wild flowers. The old stone-quarry is there, from which stone was procured for the building of the Nauvoo Temple. The little brook just north and east of our home is there, still contributing its mite to the great river. I made my way to Bro. Lawson's friendly home, and rested with the hospitable family for the night. Up the next morning, feeling very much refreshed, and desirous to take in the town. Bro. Lawson secured a buggy and horse for my use. I pulled out, up and down Main Street, with much pleasure. I viewed the Smith homes near the foot of Main Street, and other historic places, and drove up the bank of the river, following the bend around to the head of Main Street. This brought me back to the old home already described. I again reviewed the ground of my old home. What joy, mingled with sad thoughts, crowded my mind while standing on this, to me, sacred spot of ground. With some dimmed with age and affliction I gazed up the broad river at the memorable Madison Islands, then turning looked across and down the river where I could see Mt. Rose, and the island between and across the river—that fertile flat covered with vines and fruits. Then east and south, upon the gently rising grounds, upon which once the Nauvoo Temple stood, but now, like the temple of Jerusalem, there is not one stone left upon another. Yes, if we can depend upon what we hear, the stones are occupying in another building. I saw this other building, and was shown the spot upon which the temple stood; and on Sunday I had the pleasure of preaching for our friends, within a few feet of where the Temple stood. A people of God once inhabited this beautiful country, and this city so beautifully located, like the Jews at Jerusalem, through transgression of the law was taken from them and given to another people. Oh, how sad, in the face of revelation, and the promises of God, on conditions, that it should be theirs for an inheritance for ever, that a people would so lightly treat the promises of God as to forfeit their right to inherit that beautiful land.

While I gazed upon that landscape that so justly merits the title, The Beautiful, I thought of Ezra who, when he learned of the desolation of Jerusalem, while in Babylon, wept and begged the privilege of rebuilding it. Oh, will our children or our children's children, through the mercies of God, and obedience to his laws, be permitted to rebuild and inherit this beautiful place? I am led to exclaim: How long, O Lord, are thy laws to be trampled under the feet of men, to the condemnation of mankind! After my short and delightful visit to Nauvoo, I returned to Ft. Madison, filled my appointment with the friends, and had a delightful visit with the friends of that place. I am now visiting with two nieces, Sr. Minerva Wight Smith, and Sr. Estella Wight, and hope to divide the time for a few days with friends at Independence. I hope to be better able, mentally and physically, to do mission work on my return to Texas than I have been for a few years. I remain, in bonds of love, with hope of a grand reunion on the shores of eternity.

CANTON, Ohio, June 16, 1906.

Dear Herald: I write to let you know of our bereavement in the death of Sr. Rachel E. M. Stewart, that I baptized about thirty years ago, and we have held her in our hearts as one of the dearest of a few. She was a beautiful, respectable young woman, and we had great hopes she would be a help to many, and a comfort to many. She was a sister to Wight Smith, and Sr. Estella Wight, and we hope to divide our time for a few days with friends at Independence. I hope to be better able, mentally and physically, to do mission work on my return to Texas than I have been for a few years. I remain, in bonds of love, with hope of a grand reunion on the shores of eternity.

BLAIR, Nebraska, June 18, 1906.

Dear Herald: How good to be a Saint in these last days. Elder Hansen, of Iowa, did some excellent speaking for the Blair Saints, and near his going away came to us Bro. D. R. Chambers of Iowa, and he too has fed our souls on the bread of life, and we are much strengthened, confidence being restored. Our brothers and sisters look good to us, and we thought we looked perhaps better then, too. We have a church-house of our own now; a long-felt need and want is at last gratified. Our president and priest and teacher have been unting in their efforts for good service to the branch, over which they preside.

There are to-day many wounded, and many that suffer from thirst and hunger for spiritual food and drink; and I have always thought it was very unbecoming in us as Saints to say to the wounded, "Why didn't you keep step with us? I can't help it because you are hurt. Why didn't you wear the shield of mighty faith like I did? I have cares and all I can do to keep up." There is more rejoicing over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine just persons that need no repentance. Knowing these things, what manner of people ought we to be? Wish that wicked members were cut off the church! Rather wish they may see the wrong, and do better and stay in. Let us, believers in Jesus, not hope the wicked will stay out, and not disgrace the church further, but rather hope that their lives be spared until they may get back home and be once more true and faithful, as in the commencement. Let us, as a band of workers, not fear pollution, but rather fear Almighty God, and do his bidding; fear lest they can not be persuaded to put on the clean garment you have to offer; fear Him who can bring you safely through and keep you clean. And let us work, for the night comes when no man can work. And although 'tis better far to enter eternal glory maidned and blind than to have two good eyes and be cast into eternal torment, remember this, that it is a poor rule indeed that will not prove itself and weet in our ways. So be watchful lest we in our ignorance of the just laws of the kingdom, cling more closely to some resolutions formed by men than to the law given by divine revelation, and keep more people out of the church than our preachings and teachings can bring into the kingdom. I believe conference resolutions are good in their place; but divine revelation and the perfect law thus given to govern us is far better. And, finally, may grace and peace abound, and joy and truth reach all of you.

BILoxi, Mississippi, June 16, 1906.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a few notes from the Southern Mission will interest your readers.

After returning from the General Conference, I labored in the Kentucky and Tennessee District until May 18, at Wingo, Kentucky, Cottage Grove, Tennessee, and Palmersvill, Tennessee; all new places. A splendid interest was manifested at Bro. W. L. McClain's near Cottage Grove. I preached several times and baptized a fine man, Bro. Ed Dickson, and his wife will soon follow him. We organized a Sunday-school at Bro. McClain's, with thirty-five pupils, all outsiders but three. I was informed by the missionary in charge that I was to go south and labor with Bro. Alma Booker in Southern Mississippi, so I returned home to arrange to go south. I was hindered a week on account of the illness of our baby. I arrived in Mobile, Alabama, the 25th of May.

I met Bro. J. M. Stubhsart of Lamoni at the home of Bro. F. P. Scarcliff, who had preceded me a day or so, and was holding meetings at Spring Hill, or Crighton, five miles out from Mobile. I joined him and we held forth until Monday night. Bro. Alma Booker joined us Monday, and holding meetings at Spring Hill, or Crighton, five miles out from Mobile. I joined him and we held forth until Monday night. Bro. Alma Booker joined us Monday, and together we went over to “Three Rivers” to attend the Sunday-school convention and district conference, which convened June 1 to 3. A spiritual time was enjoyed. It was said to be the best conference ever held in the district. A goodly number of Saints and friends were present, four branches reporting. This being my first time in the South, I must say that I am pleased with the prospect for doing good, and the spirit manifest among the Saints, especially the young, who seem to manifest quite an interest in the Sunday-school and Religious work. After the conference at “Three Rivers,” Bro. Alma made a trip to Mobile to arrange for his family, and get them located. In the meantime I held forth at Theodore a few nights. Bro. Alma joined me Friday, and we went back to Three Rivers where we had left an appointment for Friday night. Saturday morning, in company with Bro. Rule Mizzelle, we made our way over to “Bluff Creek,” journeying ten miles in a small boat, up the Pascagoula River, and walked out to Bro. Dave Barnes’, two miles. We held forth at Bluff Creek until Monday night, then made our way across the country twelve miles to Fontainebleau, where we boarded the “iron horse” for Biloxi. This is where Brn. King, Entrehin, and others of the Saints live, but there is no branch organization.

Biloxi is one of the oldest towns on the Gulf coast, midway between Mobile and New Orleans. It is the third oldest city in the United States, settled in the year 1699 by Iberville. It is almost surrounded by water, a summer and winter health resort. It is the second largest oyster-shipping port in the world. Has a resident population of eight thousand. Has oyster, shrimp, crab, vegetable, and fruit canneries, and numerous manufactories. We expect to hold forth here till over Sunday in a private house. Then we will go to Ocean Springs, where we have secured the city hall. Will begin a series of meetings there Monday night. We have arranged to thoroughly advertise the meetings, and are hopeful of a good hearing. We shall put forth an effort soon to secure a hall in Biloxi, and endeavor to get the work better established here.

Wednesday we made an effort to find one Robert Rupp, whose name we had secured from the HERALD. His post-office is Ocean Springs, but we learned upon inquiry that the party lives three and one half miles east. We were not to be discouraged, so started out to find them, which we did after a long walk. It was a glad surprise to them as they had recently removed from Chicago to this southern country. The sister had been praying that some Latter Day Saint would come that way. This she told us with tears in her eyes, and was overjoyed to learn that there were Saints so near as Biloxi. Three Rivers, and Vancleave. Sr. Rupp is in delicate health, their principal reason for coming south, and those who know her will be glad to learn that she is fast regaining her health. We remained over night with them, and had a pleasant visit. Bro. Rupp is still in Chicago, where he returned to ply his trade, but is expected home soon, when they expect to build them a home on a farm they have bought. We left them feeling happier, and felt well repaid for our trouble in looking them up.

By the way I had forgotten to mention that the conference of the Mobile District voted to hold a reunion this fall, probably in October; and as this will be their first effort along this line, it is to be hoped it will prove a success. I am sure it will, if an earnest effort is put forth by the Saints. As chairman of the reunion committee, I will say that just as soon as the committee has time to locate a suitable place to hold the reunion, full particulars will be published in the church papers.

Dear Saints, let us begin now to labor for a successful reunion, and pray for wisdom and light and zeal necessary to make it a success; and I am sure it will be. To this end let us all pray.

Your colaborer and brother in gospel bonds.

PROVO, Utah, June 14, 1906.

Editors Herald: I arrived here Tuesday evening, June 12, and Bro. J. E. Vanderwood met me at the depot. There was here to work, so the first night found us on the street-corner telling the gospel story. About forty stopped and listened, and last night our crowd increased to about one hundred. I have baptized twelve this year, before coming to Utah. What the results will be here, remains to be seen. We expect to continue street-work during the summer, as that seems to be the best way to reach the people.

At Chandler, Colorado, on my way here, I stopped long enough to perform a double wedding. A brother and sister married a sister and brother.

It seemed hard to leave the Colorado Mission, as we had become attached to the work there during our six years of labor there. The way never seemed brighter in that field for gospel work than now. But much labor is needed here.

In gospel bonds,

WESTVILLE, Nova Scotia, Canada, June 12, 1906.

Dear Herald: I am happy to have the joy and privilege to write you again. I have just arrived in Canada with my wife and family to take up our abode by my wife’s parents and their family. With so many Saints anxious to know of our well-being, I thought the best course to take was to write you and ask for an indulgence that I might inform them in a general sense by writing to the HERALD. I will fulfill all my promises to the Saints of Manchester, and write them all in turn. We were a fortnight on the water, being delayed by fog as well as staying at St. Johns, New Foundland, for fifty-two hours, to unload and load cargo. I was glad to find Bro. Mills and family well in health and anxious for the welfare of the Saints in England, and the furtherance of the Lord’s work there. I am thankful to God for the association of the Saints during the past twelve years, and I trust that I may be kept faithful to the work out here, in my new home, and that God will bless the Saints in Manchester with his spirit, that they may strive earnestly for the faith delivered to the Saints. I am anxious to hear a good report of the work in England, as ever, and pray for the young men to be kept firm and faithful, that the Lord may bring about his righteous purposes in due time. I do not know what course Bro. Mills may take in the work, having had no time to talk it over yet. May God’s blessing rest upon the Sunday-school and the Religious workers, both at home and abroad. I trust the Saints will continue to remember us all in their prayers that we may keep the chariot rolling along.

RENSBURG, Germany, June 10, 1906.

Editors Herald: With pleasure we have read the glad news from the General Conference, and see that we have been appointed another year to Germany. Have been to Berlin recently, and while there had the pleasure of baptizing two noble souls, Bro. and Sr. Kippe. They are the first ones since we have labored here in Germany. Bro. and Sr. Kippe are nicely situated, and their home is brightened with two little girls, whom I was privileged to bless. My stay with them was pleasant indeed and they are both willing to help advance the good work in Berlin. May the Lord bless and direct them in the paths of usefulness.
The Saints’ Herald

We are still trying to hold meetings here in Rensburg; but of late the people have not come so well as we would like to have them come. Lately we have held two meetings in the country; attendance from sixteen to twenty, fairly good for Germany, I think. We wish to continue these meetings provided we can get halls to hold meetings in, and money to pay the rent with.

Bro. Peter Anderson, missionary in charge, has been with us, and his counsel and advice was helpful, and appreciated. Bro. Becker has, by hard study, mastered the German language quite well, and is doing nicely. I wish to express my thanks to the rent with.

Are there any Saints in Dubuque, Iowa? I wish to correspond on the 7th and have been preaching on the street-corner each evening since with the exception of Sundays, when we hold our meetings at regular intervals, yet we have had a fair hearing and quite a number of regular attendants who are present at each service. Whether results in the way of additions to the church will follow or not, of course remains for the future to determine, but we are quite sure prejudice has been and is being removed, and the people have a better understanding of who and what we are than they had before, and we are hopeful that seed may be sown that in due time may bear fruit. There are invitations to visit other places in the district, and I hope to reach some if not all of them during the summer.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

Chas. H. Burr.

Editors Herald: I am working in the land of cotton and magnolias and roses. People, people everywhere, but not a Saint in sight. Lonesome sometimes, but am kept busy counting and recounting my worthies for the Iron Mountain Railway Company, between Little Rock and McGehee, Arkansas. Our tracts are curiosities around here. Reverend R. P. Iliff gave his lecture on “Mormonism” at the Methodist church last week. The following clipping will “strengthen the brethren”:

Three Kinds of Courage.

There’s the courage that nerves you in starting to climb
The mount of Success rising sheer,
And when you’ve slipped back, there’s the courage sublime
That keeps you from shedding a tear.

These two kinds of courage, I give you my word,
Are worthy of tribute—but then You’ll not reach the summit unless you’ve the third—
The courage of try-it-again!—Success.

Yours truly,
John C. Grainger.

Dear Herald: As there have been no contributions to your pages from these parts for some time I thought I would write a little, although I am not given to much writing. You are always a welcome visitor at our home, as your pages are, as a rule, replete with good things. I enjoy reading the articles and letters you bring week after week from those who are alive in the work. This work is the grandest thing in this world united with it in August, 1885. In 1889 I was ordained a priest. I labored in this capacity till July, 1908, when I was ordained an elder. I have never felt like I amounted to very much in this work, but it has done much for me. I have recognized the hand of the Master working with me all along the line. He has certainly been merciful to me, for which I praise his holy name. I have had some trials which sorely were upon me that at times it would seem as if I would have to give up in despair, but thank God for bringing me safely through them all. I can now look back and thank God for them as they have been consuming the dross and refining the gold. I do not ask to be exempt from trials, but that I might not be overcome. I believe they are essential to our development. Even the Captain of our salvation was made perfect through sufferings. (See Hebrews 2:10.)

I wish to say to the Saints of Central Texas that we are living below our privileges. We are not making the advancement necessary to receive the blessings of God. Blessings are promised of God on conditions. “When ye do what I say then I am bound, otherwise ye have no promise”; “He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him”; “If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him”; “For if you will that I give you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded you and required of you.”

In your issue for May 9, 1906, is a letter from V. A. McAlister, Mineral, Texas, which contains some statements I wish to notice, not for the sake of controversy, but in the interest of truth. The writer says: “The Saints here in the Southern Mission, as a rule, are downcast. They have been taught by the Northern elders that they should not use hog meat or drink coffee or chew tobacco, which we know is not good for the human body.” If, as you say, it “is not good for the human body,” then the “Northern elders” have certainly “taught” you that which is for your good. This is self-evident.

Again: “And as our climate is so warm that we can not keep beef all the time, as I understand the Doctrine and Covenants we would just as well eat pork as any other kind of meat.” I do not understand the Doctrine and Covenants as you do. I fail to find where it commands us to “keep beef all the time” and “not use hog meat” at all, and if the “Northern elders” have taught you so just demand of them section and paragraph. But I believe you say this is your understanding. Well, let us see what the book says on this subject. “…凡 hath killed and eaten of beasts and of the fowls of the air, I, the Lord, hath ordained for the use of man, with thanksgiving. Nevertheless, they are to be used sparingly; and it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter or of cold or famine . . . these hath God made for the use of man only in times of famine and excess of hunger.”—Doctrine and Covenants 6:2. The above is the “Word of Wisdom” about which so much has been said. I believe God revealed this document and if we heed the instructions given the blessings will follow. In this he has revealed his will concerning the use of meats, one kind not spoken of more than another, but all of them are for the use of man but should be used sparingly and that in times of winter or famine. Again: “Whoso fordesth to abstain from meats, that man should not eat the same, is not ordained of God: for behold, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air, and that which cometh of the earth is ordained for the use of man, for food, and for ruinent, . . . woe be unto man that sheddeth blood or that wasteth flesh and hath no need.”—Doctrine and Covenants 49:3. Thus speaks the Doctrine and Covenants on the meat question and it is so plain that comment is not needed. See also 1 Timothy 4:1-5, which harmonizes beautifully with the above.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Again the writer says, "So far as the tobacco is concerned, I do not have any excuse for [using it]." Since you can offer no excuse for using it, just allow me to offer a reason for you to quit it and I will do so in your own words: "We know it is not good for the human body," it is "an injury to the temporal body and a very filthy habit." But you say, "I do not believe that it will destroy the soul." No, for the soul can not be destroyed, but allow me to say that I believe that that which is "not good for the human body" is injurious to, and will hinder the development of the soul. If we consult the Doctrine and Covenants on the tobacco question we will find the will of the Lord made just as plain as on the meat question. "Tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man" (Doctrine and Covenants 89:12). Then "avoid the use of tobacco" (Doctrine and Covenants 119:3).

With good will to all, and malice toward none, I am your well-wisher, Johnnie Hay.

Dennisport, Massachusetts, June —, 1906.

Editors Herald: This letter leaves me in one of Nature's most beautiful and healthful spots—down on the Cape, meaning Cape Cod. The air, free from the smoke and disease of the city, contains the ozone of life, and the miles of white sand, washed by the Atlantic Ocean, can not be surpassed. The water, sparkling in the sunlight, seems to beckon one out onto its bosom, to rise and fall as the waves come and go.

In the morning the fishermen come in, after a night's toiling on the deep. The boats are loaded with mackerel, herring, and other fish, with which the city markets are supplied.

Since being here I have been fishing for human beings, and my effort has not been in vain. Five have been baptized, and we hope that others will follow.

Dennisport heard the gospel from elders of the old organization, and some of the Saints left for Nauvoo. When the church was disorganized one of the members went to Utah and became a Brighamite. But this is of the past; we are more interested in the present.

In beginning the series of meetings here I was assured of the hearty support of the Saints. They came to the chapel in a pouring rain, and for eighteen services supported the preacher by their presence. My experience has been that if Saints are not sufficiently interested in the saving of souls to attend the meetings and to pray much to the Lord, the missionary might as well try to interest a houseful of mummies. Christ has said that his people are lights to the world, and when the light in them has become darkness, they are stumbling-blocks and hinder the progress of the gospel. When one is preaching in a branch of fifty members and his audience is composed of twenty strangers and five Saints, it is time to thunder against internal and external sins that are destroying the body. "Many are called but few are chosen."

The Saints here have treated me very kindly, and have diligently labored for the good of the cause. They have rejoiced to see humble, intelligent members joined to their branch. The prayers of years have been answered, and more are yet to be added if a faithful walk is observed by the children of God.

The writer's heart was made glad as he tasted the fruit of practical religion, when the Saints placed in his hand a box of money, with which he could buy clothes and pay traveling expenses as he went forth with the light of the gospel of Christ. May the Lord quicken the dead souls of those that tell how much they love the gospel but never make any effort to spread it. Parasites, living on the fruits of another man's labor.

We are living in the last days. The weary course of this earth is nearly over. We hear of disasters in other lands; behold! they are at our very door. I believe that the San Francisco earthquake is the most significant thing that has occurred since the Reorganization. It was the voice of God to Saint and sinner—"Prepare ye, the hour of my judgment is here." This earth is honey-combed with iniquity. In this land of profound intelligence and fervent Christianity (!) it is not safe for a man to carry money or for a woman to walk alone at night on the street!

It is true that the gospel is going forth among the nations; no hand can stay it. Honest-hearted persons are accepting the invitation to the marriage supper. Satan is raging in the hearts of men. Error slinks away and snarls when the light of truth is focused on it. The person that desires truth more than anything else will accept the gospel when he hears it. Thousands have heard our message for the last time, and millions are waiting to hear it, and millions will repeat it. Many a Saint has made shipwreck of himself because of pride; it and selfishness are the curses of this world. And yet, there are the very best of people in this work, with now and then a Judas.

I am thankful that the question of religion is individual. My salvation does not depend on yours, nor yours on mine. The Saint that is always looking at another's faults, is a hypocrite and needs to set to work on the beam in his own eye.

After all, there is much good instruction in the statement: "Know thyself."

While I do not think it is right or consistent to close the Herald to the exchange of ideas and facts on secret organizations, yet I know it is the worthy companion of the Ensign, and they are the best of papers.

Tecumseh, Nebraska, June 20, 1906.

Editors Herald: I came to this place about one week ago and have been preaching here almost every evening since. The work here is not in as prosperous condition as we should like to see it, but we still have hope of seeing the work revived in these parts, if the Saints who live here will only work together in love and strive to be exemplars of the truth they profess to love. As in other places, some few of the Saints are very willing helpers while others are very willing that the few should do the work.

My work during the remainder of the year will be almost entirely in new fields, as I desire to heed the admonition of the Master, "To push the work into new fields until the world is warned." And I am sure that the missionary is never so happy as when he is working in new fields.

While Elder R. O. Self and the writer were at Avoca, in this mission, a Congregational preacher challenged me to debate, and when I asked him whether he would affirm that the Congregational Church was in harmony in doctrine and practice with the teachings of Christ and the apostles as given in the New Testament, he positively refused; said he did not preach Congregationalist doctrine, therefore would not debate that issue. Said I should meet his interpretation of the word of God. I told him I was not there to meet such foolishness, but I would defend the church I represented and would meet him on the question of church identity according to the New Testament, not only in Avoca, but also in Nebraska City; but the reverend (?) gentleman refused to meet any such proposition. There are those in Avoca who will not long obey the truth, I feel sure. But prejudice against God's work in that place is very great indeed. And of course the sects are doing all they can to keep us from getting a foothold.

From this place I will go farther west in the field, but will aim to return to the eastern part of the field in time to attend our camp-meeting to be held at Nebraska City commencing September 7.

I hope the Saints over the district will make arrangements so as to be in attendance, and that they will assist whatever they can financially. Send contributions to Bro. H. C. Freming, treasurer for the reunion committee, Nebraska City, Nebraska.
May the dear Saints also remember to send their tithes and offerings for the church to Elder H. A. Higgins, Bishop's agent, Nebraska City, Nebraska, No. 1297 Third Corso. I am still in the conflict and hope to endure.

DENVER, Colorado, June 18, 1906.

Editors Herald: Through the kindness of the Denver and Delta Saints I am now pleased to state that I am comfortably located at 2302 Downing Avenue, Denver, Colorado. The Saints here are cheerfully looking after my wants, for which I am grateful. I am doing some work in and out of the branch here as health and opportunity permit. My health is not good, but I hope for the better. I am glad Bishop Kelley has made the call for aid to build the sanitarium and hope that the call will meet with a hearty response from the Saints all over the world.

For some three weeks Sr. Schmid of Delta has been in the St. Luke's Hospital at this place. Being well acquainted with her I visited her quite a number of times. I presume this is a very good hospital of the kind, but Sr. Schmid said she got very tired of the place. She thought the nurses were there for the money and exhibited but little affection for her. I thought, oh, how we need a sanitarium of our own where we can nurse and care for our own sick. Surely the good Lord will permit us to care for the sick and afflicted, the poor and the needy among us. Let us do it and that in the Lord's own way, that Heaven's blessings may be ours to enjoy.

CHAR. J. SPURLOCK.

FULTON, Kentucky, June 17, 1906.

Editors Herald: In reading the many articles and letters of the Saints I see something equivalent to this: "I want to live so that when I am called to die I may be saved," and "I want to be saved when this life is over." Now, Saints, where do we get such an idea? Did Jesus or his disciples teach the people that they had to die in order to be saved? Is it not probable that we are going to find ourselves, as a body, in the same condition of unbelief, only on a different line, that the other folks are? They teach their flocks that angels do not visit mankind now and do not teach, them that they ever will; quite a poor way to instill into the minds of coming generations the plain and important truth that they will come, is it not? Jesus taught plainly that the earth would be visited by those messengers—we believe that of course. Well, did he not teach that he was going to destroy him who had power over death, which is the Devil? Is he not the great conqueror of the adversary?

Does not the scripture say that the man who will turn from his wicked ways shall live and not die? Oh, yes; but some will say that meant the spirit. But wait! That wicked man was already dead, and if it meant spiritual death it would have been plain to say. If the wicked man will turn from his wickedness he shall be made alive again or resurrected and not die any more. We are taught that "the wages of sin are death"; then we are taught by the present-day teacher that if we will truly repent of all our sins with the proper kind of faith in God and Christ, and obey the next two principles acceptable with God, that all our sins are for ever canceled and that we are justified and acceptable with God. Has not the wages of these sins been paid by Jesus Christ long ago, when we render obedience to the gospel? God's power to save men with! looks like paying the wages twice at least. Let us not have too much spiritualizing of the words live and die. Why not led them to see that the man remain confined to the death of the body or life of the body unless it says spirit? Jesus said man shall not live by bread alone but by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God. You would not say spiritual death there. "Hear and your soul shall live, both spirit and body combined." "The just shall live by faith." If they die, is it not because their faith has failed? And if their "faith" fails they or "we" do not continue to abide in the doctrine of Christ. And if we do not we have not God or the Son.

It is an evident fact that man was and is subject to death until He comes who has power to destroy him who wields the sword of death over Adam's race; but are we taught to look for this most wonderful blessing—are we being taught that the time is at hand that Christ shall save his sons and daughters from this monster's power, and that by perfect obedience they shall escape death with its horrors? or are we taught to obey the gospel, that complete plan of redemption that saves men from death, from all kinds of misery, sickness, etc., and keeps them alive in Christ by faith? not dead in him. He is alive according to the scriptures and if we be in him will we be dead? To die is to be out of Christ that long. Any kind of death you may call it, he is alive for evermore. Can the head be alive with a dead body? If the foot dies, is it not cut off from the body? or if the foot is cut off from the body, is it not soon dead?

The living soul makes a complete identity of God. Not the spirit without the body or the body without the soul; both united are a member of the body of the living Christ. Or are we taught to obey this plan of redemption from death to get ready or prepare to die? Brethren of the ministry, especially remember our cry is, "All scripture given by inspiration of God is good for the man of God, for instruction, reproof, correction, or doctrine." Will some of you use portions of the scriptures bearing on the subject of life and death that are, so far, as little used by us as some of our important scriptures are by Mrs. Roper's daughters? Note for the benefit of all who are quick to read the mind of the other fellow and count him a blasphemer, and out of the faith, and about gone, etc., I wish to say that my faith is still in the message as proclaimed by Joseph Smith. But we think there are quite a lot of truths that exist which Joseph Smith never knew and a great amount that is not yet revealed to the Reorganization. So let us accept a truth when it will prove itself wherever it may be found, and not pronounce a thing rotten simply because it does not come by a Latter Day Saint.

With love for all truth, for all Saints, and for all good work, I remain desiring to be a faithful Saint of God,

J. W. WILLIAMS.

MINDEN CITY, Michigan, June 19, 1906.

Brother Joseph Smith: Our conference of the Eastern Michigan District, held at Fremont, is over. It was a very good one. There was a large gathering of Saints, and many of the friends attended part of the time, especially Saturday and Sunday evenings. The weather was hot part of the time, which made the roads a little muddy; but taking it all through, and considering all sides, a good time was had. Eight persons were baptized during the conference, all but one of that number being children of the Saints, the one referred to being a gentleman of good understanding, whose son was also in attendance, and who is investigating the work, and who, we think, will soon obey the gospel. Others are also believing the work, and many are coming our way.

Fremont is about thirty miles from where I began my work in Michigan about twenty-eight years ago. Some of the old members of the church who came into the work then, were in attendance, with many others. The parents of some of those boys and girls who were baptized were at that time but children themselves. I rejoice with them to see their children obey the truth. I am glad to know that the gospel, planted over a quarter of a century ago among the people in this part of the State, is here yet, and it is growing.

I am lonely, and a feeling of sorrow comes over me at times, when I see no more the faces of the dear old brothers and sisters whom the Lord assisted me to bring into the church so long ago; men and women, who, though professing no religion then, (when some professed Christians turned away all they could from hearing me, and some of whom persecuted me, etc.,) took me in, and fed, and sheltered, and clothed me, and heard me gladly, and accepted the “angel’s message to Joseph the Seer,” and enjoyed with me this beautiful gospel, have passed under the rod and over the river. They have died,—no, not death! They have passed from this stage of action, and their spirits are still alive; “They shall never die,”—they have gone on before me; and with a bright hope of a glorious resurrection with the just, which will be brought to pass by the power of an endless God, when the grand anticipations of their former years will be visibly portrayed again.

But those lonely and sorrowful feelings can not linger long when we feel we are not as young as we were then; and, as in the last letter from Bro. Joseph to me he says, “But, Bro. John, you are no longer the ‘boy’ preacher,” I feel I am nearer my “home over there,” where I shall meet with those dear brothers and sisters with whom I have sojourned here, and our joy shall be complete.

I rejoice because the children and grandchildren of Saints are coming into the gospel and faith of their fathers, and that they and their neighbors are enjoying the Holy Spirit of the blessed Master. The work is gaining ground; while some are moving away, some to Missouri, Canada, and other places, yet our numbers are greater than ever, prejudice is not as it was many years ago, and many are being drawn by the good Spirit of God and are obedient to his law.

Our missionaries are all feeling well, and are alive to the interests of the work; and we are arranging to carry out the instruction of our Bro. Wight, who is in charge, as much as possible to labor “two and two”; and having asked the local members to help all they can, two have responded, viz.: C. E. and C. U. Grant. One goes with William Dowker, and one with
O. J. Hawn for (at least) a few months.

Brn. G. M. Shippy and E. J. Goodenough are occupying in the tent. William Davis and D. Dowker, J. W. Davis, J. L. Sweet, etc., are all doing well.

Our Northern Michigan District men are also alive and doing about the best that can be expected under all circumstances.
May the blessing of God be upon us all.

Your little brother,
J. J. CORMISH.

Far-Pealing Silver Wedding-Bells.

Twenty-five years ago in the city of London, Ontario, there was celebrated a quiet wedding, which united in one the destinies of two whose names are to-day as widely known and highly honored as any husband and wife in the Reorganization, testimony of which was in evidence last evening at their lovely home in the city of their wedlock, No. 474 Adelaide Street, London, Ontario, when a very large assembly greeted them upon the auspicious occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marrige, their silver wedding, at which they were presented with many beautiful and costly gifts, by those present, and those that regretted their absence, the value of which will reach the hundreds of dollars, accompanied by letters and telegrams, from Canadians and those in foreign countries.

The evening sped rapidly into the small hours, while the ocassion was illuminated by the interspersion of appropriate songs, speeches, recitations, with some instrumental renderings.

But great was the surprise, and numerous the compliments when R. C. sang (to the tune of “Under the shade of the old apple-tree”) a beautiful song of his own composition, to the complete surprise of St. Lizzie, which, when sung with the melodies voice, portrayed the scenes of the true love-story of their lives, and all present were visibly affected with this beautiful life-story.

While the evening was thus speeding away, the palates of the most fanciful epicurians were being satisfied by the waiters from the larder of our youthful-looking hostess.

First to appear of the guests of the evening were Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Perrin. He is one of the wealthy men of Canada.
R. C. worked as foreman in his candy-factory at the time of his marriage, and Mr. Perrin has always held R. C. in high favor.

Little did this man think, when twenty-five years ago he placed Bro. Evans in such a responsible position, that he was training one to control men, not only in the business marts of life, but that in a few years this man with two others would preside over the church of Jesus Christ in all the world as the loved and honored of many thousands, but it was so.

When the call came for R. C. to leave the candy-factory, he left a good salary to live on the small allowance offered by the church, and God has blessed him and his; and last night we were made glad to hear him say, that notwithstanding he has been shot at and mobbed several times, and endured many hardships, that his Lizzie has made the greater sacrifice of the two.

Truly all through the years of loneliness and labor she has been a wonderful help to R. C. and all that know them can say,
This union was made under the guiding hand of God.

May they with their two children live long to be an honor to the church and to the many thousands that they have sacrificed to make happy, is the earnest prayer of the writer.

Your brother in hope,
R. C. RUSSELL.

of the presents and donors out for want of room.—Editor.]

Independence Items.

While reading Bro. Mitchell’s letter in the last issue of the Herald, in which he speaks of “reading of the General Conference,” and the desire he had at the time to be there, our thoughts were carried back to nearly two months ago when we sat listening to the words of some of the brethren while they told their early experiences in this work. It was at a time when the leading quorums were assembled in the chapel over the way, where, as was said, hovered over those present “the spirit of seriousness and deep thought,” and in the interim the chairman of the general meeting suggested that opportunity be given of hearing from some of the missionaries present.

There was an unusual degree of enthusiasm apparent, judging from the sound of many feet tapping on the floor to the rhythm of the opening song, “Shall we gather home to Zion,” and the large audience became very attentive while listening to the many elders, among them Bro. F. G. Pitt who presided, John Shippy, M. H. Cook, J. F. McDowell, William Lewis, J. M. Baker, E. C. Briggs, also the missionaries who in years ago have labored faithfully on the islands across the tempestuous deep.

As our brother says in his letter, it was “a glorious time.”
They told of their being led to pray for guidance in early childhood, how their minds became enlightened after turning from error’s darkness, and how they received for themselves wonderful promises through the gifts of faith and prayer.

Blessed experiences were those related at these closing hours of the conference, and we well remember the earnest exhortations to a life of purity and uprightness, and the stirring appeal to us as parents to do our duty faithfully by our children, with the promise that would follow, “there shall come a gladness of heart, and the bright evidences of the truth and divinity of this work will bring you joy and peace.”

The ministry of the conference of 1906, including the Presidency, through faith and doctrine and revelation, have all left with the people a glorious testimony of the truth of the latter-day work.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Since conference we have heard many excellent discourses, among them one from Bro. R. E. Ettenhouzer, which was a historical sermon concerning the early days of the church at Independence. Also we have listened to good instruction from Brn. T. C. Kelley, Hilliard, Luff, Chatburn, Bond, and F. M. Smith, who preached a very wholesome and timely discourse on June 2, on the theme, “The attitude of Latter Day Saints toward the government of the United States,” taking as a text Luke 20:25: “Render therefore unto Cesar the things which be Cesar’s, and unto God the things which be God’s.”

“We are not living up,” said the speaker, “to the spirit and letter of the law.” And this doubtless was a truth applicable to many of the Saints, and perhaps to us at the center place; for, said he, “there are some in our midst whom we are sheltering who have transgressed the laws of the land.” We regret that we have to record that while as a branch we are receiving many blessings, both spiritual and temporal, accruing to an abode in this favored spot and we are desiring to “serve God as we are commanded,” yet there has of late transpired a few things calculated to even bring the blush of shame to the face of those seeking a life of righteousness; and, because of pleasure-seeking and disobedience, sorrow has been brought to the happy hearthstone, and a blight upon the fair name of the Sunday-school.

There has also been, as evinced at the late business-meetings, even a division among us in regard to one or two matters which to some of us are of absorbing interest. We refer to the anthem-singing, which some aver is not in harmony with the revelations concerning “the selection of hymns,” and “the service of song.” We refer also to the present occupancy of the upper auditorium by the Sunday-school. The idea seems to prevail with many who are sensitive concerning any little unnecessary talk and confusion at the opening of services, that there should be “a removal” of that which is a hindrance to “discipline and efficiency” in the special department of church service, namely, “preaching of the word,” “congregational singing,” and the solemn exercise of “the soul in prayer.”

We are reminded of what George William Curtis writes in his essay on “manners in the college”: “To remove for cause in the civil service,” says he, “really means not only to remove for a penal offense, but for habits and methods that destroy discipline and efficiency.”

And, by the way, the patience of our presiding officers here is about worn out in trying to discipline us in church manners; hence the “removal” idea.

The auxiliaries are improving in attendance and interest, and the Daughters of Zion are pushing the work in behalf of the children’s home, by way of collection of the visiting and ways and means committee to a goodly degree.

Children’s day (on which occasion there were in attendance at Sunday-school 743, including 31 visitors) was a busy one for the young people, there having been solemnized twenty-five baptisms of Sunday-school pupils; also their confirmation took place at noon. (Several little ones have been blessed and six marriages have taken place since conference.) Their program in the evening based on the watchword, “Jesus is coming,” was an excellent one, the children performing their parts well.

There has been of late quite a falling off in attendance at the mid-week prayer-meetings; but we are pleased to record that since conference the Holy Spirit has been present at the prayer-meetings, uplifting and cheering all those who were privileged to attend. During and since that time there has been an ingathering by letters and baptism of more than sixty.

As to news items the Kansas City Star has of late informed us as to quite a number of interesting events happening here,—the strange visits of three or four murderers, one of whom threatened the destruction of property on and near the Temple Lot, one doing much bodily injury by striking with a heavy instrument a sister living in the west end of the city; also several other suspicious characters have been arrested for disturbing the peace, and were sent out of town.

Much also has been printed lately concerning the annexation to Kansas City; but the Independence Examiner, with much humor and nonchalance, says, “If there is going to be any annexation, let’s annex Kansas City.”

Yesterday, the 17th, was a beautiful day, and there was the usually large attendance at the morning and afternoon services. Bro. E. L. Kelley took for his text John 1:17: “For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ,” and there was liberty of the spirit on the part of the preacher and close attention was paid by the interested hearers.

The same also was the case in the evening when Bro. Charles Locke preached a very wholesome and timely discourse on June 12 for my field of labor in Northeastern Kansas. Found all well at home on my arrival. May God bless all his laborers.

F. R. Tubb, Toronto, Ontario, in a letter to Bro. F. M. Smith, says: “Grand crowd at Massey Hall last night; closest of attention; increasing interest and enthusiasm; many saying that Bro. R. C.’s effort last evening eclipsed, if possible, his best and most eloquent lectures at the Majestic Opera-house. One inquired whether the Latter Day Saint faith was a scientific religion, and if the lecturer was prepared to debate with a Unitarian minister. Our brother replied in his humorous way that he was not spoiling for a fight, nor was he going around with a ‘chip on his shoulder’; but he was perfectly willing to debate with an authorized and accredited representative of any other faith, whether he be Unitarian, Trinitarian, Quaker, or Shaker. Never before, in the spiritual and temporal history of Toronto Branch, was there a better feeling manifested towards the Saints by outsiders and visitors than at present, one gentleman having actually volunteered to donate the handsome sum of five hundred dollars toward our building fund, conditional upon the fulfillment of certain conditions involving an augmented corporate and spiritual unity among the members of the Toronto Branch. My earnest prayer is that a speedier consummation of that better and happier state of things may be realized in the near future.

G. H. Graves, Hopkinsville, Kentucky: “I will leave here June 12 for my field of labor in Northeastern Kansas. Found all well at home on my arrival. May God bless all his laborers.”

C. Scott, Toledo, Ohio: “Bro. G. A. Smith and I reached this place May 30. Preached in the city last evening. Good liberty granted. Bro. W. G. Kimball is in charge of branch here. He is one of the leading architects and builders of the city. Can not yet speak fully of the condition of the work in this State; but believe it is moving. May our Father bless Zion.”

Mrs. Effie J. McCullough, Pond Creek, Oklahoma: “A few weeks ago Bro. H. E. Moler came and preached about a week on the streets, then Bro. Aylor joined him and they continued nearly a week longer. Preached one Sunday afternoon in the court-house. A number speak highly of the preaching. Some are interested; but the greater number are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. The Methodist preacher was out a few evenings, and a lady told me her son was at the Methodist church next Sunday morning, and heard the preacher say there were some men preaching false things on the streets.
The Presbyterian preacher who lectured on Mormonism last winter when A. V. Closen was here, has gone. They scarcely ever keep a preacher their time out, here, as they will not pay him and he gets a higher call where there is more pay. Pray for us.

C. A. Walruff, Phoenix, Oregon: "If an elder can visit us I will take care of him, and he will have a good new field to work here. In the past two weeks' time there is a thing that I think would result in bringing some good people to a knowledge of the truth. I live one mile and a half west of the depot."

Miscellaneous Department

To the Saints of the Rocky Mountain Mission; Greeting: Since we are associated together for another year's labor, it seems proper to address you. It is well known that this mission is rather of a speckled bird—composed of all names and grades of belief; and that it is fraught with difficulties, obstacles, and demands not in common with others; yet it is as important that labor be bestowed here as elsewhere more so. There are, perhaps, as many misguided and irreverent people here according to number, as can be found anywhere, some of whom are fanatic, self-confident, and dogmatical, essence, not yet they do not impress the new until considered, reasoned with, if such can be, and they led to see their errors if possible, and taught a better philosophy and hope.

We should unite and concentrate our efforts for the achievement. We should unite and concentrate our efforts for the achievement. We should unite and concentrate our efforts for the achievement. We should unite and concentrate our efforts for the achievement. We should unite and concentrate our efforts for the achievement. We should unite and concentrate our efforts for the achievement. We should unite and concentrate our efforts for the achievement. We should unite and concentrate our efforts for the achievement. We should unite and concentrate our efforts for the achievement. We should unite and concentrate our efforts for the achievement.

The conference of 1906 will be remembered as the best one that has been held in half a decade. All through from beginning to the conclusion, and in the conference, there manifested a spirit of unity and confidence, love and esteem, most desirable. The Spirit of the Lord was present, and wisdom directed in our councils, so that the right thing, in the main at least, seemed to be done; and this was recognized by the Saints assembled. There were no evil incentives at work among the Saints. A careful consideration of each other's rights and worth, and good fellowship, was apparent everywhere. The communications received in recognition of the organization, and directing in the work to be done, were in keeping with the spirit and genius of the work, again reminding the Saints that preparations should be made before there is an attempted great ing. And that, looking forward, keeping in line, wisdom, and judgment to guide, according as light has come to men through experience as well as special revelations; that the preparation and coming to Zion is not to be accomplished by rushing altogether, but by the employment of those agencies known to men to be of value in building up and caring for communities, thus relieving the work from the charge of fanaticism, undue boastings of special favors over and above what is acceptable all of which, in thought and in action, be positive along right lines. So long as we can see the hand of God guiding in the great work, we can well afford to be content and bear our part in the conflict.

