I have just closed a series of meetings at this place, and as a result I baptized two yesterday and four more to-day. This is a new field, about twenty-five miles from the railroad. There were four Saints here who were members of the Southeastern Illinois District. Am feeling well in the work and am sure others will come into the church here if the Saints are faithful. I go to-morrow to Hoquiam to reply to a lecture delivered against us.

IN THE rapid events of life there is little leisure for reflection; and were there more, he who reasons when he ought to act, is sure, in case of temptation to reason wrong. — Paley.

BRO. L. G. HOLLOWAY, Humptulips, Washington, December, 25: "I have just closed a series of meetings at this place, and as a result I baptized two yesterday and four more to-day. This is a new field, about twenty-five miles from the railroad. There were four Saints here who were members of the Southeastern Illinois District. Am feeling well in the work and am sure others will come into the church here if the Saints are faithful. I go to-morrow to Hoquiam to reply to a lecture delivered against us. Have never been blessed in my labors as of late. Those baptized are noble people, part of them heads of families. All seem to take hold of the work with zeal."

There never was a time when the poor were being ground down in a more subtle and secret way than at present. One evidence of this is found in the reports that the Government inspectors have discovered that the Standard Oil Company is organized in a most astonishing manner; many local oil companies which talk loudly against "Standard Oil" are found to be backed by that company. The profits are enormous. This is a sample of what is being done in other enterprises. The daily press reports that a combined movement is on foot, backed by the capital interests of the country, to get control of enough States in such a way that the perpetuation of our Republic will be impossible.

The working people are being skinned on every hand, one man striving to gain another man's loss. There is no feeling of compunction about this in the State capitals. The people are being made to eat the fruit of their own labor. If the large companies have to suffer, let them suffer.

WE ARE GOING TO DO ABOUT IT?

Russia is to-day a boiling, seething mass of discontent and revolution, a condition brought about through years of abuses heaped upon the laboring classes by those whose sense of justice had been strangled by greed of wealth and authority. The laboring classes endured until humanity could endure no longer, then the upheaval came. The autocracy in its blindness thought itself able to cope with the situation by force, and reduce the laborers to the condition of beasts and keep them in subjection; but the "beasts" have turned to rend them.

That an upheaval of a nature as serious in our own country threatens, is believed by many, and with reason. The Book of Mormon, in few words, portrays conditions exactly as they now exist; moreover it is a prophecy of what would be right in our own day.

We quote as follows:

And it shall come to pass, that those who have dwindled in unbelief [the Indians], shall be smitten by the hand of the Gentiles. And the Gentiles are lifted up in the pride of their eyes, and have stumbled, because of the greatness of their stumbling-block, that they have built up many churches; nevertheless they put down the power and the miracles of God, and preach up unto themselves, their own wisdom, and their own learning, that they may get gain, and grind upon the face of the poor; and there are many churches built up which cause envyings, and there are many churches which cause envyings.

hand. They receive a minimum of reward for their toil, and pay a maximum, almost, of profit for the necessaries of life. But like the Russian autocracy, the oppressors of the people are blind to the dire results that must follow when their victims shall have endured to the limit.

But what have we to do with these conditions? This much at least, if no more: We must prepare ourselves against the evil day that is sure to follow upon the heels of such injustice to humanity. To escape the consequences that would fall upon us otherwise, we must comply with the law, the celestial law, which includes tithes, offerings, and consecrations. And we must not lose sight of the use to which these consecrations are to be put: To care for the needy, the poor, to purchase lands, to build places of worship, and to give inheritances to those who fulfill the law. (See Doctrine and Covenants 42:8-11; 51:1; 70:2-4; 72:3, 4; 82:2.)

But while possession of the land is necessary, and an allotting of inheritances is comprehended in the law, they will be as nothing in the work of redeeming and building up Zion, unless those who shall possess the land, those to whom inheritances shall be allotted, shall be found keeping God's commandments. There must be an acquiring of the land; there must be also a living closer to God. The two must go hand in hand if success would crown our efforts. We can not neglect the temporal law without inviting failure. We can not compromise with evil in the least degree without danger to our spiritual welfare. It is not safe to welcome anything that we may be morally certain has wrong in it, for the sake of the little good we may hope to receive from it. Safer by far would it be to refuse to participate in or indorse that which we know to be detrimental, even though we run the risk of losing something that somebody might imagine would possibly be good, or at least not hurtful. To illustrate:

Not long since we saw a college student pick up his skates, one Sunday morning, and take himself off to the pond for a few hours' sport. In our mind we sought to arrange some reasons that might appeal to him, showing the wisdom, on the Lord's day, of refraining from conduct that would bring reproach upon the church. But that same morning a meeting of officers and teachers of our Sunday-school voted by about thirty to four to hold their Christmas entertainment in the church Sunday evening. (It was prevented, if we understand aright, by the branch officers refusing to allow the use of the church in that way.) This was not done by an oversight, but after fully considering the matter, and we feel free in referring to it for two reasons: First, if it is something which they feel and believe is perfectly right, they will be glad to have it known by all; and if it be true that the majority of those who oversee the "nursery" of the church, would, after mature thought and deliberation, do something of which they are ashamed, it ought to be known by all. Second, we refer to it that we may have something definite to illustrate the tendency, as it seems to be manifested in many places, to drift into worldliness.

The effect of the action of this Sunday-school, so far as our hope of inducing a change of conduct in the young man was concerned, was to effectually close our lips. We could not hope to overcome an example of this kind set by his teachers, who argued that anything that was fit to have in the church at all, was fit to have on Sunday. He could argue that anything that was fit to do on any day was fit to do on Sunday. The only difference was that one would carry out the principle on the ice-pond, and the others in the church—a mere matter of taste. Sophistry of that kind would permit anything. It supports the Brighamites in dancing.

Why, even our business-meetings are held on week-days, and not on Sunday unless necessary. Any meeting growing out of church-work that is a necessity may properly be held in the church on week-days, and, if absolutely required, on Sunday; but preference and common sense says, Hold business-meetings on week-days, if possible. Business-meetings are a necessity. Entertainments are not a necessity on Sunday, or any other day for that matter, and hence if held in the church at all it should be with a degree of certainty that they will prove a benefit, morally.

Would you condemn parents, in the face of a manifestation of such convenient and elastic consciences upon the part of those in charge of Sabbath instruction of the young, if they hesitated about placing their children in a position where their consciences, too, would be educated and molded into the same elastic and uncertain condition?

As we see things of this character in different departments of the work, we are made to grieve for Zion, and to realize that there has not been a general response to the call, "Come up higher." The young people of the stakes ought to be leading the way in the front ranks, spiritually—an encouragement to the young in outlying districts. It is not so.

As we view the situation, and see the discouragements under which the ministry are laboring, we can not but be saddened. Reports received from various districts up to the early part of December, record a net loss in church membership of about seventy, in the United States, since General Conference. A goodly number of baptisms are reported, largely children of Saints; but there have been many losses by death, and others after putting their hands to the plow have turned back.

We know there is a class in the church who scout the idea of there being anything seriously wrong within our ranks, and who are ready to brand everybody who believe they see trouble ahead as being in the dark. But what of the history of the past? Take, for instance, Israel, the chosen seed. Their prophets and inspired men continually admonished, reproved, and exhorted to repentance. But every time a young prophet arose and prophesied good things, he was received with open arms, and the Lord's prophet despised. Christ, John the Baptist, Ezekiel, Jeremiah, and Isaiah were made outcasts, but the chief priests, the scribes, the Pharisees, and the hypocrites drew their robes about them and said, "We be Abraham's children." Again, look at the church at Nauvoo in 1840 to 1846. Every fear that evil and wrong were creeping into the church was discouraged by some fluent talker or writer who sung, "What a grand and good people we are! The best people in the world! The best city!" etc. This disposition to tell themselves how good they were increased as wickedness increased (as will be seen by reading the Journals of Discourses), and after the death of the Prophet the lines between the two classes were more distinctly drawn. The class which saw the iniquities of those whom they believed had once been chosen to teach the principles of obedience to the law, were ostracised, denounced (the Prophet's family was among them), and discredited. The class that thought everything was going along right, were the ones who followed Brigham Young, and became his dupes. And the majority of them never did discover that there was anything wrong, so far as we have any record of. The other class stayed behind, waited for light, and many returned to the Reorganization. In the two periods of time mentioned, which class was in the dark? It is patent to us now; but those most immediately concerned could not see it then.

To bring the lesson closer: We think we observe a disposition upon the part of some, now, to tell themselves and the rest of the Saints what a good people we are, and what a wonderful land Zion is; and we fear this disposition is growing. Judging from the past, it is a sign of retrogression. If we are the best people in the world, better let people find it out for themselves by our actions, rather than by our words. If it be a fact, they will find it out soon enough, never fear. We have two classes in the church to-day. One class believe they see grave wrongs in the church, danger threatening, the work being hindered, and they are greatly distressed by it. We have another class who are greatly encouraged; they think everything is going on "just lovely," and we are making grand progress. Question: If we should be called upon to pass through a crisis such as came to the church at Nauvoo, which class would be most liable to follow "Brigham"? Shall we let past history have its weight in forming our judgment, or shall we put it lightly aside and say there would be a reversal of the rule this time?

We are confronted with the fact that there is a class which is discontented with existing conditions, and it is a fact, we believe, that can not be ignored much longer without inviting disaster. The class is so large it would astonish many. Should not cognizance be taken of the situation, and efforts made to relieve it? Let us ask: What are we going to do about it? Then let us read the question this way, What are we going to do about it? And again, What are we going to do about it? In any case let us not do the Russian autocracy act and blind ourselves to the real danger. But let us remember this: However serious the condition may be, there is nothing to fear if we are willing to let God act in the matter—there is nothing to fear but wrong.

It seems to us that every one who is alive to the situation should elect himself a committee on investigation, to examine himself, to humble himself, and to seek the God of Israel, in fastings and prayer, with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, from now until next conference time, that perchance the Lord would come to the rescue; for he has said, "Ask, and it shall be given you; . . . knock, and it shall be opened unto you." If we are in a lower condition now than in years past, it is the wisdom (?) of man that has brought us there; and man never will be able to get us out again. We have little hope of seeing much progress toward Zion's redemption until there is manifested a greater dependence in God, and a little less in man.

Our hope is in God.

L. A. G.

"SHALL football be ended or mended?" is the suggestive title of a group of articles contributed to the Review of Reviews for January by Presidents Butler, of Columbia; Wheeler, of California, and Finley, of New York, and two of the best-qualified experts on physical training in the United States,—Doctor D. A. Sargent, of the Hemenway Gymnasium, Harvard University, and Doctor Luther H. Gulick, of the New York City public-school system. The consensus of these writers seems to be that the "ending" of football as a college pastime in America can only be averted by most radical "mending."

It may not be too early to suggest that visitors and delegates to our next General Conference give a little less attention to the extra millinery boxes and a superabundance of fine wearing apparel, make a little less calculation on a time of feasting and social demonstration, and come together with minds occupied more with the things of God, soberness of thought, and a realization of the importance of our work.

Stock-taking every day is a great aid to advancement. Stop and add yourself up at the close of each day and see if you have anything to carry over. If you have nothing but ciphers to carry over, something is wrong somewhere.
OBEY COUNSEL.

In the Salt Lake Tribune for December 25, 1906, President F. M. Smith deals with the question of doing as you are told by your leaders, as taught by the Utah Mormons. It was published in first three columns of page 1 and a little over a column of page 2, the Tribune furnishing the following headlines: "Curses President of the United States; Reed Smoot dare not discard hierarchy; the Mormon church teaches bold treason—from its pulpits it sets people at war with nation that has been its benefactor; A grandson of the Prophet Joseph Smith quotes some startling history; It is accompanied by a little blasphemy; Obey your leaders, even if they deny law, history, and science." We give the body of the article entire, as follows:

In the issue of the Deseret News for December 2 the leading editorial is devoted to an article under the heading "Freedom and 'Priesthood,'" in which occurs this statement: "Unquestioning obedience to men is not a doctrine of the church, nor is it exacted of any of its members." This statement is undoubtedly made in an attempted refutation of the charge which was recently made against the Mormon church over the signature of the writer in which he stated that "unquestioning obedience to the priesthood" was a prominent feature, or doctrine, or teaching of the Mormon church.

The attempted denial by the News of this charge is our justification for an examination of this subject at this time.

On October 5, 1896, in a speech made in the Tabernacle at Salt Lake City, Utah, while the Thatcher case was under consideration, John Henry Smith, an apostle of prominent rank in the Mormon church, said:

"During this conference, my brethren and sisters, the spirit of inspiration resting upon the brethren has been, 'give ear to the legitimate and proper counsels of the priesthood.'"

SAMPLE "COUNSEL."

What may be deemed "legitimate and proper counsels of the priesthood" can be gathered from the following extracts from sermons of representative men of the church. Possibly one which will at once show us the great scope of what has been considered by the leaders of the church as "legitimate" on the part of the priesthood in "giving counsel," is best shown by the following extract from a sermon delivered in the Tabernacle in Salt Lake City by Heber C. Kimball, then of the presidency, November 8, 1857, as recorded in Journal of Discourses, volume 6, page 32:

"In regard to our situation and circumstances in these valleys, brethren, WAKE UP! WAKE UP, YE ELDERS OF ISRAEL, AND LIVE TO GOD and none else; and learn to do as you are told, both old and young: learn to do as you are told for the future. And when you are taking a position, if you do not know that you are right, do not take it—I mean independently. But if you are told by your leaders to do a thing, do it. None of your business whether it is right or wrong."

"Brother Brigham is my leader; he is my prophet, my seer, and my revealer; and whatever he says, that is for me to do; and it is not for me to question him one word, nor to question God a minute. Do you not see? . . . You and I want to live our religion and do as we are told, not questioning a word for a moment. You have got to stop that. It is enough for others to do that, without our meddling with those things."

And again in the same sermon on page 34:

"Well, now, if you will do just as you are told, you will increase in knowledge ten thousand times faster than you will pray six hours; and if you follow that course, you will not advance in your religion one hundredth part so much as that man that will do just as he is told, no matter what."

AUTHORITATIVE TEACHING.

In making these extracts from the Journal of Discourses, we feel we are presenting what is accepted by the leaders and people of the Mormon church as authoritative, for at the last conference held in the Tabernacle in this city one of the apostles, Hyrum M. Smith, on the afternoon of October 6, 1896, gave the Journal of Discourses indorsement as containing the inspired words of the servants of the Lord.

Let us, then, present some more extracts from sermons preached by Heber C. Kimball. In addressing an audience in the Salt Lake City Tabernacle on March 1, 1887, he said as recorded in Journal of Discourses, volume 4, page 250:

"How can you become impregnated with the Spirit and power of God; except you become impregnated through us? There is no true path, except to do as you are told by those whom the Lord has called and chosen, and placed to direct you."

In volume 3 of the same publication, page 282, is reported a sermon he preached in Salt Lake City, Utah, June 10, 1856, in which he said the following:

"When a servant of God counsels you, it is your duty to hear and obey his words. I am fully aware that the world does not like the idea of one man ruling this entire people with his word, but I would not give one farthing for this community if they could not be governed by one man, beloved and chosen of the Lord. You have no salvation only what you get through that source, and every true-hearted Latter-day Saint, believes so.

"Our crops are almost entirely destroyed and what good will that do? It will bring us into a position where we can appreciate the blessing of Providence. Brother Brigham says that he does not fear earth, hell, nor the devil, if this people will do as they are told and listen to counsel. Do you suppose that the world could ever come through our bulwarks, if this people were to obey counsel? No, they could not."

In a sermon delivered August 30, 1857, he said, as found in volume 5 of the Journal of Discourses, pages 162 and 168:

"I will ask you the question, gentlemen and ladies: Can you live your religion except you do as you are told? I have said, again and again, that if we live our religion, and do as we are told, the people [Johnson's army] will never come over these mountains; for we shall slay the poor devils before they get there.

"I do not know of any religion except doing as I am told: and if you do, you have learned something that I have never learned. You have a Governor here to dictate you and to tell you what to do: and if we will live our religion we are always safe, are we not?"

A "LIVING ORACLE."

As an example of some of the teachings and language that is to be accepted from these so-called "living oracles" without question by the Mormon people is the following from the lips of some of the living examples of the "living oracles" in a sermon which he preached at Salt Lake City on July 26, 1857, as recorded in Journal of Discourses, volume 5, page 95:

"May the Almighty bless you! May the peace of God be with you and upon your children, and your children's children, for ever and ever! And may God Almighty curse our enemies [Voices: "Amen!"] I feel to curse my enemies: and when God won't bless them, I do not think he will ask me to bless them. If I did, it would be to put the poor curses to death who have brought death and destruction on me and my brethren—upon my wives and my children that I buried on the road between the States and this place."
"Did I ever wrong them, a man or a woman of them, out of a dime? No; but I have fed thousands where I never received a dime. Poor, rotten curses! And the President of the United States, inasmuch as he has turned against us and will take a course to persist in pleasing the ungodly curses that are howling around him for the destruction of this people, he shall be cursed, in the name of Israel's God, and he shall not rule over this nation, because they are my brethren; but they have cast me out and cast you out; and I curse him and all his coadjutors in his cursed deeds, in the name of Jesus Christ and by the authority of the holy priesthood; and all Israel shall say "Amen."

And following this cursing pronounced on the President of the United States the "living oracle" made the following close to his remarkable speech or sermon, if sermon it might be called:

"Send 2,500 troops here, our brethren, to make a desolation of this people! God Almighty helping me, I will fight until there is not a drop of blood in my veins. Good God! I have wives enough to whip out the United States; for they will whip themselves. Amen."

ANOTHER SAMPLE.

In this connection the temptation can scarcely be resisted to give another sample of what at times has emanated from the brains and mouths of this "holy priesthood" of the Mormon church: this stuff which must be accepted without question by the Mormon people. I quote from a sermon preached by Heber C. Kimball, September 6, 1856, in which the following prophecy is made by that distinguished advocate of "unquestioning obedience to the priesthood":

"The church and kingdom to which we belong will become the kingdom of our God and his Christ, and Brother Brigham Young will become President of the United States. [Voices responded, "Amen."]"

"And I tell you he will be something more; but we do not now want to give him the name; but he is called and ordained to a far greater station than that, and he is foreordained to take that station, and he has got it; and I am Vice-President, and Brother Wells is the Secretary of the Interior—you and of all the armies in the flesh.

"You don't believe that, but I can tell you it is one of the smallest things that I can think of. You may think that I am joking; but I am perfectly willing that Brother Long should write every word of it; for I can see it just as naturally as I see the earth and the productions thereof."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, p. 219.

UNQUESTIONING OBEDIENCE.

But to return to the subject of "unquestioning obedience to the priesthood." On July 13, 1855, at Provo, Ezra T. Benson preached a sermon which appears in Journal of Discourses, volume 3, and on page 63 of that volume we find the following:

"I think you are pretty well satisfied in Provo with those who are placed over you, for you know that they are appointed by the authority of heaven, and it is the right of those who appointed them to dictate you and all others; it is therefore your duty to give heed to those placed over you in authority, and if you do, you will enjoy the Spirit of God to a great extent, even to your heart's satisfaction.

"We are called upon to uphold, by our faith, works and our prayers, those who are over us; we have raised our hands to sustain and uphold them, and will we turn round and find fault with that which we have sanctioned? Can you enjoy the Spirit of God if you do this? No. In order to enjoy that Spirit you must reverence all the members of the priesthood, no matter who may be in possession of it."

Brigham Young, the first leader of any faction of the Latter-day Saints church who ever taught the doctrine of obeying counsel, or of "unquestioning obedience to the priesthood," a doctrine which it was necessary for him to inculcate in order to prepare the way for the introduction of heresies into the religious life of the people, is reported as saying:

"You and I may be ready to fight; we may be ready to plant seed, and, if called upon, to cache grain in the mountains and to do whatever the Lord may require at our hands. Let us do whatever may be required. If we are called upon to take our women and children into the mountains, let us do that; if to burn, let us be on hand to burn; if to build more, let us do that; and whatever we are required to do, let us do.

"We called up a bishop, the other night, to go on an express; and when he came to my office I said to him, 'Brother Thomas, are you ready?' He replied, 'Yes.' Though he did not know what was wanted of him, yet he was ready. He asked, 'When do you want me?' I replied, 'Early to-morrow morning' (now yesterday morning); and he was there at the time—which is the way that men should feel and act."
abandon that principle or theory. Supposing he were to say the principles by which you are governed are not right, that they were incorrect, what would be my duty? I answer that it would be my duty to lay those principles aside and to take up those that might be laid down by the servants of God."

And this same man, in a sermon preached September 27, 1857, as found on page 288 of volume 5, Journal of Discourses, used the following language to further teach this doctrine of self-oblation in absolute obedience to priestly authority:

"You need not fear: all we have to do is to be passive in the hands of the Lord and follow the counsel of our leaders, and not be particularly anxious that the Lord should reveal to you or to me his mind and will and intentions concerning our present difficulties; but pray earnestly that the Spirit of the Lord may be upon those men who stand at the head. All we have to do is to live our religion; and when the presidency say, 'Come here,' or 'Go there,' let us be on hand to obey and all will be right."

PRESIDENT SNOW.

Lorenzo Snow, the man immediately succeeding Wilford Woodruff, and immediately preceding the present ruler of this ecclesiastical kingdom in which the subjects are to render "unquestioning obedience" to their "file-leaders," in a sermon preached October 11, 1857, reported in Journal of Discourses, volume 5, page 314, taught as follows:

"When the enemy is near, and when the stormy clouds arise and the war clouds approach, even then we can feel free and quiet, and be satisfied that all is right in Israel. It is only for us to be ready to do our duty, to serve our presidency with all our heart, with all our might, with all our feelings, with all our property and energies, and with all things that the Lord has put into our hands.

"Let the power that God has put into our hands be used; for herein lies a continued advancement in dominion, in power, and in knowledge. We should be ready at all times to exercise all the power, means, and influence we possess in the service of our God, and resignedly follow out the directions of our president and those that are appointed over us. Let us be like little children, ready and willing to do as we are commanded by the powers that we should obey.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH F. SMITH.

We have but to show now that the present president of the Mormon church endorses this principle of absolutism to make the chain complete so far as the teaching of the presidents of the church since Brigham's day is concerned. The Salt Lake Tribune has repeatedly shown this to be the case, and the man himself has placed himself on record unequivocally at various times. One quotation only need be used, from a sermon preached at Provo, April, 1896, and reported in the Deseret News for April 25, 1896:

"The fact of the matter is, when a man says you can direct me spiritually, but not temporally, he lies in the presence of God—that is, if he has got intelligence enough to know what he is talking about."

ENFORCED BY ACTS.

In a more forceful way, perhaps, has he been teaching the doctrine of "unquestioning obedience to the priesthood" by promptly having any man cut off from the church who dares to call in question the acts or the words of the men who hold the priesthood, and especially when the man called in question is himself. Witness the excommunication of Charles Smithwaite, John H. Scott, and others who have freely spoken their candid opinion relative to Joseph F. Smith, and who have been cut off from the church, not for telling what was not true, but simply for saying what they did. And in their trials before the ecclesiastical courts of the church they were not permitted to prove their statements—the mere fact that they said what they did was crime enough in the eyes of the present president of the Mormon church.

Neither I nor any other fair-minded man would feel justified in presenting obsolete utterances of the past for a cruel condemnation of the present generation of men; and it is only because the dicta of the presidents of the Mormon church, from Brigham Young down (or up) to the present chief of the church, are cumulative and explanatory that I make this array.

THERE IS NO MITIGATION.

Let it be noted that with all this tremendous aggregation of utterances declarative of the one proposition of "unquestioning obedience," there is not to be found, to my knowledge, one authoritative expression from the leaders of the Mormon church, either contradicting the dictum or mitigating the generality or the severity of its application, until the Deseret News, for purposes which will be made plain in succeeding paragraphs, concludes to obliterate the whole record by a falsehood.

CONTRADICTED HIMSELF.

How strange it is that the editor of the News should have made the hardihood to try to make out that the doctrine of "unquestioning obedience to the priesthood" is not a prominent policy of the Mormon church, when he himself has repeatedly taught this doctrine to his audiences.

No longer ago than the 26th of October last he was teaching this doctrine in his peculiar oracular manner. In his sermon at Ogden on that date he is reported to have said:

"In a nutshell, the philosophy of the Mormon religion consists in obeying the commandments and living up to the revelations of God as revealed to his chosen servants on earth in this the last dispensation of the fullness of times."

"The talk was purely doctrinal," says the Utah State Journal of the 27th of October, in speaking of the effort of the editor of the News, "advising all to lead the life laid down by the authorities of the church and their teachings. In the light of what we have quoted from the leading men of the church, it is quite clear that Mr. Penrose is obediently teaching the doctrine of "unquestioning obedience to the priesthood."

WHAT IS THE OBJECT?

In the light of all this, the question naturally arises, what interest of the Mormon church or its "holy priesthood" can the editor of the News expect at this time to advance by attempting to refute the idea that "unquestioning obedience to the priesthood" has always been and is a prominent teaching of the Mormon church? We will touch upon this in other paragraphs.

To the younger and the progressive element in the Mormon church this blunt teaching of the doctrine of submersion of individuality and intelligence in an abject obedience to those holding the priesthood who may occupy positions which are considered as higher ones, may be shocking, and we hope it is; but that it has been so taught ever since the Mormons came into this valley can not be successfully denied, and we are surprised that the editor of the News should even attempt the case.

I am glad if the News editor at last realizes that the awakening of the spirit of American liberty within the breasts of the younger element of the Mormon church makes it somewhat dangerous from the standpoint of the leaders of the Mormon church to preach the doctrine of "unquestioning obedience" so bluntly as it has been in the past. That he does appreciate this to some extent is indicated by his rather weak, and for him unfortunate, effort to refute it in the manner he did.

DIFFICULT TO UNDERSTAND.

It is difficult for me, as it is for many, many others, to understand how men and women can be brought to such a state of religious fanaticism that they will bow to such domination as is taught in the extracts we have here presented from accepted books of the Mormon church. That such domination is taught to-day in the Mormon church, and that there exists therein to-day an absolutism which has been the proud boast of some of the shining lights in its priesthood, is too patent for an attempted refutation by those not possessing the reckless temerity of the editor of the News.

Knowing full well, as he does, that “unquestioning obedience to the priesthood” is a striking and prominent feature of the Mormon church, the editor of the News can have but one object in attempting a characteristically blasphemous denial that such a doctrine is prevalent and rigidly enforced in the Mormon church to-day. That object is to deceive, at this peculiarly critical period in the history of the Mormon church, the people of the United States as to the true character of some of the prominent teachings of the Mormon church. The editor of the News knows well that an exposure of this doctrine at this time, when the people of the United States are aroused as they never were before, would prove highly inimical to the interests of the Mormon chiefs and leaders in their efforts to have one of their representatives retain his seat in the National legislative halls. And that the News should thus raise the very issue it could best afford at this time to have remain in the deepest background, is but another evidence of its blundering course. Now that the issue has been squarely raised by the apostolic editor of the News, let us make an application of this array of documentary evidence that the leaders of the Mormon church have for years been assiduously drilling their people into a state of complete submission to the priesthood of the church, a submission that penetrates into every phase of the lives of their people.

WHAT IS THE INTEREST?

One may ask: Of what living interest can it be to the people of this country that the priests and devotees of any given cult shall respectively demand and render “unquestioning obedience” to ranking leaders professedly possessed of divine authority? The question is answered by this startling fact: That a representa­tive of that authority, bound by all this uncontradicted documentary evidence that the leaders of the Mormon church have for years been assiduously drilling their people into a state of complete submission to the priesthood of the church, a submission that penetrates into every phase of the lives of their people.

SMOOT MUST BE SUPINE.

To all intents and purposes, then, Reed Smoot, the apostle, or Reed Smoot, the Senator, must be as supine as a dead body, to be moved at the will of his ecclesiastical superiors. It is not a question whether they will move him to do good or to do bad for this nation; the charge is that he is under absolute control and cannot truthfully take the oath of office as proscribed.

I do not feel disposed to use the words traitor and treason, although the Tribune has made an almost irrefragable case against Smoot and the Mormon leaders on this point—but I submit to my fellow citizens of the nation that no man can be qualified to vote upon laws for our government who is bound by the doctrine of “unquestioning obedience” to any priestcraft on this earth.

“THE DEVIL’S CHOICEST COUNTERFEIT.”

In the September 1 issue of the Elders’ Journal, a periodical published in the interest of the church in Utah, of Chattanooga, Tennessee, edited and published by Elder Ben E. Rich, is an editorial under the above title which we think it necessary to consider.

The editor quotes as a text, or rather as a pretext, the following language: “We are not antagonistic to any religious sect in the United States except the Utah Mormons.”

This language he alleges was used by an elder of the Reorganized Church a short time since while showing one of the representatives of the church which the Journal represents through the Kirtland Temple. The sentiment expressed we do not indorse. If it was used by an elder of the Reorganization, we consider it a mistake. We are antagonistic to every other religious sect in the United States in the same sense that we are antagonistic to the “Utah Mormons”; that is, we are opposed to everything in their creeds, dogmas, or doctrines, which we esteem to be wrong. We are not, however, at enmity with any of them. We have a friendly feeling for all, and an earnest desire for the final salvation of all men, including the “Utah Mormons.”

But the editor spoken of, taking this language as a pretext, gives utterance to some things which we do think need examination. He uses epithets in reference to the Reorganization and its representatives, such as “apostates,” “representatives of an apostate organization,” etc. He also accuses us of having the spirit of hatred in our hearts, going hand in hand with other churches in our warfare against the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, injecting poison and venom at every opportunity, etc.

In regard to these accusations we shall have but little to say. The spirit that prompted them is too apparent to need exposing. But after accusing us of misrepresentation, and of an effort to destroy the faith of those who are turning their hearts to God, etc., he remarks by way of advice to the elders, membership, and friends, as follows:

And the elders in this mission should warn every convert and every investigator and friend as to what they may expect when they turn their hearts to God and determine to learn of his ways. For they can depend upon it that these representatives of this apostate organization will camp upon their trail and attempt to uproot the faith planted there by the Word as declared by our elders.

This advice is doubtless intended to carry the weight of authority with it, as the editor is also president of the Southern States Mission. The only reply we wish to make is to give a little counsel to the representatives, members, and friends of the church we represent. We will not warn them.
against the efforts of the Utah representatives, but simply advise that they invite these gentlemen to a careful scrutiny and thorough investigation of the issues between us. If they accept and canvass these issues in a fair and honorable way, we do not fear that the faith planted by the word declared by our elders will be uprooted.

After branding the Reorganization as a counterfeit, absolutely devoid of authority and revelation, and the other powers and blessings which characterized the administration of Joseph Smith, he remarks that the Reorganized "church [is] peculiarly adapted to the work of the adversary, into which he can steer all those who are capable of being deceived."

Our epitome of faith (and surely we have a right to define our own faith) will not justify the writer in making the charge that we are absolutely void of authority and revelation, and the other powers and blessings which characterized the administration of Joseph Smith. Our declaration of belief on that is as follows:

We believe in the powers and gifts of the everlasting gospel, viz.: The gift of faith, discerning of spirits, prophecy, revelation, healing, visions, tongues, and the interpretation of tongues, wisdom, charity, brotherly love, etc.

We might introduce an abundance of testimony from members of the church that all of the powers and gifts spoken of above have been realized to a remarkable extent; but it is unnecessary to quote evidence to meet an assertion which has no proof connected with it.

Another assertion without proof is as follows:

The spirit of hatred filled the hearts of the men who instituted the Reorganized Church—hatred against the men upon whose shoulders the mantle of the prophet Joseph had fallen, and the evil one has filled the hearts of its leaders ever since. Hatred and contention have been and are their particular mission against the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Why we are accused of hatred because we oppose certain positions taken by the people of Utah believed to be injurious and erroneous, is very strange. We disclaim hating the people or the leaders of the "Utah Mormons." On the contrary we have a kindly feeling towards them, and would do as much to reclaim them from the errors into which they have fallen as we would for any other people. The writer quotes from the Book of Mormom as follows:

For verily, verily, I say unto you, he that hath the spirit of contention is not of me, but is of the devil, who is the father of contention, and he stirreth up the hearts of men to contend with anger, one with another. Behold, this is not my doctrine, to stir up the hearts of men with anger, one against another; but this is my doctrine, that such things should be done away.

This quotation is made in this connection, no doubt, to convey the inference that the Reorganization has the spirit of contention. The word contention, like many other words, has various shades of meaning, to be understood by the context. In the will of course sympathize with the "Utah Mormons" who claim that he was a violator of the laws of his country and of the laws of God accepted by the church in his time. For this reason we have probably met as much opposition as have the "Utah Mormons." When the "Utah Mormons" claim that Joseph Smith practiced polygamy contrary to the laws of God and man, his enemies give assent. When we disclaim this, they are against us. We court such opposition as this if necessary. It is in vindication of his character, and in fulfillment of the prediction made to him so long ago by the angel which visited him that his name should be had for good and evil, among all nations, kindreds, and tongues.

The prophet Daniel is quoted by this writer to the effect that when the kingdom is set up in the latter times it shall not be left to other people, it shall break in pieces and consume all other kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever. The inference to be drawn from this is that the writer thinks that the attitude of the Reorganization would indicate that the kingdom had been given to another people, while the "Utah Mormons" claim that it continued with the same people. This has no force in fact. They are no more the same people than is the Reorganization. In fact not so much so: for the Reorganization has incorporated into its body branches which have maintained their organized existence from the days of Joseph until the Reorganization was established, while the Utah people can claim no instance of this kind. However, this writer seems to think that the word reorganize indicates that those belonging to the Reorganization are another people. But it does not necessarily mean that. The same people may become reorganized if they become disorganized. However, if the word reorganize is objectionable, and conveys the idea that those reorganized are a different people from those in the old organization, the Utah people are in just as bad a condition as we are. After the death of Joseph Smith in 1844, as is well known, the Twelve as such assumed control for a while. Subsequently, in 1847, it was thought best to establish a First Presidency, and to make other changes, and steps were taken to bring about the desired result. The notice of the anticipated movement was given by Brigham Young in the following language:

Since the murder of President Joseph Smith, many false prophets and false teachers have arisen, and tried to deceive many, during which time we have mostly tarried with the body of the Church, or been seeking a new location, leaving those prophets and teachers to run their race undisturbed, who have died natural deaths, or committed suicides; and we now, having discovered the error of their ways, and returned to the original faith and renounced their allegiance to the apostate leaders, they could not in justice be held responsible for the doctrines or practices of the organizations which they had renounced. Some of these people had also to some extent been following the organization under the leadership of Brigham Young; and if our critic will make them responsible for the mistakes of Strang and others, he must give them credit for all that he supposes attaches to having been connected with the faction which he himself represents.

We are aware that an effort has been made to construe this language to mean simply reorganize the First Presidency and Patriarchate; but it does not so read. It reads, "Reorganize the church according to the original pattern, with a First Presidency and Patriarch," etc. Further, according to the revelation purporting to have been given through Parley P. Pratt, after the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, the reorganization was anticipated. He relates that when returning to Nauvoo weighed down as it were unto death, he cried unto the Lord for direction and received the following:

Lift up your head and rejoice; for behold! it is well with my servants Joseph and Hyrum. My servant Joseph still holds the keys of my kingdom in this dispensation, and he shall stand in due time on the earth, in the flesh, and fulfill that to which he is appointed. Go and say unto my people in Nauvoo, that they shall continue to pursue their daily duties and take care of themselves, and make no movement in church government to reorganize or alter anything until the return of the remainder of the Quorum of the Twelve. But exhort them that they continue to build the house of the Lord which I have commanded them to build in Nauvoo.—Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt, page 371.

We submit that the temporary disorganization of a body is not tantamount to its destruction; it was not therefore destroyed. If it was, then the prophecy of Daniel has been proven false or it lacks application to the latter-day work; for whether you look to the church in Utah or the Reorganization, you will find a recognition of disorganization.

He affirms that various apostate factions under the leadership of Strang, Lyman Wight, and other apostates met together and perfected what they called the Reorganized Church, and so forth.

We question whether there was a single person present at the forming of the Reorganization who had ever been connected with Lyman Wight. However, if they had belonged to apostate factions, and had discovered the error of their ways, and returned to the original faith and renounced their allegiance to the apostate leaders, they could not in justice be held responsible for the doctrines or practices of the organizations which they had renounced. Some of these people had also to some extent been following the organization under the leadership of Brigham Young; and if our critic will make them responsible for the mistakes of Strang and others, he must give them credit for all that he supposes attaches to having been connected with the faction which he himself represents.

as mine are to me. The most important point to us all, as individuals, and to the church, as a body, is, Will we profit by what has been written, or will we continue to procrastinate until the evil day overtakes us?

In this article the term church means the corporate body, and any reference to individual or officer means in their capacity as servants for the corporate body, and not to them personally.

Doctrine and Covenants 42:8-10 points out our duty, but God did not stop there. In section 122, paragraph 6, he says, "Therefore, the law given to the church in section forty-two, over the meaning of some parts of which there has been so much controversy is as if it were given to-day."

What has the church done in eleven years to carry out that part of the temporal law? Why hesitate? Some other societies are struggling with all the power and wisdom they possess to better the condition of the poor. They are making some success. We have an advantage over them all: if we can not see the way clear we can go to the Father and he will give us added light; he will not turn us away; he has shown that in the past, and we ought to trust him now and in the future. Our people are roving much like nomads, seeking for an inheritance, a home; but it is hard to get. The usuers must have the last pound of flesh, even if little children go hungry and thinly clad. Our people must be married to the land before we can make Zion "blossom as the rose," and her hills resound with the music of happy childhood and contented old age. Why procrastinate? Why should the present generation be neglected, and all be given to a future one? What excuse can we give for delaying to do what we have been commanded to do? The common people are the heritage of Christ, and as soon as we do what God has commanded us to do they will gather around the ensign of Zion, and will make a great and mighty army. If we are timid because of the fear that we will be flooded by those who are after the "loaves and fishes," it will not lessen the number by procrastinating. That danger will never be removed until the King of kings reigns. Only cowards shrink in the face of danger. The true and brave do not stop at difficulties, though they be mountain high.

Many of our missionaries have no homes. They are putting the strength of young manhood into the work. They have no hope of a home, only as the church shall give it to them. The rent they are paying is a constant drain on the church, and such amounts as are being thus constantly paid out would in a few years pay for a home for them. Why not stop this waste? Why put it off? It can be done if we will it so. We would have God on our side in doing it. Then why hesitate longer?

The fact that we have accomplished other difficult tasks ought to give us courage to go ahead. Let us look back. We raised five thousand dollars or more to build the Evangelia. We spent several thousand dollars in a lawsuit to get possession of the temple lot. We built the Saints' Home. The Sunday-school children have given several thousand dollars for missionary work,—and the last, but never to be forgotten, twenty-five thousand dollars or more for Graceland College, that has made wounds that will never be healed until the hearts of God's people are softened by the sweet spirit of peace that comes with a balm to soften our hearts of stone and make us more like the "Holy One." Having done all this, would not our hearts respond to a call to get "homes for the homeless," and relieve the widow from that constant dread of "pay the rent or move out," and enable her to feel that joy that thrills so many mother hearts, that her children may enjoy that greatest of gifts from a free country, an education that will fit them for life's important battles?

Suppose some one had the courage to present something like the following to General Conference, how would we talk? How would we vote? Would we stand by our colors and say to the poor and distressed, We will remove from your gaze that specter of unhappiness,—poverty?

Whereas, The law of Christ teaches us to "love our neighbor as ourselves," therefore be it

Resolved, That in addition to the payment of tithes and consecrations, the church membership are hereby requested to pay to the bishop the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars to be apportioned among the several stakes, districts, and branches pro rata, to be used for the purchase of land for homes, for such of the Saints as are entitled to them under the law of the church; said land to be purchased within the stakes of Zion now established, and that may be hereafter established.

There is danger ahead, and trouble for us if we do not take time by the forelock. At intervals of about twenty years our country passes through the throes of a commercial or financial panic. Political demagogues, quack statesmen, and a great many non-descripts, will stand on the street-corner, whittle sticks, look wise, and tell the public how they can be avoided, but they come about as regularly as the planets revolve in their orbits. And as a "pope's bull" would not stop a comet, neither will the declara-tions of the class of people referred to stop panics. They have occurred in our country as follows; in 1818, 1837, 1857, 1873, and 1893. What will be our condition when the next one comes? The church treasury is constantly empty, or nearly so. Many of our tithe-payers are wage-earners, and when work stops so will tithes. Prices of farm products will go down, and another source of tithes is cut off. What will follow? Where will the money come from for the poor, for the families of the missionaries? Will we do as in the past, cut down the missionary force, cut down the allowance and send them adrift to look for work when it can not be found? These are not phantom pictures. They are the facts of the past; and history will repeat itself. All we have of a material nature must come from the earth. Then why not get close to it while we have a chance? Why put it off? Can we not now with courage and heartbreak of mankind?

It Must Be Settled Right.
However the battle is ended, Though proudly the victor comes With fluttering flags and prancing nags
And echoing roll of drums,
Still truth proclaims this motto
In letters of living light—
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

Though the heel of the strong oppressor
May grind the weak in the dust,
And the voices of fame with one acclaim
May call him great and just,
Let those who applaud take warning
And keep this motto in sight—
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

Let those who have failed take courage,
Though the enemy seemed to have won,
Though his ranks are strong, if he be in the wrong,
The battle is not yet done.
For sure as the morning follows
The darkest hour of the night
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

Happiness an Unworthy Ideal.

Let us look at the matter boldly—Is the great end and purpose of our religion to make us feel happy?

Surely it is a pitiable and unworthy ideal of life! Come into Westminster Abbey, and let us read the memorials of the mighty dead. Who are these that the nation delights to honor? Here are the warriors who went forth to meet troops of discomforts, and Death himself in a hundred shapes. Did they feel happy? No, indeed—when bullets were whistling past them, and cannon-balls came uncomfortably close, and the shells burst about them. But what had they to do with feeling happy? They had to do their duty or to die in trying to—and they did it, the one or other; and the nation said these men are heroes. Turn to your Arctic explorers again, having all sorts of misery and death in many shapes. There was not much happiness for them, hemmed in by the gloom and fierceness of an Arctic winter; but what had they to do with feeling happy? The glory of the men was that they counted not their lives dear to them in the doing of their duty. And yet more worthy of honor than even these, though they receive much less, think of our brave lifeboat men, who, when fierce storms break upon our coast, take their lives in their hands and go forth to the wreck. Happy? No, indeed—not as they think of the wife and little ones at home,—as they look out on the great breakers, and about them sweep the showers of foam, and all the thunder of the wind and sea booms on every side. Think of philanthropists and martyrs, who have lived and toiled and suffered and died to bless their fellow men, whose life has been an incessant toil and a perpetual sacrifice. And amongst these shall we set a highly respectable tombstone, and inscribe upon it the record—Here lies a man who felt happy! Noble person—who got up in the morning, and ate and drank, and bought and sold, and slept, and touched this lofty purpose of being—he felt happy? If that is the end and purpose of my religion I can find an altogether nobler ideal of life elsewhere.

If this is the purpose of religion, surely our Lord Jesus Christ has come the wrong way. Can we think of anything that could make us more completely and perfectly miserable than an attempt to secure our own happiness by the anguish of another? If I were a homeless wanderer, hungry, wretched, ragged, perishing, and unable to go a step farther in the bleak winds and piercing cold, and I sink at your doorstep—what if you should come forth and lay your hand upon my shoulder, and bid me come in and sit by your fire, and eat your supper, and rest in your chair; and you would go forth to take my place in the bitter cold. Do you think I should feel happy? Never. I want you to make me happy at any cost. I want you to be my life; and therein I do feel that dreadful wound-print. I look and tearful eye, shall I lightly tell him not to mind? I want him to hang with thee upon thy cross, that I may say—I am crucified with Christ. My happiness is spoiled by the pain and agony and shame and awful curse of Calvary.

There is no great virtue in feeling happy. I do not know that I could be much more confident of any man's honesty because he assured me that he felt happy, or that I could rely upon his word with more assurance on that account. I suppose a drunken man feels happy, or surely he would never pay so hideous a price for it. The prodigal felt happy, no doubt, when he was spending his substance in riotous living in the far country. Or here is a very picture of it,—a sky of deepest blue, the woods ablaze with tints of autumn splendor, the acorns and the beech-nuts strew the leafy ground, and here lie the swine that have filled themselves with the husks—stretched in the sunshine. Take the picture and write under it the title—feeling happy.

We dare not deal with our children on this principle. If the boy have told a lie, what think you? shall I call him to myself, and as he comes, ashamed and afraid, with quivering lip and tearful eye, shall I lightly tell him not to mind? I want him to be happy—that is the great end of life; let him fetch out his word with more assurance on that account. I suppose a drunken man feels happy, or surely he would never pay so hideous a price for it. The prodigal felt happy, no doubt, when he was spending his substance in riotous living in the far country. Or here is a very picture of it,—a sky of deepest blue, the woods ablaze with tints of autumn splendor, the acorns and the beech-nuts strew the leafy ground, and here lie the swine that have filled themselves with the husks—stretched in the sunshine. Take the picture and write under it the title—feeling happy.
religion, the meaning of the cross has not begun to dawn upon us, if we have not learned to see in it how God feels toward sin,—that sin is a thing so horrible and accursed that only in all the awful scene of Calvary can we see it rightly. He must nail it to the cross, and thrust it through with a spear, and bury it out of his sight. It means that sin has so defiled and cursed us that God can find no remedy for us except in our being crucified with Christ, dead with Christ, buried with Christ; that the new man, the Christ, be formed in us, and that we live now only in the power of his resurrection. The word that runs through the Bible is not first of all happiness. The whole idea of the Bible—every command, every promise, every example, all the revelation of God, of heaven, of hell, all the life and sorrows and death of Jesus Christ, every breath and influence of it—teaches me that I want something very different from feeling comfortable...

Many earnest persons fail in the religious life—not for want of trying, but for want of the right aim. It is an easy and pleasant thing to travel at the rate of sixty miles an hour when the engine is on the lines; but when it is off the lines three miles an hour is very difficult, and exceedingly uncomfortable. Many who are most conscious of effort, and even agony, are yet most conscious of failure; and how can it be otherwise? If God be for us we can not fail; but if we move against his will and way, how can we succeed? If I fall across the machinery of some huge factory it is very likely to rend me; but if, on the other hand, I fit in with it, and adapt myself to it, all the great forces shall wait upon me and minister to me. Is there, then, any unity in God's great universe—any one definite aim to which everything is adjusted, and up to which all things are working? Can I find out what it is, and can I fit in with it?

All things work together. Here, then, is the first part of my question answered. All things—the material world, the sun, the air, the endless life, the very stones and dust of earth; all things—the busy commerce, with its ten thousand interests, politics, social life; all things—gain, loss, pleasure, pain, the daily worries, the passing pleasure—all things have one great purpose running through them.

All things work together for good. God has only got one good. He keeps that word for one thing only. All goods can not make God's good. This alone is what he counts good—that we may be conformed to the image of his Son.

All things that I can ever have to do with are set to this one end—to make me like Jesus Christ. And the grace of God is the provision by which I am to be adjusted and held rightly towards all things. And now if, at the beginning of the day, I surrender myself to God, not to be taken care of, and fed and clothed, and prospered in business, and made happy, but to be made like Jesus Christ, then I am on the lines. If I will claim the grace of the Holy Spirit to hold myself rightly towards all things, I shall keep on the lines. Then shall loss and gain, pain and pleasure, good and ill, be estimated, not by any material worth, but by their contribution to the character, by conformity to Jesus Christ. If gain leave me more eager for the world and more covetous, then is gain an awful loss. If success bring pride and self-importance, then is success a dreadful failure. If pleasure dim and deaden my sense of God's presence, and check my communion with him, then is my pleasure verily an anguish. This is the only end, the test, the proof of our religion: Does it make us like Jesus Christ?

redemption, or if Zion is to be redeemed through the adoption of the business methods of our modern financiers, then may the loving Father be merciful and never allow me or mine to abide there.

There is no provision in the law for banks or banking in Zion or her stakes, other than that in which the church is the custodian and the individual members the donors, while the whole church becomes the beneficiaries. The above disability can easily be removed at any time the church desires to do so.

The basis of all the economic injustice in the world is the undue advantage possessed by one man over another. The system whereby one man can take advantage of another's necessities and profit thereby, must be abolished. Zion can not be established through the adoption of any such methods. Justice and equity must be the slogans of our service. The church must purchase lands and allot inheritances. This is the first work.

There is no divine provision whereby men of capital may go into Zion and acquire holdings in their own name and start factories, etc., and in this way employ men at a wage whereby they give to the men so employed only a portion of the wealth they create, and the remainder goes to those who have purchased stock in the institution. This is the way men do now. If any man in the church wishes to do this it is up to him to secure the privilege, and they have a perfectly legitimate right to do so under the laws of the land; but let not any man think for one moment, it matters not how sincere he may be in his purpose, that in this way he is fulfilling the purposes of God in the gathering of his people. The purchase of lands does not comprehend the present practice whereby a man takes his own money, goes to one of the stakes, picks out the place which suits his fancy, pays therefor, and consoles himself in the thought that he is now located. If I understand the law of God the church must purchase the land, the Bishopric must be the instrument of purchase. As fast as possible inheritances will be given, and, following the gathering of the Saints, industries will spring up, not by chance or subject to the whim and caprice of some capitalist seeking a chance to invest his capital, but under the direction of the church; all of the product of said factories and institutions, above that necessary to carry it along its legitimate line of work, will go into the church treasury to help in other lines of work. Because men, moved by the spirit of business enterprise, speculation, or thrift, club together and form stock companies whereby they can earn a flattering dividend for the stockholders, it in no sense commits the Almighty to an approval of their plans. Such institutions must necessarily stand as every other human institution stands—on its own merits. It made me shudder not long ago when I read the statement of a certain brother to the effect that the Saints should patronize a certain banking institution because it was organized to help establish Zion. Perish the thought. He knows, and everybody else knows, that banks are parasites. They create no value. They give nothing. They depend upon human necessity for their sustenance.

From a worldly standpoint I have no criticism as to the action of any man or men; but as a member of the church and a minister of this latter-day dispensation, I herewith enter my protest to any man or men compromising the work in any sense, either by suggestion or inference, that any means aside from that which is clearly outlined in the revelations of God should be adhered to by us. If all of the Saints would only evidence confidence in God and consecrate all of their surplus property to the work of the Lord, they would not have any means to invest here, there, and everywhere. If they would do this they would then place the church in a position to make extensive purchases of land, industries would be started, and the gathering hastened.

The following are axiomatic truths:

1. The land and all of its natural appurtenances belong to the Almighty. He of his own appointing may give any man an inheritance. No man can purchase his inheritance. He possesses no inherent or acquired right to barter away his inheritance, hence private speculation in land is purely carnal and unscriptural. Real estate dealers will find no legitimate place as such in Zion.

2. The law of eternal equity demands that no man take anything from another unless he returns the equivalent in value to the one from whom the goods were received and this will wholly eliminate the profit system, or buying and selling for profit.

3. In Zion every man and every woman must be a producer. The present plans whereby some men get something for nothing, or wherein he gets more for less will never be effective in redeeming Zion.

4. Usury, which means the taking of anything for the use of, is condemned in unmeasured terms throughout the Scriptures. Calvin was the first man to give countenance to the thought that usury and interest were separate terms. It is clearly apparent when proper conditions obtain in Zion no man will have occasion to borrow, for if he needs he can go to the church, which will supply him, and if he has more than he needs he can turn over the surplus to the church. In this way God plans for the church to be the banker for the people.

5. The wage system is unscriptural and unjust. In Zion no man will work for wages. Under the present system the wage-worker is subject to the whim and caprice of one or a few men. He is paid, not all he earns, but just enough to retain his services; or more frequently he receives the lowest amount that the man out of a job will work for. Every man will be rewarded according to his works. If he needs it all it is his. If not then it becomes his duty to turn back into the treasury of the church all above what he needs.

Then let us honor the Bishop's call. Consecrate all our surplus property. In this way lands will be purchased and the Saints located in Zion. The church will then care for the gathered ones, and establish factories and manufactories. Storehouses must be erected, having ample capacity to supply all of the necessities of life. Bro. Ruhton's suggestions along all of these lines are so pertinent and applicable that any addidion is only a detraction. God speed the day when these things may become effective.

Yours for the better day,

T. W. Williams.

STANBERRY, Missouri, December 24, 1905.

Editors Herald: I am grateful for the gospel and what it has done for me. Truly this is a "marvelous work and a wonder." As time rolls on, in its ever endless flight, I am convinced more and more that the angel did visit Joseph Smith and confer upon him the authority to establish the true church and kingdom of God. Without a re-commitment of divine authority there could be no true church of God, hence the absolute necessity of angelic ministration. Human wisdom is not always a safe criterion to depend upon at all times, and I know that God can and does speak when it is necessary. "If any man lack wisdom let him ask of God," says the apostle James. This text has often been quoted from the incipience of this great latter-day work. The Martyr predicated his faith and belief upon that text. He believed it and poured out his soul unto God in prayer that he might go forward just right—a good example, indeed, for erring humanity. How thankful we ought to be, dear Saints, for this restored gospel. Let us lean upon the everlasting arms and receive divine aid. God wants us to go forward in the line of duty, and to be earnest in the advocacy of that which will bear the closest and strictest scrutiny, overcoming evil with good, which will enable us to keep away from the enticing allurements of the world.

As to the work here, it is on a standstill. This is an old gospel landmark, where the gospel has been preached a number of times. Years ago there was a branch here, but only three families of Saints live here now. We have Sunday-school every Sunday, and sacrament-meeting once a month. Despite all the discouragements, we have tried to keep the camp-fires burning. The attacks of the world I do not fear so much as those within the fold—criticising Saints and finding fault with those whom God has called to preach the gospel. It does not show good judgment to speak "evil of dignities" or find fault with them. They may claim to be Saints, but, like Diotrephes of old, do much to hinder the spread of the gospel. I held forth at one of the churches in this city not long ago with good liberty. Some of the congregation made the remark, "He surprised me." I am thankful to God that the interpreter of the divine law, by the operation of the Holy Spirit, has help from the heavens. I am young in the work and desire the prayers of all the Saints. Ever praying for the redemption of Zion.

Vancouver, Washington, November 30, 1905.

Editors Herald: Leaving Portland, October 22, for Castle Rock, Washington, where we preached to the Saints a few times. Bro. Harry Jones thought that an opening could be made at Sara, where his parents have been residing for some time, so in consultation with him and Bro. Appleman we decided to make the effort. We boarded the train for Knapps Station, Saturday, October 28, from which place we walked three miles to Bro. Jones’ place. Bro. Jones and his mother have for some time past scattered literature, also sowing the seed by word as well as by righteous living, hence our success when applying for the Methodist church the following day. We entered upon a series of meetings uninterrupted until Friday evening, when the newly appointed pastor appeared upon the scene. He made himself conspicuous by slurringly referring to the Latter Day Saints in answer to a question put to the audience by the writer, from the stand. As we dismissed he stepped into the aisle, turned his back to the stand, and said, "I am your pastor, now; the presiding elder will speak here Sunday at three o’clock." I called attention to his announcement, also to our own for Sunday evening. A woman, who they claim is not responsible, began to denounce Mormonism, calling us Latter Day Saint devils, also asking me the number of wives I had. To this query I answered (like others have done), "I have sufficient; you need not apply." Next day the pastor left for some other place. Sunday, the presiding elder (Mr. Landen from Tacoma) came and gave us a good sermon at three o’clock in the afternoon, and at close of service he stated that he in consultation with the pastor Saturday evening had decided not to let the two gentlemen from Utah occupy the church any more, as they were Mormons, and taught that God had a body of flesh and blood like we have, and believed in polygamy, blood atonement, Adam-god worship, etc. Upon hearing this statement I arose, politely asking permission to speak. The answer was, "Yes; but I will ask this question first. Was the statement I made in regard to the doctrine true?" I answered, "Yes, but you apply it to the wrong people" and in a few minutes I succeeded in convincing the elder that he had been misinformed, whereupon he stated that the Josephites did not sanction polygamy, and we could have the church that evening. We thanked him. Our subject was, "The Book of Mormon." We had excellent liberty, the elder being present, also the Advent minister, no one offering any comment at the close. The next day we had the pleasure of comparing views with the elder, and he gave me credit for being, as he believed, an honest man, saying we could have the church the rest of the week. We continued through the week, closing Sunday evening with a full house. We made many friends.

At Castle Rock we met Bro. Griffiths. I held four services near Bro. Beebe’s, and returning toCastle Rock baptized his daughter Susan.

I returned to Sara November 23, in company with Bro. Griffiths, who preached two excellent sermons that won the admiration of all present; thus crowning our effort in that place. We can now see evidence of the seed taking root. May the fruit appear in due season. Patiently waiting to conduct some sheep through the door into the "sheepfold," I am, as ever,

Your brother in the conflict,

Dawson, Klondike Flats, Yukon Territory, November 30, 1905.

Editors Herald: Although so long a time has elapsed since I reported my welfare here in the Klondike, I feel now compelled to let you know that you are still and always in my thoughts. I am privileged to know so many of the Saints that it is impossible to write each one a personal letter. Most of you, no doubt, considered that my long silence was due to want of success. This is true in part, but only in part.

You are all aware, as all history indeed both sacred and profane shows, that only by hard labor and persistent, determined efforts can victory be achieved. And if this be true in the physical warfare, in the struggle to obtain the necessities of life, it is none the less true concerning the spiritual combat, in the attempt to win the highest blessings.

There is an old Latin saying which a friend of mine once told me, and which seems to appropriately comprise what is in my mind: Laborare est orare. That is, To work is to pray. By true and honest work, and a faithful life, the prayers of the Saints are answered from above. The reply may be a long time coming. Many falls and trials must beset our path, but if we continue in the straight and narrow way, the reward is sure. I would not have you think that I am trying to preach a sermon; I am only writing of my own experiences in the dual life we all must lead,—the lower and the higher.

There are others of you, possibly, who think that, being an elder, I have to a great extent lost my vocation by my life in the frozen north. In reply to this I can assure you all that I am more than ever convinced that a man, though an elder, and perhaps because he is one, may through the Spirit accomplish more than an unordained person. As to my mines, I know this: When all forsook me, both Saint and sinner, and urged me to give them up, saying there is nothing there, and so on, I felt an inspiration to continue. As a result, I believe I may now say that success is very near. If so, I pray earnestly that I may be guided aright, to use the means by the which I shall then be blessed.

Let me now give you very briefly some idea of the difficulties to be overcome in wrestling from Nature these treasures which she so closely guards. Imagine, as in the early days here, a vast, inhospitable country, mountain after mountain, divide after divide, through a wilderness of bush and scrub, where the foot of man had never trod, meets the eye, and the person of him who invades these solitudes. In addition to his surroundings, his life is dependent both on his gun and the pack he carries on his back, containing his subsistence. If it be winter, with the thermometer at, say forty-five degrees below zero, his discomforts, and often perils, are trebled, nay, quadrupled. Arriving at his destination, he seeks out a likely place to camp, and prospects. If encouraging, he remains, as in my case. Time goes on, year succeeds year. He still keeps doggedly on, making long, long trips to town for provisions. He is independent, working his own ground, earning his own living, and it may be that of others. What keeps such a man there? It is not love for a hard, rough life, with often but the companionship of the bear, the moose, and the dog. His convenience is not regarded. He takes his chance and is happy; at least that man is accounted happy who is satisfied with little, and who is ever hopeful of even better times ahead. Above all, the guidance of the great Counselor has been my inspiration and hope.
In conclusion, let me put this question: Is it better to stay at home, in comparative ease and comfort, doing some good, but ever feeling restless and dissatisfied, or to journey to a distant country, and there in the very midst of the Dominion. Perhaps being a little homesick makes us over-sensitive at home, possess the inward conviction of a right action?

True, I am still dissatisfied; but the man who is perfectly content, or thinks he is, is ignorant of the fact that there is what may be called divine discontent; that is, life being progressive. We should never rest satisfied with present appearances, but reach onward to perfection.

If you judge me worthy of your prayers and sympathy, and I think you do, then pray for and encourage me all you can; for this communion of Saints is most helpful. On my part, my thoughts and best wishes are ever with you all, and my intentions, when I have accomplished my aims, are, as far as one man can, to endeavor to establish God's truth by deed and word. That you may all receive the consolation of the Spirit, is the sincere wish of

Yours, still warning for the truth, Brother Sutliffs.

NEW WESTMINSTER, British Columbia, Nov. 22, 1905.

Dear Herald: We came here from Blaine, Washington, in July, to live among the Saints, and to do what our hands find to do in the way of earning a livelihood. This little nook in King Edward's county is very beautiful, and we would hardly know but that we were in our own country if we were not for the spleen felt against us and often expressed by natives of the Dominion. Perhaps being a little homesick makes us over-sensitive. We enjoy the blessings of church privileges here, which we did not in Blaine, for which we are truly thankful.

This has been a summer long to be remembered. The gospel-tent was here for weeks, with Bro. Johnson, of Nanimo, British Columbia, and Bro. and Sr. Pender from Kansas. Brn. Johnson and Pender preached many excellent sermons, in the tent and on the street, which were very much enjoyed by all of the Saints, and we hope that some who heard will remember and take heed before it is too late. No one obeyed the gospel then, and no one seemed very much interested; but perhaps sometime they will hear a Latter Day Saint sermon somewhere else, and, added to what they have already heard, it will convince them of the truth of the gospel. Surely such efforts as the brethren made are never made in vain. Sr. Pender played the organ, and sang with all her might, hoping to attract some wayfaring one, but they loved pleasure more than the things of God, and the sweet singer of Israel was unnoticed except by a few who strayed in now and then. But the crowds were very small, and mostly composed of Saints.

It is needless to say we Saints, one and all, were more than glad to have Joseph and family with us. Perhaps we acted could not have stayed longer. We are glad to note his pleasure in the western trip. The Saints all feel that they were doubly blessed in being able to meet Bro. Joseph's wife and children. Sr. Smith was suffering from a felon on her hand while here, consequently her pleasure was somewhat marred. We have no doubt she is glad to be at home once more with her three restless little boys.

Our Sunday-school and Religio are sources of much comfort and pleasure to us, and we find the Book of Mormon so interesting since studying the Religio lessons, we regret that we did not start sooner. There are so few of us, our programs are very homely affairs; but we always have something with which to fill in.

Bro. Griffiths was here before leaving on his way south and gave us much to think about. He preached several times. One excellent sermon which he preached at Vancouver just finished one good woman's conversion, (Mrs. Maxwell,) and the next day she was baptized. She had been investigating the gospel for a long time, and Bro. Griffiths' sermon cleared up all of her remaining doubts. We were glad to see her come into the church, for she is a woman of good intellect and character. The last night Bro. Griffiths was here he related his experience in the church, which was then read with wrapt attention by all present. Those who were not present certainly missed a very good thing.

Your sister in bonds,
MRS. EDITH M. HOWER.

FAYETTE CITY, Pennsylvania, December, 10, 1905.

Editors Herald: I am reminded the year is fast closing. The record as made we shall all have to meet, as it is. If it shall be found we have not tried to make what it should have been it will be a sad revealment to us.

Our conditions are widely different, but upon all rests the obligation to try. Wherever, or how it may be, having done our best, more can not be asked.

Results of my work so far as seen, are not large. I have, perhaps, reached fewer people than ever before in the same time, partly owing to difficulty in getting places, and the indifference of people in attending the few occasions possible.

The constantly increasing indifference to things religious is appalling. My health this year has been the poorest of my life,—a succession of severe boils from the last of August till December 1, among the several ills. During September I had not one restful night. The narration of ills being neither interesting nor instructive I may be pardoned under the role of hindrances. Ills can not be new, for the whole world has had them, Russia being the chief center now.

To the Seer, whose one hundredth anniversary is so near, it was said: "Be patient under afflictions for thou shalt have many." With all his responsibilities, the propriety of that from a human standpoint is unfathomable. When the Japanese were taking 203 Meter Hill, eight men were shot down in succession; the ninth planting the flag, while a Russian officer shouted: "Don't shoot that man; the flag will be planted anyhow." If so much courage and valor embellishes earthly warfare, those expecting to attain to celestial reward should try to be of good courage and cheer even under difficulties; and so the Lord has commanded. As a people we sometimes sing:

"And for the victory we will fight.
Or perish in the field."

In August an opportunity to exchange views doctrinally with the Bickertonites was had, eight nights being used, alternately, by Apostle Alexander Cherry and myself. The whole Doctrine and Covenants is repudiated by them. How they could accept the Book of Mormon and reject all the inspiration that led up to it still remains a puzzle to all but themselves. An account of their own report of organization in 1862 and their reorganization in 1904, with an unexplained episode between, will be at once a sample of their inspiration, philosophy, and logic. If "where ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise" never was personified before, it surely has been by them.

I now reproduce from pamphlet issued by them, 1905, entitled: "Law and order of the Church of Jesus Christ":

"The church was organized July 7, 1862, and incorporated.
June 10, 1865, with the following officers: William Bickerton, president; Charles Brown, first counselor; George Barnes, second counselor.

"APOSTLES"

"William Cadman, James Brown, Thomas Bickerton, Arthur Bickerton, Joseph Astin, James Nichols, Cummings Cherry,

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Joseph Knox, John Neish, Benjamin Meadowcroft, John Dixon.

"EVANGELISTS.

[The list of the names is given, and immediately afterward the following.]

The church was organized by divine revelation and reorganized by the command of God, July 6, 1904, with the following officers:

"APOSTLES"

Then follows a list of twenty-one evangelists, and so ends their statement on the topic of organization and reorganization.

In the organization of 1862, they had a presidency of three. In the reorganization of 1904, such presidency was omitted. Yet they record as appears in the above statement: "The church was organized by divine revelation, and reorganized by the command of God."

When pressed hard for an explanation of this, how the "divine revelation" of 1862 provided a presidency, while the "command of God" of 1904 left the presidency cut, I was answered by Apostle Alexander Cherry: "You can't discern spiritual things." I confessed inability to discern such work as that to be of God.

Now the episode between organization and reorganization, and the dates 1862 and 1904, is disclosed on the cover of the pamphlet referred to, for honors are divided, some of them (pamphlets) being embossed with a good cut of William Bickerton. Just beneath the picture is: "William Bickerton, founder of the church of Jesus Christ. Organized July 7, 1862."

The other series, a complete duplication with the only difference being on cover, has cut of Cadman, and under it: "William Cadman, President of the Church of Jesus Christ since 1880."

It nowhere appears how or when Bickerton was removed, or how or just when Cadman succeeded him. The general prevailing rumor is Bickerton went to Kansas to locate the land to gather to, beclouded his record some, got reduced financially so he could not return, lived alone in his old age, and died this present year in April.

In 1880 Cadman seems to have assumed position of president here in Pennsylvania. The favorite way of expressing it by a number of the members here is, "He stole it."

The mixture as it stands in their record of it: William Bickerton selected President by revelation, 1862; no notice of removal in any way; Cadman's assumed presidency from 1880 to 1904, when by divine command was effecting a reorganization omitting a presidency.

Yet on the cover of the one series of pamphlets of 1905 Cadman was still President though divine command had omitted it a year before. One President from 1882 to 1889; two Presidents from 1889 to 1904; by divine command omitted in 1904. In 1905 still published: "William Cadman, President since 1880."

Apostle Cherry's whole defense of their position was as peculiar a medley as this. Unsatisfactory as it was to meet such a controversialist, he is their best and ablest defender. Their position on very many points is as unstable and shifting as any bar of sand,—as brittle as a rope of sand. Though maintaining seven branches, and a full quorum of apostles, and twenty-one evangelists, a very small part of Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and a spot in Kansas is the sum of their effort since 1862.

Beginning with August they have published a monthly called the Gospel Reflector. Apostle Cherry is editor, and his work true to the foregoing, which, no doubt, was the result of the combined tact of Cadman and him, as he was First Counselor to Cadman, so noted in minutes of the conference of July last, when he presided in Cadman's stead. All things point to Apostle Cherry as the next leader, call him what they may. Cadman died last month, November 7.

Their "Order of business," as stated in its fifteen items, has for its eleventh: "Are there any revelations from the branches concerning the general church?"

The principal tie that binds them is their gifts, tongues being in rich abundance; but no semblance to scriptural rule has relation to their practice; so much so that on railway trains where they have indulged conductors have threatened to eject them. As to the accuracy of their own history the case of the event that occurred in their President Bickerton will afford a sample.

The Gospel Reflector in its first issue, August, 1905, opens with: "History of church. A life sketch of William Bickerton, the founder of the church of Jesus Christ."

So much for introductory headlines. The first paragraph reads: "The history of the organization of the Church of Jesus Christ commences with William Bickerton. Following is his testimony to the world:"

"I, William Bickerton, was a member of the Methodist church, until I heard the gospel of Jesus Christ preached. In 1846 I was convinced of the doctrines of Christ."

The fifth paragraph opens: "I entered the church under Elder Sidney Rigdon's organization."

How then was Bickerton the founder?

In the center of first page is a cut of Bickerton, and under it the inscription, "William Bickerton, Founder of the Church of Jesus Christ. He was born in Northumberland, England, 1815. Came to America in 1832."

Nowhere does it appear how Bickerton was made president, how long he served, when released, or when he died, which, by search among the people, I find to have been in April last.

While a quotation from a purported revelation is given calling Bickerton, who the author (or one who received it) is does not appear. Neither is any action on it made record of, and the first mention as president is: "On the following day while the president was making some remarks," etc.

Precious to this occurs: "We wish it to be understood distinctly, that the organization of this church came by express commandment and revelation from the Almighty and at the July conference of 1862 the church was formally organized of twelve apostles," William Cadman being made the president of the twelve. It is noted also that some seventies were ordained. So much for organization.

I have not given extended notes on the controversy with Cherry, for the reason that it would not have served a better purpose. That furnished herein from the pamphlet was a part, and fair sample. The rest from the Reflector, another part of their published record, is susceptible of verification, and from Cherry's late work.

The controversy was before the advent of the Reflector. Of the controversy Cherry was told by outsiders: "You are done, and out of business."

I have never met a class of people with whom reason had less effect than they. In January they meet in conference and may evolve something new. I may then report again.

Blantyre, Scotland, December 5, 1906.

Editors Herald: I left Belfast, Ireland, last month by counsel of Bro. J. W. Rushton, in charge of mission, and came to this place to see what I could do to advance the work here. As the weather was too cold and wet for outdoor preaching, I contrived a severe cold from standing bareheaded and on the wet ground talking to the people. Sometimes I had very pleasant crowds to speak to, but most of the time unurly ones, by way of interrupting, by asking questions that seemed silly to me, such as: "What is the second death?" "How many wives did Joe Smith have?" "Did Joe Smith have more wives than Brigham Young?" "Where did Cain get his wife, and who was she?" "What kind of fruit did Adam and Eve eat in the transgression?" One man wanted to know how big the window was in Noah's ark. But most of the interruptions were, "You are a Mormon, and no use to deny it." When I contrast my efforts in Ireland with the work done by the first elders of the church sent to England, and to other parts of the country, one becomes amazed at the difference in results obtained by the work done; and I have heard it insinuated that the elders now do not have the power and degree of authority that the first elders had, or the same results would be reached now as then. It requires only a casual glance to ascertain the difference in conditions existing now from those that confronted the first elders. They went to a people with the first principles, and the people were amazed at the grandeur of the line of thought presented by them. Often they held debates upon the subject of baptism, church organization, apostasy, etc.; and the people made haste to accept of the truth, for the atmosphere was clear and clean of everything but the contention of truth with error. Also, at that time America, or Zion, was held up before the people as a place of rest and peace, where land could be purchased for one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, and plenty of room there; also that land in Zion could be bought for sixty cents per acre. Many such inducements were presented to the people. The result was that thousands accepted the gospel under the efforts of those first elders. But how different it is to-day. When I came to Ireland I found a people schooled in the art of contention over the plain statements of the Bible, and honest men and women have become disgusted with the doctrines of the Mormons and we met a frowning world who can only see us through a perverted gospel, and the term Zion is a stench in the nostrils of good men and women, who can not or will not try to separate the stigma of polygamy and other corrupt doctrines from the gospel as it was committed by the angel to Joseph the Seer. And one would be surprised to know how far and fast even the details of the corruptions of Utah Mormons have traveled and poisoned the minds of people of far-away lands, thus hindering the preaching of the word. One would think, perhaps the Mormons are reaping a benefit from the result of the introduction of that which has besmirched the beautiful garments of the church of Christ, and also has destroyed the fair fame of the first elders. But, no, we find them almost fruitless in their efforts to get people into their church, and they sneak around and away from a contest with us, and are hiding their efforts by only an effort on street-corners where police will not permit of a discussion. This is the main reason why proper results are not obtained in places where there is no branch of the Saints to live down the effect of a perverted gospel. The first elders went to the world without having to confront a frowning world armed with such deadly weapons as polygamy, Adam-god, blood atonement; and we of the Reorganized Church have all this and more also to meet and overcome before we can bring the people into the church. I have offered tracts to men and women who have returned them unopened, with a "No, thank you." It makes me feel sad to think of men and women who ought to have been the friends of Christ that have, by their wicked and corrupt methods and doctrine, put his gospel to shame and disgusted good people to the extent that they will not even read a tract relating to the angel's message. I am sure we preach the gospel as plain and as clear as the first elders of the church, if not plainer; and as to results in the matter of obtaining power with God, I came to Bintyre and during the first week was called upon to administer to the sick twice; and both Bros. Murray and Browning arose and bore testimony that they were healed by the power of God. November 26 I baptized a young man, John Waddell, who after his confirmation, arose and sang a beautiful solo, "Oh, how wonderful to know that Jesus was crucified for me." It did me good to realize that God has not cast off his people, but is ever ready to bless them when they walk uprightly.

Scotland has been the place where horrible things have been done in the name of Christ, both by the church of Rome and the Church of England. Hundreds have had to lay down their lives for what they believed to be the truth. Just think of four men being put to death in Edinburg, and their bodies cut to pieces, their heads buried in one place, their hands in another, their bodies in another. Just think of a man like James Guthrie, a man of sterling character and fine qualities of mind to such a degree that he attracted the attention of kings, being beheaded and his head placed over a gateway and kept there for months, because he would not submit to church rule. Two women, one eighty-three years old, and the other eighteen, tied to posts when the tide was out and the multitude assembled to see them drown as the tide came in, because they were caught in the act of prayer, out of the ruling church. Indeed, Scotland has suffered as badly as Ireland; and both countries have had their prophets. Alexander Redon was the great and good prophet of Scotland, whose life is full of the manifestations of the divine and miraculous power of God, whose whole body of followers were hidden by a mist that came down and about them and hid them from Cloverhouse and his gang who were seeking their lives. One would think this a good field for preaching the word of God. And it indeed is, but from the effect of the latter-day apostasy which seemingly is trying to outdo the former-day apostasy. But can we think that the blood of such worthies as James Renwick, the meek and mild Scotchman, has been shed for naught, when upon the scaffold he sang a hymn and exhorted the multitude to charity and chastity, and prayed for his murderers, when, being interrupted by them, he said that death to him was as a bed to a weary man? I think not. I find the people of Scotland an open-hearted, well-meaning people; and I hope for many of them to come into the church. But perhaps they will not see the day of opportunity until after the judgments of God have begun their work in adjusting all the wrongs that both the people and the gospel have suffered at the hands of unprincipled men. I sometimes think if we only had the opportunity like the first elders of the church had to meet the world, without the effect of a latter-day apostasy—to meet them with that only which was given to Joseph by the angel, untarnished and unadulterated with those nasty and filthy things originating in Utah, the work of the redemption of Zion, and the gathering of the Saints, would now be at an end, and the ushering in of a new dispensation would at least be near. W. H. Kelley, of Indiana.
Bro. Wight, here, is declared by the masses to be one of the ablest preachers that has ever passed through Southern Indiana.

After adjournment of conference the interest increased, and a full house was the order every night, and baptizing almost every day or night. It is now the fifth week of Bro. Wight's stay, and up to this date he has preached thirty-three times, baptized twenty-three, and several names are in for baptism Sunday, the 17th. It is expected now that Bro. Wight will remain here till the 26th and then go to Wirt, Indiana.

Your brother,

JAMES P. SAPPENFIELD.

SAILING, Oklahoma, December 12, 1905.

Editors Herald: I wish to say a word concerning some of the recent articles in the Herald, as one of the many who surely appreciate these silent sermons, coming to us each week. I desire to do so in order to encourage the writers by letting them see that their efforts are productive of some thought at least. A great deal of the matter presented to us in the present times through the Herald is certainly a strong call for most serious consideration. I refer especially to such writings as that of Joseph Burton in Herald for November 29, the editorial for December 6, "Who is serving God?" of the same issue, and last in that issue, but by no means least, either in length of article, or plain, forceful truth, the article by John W. Rushton. Let us make use of these opportunities to enrich our store of understanding. Let us read these words of warning, of reproof, of wisdom, and of encouragement, as they come from time to time, then think them over, read again, and pray over these matters which show so clearly how far we are yet below the standard of excellence which our God requires of all who would be indeed his people.

By the earnest pursuit of this course, taking care to personally observe "all things" of gospel requirement, when the door of opportunity opens, we will be prepared, as Bro. Rushton says, to "do something."

We have no desire to depreciate the grand work and noble effort continually kept up in the work of the Herald, writers by particular reference to these late articles; but in these recent efforts we certainly have a fair presentation of the issue which confronts us as a people. And it is certainly true that the proper solution of these vital issues before us is the only avenue opening to our success as a people. May the servants of the Lord never hesitate to speak the whole counsel of God. When they write or speak, may they give us the word of the Lord, whether the message be flattering or not; then if we reject not the counsel, the power of Divinity will show us the means with which to build and remain on the rock.

Desiring the grace of true humility, I am,

Your brother,

JAMES YATES.

BAY MINETTE, Alabama, December 14, 1905.

Editors Herald: I send you a letter written by one P. A. Means to the Meridian Star, Meridian, Mississippi, while preaching over there.

W. J. BOOKER.

"THE TROUBLE NEAR—WHY NOT?"

"Editor of the Star:

"For the benefit of inquiring friends and the public generally as to the trouble here some four or five weeks ago, I would say, that a gentleman from Bay Minette, Alabama, came here by the name of W. J. Booker, a preacher of the Latter Day Saints. He has many relatives here and some members of his church. He preached two or three times, when behold! a war-cloud rose all over this Beat (Beat 5). Then two members of Bethany church called at Mr. J. W. Brown's home, where Mr. Booker was stopping, and gave him written orders to move on. But he did not move on, so then our justice of the peace went to see him and insisted that he leave to save trouble, as over one hundred men were organized to enforce, what? Mob Law!! But he did not leave worth a cent. On September 30, I went to see him and agreed to come with him to see Judge Cochran on Monday, October 2. That visit satisfied Mr. Booker and myself, and also the mob who met that day to arrange the order of attack; however, the better element prevailed, and the dove of peace once more hovered over our homes.

"Had the truth been told, there would never have been any trouble in the neighborhood. Mr. Booker is a deadly enemy to polygamy, and so is his entire church, which all well-read men know.

"I am not defending Mr. Booker's church, for I differ with him entirely. But I am defending civil and religious liberty, free speech, and a free press, the safety-valve of free institutions.

"Now, boys, I freely forgive you, knowing that many of you are my friends; and all I ask is for you to do unto all men as you would like them to do unto you. My effort in this affair has been solely for peace, and upholding of law and the Constitution, and protection of an old comrade, a gentleman whose character is above reproach. The writer knows the Booker family—four brothers and one sister—the sister being the wife of T. J. Brown of the Indian Territory. Their mother is buried at Bethany church, and to think that within a few hundred yards of her tomb, a plot was conceived to drive from the State her first-born—the son of her youth—and by people who profess to be Christians!

"Thank God, she is not conscious of the deep ingratitude shown her dear son, for 'there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.' (Ecclesiastes 9:10.)

"Yours very truly,

"P. A. MEANS."

SPOKANE, Washington, December 12, 1905.

Dear Herald: We wish only to say we are still in the conflict—and all is well—our branch is still growing, numbering now over one hundred. Our church is almost completed, and no "patch" on it. Our meetings are well attended, spiritual, and instructive. Our church has an enviable reputation among business men. We will not run in debt; but we pay cash for what we get. We have a corps of rustlers that is a joy to behold: sisters' aid, bazaar, excellent Sunday-school, offerings for the banner, Religious entertainment superlative, Christmas-tree looming up, and all are happy and contented. Therefore Spokane sends greeting: A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to all the faithful in Christ our Lord.

GROVE, Indian Territory, December 15, 1905.

Editors Herald: The year has been entirely devoted to the missionary field. From May to September was in the bounds of the Independence Stake. Since that time by request of the missionary in charge I have labored in the Spring River District, mostly in company with Elder W. S. Taylor, the district president. He is one of the old-timers who possesses that desirable gift of fireside preaching beyond many of his comrades.

The year has been a pleasant one so far as missionary work is concerned. May labor has been more in harmony with my calling and previous trend of thought than in former years.

My "salary" has not quite come up to the standard; viz.: eight hundred dollars, and furnished parsonage, together with marriage and funeral fees, and such other gratuities and gratises as one might long for, like the Israelites longed for Egyptian leeks and onions, but it (the salary) has been all I expected, judging by previous years in this church. So there are no disappointments or complaints. Neither is any other employed to complain for me. See?

While no financial bargains have been made between the financial agents of the church and myself, yet bread and butter have been abundant with an occasional cobber for dessert, and, moreover, dollars enough to pay traveling and reunion expenses.

Many new and pleasant acquaintances have been made. A sense of gratitude and appreciation would prompt me to mention by name many brethren and sisters who have ministered to my necessities and sustained me by their prayers and "toted" me about, but their names are too numerous. The good Lord knows who they are, and his recording angel gives credit. So do I.

Some of my acquaintances may have thought that I had dropped out of active work because my name did not appear in the list of appointments last April; but my record shows, since March 1, up to date, one hundred and seventy-three sermonettes and, moreover, dollars enough to pay traveling and reunion expenses.

If one may long for, like the Israelites longed for Egyptian leeks and onions, but it (the salary) has been all I expected, judging by previous years in this church. So there are no disappointments or complaints. Neither is any other employed to complain for me. See?

know? This method would sink us into ignorant oblivion, to become the savage of the forest. When we have found that which the law of God teaches as man's duty it is fortunate if we sincerely desire to do it; but if we do not desire to do it, this affords no legitimate excuse or reason for not doing his bidding. While happiness is the product of duty, yet it is more, for it is a part of its constituency. Well has the poet said:

"We turn our sad, reluctant gaze
Upon the path of duty.
Its barren, inviting ways
Are void of bloom and beauty.
Yet in that road, though dark and cold,
It seems, as we begin it,
As we press on—lo! we behold,
There's Heaven in it."

No true hero will be made without a duty—an arduous experience; neither can the laurels of a saint be gained unless life's perils are met bravely, with strength gained by facing many trials as a Christian victor at duty's station. Whoever heard of a good seaman developed without a voyage, or a brave soldier developed without a battle? Thus it would be unreasonable to expect a character of sainthood to be attained without hardship, sacrifice, self-denial, and constant labor. How can it be said that "works" are indispensable?

If the conditions of the future—the saints' eternal home, is holy, and purity abounds, for ever should be discarded the supposition that it can be attained through unself means; for if holiness and purity is the ultimate of the gospel hope, then principles of law and true works must be involved that will lead to this condition. We should remember (if permitted to use the figure) that over the Alpine peaks and summits of great hardship, self-denial, and tribulation, lie the pleasant valleys and delightful vales of our Italy; that over turbulent waves of pain, the sweetest music is heard. If we, too, are to attain these blissful conditions, it must be because we have walked the rugged path that they walked, obeying the same law, sacrificing in doing the good works that the saints characters anciently did.

The divine life, in its start here, is like the little brook that trickles from the rocks, little at first, but as it flows onward in its course it becomes larger and larger until it is swallowed up in the great ocean. In our journey, the divine Spirit is the awakening to reality in eternal things, and the onward flow of its current sweeps into larger channels of greater truth of God's creation, and eventually we reach the great deep, and we become a part of it, in all its immensity, wisdom, and power.

The infidel calls this religious cant. We now stop and view the situation, and ask: What right has any man to impugn the testimony of the honest experience of another because a like experience has not come to him? Well might I say, because I did not receive the force of the blow, that the man who did did not feel it because I did not. All Nature in gleeeful melody sings the anthem of creation, and that there is a creator. We see the handwriting in evidence everywhere in the universe. It remains for man, and man only to say, "There is no God." Millions of humanity solemnly testify that the intervention of divine power has come to them, and that which the world calls a miracle is not contrary to human experience. The agnostic's presumption is unlimited when he would have us believe that the power that transforms the atoms of the soil into daily bread for man and all forms of animal life could not also feed five thousand with a few loaves and fishes in the wilderness; and the testimony in other ages corroborated by man in latter days is not true because such has not come to him in his sphere of action, yet he holds himself aloft from the conditions that lead to this divine testimony. What great logic is this! Our success as the church of Jesus Christ in attaining strength, power, and beauteous endowments is developed by the action and work we do. That thing of value has always come as the stipend of honest labor. Motion is said to be the law of living nature. Traditional mythology has it that labor was the price the gods set on everything of value. The principle is true, if we do question its origin. Individually, or as a church, life is too short and opportunity too fleeting to serve vain ambition and haughty pride. The extent of our accomplishment as a church may be predicated on the intellectual and spiritual endowment we possess, and the energy and activity with which it is directed. True analysis of the science of all life and death teaches us that action is the symbol of death, and motion or action is the symbol of life. If it was intended that man should eat bread in the sweat of his face, and many comforts and benefits come to us in this way, how, and by what reasoning do we say spiritual blessings and benefits come without labor? Then for future success as a body politic we must stand for God, by the adoption of his whole law, and let the world know of a surety what side we are on. Think of the man who claims to be a saint of God, who by his actions never would demonstrate it! Thus sometimes our actions give the lie to our professions.

Too often in the church we find those who do not think of that which they have to do, but of that which we are to get; not only in the future but now; and thus they sink themselves unto the fatal sin of Ananias and Sapphira. (See Acts 5:1-11.) Yes, we sometimes want to keep back part of the price and have others to be privy to it, when it comes to temporalities. This sin, you will notice, originated with his satanic majesty, the Devil. If we are not willing to pay the full price, the Lord says we can not buy. The taking up of the cross means more than to carry it along,—not only to carry it, but also to be crucified upon it is the true import; for "they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts." (Galatians 5:24.)

We must remember the cause of Christ is the cause of humanity, and if we engage in it unselfishly it means doing good to man as well as to God; and thus if the life is fruitful of good results, then we will see an equal ratio for each in noble action and patient perseverance. While it is true salvation is not by works, yet it is true and should be impressed on all that our coronation will never be realized without works.

The true church is compared to a human body (see 1 Corinthians 12), in fact it is called Christ's body (see Colossians 2:18, 24; 1 Corinthians 12:28; Ephesians 1:22, 23; 5:30), and if this is a good comparison it must have some identity. Let us see. In the human body the heart does not receive the blood to store it away for its own exclusive benefit, but it pumps it from one chamber to another, and from one valve to another, to be disseminated through the entire system, through the veins, arteries, and capillaries. It does not become congested anywhere, for each function does its proper work; thus the benefits are general. What can be said of the blood can also be said of all the fluids of the system, and the food and the organs of digestion. But suppose one organ would confiscate all? I only have to tell you this would be the cause of invertebrate malady and disease and ultimate death. Thus, you see, is beautifully portrayed in the creation the fact that the combined human system lives by giving. One organ thrives on that which is given to it by another, demonstrating the fact that none are independent and indispensable, but all go to make the perfect whole. Thus is carried, as a fine art, the principles of receiving and giving. If each organ fails to contribute its share to the body, the entire system becomes stricken, and must succumb to the bankruptcy of death.

How true this simple analogy can apply to the church! What a great lesson we should, and eventually must, learn from this fact regarding the temporalities of the kingdom of God, before we are entirely free! In accumulating we must give; and to get and mass property and wealth, we should be equally as willing to disperse. If one arm of the body—the church—labors for the spiritual welfare and salvation of others, the other arm —the temporal—must come to the rescue and also do its part, or there is an abruption of the system, and starvation ensues to one, and extra fatness to the other, which will eventually result in death to both.

What right has one part to reserve from the other that which rightly belongs to it, when each is dependent on the other?
In the appropriation of that which does not belong to us, what principle is involved? Let the word of God settle it. (See Malachi 3:8-10.) If the violator of this principle was the only one to suffer, the consequences would not be so direful.
When the supply of the gospel has recourse to other avenues to procure means for physical necessities because of the lack of activity of those supposed to supply it, then the spiritual work and the preaching of the gospel abroad is impaired, and thus exists an abnorhmy. The ministry of the church hasjust as right to claim some of the temporal accumulations the Lord has blessed you with, as you have to claim and profit by the wisdom and spiritual food he may give forth through his servant. What right has any man to throw a clog in the progresseas of the church while they fatten on that which they have improperly withheld in greedy selfishness? Methinks such obesity and gout will react to the detriment of all such eventually. This is no child's prattle with the ministry of the church, for it has assumed serious proportions. When we realize that supreme happiness in doing duty to God is to do duty to our brother, and to get good and become spiritually strong we will do good and impart spiritual vigor and vitality to others, we have learned a very important lesson in gospel law. Also, when we come to the understanding that all we have, including our life and being, is the Lord's, and that the great work rests equally upon all, and that each is equally responsible, an integrant to the welfare of the whole, with the combined harmonious action of the whole together, with interests blended in perfect love and good fellowship, then and not until then will Zion's cause flourish and "become terrible as an army with banners."

The farmer, the merchant, the mechanic, and all men of evocation, as well as the special ministers are called, yes, called to minister for him. How many realize this? With your several abilities and talents, he calls you to labor for him.
Are you responding to the call? If you are not then you will suffer loss. To encourage you to do so, you will find there is nothing more clearly taught in the revelations of God than the fact that we are all equal, not only in spiritual but temporal things, and he destines us to be one.

As we enter the year's work with full determination, let us do all the work we can, and, as Moody once expressed it, "If we can not be a lighthouse, let us be a tallow candle." Anyway we should let what light we have radiate.

With the old year we take a long farewell, for we will never see it again. The incidents of its history may be called up at some future date for our commendation or disapproval, and we trust its unfolding will reveal nothing to our shame or discredit. It is to be hoped the stately tramp of another year will bring new conquests of victory with its wreath of glory for the devoted heads of the people of God. The past has taught its severe lesson, and we hope there will never come a day that the glory and power attained through its experience will be diminished, but at last shall have passed through the triumphal arch to glorious victory in the celestial kingdom of God.

Respectfully, in bonds, S. S. Smith.

Extracts from Letters.

C. Quick, Rats Postoffice, Missouri: "Prejudice is slowly giving way, and the cry, 'Mormon,' is ceasing. If we practice what we preach, and live by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God, we will in time be able to reach the people with the angel's message. I can talk to people now who formerly would not listen to me. We must be patient and faithful, for we can not always expect to sow to-day and reap to-morrow; but God's word shall not return unto him void. Any of the missionaries passing through Indiana, Howard County, near Jerone, auire for David Quick, or Griffith Johns. I want them to hear the gospel in its fullness, though they belong to the Christian Church."

Thomas J. Simpson, Montrose, Iowa: "I have been afflicted for some time, and my afflictions are very severe, and I ask all the Saints to pray for me that I may be healed if the Lord be willing."

William Keeth, National Home, Wisconsin: "Dear brother, you must discontinue sending the Autumn Leaves, as I am not financially able to pay for it. I feel very grateful to the good sister, Mrs. Lucy Williams, of Looking Glass, Oregon, who paid for the publication for me. I address you as 'brother,' although I am not a member of the Reorganized Church (or any other). I hope that I some day may be. For several years I have been investigating Christ's plan of salvation, and find it in no other church. As for latter-day revelations, I have the prima facie evidence that God does reveal the right way to me; and I believe he is willing to do so to all mankind. There are here at the hospital several who will and do read the HER-ALD and Autumn Leaves. Some appear interested, for they will come and get the papers, read, and return them, generally with the remark, 'There is good common sense in that sermon.' The way I look at it is that all the Master's work is just good common sense put in practice. I want to serve God, and am trying, but realize my weakness."

P. A. Flinn, Tower, Indiana: "Bro. Harpe and wife came into our neighborhood, and the first of December we began meetings at a point called Cook's Chapel. We held three meetings with full house. At Baker's, where we held some meetings, the attendance was small, on account of the rainy weather. To the members of our branches I wish to say, in the way of advice: 'Keep humble and full of love, seeking after faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, and diligence. Ask and you shall receive; knock and it shall be opened unto you. If these principles are in us, we will be found in the right.'"

James Craig, Glen Easton, West Virginia: "Prospects are bright here. I have baptized twelve since the April conference, and am trying, but realize my weakness."

Elizabeth Wickiser, Greenup, Illinois: "We are isolated from the church, and the Ensign and Herald are our only preachers.
If any of the elders should come this way, we would be glad to have them call and see us. We live only a short distance from the depot, southeast."

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints in Minnesota; Greeting: Having been appointed as Bishop's agent of this State, I take this means of letting you know my address, also that money to meet the expenses of the missionaries in this field, and I hope you will so generously respond that I will not need to mention this matter to you again so long as I act as the agent for you. All should pay this as much as part of the law of God as faith, repentance, and baptism, and now as your agent I appeal to you and I hope all will respond to the call. Remember every little helps. I also have inventory papers and will assist you all I can in making them out or give you any information I can. I am at present traveling in the field and will endeavor to see as many of you as possible and hope you will avail yourselves of the opportunity to secure all information you need about tithing and also consecration. Those Saints in a scattered condition whom I may not be able to reach, if you need any information I will gladly answer any questions I can concerning the matter of tithing or consecration. I see by examing the books that the names of some do not appear and that some who paid tithing once are not doing so now. Let us remember that he who is faithful to the end the same shall be saved. Always send money in a safe way—by bank draft, money-order, or express order, or by registered mail. Thanking you for what you have done in the past, and hoping to hear from you soon, I am,

Your agent and brother,

BIRCH WHITING.

STANBERRY, Missouri, December 24, 1905.

Expelled.

This is to notify the church in general that Priest Joseph Abraham Kemp of Enfield, London, England, and Arie Roothoff of London, England, both members of the Enfield Branch, were expelled from the church on Wednesday, the eighth day of November, 1905.

(Signed)

DOVER J. HUD, Enfield Branch Clerk.

ENFIELD, Middlesex, England, November 9, 1905.

Died.

GURWELL.—Lieutenant Grant Gurwell was born at Fanning, Kansas, May 14, 1866. He united with the church in early youth, and was ever a zealous worker for the cause of truth. For sixteen years he has represented the church officially, the last year of which he spent entirely as a missionary. He was married September 6, 1903, to Ada Homan. To them were born two children, the oldest dying in infancy. He passed away December 6, 1906, at his home in Fanning, Kansas, aged 39 years, 6 months, and 29 days. He was beloved and respected by all who knew him, and his death will be sincerely mourned by a host of true friends as well as his relatives. Funeral services conducted by Elder Samuel Twombly from the church in Fanning, Kansas.

The True Sabbath.

The true Christian Sabbath is not a day for penance, for suffering, for enforced solitude. It was made for man to do man good. It was made for bodily rest from the fatigues of manual labor; for mental rest from the pressure of business problems; for social rest from the fetters of intercourse with busy people; for political rest from the controversies of municipal and financial and national life. The Sabbath is in the legislation of all lands and the more we study the subject the more plainly we see the necessity for rest, the blessedness, the rightousness, the necessity of a day made for man—for man made in the image of God.

Our exciting age, the tension of the times, overworked bodies, overtaxed brains, anxieties about business and domestic life and responsibilities of every kind require some social regulation to compel recuperation.

How fully are these requirements met by the Sabbath still left us? the subduing power of sacred music, the impressive solemnities of public worship, the joy and love of home life, the growing memories, hallowed by love, that draw our souls toward heaven! From "The Vesper hour," by Bishop John H. Vincent, in the Chautauquan, for January.

Four Dollars' Worth of Neckties.

If some writer were to collate the two true stories of what our famous men did with their first-earned money we would have a very sad picture, if not soft painting by which we mean containing the "last words" of the great, would certainly add much to the gayety of nations. Recently, at a banquet in a New York club, it was mentioned that Dan. Beard, the celebrated artist and author of "Moonblight," when he received the four dollars which constituted the spoils of his first week's laborious apprenticeship in the mystery of surveying, that he went to the nearest haberdasher's and bought—whisper it softly under the stars—four dollars' worth of neckties.

About Habit.

Because we have not hitherto had the best possible habits is no reason why we should not begin to form them in 1906. Professor James, who has made a profound study of habit, has furnished us with one or two excellent maxims on the subject.

First, he tells us that it is indispensable to the new way and make engagements incompatible with the old; for enforced solitude. It was made for man to do man good. It was made for bodily rest from the fatigues of manual labor; for mental rest from the pressure of business problems; for social rest from the fetters of intercourse with busy people; for political rest from the controversies of municipal and financial and national life. The Sabbath is in the legislation of all lands and the more we study the subject the more plainly we see the necessity for rest, the blessedness, the rightousness, the necessity of a day made for man—for man made in the image of God.

Our exciting age, the tension of the times, overworked bodies, overtaxed brains, anxieties about business and domestic life and responsibilities of every kind require some social regulation to compel recuperation.

How fully are these requirements met by the Sabbath still left us? the subduing power of sacred music, the impressive solemnities of public worship, the joy and love of home life, the growing memories, hallowed by love, that draw our souls toward heaven! Joseph F. Smith in the Eyes of the Mormons.

Just how Joseph F. Smith is regarded in Utah is an interesting side-light on Mormonism in view of the recent elections in which his party was so thoroughly whipped. In the December Housekeeper, Marian Bonsall, in the sixth of the series of articles on "The tragedy of the Mormon woman," quotes the words of a prominent church-member:

"Joseph F. Smith is president of the Mormon church. He is the vice-regent of God. As such he directly represents God, and is to us, when he speaks, the voice of God. His word is clothed with supreme authority when speaking in his official capacity. We can disobey him through our free agency. But in doing this we assume the responsibility of rejecting the counsel of God, which no man will lightly do. As to the testimony at Washington, I consider it the finest exhibition the world has ever witnessed of a fearless, truthful, loyal man. Our young men approve of President Smith's fearless candor as before the Senate committee he earnestly announced the truth, and defended our divine institution, going so far as to state that he was willing to abide by the consequences of all man-made laws that might be involved in the circumstance."

No other newspaper published in Des Moines or Iowa devotes so much space to the public and political affairs of the State as the Register and Leader, and for that reason every public spirited citizen should be on its subscription list. It covers the news of the state-house and of legislative sessions more fully than other papers, and in addition, gives a more complete general Iowa news service. It also receives the complete day and night Associated Press report; it maintains a special staff representative in Washington, and it publishes the largest Sunday paper in the State. Its editorial policy is broad and progressive; it is free from all entangling alliances, and it owes no obligation save to the best interests of the public. The Daily Register and Leader is four dollars a year.

A SERMONET.

In the Chicago Tribune for January 2, 1906, is a cartoon by McCutcheon, a noted cartoonist, that is, in itself, a little sermon. We believe a description of the cartoon in our columns will not be amiss, but will be appreciated by many, and is probably needed by some. It is entitled, "Am I an honest man?"
Underneath the title is this statement:
"The first and most important move in the great 1906 anti-graft crusade is to make a careful study of yourself."

The cut represents a modern business man sitting before a large mirror, making a close scrutiny of his reflection in the mirror by the use of a magnifying-glass which he holds in his hand. On the wall at his right are two framed mottoes: One reads, "Old-fashioned honesty is the best policy." The other, "Be good and you can talk about others; be bad and others can talk about you."

Under the cut are the following queries:
"Do I evade the payment of my just taxes?
"Do I violate any law in making my money?
"Would I be ashamed to tell how and where any part of my income is derived?
"Do I own land or property that is used for illegal or immoral purposes?
"Do I demand my employees to do in my interest something that I would not do myself?
"Do I employ methods in my business that would not have been considered honest by my ancestors?
"Do I consider dividends an excuse for irregular methods?"

A careful consideration of these queries, and any others suggested by them, will not injure any Latter Day Saint, although it may "hurt" a little.

If the standard of honesty is being raised higher in the world, we ought, at least, to try to keep pace with it. We must admit that legitimate business methods, so accepted by the world, may not all be strictly honest.

For instance: Men in any line of business in which they are not producers, but merely handle goods or property for their patrons, without adding to the value of the same, are in a very peculiar position. Their taxes, insurance, freight bills, rents, clerk hire, advertising fees, all come, if traced back to their source, from the working man, the producer, and the President Joseph Smith has been confined to his home for the past two weeks, ill with facial neuralgia. He is improving in general health, but still suffers, at times severely, with pain in the face. He has suffered more or less from neuralgia since returning from his late trip to the Northwest. His early recovery is expected, and the Saints will doubtless remember him with that desired result in view.

Bro. U. W. Greene, Kirtland, Ohio, December 27: "On the 16th I organized a branch at Dayton, Ohio, with seventeen members. Bro. J. M. Baggerly was chosen to preside, E. H. Durand presiding priest, Brn. Davis and Jones associates, C. H. Warn teacher. They have a nice hall and flourishing Sunday-school. The presence of the Holy Spirit to a marked degree indicated divine approval. A few will soon join the little flock and in time many will be reached."
tiller of the soil. With these facts before us, in addition to the queries by the cartoonist, we ask: Is a man honest if he conducts his business in such a way that in addition to all we have mentioned as coming from the producer, he still takes so much from him that he keeps himself and family in two, five, or ten times as good circumstances as the producer and his family can ever hope to live? If he does this, Is he honest if he calls the producer a fool for adopting any means an honest man may adopt to rid himself of the burden?

Under the Lord’s plan we do not believe such conditions would be permitted. It seems to us that he provides a way by which the profits of a business above the needs and wants of the owner (being practically the same as the needs and wants of the producer) should be turned over to the church for the benefit of the poor. We hope to live to see the time when the Lord’s plan will be more fully in operation.

How often do we hear, in our day, of an enterprise being launched with the sole object of benefiting the people? Is it not rather the policy of worldly business concerns to benefit the prime movers and stockholders in the business, with a certain knowledge that a corresponding benefit can not come to its real supporters?

Who is so selfish that he would not be glad, and be made to rejoice to see the time when those engaging in the business affairs of men of the world would do so with the positive declaration, We are not entering this business for personal exaltation, but with the avowed determination that those who pay the entire expense of the business shall receive a proportionate benefit with those who do the work of conducting it? When Saints reach that condition of unselfishness, there will be a bright outlook for the redemption of Zion. Are we, as Saints, following Christ or the world in our every-day business life?

Some one has said the poor are the Lord’s heritage. We know that he was the truest and most sympathetic friend the poor ever had. He, in his earth-life, was poor. In the Inspired Translation we read:

And he lifted up his eyes on his disciples, and said, Blessed are the poor; for theirs is the kingdom of God. Blessed are they who hunger now, for they shall be filled. Blessed are they who weep now; for they shall laugh. Blessed are ye when all men speak well of you, for so did their fathers to the false prophets. —Luke 6:20–23.

Did you ever think that Jesus left out one of the most important things (according to man’s idea) when thus teaching his disciples? Not once did he say, “Blessed are the rich—Was it because he could assign no reason? And yet, strange to say, it seems to be the prevailing thought that, “We’ll run the risk of being affected by this oversight of the Savior’s, if we can only get hold of the riches.” But what did he say? Read what immediately follows the above quotation:

But woe unto you who are rich! For ye have received your consolation. Woe unto you who are full! For ye shall hunger. Woe unto you who laugh now! For ye shall mourn and weep. Woe unto you when all men speak well of you! For so did their fathers to the false prophets.

One of the great barriers in the way of the redemption of Zion seems to be a lack of the Christ sympathy for the poor. We have charities, to be sure, and philanthropists. But how many are there who are willing to put themselves on an equal footing with the “poor,” as the Master did, that all may be built up alike? The cry of England’s unemployed is, We do not want your charities. Give us an opportunity to earn our living.

One of the results of the Lord’s plan of sending out ministers to preach the gospel is, we believe, that in nearly every instance the minister, when he goes out in strict harmony with the provision of the law, is placed in a condition where he inevitably becomes a champion of the cause of the poor. Our observation confirms us in this belief, and we take comfort in the thought. And to the extent that any minister fails to develop and enlarge his sympathies for the distressed and overburdened of mankind, to that extent he fails to attain to the Christ character.

And if we desire to see the work of the redemption of Zion hastened, must we not become so humbled that we may, by our own free will, go forward and gladly comply with all the requirements of the celestial law?

A MEXICAN IDOL.

The following poem was written by Mr. Hubert M. Skinner, of Chicago, who has taken great interest in the developments of Aztec archaeology. Writing to President F. M. Smith he says: “In view of the interest you take in all that pertains to the ancient Aztecs, I mail to you herewith a copy of my last poem, which has just appeared in the Technical World of Chicago. In the magazine it is handsomely illustrated, and the artist has happily applied the lesson of the idol, ‘Xipe,’ to the conditions of to-day. The hideous monster is elevated upon a high altar, and is surrounded by men and women of the present time, in attitudes of groveling adoration and of frantic supplication.

“Aztec mythology has been only partially developed, and offers a rich field for original study. This

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

What is your object in attending General Conference in 1806? Just to have a good time engaging in social palaver and sight-seeing? If that's all, better not go. There will be no room for you. You will be in the way—in the way of those thoughtfully inclined, and in the way of their receipt of the full light and guidance desired. There will be plenty of room, however, for all the earnest hearts, for all who are devoted to duty, for all who go fully consecrated to God.

A brother furnishes this item: "Bro. U. W. Greene, minister in charge of the Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Virginia Mission, writes of the work in the same as follows: 'Splendid services in Kirtland yesterday. Singing in tongues and interpretation. Interest in Mentor increasing. Branch organized in Dayton, Ohio. Columbus difficulties adjusted. We opened the New Year at peace. Good success attended the work last year and the prospect never was brighter than that confronting the mission to-day.'

"This is encouraging and hopeful and in keeping with a number, at least, of the other missions. The Saints instead of feeling downcast at the beginning of the year 1906, should feel comforted as the prospects for the growth of the work, both from a spiritual and financial standpoint, has never been better.

"We trust that no one shall permit the enemy to frighten him out of the performance of duty and the warfare that is to be made by faith in the present year's conflicts. The watchword should be, Let everybody cheerfully perform his or her duty and the effort of the year's labors at its close will be duly seen."

The management informs us that one thousand extra copies of the January number of Autumn Leaves was printed to provide for new subscribers who desired to begin with that issue. It is a dollar a year and will be full of good reading during 1906. Send orders to Herald Publishing House.

All the old abuses in society, universal and particular, all unjust accumulations of property and power, are avenged in the same manner. Fear is an instructor of great sagacity, and the herald of all revolutions. One thing he teaches, that there is rottenness where he appears. He is a carrion crow and though you see not well what he hovers for, there is death somewhere. Fear for ages has boded and mowed and ribbered our laws are timid, our cultivated classes are timid. Fear for ages has boded and mowed and ribbered our government and property. That obscene bird is not there for nothing. He indicates great wrong which must be revised.—Emerson.

Little poem is a wholly original study of my own, from the idol presented to me."
ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF JOSEPH SMITH.

BY H. C. S.

On Saturday evening, December 23, 1905, being the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith the Seer, there met at the home of President Joseph Smith in Lamoni, Iowa, many of the descendants of Joseph Smith, and a few invited guests. The evening was spent pleasantly, and we think profitably. The spirit of the occasion is best expressed in the following program.

A poem written by Sr. M. Walker was read by Sr. Audentia Anderson, a granddaughter of the prophet in whose honor the meeting was held. It was as follows:

THE TIDES OF TIME.

Backward, O Time, thy curtain roll!
And let thy children, standing in this age—
Near where the centuries meet—discern
The writing of God’s hand upon thy page.
O angel hands, light thou the lamps
Of faith and hope, and let their beams Shed on the past pure rays of truth, and let Their light illumine all our future dreams.

The curtain parts, the lamps are lit, and we May read Time’s record—God’s handwriting see.

Upon the scroll mark how the tides
Of Time have slowly come and gone;
And ever borne to unknown climes
The plaintive moan of pain and wrong.
“On mighty shores from East to West
They wall and grope and can not rest.”

Like tides the centuries came and went,
Breaking like billows at the feet
Of man, lost man, whose only hope
Lay in a sacrifice complete.
0 Lamb of God! thy life and death
Ordained ere mortal drew his breast.

But waiting man knew not the price
Which Christ must pay for freedom won,— His garments in the wine-press stained,
Its agony trod out alone.
Gethsemane’s bitter tears of blood,
That awful cry, “My God! my God!”

They waited one to come, a king
In robes of royal purple clad,
To free from bondage, and with power
Of earthly pomp their hearts make glad.
Prophets in vain had witness bore
Of toil and pain to go before.

Still the world waited. At his birth
The angels sang and wise men sped,
Led by his star, to lay their gifts
Before his lowly, manger bed.
While shepherds worshiped there at morn,
And cried, “To us a child is born.”

How bright, how strong grew faith and hope;
How glad his message, how sublime
His life; his teachings and his works Proclaimed his mission all divine.
The Spirit’s power proclaimed the word
To those who did the will of God.

Yet men rejected—men who saw—
His works of mercy, power, and love.
Refused the meek and lowly One Sent by the Father from above.
In anger at his lowly birth
They cried, “Away with him from earth!”

Flow on the tides through centuries long,
Till comes the day when God no more Reveals himself as in the past,
When his pure Spirit witness bore,
Witness that Christ had power to save.
Man from the fall, death, and the grave.

Witness that all he taught was given
By him the Father to declare;
That death is not the end of life,
Nor grave the portal of despair;
Witness that Jesus as his Son, Suffered and died for every one.

Now comes the moan from many shores—
The cruel moan of unbelief.
The living witness veils his face,
And hope and faith are changed to grief.
Men groping in the dark are led By unbelief to bow the head.

The question, “What is truth?” is heard
On every hand, and none dare say,
“Do thou His will and you shall know”
The doctrine which you must obey.
Obey because it is God’s plan
Salvation thus to bring to man.

Blind led the blind, and teachers taught Precepts of men for God’s pure way,
And still the tides of Time moaned on Until the dawning of the latter day,
The day when God his message sent,
Saying to all, “Hear and repent.”

One hundred years ago to-night,
To humble home an infant came.
Unnoticed was his birth; no bells were rung;
No heralds sent with loud acclaim
To spread the news; but all was still,
Though heaven proclaimed to earth good will.

And still the tides of Time move on—
The babe becomes a boy in years,
With naught to mark him from the throng
Of others born to joy and tears.
Until God speaks by angel sent,
“Go say to all, ‘Hear and repent.’”

And the command he carries forth
Into the world with not a friend
To speak him well or from the wrath
Of godless men his life defend.
O angel hands, your lamps trim bright,
Shed on his message now your light.

“What is it? What is truth?” men ask.
“What has this unlearned boy to say?
This ignorant boy just from the plow,
What prates he of salvation’s way?”
Nothing but just what Jesus taught,
With this his message all is fraught.

But mark, and answer, does it not Seem passing strange that he should dare Say unto men as Jesus said, “Not mine this doctrine which I bear”?

www.LatterDayTruth.org
‘Tis God’s, who will his message seal
And by his power his truth reveal.

And stranger still that thousands stand
As witnesses for God to-day,

Thousands who testify in truth
To knowledge of God’s plan and way. Knowledge received from God, not man, According to the Lord’s own plan.

O tides of Time that ebb and flow ‘Through night to golden day;
Wit, learning, beauty, come and go Thou giv’st, thou takest away.’

Thank God, thou hast returned us more Than from our shores you rudely bore.

The living witness strong in power
Of confirmation, comes to stay;
Witness unto the truths brought forth
By prophet of the latter day.

Prophet whose mission, sealed with blood, Brought to the earth light as a flood.

What tongue can speak, what pen portray
The marvels which God’s light has shed
Since Joseph Smith, the unlearned boy,
Upon his heav’n-sent mission sped
Marvels which indicate the power
To be revealed in hast’ning hour?

When first God sent his message forth,
Men waited not but came to hear,
And thousands gladly hailed the truth,
Drawn by its light from far and near.

While tides of thousands owned its sway
And bore true witness in the latter day,
Christ had his Judas; and God’s people, too,
In this the latter day, had one,
More deeply cunning and more base,
Though not the less perdition’s son.

Who sold the church of God for pelf,
Yet lacked the grace to hang himself.

Thou giv’st, thou takest Away.

Tides of Time, how didst thou wail
This the latter day, had one,

O tides of Time, how didst thou wait Across this desert stretch of woe,
Till came to the hour when God once more
Said to his servant: ‘Haste thee, go,
Go to my scattered ones, proclaim
And lift truth’s standard in my name.

Say to the people, thou hast come
At God’s command to set them free.
As once I sent thy father forth Clothed with my power so send I thee.
Be strong of heart to do my will,
And I my judgments will fulfill.’

And here to-night, his locks grown gray,
His sturdy form with service bent,
He stands surrounded by a host Of friends and neighbors who have lent
Their presence to adorn the scene
Where truth and virtue reign supreme.

Flow on, flow on, O tides of Time,
Till thou at last shall reach the shore
Where justice, mercy, love, and truth
Meet, and God bids thee ebb no more;
Thou shalt lie still and never moan
When God shall number all his own.

And in that day when God shall take
A reckoning strict with you and me,
If Joseph Smith spake not God’s truth
This to the Lord my answer be:
“I staked my all upon Christ’s word, Thou didst confirm it, O my God.”

Elder Heman C. Smith then delivered the following address:

“I am not a hero-worshiper. It occurs to me that he that plays the lesser part in any great work is just as much entitled to credit and honor as he who plays the greater part, if he does his part as faithfully and as well. However, family gatherings for the purpose of commemorating the birth of a progenitor are always admissible; and if occasion justify, commendable; and in this the Smith family is no exception.

“So far as my part in this meeting is concerned we shall not consider Joseph Smith in the character of a President of a church, a Prophet of God, a General of a Legion, the founder of a municipality, or in any other public character. True he belonged to a church; he belonged to the world; but in a nearer sense he belonged to his family; and to-night we will draw the curtain gently around us, shut the world out, and consider Joseph Smith as a husband and as a father, as the progenitor of the majority of those who are assembled here.

“One hundred years ago to-day, at Sharon, Windsor County, Vermont, he first saw the light. There was nothing remarkable in his childhood with which we have been made acquainted. He grew up as other children do, like other children beloved by those who were near to him, and like others the good qualities he manifested were treasured and repeated.

“Some serious disadvantages confronted him and his parents. On account of the reverses of fortune they were in very poor circumstances; and as soon as able to perform labor with the hands, it was required of him to help support the family. His education therefore was sadly neglected. In addition to this, serious physical affliction came to him early in life, which we are told he bore patiently, kindly, and with consideration for those who ministered to him in his affliction.

“His youth and early manhood were spent, so far as we know, in much the same way that the lives of other youths in his circumstances have been spent.

“In his early manhood he was impressed with the truth of the statement made in holy writ, that it is not good for a man that he be alone; and hence made a selection of a life companion in the person of Miss Emma Hale, daughter of Isaac Hale, to whom he was married on the eighteenth day of January, 1827. In this he met with opposition as the parents of the young lady were not pleased with the union, for what reason we are unable to tell. We have been told that he stole her. Whether we call it stealing or not, he married her without the consent of her parents. But she was of age; and, as future events have demonstrated, the choice was a wise one. I Once heard President Smith say that if he did steal her he was glad of it; for it gave him the best mother he ever had. This is doubtless true. From subsequent expressions made by Joseph Smith, we are satisfied that he continued to be satisfied with his choice to the end.

"At a time of great danger, when beset by his foes, his life and liberty in jeopardy, and when wisdom dictated that he keep out of the hands of his enemies, and to do this it was necessary to conceal himself from public view, he gives an account of a meeting with Emma. His words are as follows:

What transports of joy swelled my bosom, when I took by the hand, on that night, my beloved Emma—she that was my wife, even the wife of my youth, and the choice of my heart. Many were the revibrations of my mind when I contemplated for a moment the many scenes we had been called to pass through, the fatigues and the toils, the sorrows and sufferings, and the joys and consolations, from time to time, which had strewed our paths and crowned our board. Oh, what a commingling of thought filled my mind for the moment, again she is here, even in the seventh trouble—undaunted, firm, and unwavering—unchangeable, affectionate Emma.

"Whether these words when written were intended for the public ear, we do not know; but they have found their way into print and reveal something of the inner life of the man in whose honor we meet to-night; something of his feelings, of his affections, of the sentiment that moved his heart in the duties and pleasures of a husband and father. They reveal to us the trust, the confidence reposed in the companion of his youth. This was in 1842; and these words tell us that for the fifteen years of their married life he had been satisfied with his choice. They are also a tribute to the worth, the faithfulness of Emma Smith.

"But whether these words were intended for the public or not, other words which we are sure were not, prior to this time, indicate the tenderness, the solicitude, and the love of the man in his family. While in New York City on important and perplexing business, he wrote to his wife on October 18, 1832. This was but a few days before the birth of our beloved president, his son. And when I read his words you will, I think, discover that he had in mind this coming event, with its attendant pain, responsibility, and trial. He wrote:

I returned to my room to meditate and calm my mind, and behold, the thoughts of home, of Emma and Julia, rush upon my mind like a flood; and I could wish for a moment to be with them. My breast is filled with all the feelings and tenderness of a parent and a husband, and could I be with you I would tell you many things... I feel as if I wanted to say something to you, to comfort you in your peculiar trial and present affliction. I hope God will give you strength that you may not faint. I pray God to soften the hearts of those around you to be kind to you and take the burden off your shoulders as much as possible, and not afflict you. I feel for you, for I know your state and that others do not; but you must comfort yourself knowing that God is your friend in heaven, and that you have one true and living friend on earth, your husband, Joseph Smith.

"Such words as these, written without the intention of influencing the public, written in the privacy of his own room, with no thought that they would be seen by other eyes than those of his wife, indicate a heart full of affection and love and tenderness. Written in the time when an expected trial was awaiting her, they indicate that the perplexing and important business that was upon his mind was not sufficient to remove the thoughts of home and loved ones, or even to render his feelings any less tender. And this is the side of his character that we want to present and think of to-night.

"In my estimation if we can get a true reflection of a man's private life, of the relationship that he sustains to those who are nearest to him, we can form a better estimate of his character, of the true, of the real man, than we can from published acts or published documents, written for the public eye.

"His life was one of continued responsibility, of active, energetic diligence in whatever his hands found to do. But it seems that his heart never grew cold, that his affections never wavered, that his solicitude and tenderness for his loved ones were ever prominent features of his character.

"At another time when cast into a dungeon with his companions in tribulation, loaded with chains, he wrote a letter full of affection and pathos, not dwelling as some would have done upon his own trial, upon the darkness of the prospect before him, though as history tells us his life was in danger; but his mind was filled with concern for those he loved. On November 12, 1838, he wrote from the jail in Richmond, Missouri, to his wife, from which we extract the following:

We are in good spirits and rejoice that we are counted worthy to be persecuted for Christ's sake. Tell little Joseph he must be a good boy. Father loves him with a perfect love; he is the eldest—must not hurt those that are smaller than he, but care for them. Tell little Frederick father loves him with all his heart; he is a lovely boy. Julia is a lovely little girl; I love her also; she is a promising child; tell her father wants her to remember him and be a good girl. Tell all the rest that I think of them and pray for them all... Little Alexander is on my mind continually. O, my affectionate Emma, I want you to remember that I am a true and faithful friend to you and the children for ever. My heart is entwined around yours for ever and ever. O, may God bless you all. Amen. I am your husband, and am in bonds and tribulation.

"I can not add more of meaning than these words themselves express. I can only invite your attention to the conditions. With Alexander but five months old, and the other children tender in years, the mother was waiting for news from her husband, hoping for the best, fearing the worst. But he seemed to think little of himself, but of wife and children his heart was too full for utterance.

"Let others celebrate this day with pomp and display. Let them laud his character as a prophet; let them speak of the many noble deeds of his life that belong to the world; but ours is a tenderer and more affectionate duty, and from our view-point we can see more of the real character of the man than can be seen from any other. He who is loving, kind, considerate, forgetful of self in his anxiety for the welfare of others at home, can but be more useful to the world, and keep himself purer from the world's corruption.

"I congratulate the family to-night when I consider that during the many vicissitudes through which they have passed, the many conflicting theories, the many conflicting accounts, contradictory as they are concerning Joseph Smith's life-work, that his own posterity stand to-day in unbroken ranks, united in faith, strong in the conviction that he was a true man, one whom they can afford to honor and love, whatever may be the opinion of others in regard to him. There occurs to me a prediction made many years ago by old Father Smith, patriarch of the church, and the father of him whose birth we celebrate. Upon his dying bed he blessed his children. Of Hyrum he spoke approvingly. He gave him credit for being as honest, as faithful, as true as was his account of Joseph; but when speaking of Hyrum and telling him he should be blessed, he said nothing of his children, was silent entirely in regard to what awaited the family; but when speaking of Joseph he said, He shall be blessed, and his children to-night, and the evidence of undying affection, that family, his love and tenderness, his ability to cast off to-night, and the evidence of undying affection, that family, his love and tenderness, his

As many, very many, have grossly mistaken his character, I: having been acquainted with him for at least fourteen years previous to his death, take the liberty to say: That no man can draw any inference of his religion or character from Salt Lake or Beaver Island. Any person or persons drawing inference of his true character, or of the tenets of his doctrine, from these two histories, would do him great injustice, and do a great injury to themselves. ... He was a man possessed of a great share of good humor. As great a lover of his country as could be found among men. Often spoke of the Government as being the most admirable thing on earth. Wept over the mob of Missouri and Philadelphia alike. He often wept that mobs of Missouri and Philadelphia alike. He

"Now permit me, though it may be digressing somewhat from the line which we have marked out to-night, to introduce the testimony of a man who knew him intimately for the last fourteen years of his life, who was his companion in bonds, and who was one of whom we have spoken who was chained to him in the Missouri dungeon.

"With the remembrance of these words quoted to-night, and the evidence of undying affection, that lived in and moved the heart of his companion even after he lay cold in death, we can but believe that he was true to her, whatever designing men may say in regard to his character; and it will take something more than the testimony of interested witnesses, who are themselves confessed criminals, and who have accepted a theory which gives them a right to commit any crime in the calendar of crimes save one without interfering with their eternal good, to shake our confidence in the virtue and truth and constancy of Joseph Smith as a husband. We believe he was true to the wife of his youth. That his tenderness and love for his children never wavered in the darkest hour or under the most adverse circumstances. When he himself was in the greatest danger his chief concern was for those he loved.

"In this, though we do not look upon Joseph Smith as a pattern,—we have but one and that is Jesus of Nazareth; yet, in this, his devotion to wife and family, his love and tenderness, his ability to cast off from his mind the cares, vexations had in the world, and not allow them to interfere with the current of his affectionate life and tenderness for home and loved ones, we trust his posterity and those connected with them may emulate his example."

President Joseph Smith followed with a few appropriate remarks, feelingly relating his experiences in his father's family, of which his memory is very clear. He said he heard that his father and mother did not live agreeably together, but this he knew to be untrue. He had never heard a quarrel or angry word passed between them, and but once knew of a disagreement. This was in calm, dignified language and resulted in his father showing great deference to the opinion of his mother. He took great pleasure in the thought that his father's posterity were united in their faith, and in respect for his memory.

We had expected to produce President Smith's speech in full, but regret to learn that he has not been able to prepare it.

Following President Smith's speech a solo, "Hold thou my hand," was rendered by Sr. Clara Burkett. She was accompanied on the piano by Sr. Lucy Smith, a granddaughter of the Prophet.

Then Sr. Vida E. Smith, another granddaughter of the Prophet, read the following poem of her own composition:

BESIDE THE HEARTHSTONE.

Close fast the door, the world outside,
The fire of love heap high and bright. Our father's father comes, a guest;
A welcome guest this winter night. We wait with words of tenderness His memory and life to bless.

His children's children knew him not Nor heard the magic of his voice, Though in the words of power he left They with God's people oft rejoice. But here, to-night, they gently claim One hour to breathe a father's name.

One hour in which the hundred years To sweet home scenes shall backward swing; Where unfraid beside his own, Within love's realm, he reigns, a king. Buoyant, bounding, full of life, A man with children, home, and wife.

To-night, within our circle small, He sits, a loved and noble form, His voice is full, his mind is rich, His heart athrob with red blood warm. A father by his son's hearthstone, This one dear night, his children's own.

In tender tones his words may fall Upon the hearts that love him best. We seek no bloodstains, see no pall, The bitter past in silence rest. We meet our father's father here With strong young limbs and blue eyes clear.

No man of destiny to-night, No Prophet slain in Carthage gate, No blood-stained soil, no funeral train; On him who lives to-night we wait. A father living, though he sleep Where silent watch the waters keep.

We know his rushing life-blood gave The ruddy drops that fed our race, Commingling, blessed with other strains, The pure, sweet channels by whose grace Our life, and form, and being come Whose spirits bid him welcome home.

If ours a royal heritage To have such man, beloved, for sire, Shall we forget—forget for once The altar builded, and the fire, Whereby such heritage is given The hope of life, the will of heaven?

Our heritage a boon may be, Or falling, failing in the cause, A stumbling-block, if written there The story of love's broken laws. One name alone Salvation's key, That, Jesus Christ of Galilee.

Our father's father's children all Whate'er their name, where'er their land, Stand firm for all he hoped and taught A glad, unbroken, trusting band. And loving him as man loves man They honor him as children can.

Mother Anna C. Smith, an octogenarian, oldest daughter of Lyman Wight, and for several years personally acquainted with Joseph and Emma Smith, bore testimony to all that had been said of their lives and characters.

Several selections of instrumental music were rendered by Sr. Audentia Anderson, her daughter Bertha, and Sr. Lucy Smith. Some time was pleasantly occupied in social intercourse and reminiscences.

Alexander Hale Smith, one of the two surviving sons of Joseph Smith the Martyr, extended an invitation to the family to meet at his residence one year from to-night. Upon motion the invitation was accepted.

The exercises were fittingly concluded by a prayer and benediction full of feeling, and thankfulness for the memory of father and mother as well as the faith transmitted, untarnished, to their children, by Patriarch A. H. Smith.

The following poem was written for the occasion, but as the author was prevented from attending as expected, the company did not have the pleasure of hearing it:

A CHRISTMAS-TIDE REVERIE.

This morning the daylight, with sun-tinted beams Crept into my window and scattered my dreams, Reclasping the lids of my soul mirrors tight.

In fancy I followed a beckoning sprite Who showed me God's love, fathoms-deep and world-wide, And led me far back to the first Christmas-tide.

Faint sounds from afar on my inner ears fell Like head or hoof stirs, causing tinkle of bell, A half smothered growl, or a lambkin's low bleat, Then all became hushed into silence complete.

Deep and sweet the repose, and the darkness how fit. But soon, as by magic, the hill-top was lit; Yes, even its sides and its crannies and nooks.
The watchmen, affrighted, leaned hard on their crooks,
And looking above them, with terror-wide eyes,
They saw hosts of angels afoot in the skies,
And heard the sweet strains of that wondrous lay
That men and arch-angels are chanting to-day.

Directed by seraphs these night-watches sped
From sheep-cote to stable, and there in a shed, Curled up in a stall, lay the babe; then they knew
That all that the minstrels had told them was true.

Sweet Mary the mother, of angelic mien,
Three long years of bitterest sorrow and pain
Thanking God for his love in devising a plan
They saw hosts of angels afloat in the skies,

Returning, he took up his mantle of flesh,
Gave his loyal companions instructions afresh,
And bade them adieu with a vow to return.

The wise men depart,
The loss of its true date we sadly deplore,
But we know that the babe in the manger was born,
That his life-blood was sought from his earliest morn,
That when twelve years of age, in the temple he showed That wisdom, if asked for, is freely bestowed.

He entered the tomb, but its gates stood ajar—
He swiftly passed on into regions afar.
Returning, he took up his mantle of flesh,
Gave his loyal companions instructions afresh,
And bade them adieu with a vow to return.

Meanwhile, they had many hard lessons to learn.
Nearly two thousand years have elapsed since the knell
Of that first Christmas babe on the startled world fell;
But still in the air at the Christmas-tide ring
The same silver trumpets, the same choirs sing
Their "Glory to God," and in accents sublime
They still chant his praises regardless of time.
And their song will go on while eternity rolls
O'er the Son of our God and the Savior of souls.

SECOND SCENE.
The music seemed distant, the sounds grew more dull,
At length they all ceased, and an ominous hush
Pervaded the air, like the mystic death hush,
Despite the grey dawn and its roseate blush.
Again with closed eyelids, in deep dreamy mood
I longed, by my charmer, Sweet Sleep, to be wooed,
And soon I was lured, not to Judah's land drear,
Where Nature's best dresses are yellow and sere,
But to Joseph's domains, where the wind and the tide
Are freighted with blessings.

There near the sea-side Lies the state of Vermont. As its name truly tells,
'Tis a mountain of verdure with rivers and dells.

The town was called Sharon. There's much in a name,
Where are Sharon's rose-trees with blossoms afloat?
Is this the fair land where such rare flowers grow?
And can that white lily-bank prove to be snow?
Well, here are some holly boughs, red, mixed with green,
And 'mong them is passing a strange Christmas scene—
A new baby born in a laborer's cot
Made Christmas and everything almost forgot,
But out from that household sped messengers swift
With thanks to the Lord for his dear Christmas gift.
The mother's arms circled her sweet baby boy
While Joseph, the father, leaned o'er him with joy.
The birth of that boy was no marvel at all
He got no rich gifts, like the babe in the stall.
Since then the grand order of heaven seemed changed—
The plan of salvation had been rearranged, Placing God so far off, that though mortal's cry
If hearing, he heeds not, nor deigns to reply.
No visible angels! no audible chimes!
No warnings to flee until safer the times!
Here then when the true faith seemed tainted with death
This boy drew his first sigh, and breathed his first breath.
'Tis one hundred years since this Christmas event;
Satan's power has been used to its fullest extent
To baffie the will and the ways of the One Who chose this same child, as an aid to his Son.
Yes, one hundred times Christmas banners have furled
Since Joseph the Martyr came into the world.
Vile slander, deep hatred, and envy have joined In passing base falsehoods, collected and coined.
In hopes his grand mission-work thus to destroy
They cover with shame the fair name of the boy.
But plainly I see as the light grows apace
That he and his foes will soon stand face to face;
That he as commission-man renders account
And he, if there's deficits, pays the amount.
For hundreds of years no true agent was kept,
This lad was appointed, and deigned to accept;
He opened the books that his patrons had left,
Brought order from chaos, by figuring deft.
He added and checked; and though errors abound
His work will prove right, when the balance is found.
His toil as a servant he truly enjoyed,
Rejoiced to be thus by a Courtier employed.
How alike do they seem, this Master and man,
One born in a cottage and one in a khan.
One human and humble, too feeble to stand;
The other a Deity, born to command.
Both born at the Christmas-tide, cheery and fair;
The glad songs of angels, still ringing, declare
In strains that re-echo from mountain and glen That Jesus and Joseph were both chosen men.
How strange that the lines of their lifework so blend
Through youth, early manhood, and on to the end!
The lives of the two men, if justly compared,
Show earth-ills between them most equally shared.
The first lad, at twenty years, great wisdom had shown,
So felt the great lack of that wisdom, that he Repaired to the woodland and offered his plea.
The dear Lord responded, and true to his word
Bright angels were seen and their voices were heard.
We need not repeat it, the tale so oft told,
Of efforts and failures, of scriptures on gold.
The sad, harassed life of the first mentioned youth Portrays most completely the other's—in truth.
The same persecution by each was endured,
And both were to sorrow and hardships inured.
When years less than fifteen had Joseph’s brow crowned,
He tested God’s promise, and true was it found—
His years had not numbered one score and a half,
When, donning his mantle and grasping his staff,
With his few chosen comrades his labors began,
And his work truly proved him not God—but a man.

Fourteen years of toil, often cursed and ignored.
Then, by the old pattern, the church was restored.
He, wayworn and weary, deserted by friends,
Staggered on in the way where the life journey ends.
His cruel tormentors no respite would give,
And truly ‘twere better to die than to live.
He bravely endured ’till his thirty-ninth year,
Then yielded his life that could have proven so dear.

He entered the tomb and its portals were closed.
Between him, and us, there’s a veil interposed.
But Faith spreads her pinions, and fluttering low
She whispers a message, and gives us to know
That as with the first-born e’en so with us all,
Because he was born a poor babe in a stall.
To-day the last born is one hundred years old.
More than half of that time he’s lain ‘neath the mold.
Ah, no! for the spirit of man never dies,
And God has decreed that the body shall rise.
His project is grand, and his planning sublime,
And Joseph the Martyr is biding his time.

God’s heralds exhort us to be of good cheer,
And shout the glad news, that Christ’s coming is near.
The draw-bridge will open; the tocsin has rung;
The songs of the angels are being re-sung.
With martyrs and saints, holy prophets and seers,
Our Prophet will come when his Master appears.
Together they’ll come and together they’ll reign,
And Joseph (our Joseph) will welcome the twain.