The ministry will please make their quarterly report direct to the missionary in charge, address, Box 181, Salt Lake City, Utah. Brn. J. W. Morgan and S. D. Condit will be expected to take the direct oversight of ministerial work in their respective fields, as hitherto, in confidence and good will accorded hitherto be manifest among us the ensuing year.

Wm. H. Kelley, Missionary in Charge.

To the Saints in Northeastern Kansas and Northwestern Kansas Districts; Greeting: Having been placed in charge of the above-named districts, and having been chosen associate minister in charge, I expect you will be looking for a few lines from me. I assure you that it is with pleasure and confidence in God's work and his Saints that we take up the work of the year. But realizing the weakness of man, we must all look to God for divine guidance, if we hope for any goodly degree of blessing and prosperity.

We can truly say that so far as laborers are concerned they are few, there only being three in the State under conference appointment, besides Bro. J. W. Wight. So may we well offer a prayer that God may send more laborers into this part of the work.

We are thankful that thus far we have had some assistance from Brn. A. H. Smith, E. L. Kelley, and H. A. Smith. The last we are hopeful of keeping with us some weeks, while Brn. Smith and Kelley have passed on to other fields of labor. I am thankful, however, that we have in all the branches local men who are willing to labor as best they can. We wish to request them one and all to make a special effort, thus freeing us of the missionary force as much as possible to open up new places. Do your best, brethren, and God will qualify you for the work he requires of you.

As now is the time of our reunion draw near, we wish to say a few words regarding that. It will convene at Madison, August 24 to September 2 (Fair Oakes), east side of town. Street-cars direct from all depots to within five rods of the grounds. The grounds are large, with large trees, thus making a lovely place for the camp, on the north side of Lake Monona. According to the action of the February conference the conference will convene August 23, thus leaving the time for direct reunion work.

Sunday-school and Religio will be given sufficient time to advance the interests of both. All must remember that this means work. Now so far as the writer is concerned, as one of the traveling workers, committed to the direct work and teaching of the body of Christ, and as anxious as any to have the work and all we want is the presence of all who can possibly come, so that we will not be disappointed. I am aware that we have quite a number of Saints who have never attended a reunion. May the Lord direct and bless you for your solicitation and help. Should you have a point in view for preaching, do not wait for the missionary to hunt you up, but write and let us know your wish and we will try to satisfy the demand. Write us any time about the work. We should all feel the deep responsibility of this work. We are hopeful for a successful year's work. Let us labor together for the education of the body of Christ. May the Lord direct and abundantly bless, and give us a prosperous year to his name's glory, that Zion may put on her beautiful garments, and shine in the loveliness of her bridal robes.

RICHARD BALDWIN.

Sharon, Pennsylvania, 103 Oakland Avenue.

To the Saints and Friends of Wisconsin; Greeting: Having the pleasure of being appointed again to labor another year in Wisconsin, and having been chosen associate minister in charge, I expect you will be looking for a few lines from me. I assure you that it is with pleasure and confidence in God's work and his Saints that we take up the work of the year. But realizing the weakness of man, we must all look to God for divine guidance, if we hope for any goodly degree of blessing and prosperity.

We can truly say that so far as laborers are concerned they are few, there only being three in the State under conference appointment, besides Bro. J. W. Wight. So may we well offer a prayer that God may send more laborers into this part of the work.

We are thankful that thus far we have had some assistance from Brn. A. H. Smith, E. L. Kelley, and H. A. Smith. The last we are hopeful of keeping with us some weeks, while Brn. Smith and Kelley have passed on to other fields of labor. I am thankful, however, that we have in all the branches local men who are willing to labor as best they can. ures of the world that do not "enrich the soul," and sacrifice anything of that nature, and try to make it possible for you to attend. Do not think that your wardrobe must be all new and "just so" before you can think of attending, but come with what you have, for the one who is pure in heart is more welcome than one who is pure in outward appearance.

We are hopeful that our missionary in charge, J. W. Wight, will be able to attend by that time, as he is improving in health.
So let us think now that we may be fit for the work of extending the kingdom of God. This location will bring our gathering into a part of the city where very little preaching has been done, and so let us hope and pray that others may be brought to a knowledge of the truth.

Further instruction will be given regarding tents, but we are prepared to say now, that we will rent tents of the same compa­ny as last year, and prices fully as reasonable.

We thank those who have cooperated with us; the lowest figures.
We will also, state for the benefit of all interested, that we hope to have one of the patriarchs in attendance.

Now may the Spirit of God direct in all things, is my prayer for the good of all concerned.

Hopefully your servant,

JASPER O. DUTTON.

An Appeal.

To the Saints in America, and to All Who May Read This Brief Appeal: The writer realizes that in days past no people on the earth more gladly received the gospel of peace than the Welsh nation, and that from this country a vast number have emigrated to the land of the Stars and Stripes. I, however, have an opinion that many have a tender regard for the "old country" and the struggling little band (the remnant) left here to hold up the banner of truth. "The pebble has dropped in the water" here, and I am well satisfied the effects thereof, will be seen to the extent of the pool in due course. I read concerning Paul (formerly a zealous Pharisee) that after his conversion he stated that his heart's desire and prayer to God for his fellow countrymen was that they also should be saved. As Wales to-day is in somewhat the same condition as the Jews of Paul's day, i. e., having a zeal of God but not according to knowledge, I wonder how many there are who will assist the remnant of Wales to provide a font where our baptism for the remission of sins can be performed decently and in order. I know some one will say, "Why not baptize in the sea or river?" To that I would reply, I have no objection as my little daughter was baptized in the sea when nine years of age.

I present this matter with a degree of confidence, believing it will be brought about in due course, and to all who are interested I would say, We have a chapel of our own at Llanelly which has a term of forty-one years unexpired lease to run, but we do not have a baptismal font, and in my judgment such a place is required. There are now about eight young persons ready to be baptized, and I have the opinion that the inner children of this age, while there are also quite a number of others at the door, among these I would say, "Why not baptize in the sea or river?"
To that I would reply, I have no objection as my little daughter was baptized in the sea when nine years of age.

I have brought about the desired object of my ốccepting. It is free from debt, with the exception of running expenses, ground rent, etc. If we can put in a font, say for about twelve or fifteen pounds ster­ling, it will be church property, and the whole of the Saints in Wales, not forgetting the general church, will be greatly benefited, as the writer is Bishop's agent, and does not forget to teach the law of tithing. I do not intend to leave a stone unturnd till I have brought about the desired object of my work. I do not say if they who think this to be in harmony with reason and good judgment, I would respect­fully ask such to send contributions, either to me, or to Bro.
J. W. Rushton, mission president. His address is No. 30, Boll­ brooke Grove, Leeds, England. I hope to continue in the conflict to the end, and am willing (as in the past) to sacrifice my talents, time, and money in this cause, because I am confident of its final triumph.

Your brother in the work,
HENRY ELLIS.

Appeal.

It has become necessary to make an appeal to the Saints for financial help. We are preparing a sixteen-page tract for publication which will cost about $39 for 10,000. Besides this we are making an effort to reach the people in the neighboring towns, which in most cases costs us half rent. Unless we receive help from the Saints we can not do this. We have fitted up a small business-room in the city, in which we hold our services, that costs about three dollars per month. Sr.
Becker has been paying this out of her small allowance. We can not ask her to do more. We have already received some help from Saints in Stewartsville and vicinity, also from a few scattered Saints, so that at present we have about eighteen .helpers who do their best to give us help, but we are not able to reach the people in the outlying towns.

Send us what help you can give by postal money order to either of the undersigned.

Ministers in Charge Take Notice.

At the last General Conference the Traveling High Council adopted blank report forms for the missionaries to report to the ministers in charge, and for the ministers in charge to report to the First Presidency. These blanks are now printed and ready for distribution.
Bro. R. S. Salyards has consented to take charge of the blanks and supply those who may need them.

Write R. S. Salyards, Lamoni, Iowa, stating the number and kind you want, and he will forward them to you.

Very respectfully,
FREDERICK A. SMITH,
Secretary Traveling High Council.

Resolutions of Respect of Second Quorum of Elders.

Whereas, God our heavenly Father, in his infinite wisdom and love, was pleased to call from our midst our well beloved brother and coworker, Elder J. Cole Moxon; notwithstanding we deeply deplore the loss of such an esteemed and respected brother, who fell at the post of duty, yet we feel to rejoice in his faithfulness and in the fact that a lively hope of a glorious resurrec­tion gladdened his soul at the hour of departure. His manly virtues and noble character being comprised of that which is good and true, we desire to express our regard and esteem for the reward of his labor; blessed be his memory. And may we who mourn expect to meet him face to face with our blessed Master when the labors of life are ended; therefore, be it Resolved, That we offer confidence to his devoted widow and relatives, and earnestly pray that heaven's choicest blessings may rest upon them, especially his bereaved wife and little daughter while life shall last; and be it further Resolved, That a copy of this resolution of respect be spread upon the minutes and also sent to the church papers for publication, and to the relatives of our deceased brother.

F. C. WARNKY, Secretary.

Reunion Notices.

Notice is hereby given that the annual reunion of the Northwestern Kansas District will be held at Baseine, Ness County, Kansas, beginning August 23 and continuing to September 2.

We serve this notice early that all may know of the selection of time and place, and be governed accordingly. Watch the papers for full announcement.

F. E. Taylor, for the committee.

The annual reunion of the Southwestern Oregon District will be held at Gravelford, Oregon, commencing July 27, 1906.

The seminannual district conference will be held in connection with the reunion on Saturday, August 4, 1906. Important business is to be transacted. All branch reports to be sent to the district president. Elder G. T. Griffin, missionary in charge of Oregon, is expected to be present, also Elder J. C. Clapp, besides the regular district force of missionaries. Come in the Spirit of the Master, and let us have a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

Mrs. E. Keeler, secretary, Myrtle Point, Oregon.

Eastern Mission reunion will convene at Touissert, Rhode Island, July 28 to August 6, 1906. An invitation is extended to all the Saints to attend and help make this meeting better than ever before. We have selected a beautiful spot farther down the Point than we had last year. It is on a higher elevation with salt water on three sides and is situated on the Narragansett Bay and Kickamuit River, a large field for sports, plenty of fish, birds, deer, beautiful woods, plenty of water, and transportation from the depot to the camp can be had by steam.
launch or team for ten cents per head. The store and com-mission-ary will be in operation this year as usual, and rate for board will probably be the same as last year. Tents 12 by 15, $3.25; 10 by 12, $2.75; cots thirty-five cents each. We have appointed agents in each of the large branches in our district from whom orders can be left. We have decided this year that tents and cots must be paid for when placing the order. Kindly have your orders as soon as possible, for it is difficult to get extra tents late in the month of July. We are expecting several prominent men in the church to be with us, besides our local laborers. Those living at a distance will kindly order tents of me direct, and remit by post-office or express order. Address me, Winter Hill, Massachusetts, Box 10. M. C. Fisher, secretary reunion committee.

Nauvoo Reunion: We have several rooms to rent, which are unfurnished, at 50 cents each for the time of the reunion. Good places for families to room and board themselves. Have secured board and lodging for about six dozen at $3.50 per week. Can furnish room and breakfast for quite a number. Price of board at boarding-hall will be announced soon. Can furnish lodging for ladies in a large hall provided for. Lancaster only in the morning, and the church secretary was performed in the afternoon at 2.30 by Elders J. W. Rush- ton and H. Greenwood. The church was very prettily decorated with plants and flowers, and three long tables were well laden with tempting viands. About eighty guests were present at the service and feast, to bid the happy couple bon voyage as they set upon their journey across the matrimonial sea. If the fine day, which was a typical English June day, and the merry meeting of the church together with all the bright display of pretty dresses and hats, shall be valued as presaging happiness, then Bro. and Sr. Cicely A. Clarke-Schofield, all of Manchester, were united in mar­riage at Manchester, England, March 30, 1867. Married to John Siddall January 25, 1888. To them were born eight chil-dren, three preceding her to the “better land.” Was baptized September 29, 1866, at Plainville, Massachusetts, by C. A. Coombs, among his consistent practice. Died May 8, 1906. Funeral-services May 12 at Saints’ chapel, Attleboro, where she loved often to gather with the Saints. Sermon by T. T. Hinderks, assisted by I. N. Roberts.

Died.

SIDDALL.—Sr. Cicely A. Siddall was born at Ashton-Under-Lyne, Lancashire County, England, March 30, 1867. Married to John Siddall January 25, 1888. To them were born eight chil-dren, three preceding her to the “better land.” Was baptized September 29, 1866, at Plainville, Massachusetts, by C. A. Coombs, among his consistent practice. Died May 8, 1906. Funeral-services May 12 at Saints’ chapel, Attleboro, where she loved often to gather with the Saints. Sermon by Richard Bullard. The church was filled with friends, and with the many beautiful floral offerings, which testified to the love and respect held by many for our gentle sister.

HANSON.—David Hanson was born November 7, 1854, at Batley, Yorkshire, England; was baptized March 20, 1904, at Raton, New Mexico; departed this life May 22, at Engle, Colo-rado, was a full of coal in the mine, leaves a wife, one son, and three daughters (all members of the church) to mourn their loss. He was ordained a priest some seven or eight months previous to his death. He loved the church and the greatest effort of his life was to adornish the Saints to live in unity and peace. Funeral from his home. Sermon by J. W. Morgan to a large and attentive congregation.

JOHNSON.—Olman Johnson was born at Tichelwarp Province, Hanover, Germany, January 7, 1835. Died at his home, three miles north of Stewartville, Missouri, May 22, 1906; was bap-tized into the Reorganized Church December 6, 1889, at Dan­ville, Iowa. Lived the life of a faithful Saint till death. He was married to Tylke Obben Fryse, 1859. Of this union eight children were born, four boys and four girls, all present at the funeral. He leaves his aged wife, eight children, and thirteen grand-children to mourn. Sermon by T. Y. Hinders, assisted by I. N. Roberts.

Worth Remembering.

There are three entirely different kinds of ingredients used in making the three different varieties of baking powders on the market:- (1) Mineral-Acid or Alum, (2) Bone-Acid or Phosphate, and (3) Cream of Tartar made from grapes. It is important, from the standpoint of health, to know something about these ingredients, and which kind is used in your baking powders.

(1) Mineral-Acid, or Alum, is made from a kind of clay. This is mixed with diluted oil of vitriol and from this solution a product is obtained which is alum. Alum is cheap; costs about two cents a pound, and baking powder made with this Mineral-Acid sells from 10 to 25c. a pound.

(2) Bone-Acid, or Phosphate, is the basis of phosphate baking powders and the process is fully described in the patents issued to a large manufacturer of a phosphate powder. The U. S. Patent Office Report gives a full and exact description, but the following extract is enough:

“Bones, after being ground, are put into freshly diluted oil of vitriol and with continual stirring and in the follow­ing proportion,” etc.

From this Bone-Acid phosphate baking powders are made; such powders sell from 20 to 25 cents a pound.

(3) Cream of Tartar exists in all ripe grapes, and flows with the juice from the press in the manufacture of wine. After the wine is drawn off the tartar is scraped from the cask, boiled with water, and crystals of Cream of Tartar, white and very pure, separate and are collected. It differs in no respect from the form in which it originally existed in the grape. Cream of Tartar, then, while the most expensive, is the only ingredient that should be used in a baking powder to act upon the soda, as its wholesomeness is beyond question. Cream of Tartar baking powders sell at about 40 to 50 cents a pound.

Such are the facts, and every one, careful of the health of the family, should remember this rule.—Baking powders selling from 10 to 25 cents a pound are made of Mineral-Acids; those selling from 20 to 25 cents of Bone-Acid; and those from 40 to 50 cents of Cream of Tartar made from grapes.

ARE THERE LIONS IN THE WAY?

We again call the attention of writers on Zion, Zionic conditions, and the beatitudes of an all-one­ness, no rich, no poor, yet all having a complete competency with the least expenditure of physical toil, an absolute level of equality, etc., etc., to the fact, just as stubborn as any truth of holy writ, and as absolute as any command God ever gave in his word, ancient or modern: To labor is the normal condition of man since the fall, and if we are to credit the prophecies, and enjoy the status after the final redemption, every man shall eat of the fruit of his labor, (possibly toil here but pleasure over there), he shall "sit under his own vine and fig-tree" with none to molest or make him afraid; he shall not plant and another eat of the results of his labor.

The money in the circulating medium in the United States is about $25 to $30 for each of the population. If this amount was given to each of the Saints it would aggregate $1,650,000, an enormous sum with which to do a great amount of business in any one direction; and yet the individual factor, the thirty dollars, is not enough to maintain the annual expenditure of the average tobacco, tea, coffee, beer, and wine bill of the habitual user of those articles. The result of this is that the one who uses these articles has spent his proportion of the public money at the year's end, and the nonuser has kept his, or made other use of it. By what rule of right or equality can the last named be made equal with the first?

In the discussion of the Zion question so far the conditions obtaining in the labor-world as contrasted with the condition of the extremely rich in the capitalistic world is paraded and made to do duty as an argument imperatively demanding reform of conditions in the church supposedly similar to those cited. We call attention to the position of the church in regard to the liquor question. The Saints are not responsible for the maintenance of the saloons of the United States, nor Great Britain, and yet the poverty-stricken condition of the industrial portions of both those countries is held up to the view as making a demand for a great industrial upheaval in the church for the relief from such conditions of poverty. If any of the Saints anywhere are living within the lines of labor referred to, and are themselves addicted to the habitual use of intoxicants, by which poverty is accentuated, and their misery enhanced, the church is not to be blamed for either the general condition or the individual case. The church teaches hostility to the sale and use of intoxicants as a religious duty, and an almost first requisite to celestial favor.

The agitation going on in the United States regarding the encroachments of greed upon the domain, supposed to be the domain of the people, must result in greatly changing the face of public affairs, and it may be confidently hoped that in due time a political, or an economic remedy for this form of crime, for it is nothing less than crime, will be found and applied.

Joseph Smith stated in his views on government that Congress was supreme in its sphere, and the late action of the Senate and House of Representatives in regard to trusts, the railways, express companies, the pure-food bill are indications that point to the waking up of the representatives of the people to the sovereignty of the people, and the exercise of good, hard common sense, in the national legislature, as it is and should be among those represented, the common people. Law is crystallized public opinion; or in other words it is the common sense of the people reduced to legal phrase and enacted into rules of the Mosaic code, the seventh year rest of the bankers of Zion, the year of Jubilee, the giving up of the occupied lands to the supposed public, for a new deal all round, may be urged by association with the City of Enoch, the sole product of the ancient gospel economy before the law was added.

The commands against the taking of usury, calling all increase or interest usury, the precept against the oppression of the hireling, etc., must be taken, if taken at all, with the action of the wise lord, who intrusted to his servants several talents and went upon a journey. At his return he called these servants and asked an accounting from them as to the use they had made of the talents intrusted to them. Beginning at the first to whom five talents had been given, he learned that this man had at once put the talents out in trade and the five had gained other five, which he proceeded to deliver.

The next had received two talents; and following the principle upon which he understood his lord to do business, or possibly actuated by the example of his fellow trustee to whom five talents have been given, he put the two talents given him out in trade and returned them with the two additional talents, which the investment had gained.

That the lesson might be sufficiently enforced, the lord demanded of the servant to whom one talent had been given what he had done with it. This servant gave as his answer, the talent he had received from his lord which he had wrapped in a napkin and kept safe; and he now returned it as he had received it, without increase. When questioned why he had not secured an accumulation, he pleaded the hard character of his lord, who gathered where he had not sown, etc.

The result of this transaction was that this "one talent" servant was seriously condemned (the other two were indorsed and commended), and the one talent was taken from him and given to the one who had ten.

The commendation of the two servants, the one of five and the other of two talents, was alike: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy lord."—Matthew 25:21.

The condemnation of the "one talent" servant was severe; the talent intrusted to him was taken from him and given to the one having ten talents. And besides this his lord said unto him: "Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strewed: thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury."—Matthew 25:26, 27.

Those who use the text in Matthew 25:21 to express the reward to be given the faithful steward, can not object in justice to the absolute statement in 25:27 as to the fact that talents here meant money, and that to each one there was an amount given according to the ability of the several servants to whom it was confided. (See Matthew 25:15.)

And further if the Lord in commending those to whom he had given the five and the two talents justified the trading (speculation if you please) by which these two gained the additional five and two talents which they returned as the results of their traffic, he in so many words justified the putting out of his money to the "exchangers," the bankers of that day, that he might receive his own with "usury," when he came back from his journey, nor is it well to forget that Jesus was teaching upon the affairs of the kingdom of heaven, and the conditions to obtain at the end of the world. The condemnation upon this “one talent” man is found in verse 30 of this twenty-fifth of Matthew: “And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.”

Congress has enacted a general law of bankruptcy, by which the unfortunate debtor is enabled to free himself from the burden of his debts, if he finds that he can not recover his fortunes and pay his debts.
It is the equivalent of the year of jubilee freedom under the old law.

Congress also is beginning to assume the right to control the common carrier system of the country by such regulations as will make such systems conser the best interests of the commonwealth, rather than simply to protect the corporate bodies composing those systems, while they gratified their greed by collecting pay for services rendered as a right rather than as the result of a concession from the people for the benefit of the people as a whole. In this Con gress is right, and incidentally President Roosevelt is to be commended for insisting that the moneyed and aristocratic lawbreakers shall be made to answer in the courts for crimes and misdemeanors the same as common scoundrels. The “big stick” was a joke but it was significant.

LIKE CURES LIKE—LABOR VERSUS SOCIALISM.

The following is taken from the news columns of the Tribune, of Chicago, for June 25. And as it points to something we have looked for for some time past, we give it place:

NEW YORK, June 24.—[Special.]—Steps will be taken this week by Mrs. Martha Moore Avery of Boston, once a promi nent woman socialist, and David Goldstein, a well known mem ber of the Cigarmakers’ International Union, to organize an industrial league for the purpose of fighting the socialist move ment among trades unions and promoting the trades union move ment.

Headquarters will be established for the league in New York, Boston, Chicago, and other cities, and an active anti-socialistic campaign will be started in a week or two.

Both Mrs. Avery and Mr. Goldstein have been socialists many years, and Mrs. Avery has been well known as a speaker at labor meetings all over the country. They say they have found that back of the socialistic theories there is a principle which will not only undermine society but will destroy the home and all modern ideas and ethics. Mrs. Avery says it took years to open her eyes as to what socialism really is. They are con verted again to belief in the capitalist idea, and say socialism would be far from an improvement on the present industrial system.

Mrs. Avery has communicated with a number of labor men in this city, and found that the average trades unionist does not want to be thought a socialist. For a number of years she has been an uniring advocate of socialistic propaganda, she says, but lately she has become convinced of its fallacies.
Goldstein, who is well educated, says the great body of trades unions, as a whole, is opposed to socialists, but that the latter have never ceased trying by fair means and otherwise to get control of the unions.

Mrs. Avery said that in a week or so the machinery would be in motion to spread the anti-socialist movement. She thinks socialism is a greater danger than anarchy, as its movements are insidious and, while the ultimate aim is the wrecking of the present social system, the socialists do not talk of open vio lence as anarchists do. They sought at first, she said, to create a spirit of discontent and hatred against capital and then spread the propaganda by depicting the misery of the poor and holding up the fact that while one man had hundreds of millions of dol lars another man had nothing. The brotherhood of man was a strong card with them, she said, and appealed with special force to unsuccessful people.

The new propaganda, Mrs. Avery says, has been outlined with a view to fight socialism and to preserve and foster the trades unions, as well with due regard for the civic duties of the work ers, and contains among others the following principles:

“To defend the principle of individual responsibility, which alone safeguards the integrity of citizenship against the denial of free will, which lies as the basic doctrine of socialism.

“To defend the rights of private property and capital as against the socialist demand that all industrial, commercial, and financial capital be owned and operated by all of the people collectively.

““To advance the interests of those trades unions which work upon the principle that the interest of capital and labor may best be promoted by trade agreements, against the socialist demand for the abolition of the wage system.”

“I was first led to believe in socialism by Doctor Edward Everett Hale,” Mrs. Avery continued. “The theory appeared beautiful, and Doctor Hale, a man of the spiritual type, was so enthusiastic over it that he found me a willing convert. I believed in it year after year, but found that there is no spir ituality in socialism, no altruism, no code of ethics, and no ideas.
There are, no doubt, socialists and anarchists, but the real underlying doctrines of the socialist party are material all the way, and, though socialism professes to uplift, its real object is to pull down and create a world in which no sense of truth or religious belief could find a place.

“Socialism, as it actually is, not as it is believed to be, is a menace to society,” she said. “Clergymen who have only an academic idea of the industrial system make a great mistake in talking of Christian socialism. Nothing could be further from Christianity than the real article of socialism.”

The anti-socialist movement will be carried on by lectures and the distribution of pamphlets, as well as active agitation in other ways. At the same time every effort will be made to promote and encourage the organization of nonsocialistic trades unions.

It is stated that every person who has attained to his forty-fifth year has within his body the seeds of the disease of which he will die. It is equally true that every nation at the zenith of its greatness has within itself the seeds or causes of its fall and conse quent dissolution.

It must be that the converse is equally true, that every man may live to fill his destined period of use fulness; almost defying the hidden, or apparent cause of his decay, by a proper conservation of his powers with a view to their perpetuity. So, also, every nation must have within itself the principles of per petuating its existence if these be permitted to obtain and continue in control.

The attitude assumed by Mrs. Avery and Mr. Gold stein on behalf of the trades unions shows this prin ciple of self-perpetuation in an organized body to be in activity in the trades unions, and from within that body of economic reformers will come a strong opposing element looking to the defeat of what is beginning to be considered an element of discord and organic disintegration, known as socialism. But as there is socialism and socialism, as is frequently said of men and other things, we will not essay to describe what particular phase of socialistic philosophy is meant by the term as used by Mrs. Avery and Mr. Goldstein. They consider it dangerous, and a menace to society, as well as being detrimental to the continued well-being of unionism.

THE SMOOT CASE PUT OVER.

It appears that action upon the report of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections in the case of Reed Smoot, United States Senator elect from Utah, is deferred until next session of Congress. So be it, if justice and right prevail thereby.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. W. P. Buckley, 1917 Travis Street, Springfield, Missouri, desires the address of Mrs. Hattie E. Burns, formerly of Coleman, Michigan. Any one furnishing the information will confer a favor.

"Joseph F. Smith, first president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints of Salt Lake City, Utah, on May 25 purchased the old Washington press upon which the first edition of the Book of Mormon was printed. The price paid to Colonel F. W. Clemens, of Newark, New York, is said to be $500."

Bro. William Armstrong, of Manchester, England, sends us the following notice for HERALD: "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Special services were held in the Central Schools, Priestsoie-road, on Sunday last, when the Saints received a visit from Elder W. R. Armstrong, of Manchester, (secretary to the English Mission). The Saints were much encouraged by the visit of Elder Armstrong. His text in the morning was taken from 1 Corinthians 16:13: 'Watch ye, stand fast in the faith; quit you like men, be strong.' Many good points were made. The Saints possess spiritual vision or sight. They see the light of God. 'Watch ye, stand fast in the faith. Be men; walk in the light of God. Be strong in the power of his might.' In the evening, Elder Armstrong again occupied the stand, discoursing from Matthew 24:42: 'Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come.' A most interesting discourse was then delivered by Elder Armstrong. The points made were clear, vivid, and concise. 'Take heed that no man deceive you. There would be a falling away before the coming of the Lord. Signs were to precede his coming—wars, earthquakes, famine, and plagues—all things would be in commotion. Take heed that no man deceive you. Watch for the greatest of all signs. This gospel shall be preached in all the world for a witness, then shall the end come.'"

W. J. Bryan, in a late conversation, is reported to have said: "The next election will decide whether America is to swallow the trusts or the trusts swallow America. My position is that a private monopoly is indefensible and intolerable. . . . There is some talk of controlling the trusts. You might as well talk of controlling burglary. We do not say men shall only steal a little bit, or in some particular way, but that they shall not steal at all. So of private monopolies. It is not sufficient to control them or regulate them. They must be totally destroyed."

Selected Poetry

A Vision of Nauvoo.

AUTHOR'S NOTE.—The past is dead; but the future is to an extent in our hands. Will you rally at the Nauvoo reunion and help to make the future bright?

To the Beautiful City, great and good,
On whose terraced slopes the dreams and hopes
Of the church took form in stone and in wood,
My spirit has taken its easy flight.
Turned back is the page of mold'ring age
And I enter the home of past delight.
Where its wide streets lie on a wing of land;
And the broad-flung sweep of the river deep
Shall for ever bind it on either hand.
Like an arch of faith, like a bow of hope,
By the great God set, lest we forget
That the work is divine in depth and scope.
And I see God's temple, as stone by stone
From the pregnant earth it springs to birth
In holy grandeur on the hill alone.
And the people come and the people go,
And cast their light afar in the night.
They sing of their joy or sigh of their woe.
And they play and labor and grow apace,
For a blessed land fills well their hand
With the fruits of earth and the fruits of grace.
And I notice one as I stand apart,
By a sign of grace I know the face,
'Tis one I have treasured in mind and heart;
For his life was given, nor counted loss,
To restore God's word, as when men heard
The gentle Heir of the Crown and the Cross.
Have black hearts hated? and have false lips lied?
Yea; a ray of light is not more white
Than was his clean soul who at Carthage died.

But the vision is past, the page turned back,
The mirror is dimmed—a breath has skimmed
Its polished surface and has left it black.
The temple is gone and the people fled.
As they hasten by the waters sigh—
They think of the past and the past is dead.

PRIDE.

What is pride? Among others, Webster's Dictionary gives these three definitions: Beauty displayed; decoration; ornament.

It is my hope that this paper may help all to see more clearly the truth in relation to this subject, and that it may be the means of awakening a new response to the divine injunction, "Come up higher"; but it will be no easy task to convey to your minds in the way I would like what seems to be a reasonable and scriptural view of this subject. The writer believes that earnest, faithful stewards of keeping the whole counsel of God, do not wish to remain in ignorance on any given point, and will gladly welcome any discussion that will stimulate thought and bring about an interchange of ideas with a view to arrive at a unity of understanding as far as all practical purposes are concerned.

Through usage and custom it is evident that we as a people have fallen into a bad rut in the matter now under consideration. I believe that an acute and penetrating search given the matter will only make the truth in relation to it shine brighter and clearer and cause wrong conceptions, out of harmony with the stated law of God, to sink into insignificance.

There is no ambiguity in language as used by the Lord, for he says in Doctrine and Covenants 1:5 that he speaks to us according to our own language so that we may understand. So, then, it must be that we can understand what the Lord has said in regard to pride if we wish. In section 42, paragraph 12, the Lord says, "Thou shalt not be proud in thy heart." The Lord means exactly what he says. This concise statement precludes all possibility of juggling with words, except with those who are in the habit of dodging the requirements of the law. We are told the whole world lieth in sin, and one of those sins is pride. It is mentioned in scripture as one of the signs to precede the coming of Christ.

Pride may find expression in many different ways; but the phase to which we will confine ourselves in this paper will be as it relates to dress. Is it not a fact that if there were less catering to outward appearances, there would be more money coming into the church treasury in the shape of tithing, free will offerings, etc.? Church authorities on financial matters will answer, Yes. In view of the fact that there are so many departments of the work in need of our help, shall we not from this time spend less of our means for personal adornment, remembering that that portion of this world's goods we have is not our own, be it much or little, but is merely intrusted to our care as stewards? Our heavenly Father has provided laws for our government in this matter, the leading principle of which is, "Seek first [f-i-r-s-t] the kingdom of God," and all things necessary will be added.

The children of this world are chiefly concerned about how they appear in the eyes of others, and not what they are themselves. No question about this. Let us look about us in the church and see if this same spirit does not exist.

Having been enlightened, we, as Saints, should not be led away after fashions and customs created and maintained by those who are yet in darkness. Beyond all question pride, as relating to dress, is one of the gods worshiped by the children of this world; and, to the extent that we, as Saints, cater to it, we worship this god in our own hearts. We ought not to be very much concerned about adorning ourselves with such things as bracelets, necklaces, and jewelry in general—whether it be much or little. The children of darkness have a hankering after this kind of adornment, because their chief desire is for appearances. Doubtless it is second nature with us to thoughtlessly indulge in the usage of the world in this matter, because we are thrown with it daily.

Granting that it is proper in some things to adopt the customs of the people among whom we mingle, it is decidedly improper to adopt any custom or usage which is contrary in letter or spirit to anything written in any portion of God's word. Our mission to the world is to be lights to which those in darkness may turn for help. We are not to be led by the world in this, but to lead the world. We are to set the standards to which all the world must bow eventually.

The wearing of kid gloves simply because it is a prevailing custom, is a manifestation of a degree of pride. It shows that there is in the heart a desire for adornment. Some say that this, like wearing ornaments of jewelry, does not affect them; it is noticeable, however, that they are affected so much that they are pretty sure to wear them, but ask them to dispense with them and see how quickly they are affected. Is it not clearly evident, then, the wearing of them is nothing more or less than pride, pure and simple? Let us not dodge this issue by trying to get around it, but rather out of unprejudiced eyes see the truth and profit by it.

The claim is made that we may adorn ourselves in the ways spoken of above, and yet not have it affect our spirituality. This is not true, and experience proves that one who does not indulge in these things can be more spiritual than one who does. This outward adornment being the result of pride, it follows that if we keep this commandment, "Thou shalt not be proud in thy heart," we can not fail to be more spiritual than if we do not keep it. The only way that we can keep this commandment is by avoiding the outward adornment already mentioned. We are told to avoid even the appearance of evil.

This desire for outward adornment is clearly

defined in 2 Timothy 3:2, in these words: “For men shall be lovers of their own selves.” The fact that we do these things shows conclusively that we are, as the scripture says, lovers of our own selves. But what should we be? Let us look to the Master. What do we see? A life of sacrifice and self-denial.

That we do these things shows conclusively that we men shall be lovers of their own selves. ’’ The fact never man spake, can we be so foolish as to deceive ourselves by thinking that it will be possible for us to enter into our rest unless we partake deeply of the spirit of self-sacrifice?

Pride is one of the signs of the last days;—see 2 Timothy, chapter 3. Inasmuch as it is clearly set forth in scripture that the church will be in a sleeping condition prior to the coming of Christ, is it not reasonable to believe that the church will partake of conditions in the world, which will bring about this sleepy condition? Inasmuch as pride is so rife in the world, is it any surprise that the church is partaking of this worldly influence in its sleeping condition? So then, with the aid of that never-failing resource, the word of God, we feel that it has been conclusively proved that pride is eating into the individual membership of the church, to a large degree.

Turning to 1 Timothy 2:9, we read: “In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with braided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array.” Again, in 1 Peter, 3:3, 4: “Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price.” These kinds of ornaments add beauty to the soul. Paul has specifically pointed out ways in which pride may be avoided. Would he have thus admonished, if there had been no occasion for it? Are not conditions such that the spirit of admonition can be given with as much force now as then? They certainly are. This being true, can any still claim that it would not be a step in advance to dispense with the customary “kid gloves”? We would suggest that a day of sacrifice be set apart in the Massachusetts District to be called the “kid-glove sacrifice,” the result to be turned over to the Bishop, to be used in doing good as the scriptures direct.

Can anything be easier to understand than Doctrine and Covenants 42:12: “Let all thy garments be plain”? It means just what it says—let all thy garments be plain; but what does plain mean? Webster says, without embellishment, not conspicuous,” etc. A pertinent query right here would be, Why do the sisters persist in wearing apparel which is not plain?—(reference is particularly had to hats). Should they not be without ornamentation, or even beauty, unless that ornamentation or beauty is the work of your own hands as provided for in the law? Emphatically, Yes. So then, dear sisters, if you have not the time, disposition, or ability to beautify your wearing apparel, let them all be plain as the Lord has said, remembering that it is also written, “If a man love me, he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him.” Is not this a comforting promise to the earnest soul anxious to keep the whole counsel of God? Oh, let us shake off the yoke of this bondage. God speed the day when those noble, self-sacrificing sisters, the worthy daughters of Zion, shall take this step in advance and thus come up higher!

Referring again to outward adorning, one most important thought we want to emphasize is, we know it is wrong to adorn ourselves in the ways mentioned, so why not take the safest course and avoid it? No one can successfully controvert this point. If we are working toward perfection, this is one of the things which will materially help us.

Pride is one of the things that lead us into temptation. Section 21, paragraph 1, says, “Beware of pride, lest thou shouldst enter into temptation.” It is also one of the causes of sorrow; section 39, paragraph 3, “Thou hast seen great sorrow, for thou hast rejected me many times because of pride.”

Pride is also associated with selfishness. In section 87, last part of paragraph 5, we are specifically informed that pride brings a snare upon our souls. In Doctrine and Covenants 38:9, we read, “Beware of pride lest ye become as the Nephites of old.”

Turning to Alma 2:5, large edition, Book of Mormon, we see that pride is associated with the desire for outward adornment. It says among other things, “The people of the church began to wax proud because of their exceeding riches and their fine silks and fine twined linen,” etc. Associated with and following in the wake of pride, we see envyings, strife, malice, etc., which now began to appear among the Nephites—pride or the desire for outward adornment being the cause of these things. We notice also the great inequality among the people at this time. Alma tells us that the only way he could reclaim them from their pride was by bearing down in testimony against them. In chapter 3, paragraph 44, this query is made: “Behold, are ye stripped of pride? I say unto you, if ye are not, ye are not prepared to meet God.” Is this not as plain and as easily understood as it possibly could be? In Nephi 3:9, 10 we read that there began to be disputings among the people, some being lifted unto pride. Notice how the two go together, and the consequent divisions among the people into classes creating that cankerous sore, social distinction. “And thus there became a great inequality in all the land.” In the book of Nephi 1:20, 21 we are informed that after two hundred years of peace and prosperity, unprecedented in the world’s history, “There began to be those among them who were lifted up in pride, such as the wearing of costly apparel, and all manner of fine pearls, and of the fine things of the world. And from that time forth they did have their goods and their substances no more common among them, and they began to be divided into classes."

Notice in verse 20 how the desire for outward adornment is associated with pride; and also notice this same connection of dress with pride in Doctrine and Covenants 42:12: "Thou shalt not be proud," etc. The Lord was evidently thinking of dress here, for he says, "Let all thy garments be plain," etc. The connection of dress with pride is here made only too self-evident to need any comment.

It has been said that the temple and the holy city are to be adorned with the most precious things of earth. Careful reading will show that this is a description of the beauty of the temple and the city. God has said that this is the way the city is to be. Here we have a specific statement of how the temple and the city will appear. We have also a specific statement how we as Saints are to appear, right now and here, in the statement, "Let all thy garments be plain, and their beauty the work of thine own hands." One is a description of how the temple and the city will appear; the other is a description of how Saints are to appear—let us not confuse them.

It strikes the writer that the perfection attained to by Enoch and his saints will never be attained to by us until pride is rooted out from among us. We have pointed out some of the ways in which pride manifests itself, so far as wearing-apparel is concerned. Still we feel sorry to say that there will always be some who will resist the truth in this matter. We have no hope of converting even a few to the points brought out in this article; but we cherish the hope that a few of the more spiritually minded will take a stand in this matter that will help those who must ever be assisted to keep in step.

There is one thing about the keeping of any law that we should bear in mind, and that is that the only way to do a thing is to do it. Apply this principle to the keeping of the law of God, and the redemption of Zion will be speedily accomplished. It is this everlasting dodging things that keeps us on the low plane where we are!

A missionary of years of experience has stated that too strong a stand in this matter can not be taken, so the writer feels that nothing herein written can be construed as being radical, extreme, or unduly severe. We have tried to get at the spirit of the matter unceremoniously, and to "lay the ax at the root of the tree."

In Ensign, January 18, the Saints of the Chicago Branch were admonished to "put away pride," the Spirit speaking through the missionary. This admonition is applicable to many of the large branches of the church, for conditions in this respect are nearly the same, especially in city branches. So then let us not evade it, but rather root it out.

Notwithstanding the great prevalence of pride among the church-members in Alma's time, we can readily see by reading the record that it was no easy matter to convince them, and so the writer feels that it will be very hard indeed to make this subject appeal to the hearers. To those who are up to their calling as Saints, there is, of course, no need of such an effort.

Attention is called to a letter in the Herald of January 31, by the bishop of this district, in which the pride question is touched upon, and also to an article in Herald of March 21, by the editor-in-chief, subject, "Hurtful pride," in which the wearing of feathers comes in for the just criticism which it deserves. Read it, sister, follow the advice he gives, and see if you will not be blessed.

The moving principle of the gospel is against ostentation and show, however modified this may be. To the extent that we are unwilling to keep any portion of God's laws, to that extent do we "love darkness rather than light," and to that extent the "love of the Father" is not in us. (See the description of the woman of Revelation 17; notice her adornments of scarlet, gold, and precious stones.)

Let us take a look at the messengers who come from the other world to minister on the earth. An angel is often referred to in this way: "His countenance was like lightning and his raiment white as snow."

On the street of a large city two individuals were talking, one a poor, ignorant, middle-aged man, the other a younger person, evidently a Christian. The elder individual seemed to be touched with something which caused him to remark, "I can see the beauty shining out of your soul." Saints, is this not rather to be preferred than the beautifying of the person with those things we put on, thinking they add something to us?

In closing, the writer feels that this article is poor at best, but he feels that it is true; and may God help us to abide in the vine of celestial truth.

THE RELATION OF THE CHURCH TO THE AGE.

(Written for First Quorum of Seventy, and ordered submitted for publication. Not read for lack of time.)

In the course of eventful times, it was seen necessary in the wisdom of God to begin a "marvelous work and a wonder," as the final consummation of the great drama in which would be gathered together in one all things in Christ, which work would be the means of preparing a people to meet the Lord at his coming, and be a prime factor in shaping the final destinies of nations of latter days.
The prophecies relating to the great apostasy and restoration, struggling down through the centuries for fulfillment, were preserved, and seen by many; and attention was called to them by men like Wesley, Calvin, Knox, Williams, and others, and the effect was that of a reformation in religious thought and practice, until God opened up the way and raised up wise men and founded this grand republic, where freedom of thought and liberty to worship according to the dictates of their own souls was guaranteed to all who live within its domain. It was in this Gentile nation, and in the early part of the nineteenth century, December 23, 1805, that Joseph Smith was born. Reared in the wilds of Vermont and Western New York, in poor circumstances, as far as worldly goods are concerned, he was uneducated, totally inexperienced, and without money or influence. These were the conditions that confronted him, as he arrived to years of young manhood. But honesty and truth characterized his motives, and in asking God for wisdom to guide him, he was answered by visitations of heavenly beings, who informed him of this "marvelous work" and the effect it should have upon the world. This humble youth was chosen as an instrument in the hands of God to assist in bringing to pass the establishment of the "marvelous work"; and one of the declarations made by the heavenly messenger was that Joseph's name should be heard in all the world for good and for evil; for good by some, and for evil by some. Thus we see in the inauguration of this work, the relation it bears to the age, will be a savor of life unto life or death unto death affecting all who receive it as well as all who reject it.

It was under the above conditions that the "marvelous work and a wonder" was commenced among men, while millions were groping as the blind for the wall, and while all were resting in uncertainty and doubt.

Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery received the visitation of an angel, directed from the courts of glory, as in the blaze of day, yes, more—above the glitter of the May sunbeam which then shed its brilliancy over the face of Nature. The words of the angel, though mild, "I am thy fellow servant," dispelled their fear, and caused them to rejoice that Jehovah had heard their prayers and had come to their relief and directed the angel to lay his hands on them and ordain them to the Aaronic priesthood. Thus the church bears a close relation to this age, as in all other dispensations of gospel work, because of divine authority conferred to execute his law. And people need not doubt the promises of God, nor rest in uncertainty, nor wish they could have lived in the days while the Savior walked and talked with men, while in his mortal career.

Notwithstanding the fact that the tongue of vituperation and slander has been busy in trying to persuade men to flee from the message and oppose it, the church is under requirement to teach the world the fullness of the gospel, also the fullness of organization, and to exemplify in its life the highest standard of morals that has ever been lived by mortals.

And, if we contrast the conditions of the world of this age with conditions in other gospel dispensations, we discover that they favorably compare, especially with conditions in the days of Noah. The world was gay, and cared more for the pleasure of the world than for God and his ways. So do they now. They cared more for the satisfying of their carnal desires than for the plan of salvation. So do they now.

The above conditions were seen by the Savior, and predicted in Matthew 24: "As the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the son of man be." But those that hear and heed the message, "Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him," stand as beacon-lights along the way, and are in a position to assist this dark and benighted generation to see the beautiful light and pure principles reflected in God's law and exemplified in the character of his son.

Many items of doctrine taught by latter-day Israel in 1830, and on in the early days of the church, are partially taught by many of the so-called orthodox world at present, and as each decade passes they receive a wider acceptance. You may run over the list: "The gathering of Israel!"; "The second personal appearing of Christ"; "Healing the sick"; "Probation after death"; yes, even "Continuous revelation," "Gathering," "Consecration," and "Tithing." While the sectarian world have been crying, Put me down for tithing, gathering, etc., latter-day Israel has never abandoned a single position taken by us in the beginning.

The statement that Latter Day Saints have been the greatest human factor in forcing a revision in the world's religious opinions, would probably be heeded at by many prominent divines; yet it is no more or less than the truth. Our missionaries have for many years carried on an aggressive campaign, reaching most parts of the United States and Canada, England, Scotland, and Wales, also Scandinavia and parts of Germany, France, and Australia, and the islands of the sea. Multitudes have listened to their convincing argument of doctrine, who have been loth to unite with us but not slow to borrow. Furious and constant attack has been made upon us and we have met it with strenuous and unexpected resistance. Many a lance has been broken on the helmet of truth, and the aggressor has retired with battered theological mail, only to reappear as a reformer on his own account. What an arduous work devolves on latter-day Israel, and especially the ministry in so conducting themselves that God will work through them in blessing the world with true principles, that the
The church has met with stubborn resistance from its organization in 1830, and has fought for every inch of progress made, which effort is only our reasonable service. It is a rare thing that any one is found in better condition spiritually than he ought to be. Very few pray too much. Few live too good. It would be an exception to the rule, if we found a person working too hard for the church. The hastening-time has come, and all our efforts to establish righteousness in the earth are but feeble, because righteousness is a scarce article in many localities.

When we consider the conditions under which our enemies have been schooled, it is only charity that we plead with them, and bear with them until all the wheat shall have been gathered out from among them, and the Savior comes in glory.

We can not fail to notice the relation the church bears to this age in a political sense. It is written in latter-day revelations, that "he that keepeth the law of God, hath no need to break the law of the land." So we judge that as the church of latter days are called to exemplify in their lives the zenith of good morals, as well as purity of God's principles of law and perfection of church government, we would be able to furnish the nations of earth, wherever the work is established, the very best and most loyal class of citizens,—faithful and loyal to trust imposed in them in whatever capacity they are called upon to occupy. Not boasters; not haughty; but humble and full of love. Exhibit to the nation model homes, homes that are orderly because taught order and law from the throne of God.

Another phase of our question is very noticeable on account of the great strikes and labor disturbances of the present "hour" that have threatened almost every branch of industry with ruin because of the conflict between labor and capital. Latter-day Israel have been instructed of God how to build up Zion, how to become Zion, and bring about an equality of living, so that in the great strife between labor and capital the people called latter-day Israel are commanded to gather together for the purpose of protection and assistance, as well as to establish a place of safety or refuge and present to the world an example of organized effort that is worthy of imitation, so that all lovers of truth and right, and those that cherish the golden rule, may be drawn to Zion because of principles of love characterizing the inhabitants of Zion. This principle of gathering has had a remarkable effect upon the world since the restoration of the gospel in 1830. Several efforts have been made to copy the efforts of the church, as set forth in the revelations given of God to the Seer of Palmyra, but all have failed so far. God's work can not be imitated. So we see in the efforts of such men as Dowie, and others that have tried the principle of gathering to build up a Zion, a desire to gather, but a disposition to discredit the source from whence the commandment came.

As outlined in prophecy, we can see the church moving on and on to victory and final triumph, Zion redeemed, the Savior's personal reign through millennium, and the grand reunion of God and the Lamb, and the holy city. Onward, brethren, and victory is ours.

Your brother,

Oscar Case.

THE HOLY LAND AND ITS RELATION TO PROPHECY.

(Read before the First Seventy.)

Of all earthly places that have engaged the attention of the world, none have probably been so pregnant with scenes of universal interest as that sunny spot which, by both monarchy and republic, Catholic and Protestant, Mohammedan and Jew, is beheld with venerated eyes and worshipful thoughts as the most sacred place of earth. Whether that veneration arises from true or false conceptions is not our purpose to deduce, though the premises of each differ.

The Holy Land is perhaps of more special interest to the Latter Day Saint because it is the scene of prophecy connected with the advent of the sealed book of Isaiah. To some, its probable future, inseparably interwoven with its past, calls for expectant contemplation.

Ages have passed since the predictions of inspired seers were recorded, or their hopes expressed; and multitudes, misinterpreting their prescient forecasts have misunderstood their hopes; and, raising false ones, have been blindly led to disappointment, despair, and the bitterness of national death. Exiles of earth, they have wandered to every land and clime without rest to the soles of their hopeless feet; wearily watching the barren cycles as, with agonizing tardiness, they came only to bring the dregs of gall with which to fill the measure of their lives. Their expectancy has died, has lived, then died again; but now, once more renascent hope is urging on; and as from distant lands, from over mountains, through scatebrous valleys, or across the restless waves, they press their way toward the promised land, their straining, eager eyes view in the distance the gladening vista of on-coming years when, as a nation, they shall again be established on the sacred soil of their forefathers.
More than eighteen centuries have passed since that awful tragedy upon the brow of Calvary. The crucified One foretold the retributive fate awaiting that backsliding nation, which should dip its ruthless hands in his life-blood; and to-day history records how constantly it has followed them; but the omniscient power that outlined the desolations of their land also foreshowed the time when they would be re-established there. The prognostic signs of this event are already beginning to evolve, but the various interpretations that have been placed upon them as surely indicate a misconception of the prophetic word as did the confusion of ancient time.

Where hope is large, and is led by desire, all things are made to bend subserviently to its energies, and an improper coloring of the picture results; this I think, can not fail to produce a painful result. The designation of our creed should not only imply that we use "all truth" as our material, but also that we employ nothing else; not to recognize this, is to be reversely aculeate, hence, the word of God being our weapon, we should use great care to place no incorrect interpretation upon any part of it. It may be tempting to use some specious, though uncertain, speculation; though it is conceded that mistakes can occur at times.

After considerable examination, the author of this thesis concludes that some of the statements that have been made concerning the Holy Land are of an erroneous character; this presentation is therefore made as the result of that examination.

The references made in history to the Holy Land embrace Palestine and Lebanon; the latter being described as lying on the northern border of the land of Israel.

In 1848, Alphonse De Lamartine, a member of the provisional government of France, published a work entitled, A Pilgrimage to the Holy Land. It consists largely of notes of travel made during the autumn of 1832. On pages 30 and 31 of volume 2, he says of the colonization of Lebanon, that a man named Maron lived about the year 400 A. D., who is mentioned by Theodorick and St. Chrysostom. His disciples built several monasteries around which many Syriac Christians took refuge, hence were called Maronites. "The Maronite nation, which according to Volney, consisted, in 1784, of a hundred and twenty thousand souls, now reckons more than two hundred thousand, and is multiplying every day." He further says that the town of Zlarkhlé, which twenty years before numbered scarcely twelve hundred souls, had at that time as many thousands.

In the close of the eleventh century Palestine was taken from the Turks by the Crusaders; later they were defeated by Saladin, and occupied a few of their strongholds; but in 1291 the dominion of the Crusaders was terminated in Palestine by the Mameluke, sultan of Egypt. For more than two centuries there were fierce contests between the shepherd-men of Tartary and the Mamelukes of Egypt. In 1517 it was conquered by Sultan Selim, and has ever since then been a part of the Ottoman Empire.

The modern inhabitants of Palestine are a mixed race. Among them may principally be found descendants of the ancient Syrians, Greeks, Jews, Turks, Arabs, and Armenians. It is claimed that about eighty-five per cent are Mohammedans. The presumption that Palestine and Lebanon have been barren since the dispersion of the Jews appears to be true only in a modified sense; the character of the inhabitants precluding that development in agriculture necessary to its original fertility, which depended, as it also does at the present day, upon irrigation of the soil by means of its rivers and minor streams.

When Isaiah said, "Upon the land of my people shall come up thorns and briers," he also gave the reason for it by saying: "Because the palaces shall be forsaken"; or in other words, the Jews were to be driven out. The fact that there has been, since the Jewish dispensation, several hundred thousand people there, indicates that its sterility has been only in part, and resulted from a failure to irrigate and till the soil in the thorough manner that was possible when the inhabitants were numbered by millions. Mr. Cram says: "The popular notion that Palestine is necessarily a barren country, not capable of yielding profitable harvests, is a mistaken one."

Another supposition is, that the rains have for centuries been withheld from the Holy Land, and some add that they were restored in 1852-53. Those who have made the claim were evidently not properly informed, as the following extracts from a few of the many volumes touching on the subject will show.

Travels to Jerusalem and the Holy Land, published at London in 1835, by Viscount De Chateaubriand, says on page 32:

We advanced to the eastern angle of the wall of the city [Jerusalem], and entered the valley of Jehoshaphat. It runs from north to south between the Mount of Olives and Mount Moriah; and the brook Cedron flows through the middle of it. This stream is dry the greatest part of the year, but after storms, or in rainy springs, a current of red color rolls along its channel.

In The United States Expedition to the River Jordan and the Dead Sea, by W. F. Lynch, U. S. N., commander of the expedition, a work published in 1849, he says of Galilee on page 204:
The first hour of their journey, which was through a most beautiful tract of alluvial, the country was entirely destitute of cultivation; nothing but a rank luxuriance of thistles and wild grass indicating the natural productiveness of the soil. The variety of thorns and thistles was remarkable.

He says on page 217, that the banks of the Jordan showed a daily fall of about two feet; and remarks:

Frequently we saw sedge and drift-wood lodged high upon the branches of overhanging trees—above the surface of the banks—which conclusively proves that the Jordan in its "swellings" still overflows the lower plain, and drives the lion from his lair as it did in ancient times.

Edward T. Montague, in Narrative of Expedition to Dead Sea, also published in 1849, on page 213, says a heavy thunder-storm occurred on May 2, 1848.

In volume 1 of De Lamartine's work, previously referred to, he says on page 217, of their journey on October 20, 1832:

We were overtaken by a storm in the middle of the day. I have witnessed few so terrible. The clouds rose perpendicularly, like towers above Mount Carmel, and soon covered all the length of the summit of this chain of hills.

Of this place, at the rise of the Jordan, he says that "the lovely climate, the prodigious fertility of the soil; the variety of tropical productions one might there demand from the bounteous earth," all united to make him choose that part for agriculture.

In volume 2, page 15, under date of November 9, 1832, he says:

The climate with the exception of an occasional gust or gale on the sea, and some storms of rain in the middle of the day, is as fine as the month of May in France. As soon as the rain begins, a new spring commences; the walls of the terraces which support the cultivated slopes of Lebanon, and the fertile hills of the environs of Bayreut, are so covered with vegetation in a few days, that the ground is entirely hidden under the moss, the grass, the lilies, and the flowers; green barley carpets the fields, which were only dust when we arrived.

Page 20 says:

All the valley was hung with the same moving curtain of foliage, and carpeted with mosses and redundant vegetation. We could not restrain an exclamation at every step. I never remember to have seen so much life in nature heaped together and overflowing in so small a space.

Palestine or the Holy Land, by Michael Russell, LL. D., published in 1840, pages 308 and 309, says:

In the mountains the months of spring and summer very nearly coincide with those in the southern parts of Europe; and the winter, which lasts from November to March, is sharp and rigorous. No year passes without snow, which often covers the surface of the ground to the depth of several feet during many weeks. . . . In the plains, however, the heat continues till October. . . . A journey of a few hours carries the traveler through a succession of seasons, and allows him a choice of climate, varying from the mild temperature of France to the blood heat of India, or the pinching cold of Russia. Thunder in the lowlands is more common in the winter than in summer, but in the mountains is more frequent in the latter season, happening oftener in the rainy season or about the time of the equinoxes; they are accompanied by violent showers of rain and sometimes by large hail.

"The appearance of a cloud on Mt. Lebanon," says Volney, "is an infallible presage of a westery wind, one of the 'fathers of rain' in Judea."

McClintock & Strong's Cyclopaedia of 1894, article Palestine, says:

In Palestine the autumnal rains commence about the end of October. In Lebanon they are a month earlier. . . . No rain falls in Palestine in June, July, August, or September, except on occasions so rare as to cause not merely surprise but alarm; and not a cloud is seen in the heavens as large as a man's hand. . . . In Lebanon the climate in this respect is somewhat different. In 1850 rain fell at Shumlan on June 27 and 28, and on August 8, 8, and 12; and in Damascus, on rare occasions, rain is seen in the month of June. . . . Doctor Barclay gives the following average rainfall at Jerusalem during seven seasons: 1846-47, 50 inches; 1847-48, 55 inches; 1848-49, 60 inches; 1849-51, 65 inches; 1851-52, 66 inches; 1852-53, 46 inches; 1853-54, 26.9 inches. This gives a general yearly average of 56.5 inches, which is 23 inches above the mean annual rainfall in England.

It seems ironical to the writer that it should be claimed that the rains were restored in 1852-53, when the facts show that less rain fell in that season than in any previous one noted; and 41 inches less than in the season of 1850-51. The inevitable conclusions are, no doubt, apodictic to all.

The Encyclopædia Biblica of 1902, page 3540, says:

Palestine is a country of strong contrasts. Of course it was the same in antiquity; climate, rainfall, fertility, and productiveness can not have seriously changed.

Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, page 2655, says:

The harvests are gathered in without any of the anxiety with which we are so familiar lest the work be interrupted by unseasonable storms. In this respect at least the climate has remained unchanged since the time when Boaz slept by his heap of corn.

Page 2667 says:

There is scarcely sufficient reason to imagine that any great and marked changes with respect to the rains have taken place in Palestine. In early days as now, rain was unknown for half the year. . . . It may be added that travelers have, perhaps unconsciously, exaggerated the barrenness of the land, from confining themselves too closely to the southern portion of Palestine.

The northern portion is described as "fertile and beautiful."

From the Jews' viewpoint, the Jewish Encyclopedia, article Palestine, contains the following, which was published in 1905:

The reference to a "land flowing with milk and honey" does not allude to the fertility of the soil, but to a country with good pasturage for cattle, the land probably not being cultivated in antiquity at all. . . . The rainy season sets in at the end of October, or, more frequently in November. It begins with the "first rain" of the Old Testament, which loosens the dry earth for plowing. Then after a period of mild weather, the heavy winter rains set in, toward the middle of December. . . . The "latter rain" in March and April promotes the growth of the grain.

Concerning the "latter rain" of Scripture, one writer (see Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, vol. 3, p. 2318) states that Dr. Barclay and others affirm that it took place after the harvest, about midsummer, and has been withheld as a punishment for the sins of the nation. I have found no evidence that such a rain ever existed; but if so, it may indicate no advantage, in such a condition, over that now existing. The yearly average precipitation of 56.5 inches in Palestine is large compared with our own land, and especially remarkable when contrasted with places where the rains are periodical. According to the World Almanac of 1902, the yearly rainfall in California ranges from 11 to 27 inches; in Utah, 8 to 17 inches; in New Mexico, 14 to 17 inches; in Colorado, 9 to 15 inches. The rainfall is somewhat greater in some of the States where showers are frequent during each month of the year, though not equal to Palestine; but a comparison would be inappropriate.

It is not sought to infer that the oracle of the sealed book of Isaiah has failed, but it has been, no doubt, misapplied by some at least. The verse, so familiar to the Saints, declares: "Is it not yet a very little while and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest." Nothing is said in the prediction about a restoration of rain to Palestine, and the writer does not see that anything of the kind is contemplated.

The Hebrew word יאר is translated "forest." Young defines it, "outspread place"; hence the passage would inform us that Lebanon, the fruitful field, shall be esteemed as an outspread place. The following verses of the chapter tell us that Jacob's face shall not now wax pale, but that he shall see his children in the midst of him. This, I think, literally means that the Jews will be restored to the promised land in such numbers, that they will not only occupy Palestine, but will spread out over Lebanon also. In this connection please notice that Zechariah says: "Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein." He also says: "I will bring them into the land of Gilead and Lebanon; and place shall not be found for them." Isaiah says the waste and desolate places shall be "too narrow by reason of the inhabitants."

Russell's work of 1840 says of the Jews: "In Palestine of late years they have greatly increased. It is said that not fewer than ten thousand inhabit Saphet and Jerusalem." In 1877 the number of people in Jerusalem was twenty thousand, according to McCintock & Strong; however, they remark that "the population of Palestine is on the decline arising from polygamy, military conscription, unequal and oppressive taxation, forced labor, general insecurity of property, the discouragement of industry, and the plague." This statement does not necessarily imply that the Jewish numbers were decreasing, but might simply mean that the Gentiles were leaving Palestine more rapidly than the Jews were entering it; in fact the latter are forbidden to remove except under extreme conditions, according to the following from the Jewish Encyclopedia:

One must not emigrate from Palestine unless the necessaries of life reach the price of a "sela" (2 shekels) for a double seah measure of wheat, and unless they are difficult to obtain even then.

This means the outrageous price of one dollar and twenty-eight cents for about twelve quarts of wheat, or, with their low wages, starvation.

The following Jewish law may suggest the need for some rule to apply to the Saints, concerning the gathering to Zion:

A husband may compel his wife under pain of divorce, to go with him and settle in Palestine, but he cannot compel her to accompany him to another country. The wife has the same right to remove to Palestine, and she may demand a divorce if her husband refuses to follow her.

Cram's Atlas of 1903 gives the area of Palestine as twelve thousand square miles, and the population six hundred and twenty thousand, of which five thousand were in Bethlehem, twenty-three thousand in Jaffa, forty-two thousand in Jerusalem, and eight thousand in Nazareth. Rand, McNally & Co.'s atlas of 1902 differs from these figures. They give the area of Palestine at about eleven thousand square miles; the population at seven hundred thousand, including about eighty to one hundred thousand Jews, of whom forty-five to fifty thousand are in and about Jerusalem, which has a population of fifty-one thousand. Beirut and Damascus, north of Palestine, number one hundred and twenty thousand and one hundred and fifty-four thousand inhabitants respectively. The Jewish Encyclopedia says there were more than forty thousand people in Jaffa in 1904. This number is seventeen thousand more than is given in Cram's Atlas of 1903, but possibly the latter's estimate was made several years before being published.

Palestine is estimated to contain an average of about sixty inhabitants to a square mile. Massachusetts, with three millions of people, is about two thirds as large as Palestine and contains three hundred and thirty-eight persons to the square mile; while England and Wales contain five hundred, and Belgium five hundred and sixty-five. With a density of population equal to the last-named place, Palestine could contain about six millions of people; but the Jews already numbered eleven million, seven hundred and twenty-three thousand, nine hundred and forty-seven, according to the American Jewish Year Book, in 1900. Within two or three decades their numbers might easily be augmented, under favorable conditions, to twenty millions. When the lost tribes are revealed, and Israel seeks an inheritance according to prophecy, the great American Zion, as Joseph's Land, will stand as a splendid vindication of the inspiration of the martyred latter-day Seer. The following from the Fulton (New York) Patriot, of March 7, 1906, fittingly concludes: "The number of Jews in the promised land has increased astonishingly of late years, so that there are now more Jews in Jerusalem itself, than there were in all Palestine thirty years ago."

Promise.
The wee blue eggs within the woven nest,
The peace of sunny swaying boughs above,
The rapture brooding in the tiny breast,
Downy and warm with love—
Is it not joy enough?
And yet God knows
The bliss is promise of more bliss to be—
New lives, new wings, new songs, as summer grows
Up in the swaying tree.
The bursting of the buds in green and white,
The petals spreading wide their pure perfume,
The rosy flush along the rims of light,
The boughs aglow with bloom—
Is it not fair enough, though that were all?
Yet God has promised, by each petal’s breath
The fruit shall ripen, though the bright leaves fall, Blessing be born from death.
O Father everlasting, who hast made
The nest-home and the blossoms on the tree,
Shall I not clasp thy promise unafraid
In joy thou givest me?
Sure that its blessedness will bloom and grow,
Kept in thy love as brightening years unfold;
Its unguessed height of bliss be mine to know Within thy gates of gold.—Mabel Earle.

Baptism of Children.

Can a child of ordinary intelligence understand the requirements of the gospel sufficiently at eight years of age to warrant his parents in permitting him to be baptized? This is a question which seems to be by many decided in the negative. What are the vital points necessary to be understood before one is qualified for baptism? As outlined on the church paper for the candidates for baptism, which seems to be by many decided in the negative. Young they are: 1. Faith. 2. Repentance. Only two principles are placed before baptism. Certainly this looks simple enough at a glance, and yet long and careful study of the word does not diminish its simplicity to our minds; but can a child be made to realize the grave importance of the sacred rite of baptism, that wondrous ceremony by which we are made members of God’s kingdom on earth, and candidates for a place in his celestial kingdom? Let the highest authority we have answer: “And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands; and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord.”—Doctrine and Covenants 68:4.

From the foregoing we may take it for granted that it is possible to cause children to understand these points, or God would not hold parents responsible for the teaching of them, and for seeing to it that they are baptized at the appointed age. Oh, what a grave responsibility this is indeed! And if we had to depend upon ourselves alone we should have great cause to doubt our ability. But we need not work alone. It is for us to prayerfully sow the seed, and He who requires this work of us will cause the seed to grow. He has also made the conditions more favorable for teaching these truths previous to the age of eight years than they can ever be afterwards, as we will see by reading Doctrine and Covenant 28:13. The statement is here made that Satan has not power to tempt little children until they begin to become accountable before God; the latter part of the paragraph explains why they are thus preserved during these tender years—that parents may improve the time in fortifying them against evil by filling their pure and pliant minds with the principles of light and truth. This must be a gradual work, beginning with the dawn of understanding. If we fail to prepare the child for baptism until the age when he should be ready to take that step, we may find difficulty in causing him to properly understand what is required; but the child whose parents have conscientiously held in mind the thought that, in a measure, they were fashioning an immortal soul, and have faithfully sought to improve their countless opportunities: that child, we may venture to assert, will be found to meet the requirements at the appointed age.

Baptism is really the beginning of the new life, and who of us, after perhaps years in the church, feel that we understand and realize the full, glorious scope of the gospel? If this be true, then, are we justified in advising our children to wait beyond the appointed age? The Lord solemnly assures us that if our children do not understand at that time sufficient to make their baptism acceptable, then the sin is upon our own heads. While this seems like an overwhelming responsibility placed upon us, yet it is a precious privilege to be permitted to help in so glorious and grand a work as that of fashioning an immortal soul. What can we do? How shall we begin and when? These are questions of vital importance, and in a measure we must each work out our own problem, for what serves for one may be useless to another. The only help and guide is the One that never faileth, to whom we may go at all times, and under all conditions. This is our only safety, the only arm on which we can lean with implicit confidence; and, relying upon his guidance, we are enabled to gain help from the experience of others, though we need wisdom in choosing the good.

Let us first consider faith, that great principle of the gospel, without which it is impossible to please God, and which it should be our aim to teach first of all. Almost unconsciously (if we ourselves are in possession of this precious gift) we, by our daily life, incorporate faith into the heart of a little child. We point out to him the beauty around us, the flowers, the trees, the green fields, the majestic mountains, the matchless beauty of the sky. “God made them all,” we tell our dear little one. We also repeat the sweet stories of his goodness and care for us, and in countless ways draw the attention of the young mind to the fact that there is an unseen, though none the less real being, who watches over us always, who knows every thought and act of ours. Some time when he hears us pray, he will realize suddenly perhaps, that we are talking to this wondrous being. This act of prayer is a powerful factor in strengthening a child’s faith; he has been told about God, and seen his handiwork. Now he hears his parent talk to him, and at once God is made real to his childish understanding. Day by day, also, we teach that this heavenly Friend can not endure wrong-doing; that he is deeply grieved when we sin, but that he will forgive us if we feel really sorry for our sin, and confess it to God with the resolution in our hearts and the promise to him that we will earnestly try not to sin again. The effort should be to inspire such love for God by often calling attention to his goodness and love for us, that the child will naturally repent of wrong acts, and will be ready at the proper age to signify his willingness to do as this loving Father wants him to do by being baptized, it having been made plain to him that this is the way in which we show that we love God and are willing to try all our lives to do right and keep his commandments, thus becoming his child, and a member of his church.
After services last Sunday, my sister (a member too), Mrs. J. F. Owens, had her little baby Marguerite blessed, and her unbelieving father shed tears. His heart was touched when the beautiful and touching ceremony was performed, while many others hearts were melted.

Bro. Alma Booker left last night for Mobile, and Bro. McClain will stay over Sunday and hold meeting at eleven o'clock, and will leave Monday to join Bro. Booker.

Bro. McClain is an able worker, and fully adapted to the South. No one would suit better in this country.

Your brother in Christ,

Editors Herald: Inclosed find copy of letter in answer to an inquiry which will probably be self-explanatory, without further comment than to say that this is a part of the outcome of "Joel Brown and the Mormons."

The letter of inquiry was written because of the charge against the Reorganization made by the Reverend Brown. The answer from Reverend Paden, while not entirely free from error, is a very fair statement of the differences between the two churches in question, and may be worth while to publish that we may "see ourself's as others see us."

At present Bro. J. W. Morgan and I are busy here and have been since the 8th inst. I left my home on the 5th, that I might comply with the request of our missionary in charge to get to this point to act as a member of an elders' court that was to meet here the 10th inst.

We spent a busy and enjoyable Sunday the 6th with the Saints of Omaha, Nebraskas, meeting quite a number of old acquaintances and many new ones. Perhaps we owe Bro. Fry an apology for trespassing upon his territory, but can only promise to do it again if we have the opportunity and extend our congratulations to him that his lines for the present conference year have fallen in such pleasant places.

So far our work in our field has not been very enjoyable; sitting upon elders' courts, or acting as a referee to settle some one's trouble is never a pleasant occupation.

While enroute here we stopped about two hours in Colorado Springs, and found the Saints gathered to celebrate the seventh anniversary of Bro. and Sr. J. F. Curtis' wedding, and they filled us up with ice-cream and other good things. That and the visit were better than elders' courts.

As ever, in the faith,

A. M. CHASE.

Rev. Paden's letter is as follows:

First Presbyterian Church,
SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, March 17, 1906.

L. W. MOPPET, Esq., Hameston, Iowa.

My Dear Sir: In reply to your letter I would say that there are two branches of the Mormon church. The Reorganized or Josephite branch has headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa; the regular or Brighamite Mormons have their headquarters here in Salt Lake City. Joseph Smith, a son of the first Joseph Smith, is president of the Josephite church: Joseph F. Smith is president of the Brighamite church. The Brighamite or Salt Lake branch is very much the larger of the two. There are perhaps 250,000 of them as against 25,000 or 20,000 of the others. There are very few Josephites in Utah, perhaps 300 or 400. Our Mormons are all of the Brighamite type. The Mormons who have caused the trouble in our country are all of this type.

The Josephites do not believe in polygamy and do not practice it. Our Mormons both believe in and practice polygamy with all their might. The Josephites are not an oath-bound secret society; our Mormons are, or at least all leading Mormons are bound by oaths taken in their secret temples, one of their oaths being an oath of vengeance against the nation. The Josephites... do not believe that the revelation found in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants establishing polygamy was authorized by Joseph Smith, and do not have it in their version of the Doctrine and Covenants. The Josephites do not believe that Brigham Young or any of the succeeding presidents of the Mormon church here in Utah, were or are authorized prophets of God. The Josephites so far as I know (and I know them pretty well) have not been a political organization, and they have in no wise encouraged or defended polygamy. If our Mormons were like the Josephites, we would still be obliged to oppose their false doctrines, but we could not oppose them for violation of the seventh commandment (i.e. polygamy), and for dialogetatis to the laws of our land and mode of Christendom. The Josephites do believe that Joseph Smith the First was a Prophet; that the Book of Mormon and part of the Doctrine and Covenants are revelations. They believe in modern revelation. They also agree with the Utah Mormons in their doctrine of baptism by immersion, although I think they do not give any importance to baptism for the dead. In other words, they are off as to the authority of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon, but quite straight on the subject of polygamy and loyalty to the laws of our land. The Mormons here hate the Josephites worse than they hate the Presbyterians.

The Josephites have cooperated with us in such cases as the exclusion of Roberts and the investigation of Apostle Smoot with great zest and effectiveness. The ones I have known, and I have known the President, his son, the president of the twelve apostles, and some of their leading missionaries, have been good citizens and good moral men, in spite of the fact they were off our base on the question of modern revelation and the authority of Joseph Smith, who was the founder not only of their sect but of the larger sect of Brighamites.

Yours sincerely,

W. M. Paden.

Editors Herald: We can safely report progress. There is much to encourage and, with Go! ’s help, no drawbacks to fear. Eleven additions by baptism recently; two of the number, Bro. and Sr. Marvel, were strangers to the faith until just a little while prior to their baptism. Sr. Marvel was healed through the administration of C. W. Earle and the writer. They showed their faith by their works, and handed me a check for one hundred dollars tithing.

Since General Conference Bro. and Sr. Burton, C. E. Crumley, C. W. Earle and wife, Bro. and Sr. Pender, and Albert Carmichael have been with us. Bro. Pender’s health is not good. He left for Bisbee, Arizona, thinking a higher altitude and drier climate might benefit his throat. May God bless and preserve him for years of active service in the church.

We have had no branch priest since January 1. Last sacrament-service the Spirit indicated to me that Bro. H. F. Bocker be ordained and appointed to that office. So clear and emphatic was the revelation to me that I at ones presented his name and he was, by consent of the body, ordained forthwith. He is a clean, exemplary man, and can, if he applies himself, become an efficient branch officer. We have had some excellent spiritual meetings, evidencing a keen interest on the part of the Saints, and special consideration on the part of the Master.

I can not see that the earthquake has had any moral effect on the people here; possibly we are too far removed from the seat of action.

We are looking forward to our reunion, commencing August 24, with expectant pleasure. An effort is to be made to secure the presence of leading church-workers. We have excellent grounds with modern conveniences and accommodation. The Sunday prior to the receiving of the revelation this spring, I was presiding over the sacrament-service here, when it was given to me by the Spirit that light was coming to the body, and indicating that it was my duty to support whatever suggestions might be made. My mind therefore was in a receptive mood. I have preached once on the revelation with great liberty. My love for the work is greater than ever, and some of the trying seasons I have passed through have served only to make me feel more and more my dependence on God for all I am or expect to be. For months, the same call set forth by Bro. Luff in recent HERALD has been forcing its attention upon me, both by night and by day, until I am constrained to respond, and “come up higher.” May God help each of us to be all he wishes us to be. The world is full of seductive messages and forces seeking to lead men astray, but I am sure we will not go far wrong if we do our utmost to bring about that era of justice, equality, and good will as portrayed in the latter-day message.

Yours for the final triumph of truth,

T. W. WILLiAMS.

P. S.—Bro. George Wixom of San Bernardino, fireman on Santa Fe, was in a head-on collision Tuesday; sustained severe injuries but to-day is resting nicely, with good hopes of recovery. His work is in the mission-field. We hope before he is around again that he will have fully resigned himself thereto. It is the call of the Spirit to him, which he will do well to heed. T. W. W.

Editors Herald: Am glad to say that a few faithful ones are still trying to hold the fort, although at times it has seemed very discouraging, and sometimes we almost yielded to the enemy. Am sorry to say that some of the Saints are sleeping upon their privileges, and doing no good for themselves or the work either. Am glad to say that at present the work begins to look more encouraging. This we credit to Bro. W. H. Kephart, who has been doing some noble work in this vicinity. Last fall when Bro. Kephart first came down, he went to the Lott’s Grove Schoolhouse, about six miles northeast of here. This was almost a new opening, but here he made many warm friends for his labor. In this place he was permitted, on Sunday, June 17, to baptize two, both heads of families. Leaving others near the kingdom, he went to the Adams Schoolhouse, about three miles northeast of here, where many friends were made. Bro. Kephart has been laboring in the two above-named places for the past three weeks. At the latter place the Baptist preacher got riled up, and is doing us all the harm he can by talking, and poisoning the minds of the people. He even went so far as to join with the Campbellites in trying to get J. W. McClure to come up from Albany. But McClure was too well acquainted with our elders, and thinks best to stay at home. We need some good elder here all the time. Plenty of places in which to preach.

The Saints from Allendale took their dinners Sunday, and joined Bro. Kephart and Bro. C. H. Jones at Adams’ Schoolhouse, where Bro. Jones preached at eleven and half past two o’clock to overflowing houses. Many are interested. Some will be baptized soon.

Bro. Kephart had to leave to join the tent at Eagleville. We did not like to see him leave while the enemy was raging. To my mind there never was a better time to do work at this place than now. We expect Bro. Kephart back after the Fourth. Bro. Jones, “the father of our branch,” as he is called, comes over occasionally, but not so often as we would like; and in his cheery manner comforts our drooping spirits. Am sorry to say that many of the Saints have not the church papers. You talk to them about it, and they say they can not afford it. At the same time they are using tea and coffee, (some tobacco, too,) which if they would sacrifice would pay for both papers in a month or two.

Pray for us that we may hold the fort at this place, and be worthy to receive a crown of life when the Master comes.

Editors Herald: Things are assuming their natural condition again quite rapidly, in our city. We are fast returning to the feeling of safety we enjoyed before the earthquake, and are adapting ourselves to our surroundings and circumstances, and things are seeming to move along quite naturally again. All is cheerful and pleasant in my part of the city, but the eastern part of the city is such a mass of ruins it fills one's mind with horror and sadness to look upon it. But already hundreds of cheap buildings are being erected, and business is springing up again in all parts of the city, and the New San Francisco is beginning to assert herself. I have done little church-work of late; have preached once in this city and twice in Oakland since the calamity. But I served three weeks in one of the relief stations, assisting the helpless and hungry. I then worked two weeks in the park, helping to prepare for housing the homeless. Am now serving as secretary for Camp 6, Speedway, Golden Gate Park, which position I have filled for three weeks, locating the refugees and furnishing them supplies. We now have in our camp seven hundred and six persons, so I have quite a family to look after, with supplies. There are at present seven thousand people camping in the park, and thirteen thousand in six camps in the city, and thousands of scattered ones, Oakland, Alameda, and Berkeley claim only twenty-two hundred and eighty-eight refugees; Los Angeles, 600; Sacramento, 129. Our bread line has shrunk to a few thousand, while the soup-kitchens claim to be feeding only about forty thousand here and in Oakland. These figures show how we are recovering ourselves, and becoming self-supporting again. When we remember that a few weeks ago we had three hundred thousand helpless and hungry people, we think we are doing quite nicely. Thousands of men are working all over the city cleaning away the rubbish, cleaning bricks, building houses, and engaging in business, laying railroad tracks, and every kind of employment; and soon we will be able to say with Shakespeare, "Richard is himself again." All the Saints are well as far as I know. Services are held here every Sunday morning, at our hall, which still has no windows, as they were all shaken out by the earthquake, and not yet replaced. All are quite happy, although some lost quite heavily. Our hearts yearn for Zion, for peace, and composure.

Editors Herald: Have been holding some successful meetings in this city, and am pleased to be able to report progress in this branch. The officers and Saints are working with a will to advance the interest of the work of the Lord in and around this place. There has been quite an addition to the branch by baptisms and members moving in from other places. The growth is not only in point of numbers, but in spirituality as well. Of course there is still room for improvement. Bro. George W. Winegar is president of the branch, and his efforts are ably supplemented by Brn. Wood, Fordham, Ferguson, Yates, Gray, Atkinson, Richards, and many others. The attendance at the preaching-services was excellent, many outsiders being present on each occasion, who seemed to be interested in the gospel message. There is a wonderful change in the appearance of the church-building, both exterior and interior, since Bro. Joseph was here. The inside has been beautifully decorated and finished, the woodwork being beautifully stained in imitation of bright mahogany; and the walls artistically papered and decorated in the latest style; the work of decorating was done under the supervision of Bro. S. Wood. The building is lighted by electricity; the electric-light fixtures are up to date and in harmony with the rest of the decorations. The seating of the building will be attended to as soon as means are available, and from present indications, it will not be very long before this is accomplished. The building is a credit to the branch, and to the whole church, and it is to be hoped that those who meet in it from time to time to worship the true and the living God will endeavor to keep their temples clean for the indwelling of God's Holy Spirit. Bro. T. W. Chatburn has worked hard, early and late, to help bring about the good conditions now obtained. He not only directed what should be done in the way of carpenterwork, but took his tools in his hands and led the way. He, with all others who have rendered such faithful service in the interest of the cause, will surely receive their reward. The prospects for an ingathering to the church in this vicinity seems very bright at this writing. Bro. F. J. Chatburn is at Coulee City arranging a home for his family, and will soon be free to wait on his ministry. We have but two missionaries in the entire district, but have a number of local ministers scattered here and there, and we trust that they will bear in mind the admonition of the Lord to thrust in their sickles and reap. We advise these brethren to make appointments in their respective vicinities where they live, and fill them on Sundays, and, if they can not find places to preach, distribute church literature, and thus, as the Savior said, work if all of the other agents in the mission would do likewise. I find some of the agents never visit or write the people about these things, which is a serious neglect of duty, as there are many who have to be reminded of their duty continuously along these lines. I leave here the 22d for Seattle and points in British Columbia. We expect to have a mission reunion held at Seattle some time in August; time, place, and particulars will be published later on. We hope that the Saints in the Northwest will put forth a special effort to be present, as we expect a good spiritual time, hence I call the attention of the Saints to this matter at this time so they can make arrange­ments to attend. A great number of the leading ministers of the church will be in attendance. Keep a lookout for reunion notices. We wish all the ministry in the field a prosperous and successful year. Brethren, be prompt in making your quarterly reports; be sure to get them in by the 10th of July at the latest.

Your well-wisher and colaborer,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

SINDEY, IOWA, June 25, 1896.

Dear Herald: I left home and loved ones on the 5th of May, and was off to my field of appointment in the Fremont and Pottawattamie Districts. I have there met some of the finest Saints that it has been my privilege to meet. My labors since coming into this part have been chiefly confined to the branches thus far. We have tried, and hope yet to be successful in getting the district tent started; but everywhere seemingly the farmers are all so busy just now. I have preached and labored in the Hamburg, Riverton, Thurman, Tabor, Hazel Dell, and Crescent Branches, and while I find some in a fairly good condition, yet there is, I believe, room for improvement in nearly all. I truly believe there still is the necessity of some help from missionaries in some localities. At the same time I am aware that it is the duty of the Seventy to push out into new fields. However, we will do the best we can, and be willing to leave the results with Him who doeth all things well.