Yes, Joseph, the fifth, who is guiding by right
The flock of his sire, will rejoice at the sight
Of angels descending with scepter and crown,
For his own head, and hand,—his burdens laid down.
Fair Faith lifts the veil, and enraptured we see
The dark cross looming up like a grand Christmas-tree
Decked with martyrs and saints, redeemed, glorified, Born children of Christ and his beautiful bride.
Oh, ring the bells loud! Their harmonious peals Awaken the soul, and humanity kneels
In reverence, bowed by melodious chimes,
To thank the great God for these glad Christmas times.

LAMONI, December 23, 1905.

“THE DEVIL’S CHOICEST COUNTERFEIT.”—NO. 2.
The author of the article under the above caption makes a special attack upon the Reorganization in regard to temple-building and ordinances to be performed in temples. The following is an extract from his production:

It is true the courts awarded the building known as the Kirtland Temple to the Reorganizers, and they have placed this fact on its walls. But of what particular value is such a building to them? What do they know about temples? What do they know about the sacred ordinances of the Lord’s House as revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith? What do they know about performing the ordinance of baptism for the dead? or the washings and sealings and anointings and endowments given in temples? Directly that building became polluted by man, it was no longer fit for the holy work for which it was erected. Joseph Smith abandoned it, as God had abandoned it, and had the Prophet returned to Kirtland, he would never have used it for any of the purposes for which it was built. Therefore, when the Reorganizers went into court, asking for a title of the building, the original and true church, knowing of its pollution, made no attempt to interfere, as the building had already, in the days of the Prophet, been abandoned for the use for which it was built.

Had the temple at Kirtland not been polluted by man, and consequently abandoned by the church, it would never have been used as it is now, as a puppet show or museum, turned over to the curious to be gazed at with worldly eyes.

Any one acquainted with the Prophet Joseph, knows that the first thing he thought of when the church found a resting-place from its drivings was to search out a site on which a temple could be built to the Most High God. This is evident to those who followed their history from Kirtland to Independence, to Far West, to Nauvoo, where sites for temples were selected by the Prophet, showing it to be uppermost in his mind wherever he went; and he never lost sight of the great importance of the work which God showed to him must be done in a temple. The same spirit of Elijah rested upon Brigham Young, his successor. The very first thing he did, after the pilgrimage of the pioneers to the Great Salt Lake Valley, was to place his stick in the ground, on the very spot where the great Salt Lake Temple now stands, and say to those around him, “Here shall be erected the temple of our God!” And there it stands to-day, wherein thousands administer in behalf of the dead, and become saviors upon Mount Zion. The same can be said of the temples at Manti, at St. George, and at Logan, Utah, where millions in money have been expended in the erection of these sacred edifices.

There are several points in the foregoing that we wish to consider. Some of his questions are too trifling to require any particular attention. He asks, however, “What do they know about the sacred ordinances of the Lord’s house, as revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith?” Again, What do they know about performing the ordinance of baptism for the dead, or the washings, and sealings, and anointings and endowments given in temples?

If by the latter question he wishes to know of what our information consists in regard to the practices in the temples of Utah, we answer, we know but very little. But so far as the ordinances of the Lord’s House as revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith are concerned, we perhaps have as much information as have the people in Utah. We have access to the revelations given through Joseph Smith and to all documents made public in his time, and have as good a right to our construction as they have to theirs.

He claims that the temple at Kirtland was polluted and abandoned in the days of the prophet Joseph. But it is a well-known fact that efforts were made a short time prior to the death of Joseph Smith, to rebuild Kirtland. He says that when the Reorganization went into court that the original and true church, as he sees fit to call the organization which he represents, knowing of its pollution made no attempt to interfere, thereby permitting the title to go to the Reorganization without protest.

However, when Mr. Rich takes the position that the Temple at Kirtland was abandoned by the Lord and the church in the days of the Martyr he disagrees with Apostle Wilford Woodruff, afterwards President of the Utah church. At a general conference held at Manchester, England, April, 1845, Elder Woodruff reported as follows:

He said that he represented about twenty-eight States of the American Union, above one hundred thousand saints, a quorum of twelve apostles, the various quorums in the stakes of Zion, fifteen quorums of the seventies, a conference with two temples of the Lord, one long ago completed, and one fast hastening to its completion.—Millennial Star, vol. 5, pp. 170, 171.

Kirtland Temple is the only temple that he could possibly have referred to as having been “long ago completed,” and he calls it a “temple of the Lord,” and assumes to represent it in 1845. What say you, Elder Rich, had the Lord and the prophet abandoned it or did Elder Woodruff misrepresent the facts in 1845? You are mistaken or Mr. Woodruff is. If it is you perhaps you had better revise your reasons for the nonappearance of your people before the courts in the case of the Kirtland Temple.

We hardly think the people in Utah can afford to take the position that when a house is built by the command of God, dedicated to his service, when he has recognized it by his appearance in person, by the ministration of angels, and many other powers and blessings, that Satan can drive him from it by polluting it; and that the Lord will not, or cannot cleanse it from its pollution, sanctify and purify it for his service. We are not interested, however, as to whether they wish to take this position or not. If they do they are welcome to it. Ours is the duty of building up the waste places, redeeming Zion, cleansing and purifying her from the pollutions which have come upon her; and if the Utah people wish to abandon this work without an attempt to recover, let them depart in peace.

He says if the temple had not been abandoned by the church it would never have been used as it is now, as a puppet show, or museum, turned over to the curious, to be gazed at with worldly eyes. I do not know what he refers to as the temple being used as a puppet show, or museum, and it is not specially necessary to inquire. Such epithets as these without any attempt to sustain them are unworthy of more than a passing notice. If he means by its being gazed at with worldly eyes that it is open to the public, that the public is permitted to attend services there, we concede it. We know of no such thing as a temple being closed in the days of Joseph Smith the Martyr, to the public, and they not being permitted to enter and enjoy the privileges of worship therein. We are aware that the Utah people have adopted this policy, but in the instruction given regarding the building of the Kirtland Temple, special provision was made that preaching-meetings should be held therein; and we can not accept the conclusion that the Lord intended that the world should be excluded and not permitted to hear the preaching of the word in the temples built for the purpose. Nor does the instruction forbidding the pollution of the temple or unclean things entering there, have reference to people entering for the purpose of hearing the word of God, but to the principles and practices taught or had therein. These are to be kept pure, and the house of God is not to be defiled by those who are made the custodians thereof.

True, temple building or prospective temple building was a prominent feature of the work in the days of the prophet Joseph, and places were pointed out for the building of temples, at Kirtland; Independence, Far West, and Nauvoo. But these places were designated by inspiration from on high, and the command was given for the erection of these temples, at least in the cases of Kirtland and Nauvoo. In Independence and Far West no temples were built.

An attempt was made to build a temple at Far West at one time without a commandment from God but met with rebuke. In the Millennial Star, volume 6, page 54, we find the following:

The same day, August 5, [1837] the Presidency, High Council, and all the authorities of the church in Missouri, assembled in council at Far West, and unanimously resolved to go on moderately and build a house unto the name of the Lord in Far West, as they had means, and appointed Edward Partridge treasurer, to receive all the donations and subscriptions for the erection of the House of the Lord; Isaac Morley to be his secretary.

This was no doubt a sincere effort to build a temple in Far West, Missouri; though the lot had been chosen and set apart for the purpose, as the sequel will show, the church was not justified in attempting to build without a commandment from the Lord. On page 89 of this same volume of the Millennial Star we have an account of a session of the High Council held on November 2, 1837. Joseph Smith was not present when the council resolved to build the temple in August; but at this later council he was present; and in the minutes of that council we find the following:

Also voted unanimously, that it is the opinion of this council, that there is sufficient room in this country, for the churches to continue gathering from abroad; also that the building of the House of the Lord be postponed, till the Lord shall reveal it to be his will to be commenced.

Mr. Andrew Jenson, a historian of the Utah church, in speaking of this as found in his Historical Record, volume 7, page 434, says:

When Joseph arrived there he counseled that the building of that house should be postponed until the Lord should reveal it to be his will to have it commenced.
This should, it seems to us, impress the thought upon all Latter Day Saints, that to attempt to build a temple without a command of the Lord, although the place may have been selected and dedicated, is wrong; and if a temple should be built under such circumstances, the ordinances performed therein would not be acceptable unto the Lord. This last decision of the High Council, which according to Mr. Jenson, was made upon the counsel of Joseph Smith, is in harmony with the revelation given on January 19, 1841, which says:

For, for this cause I commanded Moses that he should build a tabernacle, that they should bear it with them in the wilderness, and to build a house in the land of promise, that those ordinances might be revealed which had been hid from before the world was; therefore, verily I say unto you, that your anointings, and your washings, and your baptisms for the dead, and your solemn assemblies, and your memorials for your sacrifices, by the sons of Levi, and for your oracles in your most holy places, wherein you receive conversations, and your statutes and judgments, for the beginning of the revelations and foundation of Zion, and for the glory, honor, and endowment of all her municipals, are ordained by the ordinance of my holy house, which my people are always commanded to build unto my holy name.—Doctrine and Covenants 107:12.

We are aware that some of the representatives of the Utah church have tried to make it appear that this last clause in the above quotation, "which my people are always commanded to build unto my holy name," means that it is a commandment which is always in force. If this construction be correct, then the High Council at Far West was wrong in passing a resolution to wait until the Lord did command. They evidently did not understand that the principle involved was that the command to build was always in force. The plain and simple meaning, as can be learned by a close inspection of the paragraph where he specially commanded Moses to build a tabernacle, together with the instance where he specially commanded the building of a temple at Kirtland, and the instance where he specially commanded the building of a temple at Nauvoo, is that the church was not authorized to build a temple without direct command from God. And all these instances prove that the principle was correct upon which the High Council acted, that they were not authorized to proceed without a command from God.

When we consider in the light of this principle, the temple-building which the Utah people boast so much of, we are led to inquire whether they had revelation from God commanding them to build in St. George, Manti, Logan, and Salt Lake City. If they did, and built according to the command, then they have a point; if they had no command to build these temples, then the temples are not accepted of God, nor as a consequence is the work performed therein, and all this boast about temple-building, and ordinances for the dead, and so forth, falls to the ground without support. If they ever claimed to have revelation commanding them to build the three or four temples now in Utah, those revelations have not been brought to our notice. On the contrary, Brigham Young in speaking of the temple at Salt Lake City, gives us to understand positively that no command had been given. On February 14, 1853, he is reported to have said:

Some might query whether a revelation had been given to build a house to the Lord, but he is a wicked and slothful servant who doth nothing but what his Lord commandeth, when he knoweth his master's will. I know a temple is needed, and so do you; and when we know a thing, why do we need a revelation to compel us to do that thing? If the Lord and all the people want a revelation, I can give one concerning this temple.

In a few days I shall be able to give a plan of the temple on paper, and then if all heaven, or any good man on the earth will suggest any improvements, we will receive and adopt them.—Millennial Star, vol. 15, p. 391.

This principle, so far as we have been able to learn, is the principle upon which temple-building and temple ordinances have been carried on in Utah. This boastful spirit which would serve notice upon the Lord that if he wanted a revelation about temple-building, Brigham Young could give him one, has prevailed through all this temple-building and temple work. He proposed to put the plan of the temple on paper, and then invite all heaven and good men to suggest any improvement. If they could suggest any improvements after Mr. Young had drafted the plan, he was willing to adopt; but the plain inference is that Mr. Young would be the judge as to whether the suggestions made by heaven or good men were improvements or not.

The Reorganization favor temple-building and are ready to go to work as God shall give them means and strength to the building of temples, or a temple, when he shall so direct. We stand to-day upon the principle acknowledged in the resolution of the High Council at Far West, November 2, 1837, to wait until the Lord shall command us to begin. In this we are in harmony with the revelation which declares that the Lord always commands his people when such a work is to be performed. We are in harmony with every precedent of the past where the Lord has given instruction for the building of tabernacles or temples wherein the ordinances of the Lord are to be performed. To-day the Reorganization holds the deed and is in possession of the only temple under the heavens built by the command of God. We are using this temple according to the instructions given for its use so far as we can comprehend the instructions; and the slurs cast by those who claim to have abandoned the House of God because corruption had attempted to defile it, do not disturb us. When the Lord shall instruct us to build elsewhere we shall do our best to carry out the instruction; and we have faith to believe that we shall succeed; for he will not command until we are able to obey. In the meantime, let those whoflee from the House of God because of an alleged corruption therein, build houses and call them temples, administer ordinances therein without any command from God, proceed on their way; we have no confidence that God accepts such temples or work therein. If they have any revelations commanding the building of temples in Utah, we would be glad to have them produced for examination. We are ready and anxious to accept anything that is demonstrated to our satisfaction as being the will of God; but we repudiate the boastful, blasphemous claim that President Young, or any other man, or any other people, can proceed to build a house without the Lord's instruction, and invite him to make suggestions afterwards.

The attitude of the Reorganization upon the subject of the baptism for the dead, is clearly set forth in a resolution adopted by the Quorum of Twelve, and reported to the Annual Conference at Independence, Missouri, which reads as follows:

Whereas, inquiry is being made concerning the teaching and practice of baptism for the dead, and, Whereas, we understand that the observance of said ordinance was prohibited for a time, by command of the Spirit, Resolved, that as a quorum we put ourselves on record as being ready to promulgate the doctrine as soon as the Lord shall so direct and enlighten us as to time, place, and conditions for its observance.—Minutes of Annual Conference for 1892, p. 17.

Had the Utah people occupied this or similar lar grounds, they would not have been mortified by being informed, as they were by President Wilford Woodruff, in 1895, that they had been practicing these things wrongly, and that, too, after they had baptized for over three quarters of a million dead. How many of these over three quarters of a million dead were affected by the mistakes, necessitating a repetition, or a doing of the work over, we are not informed. We suggest, that if they will continue to wait, as the Reorganization has resolved to do, until the Lord shall enlighten us as to time, place, and conditions for observance, it will guard against present and future mistakes, and save them a repetition of the mortifications already suffered for proceeding wrongfully according to the authority of their own president.

A BRIEF EXCERPT OF THE PARABLE OF THE LABORERS.

The record of the parable that will be briefly considered is in Matthew 20:1-16, but that which it is given in explanation of, or that particular feature of the "kingdom of heaven" that this parable illustrates, is found in the chapter immediately preceding, and is summed up in the question, "What shall we have therefore," propounded by Peter to the Master. The direct answer is, "Verily I say unto you,"—the disciples who had "forsaken all, and followed" the Christ, (see Matthew 19:28-27)—"that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life."

These disciples to whom Jesus was directly addressing himself were those who held divine authority, because they had been called; and such as were the chosen ones of the called would receive the promised blessings. The "every one" was limited by the paragraph, "for my name's sake." Every one who has the right to minister in the name of Christ, his called ministers, are the only ones directly included in this answer, and the only ones that the parable directly refers to.

"For the kingdom of heaven is like." This introductory word for shows that the parable is in explanation of the principle connected with the kingdom of heaven as relating to the ministry, or those specially who were under similar obligations because of their callings as were these to whom Jesus was addressing himself; those who, for his name's or authority's sake, were forsaking the things mentioned, and followed him in faithfulness to the duty to which they were specially called, which required them, in order to fulfill the duty required, to forsake all things, or to consider them as secondary to the authority to which they had been called, and they had accepted.

This householder went out "to hire laborers into his vineyard." It is a recognized principle in the kingdom of heaven that none can labor "in the name of Christ," till they are called, hence the legitimate excuse rendered by those whom the householder found idle at the eleventh hour, "No man hath hired us." They showed by this expression a willingness to be a laborer, and this desire was a recognized qualification, and the Lord said, "Go ye also into the vineyard." These parties that the householder found idle were well acquainted with the principle that governed in the kingdom of heaven, hence must have been members of that kingdom fairly well instructed. They could not have been in the world, or members of the churches of men, for they do not teach any such principle, but the very opposite.

None can enter into the position as a laborer to represent the name of Christ until they are called, or "hired," in the sense that the parable illustrates this particular feature of the kingdom, for no man can "preach except he be sent," or is "called of God as was Aaron." (Romans 10:15; Hebrews 5:4.) A man can labor in the vineyard only from the time he is called till life is over, whether he is called in youth, early manhood, mature life, or old age, and if he labors faithfully in the vineyard from the time he is called till he can labor here no longer, each is Men accept of the callings of God to a particular duty, because they believe it to be their duty, and not from the thought of receiving a greater reward than they would if they had been women and had not been called to any place in the official work in the kingdom of heaven. Each performing that duty has an equal claim on God for his approval, “Well done’; and none should think that they have a right to more of a reward when they appear before the judgment seat than another because they have labored longer than another, if each have labored faithfully all the time allotted him on earth. It is true the young man who continues his labor till old age bears the burden and heat of the day, but he has had the continuous support and approval of God, during all that labor, and the greater the need the greater support and divine approval received, hence for years they may have received so much more of the power of God because it was needed than the one not called with that particular calling that requires them to forsake for “his name’s sake,” all that is dear in life to fulfill that calling; but the aged man called to do similar work, and to endure similar sacrifices, is justly entitled to an equal reward for the ministerial labor performed, or for the occupying of life faithfully as called to do by Him who only has the right to designate the time when we should begin our labor, and who decides when our labor should end.

May we who are laborers in the vineyard recognize that we are what we are, and became such at the time we did, because he who is the “householder” “hired” us at that time for that particular labor; and to be faithful to the end places us where he who hath hired us will do right by us, as he has all the time of our laboring; that it is a feature of the kingdom of heaven that we would stand idle, and should, so far as ministerial duties are concerned, until we are called; and that as missionaries we will receive for our labor all that the householder has agreed to give us, and we should not in this life, or, if possible in the life to come, feel envious of what another receives.

Still willing to labor on to the end, and look forward to stand by my brethren who have not been so fortunate as I have been to be called in the early morning of life as a laborer in the vineyard, and with others who were called in the early morning but only continued a few years when they were called hence, and behold them receive for their service as a laborer, because of being faithful to duty during the time allotted them to labor, the same as myself, even if I should be continued in life and given ability to labor for years to come, even though I should be faithful all my journey through. What I am as a minister privileged to do, and what another as a minister is privileged to do, we do as instruments in the hands of God as of the ability which he giveth we are laborers for him.

DE S MOINES, Iowa, December 30, 1905.

WHY I BECAME A LATTER DAY SAINT.

As one of our greatest desires in this world is to see the great light of the restoration of the gospel spread over the earth, I desire to set forth in this article the reasons why I chose to cast my lot with the insignificant, few, despised Latter Day Saints, disrespectfully called Mormons.

I was raised by members of the Methodist Church, and of course inherited the common reason for being a Methodist, or any other faith as the case may be. After advancing in age a little, I began to go to church, and wanted to get, as it is called, a “sound conversion,” so ventured to go to the altar and mourn for religion, as I was taught by my preachers. I would do my best to do just as my advisers would tell me. They would take me by the hand and say, “Just put your trust in the Lord. He is ready to save just now.” Another: “Just give your heart to God. Just say, ‘Here, Lord, take me as I am,’ and just a little more faith, and you will get the blessing. He is ready to save in the twinkling of an eye.” And, “I believe you have it now, if you would just get up and tell it.” Such instructions as these I received from the hired preacher, and from the laity, both brethren and sisters.

Of course when a person wants to believe anything it is not difficult for him to do so under such influences, and become satisfied. But I humbly thank the Lord that I was not so robbed of my liberty that I could not and would not open my eyes to more light, and brighter light (if the above can be called light) than I received from my instructors at the mourners’ bench. So, for a while, I was what I will call a half-worked Methodist; and I wish to clearly state that while I was in this condition I knew absolutely nothing about God, Christ, the Holy Ghost, or the kingdom of God; but, as I said before, during all this time the unseen power of deception, which works on the minds of men, apparently as a power... of light, failed to compass me round about and hedge me in so that I would not investigate anything that came to my view. And when I had an opportunity I examined what is called the Mormon doctrine. They claimed to be the true church of Jesus Christ, and, desired men to give their teachings a fair investigation and a close comparison with the Scriptures. I could not see anything wrong in that, although my friends, who were as ignorant as I was concerning the Scriptures, would advise me to let the Mormons alone, that they preached a dangerous doctrine, and many such reasons would I receive by way of warning from those who advised.

But, shily facing the disgrace, I continued my investigation as fast as I could under existing circumstances, for about two years, when I was thoroughly, soundly, and intelligently converted to the gospel of Jesus Christ, and could give a "thus saith the Lord" as to why I was a Latter Day Saint.

In Methodism I could give a reason why, but it was "because my folks were." Think of it, reader! Is that reason any better than none, for being a Methodist, Baptist, Christian, or anything else? If so, on the same ground the child of the infidel is justified in being an infidel.

In Methodism I was not taught anything about the way God had organized his church. I was taught nothing about the priesthood; nothing about the restoration of the gospel, with all its powers; nothing about the principle of the laying on of hands for the blessing of children; nothing about the principle of baptism in water as practiced by John the Baptist. (See Matthew 3:1-6; Mark 1:1-10; Luke 3:16; John 1:25-34; Acts 2:38, 39; 8:12-16; 19:5.)

I learned nothing in Methodism of the Holy Ghost being conferred upon the believer through the laying on of hands and prayer as was taught and practiced in days of old, as you will see by reading the eighth and nineteenth chapters of the Acts of the Apostles. I heard of a Holy Ghost baptism, but not the kind I read of in the word of God. By the Holy Ghost men were given the gift of prophecy, were enabled to speak in tongues, to interpret tongues, to heal the sick, to work miracles, to discern spirits, and various other gifts, as you will find by reading chapter 12 of 1 Corinthians. None of these gifts were manifested in the power that was called the Holy Ghost in Methodism, in the greatest of their "pentecostal showers."

Up to the time of my acquaintance with the gospel as taught by the Saints of the most high God, I was altogether ignorant of these spiritual gifts, even as I was led. "Now concerning spiritual gifts," friends, "I would not have you ignorant"; for you are as much entitled to them as were those at Corinth, if you will obey the same gospel, in the same manner; for God is not a partial God, neither a respecter of persons. These grand blessings of the Spirit are not "all done away with the apostles and no longer needed," as you are taught by the hired divine; neither were they given only in the "infinitile state of the church," as you will hear on another hand. But this is that Spirit which was spoken of by Joel, that in the last days God will pour out of his Spirit upon all flesh, "and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy," see visions, and dream dreams; and this Spirit is promised to those afar off, yea, every one that God shall call by the gospel. So, my friends, when you are called by the true gospel, and obey it in faith, these blessings are for you, whether you lived in the days of the first apostles or in the infinitile state of the church.

I found the Latter Day Saints contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the Saints. I found them organized as a church with apostles, prophets, evangelists, seventies, elders, bishops, priests, teachers, etc. I found the same kind of officers in the church as are described in the New Testament, and what could I say against such a church?

My ignorant friends would tell me that the "apostles did their work, and were no longer needed," and that we had the New Testament, and did not need any prophet, and the like; but that was no proof at all. They would also claim that we had no revelations since "John finished the Bible" on Patmos Isle; but up to that time none of the Testament writers said we would not need apostles and prophets, nor the spiritual gifts in this day; neither did any of them authorize any one to spring out in the latter day, build up a church, and name it Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Christian, or anything else, with only elders and deacons, and, perhaps, a bishop and steward. Friends, where is your authority for the elder and deacon, any more than for the apostle and prophet? Examine yourselves, and see whether you be in the faith, or in a man-made church. If you are in one of the abominable issues of the "mother of harlots" (Revelation 17), can you with intelligence have hope of rest in the celestial glory of God after eternal judgment is passed upon you?

I found the Latter Day Saints to claim a restoration of the gospel as proclaimed in Revelation 14:6, and that all the gifts and blessings contained in the gospel were for the believer to enjoy now just as they formerly were.

I have heard our enemies speak thus: "If you will work a miracle, it will do more good than all the preaching you can do." If you have that argument in your mind, reader, are you not real sorry you did not live in the time of Christ, to tell him how to convert those gainsaying hypocrites that lived in his day? What a mistake he made! In place of telling them "to tell no man," he ought to have said, "Go and tell it abroad and we will convert the people." No, he would not have put them all out of the house when he raised Jairus' daughter, if our modern writers are right. One writer said the Jews required a sign, and the Greeks sought after wisdom, but we preached Christ, unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness. Reader, are you either Jew or Greek in this principle? Do you want to be converted to the gospel by a sign? If so, hear what Jesus said to those Jews that believed on him, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." They answered him, "We are Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man: . . . Jesus answered them, . . . Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do." So, if you want faith to come by a sign, you may draw an idea of whose child you are. If you will read what occurred with Christ at the end of the forty-days' fast, you will see that the father of our sign-seekers desperately sought for a sign; and of course his children in our day want the Saints of God to show a sign to make them believe what Jesus said. So, to-day the gospel of Christ is a stumbling-block to the Jew, also to our modern Greeks it is foolishness, for they seek to know God by theological education: and, as before, the plain, simple truth of the gospel is foolishness to them.

We ask, Why not submit to God's plan of creating faith? He said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth [by a sign? No, but by hearing] and is baptized shall be saved"; and the gifts of the gospel shall follow; not go before. Is it not plain?

John came preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. Not a sign did he show to convert them to Christ. Paul said faith comes by hearing the word of God. Would you not rather be with those fellows than with the Devil and his sons who want a sign, and worldly wisdom, to make them believe the gospel?

I found the Latter Day Saints teaching each principle of the gospel as recorded in Hebrews 6:1, 2, which are, faith, repentance, baptism of water and the Spirit, the laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. I thought since God ordained them as principles to constitute his power to save men, and placed them in his word long before I lived, it was my whole duty to obey each and all of them, and not begin to cull out this or that, and excuse myself in it, because my forefathers had died Methodists or anything else, neither because I had already taken my choice of some of the mother's daughters (see Revelation 17), neither because I might be called a turncoat.

In Methodism I could obey two of the principles: repentance and faith, and if I chose I could be baptized just anyway that suited me,—not really essential to salvation. But I preferred to believe Jesus: "Except a man be born [or baptized] of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."

Yes, John taught water and Holy Ghost baptism. Jesus taught it. Paul taught it. Peter taught it, and so I preferred to believe it.

Do you prefer to divide the word, and believe just such portion as will receive the common esteem of men, or will you seek to live by "every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God"? Do you suppose you will be classed with those people of "Israel" of whom Paul makes mention in his letter to the people at Rome? He said, "My heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. For I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. For they, being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness [or plan of salvation], have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God,"' or plan of redemption. If you are clinging to some man-made church, you are doing just as they did. It is not the safest ground for you to occupy. Let me say unto you, Search the Scriptures; try all things, and hold fast to that which is good.

Can any intelligent man or woman, of any class, be surprised at my choice of a church, since my aim and desire are to finally become an associate with Paul, Peter, and John, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and all those ancient Saints? May the living God direct your minds and lead you to the true light of the restored gospel, is my humble prayer in the worthy name of Christ. Amen. J. W. WILLIAMS.

When to Criticise.

When your heart is warm with love
Even for your enemies;
When your words come from above,
Not from where the venom is;
When you see the man entire,
Not alone the faults he has,
Find a somewhat to admire Underneath the paltry mass—
Not till then, if you are wise,
Will you dare to criticise.

When you see the thing that's wrong,
And a way to better it—
Push a noble cause along,
Not with censure fetter it;
When your purpose is to build,
Not to tear the building down,
Use the sunshine that will gild,
Not to tear the building down;

To manifest an interest in whatever interests or amuses her. Not to forget that, though she is old and wrinkled, she still loves pretty things.

To make her frequent, simple presents, and to be sure that they are appropriate and tasteful.

To remember that she is still a girl at heart, so far as delicate little attentions are concerned.

To give her your full confidence, and never to do anything which you think she would disapprove.

To make her a partaker, so far as your different ages will permit, in all your pleasures and recreations.

To lift all the burdens you can from shoulders that have grown stooped in waiting upon and working for you.

Never to intimate by word or deed that your world and hers are different, or that you feel in any way superior to her.

Letter Department

Des Moines, Iowa, December 29, 1905.

Editors Herald: In my last letter for publication I gave a brief account of the dedicatory-services, there being only a short extract published, other parts of which there seemed to be necessity for their publication (and which by reason of what has since transpired I am indeed sorry were not); but we trust that we will see that all things work together for good to them who love God and keep his commandments.

Since the dedication my time has been largely occupied in visiting the sick, and in private conversation with some not of the faith, but who have shown slight interest therein. At the present writing all those who were sick within the church, so far as I know, are better. One not of the faith who called for administration soon passed from earth, but not till she had acknowledged that through prayer she had been blessed. Her desire was that she might be freed from her distress, but she had but little desire to live. In one of the visitations I found a man and his wife devoted to what he called "Mormonism," saying that nothing else would satisfy, but had never accepted the corruptions that were associated with the people in the West, although they had been baptized by a minister of that church, and acknowledged that their conversion to this theory was through the public and private teachings of that people. These people are devoted to a belief in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and the principles of faith and organization advocated by the Reorganized Church. They are surprised that they had never heard some of the corruptions of the Utah Mormons advocated while in Utah, for aside from polygamy they were ignorant of other departures, and said they had never believed that principle. I wondered how many other such people there are associated with that church. Would that they could be enlightened, and led therefrom.

There has been, considering the amount of sickness of late, good attendance at the services at the church, and I have been remarkably blessed in strengthening the Saints, and the spirituality of those who have been in regular attendance is quite marked, the gifts being manifest at times. The Spirit admonished us to come to the prayer-service with a more noble purpose than in the past, and to lay aside all worldliness, because of which the Lord had not been blessed as he purported to do.

The Sunday-school entertainment was held on last Saturday eve, the children doing their part well. The presents on the tree had been furnished by the school, and each scholar up to the senior classes received a present as near the same value as could be determined upon as suitable for the class, and these presents were distributed by the teachers of the several classes. All seemed satisfied, none feeling sad at receiving so little and others so much, for all were treated equally, and special effort was made to avoid any being omitted. The results of this Christmas entertainment were the most satisfactory of any that it has been my privilege to be present at in a long time, all which would be considered as out of place in the house of the Lord by the most devoted being excluded, and all that was done could very fittingly be dedicated by prayer, and as fittingly represented the event being commemorated.

Two editorials that have appeared of late, one by the Assistant Editor, and the other by the Editor, have been of benefit to the Saints here, and I very highly appreciated them. The sentiment breathed throughout both was an invitation to come up higher in spirituality and true holiness, a very necessary condition to be brought about.

As soon as holiday excitement is over I expect to occupy in the suburban towns, and in the city wherever it is possible to find opportunity.

While every day brings its duties, with me these duties are not always of the most pleasant nature, neither can I say that in the fulfillment of them any great good is accomplished. To illustrate: I sent to all the editors of the papers of the city both historical and biblical evidence of our faith; and judicial and historical evidences that there was a wide difference between us and the Utah Mormons, and that they do not represent the faith represented by Joseph Smith, but in one of the city dailies this week is the picture of the temple in Salt Lake City, underneath which is this very misleading statement: "Gigantic structure in Salt Lake City in which centers the faith founded by Joseph Smith." I wrote a short article and left it in the office to be printed, and when I went to the office to inquire about the printing of it, I was asked if the question whether Joseph Smith did or did not found the faith represented in the temple was not a more doctrinal question. I answered, "If it is, why have you decided that the people in Utah are right? We only ask space to correct the error. The matter is more than a difference between the churches, for the matter is now one of history." I was astonished that a reader of such wide note as one occupying an editorial position of any character should be so ignorant as to not know that the courts had decided that Joseph Smith did not found the faith being represented in the building or use of the temple in Salt Lake City; and this fact has even been confessed by the people themselves in some of their statements. It is such little foxes as this item referred to that spoil the grapes, but I try to correct all such, and the papers have been very good to permit my corrections to appear, except in one or two cases.

These circumstances do not affect the work so much as unwise and hasty actions and utterances, and a disregard for the order of the church in the execution of the law. While the Saints will advocate that the plan God has restored to earth for the blessing of humanity is perfect, and must be observed to obtain celestial bliss, yet in many instances is that plan disregarded, and other plans followed in the attempt to rectify mistakes, or to correct evils; thus indicating that in their estimation other plans were as good if not better than God's revealed plan; and in some instances the authority represented by the chosen vessels of God is considered of less value than the advice of those holding no such authority, and sometimes of the world; but most of such instances are such as occur by reason of improper instruction, being ignorant of the gracious provisions found in the heavenly order. When will God's people learn patience, and let it do its perfect work? It is much pleasanter for one not to make mistakes, than that after they have been made to correct them. Hence, the admonition to watch and pray that we enter not into temptation, should be carefully followed. We know we should do right, or make an effort to do right; and we should not act upon the possibility of failure. This only indicates doubt in the strength of him who has said, "My grace is sufficient for you," and "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."

During the last year I have felt quite discouraged at times, but God has so far made a way for me to escape yielding to despondency, and I am resolved, by the help of God, not to yield to discouragement during the coming year as much as during the year past. I have not felt satisfied, neither do I now feel satisfied with the results of my labor. Some of the brethren and sisters have been a stay to me, and have helped me greatly from yielding wholly to a despondent condition. May God bless them for it. What help God's children are to each other when they set the work of God first in their estimation, placing all else as secondary?

My faith is fixed in the final victory of the work, but in some respects some of the shadowy curtains that bespeak the darkness that comes just before day are to be observed, and it is my determination to keep my eye on the mark of our high calling, and, however great the darkness, keep on till we are through it, considering the plan revealed from the Father to be the only safe one to anchor me in the haven of rest.

My hope grows brighter that the coming conflict, in which all that can be shaken will be shaken, will not affect the salvation of any one who wishes to do right because it is right to do right, and who is seeking salvation upon the basis of individual purity and unselfishness. Oh, that I may be free from unselfishness, and from all impurity; and as I wish to obtain mercy may I know how to show it to others; and as I wish to be forgiven may I be able to forgive others!

May the Herald, and Herald readers have a happy and prosperous year.

Your brother,

J. F. Minton.

Scranton, Kansas, January 3, 1906.

Editors Herald: In reading your pages, we rejoice often, but more so of late than ever before, because of the spirit of progress breathed. Progress is the watchword. Have we got it? Yes. You can find it in Bro. John W. Rushton's article, which I was glad to read. Why should we not fall in line and move forward with a united effort, with the wisdom of God, and His Spirit to guide? Without a preparation there can be no gathering; and we see the need of the preparation. The place can not be moved, the Lord has said. He also has said the center of that place is at Independence, Missouri, and we have been advised to gather in the regions round about. Are we doing it? "Oh, no," says Bro. A, "the time has not come yet." But surely the time has come to prepare, and now is the time. Why stand doubting? The longer we wait the harder it will be, because land is getting higher in price; every year there is some advance made. But there is still, within one hundred miles of Independence, land underlaid with coal that can be bought for from ten to forty dollars per acre on five years' time, one fourth cash. This land is in St. Clair County, Missouri.
We have all kinds of talented men in our church; some preachers, some farmers, some I suppose of all trades, and a good many coal-miners. When a brother in Atchison had a little ad in the HERALD once about that coal-mine at Atchison, the number of letters coming from England and Wales would surprise you. Now if this had been the church property how much more good might have been done. The most of our church members, who are laborers, are working for large companies because there are very few small ones left. The age that we live in is an age of syndicates, and trusts, combinations, organizations, unions, and secret orders until there is no end, and the church is scattered all over helping to sustain these organizations. And we can not help it, as Bro. Rushton has said, until we more unitedly organize ourselves for the benefit both of the soul and of the body of the church.

Of course I do not believe in having money spent foolishly by men who do not understand the true value of a dollar. I know of men that could have bought land for fifty or seventy-five dollars per acre all underlaid with coal. They did not buy the land, but did lease the coal and gave four times as much for the privilege only to work out the coal under the land. This is rather a poor way to invest, if it is not a mistake. Land with a two-foot vein of coal leased at ten cents per ton, would bring over three hundred dollars per acre, when the coal was being taken out. And then the land would still be there. That is why the railroad companies try to get hold of the coal-lands.

I know others that bought land at twenty-five dollars per acre, leased the coal, and now they are getting over two hundred dollars per acre from other parties for royalty. So this is rather the best way, I think, to purchase good mineral-land. It is said that the obedient shall live on the fat of the land. Well, I think that the mineral comes very near being the fat.

It is said that the obedient shall live on the fat of the land. Well, I think that the mineral comes very near being the fat. It surely is the wealth of it.

GERING, NEBRASKA.

Dear Herald: We are busily engaged in holding meetings here in the Gering Valley with good interest, and are in hopes good will be done. Have felt well in preaching, God giving light and liberty. We are looking for some to be gathered into the fold. We have three members of the Christian Catholic Church attending, who seem very much interested. The Saints are doing all they can to help with the meetings, and are anxious for others to come in and help them to raise the banner of Christ, to carry on the work of our blessed King and Redeemer. The New Year is here and I find the agent's books are behind. Now what is going to be done? Are the Saints going to come to our aid and help me to settle up with those whom the Bishop has placed under my care? Now, I must not discharge my duty unless the Saints come to my aid; and I trust they will send their tithing and offering to me at once. Please send all remittances to me at Belmont, Dawes County, Nebraska.

Your brother,

R. O. SELF.

DEAR HERALD: Just a word to let you know that the Saints here are still alive in the work. While our branch has passed through severe trials, and stood the fiery darts of Satan, thank God it was all for the best. During the past summer we have enjoyed but few of our privileges and but a small portion of the Lord's Spirit. But we realize it has been a falling on our side.

When we would assemble together there only seemed to be a cool, disinterested spirit present. But it was because of our troubles and discouragements that we had become faint and neglectful. Still we struggled onward, until now we are again happy in the truth of God's love.

A few Sabbaths ago we met together with a determined spirit, and a desire to come and do our Father's will, and we united our faith, and prayed for his blessings; and while we prayed, testified, and sang sweet praises to God, his Spirit came in power to own and bless. And, lo, God's voice came, through a sister, saying, "Saints, come up higher. Come up higher.

Then I heard a whisper near by, coming from a young friend, who felt the presence of God's Spirit, saying, "Oh, I can not stand it."

Saints, how thankful we should be to know we are serving a Father who will call after us when we are so unworthy of his call. Let us come up higher, obey the call of a loving Father who has said, "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

I ask you to pray for me that I may not faint by the wayside, but go on in faith, trusting in my heavenly Master, and at last live and reign with Christ and his Saints.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

JENNIE M. CAMPBELL.

SUDBERLINVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA, DECEMBER 29, 1905.

Editors HERALD: The war-whoop of the Lamanite roving through the woods of Pennsylvania has given way to the still, small voice of God's Spirit, crying repentance to the inhabitants of this place. Potter County is a land of mountains, or foothills of the Allegheny Range. Hillside farms are the rule, and I wonder when I watch the cattle grazing on the steep slopes, that their legs do not grow longer on one side.

Years ago, when logs were valueless, large hemlock-trees were felled to the ground, stripped of their bark, and left to rot. These logs, were they in good condition, would be worth millions of dollars to-day.

A few miles from here, on Bell Farm, rise three of our largest Eastern rivers: The Susquehanna, emptying into the Chesapeake Bay; the Allegheny, joining the Ohio to the Mississippi, and the Genesee, reaching the Gulf of St. Lawrence through the St. Lawrence River. We read of a house in Canada so situated that a drop of rain falling on one side of its roof will find its way to the Gulf of Mexico, while a drop on the other side will flow to the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Schoolhouses are open to us, and so far we (Bro. A. B. Phillips and I) have preached in nine. Twelve persons have been baptized, but the multitude care for nothing but lust and license. The people of this place (and elsewhere, as my experience has been) would not repent if a bombshell of divine grace were to explode and enter heart and brain. The days of Gen­tile rejection are come, and each year sees the people more careless and more inclined to believe lies than to believe truth. The cry "Mormon" is heard on mountain and in valley. The men and women that cry the loudest are the ones living in the blackest sins, constantly sipping the hell-broth of iniquity. Stevens, the Adventist, did us much evil; the Lord reward him according to his works. We find friends here, as in other places; but for some reason the four walls of a schoolhouse will afford us shelter when Christians refuse to share their heart­stone.

On the night after Christmas, while the people of Watrous were gazing into lovelit eyes and repeating the story of a world's Savior, my brother and I were trying to sleep on the narrow bench of our schoolhouse—and we also thought of the little child of Bethlehem, and longed to see him face to face.

The Saints here (baptized in September) are the salt of the town; without them Suderlinville would be ready for the cleansing fire of God. On Christmas they remembered us with something more than a "Go, be warmed and filled." Unless religion is practical it is worse than no religion. The mouth of hell is open for the man that takes of the abundance of earth and imparts not his portion to the poor. The same woe that Christ pronounced against the hypocrite, is in force to-day. Until selfishness has been rooted from the hearts of some Latter Day Saints, there will be no Zion or anything else for them, except the fiery indignation of God.

We need a tract setting forth the distinction between the Reorganized Church and the Utah Mormons. Some people are so confused over “blood atonement,” “polygamy,” two Joseph Smiths, “Latter Day Saints,” Book of Mormon, etc., that they are easy victims to the misrepresentations of unprincipled preachers. The world is about ready to acknowledge that there are more; and that the Book of Mormon teaches nothing immoral that they know; but so long as people believe that we are representing the Utah church, we are powerless to reach them. However, we have made every conceivable effort to reach the people, passing tracts, extending personal invitations, preaching night on night, we are forced to admit that they do not want the truth. We are confronted with the mightiest question of the day, and on every hand is seen the fulfilled and fulfilling prophecies of the Almighty.

To one born on the shores of the Atlantic Ocean, the necessity of driving miles to reach sufficient water for baptismal purposes, is novel at least. We had to dam a small stream, when baptizing.

The HERALD and Ensign are among the influences for good in the church, and I hope that God will inspire more articles such as the editorial in issue of December 6. Go on, there are “four thousand” Latter Day Saints who have not bowed the knee to Baal, and they are not afraid to stand boldly in defense of righteousness, while “the devil rages in the hearts of men.”

Prayerful, hopeful, and grateful, I am, Ralph W. Farrell, Editors Herald: I have so many good things to report I hardly know which one should come first. But as many are especially interested in our church debt, I will say, first, We are all right. To-day we have a payment due of two hundred dollars, and we have the money in the bank ready to make the payment. Let me, here, again, in behalf of this branch, extend our heartfelt thanks to all who in any way have helped in this matter. This has been looked upon as being the hardest of all on account of so much other expense. But we have come out all right; and everything looks well and bright for the future in every department of church-work. The branch house now is completely organized, with a presiding elder, two active priests, one working teacher, one live deacon. All the lesser officers are young men; and I never saw better. When any of them are asked by the president to do any work pertaining to their office, there has so far never been an excuse offered, but they say, “I will do the best I can.” What more can God or man ask of them? And I want to say, the president is not ashamed or afraid to call on them in their turn to preach, and to go into the stand and open the meeting for them. And if the time is not all occupied he fills it out. The Saints and Friends are always encouraged to see the willingness to do.

Brethren, do not be afraid to give the young men a chance to develop. About six weeks ago a good brother who is not in the church saw that if we missionary was to be able to do his work he must have a horse and buggy. Accordingly he went to work to get the necessary money by circulating a subscription paper. Then on the eve of the 5th ult. about fifty Saints and friends came by surprise upon the missionary and wife (the 5d being the twenty-fifth anniversary of our wedding day). So with that which had been raised by the brother, and the wedding offering, they presented us with a little over thirty dollars. The missionary picked corn ten and one half days for the son of the man who got what he could for the horse. He is not a member of the church, but he gave us two dollars per day. Putting this all together, and giving a small note besides, to-day we have the horse and buggy, for which we are truly thankful, because it is so much needed in the work here. I see some speak of their aid societies. I want to say we have, I believe, as good a one here, according to the number, as is in the church. They have in a financial way done so much that I know that the Lord will bless them.

While all this has been done, I see that in the last few weeks there has been more tithing paid in than at any other time since I have been here. But this is not all. There has been marked advancement in spirituality, which cheers the hearts of all who are enjoying this blessing. We have so far kept clear of the trouble that has so often occurred when there was a church to be paid for; that is, get into a quarrel among the members. And, I do pray God that the last dollar may be paid, the house dedicated to God, and still peace be with us here.

In all my work in the church, now almost twenty years, I never enjoyed my work better than in the last few months, because I have been able to see at least some results. But, oh, what a trial I had to pass through since coming to this city before the blessing came! This may be rejected by some, but I know that Sr. Baker has been a source of great strength to the work here; and without her help I am sure I never could have done the work here that was necessary to be done to bring about the present results. Of course, I do not wish to convey the thought that she and I have done all. But there had to be some one to stand by the work to encourage the few Saints that were here, and make it possible for others to do something, which was so faithfully done by Brn. W. A. Smith, Oscar Case, Ferry, McPellel, Pitt, and others.

While I rejoice in the progress the church has made in the year just closed, I do hope and pray that 1906 may bring a still greater harvest. To this end let us all labor. I do want to live to see Zion redeemed and the pure in heart gathered under the protecting hand of God. O Saints, what a glorious promise—to be privileged to get out of the calamity that is coming.

J. M. Baker.

Conference Minutes.

Bishop's agent's report: Received since February 18, 1906, $208.32; paid out, $208.32; due agent from last auditing, $14.39. By resolution it was decided that the third Sunday in March, 1906, be observed throughout this district as a day of fasting and prayer; also, that Brn. Mizelle, Scott, King, Faulk, and Cochran distribute tracts and other Church literature in their respective localities. All officers of the district were sustained and Bro. Alma Booker added to their number as vice-president of the district. Resolution carried that blank reports similar to those of the Far West District be adopted by this district for the reporting of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, and that make their reports and send them to the secretary two weeks before conference convenes. Adjourned to meet with Theodore Branch, time to be appointed by district president.

Northeastern Texas and Choctaw—Conference convened at Wilburton, Indian Territory, December 9 and 10, T. J. Sheppard and H. O. Smith in charge. D. O. Harder, secretary. Branches reporting: Manchester, Wilburton 206, Haileyville 49. Granini's report too late for approval. Ministry reporting: T. J. Sheppard, Ellis Short, J. W. Jackson, S. W. Simmons, J. D. Erwin, E. A. Erwin, H. O. Smith, A. Z. Rudd, H. R. Harder, T. N. Smith, J. M. Simmons, John White, H. T. McClain, P. B. Bissell. The present district officers were sustained and the election of associate president, J. M. Simmons being appointed by district president and ratified by conference. The following were elected delegates to General Conference: H. T. McClain, F. A. Butler, J. W. Jackson, D. O. Harder, Ellis Short, T. J. Sheppard, T. N. Smith, J. D. Erwin, H. L. Dalby, Elsie Youmans, E. L. Henson, E. D. Bailey, H. O. Smith, Dalby, Peter Adelson, Jr. The delegates present were empowered to cast full vote of the district. A goodly degree of the Spirit was manifest and enjoyed during the entire conference. Bro. Henry Kemp remained over two weeks with his stenographer, Sr. Wight, giving sixty-eight blessings while here.

High Priests' Quorum.

Dear Brethren: It is time now to arrange the program for our quorum meetings next April. In this we desire your cooperation. We ask you, therefore, to send us such questions as you may want to have discussed or answered, and also for papers; also the names of members whom you may consider best qualified to take part in this work; or any other suggestions to aid in making our meetings as interesting and as profitable as possible, and that too, to the largest number.

When this notice meets your eye, do not put off answering it till some future time, as you may forget all about it. But if you have anything to offer, and we trust you have, kindly attend to it at once, as we want to have our program ready by the first of next month. Please let us hear from you.

Tree-Planting Club for Staked Plains.

The tree-planting club on the Staked Plains in the Panhandle of Texas appears to be an accomplishment.

When a forester from the Department of Agriculture attended the farmers' meeting at Amarillo, August, the suggestion was made that the people organize a club for the purpose of establishing groves of trees on their farms. This region is naturally treeless, but there is every reason to believe that certain species of trees will grow if they are properly planted and cared for. The people of the section have shown such interest in the proposition that the association has already nearly six hundred members. It is proposed to organize local groups in each of the towns and spread the idea throughout the whole Panhandle.

The definite objects of the club are to find out what kind of trees are best adapted to the region and how they shall be planted, and to obtain the necessary material in the most advantageous way. The Forest Service has agreed to send a competent man to advise the people on all these points, and to make definite plans for planting shall have been made, the individual members will combine and purchase their stock in large quantities from the nurserymen.

Every farmer in the western country recognizes the value of trees about him, and there is no better evidence of the interest of the people in any practicable plan for the establishment of groves in this section than the movement in Texas.

The club idea has been followed for the furtherance of many other projects, but this is perhaps the first time that it has been brought to the advancement of tree-planting. As an encouragement to other sections to work in the same way, the Forest Service at Washington directly offers to furnish expert advice whenever a community shall organize a club of this kind and indicate its desire to establish tree-plantations.

Why Should the Filipinos Have Free Trade?

The difficulties in the way of rapid development in the Philippine Islands are such as to lessen the chances of competition which has been such a bugbear to many statesmen in this country. It has scarcely been worth while to pass laws declaring a tariff against Philippine products, or securing complex five-to-four supreme court decisions. Exploitation of the islands has been predicted, but so far has not been attempted. Capital backed by shrewd men can find a better field in the United States. No speculators with money to invest care to try the Orient when there are such opportunities right at home. Men of small means must be presented with very favorable conditions before they will go far afield for investment, and small capital will neither exploit nor develop the islands.

Granting the Filipinos free trade, it is believed, will result in making them more contented and less anxious to get from under the domination of the Americans. It will encourage them to believe they are not held as foreigners. It is also believed that free trade will produce a healthy and sure development of the islands, that it will be an incentive to production, and that the Filipinos will be encouraged to work. It is one of the several things promised by Secretary Taft, and he believes that without harm to American products a great deal may be accomplished for the good of the Philippines by establishing free trade with the islands.—From “Free trade with the Philippines,” by Arthur W. Dunn, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for December.

The Private Car and the Favored Shippers.

Ray Stannard Baker in the January McClure’s talks about the private car and the beef trust. He begins by considering the legitimate uses of private cars, and shows how, as originally planned, they were of great benefit to the railroads, the shippers, and the consumers; how they loomed the fruit industry, and brought to the large cities of the North the delicacies of the South and the West.

After that, Mr. Baker, in his clear style, builds up a structure of facts that gives you a bird’s-eye view of the almost unbelievable sweep of the abuses. He talks principally of Armour, as the largest owner of private cars, who controls a dozen or more lines, owning fruit- and meat-cars, tank-, cattle-, and even common box-cars, approximately fourteen thousand in all, representing an investment of about fourteen million dollars. He tells how Armour & Company carry not only their own products, but fruits and vegetables for shippers generally, and how much of this side issue is conducted entirely at the expense of the railroads.

The railroads pay for these private cars a “mileage charge,” afterwards collecting the freight rate. Although the rental for the cars brings in a handsome interest, on the money invested, these big shippers are not satisfied, but turn the screws just the same and squeeze their rates down when their products are carried at a figure far below that which the smaller shipper pays.

Armour in addition, on account of the breadth of his interest, is able to drive these cars so that they make the maximum number of miles a day, and so gets his stuff through, at the expense not only of other shippers, but of the ordinary routine of the railroad itself.

Mr. Baker illustrates his narrative with many true incidents, which serve to bring home to the reader the menace contained in this control of the rates by the trusts. He tells of John D. Rockefeller and the Standard Oil Company, and shows how Armour and he defy the railroads and name the actual price at which the products shall be carried. Mr. Baker goes further and makes charges, astounding, hard of belief, until he has proved them with hard, cold facts. He shows how politics play a part and how politicians garner rebates, and tells at length of the gross injustice of the discrimination between beef and cattle. This article containing the exposure it does would create a sensation at any time, but it is of peculiar interest just now when all the country looks to Washington for rate legislation.

IT IS SURE TO COME.

The following from a Tennessee divine illustrates the thought that the world is beginning to awaken to the fact that there is need for adjustment of social conditions, and they are beginning to struggle with the "equality" problem. They recognize that if God’s will were "done in earth as it is in heaven," there would be no poor. Latter Day Saints, who are acquainted with the books, know this feature of the gospel is as old as any other principle of it, and it is necessary that this be complied with in order that we may receive to the fullest extent the spiritual blessings promised, as the Doctrine and Covenants plainly states. Humanitarians in the world are clamoring for something to be done along this line, but they hardly know how to bring it about, and of course an effort that is purely human must fail. It indicates the time approaching, however, when we will have to act, and as Latter Day Saints we should examine ourselves and see whether we are willing to meet the demand, or whether we would prefer to drop out and let another people win our crown:

THERE SHALL BE NO POOR.

"Howbeit there shall be no poor with thee . . . If only thou diligently hearken to the voice of Jehovah thy God, to observe to do all this commandment which I command thee this day."—Deuteronomy 15:4, 5, Revised Version.

This was the promise of the Son of God, our Lord Jesus Christ, made through Moses, to the Jewish people. He will be as good to other nations as he promised to be to Israel.

The cause of poverty is disobedience to God’s law, which Christ came to fulfill and not to abolish.

One cause of poverty is landlessness. The landowner can employ himself and make his own wages. The landless must accept such wages as he can get. One principle of Christ’s law given through Moses is that every family should own land. No Bible student can doubt this. Opinions may differ as to the best way of applying this principle in our age and civilization; and this essay does not enter into this question, for it will avoid all questions on which devout Bible students can differ.

Interest is another cause of poverty. It is never so tires nor sick, never rests nor sleeps nor ceases nor does till it has eaten out the heart of the civilization that feeds it. It is said (I have not had the patience to verify the computation) that if Adam had put a dollar at compound interest, the earth itself if turned into gold would not pay it. Interest may be allowed in our age because of the hardness of our hearts and the wickedness of our civilization. Opinions may differ as to the best way of stopping it; laws forbidding it or limiting it seem useless. But an honest student of the Bible can hardly doubt that it is forbidden by the law, the Psalms, and the prophets.

When considering a seal for the United States, Franklin proposed as a device Moses lifting his wand and dividing the Red Sea and Pharaoh being drowned and the motto: "Rebellion to tyrants is obedience to God." But before any device was adopted Franklin was sent to France and very little of his idea was used.

Any missionary who has not received a copy of the Sunday School Exponent may obtain one by sending his address to Herald Publishing House, requesting same.

You will find it easier to forego a wrong pleasure than it will be to forget it.—Ram’s Horn.

Without money or commerce any industry or production beyond that of the savage or barbarian is impossible. Every restriction on trade is a stab at industry. Our wealth is due to the unrestricted intercourse between such a vast population occupying every variety of soil and climate between Alaska and Florida. That restrictions on commerce are forbidden by “the law” is plain from two facts. Duties are the commonest resource for the support of civil government; but Moses does not prescribe them. One end of the law was to separate Israel from other nations; prohibitive duties would greatly help in doing this; but Moses did not ordain them.

The use of the public highways between different cities and between the different parts of the same city for private gain is a manifest injustice. Opinions may differ as to the railroad problem; but I never heard any one affirm that our Lord Jesus Christ approves of the private ownership of railroads and street railways.

Obedience to God in national affairs will undoubtedly destroy all the national causes of poverty.

Notice is hereby given that at the General Conference session of 1906, to be held in the city of Independence, Missouri, beginning April 6, and on the third day of said session, there will be presented the following proposed change in the “Articles of Association”:

Page 119, of Rules of Order and Debate, article 5, line 16, to strike out the word recommendation; then in line 18, following the words “Board of Publication,” insert in proper form the words “approved by vote of a General Conference, or a General Assembly.”

“This part of the article referred to would then read, “The principal place of business of said corporation may be changed from Lamoni aforesaid to any other place, by recommendation of the Quorum of the First Presidency, the Bishop and Counselors, and the Board of Publication, approved by vote of a General Conference, or a General Assembly.”

Signed this the fifteenth day of January, 1906.

President R. C. Evans writing from Toronto, Ontario, January 8, says: “Torry and Alexander, the great evangelists who awakened England with their ‘Glory song,’ are here in Mossy Hall for a month. I confess when I saw the thousands of dollars spent in advertising their meetings, that I was fearful lest their meetings would take my crowd. Sunday, December 31, their first Sunday, I went to the Majestic fearful that I would not have my crowd, but the house was packed, and interest unabated. Well, as you know, not one word has been in the papers for me or of my meetings this year, only that Wilkinson fuss, while papers have their pictures, their songs with music, their prayers, their sermons (I mean stories), till page after page is filled. All this made me feel shaky again yesterday; but last night, a half hour before I spoke, every seat was taken, the aisles full, the steps full, and hundreds turned away. More than twenty-five hundred people were with me till half past ten. My subiect was ‘The destiny of nations,’ given through the metallic image of Daniel 2, and showing the setting up of a kingdom in the days of ten kings.

“I was almost too tired to go to the meetings. I presided over a large prayer-meeting at ten o’clock in the forenoon, preached at eleven, then preached a sermon in our new church opening at Davisville (five miles from city; all paid for save three hundred dollars), then back to city, worn out. While they were singing, I prayed, and got up fresh and strong, and seldom felt better. Next Sunday I speak on ‘Origin of Book of Mormon.’ I am talking almost day and night. Remember me that I fail not.”

Bro. U. W. Greene, Kirtland, Ohio, December 27, assisted Bro. Stone in conducting a distinguished company of the Utah people, through the temple. He noted on the register the names of Joseph F. Smith, John Henry, John S., Hyrum M., Joseph F., Jr., Elias A., Jesse, and George Albert Smith, A. H. Lund, Benjamin Goddard, Seymour B. Young, C. W. Penrose, Frank Y. Taylor, Angus M. Cannon, R. S. Wells, L. W. Shurtleff, Arthur Winter, Brigham F. Grant, Ashley Snow, George Romney, John McDonald, George F. Richards, Oliver F. Richards, and Francis M. Lyman, together with the names of several ladies. They did all possible to make their stay pleasant, and to point out the old landmarks. The party was traveling by private car, returning from Vermont where they had dedicated the monument to the memory of Joseph Smith. They mentioned having met Bro. F. M. Sheehy there, and spoke very highly of him.

David must have been surrounded by discouragements, as we are at times, or he would not have been inspired to sing such portentous words as these: “Fret not thyself because of evil-doers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity. For they shall be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb. Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed. Delight thyself also in the Lord; trust also in him; and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart. Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass. And he shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday. Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him; fret not thyself because of him who prospereth.

in his way, because of the man who bringeth wicked devices to pass. Cease from anger, and forsake wrath; fret not thyself in any wise to do evil. For evil-doers shall be cut off; but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth. For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be. But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace. The wicked plotteth against the just, and gnasheth upon him with his teeth. The Lord shall laugh at him; for he seeth that his day is coming. The wicked have drawn out the sword, and have bent their bow, to cast down the poor and the needy, and to slay such as be of upright conversation. Their sword shall enter into their own heart, and their bows shall be broken.”—Psalm 37:1-15.

What will the conference of 1906 be? Much depends upon the individual preparation made. If we would have a better conference than the few preceding ones, we must make a more earnest preparation. And why should not our sober thought, our heartfelt and fervent supplications be to the end that our next conference may be one to which we may look back with feelings of thankfulness and gratitude, rather than a feeling of relief that we have been able to worry through somehow? Shall our missionaries go out from next conference with hands full of spiritual corn for the famishing among mankind, or shall they go out disheartened and empty-handed? It will be determined by the extent to which the will of God is done on the one hand, or by the extent to which the will of man intervenes on the other.

Students and graduates are amazed at the action of the Harvard trustees in abolishing football, and declaring it a menace to morals and health. It seems that the overseers accepted unanimously a report of a special committee which said that the game as at present played was thoroughly bad and ought to be stopped absolutely and finally. The only hope of its reestablishment is in adopting new rules and regulations. The world is moving. Schools under control of Latter Day Saints ought to be foremost in every good work.

Joseph F. Smith, president of the Utah church, according to the Elders’ Journal for January 15, 1906, uttered a prophecy while in Chicago to the effect that “Mormonism, so called, would some day encircle the world as the ruling religion of the universe.” According to the common definition, that a prophet is one who prophesies, this constitutes Joseph F. Smith a prophet. But there are different kinds of prophets. He who prophesies of the weather is a weather-prophet. He who prophesies of the Mormons, or for them, might be called a Mormon prophet. He who prophesies falsely is a false prophet. He who prophesies in the name of God, having authority so to do, is a prophet of God. The future will disclose, if the past has not, what kind of a prophet Joseph F. Smith is.

Bro. G. T. Griffiths, in charge, reports eighteen baptisms in the Northwestern Mission during the past three months. All the missionaries are in good spirits and finding encouragement in their labors.

GRACELAND’S PROPOSED ENDOWMENT FUND.

The attention of the Saints and friends is called to a few facts concerning the progress of Graceland College, as well as to her needs. As with all institutions of this character, the constituents have had the burden of debt to carry; but we are now where there is a brighter financial outlook. An institution without permanent support must struggle; therefore, the work is necessarily crippled. It is the plan of the present management to seek in every possible way to conserve the interests of the church relative to the college by having foresight in the administration of affairs. We must plan for Graceland, not for a year, but for all time. The time seems ripe for progressive work.

You who have said that you favor the maintenance of a college may now feel that the plans hereby instituted are worthy of your serious consideration. The successful execution of these plans means an immediate new and bright future for Graceland. Graceland has reached a point in her history when she must launch forth upon a new and more progressive career if she is to maintain the standard of work now being provided. This year’s increased enrollment and the advanced internal activity have assured us that she deserves the support of the church in every reasonable and businesslike undertaking. We believe the church will consider seriously the reasonable plans of the management.

The present net enrollment up to date for the year of one hundred and forty-one students in all departments ought to be an inspiration to all of the friends everywhere. One hundred and forty-one students having the advantages of Graceland is a fact that we can not overlook in considering our church interests. The increased attendance of the winter term has, for the most part, been made by students whose homes are outside of Lamoni. The college should serve the church by placing the opportunity of school equally before the young people of the church. To this end are we planning:

In our scheme of proposed endowment and improvement fund, we take the only sound basis of plan for the support of Graceland. She can not be made self-supporting as some have intimated. Institutions of this character, wherever you may find them, are not self-supporting. We can not afford to let Graceland become a second or third grade school. It is with great hope that we ask you to consider the plans which we have formulated for the prosecution of this important work.

The idea of endowment is one which we have had in mind for some time; but we felt it was necessary for us to demonstrate to the man of money, by the results secured from our labors, that he could safely place his money in Graceland where the greatest possible dividends may accrue. What greater dividends could one hope for than the dividends of character? The present net enrollment of one hundred and forty-one, with others expecting to enter later in the term, and another term yet to open, confirms our confidence in the success of the institution. With an annual struggle to meet deficits, it is impossible to reach the ideal we should, either in quality of work or in numbers enrolled.

At the last regular meeting of the Board of Trustees, it was unanimously agreed to enter upon this work of endowment at once. One reason entering to strengthen us in our efforts is the very promising possibility of securing funds from outside parties. However, we must have an initial effort on the part of the friends of Graceland if we are to hope for outside parties to share with us in this noble enterprise. What untold blessings would fifty thousand dollars bring to Graceland in her great work of education.

Your attention is further called to the reasonable provisions in our subscription contract. Not a dollar can we demand of any subscriber until every dollar of the proposed conditional subscription is raised. When the conditions of this proposed fund have been met, you will be glad to pay your subscription; until that time you are under no obligations. Ought this not to appeal to all the friends of the institution as a safe, substantial, and sane, businesslike proposition? Ought we not to come with enthusiasm to the support of the scheme when persons outside are promising to help us in our efforts?

The following conditions have been agreed upon by the committee to govern the proposed endowment and improvement fund. Will you kindly note what a great opportunity is yours in a subscription for Graceland?

1. No pledges shall be binding until Graceland College is free from present indebtedness.
2. No pledge shall be binding until the sum total subscribed amounts to thirty thousand dollars.
3. No pledge shall be binding until, in addition to the thirty thousand dollars, one thousand dollars has been subscribed by the people of Lamoni and community for the building of a gymnasium upon the college grounds.
4. Of the thirty thousand dollars, six thousand dollars shall be used for the purpose of building two dormitories upon the college grounds, and the twenty-four thousand dollars shall be used as a permanent endowment fund. If at any time the twenty-four thousand dollars is used for any other purpose than endowment, it reverts at once to the donors.
5. The cashier of the State Savings Bank of Lamoni, the cashier of the Farmers' State Bank of Lamoni, and the cashier of the Jackson County Bank, Independence, Missouri, chosen by the Board of Trustees of Graceland College, shall constitute the board to examine and pass upon the value of all papers secured by those in charge of the subscription.
6. The treasurer of Graceland College, with two counselors nominated by the president of the college and ratified by the Board of Trustees, shall constitute a committee to place this fund of twenty-four thousand dollars where the best possible dividends may accrue. The treasurer shall place the funds where the discretion of the committee demands.
7. The Board of Trustees, in connection with the president of college, shall provide two dormitories on the college grounds, one for ladies, and one for gentlemen. They shall in no wise spend more than six thousand dollars from the fund of thirty thousand dollars for this purpose.
8. Should the institution be discontinued by vote or legal action at any time, the funds received under these conditions shall revert to the donors: the twenty-four thousand dollars to revert as soon as release can be secured and the six thousand dollars as soon as the Board of Trustees may be able to dispose of sufficient property to meet the obligation. However, the manner of paying the six thousand dollars shall be left to the Board of Trustees of Graceland College and the Presiding Bishop of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Interests and dividends accruing after the formal act of closing or discontinuing shall be distributed proportionately among the donors.

As an official committee, appointed by the Board of Trustees of Graceland College, we have presented these foregoing items and plans. We hope that every one reading this article will consider it seriously; and nothing would please us more than to hear from you. Voluntary subscriptions subject to conditions imposed will be most gladly received. We invite communication from any one who may care to ask us any questions.

THE FLIGHT OF TIME.

SYNOPSIS OF A NEW YEAR'S SERMON BY ELBERT A. SMITH, AT BURLINGTON, IOWA.

And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth lifted up his hand to heaven, and swear by him that liveth for ever and ever . . . that there should be time no longer.—Revelation 10:5, 6.

When I think about the flight of time, the passage of the centuries, the years, the days, I am reminded of the flight of the wild fowl as I used to see it in the springtime when as a boy I lived on a farm in the treeless prairie country of Northern Iowa.

First came the V-shaped flocks of wild geese, splitting the sky with their flying wedge, each flock led by its strong leader and trailing off in two lines to right and left. There is no more musical note than the cry of the wild geese on a spring morning. Then came the clouds of wild ducks,—millions of them. Then the wild cranes in their peculiar flight, pausing at intervals to sweep round and round in great circles. We would hear their thin, bugle-like call, and looking straight up, far into the zenith of the heavens, would detect them,—mere specks of life sweeping in broad circles round and round, ascending their spiral stairway into the sky. Then came the wild pigeons, cutting the air like bullets, the swiftest birds that flew. They would leave our fast mail-trains out of sight in sixty seconds.

When the snow-drifts were breaking into rivulets and the green was coming on the little prairie hillocks, and all this flight of wild life was passing overhead, it was hard to be a boy and be shut up in school.

It is something like that the way the centuries, the years, the months, the weeks, the days, the hours, the minutes, the seconds go by—each with its own flight and each with its own voice. When we are sick or old or sad the hours pass with leaden flight; but when we are young and full of energy and love they pass so swiftly that we know not where they go.

My text says that there will come a time when the angel of God will swear that time shall be no more; and I turn back the pages of history to a time when time did not mean anything. Our parents dwelt in the garden of Eden and had not begun to feel the weight of years and care. They worked when they were sleepy and played when they chose. They had work, it is true—they had charge of the garden to "dress it and to keep it." They had work but not toil.

The motto on my calendar for 1906 says, "There is work that is work and there is play that is play; there is play that is work and work that is play. And in only one of these lies happiness."

Work that is work, without interest or ambition, kills a man. Play that is play, without object, simply to kill time, kills a man. Work that is play, because of interest, adaptability, ambition, is happiness. Our parents had work that was play. More than that they had no sorrow, no pain, no fear, no remorse—and time meant nothing to them. No need to say, To-morrow is Monday and at seven o'clock I must go to my work. They knew not the sound of a factory whistle. No need to say, Next March I will be forty years old and what I do must be done quickly for I will soon be on the downhill road; or, Next May I will be seventy-five years old and death hourly stares me in the face.

But when they sinned and were driven from the garden, time for various reasons began to have meaning and they began to count the years of their separation from God; that is all that time means. God and those who are with him take no thought of time. A thousand years is as a day with them.

Excessive toil became their lot, so that with sweating brows they earned their bread. The rising sun became a taskmaster. The sun in its meridian meant an hour's respite. The setting sun was hailed as the relief-guard and they went home to rest. And from that day, time has had an ever-increasing meaning. Watch the factory-hands. When the whistle blows, pandemonium breaks loose. Ere the last note dies away, some of the hands are a half block away, flinging on coat and cap as they go. A fraction of a second of liberty from the grind of toil is worth fighting for.

It is not so bad in the country, where men to a larger extent plan their own work,—yet even there one finds himself at times where he is a mere machine and must work. As Booker T. Washington says, there is a vast difference between working and being worked. Imagine yourself at the tail of a straw-carrier on a thrashing-machine. Some of you know what that means. The dust and chaff smother you and make you look like the black slave that you are, for the straw comes rolling up hour after hour and you must stand like a machine and pitch it away or the whole business will be stopped. I have been there many a time. Then is when one learns what it is to be tired and hungry and dirty and sweaty and miserable and sometimes mad.

Under those conditions, eleven o'clock, a quarter past eleven, half past eleven, fifteen minutes of twelve, ten minutes of twelve, five minutes of twelve, three minutes of twelve, one minute of twelve, a half minute of twelve, twelve o'clock—that means something. My uncle used to stand on the horse-power and whistle one tune continuously for seven hours and crack his whip and make the tired horses go round to drive the machine that drove every one else, and when he stopped his tune and threw his whip down, it was a relief and we came down from the strawpile in a hurry and headed straight for the dinner-table. And then again before night came I think the angel would have found it necessary to swear twice to have convinced us that there was no such thing as time.

Another thing that makes time mean something is sickness and pain and the sleep-deserted pillow. As the hours go by and the tossing victim counts off till morning, time means something to him; or as one lies in the hospital ward burning with fever, and the days and nights drag by and he thinks, Oh, that I could get out and see the green fields again and look up into the sky!

Then again our parents had no fear of death, until they came under its unhappy thrall, then there came a change. Then, though they might live nine hundred years, for famine and war and pestilence and intemperance and poverty had not yet lowered the vitality of the race, despite their longevity there came a time when gray hairs covered the temples, and age bowed the once erect frame, and stiffened the once supple joints, and dimmed the once bright eyes to all but the ever-nearing visage of Death, and dulled the once quick ears to all but the call of the beyond. Death gave meaning to time. The little child takes no note of the days, they are as years; but there inevitably comes a time when he realizes that their number is limited.

All these things gave meaning to time so that clocks and chronometers and calendars became our masters, and birthdays and New Year's days and times and seasons became the mile-posts by which we judge of our progress toward the grave.

But my text says that there will again come a time when time shall be no more. And it will be because of the restoration of primitive conditions. We read in Revelation 21 that the holy city will not need the light of the sun or of the moon because God will be its light. No need to watch the sun rise or set. And in the new heavens and new earth there will be no more "death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain" and God shall "wipe away all tears."

Time will not mean anything then. Excessive labor, sickness, death, will not be known. There will be no more long vigils by sick-beds, no more weary waiting to meet loved ones over whose graves we have shed most bitter tears.

The angel of God with authority will stand upon the sea and upon the land and with lifted hand swear by him who ruleth on high that time shall be no more. The taskmaster will lose his job, and never more will the meek and the pure be driven unwillingly to their labor. The slave will come from the treadmill; the sick man from his bed; the old man from his vigil with death. We can take our leisure then to finish our work unhurried and unworried. We can build our homes with care and polish and finish each creation of our hands with infinite patience. A week is gone? What matter? We have an eternity of weeks ahead of us. A year is gone? What matter? We have an eternity of years ahead of us.

When I read the history of all past years, I note that the great mile-posts that mark off the ages are the efforts that God has made to redeem man and bring him back to this condition of freedom under the perfect law of liberty. God's covenant with Noah was one of these. His covenant with Abraham on the plains of Mamre was another, and Abraham and his seed were chosen simply that through them all nations might be blessed. When they remembered that mission they prospered; when they forgot it they were lost—and so will it be with every man who covenants with God and then forgets or remembers his duty toward his neighbor. The coming of Christ as a Redeemer was another monument, marking the meridian of time. The apostasy, and later the restoration of the gospel in our day by angelic power (see Revelation 14:9) were others.

We can see God still laboring with his chosen people among the Gentiles and the Jews toward this end. Concerning the latter he predicted: "I will sift the house of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth."—Amos 9:9. And again: "He shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth."—Isaiah 11:12. Not a grain shall be lost. A Jew is a Jew still though he speak Russian or German or English or Hebrew. For centuries he has been without law or government or capital or country or ruler of his own, yet he has kept his nationality. And of late years the spirit of gathering has rested upon him. Representative Jews from Washington and New York and Berlin and Paris and St. Petersburg and Constantinople and Cairo meet and discuss plans for the purchase and rehabilitation of their land. God is at work.

Soon will come the advent of our Lord and Master and the world will have passed another mile-post. Then comes a thousand years of peace and of schooling; and then the new earth. Then will have been ended the days of our separation from God. Then time will be no more for eternity will be ours.

Is it not worth while to live worthy of a little place on the redeemed earth? The humblest of us can do that. Chist did not say, "Blessed are the rich and the mighty." He said, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." He said, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Are you pure and meek and a lover of peace? Have you kept all the commandments of God?

It is natural at this season that as a branch of the church we should review the year just closed. When we do so we note with some satisfaction that, while Believe that God gives scripture now; others do not—we must convince them.

Some churches where they come in by hundreds; but here in this font. That might not mean much to we can only estimate progress by the obstacles over­come. When I was out West we traveled on foot over some places in the mountains where after an hour’s hard climbing we were satisfied if we had climbed one hundred feet. During the same time another man may have gone sixty miles, seated in a parlor-car, with a pass in his pocket. Who accomplished the most? It took personal effort on my part to reach the pinnacle; but when it was reached and I stood there where God had worked, and looked down into the valley from which I had emerged, it was worth while.

We can not make converts with a single sermon. Sometimes it takes years of patient effort. We believe so many things that others do not. We believe that God gives scripture now; others do not—we must convince them. We believe that God heals people now; others do not—we must convince them. We believe that the gospel gifts of tongues and prophecies and miracles are given now; others do not—we must convince them. We believe that the church should be organized with apostles and prophets and evangelists and pastors, etc.; others are satisfied with less—we must convince them.

Then added to this is the misunderstanding that some have who confuse us with the church in Utah—we must overcome that. Our path is beset with obstacles. Yet as we pause from time to time to look back into the depths from which we came we know that it is worth while; and we have seen and felt and heard things in this little church that have not come in the experiences of other churches here in town that apparently have grown more rapidly.

I am not altogether sorry that there are things that make people pause and think before they come in at our door to stay. We do not want them to come simply because they like the pastor’s preach­ing. We do not want them to come because our house of worship is convenient to their homes. We do not want them to come for the sake of popularity or position. Let them come because they think that we are preaching the gospel of Christ as it is in the Bible and as he taught it; or else let them not come at all.

We have made some progress in point of spirituality and personal sympathy. I can not visit and labor with the Saints so much as I might wish, because my work is divided and I must put a great deal of time and labor on Autumn Leaves as its editor; but there are more visits among the Saints than formerly, and if you visit each other and learn where your brethren live and become sociable as a branch you can spare some official labor.

Both last year and two years ago at the New Year services, I asked each one to pledge his word that he would not quarrel with any one during the year. You may think me a crank on this subject, but I have seen so many churches ruined by personal quar­rels that spread and spread and never should have started in the first place, that I am afraid of them. I am afraid of what may yet happen here. The only quarrel we need is with the Devil and that will keep us busy.

How many will promise to do their duty this year, regardless of what others do, and promise not to quarrel with any one during the year? Let me see your hands. Good! That will do! Now remember your promise! When you get vexed, remember this sacred vow you have made in the house of God.

Now a word about New Year’s resolutions. This is the season when they are made—later comes the time when they are broken. I will give you my opinion of them.

Do you see this fine cactus-plant, loaned us by Bro. Schweers? I will hold it up where all may see. Are not those blossoms lovely? Well, I will tell you about that. For a year past, that has been just a cactus-plant. Now it has blossomed out in New Year’s blossoms. In perhaps a week they will be gone and for another year it will be just a cactus-plant. I think you see the point. But is it not better that it should be beautiful one week than never to be beautiful? Is it not better for a man to be good for one week in the new year than never to be good? And a man can be good longer than that if he tries.

Do not make fun of New Year’s resolutions. The man who buries his pipe at the New Year is not foolish; he is foolish when he digs it up a week later. The man who swears off from drinking is not mistaken; he is mistaken a week later when he goes to a saloon and swears on again. The man who cleanses his mouth out with soap-suds on New Year’s Day and quits swearing is not an object of ridicule; that comes when he goes back to his profanity.

Make good resolutions—and keep them. If there are any here who have heard our doctrine and have felt the Spirit’s prompting and have not yet made covenant with God in baptism, it is not too late to start the year right, just as our sister did who was baptized here to-night, or the two who were baptized last Sunday. Do not wait and fool away your eternal welfare! Do not hesitate like Agrippa, “almost persuaded” to be a Christian. The Spirit will not always strive with man. You want to be baptized now, but there will come a time when you will not want to—and later on you will wish with all the anguish and remorse of a repentant soul that you had seized your opportunity when it came. You will call for the rocks to fall on you and hide you.

Are there those who have made covenant and have afterward made mistakes? Take courage! You have a mediator. Christ stands at the right hand of God and, with tears in his beautiful eyes, he pleads your cause, and God is tender and willing to forgive, if you repent. Grow strong by the things you have learned and press forward. May God help you all to live for that time when the days of our separation from God shall have been ended and an eternity of bliss becomes ours.

The author of the article under the above title, which we have noticed in two former numbers of the Herald, continues as follows:

Every truth, every principle, every ordinance, every key and every blessing bestowed by the God of Heaven upon Joseph Smith, His anointed, is now with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and before the prophet's death he told the Twelve, that every gift, power, or authority received by him, he had conferred upon them, the Twelve, and they were in possession of all the power and authority necessary to build up the Kingdom of God, in all the world. At the prophet's death, this quorum, standing next in authority, as shown by the revelations of God, with Brigham Young, as the president of the quorum, took charge of the church in the face of the opposition of those miserable apostates who afterwards became the foundation of the 'Reorganized Church,' and God's work has not in any degree, been destroyed nor has it been left to another people. If the 'Reorganizers' had the only true gospel, they would be exhibiting some of its fruits,—"love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance" (Galatians 5:22, 23) instead of hate, contention, reviling, strife, envy, and other "works of the flesh."

This theory about Joseph Smith bestowing authority, keys, and so forth, upon the Twelve, is an old story; but like many other stories, it does not lose anything by being repeated. We will here quote some of the statements made regarding it by those who are supposed to know, just to illustrate how this idea grew upon them as time passed. Mr. B. H. Roberts in his work, Succession in the Presidency, quotes Brigham Young as saying on the 7th of August, 1844, the following, which Mr. Roberts credits to Millennial Star, volume 25:

Joseph conferred upon our heads all the keys and powers belonging to the apostleship which he himself held before he was taken away, and no man or set of men can get between Joseph and the Twelve in this world or the world to come. How often has Joseph said to the Twelve, "I have laid the foundation and you must build thereon, for upon your shoulders the kingdom rests."—Page 95.

Elder Young subsequently speaking upon this subject used quite different language. Under date of January 23, 1848, in writing to Orson Spencer and speaking of the same event, he relates it as follows:

Joseph told the Twelve, the year before he died, "there is not one key or power to be bestowed on this church to lead the people into the celestial gate but I have given you, showed you, and talked it over to you; the kingdom is set up, and you have the perfect pattern, and you can go and build up the kingdom, and go in at the celestial gate, taking your train with you."—Millennial Star, vol. 10, p. 115.

Under date of January 1, 1845, Parley P. Pratt gives it as follows:

I know not why; but for some reason I am constrained to hasten my preparations, and to confer upon the Twelve all the ordinances, keys, covenants, endowments, and sealing ordinances of the priesthood, and so set before them a pattern in all things pertaining to the sanctuary and the endowment therein.—Millennial Star, vol. 5, p. 151.

Orson Hyde in September, 1844, during the trial of Sidney Rigdon, in giving these same purported words of Joseph Smith to the Twelve, gives the following rendering:

Brother Joseph said some time before he was murdered, "If I am taken away, upon you, the Twelve, will rest the responsibility of leading this people, and do not be buffed off by any man. Go forward in the path of your duty though you walk into death. If you will be bold and maintain your ground the Great God will sustain you."—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 650.

Here is another statement of Orson Hyde, also made at the trial of Sidney Rigdon, in September, 1844:

Before I went east on the 4th of April last, we were in council with Brother Joseph almost every day for weeks, says Brother Joseph in one of these councils there is something going to happen; I don't know what it is, but the Lord bids me to hasten and give you your endowment before the temple is finished. He conducted us through every ordinance of the holy priesthood, and when he had gone through with all the ordinances he rejoiced very much, and says, now if they kill me you have got all the keys, and all the ordinances and you can confer them upon others, and the hosts of Satan will not be able to tear down the kingdom, as fast as you will be able to build it up; and now says he on your shoulders will the responsibility of leading this people rest, for the Lord is going to let me rest awhile.—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 651.

If these are the words used certainly Joseph did not intend to convey the idea of presidency over the church; for he said, "you can confer them upon others"; and surely he did not intend to provide that the Twelve should ordain or appoint other presidencies, not of the Twelve, did he?

Wilford Woodruff quotes the language as follows, under date of October 11, 1844:

Upon your shoulders the kingdom rests, and you must round up your shoulders, and bear it; for I have had to do it until now. But now the responsibility rests upon you. It mattereth not what becomes of me.—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 698.

These testimonies were given in an early time, and seemed to answer the purpose of the witnesses and their supporters very well for the time; but later something stronger was required, so Mr. Woodruff in 1892 again relates what purports to be the language of Joseph Smith to the Twelve, and this time according to Mr. Roberts he said:

I have had sealed upon my head every key, every power, every principle of life and salvation that God has ever given to any man who ever lived upon the face of the earth. And these principles and this priesthood and power belong to this great and last dispensation which the God of heaven has set his hand to establish in the earth. Now I have sealed upon your heads every key, every power, and every principle which the Lord has sealed upon my head. I have lived so long—up to the present time—I have been in the midst of this people, and in the great work and labor of redemption. I have desired to live to see this temple built. But I shall never live to see it completed; but you will. I tell you the burden of this kingdom now rests upon your shoulders; you have got to bear it off in all the world, and if you don't do it you will be damned.—Succession in the Presidency, p. 118, 119.

In April, 1898, Mr. Woodruff is reported by Mr. Penrose to have used the following language in regard to what Joseph Smith said to the Twelve:

You apostles of the Lamb of God have been chosen to carry out the purposes of the Lord upon the earth. Now, I have received, as the Prophet, Seer and Revelator, standing at the head of this dispensation, every key, every ordinance, every principle, and every priesthood that belongs to the last dispensation and fullness of times. And I have sealed all these things upon your heads. Now, you apostles, if you do not rise up and bear off this kingdom, as I have given it to you, you will be damned.—Priesthood and Presidency, by C. W. Penrose, p. 23.

I cite these statements from members of the Quorum of Twelve, all of whom are supposed to have been present and heard the words of Joseph Smith. By a careful examination of these statements it will be seen that it is impossible to tell from the testimony of the witnesses exactly what Joseph Smith did say. We are aware that when witnesses are testifying to a fact coming under their knowledge or observation, it adds strength to their testimony if they tell it in different words and yet agree as to the main features. But in testifying as to what a man said the case is quite different. If there is any importance in what he said the witnesses should agree so that we may determine what was said and place our own construction upon it. However, if any of these statements are correct as to what Joseph Smith said it does not materially alter the case. We do not question but Joseph Smith may have conferred blessings and authority upon the Twelve to act in their capacity as a leading quorum of the church, and in the absence of the Presidency as the first quorum of the church; but this does not in any way carry approval of what these men did as a leading quorum of the church. Besides, if the testimony here given is true, to the effect that Joseph Smith declared that every key, power, principle of life and salvation, ordinance, and priesthood, belonging to the last dispensation of the fullness of times, was conferred upon him and in turn conferred by him upon the Twelve, what becomes of the statement of Brigham Young made on April 6, 1845, as follows:

Joseph in his lifetime did not receive every thing connected with the doctrine of redemption, but he has left the key with those who understand how to obtain and teach to this great people all that is necessary for their salvation and exaltation in the celestial kingdom of our God.—Times and Seasons, vol. 6, p. 955.

What could Mr. Young have referred to when he said that Joseph did not receive every thing connected with the doctrine of redemption, and so forth, when Joseph had stated according to the testimony of the witnesses that he had had sealed upon his head every power, and every principle of life and salvation that was ever given to any man who ever lived upon the face of the earth, every ordinance, every principle and priesthood that belongs to the last dispensation of the fullness of times? This thing or things that Mr. Young refers to must be something outside of the powers of life and salvation, outside of every ordinance, every principle or priesthood that belongs to the dispensation of the fullness of times. Will some one please arise and explain what thing or things Mr. Young referred to that is outside of all those things that Joseph did have revealed to him? We have been anxious for some time to know what thing or things Brigham Young and others had the key to unlock which were outside of all those precious blessings. But I do not know that it interests us in a material way; for certainly whatever it was it does not pertain to the principle of life and salvation, or to the priesthood or the ordinances or the powers of the gospel, and therefore can not affect us only by way of information.

Furthermore, if these testimonies are made to do service in establishing the theory that the Twelve was to succeed Joseph Smith in the presidency of the church, what becomes of Mr. Young's testimony, given at the October conference, 1844. as follows:

If Hyrum had lived he would not have stood between Joseph and the Twelve but he would have stood for Joseph. Did Joseph ordain any man to take his place? He did. Who was it? It was Hyrum, but, Hyrum fell a martyr before Joseph did.—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 683.

It is peculiar how these Utah people can interpret the charge given to the Twelve, if such a charge was given, to indicate the right of the Twelve to the presidency, and at the same time take the position that Joseph ordained Hyrum to take his place. Certainly Joseph did not intend both.

It is not clear from the record that the Twelve themselves at first intended to assume the right to act in the place of the First Presidency. This seems to have grown upon them, or, if they did at first intend to do so, they concealed their intention. The minutes of the meeting of August 8, 1844, as published in the Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 638, reads as follows:

When the whole subject was properly explained and understood, and Counselor Rigdon refused to have his name voted for as a spokesman or guardian, the question was put, "All in favor of supporting the Twelve in their calling, (every quorum, man and woman,) signify it by the uplifted hand"; and the vote was unanimous, no hand being raised in the negative.

The Utah people have since published an account of this meeting in which they add a great deal to this and state that the Twelve were acting as a First Presidency and it was so stated at that meeting. But it does not so appear in the minutes published at the time. Further, Orson Hyde, in a lecture before the High Priests' Quorum, April 27, 1845, confirms the minutes as found in the Times and Seasons and relates the proceedings as given in the minutes. On page 13 of this lecture he says:

“All in favor of supporting the Twelve in their calling.” (The several quorums of officers being present and duly arranged in order) “signify it by the uplifted hand.” The vote was unanimous; not a hand being raised in the negative.

It is not strange that the people voted unanimously to sustain the Twelve in their calling. There was no intimation that they were expected to act in the place of the First Presidency. At the October conference of the same year the names of the Twelve were put before the conference separately, and no intimation made that they were to be anything else than members of the Quorum of Twelve, except in the case of Brigham Young. The motion in his case was: “That we uphold Brigham Young the President of the Quorum of the Twelve as one of the Twelve and First Presidency of the church.”—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 692.

This it will be seen was venturing a little further. At the April conference of 1845 they ventured still further and put the question as follows: “That this conference accept the Twelve as the First Presidency and leaders of this church.”—Times and Seasons, vol. 6, p. 869.

Thus did they assume more and more, either in carrying out a preconceived plan, or as their ambition grew upon them. It is not stated who made the motion on August 8, 1844. At both the succeeding conferences the motions were made by the same man, W. W. Phelps, from which one might infer that he was the party selected to present these matters as the people might be thought to be ready to receive them.

We have but one observation to make in regard to the accusation that the Reorganization exhibits instead of the fruits of the Spirit, hate, contention, reviling, strife, envy, and other works of the flesh. By way of comparison we simply invite the reader’s attention to the spirit plainly manifested in the accusation quoted at the beginning of this article against the Reorganization; and in addition permit us to quote some of the words of Joseph F. Smith as published in the October 1 number of the Elders’ Journal in regard to those who were opposing him:

This spirit of falsehood and intolerance—an emanation from the bottomless pit, a miasma from hades, from the abode of the infernal gods, bent upon “making mad” those whom they would “destroy”—this spirit of injustice and persecution, so opposite and antagonistic to the true genius of Americanism, will not focus its malevolence upon the Latter-day Saints alone. It will attack in time every sect, creed, party and organization that stands for peace, order and good government; and, if not checked, will upright, overthrow, destroy, and sweep them from the face of the earth. It is the spirit of anarchy, of murder and spoliation. These are its ultimate aims, whether recognized or not by those foolish enough to follow its lead and do its dire bidding. Religious rancor and political chicanery are its right and left hands; “yellow journalism” its banner, trumpet and drum; more blatant and more bigoted than any Peter the Hermit, working up a “holy crusade.”—Page 34.

This is but a specimen of the language of Joseph F. Smith; and though it is said that comparisons are odious, we leave the reader to judge between the spirit manifested by Mr. Rich in his editorial, and that manifested by his chief, Joseph F. Smith, as before quoted, as compared with any production that may be found emanating from the authorities of the Reorganization.

It will be easy to discern by the comparison who are manifesting the fruits of the Spirit, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, and who are manifesting the opposite, hate, contention, reviling, strife, envy, and other works of the flesh.

H. C. S.

In the above caption the word must is used advisedly. The Lord has commanded many times throughout the revelations to the church that the Saints should be gathered to Zion. “The decree hath gone forth from the Father that they shall be gathered in unto one place.” “I willeth that my Saints should be assembled upon the land of Zion.” “And there shall be gathered unto it [Zion] of every nation under heaven.” Commands similar to these run all through the revelations, and make it plain that the Lord desires the Saints to gather to Zion. And the place to which he wants them to gather is just as plainly pointed out: “Behold, the place which is now called Independence, is the center place.”—Doctrine and Covenants 57:1.

If any think that the gathering was throttled and stamped out by the driving out of the Saints who first gathered there, read this which was given to the Seer afterward:

And they that have been scattered shall be gathered; . . . Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritance; . . . Behold, it is my will, that all they who call on my name, and worship me according to mine everlasting gospel, should gather together and stand in holy places. Again, verily I say unto you, . . . that the work of the gathering together of my saints may continue. [And more emphatically still,] Therefore, a commandment I give unto all the churches, that they shall continue to gather together unto the places which I have appointed.—Doctrine and Covenants 98:4, 5, 9.

The Lord has nowhere abrogated the foregoing commandments. If there has anything happened to disannul or break the force of them, I fail to discover it. Who will say they are not in force now, and that the Lord does not mean what he says? To remove the last possibility of any one doubting that they are in force now, think on this:

The law given to the church in section forty-two, . . . is as if it were given to-day, and the bishop and his counselors, and the high council, . . . and the storehouse and the temple and the salvation of my people, are the same to me now that they were in the day when I gave the revelation. —Doctrine and Covenants 122:6.

This revelation was given in 1894, and the meaning of it is that the Lord commands us now to gather to Zion. That we should establish the storehouse now; that if any have properties more than is needful for their support, they should be consecrated to the bishop now; that the bishop and his counselors, and the high council of the church should appoint of that consecrated property to the poor and needy now; and should also purchase "lands for the public benefit of the church" now, and also see to the building of houses of worship now, and also look toward the building up of the "New Jerusalem" now. Now is the day of salvation. Now is the time to do something.

Why must we gather to Zion? There must be some potent reasons why we should, or the Lord would not have commanded it, and then reiterate it in nearly every succeeding revelation. The reasons, many evidently do not see, for we see very few Saints moving toward Zion. The Lord gives as reasons:

To prepare their hearts, and be prepared in all things, against the day when tribulation and desolation are sent forth upon the wicked. —Doctrine and Covenants 28:2. Must needs flee to Zion for safety. —Ibid., 45:13. Verily, this is the word of the Lord, that the city New Jerusalem shall be built by the gathering of the saints, beginning at this place, even the place of the temple, which temple shall be built in this generation. —Ibid., 89:2.

(Now there are not so many years left of "this generation" when we consider that this revelation was given in 1832.)

To build a temple, then, is also one of the reasons for gathering to Zion. Another, and very important reason, is that we may live under commercial and industrial conditions that will make us equal in temporal things. The Lord said:

In your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld. —Doctrine and Covenants 70:3. And you are to be equal. —Ibid., 82:4. That you may be equal in the hands of heavenly things: ye, and earthly things also, for the obtaining of heavenly things; for ye are not equal in earthly things, ye can not be equal in obtaining heavenly things. —Ibid., 77:1.

We often hear the Saints bemoaning the fact that we do not enjoy more of the "abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit" in the church. Behold, here, all you who are thus aggrieved, and see at least one good, big, potent reason for the lack. We must be equal in our temporal things in order to be in a condition to receive the "abundance" of spiritual blessings, which will so much help us to "prepare and be prepared" in all things. We are to go to Zion to facilitate our becoming equal; we are to be equal to receive heavenly things, and these heavenly things are to assist us to "prepare" ourselves "in all things." It is plainly seen that our best spiritual development is like unto a plant, that must have good soil in which to grow, if it thrive. That soil in which our spirit natures will best thrive is a temporal condition in which we can all be equal; where we can sit under our own vine and fig-tree; where we shall not be in constant fear of want; where we shall not be slaves to individualism (self) and profit; where we may have time to refine ourselves, to meditate on God's law, to study, to learn, to get wisdom; and to learn equality, because there equity prevails.

If all these blessings to be received in Zion could be received in our scattered condition just as well, the Lord never would have given the command to gather. There are, then, some things in the conditions that surround us that are not propitious to our best spiritual development. What are these conditions? Let us see if they are such as to retard our growth in that direction. We are living on the one hand, as a church, wholly unorganized as to industrial and commercial affairs—the things that concern us temporally—and are not prepared to conserve our material interests to the best advantage. On the other hand we are living in a commercial world that is highly organized in business affairs, and for profit, in the form of corporations, combinations of corporations, trusts, and monopolies. These institutions are wholly in possession of the machinery of transportation, and own and control, together, the manufacture and production of nearly all the commodities of life. They control the markets and commerce of the world. The natural law of supply and demand is disannulled by the power to fix prices. This power is secured by complete centralization through organization of all like industries under one head, then by these centralized heads being again organized under another head; hence the trust, the monopoly. This kills competition, the evil or disastrous results of which drove the captains of industry to cooperate with each other in the form of great combinations of industries and capital. This process has continued until it has embraced practically the entire commercial activities of our country. This killing of competition among these centralized heads representing the manufacturing and transportation interests of the country through cooperation, carries with it the power, and opens the way that, by the scratch of the pen from these controlling heads, prices may be raised or lowered at will, regardless of the natural balance between supply and demand. Hence, up, up goes the price from time to time on the very things we can least dispense with in our daily living. This very same power that can raise and lower prices to fictitious standards so easily, can also raise or lower the wages of toilers as easily, because it is in possession of all or nearly all of the means of employment. Now this arrangement is a grand thing from a material standpoint for those who are connected with it by having stock in these institutions; but woe unto those on the outside who comprise the laborers and consumers! It works a very grievous hardship and injustice on them; for they must pay more and more from time to time for the commodities of living, and at the same time in many instances the wage of the laborer is cut down; while, by the application of labor-saving machinery of the present day, the power to produce is multiplied many times, while the excess that it enables the worker to produce goes into the hands, not of the toiler who is the greater factor in producing it, but into the coffers of the trusts that are in control, whose members may already have acquired such enormous wealth as to be extremely detrimental to the development of good morality.

In the days of our grandfathers one man could make but a few pairs of shoes in a week, but it brought him a living. One man now, with the aid of labor-saving machinery, can make hundreds of pairs in a week, but he makes only a living, and in many cases not so good a living as did his grandsire. Where formerly a worker made a yard of cloth, he now makes hundreds. By machinery the worker's power to produce has been increased ten, twenty, fifty, a hundred, and in some cases a thousandfold and even more. Now this greatly increased power of the worker to produce with the aid of machinery while not owning the machinery, deprives him of just that portion of his product that the machinery enables him to create in excess of what he could produce without the machinery. And that portion is, by recent statistics of the United States census, far in excess of what the machinery is worth, plus a reasonable salary for brains to superintend. I have before me statistics of United States census from 1870 to 1900. I will give only one example: In the steel industry in 1870, there was an average product to each worker per annum of $2,668 for which each received an average of $525 in wages. Thirty years later, with the formation of combines for cooperation, and the adoption of the economical and labor-saving devices and processes, there was an average of product to each worker per annum of $11,684, for the producing of which each worker received an average of $9,016, while the increase of wages for the same time was only $18. In other words, each worker, in 1870, received about $210 in wages for each thousand he produced, while in 1900 he received only $47 for each thousand worth of produce. This plainly shows where the immense accumulation of wealth is going, and at an ever increasing rate. It flows to the controlling heads from every avenue of industry, as the ramifying tributaries of the Mississippi flow steadily and surely to the Gulf of Mexico. These institutions defy all competition. It is as utterly useless for individuals to try to compete with them as to try to swallow the moon. Witness the recent efforts of the whole state of Kansas to buck the Standard Oil Company, and its failure. Gradually, and as surely as the world moves, individual and small company enterprises all over the country are giving way and losing ground—going out of business—because they can not compete with the great combination of capital represented in the trusts. The scope of the great industrial combines covers the whole field of our physical necessities; so that when we buy a beefsteak we contribute to the beef trust; or a suit of clothes, to the woolens combine; or sugar, to the sugar monopoly; and so on through the whole range of our temporal wants and needs we are paying "tribute to Caesar," not only in the way of profit on what we buy, but also by the loss in the just ratio of wages to the increase of wealth produced. It forms an ever increasing tide flowing to the centers of control. It is draining and ever sapping the common people, laborers, and consumers, rendering the rich richer, and the poor poorer, antagonizing each the other, resulting in strikes, labor troubles, disaster, "commotion," "filling men's hearts with fear." The consummation of these tendencies will be "desolation," war, bloodshed. Hence the necessity of fleeing to Zion for safety. And before the worst comes we want to make use of time. If this array of reasons is not enough to move us to action, what will? The Lord has done all he can, it seems to me, unless he should unroll the scroll that veils his presence and shut down to us from the vault of heaven; and if he should, he would in all probability be heard saying, in words clear and plain, "The law given in section forty-two . . . is as if it were given to-day; and the bishop and his counselors, and the high council, and the bishop and his council, and the storehouse and the temple and the salvation of my people, are the same to me now that they were in the day when I gave the revelation."—Doctrine and Covenants 122:6.

Yes, we must gather to Zion, for the foregoing reasons and many others too numerous to mention. But how are we to go about it? There must be some misunderstanding about the matter, for the "gathering" is not progressing very rapidly at present. Let us see the cause, for cause there must be. We see only an occasional pilgrimage toward Zion, and many who go there have to face about and seek more favorable places to live. In and near Independence land is high, and there is employment for a very limited number, and often the Zion-seeking pilgrim is compelled to seek elsewhere for the means of a livelihood, and with his once highly exalted idea of Zion suffering acute contraction. There is one condition or rule of the "gathering," however, that the church is surely complying with, and that is: "Let not your gathering be in haste."—Doctrine and Covenants 98:9. But this deliberation is born of indifference and misunderstanding, and is not a healthy feature. We are commanded to have "all things prepared" before going. (Doctrine and Covenants 98:9.) And the very fact that "all things" are not prepared is the reason so few are going, and is also the reason so many have to turn away after they do go. This preparation consists in vastly more than merely corresponding with the bishop, announcing to him that you intend coming, and asking him to look up a position for you, or a location for you, or to secure a house ready for you to move into, and the like. This kind of preparation is beggarly compared to the preparation God has outlined in his commandments.

The Lord's plan is:

1. It must needs be necessary, that ye save all the money that ye can, and that ye obtain all that ye can in righteousness, that in time ye may be enabled to purchase lands for an inheritance, even the city.—Doctrine and Covenants 48:2. Now, verily I say unto you, Let all the churches [branches] gather together all their moneys.—Ibid., 98:10. According to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the bishop in Zion.—Ibid., 72:3. I require all this surplus property to be put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion.—Ibid., 106:1. All those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe the law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you.—Verse 2.

It is quite like a great and wise mind in setting about to accomplish a great commercial transaction, to first secure the necessary funds. And the foregoing shows the way the Lord means to go about it. Some may stagger when called upon to "lay all things" before the bishop; to give all their "surplus." But the end justifies the means. The end is: To create a condition where fear of want shall be unknown; to organize an institution in which we shall all have equal interests; where every iota of the products of our toil shall remain in our own hands; where we may have more time to refine ourselves and think of the things of God; where every legitimate need whether arising from the spiritual, moral, social, or physical phases of our natures, may be supplied. Would this not be worth laying "all things" before the bishop? Would not so noble an end justify the given means? Yes, surely; for what more should any one want?

The gospel is sufficient to answer every necessary condition to man's complete development, the temporal as well as the spiritual. It seems that it would be easy to "lay all things before the bishop" for a purpose so great and good, so full of beneficent possibilities for human kind. We shall have to sense and put into practice the greatest commandment if we would receive the greatest blessing: "Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind."—Luke 10:28. This means plainly and simply, that every energy of our being should be expended in a way that would transform into love for God. We have been taught to love the Lord with the heart—to have good intentions and holy aspirations,—and with the mind, to think of his word and meditate on his law; and we have made some progress along that line; but to love him with all our soul and strength has not yet fully dawned upon us all, I am afraid. How may I love God with all my strength? With my strength I can dig, saw, wield the ax, the blacksmith's hammer, till the soil, reap the fields; with my soul (body and spirit combined), I can paint, draw, compose music, write books, plead at the bar, preach the gospel. I can turn all these activities into love for the Lord, only by laying all that I obtain or produce by my digging, sawing, wielding the ax, the blacksmith's hammer, tilling the soil, etc., which is more than I need for my living, before the bishop of the church, for the establishing of Zion. Likewise the surplus product of my energies if I paint, draw, compose, or plead at the bar, as well as preach the gospel, I should render up as a wise steward for the redemption of Zion and establishing her municipals, if I would love the Lord with all my soul and strength. For in thus "laying all things" before the bishop, and in rendering up my surplus property, it will go to establish Zion,—a commonwealth where all my brethren as well as myself will be vastly benefited, and in doing so to them, I do it unto the Lord. Thus I may transform every motion I make, every intent of my heart, every idea of my mind, every power of my soul, and every energy of my strength into love for the Lord; and this is our reasonable service. Again the Lord's plan, after providing the way to raise funds, is:

2. And let honorable men be appointed, even wise men, and send them to purchase these lands; and every church in the eastern countries when they are built up, if they will hearken unto this counsel, they may buy lands and gather together upon them, and in this way they may establish Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 42:10.

The purpose for which the properties given as "consecration" and "surplus," and also the office-work and prerogatives of these "wise men," are more fully outlined in section 42, where the Lord says that these properties that are to be laid before the bishop "shall be kept in my storehouse, to administer to the poor and needy, as shall be appointed by the high council of the church, and the bishop and his council, and for the purpose of purchasing lands for the public benefit of the church, and building houses of worship, and building up of the New Jerusalem, . . . that my covenant people may be gathered in one, in that day when I shall come to my temple. And this I do for the salvation of my people."—Doctrine and Covenants 42:10. Behold here some of the very important things to be done for our salvation as well as to preach faith, repentance, baptism, etc., and if the elders will preach full salvation, declare the whole counsel of God, they must preach also the “gathering,” “tithing,” “consecration,” “redemption of Zion,” “the storehouse,” etc., if the “covenant people” are ever “to be gathered in one,” the temple built, and the “salvation of my people” accomplished. Then again, the Lord’s plan, after securing funds, and having “wise men” appointed, is:

3. To “purchase lands.” Land is the basis for all industrial operations, hence the most important, and first to be secured in this great and beneficent undertaking. What lands should our “wise men” purchase? Let the Lord answer: “The land of Missouri, which is the land which I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of my saints: . . . Behold, the place which is now called Independence, is the center place.”—Doctrine and Covenants 57:1. Again, “And it is wisdom, also, that there should be lands purchased in Independence, for the place of the storehouse, and also for the house of the printing.”—Doctrine and Covenants 58:7. In section 98, paragraph 9 (which was given after the early church was driven from Zion by their enemies), the Lord, seemingly to prevent any thought obtaining that he had given up the idea of gathering his saints, says “that they shall continue to gather together unto the places which I have appointed; . . . but let all things be prepared before you; and in order that all things shall be prepared before you, observe the commandments which I have given concerning these things, which saith, or teacheth, to purchase all the lands by money, which can be purchased for money, in the region round about the land which I have appointed to be the land of Zion, for the beginning of the gathering of my saints; all the land which can be purchased in Jackson County, and the counties round about, and leave the residue in mine hand.”—Doctrine and Covenants 98:9. Jackson County and the counties round about give quite a large scope in Missouri and also in Kansas, for the planting of nuclei of Saints.
The tacit thought is that the more favorable places in these counties be chosen, inasmuch as the lands may be available by purchase. Any portion not available by purchase is to be left in the Lord’s hands.
In another revelation in June, 1834, the same direction is reiterated concerning the available lands in Jackson County and the counties round about: “For it is my will that these lands should be purchased, and after they are purchased that my saints should possess them according to the laws of consecration which I have given.”—Doctrine and Covenants 102:8.
This is enough to make it clear where the lands are to be purchased, and that the Saints are to possess them as marked out. But the warning is often given to prepare all things beforehand, and to go by the counsel of the proper officers of the church, in a systematic way, so that confusion and disappointment may not ensue. Let us look again for some more of the Lord’s plan:

4. And again, inasmuch as there is land obtained, let there be workmen sent forth, of all kinds, unto this land, to labor for the saints of God. Let all these things be done in order. And let the privileges of the lands be made known, from time to time, by the bishop, or the agent of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 58:12.

Now we are beginning to see what it is to have “all things prepared before you.” These workmen are a very important factor in getting all things prepared for the Saints to go to Zion. The Saints are not to go as in days of yore, empty-handed, as in “prairie-schooners,” and settle on raw lands, and endure all the suffering and hardships of frontier life through lack of necessary equipment, lack of employment, lack of houses for shelter; but “workmen of all kinds” are to be sent up to “prepare the way” for the Saints. These workmen are evidently to build houses upon the lands purchased, for the Saints to live in. They are to erect “storehouse” buildings in which to keep the surplus products of the Saints in all their avocations, whether in money or in kind; to build houses for schools, that the children may continue to be educated; to establish laundry plants that their garments may be kept clean; to erect shops, mills, foundries, and plants for manufacturing shoes, woolens, cottons, furniture, and such things, to be utilized by the Saints in all their daily needs, and thus to furnish them employment, so that the church may “stand independent above all other creatures beneath the celestial world.” (Doctrine and Covenants 77:3.) To be independent is to be in such a condition temporally as not to depend upon any source whatsoever outside of the church for our daily necessities; whether for things to eat, or to wear, or for shelter, or for comfort, or to “please the eye,” or to “gladden the heart,” or to “delight the soul.” All these things are to be supplied by institutions maintained by the church, for the church, within the church, to be made by the labor and skill of the members of the church; the profits to be saved to the church by being kept within the church; thereby obviating a constant drain and loss to the church as is now the woeful case in our unorganized condition commercially, by the profits on every item of our daily necessities of whatsoever nature or kind going out, away from us to the various combinations that are formed for the manufacture, production, and control of all these things.

When this kind of preparation is made for the Saints, they will not have to turn back disappointed when they go to Zion. How like a kind and loving Father to anticipate our every need and lay down the instructions so that, by following them, every required necessity for the complete development of human character, both spiritually and temporally, may be easily obtained! Yes, the gospel is sufficient for us, when we live by every word of God. If we will only avail ourselves of the privilege and opportunity God has given us to better ourselves temporarily, we can soon have an industrial institution, to which that of Dowie, or Booth, or the Amana Society can not "hold a candle." It grieves my heart to see the Saints everywhere struggling on in this weak way, in many cases growing weaker financially, waging the unequal struggle for existence against the great odds occasioned by the combined strength of corporations and trusts. Single-handed they can never hope to compete, and the only wise thing to do is to live by every word of God,—that portion of his word relating to Zion, as well as that part relating to our spiritual welfare.

Why will we longer hesitate, when he has given so many commandments in the revelations to the church through Joseph the Martyr, and also through the present president of the church, covering, to my mind, every essential feature of the "gathering," promising by implication in section 118, paragraph 11, that when we get to that stage of her development in the redemption of Zion where we shall need further instructions, they will be given? We have all these explicit directions from the Lord for the betterment of our material conditions on the one hand; and on the other hand we have a colossal object-lesson given us to-day in the whole commercial world, speaking to us in thunder tones of the benefit of cooperation, combination, uniting of interests for mutual benefits; of many men of small means pooling their financial strength to accomplish undertakings that any one single-handed could not. Are we going to profit by all this? Are we ever going to learn? Have not the Latter Day Saints faith? Are we afraid to launch out? Are we going to wait till we are pushed by force of circumstances to make use of this beautiful and equitable industrial institution the Lord has marked out for us? The portents indicate the latter. And unless there is a "shaking among the dry bones," and an increase of interest in this direction, more than the "five" will be of the foolish virgins.

I believe we can even now redeem Zion if we only will to do it. But we must be like Zion of old if we accomplish it,—of one heart and one mind. Just think what the result would be if the fifty thousand or more people who are members of the church should be of one heart and one mind on the principle of consecration of property for the establishing of Zion. If they all had no other object—if that were the one great undertaking they had in mind,"they would not want to give any of their surplus or money for any other purpose—and this is as it should be—till it shall be accomplished. And it would be to the best interests of every member so to do. It would be more conducive to prosperity, peace, and safety, than to go it single-handed and alone in the business world against such great odds, and in the end be disheartened by loss through competition and otherwise, and final bankruptcy. Why not the whole membership thus unite under the Lord's leadership and be successful in the best system of cooperation under the sun? What would be the results if every member should give to the redemption fund even twenty-five cents a week? It would amount to fifty thousand dollars each month. In twenty months one million dollars. This sum would buy four thousand acres of land at one hundred dollars an acre, build three hundred houses costing one thousand dollars each, and establish six manufacturing establishments of the extent of the Independence Mercantile Company. That would prepare the way for many Saints to gather, and would provide employment for them. Besides, a great deal of revenue and profit would accrue to the church through her industrial establishments, and the surplus that would come to the storehouses.

This would enable the church to send out more missionaries, and they would soon be going to every dark corner of the earth carrying the glad news of salvation full and complete. This is no fairy tale, but a glorious possibility. And if we would observe the law of consecration, the Bishop's hands would soon be loosed to bring about this glorious possibility. The church could easily raise twice or three times the amount I have used as a basis of calculation in the same length of time. We could soon become one of the greatest institutions on earth, and would surely become "independent" as the Lord desires we should be. Thus may we become the richest of all people, as they were of Book of Mormon times when they served the Lord in righteousness. Thus we may be like those in the city of Enoch, "there were no poor among them."

There will be no insurance companies in Zion, for the church is our insurance, under God's plan, against want, hunger, sickness, poverty, and graft. If the money that is now paid into insurance companies, secret orders, clubs, and the like, were given into the hands of the Bishop, he could assist us in time of sickness and tide us over in times of distress. The very best thing we can all do is to consecrate according to the blank forms for inventories the Bishop furnishes, and then be wise stewards and "lay all things" before the Bishop more than we need for our actual daily expenses, and then live frugal lives, and have much better health. May that glorious time soon come.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Reading for February Meetings of Daughters of Zion.

DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

(By Elder J. W. Rushion, English Mission.)

"Daughters of Zion!" How significant. You are to be congratulated upon so apt a title. It will not be superficial to pause at this appellation and consider the meaning and responsibility involved in the definition. We shall have material both valuable and prolific. The definition of the word Zion is well known to all who are acquainted with the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and this will serve our purpose: "The pure in heart." Note that this is descriptive of a state, a condition, being without reference at all to location. Offspring of a people who are pure in their affections and impulses and the mothers that will be of a pure and chaste race! What a wealth of momentous issues are contained in this title! The world has the right to expect the coming generation of the church to be in deed and in truth a veritable "goodly heritage."

If we shall take the affirmation of some scientists and moral philosophers for granted, that the maternal influence upon the children preponderates above the paternal, as nine to one, then we can discern as in a flood of light, the splendid mission that the women of our church have been intrusted with. If they will therefore become enthusiasm with the earnest desire to make themselves efficient in this holy calling, who shall articulate the possibilities of the near future?

The vision that is thus conjured up is not a chimera born of a disordered imagination, but the deliberate pronouncement of modern thought and experience. We are not so much dependent upon extraneous circumstances for improvement as we have been wont to think. Real and lasting improvement must, at least in its initial steps, come from within. Increased knowledge and a fuller research has acquainted us with the fact that all the influences which have bearing upon the development of the human character can be classified under one of two heads, viz.: heredity or environment. Of these two history and experience have proven that the most important is the influence of heredity. Doctrine and Covenants classify the faculties with which the race is endowed as follows: 1. Animal propensities. 2. Moral sentiments. 3. Intellectual faculties. He says of them: "Considering them in detail, we do not find one of them that man has made or could have made for himself. These faculties are the direct gifts of the Creator."—Moral Philosophy, pp. 5-7.

The influence of environment does not create these faculties; the results of environment are to be seen in the development or degeneracy with their almost endless variety, of these inherent faculties.

Heredity, so to speak, supplies the material which is both latent and plastic. Environment provides more or less for the development and the molding of that crude material. Children may be, and unfortunately too often are, born into an environment that is physically and morally unwholesome, and consequently is injurious if not actually inimical to even a normal development. If, however, the child has received, as the heritage of parental fitness, the inward strength and power of survival, supplemented by a clearly defined conception of duty and responsibility, the influences of environment may not only be neutralized but this negative victory may be pressed into service as a positive aid to moral and spiritual conquest, the crowning glory of which shall be the incarnation of these moral and spiritual qualities into living character.

"The history of the world," says Carlyle, "is the history of its great men." These great men of history have acquired their well-deserved fame in nearly all instances, because they had utilized the very circumstances by which they were surrounded which were opposed to them, as the means of their achievement and victory. In the gorgeous fabrices of individual greatness and heroic splendor, the shadows and the blacknesses in all their somberness are tastefully interwoven with the bright and glowing colors of fortune and prosperity, thus producing an artistic harmony. The world's greatest example, "The glory of all the ages"—Son of God—it is true, but it requires the Son of Man to complete the divine whole. It would not only be an injustice, but it would be impossible to preserve the historic greatness of the Christ if we remove from the picture of his fascinating life the cruel suspicion that obscured his birth, his childhood's poverty, his wearying toil and labor as a carpenter's son, which brings him so very near to the throbbing hearts of the toiling multitudes; his temptations, his weariness, his sorrow, his disappointments and the lowering gloom of Gethsemane's garden, with its unspeakable anguish and the appalling tragedy of Calvary—these are just as necessary to his resplendent glory as the transfiguration and the Easter-tide of his resurrection. We cherish these dark memories because, in the poetry of the most prosaic of the apostles, "He has been touched with the feeling of our infirmities." He is so great because he was so little. He is what he is, not because of his environment, but in spite of it.

This principle seems to be so very clear that we do not hesitate to assert that redemption must come from within, and that the Daughters of Zion will have no small part to play in that great work. Until we, as a church, individually and collectively, have so developed the necessary force and persistency of character that it will transform the existing conditions, Zion is impossible. The Saints will not "be" because of Zion, any more than God is because of heaven. The presence of evil produces hell; so also does the saintly character produce Zion.

The framework, the skeleton of character, is molded and erected by the early training, as graphically described by Thackeray: "Sow an act and reap a habit; sow a habit and reap a character, sow a character and reap a destiny." The comparatively new science of psychology has taught us that upon the gray substance which we call the brain, the organ of the mind, each act makes a very slight indentation which is deepened by repetition, until it becomes a groove. With every step in the light of knowledge, the reverence of Kant's sublime declaration is increasingly made manifest: "There are two things which fill me with awe; one is the starry heavens, and the other man's moral responsibility."

How immeasurably responsible are those upon whom devolves the duty of laying the foundation, and of guiding the first indentations upon the surface of a new soul. Let us ask upon whom does the burden of the sacred duty devolve? Which are the primary influences which are brought to bear? We can only answer, mother, father, and the home life. We will not specifically consider what are called the prenatal influences, for they are mysterious and beyond many of us.

Still, we are entitled to remark that the aggregation of the still cumulative knowledge and power which is possessed by us presently will inevitably be bequeathed by us to the coming generation. It is, therefore, an urgent duty, a debt that we owe to the past and the present and the future, that we shall, by a faithful compliance to the organic laws of our being, confer upon our posterity the very best physical, mental, moral, and spiritual equipment of which we are capable. It is a criminal injustice to impose an inheritance of such momentous weight upon a generation of incapables. The present time demands from the parents of to-day the very best that can be given. It is very poor economy to simply think of the present and pay no regard for the coming morrow.

As to the laws that govern the marital relation, we will not speak, but we can not forbear to ask, "Could marriage prove to be so tragic a failure as is witnessed in the divorce courts, in the childless homes, or in the host of sickly, whining children..."
who either find a premature grave, or drag out a precarious existence in a state of unending agony if these laws were properly complied with?" We need to adjust the conditions by commencing with the idea of marriage to begin with; let us teach our young men and maidens that holy matrimony is a religious obligation to further the purposes of the divine Creator, and it is a duty to God that we give to him for his service the very best we can give, and that it is not a legalizing of the gratification of animal passion or unbridled lust.

Well, these very important matters we will pass, and come to his majesty, the baby. The possible what? Who shall tell?

It depends very largely upon the mother to decide the destiny of the world in the character of her child. There is nothing more scientifically true than the old proverb, "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." It is not an aimless concurrence of chances nor accidental, that Providence has ordered conditions in the way we find them in Nature.

There is no spot in all the experience of man that is so sacred as home. No matter what shall be the after-career, let it be prosperous or checkered or adverse, memory will fondly enshrine that "old home" amid the tenderest of recollections. Mothers and fathers are reverently canonized; brothers and sisters are affectionately garlanded with love's choicest flowers. None of the kaleidoscopic scenes of life can ever erase the cherished memories of childhood's home. Every piece of furniture is faithfully identified, and some day when resting from life's busy strain, away from the warring elements and disturbing commercial cataclysms, we fondly wander back through the bygone years and in sweet childishness rebuild the old house.

There passes before us the soft, immaterial forms in which we recognize those who left us long, long ago; and with far too swift a rapidity scene gives place to scene, and the heart is melted, the soul is chastened, and the eye is moistened with the tear that has long been withheld. In that hour of sacred quiet we hold communion with Saints. But we awake; alas! all is over, 'twas but a dream, a vision, and, heaving a sigh, we wipe away the escaping tear; once more there breaks upon us the hum of life's ceaseless machinery; but we rise mellowed, and melted, the soul is chastened, and the eye is moistened with the tear that has long been withheld. In that hour of sacred quiet we hold communion with Saints. But we awake; alas! all is over, 'twas but a dream, a vision, and, heaving a sigh, we wipe away the escaping tear; once more there breaks upon us the hum of life's ceaseless machinery; but we rise mellowed, and hallowed, and strengthened by the far-off vision of the never-to-be-forgotten "Home, Sweet Home." God grant that this is a true picture of each reader's experience. Out of the multititudes that fancy conjures to our presence, there is none that fills so large a place, so holy a place, and so tender a place, as the mother. Before her sacred memory we pause with bowed heads and listening ears to catch some sweet echo and subtle fragrance of her erstwhile real, but now spiritual personality, which lives for us now but in memory. Father we love and reverence; brothers and sisters we esteem with unfathomable affection, but none can ever supplant her, or take her place. We have husband, or wife and children, but that place is holy, and consecrated to her memory; and while the surging tide of life's happy memories shall ebb and flow, bringing new faces and new experiences, her niche is never emptied nor refilled; but always now, as of yore, her loving tenderness, gentle chiding, untiring fidelity in sickness, in trouble, in all the little petty annoyances of school-life and youth and manhood or womanhood, never, never, never shall she be forgotten.

Considering this, can we marvel that the saintly Drummond wrote with such exquisite charm, that it seemed to him all Nature had been serving herself for the supreme production of love, and that love found its highest and holiest expression, humanly speaking, in motherhood? (I have not quoted verbatim.) Daughters of Zion, what a splendid mission, what a matchless responsibility! Last conference we heard of some sister for whom ordination was solicited. Already are you ordained to the highest and holiest of all priesthoods, the work of which begins, and will continue, before and after all other duties have begun and ended.

Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, January 7, 1906.

Editors Herald: A very eventful day to me is this. It mingles news of sadness and cheer. I received a letter this forenoon that father is dead; and an hour or two later I signed propositions with a Roman Catholic bishop, Father Sinnett, of Prince Albert, for a joint discussion to begin here on the 16th.

Poor father passed away on the first day of this year,—last Monday,—and was to be buried on Thursday following. Sister writes that President Evans was to conduct the funeral-service. No telegraphic dispatch could have got me home in time. I was uneasy a year ago about him, knowing of his feebleness. Was afraid that he might not linger till I reached home, which was then indefinite. I prayed. God heard me, and gave me a promise in your patriarchal blessing, I think be spared till you come again."

I said; "and from your condition, and a promise in your patriarchal blessing, I think you better get ready for the other world, however soon I may be called there myself." He had obeyed the gospel and I hope he is happy.

I suppose I could go home or could have gone home during his few sinking weeks, but I will stand by my post. I came into the church first in our locality, and influenced most of our family, and some others to come in; and if father is happy I care not if there were a world between me and home. It is the first invasion by death of our family of six.

The Catholics here—one at least—challenged me to meet the local priest: I accepted. An effort was made to get him, but he would not. Finding the pressure insupportable, they sent for the bishop, who appeared with their representative to-day, (as I was about to begin my sermon,) with waving beard and flowing gown. I gave liberty for remarks or announcements after I was through. He arose and talked a few minutes, stating his willingness to meet me. I wrote out propositions and we both signed, shook hands, and parted. He would not debate more than five days; but if we can have day and night sessions it will be quite an extension after all.

Editors Herald: Emma and I had the pleasure of being with our son Frank W. and family at San Jacinto on Thanksgiving Day, Bro. P. M. Betts and wife, the parents of Annie, Frank's wife, also being present. Of course we had a very enjoyable time together, and on the Sunday following we all went to Hemet to meet in Brown's Hall, in a Latter Day Saints' Sunday-school and in preaching-service.

Bro. E. S. Brown, after trying in various ways to introduce our church-work in that town, finally bought a lot and a small building, and has arranged the building so very nicely that it makes an excellent meeting-place, and the two families have organized a Sunday-school, and now meet regularly each Sunday morning in Sunday-school and worship, and hope to have some of their neighbors interested in the angel message of these last times. We held several meetings in the chapel, and Emma and I tarried in the hospitable home of Bro. Brown during that time. I hope they will succeed in continuing their services and interesting their neighbors. Elder Brown will be aided by Elder P. M. Betts as long as he remains in San Jacinto, and F. W. Burton, who is a priest, and both the families attend and will undoubtedly do a good work in that section of country.

I held two services also at San Jacinto; but the people there were too much afraid of being deceived, religiously, so did not give the elder a hearing. From there we went to Colton and on to Los Angeles and Garden Grove, and enjoyed the society of the Saints in those places.

I hope the Saints will learn and abide by the law of God, as more particularly explained in the Doctrine and Covenants, concerning the wealth of the church and members. There are a great number of theories concerning properties, but our Master has shown us plainly the best method of caring for each other, and of the true equality of men in connection with individual ownership, or stewardship,—in fact the only system known among men combining all these requisites. May our Father still direct Israel to-day as formerly, and lead us by heavenly light.

Joseph F. Burton.

Winterhill, Massachusetts, January 2, 1906.

Dear Herald: Events of more than ordinary interest have taken place with us recently, one of which was the dedication of a monument to Joseph Smith the Martyr, at Dairy Hill, South Royalton, Vermont, on December 23, being the one hundredth anniversary of his birth. Elder Junius F. Wells, of the Utah church, is the one largely responsible for the work, and who carried it to a successful completion. Elder Wells has the credit of being the one who conceived the idea, upon a visit made by him to the place last year. He reported it to the presidency of the church in Utah, and received permission to proceed, and draw carte blanche on them for financial help. A good deal of careful work was done by him, looking over old records, deeds, local tradition, and histories to make certain of the exact location, which is generally conceded now as being correct. The old foundation was discovered and a new cottage built upon the precise spot. The old hearthstone was found and the new structure is so arranged that the hearthstone is put in the exact place that it was formerly, when the baby Joseph played and cooed in front of the old-fashioned log fireplace.

The new cottage is furnished with up-to-date furniture and a car-taker will be placed there to prevent vandalism. No pains was spared in a moderate way to make the place appropriate.

In the rear of the cottage stands the monument. On the face nearest the cottage was this inscription:

"Sacred to the Memory of Joseph Smith
the Prophet born here
23d December, 1805
Martyred
Carthage, Illinois
27th June, 1844."

On the reverse face is this historical record:

"TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH SMITH.

"In the spring of the year of our Lord 1820, the Father and the Son appeared to him in a glorious vision, called him by name and instructed him.

"Thereafter Heavenly angels visited him and revealed the principles of the gospel, restored the authority of the Holy Priesthood and the organization of the Church of Jesus Christ in its fullness and perfection.

"The engraved plates of the Book of Mormon were given him by the angel Moroni, these he translated by the gift and power of God.

"He organized the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints on the sixth day of April, 1830, with six members.

"He devoted his life to the establishment of this church and sealed his testimony with his blood.

"In his minority he was constantly supported by his brother, Hyrum Smith, who suffered martyrdom with him.

"Over a million of converts to this testimony have been made throughout the world; and this monument has been erected in his honor, to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of his birth by members of the church which he organized.

"They love and venerate him as a prophet of God, and call his name blessed for ever and ever. Amen."

Around the upper edge of the die, on all four sides, is the following:

"If any of you lack wisdom, let him Ask of God that giveth to all men Liberally and upbraided not And it shall be given him.—James 1:5."

It is said to be the largest polished monolith in the world. It is made of granite from the quarries in Barre, Vermont. The amount of money expended as reported at the dedication is about $25,000.

On the evening of the 22d I arrived at South Royalton. On the train with me came several who reside in New York and Boston and other points in the East, among whom were Elder J. McQuarry, president of the Eastern Mission; Elder Hentze, now temporarily sojourning in Boston, attending to the work of publishing the Book of Mormon in the Turkish language, he being the translator (Elder Hentzez has been a missionary in Turkey and other parts of the East where that language is spoken); Elder Peterson, a student at Harvard; Professor Easton, the noted tenor singer of the Mormon church; Miss Gates, granddaughter of Brigham Young, called the "Mormon Nightingale." We found the people to attend from Utah had already arrived on their special car. Such celebrities as Joseph F. Smith, A. H. Lund, F. M. Lyman, Hyrum Smith, George A.

Smith, and C. W. Penrose of the Twelve; Angus M. Cannon, Lorin Farr, J. F. Smith, Jr., Bishop Romney, and several more that I can not mention. The next morning brought J. W. Young, son of Brigham, now of later celebrity among Gentle business men of the East.

About all were domiciled at the hotel, the only one in town, some, however, staying in the private residences of the town. Saturday, the 23d, at half past eight o'clock in the morning, the gathering toward the monument began, it being four miles from the village among those picturesque hills of Vermont. Snow enough covered the ground to go in sleds, sleighs, etc. Ample provision was made for all to go. Elders Hentze, Peterson, Pack and wife (now studying medicine in Columbia College, New York), and B. O. Bean, author of the play, based upon the Book of Mormon, called "Coriantumr," (who says the play will be placed upon the stage soon, under more competent artists and management than previously when it did not succeed,) were in the sleigh with me.

I was pleased to be told by Elder Pack that he was well treated by the 'Josephites' while in his missionary work in Colorado. Elder Peterson also spoke very highly of his contact with our people in California; while Elder Hentze had the same report from his labor in Nebraska and Iowa with special praise for Bro. J. C. Crabb. I was told by these men that about the easiest proposition they have to meet in their work as missionaries is the Reorganization. So you see we are not all the ones who nurse conceit of our powers on polemic lines. I felt that our reciprocity was mutual.

The service began at eleven o'clock in the forenoon as per following extract from the Boston Globe, December 24:

"President Smith conducted the exercises, and the Vermonters gazed with interest on the head of the religion which seems to most New Englanders strange. Few of them appreciated the significance of the life of the man whose monument they came to dedicate—a man who, in point of achievement, takes rank with the founders of religions, Mahomet and Buddha.

"The company, at the direction of the First President, sang 'America,' and Pre-ident Anthon H. Lund offered prayer. The Mormon dignitaries are all big, bully men, of commanding presence, usually heavily bearded and of tremendous virility. To-day they were constantly occupied with the duties of hospitality, for all the natives were considered and treated as guests on this occasion.

"The President introduced Mr. Wells and asked him to tell again the story of the acquiring of the homestead and the getting and placing of the monument, which has been a feat of astounding difficulties.

"Mr. Wells told how hard it was to find a single piece of granite, perfect and without flaw, for the various parts of the monument. The greatest of these was of course the shaft, which is thirty-eight and one half feet long. Granite lies in bowlders, and a bowlder large enough to contain this piece was not easily found.

"When it was found, the difficulties began. A special spur track had to be built down into the quarry to get it out of its bed at all, and special dispensations from the railroads had to be obtained to send the base, twelve feet square, lying flat on a car. It could not be handled if sent on edge, the usual way. Another railroad track and switch had to be placed at Royalton village, a bridge across a branch had to be constructed, and the various bases and the shaft had to be pulley-hauled six miles up soft mountain roads.

"None of the Mormons made much reference in the way of argument for their faith. Mr. Wells said:

"'I believe Joseph Smith was a perfect man. I know this is contrary to the notions of a good many of you. But we've proved our faith, and you haven't proved yours, some of you.' (Laughter.)

"He gave credit to the men who had helped in the work, naming one after another in public thanks and testifying to the kindly way in which the 'neighbors' had assisted him at every chance.

"The total cost of the sixty-eight acres of land, the cottage, the monument, and the getting of things into position, was less than twenty-five thousand dollars.

"R. C. Easton, of Salt Lake City, a beautiful tenor, sang, and President F. M. Lyman—for the presidency consists of three men—spoke in direct thanks and gratitude to the Vermonters.

"'Mr. Wells,' he said, 'couldn't have done this thing but for your stone, your men, your horses, your railroads. We thank the Lord and we thank you, and Vermont. We want your friendship; you have ours. Come out West and let us get even with you. Don't be afraid of us; we believe in religion, we believe in Christ, we are Christians.

"This spot will become one of the most famous in Vermont or the United States, and visitors will come here from all over the world.

"Doctor Edgar Fish spoke in response for the Vermont people. He said:

"'In behalf of a large number of business men and representative people of this vicinity, I bring greeting to these people who have come among us. We have watched the progress of this work with interest, and are glad now to be able to offer our hearty congratulations on its completion. We join with them in pride. And we greet you as men, not as believers in any particular creed. You have come in peace; come, then, in peace.'

"John Henry Smith, one of the apostles and a cousin of the Prophet, delivered a fiery oration, claiming patriotism as a quality which Mormons have, though they have often been accused of being unpatriotic. Incidentally, it was this speaker who first mentioned Brigham Young, who led the Mormons across the plains to Salt Lake, and whose name is better known than that of any other Mormon to most people of the country.

"Miss Susan Young Gates, a descendant of the prophet, and a soprano of wonderful quality and fine European training, sang a duet with Mr. Easton, and Hyrum Smith, grandson of the prophet, and though a young man an apostle of the church, spoke briefly.

"Jesse M. Smith, whose mother's people were Vermonters, though he himself is directly connected with the Prophet's family by descent, spoke briefly, and Charles W. Penrose, editor of the Deseret News, the Mormon daily of Salt Lake City, begged the neighbors to watch over the monument against relic-hunting vandals who may feel it their duty to chip off souvenirs.

"Then President Smith offered the dedication prayer, earnestly, eloquently. The company sang, 'The Star Spangled Banner,' and went out into the picturesque snowstorm which was sitting down finely among the ranked horses. President Smith pulled the flag.

"There were ten persons in the Utah party named Smith, and the relationships form an almost inextricable tangle. All were, however, related in some way to the Prophet or to his elder brother, Hyrum Smith, who is called the patriarch.

"Only one representative of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints was present. He was received with utmost courtesy socially, but with no ecclesiastical recognition whatever. He is F. M. Sheehy of the Eastern department of the Reorganized Church, with headquarters in Boston.'

"I was told by one of the young Mormons that the descendants of Brigham Young were offended, which accounted for the early departure of J. W. Young, because there was so little regard for the Youngs.

While I enjoyed the sentiment prevailing on the occasion, touching the life and work of the Prophet that opened the 'dispenation of the fullness of times,” I felt strongly how the current of my own life and those whom I have been able to lead have been influenced by his work. My cup of ardent and appreciation was running over, and also I would have spoken on the occasion, and express my gratitude. The strangeness of the ‘irony of fate’ made me feel lonesome. I stood as the only one representing the true and lawful work of the Prophet, the church that is recognized as being the lawful and legitimate one following the work established by the man to whom the monument is erected.

I was also empowered to represent the family if allowed. There stood those men, saying they admired Joseph Smith, who taught his followers that “he that keepeth the law of God hath no need to fear the laws of man,” who had passed themselves in the anomalous position before the world, by their statement at Washington, that they were living in defiance of the laws of God and the laws of man, and they expected to continue to do so. Such a blot upon the scene at Sharon, Windsor County, Vermont, was at least depressing in its effect.

If the work of the Prophet has that kind of effect upon American citizens, it ought to be deplored, execrated, instead of eulogized. It was pleasing to feel that I stood for a church that has no such a record to blur his memory.

The feeling among the people as I met them in Royalton was friendly, whether from the mercenary spirit as some urge, thinking the monument will become a sort of Mecca, bringing many devotees as well as tourists, and thereby make business for the place. Edger Wells has certainly left a good impression among the people by his diplomacy and urbane manner. I noticed the reporters present learned of my unique position, and have variously represented me, some saying I was “turned down”; others, that I was treated civilly in a social way, but not recognized; and some even referred to the motive that prompted me.

In speaking for myself in this connection will say the affair was transacted in my field of labor where I ought to keep run of what is going on. I was interested in the matter from a personal standpoint also; in case there should arise a disposition on the part of the folks having the matter in charge to allow the family, or the church, even at the last minute, to be represented, I would be there. I had no disposition to keep from the people the fact that an entire church following the teaching of Joseph Smith were not lawbreakers, either civilly or ecclesiastically.

I could represent my church there as well as in any other part of my field assigned me in the confidence expressed in my appointment. So much as to motive. It is true I was not recognized in an ecclesiastical sense, but by the major part in a social way, courtesy extended, doubtless due to the personal idiosyncrasy of the individual.

Apostle G. A. Smith has brought me under much obligation to him for kind consideration and care. I was informed by one of the Utah people at the last of the proceedings that it was the design on the part of the principal ones to cut me. As to that, I do not know, and will not condemn. The Utah party went to Boston, where they held services in a hall they use on Washington Street. From there they were to go home via Manchester, New York, and visit the Hill Cumorah.

A Trip Through the Prison House.

On the night of February 28, 1902, after retiring for the night, I was thinking of the condition of the disobedient in the world to come, whether my spirit was absent from my body or not, I can not tell. God alone knows. A conductor came to me and said, “Come with me.” We went a very long way and came to a very great valley or pit. Now the pit seemed a very great cavity down in the nethermost part of the earth, thousands of feet deep. Its walls were of solid rock, and within there was nothing but a barren waste; and this scripture came to me: “And they shall be gathered as prisoners are gathered together in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited.”—Isaiah 24: 22. There I beheld a very great multitude of the most sorrowful looking creatures that could be pictured in the mind of man. They asked, “How is it that we are in this condition?” My conductor made answer, “You are receiving the reward that you lived for.” We then turned to our right and came to a very large building, and entered. There I saw a more pitiful sight. Here they were bound with great chains awaiting the great day of the Lord. They asked the same question, “How is it we are in this condition?” We lived according to what we were taught.” My conductor answered again, “You are receiving just what you lived for.”

Again we went east, the source of light, and entered a most beautiful place. The earth was clothed in a beautiful robe of green as far as the eye could reach, and the most beautiful flowers that I ever saw. I saw vessels of pure white set in a straight line, and I could not see the end thereof. Those vessels contained water, about the quantity a person would drink. This water was as clear as crystal, sparkling with very fine bubbles as clear as glass. Again this scripture came to me: “But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall not thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be a fountain of living water.”

We continued our journey till we came to a very large temple, and as I turned my eyes to look my conductor disappeared, and as I looked back I was greatly bewildered. It was some time before I could realize where I was. Although it has been some time since I received this, it is still fresh in my mind.

Died.

FINCH.—Sr. Augusta J. Finch (nee McKain) was born at Pavillion, Michigan, January 2, 1841; married to Charles L. Finch about the 25th of December, 1860, and with her companions, and others, was baptized and confirmed by Elder S. W. L. Scott, November 16, 1861; died January 5, 1906, at Dowagiac, Michigan, being found dead in bed, evidently having passed away without a struggle, aged 65 years and 3 days. Funeral services were conducted by Elder A. S. Cochran, at Nicholletville, Michigan, where she lies by the side of her companion, who died nearly twelve years ago. She leaves four sons and three daughters to mourn their loss.

NIEDORP.—Sr. Cornelia Niedorp (nee Newenhouse) was born April 11, 1845, at Amsterdam, Holland; married June 22, 1887, to emigrated to America in 1888, on the voyage being converted to the Latter Day Saints' Faith; her husband, also a believer, died October 10, 1901; died December 28, 1905, at St. Joseph, Missouri. She leaves three sons and one daughter, all in the faith, also five sisters and two brothers in the Fatherland, to mourn their loss. Funeral-sermon by James Miller. She is held in loving memory by many Saints and friends, as was evidenced by the many beautiful floral tributes.

BOOKER.—Carvil May Booker, daughter of John and Maud Booker, was born February 11, 1904, died January 2, 1906, aged 1 year, 1 month, and 11 days. Services were conducted by Elder A. S. Cochran, at Nicholsville, Michigan, where she lies by the side of her companion, who died nearly twelve years ago. She leaves four sons and three daughters to mourn their loss.

HULSE.—Elizabeth (Knox) Hulse was born at Poughkeepsie, New York, January 7, 1823, having almost reached the close of her eighty-third year at her death. Married to Herman Hulse in 1843, with whom fifty-four years was spent. Was baptized into the church in 1838 by E. C. Briggs. She was ever true to the right, and kind to all. Funeral from home of her daughter, (Mrs.) Sr. Doctor Hooper of Decatur, Michigan, S. W. L. Scott officiating. The attendance manifested the respect in which deceased was held. Interment in Prospect Lake Cemetery beside her husband. Funeral and interment December 25, 1905.

DOWNS.—J. G. Downs was born February 5, 1860, died December 16, 1905, aged 36 years, 9 months, 11 days. Baptised March 7, 1886, by J. W. Kent. He leaves a wife and five children, three brother, one sister, and other relatives and a host of friends to mourn their loss. Funeral-sermon by B. B. Bushell in the Methodist Episcopal church; large attendance at funeral. Bro. Downs lived a consistent life. He gave evidence of his future; said he had evidence of a glorious rest, which was a great consolation to the bereaved ones left behind.

HUNT.—At Dell Rapids, South Dakota, December 14, 1905, Sr. Susanna B., wife of A. W. Hunt; born at Boston, Massachusetts, October 27, 1837. She was the oldest daughter of Samuel H. Smith, brother to Joseph and Hyrum. She was married to Mr. Hunt at Elizabeth, Illinois, December 3, 1858, and removed in 1859 to Mitchell County, Iowa. Mr. Hunt enlisted in 1869 in the Union army; when mustered out they settled in South Dakota, at Dell Rapids. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church at Lamoni, Iowa, May 14, 1905, by Frederick A. Smith, while on a visit to Kansas City seeking relief for a diseased arm. Her brother Samuel and sister Mary survive, living at Salt Lake City, Utah. She was an estimable woman, well liked by her neighbors, as testified by a favorable notice in the Dell Rapids Times for December 22. Funeral-service by Rev. J. F. Bryant, pastor First Baptist church.

HALL. — Sarah Ellen, infant daughter of Mr. G. William and Sr. Mary C. Hall, was born at Novinger, Missouri, October 4, 1905. Blessed by Elder F. T. Mussell. Died at the home of her grandparents, Bro. and Sr. Francis Evans, at Bovier, November 20. Funeral-services, November 21, conducted by F. T. Mussell. Interment in Oakwood Cemetery.

EDWARDS. — At Steubenville, Ohio, December 23, 1905, Sr. Jannetta Sophia Davies. Born November 9, 1837, at Haverfordwest, Pembroke County, South Wales. Married to James Cadwaledr Edwards, September 5, 1853. Baptized at Llanelli, Carmarthen, Wales, October 25, 1878. She spent a life of faithfulness to her family and the church, and died firm in the faith. Emigrated to America in 1898. Leaves four sons and four daughters, eleven grandchildren, three brothers, and two sisters. All her children but one son were present. Service and sermon by Robert M. Elvin from Ecclesiastes 12: 6, 7, at the home, assisted by O. L. Martin. Interment in Union Cemetery.

DOWDEN. — Sarah Dowden was born May 17, 1833, in Illinois. Was married to Mr. Loux in 1853, from which union two sons were born. Mr. Loux died in 1867. She was married to Mr. George Dowden in 1889. Died January 1, 1906, near Monmouth, Iowa. During her last illness she was administered to three times but received only temporary relief. She stated she was baptized by Charles Derry in her younger years. Funeral-service by John Heide at the Methodist Episcopal church to a large attendance.

Every one taught of God and living in harmony with the Spirit of truth, daily is confirmed, under the circumstances of life, in the divinity of the truth, as also he is established in conviction concerning the character of that which is foreign thereto. Awake to the consciousness that he is being led, in harmony with the promise, he discerns more and more clearly that the office of the Spirit of truth is to "make manifest," to point out low conditions and to lead to better things. The promise that he shall not be left alone is verified to him; he is conscious of light within; he sees what heretofore he has not seen, or what hitherto has been vague and lacking in clearness. He is aware that new and greater light has touched and illuminated his spirit. “The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord.”—Job.

However, it is apparent that spiritual growth—power to apprehend and to assimilate truth—like physical growth, is natural; the supernatural is not unnatural, hence spiritual growth is gradual and is based upon fundamental, absolute laws, conditions, or necessities. First the heart must be open to truth; there must be the willingness of strong desire to hear and see and obey, to follow always where the light leads. Some men and women hear the gospel, but do not conform to its principles; hence, when they turn from it lose the light it brought to them, and go into greater darkness; but those who obey receive light and are established in truth by confirmation of the Spirit of truth. Their growth, however, is subject to the law of application, and genuine application results from sincere desire to see and know and do.

It is important to every one that he apprehend the connection of integrity with spiritual growth. It is plain, apparent, that first steps in investigation of truth, made with discriminating care, with determined intention to accept what bears the scrutiny of impartial analysis based upon correct standards—it is plain that obedience based upon such course of action brings the obedient one into touch with, and places the one thus yielding thereto, in possession of the Spirit of truth, the divine intelligence and confirming power which proceeds from the bosom of God himself. The disciple is thus placed in contact with and has access to life—the divine life. He has set to his seal that God is true and is placed in touch, in communion with “the powers of the world to come.” We repeat it, in harmony with indicated former statements, that the significance and importance of results following conformity to truth have been such as to place the individual in touch with the fountain of truth itself; to open up to him all the possibilities God has ordained for his development and perfection. Should therefore solemnly be impressed with the great importance of verifying, ever after, every step of his progress, lest he be diverted into wrong paths, lest he fail to move forward in harmony with the light of truth. The Lord has said that he will give unto the faithful line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little, etc. (See Doctrine and Covenants.) The promise is to the faithful; the aggregate is to be made up of gradual accretions, hence care should be exercised always to make them our own. “He that is faithful shall be made strong in every place.”—Doctrine and Covenants 67:4.

Obedience to first principles, intelligently rendered, should qualify for further steps toward God; should better equip the disciple to make manifest the fruits of his calling. Having seen the erroneous character of the religious systems of men, he should be able more fully to discern the false bases and outgrowths of very much of all mere human institutions. If looking for truth, if possessed of the indwelling illuminant promised the children of the light, he can not follow that light and remain in darkness. It is his to see, to see and know, and to know that he does see; not that he be dogmatic or narrow, but that he be sure of his way, and that he fully appreciate whatever of good there may be about him, and also take cognizance of the untrue, the false, the erroneous, the bad, the imperfect. It is true that development, personal development, is absolutely essential. When a people realizes that salvation requires attainment they are in better position to apply themselves to the work, to the well-directed efforts by which alone attainment is to be secured. And the degree of attainment reached will be based upon the degree and character of application manifest. God in his word, Christ in his life, have given us impressive teaching in this respect. Christ, the greatest manifestation of trieness, purity, spirituality, the complete one, “in whom is hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge,” is the greatest example of devotedness to truth, the most unswerving manifestation of faithful prosecution of true work. If by such means he secured the commendation of the Father, by “finishing” the work given him to do, it follows that a like course of procedure is among the “absolute necessities” in those called to his service. Truth needs not so much of statement, but embodiment; of interpretation by actual living, as Christ embodied it.

It may seem idle to descant upon such themes to a people professing to be of God, but general observation confirms the conclusion that the importance of serious, close attention is realized by but few, proportionately; that few if any realize it to the degree that we should realize it. It has been the case in every age. Our own dispensation is similar to former dispensations, if we are to judge necessities from the constant appeals of the Lord through his word for closer touch with him. Humanity in its various forms, with its characteristics good and bad, its carnality and spirituality, its strength and weaknesses and general imperfections, is gathered into the church, and for the purpose of being cemented into a concrete whole, to be united by conformity to the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom. If all growth is from within, if development consists of an unfolding of innate powers or possibilities, evolved under the benign influence of divinely appointed plans and forces, as we are assured it is, it is important that an intelligent conception of its requirements be realized and that no time be lost, no false moves be made. We must start right, keep going along right lines, and never deviate, no, not for one moment, from truth and principle.

If men and women in the beginning of their spiritual careers need a standard of belief and conduct, they need it all along the line. If failure to adhere to that standard before baptism constitutes failure to obey the truth at the beginning, failure to act in harmony with truth at any point along the line, by the one who has been baptized, constitutes rejection of truth and entails condemnation and loss following such course of action, and to the degree persisted in and unrepented of causes loss of light and divine favor. What we think the people of God, all of us, need above all else, indeed as the basis of all else, is to learn where the truth, the right, lies, and then to adhere to it closely, resolutely, and stand by it at all hazards; indeed, the hazard is in doing otherwise. When we do this we will move forward substantially; until we do do it, unless we can do it, we can not build up the work abroad or establish a Zion at home. Men and women who think it can be built up otherwise might just as well give it up in the beginning of their efforts. Failure already is written upon every project, every effort not based upon truth and not under the protection and power of its self-preserving and self-propelling forces. There are always, in every realm of thought, those who are ready to resort to expedients and policies which to the carnal mind give promise of quick and abundant returns and extended success, but whose efforts finally must fail and come to naught; and such policies constitute causes of friction against which truth contends and often seemingly is hidden for a time, until it wins the battle against misconception and its outgrowths, which finally are removed or surmounted in due time.

It is significant to note, in this connection, that universal, unchangeable, unrepealable law—eternal, immutable law—ever permeates and ever operates potentially, to preserve the right, to destroy and bring to naught the wrong. Do men build in harmony with its great Author, such law, in all the fullness of its universe-embracing power, sanctions and protects their doings. Do they build or begin to build out of harmony with its requirements, at once, always, inevitably, it begins and continues the work of disintegration and destruction of erroneous conception and misguided effort. The mere human mind may not see it, the “carnal mind” may be descrying success and be built up in a wealth of great expectations; but results must and can only be disappointing, and final great loss and destruction follow. All human affairs, all mundane experiences teach us this. “Every man’s work shall be made manifest . . . the fire shall try every man’s work of what sort it is.”—1 Corinthians 3:13. The scrutiny of the All-seeing is not to be evaded.

It is a legal part of Law that friction, pain, and penalty shall result from its violation. Penalty is the shock that we feel when we come in collision with it. Speaking exactly, Law itself can not be broken. If we transgress it, the Law remains intact, but we are broken. It is best that it should be so. If Law could in any degree be bent to conform to our variable wishes or standards, the moral and physical universe would become chaos. Penalty is not calamitous and without, but rather inherent, subjective, corrective, and therefore good.

It is the part, therefore, of men and women called to be coworkers with God to be devoted, to become spiritually minded, intelligently so; to sink selfish, worldly, carnal conceptions out of sight and cease from resort thereto; and by serious study and prayerful devotion to walk in the light and to attain, and know that they are attaining, to communion with God and to receive of his guidance.

“We may make law our infinitely powerful ally. The man who utilizes steam or electricity in accordance with their own laws multiplies his physical accomplishment a thousand fold. On the contrary, if he disregard their orderly methods, and strive to impose his own notions upon them, he will receive the judgment of penalty. As we render ourselves plastic to the healthful persuasions of natural law, and parallel her lines instead of crossing them, we enlist the potentiality of the universe in our service. Disregarding her, we ‘kick against the pricks,’ but through her cordial co-operation we may accomplish all things. Hitch your wagon to a star!”

‘God’s wise moral economy provides that his human children, made in his own image, should utilize his methods; and an intelligent recognition of this great boon makes man prince in power and godlike in character. No longer being a slave to law, he can—through her instrumentality—not only be free himself, but also command divine prerogatives and privileges.”

Let us not forget that mere money possession and contribution will not accomplish the redemption of Zion. While the temporal is important and not to be lost sight of, it is secondary, subservient. The world has generally had an abundance of the temporal, but lacking the spirit and purpose essential to its use, has become corrupted by misuse of the power of wealth, “the deceitfulness of riches.” Earthly riches constitute a destructive or a constructive force, according to their abuse or use. The spiritual and temporal are but parts of a great whole, each incomplete without the other, its counterpart; but the spiritual, the primary, the power by which all individualities and powers and materials are to be developed and regulated, is the fundamental, unfolding, consecrating force. As growth is from within, as in plant life all ing to their abuse or use. The spiritual and temporal are but parts of a great whole, each incomplete without the other, its counterpart; but the spiritual, the primary, the power by which all individualities and powers and materials are to be developed and regulated, is the fundamental, unfolding, consecrating force. As growth is from within, as in plant life all be. No one should seek his own, but the welfare of the whole, of the work, and through it the glory of God alone, in the welfare of the race. Wherein wrongs have existed or mistakes been made, correction should be undertaken, prayerfully, solicitously, resolutely. If we seek excuses for ourselves or for others, friends or favorites, in men or in measures, and palliate or compromise, we shall blunder and stumble and fall and miss the mark. It is necessary to draw the line, not alone between the church and the world, but between truth and error, light and darkness, principle and policy, wisdom and lack of it, etc., etc., all along the extended scale of human effort in general, individually and collectively.

Bro. C. E. Crumley, reporting the Pacific Slope Mission says: "My associates have done well; I do not see how they could have done much more, considering all circumstances." He reports six baptisms for the quarter in that field. Himself and colaborers are cheerful, hopeful, and earnest in the conflict.

Bro. W. H. Kelley, reporting the Rocky Mountain Mission, announces nine baptisms, with general activity all along the line. The efforts of the force in that field present a variety—the usual friction with representatives and other elements of the dominant church, discussion with sectarian, and the local work in branches, including Sunday-school and Religio work, in which missionaries have cooperated with the local membership. "President F. M. Smith has been largely in Salt Lake City, helping the work with his pen and tongue." "President Joseph Smith's visit did good in various ways, mostly by showing to many who are growing shaky of their creed here that he will form the best rallying point when they let go here entire." "Srs. Ruth L. Smith and Rachel LaRue have been very helpful and successful in the Sunday-school and Religio work in the city."

Referring to recent events in connection with changes in the government of a leading nation of the world, a press correspondent furnishes some instructive matter in his comments thereon. He says, "Nor must the fact be overlooked that . . . as a leader in his party, appealing to the electorate, was personally a great source of weakness. His dialectic skill makes him a great parliamentarian, but the mass of the voters want a man with a clearly defined aim as a leader. Such weakness is fatal."

Lessons may be learned from all things transpiring about us in the world. One lesson, as old as man himself, is that men can not continue to possess influence and exercise great power for good among the masses of the people without maintaining and holding to public view those doctrines and policies with which the welfare and success of the people are interwoven. Always there is need of straight paths to be made for the feet, lest evils come in and complications follow. Our plea for plain, gospel truth, as taught in the beginning, is based upon this idea and that policy. It argues for frank, untechnical adherence to what will conserve the truth, doctrinally and in the ordinary experiences of the lives of men under the gospel rule. Events transpiring in the world on every hand emphasize the truth of the position stated by the Savior, that whatsoever is more or less than the truth cometh of evil and must finally result in vexation and loss. Possibly the experiences of men in life, if long enough continued, will bring them to see that such is the aim and end of their earthly stewardship. Some claim that by such evolution the reign of right finally will be evolved. However, it is manifest that supervising agencies are contributing and overruling to this end. The outlook is encouraging to those who hope for the better day.

Delegates and visitors to General Conference: Where are you making the greatest preparation for General Conference? in the milliner's shop, or closeted in secret prayer? We need much of the latter; very little of the former—let that be incidental. The manner of the preparation will have much to do with the character of the conference.

The following excerpt from the Kansas City World for January 15, purported to have been uttered by the Reverend W. O. Thomas at the West Side Christian church, shows the tendency of worldly religions; but we have been commanded to be separated from the world: "My idea is that any church amusement is legitimate when it results in the saving of men. I would have a monkey show right here in my pulpit if it would bring men and women to church."

Another clipping from the Kansas City Times, for January 16, shows the ease with which inquiring men are satisfied to see those under their care sweetly encouraged to gratify their desire for worldly amusement. Describing a certain pastor of Pittsburg, the Times says: "When the pillars of the church hinted to him that his presence had been noted at dances, theaters, and other social affairs, he is said to have replied: "The shepherd must follow the flock [Jesus said: "My sheep hear my voice, . . . and they follow me.''] no matter where it goes, so that he can lead it all safely back to the fold, and to see that none stray away.'" The explanation proved satisfactory to the church elders and the Reverend Mr. Alexander has become a welcome guest at all social functions."
JOHN ALEXANDER DOWIE.

From current newspaper gossip it would appear that the carrying on of the founding and establishing of Zion City in Wisconsin by John Alexander Dowie, together with other enterprises suggested to his busy brain, has got beyond the reach of both Elijah the Prophet and John Alexander Dowie, the business man. It ought not to have required the skill of either an ancient or a modern prophet to determine what must necessarily be the fate of an enterprise, spiritual or business, founded, as John Alexander Dowie's effort was, upon the superstition and credulity of the people.

Just so long as he was in the prime of his strength and was able in a sense to hypnotize his people and to enthuse them with his own ardor, money was furnished him by the hundreds of thousands of dollars. It is an easy matter to plan and to undertake to carry into execution enterprises like silk and candy interests, which seem to have been the principal efforts at Zion City, but business efforts of that sort must be kept running by either a continuation of the stream of gifts and donations of devotees or the conditions of labor and trade will cause an overreaching or telescoping of debts which must be paid; and neither John Alexander Dowie nor any other man has yet succeeded in foisting spiritual bonds on the material market to realize funds therefrom.

It would appear that for the apparently paltry sum of less than $120,000 there is a failure upon the part of the treasury of Zion City to meet indebtedness accrued on borrowed money, and that either the sickness of Mr. Dowie or the business perplexities have made it necessary for him to abdicate, especially in the business affairs, to a specific number of followers, to stave off the ruin if they can.

Mr. Dowie has used millions of money that have gone into his hands, and now approaching seventy years of age his zeal has evidently abated, and he either sees the futility of further effort in this direction or is willing to take advantage of the ease which he may have provided for out of that which he claimed to be his personal perquisites from the public receipts.

His movement upon New York, his efforts in Mexico and elsewhere, his trip around the world, all taken at the expense of the public funds, have taken from the treasury which makes financial ruin inevitable.

We pity the failure of enterprises undertaken in the laudable effort to benefit mankind, but John Alexander Dowie has proved himself to be an Ishmael in the intellectual and religious field. As a result, his hand was against every man and every man's hand against him. He denounced everybody and everything that did not agree with his notions, and indulged in long and virulent abuse which no amount of sophistry can mend.

We can not help but express the belief that though the men he may have left in charge at Zion City may be able to largely put off the evil day, and possibly save great sums of money from the ruin, the prophet himself has taken good care that he shall have the wherewithal to wind up his remaining years without active contact with the business world. We shall await further events in this.

MORMON RENOUNCES FAITH.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, January 15.—W. M. Wolfe, Professor of Theology in Brigham Young College, a Mormon institution at Logan, Utah, has caused a stir in Mormon circles by renouncing his belief in the Mormon faith, refusing to pay tithes, and severing his relations with the college. He says his change of faith was due to a trip to Mexico, which satisfied him that the Mormon church had receded from the Woodruff manifesto and reinstated polygamous marriages.

We believe Professor Wolfe is correct in his deduction, and it is not surprising. We believe further that not only in Mexico, but in Utah and elsewhere, there has been a continuation of the living in plural marriage, either simultaneously with President Joseph F. Smith and his associates in their doing so, or from the influence of the example set by him, of which he made statement before the senatorial committee.

How honorable men, like the professor of Brigham Young College should be, can tolerate so complete a renunciation of good faith in the promises made to the nation and to the public by which amnesty was secured, is more than we can comprehend. If there should be honor found anywhere among men, it should be among professors of religion, and where these fail to keep faith with each other and with the world and with God, what confidence can men have in them?

THE Saints of Toronto, Canada, have been conducting their second successful winter campaign. Scene, the Majestic Theater; speaker, Elder R. C. Evans. By a thorough system of advertising they aroused such an interest that it often happened that a half hour before the doors opened, Adelaide Street was crowded with impatient people desiring to hear Elder Evans. One evening the crush was so great that a part of the door jamb and plate glass were carried away. Hundreds were turned away and those who got in stayed until half past ten listening and asking questions. Such meetings are worth reading about. How was it managed? Elder McLean, of Toronto, has prepared especially for Autumn Leaves an account of the campaign and the methods used. It will appear in the February number. SHALL WE DEBATE?

There are many conflicting ideas concerning the propriety of debating the differences existing between the various religious bodies, and I contribute a few thoughts in favor of a comparison of views by those at variance, both in private and in public, but each party and all parties interested in such a comparison should show the Spirit of the Master they profess to serve.

The only object in making such comparison should be to discover, if possible, the truth, comparison being the best means to convince a true seeker for light upon any point wherein differences may exist. What we mean by true seekers for light is that class who are willing to be convinced when the evidence is against them as well as to try to convince when it is believed that the evidence is in their favor.

There has ever been, and ever will be, so long as error exists, a conflict between truth and error. In the experience of Christ we have an example of how to conduct this conflict. He was willing to meet the advocate of error face to face, and support his cause by what was written, and permit his opponent to make as good a defense of his cause as he could. So did his disciples in times past, and so do they now. They invite an exchange of views both in public and in private upon the great plan of salvation, believing by this means they may the most successfully meet and destroy error with the truth.

When one body of professed believers in Christ set themselves so far above other professed believers in Christ that they will not meet them upon equal grounds; they place themselves in an unenviable position in the light of the example and teachings of the Lord. There were some in his days that thanked God they were not like other men; they were termed hypocrites. It is more possible that they are fearful of an honest investigation lest they themselves might be proved in error. All churches claim to be representing the truth, and have equal right to make such claim, but may not have an equal amount of evidence to support such a claim; but until it is proved to them that they are in error, and they are shown the better way, they will be consistent in continuing to believe and advocate erroneous claims, and by so doing be the means of deceiving many; just as Christ said would be the condition after his time, and previous to the end of the world, expressing himself in the following language: "Many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many."—Matthew 24:5.

It is certainly time enough to cease the examination when the opposing party does not wish to, nor will not meet you further in the examination.

Responsibility does not even end there, for every honorable endeavor should be made to secure the privilege they may have for a time been denied by seeking to show the necessity of all to "produce their cause, and bring forth their strong reasons." This was God's invitation to those who were in error in the days of the prophet Isaiah. (See Isaiah 41:21.) This is God's invitation to all who think they are in the right to-day, and God's servants would not fully represent him unless they, too, would extend such an invitation to all who differ from them, yet think they have a just cause, and reasons for its existence.

The true body of Christ has ever invited just criticism of every principle advocated, and has always grown in membership and spiritual power by this means, so long as the principles advocated were in perfect accord with God's revealed will to his people, and the spirit governing such invitation was in the fear of the Lord.

Only by giving the stronger reasons, and correct evidence can we consistently say to this man or that, "Your claim to being the true church is not correct," however much we may think so. We have not the right to base our conclusions, or expect that others will base their conclusions, upon a mere assertion, or else why has God given us such strong arguments to present, and instructed us to give an answer to every man? The truth can have nothing to fear from a comparison with error. God is with his representatives. Even though one meet with abuse and persecution, it only proves more clearly our claims in the minds of all honest people,—and those are the only ones who will believe unto salvation.

Wherever truth is presented in contrast with error, the one holding the error will soon show it by trying to sustain his side of the proposition by becoming angry—Cain-like—and presenting, instead of argument, some weakness, real or assumed, associated with some representative of the truth, or of manifesting a spirit in harmony with error by abusing or vilifying the character of an opponent; or else they will simply acknowledge that their claims are not sufficiently sustained by evidence to bear a close, scrutinizing investigation, by withdrawing themselves from a further investigation through some trumped-up excuse.

The Scriptures instruct us to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." Contend means, according to Webster, "To strive; to dispute; to vie with." Either of these meanings signifies an opposing influence met, and with proper evidence and argument, the right sustained. When, therefore, the faith is attacked we must contend for it "with all long suffering and doctrine." God's representatives are authorized to defend his work against all opposition in the spirit of "all long suffering," and with God's means of defense, "the doctrine”; and if one of his representatives fails in this duty he fails to stand the test of true patriotism to God.

The Lord has instructed his followers when offenses exist that the person offended shall go to the party offending and give him evidence of his fault, and by this means seek reconciliation. This principle is advocated by the wise man when differences exist between neighbors in the following language: “Debate thy cause with thy neighbor himself.” Reconciliation is not brought about by letting the offense or the offender alone, whether he be brother, or neighbor, but as above advocated by debating, or talking over the matter face to face, each having an equal opportunity to show reasons why they should be justified in the position taken. No one will try to avoid an investigation of differences except those who are afraid to come to the light, for Jesus says, “He that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be manifest that they are wrought of God.” Those who are trying to avoid the light of investigation, or the light brought about through a critical examination, are those who desire not their deeds to be manifest.

Contrasting things side by side where the same degree of light reflects upon them, and with the same circumstances surrounding them, is the best way to determine wherein differences or sameness exists, and both examined in the light of a correct standard will unfold more clearly than any other way wherein discrepancies exist in either or both. Jesus says of his ministers, “Ye are the light of the world,” and where two men, or organizations represented by those who claim to be his ministers, hold to different theories, both of which they claim is the truth, they should arrange to meet under Christlike circumstances, and present their theories, and the reasons for believing them to be true, in the light given to them. This gives honest investigators a privilege to compare them with each other, and with the standard, and aids them in coming to a righteous conclusion.

Deception has been, and is, practiced by false representatives of the church by using the Scriptures as Satan did when tempting the Christ; that is, by using only that portion that was favorable to their theory. They tell the truth, but tell it in such a way that it does not represent it correctly, and do not tell the whole truth, and those not enlightened by the Spirit that guides into all truth are deceived: hence the necessity that those who have the Holy Spirit should be present when error is taught, and controvert the errors presented whenever it is possible, or whenever opportunity is given. None who have the whole truth need to be afraid of hearing error, and comparing it with what they possess; neither need a representative of the truth, and the true church, be fearful of injurious results coming to the membership of said true church by listening to such comparison, because the truth stands out the brighter and clearer by such comparison.

During the ministerial work of Christ and his associate apostles, we note that many times they entered the synagogues of the religionists of their day and publicly disputed with the religious teachers, and however angry did their opposers become because they could not successfully meet the truth with their theories, yet we never hear of their concluding that this class of labor was wrong in itself, but instead they continued so doing to the end of their ministerial work. They continued to present the principles of truth and the evidences they had in its support, and while their opposers called them evil names, persecuted and beat them, they never stooped so low as to use personalities, and to call slanderous names as a means of proof against their adversaries, or the theories they were advocating; neither did they, when their adversaries used slanderous epithets, let it weigh one whit against the cause they were representing.

No real peace can exist between two parties where each believes the other wrong, without having the privilege of showing the wrongs they believe exist, and contending for their specific theories; because each, if honest, believes that theory committed to them is the only way of full salvation, and that those who do not accept it will suffer loss, and no true minister of Christ can rest in peace and see his fellow men pursuing a course that will cause them to suffer loss. The Christ could not rest in heaven and see the creature man pursuing such a course as would result in loss, but left that peaceful abode to come to earth to meet face to face those who were advocating and following error, and the Scriptures say, “If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his.” The proper object, then, that should govern those who meet to “contend,” or “dispute,” is the salvation of souls.

Tis very true that one in defense of the truth must oftentimes exercise a great deal of forbearance with his opposer, on account of his motives being questioned, and his name cast out as evil; but it takes only the same trust in the Christ to be righteously sustained in this labor as in all other duties for the Master, who is the author and finisher of the faith. We should educate ourselves as true representatives of Christ to be able to meet every kind of opposition, whether in public or in private, whether in the church or from without, “with meekness and fear,” —the Spirit of the Master,—and thus prove by the strongest proof obtainable or presentable that we have been with and have been taught of him; and then whenever we are contending for the faith, either in what is termed debate, dispute, discussion, correspondence, or exchange of views, or in making declaration of the truth, such labor will be done in a way that others will be led to glorify God, the kingdom of God be built up, and faith be established.

J. F. MINTUN.

The Hunt–Crowe debate was held at Sac City, Iowa, December, 1900. Mr. Crowe visited Council Bluffs, Iowa, a short time before the engagement, and sought out one or more Utah Mormon missionaries with a hope of securing evidence from them that Joseph Smith the Martyr taught or practiced polygamy. His Utah instructors could not furnish just what his depraved heart desired, so he was directed to call on Benjamin Winchester, who belonged to the Saints at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, before the death of Joseph the Seer, and who claimed an acquaintance with the Prophet.

Mr. Crowe undoubtedly secured the service of his bosom friend of Utah when he prepared one of the most blasphemous articles, of more than six pages of legal cap paper, ever written against Joseph Smith. He took the document to Mr. Winchester hoping to secure his signature, but he refused to sign it.

During the debate Crowe, not thinking he would be exposed, read the long article, claiming it to be the testimony of Mr. Winchester. I asked Mr. Crowe if the purported testimony was signed by Mr. Winchester. He said, “No.” I told him I would prove his article false; which I did to Crowe’s shame and everlasting disgrace.

After consulting with my moderator, Elder R. Wight, we sent several questions from Crowe’s alleged testimony to C. A. Beebe and J. Charles Jensen, who called at the residence of Mr. Winchester on the afternoon of December 9, 1900, and in the presence and hearing of seven others (all adults) the following important interview occurred:

“We, C. A. Beebe and J. Charles Jensen, residents of the city of Council Bluffs, Iowa, have this day called on Mr. Benjamin Winchester, also a resident of this city and now confined to his home by illness from which he has no hopes of recovery [He died the following year, aged eighty-three years. –C. J. H.], and we submitted to him the following questions: ‘Did you on the twenty-seventh day of November last, inform Elder W. L. Crowe that you knew that Joseph Smith married a woman, other than Emma Hale, in an Eastern State, who bore him a child?’ to which Mr. Winchester answered, ‘No, it is a lie.’ ‘Did you tell Elder W. L. Crowe that you knew that Joseph Smith had many wives?’ to which Mr. Winchester also answered, ‘No, that also is a lie.’ He also denied having said that Joseph Smith was a low, contemptible fraud, . . . Mr. Winchester further says that when Elder Crowe ’called on him he was very sick, and in much pain and distress, and that he told the elder that he was not in a condition or able to hear and answer all his questions, so the elder wanted him to sign the papers he had prepared and brought, but this Mr. Winchester refused to do, as did also his daughter-in-law when requested . . . All of which is certified to by the undersigned, J. CHAS. JENSEN.

“C. A. BEEBE.”

When the foregoing refutation of Crowe’s article was read at the debate, his face turned pale, his eyes found attractive objects at his feet, while most of the vast audience looked upon him with disgust. I can assure you that it is not a pleasure to expose such a man, but a duty.

I furnished the Herald Publishing House a copy of both articles.

Mr. Crowe claims to be an evangelist of the Church of God, or RESTITUTIONISTS.

Bro. F. M. Slover debated church propositions with him at Shaw, Kansas, and he should be required to affirm the same in every discussion with our elders.

I have a good collection of Crowe’s papers, etc., which I will send to any of our brethren who are called upon to meet him in debate.

I understand that Crowe gave Reverend (?) W. G. Roberts, a representative of one wing of the Campbellites, a copy of his so-called Winchester article, and he may have furnished it to others of like caliber as Roberts.

THE FOISTING OF POLYGAMY IN 1853.

Herewith I hand you an article translated from the Welsh by Elder Rees Jenkins, of 206 McKees Terrace, Steubenville, Ohio. I was impressed that it might prove helpful in exhibiting how the crime of polygamy was foisted upon an innocent people.

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

"THE ED T' R CONTRADICTING HIMSELF.

"It is not an uncommon thing for editors to contradict themselves; this happens quite often, much too often. But there are none perfect, that they can prevent it at will. We have been guilty of contradicting ourselves also, as will be seen from the following letter:

"Mr. Editor.—As a regular reader of your commendable Udgorn [trumpet], I humbly desire an explanation on that of yours, which appeared in the Udgorn, page 352, for the year 1851, viz.: your rational defense in the face of the charge of polygamy among the Saints, and great respect be to you for it; still it appears strange to me to see the same well-respected editor changing so much of his opinion in less than two years; and there he comes out strongly blowing in the first Udgorn in 1853, declaring liberty to the Saints far and near to take as many wives as they will. Now, Mr. Editor, the question is, which of your Udgorns [trumpets] is to be believed, so that I may burn the liar immediately. I desire you to put this in the Udgorn together with your answer, that I and others may have your mind on the question.

"I am, humbly yours,

MASTEG.

"We have been expecting something of the kind ever since we published the revelation on polygamy; and we are now pleased to have the opportunity to say a word for ourselves.

"We never claimed that we knew all things, and that everything that we said was correct; for we know that we could slip in thought, word, and deed. Before coming into this church we may have written many things that were contradictory to that which we have written since; and after coming into the church, we, in our ignorance, may have said some things at times, that are contradictory to the truth. Thus it has been relative to the question of polygamy. When the sectarians were striking at the Saints about two years ago, because of this, we felt an inclination to defend them, and try to prove to the public that polygamy was something that was not suffered among them.

"Well, it was not sufferable in this country, neither will it be; and since we knew no better then, we, much after the same manner that the reverend gentlemen of Wales are trying to prove that their erroneous ideas are in harmony with the Bible, made the effort to prove from the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants, that the Saints did not allow more than one wife to every man. But, hence, we will put forth a greater effort to be silent concerning that of which we are ignorant. After we had the privilege of hearing the doctrine of polygamy explained, we were compelled to believe it as any other doctrine; but before that, we were of the same opinion as the religious denominations of our country, and ignorant as themselves. We believe every truth as it is revealed by God; and we think that many principles are yet to be revealed, that now we know nothing of; for the great sermon of the gospel is not yet completed. Now was the time for this church to confess this principle before the world; perhaps, to confess it sooner, would have been dangerous.

"Since we have received new light on the question, we can not now judge that that which we quoted from the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Mormon does militate against polygamy among the Saints. That which we quoted from Doctrine and Covenants, page 300, [343 Lamoni edition,] is thus:

"'Inasmuch as the church of Christ has been reproached as of being guilty of the crime of fornication, and polygamy, we declare that we believe that one man should have one wife, and one woman but one husband,' etc. These words do not set forth that one man should not have more than one wife, but that he should have one; and on the other side, it is definitely stated that a woman is not to have more than one husband. Again, we will notice the words that we quoted from the Book of Mormon, pages 101 and 102 [116 Lamoni edition]. There we read, 'Thus saith the Lord, This people begin to wax in iniquity; they understand not the scriptures: for they seek to excuse themselves in committing whoredom, because of the things written concerning David, and Solomon his son. Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord.'

"'Now, there is no mention here, only of David and Solomon, while polygamy was practiced by many others. The Bible shows that the conduct of David and Solomon was abominable in the sight of God, not because they had many wives, but because they kept not the commandments of God concerning them; hence to follow their example in that was an abominable thing in the sight of the Lord. It is said in 2 Samuel 12:8-11, that it was the Lord that gave those wives to David, and that it was he that afterward took them from him because of his abomination committed with another man's wife, whom the Lord had not given him. Again, Solomon's abomination might be comprehended in that he, contrary to the will of the Lord, took strange wives from among the Gentiles, who led him to turn his heart to the gods of the Gentiles (see 1 Kings 11); had he taken many wives from among his own people, it does not seem to us that it would not be pleasing unto the Lord. That which the revelation given through Joseph Smith says is, That the Lord had justified his servants of old, and among them David and Solomon, to take many wives, and had not justified them for contradicting his commandments. Now again, we shall notice the words following the foregoing quotation from the Book of Mormon; viz: 'There shall not any among you [the Nephites] have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none; for I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me; thus saith the Lord of hosts. — Wherefore, this people shall keep my commandments, saith the Lord of hosts, or else, cursed be the land for their sakes. For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people; otherwise, they shall hearken unto these things.'

"'We see that there is here a definite prohibition to the Nephites; but it is not a prohibition to the Saints in this age; for God now is for raising seed, and he has revealed that unto his people, as he hinted to the Nephites he would.

each other is no easy work; the greatest divines of our country are failing many times. We are only beginning to learn; but we have good schoolmasters, viz.: God's apostles, and we expect to know many things better by and by. But we already know this, that we have not 'declared liberty to the Saints far and near to take as many wives as they will.' No one has the right to take more than one wife in any country on earth except in Zion: and in Zion, none can take more than one wife without the permission of the chief president of the church; and the first wife is to take hold of the hand of the second, and give her unto her husband. There are many high officers in Zion who have but one wife, while others have more. The marriages solemnized in this and other countries are considered legal until death, and Zion is the place where they are ratified for all eternity, and not annulled. We will have opportunities again to explain much more in regard to this new principle, so that no one will have cause to be without knowing all about it.

"We have also received a letter on this question from one William Thomas, who, because of his cautious manner, we believe to be that William Thomas, late of Aberdare, and who is now excommunicated from our church once more. We do not intend to waste any more of our time to converse with him, neither would we advise any one else to do so; but we declare a ten-pound reward to him, and everybody else, that can prove that we (the Editor) have received money from the Saints, or from any other men, without giving an account for them."—From Udgorn Seion (Zion’s Trumpet) for January 29, 1853, pp. 78-81.

AN INDIAN STORY.

The following was told me by Bro. Daniel Bonham, of Chico, California, and is certainly wonderful if true, and there seems to be much to support it.

"Some thirty years ago I became acquainted with an old Indian chief or medicine-man in Diamond Spring, Eldorado County, California, widely and favorably known as George Washington. He was a frequent visitor at our house, and for years, as he came and went about town, I noticed that he carried, with much care, what appeared to be a roll of buckskin, and that he never laid it down or was separated from it, not even while eating, which he often did at our house. While doing so, he would always place it in his lap. I often asked him what it was, and why he was so careful of it, but he seemed very reserved, and did not like to be questioned about it, which of course increased my desire to know.

"At that time I knew nothing of the latter-day work, or no doubt I should have been more curious. Finally, as the years came and went, he became more intimate, and told us (my wife and I) that it was the Indian Book, and after much coaxing was induced to read from it to us.

"The book was made of buckskin, carefully joined together, some sixty feet in length, and six inches wide, rolled on a stick.

"There were some characters on it that looked to me like Chinese writing, but it was mostly covered with pictures of almost everything. He could not be induced to show it to any others than myself and wife. Said if more than two white people ever looked upon it that it would be taken from him; that it would displease the Great Spirit. In after-years when I became acquainted with this work, I tried to have him show it to Elder Thomas Daly, who was very anxious to see it, but he would not; he would read from it to him, but he must sit with his back toward the roll, and a blanket had to be stretched between it and him. He told Bro. Daly very much. Bro. Daly said he was going to write a book and would put it in his book, which, perhaps, accounts for his never having published it in the HERALD.

"The book or scroll seemed to contain a history of his people, who, he said, many years ago came across the big waters, or as the Indian put it, 'Came long time ago in big canoe, from bad king' to Indian promised land, and one man talked with Great Spirit, who told them to come, and that this high council man told them that by and by white man dig Indian book out of ground; tell all about my people; fight, fight; by and by my people all same hog; white man whip him make him go, 'cause Indian no please Great Spirit. Book say long time go valley [Sacramento] big water.'

"Some of the book he never read to me; always said, when I asked him to, 'By and by.' Said Spirit would not let him read it all to a white man. It seemed to be handed down from father to son, the care of the roll.

"One thing that now seems wonderful, was a rude picture of a boat with a man tied in it. I asked the Indian about it. He said when his people came here in a big canoe some were bad and grieved the High Spirit, 'put one man in boat, tie him, no get away, him by big water go way up high [moving his hands up and down to show motion of the waves], him by let him go, big waters no more mad.'"

The above, if true, is certainly strong evidence of the Book of Mormon; and there seems little reason to doubt it. If he had ever read the Book of Mormon, then he might have fixed up such a tale; but this he never had done. At any rate I give it for what it may be worth.

After getting this narrative, I visited Chico Vicino, a small Indian village near Chico, Butte County, California, to see an Indian chief, or medicine-man, there. He was not at home, but in company with some of the Saints I visited Bro. Walter Foss and wife. The latter has known this Indian chief ever since she was a little girl, she having been quite intimate with him for many years. On account of that Bro. Foss has been able to get his confidence, for himself and some of the brethren, and to explain our faith to him. He is fairly well educated, and quite intelligent; and, since the brethren have gained his confidence, talks quite freely of his people and our work.

Those who know Indian nature, know that they are very secretive, and that it requires long intimacy with them before they divulge secrets. In both the above cases it will be noticed that long and friendly relations were had before the things were divulged.

Bro. Foss in the several talks he has had with him has gleaned the following, which I regard as remarkable: That they call themselves—when mentioning their true name—Lamoites, pronouncing almost as we do. This man has no written history, but the tribe or leading men meet once a year in council and these secrets are rehearsed and taught by the head man to the others. He says many years ago his people came here in a boat shaped like an acorn; that after a long time they went north and fought a great battle, the bloodiest ever fought, called commo; that their greatest prophet's name was Morinji, and that he told them of this coming battle; says a man called Limah (in pronouncing the name he lays stress on the two last letters) led in this battle, which he says took place sixteen hundred summers ago. Before this battle he says the Son of the Great Spirit visited them; after it they lost their records.

In one of their great battles so many were killed that they had to gather them in a great heap, and could not put but a little dirt on them; and that the wild beasts came and ate them, and carried off many of their children; that once they were white-skinned, but when they became disobedient they turned dark; that one of their great men had a white man's name, Smo, and that he did many wonderful things for them and that he came in a boat.

He says his people could make copper hard and soft, so they could drive it into anything, or drive nails into it; that they had writings on plates of brass and also copper; says (at what seems to be the Isthmus of Panama) they had four great cities; two of them sank into the ocean. Also at one time their country was ruled by many small chiefs, over whom ruled one big chief called a father; that before the Son of the Great Spirit visited them, they killed sacrifices, but not after that. The custom of parents contracting marriages for their children also obtained among them, and the Jewish mode of purification.

One certain tribe they always burned at the stake when taken as prisoners. They have here in this tribe a lodge and take degrees in it, which seems to consist in being told more of these things of which I have been writing,—their history of past ages. Not until recently have they been known to tell these things to white men, and not then until our people told them about our having a book taken out of the ground, telling all about them. This Indian says he has not told us all; that if he did we would be surprised.

They have the name Lehi among them, which they pronounce just as we do. One thing should be kept in mind; that this Indian told these things before he read the Book of Mormon.

It will be noticed that there is some similarity in the story of this Indian of Chico Vicino, and the one Bro. Bonham speaks of, but not enough to indicate that one came from the other, that is, that one was taken from the other.

It will be noticed that both claim their people came here in a boat across the ocean; that both claim to have kept back a part of their history; that both say the Sacramento Valley at one time had more water in it than it now has, and there are strong reasons for believing that. Many are of the opinion that the Columbia River once flowed through this valley to the sea, instead of through Oregon. One thing seems certain, the Indians do have more or less traditions that go far to corroborate the Book of Mormon.

In 1832 four Indians belonging to the Flathead tribe, living west of the Rocky Mountains, performed a wearisome journey on foot to St. Louis, in Missouri, for the purpose of inquiring for the Christians' Book, and the white man's God. Early in 1833 notice of this wonderful event was given in the Christian Advocate, in New York. Reverend Jason Lee went to Oregon in 1834 in answer to this call.

The above goes to prove that Indians had some idea of a book in possession of the whites that concerned them.

Some years ago while on a mission in Eastern Oregon, I became acquainted with a Mr. Smith who had an extensive acquaintance with the Indians of Oregon. He told me a great deal of the Indians' stories and traditions, and I was surprised to see in them so much that the Book of Mormon contains. Of course it was distorted; but a striking similarity was clear. Trusting that this may be of interest and profit to the Herald readers, I am, still in the faith, Hiram L. Holt.

"DO THE GIFTS AND BLESSINGS CEASE AS WE ATTAIN TOWARD PERFECTION?"

Since the war-clouds have settled, and peace has been declared, I thought it best to set the boys right on the disputed question under the above heading. Now if they will both agree with me, they will agree with each other in the hereafter. "When that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away."—1 Corinthians 13:10.

If the brethren had read and properly understood the first and second lines of verse three, in No. 110 of the Saints' Hymnal, they would have had no dispution over the above problem. But as all may not consider hymns and spiritual songs as necesarily being inspired of God, the scriptural evidence will be put forth.

It all hinges on the point, "When that which is perfect is come," or in other words shall come.
"For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known."—Verse 12.

Now as to the time when the above event shall occur, see Isaiah 52:8: "Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing:
for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion." If we can find out when the "Lord shall bring again Zion," then the question is settled. For this see Revelation 21:2: "And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." See by the previous chapter that the thousand years have passed, and so has the last resurrection; and the new earth has hit into view, and "God is with men." (Revelations 21:3.) When all of the above shall come to pass, then, indeed, the gifts will be no longer needed.

But as the enjoyment of the gifts was what brought Paul, Isaiah, and John to have the hope to meet the above conditions, so we need a portion of the same gifts given to us, "as he (God) will," that the same gifts may bring us to the same understanding and hope to which they were brought.

And so may it be. J. C. CRABB.

"THE DEVIL'S CHIEF COUNTERFEIT."—NO. 4.

(Concluded.)

There remain yet a few points in the article in the Elders' Journal of September 1, 1905, that we desire to call particular attention to. The author says:
All through this medley of confusion, when Law and Wight and Smith and Briggs and Gurley and other apostates were organizing churches, it is remarkable that no one was heard to proclaim the most prominent argument now used by the Reorganizers, that the Prophet Joseph ordained his son at Liberty jail, Missouri, to be his successor.

We have yet to learn that Law ever made any effort to organize any church after the question of succession was raised. His disaffection occurred during the days of Joseph Smith the Martyr, when there was no question of succession before the people and could not be. Wight made no effort to organize a church, as is well known; and in fact it has been conceded by B. H. Roberts in his work on succession in the presidency of the church. On page 26 of that work he says:

It can scarcely be said that either Lyman Wight or Bishop George Miller sought to lead the church; but they were guilty of insubordination to the constituted authorities, ...

However, though Wight did not try to organize a church, he did at a very early time testify to the set-ing apart of young Joseph in Liberty jail, Missouri; see the testimony of his daughter as published in the SAINTS' HERALD of December 20, 1905, from which we extract the following:

I do not remember of having heard anything while in the jail of the Prophet Joseph Smith blessing his son Joseph and setting him apart as his successor, but I do remember distinctly of having heard my father state many times both publicly and in private conversation, that such a blessing was conferred while he was in Liberty jail and that he was a witness to the same.

One instance which I distinctly remember was at a public feast at my father's house at Zodiac, Texas, to the best of my memory held about Christmas, 1850; when all of the Saints of the settlement and a few others were present, including a Mr.
William Mogford. When the feast was prepared my father took his place at the head of the table and before taking his seat made an address to the company during which he related the circumstance of his being present when the Prophet Joseph Smith laid his hands on the head of his son Joseph in Liberty jail, Missouri, and blessed him as his successor in the prophetic office.—Pages 1213, 1214.

This is corroborated by the testimony of George W.
Bird published in the same issue of the HERALD.

By Smith we suppose that the author has reference to William Smith. If so we wish to invite his attention to the fact that William Smith did teach that young Joseph was the legal successor to his father as early as November, 1845. See letter of James Kay, published in the Millennial Star, volume 7, page 134, as follows:

He contends the church is disorganized, having no head, that the Twelve are not, nor ever were, ordained to be head of the church, that Joseph's priesthood was to be conferred on his pastority to all future generations, and that young Joseph is the only legal successor to the presidency of this church.

That the Reorganization which Briggs and Gurley were instrumental in assisting to establish has made this claim is well known; therefore the statement of the editor of the Elders' Journal as regards all those mentioned, is untrue.

He continues by saying:

But even this latest argument of the Reorganizers has recently received a cooling set back by the affidavit of John Rigdon, son of Sidney Rigdon, who was with young Joseph all the time during the visit made by him and his mother to Liberty jail, and who declares most solemnly, under oath, that young Joseph's statement as to being ordained by his father the Prophet is a base falsehood, and that no such anointing or ordination took place as is now alleged by the apostate organization.

This is both a misrepresentation of the facts and a representation of John Rigdon. John Rigdon does not say that Joseph's statement was a "base falsehood"; no such language is found in John Rigdon's testimony. Nor does he say that "no such anointing or ordination took place as is now alleged by the apostate organization." But Mr. Rigdon relates that he visited Liberty jail at one time when Joseph, the son of the Prophet, did; and testifies that "no such ordination took place while we were at Liberty jail." What may have taken place when Mr. Rigdon was not there of course he is not competent to state.

We have before us the unpublished journal of Lyman Wight, kept at the time, from which we learn that Sidney Rigdon's wife and Joseph Smith's wife visited the jail on December 8, 1838, and remained over night and departed the next day. This must be the time that John W. Rigdon refers to when he was with young Joseph at Liberty jail; and had the blessing taken place at that time he doubtless would have known it. But December 20 Joseph's wife came again with Caleb Baldwin's wife; but Mrs. Rigdon, and of course her children, were not present. They remained there two days, leaving on the 22d of December. There was ample opportunity for the blessing to have been given at that time, and John W. Rigdon to have been entirely ignorant of the fact. Again, Mrs. Emma Smith visited the jail January 21, 1839, and her children were as likely to have been with her as on the first visit; for they are not mentioned in either case, nor are the children of Sidney Rigdon. Upon this occasion the blessing might have taken place without the knowledge of John W. Rigdon. She remained according to the journal at that time until January 24, leaving in company with the wife of McCrae, and Don C. Smith.

So far as the testimony of John W. Rigdon is concerned, his knowledge is of course confined to the time he was there, December 8 and 9, 1838. The opinion that he expresses in his affidavit as to what transpired, and what ought to have transpired, has nothing to do with the case. According to the evidence he does not know whether such a blessing was conferred or not.

It had not become disorganized by the death of the Prophet or the apostasy and traitorous conduct of its leading men. Instead, the church has become a mighty people in the midst of the Rocky Mountains, as the Prophet Joseph predicted it should become, and it has continued the work of redemption both for the living and the dead, for the glory of Zion, which it will continue to do until the consummation of all things.

We have already examined the claim of these people in regard to doing work for the dead, and their temple-building, etc., but just a word in regard to the prediction of the prophet Joseph that the church was to go to the Rocky Mountains and there become a mighty people. This statement, like some others we have called attention to, is quoted differently by different men among them. Elder B. H. Roberts, in a foot-note on page 102 of his work on succession in the church presidency, states it as follows:

Under date of August 6, 1842, Joseph writes in his history: 'I prophesied that the saints would continue to suffer much affliction, and would be driven to the Rocky Mountains, many would apostatize, others would be put to death by our persecutors, or lose their lives in consequence of exposure or disease, and some of you will live to go and assist in making settlements and build cities, and see them become a mighty people in the midst of the Rocky Mountains.'

Elder Anson Call, who claims to have been present when Joseph uttered the prophecy, quotes it as follows:

There are some men here who shall do a great work in that land. There is Anson, he shall go and shall assist in building cities from one end of the country to the other, and you shall perform as great a work as has been done by man, so that the nations of the earth shall be astonished and many of them will be gathered in that land and assist in building cities and temples, and Israel shall be made to rejoice. Oh the beauty of those snow-capped mountains. The cool, refreshing streams that are running down through those mountain gorges. Oh the scenes that this people will pass through! The dead that will lay between here and there. Oh the apostasy that will take place before my brethren reach that land! The priesthood shall prevail over all its enemies, triumph over the devil and be established upon the earth never more to be thrown down. Remember these things and treasure them up, amen. —See page 272 of Supplemental Volume of Biographies published with Tullidge's History of Northern Utah and Southern Idaho.

It will be observed by the quotation from Elder Roberts, that he claims that this prediction was made August 6, 1842; while Elder Call says it was given the 14th of July, 1843. (See Ibid., p. 271.)

Both these writers place the words of Joseph in quotation marks, thus indicating that they are verbatim, while the words are not alike, nor do the dates correspond. But leaving that for the representatives of Utah to harmonize as best they can, we will say that we see nothing in the prophecy, if true, to the credit of the people in Utah. If he predicted what they say that he did, it is to the credit of the Prophet, but not necessarily to the credit of those who fulfill it. It is true that they went to the Rocky Mountains, that they built cities and temples, and we believe it will be true that the priesthood will prevail over its enemies and triumph over the Devil and be established upon the earth never more to be thrown down. And a part of the prophecy related by Elder Call is just what we have been trying to convince these people did take place. He represents the Prophet as saying: "Oh the apostasy that will take place before my brethren reach that land." We are of the opinion that this took place whether the Prophet so predicted or not.

Several times through this article a boast has been made that the church has continued its existence from the days of the Prophet's death until the present, and a great work has been done for the living and the dead. We have already called attention to the fact that they proposed a reorganization, thus conceding a disorganization, while at Winter Quarters in 1847. We wish to present in connection with that the fact that when they reorganized, their organization was composed of members largely, and especially officers, who had been baptized under Brigham Young. In Tullidge's History of Brigham Young, pages 180 to 182, he quotes Wilford Woodruff as follows:

On the 9th of August [1847], the Twelve were re-baptized. This was considered a privilege and a duty. As we had come into a glorious valley to locate and build up Zion, we felt like renewing our covenants before the Lord and each other. We soon repaired to the water, and President Young went down into the water and baptized all his brethren of the Twelve present. He then confirmed us, and sealed upon us our apostleship, and all the keys, powers, and blessings belonging to that office. Bro. Heber C. Kimball baptized and confirmed President Brigham Young. The following were the names and order of those present; Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Orson Pratt, Willard Richards, Wilford Woodruff, George A. Smith, and Asa Lyman. Ezra T. Benson had been dispatched several days before to meet the companies on the road.

In the afternoon of the next day, the Twelve went to the Temple block to select their inheritances.

During the same evening the Twelve went to City Creek, and Heber C. Kimball baptized fifty-five members of the camp, for the remission of their sins; and they were confirmed under the hands of President Young, Orson Pratt, Wilford Woodruff, George A. Smith, and Asa Lyman; President Young being mouth.

On the next day (Sunday, August 8), the whole camp of Israel renewed their covenants before the Lord by baptism. There were two hundred and twenty-four baptized this morning, making two hundred and eighty-eight re-baptized in the last three days.

Thus it will be seen that the reorganization at Winter Quarters in December, 1847, was not an organization of members who retained their standing in the church, but of those who had been baptized and thus prepared for a new organization under Brigham Young. This rebaptizing was in August, 1847, before the reorganization took place in December of the same year. In less than nine months previous to that time, Elder Orson Hyde, one of their twelve apostles, and editor of the Millennial Star, wrote an editorial setting forth under what conditions rebaptism was necessary, from which we quote as follows, see Millennial Star, volume 8, page 136:

When members of our church have become cold and indifferent by the neglect of duty, and have fallen into a lukewarm state, cherish a desire to be re-baptized, and covenant anew to keep the commandments of God, it is their right and privilege to confess their sins, humble themselves before God, and do their first work by being immersed in water, and thus their second baptism is no less for the remission or forgiveness of sins than their first, yet to break a solemn covenant by becoming cold, indifferent, or lukewarm, so as to render re-baptism often necessary, is certainly dangerous, for repeated neglect of duty, and the frequent breaking of your covenant, will render you unworthy the protection of God’s Spirit, and you will find yourselves caught in the snare of the Devil in some unexpected moment.

The strong implication in this statement is that those who have a desire to be rebaptized thereby demonstrate that they have broken their former covenant; and while individual members might break a covenant and renew it without a disorganization of the church following, yet when the leading quorum of the church found it necessary because of their own transgression and covenant-breaking to be rebaptized and reordained, and the membership practically adopt the practice, there is nothing left of the organization. This material, rebaptized, reconfirmed, and reordained, reorganized the church in 1847 according to the notice of Brigham Young herebefore noted.

In conclusion we will merely say that a baptism by proper authority in the days of Joseph Smith is recognized in the Reorganization, while in the Utah church its sufficiency is questioned. In evidence of this we cite the following from Brigham Young, found in a sermon delivered at Great Salt Lake City, Utah, October 23, 1853, see Journal of Discourses, volume 2, pages 8 and 9:

I will refer again to the brethren and sisters who have lately come over the plains. My counsel to them today is, as it has been on former occasions to all who have come into these valleys, go and be baptized for the remission of sins, repenting of all your wanderings from the path of righteousness, believing firmly, in the name of Jesus Christ, that all your sins will be washed away. If any of you inquire what is the necessity of your being baptized, as you have not committed any sins, I answer, it is necessary to fulfill all righteousness.

I have heard of some of you cursing and swearing, even some of the elders of Israel. I would be baptized seven times, were I in your place; I would not stop teasing some good elder to baptize me again and again, until I could think my sins forgiven. I would not live over another night until I was baptized enough to satisfy me that my sins were forgiven. Then go and be confirmed, as you were when you first embraced the religion of Jesus. That is my counsel.

So this boasted contention of the perpetuity of the church, as will be seen, has no foundation, and the members baptized into the church of Brigham Young are no more members of the original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, than is a Methodist still a Methodist after being baptized into another church.

Mothers’ Home Column

DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

(By Elder J. W. Rushton, English Mission.)

(Concluded.)

Recently there were witnesses of a distressing scene—one hesitates to willfully use the word disgraceful—in a large hall filled to its utmost capacity on the occasion of a large political demonstration. Some women, in defiance of all that makes womanhood sacred, fought and struggled in an insane endeavor to advance the cause of “Women’s Rights.” As though “Women’s Rights” are to be obtained by an act of parliament, or are involved in enfranchisement. Women’s rights and power have been given by a higher power than that of man. God himself is depending on woman to give the greatest amount of help in the production of heaven. We are not anxious to see women on the rostrum, nor the political platform in churches and houses of legislation; we do not want to see women degraded by this kind of “power” and display. It will be a sorry day for mankind and God, if the women of the civilized nations shall, in their blindness, secure the bauble of an osten-tations of prominence, which by some strange mismener she has called her "Rights," so that she can be equal with man. If she could only know it, already she is "above" man, and in the calm, holy quiet of home, she is helping her husband, largely helping him to be all that is good and great, directing his impulses by the power of her love and sympathy. More than this, she is building up the nation in a far more substantial manner than the soldier or statesman, for the world of to-day is what the mothers of yesterday made it. It is not an exaggeration to assert that the truest asset of a nation is in the efficiency of its mothers. The boys and girls to-morrow will be required by the stern law of Nature to assume the burden the present generation must lay down. A wise woman sees her mission is to be reincarnated in her children, and thereby she is making heaven or hell a possibility. We repeat what has so often been said, there is nothing so powerful nor yet so sweet, as a real, living, womanly woman, and though she may not have the greatness of military achievement, nor the honor of political genius, yet a far richer and greater heritage is hers, the Dynamic of Love. May the day never come when woman shall barter her God-given power for the gaudy array of man-given favor.

There is much that should be said; we have but touched the outside fringe of one or two of the outstanding features of this subject, and left to the technical to be worked out, and for this task no one is so eminently qualified as woman; this should be your life's work, and your glorification is in your sons and daughters. It does appear that as a church we are very fortunate in having a band of sisters whose ideal is of so exalted a character, so unique in opportunity, so prolific in results and infinitely more sacred than any yet given to teachers and preachers. "The Redemption of Zion" will no longer be a vision or dream that will spasmodically relieve the gloom of present trial and sorrow, but its wonderful crystallization in actual fact is going to be accelerated if the Daughters of Zion will train the faculties and direct the impulses and control the latent forces of Zion's children by the power of love.

The church exists for the purpose of removing sin and its consequences. That can only be wrought effectually by removing the desire for evil from the individual; and so we will stop the supply of evil by stopping the demand. Apropos of this, notice the following statement made recently by a well-known preacher in this country, the Reverend Charles Voycey: "It is not possible to be blind to the fact that there is a great deal of moral condition. My view is this—a man's life will be affected so that he can only know it, already he is above man. If he is not properly brought up. With sincere humility I desire to lay bare the chief cause of our poor moral condition. My view is this—a man's life will be affected for good or for evil by the ruling motive in his heart; according to it, his life will be good or evil, noble or base." This, whether the gentleman intended it or not, is in point of fact a very pointed criticism of the mothers, upon whom the heaviest burden and the largest share of this responsibility must fall in the ratio of nine in ten. Surely it is here where one of the most urgent demands of the present time is revealed; we need mothers, not in the mechanical sense, but morally and spiritually efficient mothers. Mr. Roosevelt, the president of the United States, has been pleading for women who are willing to assume the responsibilities of their natural vocation as replenishers of the earth, and not stoop to the misery of sin to escape this marital duty. We grant the urgency of his plea; but, is not the need of women who are morally, intellectually, and spiritually qualified for the responsibility of motherhood, still more urgent? It may be wrong to avoid the natural duty of production, but this wrong can not be graver than the criminal negligence and shameful injustice of bringing children into the world, and either flippantly or callously neglecting the essential duty of training and cultivating the inherit faculties of which they are possessed. Paley says: "To send an uneducated child into the world, is little better than to turn out a mad dog or a wild beast into the streets." This may seem to be harsh language from so renowned a philosopher and a clergyman, but a little reflection will emphasize the truthfulness of it. Fifty years ago Doctor Coobes could say, "Ignorance, therefore, is our misfortune rather than our fault." But we can not justly excuse ourselves to-day, when we have such splendid facilities at our disposal for the acquiring of knowledge. It may also appear that it is not exactly fair to make such sweeping allegations against the women; that men also have their responsibilities. My plea is, that granting all the credit due to other influences, it would be unjust, and the most transparent affectation, to place any influence before that of the mother, the sister, and the wife. The trinity of forces has much to its credit. For the reasons then that life's conduct is but the concrete expression of thought and motive, and these are the forces which determine the individual character, can we too strongly urge the grave responsibility resting upon those who once again, let it be reiterated, exert nine tenths of the extraneous influences upon the developing future of the child? The word education is sufficiently comprehensive, but its meaning has been contracted, and it is usually thought of as training in school or college, which process is regulated by the teachers and professors. Doctor Coobes gives a much wider and truer definition: "The process of education consists in training the faculties and communicating knowledge." Again: "The objects of education are to strengthen the faculties that are weak, to restrain those that are too vigorous, to store the intellect with moral, religious, scientific, and general knowledge, and to direct all to their proper objects." Is it not obvious, then, that the first duty the parents owe to their children is to prepare themselves by study and research for this task? For "the mere fact of being father or mother to a child, is obviously not sufficient to excite its moral affections. The parent must manifest superior wisdom, intelligence, and affection, with a desire to promote his child's welfare."

All Bible students are familiar with the Pauline prophecy that one of the ruling characteristics of this degenerate age would be disobedience to parents; and we are having very many evidences of the latter times from this source. May we suggest, children cease to respect their parents because, in many instances, the parents cease to respect themselves sufficiently to maintain an intelligent hold of their children by gross neglect of their duty to keep in touch with current thought and progressive knowledge. It is one of the laws of economy, that you can not "get" what you have not "given." Science calls this the "law of conservation." The Bible says what a man sows that also shall he reap. It is the same principle. In the ordinary course of life one can see many embryonic sorrows and tragedies which must be inevitable because of this willful or ignorant neglect on the part of the parents to the duties imposed upon them. Education does not begin with school-life; but, as some scientists have asserted, the child ordinarily has had the foundation laid by the time it is two years of age. This is the period when the sterling qualities in the parental character, and especially the mother, makes its lasting and indelible impression. This duty can not be shirked, nor can you excuse yourself in the neglect of this responsibility; so important a duty should not be shuffled onto the shoulders of the hired nurse or teacher or governess; but for your own sake, your husband's sake, your child's sake, your country's sake, and for God's sake, attend to your mother's business for which there can be no adequate substitute.

This is the true womanhood, and finds its highest and holiest exaltation in the moral, and intellectual, and spiritual excellence of the children. The present condition of the church
An Appeal to the Daughters of Zion.

Dear Sisters: We feel that we must make one more appeal to you in behalf of the leaflets being issued each month. The advisory board has incurred quite an expense to have them printed, feeling assured that there was no better way of extending the work of the Daughters of Zion, if they could but have the cooperation of the sisters in the distribution of them; but so far they have not received the support they should have done. We know there are many of you who wish to see the work of the Daughters of Zion extended, and what easier or more efficient way could you have than to purchase a few of these leaflets each month and distribute them where they would not otherwise reach?

Every local at least should use them. They are too good to be lying in a pile unread. Send them out and let them do the good for which they were intended, and we shall soon see the ranks of the Daughters of Zion filling up and their numbers increasing. We only ask you to give them a fair trial and then if they are not helpful we will discontinue them. So send in your orders to Mrs. B. C. Smith, 214 South Street, Independence, Missouri.

Letter Department

Hamburg, Germany, October 31, 1905.

Editors Herald: After a period of three and a half months in our present mission, we feel sufficiently acquainted with the situation as it confronts us, to give the readers of your columns the benefit of our experience, realizing that the Saints are interested in the work here, especially the German Saints. Our trip across the sea has been described by other writers, so we will pass it by and begin with our landing in Hamburg on the 15th of July.

Our first week here was spent in securing a suitable location for our home. In our search we did not merely consult our own feelings, but considered the interests of the church as of greatest importance, as we wanted a home suitable to hold cottage meetings in. As we reached the street upon which we are living, Bro. P. Anderson remarked, "I am favorably impressed with this street," and we believe his impression was from the proper source, as will be seen later on.

As an American citizen, we supposed our troubles o'er upon our entrance into our new home, but not so in the Fatherland. The police must have your name, also the names of the members of your family, where you are from, etc., and your word alone is not sufficient. They must have your passport papers, which we failed to secure, being ignorant of the fact that we needed them, and had no one in a position to know to give us the information. As a result our first month was consumed in becoming permanently located. Then our attention was given to the study of the German language, which is not so easily mastered as might be supposed. In the meantime we prepared tracts for distribution, printing upon them the announcement for services on Sunday afternoon and Thursday evening.

But first we must go to the police again for permission to hold services in our own hired house. Little difficulty has been experienced with them, so far, with one exception. On the 15th of August a policeman called upon us with a notice that we were not wanted in Hamburg.

In conversation with him we soon learned that they had us confused with the Mormons. He informed us that the Mormon missionaries must leave the state. Well, they are here just the same. Last Wednesday evening there were five of them at their service; in all we have met eight. But back again to our conversation with the policeman. We explained the difference between our faith and the Mormons, which seemed to satisfy him; at least he has not called upon us since.

On the 21st of September Bro. Joehnk and I distributed our first lot of tracts, and invited the public to our first service to be held on Sunday following. The hour for our service arrived, but the audience failed to appear, with the exception of one man, one Mr. Ulrich. He promises to be a very earnest investigator, having already read the Book of Mormon, and at present is reading it the second time, expressing himself to be much interested, believing the book to be true.

The three Sundays following the 24th of September, no one appeared at the hour of service. On the 22d inst. Mr. Ulrich came again, also a girl about twelve years old. Last Sunday, the 29th, we had for an audience fourteen boys and girls ranging in age from five to twelve years. We changed the order of meeting to a Sunday-school, with Bro. Joehnk in charge. As a result we feel somewhat encouraged, hoping to reach the parents through the children, all of whom promised to come again next Sunday.

A little incident occurred on the 25th inst., while in attendance at the Mormon 'Biblestunde' which may be interesting to some. They had for their lesson the twentieth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. When they reached verses 28 to 31, the elder in charge called for an expression on the same. One brother, not knowing who we were, ventured to express his opinion. "This," he said, "has had its fulfillment in our time. There are those who were once members of the church, but apostatized, who organized a church and are speaking perverse things, trying to draw away disciples after them. They are known as 'Josephites.'" This seemed to embarrass the elder who had charge of the meeting, (one of the missionaries,) as the color in his face indicated. He tried to modify it by making it appear that it referred more directly to individuals who were expelled from their church for demanding justice, I suppose. We remained quiet until the close of the service. Then Bro. Joehnk introduced himself to the brother who was so liberal with his opinion, while I went after the one of the elders with whom I could converse in English, thus making myself better understood. The elder seemed very anxious to have a talk with me, but when we tried to set a time in which to canvass the subject in dispute he very mildly informed me that he could not spare the time. Bro. Joehnk was little more successful with his man, as he promised to make us a visit but failed to make his appearance at the appointed time.

It might be well to state that we are in great need of literature; for I believe we could interest some of those who so blindly worship priestcraft, if we had the proper literature to present to them. We can not expect to accomplish much with but two small tracts and the Lutheran Bible.

I have always felt, since interested in this work, that the foreign missionaries should have the first attention, being among strangers, and being compelled to pay for everything they eat, drink, and wear; but it seems the rule is reversed in some cases. I realize that the Saints have considerable. of a burden in the branches, building churches, etc., and they do not feel able to give anything to assist in publishing tracts, etc., especially in a foreign language. But how is the work ever to be accomplished?

I have been greatly interested in the articles in the Autumn Leaves, "How can we reach the people," but have failed to see anything that would be of assistance to us in this mission. We have no privilege to preach on the streets, and have no fund to advertise our work as the Saints did in Toronto. The only avenue open to us is to distribute tracts. We are in correspondence with several to whom we sent what tracts we have. They were pleased with them and requested more, but we have no tracts to give them. We can not visit them in person for want of means.

Some may say, Why not write to the Bishop for assistance? We believe that the demands on the treasury are at present greater than the supply. Could each Saint place himself in the position of a missionary among entire strangers, and at times without means sufficient to buy a loaf of bread, I believe every one would be willing to put forth a greater effort to assist in spreading the gospel. I do not write in this manner with a desire to complain, but with a desire to see the Saints become more earnest in assisting on the work with their tithes and offerings.

Our prayer is, that the Lord may direct us into channels of greater usefulness. In the conflict,

John A. Becker.

[We regret the delay in publishing this letter, but for some cause it failed to reach our desk in time to be used, even last week.—EDITOR.]

Editors Herald: I wish to thank Sr. Mattie Persinger for the thirty-two Ensigns that she sent me. They came in time for a New Year's present and I hope they will help to show some one the true light. I was visiting a widow woman who has been afflicted for some six or seven years and the doctor's treatment does her no good. She has faith in God that in his own good time he will heal her of her afflictions. I took the Bible and read James 5:14, 15 and she asked me if I would send for the elders to come and administer to her and I said, "If that is your desire I will send for them." She said, "I am willing to obey the gospel and live for the Lord the rest of my days if the Lord will heal me," and I sincerely ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed if God will it. I trust in the Lord that I may hold out faithful to the end.

BYRNevILLE, Indiana, January 5, 1906.

Editors Herald: Having written you in part concerning Bro. Wight's meeting at this place, will now endeavor to give to your readers the rest. The meeting closed January 4 with a total of thirty-three baptized. Bro. Wight came here November 14 and has remained till the above date, preaching fifty-five times. Never was there a meeting at Byrnville with so much of the Spirit manifest as at this time, Bro. Wight speaking in tongues at two different times, and for the benefit and encouragement of all the Saints present. Of the brethren baptized ten were tobacco-users; eight of them quit its use immediately after baptism, one throwing his plug into the creek when walking in the water to receive baptism. Many have already testified of the taste being taken away.

There was great solemnity and the presence of the Spirit at the water's edge and in nearly all the gatherings, and more especially on the morning of the 26th of December. Bro. Wight was so completely overshadowed by its influence it was difficult for him to pronounce the ceremony preceding baptism.

Taking it all in all this has been the most wonderful meeting ever held here and Bro. Wight has been as a polished shaft in the hand of the great God of this universe in accomplishing this wonderful work among this people, being humble and prayerful and conducting himself in such a way that he has won the confidence of the people here, both inside and out of the church, but to God the praise and the glory all belongs. And now to the Presidency we say: For the coming year send us Bro. Wight again.

SACRAMENTO, California, January 13, 1906.

Editors Herald: As we seldom see in the HERALD anything from this locality, will assume the task of giving a little information relative to the work here.

Responding to a message, or request by 'phone, from A. J. Epling, Amador City, received on New Year's Day, that he was very sick and desired an elder to come at once, I essayed the task. Leaving with private conveyance at half past one in the afternoon, 1st inst., reached the home of Edwin T. Dawson, near Ione, at half past seven in the evening. Next day reached the bed-side of our worthy Bro. A. J. Epling at half past twelve in the afternoon. After prayer with the family, administered to our worthy brother with very good results. The next morning baptized three of his sons, after which in afternoon confirmed them, and administered the sacrament and held prayer-meeting. The Spirit was present and all seemed to enjoy the occasion.

These are isolated Saints, and should be sustained by our prayers. There are others also in that vicinity all of whom are members of Sacramento Branch, but they are over fifty miles distant and can not meet with us. Bro. Dawson is alone on his farm, and needs the prayers of the Saints. He kindly satisfied the physical demands of my steed "Dandy" and self, both going and returning from Amador City.

Elder G. E. Crumley and estimable family are with us at present; they being located here, of course, naturally has a tendency to draw him this way when passing to and from his various fields of labor. He undoubtedly is "the right man in the right place" if I can judge correctly; has the spirit of his calling in "setting in order the churches" and in directing the work in the mission, the good Lord inspiring him relative to much of his work, which of course is of necessity, that no mistakes occur.

The work here we believe is on a firm basis; and the faces of some of the Saints are Zion-ward. May the Master abundantly bless all the Israel of God is my daily prayer.

Yours for truth,

T. J. Lawn.

SWEETWATER, Texas, January 15, 1906.

Dear Herald: How much I appreciate the reading of your pages, and those of the scriptures, no one can know except they, like myself, have been in a condition for a long time that they could not read. Oh, how I have for days, weeks, months, and years hungered and thirsted to read the words of eternal life. I knew they were there but could not see them. Many have been the times that I have proached and could not see a word in the Bible and could not distinguish one face from another of my most familiar friends in the congregation. During the last three years the surgeon's knife has pierced both of my eyeballs to the center. This, with other afflictions, has been my common lot for several years. Although my eyes have been dimmed my faith has been bright and clear in the Lord Jesus Christ, and recently when through the goodness of God my eyesight was made good and I could see plainly and clearly to read his name my soul was filled with joy and I could cry, Blessed be the name of the Lord our God. When one hungers for food and the bread is set before him he will eat. I was thirsty and now I drink, ‘for as the Father hath life in himself so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself, and hath given him authority to execute judgment.’ Also because he is the Son of Man, what a blessing that all through him may have life. Yet some will reject him. This has been the condition in all ages since he fulfilled the parable of himself. (See Luke 20:13.) Query: Will he in that great day forgive all who bow and cry, My Lord and my God? Surely they will be considered—their case will be presented to the great Judge; but oh, deliver me from the awful thought that I shall be called upon to appear before him with my hands, heart, and tongue stained with his blood!

Through all my afflictions my faith in my Savior has been sure and steadfast. Last year the General Conference kindly considered my condition and put me on the superannuated list. I have, however, during the year done some mission work and hope to do more when the winter breaks. The next General Conference will be welcome to put me on any list they think proper, and if the Lord prolongs my life and gives me the health and strength that I now have, I shall wave the banner in more than one place during the coming spring, summer, and fall, and it will not be at half mast either, if the Lord stands by me, and I know he will if I do my duty.

Woe is me if I preach not this gospel of the kingdom. I rejected the kingdom at an early age, and I must now make haste to redeem the time, for my deeds have been evil. I can see now that the Lord has dealt kindly with me even in my evil days. How indulgent; therefore do I love him. I have often interrogated men of other faiths and learned that they feared that God would punish with endless punishment, and so forth. I do not know, but if the Savior teaches us absolutely to forgive seventy times seven, and then in that day there is no forgiveness on the part of the Judge of all flesh, it seems to me to conflict. No; when that time comes that every knee shall bow and every tongue confess, I think God will be just as ready to forgive as he was to forgive me when I obeyed the gospel. Before that I was a sinner; I am a sinner yet, and if I sin seventy times seven he will forgive seventy times seven if I ask him in the spirit of repentance, with a desire to yield to his will.

In these western counties of Texas is as fine an opportunity to preach the restored gospel as any place I have ever been. I have preached in a good many counties in this part of Texas and have baptized quite a number, but not in the last few years. While my companion was with me we traveled together and did considerable mission work, but over three years ago the Lord called her to a better world and I must now plod alone—and not alone either, for she has visited me many times in dreams and comforted me. In bonds and afflictions I have had the comforting influence of the Holy Spirit, and many times the hand of God has led me from the deepest and darkest trials. I have seen his handwriting on the wall, and I shrink not to testify that I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that I will see him when he shall come; yes, when the clouds shall burst with the glory of God and my Savior shall be seen riding the clouds of glory descending to earth. Oh, the wife of my youth will be there! Can I afford to give up these thoughts and be silent on the kingdom of Christ and his God and my God? No! Never while these lungs shall inhale the free atmosphere of this land of liberty!

“And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. And in the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.”

Give me of this fruit.

ASHLAND, Oregon, January 6, 1906.

Dear Herald: The HERALD readers with whom I am acquainted will doubtless be surprised to read my above address. I am one of the isolated ones, the nearest Saint being Sr. Mary Griffiths of Goldhill, Oregon. Will any of the Oregon or California Saints, who chance to see this, please tell me who the Bishop’s agent is for the district in which Ashland is located? Where is the nearest branch? I have not heard a Latter-day Saint sermon since in July, the last being preached by Bro. Goldsmith at South Auburn, Nebraska. Pray for me that I may continue faithful unto the end.

Yours in gospel bonds,
BERTHA BRANDON.

felt I was not altogether forsaken, yet the burden of my heart was to be faithful to my trust, for if there is anything on earth I abhor it is dishonesty. But what can we call it when we have denounced the world and Satan to find ourselves deprived of the Spirit that is promised to be our Comforter, and we are tossed and driven as a vessel at sea; why is it we must pass through fiery trials and be tried as if by fire? Is it for our good, or for our lack of doing our duty? I have not written this to delight myself, but rather to those whom it may help to gain a footing if they have slipped a step back. I have tried to pray and to live as near right as I could, and have ever had this work near to my heart, but it seems Satan has tried to pull me back.

We left Webb City the latter part of October and came to this place. It seemed hard to leave the place where we had lived for thirty years, and go where there were no Saints, but I hope the hand of God may be in it; and I feel it is, for I have met some kind people here, and those who are trying to live up to the best light they have. It made me see just how I stood, with the and knowledge light I had—and to think I was not advancing! That is what hurts me, and should hurt every one who has named the name of Christ. Are we standing still, or are we drifting with the current, or are we climbing the hill?

I find there is talent in this place, and a work to be done here, and my heart goes out to God to help us to so live that we may set an example worthy the light we have received. I can hardly wait until Bro. A. Baker, or some one of the elders, comes to Niaugua. We are thirty miles north of Springfield, on the St. Louis Railroad, and we hope to be helpers in this part of God's heritage.

Having determined to renew my diligence in this work, I ask an interest in your prayers, hoping some will take fresh courage, and not be found at the last day with no oil in their lamps, but that each Saint may be ready when the bridgemon cometh.

SR. R. M. BRADLEY.

LAMONI, December 26, 1905.

Dear Herald: Since my last writing Elder Willey and I spent two months in Centerville with the Saints, and found three different places in the city. We have a good brick church near the center of the city. We made many friends for the church.

Our work was particularly characterized and well advertised from the way in which we had to meet two unscrupulous Utah elders, who preached on the street and made house-to-house visits. They seemed to have no other method of working than by endeavoring to blacken the characters of Joseph Smith, and his son, the President of the Reorganized Church, whose headquarters are at Lamoni, Iowa. They declared that Joseph Smith, Jr., was responsible for polygamy and that his son was only a factional leader of an apostate branch. They positively refused to meet the issue in public discussion but requested us to call on them at their rooms, and when we secured the desired evidence and Elder Willey went to their rooms they gave him the slip. The good Saints and friends of Centerville untringly stood by us while we labored under many disadvantages—much wet and disagreeable weather.

From there we took the tent to Ellston and some of the meetings were well attended. Becoming convinced, however, that the work there was not promising at this time, we brought the tent back to Lamoni. Elder Willey went to the Nauvoo District and I went to Allendale, Missouri. Here I found a few faithful Saints ready to do all in their power to get the gospel before their neighbors. We had a good hearing,—the Saints say the best in some time. While there I had the pleasure of baptizing Sr. Minnie Birk.

From there we went to Lots Grove, six miles north of Allendale. This is a new opening and I had the best regular congregation I ever met any place. For two weeks the house was not large enough to hold the crowd comfortably—sitting and standing room all occupied. We had good singing by the congregation. After I delivered my lecture, "Mormonism exposed, its devilish doctrines laid bare," I had more homes offered me than I could visit at that time. I preached twenty-nine times in thirty days. One of the greatest surprises to them was when I showed them that Joseph F. Smith of Utah was not Joseph Smith of Lamoni, Iowa. Two Baptist preachers who attended the meetings and assisted me were gentlemen and showed a Christian spirit, and all in all it was one of the most interesting meetings I ever hold. One old Baptist preacher came one night ready for battle and asked me why I left the Baptist Church, and when I told him I had left some of the Baptist principles and gone on to perfection he got angry and left the house mid a scene of laughter. I had to close for the present as the Baptists had a regular appointment in the house. At the close of the last meeting two said they were ready for baptism.

I am intending to commence another series of meetings at the Adaps about ten days before Christmas. They realized about two hundred dollars, principally from the work of their own hands. The Saints there are working faithfully and unitedly to meet the obligation incurred in building their nice chapel, and they are receiving splendid assistance from several ladies who are not connected with the church. While there had been no preaching there since the brethren left just after the conference in June, they have kept up their Sunday-school, which is presided over by Sr. Kate Alcott, the Saints deriving much benefit from the splendid lessons in the Quarterly. And my advice is that all the Saints, the isolated ones at least, should procure and study the Quarterly lessons, as they will in a great measure encourage and strengthen them when they can not attend preaching services.

I spoke three times while there. The efforts seemed to be appreciated, perhaps from the principle of the old adage that hunger never saw bad bread. I feel that they should have preaching every Sunday, as an elder who is certainly well qualified to administer the word is their presiding officer. I visited the members of the branch there and at New Troy, and near Bridgeman; also the Saints at Buchanan, speaking to the Saints at the latter place at their Wednesday evening meeting. At Dowagiac there are about fifteen Saints at present, being members of the Marcellus and Hartford Branches. Bro. George H. Goodenough is doing what he can to further the interest of the work there, holding Sunday-school and prayer-meetings.

I spoke to them three times. They mourn the sudden departure of Sr. Augusta Finch from their midst.

I hope to call on the few Saints at Decatur, Mattawan, Kalamazoo, and Jackson soon, and then to Lansing in company with Bro. S. W. L. Scott to organize a branch there again.

Editors Herald: The present time finds me at this place, having left Lamoni December 2, and stopping at Burlington for a short time with the Saints whom I found happy in the good cause. On the 6th came to Galien, where I found the sisters very busy preparing for their bazaar, which was held for three days about ten days before Christmas. They realized about two hundred dollars, principally from the work of their own hands. The Saints there are working faithfully and unitedly to meet the obligation incurred in building their nice chapel, and they are receiving splendid assistance from several ladies who are not connected with the church. While there had been no preaching there since the brethren left just after the conference in June, they have kept up their Sunday-school, which is presided over by Sr. Kate Alcott, the Saints deriving much benefit from the splendid lessons in the Quarterly. Marcellus, Michigan, January 9, 1906.
Let me assure you I appreciate the visits of the Herald each week, and often think that it would be interesting to many of your readers, especially to your 'poor boys a long way from home in the ministry,' if you had a place for Lamonite items, similar to those furnished by Dr. Horton, of Independence.

LOMAX, Nebraska, January 13, 1906.

Editors Herald: I came to this place yesterday, and am to commence a meeting here to-night in the Evangelical church-house. Religious enthusiasm seems to be rather quiet here now.

My experience since our last General Conference has been very much as it has been before. I find quite a little opposition preached a little on the streets in latter part of the summer, and believe it to be a very effective way of reaching the people, though I confess it took all the courage I had to commence that line of work. When we go on the street to preach we have to meet and face all classes. While standing in the street at Scott's Bluff, Nebraska, preaching one evening some one threw a stone at me with great violence. It brushed my pants as it passed; if it had hit me it would have hurt me badly. I was being blessed with excellent liberty when it happened, and as soon as the stone brushed me there seemed to fall a divine mantle of protection on me and I felt that I would not care if the air were full of stones. The experience was worth a great deal to me for I was made to know that my dear Father was near me and I felt thankful for the opportunity of enduring a little hardship for his name. I desire to labor in such way that the Lord will approve of my efforts.

Western Nebraska is thinly settled and upon the whole a rather poor place for an elder to labor if he wishes to have a big report for conference. Of course I want to bring in as good a report as I can and would like to accomplish much more than I do. I propose to stand in the battle line and advance as the Lord opens the way. I have baptized six since General Conference and there are others who will be baptized soon. May the Lord bless his work is my prayer.

C. W. Prettyman.

The Lord’s Prayer.

"Exchange: The question having arisen as to whether the English version of the Lord’s Prayer is a true reproduction of the original as found in Matthew, a native Greek scholar proceeds to answer it. He deals with the petitions in order, translates each word with all the shades of meaning of the original and then presents the whole in this form:

’’Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name—thy dominion come—thy (fixed) purpose be done, as in heaven, so, too, on earth. Give us this day our mere (or simple) bread and forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors theirs, and let us not fall into a tempter’s snare, but deliver us from the evil one.’’—St. Joseph News-Press, January 8, 1906.

If the Greek from which this man translates is a correct copy of the Lord’s Prayer, as recorded by Matthew, it is surely interesting and confirming. I call attention to one point in particular. King James’ Version reads: “Lead us not into temptation”; the Inspired Translation, by Joseph Smith: “Suffer us not to be led into temptation”; and this: “And let us not fall into a tempter’s snare.” Further comment is unnecessary.

Extracts from Letters.

N. Wilkinson, Buffalo, New York: “I think there are many more Saints in Buffalo than we know of, and I would ask that if there are any they will take notice that we are holding regular Sunday-school and Religious meetings at the home of Bro. Blair, 160 Delevan Street, and we would like all Saints that are in the city to attend. Would also like to ask that presidents of branches, if they know of any members who have moved away from other branches, and who have come to Buffalo, would correspond with Bro. N. Wilkinson, 52 Inter Park Street, so that he may call on them, as we wish to push the work here, and we need your assistance.”

Asa A. Ward, Ithaca, Michigan: “The Herald and Glad Tidings are the only means we have of hearing the word of God. But we are trying to get the work started here, and think we will succeed if Bro. Cornish can possibly get an elder here. But he reports, in a recent letter I received from him, as did the Master long ago, Truly the harvest is ripe, but the laborers are few. This being so let us enter into the new year with a determination to pray, work, and study harder than ever; pray, that we may come up higher in spiritual things; work, that we may be able to give unto the Lord that which belongs to him as tithing, consecration, donation, etc.; study, that we may be able to learn our duty toward God.”

F. C. Warnky, Kansas City, Missouri, December 27: “Made a trip to Spring River District by request, and preached thirty-nine sermons, and baptized eight. Bro. W. S. Taylor accompanied me most of the time, and our efforts were confirmed with signs following. Last week I baptized two more.”

Eli Hayer, Arlington, South Dakota, December 26: “We closed a series of meetings Sunday night of twenty-two sermons. Two were baptized; others are believing. Some are storming, and will very likely sing, ‘Praise God from whom all blessings flow,’ when I leave.”

A. J. Layland, Soda Springs, Idaho: “I found Bro. J. D. Stead battling away in the vicinity of Soda Springs, and together we continued the work, which resulted in seven souls being baptized by Bro. Stead. Others are believing.”

J. J. Teeter, Fairfield, Nebraska: “There is a great deal of sickness in our branch, and we suffer some persecution here. We came in contact with two of the Utah people last spring. They were to preach in a neighboring schoolhouse, and several of the Saints went. While they were singing there came over me a sound as of the wind. Some of it fell over me, but the greater part seemed to go over to the other side of the house. I had to pray to God for strength to seat myself so I could watch where it went. One of the sisters raised up with her young child, three years old, seemingly perfectly lifeless. She beckoned to me and took him out, supposing him to be dead. At the same time two of the brethren were bound in their seats under the same power. I went out and rebuked the power that possessed the little child, and immediately he became well, and we glorified God for his marvelous power.”

Anna B. Asmussen, Independence, Kansas: “We live in Montgomery County, and like the country very well, only we have no church of our own people. Hope some elder can come out here and preach for us.”

Beniah Johnson, Balliknob, Arkansas: “The work is moving along here, but we failed having prayer-meeting the last two Wednesday evenings on account of the bad weather. I had the pleasure of being with Sr. Sarah Sandas a few minutes during the forenoon, and am very glad to say to the Saints who are acquainted with her, that though she is isolated from the Saints she still seems strong in the faith. We had a little Christmas-tree for the benefit of the little Sunday-school children on the 23d.”

William Hewitt, Santa Barbara, California: “I am old and stricken in years. My father was a preacher and he paid his tithing, and did not ride in coaches, but he went from house to house as our Savior did. In those days when the elders went broke they rolled up their sleeves and made a ‘stake’; but now they have to ride,—can not walk any more.”

Alice Rush, Independence, Missouri: “I am still striving to live as the good Master would have me, and am trying to bring up my six girls to know the gospel, so that they may become useful in God's kingdom. I was once opposed to the true gospel, but through the mercies of God I was brought to realize my condition. I ask your prayers in behalf of my relatives and friends who are wandering as lost sheep, also for my husband and myself that we may hold out to the end."

R. B. Howlett, Davidsville, Ontario: "The work of God is making a little headway in this part. Eight have been baptized here within nine months. A frame church, worth one thousand dollars, built mostly by the donated labor of the Saints, was opened January 7, Bro. R. C. Evans preaching the first sermon. Organized a branch and Sunday-school."

M. M. Alsens, Bowden, Texas: "We are still in the faith that was once delivered to the Saints. I want to thank our worthy brother for the article on 'Perfection.' I am trying to attain this, and that is what I am fighting Satan for. I have received that sweet, quiet, humble Spirit of Christ; and I rejoice to know there have been a few faithful saints in all ages, and I am striving for a place among the faithful of our day."

Sr. M. M. Logan, Haileyville, Indian Territory: "I am half a hundred years old and have always been afflicted in many ways. As my body grows old and weak, so does my mind. I have been in the church since May, 1903, and rejoice that my eyes and ears were opened that I might receive the glorious gospel of our Savior. We have been blessed in our branch with the gifts of the gospel, and with grand sermons enough to convince the world. But if they believed they would not accept, for the most of them would rather miss eternal life than be called a 'Mormon.' The 21st of July, 1903, a heavenly messenger told me to tell the Latter Day Saints, while they slumber: If they will remove the obstacles from their doors, put their houses in order, cover up all unsightly objects, perhaps I will leave them a blessing. Brothers and sisters, let us have pure hearts and clean hands; for I have seen God's angel examining the hearts, with his book and pencil in his hand, and I know that where God's children try to do right they are watched over by his servants."

V. Boatwright, Hawthorn, Wisconsin: "Since coming here from Iowa I have tried to tell the angel's message every Sunday but one. I have been greatly afflicted with my left leg, and suffer almost unbearable pain at times. I ask all the Saints, and also the Prayer Union, to pray for my recovery. One of our neighbors here is a son of D. H. Bays, and is a Catholic. His wife said that all of D. H. Bays' children, but one possibly, belonged to other churches."

J. L. Rust, Gladstone, Illinois: "I have a large number of Heralds which I will send to any one wanting them to read. There have been some conflicting arguments through the Herald, but the dox only serve to help one to discern the gold. It is to be hoped that all may be profited, and come to a knowledge of the truth."

C. C. Joehnk, Elbeck, Hamburg, Germany: "I hope the work of printing the Book of Mormon in the German language may be not long delayed; for we are in great need of that Book of Mormon here. One man has been reading one of ours, was well pleased with it, and wanted to buy one. I think he will obey soon."

George W. Burt, Alpina, Michigan: "December 13 we had the privilege of leading four into the waters of baptism, one of them a lady who had been a member of the Adventist Church, and whose husband was an elder of that church for years. Her friends tried hard to prevent her, some saying they would not speak to her again, but when we arrived at the place of baptism we found her waiting there for us."

They who welcome new truth never have to wait long for it.—Rave's Horn.

DELEGATE CREDENTIALS TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Delegate credential blanks, provided for by action of General Conference, have been sent to presidents or secretaries of the various districts, also to officers of branches not in districts. Said officers are requested to forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their districts or branches in the coming General Conference, to the Church Secretary, as soon as possible, that a complete roll of delegates may be prepared, as provided for by resolution of General Conference, to facilitate prompt organization and work of that body. Credentials of delegates appointed at fall or winter conferences should be forwarded without delay, and those yet to be appointed, immediately after appointment. It is desired that all credentials be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in district or branch, and names of its delegates, signed by the president and secretary of branch or district, appointing, with name of district or branch and place and date of conference or business-meeting, is sufficient. Separate, individual credentials to delegates are not necessary. Please insert total membership, in all cases.

Any failing to receive blanks will be supplied on application to the undersigned.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restrictions of delegate voting" provide as follows:

"Each district shall be entitled to one delegate for every twenty-five members of said district, and one vote in conference for each delegate to which they may be entitled. [Scattered members in districts, including those enrolled on records of disorganized branches, who are not recorded as members of other districts, may be included in the enumeration of membership.]

"The delegates present at conference from any one district shall be entitled to cast a full vote of the district of which they are delegates, unless otherwise instructed by their district conference."

"Provided, that in case of a disagreement of views among the members of said delegation (the full delegation not being present), they shall be entitled to cast only their individual votes as said delegates.

"No one delegate shall be entitled to cast, as representative in the same conference, more than twenty votes.

"Each regularly organized branch of the church, not included in an organized district, shall be entitled to one delegate, who shall have the same privileges as delegates of districts. But when the membership of such branch exceeds twenty-five, it shall be entitled to one delegate for each twenty-five members.

For further information concerning representation, choice, and instruction of delegates, etc., see Book of Rules, chapter 17.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 17, 1906.

R. S. Salyards, Church Secretary.

Release of Missionary.

Because of financial and other conditions, which demand his time and attention, Elder T. W. Williams desires release from missionary appointment. The General Conference, in session at Davisville, Ontario, on February 2 or 3, will consider his request. Regrets are mutual. Bro. Williams will continue to do local church-work as time will permit.

CHAS. E. CRUMLEY, Missionary in Charge.

Concurred in by Presidency. Joseph Smith, President.

January 19, 1906.

Conference Notices.

The Nauvoo District conference will convene at Burlington, Iowa, February 11 and 12, 1906. No delegates necessary.

Branch secretaries and presidents please send reports to W. H. Gunn, Secretary, of the district or branch of conference year.

The conference of the Northern California District will convene at Sacramento, California, March 3, 1906. A full report is desired, and a large attendance. Important business to be presented. J. M. Terry, president.

The Kewanee District conference will convene at Kewanee, Illinois, February 3, 1906, at 10 o'clock a.m. All trains will be met by reception committee. The presiding patriarch, A. H. Smith, will be with us; also expect Bro. J. W. Wight. Those sending their branch reports by mail, please send to A. Berve, 728 North Lexington Avenue, Kewanee, Illinois. J. L. Terry, secretary.

The New York and Philadelphia District conference will convene February 10, 1906, at 6 o'clock p. m., at the Saint's church, corner of Ontario and North Howard Streets, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. All elders and priests are requested to report their writing, and if there be any who have not received blanks from secretary a card to the secretary will receive immediate attention. Ephraim Squire, secretary, 17 Sherlock Place.

Convention Notices.

The Eastern Iowa District Sunday-school convention will convene at 10.30 a. m., February 9, 1906, at Marion, Iowa, in the Hummel Hall, over the laundry, one and one half blocks from the Chicago, Milwauk & St. Paul depot, on Eleventh Street. Cora E. Weir, secretary.

The convention of the Northeastern Missouri District Sunday-school association will convene at the Saints' chapel, Bevier, Missouri, Friday, February 9, 1906. Officers will be elected for the coming year, also delegates to the General Convention. All schools are requested to send as many delegates as possible. Hattie Williams, secretary.

Spring River District Sunday-school convention will convene at 9 a. m., February 9, 1906, under which the School of Evangelism will be conducted. Election of officers for district will be held, and the convention will elect delegates to General Convention. Mabel C. Holsworth, secretary.

The New York and Philadelphia District Sunday-school association will meet at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, February 10, 1906, at 2.30 p. m. The association must commence on time, in order to be through to allow the business session of the district conference (which convenes at 5 p. m.), to proceed. E. B. Hull, secretary.

The Sunday-school convention of the Central Nebraska District will convene at Benesest, Gregory County, South Dakota, February 9, 1906. If the majority of the House is, therefore, content, it may not be in the province of an outsider to interpose any objection. At the same time, it is worth while to call attention again to the manner in which business of the House is conducted. The Speaker has the power to allot supreme control of all business to be vested in the Speaker. The modus operandi is easily explained. Thousands upon thousands of bills are introduced in the House at each session and responsibility of each of them must be reported upon. Each bill reported is placed upon the calendar. It is easy to see, however, that this docket is soon so overcrowded as to make it impossible to secure consideration for even a small number of them. As each committee is restricted to a certain day upon which it can bring its measures before the House, in order to extricate favored legislation from this accumulated mass upon the calendar, a committee on rules is appointed, which committee has the power to report an order for the consideration of a certain measure, and it fixes the day and hour upon which the final vote shall be taken. It is, of course, within the power of the House to vote adversely upon this rule; but as a matter of fact, the Speaker and the committee on rules can confidently rely upon the requisite support, because few of the majority members are willing to run the risk of opposing the desire of the men who dominate the House.—Henry Litchfield West, in the January-March "Fourm.

One-Man Power in the House of Representatives.

In his address to the Republican caucus, prior to the opening of the session, Speaker Cannon expressed the hope that all business would be transacted promptly, in order that an early adjournment might be reached. The prompt disposition of business is, certainly, much to be desired, but an early adjournment is not equally commendable if it is accomplished at the expense of many omissions.

One of the first acts of the Republican caucus was the adoption of a resolution continuing the rules of the last Congress. There was no objection. The protest against the rules which has been spasmodically made during the past few years was not even heard. The one-man power which, since the days of President B. Roed, has been dominant in the House of Representatives was continued without a murmur.

This unanimous action on the part of the Republican representatives indicates their complete and perfect satisfaction with the rules under which they are governed. If the majority of the House is, therefore, content, it may not be in the province of an outsider to interpose any objection. At the same time, it is worth while to call attention again to the manner in which business of the House is conducted. The Speaker has the power to allot supreme control of all business to be vested in the Speaker. The modus operandi is easily explained. Thousands upon thousands of bills are introduced in the House at each session and the committee on rules is appointed, which committee has the power to report an order for the consideration of a certain measure, and it fixes the day and hour upon which the final vote shall be taken. It is, of course, within the power of the House to vote adversely upon this rule; but as a matter of fact, the Speaker and the committee on rules can confidently rely upon the requisite support, because few of the majority members are willing to run the risk of opposing the desire of the men who dominate the House.—Henry Litchfield West, in the January-March "Fourm.
beyond the Mackenzie delta and the mouth of the Coppermine River. Collinson, during the Franklin search, took his vessel eastward through these channels almost to the very waters from which the Gjoa started last summer, and a short sledge journey farther east brought him within sight of King William Land, but he little dreamed that the bodies of many of the men he was seeking were scattered along its shores.

In time this route may be of some importance. Mineral resources have been found along the northern edge of Canada, and some day they will be developed. This water-route is by no means ideal, but, to some extent, it will facilitate the operations of miners and whalers. —From "Making the Northwest Passage," by Cyrus C. Bird Leaflets for Teachers.

The National Association of Audubon Societies is issuing a series of Educational Leaflets on our common birds. Each Leaflet contains a four-page description of the habits and economic value of a single species and is illustrated with an accurately colored plate showing the male and female bird, photographs of their nest and eggs, etc. There is also—and, for teachers, this seems a valuable feature—a fac-simile outline of the plate, to be colored by children from the original, an object-lesson which should aid in impressing the bird's distinguishing marks on the mind of the student.

These Leaflets and illustrations are first published in Bird-Lore, the organ of the Societies, and all teachers subscribing to this magazine will receive, free of charge, two extra copies of each Leaflet, two colored plates, and six outline drawings, on application to the National Association of Audubon Societies at 141 Broadway, New York City. Additional copies may be had at cost.

No other daily newspaper has ever covered the Iowa field so thoroughly as the Register and Leader in its daily and Sunday issues. It maintains more than two hundred correspondents, scattered in every portion of the State, and every happening of consequence is promptly reported in its columns. It publishes more than twice as much Iowa news as any other newspaper.

Its Sunday issue has gained the title of an "Iowa Magazine"; it has made a specialty of Iowa feature stories of all kinds, and it prints as many again illustrations as any other Iowa newspaper.

The field outside Iowa is also thoroughly covered. The Register and Leader gets the complete Associated Press report, day and night; it has an experienced Iowa newspaper man at Washington as its special correspondent; it maintains special correspondents also in the other important cities of the country. In sports news the Register and Leader also leads, no other Iowa paper publishing so many baseball and football results. In short, it is an Iowa paper, made for Iowans, and with their interests always in mind. The Register and Leader now has a mail service that makes delivery possible in most of the towns of the State during the morning hours.

Brother, It's FREE to You

my book telling how to make spring beds to order, where to get material, how and how to get orders, and how to make good money working at it all the time, or in your spare time. Any one can do this work. Several scores of brethren have sent for books and a goodly number have ordered material for from one to three dozen beds. Brothers with horse and buggy living in country places can do, especially well. Write now lest you forget. P.O. order will do. Address H. P. ORWIN, Pasadina, Cal., 41 Fair Oaks Ave., R. F. D. No. 1.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—Book of Mormon, Jn. 8:31, 32

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none." —Book of Mormon, Jar. 8:9

The books which Franklin read in his boyhood remained in his opinion the proper books for all children to read. The Pilgrim’s Progress, Burton’s Historical Collections, Defoe’s Essay on Projects, and Doctor Mather’s Essays to Do Good had an influence on some of the principal events of his life.—Educational Report.

When you get into a tight place and everything goes against you until it seems that you can not hold on a minute longer, never give up then, for that is just the place and the time that the tide will turn.—Harriet Beecher Stowe.

superhuman force for supremacy. Such questions should be studied and comprehended by the people, the mass, the common people, if there be such. It is their prerogative as it is their duty to analyze, to judge such matters and all facts in connection with the development and solution of them. The interests of the people, present and eternal, the interests of the cause designed for the spiritual and temporal salvation of the race, are committed to the care of the people, as sovereigns, under God, so constituted by him within his law. "The inhabitants of Zion shall judge all things pertaining to Zion."

Wherefore take heed, my beloved brethren, that ye do not judge that which is evil to be of God, or that which is good and of God, to be of the devil. For behold, my brethren, it is given unto you to judge, that ye may know good from evil; and the way to judge is as plain, that ye may know with a perfect knowledge, as the daylight is from the dark night. For the Spirit of Christ is given to every man, that they may know good from evil.—Moroni 7:2.

In harmony with this statement another writer has well said:

Its [the inspired word's] intrinsic lessons and spiritual delineations can only be discerned and measured by the inner perception, and by such discernment they need not be mistaken. The fine gold of love, faith, truth, life, and spirituality constitutes the true inerrancy.

When that which assumes to be truth is received at second hand, cast into the fixed forms of human language, it lacks that original luster and self-attesting quality with which it shines when poured fresh from the Father's heart into the affectionate souls of his children. From whatever outward source it may come, in the last analysis before its assimilation, it must receive the approval of the divine tribunal which is set up in the recesses of the immaterial man.

Development of a body of people, development of a cause, of a nation, is coequal, coextensive with the interest and activity of the people in the various departments of work being done by that body. The church is no exception to this rule, and successful administration and execution of work by those called to act in any leading capacity in the body, can not be accomplished without the intelligent scrutiny and cooperation of the body itself.

No one can ever be hurt by truth being known, by facts being brought out and submitted to full and clear inspection. Publicity is necessary, and the more light brought to the attention of the people as students of life in all its phases, including principles and policies of the work of the church, the better and more fully rounded out will be the development, the greater the usefulness and happiness of the people. It will aid those holding responsibilities in all departments to have the cooperation of the people, given as a result of confidence based upon actual knowledge and a free judgment, a righteous judgment. True men will be the more appreciated and loved and supported as they are understood and the Christlike spirit made manifest in their service. We trust God because we see in him so much to inspire our confidence and love. Publicity, like honesty, is the true policy.

Nor do we plead for publicity and the cooperation of the people in an awakened and enlightened public sentiment because we necessarily distrust any man or men; but because we aver, on good grounds, that all general facts should be known. The people are benefited and apphified and their present and eternal interests are conserved when the work moves along right lines, as they suffer loss, not only temporal but eternal loss, when it is otherwise; they therefore have full right to know and to understand all questions in which such important interests are involved. The principle of solidarity or oneness of society is being more and more recognized. No one lives unto himself alone; the good suffer with the bad, the principle of mutuality is expressed in the good of all or the suffering of all, under given conditions, that men may learn that they are keepers of brother man; hence the lesson of universal sympathy and universal help in behalf of the interests of all. All men are fallible; we distrust ourselves to some extent and seek counsel and cooperation of others, because of our limitations; we reasonably inspect and take the measure of all human agencies to the extent that we recognize that it requires the body, the church, in its various departments to minister, to sustain, and make up and balance the whole. We are constituted as checks upon, safeguards to, and correctors of one another. We assist one another; each contributes to as all share in the benefits of the service of all.

The body is not one member, but many.... And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you.... but God hath tempered the body together.

From whom [Christ] the whole body fittly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.

We can and should differ in judgment when necessary, without malice, without unkindness, but in firmness because true to right and devoted to its interests and execution. If disposed to see the right and possessing the Spirit of truth we shall be able to unite on the basis of its intelligence and guidance. The people, all, laity and ministry, share in the responsibility of so doing. "All are called," not the ministry alone, according to the "gifts and callings" of all, both men and women. The important fact that all members of the church are responsible for the condition of the work and its success, the writer believes, can not be too strongly impressed or too fully realized. God has not placed all the responsibility upon any one department of or upon all the ministry alone; yet it is a fact, and seems to have been so almost always, that the people of the church have largely confined their interest to local conditions, and many have failed to manifest an active interest even there, leaving general and specific questions affecting the status and work of the church largely out of consideration. There are numerous honorable exceptions; but we speak of the tendency or rule; the neglect or lack of participation is, of course, largely unintentional, unrealized. The fact is we need, and must develop and maintain, as in other public affairs, an enlightened public sentiment in all things pertaining to the work. Every man, every woman, should know what actual conditions are; what progress is being made, that they may rejoice in it; what evils or hindrances exist, if any, what obstacles are to be overcome. They should comprehend and know that any body of people, as a result of human conditions, must necessarily struggle with problems within the body as well as without; that so long as “human nature” is to be brought into subjection and overcome, one problem after another will come to the front in the long line of development; that in the ascending scale in which God draws humanity nearer and nearer to him there are always great obstacles to be overcome, carnal human nature to be prevailed against, powers seen and unseen to be wrestled with. We wrestle against flesh and blood, which sometimes is bad enough; but not with flesh and blood alone.

With a body of people but yet very inadequately developed, with surroundings of the world in which light and darkness are ever engaged in a mighty struggle for supremacy, with every possible appeal of error to human ambition in all the various phases of selfishness, and in deceptive forms, assuming the garb of good, and our own ranks constantly recruited by new material, inexperienced, undisciplined, possibly ignorant or to a degree advanced, as the case may be, it is apparent that close attention to problems within, largeness of vision and intelligent conception of our actual condition as a body, with all the purity and intelligence and forcefulness of purpose worthy so great a cause, are strictly essential. We need it, all this, to develop us as we are; we require it to assimilate the incoming new material and to hold our balance and go forward; we require it to become through Christ the light of the world. We repeat the thought that clear-visioned men and women, well read in the standard works and history of the church, deeply grounded in the truth, able to recognize its principles and to interpret its spirit and purposes, through Christ, are necessary to success in our work. If needed anywhere they are needed among us. “Who is sufficient for these things?”

Every great work, spiritual or secular, demands and has demanded the joint, cooperative work of such personalities. God’s work is accomplished through developed agencies. He can not do a great work without potent agencies—potent through him. “Out of weakness they were made strong”; they “received power” by spiritual consecration to him. Our work, we believe, will move only so fast as the people move, as they are prepared, as they assert themselves, true to the interests committed to their care, under the divine principle and prerogative of “common consent,” by which “all things” are to be done (Doctrine and Covenants 25:27), and through which they are to watch and note the movings of events and take cognizance of policies, conditions, and general features, at home and abroad, and see to it that the triumph of truth is assured by the employment of true men and true women and true measures and methods.

It is well that the world about us and the moral agencies of God at work therein are furnishing us some object-lessons, to the profit of all. God’s high purposes, broad and exalted as himself, are being wrought out in all nations, among all peoples. He has said that “abomination shall not reign,” and world-wide, universal, is the work of emancipation under his all-comprehending, masterful supervision. Not confined to the work of the church are his operations, but in connection therewith and in harmony with his universal purpose he is uprooting the old and establishing the new. Error, ancient and modern, in its multitudinous forms, in religion, in politics, in economics, in social life—in everything and everywhere—is being and is to be brought to light, to be unmasked, disarmed, disannulled, by the manifest revelation of truth in the minds and hearts of men and applied to all conditions of life. It signifies the remaining only of “those things which can not be shaken.” The people—all, not a few, not a mere class, not merely a privileged class, are to assume to the places designed for them—the places essential to them, by him who has decreed equal opportunities to all in that he has proclaimed that he is just and true. The indifference and neglect of the people, with their conditions of oppression in some instances, and parsimony and selfishness in others, at home and abroad, has made possible corruption and other errors in government. Oppression, graft, corruption, and attendant low conditions are awakening the people as never before, and the future is bright with promise of better things. It is the greatest epoch of awakening ever known, made possible of quick and wide-spread development largely by modern civilization with its facilities of intercommunication; and the outlook, notwithstanding the dark side of the picture, is on the whole, encouraging and optimistic. However, probabilities point to a titanic struggle—the greatest ever witnessed on earth—between truth and entrenched error. The two forces are being marshaled and concentrated for the battle and are converging with rapid approach. We have reason to be optimistic, on the whole, though great suffering must result and the final consummation be delayed until “he reigns whose right it is.”

To learn our responsibilities as a people, to develop all our forces and talent, much of which lie dormant and consequently the usefulness and power of which the church is robbed—a large amount of undeveloped, unused material too; to keep pace with developments in the church and out of it, to see that our “common consent” is given only after a knowledge of conditions as they really exist is attained, either through ourselves, by our own suffrages, or by the acts of those chosen to represent us, in the various problems that come before us as a body—to do this is to render our “reasonable service” to God, to his people, to humanity. Service based upon less than this is incompetent, “unreasonable” service; is not God’s service, but very liable to be service of another character.

If a few only are to act, a few only are to be developed, a few only to be rewarded, a few—a paltry few as to number, to be coworkers with God. Were it true that those chosen to occupy in the various grades of the ministry and in other positions of responsibility in the world, great and small, if there be such, always could be depended upon to carry out and execute work committed to their care as it should be executed, the people would lie back, as a mass, and conclude that their thought and efforts were unnecessary, hence would degenerate to a mere existence. But such is not true now and never has been the case, as history abundantly proves; hence the responsibility for success and the reward therefor is divided and distributed among all. Power and responsibility in the church, as in the government, is divided into departments and lies primarily with the people, who under God, are sovereign.

If we have not sufficiently proclaimed all facts necessary to be known and connected with the work, the causes of failure as well as the notes of success; if these facts are not sufficiently known, it is time they were known and studied and comprehended. It is not ours to occupy the attitude of mere protestants, merely urging against wrongs in sectarianism and other isms, but to make the forward movement of establishing truth our primary object, including all necessary protests therewith. Let us turn on the light everywhere, on ourselves, individually, locally, and generally; in branches, districts, stakes; on the church and its problems as a whole. A knowledge of the situation, entire, is essential to correction and progress and success. This is manifestly the true policy to be pursued everywhere. Such is the policy adopted by the Almighty himself, in America, in Russia, at home and abroad. Systems, policies, methods, purposes, acts, secret and otherwise, are being “spoken upon the housetops,” and “the secret acts of men” are being “revealed.” (Doctrine and Covenants 1.) Modern sins, like those of the ancient Babylonian, Grecian, and Roman world, are being brought to light and their foundations undermined and dissolved by the power of Israel’s God. These are present judgment days in which all things are being made “naked and open” before the people in general, as they have ever been before the Almighty. Truth has nothing to conceal, nothing to fear, if left free to examine and confront error; hence the latter only need fear the already inaugurated opening of opportunity to all to attain a higher level and a brighter day.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

It is a great pleasure to announce improvement in the health of President Joseph Smith. His general health has been improving for some time past, though until late the pain in his face, from neuralgia, continued unabated. The pain is diminishing and hopes are entertained for his early and complete recovery. He appreciates the sympathy and interest of all who have so kindly remembered him.

Reporting his field for the past quarter Bro. Heman C. Smith states conditions to be favorable, considering the season of the year and other hindering causes. The missionary force is active; seventy-seven baptisms.

Some one has defined optimist thus: “An optimist is a man who knows what is going to happen to the other fellow but doesn’t care.” We think that comes as near being a correct definition (as we see it exemplified) of the term as any we ever heard. As a rule a man who is so situated that he feels safe from “what is going to happen,” is optimistic; but remove his sense of security and put him in “the other fellow’s” place, and his optimism sinks to the heels of his boots very suddenly.

A sister suggests that while the sisters who attend conference should be not extravagant in dress, the brethren also might leave their boxing-gloves at home, and not be quite so ready to throw down the gauntlet. Yes, it might be as well to handle things without gloves! However, if each one goes with a proper desire to see only the will of God done, eliminating himself, his motives, and his wishes as much as possible, there need not be any serious sparring or wrestling. It is only the ambitions of men that make these things necessary.

We learn with much regret of the death of Bro. George H. Hulmes, President of the Independence Stake, which occurred in the state of Colorado, where he had been taken a short time before his death. He had been ill for some time and his death was not unexpected to some, though doubtless it came as a shock to many. Bro. Hulmes was a man of purity and integrity of character and a faithful servant of the church. The HERALD extends sympathy and condolence to the family and all bereaved.
SEALING POWER.

According to the purported revelation on celestial marriage presented to the Utah church at a special conference at Salt Lake City, Utah, in August, 1852, there is only one on the earth at a time who holds the sealing authority. The language is as follows:

And verily I say unto you, that the conditions of this law are those: All covenants, contracts, bonds, obligations, oaths, vows, performances, connections, associations, or expectations, that are not made, and entered into, and sealed, by the Holy Spirit of promise, of him who is anointed, both as well for time and for all eternity, and that too most holy, by revelation and commandment, through the medium of mine anointed, whom I have appointed on the earth to hold this power, (and I have appointed unto my servant Joseph to hold this power in the last days, and there is never but one on the earth at a time on whom this power and the keys of this priesthood are conferred,) are of no another has no binding force.

It will be seen that there is no provision here for the one who holds this authority to delegate it to another, and a sealing ordinance performed by another has no binding force.

If then it should be urged that, notwithstanding this lack of provision, this one has power to delegate his authority to another, it follows that he loses it while the other exercises it, for it can be possessed by only one upon the earth at a time.

In this connection observe how this authority was passed around according to the testimony of the Utah people which we are asked to believe:

1. It was on April 5, 1841, vested in Joseph Noble, who upon that day, it is said, sealed Louisa Beman to Joseph Smith. (See Historical Record, vol. 6, p. 282.)

2. October 27, 1841, it was vested in D. B. Huntington, for it is said that he on that day sealed Zina D. Huntington to the Prophet. (See ibid., p. 283.)

3. December 11, 1841, it seems to have been still resident in Mr. Huntington, for he is represented to have then sealed Precindia L. Huntington to the Prophet. (See ibid., p. 283.)

4. June 29, 1842, it had been transferred to Brigham Young, as it is said that he then sealed Eliza Roxey Snow to the Prophet. (See ibid., p. 283.)

5. July 27, 1842, N. K. Whitney seems to occupy, sealing Sarah Ann Whitney to the Prophet. (See ibid., p. 284.)

6. In the summer of 1842, H. C. Kimball seems to have occupied for a season, as it is related that he then sealed Martha McBride Kimball to the Prophet. (See Joseph F. Smith, Jr.'s pamphlet on Blood Atonement, pp. 86, 87.)

7. April, 1843, the power seems to be found in the President, as it is claimed that he then sealed Mrs. Mary Ann Price to Orson Hyde. (See ibid., p. 89.)

8. April 27, 1843, still the power seems to be with Joseph Smith, as it is stated that he then sealed Margaret Moon to William Clayton. (See Historical Record, p. 225.)

9. May 1, 1843, it goes to William Clayton, as he is supposed upon that day to have sealed Lucy Walker to Joseph Smith. (See ibid., p. 225.)

10. May 11, 1843, this special authority seems to have been shifted to John Adams, as it is claimed that he on that day sealed Emily Dow Partridge and her sister, Eliza, to the Prophet. (See ibid., pp. 233, 234.)

11. June 12, 1843, this authority, always located in one yet constantly moving around, locates in Willard Richards, as it is urged that he then sealed Rhoda Richards to the Prophet. (See Blood Atonement, pp. 90, 91.)

12. July 22, 1843, it found a resting-place in Hyrum Smith, according to the assertion that he then sealed Howard Coray and wife. (See Historical Record, p. 229.)

13. August, 1843, it seems to have returned to Joseph Smith, as it is claimed that about that time he sealed Catherine Phillips Smith to his brother Hyrum. (See Blood Atonement, p. 84.)

14. September 20, 1843, we are gravely informed that it had returned to Hyrum Smith to enable him to seal Melissia Lott Willis to his brother Joseph. (See ibid., p. 87.)

15. November 2, 1843, Brigham Young is supposed to have been clothed with this wonderful power and to have exercised it in sealing his sister Fanny to the Prophet. (See Historical Record, p. 234.)

These are only a few of the dates in which this mystic authority was supposed to have alighted on some one, while floating around, located in only one upon earth.

We have not been informed whether there is any special ceremony by which this peculiar right is transferred or not. We are also ignorant as to whether there is a record kept or not so that it can be located when desired. If not it seems to us that it might be difficult sometimes to run it down when it is supposed to be in demand.

Imagine some would-be, devoted benedict leading his blushing bride to the altar, and then being under the necessity of searching the records, or of chasing around to locate the location of this located transferable coveted commission. H. C. S.

WHY IS IT?

We may not be able to tell you, only in a small degree, but if some of the causes which result in these undesirable conditions, referred to in this article, are understood, it will tend to relieve and improve the situation.

It must be conceded that men and women of intelligence and ability who, seemingly, have a strong love for God and his cause, differ widely upon important matters. Indeed they hold directly opposite views; and, as a result, misunderstanding and conflict ensue. This misunderstanding usually leads to more or less loss of confidence, and, sometimes, cripples the efforts of good ministers and Saints of the church. Now the leading question before us is, Why is it so?

First, all men are finite. The wisest among us know but little, even at the best. If we all realized how little we know, and that, possibly, others may know some things which are not known by us, results would be much better than they are; but, unfortunately, this is not the case. Men often think they know when they do not; and they think others do not know, because they do not. What they do not see, they aver does not exist. And, therefore, others who claim to see it are either deceived or deceivers. Thus the conflict rages, and the misunderstanding, and consequent loss of confidence, increases.

If the above statements and observations are correct, they unmistakably indicate that we are greatly in need of an increase of knowledge: and as Cecil says, "The first step to knowledge is to know that we are ignorant." How many of us have taken the first step?

I have never forgotten the statements which I once heard a professor and instructor make to his school:

I divide all people into three classes. 1. Those who know, and who know that they know. These are the most useful. 2. Those who know, but who do not know that they know. These are the most pleasant to get along with, but they are not quite so useful as the first. 3. Those who do not know, but who do not know that they do not know. You can do nothing with them.

Not only do we need knowledge, but we need wisdom, common sense, and last, but not least, goodness. Without these qualities we cannot rightly apply knowledge, but with them we are safe.

I have often thought, I think now, that a superior love for God and his truth, than for anything else, will let us out safely and grandly. This condition, and this only, will enable us to successfully meet and overcome every obstacle which lies in the way. My belief is, that God has found a few men and women who possess this love of God, and of his truth, and of the people in their souls. He will find others of the same kind, and with this class lie the triumphs and victories of Zion. Is this pessimism? and if it is, am I therefore, a pessimist? If so, I can only add: Better be a pessimist and be right, than an optimist and be wrong. The true purpose of learning and knowledge is to know God and enable us to benefit mankind. They are not for display, nor to satiate our selfish desires.

The end of all learning is to know God, and out of that knowledge to love and imitate him.—Milton.

The wise carry their knowledge, as they do their watches, not for display, but for their own use. I envy no man that knows more than myself, but pity them that know less.—Sir T. Browne.

He that would make real progress in knowledge, must dedicate his age as well as his youth, the latter growth as well as the first-fruits, at the altar of truth.—Berkeley.

Some of the foregoing thoughts and quotations are presented with the hope that the reader will be able to see that misunderstanding and conflict, division and loss of confidence, may be greatly lessened by a strict, constant, and intelligent adherence to truth, as a result of our faith in God.

As a result of different parentage, nationality, education, and general environment, men differ widely in their mental constitutions. When we carefully consider these things, we will not fail to admire the provisions of the divine Being, as found in the gospel, for the final unity, peace, and perfection of his people. Nor will we be ungrateful for the degree of knowledge and unity which has already obtained in the church of God. Still, there is much, very much, room for improvement.

But to return. These radical differences in mental make-up cause us to come to different conclusions. We look from a different point of view, each one, perhaps, truly beholding an existent condition; but as all are limited, here is a good opportunity for conflicting conclusions, especially if we do not know that we are limited, and are left unaided by the Spirit of truth.

One man looks at the garden he planted a short time ago, and he is rejoiced to see that it has come up so well, and that part of it, at least, is growing nicely. He fails to see that the ground needs immediate attention, and that the myriads of weeds—thick as hair on a dog's back, so to speak—are just peering through the ground and should be extirpated at once. Why does he not see the weeds? Because all his power of vision has been expended on the flourishing part of his garden plants. He is not looking for an enemy, you know, he is looking for friends.

Another man goes out to take a view of his garden, and about the first things which strike his eye are the condition of the ground and the weeds. He sees that the ground must be stirred at once or it will become heavy and lifeless. He sees the weeds too, and he knows that the best time to root them up is when they first make their appearance. So, after tarrying long enough to see that he has a "good stand," he hurries away and prepares for work. By some this man is called a pessimist, and the other an optimist.

It is not difficult to see that these two men are likely to misunderstand each other, and as a result, fail to appreciate each other.

Now, there are certain leading, governing principles, which are true everywhere, and at all times.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
They are true in the preaching of the gospel and in building up the kingdom of God; they are true in politics, and in all social service; they are true in every profession, business, duty, or avocation of life. It is well for us to become as thoroughly acquainted with these principles as possible, and not permit ourselves to be moved away from them by the wisdom of the wise (?) or the ignorance of the foolish. They are moral landmarks which must not be removed.

In the gospel, God has made ample provision for all our needs, and if we learn to properly obey this divine law, we will certainly reach perfection in due time. Among these rich provisions is found the one by virtue of which, when we obey the divine law, we have claim upon God for the spirit of promise. How cheering and significant the promise of our blessed Lord:

If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you and shall be in you. I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you. —John 14:15-18.

What will this Spirit do for us? It is the "Spirit of truth." In the midst of the false and the darkness which we find in the world, here is something which comes directly from God to us that is always infallible and true. We need the truth, and we need the Spirit of truth.

But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you. —John 14:26.

He [the Comforter, the Spirit of truth] shall testify of me [Christ]. —John 15:26.

Howbeit when he the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he will show you things to come. He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you. All things that the Father hath are mine: therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall show it unto you. —John 16:13-15.

Now, God’s word plainly shows that this Spirit was not promised to those who happened to live in some favored age or favored land, but to all who obey the required conditions of salvation, as revealed in the divine plan. The promise of this Spirit comprehends its fruits, gifts, powers, and blessings, just as the promise of a farm, bequeathed by a father to his son, comprehends all the products that the farm will bring forth. But it should be borne in mind that the foregoing texts describe the ability and officework of the Holy Spirit. Our ability to receive and properly appropriate is altogether another thing. We receive the Spirit “by measure”; and the size of the measure, and what our portion will do for us, depends upon our faith in God, and our diligence in living up to the requirements of the divine law. This Spirit, dear reader, and this Spirit alone, is the direct agency through which weakness, imperfection, hatred, jealousy, misunderstanding, envy, that kind of doubt which is sinful, may be removed; and peace—thrice blessed peace—unity, and fellowship with each other, and with God, can be effected.

Do we live, or constantly strive to live, so near to God, so pure, so childlike in our faith and practice, that God’s Spirit may always be with us?

And now, verily, verily I say unto thee, put your trust in that Spirit which leadeth to do good; yea, to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously, and this is my Spirit. —Doctrine and Covenants 10:6.

METHODIST TACTICS.

The HERALD readers, some of them at least, will remember the article in the issue for January 18, 1905, by Bro. H. O. Smith, entitled “Campbellite tactics,” in which the writer fully exposes the artful deception and dishonest trickery of one very wise J. W. Chism, who “for the whole truth” figured out that the numerical values of the letters in the name, Joseph Smith, aggregated 666, hence Joseph Smith was the beast of Revelation 13:18.

Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is six hundred three score and six.

By reference to Bro. Smith’s article it will be seen that Mr. Chism, who “most emphatically” professes “to be wise,” deduces the fatal number as follows:

"J plus o plus s plus e plus ph plus S plus m plus i plus th, plus i; Greek value as a number: 10 plus 70 plus 6 plus 5 plus 500 plus 6 plus 40 plus 10 plus 9 plus 10 equal 666." Presto! This “wise” man of the Campbellite school proves Joseph Smith was the beast of prophecy. How does he do it? By falsifying the scale in two ways. First by giving to the letter s a false value, saying it represents 6, when according to the table furnished by Bro. Smith from Crosby’s Greek Grammar, (see HERALD, January 18, 1905,) the true value is 200, a difference of 194.

Mr. Chism, as shown in the article referred to, uses omicron (short o) when he should have used omega (long o). Omicron is 70, omega is 800, a difference of 730, which added to the 194 as above, makes 924 more than this emphatic pretender to wisdom wanted, hence this falsification of the scale.

Second. After making these false entries he lacks 10 of having the right number, so he adds the letter i, which does not occur at the end of the name Joseph Smith, and wonderful of wonderfuls, after subtracting 924 and adding 10 it comes out 666, Joseph Smith is the beast, and J. W. Chism is “Yours for the whole truth.” Ahem! He does not believe in...
miracles but he evidently believes in performing wonders, occasionally.

But there is another wise man. He, too, does not believe in miracles, but does believe in performing wonders. He is Reverend D. B. Turney, D. D., LL. D., and vice-president of the Anti-Mormon Society. He, too, pretends to believe that Joseph Smith was the beast and performs the wonderful feat of proving it just as easily as Mr. Chism. My reason for referring to Mr. Chism in this article is to show how he and Mr. Turney agree while disagreeing.

In a recent debate with the writer at Goreville, Illinois, the Reverend Turney figured it out this way:

J, 20; o, 60; s, 100; e, 5; p, 70; h, 8; S, 100; m, 40; i, 9; t, 200; h, 8; M, 40; F, 6; total, 666. No authority was given for adding the letters M. F. It was asserted without proof that “Joseph Smith, M. F.,” was a very common way that Joseph signed his name. Indeed it was claimed by the reverend D. D. that Joseph signed his name that way as often as any other way.