I have enjoyed liberty in the presentation of the word, for which I feel very grateful to our heavenly Father. On June 4 I left for home, because of sickness in my family. My stay at home of one week was longer than I had anticipated, during which time I had the pleasure of attending the children’s day exercises in Independence. To me it really surpassed anything I have either seen or heard. The singing and music was simply sublime. I thought of those who had in the past argued in favor of attending theaters for the purpose of hearing good singing; but, oh my! I am satisfied in my own mind there could be nothing sweeter than what was heard that night by the vast congregation. I am not usually given to boasting, but I feel confident in saying that I believe we have some of the finest talent in the world. And why should we not have when the Master has said to us, “Let the young men and the maidens cultivate the gifts of music and of song”? I trust we shall profit by such advice. I left on the 12th inst., going by way of Atchison, Kansas, to fill an appointment made by Bro. W. E. Peak. I left there the next morning, going by way of St. Joseph. Having to wait there about three hours I walked up to Bro. Carl Kinaman’s place, whose big heart knows well the requirements of the missionaries, as they pass through there. I reached Iowa that evening, and was soon at work again. I held two meetings at the Mill Creek Schoolhouse, where resides our worthy Bro. and Sr. James Comstock, whose home is always a home for the minister of Christ. From there I went to fill an appointment at Tabor, where I held a series of meet­ings using my chart (the vine). I was well cared for, and who would not be, among such a host of good Saints? Many of them bearing the name “Goode,” are not only good by name but by nature.

While there I was contemplating speaking upon the street, but a message from this place to come and help them frustrated my plans. I came here from Tabor by the hack, having an interesting talk with the driver, who I believe at times got so hot it is very doubtful if he really knew half the time whether he was driving the Mormon preacher to Sidney or the other place, he talked so much about hell and damnation. He was a Holiness man. I told him that it was my business to preach salvation and not so much damnation. He said that was just where “you people make a mistake.” However, I landed safe and sound in Sidney, where Bro. Frank Novinger was awaiting to convey me to his hospitable home, who, with his merry family, knows how to care for the missionary. There is a union Sunday-school here, Bro. Novinger being superin­tendent. We held meeting in the schoolhouse on Saturday evening, also Sunday morning at eleven, again at eight o’clock in the evening, where I spoke to an interested audience each time. There seems to be some interest here, so we announced meetings again for two weeks from now. Brn. Chambers and Tarpen have done some preaching here. Bro. and Sr. Novinger seem to be willing to make any sacrifice necessary for the advancement of the work. We are hopeful of winning some precious souls, as there appear to be some very nice people amongst them.

I regretted to see in the last HERALD notice of the death of Bro. John C. Hepburn, of Glasgow, Scotland, one of our promising young men whom we ordained to the office of deacon soon after the Glasgow Branch was organized. We mourn not as those without hope, as we believe he died with the assurance of coming forth in the first resurrection. I often think of the few struggling Saints over there, and of the pleasant associations we had with them. Long will they linger as sweet memories of the past. I long to see the day when the Lord will move upon that people, that they may be more ready for the acceptance of the gospel.

I feel that we will have a good year, with the blessings of God attending to this end. May we all thrust in our sickles and reap while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work. We shall welcome any word from any that may be interested in the spread of truth in this part of the vineyard, as to new openings where we may take the tent, or where we can get schoolhouses; and if necessary we will go upon the streets, that we may all labor together to build up God’s kingdom upon the earth. May the peace of God be with his Israel everywhere, is my prayer.

My field address is, care of Frank Goode, Tabor, Iowa. Home address, 1311 West Walnut Street, Independence, Missouri.

Yours in gospel bonds,

JOSEPH ARBER.

Editors HERALD: Being fearful that you might possibly be short of “copy,” and thinking perhaps a few words from this locality would be acceptable, is my apology for asking admission to your columns. The summer season is upon us—that time when it is so difficult to persuade people to come into a schoolhouse or hall to hear something they care so very little about. Therefore, after remodeling our stand, and giving it a new coat of carmine paint, we find ourselves ready for open-air work. We began in Raritan. But I guess we must have forgotten to learn its location before doing so, as from our experience there we soon discovered the fact that we were on “heathen ground.” We then remembered our appointment located us in the United States, and after three nights with the Raritanites, we returned and have been on orderly ground since. Some people in that village seemed to consider the most forcible argument against us would be rocks and eggs. They were offered,—some members of our audience receiving the former, and my colaborer at least one of the latter. A large window in the store near where we were standing was also broken by a missile of some sort. As we called on some of the principal men of the place next day and found them in no way disposed to assist in maintaining order, we moved. Rio was our next place, where we held forth three weeks, the last two nights in a hall. This is a new opening, though five services were held there last winter. Before leaving we had the pleasure of baptizing five, all adults. These were not the immediate results of this unsatisfactory fee they had heard some before. We hope to return to this place.

After spending Sunday, the 17th, with the Saints in the Tri Cities, I came to this place. On Thursday evening, June 21, at the home of Bro. and Sr. J. G. Cole, I was permitted to officiate at the marriage of Sr. Mollie Emry to Mr. J. Ellis Benson. Sr. Emry is one of our lovely daughters. I believe her attention was first drawn to the work through the efforts of Bro. and Sr. C. J. Clark, now of Chicago. Unlike most girls, she has not had the advantages of a home, but from early childhood has been forced to meet conditions which would have discouraged those of less courage and strength of character. Through all of these experiences she has been faithful to her church-work, and does not hesitate to say that her life has been brightened by the rich blessings received through the church. The kindly efforts of Saints and friends in her behalf are not unfruitful or unappreciated. Mr. Benson is a young man of good character, has high ideals and has a host of friends. For some time he has been an active worker with the young people of the Epworth League and other societies. While he is not at present a member of the church, yet his mind has been opened to many of the principles of truth; and unless we are very much deceived in him, his honesty will make him to be one with us. Until then of course the happiness of their home is marred. God's love may open the mind of one member to the covenant. A large number of friends were present to witness the ceremony and enjoy the hospitality of Bro. and Sr. Cole, who made the wedding for the young couple.

The branch here is in favorable circumstances, Mr. Benson having the position of engineer in the electric light plant of this city. May God give them determination and strength to abide the conditions of their covenant. A large number of friends were present to witness the ceremony and enjoy the hospitality of Bro. and Sr. Cole, who made the wedding for the young couple.

The branch here is in fair condition; better than it was some time ago. The best part is that God is giving his approval and that is encouragement for sure. Bro. Charles Gillin, who was baptized at our June conference, was recently given encouragement for sure. Bro. Chase wrote from Grand Junction, Colorado, June 19, 1906: "There seems to be no opportunity for gospel work in Delta and vicinity, and so we have located in Grand Junction and are doing street-work here. This is somewhat expensive, as we have found no Saints, and have to hire a room and pay board. Still we think it the best we can do at present. We found about a half dozen Utah elders here at work on the street, and distributing tracts. After listening to them the first night for some time while one of them taught, Utah, her people, Mormonism, and their 'babies everywhere,' to the skies, saying that no other people had ever lived to so high a standard of morality, etc., etc., we announced a reply for the following evening. This was the 12th inst. Well, we got the crowd, made our reply, and followed it up each night, and now our Utah friends have left us the field, and we are preaching each night to fairly good-sized audiences."

J. C. Crabb, Orson, Iowa: "Oscar Case and the writer are holding tent-meetings in Orson. Fair attendance, and attention so far. Only rained out three nights in two weeks. Are feeling well and hopeful."

Books were moved that the circulating library should be continued, and the present number of books, 43, be kept in the district under the care of the district officers. Original motion carried. A collection of 10c was taken up to purchase books for the secretary and treasurer.

After an entertainment at night, the convention adjourned to meet the day before the next conference, at same place. Before adjourning it was moved that the reunion committee be asked for some time to be allowed during the reunion for institute work and missionary work. A. H. Bush seconded the resolution. The motion was thrown out, and a resolution to hold a reunion was adopted.

The Bishop.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENTS.

To the Saints and Friends of the Central, Northern, and Western Districts of the state of Michigan; Please Take Notice: That at the last conference of the Northern District of Michigan, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, said district was duly divided into three districts to be known hereafter as the Central, Northern, and Western Districts respectively.

Upon recommendation also of said conference, the following brethren have been duly appointed Bishop's agents in and for these districts, and duly authorized to act for the Presiding Bishop in the same, according to the rules and regulations of the church in such cases.

For the Central Michigan District, Elder Edward S. White, 706 North Lynn Street, West Bay City, Michigan.

For the Western Michigan District, Elder J. J. Cornish, Reed City, Michigan.

For the Northern Michigan District, Elder John C. Goodman, Boyne City, Michigan.

Elder J. J. Cornish has been the efficient and industrious agent of the Bishopric in the Northern Michigan District for a great many years, and the Bishopric are pleased to be able to secure his services for the new Western District. We also commend to the consideration of the Saints and all friends interested in the Master's work within the territory of their respective districts, Edward S. White of Bay City and John C. Goodman of Boyne City. These brethren enter upon their work in these new districts, trusting that each and every one of the household of faith will especially remember and assist them in the performance of the work intrusted to all as the labor is one in which all are interested and we are all laborers together with the Master.

The Bishop commends the work of these brethren to the Saints and friends as helpers, and trust that the Lord will remember and bless each as the perfect the special duty, and bearing up all before the Master who is the great head of the church, we are, also,

Helpers in the gospel of peace, and Zion's good,

E. L. Kelsey, Presiding Bishop.

Bishop's Notice.

To the Saints of Northern California: For the present I am located at 60 Valley Street, Oakland; mail will be sure to reach me sent there; I purpose to go to Stockton shortly to work in the interests of the church and make an effort to build up the work there; also to visit all the branches in the interest of the sanitarium at Independence. Dear Saints, let all do what they can in this important matter upon which we have positive divine direction. Do not try to see how little can be done to escape, but do all we reasonably can that the Master may recognize it and finally say, "You have done well." In all these matters, let us remember the Lord furnished us all we have, and now makes a demand upon us.

In responding to this demand upon us, let us do it cheerfully and at once, and not forget or lessen our efforts in the same line pertaining to other matters, such as tithing, offerings, conventions, and assisting the work in a general way. Let us remember we are not to wait until we get something we do not need. The Lord demands of us a willing, cheerful service. He is testing us, now. It is better to have ninety dollars with the Lord than anything up to it than fifty without. Do you not think so?

"Whatever we do, let us do with our might, For things done by halves are never done right."

What would we think of the business method if a rich man

www.LatterDayTruth.org
started us in business,—gave us all the capital, and we failed to give him his share of the gain? Let us be "wise servants."

Trust to hear from you soon by post-office money order, Wells, Fargo & Co.'s order, or bank check, I am,
Yours for the work's sake,

C. A. PARKIN, Bishop of Northern California.

Bishop's Agents' Notice.

To the Saints of the Southern Nebraska District; Greeting: Not being able to visit all the Saints of the district, it is thought advisable that some one of the missionary force be associated with me in the work, and it has been suggested by the Bishop that Elder C. H. Porter of Wilber, Nebraska, be so appointed. Elder C. H. Porter will receive money and give receipt for same. As a district, our needs are greater this year than that of last to sustain the missionary force that has been appointed to the field, therefore we urge every one to assist us in the important matter, that we may be able from month to month to meet the needs of the Saints. Those who will be in a position, when Bro. Porter is in your vicinity, to contribute, may make remittance to me at Nebraska City, Nebraska.

Baking Powder Again.

ALUM GOODS THAT MASQUERADE AS "HIGH-CLASS" POWDERS.

The Retailers' Journal, Chicago, says that the claims of the 25-cent alum baking powders are an imposition, both on the consumer and the retailer. The difference between the cost of making an 8-cent alum baking powder and a 25-cent one is not distinguishable; in fact, it was stated recently by an officer of the Alum Baking Powder Association that they both come out of the same barrel.

The cost to make an alum baking powder is about two cents a pound. When this powder is sold at 25 cents a pound it would not appear to the average consumer as a "high grade baking powder sold at a moderate price," but rather as a very low grade baking powder sold at a high price. The twenty-three cents profit on a two-cent food article is not, however, so important as the fact that the chief ingredient of the 25-cent powder is alum, a mineral acid, well known to be injurious when taken into the stomach.

Iowa State Fair News.

Here are some of the premiums that are to be given at the Iowa State Fair this year that are attracting a great deal of attention and will cause some sharp rivalry among the farmers and farmers' wives of the State. These premiums are offered for the best products of the farms and kitchens of the State:

For the boy who is the best judge of stock and corn...$200
For the best ear of corn...............................50
For the best bean of corn (boys)..................2
For the best loaf of yeast bread....................10
For the best loaf of yeast bread (girls' class)......5

Valuable cash premiums are offered on everything produced in the State and entries are open to all. Lists and entry blanks may be had for the asking of Secretary J. C. Simpson at Des Moines.

Opening of the Shoshone or Wind River Reservation in Wyoming.

The President's proclamation opening the Shoshone reservation lands for settlement has been published and prescribes the plan of drawing for these lands, which has proved so successful with the Apaches. Applicants are to register at Worland, Thermopolis, Shoshoni, or Lander, in Wyoming, between July 16 and 31. The subsequent drawing for these lands will be held at Lander, commencing August 4, the drawing to be supervised by a committee of three persons of undoubted integrity. Parties may return home after registering, and the successful ones are notified by card when and where to appear to make filings for the land drawn.

The land area comprised about 400,000 acres of agricultural land to be drawn for, and the Government made a remarkably cheap settlement with the Indians, so that the cost is not going to exceed $1.50 an acre for the agricultural lands, except, of course, the additional cost on the pro rata plan for the irrigation works to be built.

Sixty days after August 15, those seeking timber and mineral claims can cross the border and take up these claims under the timber and mineral act, and all persons are especially admonished by the Government not to attempt to jump mineral or timber claims, or to enter the reservation for that purpose prior to the appointed time.

It has been a close race between the building of the Burlington's Worland extension up the Big Horn River and the opening date for this registration, and the most remarkable energy has been put into the work by the railroad to get this line finished to Worland by the Fourth of July. Two or three shifts of laborers are laying rail day and night, and right behind the steel gang come the ballast trains loaded from an immense gravel bed on the right of way. It is certain that the Burlington's line will be finished to Worland probably two weeks before July 16, which is the first day of registration.

One of the problems of settling up irrigated lands in the West is to show buyers and settlers from the East the regularity and the wealth of irrigated crops from year to year. All seasons for irrigated lands from the whole country east of the Missouri River appear to be from Missouri, and "have to be shown," and this was one of the chief reasons why the Burlington hauled out 5,000 laborers a thousand miles to the basin to hurry up this line through the irrigated land of the Big Horn Valley, so that the army of persons going to register for Shoshone lands could see the young and fruiting lands extended by the new Worland line goes right through a zone of irrigated lands extending all the way from Frannie along the Big Horn River, traversing single tracts of 30,000 acres under cultivation.

The railroads have also shown their interest in the enterprise of setting up the new West by undertaking to bring out the largest possible number of entries for this drawing with unusually low excursion rates, the main motive being to get the people out and scatter them over the new lands of the West.

Forest Planting Stations Which Cooperate With the Forest Service.

Seven different States now have eight forest experiment stations, established during the past year, for cooperation between the Forest Service and State forest commissions and agricultural colleges. These stations are designed to meet the growing demand for detailed information on the propagation of forest-trees in various regions.

As a result of regional studies and special investigations, the Forest Service is already in possession of very complete data on new species and the inferences of soil and location in the selection of species, and to assure satisfactory data on methods of planting and cultivation. At Berea, Kentucky, particular attention will be given to the propagation of hickory, a wood for which no satisfactory substitute is known and for which the demand is destined soon to outstrip the supply. On the plains and prairies the trees will be tried which promise to be the most useful to the farmer under the local conditions. Expensive plants will not be tried annually, but the material will undoubtedly be required before completely satisfactory final results will have been attained.

Mary Taylor-Ross in an article on new ideas for the sewing room in the June Housekeeper, suggests the revival of an old-fashioned method of fine mending. She says:

"Did you ever try mending jagged tears in a coat or jacket with hair-human hair? Well, try it, before you exclaim in your doubt as to the outcome. You know, long ago mending used to be a work of art. Clothes were much harder to get, and once obtained, every care was given them until they literally went to pieces. Some one who lived in those days-Frankie or Fanny would do the mending-you sister or mother, the lady-taught me to mend with hair, and the torn place on my jacket, or what had been the torn place, became a matter of pride, because the mending was the best kind of art-useful, with a warm flatiron, after dampening it slightly, on the wrong side, and it is finished.

Linen, and tears in dresses and aprons can all be patched without a wrinkle if the goods is first stretched in the hoop."

"Depend upon it, the most fatal idleness is that of the heart. And the man who feels weary of life may be sure that he does not love his fellow creatures as he ought."—Sir Arthur Helps.

SACRIFICING.

There is more or less talking and writing about the sacrifices men and women make for the gospel's sake when an elder takes the ministerial field for gospel labor.

Sometimes in reading or hearing men tell of leaving home and all the charms of home society and associations, we have been compelled to take the home surroundings of the men into consideration to decide if we could in what the sacrifice consisted.

In some instances the congenial atmosphere that characterizes some homes is wanting, husband and wife barely tolerate each other, and the wife is really more cheerful, more sociable with her neighbors, and freer in her life when her elder husband is not at home. If these are but an insignificant minority so much the better. There should be none. We as a people can have no efficient confidence in an elder who is justly contemned in his own home circle, notwithstanding the proverb, "A prophet is not without honor, but in his own country, and among his own kin." One of the qualifications of a deacon in ancient times was that he "should be of good repute among them who are without." One of the promises to the Saints in these days is contingent upon their good behavior, by reason of which they are to "find favor in the eyes of the people." Men and women, married people, who are not at peace with each other, can not be in good repute with them who are without, whether these require too great a degree of righteousness or not. Righteousness is doing right. Doing right for fear of comment, or for policy's sake, is one kind; doing right because of instinctive conscientiousness of what is right, is quite another; the man who does right because he is prompted to do so by the good Spirit of the Master is a safer man in any community than is the other; honesty must be from innate motive to be genuine and profitable to salvation.

The man who says that he loves the gospel and desires to spend his time and strength in preaching it, should be very careful how he boasts of his desire and love, and then talks of the sacrifice he is making to keep in the field; it smacks of self-commendation.

Bro. R. C. Evans at times, in touching upon the making of sacrifices, speaks forcibly and eloquently... upon the demands for sacrifice which the gospel makes: "It asks me to sacrifice selfishness, and gives me love for my fellow men in the place of self-love. It asks me to sacrifice my evil nature, to plant in its stead the Master's nature. It asks me to give up the things I may have acquired that are not good for me to keep, hatred, willfulness, covetousness, desire for gain, and love for the gauds and vanities of life, and offers me the choice of the good things of God. In short I am not asked to sacrifice anything that if retained would make me wiser, better, nobler, and more fitted to do the will of God."

For every sacrifice a just and earnest worker will or does make in this service of God, there is given such supreme consciousness of good received, that the value of the thing named as a sacrifice grows small by comparison. We ought to be careful then to see our sacrifices as He who rewards them sees them, and not through the medium of self and self-importance.

GOOD WORDS.

In his Fourth of July speech at Lamoni, Judge H. M. Towner, of the Third Judicial District, gave the following good words to Lamoni.

He stated that he was pleased to meet the people, and though not many of them had been before him in his judicial capacity, he felt that he was acquainted with them, and assured them that of all the people of the district none had a better record than the community at Lamoni.

He further stated that Iowa pays a less per cent of costs for court procedure, both civil and criminal, than any other State in the Union, and of course the people in this part of the State help to contribute to that condition.

Repeating what some distinguished writer has written, he said that "this country is the greatest secular blessing ever vouchsafed to mankind."

He paid a glowing tribute to patriotism, and urged that the people were not wanting in the same devotion to country that marked the revolutionary period, but that if necessity occurred the fires of love of country would blaze out as brightly as they had ever done in times past. He enjoined the cultivation of the love of country on all, and especially urged the young to see to it that they heed the voice of patriotism and be ready should occasion require to do as the fathers had done, dare to serve and if need demanded die to preserve what the fathers had saved, a united country that is destined to be an example and boen of the nations.

The Declaration was read by Bro. D. F. Lambert of Lamoni, the editor of the Patriot, and Assistant Historian of the church. It was the finest rendition of that momentous historical document we ever had the pleasure to listen to. While listening to it, we could not help contrasting the condition of England and the statesmanship that prevailed under King George III, and the present condition of the British Empire, after the beneficent reign of good Queen Victoria, and under the rule of Edward VII, who is proving himself to be an advocate of peace for its own sake, as well as for the victories it brings.

CONGRESS ADJOURNED.

The Chicago Tribune in its issue for Sunday, July 1, gave the following pithy statement of the results of the legislation of the first half of the Fifty-ninth Congress of the United States:

- Appropriated $880,000,000.
- Passed railroad rate bill after Senators declared it would not.
- Hung up Isle of Pines treaty.
- Passed pure food bill after vigorous prods from insistent public.
- Heard Senator Bailey shriek "liar" at the President.
- Snubbed Roosevelt's Santo Domingo policy.
- Saw Speaker Cannon preside in suit of homespun woven by old South Carolina woman.
- Passed mento-inspection bill in spite of "Billy" Lorimer.
- Was deaf to Secretary Taft's pleadings for Philippine free trade.
- Saved Niagara Falls, but gave Chicago drainage ditch a scare.
- Saw President Roosevelt's daughter married at the White House.
- Gave Chicago postmaster several hundred new clerks; afraid of Fred Busee.
- Voted for lock type Panama canal; first said it would not.
- Shuddered over Senator Tillman's oratory.
- Refused to ratify Algeiras conference treaty.
- Voted money for Lake Bluff naval training school.
- Passed consular reform bill; making it harder for politicians to get soft jobs.
- Made minister to Turkey a full-fledged ambassador.
- Passed a bill denaturing alcohol; great boon for farmers, nothing doing for tipplers, though.

AN EXCELLENT LAW.

From the "Current Topics" page of the Commoner, published at Lincoln, Nebraska, issue for June 22, we quote:

A law prohibiting the trimming of hats with birds' wings and feathers will go into effect in Iowa, July 1. The law provides that any milliner trimming a hat with feathers or wings of other than game birds shall be punished by a fine. Referring to this law the Sioux City Journal says: "Milliners all over the State have thrown up their hands in holy horror at this latest blow to the aesthetic in dress. In several cities of size meetings of the women with the thimble and thread of the art of hats have been held at which words of indignation streamed from every female present. In Des Moines an indignation meeting was held at which many incendiary views were expressed, the sense of the meeting being that the milliners of the State unite in their wrath and bring upon those horrid legislators all the grief possible. There is always the humane society side of the law to look at. There are men who have no grudge against milliners because of the monthly bills, but who would rather see a well-turned wing of red or blue against the natural background, the green of the woods, than glued on a hat at an impossible angle above the prettiest pair of eyes that ever twinkled."

www.LatterDayTruth.org
The Sioux City Journal is right. Let the devotees of senseless fashion take it to heart as they may, the slaughter of our songbirds and birds of beautiful plumage live, and show the beauties God has endowed them with in the surroundings provided by the divine nature, and stop this reckless destruction which is making our orchards and groves silent but eloquent witnesses against "man's inhumanity" and woman's senseless folly.

There has been ample time for the milliners of Iowa to become reconciled to the law referred to. It has been known that the Audubon Society has been at work for such a law for years, and the attitude of the press, if not the pulpits, has been favoring such reform; and now let us have a reign of common sense and sane philosophy in this feathers contest, and replenish our wooded places with song and plumage to the credit of humanity. If women's hats must have wings, let inventive milliners, or purveyors to their trade, invent artificial wings and feathers, as they have done flowers.

It is a good law and should be enforced.

A HELPFUL CONDITION.

Those who are too apt to underrate the apparent prosperity of the country may find a ray of comfort in the following.

In addition we may state that the other day we heard a man on the street say that there is hardly a man in town to do work; everybody seems to have all the work he can do. Of course the town is Lamoni, and the State is Iowa, not New York:

ALBANY, N.Y., July 1.—[Special.]—In the quarterly bulletin of the state department of labor, Commissioner Sherman calls attention to the fact that the figures show that during the first three months of this year the average wages of wage earners were $3, as compared with $2.85 during the same period last year, and were much higher than average wages usually paid.

A year ago the average quarterly earnings of organized wage workers were only $187, as compared with $212 this year. But last year the average duration of employment in the three months was only sixty-six days, as compared with seventy-one days this year. In no recent year has the average number of days of employment exceeded sixty-eight.

There was a net gain of nine labor unions (one hundred and sixty going out of existence) during the six months ended on July 1. The estimated cost of buildings authorized in the metropolis in the first quarter of 1905 ($50,000,000) was unprecedented, but has been largely exceeded by the first cost of buildings projected in the first quarter of 1906, which was no less than $64,700,000, the increase being in the boroughs of Manhattan and Queens.

There was a net gain of nine labor unions (one hundred and sixteen going out of existence) during the six months ended on March 30, making the total number of unions in the State, 2,411. Their membership is 284,270, a gain of three per cent in six months.

THE Chicago Tribune for July 7, speaking of the "Slaughter of the Fourth," says: "As the returns come in, it becomes more and more apparent that the casualties from the national celebration exceeded in number those of many a hard fought battle. In this city alone more persons were killed and injured than in the battle of Manila or the sea fight off Santiago. . . . This is the tragic side of the 'glorious Fourth.' Deliverance from foreign oppression is celebrated by a tyrannical mutilation and slaughter of fellow citizens, and the children for whose sakes the heroes of the past have tried to keep the country free are surrendered to sudden and painful death. . . . If liberty is to be celebrated by noisy and deadly demonstrations, such as would be impossible except where fullest liberty prevails, it would be well to remember that the same sentence of the Declaration of Independence which classes liberty as one of the inalienable rights of man includes also life and the pursuit of happiness. Liberty is acceptable only when accompanied by the other blessings to which man has the right. If liberty means that the innocent and helpless are to be killed, maimed, or tortured for the amusement of the thoughtless or the callous, better a benevolent despotism to protect life and the pursuit of happiness. Free men should prove themselves worthy of freedom."

Answer to "When?"

Until the Saints (?) obey my word,
And cease to selfish be,
Until you learn where you have erred—
Until you turn to me—
While water runs and stars do shine,
While herbs and grass grow green—
While hard oppression reigns, Zion
Can never be redeemed.

While you choose chaff before the wheat,
While rich oppress the poor,
While hungry, ragged children weep
For equal rights, be sure
I can not, will not call you mine.
Until you cease to dream
Of wealth and social cast, Zion
Can never be redeemed.

In the beginning all was good,
There was no fear, no strife;
No vicious beasts then roamed the wood,
To feed on others' life.
Then I gave man his agency
To do as he saw fit.
Away he went, rejecting me,
And straightway digged a pit
To catch his brother unawares,
That he might reap the good
Of others' watchful work and care
And feed on others' food.
He fell into his own foul pit,
Before his plans were ripe;
While biting others he got bit;
And thus commenced the strife.
Degeneration then took place
Among both man and brute.
From this sad scene I hid my face,

Galatians 5:22, 23. For such was not my fruit.

I've told you how you can reclaim Yourselves from this disgrace:
Acts 4:32.
Be equal in your rights and claims;
John 17:11-21.
Be one before my face.
When you apply the golden rule,
Do as you'd be done by
1 Timothy 6:4, 5.
Of strife in years gone by,
Acts 2:44.
Cooperate and not compete,
Then it shall be my theme
Isaiah 42:
To make your lives both pure and sweet;
Galatians 5:22, 23.
And Zion I'll redeem.
Acts 2:44.
Isaiah 42:
Isaiah 1:27.
Then you can sing this glad refrain:
Jeremiah 31:14.
Isaiah 1:27.
Zion is now redeemed.
2 Timothy 2:24.
We are God's children free from pain,
Isaiah 11:8.
I'll take away the adder's sting,
And change the heart of beast;
Malachi 3:10-12.
Of all of heaven's choicest things,
Give an eternal feast.

"It is I."

'Twas night in stormy Galilee,
And the fierce wind did roar,
When a little bark tossed by the sea
Tried hard to reach the shore.
The boatmen raised a prayer to heaven
That God their lives would save,
When lo, in fear, a form they see Draw near them on the wave.

"Be of good cheer!" 'Twas Jesus spoke.
"'Tis I, be not afraid."
His watchful eye their peril saw,
And straight came to their aid.
The human heart as ocean deep,
Where waves of passion roll,
Can know no rest till Jesus comes,
And soothes the troubled soul.

In storm or calm, on land or sea,
Let fate be good or ill,
If true to Christ he's ever near,
To whisper, "Peace, be still."

James L. Edwards.

Melrose, Massachusetts.

San Francisco,
O City, wrapped in deepest gloom,
Queen of the Golden West.
From thee, remorseless enemies
Thy splendor great did wrest.
By earthquake first thouwert assailed,
Then flame rushed over thee—
'Twas fire destroyed thy towering walls,
St. Frances by the sea.

A strangely fierce, wild battle-field,
Where flame was like red gore.
And boom of blasting dynamite.
Well aped the cannon's roar.
As surgeon's knife cuts but to save.
So structures great were leveled;
But still the foe swept madly on—
In hall and dome it reveled.

With naught to quench its greedy thirst,
It roared, and curved, and swirled;
Around full many a palace grand Relentlessly it curled.
It licked up with its hungry tongue,
The costly treasures there;
With gold and silver bright it played,
And many a jewel rare.

In hospital where suffering dwelt,
Where stalwart forms low lay,
The cruel host rushed in apace
And, merciless, held away.
Thro' ward and hall it leaped and hissed,
Consuming dainty cot.
While nurse and patient—inmates all,
Had place of refuge sought.

Yea, many a weakened one, and pale,
O'er whom had hovered Death,
Was borne with tender, skillful hands,
Beyond the fiery breath.
And many a sacred edifice,
Where Faith was wont to wait.
To worship at Religion's shrine,
Shared in thy dreadful fate.

Thy mammoth stores and hotels grand,
Yielded their full supply.
Oh! what was left of weave or bread
To still the wanderer's cry?
The rich man's wealth, the poor man's all,
Impartially it chose.
It danced in reckless, fiendish glee,
Most wicked of earth's foes.

But quickly ready hands stretched forth
Unto thy homeless ones,
To stifle hunger's stern demand
For thy daughters and thy sons.
And garments for the scanty clad—Thy gratitude extends
To those who heeded want's grim call Thy generous, loving friends.

Oh, thou didst silent meet thy doom.
Thy ruins charred remain;
But thou shalt soon in greater might Resume thy splendid reign;
Again shall rise thy mansion homes,
Again thy spires shall tower;
Thy lofty structures sweep the sky—
Again thou'lt rule in power.

"Queen of the West" thou once once wert called—Thou still shalt hold thy sway;
Sore wounded, now, thou fallen lie,
But unconquered in the fray.
Thou wilt shine forth a glittering gem
In setting all sublime,
Of golden shore, and peaceful bay
And balmy, temperate clime.
At Orient's bars thou proudly sat,
Thy power reached afar,
For isle, and sea, and foreign land
Thou held'st the gate ajar.
Oh, now we mourn thy cruel fate
Our hearts are sad for thee;
But Hope bids thee look up and smile,
Loved Frances by the sea.

ON THOSE SUGGESTIONS OF THE EDITOR.

In HERALD of March 7, 1906, first editorial, the Editor offers some suggestions "for the benefit" of those who have already written and those who may contemplate writing" on "the gathering," "salvation of the unemployed," "building up of Zion," etc. As I "have written" and also "contemplate writing," those suggestions are for my benefit, and I feel inclined to notice some of them, and will do so with the idea in view only of trying to throw light upon the various phases of the questions under consideration.

The Editor, in reading the various articles written, discovers, to his mind, "such a conflict of opinion that we are sure is not consistent with the real facts in the case." But he does not point out in what respect any of them are "not consistent," and we are left to judge for ourselves which are and are not consistent. He outlines about five different classes of ideas advanced by these writers, which he thinks are in "striking conflict." I have read them very carefully, and we can accede to all but possibly one. The only really serious conflict is between those who want to do something and those who do not want to do something more than we have always done. Here alone is the serious conflict. The affirmative writers for doing something all point in the same general direction, and are not so very far apart; not any more so than men who are ministers in the church already differ on some of our theological questions.

Of the thirteen suggestions by the Editor, the first four are statistical in character, to be remembered and considered in our discussion of these great questions. The others are mostly interrogations, some of which we will consider separately, others incidentally.

On number 5: "What industrial enterprises open to the handful who might possibly combine their means together for establishing enterprises of the kind could be made successful?" This question seems to be asked from the viewpoint of private enterprise. I want to be understood as believing that the society as a whole (the church) should institute, own, and operate that which the people use and depend upon in common; and that which is used in private should be owned privately. Therefore that "handful" is a private outfit, and what they do on their own hook will be a private affair. What we are interested in is, what industrial enterprises are open to the church that can be made a success? The church with her united strength in brain, muscle, and money. Answer: Any enterprise turning out any of the necessities of life—things that we must have to eat, wear, or make life worth living—that are turned out by any other institution that is now or can be successful. The particular article to be first chosen, the procuring of raw material, etc., must be determined by the wisdom and business judgment of the men who are appointed stewards or agents for the church for the managing of these concerns, they considering the conditions of the time and place, transportation, supply and demand, etc. That finite men have made in the past and do at the present make a success of industrial enterprises, all will concede. That they make a greater success when they combine their interests and produce on a big scale and with labor and time-saving devices, will also be conceded. Now, who will say we can not? A "handful" may not be able, but we all unitedly can. The Editor asks, "whence shall the means be secured?" The Lord says: "Let all the churches gather together all their moneys."—Doctrine and Covenants 98:10. Observe the two words all. If it is insisted that particular enterprises be pointed out, we would say, first get the money in the way the Lord says, then as he says again, "purchase the land," "send up workmen" to prepare the way, then settle the Saints, and establish brick-yards, creameries, canning-factories, mills, the Lord's storehouse. Set the people to manufacturing furniture, overalls, shirts, brick, tiles, and whatever business sense sees practicable, gradually enlarging and adopting the more economical ways of doing things.

"To whom should these manufactured articles be offered?" says last question in number five.

Answer: To the Lord's storehouse, for sale to any and all Saints first, and when there is a surplus, send men out over the country to sell them like all other business enterprises of like character do.

On number 6: The question is asked, "How is the host of employees or these 'wealth producers' to be fed and clothed, housed in comfort, while they are employed in producing wealth?" Answer: Just like other mortals who are and have been engaged in establishing pioneer industries and undertakings, like all those sturdy men and women in all ages who have dug canals, built towers, extended railroads through the wilds, built cabins in the wilderness and tilled the virgin soil, who had a will and found the way. How did anything ever get started in this world? We can do what others have done. Who says we can not?

On number 7: The fact that an enterprise may own the land from which its raw material comes does not secure it from competition with other like industries that may exist outside the church. It can not escape such competition till the church is universal and absorbs all people. But the competition sought to be avoided by the church running these concerns, is the competition between the laborers of our society that now exists in the business world, and also the competition between different establishments of the same kind, but under different managements, as is now the case. Two creameries, for instance, managed by different persons, must either compete, or form a trust to avoid competition. What we want is a trust covering all the business energies of our whole society, by and through which they may cooperate and work to each other's interest, or combining the many small and partially crippled ones into large concerns, wherever it may be found to make for economy. The competition between the laborers in the world is so sharp that the wage is not sufficient in many cases to afford the necessaries of life. This is what we want to remedy. It can only be remedied by giving the laborer the full products of his toil instead of only about one fifth to one sixth, as it is in the world to-day. Four fifths to five sixths of the laborer's product goes to pay dividends, this is what we want to remedy. It can only make for economy. The competition between the factories and the workmen is so sharp that the wage is not sufficient in many cases to afford the necessaries of life. This is not right, and any society that has for its aim the uplifting of mankind temporarily and spiritually, and does not attempt to remedy these conditions, is not performing its duty, say nothing of its privilege. More on this point will come under another head.

Numbers 8 and 9 are about the same as number 7, so we pass on to Number 10: It does not follow that the community was to be wholly agricultural, because the Lord said "Purchase land," nor even largely so, where the land is mineral land predominantly. Mining is just as legitimate as farming, and before the church can be "independent above all other creatures beneath the celestial world," (Doctrine and Covenants 77:3,) it must engage in mining as well as farming. But until such time as the church may be able to own her own land upon which is mined the coal, iron, steel, lead, zinc, etc., that enter into the manufacture of her products, she may go into the market and buy just like any one else who buys raw material.

Last question in number 10: "Does the fact of failure in any of these enterprises which may have occurred in the past furnish a sufficient deterrent to the entering into of such enterprises now or hereafter?" Answer: I should say not! History is replete with instances of where one has failed, and another has built with astonishing success upon the ashes of his predecessor. Many times the same individual has failed repeatedly, and by trying again has succeeded gloriously. Those who never try because others fail are never found in the van of progress in that line. Adaptability and qualifications play an important part, and who will say that our society is not qualified and adapted to bring to pass this great communistic, or Zionistic, movement to bring about temporal equality? We have the framework outlined for us, which the others have not had. We are considered brainy people by judges of human nature. We have industrious members, and it can not be said that we are lazy and shiftless. Then what can stop even fifty thousand such people from inaugurating such a move and making a success of it, if we only have the mind to do so?

In this connection I want to deny statements that have been made to the effect that all cooperative undertakings have failed that have ever been started. It is wrong and misleading to so state. The Rochdale co-operative association in England was started about forty years ago by a few poor factory workers, and has grown to immense proportions—has not failed. It did a business last year amounting to over five millions of dollars. This society now has branch establishments all over England, and, I understand, has some branches in this country. Another successful cooperative society is set forth in Everybody's Magazine for September, 1905, called the "Vooruit of Ghent" in Belgium. This society has reached large proportions. It has over one hundred thousand members in Ghent alone. I quote:

To-day the "Vooruit" possesses at Ghent a vast bakery turning out hundreds of thousands of loaves of bread, a large department store, a dozen grocery-shops, pharmacies in all parts of the city, an enormous "Headquarters," with theater and concert-rooms; a bank, a printing-house, daily and weekly newspapers, a hospital and operating room, largest cotton-factory in Ghent—these and a score of subsidiary works.—Page 297.

This society was established about twenty-five years ago, by a few "weavers and spinners," "the worst paid laborers in the world,"—"banded themselves into a society." "Vooruit, they call it." "A few working men were gathered at Paul Verbaumen's, in the Belgrade Street. They struck out the idea that bread might be made at a cheaper rate should they club their funds, buy in quantity, and bake in common. In a few days they got together eighty-five francs and ninety-three centimes—say seventeen dollars and eighteen cents. They hired an old cellar and, with an old baker and an old kneading-trough and an old oven, the work began. It was coöperation in the simplest form. It grew, however, as such things have not grown otherwise." (Ibid., page 297.) (I wish every one would look this number of Everybody's Magazine up and read this article.) Let it no more be said that all have failed. Men are learning by the mistakes of the past, they readjust their efforts according to added light and are beginning to make successful, even cooperative societies. Others will show us how yet if we do not bestir ourselves.

On number 11: "Bro. A is a man of some wealth. He started as a day laborer, married when he was a young man without a suite of decent furniture to put into his shanty. By dint of perseverance and hard work, joined with careful business wisdom and prevision, he built up an enterprise which employs hundreds of men with a relative number of women." Probably Bro. A could give us some light on how he got his "raw material," and how he "fed and clothed, housed in comfort" those hundreds of men and women who were his employees. Courage, brethren! If this Bro. A could start from a poor laborer and rise to such business proportions by his own wisdom and energy, surely the united wisdom, laborer and rise to such business proportions by his material from which to make things, and to find a way to feed and house those who make them.

A Bro. D is referred to in suggestion eleven as being in a similar successful condition to Bro. A. Then the Editor asks: "Would it enhance the progress of Zion if these two men... should stop their individual enterprises and throw their means into a common fund from which all others might draw as they saw fit, without reference to the numbers which may have depended upon their earnings for their daily support?" I have read very carefully all articles both pro and con upon these subjects, also the books of the church, and have not seen any statement by any of the writers for the affirmative, nor any accusation by the writers on the negative against those of the affirmative, that there should be a common fund into which the rich or any one else must cast their all, and from which "all others may draw as they saw fit." If, however, I should hear of any one making such statement, I would think he was in imminent need of a guardian. These two men, Brn. A and D referred to, should consecrate themselves and their property to God, and then as wise stewards go right on managing their concerns for the benefit of the church, each casting all into the Lord's storehouse over and above that which is necessary to procure the comforts of life for himself and family and likewise of that of his brethren who were formerly his employees, but who are now his collaborators sharing alike with him; he, the steward-superintendent, rendering his account to the bishop, of his stewardship. If they do this, it cannot then be said of Bro. A as stated in suggestion eleven thus: "It is true that the enterprise furnishes him an excellent living above the average laborer." There is no clause anywhere in the laws on consecration and equality that will justify one, even a steward-superintendent, to have "above the average laborer" if the average laborer is getting what he ought to get. And if he is not, there is abundance of law to show that his portion should be increased. All you who uphold this principle in vogue in the present system, that gives to one man that which is "above the average laborer," read this and think on it and tell us what it means: "For, behold, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air, and that which cometh of the earth, is ordained for the use of man, for food, and for raiment, and that he might have in abundance, but it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another."—Doctrine and Covenants 49:3. Oh, that this might be read, and the principle of equality involved in it be deeply sensed by every citizen of not only our church, but of our country and the whole world! For because it is not recognized and heeded, and because men do seek to maintain and uphold and excuse institutions that give to one more than another, against the principle of brotherhood of men who are born free and equal, and against the Fatherhood of God who has given all earth's stores that all "might have in abundance," and has not given it to be possessed by one man "above another," therefore the Almighty, in the very next clause following the above quotation, says: "Wherefore the world lieth in sin." Now, brethren of the negative, should we not seek to order and establish the enterprises among our people upon the principle of equality set forth? Are we excusable in upholding enterprises among our people or anywhere else that do not distribute to all the workers alike, in the face of this divine command, "And let every man deal honestly, and be alike among this people, and receive alike, that ye may be one, even as I have commanded you"?—Doctrine and Covenants 51:2. To "deal honestly" involves business principles that will make people "alike," and "receive alike"; for if they are not "alike" and do not "receive alike," or, when one gets a "living above the average laborer," they will soon be different, and being different divides them into classes, and people of different classes temporally can not be one, and if they try to associate together in the same society there are always jarrings and jealousies and backbitings, driving away the good spirit from their midst, and brotherly love disappears, and social relations become strained, to say the least. But God wants the people to "be alike" and "receive alike, that ye may be one."