It was so silly that I passed it without notice, not being able to see how he could be serious in presenting folly as argument, but when he had presented it the second or third time I challenged his scale and asked for his authority for it, and told the people he had hatched it up himself. But no, he said he did not but Joseph Smith did, and that it was published in the Expositor. (He could think of the name, Expositor, but said it was the one that was destroyed after the first issue in Nauvoo.)

He said the scale was perfect, and that the whole scale was as follows:

a, 1; b, 2; c, 3; d, 4; e, 5; f, 6; g, 7; h, 8; i, 9; j, 10; k, 20; l, 30; m, 40; n, 50; o, 60; p, 70; q, 80; r, 90; s, 100; t, 200; u, 300; v, 400; w, 500; x, 600; y, 700; z, 800. The first nine letters represent the nine units; the second nine, the nine tens; and the remaining eight letters represent the hundreds up to 800, but how to represent 900 he did not explain. I made a copy of his scale, and showed it to him privately and asked him if it was correct. He twice assured me that it was. This was just before the opening of the last session of the debate. I then told the people I would notice his scale, but only to show the deception that he had used because he had nothing better to bring against Joseph Smith. It took a very short time to show that according to his own scale fraudulently charged to Joseph Smith, the numerals would be:—J, 10; o, 60; s, 100; e, 5; p, 70; h, 8; S, 100; m, 40; i, 9; t, 200; h, 8; total, 610. This was just 56 short of the coveted number. Something must be done; but what? Perhaps he had read Bro. Smith’s article and there saw the miserable failure of the “wise” Mr. Chism in trying to make up his deficiency by adding the letter i, pretending thus to “Greekize” the word Smith; and, if so, he saw that would not do. But he can do wonders as well as Mr. Chism, and his first one is like unto Chism’s first, and herein is where they agree.

The first thing the Reverend D. B. Turney, D. D., LL. D., does is to deliberately falsify his own scale by changing the numerical value of J from 10 to 20. This agrees with Chism when he changes the value of s from 200 to 6. The agreement is in methods, i. e., falsification of the scale.

But like Mr. Chism’s change it would not work yet; so he deliberately adds not one but two letters to Joseph Smith’s name, viz.: M. F. Mr. Turney said at first these letters meant “Man First”—“Joseph Smith, M. F. (Man First);” Sidney Rigdon, M. S. (Man Second),” said he, with the air of one who has made a great “hit” and feels confident of it. But even the minds of “wise” D. D.’s and LL. D.’s are subject to change. In a succeeding speech he said the letters M. F. meant “Mormon Founder,” and this contradiction the Doctor was not able to fix up.

When I showed that adding the letters M. F. still lacked 10 of the required number, 666, if he gave J its true value, Doctor Turney replied: “Well, then, we will just put it N. F. instead of M. F. N. F. means No Fool. Joe Smith was no fool, so we will put it N. F., and that makes it all right.” This may not be exactly verbatim, but it is nearly so, and the sense is correct.

The following shows at a glance the variations and lack of harmony in the scales of these two “wise” men. It will also show how both of them disagree with the true scale as given by Mr. Alpheus Crosby, in his Greek grammar written in 1847. Mr. Crosby was professor of Greek in Dartmouth College and wrote as a scholar only, his object being to impart a correct knowledge of the numerical value of the letters in the Greek alphabet. He was entirely without prejudice in the matter. Of course he gives the Greek alphabet in full but I copy only the letters in Joseph Smith’s name. The letter J is not given by Crosby, hence I give it no value in the scale. If we give it any value, it will make the true number farther than ever from the figures of either Chism or Turney.

Mr. Chism and Mr. Turney are active opponents of the Latter Day Saints, the latter being the vice-president of the “Anti-Mormon Missionary Society of the Churches of Christ,” (save the mark,) and, as such, speak and write as those who are filled with the spirit of religious animosity, and prejudice against Joseph Smith, instead of the Spirit of truth and fairness, as herein shown. The table that we here give presents the work of these three men side by side, the two, (Chism and Turney,) so full of prejudice and personal spite and hatred against Joseph Smith that they both stoop to the tricks of the petitfogger by giving incorrect values to some of the letters, and by adding letters without warrant after thus changing the scale.

The third man, Mr. Crosby, writes without reference to or care concerning Joseph Smith or any other man, his sole object being to impart correct information as to the value of letters as numerals. No one need be at a loss to decide the question of reliability here. Any man who would side with either Mr. Chism, the “emphatically wise,” or Mr. Turney, Doctor of Divinity, in this manifestly corrupt work, is gullible in the superlative degree.

But here is the table; decide for yourself:

It will be seen from the above table that J represents, according to Chism, 10; while Turney has it 20, and Crosby nothing. Chism has 0, 70; Turney has it 60; Crosby 800. S, according to Chism, is 6; Turney, 100; Crosby, 200. E is the same by all. Ph, according to Chism and Crosby, is 500, while the Doctor of Divinity, Mr. Turney, “doctored” it down to 78. In the scale used by Mr. Turney in the debate, and which he claimed was perfect, J represented 10, but this was found to be 10 short of the amount wanted, so Mr. Turney “doctored” it up to 20. How handy it is to be a “doctor!”

Chism and Crosby agree that i represents 10, doctor Turney says 9; only a slight case of doctoring here. Chism and Crosby again agree that the value of th is 9, but Turney says t is 200 and h is 8, the “doctoring” amounting to 199. No miracle, understand; just a “wonder.”

Mr. Chism adds i (10) because he is that much short, but how he makes both J and i represent 10, is not explained.

Mr. Turney adds M (40) and F (6) because he is 46 short after falsifying the scale by changing J from 10 to 20, and when he was exposed in this, and shown that he was still 10 short after adding, without warrant, M and F, (to represent as he first said, “Man First,” but afterward said “Mormon Founder,”) then he said, “Well, then, we will change it to N. F. instead of M. F.” The only reason given for this change was that N. F. stood for “No Fool.” “Joseph Smith,” said the reverend doctor, “was no fool.” I wish as much could be said for all the professedly “wise” whose folly is made manifest by the unholy and unreasonable methods employed by those who oppose him. It can not be done, however.

The writer is confident that truth will prevail in the end, hence he does not worry over any harm that such silly attacks can possibly do the cause of truth. No sensible person could be induced to accept such nonsense for truth or argument. It is here presented that the HERALD readers may see the folly of both Methodist and Camphellite tactics in opposing the truth.

Hopeful of obtaining a crown of life,

Celestial Glory.

Eternal life! End of Christian mystery!
Apostles’ goal and hope of all the sanctified!
How shall my soul out-reaching through the drift of time,
Obtain a spark of thy celestial fire?

My heart’s desires seem hedged about with duties small,
That clamoring come, disorderly, insistent each;
And I must classify, arrange—with care perform
Them all, that others’ joys may be complete.

My Father, teach me: In thy word thou sayest, to reap Celestial glory we must of it here partake.
How can I? Faint, not knowing, tossed, nor time, nor strength,
I try; but oh, the way I can not see!

Woman! World-wide minister! Dost count it small
That in thy allotted sphere both heights and depths are classed?
That beginnings, endings, life’s wind-currents strong,
Turn all to thee for tenderest sympathy?

The babe in trust from thee its whole existence draws;
The frolics, labors, pains of youth thy ‘tendance needs;
Old age should have thy loving, cheerful helpfulness,
And thy companion’s life thine all must bless.

Dull facts await the magic of thy sentient touch.
Great evils flee if thou but keepest watch and ward;
The inspiration of heaven itself, and fears of hell,
Must lend thee power unto a perfect day.

Eternal life? When time for thee shall have an end,
And God shall touch thine eyes so thou canst plainly see
His perspective all that has been brought to pass,
Then only canst thou fully comprehend.

But this e’en here is known, and daily grows more clear,
That love, in union with powers of God and man,
Buoyes the soul, drives darkness hence, expands all good,
And helps to make of blank existence-life.

Aye, more. We know that this is that which separates
The righteous part from all that wrong and evil is;
Bids angels come, brought Christ to earth, and in the end
Will glorify celestial life itself!
And dost thou think that God would man’s existence plan
So as to leave him void of this, His greatest gift?
Would love be planted without needful hearts for soil?
And would it thrive except for constant care?

I think I see. God’s wisdom, far surpassing ours, Permits us not in idleness to pass our days,
Nor yet decrees that each in narrow selfishness
Shall spend his labor on himself alone.
And this that we may learn through his unerring plan,
That joys unshared seem scarcely to be joys at all;
But that the broadest, deepest streams of happiness
Are swollen only by the flow of love.
That love of parents, children, friends, companions dear,
Should lead us to the love of all of human kind;
And these, refreshing us with graces born of heaven,
At last shall lead us to the fount divine.

No more will I complain. If to perform my part
My every hour be fraught with careful ministry,
I shall not faint, for I shall find where o’er I am,
Both human love and love divine at hand.
O priceless treasures! Waters from the throne of God!
Fill thou my cup with measure daily flowing o’er,
That I may quaff and gratefully to others bear
Celestial warmth—eternal joy—pure love!

How May I Sow Seeds That Will Bring the Best Results in My Child’s Life?

Men glory in raising great and magnificent structures, but it is a greater and more glorious work to build up a man. Parents are not always conscious how early the seeds of vice are sown and take root. It is as the gospel declares, “While men slept the enemy came and sowed tares.” If this, then, is the error, how shall it be corrected, and what is the antidote to be applied? Not without design has Christ commanded to “Feed my lambs,” meaning to inculcate upon his church, the duty of caring for the children of the church and of the world at the earliest possible period. No can parents and all well-wishers of humanity be too earnest and careful to fulfill the promptings of their very natures and the command of Christ in this matter.

Influence is as quiet and imperceptible on the child’s mind as the distilling of dew upon flowers and shrubs. Not all at once does any heart become bad. Children are more easily led to be good by example and tales of well-doing in others than by being threatened into obedience by records of sin, crime, and punishment. Then on the infant mind impress sincerity, truth, honesty, benevolence, and their kindred virtues. Let these seeds be planted while they know no evil, nor have opened the way by sin to be made acquainted with misery. Teach them as they advance in years that good character is above all things else and can not be injured except by their own acts. See that they keep good company or none at all. Association with persons of decided virtue and excellence is of great importance in the formation of character. Good company and good conversation are the very sinew of virtue.

Good company is that which is composed of intelligent and well-bred persons, whose language is chaste and good; whose sentiments are pure and edifying; whose deportment is such as pure and well-regulated education and correct morals dictate, and whose conduct is directed and restrained by the pure precepts of the gospel of Christ.

Family worship is included in the necessities of our children. The restraining influence of a little prayer taught by mother, when a child, has often preserved men from ruin and infidelity. See that they attend meeting and Sabbath-school when possible. Teach them to employ their hands, and to cultivate the mind never to be idle; that an honest, industrious boy is always wanted; his services will be in demand; he will be respected and loved. There should be home amusements, fireside pleasure; quiet and simple they may be, but such as shall make home happy, and not the irksome place which will cause the youthful spirit to look elsewhere for joy. The reason so many become dissatisfied and run to every place of amusement, making every effort possible to get away from home at night, is the lack of entertainment at home. Music is invaluable as a home enjoyment. Good books also are invaluable as a moral guard to a young man. It makes him scorn what is low, coarse, and vulgar. To read with profit, the books must be of a kind calculated to inform the mind, correct the head, and better the heart. Of all the books ever written none contain so instructive, so sublime, and so great a variety as the books which contain the words of God.

Then day by day along our way,
The seeds of promise cast;
And ripened grain o’er hill and plain
Be gathered home at last.

Oh, what a responsibility to form a creature the frailest and feeblest that God has made into the intelligent and fearless sovereign of the whole animated creation, interpreter and adorer and almost the representative of divinity. I commend to you, dear mothers, in your homes the work of keeping yourselves very close to our Savior. Let us keep ourselves spotless from the world, and be full of the sunshine of his presence. If we have the love of Christ and the Christ life in our hearts and in our faces, we will certainly win our dear ones to the shelter and refuge which is so dear to us.

Dear sisters, I am ever striving to do my heavenly Father’s will as best I can. I was administered to by Bro. Warnky Sunday week and I am feeling so much better, and hope and pray that I will live faithful to the end. Bro. Warnky is an able speaker and a dear old Saint. He had good liberty, and a good spirit has prevailed all through the meetings. There are many good people here that do not belong to any church. Even the little children are anxious to hear him preach. Bro. Warnky baptized eight into the fold and kingdom of God. Let the good work go on. Bro. Warnky has the people stirred up and the hand of God is over them. There are a good many people here that will obey the gospel if Bro. Warnky will only come back and preach. He is such a loving husband, father, and brother, everybody loves him here.

Editors Herald: In reading the article in Saints’ Herald, No. 46, “The Editor at home,” I got the impression that the writer was in doubt as to the correct statement of S. W. Richards that he was one of twenty-five men that were selected by Joseph Smith, Jr., to go out West to try to find a location for the Saints beyond the reach of mobs—a condition no doubt desirable in those trying times. S. W. Richards was president... of the church in the British Isles while I lived in London. I was president of a branch there and I was often brought in contact with other presiding officers as they met in council every month. The London conference was composed of forty-two branches, was often visited by the president of the mission and his counselors. I well remember S. W. Richards and others making the same statement at one of our monthly meetings, for they frequently dwelt at considerable length on the persecutions and trials of the Saints in that day. I believed the statements then—fifty-three years ago. I see no reason to reject it now. I have never heard it disproved. The testimony of S. W. Richards is as true in 1906 as it was in 1853 that the company was organized. Recording the facts would not add to their truthfulness. I never heard that the company went west but the company was organized, although conditions were changed.

In reading of the wonderful manifestations given in Kirtland, I find the following vision as seen by Joseph Smith: “I saw Brigham Young standing in a strange land in the far South and West in a desert place on a rock in the midst of about a dozen men of color. He was preaching to them in their own tongue. I saw the twelve apostles of the Lamb that now are upon the earth standing together in a circle, much fatigued. I finally saw them in the celestial kingdom of God.”

The conditions here stated very much resemble the conditions existing in Utah extending four hundred miles south of Salt Lake City. Here is certainly strong indication, if visions are reliable, that Brigham Young with the rest of the apostles would go to a strange land beyond the bounds of civilization. And in view of the mobbings and drivings they had to endure, is it any wonder that they should seek a quiet resting-place? Who shall say there was anything dishonorable in organizing a company by Joseph Smith, Jr., to seek out a quiet resting-place where they could be free to worship God in peace, none to mock them afraid? The writer seems to have serious doubts as to the truth of the statements of the two men he met in Salt Lake City, because we have no record of the preparations made. I never heard it stated that the company did go west, because conditions changed, but the fact still remains—the company was formed, firearms and provisions were agreed upon, but as to what happened to change the program we have no record. But that the company was formed under the direction and choice of Joseph Smith is beyond a doubt.

I have learned that it is not safe to reject statements of what has been simply because there is no record. One of the most important of the events that have transpired in the restoration of the gospel in our day was the conferring of the Melchisedec priesthood upon Joseph Smith, by Peter, James, and John, of which there is no record as to date, time, or place. Yet some historians say it is not safe to assert that the ordination took place, as plainly stated in Doctrine and Covenants 26:3. There is no scruple in accepting the statement of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery when they say the messenger laid his hands upon them and ordained them to the Aaronic priesthood. Why should there be doubt when Jesus Christ says ‘John I have sent unto you . . . to ordain you unto this first priesthood,’ the Aaronic priesthood “and also with Peter, James, and John, whom I have sent unto you, by whom I have ordained you and confirmed you to be apostles.” Joseph and Oliver were to be ordained even as Aaron. History tells us that Moses laid his hands upon him.

Query: Would it be treating lightly these revelations if I said they were not reliable, unsafe? Just as certain as John laid hands upon Joseph and Oliver to ordain them to the Aaronic priesthood, just as certainly Peter, James, and John laid hands upon Joseph Smith, Jr., to ordain him to the apostleship. This is the testimony of Jesus Christ which he sent Peter, James, and John and by them ordained Joseph Smith, Jr., the first apostle. This is one of the revelations that are declared to be faithful and true, by the faithful and true witness. Section 26 was given September, 1830. The Lord’s preface to Doctrine and Covenants, November 1, 1831. See preface to Doctrine and Covenants, “Search these commandments for they are true and faithful and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled. What I the Lord have spoken I have spoken, and I excuse not myself; . . . my word shall not pass away, . . . neither by my own voice, or by the voice of my servants, it is the same.” Section 26, paragraphs 2 and 3, is the voice of God through his servant Joseph Smith, “And the Spirit beareth record and the record is true and truth abideth for ever and ever.”

“A little word in kindness spoken, A motion or a tear, Has often healed the heart that’s broken And made a friend sincere.”

GEORGE DERRY.

LAMONI, IOWA, November 21, 1906.

McTAGGART, Saskatchewan, Canada, January 9, 1906.

Dear Herald: Brn. J. L. Mortimer and E. E. Williams have been staying at our house and preaching nightly in town. Prejudice is quite apparent yet we believe there are a few honest-hearted ones who are now interested, and more who will believe if by some means they can be induced to attend the meetings and listen to the God-sent sermons of our elders. We do not despair though the way for a good opening now seems dark; but we yet trust God’s never-failing word and promise to his people, as expressed in the hymn:

“Cast thy bread upon the waters, Thinking not ‘tis thrown away; God himself saith thou shalt gather It again some future day.”

For the last year Bro. W. C. Toovey (my husband) and I have done all in our power to prepare the hearts and minds of the people to receive the word and we still believe that in God’s own way and time he will yet say to these people (whom we love very dearly): These are my servants, hear ye them. Our branch at Weyburn Plains is progressing nicely, some twenty members being added this past year and all are alive to the work.

Christmas was celebrated at Bro. and Sr. Brantwait’s, some driving fifty miles to attend. A joyous time was had—one never to be forgotten on account of the outpouring of God’s great Spirit to his children. The gifts of tongues and prophecy and discernment of spirits were manifest to cheer and bless. Elder Fisher was called to occupy all his time in the work of the Lord. May God’s best blessings be with them continually is the prayer of all Saints who know them. Bro. and Sr. Brantwait expect to leave here in the spring for an extended tour to the Southern States to visit her people; may God bless their visit to his glory. We will miss these brethren and sisters very much, and know our loss is some other peoples’ gain. Pray for us that we may not lack in our duty to God; if we all live right all will be well we know.

A young Bro. Broadway, who was ordained priest at our reunion at Weyburn Plains last July, is preaching most of the time with good results; one baptized during Christmas week where he has been laboring. Brn. E. E. Williams and Fisher have been preaching near Halbight with good results—two were baptized, more ready, and still more interested. They organized a Sunday-school there two weeks ago. May God’s blessed Spirit attend them. There are worthy workers there and we look forward to bright times in the near future, when more precious souls will be gathered into the sheepfold. Sr. Sandage, from Bozeman, Montana, arrived last week and lives near Elder Williams’.

They think of organizing a Sunday-
Editors Herald: During the holidays I have been at home with wife. I have been reading the Herald. I read two letters—or rather a report to conference and a letter—to which I did, in Cold Creek, Mendocino County.

I met a man there who has read Bro. Loof’s sermons and heard one sermon by Elder E. Keeler, and we talked around the fire that evening. The next day he asked me to baptize him, which I did, in Cold Creek, Mendocino County.

We went to Ukiah to the pleasant home of Bro. and Sr. York—two very worthy Saints—and we had a little meeting, administered bread and wine or rather water, for we had no wine, and confirmed Bro. David Coble. There was a goodly portion of the Spirit present and we all rejoiced. I missed my train at a quarter to six in the morning, so Sr. York and I went to visit of the Spirit present and we all rejoiced. I missed my train at a quarter to six in the morning, so Sr. York and I went to visit Sr. Johnson, who is bedridden and has been for a year; yet she is cheerful. I administered to her and leave her in the hands of the Lord.

"The Lord has truly blessed us, In this the latter day, And in Spirit he doth answer us When we do humbly pray."

The people where I went responded to the requirements of the financial law as best they could under the existing conditions. All urged me to come back, which I shall do at no distant day. I also met for the first time Bro. Yager, who is a tailor and seemed to be a very pleasant person.

Desiring to see the work move forward, I went to Irvington Sunday, the 17th, and met Bro. Chase and wife, Bro. Cook and family, as also the old stand-bys, Sr. Stivers and her daughters. I spoke for them on the subject of faithful stewardship, with Great and with a chip on one shoulder and dare anybody to knock it off, and when we hold a discussion with a man make a long report and in the end boast how we did beat him—come again and I will knock all the wind out of your sails. It pays better.

I think, to spend more time in preaching the gospel and less in debating. As a rule, according to my knowledge of debates, they give a debater a chance to blow his horn and to get a few pats on the back, with no real benefit to the cause and no glory to God at all. Let us exemplify that we as ministers of God are indeed what we claim to be. Acts speak louder than words, It does not amount to much to preach fine sermons and then fail to live them ourselves. Until we do exemplify our sermons in our lives and the members of the church show that they are living epistles, we will make poor progress I am sure. We need more preaching like there used to be—that is, with power and demonstration of the Holy Spirit. God help us to see ourselves as he sees us and live every day as he would that we may accomplish the work that has been done, when we come to leave this probation and give an account at the judgment day. God bless every object of his mercy.

E. W. NUNLEY.

Editors Herald: Entering into the labor of the new year, and also the new quarter as a missionary, I wish to write from this part of the field, having written to several of our people but receiving no reply as yet from them. I just came here from Arlington, South Dakota, where I have labored the last month—a place where last May the Baptist preacher concluded no one else had any right whatever, and especially a Latter Day Saint. He did all within his power to keep people away from our meetings by driving from house to house and informing them what bad people those Mormons were, but we were greeted with a larger crowd each night for a week. We returned there in November, held six meetings, when a message came over the wire to come home at once because of sickness of my companion in life. Returned again to same place and continued my efforts, preaching twenty-two sermons in twenty-one days to a full house, mostly. Sold books and handed out many tracts, and baptized two December 17, who claimed their forefathers were of the Lamanites. They seemed to have quite a natural understanding of the gospel as restored by the angel in latter days, and we believe they will be useful in that part of the field in defending the cause. There were others who would have been baptized, but sickness prevented them just at the present. Several are investigating and defending the work the best they can, and are coming to our Sunday-school which we organized while there. Some were anything but favorable, and remarks of various kinds were heard, such as: “Immersion—I have read the Bible two times; I never saw it”; “Hells and heavens—that’s enough for me; I have read the Bible and never saw such a thing”; “Baptize in the ice—who ever read of such a thing?” We were informed that “there were thirteen apostles in the quorum of twelve at one time,” also that they held the office of apostles yet but “did not officiate as such”; and “Join a church everybody sooner at,” “Go to Utah,” etc. We were asked to pay for the coal we had used while these meetings continued and that it was a requirement of the law. When asked why they did not enforce the law when the Baptist minister occupied we were informed, “Oh, well, you people are not popular.” Perhaps enough of these objections have been mentioned. The reader will see (while good was and still will, we think, be done) there were those who were not pleased, however much we would like to have pleased them.

As a missionary I have failed to reach that point yet that I can please every one who comes to hear me. The oldest of the two sisters who were baptized stated: “If they shut us out of the schoolhouse, I expect to get some means some of these days and I shall furnish a lot, and build, too, so we can have a house of our own and meet when we please and ask no odds of any one.” We all feel hopeful of the outcome of the above-mentioned place and while I was alone as a missionary (or preacher) I was not alone—the good Spirit was enjoyed in a great measure, sure I was equal to the task, but I saw the time had really come and I would have to try it for a sermon. But I did not get through in one hour, so appointed the next night for the same subject; am not yet through and the third night before me. I could not leave it and feel I had done all that was necessary. We all felt edified, thanks be to God for His Spirit to lead and give liberty of thought and utterance of words. We all felt glad, and rejoiced that we had held this series of meetings. Last Sunday we met here at Hills in the waiting-room of the depot for Sunday-school, Bro. A. Hynden in charge. The people were mostly Presbyterians. Bro. Hynden expressed himself as not quite capable of teaching a lot of school-teachers. One of them stated: “We may be able to help you in language, but you can teach us in Scripture.” These people came and requested that this Bro. Hynden should take charge of their school.

May the Lord bless our people everywhere that the world may recognize by our walk that we have learned of the Master indeed. I am feeling well in the work. Praying for the salvation of souls, I remain, Yours in Christ,

ELI HAYER.

PONDCREEK, Oklahoma, January 4, 1906.

Editors Herald: I write to renew my subscription to Zion’s Hope, also to secure a copy of Book of Mormon (thirty-five cent edition) for a man here who has become interested in the gospel. He has been reading Herald, Ensign, and many books and tracts. I have one copy of Book of Mormon loaned all the time, besides much other literature. I hope God will give the increase at no distant day. Several families of Jews seem interested in the literature I have given them and some explanations I have made.

There was a man and wife preached here in Poncreek on the streets two afternoons and evenings last fall. They claim to be the people from the land of the North (the ten lost tribes of Israel)—the northern part of Europe. I heard them preach and they held the law of life; that Adam and Eve broke it in the garden. Their address is Zion, and when Messiah comes out England will be scourged and lose her colonies.

They say they have come to America to gather Ephraim and the remnant of the house of Israel. They say Satan is the prince of the power of the air, and that he was baptized for the dead and that the restitution of all things spoken by all the holy prophets since the world began—will come to America, the land of the free; and as England in both houses of parliament has made a law that any one who claims to be the Son of Man, or Shiloh, would be imprisoned, that as soon as Manasseh comes out England will be scourged and lose her colonies.

They show the Bible in types and shadows; say this is the lapping time of the old world and the new, shown by Jacob and Esau. They say Satan is the prince of the power of the air, and that he was baptized for the dead and that the restitution of all things spoken of by Daniel, twelfth chapter, will be fulfilled, which is right at the door. They say Manasseh was in England; but some of them have rejected this last message and they are invited to come to America, the land of the free, and we England in both houses of parliament has made a law that any one who claims to be the Son of Man, or Shiloh, would be imprisoned, that as soon as Manasseh comes out England will be scourged and lose her colonies.

They say they have come to America to gather Ephraim and when Ephraim is gathered they will go back to England after she is purified, and from there to Palestine. Juda will be the last to be gathered, and all those who will not hear this prophet will be cut off from the people. Satan will be bound a thousand years, and then he will be loosed a little season—the time that is shortened now. Those who live under the righteousness of the law—the mount of Esau—will be beautiful—they will live in blood; but Mount Zion will be glorious—they will have their blood cleansed and taken away. The aliens will be servants to Mount Zion, and when Satan is loosed at the end of the thousand years he will attract the evil of those in blood under the law, and they will learn his tactics and know that he is the god of the dead and not the living. Then they will come and ask for their blood to be cleansed and taken away, and then all blood life will be cut off from the earth and the earth will be filled with trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord. Their address is Mary and Benjamin, Benton Harbor, Michigan. Your sister in Christ,

MRS. EFFIE J. MCCULLOUGH.

PLEASANT GROVE, Utah, December 25, 1906.

Editors Herald: Once more I find it possible to pen a few lines for your valuable columns. We are having winter weather in this part of late, as we have had some severe freezing the last week and now the snowflakes are falling like butterflies. Christmas passed by very quietly, yet all seemed to have a good time and enjoy themselves. Our Sunday-school was better attended last Sunday than it has been for some time. Our Christmas exercises were good considering we are so few in numbers. We had as visitors Bro. Ed Sterrett, of Independence, Missouri, and Bro. James Conyers, of Salt Lake City, Utah.

During the month just passed we have visited Union Fort, Salt Lake, Ogden, and Plain City Saints, and had the pleasure of holding meetings in each of the respective places. While at the Union Fort Branch we spent one night at the bedside of our aged Bro. C. J. Lundeen, since deceased, whose departure is a great loss to the branch over which he has presided for years.

At Ogden we spent two Sundays, and during the week intervening we went out to Plain City and succeeded in getting the schoolhouse there for one night—the 7th inst.--and while we were posting up our notices the day preceding,—which we had written out and which read, “Come and hear the gospel in its fullness and purity,” then giving the place, date, and hour of meeting,—a gentleman stepped up and said: “Friend, do you know that your bills are faulty?” “No,” said I; and he con-timed: "Don't you know that the word fullness means entire?" We informed him we did, when he replied: "Well, then, you don't believe in present revelation?" We answered in the affirmative, and he concluded by saying he would come and hear us with the expectation of asking a question at the close. We informed him we would be pleased to grant that request, and further he could ask as many questions as he desired, and went on. Well, the next evening the brother was there and we took up the subject of revelation, showing that God would always act like himself and that when he revealed himself to his people now his words would agree with that which he had given in the past; also showed that those revelations taught that in the Bible and Book of Mormon was contained the fullness of the gospel and hence our posters were correct, and when we taught the gospel as therein established we taught it in its fullness and purity. We also called attention to the fact that it was the Lord who gave the law and not man, as some of the representative men of the Utah church claim that Joseph Smith was the first lawgiver to the church and since that time it has been Brigham Young, John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff, Lorenzo Snow, and now Joseph F. Smith, and that we must disabuse our minds of that idea, and in the place thereof establish the truth that Jesus was the Captain of our salvation.

After concluding we gave opportunity for questions but there were none to be asked. But after meeting was dismissed and we were locking up the house a lady (?) informed the congregation that in the Bible and Book of Mormon was contained the fullness of the gospel and hence our posters were correct, and when we taught the gospel as therein established we taught it in its fullness and purity. We also called attention to the fact that it was the Lord who gave the law and not man, as some of the representative men of the Utah church claim that Joseph Smith was the first lawgiver to the church and since that time it has been Brigham Young, John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff, Lorenzo Snow, and now Joseph F. Smith, and that we must disabuse our minds of that idea, and in the place thereof establish the truth that Jesus was the Captain of our salvation.

As Editors Herald: As I see but little in Herald from Oklahoma I will state that we are still in the warfare here. On December 8 wife and I went twenty-two miles northwest to a place opened up by us two months before. I preached three times with good interest, and Bro. Grant Moore, a teacher who lives in that vicinity, preached once, leaving appointment for next month. Stopped with Bro. Clark Smith, who was lately married to Sr. Gorcham of Iowa, who lives near there. On last Saturday we went fifteen miles northeast, where an appointment had been made for us by Bro. Cyrus Sanders, who lives there with his father's family. There was very good interest there, it being the first preaching there by the Saints. One man, a Baptist, said that it was the first time he had ever heard the gospel preached and asked us to return soon. He and many others say they are coming to our conference in February next. Bro. Sanders' father said some would be baptized if we only had a branch of the church there. Sr. Crawley told him that was our business now, hunting up the members of which to form the branch; that it was not too far for them to come for a while to our place of meeting. We left no other appointment there, as we thought of going to Kansas next week. If we do not go, we want to return there next week. It is very different from preaching in cities, or on the railways, as it gets too cold sometimes to go to appointments in buggy, as I am unable to walk and get warm as in former years, and dangerous rivers to ford.

Last week it was pleasant traveling, but in fording the river in a strange place to us, the water ran over our buggy, carrying away my overcoat and some other things that were loose in the buggy; and badly frightening Sr. Crawley. But I had become more accustomed to such things, having the water come round my neck once, Bro. Grant Moore being with me, in the late fall, having to go two miles then and hold a two-hour session of debate at night, before changing my clothes.

We are having a beautiful winter here so far; and good health prevails. We need some one else in this country to preach, as the local elders are so busy at work that they can preach only near home. As ever,

Your colaborer in gospel bonds, whole talk here is that the demand for such work as I have mentioned will be greater next spring than ever before. The town is one of the finest, most healthful, and progressive of any in the West and it is building up very fast. Houses to rent are scarce at present, however. The Great Western Plaster Co. are just commencing six tenement houses for their hands. To the working brethren I will say you need no capital to get work here if you have the health and strength to follow such as we have.

Very truly,
MAHLON SMITH, Branch President.

ATTLEBORO, Massachusetts, January 1, 1906.

Editors Herald: One year ago to-day I sat in the home of Bro. G. H. Gates, Providence, Rhode Island, trying to make some preparation for the service in the house of the Lord, which I was about to attend. It was a glorious morning; the sun shone through the window where I sat and everything seemed to take on the gladness which fills the heart of a Saint when anticipating some special blessing from the hand of our loving Father. It was the first day of the week, the first day of the month, and the first day of the year. We observe the sacrament at our morning service in the East and try to come together fasting for that occasion that we may be the better fitted to enjoy the sanctity of the hour thus set apart. I felt well in spirit and wanted to be in the spirit on the Lord's day, and as the holy fire burned within my breast and thrilled my being as I lifted up a silent prayer to my Father I felt assured there was something in store for God's people as they gathered together.

I had been reading my Doctrine and Covenants, section 88, on "Priesthood," and came to paragraph 18 and read: "And again I say unto you my friends (for from henceforth I shall call you friends,) it is expedient that I give unto you this commandment that ye become even as my friends in days when I shall not be with you. Let not your heart be heavy, neither faint in the days of my suffering, for I suffer them not to have purse or scrip, neither two coats; behold, I send you out to prove the world, and the work that I had to do, and to shew that I am the Son of God. I do not command you to go where I do not, but I do command you to bear the true testimony of Jesus Christ. Whoso receiveth you receiveth me, and the kingdom of my Father, and the Father will receive you. Hearken diligently to the words which I shall speak. Let not the world say that I have sent you out to suffer; but let them say, He sent them, and let them be as sons of the promise, that they may hasten me on my journey, and be instruments of my salvation, and a door for my word, and a pathway for my kingdom to be taught and proclaimed.

Therefore let no man among you (for this commandment is unto all the faithful who are called of God in the church, unto the ministry,) from this hour take purse or scrip, that goeth forth to proclaim this gospel of the kingdom. Behold, I send you out to prove the world, and the laborer is worthy of his hire. And any man that shall go and preach this gospel of the kingdom, and fail not to continue faithful in all things, shall not be weary in mind, neither darkened, neither in body, limb, or joint; and an hair of his head shall not fall to the ground unnoticed. And they shall not go hungry, neither thirsty. Therefore, take no thought of the morrow, etc. This is all to the priesthood.

The Spirit was there to greet God's people and light seemed to beam from every face. Elder G. W. Robley (then pastor) and the writer were in charge. The tender, melting influence of the Spirit was there—which will always accompany the spirit of humility manifest in God's people. And thus from the opening prayer to the benediction was a spiritual feast. The gifts were present to the comfort of God's people. Sr. Ethlina Joy arose and sang a song given her by the Spirit—both words and music, as also the voice to sing; all present feeling its power and import. Every one would fain have tarried under such an influence, but these are the green spots along our busy pathway.

The year thus begun under the favor of our heavenly Father has passed away—its record made, and must thus remain. No erasing, no change or alteration can now be made, and we must at some time see the record we have made, for all things are to be made manifest. What will our record of 1906 be?

"The field is white to harvest," the laborers are very few, and while praying the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers into the field there must be forthcoming the supply for the elders' families. How is your account with the Lord, Saints? If he should appoint his bishops and agents to make out every one's account rendered, what would be the due from the Lord from you? How often has your account been rendered without a settlement? Are you robbing God? Has the love of money blinded your eyes to duty along this important line of service? Are we sleeping on our rights as citizens of the kingdom of heaven, as well as sleeping when every call we hear from our Master is to arise and put on the whole armor of God and work to-day in his vineyard? A new year opens up before us and with it new opportunities to manifest our loyalty to God and his cause. Oh, let us awake from slumber, let the "dormant faculties of the soul" be aroused and have our whole souls aflush with zeal and love for the wonderful advantages before us. Let us permit the principle of sacrifice to be a prominent factor in our lives. Let us work together so that Heaven may smile upon the effort we are making to extend the kingdom of God in the earth and the perfecting of our lives by its pure and holy laws. Then shall Zion be redeemed and her sons and daughters be gathered together and we shall be a delightsome people before the Lord.

Will you, kind readers, bear with me if I write a little of my experience through the months of the year now past? Not that I wish to spread myself in any way, but that what I write may be helpful to the cause I love.

I have been enabled to keep my covenant with the Lord as far as relates to going out without personal expense to the church. I have been cared for—have had enough to eat and drink—have been clothed and a way provided to pay my traveling expenses, and have been enabled to do a little for the church financially in other ways. I take no merit to myself for this—no, not a particle. I joy in the Lord that he was on my right hand and on my left; that not only Saints but many strangers were moved upon to assist me in the time of need. To him be all praise and the reward to those whose hearts were opened to do that much for the Master.

I have traveled during the year 1906 about twelve thousand miles; have walked of that number about fourteen hundred and fifty miles. It is only a little, but shows I have been on the move. I write this that my brethren of the ministry who are too apt to call upon the Bishop and his agent for clothing and car-fare may put the Lord to the test, and also give to the Saints of God an opportunity to prove they are truly his disciples by feeding, clothing, and giving money (traveling expenses, etc.) to the missionary as he labors among them. There are many thousands of dollars expended every year from the church treasury which could and would be paid by Saints and friends to the cause if they knew more fully their duty in these matters. Why not spare the church this expense and bring blessing upon many who are not only willing but anxious to do their own.
duty in whatever way is made plain to them? “The same [the laity, etc.] will feed you and clothe you and give you money.”

“It is expedient that I give unto you this commandment that ye [my ministry] become even as my friends in their part and there will be no lack—only as has been the common lot of God’s ministry in all ages.

I see too much disposition on the part of some (self included) to lean towards the modern clergy in the matter of embellishing the person with too much white cuff, collar, white cravat, etc., and in a few instances kid gloves. These things are all right in their place if they do not spoil us for the work assigned us by God and through the general church authorities. If when viewing ourselves in the glass, nicely clad and groomed, we forget it is simply a lump of clay dressed up—and get such an exalted opinion of ourselves that we want to cut out some of what we think the objectionable features of our work and fix up for a position of influence in the work, we had better take off the rig, and get down to the common routine of our work, as laborers together with Christ. I hardly think he had to remove his “kids” to administer to the lepers and maniacs, who, foaming and wallowing in the mire, were subjects of his ministration.

It is the common, every-day missionary who is accomplishing the most good for the Master. Let us not pander to the favor of the well-dressed few, but, in the humility which is beautiful in the sight of God, do with all our might whatsoever our hands find to do irrespective of rank or station.

With the most implicit confidence in the Author of this great latter-day work, that he will eventually bring it successfully through all the dangers threatening it, within and without the church, I subscribe myself,

Your brother in Christ,

R. BULLARD,

107 North Street, Medford Hillside, Massachusetts.

Editors Herald: I do not wish to enter into a discussion on the subject of the Spirit of God but there seems to be a difference in the understanding of the operation of the Spirit’s work in and out of the church. I am much interested in regard to this matter, as I fill a position in this church which requires a knowledge of this matter. We are commanded to “study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.” (2 Timothy 2:15.) I also read in John 14:16, 17: “And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.”

I do not so understand that the Holy Ghost is given to those on the outside of the church in these the last days. In 1 Corinthians 12:6 Paul says: “And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all.”

I will give you one of the ways of the operations of God as it occurred as Philip was preaching down at the city of Samaria. The people down there seemed to give heed to the preaching of Philip; they seemed to heed the things Philip spake to them and so they were baptized through the preached word and had much joy in that city. We learn those people obeyed the ordinance of baptism. As yet they had not received the Holy Ghost, which is plainly stated in this chapter. After they had believed the preaching of Philip and were baptized, Peter and John came down, laid their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost. I will say like this: if those people received the Holy Ghost before they had hands laid on them, Peter and John had better stayed up at Jerusalem. I understand they received the Holy Ghost after the laying on of hands and not before.

Paul speaks of the diversities of operations but it is the same God. Philip preached the gospel to those people down at Samaria and they believed and obeyed the gospel. This is one of the operations of God that Paul spoke of in bringing the children of men to the light of the gospel and to obedience to the same. In John 6:45 we find this statement made by Christ: “It is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard, and learned of the Father, cometh unto me.” Now listen to the servant of God, whose name is Peter; while preaching on the day of Pentecost to those devout people who ask what they shall do, Peter told them to “Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.”—Acts 2:38.

In verse 41, same chapter: “Then they that gladly received his word were baptized.” Whose word? Peter’s word, spoken by inspiration.

Paul says the gospel “is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.” (Romans 1:16.)

If the Holy Ghost or Comforter which was promised to the disciples operated upon the children of men on the outside of the church in these last days so that it would cause them to speak in tongues and prophecy I do not so understand. Nothing of that kind has happened since the days of Cornelius that I know anything about. Cornelius was a devout man—one that feared God and prayed to God always; also the angel came in unto him. The Book of Mormon speaks about the Holy Ghost being poured out upon the Gentiles and so it was fulfilled in Cornelius’ day as I understand it.

As Paul says (Romans 10:14): “How shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?” As the scriptures portray to my mind that there should be one sent of God to preach the gospel of Christ, they should tell the people to have faith in God and repent of their sins, then be baptized for the remission of sins; then they should have hands laid on them for the gift of the Holy Ghost, believe in the resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment.

Christ was the Comforter when on earth. He told them he was going away but he would not leave them comfortless—he would send them another Comforter which would abide with them for ever. This Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, is placed in the church to show God’s people things to come, bring all things to their remembrance whatsoever he (Christ) had said unto them, and it was to remain in the church, as I understand it, for the accomplishing of God’s purposes. Experiences differ. Some while making an investigation of the gospel received evidence of the gospel through the Holy Ghost, but it came through some one in the church, not out of the church. Take Bro. Luft’s case for instance, and many others I could mention but will not at this time.

In conclusion I will say, “The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul.”—Psalm 19:7.

Dear Herald: I will write a few lines from this place and try to tell you how we are doing in this part of Zion. We are near to Kansas City, Kansas (sixteen miles north and ten west), a bright, busy, stirring, healthful city. There are a number of whom I know who have been benefited and their days prolonged by coming here. There is (and has been for two or three years) work of many kinds going and very few idle men on the streets summer or winter. We have various factories and machine-shops, also a large bridge-building plant employing from one hundred and thirty-five to one hundred and fifty men, and the foreman (one of them) told me two days ago the company was intending to enlarge it to the capacity of two hundred men. We have three mines within the city limits, and one two miles south of limit. There are employed at the four mines over eleven hundred men. In winter mines run nearly full time. For four or five months in summer a little less than half time. A miner can earn from two dollars and a half to three.

There are employed at the four mines per day.

A miner can earn from two dollars and a half to three.

That two thirds of the men go outside to work, leaving such a place for a man with boys. A boy is equal to a man in handling coal; he must be over fourteen years of age or the law forbids him to enter mine.

I have written this for men who are located in portions of our country where for twelve months or more they have not worked two and one half days per week. Some of them are Saints and I am sure they can live fairly well here, and not only is the question of a livelihood the most important one: it brings them inheritance for us. Come all who desire a part in God's first glorious planting and preparation.

FAYETTE CITY, Pennsylvania, January 17, 1906.

Editors Herald: On January 6 I appeared at the opening session of the Bickertonite, or so-called Church of Christ, conference. After the usual opening, effected by Apostle Cherry taking the stand and proceeding, Apostle Cherry read my article and, commenting on it as he read, made the observation, "I feel it should have our attention first." I had rather looked for some mention of the lamented President Cadman, whose death had occurred just two months before, first. But on the wall they had: "In fond remembrance of our departed brother." No name or date given; the visitor left to guess what it might mean. They themselves are so used to guessing perhaps they expect all others to do as much of it.

Apostle Cherry scored me for the way I wrote up their successes and the revelation that in 1862 they should have a presidency. Then the divine command of 1904 omitting it, and their having two presidents from 1880 till William Bickerton's death, April, 1906. I asked him, there and then, to furnish the items and I would correct the matter through the Herald. He answered: "We don't furnish you anything." While proceeding with the reading he said, "Bro. Ettenhouzer is present and I am glad of it." He enlarged his joy (?) by saying: "Now it remains with you, brethren, as to whether Bro. Ettenhouzer shall be permitted to remain at our sessions. After a brief silence, Apostle James Skillen moved the reaffirmation of a former resolution, another Skillen, the vote was called, none voted on negative. I asked: "What is your former resolution?" Apostle Cherry answered: "That no outsiders are allowed at our business sessions." I asked, "Then, sir, what do you ask at my hand?" He answered, "That you retire." Then, said I, "You made my article your first item of business and propose to eject me and hammer away." He responded, "We'll attend to your article after conferences." I said, "I only wanted to be present to see what you do and how you do it; do not wish to participate in that." He said, "But we don't allow it." I responded, "If you do business that does not bear inspection, it is well to keep it hid, and, in that case, I do not want to be present. Christ ever spoke openly and the Reorganized Church hold all their conferences open to the world; have nothing to hide. Come and see us, all of you; we will make you welcome. Thanking you for so much as I have been present, I bid you good-bye."

During the reading of the article and referring back to the controversy between us and a challenge I left in his hands, and a copy in the hands of two citizens, he said: "The next time I want to meet a man with enough brains so he can tell the difference between the truth we teach and the false doctrine of the Reorganized Church; I want to meet the best man they have both at Kiriland and Independence." He well knows I could "tell," and did tell, so that he heard it, the difference between the truth as taught by the Reorganization and the error he is a representative of.

Since the elders of the Reorganization are all of them committed to one and the same position, how will he find one that can "tell" as defines the distinction? Does he want to find one of the Reorganization who sees as he does, and debate with him? Look out, brethren! for the like of Apostle Cherry you have not met among the many kinds in the conflict.

He expects, I suppose, to reply to my previous letter in Herald. Let him furnish, in detail, when, where, and just how William Bickerton was made president; when, where, how, and why Cadman was placed in Bickerton's stead; why Cadman was not removed as president when the command of God to them in 1904 omitted the presidency in their reorganization.

Being ejected, I did not learn then or since what they did in the conference. Perhaps they later thought of the deceased president but they let me in first and then, the shame of it, put me out—and when I had promised to be good, just to watch, learn, and not disturb. I may yet learn what was done at the conference—shall see what the next Reflecter reflects. It has not as yet, though giving "History of the church," given the above called for facts as to Presidents Bickerton and Cadman. Will Cherry do so now?

R. ETZENHOUZER.

HOOD RIVER, Oregon, January 17, 1906.

Herald Readers: The work in this part may not be making the progress that some other more favored places are. But considering the many disadvantages found in this western country we have no great reason to become discouraged. On arriving in this vast field I knew comparatively nothing about the scattered condition of the Saints or where to find them. Bro. N. V. Sheldon, my associate laborer, and the writer were new in the field. A thing which to my mind is very unwise is to send new men into a field, with no one to instruct them where openings and sometimes good interest was created by the missionaries of former years. Had one of those old missionaries been retained until new ones had been trained, it would save the church many dollars in expense and valuable time lost. I wrote to the church papers inquiring where and how to find scattered Saints, but I received only a few answers. One would have judged the scattered Saints did not care for preaching, but that is a mistake; I find them not only anxious but ready to help with both time and means to do what they can. What we need here is young men that know the country and live here. And I think we have two promising young men that will take hold if given the proper encouragement.

This place (Hood River) was once a promising place; they have a church-building partly finished but the work has gone down, yet there are a few noble Saints here who are anxious to see it revive once more.

We have a few faithful Saints at Portland under the leadership of Bro. Pender and wife; they are doing good work. We have a fine branch at Condon, and since the ordination of Bro. Austin to the office of priest and Bro. Jay Barr to that of teacher, we expect good reports from there. We also reorganized the Religio with Bro. Barr president and his wife assistant. There is no reason why it should not do well. At the ordination of Brn. Austin and Barr we had a very spiritual feast and the Saints fully realized the presence of God's Spirit and were much strengthened thereby.

We also have eight Saints at Clearwater. Bro. Wilson, though an old man, has done good work in the eastern part. We provided for the ordination of Bro. H. E. Merryman, who seems to be an earnest worker and I hope will be much help to Bro. Wilson.

I was sorry that time would not permit my visiting many other places from which I had pressing invitations. I am indeed very grateful for the help I receive both by encouragement and with their means, and especially by Condon and Portland Branches. With best wishes for Zion's welfare,

HENRY SPARRING.

Chico, California, January 16, 1906.

Dear Herald: The work of the Lord in these parts is in fair condition. We think our Sunday-school worthy of special mention. The young have taken a deep interest in the work of our Master. Last Sunday a young people's Bible class was formed with our worthy young Bro. Barker as teacher, and Sr. Boydston as organist and teacher. My thoughts this evening wander back seven years ago when there was only one Saint besides husband and me in this place. We have lived to see a nice little company established here. In the incipiency of the work here there have been many sacrifices made and many obstacles to overcome, but God in his kindness is ever willing to help those who trust and obey.

Bro. Hiram L. Holt has been in these parts this winter and we feel God has used him as a comfort to the bereaved and lonely. I wish to set such an example that it will influence others to see the true light of the gospel.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. J. S. HOMMES.

Toronto, Ontario, January 17, 1906.

Editors Herald: I am pleased to note the many favorable reports coming from various fields, and very glad the latter-day work is prospering. We also are sharing the same blessing in Canada and in the coming and going and moving about of these people we believe the Canadian missionaries will meet with warm friends all over the Dominion who “heard the Latter Day Saints in the Majestic.” The interest has started in the right place, the very heart of Canada.

Bro. Evans has commenced preaching on Tuesday and Thursday evenings in the church, Tuesday being the first week-night meeting. Five were baptized, more have requested baptism on Thursday evening, and so the reaping-time is on.

The work is in splendid condition here. With the Majestic services in the center of the city, Humber Bay Branch just outside the western limits, Davisville (a branch newly organized, built up since last June) over the northern line, a mission just opened in the east end, and Lake Ontario to the south, I think Toronto is fairly in the grasp of this great latter-day work. We have just heard that Garafraxa Branch has collected a fund and invited Elder Evans to come to Orangeville, where they would rent for him the town hall. I am glad to hear of the different branches becoming alive to their possibilities and standing behind the missionaries with solid financial support and willing labor. That every effort put forth for the advancement of the cause may be blessed of God is the prayer of your brother,

A. F. McLEAN.

Editors Herald: It has been quite a while since I wrote for the HERALD and I will try to give an account of myself, that your readers may know that I am still in the faith and busy. You have been informed by others of my return from Utah to Lamoni, so I need not say anything about that. From the 7th of October to the close of the month I labored in and near Lamoni, Iowa, preaching at that point and also at Oland and Andover, Missouri. From the first of November unto near its close I was laboring in Oklahoma, preaching sixteen times to appreciative audiences and making friends for the cause. Since that time I have labored in the Lamoni Stake; preaching at Lamoni, Centerville, and Wyan and Boyer Schoolhouses. My labors have been well received and there are many demands for me that are so far unfilled. The 30th of December I had the pleasure of baptizing two at Lamoni, Iowa, Srs. Josie and Victoria Beck. These are mainly the fruits of the labors of Bro. Stead in Montana. They are at present students at our beloved Graceland, and rejoicing in the truth.

The 17th of June, 1906, we were saddened by receiving a telegram informing us that our mother was dead. We had lately received a letter from her, and she appeared to be in the best of health, so it came as a complete surprise to us. She was visiting at her oldest daughter's at this place, and the funeral was held on the 19th inst. We and some took the train for this point, reaching here the 18th. We mingled our tears with others of the family, and all that was mortal of our mother... sings sleep side by side with father on the hill overlooking the home of our youth.

While we mourn our loss, there is much that we have to be thankful for. She suffered no sickness, and kept her powers of body and mind to a marked degree unto the last. A brief sketch of her life may not be out of place here. Her maiden name was Sarah Silsby. She was born in Northfield, Vermont, April 14, 1828. When about eighteen or nineteen years of age she left her father’s house and kindred and traveled westward to Nauvoo, where she made her home. Her first husband's name was Martin. He lived only a few years and after burying him and the two children born to them she married Elder Ames S. Chase. This marriage occurred at Keosauqua, Iowa, in January, 1848. Together they came westward to the Missouri River in the fall of the same year and made a home in what is now Harrison County, Iowa, preparatory to going on west to the “Valley in the mountains.” Before they were ready to make the rest of the trip, they saw developments in the work planted there that caused them to give up such an object. Polygamy with its kindred evils was not a part of the gospel as they had subscribed to it, and so for a while they were as sheep without a shepherd. When the message of salvation as sounded by the Reorganization reached them in the early sixties, they recognized the “one Spirit” by which they had been “baptized into [the] one body” and again, with renewed courage, went forward with God’s people, finding consolation and hope anew, in the promises of the gospel of Christ. Together they had passed through much of the dark and cloudy days and together they kept the faith unto death and now are resting in “hope of a glorious resurrection,” and their children rise up and call them blessed.

Whatever I may be of service to God and man I feel I owe, in a great measure, to their faith and prayers. The youngest daughter (Sr. May O. Gamet) was not able to be present at the funeral, and our sympathy goes out to her in this denial. Four children, twenty-two grandchildren and fourteen great-grandchildren remain as the fruit of this union. May they all prove to be faithful and worthy the example of these parents in Israel is our prayer.

A. M. CHASE.

DE SMOKES, Iowa, January 26, 1906.

Dear Herald: The Des Moines District conference meets at Runnells February 10 and 11, with Sunday-school work on the 9th and Religio work during the conference. We have had no conference since June and it is hoped that there will be a good representation from each of the branches. It is expected that Elder Heman C. Smith will be with us at that time.

The reports to the conference will show some advancement of the work in the district. The missionaries have been very active and have been successful in their work. A goodly number have been baptized. The books of the Bishop’s agent have more names on them this year than any previous year, thus showing that more of the Saints are seeking to honor the titling law, and the receipts in the hands of the Bishop’s agent are the largest for any one year with one exception.

The work here in the city is still onward. On last Sunday two were baptized, ladies, heads of families. There is a noticeably increased interest and awakenings among the Saints who have been cold and indifferent. More of the wandering ones have returned to the fold through the door of baptism.

The Sunday-school officers recently chosen for the half year are: Superintendent, E. F. Hall; assistant, Battie Clark; secretary, Irena Reed; treasurer, Orpha Emalie. The Religio officers are: President, Ray Chandler; vice-president, G. E. Davis; secretary, Bertha Vice; treasurer, Anthony Robinson. The Sunday-school lessons of this quarter, of a historical character, will prove interesting. The Religio lessons are also historical and are being carefully studied by a few at least. The second number of the Sunday School Exponent was received this week, and it has been permanently added to some of our homes. It has been very kindly received.

We note that the Herald has been giving some advice to those contemplating attending the General Conference, and the preparation that should be made, the heart to be filled with meekness and love, and the millinery box not portentious in its dimensions. We earnestly hope that all attending our district conference will make the necessary spiritual preparation that all may be benefited by the assembling of the conference, and that all may desire to see the work advance more rapidly.

Wishing the Herald a happy and prosperous year, I am,

A. A. REAMS.

CRYSTAL, Michigan, January 21, 1906.

Editors Herald: While it was thought advisable by some of our number to discontinue our branch on account of being so badly scattered, and there being only a teacher to preside, yet we can see some fruits of our labors.

The branch has not met together for some time, but we have had union prayer-meetings at our home every Wednesday evening all summer and winter so far, and Free Methodist, Church of God, Methodist Episcopal, and Baptist have been represented here and much, cross-firing done, the Saints the target, of course; but victory seems to be in our favor, as one has expressed her desire to become a Latter Day Saint as soon as possible; so I am encouraged in this latter-day wonder, knowing that truth will prevail.

But amid scenes of sunshine and apparent victory, there come seasons of sore trials and sadness. My wife has been seriously ill for several weeks, and it seems that all that human aid can do has been done and still she continues very low; we are far from the elders, so desire the special prayers of the Saints, and especially the Prayer Union, that God will bless her again with health as only he can.

In the conflict for truth,

D. E. DUNSHEE.

HAMBURG, Germany, January 5, 1906.

Dear Herald: Many, many times have we been cheered and comforted by reading the pages of Herald, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves, and feel desirous of sending you our contribution. We can not find words to express our appreciation of the church papers, and we note with pride the splendid articles contained in the late numbers of Autumn Leaves. May God bless the efforts of the editor.

In reading Bro. F. J. Ebeling’s autobiography, memory carries us back to days pleasantly spent together, especially in Byersville, Ohio, when the brother shared our home, advising and encouraging us onward in this grand work of restoration. How the people were elated over his masterly efforts in defense of the gospel, so much so that the citizens called upon him to deliver an oration upon Labor Day. The memories of those days so pleasantly spent in the association of missionaries and Saints will never be forgotten. But, oh, what a contrast we find, coming to this far-away land with so little freedom given us to present the gospel which is so dear to us!

Bro. Becker has made rapid progress with the German language, but, alas, I wish I could say as much for myself. I feel I have the sympathy of those who have endeavored to master foreign languages. Pauline and I have quite a vocabulary, but to get the words properly placed in sentences is a very difficult task for me and will take several more months’ study before I will be able to speak Deutsch. However, we are hopeful and are striving by God’s help to live a life worthy of divine guidance.

While we have had trials to undergo, we have been made to rejoice in the goodness of God and the blessings received. How glad we are made to read of the many souls that have been buried with Christ in the last year. How we wish we could
I rejoiced to read the article from my daughter-in-law, Mrs. J. A. Dowker, telling the reason why she left the Catholic Church, and I think she could write much more that would be interesting to the Saints and others.

We had a good meeting yesterday and Bro. J. J. Cornish was the speaker last night. There seemed to be a good interest, while he made the story so plain and easy to be understood. I have received a few copies of the Christian Weekly, which I will mail to you, in case you have not received any; and I think there are some articles that some one should reply to, but you will be your own judge in that matter.

Ever praying for the Saints, I remain,

WILLIAM DOWKER.

ELDORADO SPRINGS, Missouri, December 29, 1905.

Editors Herald: I am happy to be able to congratulate you on the close of the year for your timely and instructive pages. I have been a reader of your columns for over thirty-five years, and noted the improvements since then; yet I miss the pens of those valiant ones who bore the brunt of oppression and hardship in introducing the gospel message to the world.

The work is still on its feet in our branch. Some are removing, while others are making their homes with us. We have a good, wide-awake missionary force, and some new places have been opened up of late, with good interest manifested.

Our labor in branches we hope will ultimately prove a blessing to all concerned. My assistant, W. Waterman, has devoted his entire time in looking after the interests of the work, and I hope and earnestly pray that God’s blessing will follow, that an effort will be made upon the part of both old and young to honor the law of God. True the young have much to contend with, but as officers of the church we should make a faithful effort to reclaim them in the spirit of meekness and love.

Your brother and colaborer in Christ,

ADNER LLOYD.

Dear Herald: I am still interested in the work, and thankful for the many blessings of the past year. I must say that the trials of the past few years have made me stronger in the work, as the Lord has answered my prayers in that he assisted me in adjusting the difficulties that existed, and that seemed to be more than I could bear at times; and had it not been for the encouragement the Lord gave me through the gifts of the gospel, I fear I would have fallen in the conflict. I must say, dear Saints, it proved a great help to me that when the clouds seemed the darkest the Lord would show me in some way that I was to stand for the right.

Nearly five years I was afflicted and not able to work at hard work, but in answer to prayer I have again been able to work for nearly three months; so I have great reason to be thankful.

I am pleased to read the articles in the HeralD from Bro. J. W. Rushon and others, of the advance step the church should make. I hope the leaven will work till the church will come to that standard of perfection that God intended. Oh, how more than five years. He made light of it. However, he lived just four years and six months.

Your brother and co laborer in Christ,

I met him at Red Fork, Indian Territory, in September, and he came home and died next day, I am told here by his own Baptist people. But this great latter-day work goes on just the same.

There is considerable interest here. The time is close at hand when a great work will begin among the Indians (Lamanites). May God hasten the day.

I will begin meetings in Bengall, Indian Territory, to-morrow; from thence to Waldron, Arkansas.

In bonds till Christ comes,

J. D. ERWIN.

Independence Items.

There has been of late quite an increase in the attendance at both the church-services and Sunday-school, the latter having an enrollment of nearly six hundred, with a cradle-roll of three hundred and sixty-one to date: Since September 1, received thirty by letter and eleven by baptism, also eleven have been removed by death and ten by letter, and the record is completed by adding seven couples married and ten infants blessed.

In reviewing the events of the past few weeks it is with feelings of gratitude we can see that notwithstanding the throes of evolution and the severe jolt given us by the carrying on of church improvements a better day is dawning for the Saints here.

To be sure there are a few matters small in proportions but great in significance which, as we have been admonished, demand our immediate attention, some of which are the tightening of the parental rein, the regulating of sundry dubious matrimonial conditions of one or two inexperienced couples, the squaring up of the last year’s account in a society case or two, together with the general lining up of the rank and file in affairs spiritual and temporal.

All the late sermons, including those of our beloved and aged Patriarch Alexander and Bro. E. C. Briggs, whom we listened to last Sunday, have been messages freighted with thought of grave import.

The opening remarks at the priesthood meeting of the 25th ult., at which the “Redemption of Zion” was the theme, were made by Bishop Kelley, and his leading thought, “confidence in God and confidence in the president of the church” as a preventive against jarrings, envying, and covetous desires, could but be generally indorsed.

Bro. May, and others, offered a few thoughts in which the law was emphasized: “We must keep the celestial law, pay our tithing, consecrate our properties, and get ourselves in line”; “The gospel law is the only means by which the redemption of Zion can be accomplished, and they who do their duty and comply with it have faith in God who said, ‘Behold, I require your surplus properties’”; “As to cooperating with God, there is no work so exalted.”

Bro. H. O. Smith preached to a large congregation last Sunday morning upon the subject of “proper conditions necessary” for the reception of God’s blessings upon his children. He said we have not a full comprehension of all that our Father intends to do for us and added—

“Tis by our follies that so long
We hold the earth from heaven away.”

Roosevelt also voiced this thought in his message of our one hundred and thirtieth year of independence, for he said, “The foes from whom we should pray to be delivered are our passions, appetites, and follies.”

Bro. E. L. Kelley said in a late sermon, “It is so natural for a man to lean on his own understanding; if a man is walking in his own way, he is not walking with God.” And Bro. Luff, among many other excellent things, said on his recent theme, “Behold, I stand at the door and knock,” which gives us to understand that God’s design with his children is “the enrichment of the soul,” and it is for them to “not only believe on his name, but to sacrifice in his service.”

One brother at a prayer-meeting recently related a dream which had been impressed on his mind very forcibly. A happy people appeared before his enraptured vision and he heard the words which were repeated, “My all is on the altar; I’m waiting for the fire.”

Bro. Luff exhorted the Saints to offer their fervent prayers especially in behalf of the presidency and bishopric: they need, he said, to be remembered by the Saints.

We as a people are thankful that while all around us there is such a change going on in creeds and church methods our elders are standing by the original tenets of the church: as Bro. Earhart in a late issue of the HERALD says, “When the light of truth illuminates our understanding then we are guardians of that truth, and become responsible for its defense.”

Bro. F. A. Smith delivered on the 10th a sermon of intense interest on the words found in John 4:23, 24. “But the hour cometh and now is when the true worshiper shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him.” “God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.” And while reading the late words of the governor of Oklahoma, we were reminded of the seathing words of “reckoning” given, although in the spirit of love and mildness, in Bro. Smith’s discourse. This gentleman said, “What shall come forth finally from this active day of calling to account can not at this moment well or accurately be predicted. But we do know and can assure ourselves that the awakening presages good for the sons of men throughout the nation. In government, in education, in religion, in business, in sport, the rules of the game have at last required a reckoning.”

And then there is no doubt needed the word in season for the children, be it from a loved pastor, a Sunday-school teacher, a daughter of Zion, or friend indeed—for the boy or girl who, attracted by a love of fame or false ambition, starts out for a life of worldly honors. It may be to seek great accomplishment as a singer in light opera, grand opera—or what not. And, by the way, one of Graceeland’s teachers said the other morning in a sermon, “We should not lay too much stress upon fine singing and fine reading: the greater question is, Are our hearts right before God?”

It is said that the deer imbued with the eager desire to explore every mystery would in the early days of this country walk right into an ambuscade to ascertain the meaning of a handkerchief fluttering from a bush. Just so dangers lurk on every hand and quite as vain are the desires of many a youth.

As we contemplate the events transpiring at this epoch of church history when the Saints everywhere are interested in the honor paid the memory of the latter-day prophet on the one hundredth anniversary of his birth, our hearts thrill with gratitude that we in “the center place” can enjoy through the pages of the HERALD the reminiscences of the devoted life of Joseph Smith the choice seer, so replete as a husband and father with virtue, affection, and tenderness, and as one of the brotherhood of man with loyalty to his fellow men, his church, his country, and his God; and let us add our tribute of affection and reverence for one who by our heavenly Father was endowed richly with the divine gift.

We also feel grateful that amid the obstacles that seem to surround us we are permitted to set in order the house erected for worship and trust we may be permitted to greet our beloved president, his counselors, and all the brethren and sisters who will be privileged to meet here at the conference of 1906.

Miscellaneous Department

Pastoral.

To all the Saints of the New York and Philadelphia District;

Greeting: As our district conference convenes in Philadelphia, February 10 and 11, I have a desire to express my hope of a very interesting and profitable time, and therefore request all the Saints to take part to the extent that they may receive the benefit and blessing of such counsel as may be given. The basis of our hope is cheering reports from the ministry in various parts of the district, namely, Philadelphia, Scranton, and Broad River, etc. Let us each earnestly pray that He will abundantly bless us with His Holy Spirit.

Blank reports have been sent to all branch presidents, priests, and elders that we know of; if perchance any have been missed, kindly notify us and you shall receive one by return mail.

In concluding, we earnestly hope that God may direct our conference, and that those attending will come with a sincere desire to further God's work, and that the waste places of the district may be built up, and the honest in heart may have an opportunity of hearing the gospel of peace, that those that are hungering for the bread of eternal life may be fed. Bro. F. M. Sheehy, the missionary in charge, will be present, and others of the force that can will kindly consider this an invitation to be present. Ever praying that we may be abundantly blessed,

Your colaborer in the gospel,
GEORGE POTTS.

Transfer of Missionary.

Bro. C. H. Porter having been released by those in charge of field from appointment to the Northwestern Kansas District, and appointed by the missionary in charge to the Southern Nebraska District, said release and appointment are hereby concurred in.

Signed,
JOSEPH SMITH, for Presidency.

LAMONI, IOWA, January 25, 1906.

First Quorum of Seventy.

To the First Seventy: According to an order of the quorum I have sent a report blank to each member not under General Conference appointment. Any not receiving one, please notify me by first mail after seeing this notice. Those under appointment need not report to me. The report sent to the Church Secretary and published in the HERALD will be the report necessary for the quorum. Any having special information to give the quorum, or business to present to the quorum, please send it to me at your earliest convenience, 2500 Logan Avenue, Des Moines, Iowa.

As soon as it is ascertained by any member of the quorum that he will not be in attendance at the coming General Conference, please send the dues of the quorum. Others can bring theirs to the conference. The expense of the quorum work this year has been greater than usual on account of extra correspondence, etc.

J. F. MINTUN, Secretary of Quorum.

UNITY.

Perhaps the greatest present need of the church, and one that has existed for a number of years, is that of united action. And until we shall attain to that state of perfection where we can act together in harmony in the carrying out of the celestial law revealed for our guidance, the progress of the work must be, necessarily, slow. The benefit of a steadfast oneness of purpose is succinctly stated in the Doctrine and Covenants, speaking of the city of Enoch:

And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them.—Doctrine and Covenants 36:2.

As a result of being of one heart and one mind, and living in righteousness, the Lord owned them as Zion; and the natural consequence of this harmony in right living was that there were no poor among them. It could not have been otherwise. To have had poor among them would have been evidence that there was lack of unity, and a dearth of righteous living, consequently the Lord could not have called them Zion.

Surely we can but expect that the same cause will produce the same effect to-day, and that the Lord will own us as Zion when we shall become of one heart and one mind, dwelling in righteousness—and not before. And when we attain that condition, one of the fruits bearing witness that we are worthy to be called Zion will be the fact that there are no poor among us. But this desirable state of affairs can not be brought about by inharmony, division, and dissension. On the contrary, it must be done by a uniting of hearts and minds on purposes which are right and true. Jesus says, “I say unto you, Be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine.”—Doctrine and Covenants 38:6.

The pressing need for more harmony and unity is recognized by almost every one; and preachers, writers, and poets have importuned, exhorted, and pleaded for an increase of this virtue. The first essential, of course, is to recognize that the need exists. But that alone is not enough; and all the pleading, exhorting, and appealing will be of little avail, unless there is a way pointed out by which it may be overcome. We may all admit the need of unity; but the question is, How shall we attain to it? Jesus says:

—that is, to recognize that the need exists. But that alone is not enough; and all the pleading, exhorting, and appealing will be of little avail, unless there is a way pointed out by which it may be overcome. We may all admit the need of unity; but the question is, How shall we attain to it? Jesus says:

—Religio-Record.
Every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.—Matthew 7:18, 19.

Perhaps nearly every one will agree that disunity may be likened unto a corrupt tree. It cannot bring forth good fruit, but is sure to bring forth the evil fruit of dissension, strife, malice, envy, etc. But admitting this, and recognizing that this corrupt and unsightly tree exists, what is to be done? John the Baptist tells what to do, in these words:

And now also the ax is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.—Matthew 3:10.

That is plain enough. The ax is laid at the root of the tree. In ridding ourselves of this corrupt and unsightly growth we must go back to the root of the matter, and there make the adjustment. It will not do to simply trim off the top branches of this bad tree, and try to smooth it over and make it appear as a good tree and much to be desired. That will not change the nature of its fruit at all, for a corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit. The only possible effect it may have is to increase the crop. Neither will it do to cut the tree down leaving a two-foot stump for future generations to stumble over; or to smooth things over, thinking it will die out with the passing generation. For the stump will send up new shoots and the rising generation have a harder problem to solve than their fathers had. There is only one thing we can do, if we want to remove this unsightly thing for ever, and that is to go right back to the root of the matter and grub out all that is corrupt and bad, leaving nothing from which new shoots may sprout up.

In every case of division and dissension there must be, right near the root of the thing, a wrong on one side or the other, or on both, and the only way to remove the cause for that division is to go back and right the wrong or wrongs.

To go up into the top branches of this unsightly tree and make a compromise by which each party gives up something he believes is right, and yields to something he is satisfied is wrong, will not remove the cause, but the tree will continue to bear its annual crop of fruit, and the root continue to thrive.

Compromises are of little value, anyhow, unless it be that they serve to stave off culminations until conditions are more ripe for a thorough adjustment. Perhaps the most striking example of this is found in the history of our nation, when the Missouri Compromise was hailed as a preventive of disruption. But it only served to postpone the time when the ax had to be laid at the root of the tree, when the evil that had caused all the division and the strife was eliminated by the Emancipation Proclamation. And so with disunity in other bodies and organizations. Compromises may postpone for a time, but sooner or later there must be a going back to the root of the matter, and an uprooting of the wrong where it started, or the cause for division will continue to exist. And the effect is always present where the cause exists. Some one has said "that those who are carried away on a wave of enthusiasm usually have to walk back dryshod." We may have to do a little walking back, but the exercise will do us good. A compromise never settles anything finally, because it does not settle it right; and, as Ella Wheeler Wilcox says,

"No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.
"Let those who have failed take courage,
Though the enemy seemed to have won,
Though his ranks are strong, if he be in the wrong.
The battle is not yet done.
For sure as the morning follows
The darkest hour of the night
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right."

Now if we are willing to have this tree of disunity removed, willing to have the question settled right, by having the ax laid at the root of the tree, even if it touches us individually, well and good. If we are not willing to have this done, we may just as well quit harping for unity and harmony, for they will not come.

That our heavenly Father recognizes the need for more unity is shown in that he has condescended to speak to us upon that question a number of times. Among other things he has said:

My servants have been harsh one with another; and some have not been sufficiently willing to hear those whose duty it is to teach the revelations which my church has already received. Until my people shall hear and heed those who are set in the church to teach the revelations there will be misunderstanding and confusion among the members.—Doctrine and Covenants 122:1.

If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers; and if they do not, they can not expect the riches of gifts and the blessings of direction.—Doctrine and Covenants 125:14.

This is good, wholesome doctrine; but we opine that it was not given for the purpose of furnishing a club to be used in coercing others into the acceptance of our views, without question, whether or not they were in harmony with "the revelations which my church has already received." And we may forget, too, sometimes that there are other revelations given prior to these that have an appropriate bearing upon them; and as each of these revelations is to be taken as "having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others," we quote the following:

If ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work, for, behold, the field is white already to harvest, and he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perish not, but bringeth salvation to his soul; and faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work.—Doctrine and Covenants 4:1.
THE SAINTS' HERALD

Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care.—Doctrine and Covenants 11:4.

There is a great work to be done by mine elders, and that they may be fitted to do this work and the accomplishment thereof be not prevented, it is enjoined upon them that they shall not only be kind of heart and of a lowly spirit, that their wisdom may be the wisdom of the Lord and their strength the strength of the Spirit, but they shall lay aside lightness of speech and lightness of manner when standing to declare the word, and shall study to approve their ministrations to the people by candor in speech and courtesy in demeanor, that as ministers of the gospel they may win souls unto Christ. The elders and men of the church should be of cheerful heart and countenance among themselves and in their intercourse with their neighbors and men of the world, yet they must be without blame in word and deed.—Doctrine and Covenants 119:2, 3.

These last three quotations certainly have their appropriate bearing upon the two preceding ones, and when those whom the Lord has set in the church to teach the revelations "already received" manifest these virtues, and their works bear testimony that they are laboring with "an eye single to the glory of God," and they so deport themselves that their ministrations are approved to the people, and they are found to be without blame in word or deed, and their teachings are in harmony with the word of God, then will they be entitled to the respect of the people, and they will be heard and heeded, misunderstanding and confusion be removed, and harmony and peace prevail. For in harmony with the command that the elders are to "see that my law is kept," the ax will be laid at the root of every corrupt tree, and the cause of division and strife and contention be removed. When the cause is removed the effects will disappear, and then—and not until then—will we have unity.

Bro. J. W. Wight, reporting the field over which he has charge, says: "All things considered we are doing well, and of late there seems to be more of a religious awakening. Eighty-four have been baptized during the quarter. Thirty-five were baptized at Byrneville. Two have been baptized here—Wirt, Indiana; we look for some to-morrow."

It is often said that the cause of poverty is shiftlessness and intemperance, but we are not ready to believe that as a rule. The fact that men of millions are for the most part victims of intemperate and dissolute habits, and many of them indolent, and yet keep on getting richer, does not bear out that theory. It matters little whether it is the saloon-keeper who is getting rich off the toil of the producer, or whether it is some more respectable person, so far as the cause of poverty is concerned. That the poor as well as the rich would be better off to abandon their intemperance, we believe; but the real underlying cause of poverty is that some men who are in a position where they may take more of this world's goods than they are entitled to do not impart of their substance to the poor as the Lord commanded. But it is considered legal and honorable from a worldly standpoint, and they excuse themselves on that ground.

When some features of the celestial law are presented and it is shown that it comprehends a willingness to put our surplus means in the hands of the church for the benefit of the poor, the objection is urged, that there are so many lazy, shiftless, idle ones among the poor, that they would simply depend on the church and make no effort to provide for themselves. It is ridiculous for several reasons. One is that nine out of ten of the able-bodied members of the church, who are lazy or idle, are found among those who have enough so they do not need to work—not among the poor. Another is that the poor producer now must divide the product of his toil to help keep a dozen or more who do not work in luxury, while he and his family are in want. Under changed conditions his toil would keep him above want, and be a source of income to the church, and there would no fear of his becoming a charge. Still another is that when the celestial law is in operation fully, the idler, whether poor or rich, will not be permitted to remain in Zion, or receive of her benefits. So there is no need for fear along that line, and no ground for advancing such a foolish excuse.

President Joseph Smith, accompanied by his wife and Brn. Alexander H. Smith, Heman C. Smith, E. L. Kelley, and E. C. Briggs, left Lamoni, Friday evening, for Washington, D. C., having been summoned to testify before the Smoot investigation, which was to begin the 6th inst. The Des Moines Capital for February 5 makes note of it, and adds, "The above-named gentlemen are the principal officers of the Latter Day Saints Church, and are fully qualified to testify as to the faiths of the Utah church and the Lamoni church, and to point out the difference between the two denominations. Their testimony may prove interesting to the whole country."

Most people have naturally some virtues, but none have naturally all the virtues. To acquire those that are wanting, and secure what we acquire, as well as those we have naturally, is as properly an art as painting, navigation, or architecture.—Franklin.

If a man can write a better book, preach a better sermon, or make a better mouse-trap than his neighbor, though he build his house in the woods, the world will make a beaten path to his door.—Emerson.
We will read a portion of the fifth chapter of Matthew:

And seeing the multitudes, he went up into a mountain: and when he was set, his disciples came unto him: and he opened his mouth, and taught them, saying, Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth. Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled. Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy. Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God. Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God. Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you. Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost his savor, where­with shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men. Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill can not be hid. Neither do men light a candle and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.

Thus reads the first sixteen verses of the fifth chapter of Matthew. I desire to invite your attention to the eighth verse, one of the precious promises of our Master, one of the several sayings which are called in common parlance, the beatitudes: "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God."

And in order to apply the lesson contained therein to us as a people, I want to invite your attention to a portion of the ninety-fourth section of the Doctrine and Covenants, purporting to be a revelation given in August, 1843. Commencing at the fourth paragraph, I read:

And inasmuch as my people build an house unto me, in the name of the Lord, and do not suffer any unclean thing to come into it, that it be not defiled, my glory shall rest upon it; yea, and my presence shall be there, for I will come into it, and all the pure in heart that shall come into it, shall see God; but if it be defiled I will not come into it, and my glory shall not be there, for I will not come into unholy temples. And now, behold, if Zion do these things, she shall prosper and spread herself and become very glorious, very great, and very terrible; and the nations of the earth shall honor her, and shall say, Surely Zion is the city of our God; and surely Zion can not fall, neither be moved out of her place, for God is there, and the hand of the Lord is there, and he hath sworn by the power of his might to be her salvation, and her high tower; therefore verily thus saith the Lord, Let Zion rejoice, for this is Zion, THE PURE IN HEART; therefore let Zion rejoice, while all the wicked shall mourn; for, behold, and lo, vengeance cometh speedily upon the ungodly, as the whirlwind, and who shall escape it; the Lord's scourge shall pass over by night and by day; and the report thereof shall vex all people; yet, it shall not be staid until the Lord come; for the indignation of the Lord is kindled against their abominations, and all their wicked works; nevertheless Zion shall escape if she observe to do all things whatsoever I have commanded her, but if she observe not to do whatsoever I have commanded her, I will visit her according to her works, with sore affliction, with pestilence, with plague, with sword, with vengeance, with devouring fire; nevertheless, let it be read this once in their ears, that I, the Lord, have accepted of their offering; and if she sin no more, none of these things shall come upon her; and I will bless her with blessings, and multiply a multiplicity of blessings upon her, and upon her generations, for ever and ever, saith the Lord your God. Amen.

Permit me to say in the beginning of my remarks this morning, that I believe the most important work now, and the most important work that ever was assigned to the people of God is, "Purify yourselves." There are other things which are incidental to this; but this is the main question, and the main duty that devolves upon us. We may think about other things to some extent; but we must never lose sight of this: that no other promise is to be realized, no other thing that we are looking for shall materialize, unless we shall be numbered with the pure in heart. Our text tells us, "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God," and I am of the opinion that this word see has a broader significance than simply "to look at." To see God, is to understand him. We often use the word see in that sense. When we are speaking of any subject we say we see it, or we do not see it. And to see God is to comprehend him and understand his character, to know his attributes, become acquainted with him. As John said in his epistle: "Beloved, it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he comes we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." When we are able to see him as he is, comprehend him fully, then we shall be like him. Until we are able to see him, we shall not be capable of being like him.

And in the second text that we have read from the Doctrine and Covenants we are given to understand that Zion is the pure in heart, and that the pure in heart, or in other words, Zion, shall see God.

Of course Zion is used in other senses. We are told here about the land of Zion, and the city of Zion. But the land of Zion simply means the land set apart wherein the pure in heart may dwell; for this is really and truly Zion, wherever it may be found, whether gathered or ungathered. Zion is the pure in heart. The land is simply a place pointed out where the pure in heart may assemble. And the city of Zion is also a city prepared wherein the pure in heart may dwell.

In my opinion we have been placing too much attention upon the secondary thought, and not enough, sometimes, upon the first. We have been studying a great deal in regard to the land of Zion, been talking about the city of Zion, and looking forward to the time when we should be permitted to dwell there. Now, we need give ourselves no uneasy-ness in regard to that. There need be no trouble upon our minds in regard to the land of Zion, or the city of Zion. We shall just as certainly be there, as we are Zion! And if we are not Zion, the pure in heart, all the calculations we may make in regard to it and its economic conditions will come to naught.
All the effort we may make in other directions, other than purifying ourselves, will be lost; for Zion is to be inhabited by the pure in heart. And if you become pure in heart you will be there; you need not worry in regard to that at all.

We have been sometimes a little extravagant in our views, perhaps, in regard to this land of Zion and city of Zion. Our extravagance arises no doubt from the fact that we are not competent to understand what is to be enjoyed there, and hence speculate; and in our speculations, because we are not fully prepared to comprehend, we draw conclusions that sometimes are correct, and sometimes are not correct.
And when we draw conclusions that are not correct, and we see them materialize not, our faith gets weak, and we begin to falter by the way, and think perhaps that we have trusted in vain, when we simply have been trusting that our rendering of these things would be realized, and those renderings have no sufficient foundation.

We get enthusiastic sometimes, and in our enthusiasm we picture something glorious that is going to happen in the by and by, neglecting present duty, and present preparation for the things that are to be enjoyed. Our poets sometimes express our enthusiasm (and they are no worse than the rest of us, perhaps, in this; but in their flowery language they express it) and we sing it and enjoy it. Now I hear people sometimes sing:

"Oh, for a thousand tongues to sing,
My great Redeemer's praise."

I never was able to join in that desire; for I never could use the one I have to good advantage. I do not know what I would do with a thousand.

And again I hear them sing:

"O Zion, when I think of thee,
I long for pinions like the dove."

What would I do with them if I had them? This is to my mind simply expressive of our tendencies, that we get enthusiastic, and picture out in our minds something in the future, something that is glorious and grand and beautiful. We talk about it and sing about it; but before we inhabit the land of Zion as a permanent place of gathering and inheritance, before we are made partakers of the blessings of the beautiful city of Zion, we must purify ourselves. "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God."

This is our work to-day, and we must not lose sight of it if we expect to see Zion redeemed and flourishing upon the hills, and we enjoying ourselves there. There have been times when, in the latter day, Zion has seemed to be near to us, so far as inheriting the land is concerned. We have been disappointed so far. I hope the disappointment is not to continue, but it will continue unless we change our policies and our lives. The reason why we and our fathers have been disappointed of inhabiting the land of Zion, and planting our and their rooftrees there no more to be torn down, is because they and we have made the land of Zion first, and neglected what should have been first, the purifying of ourselves.

The revelations of God say to us that Zion, the land of Zion, might have been redeemed even now but for "the transgressions of my people," pointing out the fact that the people had not made the proper preparation for it.

One thing that has stood in the way of our being prepared, is our selfishness, and our greed. We have taken advantage, in the past, of conditions that surrounded what promised to be a gathering-place, to satisfy our greed to some extent. These may be unpleasant things to hear, but they are true. When the gathering takes place in any locality, and the people begin to want to buy homes and settle there, it has been the policy, not only of those without, but those within, to take advantage of it that they might get the advanced prices for that which they possessed. It was so at Independence in former times.
It was so at Kirtland. It was so at Nauvoo. It has been so in Lamoni and in Independence in later times. And we have made a failure every time so far as the past is concerned.

Now, so far as I am individually concerned, I do not care to see prices enhanced. And if any of you are afraid that prices are going down, and property is going to be cheap because of any movement of the church, I do not share in that. I want to see prices down, down, until those who desire to come in and locate with us may be able to purchase homes, whether they be poor or rich. And until these things are true, judging from the experience of the past, Zion will not be redeemed. Our selfishness stands in the way, and our love for gain; and our desire to have prices advance, and to be what we call prosperous—prosperous in the sense that is not worthy to be compared with something else. I told a brother the other night, in conversation, that I wanted to see prices of real estate go down. Lest he might tell you, I will get ahead of him and tell you myself that that is what I want. And the quicker we quit thinking about these things, and think about the main point at issue, the better it will be for us.

I like to see people selfish in one sense—not in the sense that it is generally used. Selfishness, in the sense in which it is generally used, must be eradicated before Zion is redeemed. But I like to see a man selfish enough to look after his own interest, and make it a particular business to look after his own interest in preference to that of anybody else.
You may think that is strange. But I think, possibly, we mistake what our interest is, and that when we talk of looking after our interest that means our property concerns. Our interest is to purify ourselves; and in that sense we should look after it, and make a specialty of looking after our own individual interest. That is the leading duty that belongs to us as a people, to prepare ourselves that we may be the pure in heart. That is Zion. The location of Zion means very little compared to that. And the Lord has given us to understand, through all the revelations he has given us, that he ever made for us, to purify the people of God, and make them fit to dwell in higher and better conditions than they enjoy here.

I am made bold to say right in this connection, that some of us, losing sight of the first and taking into consideration only the secondary idea in regard to Zion, have gathered together, no doubt, when we would better be somewhere else. There are, to-day, people in Independence and Lamoni who have come here because they were gathering-places, when probably Lamoni or Independence would have been better off without them, and they might have been better off without Lamoni or Independence, too, so far as their usefulness is concerned. There was opportunity for some of them to work somewhere else, and they came here and found nothing to do; for there is not the demand for their service here that there might have been somewhere else. They might have developed better somewhere else than here, and what has been true in the past is true now, largely. And I think it is a duty of the ministry of the church generally to urge upon the people that they pay more attention to their own lives, their own purification, their own holiness, rather than to any of these other things that simply are incidental to that, and call their attention to the fact pronounced in this text as it is there: “Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.” Let other things take care of themselves so far as possible. In business affairs we must get rid of this selfish interest that we have, the desire to build ourselves up at the expense of others.

I believe I have said, once or more perhaps in this place,—if I have not said it here, I have said it elsewhere—that in business affairs a man has no right to consider himself alone, and to take into consideration what will pay him. That is what brought disrepertable business into the world. That is why we have places of ill repute and disreputable things going on in the name of business. It is because men have considered their own interests only and asked the question, Will it pay me to do this? And if they felt there was money in it, they looked no farther. But the honest man, the fair-minded man, the pure-headed man (as our text speaks of the pure in heart), will not consider that alone, but will consider that he has no right to enter into a community and ask that community to support him unless he can return to that community value received. Men would never do that if this principle were applied to business, as it must be applied in Zion, where the pure in heart dwell. Then there will be no use discussing the temperance question; there will be no use passing laws to keep out things that are hurtful, things that are wrong, things that are immoral in the sense of business, for there will be no desire for them. Man will never engage in anything of the kind, because he knows it is not right to expect something for nothing. We will eliminate all these questions by simply purifying ourselves. And we may struggle on as long as we like, and we may talk about Zion and the redemption of Zion, and of returning to Zion with songs of everlasting joy upon our heads, but we will never get there until we are Zion, the pure in heart—not for a permanent inheritance. If we go there, we will have to get out again, whenever Zion is too good for us; but so long as Zion, the land of Zion, is no better than other lands so far as its conditions are concerned, we may enter and dwell there.
But if I understand the revelations of God aright, we are commanded to gather when we are prepared to gather; not to gather for the purpose of preparing.
We must prepare to gather by keeping the commandments of God.

I will read to you just a few passages upon this point of the necessary preparation for the land of Zion. You will see that instead of blessings, we will bring upon us cursings, unless we shall be in a condition that we may be entitled to Zion, because we are indeed Zion. I read here in the thirty-fourth section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

Keep all the commandments and covenants by which ye are bound, and I will cause the heavens to shake for your good, and Satan shall tremble, and Zion shall rejoice upon the hills, and flourish; and Israel shall be saved in my own due time. And by the keys which I have given shall they be led, and no more be confounded at all. Lift up your hearts and be glad; your redemption draweth nigh. Fear not, little flock, the kingdom is yours until I come. Behold, I come quickly.

Now you see there are great promises given, but they are all based upon the statement made: “Keep all my commandments by which ye are bound.” Of course it is right to be careful as to what covenants you make. In my opinion there are no covenants that an individual can profitably make outside of the Covenants that are found in the gospel of Jesus Christ. For me to go elsewhere and make a covenant is to concede that they have something not found in the gospel of the Son of God. Those covenants that are found couched in the commandments of God are sufficient for me, and I believe are sufficient for every other soul. If not, then the gospel of Jesus Christ is not complete. It does not fit our demand; it does not meet our necessities. I, therefore, so long as I have faith in the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, shall be content with making the covenants that are found contained therein, making none other, pledging myself to no other government on earth than that which we are commanded to pledge ourselves to in the revelations of Jesus Christ. And especially would I not covenant with those that seem to be, even by inference, condemned, but never justified, in the revelations of God.

"Keep all the commandments and covenants by which ye are bound, . . . and Zion shall rejoice upon the hills, and flourish," and God will bestow upon her all that he has promised. There may be, possibly, some regulations necessary just at this time to prepare for our going back to the land of Zion; but I say this is the important one, this is the foundation, this is the basis: Purify yourselves by keeping the commandments of God which he has given, and by living holy lives before the Master.

I read again in section 45 of the Doctrine and Covenants:

Wherefore, I the Lord have said, Gather ye out from the eastern lands, assemble ye yourselves together ye elders of my church; go ye forth unto the western countries, call upon the inhabitants to repent, and inasmuch as they do repent, build up churches unto me; and with one heart and with one mind, gather up your riches that ye may purchase an inheritance which shall hereafter be appointed unto you, and it shall be called the New Jerusalem, a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the saints of the most high God; and the glory of the Lord shall be there, and the terror of the Lord also shall be there, insomuch that the wicked will not come unto it; and it shall be called Zion.

Now the wicked are not to come into that city; and it makes no difference whether the wicked are found among the Saints or somewhere else. We are commanded to build up churches, and they were in other times, wherever the people repented. And they were promised that at some future time, when this preliminary work, this prerequisite work shall be done, then Zion is to be redeemed and become the land of peace, the city of refuge for the people of God.

And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another. And it shall be said among the wicked, Let us not go up to battle against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible, wherefore we can not stand. And it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy.—Doctrine and Covenants 45:16, 14.

The righteous are going to be gathered. It is not a place to make people righteous; it is a place where the righteous shall be gathered together. We are to get pure first, and the pure in heart shall see God. Again, in the forty-ninth section, I read:

But before the great day of the Lord shall come, Jacob shall flourish in the wilderness; and the Lamanites shall blossom as the rose. Zion shall flourish upon the hills, [that means, you remember, that the pure in heart are to flourish upon the hills,) and rejoice upon the mountains, and shall be assembled together unto the place which I have appointed. Behold, I say unto you, Go forth as I have commanded you; repent of all your sins; ask and ye shall receive; knock and it shall be opened unto you: behold, I will go before you; and be your rearward; and I will be in your midst, and you shall not be confounded; behold I am Jesus Christ, and I come quickly.

All this, mark you, is based upon the command that we are to repent of all our sins, and then we are to receive whatsoever we ask, and Zion shall flourish and grow, and become great and mighty, and the temple of the Lord is to be built, and all the pure in heart are to assemble there, and God is to be with them, and the pure in heart shall see God. Not there only, perhaps; not speaking of this as indicating it as the only place to see God. But they will be in the presence of God, founded upon the conditions of obedience.

In the sixty-fourth section of the Doctrine and Covenants I read:

Behold, the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind; and the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days; and the rebellious shall be cut off out of the land of Zion, and shall be sent away, and shall not inherit the land.

There we are told who shall inherit: The willing and obedient—obedient to the commandments of God, as we have before learned. If so they shall inherit the land of Zion. But if they are not obedient, though they may gather there, they are to be sent out of the land of Zion, and shall be sent away and shall not inherit the land. Here the land is spoken of, and we are not to inherit unless we are obedient. Perhaps we would better be trying to become obedient to the commandments of God, and let these other things go as incidental to this.

As I said before this selfishness as to financial concerns has ruined our prospects numerous times, and it will do it again if we are not careful. I wish nobody any harm when I say, as I said awhile ago, that I want prices low, so men can buy and inherit, if it is possible for them to buy; and if it is not possible that they may be provided for according to the law of God. I wish nobody any harm, for if you are living in property, that property is worth just as much to you if it is worth but one half what it is now, that is, it will make you just as good a home, and you will enjoy it just as much. And if you have any property that you are holding because you want a bigger price from your brethren, because this is Zion, then you ought to lose it, and I shall not be sorry when you do.

And the rebellious shall be cut off out of the land of Zion, and shall be sent away, and shall not inherit the land; for verily, I say that the rebellious are not of the blood of Ephraim, wherefore they shall be plucked out. Behold, I, the Lord, have made my church in these last days, like unto a judge sitting on a hill, or in a high place, to judge the nations; for it shall come to pass, that the inhabitants of Zion shall judge all things pertaining to Zion; and liars, and hypocrites shall be proved by them, and they who are not apostles and prophets shall be known.

Zion has the high prerogative of judging the nations; but mark you we must be in a condition to judge rightly before we can exercise the prerogatives to which we are called. I refer here to the second chapter of Revelation where those judging the nations are spoken of in the language of John the Revelator—the language of Christ, rather, to the Revelator. He said:

And he that overcometh, and keepeth my commandments unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations: and he shall rule as judges of the nations, or judges of men. But govern them by faith, with equity and justice, as I received of my Father.

I fear, in our present condition, that this rendering of the scripture will be carried out, if we were placed as judges of the nations, or judges of men. But there is another translation, to my mind better than this, and we must arise to the conditions as spoken of there before we become judges in Zion. This says, "He shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers; even as I received of my Father."

The better translation is as follows:

And to him who overcometh, and keepeth my commandments unto the end, will I give power over many kingdoms; and he shall rule them with the word of God; and they shall be in his hand as the vessels of clay in the hands of a potter; and he shall govern them by faith, with equity and justice, even as I received of my Father.

We must get there; overcome first. That is the promise made to those who overcome. They become the pure in heart, and they are indeed Zion. When they shall have so far overcome that they are Zion, that they may be judges in the world, then they shall govern with faith, with equity, and justice. I like that translation. It appeals to me, and arouses all that is within me to try to emulate, or to try to be worthy of such a condition as that. And I like to see the people of God get where they can judge with faith, with equity and justice, and not be in a condition of wanting to tear down, and break, and in their selfishness prey upon each other. I have not said anybody did that, you know.

Again in section 68 I read:

And the inhabitants of Zion, also, shall remember their labors, inasmuch as they are appointed to labor, in all faithfulness; for the idler shall be had in remembrance before the Lord. Now, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with the inhabitants of Zion, for there are idlers among them; and their children are also growing up in wickedness; they also seek not earnestly the riches of eternity, but their eyes are full of greediness. These things ought not to be, and must be done away from among them; wherefore let my servant Oliver Cowdery carry these sayings unto the land of Zion. And a commandment I give unto them, that he that observeth not his prayers before the Lord in the season thereof, let him be had in remembrance before the judge of my people. These sayings are true and faithful; wherefore transgress them not, neither take therefrom. Behold, I am Alpha and Omega, and I come quickly.

You can not ignore these things and expect to inherit the land of Zion in peace, when it shall become a city of refuge unto the people of the Lord. Much as we revere our fathers, those who preceded us in this work, and much as we love the world that they did in righteousness, and are thankful to God that they handed it down to us, yet we are confronted with the statement that these men were not pure in heart altogether, but their eyes were full of greediness. And if you will read the history of the past you will see, as I have once before said, speculation entered into Independence and Kirtland and Far West and Nauvoo, and the result was disastrous. And the same cause will produce the same effect, I care not where applied. But, "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God," and to none others is the promise made.

Again, we are told in the very passage we read awhile ago, what the result will be if we gather to the land of Zion. We have had a foretaste of it to some extent in the years that are passed, and we ought to be warned. The people of God were driven. Notwithstanding they were, in our estimation, a better people than those who drove them, this did not justify them in their lack of preparation:

Nevertheless Zion shall escape if she observe to do all things whatsoever I have commanded her, but if she observe not to do whatsoever I have commanded her, I will visit her according to her works, with sore affliction.

There is the condition of not being prepared. While the condition of being prepared is that Zion shall flourish upon the hills, and rejoice upon the mountains, and the pure in heart shall behold the temples of their God, and God shall appear there, and Zion, or the pure in heart, shall see God. I am not afraid of the consequences if we pay particular attention to this one thought of being prepared, of making ourselves Zion wherever we are—pure in heart; and then the rest will be provided for; the rest will come in its time.

Send forth the elders of my church unto the nations which are afar off; unto the islands of the sea; send forth unto foreign lands; call upon all nations; firstly, upon the Gentiles, and then upon the Jews. And, behold, and lo, this shall be their cry, and the voice of the Lord unto all people: Go ye forth unto the land of Zion, that the borders of my people may be enlarged, and that her stakes may be strengthened, and that Zion may go forth unto the regions round about; yea, let the cry go forth among all people: Awake and arise and go forth to meet the Bridegroom. Behold, and lo, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. Prepare yourselves for the great day of the Lord. Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour. Let them, therefore, who are among the Gentiles, flee unto Zion. And let them who be of Judah, flee unto Jerusalem, unto the mountains of the Lord's house. Go ye out from among the nations, even from Babylon, from the midst of wickedness, which is spiritual Babylon. But verily thus saith the Lord, let not your flight be in haste, but let all things be prepared before you; and he that goeth, let him not look back, lest sudden destruction shall come upon him.

What does that mean? Why, we are to gather together; but "let all things be prepared before you." And what are these? Simply the minding and arranging of our temporal affairs? That is all right as an incidental; but the proper preparation to be made before we gather together is the preparation of ourselves. "The pure in heart shall see God," and shall inherit the land of Zion.

Then let our purity be the crowning work of our lives, and the first and most important thing we do, being honest, virtuous, sober, upright, holy in our conversation, and in our walk before God, and Zion will take care of itself. We need not be uneasy about that.

We get to worrying sometimes about Zion being redeemed in this generation, and the temple of God being built within the appointed time. I am not afraid but that it will be built in a very short time, if we get to be Zion. There is no need for a house in which the Lord may meet a people that does not exist; there is no occasion for it. Until there is Zion in the world—the pure in heart—temples are not needed. The land of Zion is no better than other lands until it is made so by the inheritance thereof by the pure in heart—being Zion in the true sense of the word.

Now, of course all the ordinances and blessings pertaining to the gospel of Jesus Christ come into this subject. It reminds me of the opinions of a very intelligent man in the past, a skeptic. Reading the language of our text, with other of the beatitudes, he said one time in one of his lectures: "Blessed are the pure in heart." I like that. That is all right. That looks like if there is inspiration anywhere it will be found in that. I indorse that." When he read in connection with it: "Except a man be born again he can not see the kingdom of God," he said, "I don't like that. There is no philosophy and no sense in that." Yet, if he had seen far enough he would have known they were both the same thing. "Blessed are the pure in heart" is the same idea as being born again. Why? You see a man that is selfish and immoral in character, and has no desire for anything that is pure and holy and good; he suddenly turns and becomes interested in that which is pure and virtuous and good and holy: you look at him in amazement, and you say, "He is not the same man that he was." What is the matter? He has a new conception of life; that is the reason. And he is born, and he becomes pure in heart. He is another man. A new conception has taken place; a new birth. So we see that being born again and being pure in heart mean the same thing.

Now, when we are talking about the pure in heart, all things contained in the gospel of Jesus Christ and the commandments of God fit in nicely with that; and that is the chief and great duty that belongs to the people of God to do. If you want to see Zion redeemed and flourish upon the hills, become pure, become unselfish so far as your desire to prey upon each other is concerned; selfish, if it may be called so, in the sense that you want to purify self. That is your interest. It is all right to look after individual interest; but that is your interest. That is the main interest, and basic principle. Society is divided on wrong lines to-day. Men are placed in the higher classes of society who have the most money; and those that are poor are the lower classes. But that is not right. The division is going to be made differently sometime, and society is going to be rearranged, when there will be a basis upon which men will be judged, when righteousness and holiness and purity will be the division that God will make, and the higher classes will be the pure in heart, and the lower classes will be those who are corrupt. No matter if they have their millions they will go down when the scales are in God's hands to judge whatever appeareth, and to hold the balance where honest divisions are made.

We must place ourselves with the higher classes of society in the sense in which God looks upon society, being pure in heart, holy, righteous, honest, and frank in all our dealings with God and with humanity, and especially with ourselves; and may God help us that we may be among that happy number who are spoken of in the language of our text: "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God."
There have been many plans invented to bring about a proper equality among men, but all have failed in some particular, and many have failed absolutely. But for the purposes of this writing I will allude to but one of these, that is of the people in Kirtland in 1830 who had established an order called "all things common." (Church History, vol. 1, p. 152.) And on page 169 of the same volume is this statement of the Prophet: "The plan of 'common stock,' which had existed in what was called 'the family,' whose members generally had embraced the everlasting gospel, was readily abandoned for the more perfect law of the Lord."

This more perfect law of the Lord is referred to in sections 36 and 38 of the Doctrine and Covenants preceding the date of this statement, and shortly after this on February 4, 1831, section 41 was received promising that a law should be given to the Saints "that ye may know how to govern my church, and have all things right before me." In this revelation a bishop is called and commanded "to spend all his time in the labors of the church; to see to all things as it shall be appointed unto him in my laws, in the day that I shall give them." And on February 9 section 42 was received; and I refer to this section because of its being so closely connected with the times of the Kirtland "all things common" society, and also as being one of the "more perfect laws" to govern the church in earthly matters, and more particularly because the Lord informed us in 1894 in section 122, that "the law given to the church in section forty-two . . . is as if it were given to-day; and the bishop and his counselors, and the high council, and the bishop and his council, and the storehouse and the temple and the salvation of my people, are the same to me now that they were to me in that day when I gave the revelation."

And as in section 41 a bishop was called, so in section 42 we are informed that we must consecrate of our properties for the support of the poor with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken, and they shall be laid before the bishop and his two counselors, then "every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family." In this we are told that every man is to be made accountable to Jesus for the manner in which he uses or improves upon his stewardship, not to the bishopric, nor to the high council, nor to the twelve, although these may have some advisory privileges in the matter, but the man's stewardship is his own, and he is to be accountable to God for it, his individuality and responsibility and accountability are not to be taken from him (as Satan wished to do in the beginning); but Jesus being unchangeable says to us as he did to Adam in the garden, "but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; nevertheless, thou mayest choose for thyself, for it is given unto thee." (Genesis 2:20, I. T.) And to us he says, "every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property." And the people of God are to see that his law is kept, for he says, "These words are given unto you, and they are pure before me; wherefore, beware how you hold them, for they are to be answered upon your souls in the day of judgment. Even so. Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 41:3. Is it any wonder that the servant of the Lord said that the plan of "all things common" must be abandoned for the "more perfect law of the Lord"?

And in answering the question which forms the heading of this writing we may be assisted by first considering what officers are to direct in that work, and how they are to be directed; we therefore read:

And when you have finished the translation of the prophets, you shall from henceforth preside over the affairs of the church and the school; and from time to time, as shall be manifest by the Comforter, receive revelations to unfold the mysteries of the kingdom, and set in order the churches.—Doctrine and Covenants 87:5.

The burden of the care of the church is laid on him who is called to preside over the high priesthood of the church, and on those who are called to be his counselors; and they shall teach according to the spirit of wisdom and understanding, and as they shall be directed by revelation, from time to time.—Doctrine and Covenants 122:2.

These directions, given formerly in 1833 and latterly in 1894, are the same in principle, and are not the only ones teaching these things. Hence the care of the whole church is laid upon the Presidency; and, these having the watchcare over all the church, there must be some means provided by which they can properly teach and direct in its affairs—some­where in which they may speak ex cathedra, and in which the officers of the church may be properly instructed by them in the performance of all their duties throughout the whole church. Now let us read again:

The order of the house prepared for the presidency of the school of the prophets, established for their instruction in all things that are expedient for them, even for all the officers of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 85:30.

As also through your administration the keys of the school of the prophets, which I have commanded to be organized, that thereby they may be perfected in their ministry for the salvation of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 87:3.

Until my people shall hear and heed those who are set in the church to teach the revelations there will be misunderstanding and confusion among the members.—Doctrine and Covenants 122:1.

They [the branches and districts of which the church is composed] shall take the things which have been given unto them as my law to the church, to be my law to govern my church. . . . If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect those officers; and if they do not, they can not expect the riches of gifts and the blessings of direction.—Doctrine and Covenants 125:14.

Will we respect those officers whom God has set in the church to teach the revelations in the school which he has commanded to be organized for the purpose of instructing all the officers of the church? And if we do not, can we expect the riches of gifts and the blessings of direction by him whom God has set in the church to teach all the officers of the church from on high when needed? Will we take the things which God has given unto us as his law to govern his church, this law or command to organize this school as well as others? Or shall we continue to exist with misunderstanding and confusion among us, especially in reference to the salvation of Zion in temporal things?

We may conclude therefore from the word of the Lord, that this school is designed of God in which the Presidency should prepare ALL the officers of the church, without any exception, for all their duties by instructing them in all things pertaining to their office work.

And the "more perfect law of the Lord" in temporal things, which is superior to the plan of "all things common," is now of sufficient importance to engage the attention of the officers of the church; and in that grand school—if sufficient is not written to make the matters plain to all, that all may be agreed upon whatever law may be under consideration—then the president may receive instruction from on high, and light and knowledge be received by all in the school, and they impart it to all the officers previously instructed in all things pertaining to their office work.

We are also informed that the Twelve "form a quorum equal in authority and power to the three presidents previously mentioned." (Doctrine and Covenants 104:11.) And as section 114 is still in force, the Twelve are to take measures in connection with the Bishop, to execute the law of tithing; and this warning still attaches to them: "As I live, saith the Lord, in the manner ye execute this matter, so shall ye be judged in the day of judgment."—Doctrine and Covenants 114:2. How like the warning of the Lord, previous to this time, concerning these same matters!

These words are given unto you, and they are pure before me; wherefore, beware how you hold them, for they are to be answered upon your souls in the day of judgment. Even so. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 41:3.

And in section 122, paragraph 6, we are informed that the Presidency and the Twelve, with others, are to have some voice in the matter of purchasing lands, building houses of worship, building up the New Jerusalem, and the gathering of the people. These, all of which have to do with the redemption of Zion, and with executing the law of tithing in connection with the bishop, place a very grave responsibility upon them for which they must answer at the day of judgment as to how they have acquitted themselves in these matters.

"The application of the law [in regard to the gathering, the law of tithing and consecration] as stated by the Bishopric should be acceded to," is the word of the Lord. Where shall the Presidency and Twelve be heard? How are they going to acquit themselves at the day of judgment? How are they going to assist the bishop in executing the law of tithing, building up Zion, and gathering the people? Evidently in that school designed by the Master for the purpose of instructing us all in our duties and to teach one another words of wisdom. And there the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric shall give instruction in all the affairs of the church for the salvation and redemption of Zion; and there the mysteries of the kingdom will be unfolded, which appertain to earthly matters as well as to spiritual things. In Doctrine and Covenants 42:8 we are told that the consecrations for the poor are to be laid before the bishop and his two counselors. And "the office of a bishop is in administering all temporal things." (Doctrine and Covenants 104:32.) And also that "unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to," (Doctrine and Covenants 126:10.) And he is "to divide the saints their inheritance." (Doctrine and Covenants 57:3.) (See also Doctrine and Covenants 58:4.) And as the Twelve are not to be burdened with the duty of looking after the disbursements of the money of the treasury, or the management of the properties of the church, this portion of the burden evidently rests upon the Bishopric; and in all their multitudinous duties in the church, in their own right of office work, as well as in connection with the Presidency, with the Twelve, and with the officers and all the membership of the church, where shall they receive direction and instruction? Evidently in that school designed of God, and which he commanded to be organized for the instruction of all the officers, where direction from on high may be received through the only one whom God has appointed to receive revelations to govern the church. For in that school the president may receive revelations to unfold the mysteries of the kingdom.

Therefore these three quorums are the ones to direct in Zion's redemption, and they are to receive direction in the school of the apostles, or the school of the prophets, in which they may receive instruction from the Lord. For, there, direction may be received on high. There, all the officers may learn how to govern the church, so that all things may be done right before the Lord, and all teach and act correctly for the salvation of Zion in earthly affairs as well as in spiritual things. There the tithing, surplus, consecrations, and stewardships about which there are so many conflicting opinions now, will be so plainly shown forth that all will know the truth concerning them, and all be perfectly agreed to the more perfect law of the Lord.
And the teachings of that school would be almost, if not quite, as reliable as the revelations, which in fact might accompany its instruction; and is the only method of which God has informed us, by which all the officers of the church can be properly instructed.

And thus the redemption of Zion shall be brought about when all the watchmen shall see eye to eye, each one doing his own part in that great work, and all agreed upon it, and thus all helping onward in that work, having been instructed in that school. Shall we have such a school organized for these various purposes?

May God's blessings rest upon all latter-day Israel.

MORE ABOUT TEMPORALITIES.

It is with a deep interest I have been reading the very instructive articles of my brethren on temporalities. Some very practical suggestions have already been given. And I for one am anxious to go further along these lines; no doubt many others will be eagerly waiting for more of the same kind of food. We have not had very much of such food, but the recent economic and civic examinations and disclosures have prepared the mind for just such a diet. And it is truly a very momentous question. And while the world is clamoring for salvation from evils of the present economic system, and is looking for a more equitable way of distributing earth's bounties, we as a church entertain a hope,—a hope not born of the recent general outcry, but fundamental in our early organization,—and that hope seems nearer a realization now than ever before.

That long-looked-for "gathering" and the "redemption of Zion," is not so far removed, notwithstanding all the difficulties yet in the way. The gathering is not such a perplexing problem, as nearly all of our membership are able or can in some way secure the means to move to the promised land, or its borders. But what are they to do when they do come? is the all-important question. Now do not think for a moment that I am going to tell you just how it is all going to be done, how the perplexing problems of "labor" and "capital" are to be solved, and a just and equitable distribution of the products of labor and the bounties of earth brought about, all of which, and more, is contemplated in the gathering and redemption of Zion. No, I am not wise enough for that.

When the above is accomplished it will be the result of having adopted a better system than the human mind has yet invented. That God proposes to accomplish the salvation of his people, not only spiritually but temporally, is quite evident from his word; and the means by which he proposes to do it is through the organization called "church" or "kingdom," which is made up of two divisions, the spiritual and the temporal. The spiritual is the motive power, the temporal is the machinery part. God, the great architect, has designed a perfect machine and it will do the work when it shall have been properly adjusted and cared for. God has been saying all these many years, Oil up, put the machinery in condition, for I am waiting to turn on the power.

"Yes," says one, "it is the Lord's work, and there is no use bothering about it." It is the Lord's work. God says he proposes to do a "marvelous work"; but he has been and is making demands on humanity.

Christ's mission was to save the world; but that salvation is on condition of his acceptance. Now do you think that our temporal salvation is any different from our spiritual, as regards the part God does, and the part humanity is to do?

I know we sometimes hear it sung: "He paid the debt, and made me free," suggestive of the thought that there is nothing for us as individuals to do. But I am not prepared to accept that thought, because having learned something about what is required to become a citizen of his kingdom, I find there is a work for each and every one to do. In the consideration of the part each individual has to do in this regard, it might be well to restate some of the fundamental principles as recorded in the gospel law, as touching on temporalities, and defining each man's individual rights, sometimes called natural rights.

1. We have a natural right to live. The law says, "Thou shall not kill." Why? Because not being responsible for our having been born, God designed that no man should have the right to take another man's life.

2. Each individual has a natural and equal right to the means of preserving life, which includes or is represented by food, clothing, and shelter.

3. A natural and equal right to the source from which food, clothing, and shelter are obtained. Now the reasoning upon these last two principles is this: Justice is an attribute of God; therefore if God should have intended that some few should be favored with a greater claim on what he himself had created to sustain and perpetuate life, then he would be unjust.

"God is no respecter of persons," the record says. Then as to the second proposition, how is the individual going to obtain the necessities of life, if a favored few shall have bought up the sources from which these things are obtained, and the man who needs shall be refused his natural rights to obtain them. Again the record speaks, "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof." The Psalmist has sung, "In his hand are the deep places of the earth: ... the sea is his, for he made it: and his hands formed the dry land." Did God create the earth and instill into it that life-giving property which

when moistened by the dews of heaven, should produce
"plenty and to spare," and intend that in after-years thousands of his creatures should starve and freeze for the want of a just and equitable share of that "abundance" which should be held in a tantalizing manner before them by a few upon the false premise that they had the individual right to own the source of production (land), and collect a tax or profit off of the other fellow's labor? Is it surprising then that the command should come, (Doctrines and Covenants 63:8,) "Purchase the land"?

Was it because he had sold out? No; on the contrary he proceeds to assure us that while under existing circumstances it is wisdom to do so, "nevertheless the land is in his hands." It is a pity our people are so slow to take the steps nearest them in this regard,—the observance of "tithes and consecra-tions," a glorious starting to get right, as by carrying out such commandments it would place in the Bishop's hands the means whereby he might not only help the poor, but help them to help themselves, which is far the more noble. When the causes which produce extreme poverty are supplanted by principles of equity and justice, then there will be no extremely poor to ask alms. The poor, as a class, are not asking for charity, but for a fair chance to produce for themselves. I imagine the Almighty looks with a good deal of scornful amusement on the much-lauded donations and gifts to the poor by our Rockefellers, Vanderbilts, and Carnegies, knowing as he does by whom the wealth was produced.

Now in closing: This question of our every-day business relations is one that should concern every one of us. If Zion can be redeemed and the city built up and her inhabitants prosper and attain to "equality in temporal and spiritual things," as the record says they should, by employing the generally accepted rules practiced by the business world to-day which recognizes that the taking of interest, profits, and rent is a legitimate and righteous act, then we have not so very much to learn; but if we find that it is necessary to unlearn much of what our most successful modern financiers have taught us, and take up a study of these principles, and measure them by the word of truth, then we may find we have a good deal to learn about them.

Ever praying for the prosperity of Zion, and ever anxious to learn to do my duty, I am,
Your brother in the faith,
C. W. BULLARD.

Mothers' Home Column
EDITED BY FRANCES.

The Children's Home.

We wish to call the attention of the Saints everywhere to the following letter of Bishop Kelley, from which it will be seen that the work of the Daughters of Zion relative to a home for needy children has the approval and hearty cooperation of the Bishop of the church; so that none need hesitate to help them in that work, fearing it may be out of harmony with those who have oversight of such matters.

Some may say, We are willing to contribute to provide a home for children; but we can send our money direct to the Bishop just as well as to send it through the Daughters of Zion. But you must not forget that those who are working for any purpose can work the better the more encouragement they receive; so by sending your money through the Daughters of Zion, you may encourage them to greater effort, and thus your money would accomplish greater good.

Please take note of the Bishop's admonition to "be forward in making preparation for the destitute, homeless, friendless little folks," and send in your contributions generously for that purpose.

I have in my possession now a letter from a sister who said that she had traveled six months with her husband in his missionary field, and during that time she had met with not than twenty children who would have been benefited by some such institution. If such conditions prevail in one district they surely prevail to a greater or less extent in others, and we can readily see what a benefit the fostering care of the church would be to such children.

Let us not neglect the children and lose them to the church.
Send all money to Mrs. D. F. Nicholson, Lamoni, Iowa,
MRS. B. C. SMITH, President, Daughters of Zion.

"MRS. B. C. SMITH, President, Daughters of Zion, INDEPENDENCE, Missouri.

"Dear Sister: Replying to your inquiry as to the attitude of the Bishopric towards the efforts of the Daughters of Zion in raising a fund in the interest of a children's home, I am pleased to be able to state, that your work in this has been with our heartly approval and commendation.

"The past year owing to meeting the demands of what, at the time, was more pressing work, we advised that the work in behalf of the children's home be presented simply in a quiet way, but now we have already arranged for the additional room necessary to further accommodate the old people who are greatly needing the benefits of a home, and nothing should now take precedence of the work of furnishing an appropriate orphange, or industrial home for needy children.

"Such a work is in direct line with 'laying the foundation of Zion' and helping her children, and those who are laboring to accomplish such necessary work are moving in harmony with the Lord's commandments and should receive the hearty support of the benevolent and good everywhere.

"Due provision has been made for the aged and helpless; ample facilities are being completed for the proper training and education of young men and women who will improve the opportunities so afforded; and why should we not all be forward in making preparation for the destitute, homeless, friendless little folks? I trust and pray that the admonition given by the apostle to the early saints may be made the crowning motto of the Saints of the present age, to be 'prepared unto every good work.' The Lord will bless the helpers.

"Very respectfully,

Keep the Child-Heart.

Children are pleased with little things. Grown-up people may be dissatisfied and capricious because their plans go wrong, but children live in a beautiful land where grains of yellow sand are better than golden coins, and flowers in a daisied meadow are worth more than the treasures men most prize. Blessed beyond all others are the men and women who keep to the end of life the sweet and trustful spirit of childhood.

Jesus once said to his disciples, "The kingdom of heaven is within you." I think we do not understand this fully until life has taught us some of its lessons. But let me explain to young people that they have only to remember certain days when they were out of tune with every one, and certain other days when their aim was to make every one happy, to know precisely what our Savior meant.

"Jesus loves me, this I know, For the Bible tells me so."

The consciousness of belonging to Jesus brings heaven into every heart.

To go a step farther. Suppose that day by day we stop at intervals, and send a prayer up to the Lord for heavenly calm amid agitations. You and I might say, "What would Jesus do if he were here? What would he wish me to do, to be?" Younger or older, let us be as children in his service.

Jesus is still extending his arms to encircle you. He still says, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

And still the most blessed of all people, even if they have silver hair, are those who have kept the child-heart in touch with Jesus, through the years.

Here is another thought for you: Jesus blessed each little child. He does not look at you as if you were a stranger. He knows who you are and where you live, and what your name is. When you have had a hard time over your lessons, and have been discouraged, it is worth while to tell him. When you have made a mistake, when you have had a disappointment, tell Jesus. The greatest wisdom in the world is to tell Jesus everything.—From That Sweet Story of Old.

The Value of Enthusiasm.

Unless there is a reserve of enthusiasm stored on the hills the humblest wheel can not be driven in the valley. He who contributes just this one rare thing—self-sacrificing devotion—to his cause has done his part. Six hundred English dragoons once received a foolish order and rode to their deaths like heroes. "Magnificent," said a French general, "but not war." It was magnificent, and perhaps it was war; for it fired the imagination of England and raised the standard of duty for a century. . . . One who can plan is good; far better is the man who can stimulate. . . . History affords at every turn some impregnable fortress that was a despair of the wise and prudent, but was carried by some enthusiast with a rush. He cast his reputation, his life, his all into the breach, and his body made the bridge over which the race has entered into its heritage.—Ian Maclaren.

Prayer Union.

Sr. Marian Woodstock, Lima Center, Wisconsin, asks the earnest prayers of the Prayer Union and all Saints for her husband, Bro. Willard Woodstock, who is very sick.

Sr. Mary A. Ferguson requests the prayers of the Prayer Union, that she may be healed of a pain in her head—brain trouble.

Sr. Julia Coonce desires the prayers of the Saints for the healing of her body, and that her prejudiced husband may be enlightened concerning the true gospel.

Bro. H. A. Brintnell, Turner, Michigan, desires prayers that his faith may be strengthened, and that he may be relieved of heart and stomach trouble.

Dear Herald: I just closed a meeting in a new place; large crowds, and the most eager listeners I ever witnessed in all of my missionary work. Holiness people and True Followers in here. True Followers can speak in tongues anywhere and as often as they want to. I have shown their origin in two school-houses. It seems this missionary trip has been to answer Utahism, True Followers, and Holiness people. Oh, the deceptive spirits in the world to lead people astray! Bro. Rushton's letter, Bro. T. W. Williams', and a late editorial strike the keynote. Come again, brethren. We want more like it. I am as busy as I can be in my line of work. We can not fill half of the calls for preaching.

One of the True Followers picked up a copperhead snake in this neighborhood, and it bit him, and he came very near dying. It is a false spirit that leads people to do such things. One of the sisters of the True Followers had the gift of tongues telling a fourteen-year-old girl to marry a man old enough to be her grandfather.

At the close of my meeting an outsider took up a collection that was a help financially.

F. C. KECK.

CHEROKEE, Iowa, January 21, 1906.

Dear Herald: For about three years we had the use of the Swedes' church; but for some cause we know not, they made up their minds not to let us have it longer. It seemed very dark at first, for we knew not what to do. We fasted and prayed that the Father of life and light would give us light and wisdom to know what to do; and we all verily believe he did. The old soldiers were glad to let us have the Grand Army Hall. I believe the Lord had their hearts prepared to let us have the hall; and I also believe it was for us to make the change, for we have a better place, better location, and our congregation is much larger.

I want to say to our missionaries that we have a place in which we can have meetings every time any of them come, and it will not cost us any more. We pay five dollars a month. We would be very glad to have quarterly conference here sometime in the near future.

Dear Saints, I fear there will be too many in the day of Christ's appearing who have been just a little ashamed of being called Saints. Do not be ashamed of anything that the Lord is not ashamed of; but be ashamed because we have been blow to tell the world we are Latter Day Saints.

I will relate a dream I had just before Christmas. I seemed to be in a large room something like an opera-house. There seemed to be a very large crowd of people before me and I was preaching to them on the restoration of the gospel, telling them of the light and beauty there was in it. A personage appeared from the rear, came forward, and stood a little way from me; but she was facing the people and was dressed in black, not a ray of light on her. I called the people's attention to her, and I told them she represented the Baptist Church, but the light she was facing the people and was dressed in black, not a ray of light on her. I called the people's attention to her, and I told them that was the Catholic Church, and the Lord would never accept her, for she had no light. She then went back. I kept on talking, telling how Christ organized his church, and another personage came dressed in black, with a white star on her breast. I called attention to her, saying this was the Lutheran Church, and God would never accept her, for her light was not sufficient. She turned back, and there came another, dressed just the same only a little more light. This was the Methodist Church. She did not have the light, and the Lord would not claim her as his when he came. After she went back another appeared dressed the same, but with a little more light. I told them she represented the Baptist Church, but the light was not yet sufficient. She turned back, and still another appeared, black like the rest of them, only a little more light. I told the people she was the Christian Church, and God would never own her, for the light was still lacking; he would never accept her as his bride. She went back. Then I commenced telling the people about the coming forth of our church; and as I mentioned the year 1839 there began to come a light as though it was shining over a curtain, and there appeared my youngest daughter, singing, Hosannah! Hosannah! in the highest. A band of angels was helping her. They could not be seen, but such sweet singing I never heard before. My daughter was dressed in pure white, and her countenance was so bright and beautiful that words can not describe. She came forward and stood where the others had stood. She had a beautiful crown on her head, and on it were twelve stars, representing the twelve apostles; and just above the twelve was one bright star, representing the prophet, Joseph the Martyr; and all over her breast were bright stars representing the different officers of the church. I called attention to her and told them there was the church Christ would own as his, for she had the light; she is the bride, the Lamb’s wife. Then she went back, but the light still remained. The people all seemed to be interested. As I talked to them Bro. Joseph appeared dressed in pure white. He looked very happy as he stood there, but did not utter a word. He turned and went away, but the light still remained, and then I awoke.

My prayer is that we may all live so near to God that we may be as bright and as beautiful as our church was represented in my dream.

A. R. CRIPPEN.

Akin, Illinois, January 22, 1906.

Saints' Herald: I have been holding forth at the Parriah Branch for the last three weeks. The roads are very muddy; but I am told by the Saints, “You have the largest crowds that have attended for a few years.” I have preached eighteen times. Two parties have asked me to get them the Book of Mormon. We believe good will result.

I also did quite a lot of preaching at Akin, four miles from Parriah church. The Campbellites and Missionary Baptists, who were by the ears, so much so that the Campbellites would not allow the Baptists to occupy in their holy temple, have become warm friends. While the Baptists have found the man, the Campbellites have volunteered the use of their church for a discussion with Latter Day Saints. The man chosen by the Baptists is the Reverend W. P. Throgmorton, of Marion, Illinois. They are doing a lot of twisting by asking us to affirm what we do not believe.

Mr. Throgmorton says to his brethren, “Do you really want a debate in Akin with the Mormons? If so, all right; but do not have one just to give them a chance to advertise themselves. Some men will take a licking just to have it said they have been in a debate.”

We wonder if that is why Reverend Throgmorton debated with Bro. I. M. Smith. He should first prove he can give us the licking, before he crow too loudly, for they nearly all say he failed before. And if he should sign fair propositions and fail again, he would come under the head of those who with shame take the lowest seat. Their method seems to be: anything to lick the Saints. If our people can’t do it, we will give the use of our church, and perhaps your people can. If we can’t do it fair, we will use cunning means and trap them, by getting them to affirm what they don’t believe. And if we fail we will say we licked them anyway. But some few are finding the narrow way, and God’s work is moving slowly but surely.

DAVID SMITH.

CONDON, Oregon, January 23, 1906.

Editors Herald: Seeing so many well-written articles in your pages, we wish to say to the writers of them, as well as other readers, that many of us away in this remote western country appreciate the spiritual feast enjoyed while we read.

The article in HERALD for January 17, 1906, by Bro. J. W. Gilbert, revives dormant feelings; for your writer firmly believes with the article in question that now is the time.

And would it not be a step in the right direction, carrying with it a mighty influence, to see the headquarters of the bride, located in the same city, the city of Zion, the place where God has said the temple shall be built in this generation, wherein the Bridegroom may find a resting-place? Surely this would be one great step toward gathering.

A gloom was cast over us on the 20th by the death of the baby son of Bro. and Sr. Vanderflugt; funeral-services from the Saints’ church; sermon by the writer. And while we seemingly are never ready to part with our loved ones, yet it is good to have learned that if we who are old continue faithful to the commandments of God, again we may meet those gone before where time shall not dictate how long they may be with us.

As a branch, we are enjoying a season of peace, the faithful coming out when sickness, or other things over which they have no power, does not hinder; and, best of all, are bringing the Spirit of the Master with them. May such continue until the “righteous can say, oh, our warfare is over.”

Your brother in hope,

W. A. GOODWIN.

112 South Seventeenth Street, St. Joseph, Missouri, January 24, 1906.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I have seen anything in the HERALD from St. Joseph. Though silent, not all are asleep. Our general roll-call on the first Sunday evening of the new year was quite interesting, and proved to be beneficial to the visiting officers of the branch, and by its being so largely attended we learned that a goodly number more could attend services than usually do. There were present to answer to their names something over two hundred; and we also learned that out of a membership of about six hundred, there are between three and four hundred living in St. Joseph and suburbs, and that eighty-seven are known to be living in other cities and States. The whereabouts of the remainder are unknown to the St. Joseph Branch. So by the roll-call we have learned very nearly what our numbers are in the city. Last summer I wrote to the Ensign stating what the enrollment on the branch records were, and what the average attendance at the services was, and I wondered what the others were doing, and if the Master should come to St. Joseph what would the conditions be. Exceptions were taken to my statements and published in a letter in the Ensign, and it was said that I did not represent things as they were. It will be remembered by those who read my letter in the Ensign that I only stated what the enrollment was, and stated the average attendance at the services, and wondered what the rest were doing. I did not even indicate that the six hundred all lived in St. Joseph. And when I wrote a short reply to objections referred to, it was not published in the Ensign, and it appears that I am shut out of the paper whose creed is “All Truth.” My only object in stating conditions as I found them in regard to the attendance at the meetings was that those who read the Ensign, and did not attend the services, might know that I was a missionary, and in charge of the work here, and might realize that I was taking cognizance of the small attendance out of so large a membership. And I thought it might be the means of causing others to look at the situation and awake and put forth an effort to assist in the work and meet with the faithful few.

Well, I am pleased to say that the brethren and sisters are doing some very commendable work in repairing the basement of the church. They have changed the stairway and painted the room a clear white, with light green finish, the furnace-room being a darker color; and it makes the room much lighter. They also removed those large, unsightly wood pillar-poles and put in iron ones, which adds much to the looks as well as to the Ministers, then will those officers set in the church be useful and he who gave the law be honored; the differences between the quorums be healed, confidence be restored, and good will and peace come to the people as a cherishing fountain."

This has been accepted as a law to govern the church. Then why not follow to the very letter that "peace and good will may come to the people"? In section 41, paragraph 2, the elders are commanded to see that the law is kept; and it seems to me that the best way for them to see that the law is kept, is to keep it themselves. As I see it the order is somewhat reversed; for there are seventies presiding over branches and districts, and high priests doing general missionary work. Now, why not follow the law and set high priests and elders over branches and districts where these organizations have been effected,—especially high priests? Then if there is a surplus over and above those needed for this work, appoint them as missionaries if they are in condition for that work. In section 120, paragraph 2, we read: "If a branch, or district be large he who is chosen to preside should be an high priest, if there be one possessed of the spirit of wisdom to administer in the office of president; or if an elder be chosen who may by experience be found qualified to preside, as soon as practicable thereafter he should be ordained an high priest by the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the one ordaining, and by direction of a high council, or general conference, as required in the law."

To sum up, then, I believe that the appointing powers, the Presidency and Twelve, have the right to appoint high priests in charge of large branches and districts; and when so appointed they should be sustained by those branches and districts; and I believe also that they would be sustained. Confidence would be begotten, and peace and good will would come to the church. Why not try it?

Still in hope,

E. A. Steedman.

Editors Herald: I desire to say to those who contributed to the Christmas offering for the Scandinavian mission, that word has been received from Bro. Anderson that the money sent has been duly received, and as Bro. Anderson remarks, "It was a pleasant surprise." In closing his letter he states: "I wish more would do that way; the work would roll on and the labor some laborers on the outskirts be encouraged." Think of this, Saints, you who have the means to assist in rolling forth this work. God has placed that responsibility upon you, and to you has intrusted that part of his work.

I am pleased to state that the personal appeal which I made to some of the Scandinavian Saints with whom I am acquainted was responded to by most of them very generously, and, on behalf of the workers in that field, I thank you all for the offering, and hope that you may see the necessity of a repetition of such offerings until the work there is firmly established; and that others who are not now in a condition to help will not forget that the opportunities are still open.

During my travels there last summer it was plainly manifest that there was only one class from whom the missionaries could expect any favors, and they were the ones who "can't do" if they could, but were too poor. As I looked at the existing conditions there in religious lines, and the attitude of the people toward the established religion of that country—the Lutheran—it is equally plain that if properly worked, and the workers properly sustained financially, that Scandinavia offers the church one of the best fields for making converts that the church has at the present time. But it will require a great deal of sacrifice on the part of both the missionaries and their financial supporters, and the question naturally arises, Will it pay? This may never be fully answered till eternity shall reveal it, or the welcome plaudit be heard, Thou good and faithful servant, thou hast borne the burden and heat of the day, thou hast toiled and labored and sacrificed for my work, and now enter thou into the joy of thy Lord,

S. K. Sorensen.

Editors Herald: My heart was made to rejoice that I had the privilege of being at the district conference held at Chicago, and meeting with God's people, whom I found to be a band of noble Saints. The preaching filled my hungry soul with that which I am always seeking after.

I am made many times to rejoice by the spirit of the Master; and I hope and pray that all who do not know of the true gospel will have the chance to know. I realize that if the Master should come while this world is in the condition it is today, many would be cut off. Let us all strive to come up higher, and have brotherly love for each other, and for all of those poor mortals who have been blinded by the precepts of men, and know not the true gospel of our God and Savior.

Your brother in bonds,

Z. M. Santee.

Editors Herald: I wish one of God's Saints to stand up and ask for everybody to stand up that was saved; and if there were a liar in the crowd, for if we were saved we were saved, and why did we not stand up? I wish one of God's Saints could come to Berkley and tell my friend the difference.

Editors Herald: I have been operating in this city for the last two Sundays, and will occupy again to-night. I expect the debate in which I have been one of the disputants, but I have already contributed some information to you respecting the arrangements for the same, which, together with the fact that there are no Saints here much accustomed to corresponding, impels me to shoulder the responsibility myself.

The debate began last Tuesday evening, the 16th, as stated in my former letter. Elder J. L. Mortimer had arrived on the 11th from Alberta, indirectly, and stood at my back as an old tiger, in much prayer and fasting. On Sunday last in our prayer-service the voice of the Master was that if the Saints would uphold me with their prayers and I would be humble, I should defeat "the great, the mighty, and the wise." I tried hard to humble myself, to get at the very foot of the cross, and I fully believe the Saints complied with the admonition to them; for, to their satisfaction, as also that of a large majority of the audience, the promise of the Lord was verified. This is evident in that Mr. Sinnett refused or objected on the majority of the audience, the promise of the Lord was verified. This is evident in that Mr. Sinnett refused or objected on the question of time until we, too, as the Psalmist has said, "shall go the way of all the earth." I sincerely trust that when our change shall come we will be as well prepared to meet it as was our dear brother.

Editors Herald: It is not my pleasure to write about a debate in which I have been one of the disputants, but I have already contributed some information to you respecting the arrangements for the same, which, together with the fact that there are no Saints here much accustomed to corresponding, impels me to shoulder the responsibility myself.

He said he never knew of its being superior and like a man who is used to commanding and being obeyed. He doubtless thought he had an easy prey from the many victories I dare say he has had in his bouts with the Protestants.