On number 12: The question is asked: "Would or would not miners at work for industrial enterprises instituted and carried on by the church, or a combination of them, be under similar disadvantages and subject to the same necessities for daily support as miners are now in the world?" Answer: They would be under the same disadvantages in working for enterprises instituted by the church, if the church should carry on its enterprises upon the same unjust and unequal principles as do those in the world. That is just why we are contending that we must have a change in the methods of doing business. It must not be done in man's way; it must be done upon the principles of equality and justice, in the light of wants and needs and legitimate effort—God's way. In the world and also among our members, private enterprise, as now carried on, is for the purpose of private gain, and by the manipulation of money and men in the light of present business methods and traditions, it is thought a thing honest for the employer to get all he can out of his employees and appropriate it to his own gain, allowing the workers barely enough, not to meet the wants of life, but to keep them from leaving and seeking elsewhere for better wages. In this way the employer gets a "living above the average laborer," and piles up thousands and millions for show and ostentation; for they can not use it all up in buying the necessities of life, so ostentation, thousand-dollar dogs, ten-thousand-dollar coats, become the custom, while the workers scarcely have enough to keep the wolf from the door. It is thought a thing honest, but the divine command says, "deal honestly, and be alike among this people, and receive alike, that ye may be of his brother, and enjoy them in excess of his."

It is thought also by this very same class of thinkers, that another brother who has an equally sagacious brain, only his sagacity is in the direction of teaching and preaching, and not along business lines, should heed the statement, "to whom much is given of him shall be much required," and should go and use that sagacious mind and give to others according to the abundance given him, preach and teach the gospel, sacrificing his all for the uplifting of society, receiving only a small stipend for his family, in some places not enough for them to live decently. Is it consistent in members of the same society and brotherhood—members of the church of Christ? Are we as thinkers and writers justified in our anxiety to bring about a better condition in the church?

Yes, miners, or any other set of workers, would have the same disadvantages in working for institutions run by the church, unless they are run differently to what some are run, that are said to be run now by the church, by reason of the movers being members of the church, running them for private gain. It will be conceded, probably, that the worker has a right to enough of the necessaries of life to supply his natural needs and the needs of those depending upon him, in exchange for doing all he can do—doing his best. Take for instance, now, a mine owned by the church, held and operated by an agent of the church, or steward appointed by the church over this concern,—a steward of the order or organization of stewards provided for in Doctrine and Covenants 101:9-13 and 82:3-5. This steward would not consider the mine his own, "nor any part of it." (Doctrine and Covenants 101:12.) He would employ his brethren, or secure their assistance as colaborers with him, and not as hired servants, and the first proceeds of this mine would be directed to obtaining the comforts of life for all these brethren, the managing steward "receiving alike" with the others, "according to their families"; after this, if it were found that there were moneys obtained "more than is needful for their support," it should "be cast into the treasury as fast as you receive moneys, by hundreds, or by fifties, or by twenties, or by tens, or by fives." (Doctrine and Covenants 101:12.) Now observe, all ye, that these workers have their comforts supplied before there is any casting into the common treasury, and that they can not "draw as they see fit," for it is not to be "taken out of the treasury, only by the voice and common consent of the order. And this shall be the voice and common consent of the order: that any man among you, (the order of stewards organized for the managing of these concerns,) say unto the treasurer, I have need of this to help me in my stewardship; if it be five talents, or if it be ten talents, or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, the treasurer shall give unto him the sum which he requires, to help him in his stewardship, until he be found a transgressor, and it is manifest before the council of the order, plainly, that he is an unfaithful and an unwise steward."

(Doctrine and Covenants 101:12.) It provides also that if he proves to be an unwise and unfaithful steward, and does not "deal honestly" with his brethren, so that they may all, he with them, "receive alike," he shall be cut off for his transgression and "ye shall deliver him over to the buffetings of Satan" "until the day of redemption." (Doctrine and Covenants 101:1, 2.) The safety-valve in this system of manipulation lies in the fact that in case there should be given to the workers more than is needful for their support, they would, by virtue of being stewards over their own portions, give the excess into the storehouse. Conversely, in case the apportionment should prove insufficient by reason of misjudgment, or by reason of the infancy of the institution, the workers would not need to go hungry and destitute, for the needy shall have their lack made up to them from the storehouse. How much more beautiful to the human mind is this than the "dog-eat-dog" policy of the present business methods! Thus you see the laborers would not have the same disadvantages under church jurisdiction of industrial enterprises as in the world.

On number 13: I and others who have been writing on the affirmative of this question, are very much interested, are even anxiously engaged in so doing, because we think honestly and sincerely that the Lord has directed it in his word, and that the "world lieth in sin" because these things are not in vogue. Suggestion thirteen states: "The heads of the church, the leading men of it, . . . are just as much interested in the success of the work . . . the gathering, the upbuilding of Zion, the purchased possessions, the relief of the poor and distressed, care of the indigent, . . . as is or can be any other member of the church." This, I, for one, am glad of and proud of, and more, I have never once doubted it in the least. But what is a little puzzling to me, but not much of a source of worry, is, to whom, of all these anxiously engaged, and much interested leading men and others, is that little rebuke administered, and again referred to? What are the ear-marks of "overreaching anxiety"? If I knew, and found such ear-marks on myself, I would surely clip them off if it is deemed a dangerous and sinful characteristic. But I have always heard that anxious zeal, though in a mistaken cause, is even commendable, and should not be rebuked, but guided by the wise, into the proper channel. This rebuke, if not accompanied by a pointing out of the characteristic which is deemed bad by being "overreaching," nor by a pointing out of the right ground to be taken in this discussion, whether the affirmative or the negative, or some middle ground, does not become very enlightening. Honestly, now, should honest zeal fear a rebuke that does not purport to come from God, nor carry with it sufficient to enlighten the mind of the zealous as to the error, nor point out the wrong nor the right, neither the wrong-doer? Honestly I do not see the pertinency of it, nor do I feel the least rebuke from God for my honest and sincere zeal in this discussion. Hence I conclude that the rebuke must be for the "other fellow." If we are to welcome the cloud for a time that the rain may come, then welcome this discussion both pro and con, that the clouds of doubt and misunderstanding may be dispersed, so that the raindrops of truth let down by the clouds (discussion) may cause the fruit to grow in the sunshine. Let me say in conclusion that I fear God, and his words to do them, and fear nothing else; and what I have said on this subject is because of that fear, and honest zeal. And if I am wrong, and have given wrong interpretations of scripture that I have quoted, that same honest zeal will guide me, together with my intelligence, to change my views only when a better explanation is given, which, if possible to be given, I hope to hail with joy. Thus shall I remain, trying to work for the uplifting of fallen humanity.

SHOULD MODERN PROPHETS BE DEFENDED?

It is sincerely believed by many pious people that God does not reveal, and has not since the days of John the Revelator revealed himself to mankind through prophets. Such belief, however sincere, is true or false—it aids, or hinders, the onward march of the kingdom of God.

Truth and error being so wide apart, the most ordinary mind should be enabled to know by an appeal to the Bible and reason whether prophets should or not make their appearance among men.

God lives, and because he lives, there can be no conclusive evidence of his nonexistence. So in regard to God revealing himself through prophets: if it be true, there will be nothing in the Bible, or out of it, to lead to a negative belief. Whatever is presented must from the very nature of the question be overwhelmingly in favor of the doctrine or altogether against it.

THREE MEDIUMS OF COMMUNICATION CHOSEN.

God in the beginning manifested himself to the world through at least three different channels: the visible creation, the consciousness of man, and through prophets. The medium of communication through prophets was the chief means employed by him to make known his will; and the revelations given through them from time to time (not all at once) constitute in part the Bible as we have it. If the prophets were not the chief means, why was the Bible given through them,—those revelations, the acceptance of which brings eternal life and the rejection of which brings damnation? Since prophets were the principal medium employed by the Lord to unfold himself, it is of great importance to know if what the world says is true: that God has ceased revealing himself through prophets—the chief channel—but continues unfolding himself through the visible creation, and the consciousness of man.

As we view the physical universe we are awed like a child when looking at that which is majestic and grand. We see proofs of an Architect's planning as clearly as we see the intelligence of an architect displayed in the construction of a magnificent, well-constructed building. We might as well be told there was no builder of the building as that there was no Creator of the earth. The rich soil and seeds, the rains to make all vegetation grow, and a sun to ripen the fruits that we may live, "reveal" the loving watchcare of God over us, and that the earth was created to be inhabited. The beautiful verdure and the songs of the birds reveal that God was pleased to have us surrounded by what would conduce to our happiness. Whether we look to the heavens, or to the trees, flowers, and animals of earth, revelations come to us unfolding the love, power, and glory of God. The visible universe continues to reveal, and if that means were rejected of God how much would be lost!

Astronomers inform us that the earth is but one of a number of planets of the solar system, and that the solar system is but one system of untold myriads as they appear in the telescope. We are almost lost as we gaze into the immensity of space and see the blazing suns. Even the solar system bewilders our minds to contemplate it, and as we endeavor to follow the various planets around the sun and form an adequate conception of their orbital courses, our minds are fatigued—we can form no just conception of them. But the revelation comes to us from our observations, that God is able to do what he has promised through the prophets. Surely, if a man die, God can “raise him up at the last day.” And in looking at our bodies we are led to believe that since God had the power to bring us into existence, he will have power to bring to pass the resurrection of the dead, for the latter act will require no greater effort on the part of God than the bringing us into our present state of existence. From such revelation of God’s power shown forth in the physical world, we are led to believe he can and will cause us to arise from the dust the second time.

The heavens being so bright and glorious it dawns upon us that the life to come may be just as glorious as was prophesied by Christ and the prophets. No wonder man in his sins can not see the glorious personage on high! When even his works cause us to wonder and adore.

As we see the shining orbs moving in their beauty and perfection, within the bounds of law, the revelation comes to us, in harmony with the prophets, that we, too, should so move within the bounds of God’s law if we wish to dwell with him.

The Lord is worthy to be praised for the revelations of the visible universe that turn one’s poor, doubting spirit, into hope. Space is boundless; it enables one to believe that God is infinite as he said through the prophets. Eternity has no beginning nor end. If that be, can not the God of the prophets be “without beginning of days or end of years”? We can not see how eternity can be, nor can we see how God can be an eternal Being. The eternity of time and the eternity of God are beyond all reasoning, yet we accept the fact of each, for it is easier to think of eternity than of a time when there was no time; and it is easier to think of God as having always existed than to think of a time when there was no God. The knowledge of each comes to us intuitively—is a direct revelation from God to the soul. We know, too, intuitively, that we are dependent beings. It is also revealed through the consciousness of man that there is a supreme Being; hence, mankind, if not acquainted with the revelations of God through prophets, cut down a tree, make a god, and bow before it.

For thousands of years God was heard through the prophets, seen through the universe, and oftentimes spoke peace to the souls of men.

GOD “CHANGES NOT.”

Why did God start revealing himself through those three mediums: the visible creation, consciousness of man, and prophets, if he did not intend to continue? He has continued to this day to reveal himself through two of the means he chose in the beginning, and it is not likely that he has discarded the chief means—through which our most precious revelations have come—and retained the lesser. Changeability does not follow in the wake of God’s progress. We look upon man and find he has two ears, two eyes, two hands, two feet, one head, etc.,—the exact counterpart of man in the creation—God has not changed the form of man with which he started. God does not experiment as does man, for he sees the “end from the beginning.” Since God still uses two of the mediums chosen in the beginning, and revealed himself through the third for more than four thousand years, it is not probable that the third means (prophets) was discarded after so long a use.

If God ceased to reveal himself through prophets nineteen hundred years ago, why did he not cease as well to reveal himself through the visible creation and the consciousness of man? If any means was to be rejected, the greater ought not to be dealt with first—and yet it is said the chief instrument has been “done away with,” and the lesser continued.

In the beginning God started with the sun to give light to the universe and with prophets to give his will to the world. We know he still uses the sun—we are told he does not use prophets. One was appointed to give light to the eye; the other was appointed to give light to the soul—let both stand in the places appointed by God and shine, for the eye is not of more worth than the soul. The spark of “life” breathed into us has not ceased to reveal to us many things intuitively. The universe, of which the earth is a part, has not discontinued revealing to us the greatness of the One on high. We can not believe the other means has been abolished. If men reject revelation through living prophets, they should be consistent and reject the revelations of God that come through the physical universe and through their own souls, for God employed one means like unto another, and I repeat, why did he choose those methods of revealing himself to man if he did not intend to continue? God says he “changes not.” (Malachi 3: 6.)

The Lord did not choose one means of unfolding himself, or two, but at least three. Reject any one of those means and God is, that far, not revealed to our understanding. If the Lord revealed himself to mankind simply through prophets and not through the physical universe, men could not believe that the prophets told the truth, and when prophets would speak of the will of God, his love, and kind watch-care over all, they could not see examples of such love and care, and looking into a planetless sky and on a barren earth would ask: “How are we to know these things?”

God did not choose to reveal himself through prophets alone, but through the boundless universe as well; hence, men when they heard the revelations through the prophets could look upon the broad universe, and seeing the wondrous things there, not contradicting, but in affinity with the words of the prophets, would exclaim: “These things may be true!" Looking out upon the history of the past and considering the needs of the present, are we not led to believe that it may be true that God will speak through modern prophets?

But one may go to God and ask and receive for himself a knowledge of the matter. It must be true that man can do that for all creation glows with the thought of going to God—our Father—and receiving. If the principle is true in one part of the universe, it must be true in every other part—hence if we faithfully seek we may know. Our experiences in life enable us to believe that Jesus laid down a true law when he said, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you."

No man should labor with an empty purpose; without desiring to bring gain to his fellow men. What would be gained by rejecting the revelations of God through the physical universe? What is gained by rejecting the means of communication through prophets? How much is lost by denying the privilege of going to God to inquire if "these things" be true!

It is reasonable to believe that since God did, for four thousand years and more, work through the instrumentality of prophets and inspired men, he will now carry on his work in the same way. If he did for so long a time work through the instrumentality of inspired men, but now sanctions the "blind leading the blind," has he not changed?

CAN WE AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT PRESENT REVELATION?

The infidel has said the world did not need revelation to guide—reason was sufficient. Many believers in the Bible say inspiration or revelation has ceased—thereby showing their distance from God and their dependence on reason. If man can by his reason alone understand the things of God, why were the Scriptures given by inspiration? Nations have, by relying on their reason alone, worshiped idols; and the heathen of to-day following the light of their reason without revelation, worship gods of wood and stone.

We can not comprehend and find out God's plan for our government only as he reveals or makes it known. Jesus said, "No man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him."—Matthew 11:27. Paul said, "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost."—1 Corinthians 12:3. We can not know that Jesus is the Lord except by revelation. It was not "flesh and blood" that revealed to Peter that Jesus was the Christ but the "Father in heaven." (Matthew 16:17.) Multitudes saw Jesus in the flesh, as he walked along the dusty roads, and were none the wiser—they did not believe in "present revelation." They "knew God spake unto Moses" and the prophets, but they did not believe God spake in their day.

The greater part of the religious world say we do not need prophets—we have the Bible. In olden time did not the Jews have the Bible (Old Testament), yet God sent them prophets? Since the Bible was given by inspiration, is it incredible that inspired men should be continued to unfold its teachings? The scribes of Christ's time misinterpreted the law—they were uninspired. But what man, when inspired, ever misinterpreted the law or Bible? Does not the divided state of Christendom make known that the Bible interpreted by uninspired men results in divisions, dissensions, and sects? If the Bible, without inspiration to lead, is sufficient in our day, why was the Bible alone not sufficient in the days of the Jews—why did they have prophets, inspired men as well?

As a result of inspiration the twelve apostles taught one gospel—harmony marked their teachings. But times have changed greatly since then!

The Mosaic system was "typical" of the grand system to come under Christ. Paul says the law was a "shadow of good things to come." (Hebrews 10:1.) Is the gospel taught by uninspired men the substance of which the law with its inspired men was the "shadow"? Should not the substance be more real, at least as good, as the shadow?

We can not afford to be without present revelation, since, without it, we can not know the Lord; and because, without it, many questions necessary to the government of God on earth must remain shrouded in doubt. The existence of so many churches teaching different ways to be saved reveals that there is obscurity somewhere—lack of divine light—either in the Bible or in the teachers of religion, or else, lack of matter revealed on the points in controversy.

If confusion reigns by reason of uninspired men, why not "pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest"? (Luke 10:2.) If lack of matter is revealed on some point such as the duties of a teacher, deacon, elder, seventy, evangelist, or apostle, or if it is not clearly revealed who shall baptize and administer the Lord's emblems, why not go to God and "ask and receive"? Does the Bible anywhere say what all the duties of the above officers are? Does it anywhere say every member of the church has the right to baptize? Does it anywhere state that any one has the right to administer the emblems of the Lord's supper? If not, who shall dare proceed without knowledge? There is no danger in receiving revelation from God, for what comes from him will not contradict his word found in the Bible.
“FALSE PROPHETS.”

A portion of scripture often employed to show that prophets have ceased is the following: “Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep’s clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves.”—Matthew 7:15. The strongest advocate of modern prophets accepts that quotation without comment, as a guide, which, if followed, will prevent being imposed upon; for “false prophets” would contradict not only the revelations of God through “holy men” and the revelations of the physical universe, but also what comes through our own souls, and confusion would be the result. Jesus does not warn the church to whom he was speaking against the principle of revelation and all prophets, but against false prophets. “False christs” and “false teachers” are spoken against in the Bible as well as “false prophets.” If “beware of false prophets” means beware of all prophets, then, beware of “false teachers” means reject all teachers, and beware of “false christs” means there shall come no true Christ!

In the words quoted above Jesus did not teach that there should not come true prophets, for he goes on to give a rule by which men could know the prophets, whether true or false. He said, “A good tree can not bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. . . . Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them.”—Matthew 7:18, 20. Had Jesus intended there should never come prophets, he would not have given that rule, but would have said: ‘Beware of all prophets!’ but he did not, for in so doing he would have cast reproach on one of the means ordained of God for making known his will.

Jesus did not speak against true prophets, for he says in Matthew 10:41: “He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet shall receive a prophet’s reward.” The negative of this would be: He that does not receive a prophet in the name of a prophet shall not receive a prophet’s reward. He who receives a prophet and obeys the words of the Lord given, is entitled to the same reward as the prophet; for both have obeyed the Lord. He who rejects the prophet (the kind Jesus had in mind) will not receive the reward of the prophet, for not only is the prophet rejected, but also God, for he sent the prophet. The man will not receive the reward for he has rejected the means leading to the reward. Cause and effort must not be dispensed with when dealing with the things of God.

There can not be a “false prophet” without there being a true one, on the same principle that there can not be a counterfeit coin without there be true currency. The false prophet and counterfeit coin must exist by virtue of being an imitation.

THE BIBLE DEFENDS TRUE PROPHETS.

We read in 1 Corinthians 12:28: “And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily, prophets, thirdly, teachers.” Here it is as distinctly stated that God set prophets in the church as that he set teachers there. “Whatsoever God hath joined together, let no man put asunder.” By what rule of interpretation is one of those officers to be discarded and the other retained?

There were prophets this side of Christ’s death, during his life, and in the ages before. Of the prophets this side of his crucifixion we read of Agabus, who prophesied of the sufferings which awaited Paul (see Acts 21:10, 11); of those in the church at Antioch (see Acts 13:1); and all know of John the Revelator, whose prophecies are found in Revelation. John the Baptist, one of the greatest prophets that ever lived, prophesied in the days of Christ; and so did good old Simeon. (See Luke 2:34.) The prophets Isaiah, Jeremiah, Hosea, Ezekiel, Malachi, and many others, prophesied in the days before Jesus was born in Bethlehem.

The wise man said: “That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past.”—Ecclesiastes 3:15. God revealing himself through prophets before and after Christ’s earthly life, and during his life, proves the truthfulness of the above words. Believers in the Bible do not limit the times before Christ when prophets should appear to men; why should they limit the times after Christ’s death when prophets should come with the message of the Lord?

The Jews rejected God’s method of manifesting himself, and fought against it, hence Jesus said to them, “O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stoned them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not. Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.”—Matthew 23:37-39. Because they killed the prophets and rejected those who were sent unto them, their house was left to them desolate. They were not to see the Lord, henceforth, till they should say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. If the Lord did not put his protecting arms around the Jews because they cast out the prophets and killed them, and did not shield them, will God shield those who now say, “Away with the prophets,” and cast them out? Is an act done by one a crime, but when done nineteen hundred years later a virtue? Verily, no! If the Jews were not to see the Lord till they should say, “Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord,” are we more favored, can we reject those who “come in the name of the Lord” and still bask in the sunshine of God’s approbation?

The prophet Amos says, “Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.”—Amos 3:7. God, in all ages, has (in harmony with the words of Amos) revealed his will to prophets, with whom he wrought conjointly to establish his work on earth. He revealed his will to Noah; Moses was recognized as a channel of communication to the people of his day; John the Baptist was sent to "prepare the way of the Lord." In every instance he revealed his secret to prophets when he had a work to be done. Turning our eyes to prophecies concerning the latter days, we see in the distance the establishing of God's work on earth. If we admit he is connected with a work, we should not deny such work being surrounded by a miraculous atmosphere; for, whether we look at the creation, the days of Noah, the deliverance of Israel from Egyptian bondage, or to Christianity—the power of God was there.

THE COMING OF INSPIRED MEN SPOKEN OF.

The great event prophesied in days of old and anticipated by the people of God in all ages—the coming of Christ—is to be preceded by the work of the Lord, for Isaiah says, "Behold his reward is with him, and his work before him."—Isaiah 62:11.

Malachi says:

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years. And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the adulterers, and against the false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts. For I am the Lord, I change not.—Malachi 3:1-6.

This prophecy no doubt refers to the second coming of the Lord, for the following reasons: Jesus did not come "suddenly to his temple" nineteen hundred years ago, but was born as a babe in a manger. Men could "abide the day" of his first coming, but "who may abide the day" of his second coming, when he appears in power and great glory, and is "like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap"? The offering of Judah and Jerusalem, nineteen hundred years ago, was, "Crucify him, crucify him"; whereas, when he comes (as spoken of in this prophecy) "suddenly to the temple": "then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years." Jesus did not come to "judgment" the first time, for he said "I came not to judge the world, but to save the world" (John 12:47), while he is here referred to as coming "to judgment"—clearly pointing to that time when he shall come in the "clouds of heaven" and his reward is with him, to give every man according as his work shall be.

But before that day, "Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me." When this messenger comes, or the one to whom he appears, will he come before the world saying, The Lord has sent me, or will he come saying, God does not speak any more—the day for prophets or messengers from the Lord has ceased? If that messenger has not come, he will come. Will those who deny present revelation and hoot at the idea of messengers coming from God be likely to know the time of God's visitation? The "messenger" must come, for a holy prophet has so testified.

John the Revelator, writing about 96 A. D., says that a voice in heaven told him to come up there and see "things which must be hereafter." (Revelation 4:1.) He records:

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come.—Revelation 14:6, 7.

This angel was to come with the "gospel" to be preached to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people and it was to be in the "hour of God's judgment."—that is, in the last days. Since the Lord employed men in the past to preach the gospel he will no doubt commit the gospel in the last days to men to send forth to the whole world. Some man or men will, then, in the last days be visited by an angel, to whom will be conveyed the authority to execute the Lord's work. Angels in days gone by appeared to men and committed work to their hands. (See Revelation 22:8; Zechariah 2:3, 4.)

In Revelations eleventh chapter is found an account of what two prophets, who are yet to come, are to do: "These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will."—Verse 6. If it is unscriptural for prophets to come later than the first century, this much of the Bible is false; but if these two prophets are to come, the belief that prophets have ceased making their appearance to men is farther from truth than the Southern Cross is from the Polar Star!

THE APOSTASY OF THE CHURCH WOULD NECESSITATE DIVINE DIRECTION IN ESTABLISHING DIVINE ORDER.

Who will dispute a departure from the New Testament order having occurred at some time in the past? If the church came down the ages unchanged from the apostles till now, the same condition of affairs would obtain now that existed then. If there has been no change in the church, it should be like the church of the New Testament in organization, faith, doctrine, and practice.

Isaiah says, "The earth also is defiled under th inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant.”—Isaiah 24:5. The earth was to be defiled because the inhabitants transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broke the everlasting covenant.

Jesus taught, “He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.” The order is now reversed by many to, He that believeth and is not baptized may be saved. The ordinances may have been cast to one side as though they never had been instituted, and changed as though the Lord was not their author.

The laying on of hands was an ordinance in the church nineteen hundred years ago, and was observed (1) for the blessing of children (see Matthew 19:14); (2) administering to the sick (see Mark 6:5; Acts 28:8); (3) ordination to the ministry (see Acts 6:6; 13:3); (4) for the reception of the Holy Spirit (see Acts 8:17; 19:6; 9:17). Thus one might go on voluminously showing the difference between ancient and modern Christianity, but it is evident the results do not follow the preaching of the gospel which followed it nineteen hundred years ago: that fact alone proves apostasy. The same cause should produce the same results.

If there was no apostasy, why did such a movement as the Reformation begin, and the founding of other churches? If the church of God was on earth immediately before the Reformation, the Reformers should not have organized other churches. If it was not on earth, the apostasy was complete.

Why was it necessary for the angel to come from heaven to earth with the gospel, if there was to be no departure from its principles—why bring to earth what was already there?

God has said his work will be on earth in the last days. (See Matthew 24:3, 14.) It will, consequently, be a perfect work. A perfect work can not be established without inspiration—it could not in the days of Christ, it can not now. To what servant of the Lord in the Bible can we turn who was not inspired?

It was necessary for the angel to come from heaven to earth with the gospel, if there was to be no departure from its principles—why bring to earth what was already there?

God has said his work will be on earth in the last days. (See Matthew 24:3, 14.) It will, consequently, be a perfect work. A perfect work can not be established without inspiration—it could not in the days of Christ, it can not now. To what servant of the Lord in the Bible can we turn who was not inspired?

By turning to Jeremiah 6:16 we will see in part what is the work of a prophet. Jeremiah says, “Thus saith the Lord, stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way and walking therein, they say, “These things are done away.” Is it not likely, judging the character of God from the past, that he will now (as in the days of John the Baptist) among the “lo heres!” and “lo there” send one in the midst of the confusion to prepare the way of the Lord? The antediluvian world would not receive a prophet—we should not walk in their steps.

Since God gave Noah directions concerning the building of the ark, how long, wide, and deep it should be, no doubt he will give directions concerning the building of his church in the last days, for “as it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be in the coming of the Son of Man.” In what kind of house or church are men, if not in what was built by the Lord? Will the ark whose dimensions are not given of God be a refuge in the time of storm? No man has a right to build the church according to his fancy and then name it after some man, or attach the name of the Lord to it. There must be commandment and direction from God.

WAS JOSEPH SMITH A PROPHET OF GOD?

In about the year 1830, a young man by the name of Joseph Smith, in the land of America, claimed to be sent “in the name of the Lord.” In that respect he was like all Bible prophets who preceded him.

Such a claim deserves consideration before we say, “False prophet.” Jesus said, “By their works ye shall know them.”

When Joseph Smith presented his high claim, the gospel laws of nineteen hundred years ago were being transgressed; the ordinances were changed; consequently the covenant was broken. Even to this day alterations and violations of the law of life as preached in the first century are to be seen.

The prevailing belief of his time was that Christ would never come “in like manner as he ascended,” that the only coming of Christ was when he came at death to conduct the Spirit away. He declared that the coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven in power and glory, is an event that is near at hand.

The resurrection of the body from the grave was believed in by only a few. He said, “The earth will cast out her dead,” and the body will be resurrected, the spirit and the body reunited.

He stood in defense of all the ordinances of the early church, and taught them as being obligatory upon men now.

Such teachings came in contact with the long-cherished views of hosts of religionists and persecution followed, but he continued “contending for the faith once delivered to the saints.”

Whatever is said against Joseph Smith, no one can gainsay that since his claim and work the gospel in its fulness has been taught like in the first centuries. Is he a “wolf” in “sheep's clothing” who points out the “old paths” and tells men to “walk therein”? Had he come to the world saying, “Go on, you are all right; it does not make any difference what one believes just so one is sincere,” there might have been room for believing he was a “wolf” dressed in deceptive robes.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

He declared, “Signs shall follow them that believe,” for it was a promise of the Lord and would stand true though “heaven and earth passed away.” When such teaching was presented many Christians wanted a miracle wrought to prove that Jesus told the truth!

He taught that God will not only hear prayer in this age of the world, but will answer the prayers of faith, for he is unchangeable. What glorious truths were revived!

He was the humble instrument in bringing forth (by divine direction) the same kind of organization that existed in the primitive church, viz.: apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, evangelists, etc.

He brought forth the “sealed book” of Isaiah 29 (which chapter please read).

He believed in God the eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.

He taught that through the atonement of Christ, all men may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel, viz.: 1. Faith in God and in the Lord Jesus Christ. 2. Repentance. 3. Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins. 4. Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost—and if they “endured to the end” in righteousness they should come forth in the “resurrection of the just.” He taught the doctrine of eternal judgment, which provides that men shall be judged, rewarded, or punished according to the degree of good, or evil, they shall have done.

He taught that a man must be called of God and ordained by the laying on of hands of those who are in authority, to entitle him to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.

He stood in defense of the powers and gifts of the everlasting gospel, viz.: The gift of faith, discerning of spirits, prophecy, revelation, healing, visions, tongues, wisdom, charity, brotherly love, etc.

Publicly and privately he maintained that the religion of Jesus Christ, as taught in the New Testament Scriptures, will, if its precepts are accepted and obeyed, make men and women better in the domestic circle, and better citizens of town, county, and State, and consequently they would be better fitted for the change which cometh at death.

Through life he ever affirmed that God had called him to his work, and finally, after much persecution, with never a conviction of guilt by a jury (before which he was often brought by his enemies) he sealed his testimony with his life’s blood—he was shot to death in cold blood.

The foregoing teachings, not to mention many prophecies he uttered with a “thus saith the Lord,” and which have been fulfilled, are his fruits. If he was a false prophet, what kind of “fruit” should be borne by a man of God? Think! Answer!

The ignorant sayings of some, such as, “The Saints look to Joseph Smith instead of Christ,” are too ridiculous to notice. How foolish some people think the Saints must be! We regard him as a man called of God to do his work—no more and no less. What denomination does not look to some man as being prominent in the founding of their church: there is Henry VIII, Calvin, Luther, the Wesley brothers, Alexander Campbell, and many others, all esteemed by their followers as great men. The difference is we look upon Joseph Smith as having been inspired.

Take away the claim of inspiration, and would not Joseph Smith have as much right to organize a church as any other man? But no man has that right inherent in himself. What is a church? or can any society be properly so called which is not founded on divine authority?

CONCLUSION.

Any work committed of God to man must have God and man in it. Whoever God calls to do his work, when he “sets his hand the second time,” will feel the shafts of ridicule and scorn from the worldly-minded, for they do not believe in servants of God; and from religious people, who do not believe in inspiration, who have “a form of godliness but deny the power thereof.”

The doctrine of polygamy has been charged to Joseph Smith, but that doctrine can no more be proved to have been his than that the doctrine of the Nicolaitans (Revelation 2: 15) was taught by the apostle Paul. All the writings of Joseph Smith, whether of a public or private character; all his utterances, in public and private, when speaking of the marriage state, provided for one wife only. If anything written by him, by revelation, or otherwise, existed, favoring polygamy, the church in Utah, founded by Brigham Young, would produce it at once, for they are in desperate straits to maintain their cause. Polygamy could not be denounced in stronger and clearer terms than it is in the Book of Mormon (the “sealed book” of Isaiah 29—a history of God’s dealings with the ancient people of America) which Joseph claims he brought forth by the power of God from records hid away by the people, which people archaeology now abundantly proves to have lived. Comparatively nothing was known of American antiquities at the time the book was printed.

The charge of “wine-bibber,” “Beelzebub,” “Nazarene,” did not prove that Jesus was not the Savior; the saints in Paul’s day being “defamed, and made as the filth of the world, and the offscouring of all things” (1 Corinthians 4: 13) did not prove they were not saints of God; and the charges of “Mormons,” “polygamy,” and “impostor,” do not prove that God has not set his hand in these latter days, and established his church, like in the days of old, wherein men may walk in the “old paths.”
We repeat that God will not reject what has always been the chief means of revealing his will, for, lo, so long, and continue only the lesser means. Should the spark of life go out, through which God speaks peace and knowledge to our souls, darkness would be our portion. Should God cease to be revealed through the visible universe, we could not in our present state form just conceptions of his power, glory, love, and infinity. If God has ceased speaking through prophets, who will call the world back to the Lord their God when they go astray?

Amos said, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." Surely the Lord is not doing nothing, therefore, the voice of the Shepherd will be heard, like in all the ages—through prophets—calling his sheep from crooked paths back to the true fold.

If we welcome those who come "in the name of the Lord," we are on the side of the people of God; if we say, "Away with them," we stand with the Jews. Paul M. Hanson.

Socialism Not Anarchy.

In Herald of February 14 there occur two articles widely separated in thought and doctrine. In one the writer confines his remarks to the Doctrine and Covenants, showing the social condition that should exist in the church, and had he taken the world or all nations of the earth as his theme, the result would have been a very good article on modern socialism.

The other writer seems to think there is no good in socialism. He is evidently laboring under a very great misconception in regard to what the claims of socialism are. Webster defines socialism to mean the doctrine that a community of interests is the best form of society. The brother states that socialists have been trying to solve a workable problem or theory, and have met with failure and downfall each and every time. I do not know of a single socialist principle, that has had a fair and impartial trial, that was a failure in the least degree. But I do know of failures that people have said were socialist; they were not, however.

Let me enumerate a few industries that are purely socialist in their nature, and let the reader judge whether they are failures or not: The United States postal system; our public schools; city fire departments; and, in many cities, water and gas enterprises, where owned and controlled by the public. Can any one think for a moment these are failures?

Study New Zealand a few moments, and you will find more of the socialist enterprises that are a grand success. The railroad system there is, as well as many other enterprises, owned and operated by the public, or government "community" if you please. The government there will sell you a yearly pass over the railroad for thirty-five dollars, and you can ride the whole time if you wish. Compare this with our American system, and another principle is gained for socialism. I might go on and mention many more, but this is sufficient.

A little farther along we find the following: "I suppose the socialistic agitation will still go on, bearing its unwholesome fruits of discontent, distrust, strikes, lockouts, anarchy, and murder."

Any man that has studied socialism half an hour ought to know that the things just mentioned are not the result of socialism but to the contrary. People do not need to be so ignorant when literature is so cheap and available. Many of these crimes are the result of oppression. Lockouts are by the capitalistic class. So far as discontent is concerned, I hope for its continuance, since all reformation in politics and religion that are of any worth whatever were conceived and born of discontent.

There is one peculiar feature I have noticed through all the discussions in the Herald, and that is this: When any of the writers wish to down the socialist movement they invariably compare it with the divine plan. By so doing they virtually admit, if not in word, surely by act, that socialism is so far in advance of any other system of politics that a comparison with such would be unfruitful for good to the old parties. Socialism declares for the public ownership and control of all public utilities; all industries that the people have to depend on for a livelihood; the manufacturing for use and not for speculation and profit; the stopping of the accumulation of millions in the hands of a few and making paupers of many, allowing every one the full product of his toil, thus lessening the hours of labor and creating more time for study, enlightenment, and refinement; the eliminating of child-labor from factories; the abolishing of the sweat-shop at starvation wages, and in the place thereof establish good, wholesome places for work. Many other things could be added, too numerous to mention here.

The socialist movement is, by far, more in harmony with the divine plan than any other political party of to-day.

It seems to me to test the value of any religion or politics, we should first ascertain what the claims of the party are by an investigation of the parties themselves, and not from the representations of an enemy.

Mothers’ Home Column
EDITED BY FRANCES.

Dear Sisters: When anything really good occurs, we want to let you all know it, and we take this manner of letting you all know how the children’s home fund is increasing. Small sums have been coming in from different parts since the conference, until the amount had reached somewhere about $1,000.00, when, last week, we received from Philadelphia local the generous sum of $532.06, which has raised the amount to about $1,500.00. Does not that look as if we might soon begin to think about beginning to build a home? The Philadelphia sisters have done nobly, and we hope that their good work may be an incentive to others to go and do likewise.

We want also to tell you of the good work of a sister who has this work at heart. She went about among the sisters of her branch and secured over twenty yearly subscriptions to the leaflet. To be sure the most of them were for small numbers, but they are in the hands of twenty-two sisters who will see that they are distributed where they will do good. Now are there not others who can do just such a work as that? We need just such help, to place these readings where they will be helpful. Do not think because you do not need them, there are none who do, and would be glad of them.

While we have so much to encourage us in our work, let us press forward and do all that we can to make it a success. All orders for leaflets should be sent to Mrs. R. C. Smith, 214 South Spring Street, Independence, Missouri. All other money should be sent to Mrs. M. E. Hulmes, Independence, Missouri.

MRS. R. C. SMITH, President Daughters of Zion.

Shall the Children Help?

Dear Mothers: With Sr. Smith’s letter before us the occasion seems opportune for calling your attention to the fact as stated in Zion’s Hope that Bishop Kelley has consented that all except three thousand dollars of the money sent in this year as Christmas Offerings, shall go toward building the home for children, which the Lord has said should be built just as speedily as would not interfere with other church-work.

Last year the children sent in to the Bishop nearly six thousand dollars, and we are firmly persuaded that with your help, together with the help of our large army of faithful Sunday-school workers, they can do even better than that this year. But much will depend upon you—upon the help and encouragement the children get at home.

Last year you made a special effort that the one hundredth birthday of God’s prophet might be honored at the same time you honored the birthday of God’s Son. Since then the Lord has given a special commandment to his church to build a home for his homeless little ones. Is there a cause in all the wide, wide world to so touch the heart of a mother as this? You whose little ones are clothed, fed, and tenderly cared for, who are sheltered in homes you have provided, shielded there from the fierce storms and temtations of life which are hurled against those other homeless little ones, is there no duty you owe to them? Is there no voice speaking to your soul of their needs, their desolate, helpless, unloved condition? We know there must be—know that the voice of the Master is saying to you as it said to Peter in the long gone years, “If you love me feed my lambs.”

Nor is this all. We know that you will obey that voice, and that this year shall testify—by the works you do in obedience to this later commandment of the Father—of your love. As it was last year—as it has been all previous years—it is the fragments we are asking you to help the children gather up. You who planned and did so well last year, we ask that you will not grow weary in well-doing; and you who failed to labor then—if any such there be—we ask, Will you not help by planning for and encouraging the children to attain even better results this year? More anon.

Dear Home Column: I have often thought I ought to do my part of the writing for this department, since I so enjoy the letters from others, so will add my experience with my children, and perhaps it will aid some young mother not to be harsh with her little ones. I believe we will reap a rich reward, both in the present and in after-years, if we have the proper respect for the feelings of our children, and I do not believe they will confide in us if we do not. And where can there be any comfort obtained from them if we do not have their confidence?

It has been my experience to spare the child and not burden it with the rod. I always think these little pure, innocent beings belong to God, and we have no right to abuse them. And again I think how quickly I would resent a blow. I would not feel much like kissing the hand that dealt it. Therefore I could not except my child to love me if I treated him to blows in place of reasoning with and showing him how he was grieving mamma by doing wrong. And, dear sisters, I do not believe there will be much trouble between mamma and the children, if mamma takes her children to God in prayer every morning at the beginning of the day, before Satan has a chance to send in his evil spirits to possess some of them.

I have heard some say, “Oh! with the bustle and hurry of getting to work in the morning, or getting the children off to school, it is so hard to get them together to have morning prayers!” But, dear sisters, that is where Satan takes advantage of us, when we think we have not time to serve our God. God requires the first fruits, and if every mother will kneel with her children before the throne of grace and ask the Father’s kind watchcare over her little ones, and teach each one to do the same, for the day, there will be many, many jars that will never come into the family; many tender feelings saved a cruel dart.

I have often said I could not think of such a thing as trying to bring up a family without the help of God; and when I look around me and see mothers of the world trying to take the burden on their own shoulders, and expect their boys and girls to grow up to be an honor to them, my heart goes out in pity for them, because I know what a stupendous burden is there before them. And then when I see boys and girls in their teens war­ring against the wills of parents, I can trace back and so often see that the family altar was neglected. Oh! the great mistake of neglecting the family altar! But now do not neglect it. It has been my experience that I had trouble with the children every day that I got in a hurry with my work and forgot to pray with them in the morning; and then I would say to them, “See, we forgot to have prayer this morning!”

Sometimes some of them will sleep late and I get to work and then when they get up they get out to play or get in a hurry to get off to school, and so God is forgotten for a while. But both they and I invariably suffer loss.

Children are so much easier controlled when they have the influence of the Holy Spirit around them; and it is sure to be with us if we ask for it daily, and strive to live worthy. Then when evening comes, if mamma will only have prayers with them and thank the kind Father for his watchcare and his many blessings, and then read awhile to the children while papa looks over the paper, they go to sleep happy, and have a healthful sleep. I always see that none of them go to sleep unhappy, or afraid, or lonely. If they feel afraid of the dark or any­thing else, I tell them that the angels are around them, and will not let anything hurt them. This is true, for God does send his angels to watch over us, because I have seen them in vision around my bed, and I have seen them stand by my head till I went to sleep.

I know it is a mother’s duty to instill faith in the hearts of her children. Faith will cause them to pray. I believe chil­dren should pray as well as any one. I know that I gained a great deal of strength through prayer when I was quite a young child. I remember I used to go out in our play-house

when a child, all by myself, and pray, and I know now that I received the Holy Spirit, though I did not understand it then. I knew it made me very happy and caused me to feel kindly toward every one, and have higher thoughts; but I did not know it was the influence of the Holy Spirit, because I had not been taught that; yet I had always been taught to read and believe the Bible, and to be truthful, and to do unto others as I would be done by. I was always kept from evil companions, and how many times I have thanked God for this. Then after I became old enough I had no use for companions that were not moral and good. And so I keep my own children, and teach them that if they can not have good company, they are better off without any. I intend to keep them pure as long as possible, and when their character is formed they will not desire bad company, but will feel out of place in such.

I have had people say to me "Oh, don't stay so close to your children! They are bound to learn evil sometime." Well, if they must learn it sometime, then why not spare them from it as long as possible?

But there are evils, many of them, that I never became acquainted with, and would hardly believe that they existed long after I was married. I do not believe that there should be any "wild oats sown." Why allow pure minds to come in contact with things that will injure the spiritual progress? Why allow our children to learn evil so long as we are able to prevent it, when they have got to waste so much time in unlearning when they might be going ahead? We would not teach or allow anyone to teach our children that twice two was ten, whereas we know they would only lose time in unlearning that and in learning it right.

I always was anxious to see any good cause progress. It worries me to see any time lost. There is a certain prize at the end of the race. If we take the wrong road the farther we go on that road the more time we lose, and have to come back and start right.

Good books are such a help to parents, teaching children the right way. Everything they read leaves its impress and has influence. I never allow a novel in my house; but always something that instructs and also inspires to higher life.

Another thing I would like to say to young mothers: Do not allow cards or card-playing in your house. Never mind who it offends. If you can not reason with them without their getting offended, let them go; you are better off without such friends, and you would better offend men than angels. I do not believe angels would hover over us and encourage us in anything that leads to so much evil.

Not long since a very warm friend of my husband's came in to spend the evening. After a while he proposed a game of cards. I did not wish to offend him, so I spoke as kindly as I could, but decidedly told him that I did not allow such things in my house. I told him I did not wish to offend him, neither did I wish my son to grow up to offend me or their God, and I hope they will never learn anything about cards.

There are so many things that will interest boys and keep them home to which there is no evil attached. I give my boys their freedom at home, teach them to be neat and clean, and not take their litter in the front rooms; and teach them order at all times; yet I let them whistle and cut paper, make boats, and give them goods to make sails, and do lots of things for them, in their play; and they think mamma must see everything they make, and pass an opinion on it; and as they grow older we can keep right up with them, enjoy what they enjoy, even if we would rather do something else. If we succeed in keeping them in the way they should go, we will be well paid, and also receive our reward hereafter.

Letter Department

Terlton, Oklahoma, June 29, 1906.

Editors Herald: Leaving my home, at Holden, Missouri, on May 7, I started for my field of labor—Northern Oklahoma—and landed in Blackwell on the 8th. Not being able to find any of the Saints, Bro. W. D. McKnight having moved to Gage, Oklahoma, I went on to Pond Creek the same day, and walked out to Bro. A. M. Crawford's. Not finding any other place for preaching, I soon began work on the streets of Pond Creek, continuing until the 18th, when I was joined by Bro. W. M. Aylor. We continued the street-work together, having only a fair hearing. On Sunday the 20th we occupied in the courthouse; had quite a good hearing. Preached on the streets again on Monday night. Storm hindered us on Tuesday night, and on the 22d we came to Morrison. From thence we came about eight miles and held forth over the following Sunday at Royal Prairie Schoolhouse; thence to Eden Center Schoolhouse, where we held forth for nearly one week—except what time we were hindered by the rains. While there Bro. Aylor baptized one—Sr. Edith Beard. Her husband and a number of others are friendly and apparently interested in the work. The interest here is the result of the joint effort of Brn. W. M. Aylor and E. L. Henson.

Our next base of operations was the city of Stillwater, using the court-house and the streets—mostly on the streets, for notwithstanding we advertised our meetings for the court-house in the papers, and by chalking the sidewalks, not many would come; but on the streets we had a good hearing, and usually good attention. Of course we had our Bihaston telescope organ with us, which was quite a help. We made our home with Bro. Samuel Patton and daughter Clara; we were also kindly assisted and cared for by Sr. B. F. Knowles and family. While here we were privileged to attend a part of the graduation exercises of the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, which we enjoyed very much. This is a splendid institution of instruction, and a wonderful opportunity for the youth of Oklahoma, as the tuition is free.

On the 16th of June we came to Terlton—noted as the place of the reunion of 1905. We held meetings in the schoolhouse over Sunday, and on Monday set up the old tent and commenced meetings, and have continued till the present. We are having good interest. One was baptized by Bro. Aylor on last Sunday. Many are almost persuaded. Quite a few have been baptized here in the past. The interest here, I believe, is mainly due to the past efforts of Bro. Aylor, seconded by Brn. H. O. Smith and E. L. Henson. The helpers in the reunion, no doubt, wielded their influence for good. Bro. and Sr. T. L. McGeorge were the pioneer Latter Day Saints in Terlton, and it was mainly through their efforts that an opening was made here. I should mention that Sr. Florence Waltz preceded Bro. and Sr. McGeorge in this vicinity, but was so situated that she could not do much for the work, but has ever been firm and steadfast in the faith. Now, there are about twenty-five members in this locality—twenty of them recently baptized. We expect to continue here till after July 4, and then go to Ripley; but the tent is too dilapidated to take with us. It has served its time. I expect to make an effort to get to Alva, in Wood County, a little later.

I wish to say to all, that I find the efforts of the Sunday-school and Religio workers to be more and more commendable.
and can heartily say, May God bless them in their efforts. The circulating library, such as is now being conducted in the Independence Stake, is especially commendable, and is, I believe, doing more good than many of its supporters have anticipated. A recent suggestion of a worker, that schools be provided with a local library of reference books, comprising all the publications of the church, is a good suggestion, and I hope that soon it may be adopted and carried into effect. It is just the thing needed. Surely we can rejoice to-day in the thought that along various lines there is a forward movement. How my heart thrilled with joy when the Daughters of Zion first suggested the establishment of a children's home. And now the adoption of the revelation that approves of their effort, and provides for the establishment of a sanitarium, is surely an indication of advancement.

May all take courage and move forward, is my prayer.

Yours in the gospel,

H. E. Moler.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, June 27, 1906.

Editors Herald: I have preached in Sandiegill, Amphion, Oaklan, Lima, Medina City, and Pipe Creek with good interest. I met with the Medina City Branch, June 1, in conference, which was well attended. Brn. O. D. Johnson and W. H. Davenport were there to do their part. The conference closed Sunday night. I remained there and held meetings till the middle of the week, with good crowds, then to Lima, accompanied by Bro. O. L. Adams. Reaching our destination, we found quite a number of friends, and upon making some inquiry found that a Campbellite preacher by the name of Furguson, who had held a debate with Bro. T. J. Sheppard, was living within three hundred yards of the place where I aimed to preach. He had baptized twenty-two there, from what I learned. He was getting along nicely. He had seventy acres of cotton and corn, and gets three hundred dollars a year for preaching. On Sunday, I was told that he would be after me as soon as I began my meeting. I met him the day before I commenced, and asked him to come to meeting. He said he would, but he never showed up. I heard afterwards he had a sore foot.

I met with the Bandera Branch Sunday, June 24; preached twice on Sunday; was called on Monday, June 25, to administer the ordinance of baptism to two, Miss Mary Ethel Mills, a bright young lady eighteen years old, and Calvin Callaham, a bright lad twelve years of age, a son of Bro. Joseph Callaham.

I have been blessed with the good Spirit in presenting the restored gospel to the people, and the free-will offering has been sufficient to defray my expenses from place to place, for which I feel very thankful and feel that the Lord will bless all that will assist in this work.

Editors Herald: Leaving home May 16, in company with Bro. S. K. Sorensen, for our field of labor, Fremont and Pottawattamie Districts, we made our first stop at Shenandoah, reaching there at ten minutes past seven o'clock in the evening, and were met at the depot by Bro. E. Wilcox, president of the branch at that place. As it was past supper-time, and his family away from home, he took us to a restaurant for supper, then to the home of Bro. and S. B. Cline, where we were domiciled for over Sunday. Thursday night we attended prayer-meeting in their cozy little church, at the close of which an appointment was made for preaching on Friday evening, the writer occupying with fair liberty. Being invited to stay over Sunday, notice was given for two services, one at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, Bro. Sorensen occupying with credit to himself and I think satisfaction to others, and the writer filling the evening hour. Monday at half past nine we took train for Silver City, to see what could be done there; but not finding it an opportune time for holding preaching-services, we thought best to go on to Hazel Dell, where the district conference was to be held. Stayed one night in Council Bluffs, the writer with Bro. S. Harding and family, Bro. Sorensen with Bro. Charles Fry. Meeting Bro. J. A. Hansen, Bishop's agent, and son of Bro. H. N. Hansen, in the city, we had a ride of about eleven miles, and were caught in one of the hardest rains we had seen for some time, but had time to take shelter in a barn before we got very wet. After the storm was over we went to the home of Bro. Hansen, where we stayed until conference was over. We met some kind-hearted Saints there, and enjoyed our visit very much. The conference passed off pleasantly, the preaching being done by the following brethren as named: J. Arber, Saturday night; Paul M. Hanson at half past ten o'clock Sunday forenoon; the writer at half past two o'clock in the afternoon; and S. K. Sorensen at eight o'clock in the evening. Much of the good Spirit was present at these services, and all felt pleased, and I think satisfied with the services held.

Bro. Sorensen and I stayed till Thursday, and held three more services, then went to Hamburg to attend the conference of the Fremont District. This being our first visit to this part of the State, we thought it would be a good chance to get acquainted with the people and conditions, and thus would know better how to plan our work. Here we met some of the workers of the district with whom we had a pleasant visit, but did not get very much satisfaction as to conditions obtaining, and as to labor in the district. Bro. Eli Hayer, the sub-missionary in charge, was present, but did not know any more about work in the districts than others of the missionary force, and in fact not so much as some that had labored in the two districts. His counsel was, "You know more about the work than I do; do as you think best." It seems to me at times that we are merely playing religion, in a kind of school-boy fashion, and I am not alone in this either. Our present system creates inequality, and discriminates against others of the missionary force. For one, I am satisfied that the "sub-missionary" is purely an innovation, and unwarranted in the law, and should be done away, and every one be set out as provided in the law.

I read in the law that the Twelve are to be the leaders in opening up the work under the direction of the Presidency of the church. Then, to aid them, they are to call upon the Seventy first; they, the Seventy, to labor under the direction of the Twelve. No chance for a sub here, any more than for one between the Presidency and the Twelve. I am of the opinion that should the Presidency undertake to place one there, that there would be an incipient rebellion at least. These two quorums are to open up the work, organize and set in order, then push the work into new fields, leaving branches and districts to the standing ministry: high priests, elders, and missionaries. Is this being done? How many of the Twelve are pushing out into new fields at the present time, and opening up the work in new places? And how many of the Seventy are pushing out, warning the world, preaching with a warning voice? How many, we ask, are doing this? I heard a member of the Twelve say at the last conference, in speaking to a question before the body, that they, the Twelve, had the advantage of others of the missionary force in that they were advertized ahead, and appointments made for them, and they would preach for a week or ten days, then on to other places the same way, thus reversing the order as provided in the law. We find fault with the sectarian world for perverting the gospel law. Are we any better than they, if we do the same thing? Why not appoint every one so that he can labor in harmony with his calling, or have mistakes been made in calling and ordaining to some of these offices? If mistakes have been made, who has made them? Has the Lord made a mistake in calling some to the office of high priest? I read that no man taketh this honor unto himself, except he be called of God as was Aaron.

It would seem from a statement made by the President of the church in his closing address at the last conference, that a mistake has been made in calling and ordaining high priests, or else the Twelve have made one, and have erred in judgment. The President in his address says: "We have not yet reached the period when we can carry into its fullest execution the requirement of ordaining high priests over districts and setting them there. And one of the reasons for that seems to be that our brethren fail to understand the qualifications, and as they speak of it—they cannot find presiding material." Now it seems strange to me that out of a membership of about one hundred and nine, forty of whom are laboring as missionaries, none can be found that are qualified to preside over large branches and districts, when under the law they are made the standing presiding ministers of the church. See Doctrine and Covenants 120:3: "The twelve and seventy are the traveling ministers and preachers of the gospel, to persuade men to obey the truth; the high priests and elders holding the same priesthood are the standing ministers of the church, having the watchcare on the membership and nurturing and sustaining them, under the direction of the presidency and the twelve." As I see it there is not a plainer statement in the law than this. The Twelve and Seventy are to travel, preparing places for the high priests and elders to occupy; then again pushing out unto new fields. For one I take exceptions to the statement that there is no presiding material among the high priests. I wonder how the Twelve would take it if the statement should be made, and come out publicly, that they were not qualified to fill the place they occupy, as provided in the law. I believe the Lord knows best about the qualification of those he calls to occupy in the different offices in the church. I believe that branches and districts should first be provided with proper presidents before high priests are appointed as missionaries. Districts and branches are suffering at the present time because of this lack of proper presiding officers. Many of the branches and districts are presided over by those that have to give all their time during the week to what we might call "secular work." Some are farmers, some are carpenters, some masons, and many other different kinds of employments, so can not give proper time to gospel work, and in caring for the flocks over which they preside. Many of these, if they could give proper time to their calling, would become efficient workers. But how is one to become qualified for his work, unless he be given a chance to occupy in his calling? How is one to gain experience in presiding unless he be given a chance to preside? If some of the Twelve could have their way, district and branch presidents would never preside when they were present.

At the late conference one of the Twelve speaking upon this question of presiding said, "Why, I have had to sit in the body while a priest presided at a business-meeting." What a terrible thing that was! How humiliated he must have felt to let a priest act in his calling when he was present. Now, I believe in respecting every one in his office and calling; but I do not believe in the usurpation of power. As the President said in his address, Give these men, high priests, a chance. "Throw them into the stream," and they will learn to swim. I believe the time has come when each should labor in his own office and calling. It is written in the law that seventies have no responsibility of presiding, but are to travel continually; and still we find them presiding over branches and districts, and high priests traveling as seventies, thus reversing the order as given in the law.

In Doctrine and Covenants 122:7, 8 we find the duties of the several quorums defined; and concerning organized branches and districts it says: "The twelve and seventy administering as those prosecuting the work of preaching with a warning voice, baptizing, organizing and setting in order, then pushing their ministry into other fields until the world is warned. It is the will of God that they do this; yea, verily, thus saith the Spirit, If they [the Twelve and Seventy] will now enter upon this work, leaving the burden of care in organized districts, or conferences to the standing ministry, under the presidency of the church; observing the law already given to ordain and set high priests or elders to preside in large branches and in districts, and also evangelical ministers, then will those officers set in the church be useful and he who gave the law be honored; the differences between the quorums be healed, confidence be restored and good will and peace come to the people as from a cheering fountain."

This law was given twelve years ago, and says that if now they will enter upon this, they shall feel a peace and vigor of mind surpassing what they have enjoyed in the past. Is it not worthy of a trial? Now the main reason that I have written is because of the conditions I find obtaining wherever I go. I find the need of it right here in these old districts. Things here need to be regulated and set in order. The law makes provision. Why not live to it?

Editors Herald: On July 5 I sail for England, where I am to labor for a time among my many relatives. While absent from my district, the work of the Bishopric will be attended to by Br. M. C. Fisher and George H. Gates. Br. Fisher of 104 Sycamore Street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts, will receipt for all moneys sent to him as tithes, offerings, consecrations, also for the home for children and the sanitarium. I trust all the Saints, young and old, will heartily respond to duty's call, for our finances are at a very low ebb, and the treasury needs replenishment. This law was given twelve years ago, and says that if now they will enter upon this, they shall feel a peace and vigor of mind surpassing what they have enjoyed in the past. BLAKE, Nebraska, June 29, 1906.

Dear Herald: This finds us out in the genuine sand hills. This part of Holt County is about as wild a looking country as there could well be. I have read about "cattle on a thousand hills"—here are the thousand hills but not so many cattle. Bro. Gamet and I ascended one of the highest hills, and I want to say that while the scene looked desolate and forsaken, yet it was "grand." The hills are all sand and nearly all blow-outs, with scarcely any grass. Yet there could be seen valleys and meadows of waving grass, beautiful with flowers, and many ponds of water, some of them up in the hills as clear as crystal, while others in the lowlands were boggy. We were out thus viewing the landscape over, we knelt down, and to the Father of all poured our souls in prayer. We had come to declare the gospel message to these few inhabitants; and as God in these the latter days has sent out fishers and hunters, we had come to find, if possible, even in these sand hills, some who would obey the gospel. And we have reason to believe that he whose eyes are ever watching, and who knoweth all the works of his hands, could hear us as well out here as in other places. Two families of Saints live here, Bro. J. L. Myers and Bro. William Crandell. We are staying with Bro. Myers.

We had wondered, if we should have meetings, where the people would come from; but through the energy of Bro. Myers, we made a tour around of about fifteen miles, was introduced to the people, and our purpose made known. I gave them all some tracts, a sod schoolhouse was secured, and several promised to come out. Good to their word, in the evening every seat was occupied, and we had excellent attention.

The second evening a storm arose and burst upon us in all its fury. Suddenly as I was preaching, a gust of wind put out the light. I rushed to shut the door; and it took all my strength to keep it closed. We, and the most of the congregation, stayed

till the storm was over, which lasted till in the morning about one o'clock. We took turn about preaching, and sang a number of the Saints' hymns, and thus the time passed pleasantly, and we got home safe.

To find these Saints we drove from Inman about fifty miles. The brethren thought it too far for us to walk, and right glad we are that they took pity on us, for we would have had a hard time getting here on foot. As it was, we got lost several times. No road could be seen. We had to cross the country the best we could, driving around numerous bogs, and crossing sand hills, and it was cloudy and raining. But we are here safe and sound, and with the good water and exhilarating breeze, and the kind hospitality of Bro. Myers, we are feeling fine and hopeful.

While at Inman it seems that our mission-work was to administer to the sick, who we are glad to say were blessed, which will be an additional testimony to them and us that "God is love."

We were up at Bonesteel, South Dakota. The branch there is not as much alive as it ought to be, but with the strengthening of some difficulties, we hope things will be better. We went out on the reservation, and in the town of Hersie secured a hall free of charge. We held forth there for some time, with good attendance and interest. We found four families of Saints there.

In the town of Manervi we preached once. The people did not want any more of that kind of preaching, so we left for other places, but this gospel of the kingdom is to be preached as a witness. So in our weakness we are sowing the seed wherever we can, seeking to live and work so that we may have the favor of our Master and Lord. Desirous for the prosperity of Zion, I am, Adolph E. Madison.

Brother Joseph: I want to relate to you my experience in regard to how I know that your father Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. I went to a prayer-meeting at the house of Bro. Frank Reynolds. I went praying, and I went in as usual and took my seat, and as the meeting progressed, all of a sudden, I was raised to my feet by the power of God; my eyes were closed tight, and these words were put into my mouth, "Joseph of old was a prophet called of God," and just as quick as I dropped to my seat and my eyes were opened. This I could not help saying, for in my humiliation my judgment was taken from me. I want this testimony to go into print as a witness to the truth that God reveals in these the latter days. Yours in love,

B. S. Shaug, M. D.

Extracts from Letters.

L. R. Devore, Floodwood, Ohio: "Lately preached the funeral-sermon of Sr. Ida M. Hull, who bore with Christian fortitude five long years of affliction. Ten days before she passed away she called the family to her bedside and said, 'Put your hand to my mouth, my breath is cold. There must be some mistranslation in the passage, 'Death is sweet to the righteous.' I feel the icy hand of death, and it is a horrible feeling.' Her breath was icy cold. She requested her husband to administer to her. He did so, and that feeling left her. The room was full of friends, and she said, 'Do you see anything?' Her husband answered, 'No.' 'Why, the Lord is here, and I want to go home.' Oh, yes, death is sweet to the righteous; never be afraid to come to this point; I am well paid for all the suffering I have endured.' She prayed, and requested the Saints to pray that the Lord would not leave her here longer. Every pain left her body. The Spirit rested upon her in power. She exhorted all to faithfulness, and bore testimony to the neighbors of the great latter-day work—that the end is near. The day she died she told them she would pass away the day closed, and she did."

Mrs. Mary I. Davis, Caldwell, Idaho: "There are only a few scattered Saints here. Though few in number, we need spiritual food, that we may be strengthened thereby, and are hoping that some elder laboring near us will come and preach to us. I do not know about getting a church, but I believe, as there are electric lights, that to preach on the streets would be the best way to reach the most people; and as we live here in town will care for the elder the best we can."

Richard Bullard, Boston, Massachusetts, July 2: "We sail on the morning of July 5, on the Arctic of the White Star Line. It is the largest vessel coming to this port, of 15,861 tons. Seven decks, height from top deck to keel 80 feet, length 600 feet, beam 65 feet, speed 16 knots. I will try to give a good account of myself while away, and hope to find among my many relatives a hunger for truth. I will meet with opposition from some, but that must be expected, as the same spirit which opposes the work here is busy there."

Bro. Joseph F. Burton, wrote to President Smith from Oakland, California, June 30: "It is after ten o'clock in the night but I desire to write you a few words before retiring as there will be no time in the morning; for, although it is midnight, we will sail on the Mariposa for Papeete at eleven o'clock in the forenoon. By letters from there this mail I learn that it is best for all interests concerned that we go on this boat, and I feel very hopeful of restoring those who apparently withdrew themselves. I had a pleasant letter from one of the presidents of that faction. The Saints of San Francisco gave us one hundred dollars and we bought food with it, which is now on board; and the Oakland Branch gave us forty-four dollars and forty cents which we take with us to pay freight and duty on what we have bought. The Saints have been very, very liberal and kind to us, and have provided us with everything needful to take with us, so that I go better provided with all things needful than ever before. A brother of Los Angeles sent twenty dollars also which was added to the one hundred dollars for food, and the bishop and his agents have done all they could for us, and have amply supplied us all. "Bro. Charles H. Lake and wife, Bertie, are well and will go with us. I will need the presence of the elder's Guide when we arrive in Papeete, for my wisdom must be the wisdom of the Lord if I do the good I wish to do. May peace be with you, and the Master's blessings be and abide with you, and all your household."

All teachers of the first primary or infant grade in the Sunday-school will please take notice that, the new book, First Primary Lessons, will be ready for mailing about the 15th of July. We regret that there has been any delay in the publishing of this book, but it has been unavoidable on account of the difficulties met in securing the cuts; but we believe the efforts to produce a valuable work for this grade will be fully appreciated when the book is used. We could have issued the book sooner, but it would not have been complete without the illustrations desired.

These lessons are edited by the committee appointed by the General Association, who have had this work in hand for the past three years. They have gone over these lessons, and revised and corrected where necessary.

The book will be profusely illustrated, containing about thirty-five full-page illustrations bearing on the lessons. It is issued in both pamphlet and book form. The pamphlet form will consist of a series of six numbers, each containing lessons for one quarter. These are to be used in order as numbered, beginning with No. 1, and following the lessons through to No. 6, which will cover one and one half year's work; then they are to be reviewed one year and a half, which will cover a three years' course for the primary grade.

In ordering pamphlets, please specify what number of these series is desired. Price will be 5 cents per pamphlet, making the total cost of the six pamphlets, 30 cents.

The book will be bound in full cloth and contain the lessons complete, the same as in the full series of the pamphlets. Price 20 cents per copy.

Send all orders to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

No Que Would Eat Alum.

FOOD THAT CONTAINS ALUM OR ANY ALUM RESIDUE IS UNHEALTHFUL.

Here is some interesting evidence upon the alum baking powder subject:

Professor A. S. Mitchell, of Milwaukee, late chemist of the Wisconsin Dairy and Food Commission, in testifying before the Congressional Committee, which was created to find some means to put a stop to the use of alum, paid this compliment to the manufacture of baking powders which have been in use for years without the slightest evidence of harm: "Careful analysis of the bread thus prepared shows a portion of the alum from the baking powders remaining in the bread as such and unaltered."

The fact that alum if taken with food into the stomach would be injurious is not questioned or disputed by any one. As scientific evidence would seem to prove that when food is raised with alum baking powder, some part of the alum remains in the food, the prudent course for the housewife is apparent.

MR. BRYAN DEFENDS THE AMERICAN BUSINESS MEN.

Mr. William J. Bryan made a good defense of the American business men in a statement made by him at Trondhjem, Norway, from which we make the following extracts, as given in Chicago Tribune for July 1, 1906:

... One of the chief causes of business crookedness in America is the custom of making the same man director in several different corporations which deal with each other. No man can serve two masters in business any more than in religion, and the man who is a director in two companies, doing business with each other, is apt to sacrifice the interests of one or the other...

The recent scandals are not the fault of the American people at large, for comparatively few business men have been found guilty of crookedness. The trouble is that these few are prominent and they have secured this prominence largely by figuring on the directorates of so many big corporations.

A great majority of the American business men are honest, but they are made to suffer in reputation by the lawlessness of a few. The quicker remedial legislation is adopted the sooner confidence will be restored at home and abroad. The regulation I've suggested also would put an end to the custom of using the names of big men on the directorate of corporations wherein they have little or no interest and who give no adequate attention to their duties.

In this Mr. Bryan is right. There is no just reason why the working, busy business man engaged in the lawful conduct of his business affairs should be held to be dishonest because a few, and that few too many, have developed the greed microbe latent in their organism, betrayed the trust of their associates, robbed the institutions represented by them as principal and leading men, forgotten the bond of common honesty, plundered the community, and thus become criminals.

Such men do not represent nor stand for the mass, nor the average business men of the United States. Mr. Bryan shows his Americanism and good citizenship in thus standing for the honesty of his fellow citizens.

There is a deal too much of doubting pessimism in the array of the evil doings going on in the world. The scoundrels, thugs, and robbers and thieves get unnoticed while the good men and true citizen pass unnoticed. Evil deeds are quickly reported while the good ones are left to the final reward. Too much notoriety is being given to the evil-doer.

A few days since Harry K. Thaw shot Stanford
White to death in a place of public resort; and now the press is filled with everything regarding the two men, their immediate relatives and their past lives. A bar of lawyers are engaged to defend the murderer, and for him will set up the plea of "emotional insanity," which being taken out of legal phraseology and reduced to the talk of the common people, means that Harry K. Thaw for some fancied wrong deliberately killed a citizen of the State, and having been arrested for the crime must answer at the bar of justice for the motive and the deed. Thaw is wealthy, and has a large retinue of rich relatives to aid in his escape from punishment—if money and employed legal talent can accomplish it.

It is to be hoped that in this case justice may be neither slow, nor miscarry; and the criminal be made responsible and punished for his crime, as should any other, whether rich or poor. Punishment for crime of the kind this man is guilty of should be swift and sure.

In the meantime the press will be filled with all the details that reporters can get hold of and so spread the story of crime abroad.

APPRECIATION.

We, of the Reorganized Church, do not ask the secular press to fight our battles against the intolerance or bigotry of other denominational religious bodies, but there is just enough pride and self-love in the best of us to make us sensible and appreciative of the kindly word spoken or written in behalf of our contention against what we believe to be evil and wrong and productive of sorrow, when we discover it. Bro. G. J. Waller sends us from Honolulu, Hawaii, a copy of the Pacific Commercial Advertiser for June 19, 1906, from which we quote the following leader:

The success of the constitutional system of the United States in the promotion of religious toleration and in the suppression of religious bigotry is one of the many evidences of the fact that it is founded on the deepest truths imbedded in human nature, under every form of government and in every age. Eschewing Paganism on the one side and dogmatism on the other, it embraces and enforces all the unities essential to modern civilization and progress.

In our national history there have been few instances of collision between so-called religious systems and the law. The most conspicuous is the Mormon church in Utah, transferred and established there by Brigham Young. From the time of the original migration to Utah in 1846, that church exercised civil as well as religious domination over its adherents and, for many years, enforced complete union between church and state, defied the laws, constitutional and statutory, and by methods which were criminal and bloody, sought to build a dangerous and brutal hierarchy in the midst of the Union. There are men still living who remember the Mountain Meadow massacre of 1857, for his leadership in which, after the lapse of years, Bishop Lee suffered the extreme penalty. The secrets of the Endowment House to a considerable extent have been revealed and have excited horror among intelligent Americans. The doctrine of plural marriages, which is simply polygamy, was openly avowed and arrogantly maintained, and, as the investigation in the case of Senator Smoot proved, while he is personally free from the taint, is still held by prominent and influential Utah Mormons. Only a short time ago, in this Territory, it was shown to have been at least theoretically promulgated among an impressive class of the native Hawaiians.

It became indispensable in Utah, and in all American States and Territories where Brigham Young Mormonism had spread, that the supremacy of American institutions and the sanctities of American life should be enforced. The process, however, was long and arduous and has not yet been completely successful. It involved drastic national legislation and effective executive and judicial action in the face of obstacles and determined hostility, that, for a lengthened period, appeared to be insuperable. And when at last perfunctory submission was yielded, never were the distinctions between generalizing profession and specific practice more clear and pointed than in Utah, before and even after its admission as a State.

The Advertiser explained some months ago that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was, as it still is, the uncompromising opponent of the Utah theocracy, and was advancing with rapid strides in the very citadel of that bitter antagonist of American institutions, which looks one way and rows another. The SAINTS' HERALD, of Lamoni, Iowa, copied the article in the Advertiser, and grouped together significant facts in its support. That paper is the accredited organ of the Reorganized Church, and, naturally, therefore, indorsed the views expressed. Lately, however, in a well-considered editorial, the Inter Ocean of Chicago, which is an American newspaper of wide circulation, repeated and enlarged upon the opinions of the Advertiser.

The American press has no concern whatever, in its public capacity, with the questions that divide religious denominations, but it is deeply interested in holding all denominations within the law. It is from this point of view alone that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has lately attracted secular attention throughout the United States. A similarity of names and the opprobrium which the Mormon church in Utah had excited, led to a confusion of ideas which tended to weaken the most powerful ally of the Government and of the American people in their efforts to suppress polygamy and other criminal practices that had been persistently upheld. The Utah body is called the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the addition of one word represents the fundamental distinction between law and lawlessness, between civilization, with the monogamous family as its unit, and revived barbarism, infused with arterial sensuality.

This reorganized church, of which Joseph Smith and his legitimate descendants have been the leaders, in common with one of the great historical ecclesiastical establishments, believes that revelation and inspiration did not cease with the last chapter of Revelation, but have been projected into modern times and will exist until humanity reaches its culmination. Its Book of Covenants, however, not only fails to conflict with American institutions, but positively and fully sustains them. It provides, for example, that murderers "shall be delivered up and dealt with according to the laws of the land." It declares that a man may have only "one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh." It asserts that no man can be justified, except by "befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land." It repudiates, in the strongest manner, the asserted revelation proclaiming the doctrine of polygamy, announced by the Utah Mormons in 1856, under the specious title of the "Eternity of the Marriage Covenant." Perhaps in no moral or religious instruction is the primary duty of every citizen more compactly or more impressively enforced: "Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdued all enemies under his feet."
From an American standpoint, and looking solely to the promotion of good citizenship, it is true that all religious bodies are on an exact level, to the extent that they harmonize, genuinely and virtually, with American institutions and with that lofty conception of social and political life which is the core and the leaven of American civilization. Obedience to law, not merely in terms but in spirit, is the plain and probing test, to which every man and every woman must submit who claims the rights and exercises the privileges of an American citizen. Anarchy or those vicious forms of socialism which assail the subordination that is essential to good order or deny the moral rights and exercises the privileges of an American citizen. Obedience to law, not merely in terms but in spirit, is the plain and probing test, to which every man and every woman must submit who claims the rights and exercises the privileges of an American citizen.

It sometimes does good to "see ourselves as others see us," though the reflection may not be flattering to us. On the other hand it may do us good to see ourselves as the good and conservative among the citizenship of the world may see us though it may be commendatory to us.

DOWIE DENOUNCED IN AUSTRALIA.

The Melbourne Age for May 28 reports a scathing denunciation of Dowie by his former followers in that city at the old Hibernian Hall, the place where Dowie found a refuge after he had been laughed out of the Exhibition, at the time of his last visit to that land:

The vast majority of the members of Zion Church in Melbourne have come to the conclusion that the self-styled "Elijah" is a false prophet, and they assembled last night to renounce him. "The Reverend J. S. M'Cullagh, officer in charge of the Christian Catholic Church forustralasia," it was announced, "will make a complete exposure of his infamies, and, with all the members, will make a public renunciation of Dowiesm." In addition to the church members, who are said to number two hundred, there was an assemblage of five or six hundred people, including many women, some of whom carried babies.

The "service" opened in a striking way. A young woman, wearing a linen overall and a student's cap, walked to the organ and played "The church's one foundation." An invisible chorus echoed from the back of the audience, and a few moments later there was a slow measured procession of the church-members to the platform. Mr. M'Cullagh read the twenty-third chapter of Matthew, and rendered its denunciation of scribes and Pharisees with not a little intensity. Briefly addressing the congregation, he said that he was faced with "one of the hardest things that he had ever had to do." With the exception of one, the whole of the church-members in Melbourne and suburbs were with him, and he had received a telegram from Sydney saying that all the members there had also renounced the leadership of John Alexander Dowie absolutely and for ever. He had spoken that afternoon from three till six about "some of the most shameful things that had ever been attributed to a man standing up in the name of a minister of the cross of Christ." They must "throw off the abominable and hypocritical yoke."

Mr. M'Cullagh had more to say to the same effect, and he was occasionally interrupted by hand clapping. Before he proceeded to his formal and more fiery denunciation, the members sang "Jesus is merciful," and the deacons made the collection.

Mr. M'Cullagh, who is a comparatively young man, commenced his main address amidst suppressed excitement. He took as his text the words, "Not every one that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom," and announced that he wished to be merciful as well as just. This was the charge against Dowie:

"Whereas John Alexander Dowie, founder of Zion City, has been found guilty of the violation of every one of the ten commandments, and whereas the overseers of Zion City have found him guilty of hypocrisy, criminal extravagance, embezzlement, misrepresentation, tyranny, destitute contempt for the sufferings of those whom he has pauperized, and of blasphemous claims of divine authority to cloak his villainies—therefore it is resolved that we, the members of the Christian Catholic Apostolic Church in Zion in Melbourne renounce his leadership for ever, and dissociate ourselves from his personal or his delegated authority."

There was another section to the resolution according support to Mr. M'Cullagh. When it had been read some of the elderly women present sighed deeply, saying, "Mercy," and others clapped. The preacher launched into a withering philippic. Every unfaithful steward, he said, would have to "take his gruel." Before Dowie negotiated for the purchase of the ten square miles in Zion City he was in debt. Money rolled in by hundreds of thousands of pounds to Zion City treasury. In one year he received nearly 1,000,000 pounds. He had misappropriated depositors' money, granted titles to lands that were mortgaged, and lived in gross extravagance. Members of the church in Australia and in Melbourne had sent 12,000 pounds for investment at 12 per cent—money collected from the aged, the widow, and the orphan on trust—and Australia had also sent to Zion City over 400 people, who had been "brutally robbed of their life savings." If the people opened their mouths they "were fired out of Zion neck and crop."

The preacher's merciful indictment was, on the whole, a severe one. Amidst great laughter he told stories of Dowie's alleged gallantries, denounced him as an advocate of polygamy, and pronounced the words "Elijah the Restorer" with bitter irony. Overseer Voliva, he observed amidst renewed sighs and laughter, was "in the know." Of over $25,578,000 subscribed for "stock" for "Zion" only $1,000,000 had been invested; Dowie had spent thousands of dollars in presents to ladies and others; his stables had cost 5,000 pounds, and he had disposed of 80,000 pounds in his "New York revival!" "to revenge himself on Buckley the Methodist." Meantime some of his followers were starving and begging.

When Mr. M'Cullagh stopped to take breath there was a murmur of dissent from the rear of the hall. The preacher met it by saying that the only thing that could be said against himself was that he had left another religious organization. He "had seen corruption in it," and knew that the "visions" of the lady who led it were "a pack of nonsense." The temperature of the sermon, or speech, mounted rapidly. "When I got this news," said Mr. M'Cullagh, "I took the poker from my fire and I made through the house to Dowie's picture. My family thought I had gone mad, but I was only just recovering from my insanity. It is a good thing for his old bald-headed pate that he is not in Melbourne now."

In concluding his impeachment, Mr. M'Cullagh called upon those members who renounced Dowie to stand up. A number did so. Then he called for the other side, and one of the "deacons" who sat on the platform arose. The preacher excitedly turned upon him. "If you indorse Doctor Dowie," he said, "I don't want you in my organization. I will ——." At this stage the audience took a hand. "Let him speak!" "Give him a hearing!" "No gag!" The demand came from all parts of the meeting. The preacher gesticulated and shouted in defiance. A Mr. McGrath was the leader of the malcontents, and his stentorian voice was undeniable. The elderly ladies made many pious ejaculations, while the younger ones vocally called for "Mr. M'Cullagh" or "Deacon," "Deacon," The... deacon for his part was not anxious to say anything, but the uproot continued. Mr. M'Cullagh announced that the deacon would be allowed to make an explanation on the following night. The audience shouted, "To-night! To-night! Fair play! Hear both sides!" and many rose to their feet. A young man of sporting appearance at length jumped up from a back seat. "I am not a member of this organization," he said, "but I want to see a fair go. You're weighting the deacon out of a chance, and —"

Thereupon the choir struck up "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," and the service closed. It was followed by many excited conversations in all parts of the "tabernacle."

FROM HAWAII.

By the courtesy of Bro. G. J. Waller, we have received a copy of the Pacific Commercial Advertiser for July 2, the Fiftieth Anniversary Number, devoted to an illustrated history of Honolulu and Hawaii in general. It contains over one hundred and twenty pages, is superbly illustrated, and altogether forms a valuable and interesting general history of the Territory past and present. A lengthy article written by Bro. Waller gives a history of the Reorganized Church in the Islands. An article descriptive of the Metropolitan Meat Company, of which Bro. Waller is the manager, is also included.
The territory of Hawaii is marching side by side with the country in material and general progress.
Her citizens, notwithstanding the almost tropical climate, are full of energy and are pushing the country to the front in development.

RESIGNATION OF BISHOP THOMAS TAYLOR.

A letter from Bishop Thomas Taylor, of Birmingham, England, to the Presidency, and Presiding Bishop Kelley, dated June 26, announces the resignation of Bro. Taylor. We excerpt from the letter, believing that the readers of the HERALD, while regretting the necessity for the release of Bishop Taylor from the active duties of the office to which he was called, will read with pleasure the good words this venerable man has to offer as his reasons for wishing the release.

The Presiding Bishop will appoint some one to look after the work left by Bro. Taylor, who, so far as known to us, is justly entitled to commendation for having performed his duties in an acceptable and approved manner.

During the past winter my affliction has become so acute as to prevent me from getting about, or writing. I had hopes that as the warmer weather approached I should recover some; but am sorry to say my hopes are not realized. I have therefore decided to relinquish the office of bishop of the church in the British Isles Mission, as I feel I can no longer discharge the duties and responsibilities; and it is not likely at my great age —eighty-one years—that I shall regain the full use of my limbs. Hence ask to be released from said office.

In asking you to accept my resignation I humbly and thankfully acknowledge the goodness and mercy of the Lord throughout a long and active life, nearly sixty years of which have been spent in the church.

In the office of bishop I have endeavored to discharge my duty according to the light and leading of the Spirit of truth; and whatever my shortcomings may be, I am conscious of having at all times but one desire, viz.: the glory of God and the honor of his church.

I also wish to bear testimony to the kind and generous assistance I have received from my counselors, Bro. C. H. Caton and Joseph Dewanup, Sr. Complete harmony has existed all the time.

I desire to be released from active responsibility from June 30, and have made arrangements with Counselor C. H. Caton to carry on the work, pending instruction from you as to what course is to be pursued for the remainder of the year.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. E. A. Smith, Burlington, Iowa, reports the baptism of three there on Sunday, the 10th, nice people, husband and wife, from Mount Pleasant, Iowa. He expected to attend the Nauvoo and Stewart­ sville reunions.

Bro. R. I. Wimmer, Prunedale, Monterey County, California, asks that some of the ministry in the field correspond with him with a view to labor at that point, where he has been trying to prepare the way for preaching.

Bro. Peter Anderson, of the Scandinavian Mission, reached his home, Stanberry, Missouri, on the 8th inst., after a fairly pleasant sea voyage, landing at Boston. He is in good health and writes hopefully.

Bro. Swen Swenson wrote from Skolgaten No. 34, Goteberg, Sweden, June 26, to Bishop E. L. Kelley, that he had reached Sweden June 24. Brn. John H.
Hansen and Peter Anderson having gone, he and Bro. David Lundquist were left to carry on the work in Sweden. Through the kindness of a son of President Joseph F. Smith of Utah, Bro. Swenson found the few members of the Reorganized Church.

Brn. Swenson and Lundquist had secured a rented room and were arranging for systematic effort in their mission.

It will be good news to some to know that the conditions incident to poverty are being relieved, if it be ever so slowly, as the following indicates, as appearing in the daily press of the day:

"According to a report issued by the census bureau to-day, there were in the United States in 1904, 103,176 persons in almshouses, and of these 111,817 were males.

"Although the number of almshouse paupers is increasing, the increase has not kept pace with the growth of population, and consequently the ratio of almshouse paupers to population is decreasing. In 1880 it was 132 per 100,000 population; it decreased to 177 in 1890 and to 101 in 1903."
Adam was driven from the garden and given a new command: Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and shall offer the firstlings of the flocks as an offering unto the Lord. After many days Adam is instructed by an angel. He is baptized, the Holy Ghost falls upon him, and he rejoices because of his transgression, because his eyes were opened, and he said, "In this life I shall have joy, and again, in the flesh I shall see God." Listen:

And Eve, his wife, heard all these things and was glad, saying, Were it not for our transgression, we never should have had seed, and never should have known good and evil, and the joy of our redemption, and the eternal life which God giveth unto all the obedient. And Adam and Eve blessed the name of God; and they made all things known unto their sons and their daughters. And Satan came among them, saying, I am also a son of God, and he commanded them, saying, Believe it not. And they believed it not; and they loved Satan more than God. And men began from that time forth to be carnal, sensual and devilish.

Not because their father Adam ate the forbidden fruit, nor that their mother Eva was in the transgression, but because they rejected their word and believed not, but loved Satan more than God, and would not accept the gospel of Christ, as the angel had taught it. Thus, then, it is with all men who reject the gospel, even down to our day. They become carnal, sensual, and devilish, having delight in all manner of evil, because evil rules in their hearts, for they love the evil, to say and to do, and call it good, and refuse the guidance of God's Spirit.