I must acknowledge that our contract on the 14th, when he came into my meeting, was not perfected. I had just received word of father’s death and preached a sermon when it was arranged. Time and stationery were both insufficient to execute it with that comprehensiveness and definiteness that would leave no room for one disposed to be ready for any advantage that Jesuitical equivocation, twisting, and turning would bring him. Of course where he was uncommitted I was equally uncommitted.

Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday nights we had two-hour sessions, four half-hour speeches. In his opening address on the first evening he confined himself largely, not to the distinguishing characteristics of his church, but to an explanation of tenets generally accepted. The time I knew was short and I was shown to aid him in an exposition of the consistent and scriptural portions of Catholicism, so I launched out and argued for nearly my whole half hour that his popes whom he had alluded to could not derive their authority in unbroken succession from Peter for the reason that the Scriptures teach prophetically and historically a universal apostasy. He claimed that the prophecies of the falling away had their response in the “violent force,” “saints be prevailed against,” “make war with the remnant of her seed,” “wear out the saints of the Most High,” etc., were called into service. His claim of popes was also attacked and it was shown that they had for the most part the information, but lacked the power if uncommitted.

These points told on my opponent. He made no reply. It was rather sober and grave. But it was the turning-point and it became possible to him that he was very convenient when the title might be to himself to meet so able a man. He refused to criticize me in detail on the pope business, but said I had exaggerated. He told the audience that although I said in the beginning of the discussion I would not use the works of their apostates against them, such as Chiniquy, Maria Monk, and others, that I had taken their place in the method of playing their Bibles, and so on. A ten-year-old boy who would study such silly twaddle ought to be spanked. That was the only talk such silly twaddle ought to be spanked. That was the only point-blank that he was a bishop. Yet when he came to scare me he acknowledged in the presence of a number of his children. Possibly all but four or five would acknowledge its utter demolition.

When the attention of the audience was called to the fact that, “I am not meeting an ordinary pastor, an obscure country priest, but a bishop, a head of a diocese who probably has numbers of priests under his jurisdiction, and who must therefore be a man of both talent and scholarship, as he never could have climbed into that dignity without it,” what did he do but deny point-blank that he was a bishop. Yet when he came to scare me he acknowledged in the presence of a number of Saints that he was a bishop. It was very convenient when the title might have been useful to intimidate me, but when that failed and it became possible to him that he might fail, he did not want to occupy so high a perch—he would have that much farther to fall. So I do not know which time he told the truth—whether he is a bishop or not; though the general opinion is that he is.

We had a lively time at the conclusion. To discuss the other proposition he would not stay; would come back for two evenings next week. I told the audience my time was too improper.
tant to wait on his motions; that the debate would have to be continuous, and that I must have his name to any new or renewed contract entered into. He said he would discuss second proposition with me next May. But I replied I did not know whether I would be returned to this field. Elder Mortimer, my moderator, who was all fire at this time, whispered to me to stay till next week and meet him for the two evenings he said he could come for. I then told him before the audience that I would wait and meet him next week. But oh! was not he mad! He backed squarely down, turned red, grabbed his satchel, crammed his books in, and bolted for the door. But the crowd did not follow him. Something was said about taking a vote. That brought him back to the stand, when he said he objected to a vote. Without describing all that was said and acted on both sides, the meeting dismissed and parted with prospects of a probable meeting next May if I am returned.

He came here to make me back water and he did not. I feel conscientious in saying that he dislodged me not on a single position; but I can recollect where he was dislodged where he nodded an assent.

My opponent commenting on Revelation 12 stated that the “woman” represented the Catholic Church, and the “man child” Christ. In reply it was shown that that would be making the church bring forth Christ instead of Christ bringing forth the church. It was also asked Mr. Sinnett when the Catholic Church took her flight into the wilderness for twelve hundred and sixty days, which was proved by disinterested authors to mean twelve hundred and sixty years. The fact that the woman decreased to a “remnant” was also emphasized; as it says the dragon went to make war with the remnant of her seed. I stated that the beast of Revelation 13 completed the job in that he made “war with the saints” and overcame them. The dragon made war with the remnant; the beast who supplanted him overcame the remnant. The beast finished what had been begun by the dragon.

Mr. Sinnett said that candlesticks of Revelation 2 meant faith. In our following speech we read Revelation 1 where it says “the seven candlesticks are the seven churches.”

In defense of celibacy he referred to Revelation 14 where a hundred and forty-four thousand “virgins” were seen with Christ on Mount Sion; which virgins he claimed were the priesthood. In reply we informed him, had he read Revelation 7 he would have discovered there that they were those sealed out of each of the tribes of literal Israel, and not a retinue of Catholic priests who are to sail down with Christ. The audience laughed when they were told that the text said “white robes”—not black ones—pointing to my opponent. The audience was also directed to the fact that Catholic bishops are different from New Testament bishops; for the latter are permitted to “be the husband of one wife.” We pointed out also that those under the Levitical and Aaronic orders were married and it was thereby that the priesthood was perpetuated.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

The Gathering.

God is speaking to us in thunder tones through such men as Rushton, Rannie, Gould, and others. Some months ago a small man with a giant intellect, who is working for humanity as faithfully and as self-sacrificingly as any missionary in the church can work, came into the schoolhouse, walked up to my chart and studied it for a brief period, then grasped my hand warmly, saying, “How graphic! Indeed, the world is coming out of darkness into light.” After trying to secure my promise to address their monthly meeting (but I could not go) he said: “I am told that in the rise of your church, a socialistic compact was undertaken; but because the world was not ready for it, the undertaking failed.” I answered, “Yes.” He went on: “We are criticized for holding our meetings on Sunday, but I tell them that this is the work of the Lord. They call it politics; I call it religion, pure and simple.” I answered, “It is one of the grandest principles of the gospel; but these huge, monstrous compacts that you are fighting are presided over by Satan, and finite man can not successfully grapple with them. We must enlist the powers of heaven to help us.” He very thoughtfully answered, “Yes.” I continued, “More properly speaking, my brother, we must enlist in the service of God, and work together with him for the entire emancipation of the race, for the restitution of all things; for, as you say, socialism is the work of God.” And so indeed it is one branch of his work. His parting answer was, “As soon as I find a church that not only says, ‘Lord, Lord,’ but goes to work and does the will of my Father who is in heaven, I am with that church soul and body.” I confess I felt rebuked.

Another man, whose keen intellect is furnished by a first-class education, who has filled positions of grave responsibilities, recently said in substance: “These sermons are grand and inspiring. I have enjoyed an educational treat. I am much interested in the HERALD articles; but,” with a sad countenance he added, “your church is not practising what your books teach. The toiling masses, who are barely able to support their families, are growing frantic, being driven to despair with the knowledge of what awaits them in the coming crisis. You can not reach them by preaching faith, repentance, and baptism alone. They must be made to see that the church can and will give them a helping hand.” I confess I felt the rebuke.

Still another man said to me the other day, harshly, “Why sir! Your own missionaries gloat over the opportunities given them to vote for Teddy, under whose administration the great culminating touch is being placed upon the trusts. Your own church, with its official organ, the editor-in-chief standing at the head, has all the time held its foot on the bleeding necks of the helpless wage-earners. Thus, sir, your own shoulder is at the wheel of the ponderous instruments of death that are crushing us.”

I confess the sting of rebuke pierced me through and through. But where was my revolt to find footing? I could only affirm that others like Peter of old need yet to be converted.

This social proposition originated with God. It has been the fundamental plank of evolution in our dispensation of his grace. It was the basic principle of the restoration in the nineteenth century. It is the only means of removing selfishness from the human heart.

“THE LOVE OF MONEY IS THE ROOT OF ALL EVIL,” and God’s plan is to remove the incentive by bringing in Zion. Of course the simple act of gathering into the stakes will not accomplish the work. Forty years God worked on Israel of old to polish them, and still they failed to reflect the image of his Son.

We have been passing through the grinding process for the past seventy-five years. How much brighter are we than were they?

The end of the harvest draws nigh—God’s silent messengers, the angels, are working to gather us—his wheat—into his garner. Opposing elements are against them, and the wheat is rotting in the field.

The “great supper” of the Lord is at hand. “All things are now ready.” Many who were bidden have made, and are making excuses—they have more urgent matters on hand. He has doubtless sent his gleaners “out into the highways and hedges,” “into the streets and lanes.” “The poor and maimed,” “bad and good,” are being called. Thousands outside of the church are catching the inspiration, some of whom are doing noble work: for instance, J. A. Wayland of Girard, Kansas. I think his angel must always behold the face of our Father in heaven. With his three million copies of Appeal to Reason, “Trust number 529,” he is probably doing more toward making converts to this cardinal principle of the angel’s message than all the missionaries of the church have done during the past year; and I believe more than the whole church has done in two years.

The entire tract fund of the church, for all past time, has probably not made one half the impression on the public mind, upon this one principle of the gospel, as is made by this brilliant, herculean effort of the apostle of socialism.

J. A. Wayland is actually converting more Latter Day Saints in this State to the necessity of gathering than the church literature and missionaries combined.

The Socialists shall rise in judgment with this generation of Saints and shall condemn us, if we continue to saunter around; because they repented at the preaching of Wayland, and behold literature and missionaries combined.

Saints and shall condemn thee, Independence: for if the mighty revelations had been they came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Dowie, and behold a greater than Dowie is here.

And thou, and been sitting under their own vine and fig-tree. But it shall be more tolerable for Martinique at the judgment than for you. And thou, Salt Lake City, which art exalted to heaven, shall be thrust down to hell.

The Bishop has announced his readiness to receive our consecrations. What will we do?

Extracts from Letters.

Mrs. McCurry, Wapanucka, Indian Territory: “When seeing my time was out on the church papers I was grieved to know what to do about it. I had no one to ask for money, and I was in bad health, not able to do my own work. I prayed earnestly that God would help me get the money myself; and I made a covenant with him that if he would give strength, and the work to earn some money, I would pay the tenth of all I made, to my time was out on the church papers I was grieved to know all the work I can do, and the strength to do it with, and I am glad to keep my promise.”

All Forest Industries Concerned.

GOVERNMENT SENDS OUT QUESTION CARDS TO GATHER STATISTICS OF FOREST PRODUCTS.

Bringing to a focus the preparatory work of the past six months, the Forest Service is sending out question cards to secure statistics of forest products. The returns will be worked up into a report, which will give by States, regions, and species the cut and shipment of lumber, shingles, laths, cooperage stock, ties, posts, poles, stumps, bark and wood, the uses to which they are put, the quantity produced and value.

The vital importance of accurate statistics of forest products has appealed forcibly to manufacturers throughout the country. The National Lumber Manufacturers’ Association, and several other associations of lumbermen, have cooperated with the Forest Service. During the summer the utmost pains have been taken to make the investigation precise and practical to the last detail. The question cards which have returned to date report 104 million board feet of lumber, 83 million board feet of shingles, 58 million board feet of laths, and 30 million board feet of poles. The total amount of wood used in the various industries for which wood furnishes the raw material, and the value of the products. Circular letters to manufacturers accompanied in some cases, explaining the need of their cooperation. The returns will be regarded as strictly confidential, and neither the individual correspondent nor the location of his mill will be made public by the Government. A copy of the report which is to be published as a result of this investigation will be sent to all who fill out the question cards and to others interested in the use of forest products.

The January “Arena.”

The January Arena is a superb issue full of articles that are at once interesting to the general reader and specially valuable to all persons in sympathy with the various progressive movements in the fields of politics, economics, art, science, and literature. In this issue the well-known dramatic critic, Kenyon Wright, publishes a critical out on Richard Mansfield and his art, which is profusely illustrated with fine portraits of Mr. Mansfield in various roles. A paper of special interest to lovers of art appears from the pen of Mrs. F. Edwin Elwell, entitled “The spirit of the art of the French realists, or the Frenchman with those of western countries.” Another exceedingly popular paper is “Uncle Sam’s romance with science and the soil,” dealing with the splendid work that is being carried forward by the United States Government in reclaiming desert land through irrigation. This paper is by Frank Vrooman, and is illustrated with a number of reproductions of fine photographs. Another illustrated paper is entitled “J. Campbell Cory: Cartoonist,” and is devoted to the life of the popular cartoonist of the New York World. This paper carries a fine portrait of Mr. Cory, and the reproductions of a number of his best cartoons. Among the leading social and economic papers in this number are an illustrated paper by Eltweed Cory, entitled “The railway empire,” a startling paper showing the tremendous power exerted by the railways of the United States at the present time. “Economics of the Negro,” by Charles Edward Russell, is another highly thoughtful paper contributed by President George McA. Miller. “The initiative a Democratic safeguard against class-government,” by Eltweed Pomerooy, President of the Direct Legislation League of America, and “Direct legislation in England,” by Mr. Eltweed Cory, illustrate with fine cartoons by J. W. Bengough, are also attractive features of this issue which will appeal to progressive friends of democratic government. “The heart of the race problem” is the opening paper in a series by Alice Paul, on the negro question. Mr. Grimé is one of the foremost negro writers of the time. In the January Arena an innovation is made, the editorial department has been greatly enlarged so as to present a comprehensive editorial review of the significant events in the political, social, and economic world from the democratic view-point. This innovation will make the Arena more indispensable than ever to friends of progressive democracy who wish to keep in touch with the great advance movements throughout the entire world.

Socialism in Full Swing in England.

The recent accession of the former despised labor leader, John Burns, to a Cabinet position in Great Britain as President of the Local Government Board is the manifestation of that social ascendency that social reform has acquired in the municipal government of England. Recognizing this tendency, the Cosmopolitan Magazine recently sent Mr. Charles Edward Russell, the well-known correspondent, to London to investigate the actual workings of the movement. The remarkable results of his undertaking are set forth in the leading article in the February number of that magazine. Mr. Russell says in regard to the plan of the London County Council:

“The real government of the real London is the London County Council, and its principal business is to introduce plain, bald, unqualified socialism—socialism as Karl Marx dreamed it. The London County Council is a remarkable example of the way in which the democratic idea is making its way into the English political system. While theorists and philosophers have utopian visions of socialism as an ultimate state, and while other men have proved conclusively that it is utterly impossible and absurd, lo! among the least imaginative of all peoples, among the people least given to change and innovation, you can see socialism daily rising into a tangible, definite, undeniable structure.

London is the last city in the world that one would select for a socialistic experiment; it is the first city in the world to adopt socialism as a permanent policy.

“To be sure, the London County Council’s socialism was forced upon it by conditions and without its volition, and furthermore, it has comprehended also an element of social Darwinism. The Anglo-Saxon mind is that queer twist about nomenclature: to call things out of their proper name is a racial trait. But the ‘municipal trading’ of London is precisely the thing that socialism clamors for, and in municipal trading the London County Council has gone so far that its total operations are calculated to make any socialist gasp.”

Royal Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure
Made from Pure Grape Cream of Tartar

In baking powder Royal is the standard, the powder of highest reputation; found by the United States Government tests of greatest strength and purity. It renders the food more healthful and palatable and is most economical in practical use.

Housekeepers are sometimes importuned to buy alum powders because they are "cheap." Yet some of the cheapest made powders are sold to consumers at the highest price.

Housekeepers should stop and think. Is it not better to buy the Royal and take no chances—the powder whose goodness and honesty are never questioned?

Is it economy to spoil your digestion by an alum-phosphate or, other adulterated powder to save a few pennies?

JAMES CAFFALL DEAD.

“Father Caffall died at half past seven this morning of apoplexy,” was the word contained in a note from James D. Stuart (son-in-law of Bro. Caffall’s) dated February 7. Bro. Caffall had been poorly for the past few months, yet for a man of his years, being over eighty, was considered quite strong. Three days before his death, which occurred at his home in Magnolia, Iowa, he preached the morning sermon in the home church.

Bro. Caffall was for about forty years an active minister in the Reorganization. For seven years he acted as local elder in the Council Bluffs Branch, officiating a part of the time as president of the Pottawattamie District. In April, 1873, he was called to be an apostle, Quorum of Twelve, and was ordained at the semiannual conference, September 5, the same year. He labored faithfully in that office until 1902, when by the vision he was released from the quorum and assigned to a position in the evangelistic ministry. He, however, did not see his way clear to accept ordination as a patriarch, and declined. He continued to labor as a minister as health and circumstances permitted, and was held in high regard by the membership of the church generally.

Bro. Caffall was a man whose honesty and integrity were unquestioned; of strong convictions, and of unswerving devotion to truth; a sheaf fully ripe, ready for the garner. He fought a good fight and kept the faith.
believed that the oath contained the seeds of treason.

The next day, Henry W. Lawrence, in testifying, said that the oath administered to him early in life obligated him to covenant and agree before God, his agents, and the witnesses assembled, to avenge the blood of the prophets, Joseph Smith, Hyrum Smith, David Patten, and Parley P. Pratt. His testimony is said to have been the first to include the names of David Patten and Parley P. Pratt in the obligation, as reported by the Chicago Tribune, February 9, and is thought to indicate a change, at some time, in the wording of the oath.

On the 9th the counsel for the protestants announced that the testimony for the Government was all in, and their case closed. Senator Reed Smoot will now present his side of the case, and the Des Moines Capital states that the Senator’s counsel has announced that one hundred to two hundred witnesses will be called from Utah to disprove the testimony of the prosecution unless the committee will permit the filing of affidavits.

No representatives of the Reorganization were placed on the stand by the prosecution, and indeed so far as the Smoot case is concerned it was not necessary. If the main issue had been the difference between the two churches, the origin of either, or legal succession, it would have been different. Still we could but cherish the hope that opportunity might offer, before the close of the investigation, for representatives of the Reorganization to be heard in the interests of truth, that the distinction between the two churches might be clearly made. It seems so far to have been ordered otherwise, and we can afford to be patient and await developments.

There is some curiosity as to the possible line of procedure of Smoot and his counsel in defending his right to hold his seat in the Senate. It is rumored by the press that Senator Smoot and his friends will try to show that most of the obligations relating to the endowment house were originally built upon the form and ritual of Masonry. This would be his best move, perhaps, for two reasons. First, it will not be difficult to prove his claim. Second, it will establish a sort of kinship with the members of the Senate who are of the Masonic order, and, being under a similar obligation with himself, they could hardly feel justified in voting to deprive him of his seat in Congress. They may consider, however, that Smoot is such a distant relative that the kinship does not place them under the “tie that binds.”

It should not be surprising if, sooner or later, facts made bare reveal that the whole corrupt structure of Utahism is reared upon the foundation of Masonry. Brigham Young and many of his associates were members of that order, and, when they departed from God, what would be more probable than that they should turn to the other as a means of gaining power and exercising control?

The Salt Lake Tribune for February 8, 1906, devotes nearly four columns to a complete description of the endowment ceremony. During the ceremony there are three oaths administered, according to the Tribune, the first being as follows:

“We and each of us solemnly bind ourselves that we will not reveal any of the secrets of the first token of the Aaronic priesthood, with its accompanying name, sign, or penalty. Should I do so, I agree that my throat may be cut from ear to ear, and my tongue torn out by the roots.”

The name of this token is the new name of the candidate, which he received when he was given his garments.

Grip.—The grip is very simple: Hands clasped, pressing the point of the knuckle of the index finger with the thumb.

Sign.—In executing the sign of the penalty, the right hand, palm down, is placed across the body, so that the thumb comes directly under and a little behind the left ear. The hand is then drawn sharply to the right across the throat, the elbow standing out at a position of ninety degrees from the body; the hand is then dropped from the square to the side.

Second oath:

“We and each of us solemnly promise and bind ourselves never to reveal any of the secrets of this priesthood, with its accompanying name, sign, grip, or penalty. Should we do so, we agree that our breasts may be torn open, our hearts and vitals torn out and given to the birds of the air and the beasts of the field.”

Grip.—The grip is made by extending the right hand across the left breast, directly over the heart; then drawing it rapidly from left to right, with the elbow at the square; then dropping the hand by the side.

Name.—The name is the given name of the candidate.

Grip.—Clasp the right hand and place the thumb into the hollow of the knuckle, between the first and second fingers.

Third oath:

“You, and each of you, do covenant and promise that you will never reveal any of the secrets of this priesthood, with its accompanying name, sign, and penalty. Should you do so, you agree that your body may be cut asunder and all your bowels gush out.”

In this, the left hand is placed palm upright, directly in front of the body, there being a right angle formed at the elbow; the right hand, palm down, is placed under the elbow of the left; then drawn sharply across the bowels, and both hands are dropped at the side.

Name.—The Son.

Grip.—Pressing the forefinger and thumb into the palm and back of the hand of the recipient of the grip. This is called the “Sign of the Nail.”

Grip.—Grasp right hands so that the little fingers are interlocked and the forefinger presses into the wrist. (This is called the patriarchal grip or true sign of the nail.)

Tradition says that when the Savior was crucified the nail tore out the palm of his hand, so that they had to put another through the wrist.

Following this are some obligations: “Law of sacrifice,” “Law of Chastity,” (one for men and one for women), and “Law of Vengeance.” The latter reads as follows:

“You, and each of you, covenant and agree that you will pray, and never cease to pray, Almighty God to avenge the blood of the prophets upon this nation; and that you will teach the same to your children unto the third and fourth generation. All bow your heads and say yes.”
Those who are somewhat acquainted with Masonry will readily see the similarity; and the source, authority, power, and kinship of the Utah church is easily traced.

So far as Smoot's oath of vengeance is concerned, or any covenant by which his loyalty to the nation may be curbed, it is not so very much worse than the obligations under which many of the other government officials rest.

Turning to SAINTS' HERALD for December 28, 1904, we find the following reprint of a clipping:

An extraordinary incident took place yesterday in Paris during the hearing of a case at the Palais de Justice. M. Gustave Thery, who was called upon to give evidence, said that he was prepared to swear to tell the truth, but could not swear to tell the whole truth. "The case you are trying now," he said, "has already been tried before the Grand Orient. One of the principal persons in the case has been declared innocent before that court, and every brother has been enjoined to proclaim that fact. Whatever I might think or know, unless I am released by this person from my Masonic oath, I must obey this order, I therefore can not swear to tell the whole truth."

M. Labori, in a fiery speech, protested with great indignation, and, turning to the judge said, "So above your jurisdiction there is an occult jurisdiction more powerful than legal justice: and we have now arrived at a state of affairs that when witnesses come into court this jurisdiction weighs on their consciences and prevents them from telling the truth. I admit my emotion is profound, for it is the whole future of France which is at stake, and all the honor of justice will fall."

Compared with this, as to defiance of the laws of the land and the legal course of equity and justice, the Utah church is but a breath—a local affair only, but the other is spread world-wide. And when affairs reach such a stage that a witness refuses to tell the whole truth, because of his obligation to a fraternal order by which he is bound to defend his brother by withholding the truth, M. Labori's alarm is not to be wondered at when he exclaimed, "It is the whole future of France which is at stake, and all the honor of justice will fall."

And how can a body of men be expected to vote to unseat one of their number, because he is bound by an obligation no worse than theirs if as bad, of no more binding force if as much, and no more detrimental to patriotism, and loyalty to the laws of the nation by which we are to be governed? Personally we shall not be surprised if Reed Smoot retains his seat, viewing the situation as we do. That he should be ousted, we have no doubt. That many of the others should be ousted, we have no doubt. For they are obligated to the hierarchy or the order first, and to the Government when it does not seek to render justice to a "brother." And what could more unfit a person than this to act as an officer in church or state? The word of God teaches us that we should obey the law of the land, for he that keeps the law of God has no need to break the law of the land.

That the Reorganization has felt any of the effects of these hurtful influences in the past, or that its future is in danger from influences of this kind, may seem absurd to many; but the possibility of voice or vote being controlled in our quorums or legislative assemblies by grip or secret sign is enough to cause one to shudder. That such a thing has occurred in the past is shown by the history of the Utah church. And as long as these things are permitted to exist within the body, there is always more or less danger.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. F. A. Smith, in charge of the Southern Mission, states in his report for the last quarter that many discouraging conditions have militated against accomplishment of results desired; sickness in the families of the ministry, the winter season, other features, and the indifference of many have been difficult obstacles to overcome. He says: "Most of the branches in the mission are not as active as they should be and many of them are in very poor condition; some of the districts are not in much better condition." He reports thirty baptisms.

Bro. I. N. White, reporting the field presided over by Bro. Joseph Luff and himself, says: "The work is in fair condition. Some branches are passing through the sifting-time, but probably will come out all right. Quite a number of debates have been held, and none wherein we have lost anything. The work as a whole looks encouraging. The missionaries have worked faithfully and presidents of districts mostly have been active. Fifty have been baptized by the missionaries and many more than that number by local authority. Seemingly there are not any very discouraging features before us, but the very opposite. Satan is by no means asleep, but seemingly is watching every advance the church is making in this 'Zion's regions' with a jealous eye."

Elder F. J. Ebeling is authorized to represent the publishing department at the conference at Davisville, Ohio. Will the Saints please pay to him their subscriptions for HERALD, Ensign, Leaves, and in fact any of the church publications.
The preface to the book is by Reverend James Cardinal Gibbons, archbishop of Baltimore, America. Price twenty cents. It is a handy little encyclopedia of information on Catholicism for our ministry. We quote from the one hundred and eighty-five thousand, edition of 1904. The greater our knowledge from Catholic writings, the more we are convinced that their church, in many respects, is grossly wrong in faith, doctrine, practice, and organization.

This good rule is laid down on page 501:

It is ever a law of Scripture interpretation that an obscure text should always be explained in the light of clear and explicit passages.

Catholics claim succession:

Christ was the answer of the world’s longing for a divine, infallible teacher of God’s truth. His church is the continuation of that divine, infallible teaching until the second coming of the Christ.—Page 17.

A Catholic knows there is no danger of deception, because he believes in the authority of God, voiced to him by the living, infallible witness of Christ’s mouthpiece, the Church of God. —Page 19.

You can not do away with Christ’s divinity and pretend to follow out his teaching. If He be only man, His power to command is subject to the caprice of every individual. If He is God, then it follows naturally that His doctrines must be believed under penalty of damnation (Mark 10: 16), and His commandments obeyed under penalty of hell. Logically, also, there must be in the world to-day a teacher of His gospel, divine as he was divine, infallible as He was infallible, voicing His gospel to all men unto the end (Matthew 28: 20; Acts 1: 8); an authority of which He said: “He that heareth you heareth Me.” (Luke 10: 16.) —Page 58.

The Church teaches by divine authority; in submitting to her we submit to God, and are freed from all human authority. —Page 119.

Christ was not merely a teacher of doctrine, but an organizer of a society. He chose twelve men under the leadership of Simon Peter, ... —Page 104.

The true Apostolic succession demands more than mere natural love of the brethren. An Apostolic Church must have Apostolic doctrine, orders, and authority. The Bible gives us unmistakable evidence of a Church built on the Apostles, and continuing one and the same for ever without even the possibility of failure. —Page 188.

All the Apostles were commissioned in common to establish the Church, to preach the gospel, ... but Peter alone was made the Rock, the Key-bearer, the Confirmer of the brethren, and the Shepherd of the flock. This has ever been the witness of Catholic tradition. —Page 250.

The Church is indeed built upon all the Apostles and Prophets, but not in the same manner, for surely the prophets were not teachers of Christ in the same sense as the Apostles.—Page 286.

Conditions were vastly different in Apostolic times, for the Catholic Church teaches that each Apostle was infallible with and under the Pope, while to-day the plentitude of Apostolic power of teaching and ruling resides only in the Bishop of Rome.—Page 288.

A visible church needs a local government upon earth according to the divine plan.—Page 284.

If St. Peter or his successor, speaking authoritatively to the Church, could teach false doctrine, then he would instantly cease to be the firm rock-foundation on which Christ built his Church, the gates of hell would prevail, ... and the whole flock of Christ would be deprived of the true food of divine faith (John 21: 15-17). —Page 293.

At the risk of being called uncharitable I will say that the Bible does not teach many things Catholics aver it does. They err greatly when claiming that the church was “built on the Apostles.” Paul said it was “built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone.” (Ephesians 2: 20.) The same apostle wrote, “For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.” —1 Corinthians 3: 11. There is a vast difference in the meaning of the statement of Catholics—a church “built on the Apostles,” and that of Paul that it was “built upon the foundation of the apostles.”

It will not do to separate the truth God revealed to Peter that “Jesus is the Christ” (Matthew 16: 18, 19), from being a very material part of the foundation on which the Christ-church was to be built. The Lord did not build his church on apostles but upon the Christ-foundation (which was also the apostles’ foundation), so grandly wrought in truth, and which truth when fully worked out and demonstrated received unmistakable sanction from God to Simon Peter, by revelation that that truth revealed was the “rock” foundation of Christ’s church. When the Lord was crowned he was rightly called the “chief corner-stone” and the “head of the corner.” (Ephesians 2: 20; Matthew 21: 42.) The glorious truth of his Messiahship was not “prevailed against” by the “gates of hell” but was taken to the “spirits in prison” (1 Peter 3: 18, 19) by Christ himself. He received the “keys of death” by coming to this earth and doing God’s will, and it seems reasonable, also, that he secured the “keys of hell” (Revelation 1: 17, 18), by going to the “prison” for them.

A challenge:

Catholics are glad to challenge any comparison when it comes to morality and religion. —Page 168.

The trinity:

There is one divine nature, and in that divine nature there are three persons. —Page 37.

The Bible:

The real question is: Is the Bible and the Bible alone the way to find out the gospel of Christ? The Catholics answer this question in a decided negative. —Page 64.
Deny the Church’s infallible witness, and lo! the Bible is reduced to the level of mere Oriental literature, full of errors and utterly devoid of divine inspiration. . . . The Bible does not pretend to be a formulay of belief, as is a creed or catechism. There is nowhere in the New Testament a clear, methodical statement of the teachings of Christ.—Page 66.

The Bible was never intended to take the place of the living, infallible teacher, the [Catholic] Church, but was written to explain or to insist upon a doctrine already preached.

How indeed could a dead and speechless book, that can not be cross-questioned to settle doubts or decide controversies, be the exclusive and all-sufficient teacher of God’s revelation?—Page 67.

The Apocalypse [The revelation of Saint John] is one of the most obscure portions of Holy Writ, and no one pretends to be able to interpret it with any certainty.—Page 562.

How can they harmonize the above statement with the following?

Catholics are infallibly certain that all the books of their Bible are inspired, because of the divine, infallible witness of the Church of Jesus Christ, voiced by the Councils of Trent (1545-1565) and the Vatican (1869-1870). Protestants, lacking this divine, infallible teacher, can never be certain what books form the canon of Holy Scripture.—Page 76.

Christ, therefore, either established a Church that could not err, or He never established any teaching authority at all.—Page 132.

The ten commandments. Speaking of the reformation of the sixteenth century, the book says:

The Catholic’s loss of faith is ever traceable to the breaking of the Ten Commandments. The Church felt this keenly herself, and reformed many abuses at the Council of Trent, 1545-1563.—Page 139.

John’s baptism declared unchristian:

The ceremony performed by John was not a sacrament at all, but aroused feelings of sorrow, which prepared the hearts of his hearers for the true sacrament of Christ, as we learn from Acts 19:3-5.—Page 353.

Catholics had better take their Bibles and read the following which declare against their so-called infallible teaching on John’s baptism: Luke 3:2-8, 7:28, 30; Mark 1:1-15; Matthew 3:13-17; Acts 18:24-28, 19:1-7. The last two quotations tell us of a man named Apollos who was, undoubtedly, an unauthorized minister claiming to be baptizing and representing the Lord’s church, of whom John was the forerunner, but he was corrected by “Aquila and Priscilla.”

Infant baptism. Here is something well worth preserving on that question:

It is probable that there were children in the households baptized by St. Paul (1 Corinthians 1:16; Acts 16:15, 33), although there is no conclusive proof in the New Testament of the practice of infant baptism. In this matter many Protestants inconsistently violate their principle of the Bible only as a rule of faith, and follow the divine tradition of the Catholic Church.—Page 368.

Baptizing church bells.

Bells are not baptized, for only rational creatures are fit subjects for Christ’s baptism. They are merely blessed, as are many other inanimate objects, with a special prayer prescribed by the liturgy.—Pages 272, 273.

Query: Are infants a day or a month old “rational creatures” and fit subjects for Christian baptism? We say they are not proper subjects for the solemn rite until they arrive at the years of accountability before God and have been properly taught.

Water baptism:

Catholics are fully aware that the early practice of the Church . . . was to immerse, and that this custom prevailed in both the East and West in the solemn administration of the sacrament till the end of the thirteenth century. But, on the other hand, there is abundant evidence to prove that immersion was not the only mode, and that pouring on of water was considered equally valid. It is doubtful, to say the very least, whether the three thousand converts of St. Peter on Pentecost day (Acts 2:41) were immersed, because of the sacriety of water in the city of Jerusalem.

If, again, immersion be the only valid mode, none are really baptized save those who have been immersed. It would follow then that over a hundred years after the Reformation unbaptized men (A. D. 1858) restored the Church, which had been entirely lost in the world, by giving to one another that which they did not possess themselves. If baptism had entirely perished, whence the right of any man to restore it on his own authority?

The Catholic Church, therefore, as the infallible interpreter of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, declares that all three ways of baptizing are equally valid, by immersion, by pouring, or by sprinkling. The present mode of pouring arose from the many inconveniences connected with immersion, frequent mention of which is made in the writings of the early Christian Fathers. But, as a necessary safeguard, Catholics are not permitted to use the form of sprinkling.—Pages 368-369.

Three things are necessary for a sacrament: 1st, the sensible sign, as in Baptism the outward washing of the body with the invocation of the Blessed Trinity; . . .—Page 345.

We do not believe that sacraments act like magic to cleanse a soul from sin independently of the interior disposition of the one receiving them. The Catholic Church demands: 1st. That a person be qualified to receive them; . . .—Page 348.

Pope St. Stephen (A. D. 255-257) decided against St. Cyprian that the baptism conferred by heretics was valid, and that rebaptism was unlawful. . . . Thus, infidel and Jewish physicians in the hospitals of New York, who do not believe in the Catholic Church, know what a sacrament is, and believe that it is something sacred, have in cases of necessity validly baptized dying children, because they out of courtesy and respect to the wishes of Catholic priests have had the intention of performing an act held sacred by the Catholic Church.—Pages 390, 391.

Reader, how does this sound after listening to the above? “No outsider has a right to participate in the sacraments of the Catholic Church.”—Page 363.

Courting favor of Protestant baptisms:

If a Protestant is uncertain about his former baptism—a frequent case in our day of lax Christian views and practice—he is baptized conditionally, with the form: “If thou art not baptized, I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.”—Page 98.

Baptism for the dead (1 Corinthians 15:29):

No one knows with certainty what is meant by this obscure text of St. Paul. Many interpretations have been suggested, viz., that it refers to baptism administered over the tombs of the martyrs, or at the point of death, or some symbolic ceremony performed by the relations of a deceased catechumen.—Page 369.

Webster says a catechumen is “one who is in the first rudiments of Christianity; one who is receiving instruction and preparing himself for baptism.”

Who are Catholic?
No one is a Catholic who is not a Roman Catholic.—Page 183.
The Church of Christ has been called Catholic as early as the beginning of the second century or the end of the first.—Page 181.

The Greek Catholic Church:
In points of doctrine the Greek Church denies the primacy and infallibility of the Pope. . . . Until the middle of the ninth century the Greek Church was in communion with the Roman Pontiff.—Page 184.

The thief on the cross:
As for the thief on the cross, it is not evident that he went instantly to heaven; for Catholics, believing that Christ's soul immediately after His death went down to Limbo, to announce to the souls there detained the glad tidings of the redemption (1 Peter 3:19), declare that paradise in this passage does not mean heaven at all.—Page 402. Limbo is the place where the souls of the just, who died before the death of Jesus Christ, were detained.—Page 560.

Resurrection of the body:
The Catholic Church teaches . . . that all men "will rise again with their own bodies which they now bear about with them."—Page 560.

The millennium:
The Church has defined nothing whatsoever on this subject. The reign of Christ has ever believed that as much is contained under either species [bread or wine] as under both.—Page 454.

The sacrament—bread and wine:
The Council of Trent says . . . "that by the consecration of the bread and wine a change is wrought of the bread's whole substance into the substance of Christ our Lord's body, and of the wine's whole substance into the substance of His Blood,"

Purgatory:
The word Purgatory is not found in the Bible; . . . The strongest argument for the existence of Purgatory and the practice of praying for the dead is the universal and constant witness of divine tradition as voiced in the writings of the Fathers.—Pages 562, 563.

The mass:
We do not pretend to know how far God applies the infinite merits of the sacrifice of the Mass to either the living or the dead.—Page 454.

The apostle Peter married?
He undoubtedly was, yet tradition declares that he did not live with his wife after the divine call . . . ; the words of St. Peter to Christ are plain: "Behold we have left all things and have followed thee." [Douay Bible.]—Pages 492, 493.

Reader, please turn to Mark 10: 1–31 and contrast the teaching of the blessed Lord with the unholy charge of Catholicism against Peter that he abandoned the wife of his youth for all time when accepting the call to preach the gospel. Every Catholic ought to declare against such a malicious misrepresentation of the life-work of Peter.

Miracles—Mark 16: 17, 18:
The age of miracles will last until the end of time.—Page 545. We grant that they are not so numerous to-day as in the first days of the Church, when they were specially meant to aid the spread of Christianity.—Page 546.

The foregoing quotations from a standard work of the Roman Catholic Church prove that many of their teachings are "cunningly devised fables." Read your Bibles carefully and prayerfully; then you may be convinced, and will see the gross errors of Catholicism as never before.

THE PAPACY.
Bro. E. J. Haworth, of Wallsend, hands us a copy of the celebrated speech delivered by Bishop Strossmayer before the Vatican Council of 1870, when the dogma of Papal Infallibility was being discussed. We would like to reproduce the whole of it, but space forbids. Among other things he said: "But, my venerable friends, we have a Dictator, before whom we must prostrate ourselves and be silent, even as his Holiness Pius IX, and bow our heads. The Dictator is history. This is not like a legend, which can be made as the potter makes his clay; but is like a diamond, which cuts on the glass what can not be canceled. Till now I have only leaned on her, and if I have found no trace of the papacy in the Apostolic days, the fault is hers, not mine. . . . I have sought for a pope in the first four centuries, and I have not found him."

No doubt there have been thousands besides Bishop Strossmayer who "have sought for a pope in the first four centuries, and have not found him."

THE ECONOMY OF THE LORD'S STOREHOUSE.
Edward Belamy and other Utopian dreamers have given us some very beautiful pictures of ideal earthly conditions, but not one of them is so beautiful as is portrayed by the Almighty in his word in our own little Book of Doctrine and Covenants. It is so complete in all its aspects that it challenges our admiration, and causes us to long for the time when it will be in full working order, dispensing long felt needed social and industrial blessings to humanity.

It is the province of this article to deal only with that part of the plan relating more particularly to the...
The Lord’s storehouse. We all have heard more or less said from time to time concerning the Lord’s storehouse, but have not probably gotten more than a vague notion of it. Nor does the writer of this article assume to know all about it, but, being very much interested, writes to stimulate thought and interest along that line.

What is the Lord’s storehouse? It is, in some respects, like many other storehouses we have seen, yet in many respects vastly different. It is like other stores in that it is a building where goods are kept. There the kinship just about ends. Other stores are kept for private gain, owned and managed by private individuals. The Lord’s storehouse is to be owned by the community or church, managed by the bishop of the church, not to get gain for himself by selling for every penny he may be able to extort by the many devices for extortion that are in vogue in the world to-day, but he is to keep the storehouse as a distributing depot for the commodities of life, selling at a price equal to what they are worth to the Saints for the purpose for which they designed. This storehouse is to be maintained for the community, as the hive is for the colony of bees,—a storeroom for the keeping of all surplus products for the future use of the Saints who may need. It is the “standby” of the community against the time of need,—“a rainy day,” —times of sickness,—their insurance company. In it will be found everything under the sun that is good, that is found in all other stores combined. It is to be a department-store holding everything that people will want that is usually found in stores. All the Saints will bring everything to this store that they raise or produce in any way, that is in excess of their actual necessities. Those who till the land will bring their tithing and surplus of wheat, corn, apples, vegetables, hay, eggs, poultry, beef, etc. Those who work in shops and factories will bring their surplus money—that which they have received as wages, after purchasing all their daily necessities. (Observe here that no one needs to keep back any for a “rainy day” or for any emergency whatsoever, even if it is expected, for the church is to look out for each one in all these exigencies, and that is what the storehouse is for; for it is possible for one to hold or horde against a time of need that will never come, while need is already at the door of some one else, perhaps, and their need becomes more grievous from the very reason that some one else is holding back what is not needed. Therefore all should take all to the storehouse just as soon as it is found that it is not needed for actual, current expenses. The church will take care of our future needs when they come if we are not able to cope with them.) Those who have been appointed stewards over shops, laundries, shoe-factories, flouring-mills, saw-mills, stone- quarries, poultry-farms, hotels, etc., will take enough from the proceeds for themselves and families, and deposit all the residue in the Lord’s storehouse. (Observe again that all of these mills, shops, and factories are to be owned and operated by the church, and these men who superintend and manage them are only stewards over these concerns.)

When it is understood that the principal function of this storehouse is to be a distributing depot, and not necessarily a retail profit store for private gain, and that the head of this concern is also the head of all the manufacturing establishments, the economy of the arrangement will begin to appear. There are no middlemen for the system to support as such, but it liberates them with all their retinue, to spend their energies in a more profitable way—producing something. Everything goes directly from the factory to the consumer, the distributing, too, under the same managing head. Under this same head it is designed also shall be the ownership and control, in time, of all the necessary means of transportation. The object of the whole system will be to serve the people, and make the burden of all lighter with the adoption of each succeeding labor-saving appliance, instead of making the people serve the system, and making it harder for them with each improvement!

The one astonishing thing in the world of commerce to-day is that it is possible that there is such vast increase of wealth in a system of such consume mate waste. But let the observer look closely and he will find the increase is only by those persons and institutions that have adopted the principle of cooperation in some form, offsetting the awful waste accompanying individual enterprise and competitive methods.

In our little towns dotting the country by thousands, and also in the cities, are found numerous little stores of the same class. In a town of only a few thousand inhabitants will be found, say, six or eight grocery-stores, as many more of dry-goods, several hardware, and a number of drug-stores, each maintaining a separate business, paying rent, fuel, and light bills, employing its own help, sustaining expenses for advertising, draying in small quantities, solicitors, clerks, etc. This is all repeated in each case. The population of this town all traded at one store at first, and had all their wants supplied; but when two, three, four, or five other stores of the same kind were opened up, the people used no more than before, but some left the old store and went to the new ones, dividing the custom. Formerly the profits on the goods bought by the community had to maintain only one merchant and his family, but with the advent of all the others, the purchasers had to pay enough more for their goods to maintain all these new ones, when the old one could have served them all and then had time to spare. Where the community only needed one store to serve them, they now have to keep ten or twenty, paying all this extra expense for rent, fuel, light, clerks, delivery-wagons, horses, etc. Off on some outlying block you may see during a day the delivery-wagons from all of these various firms drive up, one to deliver a ham, another to bring a package of sugar next door, another a sack of flour at another door, wasting time, wearing out wagons, ruining good horses in the hurry, chasing their lives away all unnecessarily, darting hither and thither, crossing and recrossing each other’s track in the mad rush to make business ends meet, when one of them could have done what all did, three times over, and not have been as tired, if all this work could have been under one head. For then his delivery would have been to every house as it came, that had bought goods that day.

Under God’s plan all the waste of time, help, equipment, etc., will be dispensed with. There will be the one store in every stake or large community of Saints. They will be saved the expense of maintaining a dozen or more when only one is needed. This illustration will hold good in dozens of other instances, such as in laundries, dairies, etc. And the beauty of it is, that where it is all under one management, and that by the church, all the Saints get the benefit of the saving, and not the managing head only. The benefit accruing to him is only the same that accrues to each other member of the church. This is the solution of the vexed question of labor and capital.

When any one would go shopping at this storehouse, he could get everything he should want, no matter how varying his purchases should be in kind, all under one roof. It would be very pleasant, too, and free from fear of being cheated; for the clerks are not necessarily there to sell, but to wait upon the purchaser. The store not being established for profit, but as a distributing depot, to answer to the needs of the people and no more, the clerks’ duty would be only to show the goods and tell exactly the quality or kind and wrap them up. There would be no incentive for the clerk to misrepresent the goods, for it would be of no interest to him to sell the customer more than he should want. Clerks would be honest and still hold their positions. The customer would not be teased or induced to over-buy, that the clerk might make a greater record of sales or commission.

The store being on such a large scale, and holding every necessity upon its shelves, the people will be adequately served at such small cost, that the multitude of little merchants, as found in all the towns and cities, would in this community or stake be liberated, and would all be busily engaging in some productive work—bringing something into existence for the good of society. This great expense gotten out of the way is another great saving to the whole people. Every person would know just where to go to get any and every desired article, hence would not need to ever take notice of an advertisement, and for the same reason the management would never need to do any advertising, for it is also not primarily designed to sell goods only, but to supply the people with only what they need—preferring that they take no more. This would save thousands of dollars each year, which would reduce the cost on goods, again being a great saving to the whole people. No solicitors would be needed, which is another economical feature in the interest of the whole people. Just think of the millions spent every year for advertising alone! Then reflect that each of us under the present system has to help foot the bill in the way of added cost to every article we buy, and then reflect again that in Zion all this extra cost will be taken off because the purpose for which it is levied will be removed. Oh, how much better is the Lord’s plan!

Behold the extravagance of our present system of paying tithing! Bro. A sells his wheat crop at the local market to a buyer whose avowed object is to buy so as to sell at a profit to another man who has the same object, who converts it into flour, ships it to the wholesaler who has a like object, who sells it to the retailer with the same object of profit, each tacking on a little more with each change of hands. Bro. A pays tithing on his crop, sends the amount to the Bishop, paying for money-order or exchange for bank draft. The Bishop turns round and invests in another order or draft and sends the money to an elder’s family residing (possibly) near this same Bro. A. The wife in this elder’s family takes this money and goes to the same town where Bro. A sold his wheat, and buys her provision of flour, footing the bill for this crazy manipulation with added cost, for all those middlemen, and for transportation. This is a terrible loss to the church, and she can not prosper under it. No wonder the Lord directed a storehouse to be established so the Saints could pay their tithing in kind. Now if Bro. A could have had access to the storehouse, he could have tithed his wheat and placed it in the Bishop’s keeping; the wheat to be made into flour at the mill owned by the church and the flour furnished to the elder’s family without the least loss, and at the same time would have occasioned employment for some of the Saints in the mill. How much better the Lord’s plan is! Many times the Saints in various localities can not turn their produce into money to any advantage, the local prices hardly justifying hauling to market. Yet their cabbages, potatoes, eggs, butter, wheat, etc., are worth just as much to eat, to appease hunger, to build up tissues, and give strength to the physical organism as if they would bring their weight in gold in the market. How many times the elders’ families, and others also, need these edibles, when away off in some part of the country that can not be reached, they lay at some farmer’s door, not worth hauling to market at local prices. Now if the Saints would gather to Zion according to God’s commands, they could cooperate

J. W. GILBERT.

THE CHURCH A PRODUCER.

In a recent article in HERALD columns under the caption “The social aspect of the church,” I notice that the writer is certainly advanced in his ideas, and I fear so far so, that we cripples (financially speaking) can scarcely keep the pace.

It is all very well to talk about the splendid socialistic principles cherished to-day by thousands in and out of the church, but it is quite another thing to solve a workable theory. Socialism has been at it for years and as yet is as far behind as ever. Indeed, several have sought to reduce their principles to practice only to meet with a downfall in each and every instance. Undoubtedly something is wrong.

Until humanity, in or out of the church, can, and will, eliminate every item of selfishness from the influencing passions of their being, it is all nonsense to talk of “all things common,” etc. In the meantime, I suppose the socialistic agitation will still go on, bearing its unwholesome fruits of discontent, distrust, strikes, lock-outs, anarchy, and murder.

No doubt whatever but that true socialism is an excellent garment, one calculated to fit the wearers thereof, but the great trouble is, we have not grown to fit it. Some there are who presume to put it on, but they only betray their own littleness, while they trail the garment in the dust and neither are benefited.

True there are national evils in the world, but in commenting upon the rascality of the rich, we should not overlook the errors of the poor. None are exempt. All social wrongs are not necessarily attributable to the wealthy:—“woe unto you ye poor men whose bellies are not satisfied.” Greed and grasp are peculiarities that may be found in the hut of the Hottentot as well as in the the palace of the prince. It is a general evil.

There is, undoubtedly, much of squalor, filth, and poverty in the world, but they are not necessarily resultant from the riches of the rich. If the poor in Great Britain and our own leading American cities would cease patronizing beer-halls and such like so liberally, they would be differently situated. Vitiated appetites indulged in will make any man poor. It is the people frequenting such places, who are usually the loudest in their ranting about hard times.

As yet I have never met a toiler, willing to work, taking reasonable care of his earnings, who was called upon to live in disagreeable poverty.

God has said that he has blessed the land in these last days and we may mark those blessings tendered freely to every one who will apply himself with diligence.

The fact is, herein lies the real difficulty: the necessaries and comforts of life come so easily that many pattern after the Indian who, while it was raining, could not repair his wigwam, and when it was fair weather, thought it didn’t need it. The great trouble is, that the world is living too high. It is as it was in the days of Noah—“eating and drinking.” It might work well if there were a famine—“then would the people learn righteousness.” In the last few years we have seen samples of these poor unfurnitures. They have been brought here by the boat-load from the mother lands. In many of them I have noted a lack of energy and this is traceable to weakening habits—beer and tobacco had sapped their vitality.

Yes, I suppose an “all things common” sermon would have immensely interested these misguided mortals, but would it not have been infinitely better to preach to them the unadulterated principles of the gospel; baptized them for the remission of their sins; granted them confirmation for the gift of the Holy Ghost, and thus put an implement in their own hands, whereby they need no longer give way to their weaknesses? Then could they strike out in this broad, free world, carrying the name Saint on their banner, and by diligence make a name and place among the children of men. Submission to the law of tithing would entitle them to temporal blessings; the “devourer” would be rebuked; “pestilence” would stand abashed; and “disease” flee before the real, not “Utopian,” promises of God. This is what the church has been doing and is doing. Thousands can arise and testify to the enriching system in the gospel, in temporal as well as spiritual things.

The aforesaid article agitates the advisability of the church going into the land-office business; the building of “churches, houses, shops, and all necessary buildings”; the manufacture of “lumber, stone, natural, or artificial; brick and mortar; tiles and a host of necessary commodities”; conducting leather industries; an insurance society and a “departmental store.” Good! but how is this practicable? Just think! the church numbers approximately fifty thousand; representing, perhaps, some ten thousand breadwinners. We are scattered to the four winds of heaven all over the globe. We live in every zone, consequently our requirements are different. Those of the torrid regions can not use the requirements of the frigid. We hail from every nation and with tastes peculiar to our national customs. We are separated not only by tariffs and customs but by “everlasting hills”; and the mighty oceans keep us apart; and yet it is thought a thing practicable to unite this complex, divided band unto the running of departmental stores, factories, and other concerns. It would require more than the organizing energy of a Napoleon to do it.

This is practically the question that has been before the British nation for the last three years. Chamberlain and his aristocracy have been endeavoring to foist upon the people the bands of commercial union, protective and restrictive tariffs, between Britain and her colonies; but his propositions, to all appearances, recently have been buried 'neath an everlasting avalanche.

If Independence, Lamoni, and other centers think their local dealers are making exorbitant interest out of their investments let them speak; then let them organize their own joint stock company for a departmental store. Surely the church abroad, in Britain, in Canada, in Australia, in the South Sea Islands, should not be urged to enter into such a proposition from which we could obtain no substantial gain, financial or otherwise.

Institutions of this nature will require patronage; and to insure patronage we must be able to sell cheaper than the present concerns. Now in this age of keen competition where men are straining with might and main to keep their financial enterprises afloat, it is a question whether the church could enter the arena and beat them all. To do so, in the first place we would require the shrewdest of business men. In the second place those men would have to take a lesser salary than that allowed to their profession. We have men of business among us, but would they submit to the small salary feature—a ministerial basis for instance?

The fact is, we would have to pay our officials what they can command elsewhere. We would have to purchase our raw materials at just the price quoted in Wall Street. What advantage then is there in running a departmental store?

Retail houses are going down every day simply because competition keeps the profits down. Gentile enterprises are not making the high interest that some would lead us to suppose. This "adulterated food" talk we hear so much about is simply silly—largely imagination. Oh, I guess they do put a little sand in sugar, but then some folks need about all the sand they can get. But say, where is the faith of us people who preach "if ye drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt you"? Let us keep the "Word of Wisdom" taking a little oat-meal mush every morning and never fret about "adulterated foods."

Aside from the financial effect such manufactories may have upon the church we should not overlook the spiritual effect they will surely have. Who can prophesy that it will always be of the pleasant order? Do our late experiences with Graceland indicate it?

The only ties binding our brotherhood together to-day, are those of pure spiritual work. Temporal concerns tend to divide or at least create distrust and suspicion. Above all things let us preserve the peace of our cause and leave these temporal establishments till necessity demands them.

"The church is a consumer"; a "parasite" and not a "producer." In other words the system in operation whereby tithes and offerings are directly applied to the missionary work is simply a "consuming" system. We can not see it that way. To the contrary we believe the church is operating the greatest "producing" system on earth. Does not every elder sent out labor with the purpose of bringing souls into the church? The converts thus made bring into the church their temporal interests as well as their spiritual. While their bodies and spirits are subject to the principles of the gospel, their estates are subject to tithing and consecration. It is only a short while until the allowance invested by the Bishop, in sending out the elder, is returned. A few years ago when in missionary service your writer was instrumental in leading a certain brother into the waters of baptism. We talked to him of tithing, and in a couple of months he turned over eight hundred and twelve dollars. My ministerial allowance at the time was one hundred and sixty dollars per year. Was that not a "producing" system? Do not you think the Bishop would prefer this kind of an investment than running some flour and feed concern? And this is the kind of a "producing" system that has been going on for years. If the bishop had invested the early tithes in mercantile pursuits, where would the Reorganized Church be to-day? How many converts would have been made? How many elders would there be in the field?

That our "producing" system has been successful, is evidenced by the scores of church-buildings all over the land, representing several hundred thousand dollars. In Canada Mission alone, our real estate will aggregate some twenty-five thousand dollars, and this is but a small part of the whole.

Besides this, there are scattered throughout the world those active, integral parts of the body, men, women, and children, laboring and saving as per their duty and delight, whose tithes and offerings annually reach thousands of dollars. This is an asset of no inconsiderable estimate; and coming in every year, is in reality an interest representing a principal up in the millions. And what produced this principal? The silent, but effective, labors of the missionary. This is an asset that can be depended on, creating an interest that has never ceased to be paid, since tithing was first taught. It is not, as one author states, "a dependence upon the caprice of the human will." This tithing will come, as long as there is a church; when it ceases, "amen" to the Reorganization. It is a part of the gospel, and will last as long as any of the principles.
Not only in the financial field, but also in the moral and spiritual, has our present system been productive. Glad tidings of great joy have been carried to thousands of honest souls. The sick and infirm have reaped unpurchasable blessings. The church has fought its way against the awful odds of misrepresentation and scandal, occasioned by the Brighamite heresy. It has made the name Latter Day Saint honorable, where formerly it was despised and associated with all that is detestable. It has been one of the strongest factors in putting down the abomination of the West, which had nearly smothered the marvelous work and a wonder. It has fought its way into the highest tribunals of the land, and emerged triumphant, with the unimpeachable judicial verdict. Glad tidings of great joy have been carried to thousands of honest souls. The sick and infirm have reaped unpurchasable blessings. The church has been a "producer" of the highest order.

To the "united order" system we are surely, though slowly, tending. It takes time for everything. A heritage in Zion has been the hope of wandering, exiled Israel, ever since the promises were made. That "hope" was made possible in the early days, but frustrated by the unrighteousness of Saints. They were expelled from the country. However, it pleases the Lord to permit a gathering in the regions round about, giving heed to the admonition "carefully gather together" "consistently with the feelings of the people." This work must be gradual, while actual "inheritance" in Zion must be postponed until "firstly let my army become very great," till "the kingdoms of this world may be constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God." Then will factories, industries, and departmental stores be required. Industries always follow settlements—do not precede them.

In the meantime, it seems to me that the predominant purpose of the church should be to "go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." This "work" is of "increased magnitude and importance—the field so white unto the harvest" that it requires our first attention. The duty of "prosecuting the work of preaching with the warning voice, baptizing, organizing, and setting in order, then pushing their ministry into other fields until the world is warned" has been, and ought to be, the ruling passion of the church.

It is in this way, Brother Editor, as I understand it, that the armies of Israel will become "very great." I do not think we have anything to fear about the financial or social aspect of our church; God can and will convert the "forces of the Gentiles" and that will include their finances. He has decreed, and it will come to pass, "the abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee... and the sons of the stranger shall build up thy walls and their kings shall minister unto thee."

It is to be hoped that the purpose and mission of the church to the world will not be interfered with by an over-indulgent desire on the part of some longing for rest within the walls of an unready Zion.

Respectfully,

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

STATISTICS CONCERNING THE CONCENTRATION OF WEALTH.

In harmony with what has already been referred to in the last few numbers of the HERALD regarding the reasons why there should be a Zion or a place of refuge for those who will not take up the sword against their neighbor when the days of tribulation come, I submit herewith a few facts regarding the concentration of wealth, which is regarded by many as one of the factors that will eventually bring about the perilous times.

Thomas G. Shearman, in the Forum, 1889, said that within thirty years the United States will be substantially owned by less than one in five hundred of the male population.

Persia perished when one per cent of the people owned all the land. Egypt went down when two per cent owned ninety-seven hundredths of all the wealth. Babylon died when two per cent owned all the wealth. Rome expired when eighteen hundred men possessed the then known world. (Philosophy of Mutuation, Parsons.) One eighth of the families in America receive more than half of the aggregate income, and the richest one per cent receives a larger income than the poorest fifty per cent. In fact, this small class of wealthy property owners receives from property alone as large an income as half of our people receive from property and labor. (Distribution of Wealth, Charles B. Spahr.)

Cleveland Moffitt says in Wilshire's Magazine that the wealth of J. D. Rockefeller and his family is estimated at a thousand million dollars.

In the following statistics the first ten mentioned includes J. D. Rockefeller, A. Carnegie, the late M. Field, W. K. Vanderbilt, J. J. Astor, J. P. Morgan, R. Sage, J. J. Hill, W. A. Clark, and William Rockefeller:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>NUMBER OF FORTUNES</th>
<th>AMOUNT</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>$2,000,000,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>400</td>
<td>$2,000,000,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4500</td>
<td>$10,000,000,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5000</td>
<td>$15,000,000,000</td>

So that five thousand men in this country actually own (without counting what they control) nearly one sixth of our entire national wealth, money, land, mines, buildings, industries, everything, which sixth if put into gold would give them all the gold in the world and leave more than nine thousand million dollars still owing them. Experts in financial statistics say that by 1960 we are assured the national wealth that seems so enormous now (say a hundred billions in 1905) will have increased to nearly a thousand billions, and by 1990 to over two thousand billions. Nearly two thirds of this vast income in our national wealth will be permanently absorbed by a few thousand very rich families.

Therefore, these conclusions show that the rich as a class will grow richer, and the mass of common people will have practically nothing; still hundreds of thousands with bitter toil will barely secure the necessities of life, and millions will be crushed and broken in the struggle.

So, if present conditions continue, we can see in the picture of the near future, on the one side wealth, affluence, luxury, and on the other poverty, misery, and want. And these conditions will prevail until the great day of the Lord. Things will continue to get worse, not better, until the sayings or conditions prevail spoken by James 5: 1-6:

Go to now ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten [by reason that none will have the means to buy who need such garments]. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, [because none can borrow it as they will have nothing to give as security] and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, [did your labor, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter. Ye have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you.

The above conditions prevail in Russia to-day. It can be but a short time until the same conditions will prevail in this country. Then look out, for the common people here are more enlightened as to the true conditions than the Russians. Stand ye in holy places. Lay up treasures in heaven where moth and rust doth not corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal. W. L. Gorton.

them the prophet Malachi asking them to return in these words:

Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts. But ye say, Wherein shall we return? Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings.

Are we bringing our tithe into the storehouse of the Lord and thereby receiving as obedient children the approval of a loving Father? Let us consider seriously, “for what a man soweth that shall he also reap.”

The missionaries cannot accomplish the work of redeeming Zion alone: it needs the cooperation of all, and therefore let us see to it before God that we keep his law, and do his will that we may enjoy our rest in Zion redeemed.

The Home.

The home should be recognized as a divine institution, ordained of God’s love as the institution for which all others-state, church, workshop, school—exist. We are in sad danger, it seems to me, of turning things upside down, of making that the chief thing in life which is only secondary and auxiliary.

We talk about a life-work, life-task, life-missions with easy flippancy, gliding unconsciously away from the chief task which God has laid upon the most of us, the perfection of human society in and through the power of the home. Doubtless there are those to whom God has denied the joy of this task. One gathers from the words of Saint Paul that there were moments when he felt more keenly this sacrifice than all the others incident to his mission. Yet even those who have no such “portion under the sun” would labor and suffer in vain if the home should perish from the face of the earth.

For the true measure of civilization—and Christianity is only a celestial civilization slowly working itself out upon the earth—the true measure of any civilization is found, not in its legislation, nor in its architecture, not in its poetry, nor in its politics, not in its industry and its commerce, nor even in its schools and churches, but in the extent to which all of them are made to contribute to the perfection of the family and the glory of the home.—Selected.

Mothers’ Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Be noble and the nobleness that lies
In other men, sleeping, but never dead,
Will rise in majesty to meet thine own.

We live in deeds, not years, in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
We should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

Sister Walker: I send you the following from the Epworth Herald. It points a lesson that should be more strenuously urged on those who have the young in charge. It is a lesson indeed that ought to be laid to heart by all who profess to follow Christ, whether old or young. The loose, heedless lives of some are more hurtful to the cause we love than anything in Utahism.

It is where the Saints sense the spiritual importance and meaning of the work, endeavoring to carry it out in life and deportment, that the work makes progress among the world’s people and gainsayers, winning respect for the doctrines by the fruits of a righteous life:

"AN EMINENT AMERICAN ABROAD.

"Our missionaries in Japan speak with enthusiasm in their recent correspondence of the visit to that country of the Honorable William J. Bryan. His presence has been wonderfully helpful in their work. Ordinarily the American traveler in the far East has not received unstinted praise from those who are devoting their lives to the establishment of the kingdom. These travelers have little or no time for the missionary, and even if they are professed Christians they are quite likely to fall under the influence of the atmosphere of the country and do things that are not particularly creditable to the followers of Jesus Christ. It is the easiest thing in the world to be faithless to one’s Christian profession when traveling in foreign lands.

"But Mr. Bryan has been true to the cause of Jesus Christ in his travels; and in Japan, where fine example counts for so much in these days, his presence has been of great inspiration. It has been a moral and religious tonic. He has spoken frequently and always with dignity and telling effect. His magnificent address on ‘The Prince of Peace’ has made a profound impression in every direction. The latest reports speak of Mr. Bryan’s visitations in the Philippines, where he is making a similar impression for Christian character and for fidelity as a witness for Jesus Christ.”

A fine example of Christian life truly counts for so much, not only abroad, but at home as well; and with Latter Day Saints who have so much unjust prejudice to live down it is more pertinent than to others perhaps.

The Wickedness of Growing Old.

Let us look steadily at that weary face, and then thank God that he has sent us notice! “That age,” let us say to ourselves, “is skin deep. Horrid, too, of course. And we must give some attention to it, and lessen it in any honest way we can, because nobody wants to be aesthetically unpleasant to anybody else. But real age—that we must be on the watch for! These tired eyes, this dull complexion, are in themselves of slight importance; as warnings they are of enormous importance.” And quickly we will begin to throw up defenses against our subtle foe. Self-examination, the search for symptoms, is the first step.

Are we dull to other people’s anxieties and concerns? Do they bore us? Are we shut up within our own plans and pains, our own pleasures? Hah! Selfishness! The beginning of the end; the first gray hair, so to speak. Are we complacently satisfied with things as they are? Do we resent innovations—automobiles, or servant girls’ unions, or any other new, aesthetically objectionable or materially disturbing thing? Are we contemptuously impatient at change? Stagnation!

Do we feel we are certainly and entirely right in our theories of life and conduct, or even of art or science or amusement? Are we sure that we are the people, and wisdom and religion will die with us? That orthodoxy is our doxy, and heterodoxy is everybody else’s doxy? Intolerance! Blindness, deafness, senility of the soul! Here, then, are the three deadly symptoms of old age: Selfishness—Stagnation—Intolerance. But, happily, we have three defenses, which are invulnerable; if we use them we shall die young, if we live to be a hundred. They are: Sympathy—Progress—Tolerance.—Margaret Deland, in Harper’s Bazar.

Keep Out of the Rut.

To avoid monotony in ourselves we must seek expansion of our ideas and deeds; but only by being mindful of others’ rights and needs. Liberty loses its value without the added grace of tenderness in its action. To grow ourselves in our own way, to satisfy the wishes of those who hold a different ideal from that toward which we are striving—that is the difficulty! And it is only solved by patient love. The home, with its varying interests, can be rendered happy only by learning the secret of the recognition of each other's rights and peculiarities, and that each has a claim to self-development but to a certain point. When sickness, death, or poverty in the home checks further progress in some special line of work, no complaint should be uttered; the inevitable should be accepted in brave silence, with the remembrance that to fight against it is self-destruction. When free growth means only unlimited selfishness, it is an evil to one's self and an annoyance to others.—Kate Gannett Wells.

Alone Again.

On the seventh day of September I was glad to grasp the hand of Elder C. J. Spurlock, who faithfully endured with me the hardships of mountain life and travel, and, with unmurmuring patience beneath his sore afflictions, helped me hold meetings at Liberty Hill, Reform, and Center, where he baptized one; thence to Rose Pond and Martin's Creek. And on the third day of October he left me for his work in the West. I was lonely; for by his chaste conversation, prayerful life, and stirring sermons he had lifted me up. While he is weak in body and reduced in flesh to nearly a shadow, he is a giant in patience, and a tower of spiritual strength and endurance. If Job gets a brighter crown than Jeptha, I think it will be along some other line than patience. He was the pioneer workman in these quarters. He has the respect of all, and the warm love of the Saints. Our united prayers are, God bless C. J. Spurlock.

On the 28th Elder W. P. Pickering joined me and we preached at Ravenden Springs, Oconee, and Sugar Grove, where Elder Pickering baptized one. From there we went to Center, and then to Rose Pond, where I left him and went home to spend Christmas and attend to some writing, such as, annual financial report to the Bishop; quarterly report to sub-missionary in charge; branch president's report to missionary in charge; report to General Historian; solicited communication to president of quorum.

Looking ahead I see at least four more reports to be sent out before April conference. Well, I am glad to see the church determined to keep tab on her workmen.

I did some preaching at Reform, and on New Year's Day I met Elder Pickering at Hardy, where we had arranged to preach in court-house but found it occupied. On the 4th we went across the line to get acquainted with our neighbors and attend the Southern Missouri District conference. We enjoyed a spiritual feast, did considerable preaching; and there in Thayer Branch Elder Pickering baptized four, and left others declaring their intention to obey soon. Yesterday I saw Elder Pickering off for other fields in the Southwest; and again I am left alone.

A more diligent worker than Elder Pickering I think I never met. He has the love of all the Saints; and, what is still better, he enjoys the approbation of God.

While I was at Thayer my wife received and forwarded to me a set of propositions for debate, addressed to “Baldwin, The Mormon,” from some Christian minister in Missouri, whom the people of Center, Arkansas, have secured to represent them; but the letter has not caught up with me yet.

The leafless trees, and the grass and weeds so brown and sere, proclaim that it is winter; but the warm sun, and the rich red color of the chickens' combs, the short-cut cackle of the pullet over her first egg, the low, sweet chirrup of the bluebirds as they come and go, the flocks of robins, and yellowhammers gleaning the berries from the tall black-gums by the spring, make it seem more like summer.

The scream of the hawk is followed by the clamor and chaos of a dozen crows. The great woodcock with his sweethearth, dressed in their gaudy attire, scallop the celestial horizon in quest of fruit and find plenty. Small birds twitter their love-songs beneath the great bunches of mistletoe, and ye missionary finds warm and loving hearts in his mountain-home, but when in the field he is again alone. And the aggressiveness of this work makes me feel keenly the need of a companion.

Not a church in this whole country is open to the angel's message. And where'er I go I am considered a vile aggressor. No matter how exclusively one confines his preaching to the affirmative, it is considered that he has made a vile, insolent assault on sacred things. And so the clergy feel that it is their duty to do something mean. No matter how you ignore their existence, you may never mention or even think of them, yet if you preach the gospel they are insulted! Why is this so? Answer.—The gospel is a most thorough and complete impeachment of their nothingness. God has given them no message to bear to the world, and when they discover that we are sent with the glad tidings, they, like Cain, are angry.

No less than a half dozen times have they threatened me with personal violence. This gives license to their followers under the cover of night to besmear my saddle with excrement, cut the straps, saw the foot-log and source me in the creek, shower me with eggs, pry up the window so that they could cut and daub my chart, disfigure my pony, slander my character, and lay various secret plans for my destruction; but as long as God has a work for me to do, their plans will continue to be thwarted, and when he wants me on the other side of the river I am just as willing to take passage in the craft that bears the name Martyrdom as the one sailing under the title of Disease, or Accident, or Exhausion.

I have lodged in court-houses and in schoolhouses, in hovels and in stables. I have slept on the naked floor, on benches, and on the ground. I have been insulted, turned out of doors, hooted at, and cursed. I have been shabbily clad and penniless. My hair has grown more white, but the foregoing is not responsible for that fact. I desire to show you

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE MATTER.

I have found a few warm friends, solicitous for my welfare, outside of the church who “shall in no wise lose their reward.” I have been received and supported and sustained by the few scattered Saints. I have suffered less aches and pains than in any period of my life. I actually feel younger than when I became an itinerant. I have been made to feel my relationship with the lowly Nazarene. I have been directed by the Spirit in my work. I have been forewarned of dangers, and of fierce opposition; and been made to see that he who has called me to his work is mightier than all who can be against it.

My love for God and his Saints has multiplied. At times my love has been so increased for those who have mistreated me that I could shed tears for them, but simply could not cleanse my feet against them.

My conception of heavenly things has become more acute. I have enjoyed seasons of supreme peace, so that to-day I esteem the present remuneration of ten thousand times the value of all my beggarly efforts of the past. And it gives me a mighty and strong desire to continue working together with God for the emancipation of the race from spiritual darkness and from the galling bonds of competition and strife.

different places—two schoolhouses and two private homes—in all thirty times, and baptized one, Dora I. Campbell.

In one place there was an exhibition of bad manners, and very close to rowdiness, but at all places some paid the strictest attention to what I had to say. At Rock Creek Schoolhouse, about fifteen miles from Spencer, we had the best attendance, and the young people did well in singing. We held sixteen meetings there. It is practically a new place. Bro. I. N. Roberts preached there a number of years ago, but there are almost entirely new people now. I succeeded in getting a Sunday-school home class of six started at the home of Bro. B. C. Rookers, also several subscriptions for church publications.

Sr. Mary Putman has been confined to her bed since last October, with what seems to be paralysis of one limb, and other complications, which baffles the skill of the physician. We administered to her several times, and have spent many hours in reading for her. The trouble has affected her eyes some. She bears her afflictions patiently, and all that kind hearts can do for her comfort is being cheerfully done.

I have been received and treated with great kindness by members and nonmembers and several will have a number of cups of cold water to their credit. I have requests to go to Letcher and Kidder, and will go to the former to-morrow, and hope to reach them both and also Hudson before General Conference.

During the summer a letter from one of the missionaries in the central West deploring the lack of missionaries appeared in the Herald, saying there were only four for sixteen counties. You were born under a lucky star, brother; there is only one here for forty-six counties, as my partner's field is so large he has not got to this little corner yet. It takes from two to six years for the missionary in this field to get around to see if any of the seed that has been sown is growing.

While we are all earnestly praying, thinking, writing, and planning for the building up of Zion, we should be very careful not to become extremists, and injure the very work that we are anxious to see accomplished. We must not be too anxious to have our views carried out; but that God's plans shall prevail. It will be well if we all remember what is here extracted from documents that ought to have great weight with us.

"In regard to the gathering and the work of the bishopric, in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church thereto. To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric, should be acceded to."—Doctrine and Covenants 120:10.

"That no religious corporation can be established in this State, except such as may be created under a general law, for the purpose only of holding the title to real estate as may be prescribed by law for church edifices, parsonages, and cemeteries."—Section 8, article 2, of the State Constitution of Missouri; also Judge John T. Philips in Temple Lot Suit, p. 10.

Possibly some of our readers will remember the trouble that the people in Utah got into with Zion's cooperative institution. The property was escheated to the State and it was used for public education.

"Behold, if my servants and my handmaidens, of the different organizations for good among my people, shall continue in righteousness, they shall be blessed, even as they bless others of the household of faith."—Doctrine and Covenants 117:12.

If the "men folks" will let the sisters alone in regard to bazaars and sewing societies, it will be an exhibition of good common sense that will be a good example worthy of emulation. If it were not for what the Sunday-school children and the sisters are doing, the missionaries and their families would often go unprovided for. If the Presidency and Bishopric find no cause for condemnation, others better leave them alone. When we can not find enough in the books to guide us, we better go to God for direction, and not to ancient and modern writers on economic and social questions, whose writings are only the wisdom of men, which may be foolishness with God.

EDWARD RANNIE.

FAR WEST, Missouri, January 29, 1906.

Editors Herald: Our little branch (known as the Far West Branch) is still struggling on. We are fully convinced that our church-building was erected at just the proper time. It is all ready to paint, and to paper inside as soon as spring comes.

I baptized five here during the past year. Two of these have had to go elsewhere, but the remaining three are with us and are good members. We usually have large crowds at our night meetings. Last night Bro. S. H. Simmons, our branch priest, gave us instruction that was beyond his natural power to do. We hope the Lord will continue to remember us here as in time past, as he has helped us through some severe trials. I love to read the letters from old Gallands Grove and vicinity.

FRED B. SHUMATE.

OSTERDOCK, Iowa, February 1, 1906.

Editors Herald: Have not seen any news items from this direction for some time, so write to let you and your many readers know that we are striving to keep in the front ranks in the battle of truth against error and are endeavoring as Bro. McKiernan puts it, to "do all the good we can to all the people we can." We are doing our best to cultivate the old garden patches as well as plow up new, and as a result can see, we think, a better spiritual condition in some of the branches, although there is plenty of room for improvement yet.

In regard to new openings, we have made quite a few, the gospel flag being unfurled and firmly planted in Chatounga. Iron Hills, Nashville, Baldwin, and this place is practically new. Just after New Year's, Bro. J. B. Wildermuth sent for me to come and assist him here, as he was busily engaged in a series of meetings and had also been challenged by a retired Methodist Episcopal preacher, who wanted to debate so badly that the following propositions were signed:

"1. Resolved, That it is unscriptural and erroneous to teach that immersion is the only scriptural mode of literal water baptism. Reverend Latta affirms. Elder Wildermuth denies.

"2. Resolved, That it is scriptural and logical to teach that the church of Christ should, at the present day, conform in organization, doctrine, and practice, to the church organized by Jesus and his apostles nearly nineteen hundred years ago. Wildermuth affirms. Latta denies." The old gentleman, who boasted of his Greek and Latin, struggled through the first proposition, although people prejudiced against us said it was evident he was no match for Bro. Wildermuth. But on the second, he flatly refused to debate unless we would agree to let him bring in the Book of Mormon and Joe Smith. As we could not do this, for it was evident to all that he just wanted to abuse us, and as there was a large crowd who wanted a debate, I took the other side for one evening and the way we debated was a caution. Bro. Wildermuth did not beat me quite so badly as he did Latta, but I acknowledge my defeat, and some way I do not feel so bad about it either.

The little controversy has helped our work greatly, and people are brushing the dust of years off their Bibles, and poor old Bro. Latta is looking as if he had lost his last friend.

Yours in the faith,

FRED B. FARR.

Dear Herald: I preached the first sermon here by our people on the 21st. Quite an interest is manifested, and the field seems white to harvest. No less than two Methodist churches closed within about four miles of each other. The Presbyterian priest, as usual, warned the people, and said there was no room for any more churches here. The people said, No, there was not—of the kind they had. I enjoy unusual light and liberty in presenting the word. There is a good deal of snow to contend against, making it very hard to get around. However, I am visiting nearly every day, and as a rule I am able to attend the meetings during the week, as the men are all busy with their teams in the woods, lumbering. I am staying at the home of Sr. Cambell, formerly of Lapear County, Michigan. St. Joseph is a small island in the North Channel, and is twenty miles in length and twelve miles wide. The inhabitants seem to be thrifty and industrious, and many have beautiful homes. Their chief industry outside of farming is lumbering, and farmers and all are busily engaged at this occupation during the winter months.

Yours in Christ,

G. C. TOMLINSON.

Editors Herald: Conditions not much changed here, unless for the worse. Polygamy is lifting its head more boldly, and being defended and, rumor says, entered into quite frequently, various plans being devised to elude the law. One story is related of a zealous old brother whose domestic life was troubled because the wife of his youth would not consent to his getting a divorce so he could marry a young wife and raise another family. His explanation that the divorce would only be a sham and that lots were doing it failed to persuade her.

Recently in a discussion held with a young and zealous brother of the Utah faith, he not only defended polygamy with his might, but also Adam-god doctrine, declaring that Joseph taught the doctrine that “what man is God once was.” This last we had no chance to reply to, it being in the last speech of the debate.

Bro. F. M. Smith is making an impression on many through his articles in the Tribune. Courtesies extended to us by non-Mormons as a result.

Last Sabbath the Reverend Norfleet advertised us to occupy in his pulpit (Methodist) during the morning hour, also divided his evening hour with us. Some prejudices removed as a result.

Byron Street, LEEDERVILLE, West Australia, December 22, 1905.

Dear Herald: This is a new field, and not as yet provided with a laborer to open the gate. A few of us have lately come here from England and Victoria, and have held private meetings, besides doing as much as we could to let our light shine with various success. The darkness here reminds me much of a dense fog. It is hard to get the light to shine far; for the Christian world are playing religion to an alarming extent, while their leaders are good business men and seem to make a commercial success. Secret societies, church dances, sales, raffles, silver-coin concerts, and after-church speeches on such subjects as Ben Hur, take the place of Bible subjects.

The Church of Christ people have been sowing the tares with the true seed from that same filthy barn for a little over a year, and we are getting near the sower, and hope to save a few honest ones from his wiles; for Bro. Hanson, of the missionary force, has called for a time on his way home. But the hirelings are not very courageous when their craft is in danger.

I have been many years in this work, having had the light brought to me in my early life by that kind Saint, C. A. Butterworth, he having traveled very extensively in Australia.

I do not now look forward to a great harvest, for we are beginning to see the testimony following the preaching in some places, and a hardness of heart that is not reassuring. There is also a great unrest among a number of the Saints, and a number are longing for Zion, and the gathering-time. We are only a little band, but our Father blesses us with love and strength in our scattered state, and we are trying in our walk to let our light shine at all slippery crossings, and to beckon others on.

My sincere prayer rises to the Lord, when I look around and see the few among the thousands, and I feel my feeble self cast down; of low estate yet heir to the mighty kingdom. I do not feel worthy to enjoy the lowest office in his church, yet I am not cast off, but have abundant evidence that my every prayer is considered, and few that are not answered. I can remember none just now. I say it to the glory of God, not in boasting.

Yours truly,

JAMES H. MANNING.

Dear Herald: What a source of joy you are to the scattered Saints! No one with the privileges of branch meetings can begin to estimate the blessings the church papers are to us. Here in the city of Lincoln we have a few members, mostly sisters, but have no organization. The members are so widely scattered we can not get together so often as we would like. Bro. C. B. Brown was here for about nine months, and we then tried to hold meetings every Sunday. Since he left we meet every Sunday for Bible study while the weather was good, unless there was some elder with us, then we held sacrament-meeting once a month. Bro. Johnson has helped us greatly. He is very feeble and can not do so much as he desires. May God bless him and his.

Bro. Shirk from Western Nebraska has been in the city about three weeks, having been called here on account of the illness of his son, who is much improved at present. Bro. Shirk has met with the Saints at their homes, and preached for us to-day; had charge of social meeting, and all seemed greatly blessed and encouraged by his kindly sympathy, words of counsel and advice, and were cheered by hearing him tell his experience in church-work. We pray God to bless him and send others like him to help the good Saints in Lincoln. Why can not the missionary force find some way to this city? Is it not as necessary to keep the members encouraged and in order, as to make new members? Jesus said, “Feed my sheep.” The Saints in Lincoln meet at 1621 Poplar Street. Ever praying for the welfare of God’s people, I am, Your sister,

RENA DIEFENDORF.

Editors Herald: Have been specially impressed with the spirit of the HERALD contributions of late. There seems to be an upward move all along the line toward the accomplishment of all the gospel offers to the faithful. The pressing need of the hour is to think less of ourselves and more of our brethren. This is the underlying principle of the redemption of Zion. We are accustomed to saying, We are working for the Lord. In a sense this is true. But while we are laboring for the Lord, it is not because he stands in need of our labors, it is because our fellow man is in need. Every act, deed, or sacrifice we perform is [should be] for the betterment of humanity. How selfish it is for a person to come into the church only to save himself. I trust the agitation will continue until the redemption will take on material form and individualism will be swallowed up in the benevolence of the golden rule.

My discussion with A. M. McVey of the “Church of Christ,” a wing of Campbellism, began January 5 and ended the 17th, twenty sessions in all with satisfactory results for the truth. As usual both sides claim victory, but the only ones to render fair judgment in such matters are the outsiders. And permitting them to render the decision we have gained a "decided victory." At the close of the debate they publicly read us another challenge. We told them we were perfectly well satisfied with the results, but if they wanted any more they would be accommodated, as per instructions of minister in charge. They seemed to feel the smart of defeat, for they told us they would not take us to another congregation of theirs. We informed them if we did any debating there would be two at least, one among their people and one among ours.

The two factions among them have long been fighting each other, even to the locking one another out of the building. But when it came to opposing the truth, Pilate- and Herod-like, they joined hands and were made friends. My opponent had eight or ten preachers assisting him, while there were only three of us, and only two part of the time.

Elder McVey was very abusive and unfair in his effort to save his craft. He was simply an echo of Bays, Braden, Handcock, and Neal; but his unfair methods were freely exposed to the satisfaction of almost all the people. He would misrepresent us nearly every time he read our literature. He became so disgusting to the people that when he got up to speak many would leave the building. Others would bring books and papers and read during his talks.

While McVey and all his preachers were leaving town with bag and baggage, the neighbors were busy (just across the street from the church where the debate was held) with teams, hale and hearty, loading boxes, and brushes, setting us up in a nice place in a large store-room to continue meetings, which Bro. Long and myself occupied for nearly two weeks with excellent success. On Sunday we baptized one of the best ladies of the place, who received our message with gladness, Mr. Williams, her noble husband, encouraging her to move right on, saying he would soon follow her. Many more are near the door, and say they will obey when we return in the spring. We had large crowds almost every session, some coming for fifteen miles. Several from Stockport attended part of the time, became much interested, and have guaranteed us a large crowd if we will open up there on our return. We shall do so.

On entering the place prejudice was so great that at first no one stood by us, some going so far as to go to the hotel-keeper and to try to prevail on him not to keep us. But he informed them that he was there for that business, and our money was as good as anybody's. We take this means of thanking the Saints of Ironton, Creola, and Highland for coming to our rescue in a time of need. We hope more of the Saints will see that free-will offering in various ways is just as much of a command as tithing. To be in a strange place among strangers, with prejudice sky-high, a daily board bill running up, and nothing in the pocket to meet it, a little offering makes the elder feel "mighty good."

I would like to make special mention of all those who assisted us in our meetings. A nobler class of people can not be found anywhere.

The following is a statement drawn up and signed by thirty-three citizens of the neighborhood. More would have signed it had they been seen:

"To Whom it May Concern: We the undersigned, non-members of the Latter Day Saints and citizens of Penn township, do hereby express our hearty sympathy for the representatives of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

"The debate just closed between Elder F. J. Ebeling of the above-named church and the so-called Church of Christ, defended by A. M. McVey, was a decided victory for the Reorganized Church. We commend the honorable, gentlemanly, and Christian manner in which Mr. Ebeling conducted his side of the question. It was able, forcible, and instructive. On the other hand we condemn in unmeasured terms the unfair, disgusting, and ungentlemanly methods adopted by Mr. A. M. McVey.

"We welcome the representatives of the Reorganized Church to our community at any time. The labored efforts of the self-styled Church of Christ to connect those men, in any way, with the doctrine of polygamy, have only made them friends, and proved the weakness of Mr. McVey and his friends.

"We hereby voluntarily attach our signatures that truth and justice may prevail.

We may have use for this in the future, should they claim victory in the next conflict, as they usually do.

While reading the letters from Bro. and Sr. Becker, my mind crossed the rolling waters on the swift wings of imagination to their lonely home in the great city of Hamburg. How lonely they must be at times! What a great change in our environment a few years will make! Backward my mind flew to the pleasant little village of Byerville, recounting the happy experiences in their pleasant home. "Addie and Anna," as you are familiarly known to us, the same sun and moon which shed their cheering rays upon the fair fields of Ohio shine upon you in your far-away home among strangers. And the same God who sent his Holy Spirit into your heart, making hallowed some places in your native State, is just as near to you in the Fatherland. Be of good cheer. Rest will come, sure and sweet, to those who labor in the vineyard of the Lord.

I would not forget to mention the valuable assistance rendered me by Brn. U. W. Greene and E. E. Long in the debate referred to. Bro. Long acted as my moderator, and is not afraid to say his piece when necessary. Doctor Campbell was chairman and was fair and honorable. He won our respect.

The work still moves on encouragingly in this district. The greatest interest here I have ever seen. It seems the entire neighborhood has caught the spirit of the work. Three have been baptized, and others near the kingdom,—the best people of the place. Much credit is due Brn. Munson and Hill. Bro. Greene is holding meetings at Creola; two baptized last Sunday, and others about to follow.

Bro. Devore baptized two at Columbus Sunday; has made some new openings in the city. I baptized a daughter-in-law of Bro. and Sr. David Greene Monday. Bro. U. W. Greene and myself expect to go to Ironton Monday; from there I may go into Kentucky for the remainder of the conference year. New openings all around. None need be idle.

Hopefully in the conflict,

F. J. Ebeling.

Hopkinsville, Kentucky, February 5, 1906.

Editors Herald: Have been reading the SAIN'TS' HERALD and Zion's Ensign for over one year, and must truly say those church papers are the best Christian papers I ever read. And to the Saints who are faithful in Christ, Grace be to you all, and peace from the Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ.

The people here say that Elder Graves preaches a new doctrine; and at first, dear Saints, the writer also thought the gospel, I one good thing in him, he always tells the people where to find chapter and verse. Before I saw Elder Graves preaching the gospel, I find one good thing in him, he always tells the people where to find chapter and verse. Before I saw Elder Graves preaching the gospel, I find one good thing in him, he always tells the people where to find chapter and verse. Before I saw Elder Graves preaching the gospel, I find one good thing in him, he always tells the people where to find chapter and verse. Before I saw Elder Graves preaching the gospel, I find one good thing in him, he always tells the people where to find chapter and verse.
The work is advancing in the Northwest and the honest in heart are being gathered out of Babylon. Since our last letter to the Herald I have labored in several different places. Bro. Griffiths thought best to send me to the Spokane District, and so I went to that district. Preached in Sagle, Idaho, also Garfield Bay. Found some noble Saints in that region of country, but could not get many out to hear the truth, so after trying for a few nights returned to Spokane, somewhat discouraged. There I found some faithful Saints in the persons of Bro. and Sr. Fishel, also Bro. and Sr. Brown. We immediately began work. I preached eighteen times and then went to a logging-camp and preached seven times. Returned and preached a few more sermons, and as a result baptized six noble people. I returned to Seattle, and finding Bro. N. C. Enge there, we both returned to Humptulips, where Bro. Enge confirmed those I had baptized. We preached several times and baptized seven more of the best people of the town, some of whom were very bitter against us when we first began to preach, but saw they were making a mistake and repented as the apostle Paul did. I can see the Lord’s hand in this work as some of the things told me in my patriarchal blessing have been fulfilled to the very letter, and it seems it was necessary for me to go to the eastern part of the State for some of it to be fulfilled. I am trying in my weakness to bring men and women to a knowledge of the truth. In my year’s work I have reasons to rejoice, for the Master has been with me, both in discouraging times, and when success has come to me. I truly hope those I have been instrumental in bringing into the work will prove themselves worthy of the name they bear and live so as to receive God’s choicest blessings at all times. There will be trials in their pathway. It is but natural there should be. But let us overcome, so that when the Lord comes to reward his people, we may be accounted worthy to receive of his blessings, and receive of his glory.

Ever praying for the advancement of the work, I remain,

Yours in bonds,

L. G. Holloway.

IONIA, MICHIGAN, February 7, 1906.

Editors Herald: After leaving Marcellus I visited the few Saints at Kalamazoo and Mattawan, then went to Jackson. Found a welcome from Bro. E. C. Mehlisich who resides at 409 North Webster Street, also from Bro. Ray Frisbee and their families, who with a few other Saints living in and near the city are very zealously engaged trying to get the gospel before the people. On the 21st of January administered the sacrament and preached three times to Saints and a few others who accepted the invitation of Bro. Mehlisich to attend services at his residence. We also held four services during the week, and on Friday went to Lansing, where I was met the next day by Brm. S. W. L. Scott and Francis Granger. On the 28th we organized a branch which the Saints chose to christen the Capitol City Branch of Lansing. Bro. Charles H. Fish was ordained priest and chosen to preside; Bro. Joseph Dexter, priest; George W. St. John, teacher; and Bro. John L. Roark was ordained teacher and chosen to assist Bro. St. John. Sr. Nellie J. Kutt was chosen secretary, and
Bro. J. J. Kutt, treasurer. The branch has now an enrollment of forty-eight members, twenty-one having been members of the Lansing Branch, and twelve members of the Dimondale Branch, both of which were disorganized several years since.

The brethren have secured a commodious hall, almost under the shadow of the capitol building, being located at 114 Washington Street, where thirteen services have been held since the 28th, Bro. W. L. Scott doing the preaching. The attendance of outsiders was not large; but some are interested. Bro. Scott remains there, and will probably hold cottage-meetings in remote parts of the city during the week-day evenings, and at the hall next Sunday. We spent a large portion of the days during the week in the State and Carnegie libraries, finding much matter that is of interest to Saints. I will send a few items from a Jewish encyclopedia which may be published if you think advisable. I expect to go to Belding soon.

Yours in the good cause,
A. S. COCHRAN.

Excerpts from Jewish encyclopedia, under heading, "Jerusalem":
"Up to 1837, the number of Jews in the Holy City was very small. . . . The earthquake at Safed and Tiberias in 1837 caused many to move southward, and this gave the first impetus to the Jewish colony at Jerusalem. The next great movement towards Jerusalem occurred in connection with the persecutions in Russia; and since then the growth of the community has been extraordinary—from 3,000 in 1837 to 29,000 in 1903. Russia, Roumania, Messopotamia, Morocco, and Yemen each furnished a quota to the new Jewish community of Jerusalem."

The population of the city was 46,500; 29,000 Jews, 8,500 Moslems, 9,000 Christians.

"Modern commerce:
"West of Jordan the main products of Palestine are grapes and oranges, and in the vicinity of Safed, olives and olive-oil. Grain is produced principally in the south, Gaza being the center of the barley country; . . . Palestinian olives and olive-oil are equal, if not superior to the Italian products; but the growers lack facilities for purifying the oil and extracting its bitterness. Sesame, which produces a sweet oil, is much appreciated by the natives, and is exported in large quantities to France. The largest item of export is oranges from the groves at Jaffa. From October, 1898, to April, 1899, 338,000 boxes containing 50,000,000 oranges were exported. The center of viticulture is Hebron, where the oldest and best wines are found; but since the Jewish colonies were established, the center of that industry has been removed to Rishon-le-ziyyon near Jaffa, where the Rothschild wine-presses are located. The export of wines and cognac is chiefly from the Rothschild vineyard. The Palestinian wine received the gold medal at the Paris Exposition in 1900. In 1900, 385,000 pounds of wool were exported. The silk produced in northern Palestine (Syria) exceeds 5,000,000 pounds. Exports for 1899 amounted to 316,150 pounds sterling, or $1,530,166, the largest item for that year being soap, which is manufactured from olive-oil."

Dear Saints: I have been a member for two years, and am trying to do all I can for my Lord Jesus Christ. And as there are many ways one can do good, I will try to describe some homesteads in my locality to any one who wishes to write for information. I do not want you to take me to be a land agent; but I want to get a settlement of Saints here, as I have a homestead here myself. There are nine Saints here now with myself. I am not much of a Saint myself, just trying to be one. This is timbered land, but there is no sale for the timber at present. It is a well-watered country, springs on almost every quarter-section. Long winters, and short summers. The snow comes on about Christmas, and goes off in March. It is a fine hay country; and almost every kind of small grain can be raised, also vegetables. Mostly black soil; some stone in places, rolling or mountainous. I will give further information to any one who wishes to write me. STEPHEN DRAZAY.

Dear Herald: As I hardly ever see anything from Tunnelhill Branch, I will try to write a few lines. I have made up my mind to do better this year than I have done in the past. I am deprived of any church privileges, only hearing the good tidings through the Herald and Gospel Trumpet; and I am so glad to get them. I have a lady friend who belongs to the Christian Church, and whom I believe to be a good, religious woman. We were talking about our belief, and she said: "Well, you know I don't know much about the Latter Day Saints, but don't believe in going from one church to another." I said, "No, unless you are in the wrong way." Her husband is a good, honest, moral man, does not belong to any church, but seems to believe the latter-day work. He was up ready to leave, and said, "I wish one of those Latter Day Saint preachers would come to Cobden and preach in the hall." I handed him Mr. Higdon's picture with the Latter Day Saint belief. He just stopped and said, "That is what I want to see," and sat down. As he read he would say, "That's all right," and his wife would sanction it, till he came to the Joe Smith part. He stopped and I do not know what he thought.

I would be glad if a preacher would come to Anna, but do not know whether he could get any place here to preach or not, people are so down on "Mormons," as they call them. There are so many conversions around here of different denominations; but that does not change me a bit.

Your weak but earnest sister,
MRS. F. M. COONCE.

MANSFIELD, Missouri, January 30, 1906.

Editors Herald: Consulting with Bro. J. T. Davis, sub-minister in charge of this district, I prevailed upon him to come and assist in opening up the work in this vicinity. Prejudice and opposition have run high against us here, but Bro. Davis has been able with the assistance of the Spirit to break down a great deal of it; and we are having good crowds and fine interest. Some are believing so far, and others investigating—one a Missionary Baptist preacher. He and others bought copies of the Book of Mormon, and more orders were received last night. Satan has tried to destroy our efforts, and, failing to do so through opposition, he suddenly seized Bro. Davis in his power early this morning. The distress of body was so great that it seemed as though he would die, but he sent for me and we humbly bowed in prayer, then anointed and administered to our brother, and in the name of Jesus the Christ rebuked the evil power, and it immediately left. It was but a short time until he was sleeping quietly. Truly we are thankful that we have such a kind heavenly Father, and one who will not suffer his work to be thrown down by the adversary. Still hoping and praying that the honest in heart, everywhere, may have the chance to hear this beautiful gospel, and the courage to obey the same, I am,

Your brother in Christ,
W. P. BUCKLEY.

TORONTO, Ontario, Canada, February 6, 1906.

Editors Herald: That this fair city of two hundred and sixty-five thousand inhabitants,—erstwhile the home of the Mississauga Indians, and which once formed the southern boundary of the far more numerous and powerful Ojibway Indians' hunting-grounds,—should now form the mise en scene of a great religious awakening, is a fact no less interesting to the antiquarian than to the lover of God's glorious message and erangel in these latter days of “Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men.”

Elder Archie McLean’s facile pen has portrayed in your recent columns a brief and virile sketch of the situation of affairs here in Toronto but the portrait (though, as far as it goes, truthful and accurate) is nevertheless an incomplete one, inasmuch as it excludes—with characteristic reticence and modesty—all mention of the important and valuable position and part taken by Elder McLean himself in the very inception and initiation of these Sunday-night opera-house lectures of President R. C. Evans, which have, without the slightest exaggeration, stirred and aroused the city of Toronto to its very depths.

It goes, of course, without saying, that our respected Bro.
Evans’ potential personality and incredible swiftness of thought and fluency of speech, form the central figure in this pleasing initiation of these Sunday-night opera-house lectures of President R. C. Evans, which have, without the slightest exaggeration, stirred and aroused the city of Toronto to its very depths.

It, goes, of course, without saying, that our respected Bro.
Evans’ potential personality and incredible swiftness of thought
and fluency of speech, form the central figure in this pleasing

The strange, wonderful, nay, even marvelous spectacle of an immense concourse of people, many of them obviously ladies and gentlemen of cultivation and refinement, struggling earnestly and energetically for entrance to a lecture upon the Book of Mormon, is a sight that in my twenty-five years’

The “wiflind’s mite” went into the collection side by side with the dollars or scores of dollars of the more fortunately situated in this world’s goods. Several brethren at once commenced to employ themselves in the construction and distribution, in all the important centers,—of notice-boards announcing the lectures. Others acted as ushers at the theater. Sisters sacrificed, and actively assisted in the preparation of concerts and other pleasant and interesting festivals intended to augment the opera-house lecture fund. Others commenced an active, aggressive, and vigorous house-to-house or shop-to-shop canvass, with the object of getting the announcements (containing Elder Evans’ photograph) placed in all the shop windows or banks, or in other prominent places of business. Elder Evans’ own labors have been simply herculean; for besides the great stress of speaking in a building calculated to seat more than two thou­sand people, he has been perpetually busy answering the vast and numerous inquiries (oral or written) of a population stirred as surely no other population has been stirred, by the announcement that an angelic being from heaven has visited earth’s mundane sphere, and commissioned man to preach the eternal and everlasting gospel.

The strange, wonderful, nay, even marvelous spectacle of an immense concourse of people, many of them obviously ladies and gentlemen of cultivation and refinement, struggling earnestly and energetically for entrance to a lecture upon the Book of Mormon, is a sight that in my twenty-five years’ experience of this beautiful and heaven-born gospel of the Son of man, I have never yet seen surpassed, or even equaled.

Laying aside the personal equation, and making every allowance for the high esteem and respect which all Canadians feel for the popular lecturer, laying aside the personal element, and every other adjunct that will help to originate or augment a crowd in any large city such as Toronto, there yet remains the residual and incontestable fact that more than two thousand persons not only struggled for places in a great opera-house to witness—what? Some melodramatic and soul-stirring play, teeming with situations in which the very audience holds its breath with wonder, or terror, or amaze? No! Some marvelously grand performance of Handel’s “Messiah”; or “Samson”; or “Jephthah”; or Mendelssohn’s “Elijah” or “St. Paul”? No! Some profound and eloquent discourse by the astronomer royal, in which the marvels and mysteries of Stella, or Saturn, or Jupiter, or Aldebaran were to be held up and expounded, with all the grand accompaniment of modern astronomical science and research, to a thrilled and awe-inspired congregation of men and women? No! Simply a lecture upon the Book of Mormon, the record of dead, long-lost, and world-forgotten peoples! The book, the very name of which less than twenty years ago would have evoked hisses of derision, and storms of angry and envenomed scorn and denunciation!

Seated upon the platform amongst my beloved and respected Canadian brethren and sisters comprising the large choir, it was a life’s education, a world of experience to watch the eager, animated countenances of those vast throngs; alert to every movement, every thought, every expression, nay, every gesture of the lecturer.

How, when the beneficent, loving, and affectionate nature of the All father, who “loveth his children, and willeth not that any should perish,” was powerfully and eloquently proclaimed in opposition to the eternal “hell-fire and brimstone” theory of Torrey and Alexander, (two revivalists who have been laboring in this city,) the entire audience (after a brief pause of intense emotion) burst into thunders of applause. How, when the speaker, in vivid and fiery phrases, sternly denounced all such doctrines of literal, never-ending fiery torment, as a “libel upon God”! and an outrage upon humanity (let alone divinity) the entire audience applauded with a vigor and enthusiasm which left no mortal doubt as to the depth of their convictions, or the sincerity of their emotions!

These, I say, are sights and sounds that will remain with me “While life or thought or being last,

Or immortality endures.”

And oftentimes I wonder, “What will the harvest be?”

I was both pleased and gratified to see in the choir at these great gatherings the beloved and respected partner of Elder Evans. I believe, too, his only daughter was there also, and I could not help reflecting: What more beautiful, more fitting, or more appropriate than that they who have patiently and faithfully shared in the conflicts, the trials, the difficulties of a husband and of a father, should also participate in the triumph and blessing which will, nay, must assuredly crown Elder Evans’ long and strenuous exertions with an abundant harvest of glory and of success.

May we also speedily hear of the complete restoration of our aged and esteemed President Joseph Smith, and may he and his son long continue (with our beloved Bro. Evans) to guide and lead the van of the onward march of Zion’s great army, till condict shall be swallowed up in victory, and until the weak faith of but a small and fitful sublunary radiance shall be lost in the mighty effulgence of the celestial glory: for it is written: “His glory is brighter than the sun.”

“Who shall describe the joys that rise
Through all the courts of paradise;
To see a child of God return,
To see an heir of glory born?”

Your brother in hope of that glorious consummation,

F. R. TUBB.

FULTON, Kentucky, February 7, 1906.

Editors Herald: We hope for a prosperous year in the gospel cause, and I do not see why it should not be, if all the ministers thereof would set about the work with a “will to do something,” rather than merely to put in their time. It seemed to me that men who are to administer the gospel of Jesus Christ should nearer imitate patterns which are described in the New Testament, such as John the Baptist. We have no

www.LatterDayTruth.org
evidence that John left home and laid around some "old branch," or among his "kin," or anywhere else in order to report that he was gone so long, and the like. We have no account of his grappling about his "wife's allowance," or his "expense money," or anything like that; but the evidence is that he did "with his might" that which God sent him to do. Paul is another example very much worthy of present-day imitation. Neither of these fellows had a wife or family to receive an allowance from the church; but some of the ministers did. But it seemed that their trust was in God and their zeal was to build up his righteousness in the earth. "Never heard of any of them threatening to "quit the field" if their wife's money did not come right along, when perhaps they were getting about twice as much allowed for their family as they could make "fishing" or working on shares, or any other way. We could not do any better than keep our eye on the "written word," and try to imitate the examples referred to above. As Christ is the head of the church, so should men be the head of their family, and should rule over it, and the wife should not influence the husband any more than the church did its head or ruler, that is, if Christ is the head and ruler of that "husband."

We should all be careful that we be not an obstacle of hindrance to the general progress of God's cause in the world. And of course those who put themselves up for teachers and examples should be especially full of care. My love is for God's cause and his people.

J. W. WILLIAMS.

Independence Items.

We have had the pleasure, although amid many sad experiences of the past few weeks occasioned by the deaths of a few of our number, of listening to the word of encouragement and instruction from several of the elders from abroad.

Our dear sisters, Mary A. Mooney of Englewood, who died on the 15th, and Nancy Winslow on the 26th of last month, both passed away peacefully, having lived lives of devotion and faithfulness to this work.

The funeral of the latter, which was attended by a large concourse of sympathizing friends, both from in and out of the church, took place on the 28th at Bro. Carson's room for undertaking, which was altogether too small for the occasion. About fifty sunshiners were crowded into a small back room after being permitted to lay their beautiful tribute of love upon the coffin and to look once more upon the sweet face of their friend; and as many if not more of the Saints stood out in the cold on the sidewalk. A room in the church draped for a funeral was unoccupied, and that the request of the sister and family to have the obsequies held there could not be freely granted was to say the least a source of much grief and disappointment to the Saints and many friends outside the church.

Also our beloved Bro. George H. Hulmes passed calmly away on the 24th ult., and the last tribute of affection was paid on the afternoon of Sunday the 28th at the church where all the Saints and many friends assembled. The lovely forms of two sweet little ones were laid to rest recently also.

The public services and Sunday prayer-meetings have been well attended as usual. That of the 21st was particularly interesting, many prayers being offered and sixteen testimonies borne, among them that of Bro. Hulmes' sister, whose earnest words of prophecy and pleading for the Saints by the Spirit melted many hearts. Bro. I. N. White also related a vision wherein he was shown that we are nearing the midnight hour and

"Soon we'll hear the watchman say,
'See! the Son of God is coming;
Go and meet him on the way.'"

Father Alexander Smith, who was present, explained how the Spirit had shown him in vision the manner of the gathering.

Many of the Saints no doubt have heard from his lips about the pure, clean room, the table, the bucket of water, the stream of white sand, and the messenger as he poured it out slowly grain after grain from his lovely white hand, and filled the vessel, each grain taking its place till no water remained; and he said, "Thus shall be the gathering of my people."

At the sacrament-service last Sunday, the 4th, twenty testimonies were given and it was apparent to all that the experiences of the past have proved effectual to the strengthening of the faith of the Saints, to restoring to confidence in the officers, and preparing the minds of some of the brethren who had hesitated to go forward and do their duty in regard to honoring the temporal law.

On Wednesday evening, the 25th ult., the day of the death of our beloved president, a feeling of sadness and mourning brooded over the prayer-meeting when it was announced by the presiding elder to the Saints assembled that Bro. Hulmes had peacefully passed away.

A few of the Saints and others witnessed the dark and ill-boding cloud that for nearly an hour hovered over the sky in the western horizon on the evening of that fateful day when the trio, Sr. Alice Hulmes, the sorrowful wife, and her relatives, Sr. M. E. Hulmes and Bro. W. H. Garrett, after their many nights and days of weary, faithful watching, started with our dear brother for Colorado, thinking perhaps in that clearer atmosphere there would come relief to his sufferings. Never did the Saints pray more earnestly for recovery, if according to our Father's will, and never, as we believe, for one who had served more faithfully in the Master's service here in Independence Stake.

Bro. Hulmes was a man of poise and judgment; and he was gentle in reproof, long-suffering with the erring, full of sympathy for those in trouble, and kind and considerate to those who failed to render the services he requested and needed. And we all witnessed his solicitude for the completing of church improvements, and many appreciated his valuable assistance, with that of the brethren, his fine, artistic touch in painting, and the willing service of his skillful hands.

The necessity of obeying the temporal law, observance of decorum in the house of worship, efficiency and integrity in business, the keeping of the Word of Wisdom, and the exercise of the mind in prayer in the seasons set apart in the home for its observance,—a failure to attend to these and other things our brother accounted as weaknesses to be overcome by prayer and earnest effort, and by the help of patient instruction which he was always willing to impart.

He has left a people who loved and esteemed him for his earnest, wise counsel, his many virtues and faithful, unselfish life. And while the responsibilities of his high and sacred office which weighed heavily upon him were increased some what by the failure of many of us "to heed the commandments of God," which was his constant burden, the lessons of the past, if well learned, will, through his example and efforts as a minister, redound to our lasting welfare and his exaltation and reward.

Extracts from Letters.

E. A. Stedman, Cleveland, Iowa, January 29: "Closed a three weeks' series of meetings last night with a full house. Much good has been done, and some will be baptized as a result. My throat has bothered me some, but hope a short rest will be beneficial."

Joseph Lane, Piagah, Iowa: "Bro. A. M. Chase held forth at this place for six evenings with fair attendance and good interest. Some of the Saints at this place are laboring with their might for good; others are drifting with the worldly tide."

Quorum of Twelve.

The members of the Quorum of Twelve are expected to meet on the twenty-third day of March next, as per adjournment, in order to consider matters properly referred to them pertaining to the work of the ensuing General Conference. The chairman is of the opinion that a full quorum should be in attendance if at all practicable. Meet at 10 o'clock a.m., at the Saints' church, Independence, Missouri. The resident members will be expected to provide for a permanent place of meeting. All communications intended for the quorum may be sent to the president or the secretaries of the quorum. I. A. Smith and I. N. White, all sent in care of Bro. I. N. White. Sunday, March 18, is suggested as a day of fasting and prayer for invoking divine guidance and assistance so essential to the performance of the work imposed upon the quorum. May we hope for the elimination of every evil prompting and the cultivation of a feeling of perfect accord that the spirit of unity and of God may prevail in our councils, guide and dictate in order that we may move in that light and truth to succeed in all the work of God.

Let all come prepared. F. J. Ebeling, superintendent.

WM. H. KELLEY, President.

High Priests Quorum.

I will in the near future mail to you, at the latest address you have furnished me, program for 1906; report blank; and self-addressed envelope, for return of your report, which you will please make out March 1, with which you may make remittance of a self-imposed assessment for running expense of quorum.

If you have changed your address since you last informed me please let me know at once, so as to insure reaching you.

Your fellow servant,

ROBT. M. ELVIN, Secretary.

Resolution of Condolence.

As a resolution of condolence and respect in the loss sustained by the church, and in a nearer sense, a still closer relation, the high council of the Independence Stake together with the bishopric of the stake desire to present this memorial and resolution in regard to the memory of our departed friend and associate, G. H. Hulmes, president of the Stake, and high council of the Independence Stake, who joined and united with the church in Monroe County, Wisconsin, by Bro. Frank Hackett. He was a good and faithful woman. Her husband died in 1898. Of six children three are living, but none were present at her death. The funeral-sermon was preached by D. C. White, assisted by W. H. Kephart.

HENDERSON.—Sr. Martha Wimmer Henderson was born June 18, 1822, in Indiana. She was baptized into the church about 1831. She was one of the oldest members of the church, if not the oldest. She was married to William Henderson in 1842. Five children were born to this union. Only two survive her, A. J. and T. Henderson. She did not appear to suffer any in her sickness. She fell asleep in Christ, January 30, 1906, at her home in Ford, Iowa. She was buried by W. A. Smith, at the Saints' church at Moorhead, Iowa.

SIDES.—At Potter Valley, January 25, 1906, Olive Lulu Sides. She was born April 29, 1867, at Washoe, Nevada. She leaves a mother (her father having gone before in 1870), one sister, and two brothers to mourn. She had a lump in her right breast at the age of sixteen years, which developed into a cancer last February and finally caused her death. The neighbors showed great respect, the whole of Potter Valley attending the funeral at the Methodist church, where a funeral-sermon was delivered by A. Parkin, assisted by the parish preacher.

YOUNG.—Sally Ann Young was born in New Hampshire, January 1, 1811. Married David Young in 1827. She was the mother of fourteen children, four of whom survive, with twenty-one grandchildren, fifty-six great-grandchildren, and two great-great-grandchildren. She united with the Latter Day Saints in the early organization and with the Reorganization in 1884 and remained a faithful, honorable member until death came at the ripe age of 86 years and 17 days. Funeral-services from the house to the church were conducted by W. W. Burton, in charge.

CHASE.—Sarah Sibley was born eighty-three years ago. Married Amos Chase in 1848. Mother of four living children, Amy Vredenburg near Piscag, Asaph residing near Orson, May Gamet of Oakland, and Amos Milton, a missionary of the Latter Day Saints Church residing at Lamanon, Sr. Chase united with the church in 1862. She had spent the greater portion of recent years with her daughter May, of Oakland. In good health she came up to spend the winter near the old home scenes with her son Asaph, and daughter Amy at whose home she suddenly expired the 17th of January.

MERRITT.—At Davis City, Iowa, February 5, 1906, Bro. Theodore C. Merritt, aged 59 years, 4 months, and 10 days. He was born in Crawford County, Indiana, in 1846. During the Civil War he was in the 6th Indiana Infantry. He leaves wife and eight children, also three brothers and three sisters. His name was honorable and his life upright. He united with the church in 1899, being baptized by F. B. Blair, assisted by Bro. J. A. Stebbins.

DAVIDSON.—James Jackson Davidson was born in Trumbull County, Ohio, June 30, 1831, and died at his home in Colton, California, January 30, 1906. Besides his widow, Lydia Davidson, he leaves six children, Viola Calvert, George W. Davidson, Winnie Ham, Ethel Sims, A. J. Davidson, and Carl Davidson. Funeral-services conducted by J. F. Burton and A. E. Jones. The funeral-service of the Pioneers (of which society he was member) was read by the president, John Brown. Interment in Bermona Cemetery.

One of the important questions to be decided by the coming General Conventions of the Sunday-school and Religio Associations is the question of holding a convention in Nauvoo in the autumn of this present year. In order that the situation may be properly understood the editor of Autumn Leaves has arranged with Elder J. W. Peterson, president of the Nauvoo District, for an article on that subject. It is finely illustrated—the first article in the March number of Autumn Leaves. The advantages and disadvantages of the city as a convention site and the general phases of the idea are ably discussed. It is also expected that a cut of the city park where it is proposed to pitch the big tent will appear in the April number. Subscribe in time for these numbers, it is also expected that a cut of the city park where it is proposed to pitch the big tent will appear in the April number.
demand unquestioning confidence in his professions and statements and methods, and by his peculiar conjunctions has been able to command large financial resources and to secure a considerable following. That he has proved himself able and forceful, after his kind, there is no doubt; but that men and women would surrender themselves and their temporal and eternal interests into the hands of such a man, or indeed to any man or any group of men, in these supposed-to-be days of enlightenment and independence is, to say the least, astonishing if not amazing.

Failure was to be expected from the Dowie movement because it was not based upon the principles of the lowly Nazarene, which demand the spirit of service to the race, in the spirit of lowliness of heart and in truth, for the common good. Dowie came to be ministered unto and to have his own way in everything he undertook, and everybody under him was expected to obey his dictatorial mandates without question. With much flourish of personal wisdom he proclaimed his own greatness, and with harsh denunciations of all who refused to render obedience simply on the ground of his arrogant claims, he berated those who differed from him in opinion and cursed those who ventured to offer contrary methods. It is not to be wondered that he failed; he ought to have failed.

Reference is made to Dowie as one who was permitted to see farther into the future than other men have seen. It is known that both in Australia and in California Mr. Dowie became acquainted with the latter-day work, from which, doubtless, he obtained some ideas of social and economic progress which he promulgated in perverted form. He did get some good ideas from it, but seemed incapable of carrying out anything without attaching to it the spirit, claims, and signature of one whom he served, Elijah Dowie, “the First Apostle” and “General Overseer”—Dowie first, last, and all the time.

Failure of the Dowie movement should impress and prompt all to whom it comes as an object-lesson to see the import of that lesson; namely, that work done in the name of Christ must be done by his authorization, on lines outlined and prescribed by him, and in accordance with his spirit and purpose, in harmony with the principles ordained of God to secure and to safeguard the interests of the people. The more of Christ, the less of the spirit of self will there be in it. The leading feature manifest in the ministry and life of the Christ on earth is the spirit of self-abnegation. If he made claim to be sent and recognized of God at all, it was that he might bless with peace and deliverance and good will those who believed in him. He took pleasure in delivering the poor from oppression and in relieving them from suffering, rather than in proclaiming personal superiority or authority with a view to build up a following for mere personal aggrandizement. By sweet reasonableness in teaching with a view to ministering to the common good of men and by breadth of sympathy which exemplified God’s love for the race, he sought to draw all men unto him, not by dictatorial demands that men follow him without question.

The race can and will spare Dowie and his spirit of compulsion, with all his farcical claims to leadership and his false and deceptive methods. It needs no such leadership, and the more men grow and develop with the freer spirit of the times the less there will be of disposition to look with favor upon such characters. The world is ready for the genuine teacher and leader, the man who sets the example of lowliness of spirit based upon a desire to lovingly lead in the footsteps of the great Nazarene. He is the true leader everywhere, in the family, in business life, in church, in the state. His ideals are true and strong and insure a basis for permanent welfare.

Dowie has furnished another object-lesson to the world of the folly of basing expectations of financial or spiritual success upon the old and time-worn dicta of selfishness and dictatorship. Men are learning and must learn that success is the result not of taking as ground for action somebody’s opinion or arbitrary dictation, based upon a mere claim to superior knowledge; but of following what, after due examination, is actually known to be based upon truth, principle; genuine, living, immovable, foundation. The longer men hesitate to make such analyses the basis for action the longer will their hope for their own success and the success of the race be delayed. He who teaches men to think, to see, and to know, and who warns them against taking for granted that which is not seen and not known by actual examination on their own part to be correct, is leading men as Christ led them. He who teaches men to act and to lead others on without necessary knowledge, appeals not to their powers of intellect, but to their credulity. A man is a slave who does not know where he is and what he is doing. He is worse than a slave if he hesitates to make necessary investigation; he is willfully blind.

The apostle Paul was a misguided force for evil when he rendered a blind, fanatical adherence to the Jewish priesthood and made the “tradition of the elders” the basis of his action and hope. He did it, too, “in all good conscience,” he declares. He was not without sincerity in his ignorance. But when enlightened of Christ he became a free man and he taught men to reason and to think and to seek for light. The Spirit of which he partook was freeing and enlightening in its influences, and under its guidance he wanted men to “grow” in the “knowledge” of the truth; not in mere belief in it, but in actual knowledge of it. He declared his mission and the mission of his brethren to be, “to make all men see.” To make all men see! How true and grand is the apostle’s conception of the Christ spirit and the system of divine government, a government not based upon human ignorance, but commanding the free adherence of the race because the love and wisdom of God is seen to be its creative and upholding force!

When people learn to see what they look at, and to look at what they see; that is, to go to the bottom of everything with which their interests and the interests of the race are concerned, there will be less of disappointment and more of satisfaction, because care will be exercised to guard against groundless expectations. Let us not forget that, as a people, we are called to see, to put to the best use we can all our powers of mind; that we build every part of our work truly and substantially. If any people have been called to represent true principles and true methods, including sound business principles, we have been so called. If any people are under responsibility to make manifest such principles and such methods before the world of mankind, we are that people. Making profession, as we do, that we have received the Spirit of truth as a result of obedience to the gospel; that there have been outlined to us in the revelations of God to the church such rules and regulations as are guaranteed so to govern that the people of God may live, not after the manner of the world, but according to the divine plan, we are under obligation, personally and collectively, to make good our professions and our claims in all departments of the work in which we labor, whether as ministry or laymen, business men, tradesmen, or what not; and whether men or women. It is ours to build upon the true foundation, and with such materials as will make our work secure and strong, so substantial in plan and detail that the world, all men, may see and take cognizance that our work is not the work of careless, selfish, carnal, self-seeking men and women, but sound and true in every particular, worthy of its claims to be that built as a result of cooperation with God.

The world to-day is repeating the folly of past ages and men and women are immersed in the spirit of selfish accumulating, speculation, and idle, carnal pleasure-seeking. If we are basing our work upon a superior system and have in view a higher purpose, it is ours to be consistent by being true to God and just to man, faithful to one another. Men and women have varied and varying conceptions of right; some high, some low, with all the shifting grades that lie between the two extremes; but it is ours to cultivate and to hold ourselves strictly, rigidly, in harmony with a high sense of principle in all things; to help others get there, and to insist that all stay there. By so doing, and only by so doing, can we get near to God and maintain a condition of communion and harmony with him. Unless He builds the house, we labor in vain; unless we keep in touch with him, our work is the work of mere carnal conception. He is declared to be both the author and the finisher of the work of the church.

No man can be a worker with God unless he be a worker under the influence of his Spirit; and the Spirit is given only as a result of living in communion, in touch with him. All the priesthood in the church—apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, helps, governments, gifts, miracles, diversities of tongues, etc., in the whole spiritual paraphernalia, will not qualify us, and they can not be ours at all, in a genuine, living sense, without that clear light which results, and results only, from close, conscientious application and care to maintain a high degree of spirituality; to lean not upon our own mere human understanding, but to gain and retain that spiritual understanding which results from coming into touch with "the mind of the Spirit" of truth. This is the true understanding. That obtained, all the faculties and powers of the minds of men are quickened and enlightened, and darkness is chased from the mind. We are commanded to be free from darkness of mind; to chase darkness from us. By so doing we see God by seeing and comprehending his character, his purposes, his system of government, his divine economy, and the eternal fitness of it. By so doing we feel a consciousness that he is in us and we avoid blunders and mistakes and disorder and confusion and loss of confidence; by so doing we justify before men the claim that God is in his servants and in his people, responding to their faithfulness by leading them along safe lines and according to true policies. But if we make serious mistakes and continue to repeat them, it will evidence our failure to reach a proper altitude and cause doubt where clearness and confidence should result. A capable, confidence-inspiring business man is a man who applies to his business the principles of sound, economic management to all the features of his business. He buys what will give satisfaction and sells at a satisfactory price. He sells where he can collect expense, meets his obligations promptly, and watches every detail of his affairs. If he does less than all this and does not do all that is essential to a successful career, he is gone and loses what he has invested. So of anything else. Religion means morality, uprightness, application, diligence, intelligence; in fact, all the qualities which make up a sound and rightly regulated career. It is no light thing we have entered upon, and experience proves that our best conceptions and efforts are demanded if success is to crown our labors as a church. We are required to prove our own work as we move along. To prove it we must test it, by examination of our work as we proceed.

Obstacles are in our way; men and forces seen and unseen oppose the truth and seek to disqualify us for success by every appeal to lower the standard and accept the dicta of carnal, human methods of operation; but to yield to anything which promises success upon lines that run lower than the lines of truth, revealed in the revelations and exemplified in the Christ, is to fail, and miserably to fail at that, in the effort. It is necessary, then, for our work, that our conceptions be correct, that our work may be blessed and approved of God. But our conceptions will be according to our personal standards of right, according to the leaven we imbibe in our reading, in our thinking, in our associations and habits in the world. If we have become accustomed readily or in any degree to accept any theories of morals or economics or religion or politics—anything at all—not in harmony with the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, our moral and spiritual conceptions must be affected and largely determined thereby, hence we bring with us in our work false or true conceptions, according to our previous education. Idols of conception must be given up. We of disaster that follow failure to compute, to analyze, wrecked and stranded at Nauvoo and elsewhere and on which finally they were wrecked and stranded at Nauvoo and elsewhere and scattered into a bondage worse than death, many of them, as were ancient Israel.

Many of the sectarian world are more business-like in method and more progressive and energetic than some of our own people. We need to wake up and make good our claims to have more light and to prove ourselves worthy to reflect it as teachers. It will not hurt us to think more about our own defects. It ought to help us to see, day by day, the examples of disaster that follow failure to compute, to analyze, to study, to foresee, and to provide against loss and disaster, morally, spiritually, financially, and in every way. It is possible that much or a certain amount of our work has been haphazard, without enough of system and order and examination in it.

God in his universe is a manifestation of law, of order, of diligence, promptness, hard work, attention to detail, interest and earnestness. We ought to be all this; we must apply such methods to our Father's business, and to do it requires application, thought, reflection, consecration of powers of body and of mind. We should educate ourselves and our children along such lines. We should demand such things of ourselves and of others if we would be effective and see others effective for good. To demand less, to be content with less, is to be asleep; to be children, and to act the part of children. Shall we be men and women—or shall we be mere passive spectators in this work? Who are to compose the active, forceful characters that are to comprise and to do the work of constituting and maintaining a Zion, the sluggish, drifting, inert mass who merely pass along and wait for something to turn up, or the men and women who think, who see, who are interested and who study and strive to see and act clearly?

What we want to say, and to say it as plainly as we know how to say it, is that the people of the Reorganized Church, as we see it, must wake up and take a more active part, a more active interest in the work of the church, local and general, and in its problems. If we sow indifference we shall reap indifferent results. The errors and failures of the past should be guarded against strictly and carefully.
Our work is worthy of and should receive our best talents, fully cultivated by intelligent application.
The problems affecting the interests of ourselves and the world both temporally and morally, and spiritually and eternally, should be looked into and comprehended and wherever a remedy is necessary the remedy be applied. We are expecting great things, but are not doing great things necessary to bring the desired results.

It may be that we are not near enough to God.
Possibly, and we think probably, very probably, we are not as near to the source and conditions of inspiration as we ought to be. It may be that God has not been sufficiently consulted in some of the movements made and that we must and shall be obliged to confess that we have preferred to go on in human wisdom rather than keep ourselves in such condition as to be disposed to seek him and be governed by the leadings of his Spirit. How is it with us? Has any of our work brought such results or caused such conditions as to lead us to fear that confusion, and hindrances, rather than peace and harmony and progress, have resulted? We are all interested in these things, and we ought to do considerable thinking along these lines. We should be anxious to confess our faults and shortcomings and not seek to justify ourselves in our mistakes. If we contend that we are right and always have been right, we simply deceive ourselves and separate ourselves further from God.

Why should we hesitate to speak frankly and compare notes? Why not be frank and candid with our-soles and with one another? It will not hurt us to think more, to believe that we might have been more careful in the past, and to resolve to be more careful in the future. We are all workers together with God, supposedly so at least, and it will help the cause to know what we all are doing and how we are doing it. We ought to speak out plainly and freely, and of course kindly. But we ought not to hesitate to speak because of any stilted, mistaken conception of official courtesy or the like. Let that be the method of the world. We have no use for anything that is not ruggedly straight and clear.

It is not mere men and measures we are seeking to enhance or merely to sustain official dignity. We wish to help all, and to do men good and to work to their present and eternal happiness right here and right now. We are servants to God and to fellow man with that end in view.

We ought not to lose a day in the work of getting at best possible results. We should get right at every slip in the machinery, every defect in our system, and correct every mistake in method of procedure past and present and get down to a sound basis in everything, in branch, district, stake, and in general, anywhere and everywhere. We are not interested in making or in perpetuating mistakes or errors. We waste our time if we proceed on any other lines than right lines. If we are of the class who sit around open mouthed and take for granted things we do not know, and which we ought to know the real status of, we are weak and of little use to ourselves and others. We ought to know. To take for granted what we do not know, what we have not taken sufficient steps to find out, or what we have reason to fear may not be the facts in any given case, is below what is expected of us. These are some of the "few things" in which men and women ought to "be faithful."

If Dowie has furnished us an object-lesson from which to point a moral and adorn a tale, all well and good. We have written with malice toward none and in charity to all, but with strong convictions against the policy of the ostrich who hides his head in the sand to avert approaching danger.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Bro. J. W. Rushton, reporting the British Isles Mission for the quarter ending December 31, says:
"The statistics do not represent the amount of work done, by a long way. The local authorities have accomplished some good work and incidentally there have been reported a number of baptisms by the local ministry. The condition generally is fair; apparently there is an upward tendency among the Saints and we are hopeful to be in good and prosperous condition ere long. We are endeavoring to sys-tematize the work as far as practicable, and to facilitate this we have secured some report forms which have been distributed among the branch and district presidents with the beginning of the new year, and all have expressed a willingness to do what they can to conform to the request to report work done. We have a new branch in Sutton, in Ashfield. This is a new place and the local brethren and sisters are very largely responsible for this.
Bro. Greenwood has been very attentive and they seem to be in a very good condition. Bro. Kelley with my consent left Ireland about November 1, and up to the end of December has been laboring in Scotland with excellent results. Some have been baptized and better than all the Saints there are in splendid condition and harmoniously engaged in the effort to build up. Bro. Kelley has been visiting in the Leeds and Manchester districts, doing good work. He will spend the rest of the conference year in Scotland. My own labors have been distributed over the mission."

THE SAINTS' HERALD

PNEUMONIA: A SIMPLE REMEDY RECOMMENDED BY A HEALTH BOARD.

Few acute diseases in our northern climate are so fatal as pneumonia. Every winter it levies a fearful tribute in every community, and few diseases have so successfully baffled medical science in its research for specifics. Many people will therefore read with interest the strong recommendation recently made by the health-board of Washington, Warren County, New Jersey, of the following simple treatment for pneumonia, which according to a dispatch in the New York Herald is claimed to be a sure cure if used in the early stages:

Take six or ten onions, according to size, and chop fine, put in a large spider; over a hot fire, then add the same quantity of rye meal and vinegar, enough to form a thick paste. Stir thoroughly, letting it simmer five or ten minutes. Then put it in a cotton bag large enough to cover the lungs and apply to the chest as hot as the patient can bear. In about ten minutes apply another, and thus continue by reheating the poultices, and in a few hours the patient will be out of danger.—Arena, January, 1906.

The need of promptness in the treatment of pneumonia can not be too strongly pointed out. By instant attention to the trouble before it has time to become possessed of the lung tissue, it may be scattered. Treatment should be resorted to at once and the inflammation and filling of the lungs be prevented. The patient should be kept in bed in a room where the temperature is kept at about seventy-two degrees.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Elder D. A. Anderson will represent the publishing department at the conference at Cleveland, Ohio, March 3 and 4. The Saints can pay their subscriptions to any of the church publications to him at that time.

Humanity is one. The Eternal intends to show us that humanity is one . . . And if we do not accept the revelation lovingly, do not take to the fact kindly, why then 'tis flashed upon us terribly, by lightning of hell, if we will not have it by light of heaven.—Gerâld Massey.

The Herald, Los Angeles, California, February 4, contained a double-column cut of the Saints' Church of that city, also a half-column descriptive article concerning the dedication of the chapel. Another of the dailies also published an excellent account of the services, including the main points of the address by the pastor, Bro. T. W. Williams. The faith of the church is set forth in terms clear and strong. The dedication program sent us by Bro. R. T. Cooper and the whole affair is creditable to the energy and interest of our people in the city. Brn. Burton, Van Fleet, Daniel Hougas, A. W. Ballard, also an excellent choir took part in the services which seem to have awakened considerable interest.

President Joseph Smith at last accounts was in the city of Toronto, Ontario, accompanied by his wife, enroute home from Washington, District of Columbia. His health slowly improves, though he has seasons of pain in his face from his old enemy, neuralgia. He is expected at Lamoni some time during the present week.

Bro. G. H. Graves, our colored brother who is striving earnestly to establish the cause among his colored brethren of the South, reports much interest in his efforts in presenting the faith. Several newspapers have made friendly and complimentary mention of his work. He feels encouraged with the outlook and hopes to plant the cause permanently in the state of Kentucky. He may be addressed at Hopkinsville, Kentucky, by any who may wish to write 'him. He is preaching in churches and in private houses, as the way opens.

ARE WE OUR OWN?

This question, so important and so nearly concerning our present and eternal welfare, is one which every thoughtful, intelligent individual should investigate, with unselfish motives and with an eye single to his spiritual advancement, the helping of his fellow men, and the honor and glory of God.

Viewing the matter from a natural standpoint, we must admit, from a reasonable point of view, that even here we are not our own. The mother who gave us birth, guided and guarded us with watchful care through years of physical and mental development; the father who labored and struggled daily that food, clothes, and an education might be supplied us and who later advised and counseled us from his practical experience; the brothers and sisters who assisted in our care and advancement along these lines, all own such a part of us and present such strong claims upon us that we can say with truth that we are not our own. If naturally reasonable we must live, at least in part, for them as a partial payment on our part for the labor and interest they so lovingly bestowed upon us.

And from a patriotic point it is the same. The fact that we are free-born citizens of a free country does not make us in an unlimited sense free; for do not we owe our freedom, yes, our very lives, to those who, in the early days of our country, fought, suffered, and died to purchase for us that freedom? By their life's blood we are to-day free and independent; and notwithstanding all that we are or enjoy in this respect, we are not our own. And if all this be true

in a temporal or patriotic sense it must necessarily be much more so in a spiritual sense, for in a spiritual sense we owe not only what we are, but the work and labor of others in making us better, to a source higher and grander than that of a worldly nature. In 1 Corinthians 6:19, 20 will be found this statement: “What! know ye not . . . ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price.” Here are found in reality two distinct statements. First, “Ye are not your own.” Second, “Ye are bought with a price.” If, as the first says, we are not our own, then surely we must belong to some other; and if so, all our words, thoughts, and deeds should be according to that one’s ideas, or along this particular line of thought or law. And to show further the truthfulness of this fact let us turn to 1 Timothy 6:7 and read: “For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out.”

Here we are told plainly that at our advent into this world we came in every sense empty-handed. What we may have accumulated has been what others have possessed and used before us, which for a time becomes ours, but at the end of our earthly existence is left again for others in turn to occupy or possess; and accordingly we step out once more empty-handed. So are we not merely stewards or overseers for a time over God’s universal possessions? It is not ours. In this sense we are not our own. And if not our own, to whom do we belong? Again referring to 1 Corinthians 6:20, we read, “Ye are bought with a price.” A price is that paid for something, and in this case it is something paid for man. That includes you and me; that includes every human individual.

If we go back to the dawn of creation, we find our first parents Adam and Eve as transgressors of the law of God; and by such transgressions they fell from their blissful state to a sinful condition. Having been told if disobedient they should die, they were so condemned, and death (spiritual) came upon them and through them upon all mankind. And now comes the purchasing. Christ, the Son, says to the Father, I will go and offer myself in the stead of man. I will take upon my shoulders the load which sin has brought, if, through me, they may be made free again. And in confirmation thereof he comes to earth as the Redeemer and Savior of men, lives, suffers, and dies for us that salvation might be possible for man. By his blood he has purchased us; and well may the Scriptures declare, Ye are not your own. Ye are bought with a price. In the face of such evidence the only conclusion we can logically arrive at is to say, I am not my own; I am purchased by the redeeming blood of Christ. And this is just the condition of mind in which all should be; for it is a reasonable, logical, and natural condition, and the only safe one.

Every human individual should admit the fact that inasmuch as he has been purchased in so costly a manner, he should live a daily life pleasing to him and in accordance with his laws and will. More than this is impossible; less certainly shows, at the least, an ungrateful, unthankful spirit on our part.