So, then, Adam and Eve had sorrow, not because of their transgression, but because of the wicked disobedience of their own children. Ever since men were upon the earth we find two classes: Those who were obedient and those who swore oaths, believed in secrets, did all their work in the dark, and they knew every man his brother. So they are, to-day. They have their secret upper chambers, their oaths, signs, grips, and passwords. Their works are in the dark. They know every man his brother. Men have lamented, saying, What might have been had Adam and Eve not eaten the fruit? Why not ask the question, What might have been had there been no secrets, or works in the dark, but that men had believed the angel’s message as taught to Adam and Eve in the gospel plan of redemption? Aye, would the world have known envy, hate, murder, and all the evils among men of which we read? The people of the city of Enoch came to perfection. They were taken up to God, never having tasted death. The Lord said, Zion have I blessed. The residue of the earth was cursed because of their disobedience.

This is the history of mankind—unbelief and lovers of evil. For this the world was destroyed by flood. Their language was confounded. God chooses a man Abraham, and through him tries to raise up a righteous seed. Time and again they rebel, are destroyed, a few chosen to begin again, and so on down to our day. And while there have been many good men from time to time upon the earth, many have been lovers of evil rather than lovers of good. The evil and good are always present. The evil is a denial of the good, a destroyer of knowledge. It is only when men seek the truth and love the good that they can grow in knowledge, come to perfection, be truly, men.

We read that it was the spirit of evil that put it into men accept in accord with their love and desires.

And while there have been many good men to be love. All good thoughts come from the spirit of good. All evil thoughts come from the spirit of evil, and men accept in accord with their love and desires. We read that it was the spirit of evil that put it into the hearts of men to have secret signs and combinations. The acts of men are oftentimes a mixture of good and evil. Few are really free from evil. In many the good prevails. In some the evil rules. Their thoughts are evil continually. Such become agents for evil, doing the works of the Devil. Such are libertines, liars, evil-speakers, and lovers of strife and contention, for the mastery, to rule and oppress for gains.

Lovers of good are led by the Spirit of Christ. Such are men of truth, justice, and mercy in all things, to the best of their knowledge; and oftentimes become a power for good among men. And thus do all mankind become agents unto themselves for good or evil, as they may choose to will and desire; and, when life has ended, they themselves are and will be what they have made themselves, whether for good or evil as they have loved.

The question is asked, Did not God know just what men would do before they came upon the earth? Yes, God knew all that men would do, but men of themselves did not know; hence, God designed a time of probation so that men might know themselves. No need now to tell them. Their knowledge of themselves is their own, that they can not deny, though many may well be ashamed. Thus, now, as it ever has been, the whole duty of mankind is to fear God," and learn to obey his commands.

SONS OF PERDITION—SHALL THEY BE RESURRECTED?

Let us see what the scriptures say in the matter.
Christ said:
All that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation.—John 5: 28, 29.

I take it that all means all, and the sons of perdition are the ones that are resurrected unto damnation. But let us examine other texts. In the Book of Mormon we find the following texts:

The day cometh that all shall rise from the dead and stand before God, and be judged according to their works. Now there is a death which is called a temporal death; and the death of Christ shall loose the bands of this temporal death, that all shall raise from this temporal death, . . . and we shall be brought to stand before God, knowing even as we know now, and have a bright recollection of all our guilt. Now this resurrection shall come to all, . . . both the wicked and the righteous.—Pages 235–236, small edition.

And it shall come to pass, that when all men shall have passed from this first death unto life, insomuch as they have come immortal, they must appear before the judgment seat of the Holy One of Israel. . . . They who are righteous, shall be righteous still, and they who are filthy, shall be filthy still; wherefore, they who are filthy, are the devil and his angels; and they shall go away into everlasting fire, prepared for them; and their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames ascend up for ever and ever; and has no end.—Page 72.

Here we have all resurrected, the filthy as well as the righteous, and the filthy "are the devil and his angels"; so that must include the sons of perdition. It may be possible even for the Devil himself to be resurrected with a body. If not, why are devils so anxious to possess human bodies? And we read, "That same spirit which doth possess your bodies at the time that you go out of this life, that same spirit will have power to possess your body in that eternal world."—Page 298. The disembodied spirits, then, if any, may be those that have let devils crowd them out.

There are many passages of scripture to prove that all are resurrected. I will submit one more: "And then shall all the dead awake, for their graves shall be opened, and they shall come forth; yea, even all."—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 7. Is that plain enough? But we are told that the heathen nations are to be redeemed in the first resurrection (see Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10), and "that through the redemp­tion which is made for you, is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead. And the spirit and the body is the soul of man. And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4.)

The difficulty here seems to be the failure to understand the meaning of the word redemption. Redemp­tion does not always mean resurrection. When Zion is redeemed, it will not of necessity need to be resurrected. Property may be redeemed when the debt against it is paid. Man is redeemed when the debt of sin is paid; and that redemption includes his resurrection. The redemption from death will be as broad as death itself. "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."—1 Corinthians 15: 21, 22. Paul is here talking of death and the restoration to life through the resurrection; and just as surely as all die, so shall all be restored to life through the resurrection. And as just noted in the Doctrine and Covenants: since the spirit and body, united, is the soul of man, "the resurrection of the dead is the redemption of the

www.LatterDayTruth.org
soul.” That is, the separate parts, spirit and body, are restored to each other.

While it is true that the resurrection, in this sense, is the redemption of the soul, it does not argue that every soul is redeemed, in the full sense, that is, resurrected; if so, the wicked are redeemed as well as the righteous. Paul had a different idea of the redemption to that. He said, “We have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace.”—Ephesians 1:7. Redemption is forgiveness of sins. Redemption is the plan of salvation, and when it has completed its work on us, we will be landed safely in an immortal condition in the eternal kingdom of God.

The quotation referred to in Doctrine and Covenants makes the resurrection only a part of the plan of redemption. It says, “Through the redemption which is made for you, is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead.” The plan of redemption makes the resurrection possible, but the resurrection is not the full plan.

Amulek, speaking of Christ, said, “He shall come into the world to redeem his people; and he shall take upon him the transgressions of those that believe on his name; and these are they that shall have eternal life, and salvation cometh to none else; therefore the wicked remain as though there had been no redemption made, except to be the loosing of the bands of death.”—Book of Mormon, page 235. Redemption here is more than the “loosing of the bands of death”; but that is the only plan of redemption that is extended to the wicked. “If he hath repented of his sins, and desireth righteousness until the end of his days, even so shall he be rewarded unto righteousness. These are they that are redeemed of the Lord.”—Book of Mormon, page 313. Here is redemption in its full sense; but redemption may be of different degrees, as there is difference in the degrees of glory; and those entitled to celestial glory shall be redeemed, but not till the final resurrection: while the sons of perdition will be “the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the suffering of his wrath.”—Doctrine and Covenants 76:4. Redemption here means to be saved from punishment, restored to God’s favor, and given some degree of glory. The sons of perdition will not thus be redeemed:

With this agrees the following:

Ye shall receive your bodies, and your glory shall be that glory by which your bodies are quickened [resurrected]. Ye who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness; and they who are quickened by a portion of the terrestrial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness; and also they who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness; and they who remain shall be quickened; nevertheless, they shall return again to their own place, to enjoy that which they are willing to receive, because they were not willing to enjoy that which they might have received.—Doctrine and Covenants 85:6.

Here we find a quickening or resurrection for all three glories, and one for those “who remain.” These must “return again to their own place.” Hell had given them up, and they must return to it again, hence they will not be redeemed from torment, or the Devil; they will be “cast into the lake of fire.” (Revelation 20:15.)

“GRAVES OF ELEVEN OF THE APOSTLES.”

In your issue for June 27, page 603, in pointing out the places where the remains of our Lord’s apostles were laid away, it is said, “Of the body of St. John the Evangelist, the remaining one of the twelve, there is no knowledge.”

The above statement should be repeated with care, especially by young ministers and church-members, because Bishop Polycrates says that John was buried at Ephesus:

Moreover, John, who rested on the bosom of our Lord; who also was a priest, and bore the sacerdotal plate, both a martyr and a teacher. He is buried in Ephesus.—Eusebius’ Ecclesiastical History, book 4, chapter 24.

In another place Eusebius says:

The time and manner of the death of Paul, and Peter, and also the place where their bodies were interred after their departure from this life, has also been stated by us. The time when John died has also, in a measure, been mentioned, but the place of his burial is shown from the epistle of Polycrates, who was bishop of the church of Ephesus, which epistle he wrote to Victor, bishop of Rome . . . Moreover John, that rested on the bosom of our Lord, who was a priest that bore the sacerdotal plate, and martyr, and teacher, he also rests at Ephesus—Eusebius’ Ecclesiastical History, book 3, chapter 31.

Eusebius also speaks of two tombs in Ephesus, “both of which were called John’s tombs even to this day.” (Ibid., book 3, chapter 39.)

Jerome, born 331 A. D., at Delmati, and presbyter of the church at Antioch, died at Bethlehem, 420 A. D., visited Ephesus, and while there he “was shown John’s tomb.” (Faussett’s Bible Cyclopedia, p. 388.)

Eusebius says that John returned from Patmos after the death of Dametian, and abode at Ephesus until the time of Trajan.

It is said that John, the Virgin Mary, and Timothy were buried at Ephesus.

Ephesus was the capital of the Roman province of Asia, and the center from which John superintended the churches in that region. (See Eusebius’ Ecclesiastical History, book 3, chapter 23.)

Strabo calls it the “eye of the east,” but it is now “heaps of stone” in ruins, with a few miserable Turks “living in mud cottages.” (Encyclopedia of Religions, knowledge, p. 506.) “For a time the place was called Arsinoe; then again Ephesus. Now it is sometimes called Ajasalone.” (American Dictionary and Cyclopedia, vol. 18, p. 1094.)
The epistle to the Ephesians is read in all the Christian world, but not at Ephesus. Its “candlestick” has been removed, such is the forsaken place where it is said that John, the mother of our Lord, and Timothy were laid away.

Those who find occasion to speak of John as having “tarried” on earth alive, (see John, and Doctrine and Covenants 6,) should in advance prepare a way of escape from Polycrates, Eusebius, and Jerome. The first lived at Ephesus, and was bishop of the church there, 180—192 A. D. The second was bishop of Cesarea, and wrote in the fourth century, “the father of church history.” The third wrote in the fourth and fifth centuries. If John “tarried” these men seem to have had no knowledge of it.

This is not written to provoke controversy, but it is a good time to take observations, to see where we are on this particular point.

"THE WHITE MAN'S BURDEN."

(W. J. Bryan's address before the American Society on July Fourth.)

Speaking on “the white man's burden,” before the American Society at London, July 4, Mr. Bryan said:

“The memory of the evening spent with the American Society, Thanksgiving Day two and a half years ago, is such a pleasant one that I esteem myself fortunate to be able to accept the invitation so kindly extended by our distinguished ambassador, Honorable Whitelaw Reid, to be your guest upon this occasion. Our English friends, under whose flag we meet to-night, recalling that this is the anniversary of our nations' birth, would doubtless pardon us if our rejoicing contained something of self-congratulation, for it is at such times as this that we are wont to review those national achievements which have given to the United States its prominence among the nations. But I hope I shall not be thought lacking in patriotic spirit if, instead of drawing a picture of the past, bright with heroic deeds and unparalleled in progress, I summon you rather to a serious consideration of the responsibility resting upon those nations which aspire to premiership. This line of thought is suggested by a sense of propriety as well as by recent experiences—by a sense of propriety because such a subject will interest the Briton as well as the American, and by recent experiences because they have impressed me not less with our national duty than with the superiority of western over eastern civilization.

"Asking your attention to such a theme it is not unfitting to adopt a phrase coined by a poet to whom America as well as England can lay some claim, and take for my text "The white man's burden."

"Take up the White Man's burden—In patience to abide,
To veil the threat of terror
And check the show of pride.
By open speech and simple,
An hundred times made plain,
To seek another's gain."

"Thus sings Kipling and, with the exception of the third line (of the meaning of which I am not quite sure), the stanza embodies the thought which is uppermost in my mind to-night. No one can travel among the dark-skinned races of the Orient without feeling that the white man occupies an especially favored position among the children of men, and the recognition of this fact is a duty inseparably connected with the advantages enjoyed. There is a white man's burden—a burden which the white man should not shirk even if he could, a burden which he could not shirk even if he would. That no one liveth unto himself or dieth unto himself has a national as well as an individual application. Our destinies are so interwoven that each exerts an influence directly or indirectly upon all others.

"Sometimes this influence is unconsciously exerted as when, for instance, the good or bad precedent set by one nation in dealing with its own affairs is followed by some other nation. Sometimes the influence is incidentally exerted as when, for example, a nation in the extension of its commerce introduces its language and enlarges the horizon of the people with whom it trades. This incidental benefit conferred by the opening of new markets must be apparent to any one who has watched the stimulating influence of the new ideas which have been introduced into Asia and Africa through the medium of the English language. This is not the mother tongue of very many of the world's leaders in religion, statesmanship, science and literature, but it has received through translation the best that has been written and spoken in other countries. He who learns this language, therefore, is like one who lives upon a great highway where he comes into daily contact with the world. Without disparaging other modern languages it may be said with truth that whether one travels abroad or studies at home there is no other language so useful at the present time as that which we employ at this banquet board, and the nation which is instrumental in spreading this language confers an inestimable boon even though the conferring of it be not included in its general purpose. England has rendered this service to the people of India and the United States is rendering the same service to the people of the Philippines, while both England and the United States have been helpful to Japan and China in this way.

"But the advanced nations can not content themselves with the conferring of incidental benefits. If they would justify their leadership they must put forth conscious and constant effort for the promotion of the welfare of the nations which lag behind. Incidental benefits may follow even though the real purpose of a nation is a wholly selfish one, for as the sale of Joseph into Egypt resulted in blessings to his family and to the land of the Pharaohs, so captives taken in war have sometimes spread civilization and blacks carried away into slavery have been improved by contact with the whites. But nations can not afford to do evil in the hope that Providence will transmute the evil into good and bring blessings out of sin. Nations, if they would be great in the better sense of the term, must intend benefit as well as confer it, they must plan advantage, and not leave the results to chance.

"I take it for granted that our duty to the so-called inferior races is not discharged by merely feeding them in times of famine or by contributing to their temporary support when some other calamity overtakes them. A much greater assistance is rendered them when they are led to a more elevated plane of thought and activity by ideals which stimulate them to self-development. The improvement of the people themselves should be the paramount object in all intercourse with the Orient.

"Among the blessings which the Christian nations are at this time able—and in duty bound—to carry to the rest of the world, I may mention five: education, knowledge of the science of government, arbitration as a substitute for war, appreciation of the dignity of labor, and a high conception of life.

"Education comes first, and in nothing have the United States and England been more clearly helpful than in the advocacy of universal education. If the designs of God are disclosed by his handiwork, then the creation of the human mind is indubitable proof that the Almighty never intended that learning should be monopolized by a few, and he arrays himself against the plans of Jehovah, who would deny intellectual training to any part of the human race. It is a false civilization, not a true one, that countenances the permanent separation of society into two distinct classes, the one encouraged to improve the mind and the other condemned to hopeless ignorance. Equally false is that conception of international politics which would make the prosperity of one nation depend upon the exploitation of another. While no one is far-sighted enough to estimate with accuracy the remote, or even the immediate, consequences of human action, yet as we can rely upon the principle that each individual profits rather than loses by the progress and prosperity of his neighbors, so we can not doubt that it is to the advantage of each nation that every other nation shall make the largest possible use of its own resources and the capabilities of its people.

"No one questions that Japan's influence has been a beneficent one since she has emerged from illiteracy and endowed her people with public schools open to all her boys and girls. The transition from a position of obscurity into a world power was scarcely more rapid than her transition from a menace into an ally. China is entering upon a similar experience and I am confident that her era of reform will make her, not a yellow peril but a powerful colaborer in the international vineyard. In India, in the Philippines, in Egypt and even in Turkey statistics show a gradual extension of education and I trust I will be pardoned if I say that neither the armies, nor the navies, nor yet the commerce of our nations, have given us so just a claim to the gratitude of the people of Asia as have our school teachers, sent, many of them, by private rather than by public funds.

"The English language has become the vehicle for the conveyance of governmental truth even more than for the spread of general information, for beginning with Magna Charta and continuing through the era of the American revolution and the Declaration of Independence down to the present, no language has been so much employed for the propagation of that theory of government which traces governmental authority to the consent of the governed. Our own nation presents the most illustrious example known to history of a great population working out its destiny through laws of its own making and under officials of its own choosing, although, I may add, we scarcely go beyond England in recognizing the omnipotence of a parliament fresh from the people. It is difficult to overestimate the potency of this conception of government upon the progress of a nation and, in turning the thought of the world away from despotism to the possibilities of self-government, the pioneers of freedom made western civilization possible. An idea will sometimes revolutionize an individual, a community, a state, a nation or even a world, and the idea that man possesses inalienable rights which the state did not give and which the state, though it can deny, can not take away, has made millions of human beings stand erect and claim their God-given inheritance. While the era of constitutional liberty is ever widening, while the tyranny and insolence of arbitrary power are every year decreasing, the leaders of the world's thought, not only the English-speaking nations but the other Christian nations as well, have yet much to do in teaching reverence for the will of the majority and respect for the public servants upon whom the people bestow authority.

"The Christian nations must lead the movement for the promotion of peace, not only because they are enlisted under the banner of the Prince of Peace, but also because they have attained such a degree of intelligence that they can no longer take pride in a should be made until the submission of the question in controversy to an impartial court for investigation, each nation reserving the right to accept or reject the decision. The preliminary investigation would in almost every instance insure an amicable settlement and the reserved rights would be a sufficient protection against any possible injustice.

"Let me go a step farther and appeal for a clearer recognition of the dignity of labor. The odium which rests upon the work of the hand has exerted a baneful influence the world around. The theory that idleness is more honorable than toil—that it is more respectable to consume what others have produced than to be a producer of wealth—has not only robbed society of an enormous sum but it has created an almost impassable gulf between the leisure classes and those who support them. Tolstoy is right in asserting that most of the perplexing problems of society grow out of the lack of sympathy between man and man. Because some imagine themselves above work while others see before them nothing but a life of drudgery there is constant warring and much of bitterness. When men and women become ashamed of doing nothing and strive to give to society full compensation for all they receive from society there will be harmony between the classes.

"While Europe and America have advanced far beyond the Orient in placing a proper estimate upon those who work, even our nations have not yet fully learned the lesson that employment at some useful avocation is essential to the physical health, intellectual development, and moral growth. If America and England are to meet the requirements of their high positions they must be prepared to present in the lives of their citizens examples, increasing in number, of men and women who find delight in contributing to the welfare of their fellows, and this ought not to be difficult, for every department of human activity has a fascination of its own. The agricultural colleges and industrial schools which have sprung up in so many localities are evidence that a higher ideal is spreading among the people.

"And now we come to the most important need of the Orient—a conception of life which recognizes individual responsibility to God, teaches the brotherhood of man and measures greatness by the service rendered. The first establishes a rational relation between the creature and his Creator, the second lays the foundation for justice between man and his fellows and the third furnishes an ambition large enough to fill each life with noble effort. No service which we can render to the less favored nations can compare in value to this service, for if we can but bring their people to accept such an ideal they will rival the Occident in their contribution to civilization. If this ideal—which must be accepted as the true one if our religion is true—had been more perfectly illustrated in the lives of Christians and in the conduct of purely physical victory. The belief that moral questions can be settled by the shedding of human blood is a relic of barbarism; to doubt the dynamic power of righteousness is infidelity to truth itself. That nation which is unwilling to trust its cause to the universal conscience or which shrinks from the presentation of its claims before a tribunal where reason holds sway betrays a lack of faith in the soundness of its position. I venture to suggest that the world's peace would be greatly promoted by an agreement among the leading nations that no declaration of war Christian nations there would now be less of the 'White Man's Burden.'

"If it is legitimate to 'seek another's profit' and 'to work another's gain' how can this service best be rendered? This has been the disputed point. Individuals and nations have differed less about the purpose to be accomplished than about the methods to be employed. Persecutions have been carried on avowedly for the benefit of the persecuted, wars have been waged for the alleged improvement of those attacked and still more frequently philanthropy has been adulterated with selfish interest. If the superior nations have a mission it is not to wound but to heal—not to cast down but to lift up, and the means must be example—a far more powerful and enduring means than violence. Example may be likened to the sun whose genial rays constantly coax the buried seed into life and clothe the earth, first with verdure and afterwards with ripened grain, while violence is the occasional tempest which can ruin but can not give life.

"Can we doubt the efficacy of example in the light of history? There has been great increase in education during the last century and the schoolhouses have not been opened by the bayonet; they owe their existence largely to the moral influence which neighboring nations exert upon each other. And the spread of popular government during the same period, how rapid! Constitution after constitution has been adopted and limitation after limitation has been placed upon arbitrary power until Russia, yielding to public opinion, establishes a legislative body and China sends commissions abroad with a view to inviting the people to share the responsibilities of government.

"While in America and in Europe there is much to be corrected and abundant room for improvement there has never been so much altruism the world as there is to-day—never so many who acknowledge the indissoluble tie that binds each to every other member of the race. I have felt more pride in my own countrymen than ever before as I have visited the circuit of schools, hospitals, and churches which American money has built around the world. The example of the Christian nations, though but feebly reflecting the light of the Master, is gradually reforming society.
"On the walls of the temple at Karnak an ancient artist carved a picture of an Egyptian king. He is represented as holding a group of captives by the hair—one hand raising a club as if to strike them. No king would be willing to confess himself so cruel to-day. In some of the capitals of Europe there are monuments built from, or ornamented with, cannon taken in war. That form of boasting is still tolerated but let us hope that it will in time give way to some emblem of victory which will imply helpfulness rather than slaughter."—The Commoner, July 6, 1906.

August Reading for Daughters of Zion Meetings.

OUR BOYS.

"Parents everywhere, be they rich or poor, read or unread, in the city or in the town, in the village or in the woods, with anxious arms are reaching out for something to cooperate with them in the guidance of their boys, who to-day may be bent, but to-morrow will be rigid men, set in the stillness of adulthood."

The plaintive plea which has come in connection with these outstretched arms—the arms of parental love—has long been heard by the Daughters of Zion, and has awakened in their hearts a desire to help—a longing to cooperate and to at least speak words of cheer and sympathy which possibly might strengthen and encourage parents of both boys and girls to discharge faithfully the duties of their position, and to fill with honor, loyalty, and zeal for the good of mankind, the solemn obligations they have assumed.

This, from time to time since their organization, they have endeavored to do. Not as feeling that they were equal to the task, but in weakness and with a full sense of their great need of divine help. Many times the most earnest and faithful among them have felt disheartened and discouraged, even to the extent of saying, "What is the use? Why should we strive longer against such odds? There are so few who seem to feel the need of any help which we can offer that we might as well cease to concern ourselves, even in the smallest degree, with reference to the children of our neighbors. Let this work go—it may be superfluous and surely we have enough other work to fill our time, to demand all our energy!"

And yet while words like these came to the lips of the discouraged ones, down deep in the soul of each was a still small voice: "Are ye not remembering, that an officer can not be saved alone. In helping others you are helping them. In trying to make something out of the smallest, you are contributing to the great cause of mankind."

And so the Daughters of Zion, while feeling the weakness and the necessity of the work, yet persist in doing it, and seek means to make it more efficient. How this is done will be shown in our next reading.
this constitutes the admonition of the Lord and is, therefore, nurture.

"The whole problem of the physical or bodily life resolves itself into a problem of nurture. This means more than mere food; it means atmosphere, light, exercise, in short, whatever goes to give life an opportunity to build up its habitation, whatever makes for the fullest development of the physical man. The same is exactly true of nutrition, nurture, or education if we prefer to call it so, of that which for the want of a better term we call the soul. Indeed, these are not separate—related that soul nurture must also regard bodily nurture. A fatigued body may mean a lean soul. The practical application of it all is, that as the problem of the physical life is a problem of nurture, so likewise is the problem of the soul life. The nurture to which Paul refers must be in the chastening and admonition of the Lord, but nurture it must be. Life, child-nature, must be respected and regarded before nurture is possible. If we could see the soul as we can see the body, what a horrible spectacle of starved, anaemic, wasted lives would be presented to our view as we look over the average Sunday-school and into the average home!

"This is because we look at the religious life, and especially that which we call the religious education or training of the children, through the peep-hole of our adult habit of mind. If we could hold ourselves to the single point of view of nurture we would be less given to thwarting our own purposes.

"Nature must be reckoned with, or nurture cannot be reckoned on. Every proposition for teaching or training rests upon two bases—the nature of the person to be taught and the thing we are to teach him; and the first principally determines the second.

"Children are to obey their parents in the Lord. But nothing is in the Lord which is at variance with his laws. The parent must therefore be obedient to God before he can rightfully demand obedience of his children. A part of this parental obedience will consist in his respect for the child's nature—his possibilities as an individual, a life.''

The writer then goes on to show that the entire problem of this world, of life, is an educational one and the solution of this educational problem is governed by divine laws, and these laws he contends "are to be found in nature—child nature and not in our adult philosophies and intellectual formulatures. . . . The progress of education is the progress of our obedience to the laws of the body, mind, and spirit.''

From this broad fundamental law and because of its actual existence whether it is or is not recognized by parents and teachers Mr. Du Bois argues that it would be well if the great laws of soul-life could be so simply formulated "as to be understood and applied by all who sincerely and conscientiously desire to nurture the children in the admonition of the Lord."

In physical nurture it is not so much the child's food which is to be considered. Atmosphere, light, exercise, and proper clothing, as well as proper food, have each a bearing upon the child's physical development, and are essential to bodily health and growth. Other essentials are needed, but the demand for these at their very best is imperative if the physical nature of the child flourish and come to its best development.

Now carrying this law over into the soul realm—the spiritual nature of the child:

"What kind of an atmosphere is the child breathing,—one of filthy odors and poisonous gases—one of disorder, cynicism, jealousy, strife, hatred, impurity, suspicion? It is unwholesome. Why these pale, pinched faces and scrawny hands? These lives of pinched desires and shrivelled morals—they are bred where there is no gospel light, no pictures of life in the beauty of holiness. Here is an anemic, dyspeptic sufferer; he needs good food such as he can assimilate; and here, too, is a starved soul, fed on the husks of hard words and empty forms. There is another, a case of arrested development, a weakness in will, a failure. He needs moral as well as physical and mental exercise, he needs to express himself. Give him his right of choice and set him free—make a self-determined personality of him by giving him his own powers. All these work together to nurture a whole individuality, a healthy personality. Cheat the man out of his due of air, light, food, or exercise, and he suffers loss. The possibilities of his nature are never realized. He needs saving.

"This, in our terms, we might call salvation by nurture, and as true nurture is possible only in Christ, so is Christ our nurturer into the abundant life. He makes us whole and is therefore our Savior. In particular there is no true, healthful atmosphere but that which emanates from the divine man; no perfect light but the light of the world; no substance of food but his truth; no safe exercise of the will but in the will of God.''

August Program for Daughters of Zion Meeting.

Hymn No. 67 Saints' Hymnal; prayer; reading and discussion of "Our Boys," in "Home Column," using Questions as an aid; paper, "Children, obey your parents in the Lord," followed by discussion; roll call; concert citation of Ephesians 6:4; business; hymn 107; dismissal prayer.

Questions Upon August Reading.

Does your experience go to prove the truth of the statement quoted at the beginning of your reading? What answer must we give to the answer of Cain, "Am I my brother's keeper?" Will this answer leave us free to slight the work of the Daughters of Zion? What is the relation of the family to the church and state? What is the necessity in regard to the home? How was the family instituted and what is the nature of the obligations assumed in marriage? What is the character of the trust God imposes upon those who become parents? Is this an arbitrary act upon the part of God? In the law of Moses how are the sanctity of the home and the instruction of children regarded? What do we find in regard to these things in the gospel? What advice does Paul give to parents in Ephesians 6:4? How is this passage rendered in the Revised Version? What is the essential word in this text? What is the meaning of the word nurture? Are children nurtured by the church and the home as they should be? What is sometimes mistaken for nurture? What is included in physical nurture? Can real nurture be independent of bodily nurture? If we could see the soul as we see the body, would we be pleased with the spectacle presented in the average Sunday-school or home? What are the two bases upon which every proposition for teaching or training rests? How are children to obey their parents? What will a parent's obedience to God cause him to respect? Having this respect will he not certainly heed Paul's injunction, "Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath'?" What does this writer show the entire problem to be? How does he define the progress of education? In physical nurture what is to be considered besides the child's food? In the soul realm what kind of an atmosphere would compare with the physical one of filthy odors and poisonous gases? Show the comparison with each physical lack and how proper nurture would bring salvation physical and spiritual. Where only is true nurture possible? Will you see to it that your children obey you "in the Lord" because you have partaken of that perfect nurture?

SCRANTON, Pennsylvania, July 9, 1906.

Dear Herald: I arrived in my field of labor May 17, located wife and Ruth in Philadelphia. Bro. and Sr. W. W. Smith rented us two small rooms, we having formed their acquaintance in the "regions round about." On our arrival in Philadelphia, Bro. Smith had made arrangements to hold preaching-services for one week, or over two Sundays. Circulators were distributed announcing the meetings, and speakers. The liberty was taken to place my name with Bro. Smith's, which I did not object to. The meetings were, in my judgment, of some benefit to Saints and friends. Eight or ten have been baptized, who had for some time been convinced of the truthfulness of the claims of the church.

I am very much pleased with the Saints of the Philadelphia Branch. They are what may be truly called Latter Day Saints, not in name alone. There is a fine lot of young people who are a credit to the cause.

I left for Elk Mills, Maryland, May 27, to meet with the Baldwin Branch at the above place. They had been busy painting and enlarging the little chapel, which is very neat. Brn. Parsons and Pitt would find a warm reception with the Saints of Baldwin Branch, if they could call on them. Here the Saints were a little discouraged because none of the missionaries had called on them for some time. A strong invitation is extended to Bro. W. W. Smith to run down and see them (only forty miles on the Baltimore & Ohio). They are contemplating holding a grove-meeting Sunday, August 19. If we can not make other arrangements, Bro. J. E. Farnfield and I will attend and do some labor in that part.

The New York and Philadelphia District Sunday-school convention was held there Saturday and Sunday, June 2 and 3. Bro. Christy, McGuire, and Hull, officers of the district as well as members of the school, can take courage, for the good influence left by the convention was certainly gratifying, and it is to be hoped that the Baldwin Saints will keep up the work there. They have talent and ability to make their influence felt for good in church and Sunday-school work.

I came to this city June 16 to take up tent-work in company with Bro. Farnfield, who like myself has had no experience in that line of work. I believe that much more good could be accomplished with what is called a "gospel wagon," than with a tent. With a wagon, or better still, an automobile, two men can go to at least two places the same evening, and speak forty minutes at each place. With the wagon or "auto" you can go to where the people are; but with the tent the people must come to you, and if rain threatens they will not come. A tent is no place to be in when a storm comes up. We have had some very unpleasant experience, and to sleep in a tent in wet, damp weather is not in my judgment wise. If you have a tent you dare not leave it, or some bad boys will do some damage. This tent is twenty-four by forty, has twenty-four canvas benches, two small tents, one to cook in, one to sleep in, has an organ, but in bad order. I presume the cost now would be close to two hundred dollars or more. With that money I can buy a good second-hand automobile with power enough to carry two men and their baggage, and hold six meetings every week, and meet at the hall or chapel on Sunday. We could get ten persons to hear us to one in the tent, and in the daytime we could do some visiting or tracting with the automobile; could go from town to town; no expense for horse feed or railroad fare.

If I were going into business and wanted to advertise my goods, I would not take the tent method. Years ago peddlers of medicine used to travel with tents, locate in towns and cities, then go out and invite the people to the tents. Now they go on street-corners, where they can always have a crowd to talk to. They found out, after years of experience, that the tent was not the drawing-card it used to be, and people would not come out. So they go where the people are. It is a good plan to advertise the time and place of your service, if you have a branch. If you think best to hold but one meeting each evening, where two are together, you can do so all the week, Saturday night included. In a tent you can not get many out Saturday evening. They go down town to do their trading.

Bro. Farnfield is a good, faithful missionary. I presume the Saints in Cleveland, Ohio, will miss him very much. He takes well with the people. I had been informed that he was a young man—twenty-five years of age. One night I dreamed that I saw him, and I said, "Well, you are not the man I expected to see. I thought you were a young person." "Well," he answered, "my name is J. E. Farnfield." I saw in him an honest, God-fearing look, and I said, "Well, come on. We will have to get us each a pair of overalls, for there is much work to be done in tent-work." "Well," he said, "my wife was not very willing for me to go with the tents." I answered, "I do not favor it." I told the dream to Bro. and Sr. Smith and others. Walter said, "I do not know Bro. Farnfield, but I understood he was a young man." I went to the station to meet him. There were quite a number coming out of the train. I saw the person I had seen in the dream, but was looking for the young man, and did not give the dream proper credit. Still I kept looking at him, and he at me, and presently he came direct to me. The mistake was that instead of being young in years he was young in work, only two years.

The Saints and friends here are kind to us. Some of the friends are very much interested, and are talking in favor of the faith to all they can see. Still the attendance of outsiders at the tent is only five to twenty, more on Sunday evenings. We shall stay as long as the interest justifies.

There is a good church-building seventy by forty-six, built in 1893 at a cost of eight thousand dollars. It will take about one thousand dollars to paint and seat one room, and the estate wants thirty-two hundred. It is in one of the best locations in the city. I think three thousand would buy it. That would make four thousand to have it put in first class shape. If some one had the money, and would want to do a good favor, here is a splendid chance. The branch here, yet, is small to undertake it. I believe if we could get it, it would give the work great prestige. The foundation is twenty-inch stone wall, first class. The building is frame. The leading men of the church died with the mortgage, and the estate wants to sell it. There is only one reason why I have not bought it. My salary is too small.

WILLIAM LEWIS.

Eddiara Herald: It has been something more than a year since I wrote a letter to the columns of the Herald, so I venture to try again.

Bro. S. J. Jeffers and I are with the tent at present. Bro. Ebeling and I started the tent at Stockport, a new place, and had a fine meeting, making many friends to the cause, and sowing seed that will surely bear fruit in due time. Revered Blades, a Methodist, lectured against us, but it only made us friends.

Aside from the usual opposition incident to a new place we have had rain nearly every day since June 1, and last night we were rained out again. To make matters worse here, the Methodists and Disciples, so called, are doing all they can to keep people away from our meetings.

We were very much encouraged in reading Bro. Luff's "Epistle," the good Spirit bearing witness to its divinity. But who will give heed? Will any one dare say now that the Lord approves secret societies, the desecration of his house, and other evils alluded to? The advance-guard of any reform movement has always met severe criticism, and oftentimes pr scription and censorship. It is not the most pleasant thing in the world to be called a "radical," "hot-head," "mischief-maker," and other unsavory epithets, simply because we give expression to honest convictions; and when these come from "brethren," it hurts still more.

It is written somewhere that "he who waits to be commanded in all things is a slothful servant," or words to that effect; and we wondered when reading the revelation to Bro. Luff if those who have "made covenant in secret places," and "worshipped at other shrines," would see the point. We bless God for the day of vindication and pray that he may inspire others to lift the warning voice.

We note with pleasure that Iowa has passed a law protecting the song-birds from the ravages of feminine pride and wonder how many Latter Day Saints will be caught in the net.

When will we become a "light to the world," and demonstrate the divinity of our mission by the power of example?

We have read and reread the recent editorial, "Are there lions in the way," and would like to answer just briefly that they are only imaginary, and just as soon as we boldly move out as God has commanded, his lionship will "skiddoo." We need to sing, "Oh for a faith that will not shrink!" The "redemption of Zion" seems a long way off, judging by present conditions; and it will likely remain so until we can take God at his word, and work according to the "pattern."

Any effort not in harmony with God's plan, however plausible it may seem to us, will result only in failure and loss of confidence.

The Lord says, "The spirit of speculation, the exhibition of greed for gain is unseemly in the saints and officers of the church, and should be avoided." And we wonder who are the guilty ones? That some are guilty is beyond cavil. Again, "Heed should be paid to the admonitions of those who from time to time preach and write upon the gathering to remove the principle of selfishness from the hearts of the saints, and especially from those upon whom rests the burden of the church and its ministrations abroad." There is the secret revealed in the power of example. And that example is not very well set in a "bank," established by "officers" of the church. The Kirtland bank, with its direful results, should be a lesson, but how soon we forget when there is a little "gain" in sight.

"The mammon of this world hath been sought by guile and oppression and unseemly desire by some." The poor dupe who goes to the "bank" and gets money at eight per cent interest, and that deducted before he gets the money, will learn to his sorrow what "oppression" is. I speak from experience. Because Jesus used a worldly avocation to illustrate a point, does not commit him to an indorsement of the method, else some of us selfish fellows might use the parable of the "unjust steward" (Luke 16:1-14) to advantage. I firmly believe God's plans will ultimately be consummated, but it will be when the rubbish of our selfish desires shall have been cleared away. God speed the happy day!

Editors Herald: I have been for twenty-five years trying to get the gospel before the people of Milltown, Indiana. Have done a lot of talking, distributed lots of tracts, though never got up much interest till this spring. I came here, and have been at work in the quarry, and giving out tracts; and last Friday Bro. Charles Harpe came here; has preached at the Park and at Bro. Slauterback's. Several are interested, while many are uneasy, especially the Christians or Campbellites. I would like Elder Ellis, when he reads this, to write me a letter telling me when he can come here and help. I am now sending for a new supply of tracts. I believe there can be a lot of good done here. Anyway we can help overturn Babylon.

Editors Herald: On the 22d ult., in company with Bishop C. J. Hunt, I came to Lakeeboro, Iowa, for the purpose of holding a park-meeting for a few days. We commenced on the next day and continued over two Sundays. The attendance week-day evenings was indeed small, but the few Saints in town and vicinity stood by us loyally, which was indeed encouraging. Bro. A. B. Reynolds and family, and his near neighbor, Mr. Herman Willert and family, from thirteen miles north, drove down each Sunday and helped make our meetings a success.

Our good bishop and the writer took dinner in the park with the two families mentioned, and the way those missionaries got away with the fresh fish provided was interesting to all. Even Aunt Martha Salisbury, though sorely afflicted, was courageous enough to make one in our meetings whenever it was possible. The Lord blessed in the preaching of the word.

Monday, the 24th inst., I came out with Bro. John T. Reynolds to his father's home, where I held some meetings in the homes of A. B. Reynolds and Herman Willert, and felt much blessed of the Spirit in doing so.

We celebrated the Fourth by driving about two miles to Lake Creek, where I had the pleasure of baptizing Bro. Herman C. Willert and wife Bertha, and their three daughters, Anna, Ruby, and Emma. The confirmation-service was held immediately following the baptisms at the home of Bro. Willert, where the Spirit's presence was forcibly felt by the writer during the service.

The additions are the result of the labors of Bro. A. B. Reynolds and family, and Brn. F. B. Farr and F. E. Cotht. This incident illustrates the truthfulness of the apostle's statement: "I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase." I came to this place last evening and found the Saints well. My health is excellent. May the Spirit of the Lord continue with his people.

Bro. J. F. Elder Curtis is now holding forth at private houses, among those who are interested with a fair attendance, while the writer will move on north and look after the interests of the work at Salt Lake and other points.

Well, our nation's birthday is again past, and it is almost heartrending to see the manner in which the people conduct themselves on such occasions. Drinking and swearing seems to be the ambition of some; and when they claim to be saints, or representatives of Christ it is lamentable. However, we were pleased to hear a remark from one of the leading men yesterday "that the Mormon church was responsible for the actions and conduct of their young men. They being the dominant power they could prohibit all the extreme evils, and better the social circles if they would." We only regret they are not ready to take a stand for the better, and eliminate some of the evils prevalent among them.

ESCATAWPA, Mississippi, July 4, 1906.

Editors Herald: In reading so many interesting letters from the brothers and sisters in the Herald it makes me feel good to see them so interested in this work, for I know it is the work of God.

We have a small Sunday-school and Religio here. Although we live a good way from the church, we never miss a Sunday, without a lawful excuse; and it seems that the young boys have taken hold of the rod now, and are going to try to do all they can to help the work along.

Our conference of the Mobile District was held here in June, and we had a delightful time. It was the best conference I ever attended here. Bro. J. R. McClain and Bro. Alma Booker, and also Bro. J. M. Stubbart were present. Bro. McClain preached at our house one night during his visit.

I will be so glad when the time comes that I can get away from the place where we are now living; for there are so many temptations here. The most of my neighbors belong to other denominations, and their pleasures are of the world. But I have learned that we can not indulge in worldly pleasure, and be children of God.

My brother attended the last General Conference at Independence, and he says he never knew what pleasure and joy was until he met with so many of the Saints, and could go to so many good meetings.

I ask an interest in your prayers that I may be a faithful Saint to the end.

Your sister,

MAMIE MILLER.

ECKERTY, Indiana, July 6, 1906.

Editors Herald: We begin services here to-night in Mr. Ott's opera-house. Do not expect as many in attendance as Bro. R. C. had last winter. In company with Bro. James Ferguson, we opened the work at Milltown. He is better known as "the traveling preacher." He is one of the charter members of the Southern Indiana District. He has ever been ready to do his part in any line, and has done considerable tracting throughout that entire country.

While we were in attendance at the union picnic held at Milltown, by the different Sunday-schools, waiting if an opportunity afforded to take our part with the rest, about eleven o'clock, Bro. Ferguson came to me and said he just received a telephone message that his daughter, Sr. Lizzie Bagggerly, was dying or had died. What could he do? The train had just gone a few minutes before, and it was too far to drive by team, and no more trains until fifty-five minutes after six in the evening. We sought the Lord during the day, and did the best we could.

The brother left on the evening train, promising to let us know the next evening at Eckerty, which he did, telling us she was still living. The doctor thought she had been bitten by a spider, causing lockjaw to ensue.

Sr. Lizzie is known by all as a faithful one in Israel, one who is worthy of our dear Lord's blessing. We hear to-day that she is better. May God kindly remember her, and spare her life for the good of her children and the gospel.