Now what must we do as a partial recompense for this purchase? As another’s, or Christ’s, what must we do to live in accordance with his will and laws? The Master sums up the matter neatly when he says, “Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness [or according to another version, “to establish his righteousness”]; and all these things shall be added unto you.” In other words, Seek to obey the principles of the divine law, namely: faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands (see Hebrews 6:1, 2), and then according to Paul, “Let us go on unto perfection,” living by every word that comes from the mouth of God.

Does not this, condensed, mean to be a true saint of God? to deny self, to take up our cross, and to follow him? And can we do so and still mingle with and partake of the world, its pleasures, and carnalities? Must we not rather obey the scripture by coming out from among them, and by showing ourselves a pattern of good works?

In view of the evidence here outlined, we must arrive logically at some such conclusion as this: I own nothing here; I am but a steward for a time over a little of God’s property; I am not my own, for Christ by his sufferings and death has purchased me. As I must obey his will—the keeping of the law in its entirety, which means living by his laws and desires and not those of man—I must deny self, take up my cross daily, and follow him. And when I have accomplished all, I must remember that this is only a small, partial payment compared to what has been done for me, what is being done, and what will be done if I remain faithful to the end.

Reader, are those your views? Have you concluded you are not your own? If so, are you serving your purchaser aright by living a life so good and pure that it will reflect only glory and honor upon his great and holy name? Remember that as you are not your own, every thought, word, and deed should be for the advancement and upbuilding of God’s kingdom, and to the encouragement and helpfulness of his children. In no other way can you benefit your heavenly Father or your Redeemer, and thus help to pay for your blood-bought redemption or purchase.

WALLACE A. SMALL.

THE WAR IN HEAVEN.

It is with a degree of caution that we approach this subject, realizing as we do the wide diversity of opinions concerning the wonderful visions of the Patmos seer. I have noted with interest the various ideas expressed relative to the prophecies concerning the last days, their relation to us as a people, and the probable condition of things yet future. Many ideas have been advanced that, to my mind, are rather absurd when compared with other plain and pointed scriptures. I have been schooled to believe that “no prophecy of the Scriptures is of any private interpretation,” but that scripture should interpret scripture; and I believe it is a safe rule to follow in the study of the sacred word.

We, as a people, occupy a peculiar position in the world, and our strongest fort is a “Thus saith the Lord,” and its fulfillment, and I believe we have been careful how we handle our “weapons.” We have an abundance of logical testimony to sustain our position without misapplying a single text; and should I get wide of the mark I will appreciate criticism and correction.

I have frequently heard it argued that the “war in heaven” of Revelation 12:7-9 occurred in the early morning of time when Lucifer rebelled against God and was cast down, but I never so understood it, and shall give my reasons why, and then try to ascertain when it did take place.

Isaiah 14:12-17 has been made to do service as a proof-text in support of this theory. In fact it is thought by some to be a veritable Gibraltar, so we will notice it first:

How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! How art thou cast down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations! For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of heaven: I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the house of the kingdoms of the earth. Yea, thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit. Those that see thee shall be greatly afraid: Thou shalt be cast into the bottom of the sea, then the mountains shall be melted with thee.

Now let us apply our rule of interpretation and see how it will work. In the fourth verse of the same chapter it says, “Thou shalt take up this proverb against the king of Babylon”; and we learn at once that it is not Satan at all, but a haughty earthly king that is meant. True, he is called “Lucifer, son of the morning,” but Jesus called another one of earth’s nobility a “fox.” (Luke 13:32.) It may be asked how the king of Babylon could “ascend into heaven and exalt his throne above the stars of God,” etc., and we reply, Just like capernaum was “exalted unto heaven” and “brought down to hell”—destruction. (Matthew 11:23; Isaiah 14:22, 23.) The king of Babylon is called Lucifer in the same sense that the “red dragon” (pagan Rome) is called the “Devil and Satan.” (Revelation 12:9.) The “king of Babylon” was a “king of kings,” and ruled the world (Daniel 2:37, 38), and because of his haughty pride the Lord designed to punish him (see Isaiah 14:22, 23). Now let us examine Revelation 12:7-12.

And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent called the Devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world; he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him. And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb [The blood of the Lamb had not been shed in the early morning of time], and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death. Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Woe to the inhabiters of the earth and of the sea; for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time.

This “war” has no reference whatever to Satan’s rebellion, not in the least, but all takes place after A. D.

Beginning with the first verse of the chapter John says he saw a “great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun,” etc., and in the third verse he says, “there appeared another wonder in heaven.” This time it is a “great red dragon.” Both these “wonders” appear in “heaven.” John views this scene until the dragon chases the woman into the “wilderness” (verse 6), and continuing without a break in his narrative he says: “And there was war in heaven”—the same place where he saw the woman, and after the dragon is defeated, cast out, he persecuted the woman that brought forth the man child (see verse 18). Now, was the woman “cast out” too? If not, how could the dragon in the earth persecute the woman in heaven? I know it says he was cast down unto the earth, but does that signify that he was actually in heaven? If the woman is the church, when and where was it that she gave birth to the man child? That event happened in the same place that the “war” was fought. In the tenth chapter of Luke, after the return of the seventy from their first mission, Jesus said, “I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven.” (Verse 18.) But that does not indicate that the old fellow did actually get through the pearly gates only to be thrown out. Remember both these “wonders” were in heaven, and if the “war” happened in the “early morning of time,” then the “man child” was born back there and the woman went into the wilderness back there. I do not believe it.

The Greek word from which the word heaven is here translated is ouranos and means sky—air. (See Young’s Analytical Concordance; also Revelation 12:1, Inspired Translation.) John simply saw in vision that which was to transpire on the earth, and his vision has not the slightest reference to the time when those who “kept not their first estate were cast down.” In vision John follows the dragon to earth, and sees him persecute the woman—the church—which was fulfilled during the "ten persecutions" of the Christians. That was the war in heaven—pagan Rome fighting the saints in order to stamp out Christianity if possible. In vision it is represented as Satan and Michael, and their hosts. Verse 13 is explanatory, and tells us just what the war was, and where it actually occurred. The appearance of the woman, the birth of the man child, the flight of the woman into the wilderness, and the "war" all occur in the same place. The woman is the church. (See verse 7, Inspired Translation.) The man child represents the priesthood, or authority, the red dragon is pagan Rome. And the first real battle of this "war in heaven" was fought in Bethlehem, Judea, when Herod slaughtered the infants in his vain effort to destroy the new-born king—Christ—and has been raging ever since. Jesus said: "From the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force."—Matthew 11:12.

It was at the hands of pagan Rome, symbolized by the red dragon, that the church suffered violence; and under Nero it was "general throughout the whole Roman Empire." (Fox's Book of Martyrs, p. 16.)

Again, the same historian says:

The Emperor Domitian was naturally cruel, and after having slain his brother he raised a persecution against the Christians. He commanded all the lineage of David to be slain: hoping, by this means to stop the progress of Christ's kingdom, which he was taught to consider as a temporal kingdom. A law was also enacted, that no Christians once brought before the tribunal should be exempted from punishment, without renouncing their religion.—Page 17.

After this "war" has been in progress upwards of two hundred years, and thousands of Christians had been put to death by this "red dragon," it was said by a Roman governor:

What signify all the former executions if some yet remain who dare avow themselves Christians. Ibid., 28.

Under Severus they enjoyed a brief respite:

But increasing in numbers very rapidly, the fears of the heathen were excited, lest their religion should become entirely supplanted, and imputing the various misfortunes which befell the empire to their impiety, a furious persecution was suddenly raised against them. Fire, sword, wild beasts, and imprisonments, were resorted to, and even the dead bodies of Christians were torn from their graves and subjected to the vilest insults. The gospel, notwithstanding, withstood these attacks, and continued to spread to such a degree, that had its votaries withdrawn themselves to other countries, the Roman Empire would have been greatly depopulated.

John said "he prevailed not," because they "loved not their lives unto the death." They overcame him by the "blood of the Lamb and by the word of their testimony."

Decius, provoked at the rapid increase of Christianity, undertook to exterminate the very name from off the earth, but in the latter part of the third century they had increased so fast that they had become formidable by their numbers. Christianity was gradually taking the place of paganism, or "Michael and his hosts" were overcoming the "dragon and his hosts."

The conversion of Constantine virtually put an end to the "war," so far as the dragon is concerned. There was some persecution in the latter part of the fourth century under Julian and Athanaric, but not to be compared to the others.

The dragon being defeated—cast out—he now goes to make war with the "remnant of her seed, that keep the commandments of God and have the testimony of Jesus Christ." (Revelation 12:17.) Notice, he is not going to make war with the woman now, but with the remnant of her seed that keep the commandments of God. The woman is in the "wilderness"—darkness—and being nourished from the face of the serpent.

The flight of the woman into the wilderness does not signify a sudden departure into some unknown place, but a gradual departure, drifting from the pure principles of the gospel of Christ into a condition of error and spiritual darkness. Cyprian, bishop of Carthage, wrote often to his flock, warning them against the many evils that were creeping in among them. (See Fox's Book of Martyrs, pp. 35, 44.) Satan in the personnel of the "dragon" could not overthrow the church by force. In order to accomplish his design he must change his tactics—adopt his old method of deception by the introduction of false ideas, which had to be done gradually. Heretofore, he has been at a disadvantage, but now, acting the part of a wise general, he resorts to strategy and gets on the "inside." He is not fighting with Michael any more, having been defeated and cast down; so he assumes a new role and joins the church. Let us now take a look at him as John sees him in the next act:

And I saw another sign, in the likeness of the kingdoms of the earth; a beast rise up out of the sea, and he stood upon the sand of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns; and upon his horns ten crowns; and upon his head the name of blasphemy. And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion; and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority. Revelation 13:1, 2. I. T.

This beast, like the dragon, has seven heads and ten horns. The dragon fought with Michael and his hosts—the apostles and saints—and "prevailed not," while this beast is to "make war with the saints and to overcome them." (Verse 7.) Pagan Rome, after a struggle of three hundred years, failed to overthrow Christianity. Papal Rome during a period of twelve hundred and sixty years was to "wear out" and overcome the saints. Daniel says:

And his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power: and he shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper, and practise, and shall destroy the mighty and holy people. And through his policy also he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand; and he shall magnify himself in his heart, and by peace shall destroy many. —Daniel 8:24, 25.

Had Daniel lived during the papal supremacy and witnessed the horrible butchery of fifty millions of people said to have been slain by this mighty "power" he could not have given us a more graphic description of his character than he has done here in few words. This mighty "power" is symbolized by a "little horn" that arose among the ten horns of the beast and plucked up three of them. I believe it is the Protestant opinion in general that this little horn is the papacy as a system without reference to any certain pope. This beast of Daniel, under its two phases, represents Rome. The first, pagan Rome; the second, papal Rome, in complete harmony with Revelation 13:1–10. Notice, the dragon gives his seat, power, and great authority to the beast. That was certainly fulfilled when pagan Rome became papal Rome, or when Christianity, corrupted, succeeded paganism.

Right here let us note the following points of identity between Daniel's and John's testimonies. The leopard beast was to blaspheme God (see Revelation 13:6); and so of the other (see Daniel 7:25). The beast makes war with the saints and overcomes them (see Revelation 13:7); and so of the "little horn" (Daniel 7:21). The "little horn" was to continue a "time, times, and the dividing of a time." (Daniel 7:25.) The beast was to continue "forty and two months" (Revelation 13:5) or twelve hundred and sixty years.

The papacy arose after the cessation of paganism, 508 A.D. By decree of Justinian, the Roman emperor, the bishop of Rome was made the "corrector of heresies," and declared to be the "head of all bishops," with the bishop of Constantinople as "second." This power could not be enforced at this time for the reason that the Arian Ostrogoths held Rome and Italy. This was the last one of the three horns to be "plucked up by the roots" by the little horn; so the Italian war was begun 534 A.D. under Belisarius, who succeeded in entering Rome December 10, 536. The Goths, however, rallied their forces and laid siege March, 537 A.D., which was raised one year later in great disorder, thus acknowledging defeat. Papal supremacy was now established, which, however, was disputed by John of Constance, but who was suppressed by Phocas 606 A.D.

This beast power was to continue twelve hundred and sixty years, at the end of which time he was to go into "captiveitv" (Revelation 13:10), and have his "dominion" taken away (Daniel 7:26). Adding 1260 to 538 it brings us to 1788; and what happened then? Berthier, at the head of the French army, entered Rome, took the pope a prisoner, proclaimed a republic, and thus overthrew the papal system for the time being. In 1800 another pope was elected, thus healing the "deadly wound." But though the papacy was restored, it was with diminished powers. The prophet said they would "take away his dominion to consume and destroy it unto the end." In 1870 his temporal power was entirely taken away.

I know it is claimed by some that the exile of Pope Silverius, 537 A.D., was when the "deadly wound" was inflicted, but that theory is erroneous for the following reasons:

1. This pope was, with others, convicted of treason and banished by Belisarius, the very man sent to enforce the imperial decree in favor of the papacy, and not by an enemy.

2. Another pope was ordered elected by the man who exiled this one.

3. His powers were not at all diminished, but were gradually increased.

On the other hand, in 1798 the pope was taken prisoner by an enemy and placed in exile where he died and for two years there was no pope. That blow was inflicted with the design to abolish every vestige of Christianity, that the infidel "Goddess of Reason" might be enthroned.

The "wearing out of the saints" by this "power" is too well known to recite here, so we pass on to later events.

After watching this beast from the time he rises up out of the sea until he goes into captivity, and his dominion is taken away, another "wonder" appears. John says:

And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed. —Revelation 13:11, 12.

The red dragon appeared before the woman, denoting that the power symbolized was already at that time in existence, while the leopard beast was seen to rise out of the sea, signifying that he was yet to arise. He continued his allotted time, twelve hundred and sixty years, after which another beast rises up, this time out of the earth.

Unlike his predecessor, he is represented as being gentle, peaceable, and lamb-like. The red dragon, as we have already seen, is pagan Rome, the leopard beast is papal Rome. But what power is here represented by this two-horned beast? This is the one, above all others, that we want to locate if we can. Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome are all symbolized by beasts, the nature of which was best calculated to represent their character, the "horns" denoting "power," civil and religious.

The beast before us has "two horns," but altogether unlike the others. His predecessors showed on the surface just what they were in character, while this fellow appears very lamb-like, but at the same time he is a devil at heart; "he spake as a dragon."
Like the other beasts he is a persecuter because he has power to put to death those who would not worship (honor or respect) the first beast before him. Now what power arose at the close of the eighteenth century? I imagine I see a frown on the face of some of my readers when we say, "America, associated with Protestantism." But think a moment! Remember it is not the part of wisdom to pass hasty judgment, so we ask your calm consideration of a few plain, cold, historical facts, keeping in mind that in history is where we see the fulfillment of prophecy.

All Latter Day Saints believe that America was to be the great theater where the closing scene in the great drama in the history of the nations was to be enacted. Do you suppose that this nation of ours, with all the wonderful events incident to the final culmination of the great conflict, should pass unnoticed in prophecy? Verily, no! These beasts each came upon the stage of action successively. Does our nation meet the conditions? The United States arose to prominence at the right time, and here it was that Protestantism found an asylum where she could worship free from papal persecution. The main object of migration to this country was that they might enjoy freedom, and religious liberty. The Constitution of the United States guarantees these rights to all its subjects. Article 4, general provisions, reads:

The United States shall guarantee to every state in the union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature can not be convened) against domestic violence.

Just how well she has kept that sacred pledge remains to be seen.

As already shown, the "first beast" received his "deadly" wound in 1798, when his "power" began to be diminished, and his "dominion" taken away. The beast with two horns succeeds him and exercised his power. It may be argued that the "inquisition" is not possible in these days of enlightenment, and we will admit that it would seem so; but remember that part of the prophecy concerning this two-horned beast is in process of fulfillment now. And if we may judge the future by the past, he has some bloody work ahead of him yet.

Let us take a glance at his past record, coupled with the unerring "spirit of prophecy," and we may get an idea of his future probabilities.

My readers are all more or less acquainted with the bloody scenes enacted in Missouri and Illinois—and some of us have had a little taste since then—from 1839 to 1848, so that we will merely refer to a few advance movements of this lamb-like power. The spirit of persecution was born and bred in this country, and is only under restraint now by the spirit of toleration and advancement. In the mad rush for wealth and position we seem to lose sight of everything else, including our past record. Let us pause long enough to refresh our memory.

Our nation, while not noticed in prophecy until it becomes a factor in the world, nevertheless had a beginning; and in order to a clear understanding of a man's character, it is sometimes necessary to know something about his boyhood pranks. We can judge of nations in the same way. "Uncle Sam," as a boy, has been guilty of many naughty things, as the following will show:

To the constables of Dover, Hampton, Salisbury, Newbury, Rowley, Ipswich, Wenham, Linn, Boston, Roxbury, Dedham, and until these vagabond Quakers are carried out of this jurisdiction:

"You and every one of you are required, in the King's Majesty's name, to take these vagabond Quakers, Anne Coleman, Mary Tompkins, and Alice Ambrose, and make them fast to the cart's tail, and driving your cart through your several towns, to whip them on their backs, not exceeding ten stripes apiece on each of them in each town, and so convey them out of this jurisdiction, and you will answer it at your peril: and this shall be your warrant." Per me, Richard Walden. At Dover, dated December 22nd, 1662.

If those poor women suffered the full extent of this sentence they received, all told, one hundred and ten stripes, all because they were exercising their religious liberty. The whip, too, was made of "dried guts, and each string had three knots at the end." Of course this was all in the "King's Majesty's name," but this was the formative period when the "boy," by his environment and training, would have his character molded. He has made some improvement as a man, but the spirit still lurks within as we shall see. Here is the sentence passed upon another "vagabond Quaker":

Margaret Brewster, you are to have your clothes stripped off to the middle, and to be tied to the cart's tail at the South Meeting-House, and to be drawn through the town, and to receive twenty stripes upon your naked body.

Many of them were hanged. The reader is referred to The Blue Laws of Connecticut, or Upham's Salem Witchcraft for a complete record of the doings of this "boy." He reached his "majority" about 1789, and it is about this time that he attracts the notice of the prophet.

In 1833 a persecution was begun in this boasted "land of liberty" that has no parallel in the annals of crime this side of the Dark Ages; instigated, too, by the religious teachers and leaders of Protestantism, backed up by the governor of a sovereign State, sanctioned and winked at by the clergy and press all over the land. And when loyal citizens were being persecuted beyond endurance and to death, and when they had importuned at the "feet of justice" and carried their petitions to the highest officer in the land, the only consolation they received was, "Your cause is just, but we can do nothing for you."

Why? Simply because the "beast" was "exercising," his "powers"; his dragon proclivities were being manifested. They were driven from the State under the exterminating order of Governor Boggs. They were whipped, plundered, women ravished, and helpless, begging children murdered and tortured for the "public good" (?) In Illinois they enjoyed a brief respite until 1843 when persecution was again raised, by which, after much suffering and loss of life, they were forced to leave the State. While it is true that Governor Ford acted the part of a friend, the legislature was opposed to the Saints and contrary to the constitutional guarantee enacted law against them as the following will show:

I have always considered that your enemies have been prompted by religious and fanatical prejudices, and by a desire for plunder and blood, more than for the common good. By the repeal of their charter, and by refusing all amendments and modifications, our Legislature has given a kind of sanction to the barbarous manner in which you have been treated. Your two representatives exerted themselves to the extent of their ability in your behalf, but the tide of popular passion and frenzy was too strong to be resisted. It is truly a melancholy spectacle to witness the lawmakers of a sovereign Statedescending to pander to the vices, ignorance, and malevolence of a class of people who at all times are ready for riot, murder, and rebellion.—Attorney General Lamboun in Life of Joseph the Prophet, p. 841.

The charter referred to was repealed in January, 1845. One writer referring to this action of the Legislature says:

The Mormon people were virtually outlawed and all constitutional powers taken away from them.

Now note what another writer has to say:

Who began the quarrel? Was it the Mormons? Is it not notorious, on the contrary, that they were hunted like wild beasts, from county to county, before they made any desperate resistance? Did they ever, as a body, refuse obedience to the laws, when called upon to do so, until driven to desperation by repeated threats and assaults from the mob? Did the state ever make one decent effort to defend them as fellow citizens in their rights, or redress their wrongs? Let the conduct of its governors, attorneys, and the fate of their final petitions answer. Have any who plundered and openly massacred the Mormons ever been brought to the punishment due to their crimes?

Let the boasting murderers of begging and helpless infancy answer. Has the state ever remunerated, even those known to be innocent, for the loss of either property or their arms? Did they ever, as a body, refuse obedience to the laws? Let the clergyman who abetted and the editors who encouraged the mob answer.—Joseph the Seer, p. 191.

The religious phase of this bloody drama in Illinois was enacted by T. S. Brockman, a Campbellite preacher, of whom Governor Ford in his History of Illinois writes as follows:

This man Brockman was a Campbellite preacher, nominally belonging to the Democratic party. He was a large, awkward, uncouth, ignorant semibarbarian, ambitious of office, and bent upon acquiring notoriety. He had been county commissioner of Brown County and in that capacity had let out a contract for building the court-house, and it was afterwards ascertained he had let the contract to himself. He managed to get paid in advance, and then built such an inferior building, that the county had not received it up to December, 1846. He had also been a collector of taxes, for which he was a defaulter, and his lands were sold while I was governor, to pay a judgment obtained against him for moneys collected by him. To the bitterness of his religious prejudices against the Mormons he added a hatred of their immoral practices, probably because they differed from his own. Such was the man who was now at the head of the Anti-Mormons who were about as numerous in camp as ever.—Church History, vol. 3, p. 186.

Add to the above testimonies the statement of President Van Buren, "Your cause is just, but we can do nothing for you." Why? "Popular passion," the ruling power, was "too strong to be resisted." Surely Protestant America "spake as a dragon" in these Missouri-Illinois persecutions. Of the two martyrs it stands recorded:

They were innocent of any crimes, as they had often been proved before, and were only confined in jail by the conspiracy of traitors and wicked men; and their innocent blood on the floor of Carthage jail, is a broad seal affixed to Mormonism, that can not be rejected by any court on earth; and their innocent blood on the escutcheon of the State of Illinois, with the broken faith of the State as pledged by the Governor, is a witness to the truth of the everlasting gospel, that all the world can not impeach; and their innocent blood on the banner of liberty, and on the magna charta of the United States, is an ambassador for the religion of Jesus Christ, that will touch the hearts of honest men among all nations.—Doctrine and Covenants 113:7.

"And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed."—Revelation 13:12. I believe the word worship here means to honor or respect, which is being fulfilled right along, and notably so upon the death of Pope Leo, when a great wave of popular sympathy swept over this country, and he was lauded to the skies for his greatness and piety, one noted Protestant divine referring to him as the "great leader of the Lord's hosts," while our worthy president and other state dignitaries have paid official respects to his "Holiness."

And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by the sword and did live. —Verses 13 and 14.

Protestantism, of to-day, embraces all forms of Christianity aside from Catholicism, including spiritualism, Christian Science, and other systems possessing occult powers. Visit the modern revival and hear them tell how they have received the "fire from heaven" in the so-called "second work of grace." This, too, in the sight of the beast, because he still lives until he is destroyed by the coming of Christ. (See 2 Thessalonians 2:8.) Then, again, he would advise the people to make an "image" to the beast whose "deadly wound was healed."

The beast, as we have seen, was papal Rome and an "image" would be something to resemble it; a universal church with a governing head. Has Prot-
The recent antagonism among the different Christian churches, especially those certain narrow Protestants who antagonize the Roman Catholic faith in this city, together with my participation in that meeting held at Ayer a month ago, in which thirty-three different clergyman of various denominations, including one Roman Catholic, met together to form a united religious association or a union of the sects of Christendom, only one of a thousand movements which are gathering and working silently throughout Christendom. Thus it is that the broadened and liberal-minded men and women, the greatest and grandest thinkers and renowned scientists of the world, are gathering and striving everywhere to bring about this union of the sects in Christendom. That this union will come is inevitable. And the basis of this union of Christendom will be the command of Jesus—the simple commandment of love God and love man. This union of the sects, this coming of the one wholly undenominational Catholic Church, will not be the Roman Catholic Church, nor will the Methodists, the Baptists, or one or another of the Protestant churches unite one with another to merge themselves into the tritarian faith or denomination. It must be a union of all the sects—an inter-denominational union—that must give us the coming Catholic denomination.

Reverend George E. Littlefield, using the theme, "An inter-denominational Catholic Church, or a United church," said in part as follows:

It is inevitable that the future will see a Protestantism Catholicism, as a universal Protestant church, as now, and for many centuries past, it has seen a Roman Catholicism.

We could multiply these evidences with material at hand, but enough has been already produced to show that the conditions of the prophecy are being met by Protestant America.

It will not do to try to make this two-horned beast a part of Rome. It rises too late to allow any such interpretation; and since our country, alone, meets the conditions portrayed, there can be but one logical conclusion, much as we may disguise to have it so.

Pagan Rome made war with the people of God and "prevailed not." Papal Rome—apostate Christianity—made war with the saints and "overcome them." It continued twelve hundred and sixty years to 1798, when they began to "take away his dominion," and the two-horned beast appeared upon the stage of action. America rose to national prominence about that time and came up "out of the earth"—in a new world—while the papal beast came up out of the "sea" or "peoples, multitudes, nations, and tongues." (Revelations 17:15.) The United States is a great peace-maker among the nations—lamb-like—but when it came to dealing with some of her own people she played the part of a dragon, thus fulfilling the prophecy and adding another testimony to the long list in favor of the divine inspiration of the word of God.

A Missionary.

Another View.

Some time has elapsed since I contributed anything for your columns. I hope, therefore, that it will not be thought an intrusion if I offer a few thoughts for the consideration of your readers. I presume it will be admitted that in the consideration of any question in order to arrive at correct conclusions it should be considered in all its different bearings. And while enthusiasm in a good cause is a very good thing, possibly sometimes get so enthused that we forget the other side, and overlook some things with which we ought to reckon.

In your issue of January 17 appears an article entitled "Graceland's proposed endowment fund." The conditions agreed upon by the committee for the government of this fund are numbered 1, 2, 3, etc. Now we are not opposing Graceland; do not wish to discourage any one from doing that which he may feel to be his duty towards her, and have no particular objection to the article in the main. But we wish to notice briefly No. 3, which from our point of view is somewhat faulty, and if carried out is more likely to prove a detriment than a blessing. It reads:

No pledge shall be binding until, in addition to the thirty thousand dollars, one thousand dollars has been subscribed by the people of Lamoni and community for the building of a gymnasium upon the college grounds.

Now from the writer's point of view, a gymnasium is not really essential to Graceland's true success. Of course, according to present-day methods, viewing it from the standpoint of the world, it may be considered very essential. But we have been led to believe that Graceland was a church institution, or partially so at least, and that being the case it seems to us should be run on slightly different lines, taking into consideration the financial condition of the church. When Paul was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, we are not informed whether there was a gymnasium attached or not; and when he speaks of such things he seems to wish his converts to apply the principles involved to their development along spiritual lines. At any rate he seemed to attach little importance to such things later in life when he wrote, "For bodily exercise profiteth little." We do not wish to be understood as underestimating a good physical development, for we know of a number who are sadly handicapped and their usefulness very much impaired on account of their physical infirmities. But we desire to see the greatest good accrue to the greatest number, and believe that this could be brought about by some other method than the building of a gymnasium. It may be argued that the "people of Lamoni and community" are the ones who are asked to contribute to this building, and it is therefore no one else’s business. This is true only in part. We take it for granted that the people of Lamoni and community are largely Latter Day Saints; and, being part of the church, what affects one affects all to a greater or lesser extent. Now if the people of Lamoni and vicinity are willing to contribute one thousand dollars for the benefit of Graceland, or in other words for the lasting benefit of her students, why not amend those rules agreed upon for the controlling of the proposed endowment, and instead of a gymnasium purchase a few acres of good land, build a carpenter-shop, a blacksmith-shop, a dressmaking- or tailoring-shop, etc., and give the students an opportunity to develop their physical powers in a way that would be not only a benefit to them, but to their posterity and contribute quite a little toward making Graceland self-sustaining? A good truck-patch might furnish a great deal that could be used in those dormitories, and it could be had fresh from the garden in its most perfect state, and not in the wilted condition in which it is often obtained from the stores. The boys or young men might develop their muscle by raising these vegetables, shoveling the plane, or wielding the blacksmith’s hammer. And the girls or young women might do likewise, using part of their time helping to prepare them for the table, and learning something of “cook-ology” that might enable their future husbands to escape dyspepsia.

A few wash-boards or washing-machines might be added which would enable them to do their own laundering, all of which we think would be in perfect harmony with the law of the Lord.

I saw an account a short time ago of a young lady who sent fifty cents to Chicago for a receipt to make nice, soft hands. The answer was: “Soak them three times a day in dishwater, while your mother rests.” We presume that in some instances, at least, this is excellent advice, but sincerely hope that in the homes of Latter Day Saints there are but few instances where it would be necessary. Do not understand by this that we would have any one especially seek a menial service. But inasmuch as these things are essential and must be done by some one, why not each one be willing to do his little part, instead of doing the nice things ourselves and slipping the drudgery onto some one else, who is perhaps less able than we? The desire on the part of the church, and we could not do better than follow his example. The establishment of a gymnasium would call for a professor in athletics, which would in turn call for a greater contribution for running-expenses; and this brings us to another phase of the subject. If the running-expenses have not been met, why attach the tendency of which will be to make them discontented and likely shorten their stay, while some of the more sensitive ones will be deterred from entering at all. For we are none of us, especially the young, entirely oblivious or indifferent to the opinions of our associates, and the esteem in which we are held by them, as witness Bro. Ebeling’s testimony in Autumn Leaves. And should we not, as Latter Day Saints, seek to eliminate from our nature, and curtail in our children, anything not of the Christ character?

Further, who are those who hold the world’s record for usefulness, and have been the greatest benefit to their fellows? Are they those who have taken a course in and graduated from the gymnasium? or those who have developed on the farm, in the shop, or in the mine? Those who are of an age to attend Graceland should begin to think of usefulness in life, and not so much of its amusements. The Master said, “My Father worketh hitherto and I work”; and we could not do better than follow his example. The persistence and “sticktoitiveness” of the Board in trying to have them do so is perhaps commendable. But there are some things which they may possibly have overlooked, or may not be cognizant of. The branch to which we belong failed to observe “College Day,”—an appeal to all branches of the church to contribute to the running-expenses of the college. Some branches did not respond. The persistence and “sticktoitiveness” of the Board in trying to have them do so is perhaps commendable. But there are some things which they may possibly have overlooked, or may not be cognizant of. The branch to which we belong failed to observe “College Day,” and a few days go we received a personal appeal requesting that we make an effort to get them to respond. Now for a few facts. Our branch numbers according to last report eighty-nine members, some scattered. Of those who remain there are possibly four or five who own their homes,—a few others whom a traveling elder might think were in comfortable circumstances, but upon whose places some loan company or other insatiable concern has a cinch, so that it keeps the occupants scratching to “make ends meet.” To my certain knowledge some of these parties deprive their children of the benefits to be derived from the common school because they feel that they cannot do the work necessary to be done in order to meet their obligations without their children's help. Some of these parties contributed in a small way to liquidate Graceland's indebtedness, and we know they are endeavoring to pay their tithing as they understand the law of God requires. In the light of these facts, is there any consistency in asking these Saints to further deprive their own children of the privilege of the common school, in order that they may contribute to the higher education of some other man's child more fortunate than they? Brother editors and college trustees, please excuse us. We are not built that way; could not conscientiously do it. Now these people are not opposers of Graceland; would like to see her prosper, and are generally ready and willing to help in any laudable enterprise to the extent of their ability. And I doubt not they fairly represent quite a respectable number in the church. Now in view of these conditions would it not be better, for the present at least, to cut out the gymnasium and substitute something else that will benefit the most needy, or give them a better opportunity to help themselves?

Still laboring, hoping, and praying for Zion's redemption, I am,

Your colaborer in the gospel,

SELF-CONTROL IN DEBATE.

Many good people do not like to listen to debates on religious questions, because some disputants warm up and exhibit impatience with their opponents, and instead of good being done, the cause of Christ is made to appear like a religious row. When debates are conducted and both sides manifest impatience and insult one another by nipping answers and smart sayings, it causes some to conclude there is no profit in them, and that they are sinful and do harm.

Our opinion is that when debates (either private or in public, with tongue or with pen) are conducted in the right spirit, and the disputants are earnest, honest, and gentlemanly, they not only do good, but are God-approved. The following quotations from holy writ will prove that it is right and proper to delve into the mysteries of the kingdom.

Paul "disputed for two years" in a schoolhouse. Jesus disputed with the preachers of his time and commenced at the age of twelve. John says we should earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. God said through a prophet, "Come let us reason together." Jesus says, "Search the Scriptures, for . . . they testify of me." "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good."

This is proof positive that God indorses debate; but one must be careful that when discussing and being tried by some insulting opponent he, too, does not descend to the level of his opponent who steps aside from the question and stoops to slander. It is evidence that a person feels his weakness in himself or in his position when he gets angry in debate. If a person cannot control himself in a calm and cool manner in defending God's work in private debate or conversation he need not go on a public platform to defend the church; for if he does he will only expose his own weakness, and the cause of Christ is sure to suffer.

There is an adage that says, "Patience is a virtue; who can possess it?" A successful debater or good conversationalist has learned that his strength lies in his keeping cool, keeping out of the mud, keeping to the question, keeping from looking for self-glory, from acting smart—fact keeping earnest, humble, and in touch with God.

When one writes or speaks with a spirit of contention, using insulting phrases towards his opponent, the strength and force of his arguments, be they ever so convincing, lose their value and are worthless so far as making converts is concerned with honorable people; and often such ill manners raise a spirit of antagonism in many who might decide otherwise. The demeanor of the speaker or writer will help much in making converts. How unpleasant it is at times to listen to conceited disputants strain and twist on technicalities, immaterial, too, at times, in their nature, in Bible-classes, business-meetings of branches, districts, and General Conferences, and occasionally through the columns of our church papers, and use phrases of an objectionable nature to their opponent in discussion. Such conduct often leaves the impression with many outsiders that the whole church is measured by a few aggressive members who have not yet learned that often the wisest of our men scarcely ever speak until they are called upon. I believe our cause is often hurt by aggressive ones who do not use good judgment in private conversation, viz: trying to present the gospel before the world.

This gospel must be offered as a treasure, and not as a war-knife to trim those who differ from us on religious questions, either discussing among ourselves or against those of other faiths. I have listened to some trying to force discussion in private debate upon those not of our faith, who did not want to listen or talk on the subject, and I have actually felt ashamed and sickened for the church's sake to see such a display of bad manners, let alone Christianity. Instead of making converts by such conduct, it for ever drives your opponent entirely out of our reach. I have seen and listened to just such pictures, and I have noticed in every case the aggressor was defeated, the church claims were not defended, and the church was misrepresented.
I believe much good can be and is done by debates, when those defending the truth govern themselves in a gentlemanly manner, in patience and in meekness, upholding the truth with holy boldness, firm, strong, and fearless, facing the enemy and exposing his errors. "He that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city."

"THE COMFORTER, WHICH IS THE HOLY GHOST."

Jesus said to his disciples:

I will pray the Father, and he shall send you another Comforter... Even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him:... the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost.—John 14:16-26.

We here have the unqualified statement of our Savior, that the world can not receive the Holy Ghost. It seems like that ought to settle the matter. He says nothing about their not receiving it as an "abiding Comforter," or as a gift, or "in its fulness," or anything else to that effect. He plainly states that this Comforter the world can not receive.

Whatever spirit or power was with Jesus and the church up to this time, it seems they did not have this Comforter—Holy Ghost—Spirit of truth, for Jesus says, "he shall give you another Comforter." If they already had the Comforter, he could not send him to them. In verse 26 he says, "The Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send." If he was already there, the Father could not send him. Again, "When the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth."

The Comforter had not yet come. He was with the Father. Jesus said, I will send him unto you. Had he been here, Jesus could not send him. But he virtually says that when he went to the Father, he would send this Comforter to the church, that he should be for them, and them only; and the world—those who did not belong to the church, that particular church—could not receive him.

The writer does not believe that any one can receive the Holy Ghost, only in God's appointed way, as proclaimed by Peter: Accept the gospel, and "Repent and be baptized ... in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."

—Acts 2:38. This is the way—the only way to obtain it; and all who fail to comply with these requirements can not receive it. Until they obey this ordinance, they are still in the world. They may be the sheep of God, but still outside the fold—the church.

While the Holy Ghost is only for the church, we are told that Jesus Christ "lighteth every man that cometh into the world." (John 1:9.) Every man receives the Spirit of God, through Christ, when he is born! It is the Spirit that prompts him to do good! It is the Spirit that responds within him, giving him peace and satisfaction, when he has done a good or noble deed. It is the Spirit that answers his prayer of faith, when he offers a fervent appeal to God. It is the Spirit that seems to fill his soul with sacred joy, when he tries to worship the Father in honest devotion; and it is the Spirit that enthuses him in his religious experiences when he tries to please God. But that is not the Holy Ghost.

The writer believes that all men, regardless of church or creed, may have, and enjoy, the Spirit of God and the Spirit of Christ; and the more they try to serve God and the nearer they draw to him, the more of his Spirit they have, but not the Holy Ghost. The Spirit of God permeates everywhere! It comes from God. The Spirit of Christ may be obtained by all who wish it! It comes from Christ. The Holy Ghost is given to all who unite with the church of Jesus Christ, in God's appointed way! He is sent from the Father. Thus we see the three Spirits of the Godhead. Three in one. No division or opposition, but one in purpose, one in desire, and one in the uplifting and saving of man, working together in perfect harmony, and neither interfering with the rights or duties of the other. It must have been this Spirit of God, by which Christ did his wonderful works while on earth, for "the Spirit was given without measure unto him." It must have been by the same Spirit that the apostles worked previous to the day of Pentecost. It could not have been by the Holy Ghost! If it were, when was the Holy Ghost taken away from them? When did he leave the earth? For Jesus said to them just before his death, "The Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name." He was not yet sent to them! Again he says, "The Comforter ... I will send unto you from the Father." He was not with the apostles then. But Jesus makes it still plainer, saying:

I tell you the truth: It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you. And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment.—John 16:7, 8.

To the church he is a Comforter; to the world, who can not receive him, he is a reprover.

It would hardly do to claim that the apostles had the Holy Ghost with them in their ministry, and that he was taken from them, that Christ might send him back again after he went to the Father. So we claim that it was by the Spirit of God, through Christ, that they did their wonderful works. The promise of Jesus to his disciples was, "In my name they shall cast out devils." "And the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name." It seems it was done through the wonderful name of Jesus Christ, and the Spirit of God. John told the people that Jesus would baptize them "with the Holy Ghost, and with fire." He did so on the day of Pentecost, but we fail to find any account of his doing so before.

As to the power of the Spirit of Christ, we present the following: "All those who humble themselves before God and desire to be baptized . . . and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church."—Doctrine and Covenants 17:7.

No one can receive the Holy Ghost until after baptism; but we are here shown that they can receive the Spirit of Christ, and they can manifest by their works, that they have received it, and then they can be baptized and come out of the world and into the church where they can receive the Holy Ghost through the laying on of the hands of the elders. But this is a gift which "the world can not receive," says Jesus the Christ.

As to who is the world, we read:

I have manifested thy name unto the men which thou gavest me out of the world . . . I pray for them: I pray not for the world . . . the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world . . . As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world . . . O righteous Father, the world hath not known thee: but I have known thee, and these have known that thou hast sent me.—John 17:6-25.

These disciples had been converted to the gospel of Jesus Christ, and had united with his church, in baptism by immersion for the remission of sins. They had gone out of the world, and into Christ, and were no longer of the world, but were in a condition where they could receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, which the world—men who were in the condition they were previously in—could not receive.

What is the Holy Ghost? It is the Comforter, "even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father." We read of the spirit of man, and the Spirit of Christ, also the Spirit of God. And we are here told that the Holy Ghost is the Spirit of truth. What is truth? "Thy word [O God] is truth." Then the spirit—the life essence—of the word of God is the Holy Ghost. The world can not receive that! Paul tells us of "the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth." (1 Timothy 3:15.) The spirit of this church and this truth, is the Holy Ghost; and none can receive of it unless they enter into this church. Jesus says, "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth."—John 18:37. Then the Spirit of that to which Jesus bore witness, is the Holy Ghost.

Any one who desires can receive the Spirit of Christ, which will lead them to the word of God—the truth. But they can never receive the Spirit of that word and truth until they first receive the word and obey the truth.

When Philip preached the gospel to the people of Samaria they believed, and they received "the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins"; and they were baptized, both men and women, "and there was great joy in that city."

We can imagine their rejoicing and singing praises to God, their hallelujahs, and shouting for joy, because they were led to see the beauties of the kingdom of God, and the wonderful power accompanying the name of Jesus Christ. Wonderful miracles were performed in his name, and the Spirit of Christ was with them in great power. But that was not the Holy Ghost; for shortly after that Peter and John went there and "prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (for as yet he had fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.)"—Acts 8:15, 16. It seems that the Holy Ghost had no part in the affair up to this time. It must have been the Spirit of God and the Spirit of Christ that filled them with joy. They had not received the Holy Ghost in any way or part, "for as yet he had fallen upon none of them." But when Peter and John laid their hands on them, they received the Holy Ghost. And Simon saw that it was through that ordinance that the Holy Ghost was given, and he wanted to buy the power that he might do the same by laying on his hands.

If we attend a spiritual prayer-meeting of any of the denominations of the day, (and they do have spiritual meetings,) and listen to the honest prayers offered up to God, and to the devout souls pleading with the Father—honest in their way, sincere in their worship, grateful to him for his watchcare and thanking him for his blessing—we enter into the spirit of that meeting, and we worship with them in spirit, for we feel that the Spirit of God is there. But that is not the Holy Ghost. God's loving watchcare is over all his children, even if they are in error. "He loves them still, even if they are in sin." "He loves the sinner but hates the sin." And when they try to draw near to him, he draws near to them. And according to their zeal, they receive of his Spirit to comfort and cheer them. The members of all churches can testify of the wonderful power of the prayer of faith—how God has heard and answered their prayers, and removed from their souls the weary weight of woe; and how they knew they were in the divine presence—but that is not the Holy Ghost.

If we attend a prayer-meeting of the Saints, and hear the prayers offered up, and the testimonies given, we drink into the spirit of the meeting; a sweet, peaceful influence steals over the congregation, and we feel that the Spirit of God is there. A brother or sister arises to speak; a spirit inspires them; and under its power they deliver words of prophecy or speak in an unknown tongue; or describe a vision they have received, or a revelation. Every one in the room who is in touch with God, feels the presence of that Spirit. It seems to thrill through their system, and burn through their veins—they tremble under its power. Tears start unbidden to their eyes and course down their cheeks, while their whole soul seems drawn out to God, and they are filled with thanksgiving and praise. And as they listen to the words spoken by inspiration, the Spirit testifies to them that it is of God, while the sweet, melting power that rests upon them fills them with holy love, and they know they are under the influence of a peculiar heavenly power. That is the Holy Ghost—which the world can not receive. Jesus said, "He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you"; "he shall testify of me"; "he will show you things to come"; "he will guide you into all truth"; he shall take of the things of the Father, "and shall show it unto you." That is the Holy Ghost, which is only given to the church of Jesus Christ, the pillar and ground of the truth.

In 1 Corinthians 12:13 we read, "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." What Spirit is that? Why, the Spirit of Christ, of course. There is only one body, that is, the church—the body of Christ. We can not be baptized into the body of Christ, only by the Spirit of Christ. So it is by one Spirit that we are all baptized into the one body, "and have been all made to drink into one Spirit." What Spirit is this? Why, the Holy Ghost. After we are all baptized into the one body by the one Spirit, and its office work with us, in that direction, is done, then, after that, we are all made to drink into one Spirit. The chief office work of the Spirit of Christ seems to be outside the church—gathering his sheep into the fold. He is the good Shepherd. All men who come into the church are drawn by the Spirit of God, and the Spirit of Christ. The office work of the Spirit of truth—the Holy Ghost—is inside the church: To be with the members continually, to comfort, to encourage and cheer, to remind them of the words of Christ, to show the things of God, to lead them into all truth, to show them things to come. In fact, to have general watchcare over the members of the church, the family of God.

"For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body... and have been all made to drink into one Spirit." Paul does not say that all have been made to drink into one Spirit, as though there were only one. Neither does he say the one same Spirit; but he says "one Spirit"; that is, the Spirit of truth, who seems to be the guardian of the church. The twelfth chapter of 1 Corinthians continues the same line of argument, in speaking of the gifts of the Spirit; and, mentioning the different gifts, Paul says they are all from the same Spirit, whether it be wisdom, knowledge, faith, working of miracles, prophecy, tongues, or interpretation. "But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit." "That one" Spirit is the Spirit of truth. All these gifts you will notice are for the members of the church. The wisdom and knowledge here spoken of are not worldly wisdom and knowledge. Men can gain that outside the church, without the aid of the Holy Ghost. But this gift here spoken of is the wisdom and knowledge of the things of God, which are only revealed unto the household of God.

"But," says one, "this must be given by the Spirit of God, for the sixth verse says, 'There are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all.'"

The next verse reads, "But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." He says that God worketh all in all. Why, certainly he does. He is everywhere, by his power. He is the mainspring of everything. The movements of all the universe depend upon him. He is the source of life. He worketh all in all. But the manifestation of this Spirit Paul speaks of, is given to the members of his church. In the sixth verse, he speaks of God; in the next, of the spirit that operates in the church. "There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit." But there is one Lord, who presides over all.

When a person becomes a member of the true church he becomes a "son of God," a member of the "family of God," a citizen of "the kingdom of heaven." He is adopted into "Abraham's seed," is a "joint heir with Jesus Christ," and belongs to the "household of God." He is entitled to "know the mysteries of the kingdom," and to "receive the gift of the Holy Ghost"; and does receive and enjoy the same.

A person who has not been baptized into the true church, has no claim on any of the above, and no matter how good or honest he may be, he is still outside the kingdom, and not entitled to any of the blessings thereof, and he can not receive "the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost."

THE EVER PRESENT PROBLEM.

Life is a great school with no recesses and no vacations. The Head Master is over at hand to give problems to us, his pupils, and whether we will or not, we are compelled to work at the solution of them.

Sometimes we are rebellious scholars and pout and whine while we work, and then we never get the right answer. But if we are cheerful, hopeful, if we believe that the great Teacher

knows what problems we are best able to tackle, we work with faith and persistence, we get the right answer, and find ourselves stronger, and ready for the next problem.

In this great life-school education is not postponed until we are six years old. We begin our school-work with our first breath. It is difficult to realize that the infant is at school and getting his education, but that is the fact, and he works and studies with persistence that puts us older ones to shame.

What is the problem set the baby and at which he is working? His first great task is to build himself a brain. The little head is full of material for a brain. A small part of it is already in working order, having been created by prenatal activities, but the greater part lies unformed, a mass of embryo cells, which his own efforts are to develop into a fully formed brain.

Those constant movements of the head and feet, which look so aimless and so meaningless, are building up the motor areas of the brain. These constantly moving eyes are not taking notice of things, as mamma fondly believes; they indicate the effort that is being made to coordinate the movements of the eye-muscles. Why does the baby look cross-eyed? Because he has not yet gained control of the muscles that move both eyes in the same direction. This is his first lesson in the school of life—to get hold of his body through his will, and he works at it hour after hour, undismayed by the magnitude of the task. Little by little he learns, and at last there comes a day when he can balance himself on his two tiny feet and take a step. No feat of the skilled acrobat has demanded such untiring and persistent effort as this accomplishment of the baby's in learning to walk, for the acrobat has had a trained brain to take control of his efforts, while the baby has had to build his brain as he went along.

This brain-building continues during childhood, and the activity of the child which we call play is in truth his lesson in the great school of life. Play to him is not amusement or recreation, but occupation. When we say he is playing, he is in reality working at a most serious business—learning to use his own powers.

We think children play because they are young, but the psychologist says children are young so that they may play. When we come to have this view of play, we begin to realize its importance and to understand why it seems to the little people so serious a business.

Before the child enters school, he has received a large part of his education. All the first years are taken up with the learning of lessons that tend to self-preservation. When his body is finally developed, when his judgment is somewhat matured, when he has learned the lessons of self-protection so that he may safely be promoted to a higher grade of school-work, he is perhaps made a pupil-teacher by the great Head Master.

We often follow this same plan in the schools which we institute. When a pupil has advanced far enough he may be trusted to teach the pupils in the lower grades. So in life's great school we are made pupil-teachers; a position which we know as that of parenthood.

I doubt if we generally recognize the fact that our parent is only an elder pupil to whom is intrusted the little scholar first entering the primary class in life. If we did recognize this, we might sometimes deal differently with these tiny ones, so ignorant, so helpless, so courageously feeling their way through the mazes of life's great lessons.

If I were to ask my readers how many believe that the fact of physical parenthood does not in itself confer the right to command, arbitrarily. The parent says: "This is my child." Does that imply ownership? I have heard men say, "This is my child. I can do with him as I please." But the state does not recognize such a right of parent over child. The state says:

"You must feed your child, must clothe him, must educate him, and, up to a certain period of his life, his earnings belong to you. But you must not put him to wage-earning under certain years of age, and you may not treat him cruelly, or teach him immorality or criminality."

This seems to imply that the state has a higher claim to the child than the parent has.

The parent then has no such ownership of the child as would allow him to sell the child, as he would a horse or a dog, nor to shirk his responsibility concerning him. The state implies that the child is a trust put into the parents' hands to be protected, educated, safe-guarded in every way until he is able to take care of himself. In other words, the parent is a pupil-teacher, himself in a school, but guiding and caring for the younger pupil. As pupil-teacher he is intrusted with the power to instruct, to guide, to direct, and to control or command, within certain limits, and always in accordance with the rules laid down by the great Head Master.

Some of the most important of these rules are written in the bodily members of the tiny pupil. We call them physiological functions, laws of the body, etc. Our authority over our child must always take into account the child's best interests, and never oppose them. Now I want to make myself very clear on this point. I repeat. The authority of the parent must never oppose the interests of the child. Note I say interests, not wishes, fancies, or desires of the child, for these may directly oppose his interests. By interests I mean his highest good.

Neither should the commands of the parent be given solely in accordance with his own desires. He should know that reason upholds him in what he asks. Too often the only reason in the mind of the parent is expressed in the reply to the child's query, "Why must I do this?" "Because I tell you; that is reason enough." It may be reason enough to give to the child, but it is not reason enough to govern the parent. In fact it may be no reason at all. In giving the simplest command to the child, the parent should feel sure that it does not violate the child's highest welfare. This is putting the conduct of the parent to a severe test, but there is no act where a child is concerned that does not involve a moral question.

As I have said, the work of the body is brain-building. This important process should proceed harmoniously in order that he may build a healthful, symmetrical brain, and a consequent harmonious character. Whatever needlessly interrupts that brain-building process puts needless strain upon the nerves and consequently upon the temper of the child. Not comprehending this fact, we needlessly and needlessly interrupt the play and disarrange the plans of the child; if he rebels, we call him naughty and perhaps punish him.

The little fellow is building a block house, his whole mind intent on the work. He is just about to put the finishing touch and some one stronger and bigger seizing her and carrying her off to make her sing a song; or putting her to bed forcibly when her whole thought is with that incompletely dinner. How would she feel? And with her the matter would not be so serious. A dinner-getting is really not as vital a business as building block houses. In her case her completed brain structure has been momentarily disturbed; in the case of the child, a brain-building process has been interrupted and a faulty brain structure may possibly result.

Well, you say, must the mother wait until the child wants to have the play? He would need not, ready, but would grow cross and irritable and his brain be harmed thereby. That is true. The mother must direct and control, but if she is wise she will see that it is done in a way not to interfere seriously with vital physiological processes.
Suppose she had said, "Now, dear, bed-time is coming soon; you may finish your house and let mamma see how fine it will be, and then we shall have to go to bed. I will give you fifteen minutes in which to finish your house and to put away your blocks." If the child is not ready at the end of fifteen minutes it is his fault and he can have no sense of being unjustly dealt with. And at length he will come to see the value of time and the inexorability of its passage and will govern things accordingly. That is, unless the mother fails to keep her word and allows him more time than the allotted fifteen minutes.

Another illustration: Harry's father is an engineer and Harry is running a train of cars. This train passes through an open door from which his mother thinks she feels a draught. "Shut the door," she commands. Harry does not obey. There is a struggle, a conflict of wills. Mother compels outward obedience, but there is inward rebellion. Harry is not more ready to mind mother next time than this, and years later manifests a disobedience and perversity that nearly breaks his mother's heart.

Well, who is to blame? Let us see. Did the mother think, before she gave the command to shut the door, whether it was in accord with the child's highest good? What were her reasons for shutting the door? She felt a draught. She could have moved out of it, but it did not occur to her that it would be an injustice to her little son to interfere with his traffic. She would have felt justly indignant had some one switched her husband's train off the track and derailed it as she had done with Harry's. The child's train was to her only a toy, his occupation only play; why should he object to having his whole business upset? It was perfect nonsense and he was a naughty boy.

Now what were his reasons for not wanting to shut the door? Just the same reasons that his father would have to having his train summarily stopped. It interfered with traffic.

Well, then, must the mother submit to sit in a draught and take cold in order that a child's play shall not be interrupted? Not necessarily, but she will be wise if, before giving the order, she stop to consider the child's highest good. If she believes that to teach him to be thoughtful of others is the lesson for him to learn at this moment, she will be justified in interrupting his traffic by having the door shut, but she must remember that an arbitrary "shut the door" will not teach him the desired thoughtfulness, especially if enforced by physical compulsion.

Let her consider the question carefully. The boy is at school learning his own powers, learning something of physics, the physical power necessary for overcoming the inertia of stationary objects, the judgment needed to guide his train safely through the doorway, skill in loading his freight-cars; in fact he is learning many valuable lessons, in which occupation he is very happy. All the development of his organism is proceeding harmoniously. Is her desire to have the door closed of enough importance to cause her to interfere with the occupation of her child? If so, then she is justified in asking it. But she will be wise if she can put her wish into such a form that it will not cause an abrupt reversal in the boy's mental processes; if she can bring him to desire to do what she wishes. How can she do that? That will depend upon the child's temperament. One plan will work with one and not at all with another. She might suggest that a new road be opened which need not lead through the door; she might appeal to his love and ask him if he would not like to shut the door for mamma.

But, it will be argued, none of these plans teach him prompt obedience. True, but I might say, neither does the plan followed by the mother teach prompt obedience. At any rate the plans I suggest do not irritate the immature brain as does her plan.

I believe there are times when a peremptory order must be given and prompt, unquestioning obedience rendered. But, I do not believe that this result will be obtained by repeated violations of the laws of the child's brain development, and consequent rebellion and irritation. I would prefer to train to prompt obedience at times when such obedience was not a necessity. In other words, I would institute an obedience-drill. We do not wait until the house is on fire before we have a fire-drill if we want things to work well in the emergency.

Mothers often write to me, "My little boy or girl, three years old, does not seem to have the least idea of obedience. What can I do? I feel that the child must learn to obey his parents."

One can not answer this question in a summary manner, yet it involves the whole philosophy of child-training. Let me ask a question. Why must a child obey his parents? Because they are his parents, you say. He owes his life to them, he is under obligations to obey them. That really has nothing to do with the matter. If he were under the care of some one who was not his father or mother, he would be obliged to obey that one. A child should obey his parents, not because they gave him life, but because they represent Law, and he must be under law all his life—the law of home, the law of school, the law of society, the law of the nation, and the law of God. Children have the idea that when they are grown up they will not have to obey. It would be well for them early to learn that never do we reach the point where we are free from law. It would make it easier for him to obey if he knew that his parents were also under the law and were trying to be obedient. He would feel that there is no injustice in exacting obedience of him. If I had a child who seemed to have no idea of obedience, I would institute an obedience-drill. I would have him march to music and learn as a play to obey orders—"Halt!" "Forward march!" etc., until he would instinctively stop at once when he heard those orders given. I should know in this play that I was educating the brain cells in the right direction, that instead of irritation or rebellion I was creating the habit of prompt obedience.

Then I would enlarge the play to a pleasant stripe to see who would most quickly respond to the orders: "Shut the door," "Hang up your hat," "Bring me the book"—all as a part of the play, but tending to create a habit.

Some parents will perhaps feel that there is no virtue in an obedience that is established through a play; but why should we think it needful to enter into strife with our children when by taking a little more time at the outset, we can pleasantly teach them to obey, and to make it easier for them to obey when the order is given in earnest?

Gladstone says, "Instead of merely making it hard to do wrong, we should also make it easy to do right."

Hughes says, "Laws are not rightly prohibitions, but are needful to mark the boundary in which we have liberty."

The ever-present problem of the parent is to give to the child the freedom that shall prepare for future self-government, and surround him with the restrictions that shall insure present safety. —Doctor Mary Wood Allen in American Motherhood.

BONesteel, South Dakota, February 15, 1906.

Editors Herald: I have read most of the many articles that have appeared in the HeralH recently upon the subjects of the redemption of Zion, the gathering, and consecration, but am sorry to say that I am unable to indorse all that has been presented to us on these lines. I do not care to be "carried away on a wave of enthusiasm" with the prospects of "having to walk back," not being so badly in need of exercise, as there is plenty to do along certain and legitimate lines. I think we will make haste by going slowly, pressing steadily onward in the sure path, that there may be no need of any backward movement.

All who feel anxious for the gathering and the redemption of Zion will do well to read the sermon by Heman C. Smith in a late issue. To my mind that is the kind of doctrine that is needed at the present time. The time may have come for the rich to consecrate of their property, but if so I trust the same may be used for the purchasing of the land, and for the establishing of the worthy poor on that land, and not be spent in a way to leave the church nothing in return, for, by continuing in such a course, we will find ourselves an organization of paupers. The time may have come for the Lord to direct us, for, by continuing in the way to leave the church nothing in return, for, by continuing in such a course, we will find ourselves an organization of paupers. The time may have come for the Lord to direct us, for, by continuing in such a course, we will find ourselves an organization of paupers.
Permission being granted to me to break my journey at ports of call, I stopped, after leaving Sydney, one month at Melbourne, one month in Adelaide, and am stopping a month here.

Before leaving Melbourne I was enabled to visit the Saints of Geelong and found them worshipping in a neat and excellent little church-building erected by Elder C. A. Butterworth. I preached once here and was attentively listened to, the house being well filled. I would be pleased if I could say that Bro. Butterworth was enjoying perfect health.

By the way, it seems I am to break the record; that is, of American elders failing to get away from Australia single! There are Brn. Wight, Butterworth, Wells, and Barmore who have gone on before, none of them "bullet proof," except one, the last one, and his armor was broken. Does this not speak well for Australia?

There was much gambling, drinking, and racing of horses done here during the Christmas and New Year holidays. Little thought by the masses was given to the celebrating of the birth of the Prince of Peace. Great forces, political, social, and religious, are working toward great ends. What would have thrilled our forefathers scarcely possesses novelty now, so great are the evolutions and revolutions that are taking place.

A few of the major events of 1905: The Russo-Japanese War—one of the most sanguinary struggles of modern times; Russia in revolution, many of its towns and cities deluged with blood; Scandinavian rupture; Austria-Hungary on the verge of dismemberment; Eastern question raised by the persistent misgovernment of Macedonia by Turkey; separation of church and state in France; strained relations between France and Germany respecting Morocco.

As time marches along the great latter-day work makes greater calls for my admiration. There is nothing I have which I consider too good to be used in its behalf. My labors in Australia I shall ever look back upon with pleasure; if there is one charge I have against the Saints of Australia it is that they were too kind to me.

PRINCEVILLE, Illinois, February 17, 1906.

Dear Herald: I wish to ask the earnest prayers of the Saints in behalf of our afflicted ones, two of whom are upon beds of sickness. My youngest sister has been sorely afflicted for almost a year, and now my father is confined to his home, and bed, with a severe case of liver trouble, which has been brought on by worry and anxiety over the sad condition of sister.

She seems better than she ever has been yet, and I hope and pray she may soon be well again, if God wills. I know he is with us, and will do all things well. I feel happy in the hope we have in the glorious gospel, and I pray that God may help us to submit graciously to his will.

Hoping the Saints will remember us, I am,

Yours in the faith,

ADEAINE HOPKINS.

MARION, Iowa, February 13, 1906.

Dear Herald: Our Eastern Iowa Sunday-school convention and district conference is now a matter of history, and very pleasant history to all those who attended it.

On Friday evening a well-arranged program, under the auspices of the local Saints assisted by some of their friends of the city by music and recitation, was given and our greatest wish was that the program could have been much larger, for, in a word, it was good.

The conference sessions all passed off pleasantly. The spirit of peace and love abode with us, and at one of the prayer-meetings the gift of prophecy was enjoyed.

Bro. Farr, in addition to his duties as district president, aided in making the conference a sacred joy by singing a few sacred solos.

We believe the conference will long be remembered by all who attended it, for it was a spiritual feast.

May God aid us all to live so that he may make use of us in his service, that his purposes in us may be fulfilled until Christ shall come again.

Your fellow servant in the Lord,

J. B. WILDERMUTH.

RAILROAD RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Preliminary notice is given that the Trunk Line, Central, Western, and Southwestern Passenger Associations have granted the usual rate of one and one third fare, for the round trip, on the certificate plan, to the annual conference and auxiliary conventions to be held at Independence, Missouri, April, 1906.

The usual rate from Pacific Coast points—two cents per mile each way, is announced by the Trans-Continental Association.

The Southeastern Association—south of the Potomac and east of the Mississippi River—will concur in the rate if an attendance of twenty-five persons on the certificate plan is guaranteed. Those coming from that territory should notify me at once.

The New England Association is expected to concur in the rate.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, February 17, 1906.

ENROLLMENTS IN QUORUMS.

Elders, priests, teachers, and deacons who desire to be enrolled in quorums will be supplied with application blanks giving all necessary instructions and information on application to the undersigned. There has not been a sufficient number of vacancies in the existing quorums to receive all applicants, but probably it is well for all unenrolled to make application that new material may be at hand for use; and it may be that new quorums will be organized at the General Conference. This could be done by a sufficient number acting together and petitioning the conference to make provision for additional quorums; and such quorums could be made a success by putting live men in charge of them.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, February 17, 1906.

SECOND QUORUM OF SEVENTY.

To All Members of the Second Quorum of Seventy: By action of the quorum at our last sitting, it was resolved that the reports of the members as missionaries, as printed in the Herald, be the report to this quorum. However, as there are some of our number who are not under general conference appointment, we request them to send us a written report of all labor performed in the ministry during the present conference year. Let all remember the dues of fifteen cents each, and unless you are sure you will attend the General Conference, send same to the undersigned between March 1 and 15.

We desire, also, that the reports reach us not later than March 15.

H. E. MOLE, Secretary and Treasurer.

Box 396, HOLDEN, Missouri.

SECOND QUORUM OF ELDERS.

I have mailed a circular letter and blank report to each member of the quorum; if you fail to get yours please inform me and I will see that you are provided. We wish to have a complete report from each member.

F. C. WARNER, Secretary.

2424 Wabash Avenue, KANSAS CITY, Missouri.

FOURTH QUORUM OF ELDERS.

To the Fourth Quorum of Elders: We are pleased to inform you that soon (all being well) will be mailed to your latest post-office address the annual circular letter, together with the report blanks. Any one not receiving the same by March 1, please so state at once by card to clerk.

We have written to a number asking them to write upon different subjects, to be considered at our next quarterly meetings, but there are only two articles at hand to date. Please hurry them along, brethren. And any one having any questions, suggestions, or propositions for discussion and consideration at the session of quorum at the coming General Conferences, please send them at once to Elder F. E. Cochran (quorum clerk), Lamon, Iowa, Box 345.

C. G. LEWIS, President.

Second Quorum of Deacons.

Members of the Second Quorum of Deacons are requested to send their annual reports to the undersigned before March 10. Some did not report last year. We desire to remind such that members not reporting in successive years shall be dropped from the quorum.

W. E. PAUL, Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, February 19.

Land Us Your Aid.

Having proffered the manuscript of Parsons' Text Book to the church, I have been requested to put the matter in shape with the new evidence, for examination by the Board of Publication with the view of reprinting. And as some of the brethren have evidence along different lines treated, that they would like to have inserted, let them send it to me, also any corrections that they have discovered necessary in the book itself. I hope to keep this evidence of each day, but I have missed some very important matters, hence let me hear from you at as early a day as possible.

In bonds I remain,

A. H. PARSONS.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, February 12, 1906.

Conference Notices.

Kentucky and Tennessee District convention will convene with Foundry Hill Branch, on Saturday before the first Sunday in March. All reports should be sent to reach me by the first day of March. District officers are to be elected. J. J. Adair, secretary, R. F. D. 1, Farmington, Kentucky.

Florida District conference will convene with Santa Rosa Branch at McArthur Schoolhouse, February 24, 1906, at 10.30 a.m. All Saints and friends are expected to attend. B. L. Jernigan, secretary.

Convention Notices.

Central California District Sunday-school association will meet in convention at San Jose, Saturday, March 16, during district conferences of offices, with other business of importance. Evie Carmichael, secretary.

Lamoni Stake Religio and Sunday-school associations will hold their annual joint convention at Lamoni, March 8 and 9, commencing 2 p.m. Thursday, the 8th, and continuing over Friday evening. Thursday afternoon, normal training work; Friday morning, round table business; afternoon, election of officers and delegates. Both evenings will be devoted to programs, music, and papers and discussions upon the theme, "Employment," as provided by programs issued by the General Sunday-school Association. You will greatly oblige us by giving this publicity. In bonds, J. A. Gunsolley, superintendent stake association; D. L. Morgan, vice-president stake Religio.

Resolution of Condolence.

(Adopted by the conference of the Little Sioux District.)

Whereas, Our heavenly Father has been pleased to release from his long and arduous labors, our beloved brother and fellow laborer, Elder James Caffall, and to call him home to the haven of rest and peace prepared for the faithful in Christ Jesus, be it therefore

Resolved, That we, his brethren and sisters of the Little Sioux District of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, do hereby extend to our beloved sister, his faithful companion in tribulation and trial, and their beloved family, our deep and heartfelt sympathy, and brotherly love, with the assurance that we do earnestly commend her to that divine care that has watched over and upheld him in all his trials and labors, and enabled him to maintain his integrity and love for God and his cause, and we feel assured that the divine arm will be around her to sustain her until she shall have completed life's journey and shall be gathered home in peace to receive the glorious reward secured unto all the faithful in Christ Jesus.

We realize that in the death of our brother the church militant has lost a diligent, faithful, and wise laborer; that he was a faithful friend to virtue, an unswerving defender of the truth, and a fearless foe to vice in all its forms.

We believe his life has been one worthy of admiration and emulation; therefore, we humbly pray that we may profit by his noble example of virtue, honesty, integrity, and purity; that we may be worthy to enjoy his society and that of the righteous of all ages, in the presence of our God and his Son Jesus Christ. Amen.

LITTLE SIOUX, IOWA, February 10, 1906.

Died.

CAPPAL.—Elder James Caffall, born in Herefordshire, England, July 14, 1855, married Eliza Pratt, June 5, 1880. Came to America in 1883; first settled at St. Louis, then went to Utah; soon dissatisfied they came to Council Bluffs in 1886. Six daughters were born to them, four of whom survive: Srs. J. D. Stuart, and Emma Daley of Magnolia, S. George Gilmore of California. His noble companion also survives to mourn. Bro. Caffall was ordained and began preaching at about the age of twenty-one. In 1873 he was called by revelation to the Quorum of Twelve, released honorably in spring of 1901. He was earnest, devoted, faithful to the last. Funeral services at his home, at 2 p.m., Friday, February 9. Sermon by Alma M. Fyrando, assisted by Sidney Pitt. Thus at the age of 80 years, 6 months, and 23 days, we feel he has wrought well, and his rest is assured.

MILLER.—John William Blair Miller, born February 29, 1892, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; converted, W. W. Blair; baptized August 14, 1904. Died February 11, 1906; buried in Kirtland, Ohio, services conducted by G. T. Griffiths, A. E. Stone, and John H. Lake. Sermon by Elder Lake. The parents wish to convey sincere thanks to Saints and friends for their kindness. Their son hurt himself by falling on the ice Friday. He said nothing about it, and died suddenly Sunday evening while his parents were at church, word being brought by the oldest son. Only those who have been so tried can sense the cruel shock.

SOUTHWESTERN Iowa has shared with other regions of the country in the enjoyment of warm, sunny, springlike days, and the voice of the robin is heard in the land. Unless the frost breath from the north chills the buds and freezes the running sap and destroys the fruit, all signs indicate an early and a goodly spring. We are hopeful, notwithstanding unfavorable possibilities and the shadow of the coal strike for the coming winter.

station. By consultation and agreement the delegation appeared at the committee-room in the capitol where the investigation was being held under direction of Senator J. C. Burrows, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections.

By courtesy of the committee the delegation were accorded seats where they could both see and hear all that was said and done in their presence. Being assured that we would not be called before the committee as a witness on the opening day—Tuesday, the 6th—the Editor did not attend the session with the rest of the delegation; but on Wednesday he attended and continued to attend the sessions until the adjournment on Friday, the 9th, without date.

It must be understood that the Editor was the only one of the delegation who was summoned to appear before such committee as a witness, but he deemed it prudent, both for personal reasons and for the good of the church, to consult with others of the brethren and to take with him those selected, as he deemed it important that in case an emergency should arise at any time, a proper delegation of some of the authorities of the church would be essential. It was not expected that this delegation would force itself upon the attention of the committee as witnesses in the Smoot inquiry, as but one had been subpoenaed.

What the nature of the evidence which might be in the possession of the Editor and desired by the committee should be, neither himself nor others of the delegation were informed, and hence no effort was made to secure the examination of witnesses so far as the delegation was concerned. It became evident at the closing session of the committee on Friday, the 9th, that the Editor would not be called to the stand to testify. This was not unexpected by some members of the delegation. The reasons stated by the Chairman to the Editor at the close were to the effect that it was deemed inopportune to enter upon any examination which might prolong the sessions of inquiry upon the part of the committee. The Editor himself and the delegation were quite satisfied to let the matter rest as it was, feeling assured as they did that whatever their opinion might be as to the right of Senator Smoot being continued in his seat as senator, it was a matter clearly and entirely within the province of the Senate, and which it would be improper for them as church officers to express an opinion upon prior to the finding of the committee of inquiry.

We were not surprised and not at all disappointed at the issue nor because of not being called to testify. The delegation was not there to force itself upon the notice of the committee nor the public in regard to the mooted questions existing between the two churches. The Editor was there because he was subpoenaed to appear as a witness; and had he been called to the stand would have given evidence upon such matters as were inquired of him by the prosecuting protestants and the defense according to his knowledge without fear of man or regard for consequences. His brethren were with him at his request as presiding officer of the church, for the purpose of the moral prestige and support which the effective membership of the church should give to their associate officers under circumstances and conditions in which the general interests of the church were involved or might be called in question.

We are satisfied with the result. To have been urgent and persistent in urging themselves upon the attention of the committee persistently the delegation would have been putting themselves in the position signified in the proverb which says: "He that passeth by, and meddleth with strife belonging not to him, is like one that taketh a dog by the ears," the result of which would have been sure to have been to the disadvantage of the witnesses and of the church. The Editor has at no time expressed an opinion as to whether he thought or desired that Mr. Smoot should be expelled from the Senate, as he has been patiently awaiting the action of the committee of inquiry.

It seems to the Editor, in this connection as well as with reference to the agitation which has been going on in the HERALD in the last three or four months in regard to the gathering and the temporalities of the church, that no more fitting or peculiarly appropriate rebuke to the overreaching anxiety upon the part of many could be stated or presented than is found in the following, taken from the Ensign for February 22, which the Editor most cordially indorses, as he feels assured that the Holy Spirit by which the prophets of old spoke to scattered or collected Israel gave direction and force to what was said:

Behold, the Lord walketh in the midst of his heritage as does a man in his garden, and beholdeth the fruit from his own planting, in the grain which is for food; in the flowers which are for beauty and fragrance, and in the fruits which are for exhilaration and invigoration. He seeth the places which are chilled and he ordereth the sunlight. He noteth the parched plant to welcome the cloud even as they pray for the sunshine, for how can ye have the rain except the clouds shall gather, and how can ye have the sunshine of yesterday or the cloud of to-day, the plow of the morning, or the sickle of the evening, shall do most for the enrichment of my heritage, or the extolling of my wisdom? Judge ye regarding this, and add ye contentment to your diligence, and leave the harvest with me.

On Saturday, the 10th, after the adjournment of the committee on the previous day without date, the delegation scattered, Brn. Kelley and Sheehy going on to Philadelphia, Brn. Alexander and Heman C. Smith starting home, the Editor and his wife starting home by the way of Ontario, and Bro. E. C. Briggs remaining at Washington for a few days by invitation.
We were kindly entertained by the only member of the church known to be in Washington, Sr. Peck, who with her husband gave us kindly welcome.

The Editor and wife returned home on the morning of the 21st inst., improved in health and desirous of doing what he can still for the upbuilding of Zion and the conservation of truth.

BRO. R. C. EVANS AT TORONTO.

In returning from Washington we went by way of Toronto for two purposes: one to visit a portion of the family resident there; the other to see and confer with Bro. R. C. Evans of the Presidency in reference to conference work and also to witness the effort being made by the Saints in connection with Bro. R. C. Evans in the Majestic Theater, one of the largest in the city.

We learned upon our arrival there on Sunday, the 11th, at noon that Bro. Evans was suffering from an attack of sickness and was quite bad. We visited him at five o'clock in the afternoon, found him in bed twisting and writhing in distress from pain, the result of an attack of calculus. He was advertised to speak at eight o'clock in the theater and he had stated to the audience that if he were alive and well he would be at his post. We thought it almost impossible for so sick a man to rise and occupy, but at eight o'clock he was at his post, preaching an excellent sermon as reported and answering questions for half an hour after the sermon was closed.

Bro. F. R. Tubb in a letter to the HERALD has glowingly reported the work being done. A few facts will be acceptable to the Saints. Bro. R. C. Evans is an attractive speaker and he has taken the view that before people could be reached to be talked to they must be attracted and interested, and that if a thing was worth having and offering to the people it was worth advertising. He has therefore had the place billed with posters each week containing his photograph and with a printed program, an invitation telling the people where the services would be had, what hour, what day, and also announcing the subject. This the brethren and friends have placed in eligible sites in the front of stores and buildings and on bill-boards in connection with other advertising-matter, and has resulted in drawing considerable attention to what was being done at the Majestic Theater.

We were present on the evening of the 18th at one of these services, it being the seventeenth in the series. For seventeen successive Sunday evenings Bro. Evans has been upon the platform and has occupied from an hour to two hours and a quarter in preaching and answering questions after the sermon was over, questions which have taken a very wide range, the answers to which have in many instances enforced the letter of the sermons which were delivered. His subject the night we were present was from the text, “What shall we do with this Jesus which is called Christ?” He made an excellent effort, elucidating the character of Jesus and his work, and contrasting it with men who have attained celebrity in the world from position or native talent, showing clearly that Jesus was the one and only character of the kind that the world has ever seen. In doing so he had the opportunity to present the gospel and its requirements in positive manner from the consideration of the promise made in prophecy, that God had given him, Jesus the Christ, as a witness, a commander, and a leader, confining his talk to this point especially to what Jesus had borne witness and commanded through his disciples to the world.

This movement in Toronto originated in a set purpose of attracting attention to the work and of presenting its claims. It has been so far eminently successful. After it was projected the powers that were imported a celebrated revivalist, a Reverend Doctor Torrey, and a noted singer, Mr. Alexander. The large hall, known as Massey Hall (not Mossey as a late HERALD had it) was secured for the revivalist. It was feared both by Bro. Evans and others of the brethren that this effort of Doctor Torrey's would result in detracting from the effort made at the Majestic Theater and that the effort might have to be abandoned; but to the surprise of the brethren it seemed to have no such effect upon the effort being made; indeed, it would appear that the striking contrast between the two efforts had resulted in turning greater attention to Bro. Evans and his effort so that the largest congregations were had while this revivalist effort was being carried on. It has ceased, but Bro. Evans' effort is still going on.

The theater will seat some 2,400 or 2,500 persons. The seats were filled and all standing-room in all the aisles and open spaces was filled until the attention of the city authorities was called to this fact, when policemen were stationed at the entry and when the seats were filled no others were allowed to enter. Thousands were turned away from the doors night after night. This effort up to the Sunday we were there has cost an average of about $55 per night for the use of the theater and the advertising. This has been paid by collections taken up, cheerfully responded to by collections running from $45 to $70; so that the brethren are still in advance, having a reserve fund in the hands of President Archie McLean sufficient to cover the expense of two services, should there be a failure in collections at any time.

It is Bro. Evans' intention to continue these services if his health permits until time to close for General Conference purposes, or in case his health should fail and he be compelled to desist, which we thought would not be probable, for he had rallied and though suffering pain at times, was apparently improving. The night we were with them, the congregation upon learning we were present, after the sermon requested a speech. This we responded to for a few moments, the best we could under the circumstances; but whether satisfactory or not we do not know. We cordially indorsed the effort put forth by the brethren, notified the people that Bro. Evans was an evangelist for the truth, and that as we knew that nothing but that which was true and honest and upright would be permitted to continue, we propose to stand upon the truths revealed by the Almighty through the Bible and the later revelations which had come to the church. Our statement was received with general applause, showing that the teaching of Bro. Evans and others who had spoken had been appreciated and that the positions of the Reorganized Church on the religious questions of the day had been approved by those who had been attending the meetings.

As to the method employed by Bro. Evans and the brethren, we confess we see a striking merit in it. It informs the people beforehand of what they may expect when attending the service. It brings into striking contrast the teaching of the New Testament and the later revelations to the church as understood and presented by the Reorganized Church and what is ordinarily called the gospel by the denominational clergymen of the times. We trust that our presence and what little we had to say would be no detriment to the work which is going on. The city of Toronto is being stirred as it never has been before. The matters presented are being discussed among those who have attended the services, where the kindest of feeling seems to prevail and the closest attention is being given. The house was full the evening of the 18th, every seat being occupied, with policemen standing at the entry to prevent the crowding of the aisles contrary to the city ordinance.

On Monday night there was a concert in the church by our people, at the close of which a testimonial of esteem was presented to the Editor and his wife in a presentation speech by Bro. Evans, the response to which was made by the Editor's wife, he himself having determined to remain indoors for excellent reasons.

To those who may have thought that the visit to Toronto was unnecessary we have only this to say: We were about the Master's business in going to the seat of government at Washington, and returning we could not afford to pass by so important an effort as the one being put forth by Bro. Evans when so excellent an opportunity was offered to see and hear for ourself. The additional expense was not great and we being largely unfit for office work under the circumstances were just as well off in the house of friends at Toronto as anywhere else.

Persons interested in railroad rates to the coming General Conference and auxiliary conventions to be held at Independence, Missouri, in April next will do well to consult the notice of the Church Secretary covering the same. Care to follow instructions given therein will save vexation and disappointment. Local railway agents frequently are uninform ed concerning dates and other rules governing such meetings, hence advise purchasers of tickets contrary to rules governing association agreements. Rules observed will bring desired results.

Bro. C. A. Butterworth reports ten baptisms in his field for the past quarter. Speaking of conditions in general he says: "I made one short visit to Hastings, two or three to Melbourne, and spent a month with the Saints at Adelaide. The rest of my time has been spent in the Geelong District, in trying to get the work on a more sure footing there, with the hope that sufficient and suitable material might be gathered in to form a branch. The work is gradually increasing in Geelong and quite a number are becoming acquainted with the faith. The Sunday-school is also making steady progress and the outlook is encouraging along this line. The last month has been spent in Adelaide, where I find we have a fine, faithful little band of Saints, who are walking in love and the unity which characterizes the children of God. No sacrifice seems too great to them to get the truth before their neighbors, or to assemble at the times appointed for meeting. Both old and young, almost en masse, attend the Sunday-school, which indicates their anxiety to learn all they can and set an example to the world. The work in Adelaide is in good condition with very bright and encouraging prospects ahead for a large branch, if they keep on as at present. There must be a greater sacrifice upon the part of the body of God's people in Australia, both spiritually and financially, if we would reach the ideal we have in view—the gathering to Zion of the pure in heart. 'She hath done what she could,' should be the motto for every Saint to observe. Unless unity, love, and perseverance are manifest among God's people they must surely suffer loss."

'The little that a righteous man hath is better than the riches of many wicked. For the arms of the wicked shall be broken; but the Lord upholdeth the righteous. The Lord knoweth the days of the upright; and their inheritance shall be for ever. They shall not be ashamed in the evil time; and in the days of famine they shall be satisfied. But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away.'—Psalm 37:16-20.
"CONTEND AGAINST NO CHURCH."

The above statement is only a portion of a complete thought which was expressed in the following words: "Contend against no church, save it be the church of the devil."—Doctrine and Covenants 16:4.

Since we are directly authorized to contend against the church of the Devil—if against any—and to contend against that church only, is it not proper that we make an examination to ascertain, if possible, what and where that church is? Does it not seem strange that in the face of this plain statement we have applauded and praised the strenuous blows that have been rained upon many of the churches of men while we have been conspicuously silent as to the identity of the one church we are authorized to contend against?

In considering the origin of churches we find that there are three distinct sources from which they come. 1. From God. 2. From man. 3. From Satan. And, too, we find that in the rise of any church there has always been a prime mover, some one who has delegated authority to men to act in executing the laws and regulations given or adopted to govern that church.

In the church of God, he was the prime mover. He laid down the laws to govern in his church. He delegated authority to man to carry out his plans. When the authority was lost by reason of unfaithfulness, at such times as seemed best, when the people were ready for it, he restored that authority again to man.

The churches of men originate with men. Man is the prime mover. Man commissions his fellow men to carry out the rules and regulations adopted for the government of the church.

Therefore in the church of the Devil we should expect that Satan would be the prime mover, and that he would delegate authority to some one to act in carrying out his wishes and the rules and regulations instituted by him for the government of the organization of which he is the head. And so we find it.

Now, it would seem strange and peculiar if Satan should establish a church that was a shadowy, imaginary thing, without any real substance that one could locate and describe,—no perceptible, tangible body that could be understood by man. If that were so, how could we carry out the injunction to contend against it? We believe there is ample scripture to show that the church of the Devil had a beginning in tangible, organized form, that Satan was the prime mover, that he delegated authority to man, and that he has restored, by his revelations, that authority when it has been lost by any people, when they were ready to receive it and act in harmony with his instructions.

And when we find that God established his church in the morn of creation, and had the gospel preached to Adam, would we expect that Satan waited until the meridian of time, or until the end was near in the latter days, to establish his church? Hardly. He is not the kind of a character that has been represented to us if he would not take immediate steps to establish his church right in the beginning, and commence his opposition to the church of God in the early morn of creation. With this thought in mind, we desire to call attention to some statements made in the account of the history of the creation and the events immediately following:

Turning to the fifth chapter of Genesis, Inspired Translation, we read that Cain loved Satan more than God, and Satan commanded him to make an offering. He made it as Satan commanded. Abel made his offering as the Lord commanded. As a result the Lord accepted Abel's offering, but rejected Cain's, which stirred Cain to wrath, and "Satan knew this, and it pleased him." Yes, he saw his opportunity there to start his work among men, to get his organization into working order. He was not at all backward in taking advantage of it, either, for he presented himself to Cain and said:

Swear unto me by thy throat, and if thou tell it thou shalt die; and swear thy brethren by their heads, and by the living God, that they tell it not; for if they tell it they shall surely die, and this that thy father may not know it; and this day I will deliver thy brother Abel into thy hands. And Satan swear unto Cain, that he would do according to his commands. And all these things were done in secret. And Cain saith, Truly I am Master Mahan, the master of this great secret, that I may murder and get gain. Wherefore Cain was called Master Mahan, and he gloried in his wickedness.

This was the commencement of Satan's organization among the children of men, the foundation of his great church. Note some of the peculiarities of this formative process. Cain was to swear by his throat; and, if he told, the penalty was death. All those who should become his brethren in this great secret affair, were to be sworn by their heads, and if they told a like penalty was attached. They swore by the living God. All these things were done in secret. Bear these points in mind as we investigate.

The killing of Abel was only an incident in the great work that began at that time. Farther along it is stated that Cain and his wife and many of his brethren went to the land of Nod, and they built a city called Enoch. (See how the prime mover of this organization inspired them to anticipate that which would take place in the church of God. The church of God had a city of Enoch, too, which was caught up to heaven.) The next great abomination mentioned, as a result of the establishment of this organization, was polygamy. Along down the line of the descendants of Cain we find one, Lamech, who took unto himself two wives, and this bit of history is recorded:

And Lamech said unto his wives, Adah and Zilla, hear my voice, ye wives of Lamech; hearken unto my speech, for I have slain a man to my wounding, and a young man to my hurt. If Cain shall be avenged seven fold, truly Lamech shall be seventy and seven fold. For, Lamech having entered into covenant with Satan, after the manner of Cain, wherein he became Master Mahan, master of that great secret which was administered unto Cain by Satan; and Irad a son of Enoch [Irad was a grandson of Cain's] having known their secret, began to reveal it unto the sons of Adam; wherefore Cain, being angry, slew him, not like unto Cain his brother Abel for the sake of getting gain; but he slew him for his oath's sake; for, from the days of Cain, there was a secret combination, and their works were in the dark, and they knew every man his brother, wherefore the Lord cursed Lamech and his house, and all they that covenanted with Satan; for they kept not the commandments of God.

In the foregoing please note these points: Lamech carried out the penalty of the oath by which all who joined the organization were bound. Their works were done in secret, in the dark, and yet every man knew his "brother." (They had some way of telling who was a "brother.") God cursed them for their works.

The succeeding verses relate how this abomination was among all the sons of men. When Lamech made known his crime to his wives, they rebelled against him and had no compassion for him; and Lamech became an outcast and dared not come among his "brethren" for fear some of them might make away with him.

In the sixth chapter we find a statement which gives added information:

And in those days Satan had great dominion among men, and raged in their hearts; and from thenceforth came wars and bloodshed. And a man's hand was against his own brother in administering death, because of secret works, seeking for power.

This reveals another object of the organization: to get power.

We will now notice some Book of Mormon evidences. Among the Jaredites there was once a man, who, to get power, gathered his people around and extracted a promise that they would be faithful to him in all that he desired of them. The account continues:

And it came to pass that they all swear unto him by the God of heaven, and also by the heavens, and also by the earth, and by their heads, that whoso should vary from the assistance which Akish desired, should lose his head; and whoso should divulge whatsoever thing Akish made known unto them, the same should lose his life. And it came to pass that thus they did agree with Akish. And Akish did administer unto them the oaths which were given by them of old, who also sought power, which had been handed down even from Cain, who was a murderer from the beginning. And they were kept up by the power of the devil to keep them in darkness, to help such as sought power.—Ether 3:12, small edition.

Note that this was a revival of the same thing which was organized by the Devil in the beginning; the nature of the oaths was the same. Farther on in the same paragraph we have this:

Therefore Akish administered it unto his kindreds and friends, leading them away by fair promises to do whatsoever thing he sired. And it came to pass that they formed a secret combination, even as they of old; which combination is most abominable and wicked above all, in the sight of God; for the Lord worketh not in secret combinations.

Note that the people were induced by fair promises, as they are to-day. If you are out of work, it will get you a good position; it will come to the relief of your family, if they are in need, and all that sort of thing. But notwithstanding the fair promises, it was "most abominable and wicked above all, in the sight of God." Note also this statement, and may it be indelibly impressed upon our minds: "For the Lord worketh not in secret combinations."

In the next paragraph we read:

And now, I, Moroni, do not write the manner of their oaths and combinations, for it hath been made known unto me that they are had among all people, and they are had among the Lamanites, and they have caused the destruction of this people of whom I am now speaking [the Jaredites], and also the destruction of the people of Nephi; and whatsoever nation shall uphold such secret combinations, to get power and gain, until they shall spread over the nation, behold, they shall be destroyed.

The Devil took good care that his work was established among all nations. Moroni speaks of two nations that were overthrown by this wicked combination, and prophesies that whatever nation shall uphold such secret combinations, until they shall spread over the nation, shall be destroyed. "Whatever nation" includes our nation with the others; and there is no escape from the consequences of that prediction, if the conditions are permitted to obtain.

Wherefore, O ye Gentiles, it is wisdom in God that these things should be shown unto you, that thereby ye may repent of your sins, and suffer not that these murderous combinations shall get above you, which are built up to get power and gain, and the work, yea, even the work of destruction come upon you.

Why the call for the Gentiles of this day to repent, and why the warning against these things, and why the wisdom in God that these things should be shown unto this nation, if no such thing exists to-day?

Wherefore the Lord commandeth you, when ye shall see these things come among you, that ye shall awake to a sense of your awful situation, because of this secret combination which shall be among you, or woe be unto it, because of the blood of them who have been slain; for they cry from the dust for vengeance upon it, and also upon those who build it up.

This command to awake is to whom? To the Gentiles unto whom this book shall come. To the nation in which this work shall come forth, and in which these secret combinations shall exist. But more especially to those who accept and claim to believe in the divinity of this book. They, above all others, when they see things among them, should "awake to a sense of their awful situation." Have we done it? Are we doing it?

For it cometh to pass that whose buildeth it up, seeketh to overthrow the freedom of all lands, nations and countries; and it bringeth to pass the destruction of all people, for it is built up by the devil, who is the father of all lies.
Here we see another object of this organization. But we would not expect that it would publicly proclaim that this was its object. No, the claim put out to the public will be the very opposite, because it is built up by the father of all lies, and we could not expect that the people would be told the truth about its real object and aim.

Later, the Jaredite nation was rent in twain, because of this secret combination; and after those days there came many prophets, and prophesied great and marvelous things, and cried unto the people to repent, but “they did reject all the words of the prophets, because of the secret society and wicked abominations.” (Ether 4:12.) And yet you could not convince one connected with that secret society that there was anything in it that conflicted with his duty to God, his country, his neighbor, or himself. And to-day we are met with just such a statement (as argument against the plain word of God) from those who have sworn by the God of heaven to subscribe to the following: “I furthermore promise and swear that a [here is inserted the name of that degree] secrets given to me in charge as such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast, as in his before communicated, murder and treason only excepted; and they left to my own election.” And again in a still higher degree: “I furthermore promise and swear that I will keep the secrets of [here is inserted the name of this degree] (when communicated to me as such, or I knowing them to be such) without exception.” That is growing some! The farther you go the worse it gets. In the first one murder and treason are excepted, but you have your choice in the matter. In the one farther along no exception is made. You swear to keep these secrets without exception. Notice how the binding process goes on little by little. The law of God says that he who breaks the law of the land must be delivered up to the law of the land. So there is a conflict here, notwithstanding the claim that there is no conflict.

Now see how closely the extracts from the oaths above agree with Helaman’s account of the secret combinations in Nephite times:

And it came to pass that they did have their signs, yea, their secret signs, and their secret words; and this that they might distinguish a brother who had entered into the covenant, that whatsoever wickedness his brother should do, he should not be injured by his brother, nor by those who did belong to his band, who had taken his covenant. —Helaman 2:30.

Yes, he was bound to keep his brother’s secret and protect him if necessary from a just application of the law.

Now behold, those secret oaths and covenants did not come forth unto Gadianton from the records which were delivered unto Helaman; but behold, they were put into the heart of Gadianton, by that same being who did entice our first parents to partake of the forbidden fruit; yea, that same being who did plot with Cain, that if he would murder his brother Abel, it should not be known unto the world. And he did plot with Cain, and his followers, from that time forth.

Here we see the restoration of these things by the one who was the prime mover in their first establishment. The oaths were in Jaredite records which Helaman had; but he would let no one see them. And Satan inspired Gadianton to produce them. And we are told farther on that it was part of the Devil’s work to hand down their plots, and their oaths, and their covenants, from generation to generation as he could get hold upon the hearts of the children of men.

In verse 32 we are told that “the Nephites did build them up and support them, beginning at the more wicked part of them, until they had overspread all the land of the Nephites, and had seduced the more part of the righteous until they had come down to believe in their works.” That good and honest men in any age are found in it, is not sufficient reason for accepting it as approved of God. The more part of the righteous may be seduced to enter into it and believe in it; but that does not alter the fact that it is still abominable in the sight of God, founded by the Devil, and carried on by his power.

And thus they did obtain the sole management of the government, insomuch that they did trample under their feet, and smite, and rend, and turn their backs upon the poor, and the meek, and the humble followers of God. And thus we see that they were in an awful state, and ripening for an everlasting destruction.

That destruction came, as spoken of by Moroni in a previous quotation.

We have briefly noticed the results of this organization among the Jaredites and the Nephites, and the prophecy of what the same things, if permitted, will lead to in our day; and we wish now to call attention to another prediction that these things shall be in our day:

And it shall come to pass, that those who have dwindled in unbelief [the Lamanites] shall be smitten by the hand of the Gentiles. And the Gentiles are lifted up in the pride of their eyes, and have stumbled, because of the greatness of their stumbling-block, that they have built up many churches [churches of men]; nevertheless they put down the power and the miracles of God, and preach up unto themselves, their own wisdom, and their own learning, that they may get gain, and grind upon the face of the poor; and there are many churches built up which cause envyings, and strifes, and malice; and there are also secret combinations, even as in times of old, according to the combinations of the devil, for he is the foundation of all these things; yea, the foundation of murder, and works of darkness; yea, and he leadeth them by the neck with a flaxen cord, until he bindeth them with his strong cords for ever. —2 Nephi 11:14.

Note in the foregoing the sources of three church organizations represented: the pride and greed of the churches of men, the power and miracles of the church of God, and the darkness of the church of the Devil. Note that the Devil is the foundation of all secret combinations. And those last two clauses have a great deal of significance; the leading with a flaxen cord, and being bound for ever. How is it possible for a man who has been led with this flaxen cord ("cable-tow") around his neck, or neck and left arm, until he has taken the oath which binds him for ever (then the tow cord is removed), and fail to see the significance of that prophecy? And by each successive step and oath he is bound more firmly. Some are very quick to deny that those awful things are contained in the oaths; that they know of no such thing. We can concede that it is possible if not probable that they do not know it; but they are bound by them just the same, for as they reach a certain stage they solemnly swear "that if any part of this solemn oath or obligation be omitted at this time, that I will hold myself amenable thereto whenever informed." A trick of the founder, paving the way for the omission of any part of the oath which might bring revulsion to a refined, sensitive nature; and yet he would be bound by it the same as if he had heard and repeated it.

"Well," we are sometimes told, "those secret combinations spoken of in the Book of Mormon mean trusts and labor unions; and not the secret societies known to-day." Is that so? Have trusts and labor unions existed since Cain's day, in all nations, and among all people? If they include trusts and labor unions, they certainly do not exclude the others. These secret combinations of which the Book of Mormon speaks started in Cain's day, have existed among all nations and people; and if any people lost these things by reason of their righteousness, they were restored to them as soon as some one could be found wicked enough to act for the founder, and then began the work of seducing the righteous. Look around in the history of the world, and consider, What secret combination has existed since the day's of Cain, among all nations, being found among the American Indians [Lamanites] also? What secret combination exists to-day that has existed since the morn of creation, that swears men by their throats, by their heads, by the living God, and all the holy prophets and evangelists, and has for one of its earmarks the password, Tubal Cain, the name of one of the sons of Lamech who lived in the early morn of creation when the structure was founded? Any intelligent man must put his hand on one order, and say, This is it. All others are offshoots and imitations.

Another question: Where did the secret organizations of to-day get their authority to administer these gruesome oaths to men? from God, man, or Satan? Where did they get the authority to imitate the officers of the church of God in appointing deacons, high priests, etc.? from God, man, or Satan? Answer, please. They got it somewhere. Did they get it from God? No. For we are told, "The Lord worketh not in secret combinations." Did they get it from man? If so what right have they to swear a man to an abomination in the name of God? Did it come from Satan? If we are willing to take the word of God for it, we will have to admit that it did; "for the devil is the foundation of all these things."

If that last statement be true, how do we account for the good found in these things? We can not deny that there seems to be some good in them. Do you really think that the Devil would start out to deceive the people by presenting something that everybody could see was all bad? No. He made Eve think that the forbidden fruit was most desirable. In every deception he will make it appear as good as possible. And what about his greatest of all deceptions, his church? Will he organize it in such a way that everybody, at first glance, will know that it is all bad? Do not think it for a minute. Into his greatest of all deceptions, his church, designed to get gain, power, and to overthrow the freedom of all governments and nations, he put so much that seems to be good and desirable that it will make it seem as if a man were throwing away the opportunities of his life, and bidding good-bye to success and enjoyment in failing to embrace it. He does it to deceive men; and they are deceived by it. Why, he even pretends to teach chastity; but such chastity! Just listen: "Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will not violate the chastity of a——'s wife, mother, sister, or daughter, I knowing them to be such, nor suffer it to be done by others, if in my power to prevent." Is that chastity? If you take good care not to find out that the woman is a brother's wife, mother, sister, or daughter, you are under no obligation. What a mockery! Whether there is anything in it that conflicts with a man's duty to God, his country, his neighbor, or his family we leave you to judge; there is certainly nothing in it that is helpful or elevating.

Compare the above obligation with the Savior's teaching: "Whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her in his heart already." Not only a brother's wife, mother, sister, or daughter, but any other woman as well.

It is about time, now, for some one with his eyes shut to the facts to jump up and exclaim, "Every good thing comes from God." There are good things in this great organization you talk about, and they must come from God." We admit that every good thing comes from God; but you must remember that every good thing may be perverted and used by the evil one to lead to evil. We should judge a thing not by its appearance, but by what it leads to. If it appears good, but leads to evil, reject it.

If we are invited to ask some prominent men, members of these societies, who are respected and honored by every one, and whose word would be taken anywhere, whether there was anything in them to conflict with duty to God, country, neighbor, etc., we answer that we would not accept any statement made by any man that conflicted with the word of God, on that matter, and we do not believe others ought to. We may not know much about secret societies; but we have read some things that God knows about them, and what he knows and says about them ought to be good enough for any man. It is good enough for us. He says, "The Lord worketh not in secret combinations"; "for the devil is the foundation of all these things." That is why we stand where we do with regard to secret societies, and we expect to stand there until the word of God changes. It is so plain that no one need misunderstand it. It is simply a question of standing by the word of God, or throwing it away and choosing the other. And each must decide that question for himself.

"Well," one may say, "I have always understood that the mother of harlots was the church of the Devil." It is a part of his church at least. For the Book of Mormon tells us that it is reared on the same foundation that these secret societies are. Paganism was founded upon it. When the church apostatized, it left the foundation of God, and went over to the foundation of the Devil, incorporating with it some of the perverted principles of the gospel. And that is what succeeding apostasies have done. That there is strife between two divisions of his majesty's organization matters not; we would expect his house to be divided. That great and abominable church, the mother of harlots, is built on the same foundation that the secret societies are, and hence in contending against the church of the Devil, we must contend against all these things.

The thought may be in some one's mind, "Why does the Lord call a man to office who is a member of a secret order, if it is wrong to belong to it?" We ask another, "Why does the Lord call a man to office who uses tobacco and strong drink, both of which he is commanded to avoid?" When you answer the latter question you answer the first. To take the position that when the Lord calls a man to office, he includes his whisky, tobacco, and secret order, and sanctifies them to the good of the work, is, we believe, to stand on dangerous ground. Rather would we say that he calls them, not because of their perfection, but because he sees the good they may do, if they will forsake these things, and every other harmful thing, and teach the people against becoming contaminated with them. And to the extent that they fail to forsake them, to that extent they fail to accomplish the work designed. When he calls a man who uses tobacco he need not tell him on the spot that he will not be qualified for the place until he gives up his tobacco. Neither do we believe he would so instruct the one belonging to the secret order. He has given his instruction on those things in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, and they ought to guide in the matter. The men who have continued using tobacco after coming to a full knowledge of God's wishes, have declined, left their quorums, etc. What will happen to others when their eyes are opened, if they continue?

If we made a convert from the Catholic Church we would allow him to come in and bring and keep his Catholicism with him, if we knew it, on account of the good there may be in it? Then why do so with the secret society, when the Book of Mormon says they are built on the same foundation? Is it consistent to do so? Moreover, is it consistent to go out and denounce sectarians for rejecting the word of God relative to baptism, etc., when we occupy a similar attitude with regard to secret orders?

That the Lord has no use for secret organizations we further gather from the words of revelation to us as a people:

And now I show unto you a mystery, a thing which is had in secret chambers, to bring to pass even your destruction, in process of time, and ye knew it not, but now I tell it unto you. . . . And again I say unto you, that the enemy in the secret chamber seeketh your lives. Ye hear of wars in far countries, and you say that there will soon be great wars in far countries, but ye know not the hearts of men in your own land. — Doctrine and Covenants 38: 4-6.

And even now, let him that goeth to the east, teach them that shall be converted to flee to the west; and this in consequence of that which is coming on the earth, and of secret combinations. — Doctrine and Covenants 42: 18.

Notwithstanding this warning to beware of men in secret chambers, who sought their destruction in process of time, the Lord's servants were induced to take part in the secret order, and the thing was accomplished, their destruction followed in process of time. How the angels must have wept, as they saw it! One of the abominations creeping out of it, as in Cain's day, was polygamy. This was made possible by men, who were placed to watch over the church, being bound to reveal no secret of a brother, murder and treason excepted; and when at last acknowledgement was made that there had been deception (see William Mark's testimony), and the decision was made to declare against some of these secrets, death was the result before it could be carried out.

It is not a pleasant task to write against these things; but for some time we have felt impelled to call attention to the word of God along these lines, that perchance some of our young men and ministers might be saved taking a step that must cripple their efforts for usefulness in the work of God. We have no personal ill will against any society, or against any member of them, and it is only with a desire for truth that we write. We feel that the measure of responsibility borne while we have hesitated to discharge the duty, now rests upon others, and it is between them and God.

If any apology is due, it should come from those who have kept silent in the face of these revelations. of scripture, not for our action, but for theirs. No apology is needed for the word of God, nor for speaking plainly of these things; for the Book of Mormon was given to the church with the command to teach it to the world. And “it is wisdom in God” that these things should be made known to this generation. How else could the nation repent and escape destruction? And except these things are taught, how can the church awake to a sense of its awful condition?

Strong men and women have wept because of seeing these things in our midst, and in tears have sought the Almighty for consolation. And shall we say that they must continue to weep in silence, that they must not raise their voices in warning young men of the church of God, that they may realize the awfulness of the pitfalls placed for them, and be enabled, if they will heed the warning, to escape the snares of the adversary, and be not bound by his “strong cords for ever,” that they may not have to experience the bitterness of trying to escape from the power of the enemy to whom they have so dreadfully sworn their allegiance? God forbid that any one should weakly require it!

“MY CONFESSION.”

Or if a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil, or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him: when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty of one of these things. And it shall be when he shall be guilty in one of these things that he shall confess wherein he hath sinned in that thing.—Leviticus 6:4, 5.

My reason for writing upon this subject is for the purpose of making my “confession” that I had “sinned in that thing,” and also to warn others, that they may not be “led with a flaxen cord until they be bound with his strong cords for ever.” (2 Nephi 11:14, small edition.)

In giving my reason for so doing it will be necessary for me to relate some of my religious experience.

I became a Mason in December, 1887. I was twenty-one years of age at the time. I was persuaded that they “were a righteous order” “which society and works thereof I ‘thought’ to be good” (Book of Mormon, p. 421, par. 1, small edition), because very dear friends and relatives belonged, who I was quite sure were good men. Our minister also belonged, for whom I had a high regard.

When I entered the order blind-folded, a cable-tow (flaxen cord) about my neck, I was informed that the great and good men of all ages had been Masons, and that the oath I was about to take when once taken could never be repudiated or denied. The assurance was given me by the “Worshipful Master” on behalf of the lodge, that there was nothing therein that would interfere with my duty to my God, to my country, or to my family. Thus being spiritually as well as naturally blinded, “leaning upon an arm of flesh,” which was the supposed righteousness of others, I did take of mine own free will and accord (or was caused to say I did it of my own free will and accord) the same oath that Cain imposed upon his brethren (see Genesis 5:14, Inspired Translation), thinking, at the time, that if a man should violate such an oath the penalty ought to be attached or inflicted upon him.

I had forgotten the injunction of the Master to “swear not at all,” not even “by your head” (Matthew 5:36), for which disobedience I was caused to pass through much suffering.

In that obligation I also violated the admonition not to “forswear thyself” by promising to keep all the secrets, arts, parts, or points of the hidden mysteries of Masonry “which may be revealed to me at this time or any future period,” so you can readily see that no difference what erroneous obligations or criminal oaths were thereafter revealed the unfortunate candidate was forewarned to keep them under the penalty of death.

In this article it is not my purpose to go into the details of the awful oaths and penalties attached thereto, only suffice it to say that they are as abominable as those of the Gadianton robbers told of in the Book of Mormon, of Akish, whose combination was a combination “abominable and wicked above all.” (Book of Mormon, p. 515, s. e.) At this time I was a member of one of the popular churches, but had a desire to do right and to obey the truth. My profession as school-teacher caused me to be associated with many different sects of religion, and thus I began to observe my surroundings more closely, and soon began to realize that something was wrong in the religious world. I could not reconcile what I saw among professed Christians with the record as revealed in God’s word. Doubts assailed me of there ever having been a God as revealed in the Bible, and I wondered if so, why no one now living ever heard from him or knew him other than by tradition. Such theories seemed to me more like mythology than an intelligent being making himself known unto his creatures.

About this time the injustice of my holding the position in life I did dawned upon me, and I realized that I was holding a responsible position at a good salary, entirely upon the strength of my being a brother in the “great secret” (Genesis 5:16, I. T); and while I was moving in ease, not having qualifications equal to others less fortunate (or unfortunate) who had labored faithfully in the “heat of the day,” I wondered wherein was the justice, and why it all was. I discovered that it was through combination, and in the name of religion and society. This discovery more and more weakened my confidence and belief in a God as commonly believed in the world.
The next evolution in my mind was to come to the following conclusions:

1. That I never would again seek for advantage of my fellow men through "secret combinations or use the mark of the beast" (Revelation 14:1) for position and power.

2. That if God could not make himself intelligently known unto men now, he could never do so; and if he could ever do so he could now.

3. That if there was a living, intelligent God, who would give me to know he was God, I would render him true obedience and serve him.

The above decisions are responsible for the change in my life and for the "confession" which I now make, for it is written: "By this ye shall know if a man repenteth of his sins. Behold he will confess them and forsake them."—Doctrine and Covenants 58:9.

I then began to call upon the name of the Lord and to pray, saying, "O Lord, if you are God, do help me!" This prayer was repeated many times while I waited and looked for light from above.

After some months the feeling of intense inquiry left me in part, and I began to feel that the Lord had failed to reveal himself to me, and that I was under no special obligation to him. I determined to reap all the enjoyment possible in this life and not to worry about the future. I had sacrificed many opportunities in youth through fear of offending God, but now had decided to fear him no more; yet I retained the willingness, that should God ever reveal himself to me I would render him willing and faithful obedience.

About this time I was married, I had quit reading the Bible and saying my prayers, and had begun to move in the field of ease, when on a certain Sunday morning as I was walking through a green field, meditating upon the state of society, I perceived its awful condition, and began to exclaim, "What can be done for humanity! What can be done for humanity!" when I heard a voice say, "Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness." I then and there believed God and my life changed. I can see the spot of ground in the field, in my mind, to this day. I can see the grass, the beautiful light still shining, as I turned to seek the face of the Lord. "When thou saidst, Seek ye my face, my heart said unto thee, thy face, Lord, will I seek."—Psalm 27:8.

From that time on my whole desire was to know the will of the Lord that I might serve him. I soon found the so-called churches were not of God and my effort to find one in harmony with the Scriptures failed. My understanding was then opened and I began to see what the true conditions were.

I tried to be faithful, according to my covenant, and testify to the people what I saw and heard and how I understood the Bible. I soon found myself cast out of their midst and was also caused to suffer many hard things at their hands. But my lodge friends continued to treat me friendly because of our relationship, though we had nothing in common in church affairs; we, as Masons, are always to "meet upon the level and part upon the square."

I began to enjoy the blessing of visions and was instructed in many things, until I was made to realize that Masonry was wrong, but I could not see how I could ever get free from the oaths and obligations I had taken. It appeared to me that I would be guilty of great wrong to violate such a solemn oath, the violation of which, when penalty attached, was death in the most horrible manner.

It did not dawn upon my mind for a long time that the Lord did not recognize the oath, though it was taken in his name, just as Cain had done. But I discovered I could be willing to suffer if necessary for my oath, and would thus be free; and, like Bunyan, I saw a door opened for me. Through much faith and effort I was able to press through the door. I discovered that through Jesus Christ I had a means of escape; that he came to destroy the works of the Devil; that his blood atoned for me and answered the ends of the law on condition of repentance and obedience. I was under a false and broken law, and, by my oath, I was doomed to die. From the penalty of that law I saw no escape only in Christ. Helaman 2:30 tells us of this secret combination:

Whosoever of those who belonged to their band, should reveal unto the world of their wickedness and their abominations, should be tried, not according to the laws of their country, but according to the laws of their wickedness.

After finding a way of escape the next question was how to avail myself of the means. I for weeks carefully weighed the profit and loss involved. I saw that to take the step meant a total loss of friends; that the few who continued to befriend me would hold me a perjurer and false-swearer; that nothing I ever could do would restore their confidence. It meant poverty and suffering not only to myself but to those depending upon me for their daily support.

On the other hand not to do so was to offend a just God, who had made himself known unto me on the condition that I would serve him. Not to forsake Masonry meant spiritual death, and we are told in Matthew 10:25, Inspired Translation: "Fear not them who are able to kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul, but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." I was troubled many nights and days before being able to come to a decision, until one night I was about to be delivered into the hands of the adversary, when I called upon the Lord for deliverance, renewing my determination to serve him. Peace and comfort immediately came to my mind and with it the knowledge that I must forsake the lodge.
When I received my withdrawal papers, which are issued to a member to change membership from one lodge to another, I was tempted to keep them and not destroy them, thinking that I might change my mind sometime. No sooner had this thought entered my mind than a voice said, "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."—Luke 9:62. I then burned the papers and never after have felt any desire to return to the place from whence I came. But I continued to think I was obliged to keep quiet and say nothing. For about one year after this time I enjoyed many great blessings from the Lord—several very bright visions. Twice was I caused to weep for having to remain longer in this present world after having a taste of the good things of the world to come. Many times when in secret prayer I would ask the Lord if I were filled with light within as well as around me, and I inquired what it meant. I was told that, "if thine eye be single to the glory of God thy whole body shall be full of light."

After this passed away I would see a pure white stone when in prayer. It was a perfect cube, and in my vision I would make great effort to get possession of it, but it would move just out of my reach. After I had seen this for a number of days, one time when reaching out after it I inquired what it meant, and I was told that "He that overcometh I will give him a white stone and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth save he that hath it." The stone then disappeared and I was left wondering. But from that I understood I was about to enter upon a series of very hard trials and temptations. I passed from the glorious experiences I had been enjoying, as it were into a dark and dreary wilderness, and there I met the wicked one. This experience lasted about three years. The persecutions without were lost because of the trials within. The enemy came to me in every possible way and wherever in my being he found affinity there he plead for service. The Master said the "prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in me." (John 14:30.) With me it was different—he found something in me, or, as the Inspired Translation says, "had power over me." I was many times tempted to deny the Lord. The tempter would whisper, "Sell him! sell him!" and then, "You are a miserable wretch," "Don't you see your poverty, and the disgrace you are brought to," and other words of a worse nature even. It seemed my mind would be overthrown. It seemed that all I had to do to lose my agency or power of overcoming was just to yield once to his whispers.

This followed me for weeks, months, and years. At times the Lord would come to my help and drive Satan away, but again he would return stronger than ever. I began to suffer in the body, but of no natural sickness. My hands and feet, and at times all my body, would seem crushed under the awful strain. I would desire to cry out as I walked through the woods, and at times to throw my ax out of my hand; but during all this time I knew it was Satan and that he desired that I should obey him. I did not yet realize that my Masonic oath gave him claim to me, especially to my flesh, as I had sworn my body away to him even to the marrow in my bones, and I had not publicly denounced this allegiance. At times it seemed the very marrow of my bones would ache, and a fierce spirit would take possession of me, and I observed that that fierce spirit was the spirit of murder, and afterwards I found it to be the spirit of Freemasonry or of the "church of the Devil," which in the Doctrine and Covenants we are commanded to contend against.

I thus suffered in a manner all the penalties of my Masonic obligations: for instance, for days my throat would pain me from ear to ear; other days my body would pain me as though I were severed in twain. These things I suffered before I realized the reasons for it, which I did not until one night on retiring to my bed I was suffering intensely, and I inquired of the Lord why I was permitted thus to suffer, when immediately I was given a vision and saw my left breast torn open, my heart plucked from thence and suspended in the air, and a voice said to me, "This is the penalty of your obligation." "Having your left breast torn open, your heart plucked from thence, and given to the beasts of the field and the birds of the air for prey," is the penalty of the second degree in Freemasonry. I was then and there given to understand that if I desired to be delivered out of the hands of Satan I must deny my allegiance to him by contending against and opposing this wicked combination, which Moroni says is wicked above all, and is the same that was first established by Cain to murder and get gain. Who also commanded us not to suffer them to get above us, "For it cometh to pass that whoso buildeth it up seeketh the overthrow of the freedom of all lands, nations, and countries, and it bringeth to pass the destruction of all people, for it is built up by the devil, who is the father of all lies."

The Lord has commanded to "contend against the church of the devil." Moroni tells us (Book of Mormon, p. 515) that the Lord commandeth you, "When ye shall see these things come among you, that ye shall awake to a sense of your awful situation, because of this secret combination which shall be among you."

Speaking to us, Moroni says, "which shall be among you." To whom was he speaking? Was it not to the church? If so, then he says it shall be among those of the church and it is among those of the church; hence we should now "awake to a sense of our awful situation," and put those secret combinations from among us like the converted Lamanites did, or else we can expect the judgments of God to come upon us. As a certain brother has said, "Did it not ever occur to you that if we have two or more members who belong to a secret combination that we have secret combinations among us?" I see the same dark being making encroachments upon the church of Christ that met me in the wilderness, and I hope that we will not be deceived, for Paul wrote to the Corinthian brethren concerning some, "For such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into apostles of Christ. And no marvel; for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light."—2 Corinthians 11:13, 14.

By their good, or apparently good, deeds they deceive the righteous, but we do see that "death is in the pot." Helaman tells us in the Book of Mormon, page 396, in speaking of this combination, that they had seduced the more part of the righteous (Nephites) until they had come down to believe in their works, and partake of their spoils, and join them in their secret murders and combinations. Thus has it happened in our land because of the little good they appear to do and because it is claimed that the "great and good men of all ages" belong to it; the better class of people are joining in with them. But to recite their murders and robbing and the far­ reaching effects of this combination, most abominable, would fill a library. But if necessary we believe we can indict it before the court of heaven and bring conclusive and undoubted proof of its origin and identity.

Knowing these things as we do, we have touched upon a few facts lightly so as to confess our wrong and give a reason for our actions to those who may desire to know; also to warn our brother (as we are our brother's keeper), for it is written, "It becomeath every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor; therefore, they are left without excuse, and their sins are upon their own heads."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:22. The above was the key that released me from the grasp of my enemy. After using it, a door to peace and light was opened unto me and I soon found the gospel whereby I was permitted to enter in and be born of water and of the Spirit, and have the evidence that I pleased God.
Hoping that this may be of service to some and that it will obtain the mission desired, I with love for all and malice toward none bid you farewell for the present.

Your brother in Christ,

WILBUR C. EARHART.

CRITICISMS ON AN EDITORIAL.

I have been a constant reader of the HERALD for forty-four years. It has been almost the only instructor in the gospel I have had, elders' visits being few and far between. Have heard one sermon in four years. I look forward to its weekly visits for news of the progress of the work over the world and for the instruction contained in the editorials and articles from the pens of those whom the Lord has made overseers or leaders of his work.

While in some cases I could see neither wisdom nor profit in some of the discussions carried on in its columns I tried to be charitable and think perhaps the trouble was with me, that I did not appreciate them—it was my ignorance. There have been, several times, letters or articles in the HERALD on a subject that I did know something about, which were, to say the least, very foolish, unreasonable, and uncharitabile, in attacks on secret orders. But I again tried to exercise charity for the brothers writing them, and attribute them to ignorance and prejudice, and let them go, although Latter Day Saints, of all people, should be free from the charge of condemning anything of which they have no knowledge, or allowing their prejudices to warp their judgment. The edito­rial columns have heretofore been free, so far as I know, from any charge of this kind; but the editorial in the issue for February 14, headed "The Smoot inquiry," and signed "L. A. G.," contains such an uncalled-for attack on one order, and makes so many false, unfair, and illogical, unjust deductions, that it calls for a rebuke from every fair-minded man who loves truth and justice. It actually seems to me that if the "father of lies" himself had been sitting at the elbow of L. A. G. when he penned those lines, and had dictated them, he would not have changed the dotting of an "i," or the crossing of a "t." You hear this wise (?) editor, after quoting newspaper reports as to a possible line of Senator Smoot's defense, that the endowment-house obligations were built up from the Masonic Ritual, hasten to give Senator Smoot some good (?) advice, as fol­

This would be his best move, perhaps, for two reasons. First, it will not be difficult to prove his claim. Second, it will establish a sort of kinship with the members of the Senate who are of the Masonic order. . . . It should not be surprising if, sooner or later, facts made bare reveal that the whole corrupt structure of Utahism is reared upon the foundation of Masonry.
Brigham Young and many of his associates were members of that order, and when they parted from God, what would be more probable than that they should turn to the other as a means of gaining power and exercising control.

My! what a lucid and logical argument or deduc­ tion that is. Just on a plane with Braden, Bays, Neal, et al., who are fighting us on all corners.
Utahism is corrupt and bad, Brigham Young and his associates were members of the Church of Jesus Christ—as a consequence Joseph Smith and the whole church from which they came must be corrupt and bad—clear, do you not see? I think I see our elders as they gather for the next conference stepping up and putting L. A. G. on the back for the club he puts in the hands of their opponents. Then this brilliantly logical (?) writer, after quoting purported extracts from the endowment-house oaths, comments as follows: "Those who are somewhat acquainted with Masonry will readily see the similarity; and the source, authority, power, and kinship of the Utah church is easily traced."

Yes, indeed! Perhaps some similarity might be discovered, if one had an exceedingly strong microscope. It is not discernable to the naked eye, at least so far as the quotations given are concerned. I venture the assertion that the writer of those lines has, even at this moment, secrets locked up in his breast that he has pledge his word to keep and which he regards as binding; and that the purported endowment-house ceremonies resemble his pledges, his word as much as it does the Masonic Ritual.

Then the most unkind, ungenerous, not to say unchristian and untruthful accusation follows in the next paragraph:

So far as Smoot's oath of vengeance is concerned, or any covenant by which his loyalty to the nation may be curbed, it is not so very much worse than the obligations under which many of the other government officials rest.

That the writer meant government officials who were members of the Masonic order, by this insulting, if not treasonable charge, is shown by quoting a newspaper dispatch, from Paris, France, to the effect that a man in a court of justice refused to testify on account of his Masonic oath. As to the truth of the dispatch I know nothing; but if true, the brother before he throws himself into such a violent fit of hysterics, should have known that the so-called Masonic body in France bears no more, if as much, relation to the Masonic order, than the Utah church does to the old church, or to the Reorganization. The truth of this the brother could have ascertained in five minutes in Lamoni. The brother then goes on to draw the most harrowing picture of the fate in store for the nation, state, organization, or church, whose members belong to oath-bound societies. In his wild screed against Masonry, he forgets that some, at least, of the highest and most respected officers of the Reorganization are members of the Masonic order, and that Joseph the Martyr was an active member of the order, and that its oaths were not binding enough on his contemporaries to protect an innocent man from a mob's vengeance. Why should it now be considered strong enough to protect a perjured traitor? I am afraid consistency is not the jewel that rests on L. A. G.'s desk.

Why does he not ask some of the prominent members of the church, men who are respected and honored by every one, saint and sinner, whose word would be taken anywhere, whether there was anything in Masonry to conflict with any duty a man owed to his God, his country, his neighbor, or himself? Go to the master of the Masonic lodge in Lamoni, and borrow his Webb's Monitor (he will be glad to let him read it), turn to page 64, charge to the newly initiated brothers, and read:

In the state you are to be a quiet and peaceable subject, true to your government, and just to your country; you are not to countenance disloyalty or rebellion, but patiently submit to legal authority, and conform with cheerfulness to the government of the country in which you live.

In view of the above, how much comfort do you think Senator Smoot will get from the Senators who are Masons?

Stick to the gospel themes after this, my brother. You know something about that, but nothing at all about Masonry; and when you talk about that, you put yourself in the same class as that descendant of Balaam's riding animal, that thought he was a fine singer.

I have been a Mason for over twenty-two years, and have never seen anything in it derogatory to my profession as a Latter Day Saint. Moreover, I feel assured, now, that if I had not been a Mason, I would not have become a Latter Day Saint, at least when I did.

Yours for the truth without guile,

W. E. MESSENGER.

IS IT CONSISTENT?

I refer to the position taken by L. A. G. in some of the late HERALDS. I shall notice only some few things in the last paper of February 14, although there are very objectionable things in other articles previous to this one.

In this paper I am not going to offer a plea for Masonry. It may be wrong for Saints to go into it, or any other order that has secrets in it, or it may not; I leave that for each man to decide for himself. I notice, however, the Lord has told his people to keep from the world what he told them to do until they should accomplish what he had given them to do. In the article headed "The Smoot inquiry" we are given the Mormon oath which the witness believed contained the seeds of treason, and it would so appear to ordinary-thinking people. We have the writer comparing this Mormon obligation with the Masonic obligation, and he pronounces Smoot's obligation not worse (if as bad) than the Masonic obligation as to loyalty to the government, then cites a statement of some Mason in France to sustain his assertion.

It so happens that I know something about Masonry. I was made a Mason in 1884. I have taken the degrees in the Blue or Master Mason's lodge, the Royal Arch Chapter, and the council degrees. Before taking any obligation I was assured that there was nothing in the obligation that would interfere with any duty I owed to God, my country, my neighbor, my family, or myself. All Masons receive this assurance. Is it consistent to believe that an obligation would be required that would interfere with your duty so you could not tell the whole truth, thus interfering with your duty to your country? We think not. And that newspaper report can not be correct. I personally know there is nothing required that is treasonable or disloyal to the government in any Masonic obligation, as far as I have gone. Not only that, but even if you do receive as a secret anything murderous or treasonable, you are in no way bound to keep it because of any obligation taken, or because he may be a brother Mason. Is it consistent to accuse an order so prominent and numerous as the Masonic order, of being under obligations as bad or worse than Utah Mormons who have taken the endowment oath, as detrimental to good government and loyalty? We think not. Is it consistent to wage war against and misrepresent a large class of people (whether ignorantly or otherwise), if we want to reach them with the gospel and do them good? Surely not! Is it consistent to say they are obligated to the hierarchy or the order first; and to the government when it does not seek to render justice to a brother, in the face of facts as herein stated, merely from a newspaper statement, without any knowledge in the matter, and thus falsely accuse them? Is it consistent to believe that God would call Masons to be elders, seventies, high priests, apostles, and to the Presidency and Bishops of the church, if their Masonic obligation disqualified them to teach and to tell the whole truth, and to keep the law of the land, and not tell them wherein they were wrong? Would you think the Author of this church and work would, through Joseph Smith, call a man to be an apostle, then to the Presidency, who was a Mason, and forget to tell him that his Masonic obligation disqualified him, or unfitted him to act as an officer in church or state if it did disqualified him? Surely not!

Is it consistent for a man, on the editorial page of our church paper, that goes out for the thinking, intelligent public to read, to say so much about things of which he seems to know so little, thereby placing his brethren in the humiliating position of having to apologize for him?

Now, my dear brother, I am satisfied that better results will come from your efforts if you give some of those things more thought before writing on them. Desiring to be consistent, and holding that the gospel is all-sufficient for our present and eternal good, and believing that we can accomplish our work without those worldly institutions I believe in leaving men free to belong to orders, or lodges, as they think proper, always trying to persuade them to attend strictly to their church duties all the time.

It is unfair, unchristian, and in no way brotherly, to insinuate that, by secret sign or grip, voice or vote would be controlled in our assemblies. They could be controlled possibly with some people by various other means as well as grip or sign; yet I have no right to assume that they will be.

If I know I am honestly trying to do right I can afford to believe that others are as honest and sincere as I. Joseph Smith, Jr., was a Mason, and many of our brethren are Masons. It may have been a mistake for him to become a Mason. It may be a mistake for any of our brethren to be Masons. The Masons, according to history and tradition both, stood for freedom in religion during the Dark Ages and so enraged the dominant church that they would not tolerate Masonry. And, now, it is against the rules of the Roman Catholic Church for any member to be a Mason. It is well to get every one deeply interested in the gospel, and he will generally lose interest in those worldly institutions. Many of those institutions of men do good, in a way, and let us not unnecessarily go to war with them. We have enemies enough, and will have, even if we consistently do our work and let the world take its course.

As ever, I hope to stand for truth and consistency.

G. H. HILLIARD.

THESE SECRET SOCIETIES.

Every once in a while some well-meaning brother (no doubt) calls attention to the danger that may occur to the church because of some of its members belonging to secret societies. It should, perhaps, not be taken notice of were it not that some may take it seriously, thinking that the brother knows whereof he speaks, which he evidently does not—simply thinks that because the word secret is attached to these orders, there must be something fearful in them. Bro. L. A. G., in the editorial of HERALD of February 14, in describing the oaths and signs of the endowment house in Utah, as brought to light in the Smoot case, as similar to that of fraternal orders, sees a possibility of the Reorganization being controlled in its assemblies by grip or secret sign, and believes as long as these things are permitted to exist within the body there is always more or less danger.

Now to claim that a brother, because he is a member of one of these fraternal orders, is dangerous, and can not perform his duties, and would in any way prevent right and justice to be done either in the church or out of it, is not only an injustice, but well-nigh unto an insult. I am not a Mason, neither do I have to defend it, or any of the fraternal organizations; but I am, however, a member of one, and I believe in good standing, though have paid but little attention to it since coming into the church; but will state that I have taken no obligation that I could not conscientiously take any morning before entering on the duties of the day, unless indeed I should determine to no longer follow the teachings of the gospel.

The brother could find out, if he wanted to, (and he certainly ought to before giving vent to his fears
FIRST PRINCIPLES OF THE GOSPEL OF SATAN.

The first principle of the gospel of Satan is secrecy; the second principle is transformation to counterfeit the works or principles of God. 2 Nephi 6:9, 10, large edition, informs us that if we should rise no more we would become devils, angels to a devil, and remain with "the father of lies," "who transformeth himself nigh unto an angel of light and stirreth men up to secret combinations of murder, and all manner of secret works of darkness."

Genesis 3:2, Inspired Translation, informs us that he wished to become one of the Godhead; he says: "Send me, I will be thy son, and I will redeem all mankind." The angel's message from God was to fear God, and give him glory through obedience to his law, and Satan could conceive of no other way, only a secret way, to make men fear him. "In secret have I said nothing."—Jesus, in St. John 18:20.

I have never spoken openly to the world; all I have spoken has been in secret.—Satan.

The Lord worketh not in secret combinations.—Ether 3:89.
The Lord God worketh not in darkness.—2 Nephi 11:47.
And behold, he doth carry on his works of darkness, and secret murder, and doth hand down their plots, and their oaths, and their covenants, and their plans of awful wickedness, from generation to generation, according as he can get hold upon the hearts of the children of men.—Helaman 2:134.

They did enter into a covenant one with another, ... which was given by them of old, which covenant was given and administered by the devil, to combine against all righteousness.—Nephi 3:22.

The first account we have of this spiritual satanic love in men's hearts was that Cain loved Satan more than God. (See Genesis 5:6.) We conclude there must have been a transformation that caused Cain to love Satan more than God, for we see a different state of mind after Cain slew Abel; he said, "My punishment is greater than I can bear."—Genesis 5:24. Not until the Lord told Cain what he had done, did he awake to his awful condition.

Behold Satan hath come among the children of men, and tempteth them to worship him. And men have become carnal, sensual, and devilish, and are shut out from the presence of God.—Genesis 6:50. Satan shall be their father.—Genesis 7:48.

If thou dost well thou shalt be accepted. If thou dost not well, sin lieth at the door, and Satan desireth to have thee.—Genesis 5:9.

Not until Cain had forsworn himself with Satan to keep secret those things into which he (Satan) would lead him by his transformed power to do, did he have any desire to murder Abel his brother to get gain.

The God of heaven has decreed, from the beginning, that men should go to hell for forswearing themselves, if they did not repent. This question is so all-important that the Lord is to send the decree unto the end of the world as we shall see:

And for these many generations, even since the day I created them, have they gone astray and have denied me, and have sought their own counsels in the dark; and in their own abominations they have devised murder, and have not kept the commandments which I gave unto their father Adam. Wherefore, they have forsworn themselves, and by their oaths they have brought upon themselves death. And an hell I have prepared for them, if they repent not; and this is a decree which I have sent forth in the beginning of the world from mine own mouth, from the foundation thereof; and by the mouths of my servants, thy fathers, have I decreed it; even as it shall be sent forth in the world unto the end thereof.—Genesis 6:28-31.

This was one of the first decrees sent forth, even from the foundation of the world. It must have been all-important. From that time, through all the dispensations of God's work here on earth, this secret method of the Devil has been set up to destroy God's plan of redeeming mankind; even down to the present generation. If not so, God made a mistake in his calculation of there being any necessity for sending forth the decree unto the end of the world.

The first principle in this drama is fear and secrecy. Let us compare then with now.

Since I come endowed with all the necessary qualifications, I enter Satan's worshipful shrine, in the name of the Lord, and I am commanded to take heed on what I enter. As I pass in, my naked left breast is pierced with the point of a compass. I am asked, "Do you feel anything?” “I did.” “What was it?” “A torture.” I am then told that as this is a torture to my flesh, so may it ever be to my mind, if I should ever attempt to reveal the secrets unlawfully, etc. The candidate advances to the center of the shrine, temple, or lodge—call it what you may—kneels with the Deacon, while he pronounces the following prayer:

Vouchsafe thine aid, Almighty Father of the universe, to this our present convention, and grant that this candidate may devote his life to thy service, and become a true and faithful brother among us; indue him with a competency of thy divine wisdom that by the secrets of our art he may be the better enabled to display the beauties of holiness to the honor of thy holy name. So mote it be. Amen.

To the unthinking mind what a beautiful prayer. The candidate is conducted three times around the room while passages of scripture are read.

He then kneels on his left knee, he places his hand under the Holy Bible that rests upon the alter, while he takes the oath, or obligation, “in the presence of Almighty God, and this worshipful lodge... dedicated to God and held forth to the holy St. Johns,” binding himself under no less penalty than having his throat cut across, his tongue torn out, etc., calling upon God to keep him steadfast in the due performance of the same, then kisses the Bible. Speaking of the day the Book of Mormon should come forth:

There are also secret combinations, even as in times of old, according to the combinations of the devil, for he is the foundation of all these things; yea, the foundation of murder, and works of darkness; yea, he leadeth them by the neck with a flaxen cord, until he bindeth them with his strong cords for ever.—2 Nephi 11:46.

The candidate is led blindfolded, with a rope or “cable-tow” around his neck. Nephi calls it a flaxen cord; it is made out of the tow of flax. In one of the degrees he subscribes to the following. How does it compare with the Utah oath of vengeance?

I do solemnly swear, in the presence of Almighty God, that I will revenge the assassination of our worthy master, Hiram Abiff, not only on the murderers, but also on all who may betray the secrets of this degree, and furthermore, that I will keep and protect this Order with all my might, and the brethren, in general, with all my power, and furthermore, that I will obey the decrees of the Grand Council of Princes of Jerusalem; and if I violate this my obligation, I consent to be struck with the dreadful poniard of vengeance, now presented to me, and to have my head cut off, and stuck on the highest pole, or pinnacle, in the eastern part of the world, as a monument of my villainy! Amen! Amen! Amen! Amen!

The candidate takes this most beautiful Satanic obligation, of the head, as in the beginning, on his knee. He has not only been led with a flaxen cord, but the Devil has him bound with his strong cords of fear for ever. He then is a sure tool, politically and otherwise, in thousands of the different avenues of life, for this “most holy” order to get power and gain.

And they were kept up by the power of the devil to administer these oaths unto the people, to keep them in darkness, to help such as sought power, to gain power, and to murder, and to plunder, and to lie, and to commit all manner of wickedness and whoredoms.—Ether 3:87.

After the candidate has become master of this great secret, he swears to dedicate his life, his property—hereafter, to his holy name Jesus. He swears to give himself to this holy and illustrious order unreservedly, to always advance his brothers’ interests in supporting his military and political per­ferment in opposition to another, by employing his arms and aid in his vocation under all circumstances where he shall not suffer more by doing so than his brother by his neglecting to do so. He swears to look on his brothers’ enemies as his enemies, to mete out tender kindness or vengeance accordingly. He swears never to prosecute a brother until his order or council shall become inadequate to do him justice. He swears to keep sacred his brothers’ secrets when delivered to him as such, or when the nature of the information is such as to require secrecy. He swears to espouse his cause so far as to extricate him whether he be right or wrong, murder and treason excepted, binding himself under no less penalty than having his skull smote off, calling upon God to keep him steadfast in the same.

It was that same being who led on the people who came from that tower, into this land; who spread the works of darkness.—Helaman 2:132. And they were kept up by the power of the devil to administer these oaths unto the people, to keep them in darkness, to help such as sought power, to gain power.—Ether 3:87.

The present workings of this most beautiful transformed order of Satan surely represent the one spoken of in Helaman. The Book of Mormon should come in a day “when the blood of the saints shall cry unto the Lord, because of secret combinations and the works of darkness.” (Mormon 4:31.)

Speaking of our day, Mormon asks us:

Why do ye build up your secret abominations to get gain, and cause that widows should mourn before the Lord, and also orphans to mourn before the Lord; and also the blood of their fathers, and their husbands to cry unto the Lord from the ground, for vengeance upon your heads?

Out of four hundred and eighty penalties that the candidate takes upon himself, there are not a dozen of them, if administered upon his head, but that would bring death, and no oath is given but that has a death penalty in it, the Bible being used from Genesis to Revelation to counterfeit every good work mentioned by the prophets or Jesus Christ, with emblems to fit every ceremony.

When Enoch told them of their works, they said, “There is a strange thing in the land, a wild man hath come among us.” When John the Baptist told them of their works, he was beheaded. When Jesus Christ told them of their works they said, “He hath a devil,” and crucified him.

Did Christ know anything about this Satanic church in his day?

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Again, it hath been written by them of old time, Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shall perform unto the Lord thine oaths. But I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's home; nor by the earth, for it is his footstool; neither by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the great king; neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black. But let your communication be Yea, yea; Nay, nay; whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil.—Matthew 5:37-38, I. T. [Now read this.] I do solemnly promise and swear in the presence of Almighty God the great Architect of heaven and earth and of those valiant princes of Jerusalem.

We see that Jesus Christ knew all about this transformed power among the people.

Alma says:

Teach them [the people] to abhor such wickedness, and abominations. . . . The judgments of God did come upon those workers of darkness and secret combinations; yea, and cursed be the land for ever and ever unto those workers of darkness and secret combinations, even unto destruction, except they repent before they are fully ripe.—Alma 17:45, 46.

Moroni is commanded “to write these things that evil may be done away.” He tells us by direct revelation that these secret combinations were had among all nations; that they destroyed the Jaredite and Nephite nations; and he warns this nation of its downfall, if it suffers these things to be; and warns us “that whoso buildeth it up seeketh to overthrow the freedom of all lands, nations, and countries, and bringeth to pass the destruction of all people.” (Ether 3:90-93.)

The Lord tells us “that he must needs destroy the secret work of darkness, that he may fulfill his covenants which he has made unto the children of men.”

Speaking of Joseph Smith:

And the Lord said: I will prepare unto my servant Gazelem a stone which shall shine forth in darkness unto light; that I may discover unto my people who serve me, that I may discover unto them the works of their brethren; yea their secret works, their works of darkness and their wickedness and abominations.

The question is asked: “Why did the prophet go into this organization?” “His eyes could not see afar off.”—Genesis 6:27. “The devil transformed himself nigh unto an angel of light,” stirred up his mind to the thought, as many men throughout the church to-day are told. You will get many favors that you can not get otherwise; your people will get protection, etc. The blood-curdling endowment oaths of Brigham Young’s followers are in evidence of what his Satanic majesty had in view. Do we believe the Prophet repented for putting his trust in the arm of flesh (as it appeared to him)? Yes, ten thousand times, we believe it:

And now I show unto you a mystery, a thing which is had in secret chambers, to bring to pass even your destruction, in process of time.

This destruction was to be so great that all the hosts of heaven were pained.

We are informed by God in Ether 3:91, that it was wisdom in him that these things should be shown unto us. He commands us when we see these things come among us, that we shall awake to a sense of our awful situation; tells us that the sword of justice of the eternal God shall fall upon us to our overthrow and destruction, if we suffer these things to be.

Are we teaching the world of mankind to-day, to come into the church and “bring your combinations in with you; you shall be saved”? If so how much ahead of the people of the West are we? Can we ever become one under such conditions? When men join themselves to other churches, we expell them from the church.

Some say this combination is not classed as a religious organization.

The Honorable Dewitt Clinton, General Grand High Priest, etc., says the principles of his order have the same eternal and unshaken foundation, contain and inculcate the same truths in substance and purpose, the same ultimate end as the doctrines of Christianity; the same system of faith, and the same practical duties taught by revelation are contained in and required by this institution and combine those fundamental principles which constitute the very essence of the Christian system. He further says that it is no secret that there is not a duty enjoined or a virtue required in the volume of inspiration but what is found in and taught by this institution.

Again he says that the divine Being views no moral character in a man with greater complacency than his who in heart strictly conforms to the requirements of his order. Satan’s quick work to seduce the people in ancient and modern times is manifested in the following:

Helaman 2:136-142 tells us that this secret work spread so fast among the people that the more part of it came in the sixty and seventh year of the reign of the Judges, and did grow that it seduced the more righteous part in the sixty and eighth year.

And now, in our day dispensation was granted by the grand master of Illinois, and the Saints commenced work March 15, 1842, and by the 11th of August of the same year, in a period of one hundred and forty-nine days, they passed and raised no less than two hundred and eighty-six candidates, averaging six degrees per diem in that same time. They were advised by the committee of the grand lodge of Illinois, when sent to examine their work, not to go so fast, and divide their labors. While a charter was not granted to the Nauvoo lodge the dispensation was continued, and dispensations were issued to two more lodges. From the records it appears these three lodges in Nauvoo made in one year, fifteen hundred members, and at the same ratio, in two years they could have made an army of about four thousand, while under dispensation.

These three lodges were declared clandestine throughout all the grand lodges of the United States, October 7, 1844.
Thus we see, as with the Nephites, so with the more righteous in our day, they were gathered in multitudes.

NEW TREDEGAR, Wales, January 15, 1906.

Editors Herald: Thinking perhaps the Saints would like to know how the work is progressing in South Wales, I pen these few lines. I started out after receiving my appointment, from missionary in charge, for Nantyglo, where Bro. T. Jones has held the fort for a number of years. Here I met Bro. E. B. Morgan, and after a little conversation we decided to go to Abertillery, about four miles distant. Your writer preceded them a few hours for the purpose of trapping a little. We held meeting in Mr. Schroll's house that night. After my two hours' trapping we got two individuals to venture out. I concluded in my mind that very little work could be accomplished in that way, so I returned with T. Jones to Nantyglo. My next effort was a visit to Pontlottyn with Bro. T. Jones. Here we had large crowds on the public square. I throted by day and preached on the square by night; visited many friends and talked hours with them. But they seem to be satisfied with the precepts of men. I learned that the Utah elders were holding forth in the town. I got the address where they lodged, also inquired from the people where they had been proselyting and I began following their course. They had succeeded in getting some interested in the principles of the gospel; but they assured the people that they did not practice polygamy now. The people told me they were nice fellows, so courteous and amiable they could not withstand them; but I soon let the cat out of the bag. And what an altercation! I told them that one of the nice young fellows was at Pontlottyn, with Joseph F. Smith who had five wives at that very day, and that he was only one out of forty-two, and then the people began to see through the sheep's clothing. I called at their lodging; the lady of the house told me they were the nicest young men she ever saw. She told me that they fasted and prayed every morning before entering upon their day's labor. Well, they may be sincere in their belief; but I am satisfied that they have done the mission of Joseph Smith more harm than good. I explained my position to the people, telling them that Joseph Smith never taught polygamy, and gave them our tract, Facts Concerning the True Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. They were glad that I had explained their position and ours also. After this many began to hoot them on the streets, also blaming their hostess for keeping such men in her house. Well, the Utah elders began to explain their position on the square, so we challenged them for discussion. We had a great number of people, the greatest number I have seen while preaching out-of-doors. I preached the principles of the gospel. Bro. T. Jones then began to explain our position. He told the people that we were glad to have the Utah elders face to face, so that they could see our position and theirs also. The son of Joseph F. Smith stepped into the ring. He told the people that they had not come to preach polygamy, etc., but to preach the gospel of Christ. Told the people we were apostates, and then got out. Bro. T. Jones began reading from Times and Seasons, showing the people they believed polygamy to be a law for eternity, and that they that would not believe it would be damned. They refused to defend their doctrines. I am sorry that we have to be so hard on them. They have done us more harm in this country than all the other forces combined. The result of our efforts is that these elders have had to leave. The people would have nothing to do with them. From there I made for Aberaman; but sorry to say I found sufficient to do in encouraging the Saints here who are without a shepherd. I believe good could be done, a branch organized in a short time, young brethren could be encouraged and stimulated to be forces for good to this work; but they have been left to do the best they can, except when missionaries call upon them, and other brethren visit from time to time.

I also visited Gilfach Goch Branch. Found some of the brethren quite active; others quite cold in the work. I find the work to be in the condition Christ said that it would be: five wise and five foolish. And while the five wise are doing their utmost to bring souls to Christ, the other five seem to be stumbling-blocks. I suppose this is the condition that will exist until Christ comes to separate the wheat from the tares.

I also preached at Tredegar. I reached this town from my home, it being about four miles. Here I had a grand opportunity to preach. Crowds came out to hear me. I had to preach here alone,—only a brother to hold my hat. I was opposed by two Baptist ministers and a Methodist preacher upon baptism for the remission of sins. The crowds nearly carried me off my feet. God gave me a grand victory over the enemy of truth. I have preached also at Pontlottyn. Here again there were not Saints, only Bro. Skyrme from Abertyswrg, the brother before mentioned. Here I had large crowds; but wherever I went the Utah abomination was thrown in my face. But this is not the only hindrance. The people are bribed to the teeth. If they want a good position in the mines, or to be successful in any kind of business, they must receive the mark of the beast on the forehead, or in other words become members of one of the popular churches. Money and religion are so connected that to forsake one they must lose the other, and they know it. There seem to be very few who have the courage of their convictions. They are not willing to suffer persecution for the truth.

There is a great contention in England and Wales about free trade and protectionism. There are thousands out of employment. Mr. Joseph Chamberlain throws the blame upon free imports into this country. It is true our tin and iron and steel trade has been destroyed by the competition from other countries. Also, hundreds of earthenware factories have been rendered useless, and every other industry is suffering; and the poor miner has to share his work with tin-workers, steel and iron-workers, potters, farmers, and shoemakers. Workmen of every sort have filled the mines until we are eating one another up. It is hard for the miner to get a livelihood, and I am afraid that the coal trade will have to suffer ere long. I see in the output for 1905 that America has increased her output by leaps and bounds, also France and Germany. There has also been a demand by the commander-in-chief of the British army, that is, Lord Roberts, or an appeal to pass a bill compelling every man from sixteen years of age to be trained for war. There seems to be in the mind of Lord Roberts a great struggle not far distant. This may fulfill the prediction of Joseph: they that would not take up their sword and fight must needs flee to Zion. I began my mission on May 16. Left for the mines again on October 1. Hoping that God will bless the effort put forth, I remain, Your brother in Christ.

JAMES EVANS.

HUNDSLUND, Denmark, December 28, 1906.

Editors Herald: We are endeavoring to get the gospel before the people of this vicinity, and so far have had the satisfaction of reaching quite a number, and making friends of some, who will take our part when we are assailed. The missionaries in my field are doing their best, in their respective localities, so far as I know. We are hopeful of getting an opening in Holstein. I was quite interested in the political situation on the Scandinavian peninsula. I had hoped to see a republic in Norway, but the majority of the people chose to retain the monarchial form of government as the most suitable under present condition. After a forced separation from Denmark and a forced union with Sweden—a union of nearly a century, which has had a tendency to break up families and cause disregard to parent and children in Norway. Formerly defended and after 1852 they turned around, opposing what they had as a missionary, it is quite natural that I should be interested to gratify their desire for worldly power, wealth, and the carnal propensities, will make lies their refuge and cause so much misery to others!

I am glad you [President Smith] have had a good hearing in Utah. Your efforts will count, as also those of Bro. Fred M. I am glad to be able to say that, even before I understood your speech or was a member of the church, the “Spirit’s sure witness” deep down in my soul gave evidence of your being a servant of the Most High, and often, while in Utah, discussing on the question of succession in the prophetic office and calling have I had the renewal of that evidence through the same Spirit, in light and power to the extent that it caused me to wonder and rejoice. It was one of the pleasant experiences, which greatly tended to encourage me under the peculiarly trying and depressing conditions that obtained in Utah during my first mission there, from 1885 to 1891. Those impressions are deep and lasting, in fact have become part of my very being. I hope you may live many years for the good of the work of God, and, at least to some extent, realize the fruits of your labors of love, your patience, hope, and faith. Your lot in life has often been unpleasant, your position required the patience of a Job and the faith of a Daniel, but through it all you have stood like a tower of strength and like one mighty and strong, and have so far set in order the house of God. May you live to see that other house of God erected and the Zion of God built up; then perhaps misguided Israel in the mountains would realize the truth of that which also their own books contain, that a blessing should come to all nations through the seed of the latter-day Seer. But whether or not you live to see these things accomplished, the completion of the work and the instructions of the Lord relative thereto will come under the direction and instrumentality of that Seer’s descendants.

Editors Herald: I desire a small space in the HERALD. I would be glad to correspond with Saints in or around Baldknob, Arkansas, or missionaries in that part, as that place is near my birthplace and old home. I am glad to hear from them anywhere, but I have relatives there that I would be glad to have hear the restoration gospel. There is knowledge in it, and the reward we may receive in the future is worth our best efforts. Hoping for an early response from some of you, I remain,

MT. CARMEL, Illinois, February 9, 1906.

Dear Herald: I am among some unbelievers, but still holding to the faith that was once delivered to the saints. But I am not so strong as I should be. I need your prayers. After ten years I feel that my husband is ready to embrace the truth. Remember us always in your prayers. Any brother passing by will be made welcome to stay with us to help spread the gospel. I will close with love to all the Saints.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. LEORA GREISS.

SOLDIERS GROVE, Wisconsin, February 13, 1906.

Editors Herald: This is a stormy day in old Wisconsin. It began raining at nine o’clock in the evening yesterday and continued all night, and at eight o’clock this morning turned to snow, and has continued all day—the best snow-storm of the winter, as we have at least six inches of heavy snow.

Our district conference passed off in a good spirit, and we believe it did the Saints at Flora much good, as also all others that attended. The preaching during conference was good, also other meetings.

Especially will the Sunday afternoon sacrament-meeting long be remembered by all present.

We are glad that God recognizes his people from time to time, giving them precept upon precept, and line upon line. And we hope that our people may not be forgetful hearers, but doers of the word. One voice that was heard in our meeting will never be heard on earth again. Bro. Isaac Anderson, just in the prime of manhood, returned home from conference, and after but two days of sickness passed over to the great beyond. About the last thing he did was to write two very spiritual letters, each to an older brother and sister. We all sincerely sympathize with the aged father and mother who depended on Isaac so much. Our district conference adjourned to meet just prior to the district reunion at Madison this fall. We hope that one and all will begin to plan on the conference and reunion and say, As for me, I will be there from start to finish. If the young especially begin now to lay by their nickels and dimes, they will find quite a good amount by the time September rolls around.

I expect Bro. C. H. Burr to join me here to-morrow. We will remain here over Sunday with the Wheatville Branch, and next week we expect to go to Excelsior to organize a branch there in accordance with a resolution of district conference. We feel that the work is onward in Wisconsin; and still there is lots of room for improvement. May the Lord help us to come up higher, that coming time may bring greater blessings than the past.

Missionary in charge, J. W. Wight, was present at our conference, and we feel sure that his visit to the Flora Branch will long be remembered. He, in company with W. P. Robinson, went north to attend the Northern Wisconsin District conference last Saturday and Sunday.

Hopefully,

MILTON JUNCTION, Wisconsin. JASPER O. DUTTON.

LEXINGTON, Tennessee, February 10, 1906.

Dear Herald: I will write a few lines. I feel if one of the elders were here my papa would get well. He is very sick to-night, and we wish that elders were here to administer to him. I am eleven years old and have been a member of the church three years. I love this glorious gospel.

ETHEL RUSH.

Independence Items.

Within about two weeks much tribulation has come to our fair city in the destruction of two of her most valuable sites of business and thus we regret to record that her beauty has been seriously marred by the burning of a couple of the finest blocks in Independence. On February 5 the Mercer Building on the south side of the square was destroyed, causing a loss of seventy-five thousand dollars, and this morning the Clinton Block was reduced to ashes, the estimated loss being somewhat greater than that amount, our brother Ole White among many other merchants meeting with much damage in business through this fire. Where the Clinton Building stood was the ancient Noland House, the site of the old outfitting point of the great Clinton Block was reduced to ashes, the estimated loss being somewhat greater than that amount, our brother Ole White among many other merchants meeting with much damage in business through this fire. Where the Clinton Building stood was the ancient Noland House, the site of the old outfitting point of the great

The trolley-cars running north and south were put in operation in those days going south to near Waggoner Mills and the trail leading south of Blue River on the land of gold.

Since then many improvements have been made, and even within a few months great changes have taken place in and near the square. The court-house is more conveniently arranged than formerly, and the circuit court room is said now to be one of the handsomest and best appointed in the county. The trolley-cars running north and south were put in operation December 1 in a two-mile extension, making it much more convenient for us than formerly, especially for those who lived here eighteen years ago. During the boom, when ears, drawn by mules, were installed.

In the building mentioned it is estimated by lawyers that fully forty per cent of the divorce cases of Jackson County are tried, and we are glad to say few indeed are such instances among our people.

“During your lives,” the words found in the marriage formula of the Doctrine and Covenants, have carried with them their proper weight with us, as a rule, for we know that “easy divorces” are evils resultant from contentions and divisions in the home life which were not as rare formerly as now everywhere. The commandment we well remember that has gone forth through the prophet of the Reorganization, “Continue in righteousness”; “Let contentions and quarrelings among you cease”; “Sustain each other in peace”; and these words of admonition we are sure apply as well to the home as to church associations.

The church-service last Sunday morning and afternoon were well attended, also the Sunday-school, there being present five hundred and sixty-one. The temperature lowered somewhat toward night, and the usual number failed to come out to the evening service, which Bro. J. D. White conducted in lieu of Bro. R. J. Parker, who was looked for but who was prevented by illness; also Bro. W. H. Garrett and a few others of the brethren were hindered from attending last Sabbath.

Bro. Joseph Luff spoke in the morning, taking for his subject the theme as based on several passages written regarding the nature of sin, its baneful influence, the scope of the power of transgression, and the law laid down whereby man may learn his duty toward God. The main thought was, as found in the gospel according to Matthew 7: 23, Inspired Translation: “Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.” And the speaker declared that “if we do not do and say as Christ would have done or said under similar conditions, we have no business to say we have any partnership with him.”

At the afternoon meeting the gifts of the Spirit in vision, prophecy, and inspiration were present and many were cheered and comforted; also two little ones were blessed by Brn. Foss and Robinson.

A large number spoke in testimony, among them Brn. J. D. White and H. R. Mills, who conducted the meeting. Bro. White discerned that the spirit of criticism was in the church, and he hoped in all our criticisms the spirit of charity also would actuate all our works. Bro. Mills felt we were approaching an epoch in the history of the church here; the question will be, “Will we be enabled to endure the test which is about to be presented to test the faith of the Saints? We are subject to the conditions of the world, and surrounded by its influences; but in our striving to come up higher let us take upon ourselves a life of righteousness, be it only a little at a time.” Our brother’s testimony was encouraging and hopeful, and filled with the spirit of trust in God.

On Wednesday the weather was cold and few attended the prayer-meetings held by both old and young, though separately.

The prayer-meeting proved to be a profitable one, for many stirring testimonies from Brn. Warnock, Price, Pooling, and Bullard, and Srs. Cook, Harrington, and others were given, and the blessing of peace, and thus assurances of our Father’s kind protection and guidance were ours to enjoy.

RAILROAD RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Western Passenger Association.—The Western Passenger Association, territory Cheyenne, Wyoming, and east to Chicago, including all points in Colorado, has granted a rate of one and one third fare, round trip, certificate plan, to “Annual Conference and Auxiliary Conventions, Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, Independence, Missouri,” in April, 1906.

Passengers pay full fare on the going trip, and must obtain a separate certificate with every ticket purchased, all certificates to correspond to tickets purchased, showing payment of fare to Independence, Missouri. If impossible to buy a through ticket, buy to Kansas City, and there repurchase to Independence; but to see secure certificate with every ticket. Holders of certificates showing payment of full fare on going trip, will be entitled, over and above as given in America’s first third regular fare—provided such certificates are handed to the Church Secretary and vised by him and by the joint agent. The joint agent will be present on two days only—Wednesday and Thursday, April 11 and 12, and will make sure that the execution of each certificate. All must be present in person or by representative to receive certificates from him on those dates.

Do not accept certificates covering more than one ticket. See that your name is written thereon before handing in, and get them into the hands of the Secretary promptly on arrival. Tickets over regular steam lines of road between Kansas City and Independence are limited strictly to continuous passage.

Thursday, April 11 and 12, and will charge twenty-five cents for going tickets may be purchased from April 2 to 7 inclusive—not earlier than April 2, and not later than April 7, and are limited or limited according to rules of roads selling them but return tickets are limited strictly to continuous passage. If you buy a ticket on any other dates than those named, it is the same as to reduce fare on return trip. Return tickets may be purchased as late as April 26.

The rate applies to buyers of first-class tickets, only. Ministers traveling on clergy tickets and children traveling on reduced rate tickets are not eligible to reduce in return fare. The rate is based on attempting to receive certificates holding for tickets costing fifty cents or more. The number has always been ample in recent years.

Parties traveling in clubs on special rate will note the following ages of the state of Nevada west of Bismarck, in Wyoming, etc., which are in the Western Association, and the eastern boundary of the state of Nevada, etc., from such states as Utah, Western Wyoming, Western Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Arizona, New Mexico, etc., should apply direct to the individual railway Association on eastbound traffic. The foregoing from the Chairman should be noted. Parties in those States may buy to best advantage they can to Western territory and there buy on certificate plan, unless they can do better. (See Western notice.)

Va., and east thereof); Chesapeake & Stearns, States of Arkansas and Texas. Territories of Oklahoma and Indian. The same regulations concerning dates and securing of certificates, etc., as stated in Western Association notice apply. “If through tickets cannot be purchased at the starting point tickets should be purchased to the nearest point where such through ticket can be obtained, and there purchase through to place of meeting; and a certificate from the ticket agent at the point where each purchase is made should be requested.” Certificates are not transferable. “No refund of fare can be expected because of failure of parties to secure certificates or to have them properly vised at place of meeting.”

“Certificates are not kept at all stations. If, however, the ticket agent at a local station is not supplied with certificates and through tickets to place of meeting, he can inform the delegate how he can get nearest station to be obtained. In such case the delegate should purchase a local ticket to such station and there secure certificate and through ticket to place of meeting.” Secure certificate with each ticket and corresponding thereto.

List of roads: B. & O. (Pittsburg, Parkersburg, Bellaire, Wheeling, and east thereof); Buffalo & Susquehanna; Buffalo, Rochester, & Pittsburg; Central of New Jersey; Chesapeake & Ohio (Huntington, W. E. R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, February 23, 1906.

Quorum of Twelve.

By an oversight, I find the wrong date was given in my notice for the convening of quorum. March 23 should have been March 20. All concerned please notice.

WM. J. KELLEY, President.

SALT LAKE CITY, February 19, 1906.

Third Quorum of Elders.

To the Members of the Above Quorum; Greeting: Will you please send your annual reports to the secretary in time so they can be arranged for our coming meetings at Independence, Missouri, April 6. We will be pleased to meet as a quorum personally at this gathering, in order to get better acquainted with each other, and to enjoy the blessing of our deliberations while together. Bring the Spirit of the Master with you, then our meetings will be profitable.

CHARLES P. FUAL, Secretary.

STEWARTSVILLE, MISSOURI, February 23, 1906.

Conference Notices.

St. Louis District conference will convene at St. Louis, Missouri, Saturday and Sunday, March 17 and 18, 1906. Delegates to the General Conference will be elected. We desire a full and complete report from each branch in the district, so we can send same to the General Church Recorder. Charles J. Remington, secretary of said conference.

The forty-third conference of the Clinton District will convene at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, March 24 and 25, 1906, at 10 a.m. Reports and communications sent by mail should reach the undersigned on or before March 11. A. C. Silvers, secretary, Walker, Missouri.

Montana District conference will convene at Bozeman, Montana, at 10 o'clock, March 10 and 11. Jerome Wyckoff, secretary.

Conventen Notices.

Montana Sunday-school convention will convene at Bozeman, Montana, at 10 o'clock, a.m., February 9, 1906. This is the annual business-meeting for the election of officers, and all schools are requested to be represented. Anna Wyckoff, secretary.

Independence Stake Sunday-school association will convene at Holden, Missouri, March 9, 1906, at 10 a.m. Secretaries will please send credentials in time that their delegates may be properly authorized to transact business. Mrs. J. A. Gardner, secretary, Independence, Missouri.

Prayer Union.

A sister requests the prayers of the Prayer Union, and all Saints everywhere, in behalf of one of her children who has been mentally afflicted for a long time; that, if it is the Lord's will, he may release him entirely from that affliction.

Addresses.

General Conference Visitors—Take Notice.

All who are expecting to attend either the Conventions or General Conference are urged to report same to the secretary of the reception committee as soon as possible, in order to have proper arrangements made for board and lodging. By the action of the Independence branch the following arrangements have been made: Lodging and breakfast will be furnished at the homes of the Saints and friends for $1 per week. Dinner and supper will be served at the new, commodious, and well-equipped dining-hall, for $2.10 per week of fourteen meals. The dining-hall will also serve breakfast on the "short order" plan (get what you want) to any desiring to thus arrange. The above arrangements have been made to give the families of the resident Saints an opportunity to attend services. Please write at once, giving information in full as to your wants, etc., addressing all communications to:

Why We Need a Bigger President Than Washington or Lincoln.

Mr. Ernest H. Crosby is a radical whose motives no one can doubt. Born a conservative and the heir to a large fortune, he has made a radical of himself as a righteous matter of principle. "We still are in need of freedom, then, in a form adapted to present circumstances, and the need to-day is more searching and wide-spread than it ever was before. The tasks of Washington and of Lincoln were comparatively simple and easy. To cut off the connection with England was like amputating a separate limb. The ulcer of the slave power was localized, and three-fourths of the body politic at any rate was in a healthy condition, but now we have to do with a disease which has infected every drop of our blood and made its way into every tissue. We need a bigger president than Washington or Lincoln, for the opportunity is far greater than it was in their day.

"King power, slave power, money power! Two of them have fallen. Who will tackle the third? It will be no operation of pin pricks, but it will require a sharp knife, a steady hand, and a determined heart. As Andrew Jackson took the United States Bank by the throat, so the selfish gamblers of to-day, whose authentic exploits are chronicled in our magazines month after month and in the daily reports of investigation committees, must be shorn of their privileges and sent back chastened to the place of equal opportunity with their fellow citizens. We need a man who will go into the legislature, and there he feels that his heart was too big for him to remain long uninfluenced by the tragic conditions upon which his wealth was based, and since his conversion to revolutionary tendencies the social-reform camp can find has no more faithful ally. Poems, sermons, pamphlets, and lectures have issued from his energetic mind with steady purpose, and always in behalf of the proletariat. And still he feels that his work is all before him. As he says in a striking editorial in the February number of the Comonopolitan Magazine:

"We still are in need of freedom, then, in a form adapted to present circumstances, and the need to-day is more searching and wide-spread than it ever was before. Home Baking with
ROYAL Baking Powder

The United States Agricultural Department has issued (and circulates free) a valuable report giving the results of elaborate experiments made by and under the direction of the Department, which show the great saving from baking at home, as compared with cost of buying at the bakers. All bread, cake, biscuit, crullers, etc., are very much fresher, cleaner, cheaper and more wholesome when made at home with Royal Baking Powder.

Is It for the Benefit of the Whole?

For the benefit of those who are at present exercised over the subjects of the gathering, the methods to be used for the salvation of the unemployed, the building up of Zion, and the establishment of the righteous, the pure in heart, we suggest a few points that should be taken into the discussion.

It is by no means enough for a writer, taking a general view of the field and the conditions in the world plain to everybody, to cry out with reference to the church, There are rich and there are poor, therefore “something is wrong”; and upon this expression to attempt to write an exhaustive article suggestive of the things commanded of God by which it is intended to remedy the conditions of evil by which the people are oppressed.

We have been permitted the privilege of perusing quite a number of the articles which have of late been written, and we discover such a striking conflict of opinion that we are sure is not consistent with the real facts of the case. For instance: One class of these writers insists upon the proposition that the commandments given of the Lord require the church (we suppose meaning the church officials) to take the lead in all enterprises calculated to afford the means of support to the members of the church, individually and as a whole, by furnishing employment to be followed by adequate support of those who are able and willing to work and the positive and adequate care and support of those who are unable to work. Another class just as earnestly and as sturdily insists that the law of God does not so require, but has opened the way for the cooperation of those who may have means and are so inclined to carry on enterprises with a view to furnishing employment to those who may need.

Again. One class insists that the terms of equality require that there shall be no discrimination between individuals, so far as the claim upon the properties of the church is concerned, but that there shall be a reduction to the dead level of all; or, if the expression will be better relished, all are raised to an equal height.

Another insists that the first work which should now be undertaken should be providing for the unemployed; that other desirable objects to be effected should wait upon this one. Another is of True unity is most desirable. But division on proper lines, i. e., the lines dividing right from wrong, is more desirable than unity on a wrong basis, i. e., on a mixture of truth and error. The unity we need—and the only kind that will do us any good—is the uniting upon that which is right and true.

Many a man would be more of a man if he thought less of what men think.—Rum's Horn.
the opinion that no object is so important as the gathering together for the purpose of universal application of the principles of the oneness desired. All of these writers contend that the end desired and which has been commanded to be consummated can only be brought about in the Lord's way. Each claims that that is the only way; that man's wisdom will fail. One writer cites Dowie, another cites Wayland, and another commends articles which have preceded his in noting one or two of them and lauding the statements made as to what ought to be done.

We suggest for the consideration of those who have already written and those who may contemplate writing some facts which must be met with, whether as obstacles or otherwise, and that the position suggested by them be taken into consideration:

1. At a liberal computation the present membership of the church is sixty thousand,—less than the population of St. Joseph, Missouri; about a third of the population of Kansas City, and a mere handful as compared with the population of Chicago.

2. Upon the computation that families consist of groups of about five; father, mother, and three children, which is the usual basis of computation of population, dividing the total we would have twelve thousand heads of families, supposed to be breadwinners.

3. Of this twelve thousand heads of families it is perhaps safe to say that there is not a single millionaire, and perhaps one would be safe to say that there are not fifty whose possessions of worldly wealth would reach five hundred thousand, and not two hundred worth a hundred thousand each. As to the balance, it would be quite easy to determine that possibly half of them have what may be termed a competency. The larger part of the whole existing and living, prospering or failing, upon the labor of their hands or the various occupations in business which occupy their time and attention.

4. There are in this enumeration men of almost all kinds of business and labor; employers, men of business, real estate, banking, manufacturing, merchants, millers, masons, lawyers, doctors, laborers of every class, from the daily grind with pick and shovel to the skilled workman in the shop, overseers, foremen—but it is useless to enumerate further. Any one with knowledge of life and its development can easily fill up the list.

5. The chief insistence of each writer so far seems to be that what are called industrial enterprises should be entered upon, which would give employment to hundreds of those unemployed who are standing about the streets willing to labor if they had anything to do. In this consideration, what industrial enterprises open to the handful who might possibly combine their means together for establishing enterprises of the kind could be made successful? It is not wise to ignore this question. Whatever manufactured demands what is called the raw material, which must be procured where it may be found or where it is offered for sale, and the finished product must be disposed of to those who are able and willing to purchase to furnish means to continue the enterprise. To whom should these manufactured articles be offered?

6. How are the host of employees or these "wealth producers" to be fed and clothed, housed in comfort, while they are employed in producing wealth, the finished article which the enterprise is offering for the market? Is it not a fact that every industrial enterprise must have for its object the creation of something that is valuable to dispose of? And if produced and not disposed of, in what sense is it wealth?

7. If to avoid competition these enterprises referred to are to be self-sustaining because they have access to the raw materials without entering the markets of the world to secure them, as suggested by one writer among others, they must purchase the land in which the raw material is found and produced, by mining the ores out of which the iron, brass, steel, etc., are made which enter into the articles manufactured by industrial enterprises, whence shall the means be secured to purchase said land?

8. If the industrial enterprise contemplated is for the purpose of manufacturing articles in wood and to avoid competition in the markets, lands must be purchased on which the timber stands, whence the means to purchase said land? It is already in print that the scarcity of suitable timber for the making of matches has been supplied by the manufacture of matches of paper, ruled and twisted, stiffened by some sort of mucilage, cut into lengths and the ends dipped in the fulminating paste that gives the fire when it is struck.

9. The same question lies at the opening of the discussion of every identical article that may be sought to be produced by what are called industrial enterprises.

10. If because the Lord said, Purchase the land, it may have been said that the community was to be largely or wholly agricultural, is it a mistake so to say? If the terms "purchase the land" refer to those tracts in which mineral of all kinds may be hidden in this wonderful Joseph's land, is not mining of every description a legitimate pursuit for Saints to engage in? Does the fact of failure in any of these enterprises which may have occurred in the past furnish a sufficient deterrent to the entering into of such enterprises now or hereafter?

11. Bro. A is a man of some wealth. He started as a day laborer, married when he was a young man without a suite of decent furniture to put into his shanty. By dint of perseverance and hard work, joined with careful business wisdom and prevision, he built up an enterprise which employs hundreds of men with a relative number of women. That enterprise is still continuing, furnishing the desired employment to the requisite number of persons. It is true that the enterprise furnishes him an excellent living above the average laborer. Out of the surplus he pays tithing and gives hundreds of dollars to individual necessity; scarcely an elder passing through his neighborhood without being provided with suitable clothing if he lacks. Should this Bro. A abandon this enterprise, throwing the persons whom he has in employ out of labor? And if he did, where and how would they obtain their daily bread? True, they are the employees and wage-earners; so is Bro. A an employee at his own business and a wage-earner. Bro. D has been and is in a similar condition. These men employ members of the church so far as they can and so far as members of the church will work for them. Would it enhance the progress of Zion if these two men and others who may be in similar condition to a lesser or a greater extent should stop their individual enterprises and throw their means into a common fund from which all others might draw as they saw fit, without reference to the numbers which may have depended upon their earnings for their daily support?

12. Would not those employed in an industrial enterprise, the unemployed, the poor man, if it be proper to call a man able to work and willing to work a poor man, be any less wage-earners working in an industrial enterprise conducted by the church or any members thereof than are the men who work in other enterprises wage-earners? Take the miners for instance. The miner is a wage-earner. As a class they are working for individuals or firms or railway companies at a given rate for their labor. This includes miners of every class, from fire-clay and coal, to lead, zinc, copper, silver, and gold, saying nothing about the thousands of independent miners who have gone to the mining regions to take claims and work at surface-mining. Would or would not miners at work for industrial enterprises instituted and carried on by the church, or a combination of them, be under similar disadvantages and subject to the same necessities for daily support as miners are now in the world?

13. It must be understood that what are called the heads of the church, the leading men of it, in each and every quorum, are just as much interested in the success of the work intrusted to the church, the gathering, the upbuilding of Zion, and the purchased possession, the relief of the poor and distressed, care of the indigent, the education of the rising generation among the Saints, purification from evil, and the building up of fitting characters for citizenship in the state and in the church and kingdom of God, as is or can be any other member in the church. Some of these men are at a loss to know what they have said or done that justifies even a remote suspicion that they are either willingly or willfully lacking in the performance of the duties imposed upon them by their positions and the law of God. It is unfair to suppose that they are indifferent to what they see is wrong or lacking in conditions or personal conduct or are carelessly ignorant of what the law directs. It is suggested that those who may write hereafter upon these great topics of interest will write upon the basis of absolute facts, including the actual membership of the church and their various conditions.

IN QUESTION—SECRET SOCIETIES.

The HERALD for February 28 might appropriately be called our Masonic number. As Editor-in-chief we wish to state that we did not see the articles of L. A. G., Wilbur C. Earhart, and Jerome E. Page before they were published in the HERALD; neither did we see the editorial with reference to the Smoot case in which the Masonic order was referred to; nor the replies or criticisms made by Brn. Hilliard, Messenger, and Johnson. We have been absent from our post and off duty for a number of months. This may have accounted for the fact that the articles referred to were not submitted to our supervision.

Efforts have been made in the past at different times to hold the Editor-in-chief responsible for not only what appeared as editorial and leaders, but also what has been written by individuals—articles and communications. We have steadily refused to become responsible for individual articles and communications, for the reason that it was inconsistent to hold the Editor responsible for the great contrariety of opinion and argument expressed in controversial articles which must necessarily appear at times in the church publication. The inconsistency of holding the Editor to such responsibility is very clearly emphasized by the letter and spirit of these articles on Masonry which have so lately appeared.

Perhaps it will now be remembered by the general readers of the HERALD that we have steadfastly refused to enter into a personal discussion of secret orders and societies, the Masonic fraternity included. Our position has been that we knew nothing about the orders referred to from personal contact with them; that our business was to preach the gospel and teach those things which belong to the establishment of the church and to the good conduct of church-members as citizens of the commonwealth of Israel and of the political commonwealth as well. That we were not a member of any secret order, have never been, and did not expect to be. That we have had neither time nor money to invest in an association with any of these orders. That we held our baptismal vow bound us to the accomplishment of all the good that we could do our fellow men under any and all circumstances in life, with as much fidelity and love and charity as could any oath imposed by any human association. That we had no war to make upon any society, neither as an individual, as Editor of the church paper, nor as an officer in the church.

We have frequently been criticised because we have permitted controversial articles for and against to run in the HERALD, it being held that it was detracting from the character of the HERALD as a church organ. As against this criticism we have held that the discussion of these different topics appertaining to our church-work at suitable time and opportunity was permissible, and that no one should be unduly exercised by such discussion. We have believed that the discussion that would be brought to run in the HERALD, writer therein upon secret societies would precipitate an angry controversy which would not only be utterly profitless, but would not be relished by the great majority of the Saints and would be productive of disturbance and ill-feeling upon the part of many.

The attempt to identify the church of the Devil has been made in the past and we discover is made again. We have hitherto failed to see the justness of the application, and fail now. A society is not a church. Nor does the history of the past, so far as our knowledge of the history of the United States goes, show that at any time in any crisis which has arisen wherein the stability of the Government and the institutions known as the foundation of the Government have been put in jeopardy there has been any failure upon the part of members of the Masonic fraternity to answer to the call of patriotism; nor does it appear that membership in that or other society, secret or beneficiary, has militated against the safety and well-being of these institutions.

On our own behalf and on behalf of the church in its collective capacity we disavow responsibility for these attacks upon these societies, believing that they are untimely and not justified by the facts in the case.

The HERALD has no right to assume that the Mormon church or any of its official membership in the defense of the right of Mr. Reed Smoot to retain his seat in the Senate of the United States will assume that the endowment ceremonies of which so much has been attempted to be made in the inquiry before the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate has been derived from Masonic rites quasi or otherwise. In fact, it is safer policy to wait patiently until the inquiry of the committee shall have been finished and their report made. It is neither wise nor safe to attempt to foreshadow what course either party will or may assume in the prosecution of the case. Rumor has been active and busy. It is poor policy to follow in its lead, and peculiarly unsafe at the present juncture. Let the committee finish its work, and then there will be a fair opportunity to judge as to what has been done.

It is our business and duty to preach the gospel, to call men’s attention to the beauty and grandeur of the plan of salvation, and induce them to enter into the gospel covenant. If this can be safely accomplished the things of this world, including the attachment to societies of this or that order, will by the perfected vision of the disciple be made to assume their proper place in the values which men should set upon the things of this life.

A friend of the Editor who was an active Mason, and may be yet for aught we know, when asked which he would give up if compelled to give up one or the other, his religion or his Masonry, made this reply: “That is not a difficult question to answer at all: my Masonry is for time; my religion for time and eternity both.” The sequel of this answer is that Masonry as he understood it was a matter of this life only; but that religion had direct relation to a man’s life here and his life in perpetuity; that is, in eternity.

So far as the fear of the influence of secret societies in the church, we have this to state: We know of none that have been or that is authorized by the church or any quorum of the church. We know of no effort made by any society nor members of that society to introduce policies into the government of the church, spiritual or temporal, nor any attempt to bias or control any of the spiritual authorities of the church under any circumstances whatever. We do know that if any attempt was made upon the Presidency of the sort referred to, it would at once be rebuked. We believe the same thing would occur in case such effort was made with regard to any other quorum in the church. Fear, then, is groundless, based upon supposed existences which are suppositions only.

We anticipate that the articles referred to as occurring in the HERALD for February 28 will raise a storm of protest and remonstrance. We caution moderation and call attention to the sentiment so frequently expressed in our presence on stirring occasions:

“We thank thee, O God, for a prophet
To guide us in these latter days.”

If there is any value in advice or warning coming from prophetic source or believed prophetic source, we suggest that there be a wholesome regard for the good that may be found among our fellow men, though we may possibly find it in secret or social organization, which the church neither approves nor condemns, and which must necessarily be left to the consideration and discretion of individual members of the church as to their connection with or a refraining to join them.

Discussion upon this point would bring endless controversy, bitter and harsh criticism and recrimination, and would be profitless and therefore wrong.

We have heretofore kept this discussion out of the HERALD and shall pursue the same policy hereafter if intrusted further with the editorial control. We caution patience in this as in other controversies which have been going on in the HERALD for the past few months; for only by patience and proper caution can the right prevail, where so many earnest and honest-minded men differ so widely, as it appears men do in this instance as in others.

OUR LOSS IN THE SOCIETY ISLANDS.

Extracts from the daily papers concerning the recent storm and tidal wave in the Society and Tuamotu Islands, which swept over that part of the globe February 7 and 8, are as follows, so far as our work is concerned:

PAPEEITE, Tahiti, February 18, via San Francisco, March 8.—The most destructive cyclone ever experienced in the Society and Tuamotu Islands occurred on February 7 and 8. The damage in Tahiti is estimated at $1,000,000, and presumably a similar amount of property was destroyed on the Tuamotu Islands. . . .

The cyclone or hurricane reached the velocity of 120 miles an hour. It struck the islands about midnight on February 7 and continued until four o'clock on the next afternoon. The Island of Anaa, Tuamotu group, is believed to have been the center of the storm. . . .

The schooner Papeete was submerged for an hour near Anaa, Tuamotu. Her captain, Philip Michaelli, estimated that the waves were sixty-five feet high. It was impossible to see twenty feet away. The sailors had to be lashed to the vessel . . .

At Fakarava, the natives sought refuge in trees after the government buildings, Roman Catholic church, and all the dwellings had been swept away. It is feared that many will succumb to hunger, thirst, and exposure . . .

In addition to the property destroyed at Papeete about an equal amount is believed to have been destroyed altogether along the beach road around Tahiti. Scores of dwelling-houses were blown down. There is much distress among the homeless people. The local government extended the military barracks as a temporary refuge, and provided food when needed, but the funds of the treasury are practically exhausted. Governor Jullien will appeal to France for aid . . .

Bridges and roads were badly damaged on the island of Tahiti. Breadfruit-, coconut-, banana- and plaintain-trees were blown down in great numbers, which will result in hardships to the natives and materially affect commerce during the next two or three years. . . .

The village of Tarona, near the arsenal, was completely swept away. It consisted of the mission buildings and homes of native converts of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints' mission, formerly under the direction of Captain Joseph Burton of California. The mission-house and a great many houses were carried off to a distance of many hundreds of yards and demolished. Of the church edifice not a vestige remains.

It is also stated that the Mariposa called at several islands and saw no signs of life.

It is hard to estimate the real value of our property which was destroyed but a conservative estimate would be near fifteen thousand dollars on the island of Tahiti, and mostly if not entirely in the city of Papeete; and the loss in the Tuamotu Islands outnumbers that many hundred times if we count the personal property of the members, to say nothing of their crops of coconuts. Unless the reports are exaggerated, as first reports are apt to be, perhaps a hundred thousand dollars would not cover the loss in dollars and cents, while the loss of life must be very great. A sixty-five foot wave would practically annihilate life in the Tuamotu Islands, where nine tenths of the membership of the church resided.

The prospects for the future so far as missionary work is concerned is practically at an end for a while unless entirely supported from the home fund. No doubt great suffering for food and water, and perhaps many deaths have followed in the wake of the storm. Large credit will have to be allowed the natives which will practically tie them up financially for years; but all that is nothing compared with the loss of life,—perhaps whole families, or whole cities, and indeed a whole country! Who can estimate it?

CHURCH GAIN BY BAPTISM.

Some of the writers for the HERALD in their letters and articles seem to be depressed over the thought that baptisms are not as numerous as they used to be, and therefore that the church is suffering great loss from spiritual decadence. The facts appear to be that what is called the Latter Day Saints in the statistics of religious information concerning the United States, that body has advanced from number eight to number seven; having made larger increase since the prior census than what is called the Christian Church. It is true that these statistics must have included both bodies or churches, the Utah Mormon church and the Reorganized Church.

The increase for the eleven months since conference year began in April up to the latest information in the hands of the Recorder give 1,511 as compared with 1,523 for the last conference year; so that as the Recorder suggested it does not show up so bad after all.

The Christian Advocate, New York, in its issue for January 25, in the statistics given in tabulated form, states that there have been 997 accessions to the Reorganized Church in the United States alone for the year ending December 31, 1905. It says of the Disciples of Christ that they report a very small gain in numbers.

From all that we have seen from the reports made by the different missionaries in charge we see no reason for discouragement. But on the contrary feel that we are holding our own in the field of contest, so far as numbers are concerned, and increasing in spirituality as a whole.

SOCIALISM—UNITY.

A number of articles have been running through the HERALD of the last three or four months, including a letter from Bro. John W. Rushton, with reference to the temporal prosperity of Zion and the temporal and spiritual gathering to Zion. We have by force of circumstances been precluded from a close examination of these articles before they went into the HERALD, and while we believe in the largest liberty compatible with spiritual progress and unity, we regret to see any disposition upon the part of controversialists to unfairly criticise or denounce by detraction the views held by those from whom they differ.

There is ample room for the exercise of all the talent that any of the Saints, clergy or laity, if it be proper to make such a distinction, may be possessed of in teaching the gospel to men and in encouraging the spiritual growth which when fully made gives a proper appreciation of the value of temporalities, the things of this world. It is all well enough to talk and write about all things common, temporal and spiritual unity; but as suggested by one writer, until there shall be a sufficiently strong spiritual unity established between those who are to be called the pure in heart to mingle together in temporal pursuits for the mutual benefit of each other and the general prosperity of the whole, there will be no great success as a body in this regard. There must be sufficient integrity among men to pursue the daily walks of life together in frankness, honesty, uprightness of purpose, and diligence as individuals and as separate entities of the great body before there can be that emergence of self-interest that is required and the devotion to principle which uproots selfishness. There is ample provision in the revelations of God given to the church for the unity of individuals in the church to carry on public enterprises for the purpose of giving labor and labor's equivalent, support, to those who may choose to engage as laborers or helpers and to enhance men's value and the products of their labor for the good of all, without the church being called in its official character or its officers in their official character to carry on such works. It has been provided for in the orders referred to and from which so much has been quoted, and especially in that clause which provides that men may of their own selves bring to pass much righteousness, for the power is in them. They ought not to wait to be commanded.

We have as an individual believed in coöperation, and do now believe in coöperation. We were instrumental to a certain extent in the formation of the First United Order of Enoch, through the intervention of which a settlement at Lamoni was made. And notwithstanding every effort that we made, backed up by some strong men to the extent of their available means, we did not succeed in raising a basis of operations to the amount of $50,000.00. This effort at coöperation was broken down by very unjust criticism from men who undoubtedly had as great desire for onward progress as we did, but who by the cry of speculation first hurt and then dampened the ardor of those men who were standing for the financial success of the enterprise. Such men as Israel Rogers, Elijah Banta, David Dancer, and W. W. Blair, could not afford to stand before their brethren charged with the spirit of speculation, hence the enterprise was quietly brought to an end and each man who engaged in the enterprise who held stock therein received the amount invested by him at an increase of ten per cent; so that no one lost anything, unless it may have been Brn. Banta and Dancer. Of this we can not say.

We have stated hitherto that we were still in favor of coöperation and were willing to consider documents presented by any one as to the working details for carrying into effect any enterprise that may properly be called a coöperative one. We have a specimen case in point in the enterprise known as Zion City, Wisconsin, conceived in the busy brain of John Alexander Dowie, who first styled himself the General Overseer, then Elijah the Prophet, or the First Apostle, who by his peculiar methods gathered together thousands of people who apparently devoted all their wealth to specific enterprises suggested by him, but of which John Alexander Dowie was the principal operator, director, and apparent owner, claiming five per cent of all the money which was deposited at his feet as the Lord's overseer, Elijah the Prophet, or the First Apostle. This work is in trouble; John Alexander Dowie's health is failing, and the man appointed by him to succeed him in his effort at Zion City lately demanded from the membership an additional sacrifice, producing an old-time sporadic wave of reformation in which people threw down their trinkets, jewelry, watches, and other things of personal adornment for the benefit of the general cause, besides what money they may have had. None of those who thus sacrificed gave the matter a thought as to how these apparent valuables so consecrated were to be disposed of, who was to buy them, the Gentiles at auction or the faithful who had already used up their available means in furthering the enterprise at Zion City. Give this matter a thought.

Another instance is that which was shown in the presentation of the President of the Utah Mormon church being the principal authority in a great number of temporal enterprises, seeming to have individual direction thereof by which he commands the temporal interests of the people of his church, and is carrying out those enterprises in a commercial spirit such as any one can see if he choose to open his eyes. This he is doing ostensibly upon the hypothesis that he is the Trustee in Trust for the church over which he presides and by virtue of this in direct control temporally as well as spiritually.

The brethren ought to have a sufficiently good knowledge of the organic character of the church to understand that the temporalities of the church are by the direction of revelation centered in the Bishopric, and not in the Presidency, nor the Twelve nor the High Council. The revelation does not create the President or Presidency as Trustees in Trust. Such trusteeship, if established at all, would be by virtue of some local statute enactment under which properties only could be held.

What necessity is there for diverting the care and control of the temporalities from their legitimate channel, through which, the law of the Lord, they should go unto the benefit of all? Has it been considered by those who are engaged in this literary controversy over the matter that the success of temporalities under the care of the Bishopric may be hindered for months and years by the effort to scatter the responsibility of means and labor? We are not now expressing any specific method of procedure; for we have hitherto said that while we are aware of certain provisions looking toward the accomplishment of cooperative existence, the working details are not provided, apparently being left to the prevision, experience, and judgment of those whose duty and business it is to look after these matters.

We shall, if permitted, give this matter further consideration, calling attention once more, as in the editorial touching the visit to Washington, to that splendid exhortation and reproof taken from the Ensign for February 22, as delivered by a brother.

While in Toronto we learned that a prophecy had been delivered either in one of their prayer-meetings or at the conference, that the year would be an advanced one and that the work was receiving a greater increase of spiritual oversight from the Lord. This agrees with what we have heard from elsewhere. Throwing no discredit upon the efforts made by others, we call attention to the fact that temporal unity can only result from a continuation and success of spiritual unity.

CHURCH DECADENCE.

A local pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Providence, Rhode Island, Reverend C. N. Melden, D. D., is of the opinion that Methodism in New England is fighting a losing battle, to use his expression; and he further believes that the greater part of Christendom “is so indifferently Christian as to be not very much better than some of the heathen.”

A number of Reverend Melden’s fellow ministers do not agree with him. However, Doctor Edwin A. Blake, of the Tremont Street Methodist Episcopal Church, said: “Without having referred to the conference reports I can simply say that I am inclined to accept the Reverend Doctor Melden’s conclusions. All Protestant churches are contending against odds in New England. Methodism is very successful in the suburbs of Boston.”

It is a matter of almost universal comment among ministers, and quite largely so in the secular press, that Protestantism is not holding its own against the encroachments of Catholicism, the higher criticism, and the various offshoots from the Protestant church existing in almost every part of the United States. The supposition is that the methods employed are not sufficiently attractive. However, it is clear that whether the methods employed are sufficiently attractive or not, there is an almost wholesale indifference to the strong appeals that are being made in the different churches of the land.

LAMONI SUNDAY-SCHOOL EXPLAINS.

The following has been received by the Assistant Editor, which speaks for itself. We publish without comment, further than that after taking into consideration the material points mentioned in connection with others of which we are cognizant, we see no reason to change our views:

Mr. L. A. Gould,

Dear Brother: At a business-meeting of the Lamoni Sunday-school, a committee composed of the superintendency of the school was appointed to reply to a portion of the editorial in the Herald for January 3. The members of this committee requested Sr. Scott, the first assistant of last year, to act with them. In the editorial referred to, there appeared a statement concerning the Christmas entertainment of our school in regard to which we desire to offer an explanation. We quote from the editorial as follows:

“But that same morning a meeting of officers and teachers of our Sunday-school voted by about thirty to four to hold their Christmas entertainment in the church Sunday evening. (It was prevented, if we understand aright, by the branch officers refusing to allow the use of the church in that way.) This was not done by an oversight, but after fully considering the matter.”

The time first agreed upon by the school for the entertainment was Saturday evening, December 22. On the Sunday previous, at the Sunday-school session, the superintendent received a letter from the entertainment committee informing him that there were obstacles which would prevent the giving of the entertainment on Saturday evening. The superintendent called the officers and teachers to meet in the interval between Sunday-school and the morning preaching-service. It was then learned that neither Monday night nor Tuesday night was available. The meeting was necessarily very short. The time had almost expired when it was moved to hold the entertainment on Sunday evening. There was no time for discussion of the question and the motion carried. We think the editorial error in saying that action was taken “after fully considering the matter.” The branch officers refused the use of the church for Sunday evening. We then postponed our annual business-meeting which had been set for Tuesday evening, and occupied that evening with the entertainment. Incidentally we may say that one half of the number of the branch officers were active Sunday-school officers and teachers, and while the vote of thirty to four may seem large, the full number of officers and teachers is nearly seventy (sixty-nine). This shows that many of the teachers were not represented in the vote.
The committee had not prepared the entertainment with any thought of giving it on Sunday, and when notified of the resolution that it be so given, the chairman of the committee at once signified her intention to resign, and the other members of the committee were opposed to the resolution. For the same reasons as those held by the committee, the branch officers refused the use of the house. But in former years, when Christmas fell on Sunday, an appropriate Christmas service was given by the Sunday-school on the Christmas Sabbath with full permission of the branch officers.

The editorial makes no distinction as to the character of entertainment but concludes that the example of allowing anything of the kind on Sunday must necessarily be bad. It may be a mistake to apply the term entertainment to a service suitable for Sunday, but we believe it possible to prepare a sacred service that would not mar the holiness of that day, though it might not often be advisable to give it on that day, and we should prefer to have it at some other time. The committee had reported that the entertainment would be a delusion of the life of Christ in art, story, and song. The purity of the theme commended it to those who favored the motion to give it Sunday evening.

We assure you that we have a sense of the responsibility of our work, that we desire to do it carefully, avoiding worldliness, and gaining the approval of the Master by doing his children good and not harm.

JOHN E. PAGE ON TRUE PRINCIPLES.

The following article, entitled "Private character corrupted, never invalidates true principles," was written by John E. Page, one of the members of the Quorum of Twelve in the first organization of the church and will be of interest to the reader in showing the views and the sentiments of Elder Page in the later time of his life.

The article is in the handwriting of Elder Page and signed by him and was found among the papers of the late Samuel M. Reeve, Mt. Holly, New Jersey. Elder W. W. Smith of Philadelphia having had access to these papers has kindly furnished this at the request of Bro. E. L. Kelley for the HERALD columns. The reader will readily discern the true gospel sentiment of the article and understand why Elder Page could so faithfully contend for the truth notwithstanding the follies and sins of so many who had once known the way of life:

PRIVATE CHARACTER CORRUPTED, NEVER INVALIDATES TRUE PRINCIPLES.

Nothing would be more desirable than to know that every member of the church was walking before the church, and the world, according to the true principles of the gospel of Christ. And nothing manifests more weakness of intellect than for any person to object to true principles, merely because there are a few or many persons in the church who disgrace themselves by transgressing the principles of truth and righteousness. Such an objection savours the strongest of infidelity of almost any other objection.

It aims a fatal blow at the probability of Adam ever becoming a saint, because Cain killed his brother Abel. Or that Noah was a prophet because he and his family were the only individuals who were saved from the deluge. Or that Melchizedec was a prophet or high priest of God because the posterity of Noah and his sons so early apostatized from God and practiced the same things for which God sent the deluge, which was: to fill the earth with violence; or that blood touched blood when the five Kings of the plains took Lot and his goods captive in the days of Melchizedec and Abraham. Or that Moses was a prophet because Korah, Dathan and Abiram and hundreds of others rebelled against Moses, and almost all Israel fell into apostasy and committed "idolatry," "fornication," "tempted Christ" and "murmured" and committed almost every other species of wickedness that poor fallen humanity was ever guilty of. —Read 1 Corinthians 10th chapter. And Moses himself not escaping the fatal snare of sin and human fallibility. Or that David, or Solomon were ever inspired of God because they fell into the sin of polygamy, and concubinage, and other oppressive enormities too delicate to mention. Or that any of the Kings of Israel were ever righteous men because that only Jotham and Josiah, two out of forty kings in Israel and Judah, that were righteous, and Jotham and Josiah were not of the house of David.

The Apostles Paul says of himself, "that he had need to take heed to himself, lest while he was preaching to others he himself should become a castaway." Even Christ himself was subject to temptation, and the only one (we believe) that ever was veiled in humanity, that lived without committing sin. Since the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has successfully braved the storm of the most unparalleled persecutions, falsehood and misrepresentations of her principles, by professed Christian ministers, and editors, the glittering sword itself has been unsheathed in this land of boasted equal rights, and has gorged itself in the blood of helpless innocence, and every pulpit and press (with few exceptions) has teemed with the most bitter anathemas and cursings to put down the influence of the true and "everlasting gospel" of Christ as preached by us—but all to no purpose. The tone now begins to change, and the freethinking untrammeled part of community begin to say, "well, your principles are true if the Bible is true; but I do think there is something wrong yet." What is that?

"There is Mr. and Mrs. So and So, they do so and so, which I think is very wrong." Admit it, and what, pray, does it prove? —Why, just as much now as it did anciently,—that the fallen nature of man is just as subject to do evil now as then, and nothing more. But as long as the church remains to be "the pillar and ground of the truth!" it is enough to know that its principles are true; that if faithfully abided it will save us. It becomes the indispensable duty of every man and woman to

attaching themselves to the church in order to be saved, although many who join the church should transgress its principles to their own condemnation before God. The genuine purity and scriptural correctness of our principles is what renders it more liable to be imposed upon by intruders, because a dark spot on a clean sheet is more conspicuous than on a dirty one. The gospel of Christ is ordained of God for the salvation of the whole world, and there is not a sentence in the gospel to justify the idea of shutting the doors of the church or its ordinances against the worst of men. The church is truly a moral hospital into which all may come and be healed of their moral evils. And if any should through want of moral stability apostatise and die, it is no loss to him who lives and abides in the truth. And if there are any so intellectually weak as to say they will not come into the church because they know of somebody in it that does wrong, such a person or persons only hold themselves candidates for the same condemnation that those do who sin in the church, and they vainly fancy that they are shunning the company of evil doers in this world, they will surely associate with them in the world to come.

FIT CHOICE OF OFFICER.

Gilbert J. Waller has been appointed a member of the Board of Prison Inspectors of the First Judicial Circuit, in place of F. J. Lowrey resigned.

This is the first appointment made by Acting Governor Atkinson in his present occupancy of the executive chair. He had consulted over the matter with A. G. M. Robertson, Republican National Committeeman and Territorial committee chairman.

Due courtesy to the party under whose banner the administration was ranged, however, was but an incident of the Acting Governor’s selection of a good man for the office. It is a more important position than ever now, owing to the good judgment and discretion required for giving the right kind of advice in the administration of the parole law. Mr. Atkinson chose Mr. Waller as a man of high moral ideals and philanthropic motives, equipped besides with a judicial frame of mind and every-day business sense.

The foregoing is taken from the Pacific Commercial Advertiser, Honolulu, Hawaii Territory, February 15. The editorial columns of the same issue contain the following in addition:

The appointment of G. J. Waller to the Board of Prison Directors by Acting Governor Atkinson is one that will give entire satisfaction to the community. Mr. Waller is of that class of citizens whose acceptance of public position always marks a distinct gain to the service.

We are pleased to note this appointment. It seems to have been entirely free from partisan influences, made upon the basis of merit alone. It speaks well for the record made by Bro. Waller. He is the manager of a large business concern in Hawaii, in the conduct of which he has given evidence of ability and integrity of a high order. It is gratifying always to see men prove themselves worthy of service, and to note that their merits are recognized and appreciated.

PLURAL MARRIAGE DECLARED TO BE ESSENTIAL TO SALVATION.

When in 1852 the so-called Revelation on Celestial Marriage was first published, it contained the following statement:

Therefore, prepare thy heart to receive and obey the instructions which I am about to give unto you; for all those, who have this law revealed unto them, must obey the same; for behold! I reveal unto you a new and an everlasting covenant, and if ye abide not that covenant, then are ye damned; for no one can reject this covenant and be permitted to enter into my glory; for all who will have a blessing at my hands, shall abide the law which was appointed for that blessing, and the conditions thereof, as was instituted from before the foundations of the world: and as pertaining to the new and everlasting covenant, it was instituted for the fullness of my glory, and he that receiveth a fullness thereof, must, and shall abide the law, or he shall be damned, saith the Lord God.—The Seer, vol. 1, p. 7.

When subsequently it was claimed that only two per cent of the church in Utah entered into the practice of plural marriage, we were led to ask, Will not the ninety-eight per cent be damned according to the provision of the revelation quoted above? In answer to this we were greatly informed that celestial marriage did not necessarily include plural marriage; and that if a man married one wife according to the celestial order, he had obeyed the law and did not come under the condemnation attached for rejection. Further that if a man did not marry at all, if he accepted the revelation as the word of God he could not be condemned for rejection.

This seemed plausible; and though we could not believe and had, because of this, to take our chances for eternal damnation according to the terms of the decree, yet we were willing to let the indorsers of the document interpret it.

This interpretation, however, has been disputed by no less a personage than Joseph F. Smith, who is now the chief interpreter of the law in the organization standing sponsor for this revelation.

On Sunday, July 7, 1878, he preached a sermon in the tabernacle at Salt Lake City in which he gave utterance to the following statements:

Some people have supposed that the doctrine of plural marriage was a sort of superfluity, or non-essential to the salvation or exaltation of mankind. In other words, some of the saints have said, and believe, that a man with one wife, sealed to him by the authority of the Priesthood for time and eternity, will receive an exaltation as great and glorious, if he is faithful, as he possibly could with more than one. I want here to enter my solemn protest against this idea, for I know it is false. There is no blessing promised except upon conditions, and no blessing can be obtained by mankind except by faithful compliance with the conditions, or law, upon which the same is promised. The marriage of one woman to a man for time and eternity by the sealing power, according to the law of God, is a fulfillment of the celestial law of marriage in part—and is good so far as it goes—and so far as a man abides these conditions of the law, he will receive his reward therefor, and this reward, or blessing, he could not obtain on any other grounds or conditions. But this is only the beginning of the law, not the whole of it. Therefore, who ever has imagined that he could obtain the fullness of the blessings pertaining to this celestial law, by complying with only a portion of its conditions, has deceived himself. He can not do it. . . .

If, then, this principle was of such great importance that the Prophet himself was threatened with destruction, and the best men in the church with being excluded from the favor of the Almighty, if they did not enter into and establish the practice of it upon the earth, it is useless to tell me that there is no blessing attached to obedience to the law, or that a man with only one wife can obtain as great a reward, glory or kingdom as he can with more than one, being equally faithful. . . .

It is a glorious privilege to be permitted to go into a Temple of God to be united as man and wife in the bonds of holy wedlock for time and all eternity by the Authority of the Holy Priesthood, which is the power of God, for they who are thus joined together "no man can put asunder," for God hath joined them. It is an additional privilege for that same man and wife to reenter the Temple of God to receive another wife in like manner if they are worthy. But if he remain faithful with only the one wife, observing the conditions of so much of the law as pertains to the eternity of the marriage covenant, he will receive his reward, but the benefits, blessings, and power appertaining to the second or more faithful and fuller observance of the law, he never will receive, for he can not. . . .

I understand the law of celestial marriage to mean that every man in this church, who has the ability to obey and practice it in righteousness and will not be damned, I say I understand it to mean this and nothing less, and I testify in the name of Jesus that it does mean that.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 20, pp. 28-31.

According to Elder Smith's deductions, which are certainly in harmony with the revelation from which deduced, the man who does not have more than one wife will never enter into the exaltation and degree of glory to which the polygamist is entitled. If then the church in Utah is sincere in the abandonment of plural wifery, and actually forbids its membership entering into that relation, it thereby according to the position of President Joseph F. Smith closes the gates of the higher glory to church communicants, and says, You can not enter there were the polygamist and his wives are to be. If these people would renounce their former theory and acknowledge the errors of the past, men could have more confidence in their sincerity, and believe that the practice had ceased; but so long as they profess confidence in the divinity of this so-called revelation and its legitimate interpretations, it is hard to believe that they are in their own convictions barring themselves from the higher bliss and glory by abandoning what they believe to be a holy and divine practice.

So long as they are sincere in their belief they will not injure their prospects in eternity by failing to practice this part of their religion.

It hardly seems that Senator Smoot would sacrifice his eternal interest for a seat in the United States Senate, yet we are assured that he is not in the practice. It must be that he is not a believer in the theory of plural marriage by divine sanction. Why then has he not the courage to come out plainly and denounce it, thus proving himself to be worthy a place in the Senate and in the confidence of his countrymen?

So long as this belief remains the practice will continue, especially while the processes of marrying are so various and convenient as set forth in the last will and testament of the late President Brigham Young.

In this document we find the following definition:

To avoid any question, the words married or marriage, in this this shall be taken to have become consummate between a man and women, either by ceremony before a lawful magistrate or according to the order of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, or by their cohabitation in conformity to our custom.

If President Young represented that people correctly it is not necessary in order to prove this unlawful practice to establish that there has been a marriage ceremony either before a magistrate or a church officer, for there is another and very convenient way of consummating marriage.

Let us hope that he did not represent them fairly, but if not, let them say so in unmistakable terms.

SIGNS PRECEDENT TO OUR SAVIOR'S SECOND COMING.

The coming of our Savior in glory, his second, personal coming, is an event having no parallel, so far as history or prophecy reveals, in some infinitely important respects. It is so from its character and its purposes and its results. It marks the end of human political government, of the end of this world and the introduction of the world to come. It will be attended by the resurrection of the righteous dead, the change of the righteous living; of both, from mortality to immortality, and the visible development of the everlasting kingdom of God on earth as also the rewards of all God's children. (See Matthew 16: 27; Isaiah 40: 9-11; Revelation 22:12.) We need have no wonder that this event has been looked forward to with such thrilling interest, the day of glory, bliss eternal, rest and peace unending.

But it is to some of the signs that precede this most wondrous event that we desire to refer. Our Savior himself certified to certain signs at some length, which, if we truly seek to understand and to give diligent heed to, will enable us to know when that day is approaching, that we be not overtaken unawares and unprepared. This is evidently the purpose of the signs given—to prepare all who heed them for that day.

Sermons without number have been preached, many books written, and much speculation indulged in, regarding the signs of Christ's coming, and but very little so far developed that may be depended on. In these speculations the great truth is overlooked that "the way" must be prepared among the inhabitants of the earth for that event, and in the way already pointed out in Bible prophecy. In order that this may be accomplished and the prophecies be fulfilled, God must move,—must have moved—and we may say, has moved among us in this our day. We hope this great work of preparation for the second advent will be emphasized, for it is in this, and here, that the mistake so far has been made. The way for Christ's second coming must be prepared, as much so as was the way for his first coming. The mind, intelligence, and soul of the righteously inclined must be struck, awakened, and they regenerated to be prepared for that great event. And such a work done among us will of itself constitute one of the most important signs of Christ's second, personal coming in glory.

Since Christianity, pure and unmixed with human philosophies, the superstitions of the Dark Ages, and human traditions originating during the second, third, fourth, and fifth centuries, went down and disappeared from among men, the people have had to be content with just such religious doctrines and church systems as human wisdom unaided by divine wisdom and revelation chose to give to them. For none of the religious leaders or teachers made any claim that God spoke to them, or gave any direction for the work they chose to do in church building, as had been the case with John the Baptist, or with the ministry of the first century. It was decided by the clergy soon after the apostles' days that the revelation of John on Patmos closed the canon of scripture, and from that day to this all revelation from God has been condemned by the popular clergy as a deception; consequently none of them were called of God, as Aaron was, by revelation, to do a work for God. (See Hebrews 5:4; 5; Exodus 4:27, 28; 28:1.)

This is the teaching of all the great reformers, and also of the great catholic world. Therefore they have had no way of proving from God whether he has accepted their work,—their churches,—or whether he claimed those churches as his or took his seat in them as their head. All their work has been an uncertainty all those ages. This is a sad picture, a deplorable condition, but such are the undeniable facts of this matter. The following cited scriptures will fully testify: Isaiah 24:1-6; Daniel 7:24, 25; 2 Thessalonians 2:7-11. During those dark ages the saints were worn out by a great union of church and state (and truth cast to the ground) that existed. The kingdom of God was "taken by force," suffered "violence," as Jesus predicted. (Matthew 11:12.) False teachers were to arise and not spare the flock—the church, (see Acts 20:28-30; 2 Peter 2:1-3,) and many were to follow their pernicious ways, and Christ be denied. The doctrines of devils were to supplant the truth, and a "man of sin" was to arise in "the temple of God," the church, and there bear rule, exalting himself "above all that is called God." (2 Timothy 4:2-4; 1 Timothy 4:1-3.) And instead of the church becoming universal and maintaining its purity and integrity, a great Babylon, a confusion, a mother of religions usurped the place of the church, and ruled over all the earth, including its kings, for twelve hundred and sixty years as a state and church united. (See Revelation 12:1-6; 17:1-7.) The religious realm was a "wilderness," and a beast—human government—bore along the cause of confused religion;—not God. A great number of able reformers have arisen since the fifteenth century opened, and have protested against the dead religious condition of things, also tried to reform that body of religion called Babylon, but each effort at leading a body of people from under their former bondage but added one more division to the already existing ones, and added no additional light to the world on the situation, the religious world choosing to thus remain in confusion and darkness for so long a period. Would it not constitute a notable, a wonderful "sign," for the Lord to make bare his almighty arm, open the heavens again, reveal himself to man? To send his angels down to man again, and through them give commission and authority to proclaim and administer the same gospel as did the apostles and other ministry of olden days? Would it not, indeed, be a strange thing that mankind should have the great privilege of hearing and of obeying the same gospel as had those of Paul's day, and of enjoying the same blessings as described in the New Testament, and enjoy the light and revelation of the Holy Ghost as in those days?

THIS GREAT PRIVILEGE IS OURS.

The Bible prophecies on this part of our proposition are too numerous to be quoted here. We have space to cite only a few relating to the great work of God in the last days. To begin with, let us note the fact that the New Testament writers locate the last days subsequent to their day. In fact the phrase, "the last days," so definite in expression, can refer to no other than the closing days of our world or age. The writers do not use the phrase "these last days," (the days in which the writers lived.) Nor yet always the terms, "the latter days," when referring to events to occur at so late a date as we live in.

Now, in the light of these statements, let our readers study with care Isaiah, chapter 2, verses 1 and 2, as to God's intention to restore, erect, establish, his house or church in "the last days," preparatory to the coming of Christ to "judge among the people, and rebuke strong nations afar off," in order to the reign of peace so longed for by prophets of old.

Bear in mind that "the last days" of this world are not to be confounded with the opening or first days of the world to come. After carefully considering what Isaiah says God will do in "the last days," then turn to Paul's second letter to Timothy, third chapter and verses 1 to 5, and read how graphically the apostle prophetically describes the social and religious conditions of this our age, or, using his language, "In the last days." Paul's language above cited is most wonderful viewed in the light of conditions now existing in the world, and everywhere. Men are self-loving, selfish, and becoming more so, are "heady"—self-willed, will not condescend to men of low estate. The great man of business hides away and is generally unknown to his employes—"high minded," are unknown to their common patron, politically or otherwise, except when in need of his patronage—"without natural affection," "truce [bargain—C. S.] breakers." Hence, the unscrupulousness manifested everywhere in the "tricks" of business, the universal avalanche of divorce, the reckless abandonment of wives or husbands and children. All this has ceased to be disgraceful or unpopular. In fact, but little notice is taken of these disgraceful affairs of late. The destruction of homes, the blighting of society, are as unnoticed as if of no particular concern to the nations. Of the religious phase of society as indicated in Paul's prophecy, a general indifference to religion has come about. Almost any "form" will do, or no particular "form," just as any one may elect. And as to the spirit of religion any will be all right, except,—be sure it does not have associated with it the Holy Spirit as associated with ancient Christianity, for that was limited to the apostolic age! Men are not to be actuated now by a religion diffused as was that with the spirit of revelation and the knowledge of God. (See Micah 3:5-8; John 7:17, 18; 8:30-32.) Hence Paul's language: "Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof."

Such was to be the condition of the social and religious world when God should "set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people," and "set up a standard to the people," (Isaiah 11:11, 12; 49:22,) preparatory to the coming of Jesus Christ.

The apostle James, too, associates the events of "the last days" with "the coming of the Lord," when describing how men "shall heap treasures together for the last days," and moneied greatness will oppress the poor and seek to destroy and curtail men's competitive rights along business lines. When these conditions obtain, James prophetically admonishes God's children to "be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord, . . . Be ye also patient; establish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." (James 5:7, 8.) Never in the history of the world has there ever been such accumulations of moneied fortunes by individuals as are now existing in the world. But such a state of things is to characterize "the last days," according to St. James.

The apostle Peter tells us concerning the irreligious and sceptical condition of society in "the last days" that men will be so blinded to true religion that they will scoff at the belief in the near approach of Christ, being willfully ignorant of the flood, or of the truth of their having ever been one—"Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation."—2 Peter 3:3, 4. They pass over the flood and go back to "creation." Here, then, is the evidence that "the last days" are associated in the minds of the divinely inspired writers quoted and cited with the second coming of our Savior; and the conditions they described to exist in those "last days," being so palpably existing now, demonstrate that we are now in those "last days." We are thence led to conclude that now is the time for "the mountain of the Lord's house," his church, or kingdom, to "be established in the top of the mountains," or earthly governments, preparatory to our Lord's coming to rule, judge, and reign, as foretold by Isaiah. It will not do to argue as do some on this passage, that the "house" referred to by Isaiah is a literal house, a temple built in the valleys of the mountains, or on a mountain, for the prophet says "that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains," and to literalize the house would place them under the Herculean task of establishing or building a literal mountain to claim their application of the text. "The mountain of the Lord's house" to be established in the last days is the restoration of the church in the period indicated, after the pattern given in the New Testament.

But such a work as that is objected to by the religious world generally on the ground that it would imply new revelation from God as in ancient days, for it would imply a like organization as formerly existed, viz.: apostles, prophets, high priests, evangelists, bishops, pastors, teachers, and deacons, chosen as those were chosen, called by revelation as Paul and his fellows were called, and qualified by divine gifts of the Holy Ghost as they were qualified. Well, admit this, and we ask, How is the objector to prove that anything differing from this implication is the church of God? Aside from the New Testament description of the church, in organization and doctrine, how can we know God's church from any other? Are we to be in uncertainty about this matter? To thus move in uncertainty is to trust alone in human wisdom. If we are to go to the New Testament for doctrine and tenets of faith, why not go to the New Testament for the church pattern or organization? God can just as easily have a church like that described in the New Testament as any. If he intended to change about this matter he has never so informed us. If so, where? Why? (See James 1:17; Hebrews 13:8; Acts 10:34; Romans 11:29.)

God can just as easily have apostles and prophets in his ministry to-day as to have a church at all. Church of Christ not essential these days, did you say? His mission into the world was to build his church. (See Matthew 16:18.) After its establishment, God added to it “daily such as should be saved.” (Acts 2:47.) Christ died for it. (See Ephesians 6:23, 26.) Only those who belong to it are heirs of God by covenant relationship. (See Galatians 3:17-20; 4:21-31; Romans 8:16, 17.) The church of Christ is his mystic body. (See Ephesians 1:22, 23.) It is his kingdom. (See Acts 20:25, 26; 1 Corinthians 4:19, 20; Romans 14:17; 1 Corinthians 12:13-28.) The gospel of Christ is the gospel of the kingdom of Christ. (See Luke 4:18-20, with verse 43; Matthew 4:23; 9:35.) And he who preaches the gospel of Christ, preaches the church of Christ. (See 1 Corinthians 12:27-31; 14:23, 33; Ephesians 4:1-13; Colossians 1:14.) And Jesus predicted that this same “gospel of the kingdom” should be “preached as a witness to all nations” before the end of the world should come, and placed this great work as prominent among the “signs” of his coming in glory. And this is the one sign of all the signs of the second advent that is overlooked, by the learned world, and it is the strangest of all the strange latter-day work of God!

THE STRANGE WORK.

“For the Lord shall rise up as in mount Perazim, he shall be wroth as in the valley of Gibeon, that he may do his work, his strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act. Now therefore be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong; for I have heard from the Lord God of hosts a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth.”—Isaiah 28:21, 22. A “strange act”—a “strange work”—God is to do in the last days. A “determined” “consumption” awaits not Jerusalem alone, not Babylon, not Palestine, not Asia alone, not the Old World alone, but “the whole world!” All the nations of the earth, the whole earth, are involved. A consumption—a decreed consumption. Why is this work or act of God strange? To whom is it to be strange? The whole world! Why are the nations exorted not to be or forbidden to be “mockers”? Stop here and think. Is there a message about this work to be published to the nations? The language of the prophet would imply this. Otherwise the language, “be ye not mockers,” is without meaning. God has always sent the message of warning hitherto, before opening his vials of wrath on men. He did so in Noah’s day. Israel was visited with opportunity to have life before their dissolution as a government. This is the purposed message:

“And as he sat upon the mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?”—Matthew 24:3. A threefold interrogation. The Savior begins to reply by warning his disciples of imminent dangers and deceptions, and answers the last question first. The words are: “And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached as a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.”—Verse 14. End of what shall come? The end of the world, is the question under consideration. A strange work! Jesus was discoursing to the apostles. To those apostles who had been with him while preaching “this gospel of the kingdom,” he now, while answering the great question, “What shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world,” answers: “This gospel of the kingdom,” Peter, James, and John, the one you have heard me preach, “this gospel of the kingdom,” not some gospel or other, not a gospel, not a religion, not religions, not some religion, or religions, but “this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached as a witness to all nations, and then shall the end come.” Has not this gospel of the kingdom been preached down through all the ages since Christ was here? The end of the world, “the harvest” of the earth, the burning of the tares of the earth, or the “consumption decreed upon the whole earth,” has not yet occurred. If this gospel of the kingdom has been continuously from the days of Christ till now, it would be no more of a sign now of the coming of Christ than it was to those living seven hundred years ago! To say it is not the sign of Christ’s coming in great glory is to say he did not answer their question.

There is too much involved in this question of the signs of Christ’s coming to leave it to the conjectures or guesses of men not immediately directed by the Lord. No man or set of men ever did a work for God among their fellow men without first being authorized of him to do such work, and being informed as to the character and nature of such work. See all the Bible on this statement, from Abel to John the Revelator. Many have tried the experiment, but uncertainty, speculation, and division and confusion have resulted and continue to be the result. When divine inspiration was withdrawn from the ancient Christian church it wandered into the wilderness of apostasy. And many churches have come upon the stage of action and disappeared, while others are changing their man-made creeds and disciplines and confessions of faith. But, on the contrary, the gospel of the kingdom of God, like him, remains unchangably the same in all ages. But mankind in general do not desire to hear, preach, or obey it. If they did they would not continually oppose what Christ and Paul declared to be the gospel, and cease contending that it ought not to be proclaimed now because not intended for us.
In order that certainty might attend God's strange work, his strange act, he arranged that an angel from heaven should be commissioned to descend to men to commission them to proclaim to all nations the eternal gospel to prepare them for the coming of our God in glory, for thus it is written:

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters."—Revelation 14:6, 7. The wonderful event described by this passage is connected with other angelic messages that successively follow, and a series of events to transpire among men, and leading up to the "harvest of the earth," or "the end of the world." (Verses 15-19 and Matthew 13:30-39.)

The consumption decreed, the destruction of the wicked, the burning of the tares, is to be "in the end of this world." (Verse 40.) The angel was to come "in the last days," and the authority and commission to declare the everlasting gospel to every nation, tribe, and tongue was to be restored, and the great proclamation was to be made "as a witness to all nations," to prepare the obedient for the "signs" to follow this one, and for the great salvation to be revealed at Christ's coming, and the unbelieving for the impending doom, the "consumption decreed." (See Psalm 50:3-5; Isaiah 66:15, 16.)

"For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots, like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh, and the slain of the Lord shall be many." "Plead with all flesh?" What a sweeping, universal "consumption"! With such astounding consequences as these scriptures portray to be visited on all the nations of the earth, does it not consistently become the Father of humanity to give them fair and unmistakable warning and opportunity and in a manner to be understood, before such a fiery visitation of earth? We feel sure this commends itself to every unprejudiced, reasoning person. In every age of the world when God has done a work among men for their good, that work had to be revealed from heaven, and also its beginning, to and with some men, somewhere, and some time. Is not this true? Has a work of God opened up among men, at any time or place, been popular with the masses? When? Where? Have not God's called and sent servants invariably sealed their testimony with their blood, or been rejected of man?

THE COMMISSION DELIVERED.

In harmony with the foregoing prophetic Bible statements, an angel of God appeared to a young man by the name of Joseph Smith, about the years 1822 and 1823, and later, who at the time was residing near Palmyra, in the western part of New York State. His mind at the time was agitated over the question: "What must I do to be saved?" The diversity of religious opinions put forth on this question in his community by the differing religious teachers confused and greatly troubled his mind, young as he was—some sixteen or seventeen years of age. A revival of religion was being conducted—a union revival of differing religious beliefs. He attended. Some of his father's family were dividing and uniting themselves to some of the different religious bodies represented in that revival. These palpable differences of religious beliefs, while each representative or minister claimed to rely on the same Bible for his distinctive faith, made it impossible for him to determine which church represented he should unite with and be sure he would be right and be eternally saved. The question was a most momentous one to him. The eternal destiny of his soul—its welfare—was at stake on the decision to be made! What was he to do? He was reading the Bible in his endeavor to settle the question. But each teacher interpreted the Bible differently from the others in defending his particular church and faith, and to go to them did not solve the case. Reading the Scriptures seeking for the truth, he read, in the epistle of James, the language: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."—James 1:5. Here was direction from the Savior of souls. Wisdom could be had from God for the asking. And the promise of receiving "liberally," and not be upbraideth for it. Surely this must have been good news to his anxious and long-ing heart!

May he go to some lone retreat and where no one may intrude seek the heavenly Father for light and instruction? What subject could appeal to him more readily than that relating to the human soul's salvation? From the days of Abel, all down through ages of the Bible, men had sought unto God for light and truth, and why not he? God had not disappointed them. (See Hebrews, chapter 11.) Why disappoint Joseph? The great Father was pleased with them. (See Daniel 2:28.) "Without faith it is impossible to please God." God is unchangeable. "There is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and maketh known to the king what shall be in the latter day," and if God would reveal to a heathen king that relating to earth and heaven, even unto future ages from his day, why would not the same unchangeable God speak to Joseph now concerning that relating to his eternal interests and even that of others? How different that would be from the popular faith and practice of Joseph's days! Under similar impressions to these, and with a burning desire to know what to do about his soul's salvation, he repaired to Nature's temple, God's place of worship, a grove, and betook himself to earnest, humble prayer to him who sent his Son to die for Joseph and all mankind. Was this right? If not, why not? "If any man will open unto me, I will come in and sup with him, and he with me." Christ appeared to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to Moses and all Israel. (See Exodus 23:20, 21; Isaiah 63:8, 9; 1 Corinthians 10:3, 4.)

Christ had appeared to Paul while yet a wicked man, (see Acts 22:14,) a persecutor of God's church; Joseph was neither: should he not appear to Joseph and show him the right way? No more could be said against him for seeking God for understanding than had been said against many others who had sought God. More could not be done to him for seeking God than had been done to others for like desires and deeds. While at prayer Satan endeavored to hinder and stifle his effort at prayer and his faith, but the time had come for God's great "last days" purposes preparatory to the gathering of Israel home to the land of their fathers (see Isaiah 11:11, 12; Malachi 4:4-6), and for the angel to restore the gospel authority, and for the coming of Jesus, to be ushered in. Hence the words of the personage who appeared to him on that occasion, and as the veil of darkness gave way, was dispelled, and the heavenly light shone about him, brighter than the noonday sun: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him." He was also informed that he was not to unite with any of those sects, for their creeds were an abomination before God.

He was informed that it was his duty to trust in God and await further directions to be given him in the due time of the Lord. He was now satisfied on human events, he naturally drifted with the tide usually prevalent, and was caught up into an uproar of opposition to the young society into which he had been cast, and persecution raged against him. But he said: I have seen the vision and heard the divine voice; they may even take my life, but, like Paul, I know I have seen the light, the personages, and have been commanded of God!

The effect of relating the vision roused the community into an uproar of opposition to the young man, and almost ostracised him from their society. Being young, and beset with weaknesses common to humanity, he naturally drifted with the tide usually attendant with young society. Not a great many months subsequently he was thinking seriously of his condition, and of the coldness of religious society toward him, and one evening when seriously longing for relief from his trying condition, and for pardon of his errors so common to youth, he turned his soul again to Him who heard his prayers before and came to his relief. After a season of earnest prayers to the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob for light as to his standing and for favor, and pouring out his soul to the infinitely merciful, loving Father of poor fallen man, who had said "they that seek me early shall find me," "ask, and ye shall receive," and who is more willing to give blessings to his creatures than are earthly fathers and mothers, he had not breathed the earnest longings of his heart to God on that wonderful (to him and to us) evening, until he observed a beautiful, a heavenly light coming into his room. As the light continued to increase in brilliancy and heavenly glory, a personage clothed in a white robe appeared in the pillar of light—a man rather above medium size, whose countenance was glorious. The whiteness of the robe defies description with mortal tongue. As he addressed the youth, all fear left his heart, and love to God and confidence glowed in his youthful heart. This personage informed him that his prayers had been heard, that he had found favor with God.

He also told Joseph that the time had about arrived for the introduction of the great work which should prepare the way for the restoration of Israel to the land of their fathers, and for the advent of the Messiah, to be ushered in. To enable him to gain a conception of the great magnitude of this great work, the angel (for such he is) cited him to some of the prophecies of the Bible bearing on this momentous work now to be commenced. He was cited to the closing verses of Acts, chapter 3—those referring to "the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began." He was informed that the prophet referred to there was Christ. He was likewise cited to the mission of Elias, or Elijah, spoken of in Malachi, chapter 4: "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." Other prophetic scriptures were cited by this divine personage, and other features of the great latter-day work revealed in the vision. The light and the vision withdrew, leaving the young prophet to ponder for a time, but they were repeated twice with additional instructions, impressing him with the mission then given him. He was informed that if faithful and humble, observing God's commands as he came to understand them, the time was not far distant when he should be chosen and enabled to lay the foundation of the work.

Joseph concludes the relation of his vision thus: "I lay musing on the singularity of the scene, and marveling greatly at what had been told me by this extraordinary messenger when, in the midst of my meditation, I suddenly discovered that my room was again beginning to be lighted, and, in an instant, as it were, the same heavenly messenger was at my bedside. He commenced, and again related the very same things which he had done at his first visit, without the least variation, which having done, he informed me of great judgments which were coming upon the earth, with great desolations by famine, sword, and pestilence; and that grievous judgments would come on the earth in this generation. Having related these things, he ascended as he had done before.—Times and Seasons, vol. 3, p. 729.

At the date of this vision the world was asleep, profoundly so, as to the near approach of Christ in glory to usher in the millennium. No one seemed to be looking for the judgments then predicted to come on the nations, the inhabitants of the earth. It was then believed by the religious world that through the medium of the preaching of the popular, though disunited ministry, and missionary efforts, translating the Bible into the different languages of the nations, and its circulation among them; the world would be converted, and the millennium would be introduced, and peace, love, union, and security would become universal, and the glory of God brood over the nations as a benediction for ever! Alas for the nations of uninspired man in relation to the things of God's kingdom! Little did the world dream, in A. D. 1822 and onward till now, that their creeds would crumble to nothing; that churches, many of them, would vanish as a dream; that those churches which should survive for a season would seek, as a means of their continuation at all, a great confederation for mutual support. Not once did it occur to them that the hour of great Babylon's downfall was so near at hand. None would have believed, then, that religious indifference would have been so absolute and universal as it is now. None would have asked, What judgment or disaster shall we look for next, as is so expectantly done now. None had the most distant thought that evil and crime of every character would wreck society everywhere as they are doing now. No, the popular watchword then was, Peace! The world is growing better! The great millennial, in the way we are going, is at hand! But God foreknew. The great world must be awakened from its false dreams. The prophets had said a Zion must be built up before the Lord would come in glory. (See Psalm 102:16-22; Isaiah 40:9-11; 52:7-11.) The means used of God to build up, or, as Isaiah says, to "bring again Zion,"—notice, "bring again Zion,"—is the gospel, including the authority to administer it as in the days of Zion of Paul's day.

It was on this great topic, the restoration of the gospel, that the great awakening of the world was needed, hence the mission of the angel to Joseph Smith the Seer. And it is in this the prophecies of Jesus and of John the Revelator (see Matthew 24:3, 14; Revelations 14:6, 7) apply. This is the beginning of God's establishment of the church in accordance with the prophecies cited, for after the angel was to come with the "everlasting gospel," associated with proclamation of the hour of God's judgment on the nations, Jesus predicted it should "be preached as a witness unto all nations." Theories of treating the subject of the signs of the times, as indicating the near approach of Christ's coming and the end of the world, have been advanced. And they have appeared so plausible that they have set the time of Christ's coming in glory. But these theorists omitted the great restitution of the gospel, the restoration of the church, and the restoration of the Jews to Palestine, and their theories have failed, the Savior did not come, and the "scoffers" referred to by Peter have taken advantage of the situation, and are saying: "Where is the promise of his coming; the time set for his coming has gone by and he did not come!" But for seventy-five years the elders of the church of Jesus Christ, and of that church reorganized in 1832, have been sounding the proclamation to the world. The gospel as preached by the apostles of old has been restored by the angel, and the church is being rebuilt, and a people is being prepared for the coming of the Lord, as one of the unsuccessfully questioned and definite and certain signs that the coming of the Christ is near at hand.

God intended man to understand him, in this great subject, man's final destiny. The gospel of Christ will make the subject plain, as nothing else can. Matthew 13:15: "And should understand with their hearts and should be converted." (See also verse 19.) "Learn of me."—Matthew 11:29. The gospel, its eternal principles. (See Hebrews 5:12.) Faith in God and Christ and the Holy Ghost. Repentance, baptism in water for remission of sins. (See Mark 1:1-4; Matthew 3:11, 12; John 3:5; Acts 2:38, 39; 16:32, 33; 22:16.) Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. (See Matthew 28:18-20; Acts 8:17; 19:1-6; 1 Timothy 4:14-16.) Baptism of the Holy Ghost. (See John 3:1-5; Acts 2:38, 39; 19:5, 6; 1 Corinthians 12:13; Hebrews 6:1, 2.) Resurrection of the dead. (See John 5:28, 29; 1 Corinthians 15:1-6; verses 19-21.) Eternal judgment. (See John 12:48; Acts 17:30, 31; Hebrews 6:2; Revelation 20:11-15.) The eternal inheritance of saints on the earth. (See Psalm 37:9, 11, 22; Matthew 5:5; Daniel 7:18; verses 27, 28; 2 Peter 1:10, 11; 3:13; Revelation 5:8-10.) The Christian graces. (See 1 Peter 1:5-9.) The fruits of the Holy Spirit in our daily life. (See Galatians 5:22-24.) Crucifixion of the works of the flesh. (See Galatians 5:19-21.) Exercise of the same spiritual gifts. (See 1 Corinthians 12:1-13; 14:26.) The gospel of the organization of the church according to the New Testament pattern as no other pattern is given of God, (see 1 Corinthians 12:28-31; Ephsians 4:1–13,) to grow up a holy temple in God. A church whose officials are apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, high priests, bishops, elders, teachers, and deacons. (See Isaiah 61:1–6; Revelation 5:8–10.) With tithing, and consecrations of our temporal means to carry on the Lord’s work among men. (See Matthew 23:23; Luke 16:9; 2 Corinthians 9:7–12; Hebrews 7:6–8.) The giving of alms to the needy.

2 Corinthians 9:10–13) to grow up a holy temple in God. A ers, “This gospel of the kingdom must be preached unto all nations, as a witness.” And that we may be certain,—and not be led astray by deceivers that are rising in these last days on every hand,—an angel has been sent, God’s voice has been heard, the Holy Ghost has been, and is, bearing record to the hearts of the humble and obedient who hear and receive the message.

As to the “tribulation” that befell the Jewish nation as foretold by the Savior, with the treading under foot of their land by Gentile nations, the captivity of the Jews among the nations (see Matthew 24:3, and verses 15–27; Luke 21:20–24; Mark 13:14–23) but little need be said in this connection. The tribulation there spoken of relates more particularly to the Jews, and began with the destruction of their city and house—nationality—government, (A. D. 65–72,) progressed with the remnant being carried into captivity among all the nations of the earth, and is to continue till the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. One of the most wonderful “signs” to the present generation is, the preservation of the Hebrew people a separate people, unmixed with the nations to whom they have been in captivity for more than eighteen hundred and thirty years! The wonder does not decrease as we contemplate that it is more than four thousand years since their beginning as a people, with Abraham, and many of them have no Gentile blood in their veins. This can be said of no other race of man. Yet they have been in captivity to all the principal nations existing in those days, except the United States.

Much of this time they have been without a country they could call home. Why have they been thus preserved in anguish of spirit, in captivity and tribulation so long? Just to be burned, destroyed, at Christ’s coming? No. They are to have their eyes opened to the truth of the gospel of the kingdom at the fullness of the Gentile times and at the termination of their captivity, (see Romans 11:25–27,) when Zion is again built up. (See Isaiah 2:4, 5; 52:8, 9.) The truth of the matter is, the conversion of the Jews to the gospel, and the restoration of the gospel with the restoration of the church as the result of the proclamation of that gospel, is associated with this great work by the Bible writers. (See on this point, once more, Isaiah 2:1–5; 40:9, 10; 52:7, 8; Jeremiah 31:31–35; Zechariah 12:10–14; also Joel 2:28–32; Malachi 3:1–6.) And in that day when a messenger is sent to prepare the way of the Lord’s second coming when he comes as “a refiner’s fire.” (2 Thessalonians 1:7–10; Revelation 1:7.) God says of himself and Israel, “For I am the Lord, I change not, therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.”

THE ORDER OF THE GREAT WORK OF GOD

of the last days, then, is, first, the restoration of the gospel by angelic ministration, as we have seen hereby; the restoration of the church, of gospel pattern; the proclamation of this gospel of the kingdom as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles and then to the Jews; the preparation of the land of Palestine, by restoring its former and latter rains (see Joel 2:23; Isaiah 29:17) and its fertility, for the restoration of the children of Abraham thereto.

The Gentiles now, like the Jews did in Jesus’ day, will bring in their fullness by rejecting the gospel, and this will justify the judgments portrayed in the language of Jesus,—to be fulfilled at the conclusion of the Gentile times,—“And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men’s hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken.” —Luke 21:25, 26.

It is now declared to be a recent scientific discovery that our solar system, including sun, moon, earth with the planets, are moving toward the constellation Lyra at the rate of three hundred millions of miles annually. And it is further asserted by the same authorities that it is unknown where this stupendously wild race began or where it will end. These signs mentioned here by our Savior are not to transpire in a literal day, or all at once, but by gradual progression. We have the initial of some of them now. The times of the Gentiles are slowly and gradually drawing to a close, but are surely ending. Heavens and earth are beginning to bear witness to the verity of the great work of God now being accomplished, for the salvation of the honest and obedient among all nations.

Nations are beginning to be distressed “with perplexity.” No question of this, and the hearts of some of the great men of earth are failing them now, in beholding that which is overtaking them, by the exposure of their wicked works, and they die,—some by seeing their earthly possessions fly away, and others by their criminal exposure.

Of the unparalleled increase of crime, at the present time, we need not take space to enlarge, as there is now no question of its being a fact. Isaiah says, writing of the last days, “The transgression of the earth shall be heavy upon it, but it shall fall and not rise again.”—Isaiah 24:17–20. Nor is there any hope of relief from it till Jesus comes in glory and fire to cleanse the earth thereby.
OF THE CONTINUED PROGRESS

of the great latter-day work of God, and in connection with what has been said herein, before, and to conclude, we cite the following prophetic statements.

After the restoration of the everlasting gospel by angelic ministration and the consequent organization and development of the church or kingdom of God, Israel is to be remembered of the Lord. As the gospel is being proclaimed among the Gentiles, Zion is also being builded up; as "the FULLNESS of the Gentiles" is brought in, God is remembering his covenant with Abraham's children, and also their land. We read:

Fear not, O land [of Palestine.—C. S.]; be glad and rejoice: for the Lord will do great things. Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field: for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, for the Lord your God: for he hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month.—Joel 2:21-23.

The rains were withheld from that land after its children were scattered in the year 72 A. D. (See Isaiah 5:5-7.) But soon after A. D. 1830, where the rebuilding of Zion had begun, the former and latter rains began to come down moderately on the land. This was in 1846 to 1853, and they have gradually increased since that time. No class of people have ever been more interested in their land than have the scattered Hebrews, and none are better prepared to speak authoritatively regarding it than they. From an article published in the Jewish Chronicle, (London, England,) of 1854, we select as follows:

Why should not the springs and brooks flow from the hills of Judea as freely as from the hills of Ephraim and Samaria? In form and composition they are the same; and, what is in their favor in this respect, they are larger and more in number. But they do not. Water is their greatest want. Much more artificial irrigation is needed here than further north. It is this dryness and heat of the soil that makes this part of the country so much more adapted to vines and figs than farther north. These thrive best in a hot and dry soil.

After commenting on the character of other lands of a similar latitude, their two annual seasons, wet and dry, and the occasional exceptions to this rule, and noting that the rainy season extends usually from October to April, also on the barrenness of Israel's land as late as 1854, it continues:

The Israelites were often threatened by Moses and the prophets, that in case of disobedience, "the rain should be withheld." If they were withheld, they must, of course be shortened in duration. Now the rains that fell in the latter part of the rainy season, and especially those that fell after the usual period for them to cease, were called "the latter rains." These occasional showers, if continued through the time of the ripening of the fruit and grain, would add greatly to their abundance and perfection. The withholding of them would have the contrary effect. The withholding of the latter rains, and the promise of their return, are things often spoken of in scripture. These latter rains have been withheld century after century, till the land has been brought to the state that we now [1854—C. S.] find it; and there can be but little doubt that the return of these rains again will be the means that God will employ to restore the land to its ancient fruitfulness.

If we had no scripture to bear us out in this opinion, we should be well assured of it, from the well-known scientific fact that all soils require a certain amount of rain to carry on the decomposition of mineral matter in sufficient quantities for the annual supply of the crops. This is especially necessary in such a geological formation as the land of Palestine. So we see there is no physical obstacle in the way, for God has the means close at hand, whenever the time for him to do it comes. For this event we can all adopt one of the expressions in a Jewish prayer—"The Lord hasten it even in our day." And one fact there is, that I will mention, that looks somewhat as though this prayer might be answered "even in our day." For since the efforts that are now making for the improvement and settlement of the Jews in Palestine commenced, the rains have fallen more than they have for many an age before. No question is more often asked respecting this land than, What can be done to reclaim it from its barrenness? I know not that a better answer can be given than this—cultivate it, and trust the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob for the "former and latter rains."

The prayer referred to and the above question so long and often asked have been answered, for both rains and crops have reappeared in Palestine. And the question now is,—When, and how, under existing circumstances, will the sons of that blessed land be restored? and we know of no better answer than, The righteous shall have the desire of their heart, wait on the Lord, and he will bring it to pass; for, hath he not declared, by the mouths of the prophets, thus:

"Therefore fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, saith the Lord; neither be dismayed, O Israel; for, lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid. For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save thee: though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee: but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished."—Jeremiah 30:10, 11.

Revelation from God is to attend this last days' gathering of Israel, for so the prophet testifies:

"As I live, saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you: and I will bring you out from the people, and gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out. And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face. Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord God. And I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant: and I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me: I will bring them forth out of the country where they sojourn, and they shall not enter into the land of Israel: and ye shall know that I am the Lord."—Ezekiel 20:33-38.

"Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them: and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore."—Ezekiel 37:26.

"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord: but this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know ye the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more."—Jeremiah 31:31-34.

The gospel covenant is God's "everlasting covenant." (Isaiah 24:5; Hebrews 13:20.) This covenant was offered to the house of Judah by Christ, but they, as a house, rejected it. (See Hebrews 8:8; Matthew 23:37, 38.) Moreover, this is the only covenant by which sins can be forgiven, or "taken away." (Hebrews 11:11, 12.) But "the house of Israel" was not in Palestine when Jesus ministered among men, therefore he did not "make" this gospel "covenant" with the houses of Judah and Israel, at that time. But God's word is pledged, "as" he "lives," to make this covenant with them in the last days, and the time is near at hand. Under this covenant the two houses of Israel and Judah are to be joined into one kingdom again. (See Ezekiel 37:21-25.) "And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, (Psalm 105:9-15), wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they and their children, and their children's children for ever; and my servant David shall be their prince for ever."

That this wonderful, terrible yet glorious day, when these wonderful events are to be accomplished, is near at hand, and some of them are now being consummated, note the following from a revelation given to Joseph the Seer, March, 1831:

I will show unto you how the day of redemption shall come, and also the restoration of the scattered Israel. And now ye behold this temple which is in Jerusalem, which ye call the house of God, and your enemies say that this house shall never fall. But verily I say unto you that desolation shall come upon this generation as a thief in the night, and this people shall be destroyed and scattered among all nations. And this temple which ye now see shall be thrown down, and there shall not be left one stone upon another. And it shall come to pass that this generation of Jews [the one Jesus ministered to.—C. S.] shall not pass away until every desolation which I have told you concerning them shall come to pass. Ye say that ye know that the end of the world cometh; ye say, also, that ye know that the heavens and the earth shall pass away; and in this ye say truly, for so it is; but these things which I have told you shall not pass away until all shall be fulfilled. And this I have told you concerning Jerusalem; and when that day shall come, shall a remnant be scattered among all nations, but they shall be gathered again; and they shall remain until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

"And in that shall be heard of wars and rumors of wars; and the whole earth shall be in commotion, and men's hearts shall fail them, and they shall say that Christ delayeth his coming until the end of the earth. And the love of men shall wax cold, and iniquity shall abound; and when the time [not times.—C. S.] of the Gentiles is come in, a light shall break forth among them that sit in darkness, and it shall be the fullness of my gospel; but they receive it not, for they perceive not the light, and they turn their hearts from me because of the precepts of men; and in that generation shall the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled; and there shall be men standing in that generation that shall not pass, until they shall see an overflowing scourge, for a desolating sickness shall come over the land; but my disciples shall stand in holy places, and shall not be moved; but among the wicked, men shall lift up their voices and curse God, and die. And there shall be earthquakes, also, in divers places, and many desolations; yet men will harden their hearts against me, and they will take up the sword one against another, and they will kill one another.

"And now, when I the Lord had spoken these words unto my disciples, they were troubled; and I said unto them, Be not troubled, for when all these things come to pass, ye may know that the promises which have been made unto you shall be fulfilled; and when the light shall begin to break forth, it shall be with them like unto a parable which I will show you: Ye look and behold the fig-trees, and ye see them with your eyes, and ye say, when they begin to shoot forth and their leaves are yet tender, that summer is now nigh at hand; even so it shall be in that day, when they shall see all these things, then shall they know that the hour is nigh. And it shall come to pass that he that feareth me shall be looking forth for the great day of the Lord to come, even for the signs of the coming of the Son of Man; and they shall see signs and wonders, for they shall be shown forth in the heavens above, and in the earth beneath; and they shall behold blood and fire, and vapors of smoke; and before the day of the Lord shall come, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon be turned into blood, and the stars fall from heaven; and the remnant shall be gathered unto this place; and then they shall look for me, and behold I will come; and they shall see me in the clouds of heaven, clothed with power and great glory, with all the holy angels; and he that watches not for me shall be cut off."—Doctrine and Covenants 48:2-8.

Thus was revealed to Joseph the words the Savior unfolded to the apostles when he was with them at Jerusalem.

All the desolations predicted by Him to come on the Jews of that generation were fulfilled during the years one to seventy-five A. D., including the opening of the years,—period,—of their captivity among the Gentile nations. The period of their captivity is closing: The light to break forth among those that sat in darkness began to shine forth, by the restoration of the gospel through the ministration of the angel to Joseph Smith, the Seer, A. D. 1829-1830, and is rejected by the masses, as predicted, "because of the precepts of men." And in this generation is the times of the Gentiles to be fulfilled. The way is being prepared for the remnant of the Jews to be gathered back to their fatherland, to prepare for their salvation in Christ. (See Isaiah 10:20-23; Luke 21:24; Romans 11:25-27; verses 32, 33.)

No shade of religious belief arising in the world in modern times, looking for the Lord to come soon, have included the restoration of the gospel by angelic hands, and the gathering of Israel to the land of their fathers, except the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, as organized in A. D. 1830 and reorganized in 1852 to 1860; I believe the reader who is anxious to understand the things that relate to their eternal welfare, and who desires to comprehend the signs of our times, the signs of our Savior's coming in glory to reward the faithful of all ages, and his glorious reign, and how to become prepared for all these things, will bear with us for dwelling so lengthily on the subjects of the restoration of the gospel, the church, the restoration of the fertility of the land of Palestine, and the period so near at hand for Israel to be restored to their land, and be brought

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"The Man Who Put His Arm Around Me."

"And what is the name of this little man?" Brown had asked, holding out his hand invitingly to the diffident boy, but looking at the boy's mother.

"His name is Govan," she replied.

"And does he go to school?" pursued Brown.

By this time Govan was standing by Brown's side, a tow-headed slip of a boy of six, absolutely different in every item from his brawny, five-feet-ten Scotch mother—like a pale flower plucked from a Turk's-head cactus.

"Yes; he goes to school, but his teacher is telling me he is a bad boy," said Mrs. MacNabb.

Brown's arm had been around the boy for some time, now he drew him closer and looking down into his eyes said: "Govan. That is a new name to me. How do you spell it?"

We had called to see Govan's brother Jim, but Jim was out. Since the death of his father two years ago, Jim, "a fine lad o' thirty" and a man after his mother's heart, had assumed the support of the entire family. The conversation ran naturally towards Jim, and Govan was not mentioned again until just as we were going.

"Hello," exclaimed Brown, fingering a long leather strap which his hand had come upon accidentally on the edge of the door casing, "Jim hangs his razor strap a long ways from the mirror, doesn't he?"

Mrs. MacNabb smiled sourly. "When the teacher was telling me Govan was a bad boy," she said, "I was telling her to remember the words of the book and not spare the strap—which his hand had come upon accidentally on the edge of the mirror, doesn't he?

Poor little fatherless chap," said Brown, as we turned into the road. "Think of that timid, frail child and that six-foot woman with 'the belt!' Govan is bashful in school; he isn't bad.

Brown, with his passionate love for all children, had never seen a bad one—they were ill or neglected or spoiled by indulgence, if they made trouble; their parents were the culprits who needed "the belt."

A week later I met Govan on the street.

"Where's your friend?" I inquired, softly.

"What friend, Govan?"

"The man who put his arm around me."

"The man who put his arm around me." That ought to be the boy's first thought about his father.

When I was as small as I can remember, my mother used to call me heavy—I could toddle about her all day, but along towards noon I wanted to ride a little. Mother couldn't carry me as she used to, but there was a big black-bearded fellow in a suit of blue overalls who used to stride in about that time, and whisk me up off the floor and pitch me into the air and catch me as I came down, and take me in his arms and carry me on his bosom for a few moments before dinner. I shall never forget him!

Wasn't he strong! I had no more fear of falling from his arms than I had of falling out of my trundle-bed. And how high up I was in his arms! I had to look down into mother's face! It was a novelty to see the tops of the tables, and the inside of the sink, and things cooking in a spider on the red-hot stove, and grass and flowers outside the window instead of sky and trees. I wanted to ride on and on, but I knew that when mother said, "Dinner is ready," I should be put into my high chair and the ride would be over.

But there were compensations. I was sure of another ride the next day, and I was sure my chair would be next his at table. Now that I had grown to be a "little man," big enough to sit at table, of course he fed me as he did everybody else. He used to put choice bits from his own plate into my little "X Y Z plate." Sometimes my mother wondered if he'd better, but he always laughed and said, "Oh, it won't hurt him, he has teeth of his own now." He used to put his arm around me when he helped me to drink from my tin cup, and he patted me on the back when I choked.

You don't do that for your baby, you wise and important man? Then I am glad I am not your little boy. And I want to tell you something else—for I am no longer anybody's little boy but God's—if you don't do such things for your children you are losing half the fun of living, and are laying up for yourself a lonely old age. Let your children alone, turn them over to hired help, spend your time getting rich and running the lodge and the club and then, by and by, you can have the pleasure of wondering why it is that your boys do not spend their evenings at home, enjoy your company, or care a rap about your welfare. You must be numb already if you don't enjoy the ringing laugh of a child, the feel of his plump, lively little body—as hard as a rubber-boot heel—his wise remarks about you and the world in general, and his unanswerable questions about God.

"That man who put his arms around me!"—in the twilight, and by the open fire of an evening—told me stories beginning, "When I was a little-boy." There were no better stories than those. And you don't tell them to your little boy? Then I am glad again that I am not your little boy. You can't tell them? Try it. Get the boy away with you alone somewhere, and begin. You will surprise yourself with your success. You will become a hero in his eyes. Tell the experiences that will help him as he follows the same boyhood path you stumbled along in your day. Let him know that you, you were once a heedless boy, a boy who forgot, a boy who spilled things, and tore things, and lost things, a boy who got into trouble, a boy who had a good time. How it will surprise him! How much better he will like you!

That man used to put his arm around me where I sat proudly by his side on the front seat going to church on Sunday. How vivid yet the memory of those sunny hours! Always green fields and woods along those three miles of country road, always that marvelously funny blue-shadowed horse working silently along flat in the dust beside old Fan. With one arm the man drove. Sometimes he let me work the whip. I could help old Fan drive flies, he said. Sometimes he let me hold the reins. And so I learned how to steer a horse before I learned to steer a straight course through the Ten Commandments and the Beatitudes and the names of the minor prophets.

That man used to put his arm around me and ask helpful questions when I was trying to figure out my first problems in arithmetic. I never could do much with "examples," but somehow when his arm was around me and he took my pencil and paper and told him what to work out one of his funny problems about eating rhinoceroses, or distributing bushels of cannon crackers, my own stupid book problems seemed easier.

He put his arm around me when I was learning to swim. I didn't have to run away and learn on the sly, nor did the big boys catch me and throw me in to "sink or swim, live or die, survive or perish." My father told me one summer that it was time for his boy to know how to swim. He took me to the "sandbar" where the big boys went, and I saw him dive in head

first, and swim any side up, in the water or under it. I saw him float and stand on his head under water with his feet out. He could make the fat-man’s dive and the turtle-dive, and go leaping frog into the river over the shoulders of Uncle Tom. What rare sport it was! Did I want to know how to swim? You bet!

When we went in together he said, “Now if you will do just what I tell you to do, you will learn to swim and dive this week.” The first day I learned to “duck,” the next to float on my back; the next two days he held me by his side in four feet of water and taught me the swimming movements. Then he let me go and I swam.

He put his arm around me when I passed the dangerous straits between boyhood and manhood. That passage is not to be talked about freely in a newspaper, but it ought to be talked about more freely than it ever has been talked about, in some printed thing for every father to read. I was fourteen. I remember the sunlight in his workshop, the bench with the watch tools arranged upon it, the little Bible opened to a certain chapter. I recall the thrill of the quiet words: “Henry, come here a moment, I have something to tell you.” And then the revelation. I had been a boy, I would soon be a man. I had been a joy to my father; some day I might know how great a joy; but first there were duties, self-denials, a discipline for vigorous manhood.

I was not only to keep myself pure and strong, but I was to be my brother’s keeper. There were three of them, all in turn sure to pass the way I was then going. I could help by example and precept to guide their feet into the way of life. There was a way to death, and it was frequented by those whose steps take hold on hell. There were commands of God and they were pointed out to me. And behold he had set before me that way and precept to guide their feet into the way of life. There was not only to keep myself pure and strong, but I was to be my brother’s keeper. There were three of them, all in turn sure to pass the way I was then going. I could help by example and precept to guide their feet into the way of life. There was a way to death, and it was frequented by those whose steps take hold on hell. QUESTION OF BRANCH JURISDICTION.—NOTICE OF REFERENCE.

At the last session of conference there was left to the Presi-idency, the Twelve, and the Seventy, by reference, the question as to the jurisdiction of branches over their respective membership. It is desirable that the quorums shall take the matter under advisement as early as practicable; and we suggest that the presidents of the quorums shall submit the question to the individual members at once, or as soon as practicable, in something of the following form:

If the branches to which members of the church may belong hold such jurisdiction over their respective members as will preclude their answering for personal conduct to other branches in which they may be temporarily or otherwise located without having and without being advised of their having entered into these branches where they may be temporarily residing?

It will be remembered that this question arose upon a protest of one of the branches against action of another branch whereby a member of the protesting branch was temporarily located.

The above question will give as wide a latitude for consider-ation as should be needful for determining the opinion of each quorum to which it may be submitted. However, this suggestion is not intended to prevent each quorum from formulating or submitting by any other form of question or resolution as may be desirable.

We regret the lateness of the hour at which notice is called to this provision, but serious indisposition has intervened.

[Signed,] JOSEPH SMITH, for Presidency.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 3, 1906.

NOTICE TO HIGH COUNCIL.

The High Council will be called together for the consideration of important matters probably as early as the 1st of April. It is desirable that as many as can attend the session of conference do so. There probably will be three more or less important cases to be submitted to the consideration of the High Council. Further notice will be given in the HERALD as to the exact date.

Authority was given the Presidency at last session to call the council before conference if it was thought necessary so to do. Conference session being at Independence, the council will also convene there.

RAILROAD RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

New England Passenger Association.—This Association has concurred in the rate of fare and one third, round trip, certificate plan, to the Annual Conference and Auxiliary Conventions Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, Independence, Missouri, April 1, 1906. The same general rules apply as governing other Associations who have concurred in rate on certificate plan. Going tickets may be bought from April 2 to 7, not earlier nor later; pay full fare and secure certificate with every ticket purchased, showing payment of full fare to destination. If impossible to buy through ticket, buy to Chicago or Kansas City and repurchase to destination, securing certificate with every ticket and corresponding thereto. This will entitle holders of such certificates to return full fare to destination.

Going tickets are limited or unlimited according to rules of roads issuing, but return tickets are in all cases limited to continuous passage. Return tickets may be purchased as late as April 24.

Joint agent will be present on Wednesday and Thursday, April 11 and 12, and parties holding certificates will be charged fee of twenty-five cents for execution of same. They must get certificates from him in person on those dates. Hand in certificates to the undersigned promptly on arrival.

"If the ticket agent at a station from which delegates or others are expected to come is not supplied with certificates and through tickets to the place of meeting, he will inform the delegate of the nearest important station where certificates and tickets can be obtained, in which case local ticket should be purchased to the point and there obtain certificate and through ticket. If he understands it is understood by us, that persons should arrange to arrive at the station where such are procured in ample time to allow agent to execute the same. List of lines making connections: Bangor & Aroostook R. R.; Boston & Albany R. R.; Boston & Maine R. R.; Canadian Pacific R. Y.; Eastern Lines; Central Vermont R. Y.; Grand Trunk R. System; Maine Central R. R.; New York, New Haven & Hartford R. R.; Portland & Rumford Falls R. Y.; Rutland R. R. (Take care that the Eastern Steamship Co. has not concurred in the rate.)

Southeastern Association—east of Mississippi and south of Ohio and Mississippi Rivers.—See certificate forms in HERALD of March 28. Persons in this section should remember that if they cannot get a satisfactory rate from their local roads, they can only get the certificate plan rate by buying a local ticket up to some point in either Southwestern, Central, or Trunk Line territory, and there buy tickets and secure certificates corresponding thereto showing payment of full fare to destination. A Southeastern certificate form will not secure the reduction. Therefore buy from any point in Arkansas, which is Southwestern territory; from Cairo, Paducah, Evansville, Louisville, etc., along the Ohio River in Central territory; or from Huntington, Charleston, White Sulphur Springs, Alexandria, etc., in Trunk Line territory. Purchase tickets at point of departure to Independence, Missouri, buy to Kansas City, and there repurchase to destination. Get a corresponding certificate with every ticket purchased if compelled to buy at various points in transit. Do not accept Southeastern Association certificate forms.

Fourth Quorum of Priests.

Dear Brethren of the Fourth Quorum of Priests: The time of the General Conference will soon be upon us. This is generally the time when the quorums of the church assemble to consider questions relative to their respective duties, etc. Consistency requires the members of each quorum to be prompt regarding essential duties. Among the essentials are:

1. Promptness in reporting.
2. Be always as active as you can, wisely.
3. Be studious, humble, kind, and prayerful.
4. Give God the honor and glory for all work accomplished.

Let us, then, brethren, one and all, send in a report this year. Some who miss reporting this year may be dropped from membership. Let the quorum know that each one has been busy working for the Lord.

Some have been ordained higher; some may have died. Time has worked changes. Just a word from you will give us a correct record; without that “word” the record of the Fourth Quorum will be incomplete. Let us have the dates of all these changes during the last year. Let us have the correct address of each member; as many of us as can, be present at conference to engage in perfecting the organization of the quorum.

W. B. TORRANCE, Recording Secretary.

JAS. D. SCHOFIELD, Corresponding Secretary.

STANBERRY, MISSOURI, March 1, 1906.

First Quorum of Priests.

All members of the above quorum who have changed addresses during the last year are requested to send the new addresses to the secretary, as I wish to send out the annual report blanks in a few days and shall send them to the old addresses unless otherwise advised.

Hoping to reach all of you, I am,

J. C. NUNN, Secretary.

There is no disposition upon the part of any one who has a knowledge of the situation to disregard the value of the statement so earnestly made by many of the writers in regard to the gathering, that it is time to do something. It evidently appears to these writers that time is rapidly passing and nothing seems to be doing. It is necessary to call the attention of these to the fact that not only in the revelations of an earlier period touching the gathering, but those much later contain the information that the gathering should not be made in haste, but should be done in accordance with the counsel of the elders, that undue and hence unfortunate results may be avoided.

There are now living in Northern Missouri, principally centered at Independence, several thousands of the Latter Day Saints belonging to the Reorganized Church. Their character is good as a whole, and they have the confidence of the people not of the church. They have had a marked influence upon the policies of the municipalities where they dwell, upon the liquor traffic, and it is known that Latter Day Saints neither countenance nor foster the existence of intoxicants and the use of saloons or places where liquors are sold as beverages.

The condition of things has materially changed since the revelations of 1830, 1831, and 1833 to gather in that section of country with Independence as a center were given, and the gathering there now upon the hypothesis that the revelation appointing it as center place continues operative must be governed to a very great extent by the revelation of 1834, given on Fishing River, in which it is distinctly stated that they should carefully gather into the regions round about, talking not judgment nor boasting of mighty faith, but carefully gathering together as many in one place as can be done consistently with the feelings of the people.

Settlements are available in various localities in the regions round about, where Saints may gather and be in touch with the church as a whole, and who can, under the circumstances existing, make themselves homes and live as economically as they choose, devote as much time, energy, and money to the general cause as they are willing to do; and the elders or other officers of the church in that region of country everywhere may be consulted and their judgment may be taken as the judgment of fair and honorable men. And those who choose to gather under such circumstances may run no risk of suffering undue loss in relocating themselves.

The Presidency has hitherto advised that those desirous of gathering to Zion and who could change their locations without loss and without destroying their usefulness or means or capabilities of making a livelihood were at liberty to do so. All writers upon the subject should take notice that since the command to gather into Jackson County was given there has been a great influx of emigration into those regions and land for any purpose has increased in value. This is absolutely true of every locality we know anything about in the West and Middle West. We know of no eligible site where land could be purchased for $1.25 and $2.50 per acre, the rate which prevailed at the time the commandment was given. The Lord at that time said that there was sufficient wealth to redeem Zion. However, the efforts to accomplish this, like those of men referred to by the poet Burns, went agley; whether from personal speculation, the unjust and vehement persecution they suffered, and which the Saints were obliged to flee from, does not change the facts. They were obliged to go, and they did go. Since then the Saints have been taking comfort upon the hypothesis that Zion would not be moved out of her place and that the central stake would be the center of the final location.

It is quite possible for groups of Saints, few or many, to live according to the rules of righteousness in their intercourse with each other and with the world, in any of these localities in the regions round about. They must, however, come into contact more or less intimate with their neighbors, Gentile neighbors if you please. Their intercourse with these neighbors should be of such a character as to command them for honesty, uprightness, industry, and due regard for the principles of common prudence and the dictates of common wisdom in their everyday lives. The Savior said of his disciples, "Ye are in the world, but not of the world." This may distinctly be said in reference to these Latter Day Saints. They may be in the world and yet be not of the world. There is no necessity for them to become subject to the ways of the world, making the ways of the world their ways, unless those ways are ways of righteousness and of peace. The ways of the Gentiles in their completeness ought not to be condemned unless those ways are evil ways. It must be clearly understood that all their ways are not evil. Some of them are commendable. It is possible for a group of Saints to collect in any neighborhood, adopt entire isolation from the world, living simple lives, having no intercourse with the world, and continue so for a time. But it is a matter of serious doubt if sooner or later absolute necessities would permit such condition to continue; if they would not force a more or less free intercourse with their neighbors.

It is conceded that there are commandments looking to the fact of gathering. We will be obliged to any reader of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants who will point out to us the prescribed rules which may be called the details of procedure upon which some of these commandments are to be carried into effect. What is called the storehouse of the Lord in its general sense may justly be said to be the Bishopric in its agencies wherever they may be located, and the question whether or not tithes should be gathered in kind, gathered into a warehouse in any one given locality would answer the end of the commandment or not.

The question of equality and inequality will remain a question of dispute for some time to come. An agent of the church engaged in a field of labor must necessarily be maintained in such field from that which is paid into the storehouse. The degree and character of that sustenance must be determined necessarily by a consideration of what he does and how much of his time is occupied in that particular ministry and whether or not he makes any effort outside of his work designated for him by his position in the church or not. The Book of Mormon seems to have carried the inference that the priests labored with their own hands and so maintained themselves. If such is the commandment now and such the policy, then those who are laboring for the things that perish only and who spend only such convenient times as they can spare for the minister's work, are doing what they can. If these gain more than a sustenance, the law points out that such surplus should be made subject to the general draft of the church for its general necessities and maintaining of those who are not in such way of helping to sustain themselves. There are those, however, who have not from their first connection with the church given their time and their attention to an effort to secure a personal maintenance for themselves and families independent of the church. They have taken up their service and they have devoted themselves chiefly and entirely to the work intrusted to them. They have been cared for by the church. Whether their being thus cared for brings them undue blame for not having put forth other effort will be a matter of inquiry and criticism by some. However, they are prepared to give answer before a proper tribunal for their personal conduct.

We have some articles lying on our desk in reference to the gathering. Some of them more or less directly in point will appear in due time; and it may be that there are those who have not yet aired their understanding of things who may be wrought upon to write. Whether we shall reach a proper general conclusion from the variety of views held and expressed remains to be seen. If in the multitude of counselors there is wisdom, there should be huge nuggets in what has been written and what remains to be said upon the topic. In the meantime let those who desire to remove nearer to the center than they now are, take into consideration what has been written for the guidance of those who thus emigrate, and govern themselves accordingly.

Some fault is found with the idea that there are banks and real estate men, manufactories and merchants, already in Zion. Some who have emigrated to Zion after having written to officers of the church for advice have gone there and have put themselves into the hands of others, and subsequently have cried "speculation." How true these charges may be we have no personal knowledge; but we do know this: that if we desired to move into the region round about we should go down there and with some reliable officer of the church we should look around, ascertaining what the facilities were, the value of specific localities, the worth of things generally, and then make our selection and our settlement. Nor would we find any fault if we made a bad bargain, nor if subsequent events changed things over which we had no control for the seemingly worse. We believe, however, that if those who go into the regions round about will take with them spiritual energy, carefulness, and industry, and will mind their own business with sincerity and persistence, keeping themselves unspotted from the evils of the world, they will win a living, be successful in business, and become able to be of great benefit to the general work; but any one who goes there with the idea that work is not essential and carefulness and industry are things of the past and that they must perform be sustained by those already there—they will meet with sore disappointment.

We regret to say that some of the writers upon the topic have taken things as they exist among the Gentiles in the large cities as reasons why the Saints should do thus and so. We have within the last year been in numerous localities and in various branches of the church and in none of these have we seen indigent Saints standing around the streets unemployed either wanting or begging bread. We have found them industriously engaged in business, thriving, and many of them able and willing to assist their neighbors and doing so when assistance was required.

Economic conditions in the world are of course being agitated into change and improvement. It is to be earnestly hoped that the changes that may be made will be of such a character that there will be a decided improvement. Whether we are justified as Saints in burdening ourselves as being responsible for the terrible condition of things that exists in large cities in which existence is a problem for humanity's solving, is a question. The church as a whole is poor; that is to say, it is made up of what may be called the workaday world, with here and there an enterprising man who has begun poor but has won some degree of wealth; but they are not excessively rich men. To our knowledge some if not all of these so-called wealthy men have used their means unstintingly for the good of the church in a public and local way, and have scattered favors to individuals to the right and left as God gave them increase. They were poor; they never forgot it, and they have been willing to help those who were like themselves struggling for sustenance.

One brother writing on the topic and suggesting reformation says by the way of explanation, "I am not finding any fault and have no kick coming." What he means by this evidently is, that personally he is doing well enough, taking care of his family where he is, but thinks that the general situation needs an easing up. It may. And it is to be hoped that in due time the feeling may become sufficiently general throughout the church that the desired change for the better may be brought about. In one sense of the word it is a revival of the old question, "Will the Jews be gathered in belief or unbelief?" Different views are held in regard to this matter; and as a similarity, Will the Saints be gathered without sufficient assimilation before gathering? Or is it expected that they should be sufficiently pure in heart to live in quiet with their neighbors and under the principles of advancement and progress where they are before they are gathered to Zion?

THE DOWIE MOVEMENT.

One of the papers of Chicago last week had a tabulated statement in reference to the enterprises carried on at Zion City. The chief enterprises were the lace and candy departments. It is something peculiar that Alexander Dowie, who has made such a tremendous onslaught on what people eat and drink, should depend upon the manufacture of various kinds of candy which to compete with the outside market must be up to date in quality, quantity, coloring, etc. It is also not a little singular that he should have been so peculiarly extravagant in building himself a home, making magnificent offices in the different departments, and making the manufacture of lace, one of the luxuries of life to gratify the eyes, a chief industry.

The same paper for Sunday, March 11, has a statement that a draft on the Zion City Bank by Apostle Dowie was refused payment, the statement being made by the business manager that Dowie had no personal funds in the bank. Deacon Granger, the financial manager of Zion, returned the draft to Doctor Dowie with a note suggesting that he should curtail his expenses as every one else was doing at Zion City. The deacon further said that he had sent a small amount to Jamaica, but did not send all that was called for.

In pursuit of the economical scheme, Mrs. Jane Dowie, wife of Apostle Dowie, has removed from an almost palatial residence which was built for the family to a small cottage, the Shiloh House which she is leaving being mortgaged for $20,000.

The report in the Tribune, the paper from which we quote, states: "The methods of Doctor Dowie, after all but wrecking the various industries and making a deserted village of Zion City, which even after recent trials supports a population of six thousand persons, have been abandoned for ever." The General Overseer now is Mr. Voliva, and it will appear that Doctor Dowie will not be permitted to lead and control in the business affairs of the city any further. It is also reported that somewhere near five hundred men, women, and children of Zion City were either seeking work at Waukegan and North Chicago, or were already working there, and the merchants of Zion City were complaining about their wages having been taken out of the city.

One of the causes of the present distress in Zion City is easily found in the fact that Doctor Dowie built a college structure and other schools at a cost of $150,000 without endowment, provided with a full faculty, and from which college two persons were graduated last year. The further reason is found in the fact that vast sums of money were expended by Doctor Dowie in his missionary trips to New York and elsewhere, and the spending of $150,000 on a Mexican colonization scheme which it is found must now be abandoned.

The following seems to be a summing up of the revelations since Voliva assumed control: That the entire financial system of Zion City was wrong from the beginning. Doctor Dowie spent with a liberal hand moneys taken from the general fund, securing authority when he thought authority was needed from his followers, and otherwise assuming authority upon the hypothesis that the funds were inexhaustible. The closing paragraph in the report states: "In line with the complaint about the college building comes another concerning the mammoth structure that houses the lace-works. There are actually employed in the huge building that covers the space of a city block one hundred and sixty-three persons. There is room there for three thousand employees. The printing and publishing plant is an unfinished building whose naked rafters and uncompleted walls give further indication of vast projects, conceived without enough capital."

It would seem like this: that the apparent prosperity of the Doctor's methods, both of a spiritual and temporal character, in converting people to his theories, and the influence which he used upon them by which he obtained vast sums of money, turned the Doctor's head. In basing his projected enterprise upon the continuation of such unexampled prosperity he simply overreached himself, undertook to do what he could not possibly carry out. The subtracting of half a million dollars from the general fund and spending it in an organized attack upon New York, a trip around the world with apparently no design, and the establishment of Zion in Mexico, exhausted the overflow of funds and now there is but the gleanings left for his business successors. They will undoubtedly be able to save considerable from complete ruin, but it will not be by Doctor Dowie's efforts.

It might be well for some of those who are writing upon the subject of material prosperity quietly to make a trip to Zion City without haste to see what they may discover of actualities in the premises, leaving out the pomp and glitter of the uniformed guards and the hosts of trained singers and all the flourish of ecclesiasticism which has marked the career of Doctor Dowie for the last fifteen years. It is a wonder that the man has not mitred himself or put on the red cap of a cardinal long ere this. The flowing robes and the garb of a high priest characterize a part of the display, and the result is pitiful.

It would also appear that some part of his followers still have reverence for him in the spiritual side of the controversy, but he can never again be the dash- ing, overbearing, masterful, leading spirit dominating over those over whom he presided, and doing what he would with an infatuated people. We had supposed that he had made some preparation out of the five per cent which he claimed was his own out of the liberal donations received; but from this refusal to honor his draft from Jamaica we would gather that the business officers of Zion City would see that he, though he might be a spiritual leader, should only receive a proper proportion, the same as other members of the fraternity.

PRESIDENT FREDERICK M. SMITH, wife, and daughter Alice arrived home, Lamoni, on Tuesday, the 13th inst., from Salt Lake City, Utah, where they have been located in the interests of church work since the month of May, 1905. They are in good health, and Saints and friends are pleased to extend them a hearty welcome home again.

BRO. T. W. WILLIAMS, Los Angeles, California, writes that their late conference passed off very amicably, the peace and power of God's Holy Spirit clearly apparent. On Sunday they raised sixty dollars for the relief of the Saints in the South Sea Islands, and subsequently at a prayer-meeting they raised sixty dollars more, and expect to raise more in a few days. Elsewhere in this issue will be found a letter from Bro. Burton confirming the reports of the terrible destruction by wind and waves the fore part of February.
REVIVAL MEETINGS AT BURLINGTON.

Beginning February 25 Bro. Elbert A. Smith has been conducting a protracted meeting in the Saints' church in Burlington, and succeeded in arousing such an interest that the local papers speak of it as a revival.

Bro. Smith has been advertising his services in some such way as Bro. R. C. Evans has been doing, and has been meeting with quite a degree of success. He issues little handbills with comment as to place of meeting, subject, and a freehand drawing illustrating the subject. He has now been running two weeks. We have not heard whether he will continue longer or not.

The following clipping from the Burlington Evening Gazette, for March 5, gives an idea of the interest created, also an interesting synopsis of the sermon on "Marriage."

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Twelfth and Locust Streets, was well filled at the evening service Sunday. It was intended for the closing service of the revival; but an enthusiastic vote ordered the meetings continued this week, requests having come from many sources to that effect. The subject for Tuesday evening was announced as "These signs shall follow."—Mark 16:15-20.