And now to the Saints in Southern Indiana: There has been a two-day meeting appointed for each branch in the district, and on Sunday to be a basket meeting if the branches deem wise (this however is left to their own discretion.)

We see so many of the Saints without either of the church papers, and they wonder why everything does not work for their good. We can not expect the blessings, when we do not do our part.

This is quite an old district, and yet it has taken a large amount of money in the past to sustain the work in this part, and our list of elders has been cut down this year until it is quite small compared to what it was a few years ago. Some in the district have done their part, while others have done very little, and something nothing at all. We are informed that our Masalso more ministers than churches, as have some others of the smaller denominations.

It has also been noted that among the denominations which show marked advances in members and churches the supply of ministers does not keep pace with church growth. Lutherans last year added 279 churches to their total, but gained only 114 ministers. There was an increase of 219 in the number of Episcopal churches in the United States with a gain of but seventy clergymen. Baptists gained 176 churches and but 91 ministers, and Methodists added 432 ministers and 533 churches.

The Reverend C. D. Matthews of London, general secretary of the Alliance of Reformed Churches, has been making a close study of the question of the failing supply of ministers, and he reaches the conclusion that the decline is almost universal. Since 1800, he finds, the ministerial supply in the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America has declined eight per cent; in the United Free Church in Scotland it is seventeen per cent; in the Church of England thirteen per cent. These percentages of decline are said not to be so large as they were in the five years preceding 1800, but there is held to be justification for the claim of some alarmists that there has been a falling off of seventy-five per cent in the number of candidates for the ministry, though some authorities hold that the number of such candidates is now no more than two thirds of what it was a decade ago.—Minneapolis Journal, June 24, 1906.

Editors Herald: I came across this hymn this morning as I was looking over and reading the hymns in the Hymnal:

"God moves in a mysterious way, His wonders to perform."

I have been led to correspond with a young girl in Wisconsin who is afflicted with curvature of the spine. I found her name in a paper called Comfort published in Augusta, Maine. Now, I corresponded with Sr. Hawkins of San Jose, California, who is also afflicted and is not able to walk. She tells me she has not walked for seven years. I had not written to her for seven years, but when she saw my letter in the Herald asking the elders to visit "Little Nell," she wrote me a letter to find out if I was the same Mrs. Dawson who had written to her. She told me that she had also been corresponding with Nellie. She said Nellie had been sending her poems of her own composing to read. Now she (Little Nell) has promised to write something for the Hope, but she would like a copy of the paper first so she will know what it is like, before writing. Will you please send her one? We are not taking it. She gave me permission to send her name to the Prayer Union. I hope you will publish the request, and that many earnest prayers will be offered for her. She is doing much for others in affliction, and deserves a blessing from the One whose name she is laboring to glorify. If some of the young Hopes would write to her, she would be pleased to hear from them.

"Oh the good we all may do, As the days are going by."

How I wish the whole world might be brought to understand and obey the gospel, that they might not have to suffer the second death. Oh, that every one might give up doing the work of Satan, and be saved by the power of love and sacrifice.

Yours in peace and love, and the hope of salvation.

Dear Herald: Bro. R. T. Walters and I arrived in the field assigned us by the late conference May 8, and we have been striving to do our duty as servants of the Master in presenting the word to the people, as well as in trying to make the work effectual by our example. We have been blessed thereby, and our efforts have been a blessing to others. We have just closed a two weeks' effort at Taylorville, where I had the happy privilege of assisting others to introduce the work ten years ago. And I was happy, in meeting with those who obeyed the truth then, to find them still in the faith. Several have obeyed since; and, with a number of additions from other places, they now have a good-sized branch, and a nice chapel in which to worship. Bro. M. D. Lewis, the president of the branch, is a man possessed of much humility, which is one of the chief qualifications of a good leader. The Lord has an excellent people there, and I could not help but think that a bright future is before them, if all will labor together in love and humility, as the Lord has commanded. Every part of the organic structure is necessary in order that the Saints may be perfected. The eye can not say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you; for without the feet how shall the body be able to stand? Also the body hath need of every member that all may be edified together, that the system may be kept perfect. The excellent communications from Brn. Joseph Luff and J. R. Lambert have been read and reread by me, and I am determined to make my life conform to the excellent instruction given. I am thankful to be associated with such bright and shining lights in the great gathering dispensation of the fullness of times; and my chief desire is to keep step with the great army of workers, and be worthy to enter in, with them, into the marriage supper of the lamb. As saints of God, we should double our diligence in this great and grand cause, and see to it that we are not stumbling-blocks in the way of progress, and that our life is kept pure in every particular. To be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things, will qualify us to do a good work for the Master, which will stand to our credit when the books are opened.

With thankfulness to God for the many precious blessings received in the past, and with a great desire to be worthy to receive all he has for me in the future, I am thus willing to labor on, and do what little I can, under his parental care, to advance the cause in the future. All who desire to correspond with me, please remember that all mail will reach me promptly if addressed to Box 18, Holden, Missouri.

Your brother in the faith,

F. M. Slover.

Nebraska City, Nebraska, June 30, 1906.

Editors Herald: The late rains have gladdened the hearts of many in Nebraska, as they came in time for the crops. Our work in this district is moving along nicely, as a whole. We have seven branches, and seven Sunday-schools, and the Saints are willing to sacrifice money, time, and talent for the cause they love.

We have had cause to rejoice, as we have troubled the waters at Auburn, Nebraska, and at Nebraska City, and Eustis of late.

And then we were glad to hear from the Lord through one of God's servants, Bro. Luff. Hope the Saints in general will give heed to advice given from the Lord, to stand separate from the worldly pleasures and secret covenants; for because of these orders the church is drifting into the world.

I was surprised to note in the Herald some of the writers stand in favor of these things, when Jesus plainly said, "Swear not at all, . . . but let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil."—Matthew 5:34-37. And again, James said: "But above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath: but let your yea be yea; and your nay, nay; lest ye fall into condemnation."—James 5:12.

Again, Jesus tells us that he said nothing in secret, and admonishes us to let our light shine like a lamp on a hill, so all the city can see it, not as a candle under a bushel. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Let us stand separate from these works of darkness, and let us bask in the open light of God’s Spirit, so that our lamps will be trimmed and burning, that when Christ shall come to make up his jewels we may be among them. We must be under his covenant, and his alone; and not tied up by half a dozen other covenants. With love to all the brethren, I am, in the light of the gospel of Jesus Christ,

CLEVELAND, IOWA, July 12, 1906.

Editors Herald: A few items may be of interest to your readers. On May 19 and 20, I visited the Saints at Lucas, Iowa, holding services over Sunday, going from there to Norwood church, where I preached nine sermons and baptized two, Miss Viva Keen and Eva Cackler. June 2 and 3 I attended the stake conference at Hiteman, which was a pleasant gathering and an all round good conference.

June 9 being children’s day at the Evergreen church I was requested to assist in the services. Eight were baptized, Bro. A. B. Young leading six into the water, and I the other two.

At the conclusion of those baptized, the Lord blessed the Saints, and many hearts were made happy to see the fruits of their labors being gathered into the fold of Christ. At night I preached in the house, the Lord blessing us.

June 14, the gospel tent was hoisted at Engleville, Missouri, fourteen miles southwest of Lamoni, about nineteen sermons being preached, Elders J. W. Wight, E. E. Morgan, and W. H. Kophart assisting in the preaching of the word. Good attention was given though all the services. This being where Elder Popplewell lives, who has met our elders in public debate so often, we thought there might be some opposition—but such was not the case. He attended one or more of the services, and his wife and daughter a number. They kindly extended to me an invitation to call on them. The success of these meetings was largely due to the assistance of May Skinner, Zaida Rabidou, Bertha Bailey, and Frances White, who furnished most of the singing, Sr. Bradfield acting as organist.

The preachers and singers were kindly provided for at the homes of Brn. and Sr. Hitchcock and Bradfield.

July 7, in company with Elder John Smith, we took the train for Lucas, Iowa, where we were met by Jacob Cackler, and, in company with J. R. Evans, were taken to the home of Brn. Cacklers, eleven miles in the country, arriving there some time after ten o’clock at night, tired, and needing rest.

Saturday, the 8th, at three o’clock, a number of the Saints and friends met at a little pool of water in the Creek’s pasture, and I baptized Steve Bennett and wife, and Miss Edith Cackler.

Previous arrangements had been made by Bro. Smith to organize the Saints into a branch, so at eight in the evening a large crowd of Saints and neighbors met at the church-house, and after the three were confirmed, Jacob C. Cackler was ordained to the office of priest, and Art L. Keen to the office of teacher, Viva Keen chosen recorder, and Edith Cackler, secretary. Heretofore the church has been called “Norwood church,” but Norwood being about three and one half miles away, it was thought best to change the name; so the branch was given the name of Graceland. Everything passed off pleasantly; and another branch is added to the Lamoni Stake.

Sunday the 9th, a number of the Lucas Saints came out to the forenoon and afternoon services. All seemed to enjoy themselves, Sr. C. Cackler telling me she had about forty to spread their dinners at her house. May the Lord bless Graceland, that in works her members may honor the name.

To-morrow, the 10th, I go Centerville, Iowa, to remain over Sunday. On the 22d of July I expect to be at Pleasanton, Iowa, to hold services; and July 28 and 29 at the Elleston Branch. My health is not good. I have been suffering with rheumatism, and nervousness, and I feel, unless a change shall come to give me additional strength, my missionary work will end by another year, if not before.

The Lamoni Stake reunion will soon be here, August 17 to 27. Being chairman of the committee, can say all are invited to come and have a good spiritual time. Do not miss this opportunity; but all come.

In the bonds of the gospel,

D. C. WHITE.

NEVADA, IOWA, July 10, 1906.

Dear Herald: I have no apology to offer for seeking to occupy space in your sacred pages, other than that I have at times been requested by some of the dear Saints of the Des Moines District, to write of my experiences in, and the developments of the work of the district. Before entering into the active prosecution of the duties assigned me for the year, I felt assured that outside of the, to me, very trying ordeal of leaving home and loved ones, the year’s labors were to be fraught with many pleasant and profitable experiences, made so as the result of the grace of our divine Father in the bestowal of the Spirit of truth. Up to the present time the forebodings of spiritual blessings have been realized even beyond my fondest hopes. When preparing to begin the labors of the previous year, Bro. and Sr. Fred Wells of the Concord Branch, were the first to invite, wailing for labor, with the information that they had secured a schoolhouse in a new locality, where there had been no preaching of our faith. Glad for the opportunity, and to encourage this faithful, energetic pair of home missionaries in striving to warn their neighbors and friends to flee from the wrath to come, I put in my appearance May 11, and began the same evening. The attendance was good, and interest all that could be wished, from the first night, and continued to increase during the nineteen services held, when we were compelled to quit to attend district conference. We knew by spiritual knowledge that sheep were to be gathered into the fold. Our purpose was to return from conference and continue the labors, until we could report results; but unseen and uncomprehended, forces ruled otherwise, so that when we returned, the hand of affliction had taken such firm hold upon me that I was soon prostrated. These are times when there appear visions of home; and how grand it appears, like a miniature paradise, while in reality but very humble,—yet the brightest of all the sacred spots of earth; and with it a vision of the wife of our youth occupying as queen in this place of beauty, and a longing for her smile his brightest day,—her kiss the guardian of his innocence—her arms, the pale of his safety, the balm of his health, the balsam of his life—her industry, his surest wealth—her lips, his faithful counselors—her bosom, the softest pillow of his cares—and her prayers, the ablest advocate of heaven’s blessings on his head.”

We could not but whisper, Peter like: “Lo, we have left all, and have followed thee,” and with it a possible doubt, if the world’s appreciation justified the sacrifice. I was made to realize the truthfulness of the Savior’s promise of Mark 10:29, 30, and found in Bro. and Sr. Griffin, a father and mother whose kind administrations created a bond of love and appreciation that I hope will extend into eternity. While the hand of Providence seemed to be against us, it did not discourage my loyal supporters, Bro. and Sr. Wells, so when others thought it too cold, or the people too busy, they were anxious to make the effort. So in January or February I returned, this time assisted by Elder S. M. Reiste. After a few days of labors, supported by a marked degree of the Spirit’s presence, we were called upon to officiate in the ordinance of baptism; and as a result of their efforts Bro. and Sr. Wells were rewarded with a flood of joy when we garnered, as the first-fruits, their old schoolmate and Sr. Well's most intimate and dearest friend, Sr. Addie Van Syoc, also Sr. Mabel Morgan, two of earth's exemplary women, composed of the mettle that goes to make up the true saints of God. And if it were not for the fact that there was so many others, some of whom were persuaded but prevented from obeying, others persuaded, yet halting between two opinions, our joy might have been complete. But our hearts were drawn out to them, and our determination was to wrestle with them and our God until we gained the victory. So when we were ready for work, after this spring's conference, Bro. Wells was ready with another new opening near the former, as we had been shut out of that by the influence of religious adherents who had a form of godliness, yet denying the power thereof. Being unable to gainsay the principles of truth as advocated by us, they resorted to this unchristian and cowardly means of preventing us from preaching and the people hearing that which nine tenths of them will confess has power in it to save, if lived up to.

On the 11th of May we again responded to the call, and were soon wielding the sword of the Spirit in a little schoolhouse, where, while the number attending was not great, they were all thinking people and came to learn. It is true that the "heathen raged," and some of the people "imagined vain things," yet we were given two more precious souls. Sr. Alice Morgan came in under trying conditions. She is a noble woman who needs the prayers of all Saints to support her in her trials. We have perfect confidence in her triumph over all obstacles so long as her faith is anchored in the God we serve. The other was Sr. Esta M. Griffin, whose coming brought special joy to the writer, and the Saints. On the thirtieth day of January, 1906, I had the pleasure of uniting Bro. Pearl B. Griffin and Miss Esta Cleveland in a contract for life's companionship; and had learned to love them because of their noble traits of character. Bro. Pearl has for some time been a faithful and true followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, and it gave us great pleasure to see his young wife so soon associated with him in the one faith. May God's love and protecting care overshadow the new home.

We were compelled again to chase our efforts in order to attend the district conference under like conditions as before, and with a knowledge that our work was not done. After conference, associated with Elders Reiste and Peters we pitched one of the district tents at St. Charles, Iowa. Our interest was good, and before being compelled to leave to fill appointments previously made, I had the pleasure of seeing two more garnered into the fold, Bro. and Sr. Patrick, two noble people that come with a practical knowledge of the power of the gospel of Christ. From St. Charles, I went to Packard, Iowa, to assist Bro. McKiernan in a two-day meeting previously arranged for, June 23 and 24. Our meeting I am sure was profitable to all. At Packard there are a band of noble Saints, whose prospects for work are fine, but they need more frequent assistance and encouragement from the missionaries. But, ah! too few men for so large a field. Brethren of the local force, get up courage and jump into the work.

From Packard to Colo to assist Bro. M. H. Cook for a short time, who with others of the district force had been laboring with ceaseless energy for some time, and we know they have discharged their duty faithfully, and believe good was done through their efforts.

From Colo to Marshalltown in response to an invitation from Bro. and Sr. Stiley to spend the Fourth with a few of the Saints there, where we enjoyed the association of the Saints, and said the words that made John Harrington, of Tabor, Iowa, and Grace McCoy of Marshalltown, Iowa, husband and wife, likewise Orace Currie of Lomoni, Iowa, and Blanche Buell of Lookingglass, Oregon, We pray that the voyage of these young couples upon the somewhat treacherous and uncertain sea of life may be guarded by the unseen hand until they are safely landed in the haven of eternal rest. From Marshalltown we went to Montour, Iowa, to encourage our faithful Sr. Mary Kennell in her ceaseless efforts to bring the gospel to her neighbors. She has labored faithfully, and her companion, though not a member of the church, has made every sacrifice that could be expected in caring for the missionaries, and doing other things incidental to the prosecution of the work. Bro. Roth and Sheldon opened up the work, and laid a good foundation. The efforts were followed up by Bro. Reiste and the writer, with good results along the line, until it culminated in the bringing of one into the kingdom. Monday at noon Sr. Rosa Wall, a lady with a large family, was baptized and confirmed in the presence of several witnesses. The Spirit's witness to divine approval made it an occasion long to be remembered by many. We rejoice with Sr. Kennell that she has a sister in Christ, as a result of her labors. In our association with the people in this part of the district, we have made many warm friends, whom to know aight is to appreciate. And in all my missionary experiences, I have not found it as difficult to leave a place as when I was compelled to say good-bye to some who were so near the kingdom, as the Spirit bore evidence to me they were. I hope every Saint that believes in prayer, and has faith in God, will petition God not to withdraw his Spirit from them, but to use it might and main in bringing them until the victory is ours. We will take the tent there again this summer, no preventing provision.

At Nevada, Iowa, assisting Bro. M. H. Cook. We began tent-meetings last night, not knowing what the results will be. We ask the Saints of the district especially to join us in prayer for the accomplishment of good.

Our district reunion to be held at Rhodes, Iowa, August 24 to September 3, is not far in the future. We hope to see a good number in attendance. All those who have not paid their subscriptions to the district will confer a favor by looking after the matter at once. Write to W. C. Nirk, Rhodes, Iowa, C. M. Richeson, State Center, Iowa, or the writer at Lamon, Iowa, for any information desired. With a desire for the onward progress of the cause of Christ I am, as ever,

Your brother in the one faith,

W. Christy.

Editors Herald: I have just been reading some letters in the Herald which are a source of enjoyment to me. I do not and can not sit down and think there is nothing to do with the gospel of Christ and can not sit down and feel satisfied or justified, as the word teaches we must be doers of the word and not hearers only, deceiving our own selves, it being necessary to first hear in order to get faith; as Paul says in Hebrews, faith comes by hearing and after we hear then there is something to do to gain eternal life. Every inquiry that was made of the Savior was, What must I do? When the prison doors were opened the jailer was alarmed when he thought the prisoners were out, and the cry was made, Sirs, what must we do? and on the day of Pentecost, when the people became convinced they wanted to know what to do. Peter told them to repent and be baptized for the remission of their sins. In Matthew, fourth chapter, when Satan tried to tempt the Savior by saying "If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread," he know the Savior was hungry after fasting forty days, but the Savior taught us a lesson right there when he told Satan that we did not live by bread alone but by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God; that clearly sets forth the thought that it is as impossible to live a good spiritual and Christian life on half of the principles of the gospel and commandments of God as it is to live on bread alone. If we want a full and free salvation we must live up to the commandments. The ten commandments are not all, for Jesus, "Marvel not ye must be born again." I often hear people say I do not enjoy what I would like to, as the poet says there is no other way to be happy in Jesus but to trust and obey. The nearer we live to Jesus the more enjoyment we have. He never leaves us but we all stray off from him.

Dear Saints, let us all get in earnest and get to work. The writer feels very weak and unworthy but desires to hold out soul it would be a grand every man as his works have been."

We have no place to worship at this time and I feel that the harvest is evil spoken of; worship at this time and I feel that the harvest is

"Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give to every man as his works have been." We have no place to worship at this time and I feel that the harvest is great and the laborers are few. May the Lord send laborers in the vineyard to gather in the sheaves. The wheat, which is the righteous, will be gathered into the barn, the tares will be gathered into bundles to burn. May the time speedily come when the people can see the beauty of the gospel of Christ as taught by Christ and the apostles. If I could convince one soul it would be a grand work.

The writer is trying to present the gospel in any way he can; the people are slow to hear; the way of truth is evil spoken of; as it was in the days of Noah so will it be in the days of the coming of the Son of Man. There was eating and drinking and having a good time as they called it until the day Noah entered the ark and then it was too late to repent. I do not think there will be much change until just before Christ makes his appearance in the clouds, then the sun shall be darkened, the moon turned to blood every eye will see him; then they will cry for the rocks and the mountains to fall on them and hide them from the face of him.

We can not say as to the time Christ will come to begin his reign here on earth—not even the angels know the day or the hour; but, dear Saints, let us be ready, let the time be when it may. If the good man of the house had known in what hour of the night the thief would come he would not have had his house broken into, for he would have been watching. So the Savior is going to come upon some like a thief in the night on them that are not watching.

Dear Saints, my heart is in this work still I have not much time to read or study as I have to work at low wages by the laws, although it was permitted for the Israelites to take and to restore what had been exacted. After the return of the Jews from captivity, they were ordered by Nehemiah "to leave off usury" (Nehemiah 5:19) and to restore what had been exacted. Christ denounced all methods of extortion. "Give to every man that asketh of thee; and of him that taketh away thy goods ask them not again.... Love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again."—Luke 6:30, 35. (See Psalm 15:5.)

The farewell to the Missionaries.

The farewell has been said, and they are now on the great deep. Bro. and Sr. Burton came to Oakland June 11, and after a few days went to visit San Jose and other points, returning the 23d. Sunday, the 24th, Bro. Burton preached in the city in morning and in Oakland at night. Bro. C. H. Lake was ticketed to arrive on the 23d, but stopped over in Salt Lake City, which delayed his arrival till Tuesday at midnight. Bro. and Sr. Burton found a welcome home at Sr. Putney's, while Bro. and Sr. Lake were cared for by ardent Sr. Tate. Now the real work began for the brethren to make the final preparation for the journey. On account of the depleted condition of the Islands, it was deemed prudent to take along what provision they could, and of such as would keep for a time in the island atmosphere which is very destructive to everything. Even flour will sour and bacon will not keep. So to get this ready and "cleared" was no small piece of work, aside from their trunks and baggage, all the way from a suit-case to a mimo graphe. And when it was all done, there were four tired missionaries I assure you; but they said, We can rest when we get on the water. Sr. Lake thought she would likely soon go to bed and remain there for about twelve years,—the time for the trip. The sailing-time came on Sunday, at eleven o'clock, which prevented their attending the Sunday service. However, the Oakland Branch appointed a special prayer-meeting, as a farewell on Friday night, which was well attended, and was a good meeting. The missionaries were cheered by this demonstration of deep interest in their work and welfare, and the Saints were comforted by their words of counsel. Arrangements were made for the baptism of Bro. George Tate and his son John. After much trying, we obtained the use of a font in the Calvary Baptist church, and I wish here to state I never met a more cordial welcome to a favor than from Mrs. Matilda Brown, a wealthy lady in charge, also from Mr. Brawston, who prepared the font and did all he could to make us welcome. May the Lord richly reward them. We hastened the baptism that Brn. Burton and Lake might be with us at the confirmation. So when we came to the time of baptism, eight o'clock in the evening, there came four candidates instead of two. The wife of our faithful Bro. F. W. Wille, and Sr. Lena Martin, whose mother was baptized on June 13 by Bro. W. P. Bush. After the baptism the nice little company of Saints repaired to our church, where we held the confirmation. Bro. Burton was spokesman in all the confirmations, and was assisted by Bro. C. H. Lake, C. A. Parkin, F. W. Wille, and the writer. It was a season of joy, occurring as it did on the night before their sailing. Seven baptisms of late is cheering to the Saints. The Saints donated liberally to the Island mission, which is characteristic of the California Saints. The church service prevented many in Oakland from attending the sailing, yet they were engaged in a well-attended sacramental-service. The city branch postponed their meeting that they might attend. The time of parting came and the last good-bye was said, the ponderous machinery set in motion, and the great floating city slipped from the pier, and, passing out through famous Golden Gate, headed for the far-off islands, carrying God's messengers on their mission of sacrifice and love. They all stand under a spirit of good cheer and willingness. Bro. Burton was much worn in body, also Sr. Burton. Bro. and Sr. Lake were cheerful, yet realizing all may not be pleasant in the work. May peace attend them is the prayer of all.

J. M. Terry.

Usury.

Interest for money or property loaned. Usury is forbidden by the laws, although it was permitted for the Israelites to take from any one not a Jew. This was used as a means of ruining the Canaanites. After the return of the Jews from captivity, they were ordered by Nehemiah "to leave off usury" (Nehemiah 5:10) and to restore what had been exacted. Christ denounced all methods of extortion. "Give to every man that asketh of thee; and of him that taketh away thy goods ask them not again.... Love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again."—Luke 6:30, 35. Kirtland District conference will meet at Akron, Ohio, the last Saturday and Sunday of the reunion, August 11 and 12. Branch clerks will please send reports as early as possible to the district secretary.

To the Saints of the Northeastern Missouri District: This is to inform you that the reunion committee for said district have decided that it would be best not to hold a reunion this year. And, after consultation, the district officers have arranged to hold a convention at Highvue, Missouri, September 1 and 2, 1906, commencing at 10 a.m., and we hope we will have a good representation, as there are matters of importance to be considered. F. T. Mussell, vice-president, Bevier, Missouri.

The Southern California annual reunion will convene August 24, lasting ten days, at Mineral Park, a beautiful park of natural beauty, near the city of Los Angeles, on the streetcar line, near the ostrich-farm,—a five-cent car-fare. The park is furnished with 7 frame houses 10x12, which rent for $3 each for the ten days; 13 houses 12x14, which rent for $5 for the ten days; 1 house 24x24, which will serve as a tabernacle; 12 houses for $10, and a large dining-room furnished with tables; a kitchen with all necessary ranges for cooking for a large body of people on the cooperative plan. The small houses are furnished with a gas stove, and gas for lighting and cooking if desired—but gas will be charged extra. Meals will be furnished at 15 cents, and the head of that department promises good fare. Bro. G. T. Griffiths, E. L. Kelley, F. A. Smith, and C. E. Crumley have been long planning this. An effort is being made for combining the choirs from San Bernardino, Garden Grove, Santa Ana, and Los Angeles unto one large chorus choir for the occasion. Parties who do not wish to use the small houses can rent tents 10x12, 10x10, $5; 12x12, $8. Send all orders for tents or houses direct to R. T. amount in cash, as we have to pay in advance. Let everybody come and make this the best reunion, spiritually and socially, we have ever enjoyed. Albert Carmichael, George Wixom, R. T. Cooper, committee.

The Southern Nebraska District reunion will convene in the grove of E. D. Briggs at Nebraska City, Nebraska, September 7, continuing over the 16th. Tents will be supplied at a rental of $1.25 for 10x10, 3 feet wall, and $2.25 for 12x14, 3 feet wall. Send in all orders early, accompanied by rental. The above price does not cover freight and will be made up on the grounds. We anticipate having H. E. Smith, D. R. Chambers, Henry Kemp, and the local missionaries of the district present. Arrangements will be made for meals by the committee. We would urge the Saints to spend a pleasant time with the Saints of Southern Nebraska. H. A. Higgins, chairman committee.

Nauvoo Reunion.

The price on the river excursion trip will be about 50 cents—an all day's ride. Stray for bed-ticks will be on the ground for 10 cents. Arrangements will be made to deliver luggage on the ground at a reasonable rate, perhaps not more than 694 cents. Weekly cheaper. Rooms vary in price and size. “First come first served.” We may be able to give you better prices on tents than have been published, owing to the fact that we have rates from a new tent company which we are sure will furnish them more cheaply. If so, the renter will get the full benefit of it. Those who have the money to spare can rent a cottage across the ferry in the morning about 9 a.m. and return in the evening after the last meeting.

M. H. SHREffREJD. J. W. PETERSON.

Change of Date of Colorado Reunion.

Owing to an error in renting the grounds, it is learned that the Eastern Colorado District reunion will have to be held a week earlier than announced, viz.: from Friday, August 17, to and including Sunday, August 26. The conference will be held August 24 to 26.

The reunion will be held at Arlington Park, just south of Denver, in beautiful camp-gounds, with plenty of shade and water, and on the street-car line. From the Union Depot, take Calfax car and transfer to Harman or Fourth Avenue car.

Tents may be had for $3.00 for the whole time, size 10x12 or 12x14 feet. Write Bro. E. F. Shupe, 3633 Clayton Street, Denver, for tents. Meals served on the grounds, cheap.

Apostle I. C. Smalley is expected to visit us, as also other good speakers. Arrange to be present the whole time. Pray for the outpouring of God’s Spirit upon the meeting.

The Finest Horses: The Best Cattle.

The finest horses the world can produce, the best cattle of the best breed of America, for all lovers of fine animals who visit the Iowa State Fair at Des Moines this year.

Iowa farmers have learned the great value of these annual exhibitions, and each year they journey by thousands to the State capital, coming from every corner of the State, to spend a week with the horses and cattle placed on exhibition by enterprising breeders of a score of States. It is the best place in the world for farmers to get into touch with everything modern in live-stock breeding, and they show their appreciation by regular attendance at the fair. Iowa people are exceptionally favored in being able so easily and cheaply to attend an exhibition of live stock second to none.

GREAT DRAFT TEAMS.

He is indeed poor who can not appreciate a show of splendid four- and six-horse draft teams like that which proved almost sensational last year. A still better exhibition is assured. Silver cups worth $150 each go to the best teams in each class. Professor C. F. Curtiss, of the State Agricultural College, is superintendent, and he is at work to make the horse-show this year surpass all previous records. Prize-winners will get over $4,000 this year, and in addition many special premiums such as silver cups by the American Clydesdale Association, and gold medals by the Percheron Society.

BEST CATTLE SHOW.

Nobody now questions the greatness of the Iowa cattle shows, measured by any standard, no matter how severe. Last year with 800 head, every animal fit for a glass case, the Iowa exhibitions got into the class with the biggest of the world. Ex-Governor Packard, the superintendent, feels sure that there will be a still better show this year, and in preparation for the larger number of exhibits a fine new brick cattle barn is being built. More than $10,000 is offered in premiums on cattle, and to this is added many special premiums. An entire new class this year is that of Dutch Belted, which will bring out some new exhibitors from the East.

SPECIAL PREMIUMS.

This year the list of special premiums is unusually fine in the cattle department. The much-coveted will be reserved this year for a purse of $100. A thousand dollars is offered for special Iowa classes on three well known breeds. Then there is $300 as a special for the Angus, $500 for the Herefords, and $1,000 for Shorthorns, all offered by breeding associations.

ENTRIES SOON CLOSE.

In order that the live stock catalogue may be printed, all entries for horses and cattle close August 1. Secretary J. C. Simpson reports many preliminary inquiries and entries. All exhibition cattle are returned home after the fair fair.

It is going to be a great year in Iowa for cattle and horses as well as for grain and grass.

Let the People Incorporate.

If the people controlled industry, they would not be content with the production of anything unless it were the best that could be produced.

Can you imagine a united people adulterating their own food, fraudulently mixing cotton and wool for clothing, and lying to themselves about it? Can you imagine them living in any building unless they combined in every part the highest possible intelligence, in art, science and architecture? Can you imagine them planting poor seed and raising poor wheat? No, you can not. A United World People would be content with nothing except it were the best that their intelligence as a whole could produce. - King C. Gillette, in the National Magazine for July.

Read the Label.

SOME OF THE ALUM BAKING POWDERS OFFERED BY GROCERS.

As is well known, the laws of most States require all baking powders made from alum to show that fact on their labels. It is not always that the manufacturers comply with the law, or if they do in a technical way the terms used are not intelligible to the average consumer.

For instance "basic aluminum sulphate" is nothing more or less than "alum." The following list of baking powders containing alum is made up from the official reports of the Food Commissioners or from the report of the U. S. Agricultural Department at Washington, or other equally reliable authority.

Baking Powders Containing Alum:

- CALUMET ........................................ Contains Alum.
- I. C. ........................................ Contains Alum.
- K. C. ........................................ Contains Alum.
- PALACE ........................................ Contains Alum.
- Cameo Baking Powder Co., Chicago.
- BON BON, .................................... Contains Alum.
- Hotel ........................................ Contains Alum.
- ATLAS ........................................ Contains Alum.
- Chapman & Smith Co., Chicago.
- CHAPMAN'S .................................. Contains Alum.
- CHICAGO YEAST, ................................ Contains Alum.

The housekeeper should bear in mind that alum costs but two cents a pound while cream of tartar costs thirty. The quality of the powder is therefore usually indicated by the price.

EDITORIAL

ONENESS.

It is a wonderful thing to be at a oneness with God. Paul has it somewhere in his writings that “We are workers together with God.”

Who are the “workers with God” referred to by Paul, so far as an application of the saying may be made in our time? Is the text applicable to us, any of us, now?

To be at one with the Lord is to be at one with every good man, every good woman, the angels, Christ Jesus, and God.

If any man is at a oneness with God, it is because he has brought himself into such condition by submission to the words, the will, the commands of God. No man can be at oneness with God, and hold himself subject to his own will, to conserve his own intents and purposes.

Submission to the will of God must be a voluntary, an intelligent subjection to the power of him who rules well, not through fear but from an absorbing desire to please God and become one with Christ as Christ is one with the Father.

To be one with God is to be in affiliation and in oneness with the church of God, no matter where that church is; not in a self-assertive way of one’s belief and opinions as being the only standards of the faith, but in a cheerful and supportive manner, sustaining the recognized standards, maintaining the integrity of the body, and its accepted theories of procedure.

It was argued in Paul’s day that a man should not think himself to be of more worth than he was, or putting the matter in modern saying not to think too much of himself, for such overestimate of one’s self would render him subject to criticism and trial that would expose him to defeat and consequent disgrace. A man who has himself in a proper degree of oneness with God is in no condition of mind to exalt himself beyond his due, and this should be an additional reason for a man to bring himself into that oneness.

According to the promise of the Savior, “seek and ye shall find; ask and ye shall receive,” a man is entitled to receive of the Spirit of truth, the influence of which, if yielded to, will bring him into the unity with the truth, that is, into a just relationship. with the things of God. The man who is at odds with his acquaintances, his friends, his brethren, and his surroundings is not, can not be at one with God. He lacks the element of assimilation, and is practically a rule unto himself, and can not have a just appreciation of what he ought to be to find the unity he longs for, but does not seek.

The "fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man," requires oneness between men engaged in any great work, if success is to crown their work as a finality. Whatever will conduce to that oneness, must be done by both parties to the unity. It is not enough that God is willing to do his part and to do it in its hour and time; it is essential that those who reap the greater benefits from the compact should be not only willing, but should be actually doers of that which requires oneness between men engaged in any great understanding.

How may I be one with God? This is determined by my becoming subject to Him, not He to me.

THE UPWARD TREND.

The reform movements in the world foretell the ushering in of a higher plane of living. The exposure and condemnation of present-day evils, that have come with such astounding rapidity, in such quick succession from every quarter, are the harbingers not of retrogression and decay, but of an advance step toward a higher standard of honor and civic righteousness, if the revealments made are used as they should be, as stepping-stones to something higher.

From the Public for June 23, we select the following:

A SANE OPTIMIST.

In recent years we have been accustomed to think of optimism as a species of good-natured insanity. The self-styled optimist has been a person incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong or good and bad. But a truer apprehension of life has latterly been apparent. No better instance of this has come to our knowledge than the baccalaureate sermon of Doctor Raymond, Chancellor of Union College, at Schenectady, New York. Doctor Raymond had no diatribes for those men and women who have uncovered the awful corruption of our time. He made no "attempt to detract from the seriousness of the evils brought to light." To him, the facts justify "the general condemnation." But he saw, and this is the really important thing about it all, that "the evils now denounced have always existed," but their malignity was not appreciated, whereas they are now seen in a clearer light and as a result "a higher standard of honesty and honor has been raised." In other words, the exposure and condemnation to-day of evils that yesterday passed unnoticed or wore the mask of virtue, do not mean retrogression; they mean progress, a higher conception of righteousness, and consequently the prophecy of a still higher civilization. It is the old, old story; we must cease to do evil before we can learn to do well; and that we may cease to do evil we must know our evils and acknowledge them—apply the "muck-rake," if you please.

It seems that we are gradually getting away from the old fable that if you want to be good, all you have to do is just to contemplate good things, and the bad will disappear of itself, and are becoming acquainted with the better and deeper thought, that we must first know our evils, acknowledge them, and cease to do them, then we have the proper foundation (or at least the excavation preparatory to the foundation) upon which to build good works. Repentance means all of that. And we are given to understand by the Inspired Translation that we must take this principle of "repentance" with us if we would arrive at perfection. Have some of us overlooked this? We have been accused of being pessimistic, and of always holding to view the discouraging features. However, it is not discouraging to us that these things (our evils) exist, if we could only see a manifest desire to know them, and then forsake. The discouraging feature would be to know, and yet neither acknowledge nor forsake. And the only object in attempting to present them to view is, that we may know, acknowledge, and cease to do.

Events in the world around us should be studied; for they have a bearing upon us. The church is affected to a greater or lesser degree by its environment. Low conditions in the world mean, too often, low conditions in the church. This should not be, but it seems to be so; perhaps because of our scattered condition. Reform movements in the world, under such conditions, mean reform movements in the church. It is unfortunate that it is necessary for the world to take the initiative, for the church ought to lead in everything that is good. As certainly as the world is experiencing a reform movement to-day, so may the church experience a great upward trend; but first we must know our evils, acknowledge them, and then cease to do them. And those of us, if any there be, who are following a course that is the least bit questionable, whether in secular pursuits or in church-work, should take warning, turn over a new leaf, and endeavor to get a foothold on the platform of the higher standard that is sure to be raised. The reform is certain, the movement must be upward, there will be a turning and overturning, and if we are found wanting we shall suffer loss, and our iniquities be spoken from the housetops as it were.

In the Herald for March 7, a writer in speaking of "the leading men of the church in each and every quorum," said, "Some of these men are at a loss to know what they have said or done that justifies even a remote suspicion that they are either willingly or willfully lacking in the performance of the duties imposed upon them by their position and the law of God.

On March 29 the One to whom be all praise for ever and ever, as it were directly answers the thought, in a communication to Bro. Luff (see his epistle in HERALD for June 6) in these words:

But ye say, "Wherein have we failed and in what is our infidelity revealed?" Listen: and I will give answer, and then shall ye reply whether ye have been silent when evil has been present among you and whether ye have consented thereby to a defilement of mine heritage.

That is what causes the suspicion, if there be any (but with many it has passed from an unwilling suspicion to a sorrowful conviction); therein lies the failure,—in being silent when the Lord's heritage is being defiled. Lest we should ask, "When have we been silent?" the Lord proceeds to point out three distinct evils in existence, in connection with which we have shunned to declare the whole counsel of God: 1. Desecration of houses of worship. 2. Seeking wealth by guile and oppression and unseemly desire, and making a show of being in harmony with the law. 3. Making covenants at other shrines.

He does it in this wonderfully comprehensive language:

For, behold, houses have been builded unto me and have been, nevertheless, reserved for pleasures which do not enrich the soul. Altars have been dedicated unto me and have been shared with other gods. The mammon of this world has been sought by guile and oppression and unseemly desire, and have been given as a tithe or an offering unto me, and I have chosen them out of the world and made them to be agents unto me; but they have sought out other shrines and made covenant in secret places in which I have no delight.

So we see that there is need for reform in more ways than one. Not a reform in gospel theory, but a reform in gospel practice. We each ought to be ready to welcome it, and pray the Lord to hasten it.

That the Lord contemplates taking part in it we gather from the following:

Shall I be content while this evil doth pollute my estate? Behold the brick that is not burned and the mortar which is not tempered; yes, and the material which I have not selected shall not find permanent place with that of my choosing; for my fires shall consume and my floods shall overwhelm, and men within and without my church shall yet learn that but one pattern hath been given by which ye shall build, if I shall accept your labor; . . .

So let us wait, watch, hope, and at the same time work for the forward movement that is sure to come, not forgetting that we must know our evils, acknowledge them, and cease to do them before we can learn to do well; and that there is but one pattern by which we can build, if we expect to please God.

And we are promised that the time will come, thank God, when men both in and out of the church shall learn that there is but one pattern by which we should build. Evidently the divine mind considers that men in and out of the church have not yet learned that, fully; and we are led to the conclusion that sooner or later something out of the ordinary is going to take place. Are we wrong in the conviction that the surest, and seemingly about the only way this can be brought about is by such a separation of the burned from the unburned brick, the tempered from the untempered mortar, the selected from the unselected material, that the attention of even the men of the world shall be arrested, and they shall be moved to exclaim, "Surely, is there a God in Israel who does not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance?" Whether it shall come about suddenly or by gradual processes matters not, it is to be so apparent that men must learn this great truth.

Should we not be preparing ourselves that these events come not upon us unawares, and that we be not found to be half-baked brick or untempered mortar, only fit to be rejected and cast aside? If we are really in earnest in our expressions of anxiety for the good of the cause, will we not in our souls be willing to say, "Lord, if I am benighted, unfit, and unworthy, and am not building, and will not build according to the one pattern, for the good of thy work cast me out with the rejected material, no matter what the remorse to me, that Zion may rise and and shine?" Let God be the judge.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

William B. Hunter in attacking the municipal ownership idea advanced by Clarence S. Darrow at the Illinois Bar Association meeting said: "The adoption of the principle of municipal ownership and operation would be a long stride toward socialism or communism, as said systems, according to an eminent bishop, would operate in but two places, 'heaven and among savages.'" Since heaven upon earth is the ultimate end of our labors, if the statement in the first instance is true, then that is what we want. And if "savages" are nearer the heavenly ideal than those who are supposed to be enlightened, they are certainly to be commended.

In a stirring speech before the Illinois State Bar Association, W. R. Curran of Pekin, Illinois, among other things said: "The present condition of graft in this nation has appalled us. With fear we contemplate the future. The rising tide of greed seems to be undermining and submerging some of the landmarks that our fathers have set. The moral standards that we have deemed as fixed and eternal appear to be crumbling. Many men of honored names, who have stood for a lifetime as the exponents of honesty, integrity, and manhood, have been unmasked and revealed to their fellow men as grinning skeletons of deception, fraud, dishonor, and treason to every interest and every trust that we hold dear. . . We are come to parting of the ways. This nation must determine once for all the question, Shall Mammon or manhood be the dominant force in this government? . . . Fear has been expressed that the outcry against graft was becoming hysterical, and that the muck-rake was a detriment. The muck-rake is only detrimental to the muck. The muck-rake is its own justification. So long as it turns up muck we need the rake. . . The most reassuring sign of the time is the promptness and unanimity of the judgment of the court of public opinion rendered on the offenders so soon as the offense has come to certain public knowledge. Graft can thrive only in secret. Darkness is its breeding-ground. Publicity is its poison."