At the Sunday evening service the pastor, Elbert A. Smith, said in part:

"Marriage is an important subject. The marriage covenant antedates the Christian covenant and the home antedates the church. In some ways it is more important. Love is the greatest force in the universe. It strengthens the warrior's arm and heartens the toiler and brightens the home and inspires the genius; its counterfeit, lust, destroys all of these.

"To every natural young man there comes the time of love, and no matter what the physical defects or blemishes of his chosen one may be he gladly joins the old song:"

"'Her brow is like the snow-drift, her neck is like the swan. Her face it is the fairest that e'er the sun shone on.'"

"'Do not ridicule or pity him in his rose-tinted paradise—pity him later when he proves untrue to his vision. It is sad when death interrupts the dream; but how much worse when infidelity breaks up the home. Solomon says the earth can not abide an odious woman when she is married. He might have added, 'nor an odious man.'"

"The first marriage ceremony is recorded in the second chapter of Genesis where God gave the bride away and performed the ceremony. It was the ideal marriage—where one man and one woman covenanted to separate themselves from all others and be true to each other during life.

"This heaven-ordained system of marriage is violated in three ways by men to-day, and at many times in the past. First, by those mentioned in the fourth chapter of First Timothy, who in the last days should forbid to marry. The sect of the Shakers do that. The apostles of free love and anarchy do that. Those people who build fine hotels and apartments and homes and then hang out the sign 'No Children Allowed' do that. All those who encourage the idea that a man can not afford to marry and that a woman better not marry, help to foster that doctrine of the latter days.

"Second. It is violated by those who are untrue to the wife of the youth, and by the unmarried who are untrue to themselves. It is responsible for the conditions which we are trying to eradicate from our city, well described by Job: 'The eye of the adulterer waiteth for the twilight, saying, no eye shall see me; and disguiseth his face. In the dark they dig through houses, that which they have marked for themselves in the daytime. The morning is to them as the shadow of death; if one know them, they are in the terrors of the shadow of death.'"

"Third. This original sacred covenant is violated by those who, like our Utah friends, teach and practice polygamy. This crime is mentioned as one of those for which the earth was destroyed by a flood. It obtained under the patriarchs. It came again in our time. We read of one occasion where the sons of God were assembled and Satan came also. Just so in this land where freedom and every good thing came to dwell, slavery and polygamy and whisky and adultery came also. The church which I represent never stood for any of these. Brigham Young introduced polygamy five years after the death of the original leader of the church. Joseph Smith never taught or practiced it—some encyclopedias and histories and people to the contrary. I have quoted you the decisions of two courts to prove that. I have quoted from one standard encyclopedia and several good histories. But greatest of all I have shown you how he wrote and spoke against and even cut people off from the church who taught it.

"Now in conclusion: A little paragraph in one of our dailies some days ago told how to care for pearls, so as to preserve their luster. It was simple—just wear them. If not worn they degenerate. It is even so with every Christian virtue. Use them. Use them in the home. The vast majority of wives have no pearls to wear; but the poorest may wear Christ's priceless gifts.

"'If jewels are for the adornment of women, armor is for the protection of men. In some of the old castles of the Old World hung rusted and useless suits of armor. Time was when they shone brightly because of use and burnishing. Men do not wear chain armor now but they should wear the armor of purity and truth and should keep it bright with use. If our women will wear the pearls of pure Christian womanhood and our men put on the armor of Christian manhood and prove themselves worthy of such pearl-bearers our Civic Federation will find less work to do.'"

These meetings continue this work, beginning Tuesday evening. There will be no service Monday evening. All are invited.

GREAT MINE ACCIDENT.

At Courrieres, near Calais, France, seventeen hundred and ninety-five men went into the mine in the morning as usual, and they had scarcely more than descended when there was a deafening explosion and cages and miners in some instances were thrown from the mouth of the shaft.

Out of this number barely six hundred and two have been brought to the surface at last report, and some of these were dead, leaving the total loss of men abandoned eleven hundred and ninety three, the most appalling disaster ever experienced in France; so says the report.

We appreciate the dangers to which the miners are exposed. It is sad that such tremendous loss of life may now and then occur. This, like other disasters in mines, has not been traced to any adequate cause as yet. It is to be hoped that human carelessness was not at the root of the disaster.

ELDER ROBERT M. ELVIN will represent the publishing department at the conference at Wheeling, West Virginia. The Saints will please pay him their subscriptions for all of the church publications.

THOSE TREASONABLE HYMNS.

In the late investigation before the Senate committee in the Smoot case some hymns were introduced supposed to contain evidence of treasonable sentiments upon the part of those using them.

We listened to them when presented before the committee, and have since examined them carefully, and our conclusion is that the inference of treason is very far-fetched as regards all of them except one.

That one reads as follows:

"Up, awake, ye defenders of Zion
The foe's at the door of your homes;
Let each heart be the heart of a lion,
Unyielding and proud as he roams.
Remember the wrongs of Missouri;
Forget not the fate of Nauvoo;
When the God-hating foe is before you,
Stand firm, and be faithful and true.

"By the mountain our Zion's surrounded;
Her warriors are noble and brave;
And their faith on Jehovah is founded,
Whose power is almighty to save.
Opposed by a proud, boasting nation,
Their numbers compared, may be few;
But their union is known through creation,
And they've always been faithful and true.

"Shall we bear with oppression for ever?
Shall we tamely submit to the foe,
While the ties of our kindred they sever?
Shall the blood of our prophets still flow?
No! the thought sets the heart wildly beating;
Our vows at each pulse we renew,
Ne'er to rest till our foes are retreating,
While we remain faithful and true!

"Though assisted by legions infernal,
The plundering wretches advance,
With a host from the regions eternal,
We'll scatter their troops at a glance.
Soon the 'Kingdom' will be independent;
In wonder the nations will view
The despised ones in glory resplendent;
'Then let us be faithful and true!'"

It is not our purpose to pass judgment upon this hymn as to its loyal or treasonable tendencies. We are content to leave this with the committee whose duty it is to decide, but we wish to fix the responsibility of it where it belongs.

We were permitted to examine the book used before the committee for a few moments, and if our memory serves correctly it was an 1891 reprint of the 1840 edition. The preface to the reprint states that there had been some hymns added to the last part of the book, but as this particular hymn is No. 61, near the fore part of the book, the impression might obtain that it was in the 1840 or original edition.

This is not true. Elder C. W. Penrose is the author of it according to the index of the volume and he was not a member of the church at the date of the original publication. He was born in London, England, February 4, 1832, baptized into the church of Utah May 14, 1850. Hence he was but eight years old at the date of the original publication, and not a member of the church until ten years later.

There were several editions of this book published, but we have access to but few of them. The ninth edition "revised and enlarged" was issued from Liverpool, England, by F. D. Richards in 1861.

This edition does not contain the hymn in question. The twelfth edition published at Liverpool, England, by George Q. Cannon in 1863 does contain this hymn. Whether it is in the tenth and eleventh editions or not we do not know, but it is certain it was not in the book until after 1851.

Besides, the production itself betrays the fact that it was written after the settlement in Utah as the following line shows: "'By the mountain our Zion's surrounded.'"

This is evidence that the church in the days of the Martyrs Joseph and Hyrum Smith were not responsible for these utterances.

Charles W. Penrose, the latest accession to the Quorum of Twelve in the Utah church, was first responsible, later the church he represents became responsible by inserting it in one of its authorized publications.

It is but fair that they should have whatever of credit or blame may properly attach to the document, and its publication in the book.

THE SPIRIT OF GOD, HOLY GHOST, SPIRIT OF CHRIST, SPIRIT OF TRUTH, AND THE SPIRIT ARE THE SAME.

Within the last year, I have read a number of articles on this subject, as published in the SAINTS' HERALD. Paul said to Timothy, "preach the word," and I take it for granted that we ought to write it as well as preach it. Evidently none of the writers on this subject intend to ignore the word of God, much less to oppose it; but they will, I trust, agree with me in the thought that it is hardly legitimate to urge our assumed theology as a reason for being unable to accept a position which is found to be in harmony with the word.

To me none of the arguments advanced in support of the claim that the Spirit of God and the Holy Ghost are two different things are conclusive; but I will resist the temptation of directly attacking these arguments, and proceed to furnish a small part of the evidence, contained in the sacred books of the church, in support of the caption of this article.

ONLY ONE SPIRIT BELONGING TO THE GOSPEL PLAN.

One late writer claims that there are three, viz.: the Spirit of God, the Spirit of Christ, and the Spirit of truth.

"There is one body [church], and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling."—Ephesians 4:4.
“For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus, whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another Spirit, which ye have not received, or another gospel, which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear with him.”—2 Corinthians 11:4.

It may be said, the apostle does not state that there is but one Spirit. True, nor does he state that there is but one Lord, one body, one hope of our calling, one gospel. There are many false gospels, but only one true one. (See Galatians 1:6-9.) Many false spirits have gone into the world, but only one which is true and divine. (See John 4:1-3; Doctrine and Covenants 50:2.) If, as claimed, there are two or three Spirits instead of one, how are we to know which one is meant by the oft-repeated phrase, “the Spirit”? How do we know whether reference is had to the Spirit of God, the Spirit of Christ, or the Spirit of truth? Accept the position that they are one, and only one, and all is plain.

SYNONYMOUS PHRASES.

The different phrases employed prove that there is but one Spirit, for they are used synonymously and, more or less, interchangeably. In John 14:16, 17, 26, as well as elsewhere, “the Comforter,” “the Spirit of truth,” and “the Holy Ghost” are used to define the promise and office-work of the Holy Ghost. No one will be so rash as to deny this.

The evident reason why this Spirit is called “another Comforter,” in John 14:16, is because Jesus was about to leave them. He had told them so, and their hearts were filled with sorrow. He had been a true Comforter to them for more than three years, but now he is about to depart and go back to his Father. While he was here on the earth he enjoyed the Spirit without measure, (see John 3:34,) and his disciples rejoiced while he dispensed to them the word of life, as it was given to him by the Holy Ghost.

“The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach, until the day in which he was taken up, after that he through the Holy Ghost had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen.”—Acts 1:1, 2. Now we are prepared to understand the statement of Jesus concerning the Holy Ghost, as found in John 14:17: “For he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.”

By further investigation, we learn that “the Holy Spirit,” “the Spirit,” the Spirit of Christ, “the Spirit of God,” and “the Holy Ghost” are the same. Jesus said: “Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God.”—John 3:5. We will doubtless agree that Jesus referred to the baptism of water and the baptism of the Holy Ghost. John speaking of this baptism of the Spirit says: “I indeed baptized you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire.” Thus we establish the Spirit and the Holy Ghost as the same thing.

In Doctrine and Covenants 36:1, last part of the paragraph, we have the following words from the prophecy of Enoch: “And he gave unto me a commandment that I should baptize in the name of the Father and the Son, which is full of grace and truth, and the Holy Spirit, which bears record of the Father and the Son.”

From Matthew 28:19, and Doctrine and Covenants 17:21, we learn that we are required to administer baptism in the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Thus we establish that the Holy Spirit and Holy Ghost are the same.

“And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him.”—Matthew 3:16. Did not Jesus receive the baptism of water, and of the Holy Ghost, at this time? John, referring to this wonderful event, said: “And I knew him not: but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost.”—John 1:33.

In the above scriptures the Spirit of God and the Spirit are used interchangeably, and, without reasonable doubt, both refer to the baptism of the Holy Ghost.

It is admitted that when we obey the gospel we become the sons of God and receive from him the Holy Ghost. Very well. Paul tells us in Romans 8:14 that “as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.” And in the same chapter (verse 9), addressing the same company of Saints, and speaking of the same Spirit, he says: “But ye are not in the flesh, [that is, in a carnal condition,] but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.” This should settle the case, and by the best authority that has ever been given to man, that is, the word of the eternal God. If our assumed theology stands in the way, why not revise it, rather than tinker with the word of God?

In Doctrine and Covenants 8:1 is recorded a precious promise made to Oliver Cowdery, “by the manifestation of my Spirit; yea, behold, I will tell you in your mind and in your heart by the Holy Ghost, which shall come upon you, and which shall dwell in your heart.” And in the next paragraph we are told that “this is the Spirit of revelation; behold, this is the Spirit by which Moses brought..."
the children of Israel through the Red Sea on dry ground," etc.

Here is the promise made to Edward Partridge in December, 1830: "And I will lay my hand upon you by the hand of my servant Sidney Rigdon, and you shall receive my Spirit, the Holy Ghost, even the Comforter, which shall teach you the peaceable things of the kingdom," etc. This revelation was given by "Jesus Christ, the Son of God," and it therefore proves that the Spirit of Christ, the Holy Ghost, and the Comforter are the same.

Paul teaches in 1 Corinthians, twelfth chapter, that all the spiritual gifts come from the same Spirit; and in section 46, Doctrine and Covenants, which is a treatise on the spiritual gifts, this one Spirit is declared to be the the Holy Ghost. In paragraphs 5, 6, and 7 we have the following:

"For there are many gifts, and to every man is given a gift by the Spirit of God: to some it is given one, and to some is given another, that all may be profited thereby; to some is given by the Holy Ghost to know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that he was crucified for the sins of the world; to others it is given to believe on their words, that they also might have eternal life, if they continue faithful.

And again, to some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know the differences of administration, as it will therefore prove that the Spirit of Christ, the Holy Ghost, and the Comforter are the same.

Paul teaches in 1 Corinthians, twelfth chapter, that all the spiritual gifts come from the same Spirit; and in section 46, Doctrine and Covenants, which is a treatise on the spiritual gifts, this one Spirit is declared to be the the Holy Ghost. In paragraphs 5, 6, and 7 we have the following:

"For there are many gifts, and to every man is given a gift by the Spirit of God: to some it is given one, and to some is given another, that all may be profited thereby; to some is given by the Holy Ghost to know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that he was crucified for the sins of the world; to others it is given to believe on their words, that they also might have eternal life, if they continue faithful.

And again, to some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know the differences of administration, as it will therefore prove that the Spirit of Christ, the Holy Ghost, and the Comforter are the same.

In paragraph 7 we are informed that the gifts of wisdom, knowledge, faith to heal and to be healed, the working of miracles, prophecy, discernment of spirits, tongues and the interpretation of tongues, are all given by "the Spirit of God."

The foregoing is but a small portion of the evidence contained in the sacred books of the church, but sufficient to completely sustain the position which we have that the Spirit of Christ, the Holy Ghost, and the Comforter are the same.

I subscribe myself your fellow servant in the truth, believing in one God, one Lord, one gospel, one body or church, and "one Spirit." J. R. LAMBERT.

Mother and Child.

My child is lying on my knees,
    The signs of Heaven she reads;
My face is all the Heaven she sees,
    Is all the Heaven she needs.

I also am a child and I Am ignorant and weak;
I gaze upon the starry sky
    And then I must not speak.

For all behind the starry sky,
    Behind the world so broad,
Behind men's hearts and souls, doth lie
    The infinite of God.

Lo, Lord, I set in the wide space,
    My child upon my knee;
She looketh up into my face
    And I look up to thee.

—George MacDonald.

The Tragedy of Carelessness.

Who could ever estimate the lives lost, the vast number of human beings injured, and the tremendous loss of property caused every year by carelessness? Just a little indifference or carelessness, just a few little bubbles in a casting, and the whole building is wrecked, or a bridge goes down into the river, carrying its train of precious human freight.

Just a little flaw in a rail, or in a wheel, or a bit of machinery, just a little carelessness, and scores of people may lose their lives. We are always on the lookout for big things; but it is the little things that escape detection that cause the great mischief.

Oh, the tragedy of carelessness, enacted every day in our country by employees, which comes from indifference, from lack of interest, from not thinking, from a wandering mind! How many customers and how much money is lost by business houses every year from careless letters, careless packing, and careless addressing—useless blunders! How many lives are lost from the carelessness of railway employees, of switchmen, and of motormen!

It is a most unfortunate thing for a large establishment to be honeycombed by carelessness of its employees. Boys break things, ruin goods, furniture, china, glassware, works of art—all sorts of things—by sheer carelessness.

In our homes everywhere we see evidences of carelessness and indifference. Our furniture is always falling to pieces, because not properly glued or properly doweled, and our beds breaking down, casters coming out, and chairs coming to pieces.

The little mistakes of the employees in John Wanamaker's establishment cost the firm more than twenty-five thousand dollars a year. The manager in a large Chicago house says that he has to station pickets here and there all through the establishment in order to neutralize the evils of inaccuracy. One business man states that inaccuracy costs the city of Chicago $1,000,000 a day and, when we remember that somebody is blundering somewhere every minute of the day, this does not seem strange. Yet the most of those who make mistakes would say that they are little things to make such a fuss about; in the aggregate, however, they amount to a small fortune. These careless clerks double-boss wonder why they are not promoted, and would be greatly surprised if told that these trifling errors are the cause of their slow advancement.

Some minds seem to be almost incapable of accurate action. There is loose-jointedness about their very mental make-up. If we analyze these people, we find that they do not observe definitely or think sharply. They lack mental method and system. Slipshod thinkers are loose-jointed doers.

"Oh, that is good enough. Do not spend so much time on that thing. We can not afford it, Charlie. We do not get pay for it." This was the exclamation of the proprietor of an upholstery shop to a new boy who was employed to run errands and to get and deliver goods in a push-cart. When the boy had a few minutes, he borrowed tools and repaired furniture. He soon became so skilled that the proprietor set him to work at upholstery furniture. The only fault he had to find was that he was too particular, and he would say, "Do not use two nails where one will do. Do not spend two hours on a job when one will do. We do not get pay for that sort of nicety." But the boy was not satisfied with "good enough," or "pretty fair." He always insisted upon everything being done to a finish, and would never let a job go out of his hands, if he could help it, until it was done just as well as he could do it. This was his trade-mark.

The determination of this young man to do everything to a finish has carried him to a high and very responsible position within a very few years, and now he has hundreds of men under his authority.

The reputation of being absolutely accurate and painstaking is equal to a large amount of capital to a young man going into business for himself. Banks are more likely to give him credit, and jobbing houses will trust him, when they would not place confidence in a slipshod man of equal ability.

Thoroughness is the twin brother of honesty. When an employee gets the reputation of doing a thing not pretty nearly, but exactly right, it has more influence with his employer than brilliancy or talent.

For example, a young stenographer who is accurate in taking notes, who spells correctly, punctuates properly, and whose judgment and common sense enable him to correct involved sentences, or matter that has been hastily dictated without reference to grammatical construction, will never be out of a place.

There is never a day in a business office when accurate understanding and clear-headedness are not at a premium. As an illustration, take the schoolboy, who has learned that the axis of the earth is an imaginary line, passing from pole to another, upon which the earth revolves.

"Could you hang a bonnet on it?" asks his teacher.

"Yes, sir."

"Indeed, and what kind of a bonnet?"

"An imaginary one, sir."

If this boy were an employee, he could be depended upon as equal to an emergency. He would seldom make a mistake, and would put things together that belong together, attending accurately to the details turned over to him. — Success.
number manifested a desire to see and shake hands with the son of the Prophet. It was not very pleasing to the ruling authority for the members to attend our meetings, so a council was held and the members forbidden to attend, so we were informed. Anyway, all at once there were but few in attendance.

The fall election was looked forward to with much interest. This resulted in placing the American party in power, which was a surprise to many. The main issue was between Mormons and Gentiles and seceding Mormons. The Mormons lost, so the political, social, and religious conflict is on—grinding away, and the people are waiting results, anxious to learn whether the Government of the United States is going to permit the Mormon leaders to go on breaking the laws of the land and the laws of God, and thus defy the powers that be, or whether they will turn them down and compel them to lawful obedience like other people or punish them. The Mormons it appears have fooled the Government a few times, and are endeavoring to play a similar game again. To hear them talk, however, they were always law-abiding, consistent, and honorable, but unfortunately for this claim a history is written, and fanatical persons and dissenters will blurt out real sentiments. Some of the wiser ones begin to see coming events. As an instance, Elder B. H. Roberts recently preached a discourse in the tabernacle at Ogden on "What the Mormons do not believe." He went on to say: "We do not believe in the writings of the Pratts and Taylors and others of our leaders. We do not believe that what our elders speak in the pulpit is divinely inspired, or inspiration. "We believe in the Book, in the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. These are our standards." I quote from memory. When it is remembered that only a few conferences back the book of Abraham was adopted as a text-book, and that Apostle Hyrum M. Smith commended the Journal of Discourses at the recent conference to be read by the Saints, and the rule has been to follow the living oracles, Elder Roberts' statements are significant. Elder Roberts is to be congratulated on the bold and sensible stand he has taken; and while he is one of their ablest apologists, whether he will be able to buck the living oracles and maintain himself, or be summoned before a court of inquiry and compelled to recant remains to be seen. It is known far and wide that since 1851 the Reorganized Church has been insisting on the basic principle which all Latter-day Saints of whatever name could find a consistent platform upon which to stand. But it has been rejected in Utah and a persistence manifested to follow the living oracles. It is encouraging to know that at least some are thinking, and are tiring of the inconsistencies they have been tolerating and have been governed by in the past.

The recent revelation made of the temple secrets is terribly disappointing and humiliating. The people have been impressed with the belief that should any one be so recreant as to divulge those secrets they would drop dead in their tracks, lose their senses, or some other terrible chastisement overtake them. But nothing of the kind has occurred.

President Frederick M. Smith's reply to Editor Penrose's denial of the leaders' effort at dominating and dictating absolutely in church matters, started a good many thinking. In spite of the prejudice against the Truehe and counsel not to read it, the more independent and thinking element read it. So much so that every copy in which said article appeared was sold. Fred gave chapter and verse, so there was no chance for dodging. Of course the polygamous element that are in power and control are doing all they can to hold their grip and blind, prejudice, and mislead those who otherwise would give rational and consistent examination to all claims in which the people are interested. So things are seething and working here as elsewhere.

We have had a very uniform, nice winter; continuing cold up to the present. The writer recently made a trip to Delta, Colorado. Went to try to smooth the troubled waters there a little, but do not know how successful he was. But more of this later on.

Saints usually are well here and church matters are moving along as usual. Bro. J. D. Stead recently started on a return trip to Montana, stopping by the way; is now at Soda Springs, Idaho. Bro. Vanderwood has joined the force in Idaho for a season.

There is a restless feeling among some of the faithful here in regard to the Zion question; desirous of going back to Missouri, finding out that after all this is not Zion, that they have been fooled. It is the old saying over, The leaders can fool some of the people all of the time, but they can not fool all of the people all of the time. So there are hopeful signs that Utah people will one day be delivered from the bondage into which they have been plunged. Wm. H. Kelley

Dear Herald: I just closed a three-weeks' meeting at Runnells, leaving a splendid interest. Bro. James McKinnon is continuing the services a part of this week.

Friday, Saturday, and Sunday last the conventions and conference of this district were held at Runnells—one of the best conferences in some respects I have attended of late. At the social meeting on Sunday the Spirit through one of the brethren said that the Lord was well pleased with the efforts that had been made at that place, and that the seed sown would bring fruit in its time. None were baptized, but several much more favorable than before. The good Spirit supported me in my ministrations. The world exercised its influence over some of the young members and gave them opportunity to determine whether they loved God more than pleasure, and they decided with the world, to the surprise of the writer. There seemed to be a determined effort to keep the minds of the people disturbed with socials and shows, but the good Spirit prevailed with the greater number, and some not numbered with the Saints showed more faith in God than those who had made a sacred promise that they would be obedient to his will. We learned that one man who has charge of the hall and had an opportunity to rent it all this week to a show, telephoned to one of the brethren to know whether the meetings would continue this week, and if they did he would not rent to them. Very commendable in him. He was more thoughtful than some of the Saints would have been, I fear, judging from the fact that they would leave sacred service to attend a show.

There are many calls for the ministering of the word, and much interest where late ministrations have been. I begin a series of services next Wednesday at Youngstown as a result of interest created by a week's services that I held there a few weeks ago, and request growing out of that interest.

A missionary effort will be made in the city beginning the 27th inst. There seems to be a greater desire to reach the people with the gospel of late than for some time, and we hope to make the people of that desire by largely advertising the present series of services.

The information that some of my brethren of the ministry have fallen by the shaft of death is sad indeed, and causes us to cry out, "Lord, send forth more laborers into the vineyard," while a tear of sadness courses down the cheek. But to know of some failing to retain their integrity while standing to teach others, and to know that by this failure they have brought reproach upon the work for which they and their dear ones at home have sacrificed, causes a deeper sadness, and with it a feeling of the necessity to watch and pray always lest we be led into temptation. It places a broader meaning upon that part of the prayer taught by our Lord as translated by inspiration, "Suffer us not to be led into temptation," to the missionaries of his day on earth, associated with the instruction he gave relative to the last days, or the days just preceding his coming in glory, because iniquity will abound. Love for God is certainly cold when those who have sacrificed as do the missionaries for the cause of Zion will allow impure suggestions to mature to that extent that their usefulness is permanently impaired. Another source of sadness is to know of so many of the ministry who are being brought into bondage to affliction, either in their own bodies or through that of their wives or children that they are compelled to do nothing or much less than they could do otherwise; and many because of increasing expenses for the necessities of the families are compelled to ask release from active service to make up the deficiency. May God come to the rescue of the afflicted, and his people under the leadings of his Spirit come to the relief of those temporarily embarrassed. Hopefully in the truth.

Editors Herald: I feel it my duty to write to the Herald; not to tell of any great things that I have done, or of the spiritual development of our branch or of our district.

It is surprising to me that we do as well as we do under capitalism or wage slavery. But the church is waking up from its sleep. Saints should be the salt of the earth; a city set on a hill. We should not be afraid to advocate all the truth, wherever it may be found. The Spirit of God lighteth every man that comes into the world, whether he belongs to our church or not. Many of the heathen nations, and them that know no law, will have part in the first resurrection; and more than likely they will rise up in judgment and condemn us. It seems to me that we have a lot of cowards in our church; too many conservatives. It is all right to be subject to the powers that be; but should we not try all the time to change the powers that be, if there is need for it? Zion must be redeemed, or in other words established. Purity of heart is the first qualification. How can the heart be pure, with impure surroundings? The conditions make the man, more than the man makes the conditions. We are subject to our environment, more or less. Of course there are exceptions to the rule; but we must not leave the rule and follow the exception. Zion will never be established with capitalism for a basis.

One good brother up in Canada, says, "Now in this age of keen competition, where men are straining with might and main to keep their financial enterprises afloat [see Dowie], it is a question whether the church could enter the arena and beat them all. The church does not propose to do anything of the kind. Competition is not the celestial order; competition is the existing order. The order of the day is "the survival of the fittest," or brute force, which is the Devil's order. Christ died for the very least of his creation. He taught that we were all brothers; and that except we were one we were none of his.

Oh, that we had a thousandth part of what he said; but I guess it is well enough that we reason it out for ourselves. It has always been my desire to help build up Zion; that is, for the Saints to all gather to the appointed place. We are all poor. We can work just as well in Missouri, as we can any place in the world. Idlers are not in it, you know. We can pay our tithing just as well in Zion, as we can other places, and when a majority of Saints get to Missouri, they can start a cooperative commonwealth and give this system of competition a death-blow. "From Zion the law shall go forth." Any effort, with capitalism for a basis, will fail. Socialism on a capitalistic basis will be a failure.

The men in China are as much our brothers as the people at home. When enough of the human race believe this, then Christ will come.

HALBRITE, Saskatchewan, February 8, 1906.

Editors Herald: The Methodist Episcopal Church held revival meetings for five or six weeks in the schoolhouse eighteen miles southeast of Weyburn. The Saints of Weyburn Plains called on me and desired that I should follow them up, which I did, the Lord helping me. I preached to them for two weeks and two were baptized by Bro. Fisher.

I went from there to Osage and preached there six times, baptizing one and leaving others believing. Bro. Buntwait drove me over to McTaggart; met Bro. J. L. Mortimore there staying with Bro. and Sr. Toovey. We preached four or five times there but could not get the people out. Went back to Osage and preached some more there, but the weather got too rough and the people could not turn out. Bro. David Neil stayed with me and took me back to Weyburn Plains. Very cold and rough weather on the way, and had to stop with Bro. Neil till it was over. Then Bro. Fisher took his team and we drove back to see how the Saints were getting along southeast of Weyburn. Bro. and Sr. Jorden had been praying that God would send his servants to help them. I preached there two weeks more, preaching every night. Brn. Fisher, Jorden, McMickin, Sr. Sandidge of Montans, and I divided up and went from house to house and taught and expounded the scriptures to them in their homes; the result was six precious souls were baptized into Christ last Sunday by the writer, all adults—William McGowan and wife and married daughter, and James Moore Jorden and his wife, and another young man; thermometer thirty-three below. A load of Saints came from Weyburn Plains. We had confirmation in the afternoon and prayer-meeting at night. The Lord was with us. There are ten more believing and ready for baptism when the weather gets warmer. The two Methodist Episcopal preachers here did all they could to injure us and to stop the people from coming out. One of them got up in our meeting one night and tried to defend his position and wanted to know why I did not preach to sinners instead of taking all their converts after they had worked hard for six weeks to convert them. He also said that it was too bad that intelligent men had to be cut to the heart as they were— that he never was cut so in his life as he was by me. Said he: "You have called us Pharisees and hypocrites and are sending us all to hell." When he got through I asked the congregation if there were any present that ever heard me mention any sect, creed, or person in any of my sermons; if there were for them to raise their hands. No hands up. I asked him if he believed that those that manifested the same works and spirit that the Pharisees and hypocrites did, now if they would not be as guilty as they were. He said that they would. I asked him again if the cap did not fit him why did he put it on, and if it did that I had no apology to make. He did us no harm but gave me better opportunity to convince those present of the truth of the gospel.

I am now in Halbrite; shall preach here all week and longer if interest is manifested. In conclusion will say that the Saints are alive in Canada and it is a pleasure to meet them. The love of God is manifest in their countenances. May they grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth.

Editors Herald: Herewith I hand you a postal from a representative of the Utah Mormon church, which I think it would be well to publish, the address and all, likewise the reply of Elder O. J. Tary, president of the branch at this place. The Utah elders neither called, nor answered Bro. Tary's letter.

"Dear Brother: As we expect to come through Wheeling in a few days we thought we would like to pay you a visit if you will send us your address. We are elders from Utah, or representatives of that branch of the church of Latter-day Saints—elders of the Ohio conference. Address us here.

"Elder W. H. Smith."

"WHEELING, West Virginia, November 29, 1905. "Elder W. H. Smith, Gincee, Ohio. "Dear Sir: I received a card from you to-day addressed to 'The Mormon Elders,' and I do not know of any in Wheeling I suppose you mean the elders of the Latter Day Saints Church. I have a decided objection to the term 'Mormon' being applied to me or the church I represent. If it had reference only to the man or the book of that name it would not be so bad. But in its common and most accepted use it is made the synonym of polygamy, Adam-god worship, and many other innovations of Brigham Young, and as such has no place in connection with the true Latter Day Saints or the restoration of the gospel and the work of Joseph Smith from 1830 to his death in 1844. I do not consider the church whose headquarters are in Utah in any sense a branch of the Latter Day Saints Church. True, they claim it, but the history they have made proves them to be far from the church organized in 1830. This statement is supported by a decision of the judge of the United States Court for the Western District of Missouri. If this decision had never been given, the miserable imposition that Brigham Young put upon his followers in the pretended revelation on 'celestial marriage' makes it quite clear that he was an apostate from the church that never sanctioned such a blasphemous doctrine. You may say that I am harsh because the church in Utah has abandoned the practice of polygamy. I do not think it has abandoned it at all, and if the practice was abandoned you still believe it, and so long as you believe that to have been a true doctrine you dishonor the religion of Jesus Christ, and have need to repent and accept the pure gospel as restored by the Martyr. The head of your church, Joseph F. Smith, standing before the world as a confessed violator both of the law of the land and of the law of God ought to convince you that there is something radically wrong. What freedom have you? Does any member of your church dare vote contrary to the wishes of the leaders in your conferences or publicly express his sentiments against your leaders and retain your membership in the church? As to your coming here, we will extend the same courtesy that we extend to all well-disposed persons. And I can say we bear you no personal ill will. But we have been made to suffer too much because of the iniquitous doctrines of Brigham Young to allow any to teach them in our midst without showing them up in the light of truth. As to the restoration of the gospel, the work of Joseph Smith from 1830 to his death, and the coming forth of the record of the ancient peoples of this continent, I heartily agree with you, but of the work of Brigham Young and his successors can never accept. I only hope you may awaken to the truth and throw off the shackles of error and forsake all man-made teachings.

"Our chapel is at the corner of Jacob and Forty-second Streets. Our times of meeting are as follows: Sunday-school 10.30 A. M. Testimony-meeting 2.30, and preaching 7.30 P. M. on Sundays, and prayer-meeting every Wednesday evening at 7.45. The last three evenings of this week we have a bazaar at the church.

Editors Herald: I came to this place to try what I could do in the missionary line, for although I am not so strong as I once was in body I feel just as anxious for the work and just as much ambition as ever and I have got altogether too much vitality to sit down and let it go to waste. When I tried this mission before on account of the altitude of the place and the great smelters that filled the air with sulphurous smoke I could not stand it, but now the smelters are moved to Douglas and it is all right here—at least it is much better. There are only about a half dozen Saints in this city of twelve thousand inhabitants and they live widely apart, but they are good, earnest Saints and are well worthy of being looked after. They are mostly miners and it takes much of their time to provide the bread that perisheth, but they are going to make an effort to get a place to preach in, and you may expect to hear from us later on. I find a pleasant home at the home of Bro. and Sr. Rehwald. They, like the others, have their hearts and hands open to the needs of the work and its defenders. I came among these people by permission of the missionary in charge and as a kind of volunteer and by the solicitation of some of the Saints, and I truly hope that fruit may be gathered sufficient to justify my coming.

May the Lord direct us in our work is my prayer.

Editors Herald: I can not get along without the Herald any longer. The church is moving on and I am left away behind as far as a knowledge of its movements is concerned. I have plenty of reading but I like to keep posted and apace with the church. I am so thankful for the gospel and for the comfort and peace it brings to me in my lonely condition. I live alone and yet I am not alone. I know God and the angels are near; I feel they are watching over me and caring for me. I have passed through many trials and sorrows. I know the dear Lord knows what is best for us. We are called to pass through the refiner's fire that the dross may be removed and the gold shine out with a richer glow. One year ago this month my husband passed over to the "land immortal, the beautiful of lands," and I am left alone, as I have said. I have comfort and consolation in the gospel. I do not see how people live without it. I am trying to live worthy of the name I bear and trying to come up higher. I realize we are passing away—when evening comes one day more has gone never to return—one day less to live—one day more of my probation gone. Oh, how very important that we should live so near to God the Spirit might always be with us! Pray for me that my understanding may be enlightened, that my mind may be clear and influenced by the Holy Spirit, that I may be enabled to comprehend greater depths of his love and be brought nearer to my Savior.

If Bro. F. C. Smith would send his address I would like to hear from him and his family.

Your sister in the one hope,

MRS. FRANK GREEN.

Editors Herald: As we are out here among a class of people that are professing Christians and who are claiming divine guidance from God and claiming sanctification, we are made sad when we see the coldness of these people when they come and ask us if we are saved and we say we have got salvation. Therefore when they say, Why, you people are so slow about making it known, and if we do not bob up and down when they want us to they complain to us at say and we are prejudiced, and at the same time if we ask them anything about the water birth they will say, Now, brother, we will not contend with you and drive away the Spirit. Such is the language of a Reverend Johnson and wife who have been in our midst for two weeks holding a revival. This man quoted Christ's language, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God," and then he said, "There is a natural birth and a spiritual birth and you will notice here nothing about the water birth, so there were only two births intended." We were led to say that the thing said was the thing intended, so we are called mossback Christians because we do not agree with them on every point. These people are right in my judgment in regard to holiness, but they boast too much about it in every testimony. They declare they are saved from sin. They say it is either heaven or hell and they tell the people that do not come up to the mourners' bench that they are going down to a devil's hell. They tell them that if they do not leave their lodges they will go to hell.

May God send some one into this community that can prove to this people that God is a loving Father who only punishes his children to reclaim them, instead of a monster. I praise God for evidence in his word that gives me a better conception of him than that.

We have not had any gospel preached here since Brn. Wight and Gamet left last winter. Any of the missionary force are welcome to come that want to and we will do the best we can in regard to taking care of them.

Ever in the conflict,

S. F. BUTTS.

Editors Herald: As I hardly ever see anything from this place I will write a few lines. I can truly say that I appreciate having the privilege of attending the different services. We have Sunday-school at ten, prayer- and testimony-meeting at eleven and preaching by one of our branch officers at night. Bro. Mintun was here and preached almost three weeks; had fair attendance. There are some interested and I trust they will obey ere long. The conference convened the 10th and 11th of this month; had a small attendance, there being considerable sickness, and am sorry that Bro. Roth was so sick he could not attend. Was glad to have Bro. McKiernan with us once more; it seems like old times.

Still hoping and praying that the honest in heart everywhere may have the chance to hear this gospel and obey it,

EMMA E. PARK.

Editors Herald: I would like to add some more testimony to the Indian story of January 24, 1896.

In an old pictorial history of America, by S. G. Goodrich, published by House & Brown, 1850, I find on pages 69 and 70 these words: “Montezuma was sovereign of the empire of Mexico when the Spaniards landed there. The monarch was soon informed of the arrival of these strangers. Throughout the vast extent of his kingdom carriers were placed at different distances who speedily acquainted the court with everything that happened. In the most distant provinces their dispatches were composed of pieces of cotton upon which were represented in pictures the several circumstances of the affairs that required the attention of government. The figures, or pictures, were intermixed with hieroglyphic characters which supplied what the art of the painter had not been able to express. It was to be expected that a prince who had been raised to the throne by his valor; who had extended his empire by conquest; who was in possession of numerous and disciplined armies, would have dispatched troops immediately to disperse a handful of strangers who dared to infest and plunder his domains. But this step was neglected. . . . The writers of this superstitious nation have not scrupled to declare to the whole world that a short time before the discovery of the New World it had been foretold to the Mexicans that an invincible people from the East would soon come among them who would in a terrible manner avenge the gods irritated by their horrid crimes.”

On page 29 in back of history is this about the paper which was used for the Mexicans' hieroglyphic painting: “It much resembles the Egyptian paper manufactured from the papyrus. It was made from the agave . . . or aloes. Some of the hieroglyphics now extant are painted on deer-skins. . . . Immense quantities of Mexican manuscripts were burnt by the Spaniards.”

These things happened about the year 1519.

I have only added a few of the strongest proofs of this old history in support of the Indian story but hope this will be of some interest.

I was much pleased with the article in the HERALD of February 7, “Zion: the pure in heart.” I think that we will have to be pure in heart and in body before we can build up Zion, and I am going to try to step up a little higher. I think it will be better to try and fail than not to try at all; but I do not think I shall fail altogether for there is so much room to improve that if I try at all I will get nearer.

We, I think, have some chance to have a small branch here in the near future. We have had some good preaching here during the last conference year, and gained fifteen new members, which, added to the old, makes about eighteen in all.

J. L. MIZELL.

BLAIR, Nebraska, February 11, 1906.

Editors Herald: I would ask for space in the HERALD for a few words from this district of the church. Very few write from here, so I thought I might tell about our work. We are not all dead nor sleeping, but there are some few that have oil in their vessels.

Our district conference was held in Omaha the last of January and it was a time long to be remembered. God met with us by the power of His Spirit, and we were made to rejoice in Him. All was peace with us—not enough of the other power present to cause worry. Officers were sustained, and we will next meet at Decatur, Nebraska, the latter part of May. We would urge upon the members of the district to start now to get ready for the next conference. Some may wonder what there is to do. There is much to do. First, pray; next, keep praying that we may be led by God's Spirit, and also that all things may work to the good of the conference; that we may have good weather; that there may be no sickness; that we may not forget, but that when the time comes we may be ready. Come prepared to do God's will as it may be made known to us. There is no patent on this and other districts of the church may also take this to themselves. I have been impressed with the need of these things, and so thought I would write about them.

The Saints of this district have not enjoyed the blessings that could have been theirs, just because they did not meet together so much as they should. We talk of gathering to Zion, but do not seem to know that we may have a foretaste of what that gathering will be, if we would but meet together at our conferences. I can say, and I think those that were at our last conference and attended all the meetings will say the same, that we had a taste, as Paul says in Hebrews 6, of the heavenly gift and we received of the good word of God; and the feeling there was what I imagine the Saints will have when they gather to Zion. It was a surprise to see Omaha wearing such a robe of righteousness as she had on at this conference. Perhaps they could not notice it so well as those from the outside. But all praise to God for bringing to pass such a feeling.

I hope to see this work continue. And as a pastor of this district I ask you to continue in this good work. Keep this great treasure and add to it and you will then gain the riches which it is the will of the Father to give unto you. (See Doctrine and Covenants 38:9.) When you can gain sufficient of God's Spirit I feel that you will then pay your tithes and offerings. I am ready to receipt you for the same any time.

Bro. Shafer of the Omaha branch is to receive tithes and offerings from the Omaha Saints. I will try to reach all the branches in the district as soon as needful. If you need me let me know.

Bro. Belkham of Decatur will take your tithes and send them to me, so if you of the Decatur Branch have ought to give, hand to him. Brn. Hansen, Fry, McDonald, and Mann have been holding meetings near Blair lately. Two have been added to our number in Blair lately by baptism—both children, one my little girl and the other Bro. Bilyne’s girl.

May God help his people to draw near unto him, while he is near unto them. Pray for me that I may not fall by the wayside.

Your brother in Christ,

HERBERT S. LYTLE,
District President and Bishop’s Agent.

DES MOINES, IOWA, February 12, 1906.

Dear Herald: The district conference convened at Runnells the 10th and 11th, and while the attendance was not large it was a most enjoyable session in every way. Friday, the 9th, was devoted to Sunday-school work and S. M. Reiste was chosen superintendent, W. Christy, assistant; Elsie Russell continued as secretary and Emma E. Park as treasurer. Elder James McKiernan, missionary in charge in the district, was present. It was expected that Elder Heman C. Smith would be present, but his being called to Washington, District of Columbia, prevented. The reports to the conference covered a period of eight months, and show active work among the missionaries, and among some of the branches. A notable increase is shown in the branches at Booneboro and Des Moines.

The district Religio society held a business-session on Saturday and elected the following officers: President, A. A. Reams; vice president, Hattie Clark; secretary, Sarah Rogers; treasurer, Winifred Hall; librarian, J. R. Epperson. Delegates to the General Convention of the Religio society were chosen, as were also the delegates to the General Conference, and General Sunday-school Association.

Priest S. M. Reiste occupied the stand on Friday evening. Saturday was occupied with the business-session of the conference with Elder W. Christy as the speaker in the evening. The Sunday services were Sunday-school in the morning, followed by preaching, social service in the afternoon, and preaching in the evening. The conference adjourned to meet at Des Moines in June.

It is expected that quite a number from our district will attend the General Conference in April. All regretted to learn of the serious illness of Elder J. S. Roth at his home in Grinnell. He has spent many years in the missionary work in the church, and we would that he might be spared to us yet a few years. Earnest prayers were offered in his behalf, as also in behalf of Sr. Elsie Russell, who is sick and not able to attend the convention and conference.

The missionaries of the district were all present at the conference, and go out this week to different parts—S. M. Reiste to Tama County, some to continue during the week at Runnells, and J. F. Mintun to begin a series of meetings in the city, giving a course of lectures on the Book of Mormon.

The work of the Master is onward in the district and younger ones are developing for active service in the army of the Lord. Our district is well represented at Graceland College this winter in the persons of Bro. Ellis Shimek of Tama County, Fred Moser of Dallas County and Melvin and Robert Boatwright of Warren County.

Yours kindly,

A. A. REAMS.

CHELSEA, IOWA, February 16, 1906.

Editors Herald: I am just home from Eastern Iowa conference, and, being somewhat exercised by the Spirit, I thought I would write a few words. It seems good to meet those with whom I have associated so long, and to see that they are still in the faith; also to see the love and joy beaming from their faces.

We had a good conference and God was pleased to grant his Spirit’s power to rest upon us and to fill all hearts with joy and peace. All were made glad and to rejoice. However, we received a gentle reproof and I hope we may all profit by the same in the future and remember when we assemble for worship that we may have respect to the house of God, or place of worship, and not be too hilarious and too worldly, but instead show in our countenance the joy of the Lord. We are all weak and have that in our make-up that is hard to overcome. We must cultivate the soil and subdue the weeds and root them up, and clear the ground so the corn can grow and develop and mature into a beautiful crop. So in the spiritual realm: it takes labor to produce a spiritual crop. I find it so with myself and oftentimes come short. If I could only see more of self and less of others, or, in other words, find fault more with myself and less with others, oh, how much better I would be!

I rejoice in this great work. At the conference at Marion God’s Spirit was given in quite a degree; it seemed to stir the very fountain of my soul and aroused that spirit for so long dormant in me. The circumstances are such that my hands are tied; I will have to submit until God sees fit to loose them, so I will try to be content in my lot and try to say, Thy will be done. Thy will be done.

It has been quite a source of trial to me because of others. They do not understand the conditions and find fault and even accuse and condemn. Oh, how thankful I am that there is a judgment-day and a just judge to judge all! Oh, how disappointed many will be! My desires are as strong as ever in this great work—it is all to me. I try to do the best I can and that seems but little. It has been almost four years since I had to leave the field. I have been tied at home and am yet; so if any of the Saints wonder why they do not hear from me you may know I am not dead yet, but circumstances surrounding that I have no control over are the cause.

It made my very soul rejoice to sit and listen to the voice of the good Shepherd, by Elder Whiteaker. There being nearly all Saints, he fed the sheep and the lambs too. I thought then, That is what we need to revive the work—food for the flock. Take a herd of cattle that are poor and all run down—what would we do to recruit them? Would we not give them suitable food and care and nourishment? I talked with a missionary once about this. He said it is our duty to bring them in, then the Lord will care for them. True, but the Lord has provided the way to care for them so they would not come in to drown in sin after entering into the fold. The Lord never did intend to bring them in and let them starve to death. ‘I believe this is much the case in many places.

When we or any one is born into this work we are only babies—we are just little lambs. What does a little lamb need? Proper care and nourishment. Just so with a child of God—he must have the proper care and food to make him thrive and grow; if he does not he is stunted and becomes a spiritual runt, dwarfed because he lacked the necessary teaching and training in the doctrine.

I sometimes think it would be well to appoint some to feed the flocks as well as to bring them in, that they may bring forth the desired fruit and that it may be preserved to the end—not wither away before it is matured. This is, I think, one of the causes why we lack the spiritual gifts so much needed. Such would serve in a manner to keep down division and strife. It may be I ought not to speak, but it is my mind finding fault with none only self, for the day of perfection has not come; if it is, or has, I am way behind—out of sight.

May God bless his work and his people and hastily bring about his righteous purpose. I always crave the prayers of God’s people.

Yours in bonds,

CHAS. E. HAND.

Editors Herald: As we have never written anything for the paper which we all welcome so warmly each week, we thought a few lines from this part of the Lord’s vineyard might be of interest to all interested in this great latter-day work. We have a small branch here, forty-nine, I believe, in number, all rather poor in this world's goods; but nevertheless with perseverance and volunteer labor we are now in possession of a very comfortable place of worship—small but sufficient for present needs; seating capacity about one hundred.

We have had preaching quite regularly the greater portion of the winter. In the earlier part of the season Brn. E. Keeler and N. V. Sheldon delivered a series of sermons which continued every evening for two weeks or longer and which were very well received by those who came out to hear. The house was well filled every evening. They then labored at Bandon for a time, baptizing two. They then returned to Myrtle Point and labored for a while, baptizing one. Brn. Sheldon then went to other parts of the State, leaving Bro. Keeler to do all the preaching here, which he has done well and faithfully. His clear and concise way of explaining the gospel is breaking down prejudice and enabling a few at least to see the beauties of the restored gospel. We are pleased to know that some are about ready to obey and come into the fold. The branch is in a reasonably good spiritual condition, but we feel the need of a shepherd continually with us to feed the flock and keep it up to that spiritual state that should exist in a branch of Saints. The fact that the branch is small is no excuse for lack of spirituality.

We trust it will be the will of the Lord for Bro. Keeler to be with us for the coming year as he surely can accomplish a good work here if continued. He has gained the confidence of many outside of the church and should he not be permitted to continue here we feel that he has made the work easy for the one who succeeds him.

We have quite an interesting Sunday-school—between thirty and forty enrolled. Sr. Keeler is our superintendent. She is quite an efficient worker in that capacity and the loss of her would be seriously felt by the school should they be sent to another field.

Trusting all to a loving heavenly Father, I am,
Your sister in the faith,
LEAH M. CONOVER.

Editors Herald: It is with pleasure that I pen these few lines to let all Saints know that what few of us are in this part of the Master's vineyard are all as well as could be expected, and we are glad of it, and sure all who read this will be glad to hear it.

I also write with some reluctance when I tell you we have a small branch at Santa Rosa, but we have no house to worship in. I think we could buy a lot and build a church large enough for us to worship in for the present for about two thousand dollars. We have paid nearly half that for rent if I am not mistaken. I feel quite sure that all Saints who read this, especially those who know the writer as Sr. S. A. Scott, (now Whisler,) of Fulton, California, will be too glad to lend us a helping hand according as they have been blessed and as the Lord leads them, from the widow's mite to as much as they feel able, and I am quite sure some who do not belong to the church who may read of our needs, will donate some. I will mention as some who are acquainted with the writer, Brn. F. B. Blair, William Newton, Sheehy, and Parker, who all know our condition here, and if we could get a good start from the Saints abroad then I believe the citizens and business men of Santa Rosa would help us out; at least we will give them a chance to accept or reject. We have received letters from Saints in Oregon, Pennsylvania, and other places who are isolated and are desirous of living where there is a church. Those elders I mentioned who know the writer and know our condition will please make it known from the pulpit, if they feel so led. Our bishop, Bro. C. A. Parkin, says there must be something done or our branch will go down and we will have no church to worship in. I hope all who read this will give it a deep thought for good, and finally put their thoughts into action. Please send all donations to Elder B. N. Fisher, 730 Tupper Street, Santa Rosa, California.

All Saints, and others, who may read this and who are desirous to come to California, my husband will do all in his power to locate them.

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. S. A. WHISLER.

BROOKELAND, Texas, January 30, 1906.

Saints' Herald: I feel it my duty to tell you about the good meetings we had during the last week, which were brought to a close on Sunday night. Bro. Harp came to the Gilmer saw-mill, near Brookeland, and preached several discourses. But few people attended the meetings, on account of prejudice, I presume.

There were two preachers living at the mill, who would not come to hear or to help the man of God at all until I got after them. The Christian minister came once and got his little jug full and left. The Baptists minister came out the last service, and he got his little jug so full it ran over; and if his wife had not come to the rescue I think he would have confessed he had heard the truth for once in his life. She came at Bro. Harp with both hands clawing the air, and might have damaged Bro. Harp's face and eyes if he had not had a stick in his hand. Well, the congregation had a hearty laugh, and nobody got hurt; but they will not soon forget the powerful discourse they heard on Sunday night. As for the preachers, I have good reason to believe they tried to get up a crowd of toughs to disturb the meetings; but I became aware of their plans, and put a stop to the proceedings. I think they are not likely to forget me or what I said to them. As for the two preachers, I had already caught them holding a caucus by themselves, and I went for them fore and aft, till they separated and each went his way. They did not know anything about my belief or what I had been. I accused them of cowardice, professing to be men of God, and turning the cold shoulder against a man of God, while wickedness was running rife around the mill. I told them that there was but one true church, and that the old Roman Catholic Church was the mother of harlots, and that all of those man-made creeds were her offspring, and all together constituted Babylon, Mystery Babylon if you please. They took a good look at me, but made no reply. I am glad that Bro. Harp came, as he did much good, and baptized some that are near kin to me.

Kind regards and love to all the Saints.

Yours for truth and fair play,

SAMUEL SKERRILL.

PUEBLO, Colorado, February 23, 1906.

Editors Herald: Since leaving home at Christmas I have been working here for the Missouri Pacific Railway as brakeman. The Saints here have a small branch, a Sunday-school, and a Religio.

Branch President Woolsey is a priest. He and his good wife will leave here for Warrensburg, Missouri, about the first of March. Elder Simms is doing what he can to forward the work. Sr. Crossley is Sunday-school superintendent and Bro. Yockey is Religio president. The meetings are held in the Saints' homes.

The Brighamites have a little church here on the corner of Fountain and Seventh Streets. I visited them a few times last month and one Sunday afternoon while the branch president, William A. Coleman, was presiding, the mission president asked me to address the meeting. I accepted and spoke on unity. I showed that the abundance of the manifestation of the Holy Spirit was being withheld from the church because of its divided condition, and cited the fact that the church was not receiving revelations and instructions like it did before the death of Joseph and Hyrum in 1844. Three or four others spoke and all expressed a desire for peace and harmony amongst all Book of Mormon believers. President Coleman in his closing remarks commended the ideas that were advanced and hoped to see a better spirit prevail amongst the factions of the church.

After the meeting I distributed suitable tracts from the Herald Office to the congregation and officers, and was invited to visit the branch often. They treated me with kindly hospitality. At the home of one family we spent three hours reading and discussing Elder Jason W. Briggs' tract, The Basis of Brighamite Polygamy.

After the evening meeting while walking from the church with two young ladies of the congregation one of them said, "Well, I believe I am a Josephite," and the other said, "So am I." In doing this work the divine Spirit gave me enlightenment, and liberty for which I am humbly thankful.

While reading the Ram's Horn of February 17 I found the following item, which reminded me of the fact that when section 125, paragraph 11, of Doctrine and Covenants was given to the church in April, 1901, there was very little prospect of the people of China accepting the doctrine of Christ:

"The desire for foreign books is so great in China to-day that the missionary is pressed upon by the crowds, eager to get his Bibles and other publications, and the press at Shanghai is six months behind in its orders. The entrance of God's word gives light, and creates an appetite for more of sacred truths and instruction. One Bible in a heathen country will create a demand for a hundred copies, one tract a craving for numberless 'portions' of the blessed Book. Herein lies a strong incentive to the distribution of religious literature among the needy, backward people of the earth."

Go to, brethren.

Yours in the one faith,
JohN Grainger.

PETERSHAM, Sydney, New South Wales, Australia,

Editors Herald: With pleasure I write to express my appreciation of the many interesting letters from Saints in various parts of the world where the angel's message has been preached. A review of my experience since obeying the gospel of Christ shows it to have been an eventful one, even before my uniting with this church, having up to that time been a member of the Methodist faith. Becoming dissatisfied with the doctrine taught by that body, as it was contradictory in many respects to that taught by Jesus, I began in earnest to take in the situation and seek for the kingdom or church of God here on earth. Having examined several of the doctrines taught in the popular churches and finding them all teaching contrary to each other and to the Holy Scriptures, I determined to go to God in earnest prayer, and if ever there was a time that I asked God to hear and answer prayer it was at that time, for I had now come to the point of decision. I prayed, "O Father in heaven, if thou hast a church here on earth teaching the whole that the Lord Jesus taught, do lead me into that church for I hunger for the true doctrine of Jesus." After pleading in prayer for some time for direction from God I was led into the company of Elder Henry Broadway through a business transaction, and he told me what I must do to become a citizen of God's kingdom. Having taught me the first principles of the gospel I felt a power lay hold on me preventing me from admitting to him my desires and intentions. I fought within me an unseen power which tried to hinder me and in a few weeks my wife and I were baptized by Elder C. A. Butterworth at Wallsend. That day has ever been a bright spot in my life. Since then three of my boys were baptized.

Shortly after entering the church a prophecy was spoken to me through Elder H. Broadway to prepare myself as trouble was coming to me—Satan was going to stir himself against me to try to overthrow my faith. It came according to the words of the prophet: E. E. Haworth of Wallsend about April, 1901, that the Lord had a work for me to do and would specifically call me into the ministry to preach his gospel and that many would be caused to rejoice at the sound of my voice. I felt that in the midst of my severe trials God was near by his Spirit bearing witness to me, for while on a friendly visit down at Bro. Butterworth's, in Victoria, and at the church service at Hamilton Branch Bro. Baxter delivered the message of the Lord to me that he called me to be an elder in his church, Bro. Butterworth bearing witness to the divinity of the call. This took place on May 26, 1901. Ordination took place on June 23, 1901, by E. J. Haworth, G. Lewis, and W. H. Broadway, Jr.

From this time on my spiritual life began to enlarge and take a fresh impetus to become the Christ ideal in a closer walk with God in my daily life, although the fire of affliction I have been called to pass through has had the effect of purifying the brass and refining the gold. Of late the Lord has blessed me in spiritual dreams and revelations. On one occasion I dreamed I was watering a grass-field with a hose, passing a policeman who did not even question my right to using the water. Continuing on to the top of the field I came to a recess in the corner where a considerable amount of wheat was growing and by appearance should have been harvested some time before. Feeling pleased at finding some wheat I continued back down the opposite side of the field along an old cart-track. I found old wheat growing along the track so tall that I passed through under it. I came at last to an old retaining-wall at the end of the field. I turned the hose on it to wash it and a large hole in the wall out came an animal like an immense toad-stool, having legs to walk on. It crawled down the wall and as I turned the water upon it the animal stopped and spoke these words: "The work is true. The work is true." Thus ended my dream. On another occasion while undergoing a little persecution for the work's sake among those with whom I labored a young man came to me and said that he had seen me in a dream. Accompanying me was an angel. Addressing him and pointing to me the angel said, "This man was not sent here by the will of man but by the will of God." The young man told me the dream had left a deep impression on him. A few days after another young man called me alone and said he had a dream and saw me leading a flock of sheep, one of which fell down, and while attending to it he said he saw me in the form of an angelic body. Calling to me to come to his rescue from falling I flew to his relief but he had fallen from the beautiful grassy slope from which he was reclining only to hear me saying, "It is too late." The young man said he was much concerned over the dream.

Previous to this, while I was a member in the Hamilton Branch, I saw at about one o'clock in the morning in vision, as I stood outside of the porch door, the whole of the seats occupied by Saints and could see the Saints were enjoying the comforting influence of the Spirit. My attention was drawn to what appeared to me as a white cloud like a mantle hovering over the Saints and coming and resting upon one Saint. The Saint I could see who was enveloped in the cloud would stand up and speak in prophecy. The white cloud kept going from one to another in like manner with like results, and these words came to me as if written on the end of the church: "This will be the condition of this branch if the Saints heed the counsel given by the Spirit through his servants." The condition of the branch afterwards spoke for itself; for God will not be mocked. Truly spoken. The way of the transgressor is hard. I have had many testimonies of the divinity of this work and have enjoyed many refreshing seasons of the comforting influence of the Holy Spirit.
I desire to consecrate my life to the building up of this marvelous work while it is day, that I may win souls to Christ and lay up treasures in heaven.

Our conference just passed has been one long to be remembered by those present, both in the business-session and also in the sacrament- and preaching-services. A marked degree of spiritual influence was present. The conference decided to purchase a printing-plant and to remove the Standard to the Sydney District and to occupy a shop for the sale of church publications and for the publishing of the Standard. The work here in Balmain District seems to have taken on a fresh impetus which was apparently opportune—the time had come.

Editors Herald: We in this part of the Lord's vineyard have recently been favored by a visit from Bro. W. H. Kelley, E. F. Shupe, J. W. Morgan, and Petre. These brethren were here looking after branch matters and preaching the gospel of Christ. I hope their visit here will be of great importance in settling a branch difficulty of long standing. I do love unity in the branches. Saints, let us all confess our faults, be forgiving, and serve the Lord. Let us see ourselves not only as we may see God, for only such are to see and reign with Christ the Lord. May God help us all, both here and elsewhere, is my prayer in Jesus' name.

Editors Herald: I am holding meetings at this place in the little brick church, where I commenced February 5, and we are having fair attendance and good interest.

One week ago to-day I baptized one precious soul and last Sunday I led eleven more into the water and baptized them into the church and kingdom of Christ, and at the church at night they were confirmed by C. J. Hunt and the writer. They all sat up on the rostrum facing the congregation and the eleven all looked so bright and clean and pure. It was a lovely sight indeed and the loving Spirit was present and such a quiet, peaceful silence prevailed.

That makes seventy I have baptized the past year, but I had sent my report in just two days before with fifty-nine.

At the close of my meeting that night several others gave in their names for baptism for next Sunday, and the interest is increasing day by day. So the good work goes on. We have more calls for labor than we can fill. In haste,

Your brother,

W. A. SMITH.

Editors Herald: Once more I essay the task of writing a letter to our beloved Herald from "Old Nodaway."

The district Sunday-school convention was held February 2, with the Guilford school at two o'clock in the afternoon and half past seven in the evening. A good delegation was present from all of the schools except the Pleasant View school. The good Spirit was present to a marked degree. An excellent program was rendered at half past seven in the evening, consisting of songs, recitations, papers, talks, instrumental music, etc. On the 3d at ten o'clock in the forenoon the district conference convened with delegates from all of the branches. Business passed off with dispatch and a kind and loving influence predominated. Good weather and good roads were enjoyed also throughout the entire conference.

We experienced some disappointment, however, as we were expecting Bro. I. N. White with us, but sickness hindered. We were also robbed of the presence of Bro. W. E. Haden on account of interest in a meeting at the Workman chapel near the north side of the county. Bro. A. E. McCord was with us for the first time since coming into the district and was the only one of the active ministry present. The preaching was done by Bro. A. E. McCord, William Woodhead, and J. L. Gussolley. Many of the Saints were exceedingly glad to see Bro. J. L. put on the gospel "harness" again after a rest of eight years.

It is, indeed, a pleasure to be permitted to listen to Bro. Woodhead discourse on the evidences of the divinity of the Book of Mormon, bringing mediasial, ancient, sacred as well as modern history in support of the teaching of the Book of Mormon, and how he delves into the mysteries of archeology! The brother is a veritable walking encyclopedia.

Bro. McCord remained with the Guilford Saints and conducted a week's meetings. Forceful, logical, accompanied by the divine Spirit, and as plain as the writer ever heard the gospel preached. The brother's chart illustrating the conditions of earth and final destiny of man was indeed a help to the auditors.

From Guilford Bro. McCord went to Oregon, in Holt County, to assist Bro. W. E. Haden in an effort there. During the conference two noble young men were ordained to the priesthood, Bro. James Powell to the office of elder, and Bro. Alma Nelson to the office of deacon.

Shortly after the conference, on the 13th of February, Bro. K. C. Knudson and wife sustained the loss of their little five-year-old son, Lester, from croup. It is so sad to lose loved ones in whom is reposed future hopes and fond anticipation; but sad disappointment comes to the children of men and robs them of what seems to them would be a joy for ever.

We are now having a siege of muddy roads, the frost all being out of the ground, snow and rain coming just often enough to prevent the roads from drying.

Bro. R. F. Hill and family are moving from Rea, Missouri, to near Guilford, where they can attend Sunday-school and church at Guilford. They will be a helpful addition to the branch and Sunday-school.

May God help his children to prepare for the changes which are rapidly taking place toward the consummation of his great work in this last dispensation.

Your brother,

W. B. TORRANCE.

BRECKENRIDGE, Missouri, March 4, 1906.

Dear Herald: As there are so few letters from this district I thought I would let you know how we are getting along. Although few in number we are striving to do God's will. We have a home class Religion of six members. We observe prayer-meetings each Wednesday evening, thereby receiving God's blessed Spirit as spoken of by him. Although we have had afflictions to pass through we are striving all the harder to keep God's will.

Dear Saints, there is one topic I wish to draw your attention to and that is paying our tithing to the church. There are many who never pay a cent into the church to help the blessed cause along. It takes money to send our ministers out to preach to the outside world. There are over fifty thousand members at the present time in the church. Now there are none, I believe, but who could save the small sum of twenty-five cents a month, which would equal three dollars a year, and if that were paid by all it would equal twelve thousand five hundred dollars. But there are Saints who could pay many times twenty-five cents if they would only do it. Take the free-will offerings, tithing, and Christmas Offerings; they ought to pay

all expenses and still have money in the treasury. We here as a little hand are willing to pay our three dollars or even five a piece if we can get others to see where it is wise and can get the method started. Now think about it, Saints; what a help it would be to the blessed cause.

There is too much pride in some of our churches. They spend their tithing money for fine clothes. We are not going to be judged by our clothes on the judgment-morning, but by our faith and works. Now let us gather to Zion and be prepared to meet God when he comes to gather the faithful ones.

If Bro. Swenson sees this will he please write us as we would like to hear from him.

Your brother in the one faith,

NEWTON HOLMES.

MELFORT, Saskatchewan, February 24, 1906.

Editors Herald: Another debate concluded, and thank God for one more wonderful interposition of his matchless power.

What do you think? Last night my opponent, the Disciple preacher, came and backed squarely down before the audience who were there awaiting the continuance of the debate, and refused point blank to go any further. He had gotten his fill; he had taken off a bigger bit than he could swallow, and, poor fellow, he stood up there, crest-fallen, blue, the very impersonation of despondency and defeat, and said, "I have made a mistake."

On the evening of the 12th this gentleman, Mr. Jones, came to my meeting somewhat through the influence of others who wanted to see him run against me, as he admitted last night. I preached an hour's sermon, and gave liberty for remarks or questions. Whereupon Mr. Jones arose and not only placed a question before me, but made a hot, fiery address for ten or fifteen minutes the intent of which was to invoke on me the ridicule, contempt, and laughter of a few of his supporters who were present for the first time. This turned me into a volcano at once and I made up my mind instantly that if I could get his name to propositions I would humble him before I left this neighborhood. I reviewed him in a ten or fifteen minutes the intent of which was to invoke on me the false, misrepresentation of despondency and defeat, and said, "I have made a mistake."

The rules required that the debate continue from the 19th to 24th or from Monday till Saturday inclusive, four half-hour alternate speeches, each disputant to provide himself with a moderator and they to choose a third who should act as chairman. There is only one Saint here, a sister, so I selected an intelligent young man, a very fair and estimable Englishman, for my moderator, while my opponent of course had a Disciple of the opposite (Progressive) wing. Under these conditions we began Monday evening, I in the affirmative. I felt that my case was just and that the same God who could vanquish a Catholic priest could vanquish a Campbellite. I had placed my case earnestly before the Lord, and in fasting I plead with him to do for me what I could not do unaided. There being so many churches in this neighborhood and so much religious contention I relied on it as a great opportunity to get the superiority of our work before the people. At any rate I had good liberty from the very first, and in my first half hour the Spirit of the Master clothed me with power and boldness.

I found my opponent a whirlwind talker but fatally illogical; and as mean and treacherous as he was wrong. He strained and seized every opportunity to embitter the audience against me, many of whom never heard the Book of Mormon presented only as they heard it in my half-hour addresses. He tried to work on their feelings and again to excite laughter. Utterly failing to follow me in my dissection of Bible texts and chapters, in my archaeological evidences, he exhausted his resources for ridicule and bare assertion. Of course while the audience could see that he was steering conspicuously clear of my subject-matter, their prejudices were decidedly in his favor to begin with; for aside from the sister here and me I could not say that another one in the locality was an actual believer in the Book of Mormon.

So passed away the three nights on proposition No. 1, and while I was wide awake to the fact that the majority of the audience were against me, even up to the last evening, I sensed a material good was resulting to us. Nevertheless in that a great inquiry existed with reference to the contents of the Book of Mormon and a curiosity on the part of a number to buy and to read it in the which if they did so I could but suspect that conviction would most likely follow in some cases, as it usually does. This I noticed also, that the thinking element and the few who were investigating were becoming friendlier to me and stronger in their conviction with reference to the authenticity of the book when they discerned his unfairness and utter disregard of the evidences I adduced. He would turn when speaking rage and foam at me so much that I could discern the experience and nearness to him I could discern behind the scenes that my speeches had badly crippled him; I could discern a cringing and embarrassment in his own consciousness of the fact that he was unable to follow me and explode my constructions on the prophecies and an array of the pithest archaeological proofs I could summon before them. It was not till the last evening that he made any attempt to read from or attack the internal characteristics of the Book of Mormon, and then his objections were so shallow that I venture to say even the most prejudiced could not help but see them melt away one by one as I touched them severally with a gentle explanation. He made no effort to reconstruct them.

Before his first speech and in my first speech on Wednesday evening—last evening on the Book of Mormon proposition—I presented him with a paper of questions to be answered in his next address, questions that I had put to him repeatedly and he had failed to answer them "and," as I told the people, "because he can not." Neither did he.

I had perceived by a remark he dropped—perhaps inadvertently—that he intended to launch the Spalding yarn and some new matter in his last speech. No rule obtained to prevent this and I was not particular about any for my proposition came first, and I thought if he tried that I could work it in my last speech on proposition two. So in my last speech on Book of Mormon proposition I stated the Spalding theory and refuted it so thoroughly that I knew if he brought it up at all it would certainly be uninformative with the people. Well, he brought it up, because it was a part of his program, but it was a labored effort for him indeed, and appeared as flat as mud. It was only the support of his little band of sympathizers that kept him up, who could put him on the back and say, "You did well." They displayed great bitterness toward me and truly I sensed the statement of the Master, who said, "Behold I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves"; and again through Oliver Cowdery to the first Twelve that not only congregations "but nations will gnash their teeth upon you."

Unconsciously to the audience but not to me, Mr. Jones was growing weaker and getting discouraged. He found me with tried the first evening to shorten the duration of debate; said that he did not know the rules said six nights when he signed them. Positively did I refuse any variation, hence the rule had to obtain.

The turning-point had to come. Thursday night Disciplesism was on trial. He reverted to the Reorganized Church and the Book of Mormon but was called to order and ruled down by the chair. My liberty astonished them. When the session was dismissed they were a gloomy, drooping, despondent-looking man, The daughter of Rome was knifed and bleeding. Jones' moderator said we were "both pulling each other's hair" and he would not come back again. It happened on account of family affairs my moderator could not come again. It is true I handled Discipleism without gloves, and the Disciples were all mad. One of those holy sticklers who are so silent where the Bible is not silent and yelp so loud where the Bible does not speak, was heard to threaten tar and feathers. Jones himself had played his last card. As I told them, he had become like an extinct volcano vomiting smoke and mud; that it was like the last yelp of a dying Indian.

In attack on Disciplesism I quoted copiously from Campbellite literature. Jones objected. The chair sustained me.

Next night then, last night—what?

Poor Jones! He came alone. Not a Disciple cronie with him. He came to back down and back down he did—though very grovelingly. Truly he died hard. His friends had heard the death-rattle of Campbellism the night previous and they did not want to see it kick its last. Truly he died hard. His friends had heard the death-rattle of Campbellism the night previous and they did not want to see it kick its last.

Jones and I turned up our sleeves and went in for the alligators. He and I met in the middle of the road and fought it out. Jones was still as a sphinx—no answer. I pointed out to the people the absurdity of his enjoying a liberty on the first proposition that he denied me on the second. The chairman and majority were decidedly of those holy sticklers who are so silent and yelp so loud where the Bible does not speak, was heard to threaten tar and feathers. But we are told that these things begin to come; so that for at least two years the native food must be chiefly fish. I hear that the people of the Tuamotu islands, except from Pakarava and Malemo, which were swept by the ocean, every house destroyed, even the large stone government house and stone Catholic chapel. The people saved their lives by climbing the coconaut-trees or their stumps. Doubtless before this reaches you, you will have seen and learned of this storm by newspaper reports, but the letters from the brethren confirm it all.

Of the waters the Lord once said, "Thus far shalt thou come!" but in the latter days the angels shall smite the waters and their bands shall be broken, and many places be destroyed. But we are told that "when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." (Luke 21:28.)

May God's blessing rest upon the faithful Saints of the South Sea Island Mission, that they may receive an inheritance in Zion, where neither storms nor oceans mar the happiness of the redeemed.

I have written hastily, for I am anxious to fully answer the island letters, and have but one day in which to do so to catch the mail steamer.

I feel very sad and somewhat depressed at the news of the

A Pastoral Visit.

On the 15th of January I left home for the purpose of visiting some of the branches in the district. Attended prayer- and testimony-meeting that evening at Logan. Found the Saints there in good spirits. On the 19th made a few calls, and on to Magnolia, visiting a number there on the 20th, then drove to the hospitable home of Elder John Garner, president of the Mondamin Branch, and on the 21st met with said branch in Sunday-school session at eleven in the forenoon. Preached at three in the afternoon and attended Religious session at six in the evening. Preached again at half past seven. On the 22d visited from house to house, holding prayer with a number of the Saints, preaching again at night, then on the 23d moving on to Pisgah, stopping for the night at Bro. William Coffman’s. Attended the Pisgah church at night, and heard an interesting discourse from Bro. A. M. Chase. Then on to Moorhead, stopping there for prayer-service on the evening of the 24th, and on the 25th preaching at night. The 26th back to Pisgah to be entertained again by Bro. Chase in a very earnest, able manner. On the 27th went by train to Sioux City, where I met the genial, smiling face of Bro. J. M. Baker, and learned that I had been announced for three sermons on Sunday the 28th. I spoke to intelligent and attentive audiences there, had a splendid visit with the Saints, and assisted Bro. Baker in administering to a few sick folks. I found the Sioux City Saints alive, energetic, and alert. Indeed it gives me pleasure to note the progress made in the past two years under the able direction of Bro. Baker, assisted by his wife, who seems to have a word of cheer for each and all. Their church-building is a neat, commodious structure, ample for present needs. The membership seem to cheerfully and gladly second the efforts of their pastor, and take saintly pleasures in attending meetings. But above all is the fact that a number of bright, earnest, and intelligent young men have been ordained to the lesser priesthood, and are being educated up to great usefulness by the pastor, and each of them is destined, if faithful, to do a good work for the Master, making it certain that the work there is on a sure basis. But they still need the efforts of their pastor. Bro. Baker and his good wife have proved themselves fitted for the work. I hope and pray that they may be continued there indefinitly.

And here let me drop a word or two to presidents of branches. The great need of the times in the branches is good, efficient visiting officers. You should go yourselves and see that this work is carefully and properly done. Develop the younger officers by taking them with you. Call upon them to lead both in praying and in giving instructions in the homes. Also have them take charge of meetings and occupy the pulpit if possible, always supplementing their efforts if necessary, and never forgetting to say words of encouragement and cheer to them.

On the 9th of February I attended the funeral of our good, faithful Bro. James Caffall, at Magnolia; sermon by A. M. Pyrano, who spoke cheering words to the bereaved ones.

Our district conference convened at Little Sioux on the 10th, the writer and Bro. S. B. Kibbler in charge. Ten of the eleven branches were reported. Taken altogether, we had a very spiritual time. The gifts of prophecy and tongues were enjoyed, and all seemed encouraged and built up, a number saying it was the best conference they ever attended.

May the Lord continue to bless his work, and may the Saints respond to the call of the Master to come up higher, is the prayer of your colaborer in the cause of truth,

S. Pitt

President Little Sioux District.
Branch of Frank Powell to the office of priest was referred to district president. The recommendation of Bro. Alma Nelson to the office of deacon by Guilford Branch was approved and ordination provided for. Delegates to General Conference: A. E. McCord, W. E. McKee, Elmer Sweet, E. H. Lang, R. A. Palmer, R. F. Hill, R. K. Borden, J. P. Ford, W. B. Torrance, R. Lorensen, Srs. Anna and Tena Ivie. By motion the delegates present are to cast full vote of district. E. S. Fannon was elected farmer, W. B. Terance, and recorder. Financial report of missionary fund committee, by W. E. Haden: Receipts, $33.50; expenditures, $32.93. Adjourned to meet with Sweet Home Branch Saturday and Sunday before full moon.

Central Illinois.—Convened February 3 and 4, 1906, at Taylorville, there being a good attendance. No minutes were taken. After the original report it was seen the work was not quite dead. A number of new places just opened, lots for preaching. The need of more laborers and funds to pay the expenses was evident. Delegates to General Conference: R. T. Walters, W. H. Mannering, F. M. Cooper, F. L. Simpson, S. E. Stenger, Anna Cox, Arv Wildermuth, Viola Mannering, and Sada Simpson. George Hartnell, secretary.

Seven schools reported; namely: Muscatine, Waterloo, Oran Center, Zion's Hope of Clinton, Fulton, Chatanooga, and Green Valley. Officers elected: John Heide, superintendent; Ella Brooks, assistant superintendent; Cora E. Weir, secretary; Mary E. Green, treasurer. Convention adjourned to meet in August at the same place and one day previous to next district conference.

Southwestern Missouri.—Convention convened at Springerton February 9, 1906, at 10 a.m., in the chair. Secretary being present, the following officers were elected to represent this district at the General Convention: J. H. Hooper, president; W. J. Richards, secretary, E. N. Raw, treasurer. The following officers were elected: President, Samuel Hoover; vice-president, Wilbur-Sutton; secretary, Martha E. Bing, treasurer, Cora Ellis. David Smith was chosen to represent this district at the Convention. The Religio and Sunday-school held a joint session, in which a well-rewarded program was enjoyed by all present. Convention adjourned to meet Friday at 10 a.m. at the same time and place as the next conference. Martha E. Bing, secretary.

The Presidency.
GENERAL HIGH COUNCIL.

The members of the Standing High Council of the church are hereby notified that they will meet at Independence, Missouri, on Monday, April 2, next, at ten o'clock a.m., at the Saints' church. Those expecting to be present are requested to notify the Presidency at once, that due and necessary arrangements may be completed for the transaction of business to be considered by the council.

[Signed] JOSEPH SMITH, for the Presidency.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 10, 1906.

Church Secretary.

CLERGY CREDENTIALS CENTRAL PASSENGER ASSOCIATION.

The following has been issued by the Commissioner of the Central Passenger Association. Those of the ministry interested who have not received such notice, will note its conditions:

"Owing to an enactment by the General assembly of the state of Ohio, effective 10th inst., fixing passenger fares at two cents per mile, the joint annual clergy certificate granted by the Central Passenger Association for the year 1906, will not be valid for purchase of tickets for travel within the boundaries of the state of Ohio at less than the rate indicated, viz.: two cents per mile. If you elect by reason of this abridgment of its privileges, to return your certificate to this office on or before May 10, 1906, the fee paid at the time of its issuance will be promptly refunded. No application for such surrender and refund will be entertained after the date indicated. It will of course be plain to all that the half fare rate under the clergy credential in Central territory, except in the state of Ohio, remains good; that the rate of two cents per mile will be charged in the state of Ohio only.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 9, 1906.

The Seventies.

SUNDAY APRIL 1, 1906, A DAY OF FASTING AND PRAYER.

Believing it would be pleasing to our heavenly Father, and having also the commendation of the First Presidency of his church, I suggest to all the seventies that the above-named day be observed a day of fasting, and that, if possible, they should on this holy day, render for their country and the people thereof, and for the Church and kingdom of God, fervent, fervent, fervent supplications before the Lord, for light to be reflected on the path of duty, that his direction be specially given in the transaction of business pertaining to his work, and guidance in the work committed to all, that God may manifest his hand and help Zion "right early."

C. Scott, Senior President Seventies.

MARESILLES, Illinois, March 6, 1906.

Presidents of Seventies.

The presidents of the Seventies are hereby invited to assemble at a place to be designated, at Independence, Missouri, on Wednesday, April 4, 1906, at 9 o'clock a.m., to arrange for, and enter upon the work necessary to be done at sitting of the annual General Conference.

C. Scott, Senior President, Presidents Seventies.

MARESILLES, Illinois, March 6, 1906.

First Quorum of Seventy.

The First Seventy will convene at Independence, Missouri, April 5, at 8 a.m., the place at which we meet to be announced at the morning session of the Sunday-school Convention of April 4, and also through the church papers if we determine upon the place of meeting in time to get the notice to the paper. Brethren are requested and urged to examine the resolutions of the quorum as attached to the last circular letter, and be governed thereby as far as possible.

JAMES MCKIE, RMAN, President First Seventy.

J. F. MINTUN, Secretary First Seventy.

2500 Logan Avenue, DES MOINES, Iowa, March 8, 1906.

Second Quorum of Seventy.

The members of the quorum who may attend the annual-General Conference of 1906 are invited to assemble at a room to be named later, on Friday, April 6, at 9 o'clock a.m., to arrange for and enter upon the work necessary to be done during the sitting of said General Conference. Let all business rightly coming before the quorum be promptly placed in the hands of the secretaries, Elders H. E. Moler, Holden, Missouri, and F. A. Russell, of the Church.

C. Scott, President of Quorum.

MARESILLES, Illinois, March 9, 1906.

Fifth Quorum of Elders.

Report blanks have been mailed to each member of the quorum with request that they be returned immediately after March 1; but to this date only about one half have been so returned. Will those who have not sent their reports in, please forward them at once. If you have not received a blank, write for one, and it will be mailed at once.

W. C. EARHART, Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 12, 1906.

Fourth Quorum of Priests.

I have mailed annual report blanks to all members of the quorum to the last known address. If Brn. Thomas H. Morr, N. G. Dunnington, A. P. Sherman, and others will write to me I will send them blanks. Please remember that those who do not report for two years will be dropped from the quorum. Our president has been ordained an elder, which will necessitate the reorganization of the quorum, and the first and second counselors urge you to be in attendance at our next General Conference which convenes at Independence, Missouri. In your annual report please state whether you will attend the conference or not. Much depends on your attendance.

JAMES SCHOFIELD, Corresponding Secretary.

STANBERRY, Missouri, March 1, 1906.

General Convention.

Zion's Religio-Literary Society will hold its annual convention at Independence, Missouri, beginning April 2, at 8 o'clock, and continuing until 10 a.m. The program will consist of the following order of business, subject to change as may be considered necessary.

Monday evening, the 2d. Preliminary meeting, appointment of credentials committees, short addresses, or time to be occupied as ordered by the meeting.

Tuesday, the 3d. Devotional, reports of officers and committees, communications, miscellaneous.

I. N. ROBERTS,

B. J. DICE, Presidents of Districts.

Addresses.

My permanent address is, Hubert Case, Piedmont, Oklahoma.

Died.

HURD.—Christiana C. Carter Hurd, a niece of Apostle Jared Carter, died at the home of her daughter, S. E. Tiddick, near Packard, Iowa, February 22, at the age of 78 years, 1 month, and 27 days. She was born in Rutiland County, Vermont, coming with her parents to Kirtland, Ohio, in 1983, where at the age of eight years she was baptized. She passed through many trials consonant with the members of the old church, but through it all her faith endured. Funeral services will be held at the Saints' chapel, February 24, attended by a host of friends, conducted by Elder J. F. Minton.

JOHNSON.—Mrs. Mina Johnson died at the home of her sister in Kansas City, Missouri, February 11, 1906, after three months' suffering from consumption. She was born in Cape Breton thirty-eight years ago; came west in 1888; was married to Nels Johnson September 23, 1888. She leaves husband and two sons, sixteen and thirteen years of age, six sisters and three brothers. She was laid to rest in the cemetery at Independence, Missouri.

General Conference Visitors—Take Notice.

All who are expecting to attend either the Conventions or General Conference are urged to report same to the secretary of the reception committee as soon as possible, in order to have proper arrangements made for board and lodging. By the action of the Independence branch the following arrangements have been made: Lodging and breakfast will be furnished at the homes of the Saints and friends for $1 per week. Dinner and supper will be served at the new, commodious, and well-equipped dining-hall now being erected at the rear of the church, but at an expense of about $1 per meal. The dining-hall will also serve breakfast on the 'short order' plan (get what you want) to any desiring to thus arrange. The above arrangements have been made in order to give the families of the resident Saints an opportunity to attend services. Please write at once, giving information in full as to your wants, etc., addressing all communications to

RICHARD B. Trowbridge,

Secretary Reception Committee.

Hurtful Pride

Notwithstanding the long and pointed dissertations of the Book of Mormon and the able articles which have been written respecting pride among the Saints in these latter days, it is strikingly singular that this personal pride, that is to say, pride in personal adornments, should have taken the direction of adorning the hats and clothing with the skins and feathers of beasts and birds, necessitating the loss of life. We note more especially the phase of it which has been so destructive to bird life, song-birds by the millions having been destroyed that the hats and bonnets demanded by fashion might be adorned. It looks like such adornments were not the work of one’s own hands, as required by the revelation given to the Saints, and we see no reason why Saints, good Saints, should persist in making such display.

For a preacher to ascend the pulpit, even of a small branch, and look out upon the congregation facing him, if he is a thinking man he can not help but see and mentally make comment upon the display of bad taste where bonnets and hats are adorned sometimes with the entire bodies of birds of brilliant plumage and song-birds of the land. It is not only cruel, but it also comes under the condemnation stated in the Inspired Translation that God will require the life of every beast at the hands of man.

The Audubon Society has entered in upon a crusade to stop the destruction of bird life, and we hope sincerely that the Saints will assist this society by absolutely refusing either to purchase or use the feathers, wings, heads, and plumage of any bird whose life is to be destroyed in order that its plumage may be put upon the market.

The Audubon Society has entered in upon a crusade to stop the destruction of bird life, and we hope sincerely that the Saints will assist this society by absolutely refusing either to purchase or use the feathers, wings, heads, and plumage of any bird whose life is to be destroyed in order that its plumage may be put upon the market.

The ostrich, the feathers of which are fine, ornamental, and as costly as any one chooses to pay for them, furnishes an innocent phase for the gratification of this personal pride, for the taking of its feathers does not involve the taking of the life of the bird.

We hope to see at conference a striking recollection of this little squib in the HERALD, and that the sisters will not take their pride in that kind of personal adornment into the church.

Our forests and hedges and dwelling-places are fast being desolated of the bird life which is so pleasant and precious to lovers of nature. Can not these sunshine bands, Sunday-schools, and Religious societies make it a point in their teaching to strike at this too prevalent fashion? Try it, brothers and sisters.

CRITICISM—DISCUSSION—DIVISION.

Now and then some one gets alarmed because there seems to be a growing disposition among the Saints to criticise this, that, and the other thing. And sometimes the statement is made that we have no objection to just and proper criticism, but it is unjust and harsh criticism that is so hurtful and damaging in its effect. But have we not been looking at this matter in a wrong light?

Studying the history of Christ we find that he was often unjustly criticised. His actions, his teachings, his conduct on the Sabbath day—all these came in for a portion of harsh criticism. But this did not in the least detract from his character as the Son of God. He was beloved of God just as much after as before the criticism. That the criticisms were all unjust, we are led to believe from the statement that he “did always those things which pleased” the Father, and hence in no respect could he have merited criticism.

And so we need have no fear of unjust criticism. We stand just as high in the sight of God after the criticism has been made as we did before; and, if we exercise a proper degree of patience and humility, we may stand a little higher. The only harm that can result from unjust criticism, is the harm that comes to the one who offers it, and because of this he is entitled to our pity. If we have reason to fear criticism of any kind, we should fear justifiable criticism rather than the other. Not because of the criticism itself, but because of the conditions that justify it. For all of us to become unreasonable critics would certainly be regrettable; but as we see it, the greater danger to the church is not in the disposition to criticise, justly or unjustly, but in the tendency to choose to do that which justifies criticism—severe criticism sometimes, it may be. To demand that all criticism cease, and yet expect to continue in a course that breeds criticism, appears to us like treading on the verge of folly. The best way to discourage criticism, it would seem, if we object to it, is to take an open, straight, and true course that will afford no opportunity for it to get a foothold.

Some fear is felt and expressed by many that the presentation of diverging opinions through the columns of the Herald will create division among our members; and that the appearance of certain articles on different topics in late issues of the Herald may hinder the progress of the work, and divide our ranks. It seems to us that we have not looked closely enough, or the fear of division being created would in a measure vanish. The fact is that division already exists, on some lines at least. If not the articles would not have been written. The articles themselves are evidence that it exists. They tell where it exists. They open up the avenues whereby, if desired, the cause for its existence may be removed. The publication or nonpublication of these articles does not alter the fact that the division is there.

The first thing necessary to remove the division, is to locate the cause. And to locate the cause we must go to the bottom, and get all the light and evidence obtainable from those who can and are willing to produce it on both sides of the question. For this reason we can not see the advisability of shutting off discussion which is pointing out conditions as they already exist, which is putting the matter before the people in a way that all can judge for themselves, and which is pointing us, if we are willing to follow the light of former- and latter-day revelations, back to the root of the matter, the cause of the division and strife between brethren.

Folding our arms and refusing to look at the facts as they confront us in no wise tends to lessen division. They simply open the way for an increase of division, and if the avenues for pointing out the fact of its existence and the cause for it are closed, where, and when, and how will it be removed?

L. A. G.

SOME THINGS—CURIOUS BUT INSTRUCTIVE.

“There are said to be 20,000 less women than men in the state of Iowa, and the State is also short of school-teachers.” Query: Does this disparity in the number of the sexes justify polyandry, that is, a plurality of husbands in Iowa?

“It is estimated that in the United Kingdom over fourteen million dollars are annually spent on pipes and tobacco.” This represents an immense sum spent for that which is not food, nor essential to the support of human life. An estimated half of this sum is paid by the working class, employed, unemployed, and poor.

“The number of Japanese slain in the war between Russia and Japan was seventy-two thousand, four hundred and fifty, of whom forty-eight thousand, one hundred and eighty were killed outright in battle, ten thousand, nine hundred and seventy died of wounds, and fifteen thousand, three hundred died of disease.” More than one fifth of the entire loss of life resulting from disease induced by exposure, fatigue, want of food, and unavoidable lack of proper care. Oh, the terriblyness of the scourge “that maketh desolate.”

“There are in America to-day more than two hundred fraternal benevolent orders with a combined membership of over five million, who are protected to the extent of about seven billion, five hundred million dollars, and have distributed benefits to disabled members amounting to more than eight hundred and twenty-five million dollars." Is it possible that these orders, all of which may be said to be secret, in that they do not admit those not members to be present at their meetings or to be entitled to benefits accruing to members, are of Satanic origin and doing the works of his majesty the Devil, just because they are thus secret? Or, are they the works of men originating with the wisdom of this world for business purposes and supposed or real benefits?

"The apple-shippers of Canada have formed a combination for the control of the British markets. They will sell direct to the small fruit-dealers, taking the trade away from the big commission firms." The right kind of cooperation; but it is a combination to get gain, the same principle lying behind it that is found in other combined efforts to increase the price of products raised or manufactured. The customer who buys the apples for consumption is the chap that pays the cost of protection to the shippers. They do not buy, store, stand the loss of shrinkage and waste just for the fun of being in business.

THREATENED STRIKE AMONG COAL-MINERS.

It is earnestly to be hoped that the interference by President Roosevelt with the threatened strike among the bituminous and anthracite coal-miners will bring into consideration one of the most potent factors in the whole business; and that is the consumers. We have but little to say about the controversy, but would call attention to what is certainly plain fact: that every advance paid to the miner by the coal barons, as they are called, is placed upon the price which the public pay for the article mined and put on the market.

One of the greatest demands made upon the coal regions is for fuel, and the greater number of those using this fuel are among the poor. It is probable that the rich, the extremely rich, could afford to buy and burn at any price; but the poor can not. Every ton which is used by manufacturers and the carrying on of interests everywhere is counted and the cost put upon the consumer and the article manufactured or the material sold out of the industries. It is not the employer that suffers the loss; it is not the railways that suffer the loss, it is not the great combinations of men who buy and sell the coal who pay the ultimate payment and meet the advanced prices wherever they are paid. It comes out of the consumer; it is the consumer first, last, and all the time.

It is to be hoped that President Roosevelt will emphasize this so that while men sympathize with the miner there will be an expression of sympathy for the consumer, especially as far as the consumer is to be found among the poor.

A WOULD-BE REVISIONIST.

The following from the Christian Guardian emphasizes the manner in which some of the cardinal doctrines of the New Testament are discredited in the minds of twentieth-century religionists. This writer discounts the resurrection, the second coming of Christ, birth of the water, or baptism, and with his ideas realized the religions of men, which have so little in them now that they are but a "form of godliness, denying the power thereof," will certainly become "without form and void." And then they wonder why men who have souls to save do not come to church! The reason is plain, it is time and money wasted. The idea, too, that instead of being born of water, we must be born of the "word" which he discounts and rejects is, to say the least, peculiar.

PLEA FOR REVISION OF RITUAL.

To the Editor of the Christian Guardian.

Dear Sir: It is hoped that the Revision Committee on the Discipline will revise some part of the ritual for funerals and baptisms. For instance, the quotation from Job, "worms" destroying the "body," and "yet in my flesh shall I see God," and the reference to the "general resurrection" might well be left out; the quotation from Job being irrelevant, and the acceptance of Paul's teaching, "it is sown a natural body and it is raised a spiritual body," "not that body that shall be," settling aside the idea of a physical resurrection. The reference also to the "second coming" is out of harmony with generally accepted truth. We do not now expect a scenic second coming of Christ, but as he said, "Henceforth," Revised Version (not hereafter), "shall ye see the Son of man," etc. If Paul expected the immediate literal coming of Christ, and it is unlikely he did, he was mistaken in at least 1,900 years. As Christ has been coming for the last 1,900 years, and as we want him to come in regenerating hearts and churches and society, so may he come, but not outwardly.

And in the baptism ritual why make use of the quotation, "Except a man be born of water," as though it referred, in a high church sense, to the absolute necessity of water baptism instead of to the need of regenerating by the word, as Paul says, "Washing of water by the word," and "being born... of the Word of God"?

The appropriateness of the reference to Noah being saved by water, and the passing of the Israelites through the Red Sea, too, might well be questioned. Let us make a plea for a simpler, more unequivocal form. L. M. ENGLAND.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We are in possession of a short, well-written article on the Book of Mormon from the pen of one who is not a member of our church. Before publishing we desire the name of the writer for our own information, not for publication. If this comes to the writer's notice, will he please send us his name?

Quite a number of the districts have not as yet sent in their credentials to the Church Secretary. They are urged to do so at once, that a report may be prepared for the committee on credentials, to facilitate prompt organization of the conference.

Sr. Melvina Ulmer, Eldorado Springs, Missouri, desires to hear from Laura T. Carroll, formerly of Joplin, Missouri. Those knowing her address please communicate with her.

Bro. John H. Hanson, Goteborg, Sweden, writes that the work is still going on and is gaining ground. He baptized one March 2, and others are waiting for better weather.

We erred in stating in HERALD for February 28 that orders for all goods in his line should be sent to Bro. B. F. Ordway at Pasadena, California. Eastern agents for his bed-springs should order from Peoria, Illinois.

ERRATUM.

In HERALD for January 31 was found a letter from Bro. J. D. Erwin in which it was stated that an opponent of the latter-day work, Abe Carlin, was dead. By letter from Elder H. O. Smith, assistant missionary in charge of that field, we are informed that it was an error, and that Abe Carlin was still living. It was, however, a mistake for which Bro. Erwin is not responsible, and no blame should attach to him. However much we regret the mistake, we are glad to make the correction.

BUSINESS TRANSACTIONS AT KIRTLAND.

When Joseph Smith and others left Kirtland, Ohio, early in the year 1838, they left their business in an unsettled condition. This gave rise to adverse criticism and reports were widely circulated that they had left the State without making satisfaction to their creditors. These reports once started continued to circulate, and we hear of them frequently yet.

The conditions under which they left Kirtland are described by Joseph Smith himself in the following language found on page 136 of the second volume of Church History:

A new year dawned upon the church in Kirtland in all the bitterness of the spirit of apostate mobocracy; which continued to rage and grow hotter and hotter, until Elder Rigdon and myself were obliged to flee from its deadly influence, as did the apostles and prophets of old, and as Jesus said, "When they persecute you in one city, flee to another." And on the evening of the 12th of January, about ten o'clock, we left Kirtland, on horseback, to escape mob violence, which was about to burst upon us under the color of legal process to cover their hellish designs and save themselves from the just judgment of the law.

But before the close of the year 1838 they made arrangements to have their business satisfactorily adjusted at Kirtland. To do this Colonel Oliver Granger was sent as agent for the church and for individual members of the church, including Joseph Smith and other leaders. After settling the business he obtained the three following certificates to show that the business was satisfactorily adjusted (see Church History, volume 2, pages 349, 350):

"A CARD.

"PAINESVILLE, October 19, 1838.

"We, the undersigned, being personal acquaintances of Oliver Granger, firmly believe that the course which he has pursued in settling the claims, accounts, etc., against the former citizens of Kirtland Township, has done much credit to himself and all others that committed to him the care of adjusting their business with this community, which also furnishes evidence that there was no intention on their part of defrauding their creditors.

THOMAS GRIFFITH.

"JOHN S. SEYMOUR."

"To all persons that are or may be interested. I, Horace Kingsbury, of Painesville Township, Geauga County, and State of Ohio, feeling the importance of recommending to remembrance every worthy citizen who has by their conduct commended themselves to personal acquaintance by their course of strict integrity, and desire for truth and common justice, feel it my duty to state that Oliver Granger's management in the arrangement of the unfinished business of people that have moved to the Far West, in redeeming their pledges and thereby sustaining their integrity, has been truly praiseworthy, and has entitled him to my highest esteem, and ever grateful recollection.

HORACE KINGSBURY.

"PAINESVILLE, October 26, 1838.

"To all whom it may concern: This may certify that during the year of eighteen hundred and thirty-seven, I had dealings with Messrs. Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon, together with other members of the society, to the amount of about three thousand dollars, and during the spring of eighteen hundred and thirty-eight, I have received my pay in full of Colonel Oliver Granger, to my satisfaction. And I would here remark, that it is due Messrs. Smith and Rigdon, and the society generally, to say that they have ever dealt honorably and fairly with me: and I have received as good treatment from them as I have received from any other society in this vicinity; and so far as I have been correctly informed and made known of their business transactions generally, they have, so far as I can judge, been honorable and honest, and have made every exertion to arrange and settle their affairs. And I would further state that the closing up of my business with said society has been with their agent, Colonel Granger, appointed by them for that purpose; and I consider it highly due Colonel Granger from me here to state that he has acted truly and honestly in all his business with me, and has accomplished more than I could have reasonably expected. And I have also been made acquainted with his business in that section; and wherever he has been called upon to act, he has done so, and with good management he has accomplished and effected a close of a large amount of business for said society, and, as I believe, to the entire satisfaction of all concerned.

"JOHN W. HAWDEN.

"PAINESVILLE, Geauga County, Ohio, October 27, 1838."

As a further expression of the confidence in which Elder Granger was held by the church and of his good character at Kirtland, at a conference held near Quincy, Illinois, May 4 and 5, 1839, he was appointed to go to Kirtland to take charge and oversight of the house of the Lord, and preside over the general affairs of the church in that place. Under this last appointment he continued for some time; and recently there has come into our hands a letter written him while acting in that capacity, from Nau­voo, Illinios, January 12, 1841, signed by Joseph Smith, which contains the following statement:

Beloved Brother: I long to see you once more, and hear of your success in the discharge of your duties and hope that you will be able, to do all that is in your heart to do in righteousness.

Maintain our characters by maintaining your own, and set such examples before the church as shall lead them to respect and love both yourself and the presidency.

Be assured of my continued regard and prayer for your prosperity and welfare and believe me to be your friend.

You know, dear brother, that it is not a little that will cause me to forsake a tried friend. May God bless you and all my friends in Kirtland.

These certificates establish the fact that it was the desire of Joseph Smith and others concerned to deal honorably, and that in a remarkably short time considering their circumstances and troubles, they adjusted everything to the satisfaction of their creditors. And this letter conveys the idea that Colonel Granger in dealing honorably and uprightly secured the confidence of Joseph Smith, and was acting on lines previously understood between them. This ought to be sufficient to counteract the influence of any adverse stories in regard to their leaving the state of Ohio without their making satisfaction.

We hope the ministry and others will take note of this and be prepared to present this matter when necessary in vindication of the right. H. C. S.

THE LABORERS.

Several have expressed their views of the parable found in Matthew 20:1-16, which I have watched with interest. I believe the parable here refers to the different gospel dispensations, and from it we glean how God in former ages or dispensations began his work. The principal thought involved therein is that the gospel was to be preached by different men at different periods of time. In the first verse he (Christ) likens the kingdom of heaven unto a householder, who goes out early in the morning to hire laborers into his vineyard. The householder referred to evidently is Christ, as he alone is the one that selects whom he wishes to represent him. The laborers are those who hold priesthood authority; for through the priesthood only, we understand, can the people be able to abide his presence. This will apply to the priesthood, eminently and preeminently, and also to the people. The vineyard referred to is the world. Here we find the householder (Christ) and the laborers entering into an agreement to work in the vineyard. The laborers receive for their work a penny a day, as agreed upon. And we believe the penny referred to here is eternal life.

The first dispensation began with Adam, the second through Noah; the third through Moses; the fourth through John the Baptist and Christ; this agreeing with the first, third, sixth, and ninth hours of the parable.

And, by introducing Luke 20:9-19 and Mark 12:1-12, we find a corroboration in witnesses, whom we believe referred to the same thing under consideration. Now, remember that the Lord of the harvest said to his disciples, in Matthew 9:38, pray to the Lord to send forth laborers into the vineyard. And he sent laborers at the first hour, the third, the sixth, and the ninth hours. Those hours are the different gospel dispensations. The morning hour, the hour of Adam; the third, the hour of Noah; the sixth, the hour of Moses; the ninth, the hour of John the Baptist and Christ, making the eleventh hour to be the hour in which we live.

Turn to Luke 20:9-19 and see if we can not glean from him something that will reflect some light upon this subject. Here we have an illustration of the first hour when he sent laborers to gather the fruit of the vineyard in the first hour—the hour in which these men went. And again he sent another servant, “and they beat him also, and treated him shamefully, and sent him away empty.” Now remember, we have two dispensations disposed of. First, the one under Adam; second, the one under Noah. The first man went, the second man went, and both fared alike. The third is sent and they wounded him also, and cast him out. See now what follows from this transaction. “Then said the lord of the vineyard, What shall I do? I will send my beloved son: it may be they will reverence him when they see him.” The beloved son is sent. When? In the fourth dispensation. What follows in the sending of this beloved son? He is cast out of the vineyard and killed. The fourth man, the fourth dispensation, is the beloved son, the owner of the vineyard.

From Christ’s day, the ninth hour, we find no connection, an entire break. Turning to Revelation 12, the woman (the church) was delivered of the man child; the Devil enters upon the scene at the birth of this man child, to destroy it. God comes to the rescue of this child. He takes it back to his throne—the man child—the authority; hence at the apostasy of the church in the ninth hour (five hundred and seventy years after Christ) there is no authority upon the earth from the year five hundred and seventy when the man child, the authority, was taken back to God and his throne. Then after the expiration of twelve hundred and sixty years we must look for his return. By a careful study upon this subject, we will see that every dispensation is connected from Adam down to Christ. He stands in the ninth hour, and from there to the eleventh hour you see there is no connection. So, to make the chain complete, and to supply the missing link, there must be some one in the eleventh hour called and commissioned with divine authority to bring his work forth. We believe Joseph Smith was selected as an instrument in God's hand to restore the work in the hour of God's judgment, in fulfillment of Revelation 14:6.

In verse 7 of chapter 20 you will find this language: "Go ye also into the vineyard." And by close reading of this verse it will be seen that it does not state that those selected in the eleventh hour remained there the entire day, else the question would not have been asked, "Why stand ye here all the day idle?" This was to impress upon them that if they had no opportunity in the earlier hours, why should not they labor in the closing (eleventh) hour, for they express their willingness to work. We think it would be unreasonable that there were set hours for mankind to obey the gospel when it was preached throughout the entire day.

In conclusion: I believe this parable represents the different dispensations of the gospel, when it was to be proclaimed. And as men had to be duly commissioned with divine authority in harmony with God's law, it is necessary to select them at different times—in the early morning hour and the third, sixth, ninth, and eleventh hours.

Yours for the love of truth,
E. E. MARSHALL.

WHAT IS THE "NEGRO" AND WHERE DID HE COME FROM?

I have often heard men say, "What is the 'negro,' and where did he 'come from'?" Some have gone so far as to say that the "negro" had no soul, that he was some kind of a beast or animal. I once saw a book written by a "lunatic," for he must have been—I know not what else to call him—proving (or trying to prove) that the negro had no soul, that he was an animal. Some say he is a monkey or the same as a monkey; but hold on, let us see what Moses knew about them. God made Adam and Eve and put them on the earth to multiply and replenish it, and we find that in the days of Noah there were many nations or peoples on the face of the earth, and because they were so wicked, God sent a flood and destroyed them from the face of the earth, save Noah and wife, three sons and their wives, making eight souls in all.

How strange! But there are many people in the world to-day that do not believe this, and say, "You know that the old black negro did not come from the white man, that when God made Adam he made him white, then he made the negro and made him black."

But one says, "That will not do, for when Cain slew Abel, God cursed Cain and put a mark on him and his seed after him, so the negro is a descendant of Cain; and Cain went to the land of Nod and was not destroyed by the flood." But hold on; we find in Genesis 7:23 that every living substance was destroyed which was upon the face of the earth, both man and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowls of the heavens; and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark. Now if the negro is a descendant of Cain, he surely was a man, but we find in Genesis 7:7, that Noah and his sons, his wife, and his son's wives went into the ark with him; only eight, four men and four women. Then the negro was not a human or else he was destroyed. So he sprang up since the flood. Now let us see if we can not find where he came from. Noah had three sons, and after the flood he tilled the ground, and he planted a vineyard, and he drank of the wine and was drunken; and he was uncovered within his tent; and Ham, the father of Canaan, saw him, and told Shem and Japheth, so they took a blanket and covered him up. And he awoke from his wine and knew what his youngest son had done unto him, and he (Noah) said, "cursed be Canaan, [youngest son of Ham,] a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren. And he said, Blessed be the Lord God of Shem; and Canaan shall be his servant, and a veil of 'darkness' shall cover him," that "he shall be known among 'all men.'" "God shall enlarge Japheth, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem; and Canaan shall be his servants." (Genesis 9:29-31.)

Canaan was to be a servant unto all men; there was a veil of "darkness" put over him, so he would be known among all men. Now let us see about Ham and his sons, and where they went to. Ham, (heat, brown,) youngest son of Noah. For paternal disrespect, a curse fell upon Canaan. He was the father of the Hamitic family through Cush, Mizraim, Phut, and Canaan, who settled Canaan, Africa, and the coast as far east as India. (See Genesis 10:6-20.) His name appears in "Kem," the name of "Egypt," also "heat," "blackness."

Cush (blackness). That indefinite country (land) translated "Ethiopia" in Genesis 2:23; (2) eldest son of Ham, and the country which his descendants peopled is Ethiopia in Africa; now called Abyssinia. (See Isaiah 18; Jeremiah 13:23.)

Mizraim (tribulation). Hebrew name of Egypt, applied on the supposition that the descendants of "Mizraim" settled or occupied. But without disputing the ethnic fact, the name would better signify "black," after the Arabic "Mizar," and Egyptian "Kem," both of which as applied to the country indicate the "color" of the soil, which is dark colored.

Phut—Put (bowman). Third son. His descendants are associated with the Nubians of Africa. (Jeremiah 46:9, marginal rendering.)

Canaan (that humble, lower country). (1) Fourth son of Ham, and progenitor of the nations who peopled Palestine and the Mediterranean coast before the conquest by the Hebrews. (2) The land of Canaan, called the "Holy Land" after the captivity, (Zechariah 2:13,) and Phalestine by the Philistines, (Genesis 15.14,) who came from Africa and took possession of a small part of it. (See Ills. No. 534.)

The world was repopulated by Noah's sons. Shem, or the Shemitic branch, settled Asia. Japheth, or Japhetic family, settled Europe. Ham, or Hamitic family, settled Africa. (See Bible Dictionary.)

Mothers’ Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Reading for April Meeting of Daughters of Zion.

PARENTAL CARE FOR THE CHILD’S HIGHER LIFE.

"Having little time to devote to writing, I thought to decline when asked to prepare this paper, but there came to me in the night this whisper: ‘Tell them to teach the children to love God, and to reverence the service of his house; teach them the beauty of the gospel that they may love it.’

“So, dear fellow Saints and parents, I try to follow out this thought, praying for divine aid to do so clearly and plainly.

"Love, is the very essence of the gospel. How shall we teach the children to love God? Well, how do we teach them to love anything? Is it not by showing them the beauty and desirability of it? Suppose we wish to teach them to appreciate the beauty of the gospel. How shall we present to them of it when they are with you at your work. A man whom I know told me how he learned of the gospel by following in the furrow behind his grandfather and listening to his devout talk. ‘We plow, we sow, but thou only, O Lord, canst touch men’s hearts, and make the word we plant bear fruit.’

“Do we not teach the children to love Nature in her varied aspects by thus interesting them in the works of Nature? They may also thus be led to love Nature’s God. Then, may we not lead them farther, to love God in the gospel by unfolding to their view its beauties, its harmonies, its adaptability to every need, its heights, its depths, its far-reaching grandeur, higher than heaven, deeper than hell, farther than the wings of the morning can bear us, its rivers of living waters,—all as real as the scenes of nature that they daily look upon.

“From learning to understand, they learn to love the God of the gospel, who makes all nature to give comfort and happiness to his children. The service of his house loses its tiresomeness in love; and reverence for its holy institutions follows.

"Parents who understand this gospel are under fearful responsibility if they do not teach it in a manner to inspire the love and respect of their children. The words so full of meaning to us when we sing, ‘We thank thee for sending the gospel,’ are meaningless to the children, who have been left without knowledge and understanding. Of course, there is a divine inner knowledge that the spirit of revelation alone can give, which no human power can impart; that which God alone can give that makes us cry, ‘Abba Father!’ But children are reasoning beings, and reason must first be convinced in us all before we can realize the desirability of the things presented.

“‘The beauty of the gospel.’ Children love beautiful things. The enjoyments of the world, its music and joyousness, seem beautiful to them. But in our teaching we are apt to forget the exceeding loveliness of the gospel and the happiness it has power to give. We are apt to present to them first its necessity or its penalties. Teach them its beauty first that they may love it; its necessity will then be apparent to them, and its penalties they will not need to know; for love swallows up fear.

“Talk to them of it when they are with you at your work. A man whom I know told me how he learned of the gospel by following in the furrow behind his grandfather and listening to his devout talk. ‘We plow, we sow, but thou only, O Lord, canst give the increase. We preach, we pray, but thou only canst touch men’s hearts, and make the word we plant bear fruit.’

"How many children can say that of their parents? I will not suggest the things they too often hear instead of holy converse. Yet the responsibility is upon all to be examples in all things of what is beautiful and reverential in our religion, that the children may learn to love it, and to love God. Let them see that the service of the Lord’s house is to you above money, or pleasure, or profit. That it is your choice above every other place or thing,—the place where you prefer to be found, and the gospel the thing that your prefer, and would be spent for. The child of such earnest, conscientious parents can never be reckless, as he is very liable to be if the only home conversa-tation he hears is about business or gossip; if politics or fashion absorbs all interest, if inconsistency marks his parents' daily life. The stream will never rise above its source.

"M. E. Kearney."

To the foregoing we add the thoughts which follow, taken from an article on the subject of Christening, by W. H. Lyon, D. D., in the Christian Register. This writer makes a plea for the service of christening for its influence upon parents in causing them to be consecrated to the spiritual education of their children. The picture he presents which calls for the need of such consecration is worthy of our study, and may help us to heed the beautiful teaching contained in the Spirit's whisper to our sister, and to realize what our children will miss if we fail to heed it:

"'And Abraham said unto God, O that Ishmael might live before thee!'—Genesis 22:18.

"The cry of Abraham echoes through the Bible. The good book abounds in fathers and mothers and children. We are apt to think it concerned only with the history of a nation, and with men of national importance, kings and judges, prophets and priests. It does treat of these; but, scattered through the annals of nations and great men, we find many stories of family life, like the little flowering shrubs that we see under the tall trees of the forest. Here are Abraham with Ishmael and with Isaac, Jacob with Joseph and with Benjamin, David lamenting over Absalom, Hannah bringing her long-wished-for boy to the sanctuary, Solomon's judgment between the rival mothers. And, when we open the New Testament, it is a mother and her babe that begin the story. We go with Mary to the temple to sanctify her little son, and we search for him with her through the streets of Jerusalem. The wisdom of both testaments gathers largely about children. The proverbs concern themselves much with training them up in the way they should go, and there are no tenderer words in the gospel than those which are spoken of the children of whose like is the kingdom of heaven. In fact the whole Bible is a sort of family history. The story of Israel and the story of Christianity both are told in terms of father and child, and the climax of their teaching is reached in the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. So the Bible abounds in stories of children, and is itself the story of a divine Father and his family.

"But the teaching of the Scriptures is not only tender, but high. The care of the father is generally for what is deepest and best in the child. The cry of Abraham over his first-born—'O that Ishmael might live before thee!'—is echoed in almost every story of the parental relation. Simple as life was in those days, it had its material interests as it has now, yet the anxiety of the father and mother was for the moral and spiritual welfare of their children. We can trace what is popularly known as the Jewish taste for business through the whole history; but when it is a question of bringing up children, it is their consciences and souls that seem to be in view. It is the godly child that is the ideal. The education of the children was a religious education. The only literature was the sacred books of the nation, and Jehovah was as real as the king or the judge. To teach the growing boy the story and the hope of his people, to bring him at thirteen to the temple at Jerusalem, and to make him, as a man, a patriot and a worshiper, was the aim of father and mother. To the good life, worldly success and personal advancement were made secondary. The aim of Hebrew and Christian parents was expressed in the cry of Abraham: 'O that Ishmael might live before thee!'"

"There is reason why the father and mother of to-day should ask themselves just what their ideal for their children is. Life has grown very broad and very full since these old days of the Bible. We still have religion, but it has shrunk to a narrow stream running through a broad meadow of practical life. We still have spiritual ideals, but they are apt to be voices crying in the wilderness of many worldly interests. We still care most, at least when we stop to think about it, for the character of our children. Yet both we and our children live in circumstances which have vastly changed from those of ancient Israel.

"In the first place, the parents of to-day are burdened with much serving, distracted by many interests, and hurried from one to another of many pleasures and labors. The father is no longer, like the ancient carpenter or tent-maker, a worker at home. Steam and growth of cities drag him away from his family often early in the morning, and hurl him back, tired and inert, often well into the evening. Many a man never sees his little children awake except Sundays. And even the man of business, whose hours of labor are fewer than those of the wage-earner has his spare time well filled with various pleasures and interests, so that hardly and evening is at his disposal for leisure; while the evenings that are free from actual engagements are rendered almost useless for any serious thought by the fatigue that life puts upon him. The mother, even in the humbler ranks, has a more complicated life than the Hannahs and Marys of the olden time. Even she has her social duties, and she certainly has appearances to keep up which absorb her energy and hinder by the evening. As to the mother of degree, we know what she has to say about her life,—that it is so full of engagements, mostly out of her house, that she can hardly find time to do the indispensable duties of home. Nothing has changed more in the Christian centuries than the life of woman. No one has expanded into the opportunities that city life has multiplied more than she. Into her hands fall the charities, the art, the music, the literature, and in general the finer and tenderer side of our full modern life. The rearing and training of the children must be mostly in her hands now as it always has been, but it takes only a little observation to see in what danger the mother's duty is brought by this great multiplication of the woman's privilege and opportunities. It is of course an exaggeration and yet it has some truth in it,—the common saying that there are families in which father and mother hardly know their children when they meet them on the street.

"In the second place, the child's own life has changed. Most children, half a century ago, had some kind of work to do, bore some responsibility for the supply and order of the home. The boy in the country had to help about the farm. The boy in the village had his 'chores' to do. Most of us can recall very vividly the work we had to cut, the water we had to draw, and the sidewalk we had to clear of snow. Both in country and in village the girl had to help in the housekeeping. The result of all this was a wholesome training in industry, self-reliance, and the sense of responsibility for some part of the world's work. The boys and girls learned that life did not go of itself, and that every one had a share of it in his charge.

"In our city life, however, the children are left empty-handed. The expert takes away the child's work as he takes away that of the parent. The coal is brought and put in, the water is laid on, and some towns take away the last refuge of the boy's responsibility by clearing the walks of snow. There is nothing left for the girls to do in the house, but it grows less necessary as servants grow more common, so that those who would have been capable young housekeepers in the village are left in our cities to less useful and sometimes less wholesome activities. The strain that is put upon young characters by thus emptying life of all compulsory occupation and of all responsibility for the common welfare is very serious. The times are hard upon a young woman who is not obliged to do anything useful, and who can not force herself into the world of work without crowding out some one who needs the reward of labor.

"So the home situation to-day is this: There is more material comfort than ever before, blossoming fast into luxury. There are opportunities for the education of the mind such as no other generation has ever seen; and books, pictures, music, amusements, are in greater abundance. The problem of the home is moral and spiritual, and in face of it stand fathers and mothers whose tendency is to throw off their responsibilities upon others. In fact, there is a tendency to decline responsibility altogether even at home. The child is set free from parental control to an extent which our ancestors would have considered ruinous. The freedom of our American children is very great—often complete. In some respects, our boys and girls have responded to the trust we have placed in them. They are frank, truthful, sincere, haters of sham and cant, self-reliant. In personal purity they probably have no equals in the world and have had none in history. So far their freedom has made them strong. So far the parent's cry, 'O that Ishmael might live before thee!' is often answered to his satisfaction.

But there is another side on which the growing generation is not so strong. It is a maxim that no one can learn to command who has not learned to obey. It is absurd to say that those who are in their teens have learned all there is to know, or are wholly capable of directing their own lives. The parent, therefore, cannot abdicate his authority. He must take the labor with the love, the responsibility with the privilege. The lack of parental control means weakness in the child. It means more than this—the lack of ability to look up, to respect greater wisdom, to admire higher character,—in a word, it means to lack reverence.

'It may be said that not only self-control, but religion, begins in the home. It begins there, not merely in the prayers which are taught in the nursery, but in the general attitude of respect which the child is taught and even forced to take toward greater age, experience, and knowledge. The home in which there is no disposition to listen to what father or mother says is a home in which true religion lacks roots. Perhaps we may go further and say this of a home in which young people are allowed to be disrespectful of any one of greater age and experience. It may be laid down as beyond question that to encourage the careless and flippant criticism of good men and women by the boys and girls under our charge is mischievous and will react sooner or later not only upon ourselves but upon our children.

'The conceit of knowing it all, of being able to pass judgment upon those who are recognized as capable and respectable in their places, is as harmful as it is false. To be conscientious, to be ambitious, to know that there are others who are more wise or experienced, and to defer to them, are necessary to all ambitious to know and to grow, and are the roots of that reverence for what is higher that ripens into the worship and obedience of God. The lack of these roots is the source of what we most deplore in the rising generation, the want of good manners, of habits of industry, concentration, and persistence, impatience of control and of submission to moral and religious culture.

'The responsibility lies in the home, for there is the opportunity. The school and the church stand ready to do their parts, but the home must take the initiative and must furnish the indorsement. There is a wall from all churches and all sections, that young people are not found in the houses of worship as they used to be. But where is the responsibility? Not with the churches or with the children. Young people never liked to go to church. They went because they had to go. They never liked to go to school; but they had to go, and they have to go still. Let going to school rest on the mere liking of the child, and we shall see there what we see in the churches. The change in the religious habits of young people does not come from any change in the church, but from the great change in the home, the reluctance of parents to regulate the lives of their children.

So all things point to the need of an awakening to the responsibility of the parent for the higher life of the child. We have more comfort and luxury than ever before; we have better means of amusement and education; we have abundance of art, literature, music. Our young people are, in consequence, bright and genuine, but careless of the higher life. The parent, in the haste and fatigue of modern life, tends to hand over all that he can to experts in various lines. Whether he can shift the burden of the higher culture upon others or not, in some way he needs to be aroused to the necessity of his children's having that culture. Somehow he must raise in his own heart the cry of Abraham: 'O that Ishmael might live before thee!'

'Ishmael's own children are getting to be frank, free, generous, fair, self-reliant, but careless and wild. Ishmael and Esau are always their choice before the meditative Isaac and the industrious Jacob, but the line of Israel ran not through the free and irresponsible sons, but through the careful and self-restrained. The future of this age does not lie in those who are growing up in homes of luxury, untrained by labor, responsibilities, and obedience, so much as in those who are taken in hand by adverse circumstances or conscientious parents, and disciplined into strong manhood and womanhood. . . .

'Parents have brought the child into the world. They love it and wish to do all they can for it. They are sure to care for its body, what it shall eat and wherewithal it shall be clothed. They are sure to care for its manners, that they shall conform to the requirements of refined society. All these things the father and mother are compelled to attend to by the pressure of the common sentiment of the world or of the social circle. There are many cares and anxieties which they are sure not only to have, but to exaggerate. Those who have no children, or whose children have not arrived at sufficient age, stand astonished at some things that rob fathers and mothers of sleep and weigh down days with worry or disappointment, so irrelevant and unnecessary to happiness do they seem.

'But what fathers and mothers need to be reminded of is what they so often forget among meaner anxieties,—their duty toward their child's highest life, the life of the soul, which may be independent of all circumstances, and need not hang on the favor of any social circle or family line. How often we wake to the dreadful fact that, while we have trained our children in certain conventional ways, have given them the education of the day, have given them accomplishments, we have been as those of old who gave tithes of mint, anise, and cummin, and forgot the weightier matters of the law,—justice, mercy, and truth. We have taken thought for food and raiment, but have not sought first, the kingdom of God and his righteousness. We have given our boys and girls everything else, but have left out the food of the soul. Here they are, heirs of all that a great material civilization can leave to them, but selfish, fretful, weak of will, without the serenity of a true faith. Like the ancient king at his luxurious table, we see written on the wall the verdict upon our fatherhood and motherhood, 'Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting.'

'There is an eternal life here and now, independent of circumstances and of the world itself, which, if any one lack, he is poor indeed, however great his fortune, and a failure indeed, however great his success in the eyes of men.

Program for April Meeting of Daughters of Zion.

Hymn; prayer; reading and discussion of "Parental care for the child's higher life," from "Home Column"; roll call; response, scripture text showing love in the gospel; paper, "What is our ideal for our children," followed by discussion; business; closing hymn.

Prayer Union.

A lady residing on Albany Avenue, Toronto, Canada, but not a member of our church, desires the prayers of the Saints for her only son, a very intelligent young man, and greatly interested in the restored gospel, but unable to get to our meetings on account of what is known as creeping paralysis in both the lower limbs. Will the members of our church Prayer Union kindly remember this sad case in their petitions to the throne of grace?

WAXAHACHIE, Texas, February 18, 1906.

Editors Herald: As your columns are for the benefit of all, I would like to put in a few words, maybe to the interest of some one.

Bro. Harp was with us on last Sunday afternoon; he preached twice. Baptized and confirmed one. Administered to four sick ones, and administered the sacrament, and organized a Sunday-school. The Spirit being present, it was a time of rejoicing. The brother was certainly blessed, and we were all edified. The brother did much good while here, and it will be long remembered by us.

We had our first Sunday-school to day. Not many outsiders present, but we hope that they will come. We are going to do all we can to get them to come, for we want to teach this grand and glorious gospel.

Since last Sunday, we feel like sheep without a shepherd, as the brother was with us several days; but realizing that it was impossible for him to stay, we went to the One that can give comfort.

While praying through the week that God might pour out his Spirit upon us, I was made to think there were blessings waiting. To-night before prayer-meeting I was praying for the blessings; the Devil did all he could to make me think it would be of no worth; finally the time came to open meeting. I was called on to preside, so I did, telling the Lord in my prayer that it was altogether in his hands whether there was any good done or not. Feeling our dependence in God, I left it with him. The meeting passed on very well until it was about half over, when the Lord saw fit to pour out a blessing on his weak creatures and the Saints were made to rejoice when the Spirit filled the house with a brilliant light, far above that of the lamps, and rested on all of the Saints that they spoke by the Spirit of God in much power. It seemed for a while that heaven and earth had come together. It was a time that will always be remembered.

So, Saints, let us live so that God will be with us whether we are gathered or alone. It will take pure lives, constant prayer, and study of God’s word and talking it to your friends.

Pray for me, Saints, as I do for you, and that the Lord may redeem Zion and gather his people so they can be together and praise God that brought them to the promised land.

Your brother in the Faith,

Editors Herald: After spending two weeks at the bedside of my father, Williard Woodstock, whose earthly life closed peacefully on Monday, February 19, I feel constrained to pen a few lines to your pages. While we are called upon to pass under the cloud of sadness as we miss the loved one in our home, we do not mourn as those without hope. And within me, at least, this hope in the gospel is growing brighter day by day. I never supposed it possible for death, with all its natural sadness, to enter our home circle, removing one of our number, yet leaving so little to regret and accompanied by so sweet a spirit of peace—that “peace which passeth all understanding,” which He has promised his children. It is of this blessing of the Master amid our grief that I wish to bear testimony.

For four months father was confined to his room with cancer of the liver and stomach. Through our faith and prayers and repeated administration his suffering was so reduced as to baffle the understanding of all the physicians. Naturally, as he took almost no nourishment, his strength gradually declined. He was patient and resigned and his mind was perfectly clear to the last and his faith firm—not that he should recover, but that his patriarchal blessing should be fulfilled. From the letter that his work was accomplished and that his last days should be as a beautiful setting of the sun, his reward glorious, and his inheritance sure. A few hours he fell into a peaceful sleep from which he did not wake. Oh! how peaceful is the sleep and rest of those who die in the Lord. I had thought this a beautiful gospel to live, but its true beauty can never be realized in mortality. The change from earth-life to that of paradise must be grand beyond description, only to be followed by millennial reign when we may complete our growth and development and grow into his likeness, and then to enter into that eternity of bliss in the celestial kingdom prepared for the faithful from the foundation of the world.

A few facts in father’s life may be of interest to the Saints. His father, Williard Woodstock, an elder in the old organization, united with the church in its earliest days in New York, and coming west with the Saints, stopped at Springfield, Ohio, where Willard Woodstock was born November 21, 1840. In 1842 the family moved to Nauvoo, where the father and mother were often employed in the household of Joseph the Seer. They remained in Nauvoo until after the death of the Prophet when, rejecting the false leadership of Brigham Young, they came to Wisconsin and settled upon a preempted homestead near Janesville. Although having a full knowledge of the doctrine and raising a large family in the fear of the Lord, father did not unite with the Reorganization until June 29, 1889. In 1885 he was ordained a teacher in the Janesville Branch. With the assistance of a kind and loving wife he reared a happy, Christian home, lived a noble, honest life, was devotedly loved by the family and highly respected by all who knew him.

During his last illness we could not but feel the Father’s blessing of strength, comfort, and guidance. Tenderly the Lord dealt with us; lovingly he ministered unto us. To him we feel grateful.

On Saturday, the 24th, I was called to Janesville to say such words of comfort and consolation as it may be given man to say to those who sorrowed in the death of little Earle, youngest child of Sr. Carrie Hoague-Baker. We love the little ones and would keep them with us, yet we do not know what a beautiful work the Master may have for them elsewhere.

I am again at my duties in this place, which, though pleasant, occupy far too much of my time. I love the Master’s work. I feel my isolation, yet find much to cheer in the church papers, the Sunday-school and RELIGIO study, and, most of all, in telling the gospel story to those who will hear it. My efforts seem small and unavailing, yet all given in the Father’s name. May his peace and strength rest and abide with all the Saints.

Hopefully, in gospel bonds,

CHARLES B. WOODSTOCK.

Editors Herald: I wish to furnish a few lines to your columns for the Saints and friends calling their attention to the baptism of a Sr. E. B. Denton at McGaha, Adair County. I baptized Bro. Denton in Rock Castle County, near Brodhead, my home, in October, 1903, and he is the brother I walked seventy miles to see last August and the Lord raised him up at that time and I baptized his wife and his brother on August 2 last. The brother was healed and afterwards came to see me, showing and telling the people what the Lord had done for him, but a short time ago he lost his mind and they sent for me but I could not go. It was beyond my power I assure you, for there is nothing too hard for me to do that I can do for the Lord. At that time I was working for the support of my family with a broken toe and a mashed finger, and the streams were so full that I could not cross them. I now have a letter from Sr. Denton begging me to come and preach there for them, and she also speaks of her temporal affairs, and I know them to be true; they have had a great deal of sickness and have worked hard trying to pay for a little home, and have it nearly paid for, but still owe about forty dollars on it, and it is nearly due. Then she has no horse to work with to take care of her crop. She has three little children. They must be fed, and if I did not know this sister to be a hard working woman I would not bother you with the case. I owe her enough to pay for the little place and put her out of debt but at present it is impossible for me to provide properly for my own; but I have better prospects ahead and will do all in my power to save her home.

Now, dear Saints, if you can not send her any money, write her. She will be so glad to receive encouragement. Send her the Ensign, or any helpful matter you can. She will use it well. I myself met with a loss Saturday night by fire.

Your brother in Christ,

W. H. FORBES.

DELOIT, Iowa, March 12, 1906.

Editors Herald: This leaves me at the above place, where I have been for the past five weeks, with good attendance and good attention. The 28th of February I baptized one, and March 1 I baptized eleven, and yesterday we troubled the water again and I led fourteen more down into the water and baptized them beneath the cool waves into the church of Jesus Christ. That makes eighty-four that have been baptized the past twenty-five. At the close of the meeting last night a few more gave in their names for baptism.

The interest seems to be good.

JOPLIN, Missouri, March 2, 1906.

Editors Herald: Having come down here from the exalted heights of Colorado's altitude in the hope of benefiting my rheumatic leg by the change, I am preaching, in company with Bro. Evan Davis, in a series of meetings in the Joplin church. The interest seems to be good. I feel well while in the stand dispensing the word.

I am very much interested in this work, more so now than in the past, from the reason that there seems to be a movement at present toward the realization of the whole benefit that may come through the gospel, and not of a part only. The gospel comprehends the whole range of human needs and requirements, both spiritual and temporal, and has that in its philosophy that is calculated to secure to us all needs and wants along these two lines according to the twofold nature of man, if we will only abide in the requirements, "bounds, and conditions" of the same.

I believe that in the past we have slept on our privileges in regard to the temporal phase of our salvation. We are giants as it were in setting forth the spiritual phase of the work, and have beaten the world in showing up the beauty of the gospel in providing for our spiritual development here, and for eternal life and the justice of God hereafter. Let us be giants also in showing men the better way to manipulate the treasures of Mother Earth so that all who will may reap the blessings God has designed to be enjoyed in regard to temporal things. God intended that Zionistic conditions in temporal things should obtain right alongside of celestial conditions in spiritual things. This is evident from the fact that right in the beginning of this work, as early as 1831, the Lord revealed the law concerning bishops, high councils, storehouses, consecration, tithing, surpluses, purchasing lands, etc.—"And this I do for the salvation of my people."—Doctrine and Covenants 42:10. (See also whole section.) If the Lord has given us these laws to bring about Zionistic conditions "for the salvation of his people," do we expect full and complete salvation without them? I want the benefit of the whole gospel. And viewing it as a whole, it meets all our requirements; it is all we need in this world, should be our whole theme, and we do not need to do any other thing, or so much as waste a thought upon any other aspiration or ambition, but to see to it that we establish the kingdom of God. It is the shortest road to a safeguard against want and poverty as well as freedom from spiritual bondage and superstition.

That the people in the early church "fell down" on trying to carry out the principles of Zionism is no argument against the necessity and possibility of carrying them out now. The people have "fallen down" in every age on trying to carry out the designs of God, but it does not excuse us from carrying them out, or in discouraging the very idea of trying to do so.

I feel like making comment on a few points in Bro. Daniel MacGregor's article in ENsign of February 14. He said, page 153, first column:

"Until humanity, in or out of the church, can, and will, eliminate every item of selfishness from the influencing passions of their being, it is all nonsense to talk of 'all things common.'" If we can eliminate "every item of selfishness" before we have "all things common," we would not need then the "all things common" condition. If we could become perfect before accepting the gospel, we would not want the gospel at all, for the "law was not made for the righteous," but to assist and guide the sinner to become righteous. Remember that Zionism is part of the gospel, and is given "for the salvation of my people." It must be then that it is to assist us rather than to adorn us after the battle is finished in eliminating "every item of selfishness." Conditions have something to do with our progress, and "men housed like pigs cannot pray like Christians," is a thought pertinent to the subject. A New York supreme court judge said recently: "There is a large class, a majority of the population of New York, who just live, and to whom the birth of two more children means a boy for the penitentiary, and a girl for the brothel." This judge must know something about conditions in the world, and it will be light on the subject to our brother, who says on page 153, second column: "As yet I have never met a toiler, willing to work, taking reasonable care of his earnings, who was called upon to live in disagreeable poverty." I can not imagine where the brother has been living that he has seen nothing of the "disagreeable poverty" in the land, in which people are compelled to live right along, and by the thousands too. Come down this way, brother, and I think I can show you a few things as well as the judge in New York City. Conditions make the crying agreeable that we need for the present, as evidenced from section 126, to live right along, and by the thousands too. Come down this .hills," "tariffs," "customs," appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric, should be acceded to.' I do not think the Lord sees fit to give any more revelation on the matter till we build on the outside of this order. It might be to keep reminding us, as he has, that he has not changed his mind about the gathering and redemption of Zion. The gathering is necessary so the Saints may be near enough to each other to cooperate in these temporal undertakings. And although "oceans," "everlasting hills," "tariffs," "customs," divide the membership, the Lord says they shall be gathered unto it from every nation under heaven. Our brother says, page 154: "And yet it is thought a thing practicable to unite this complex, divided band into the running of departmental stores, factories, and other concerns." I am sorry to see him scout the idea of it being practicable when the Lord commands all these things to be done; especially after admitting on page 153 that it is all right in this language: "Good! but how is this practicable!" I would never question the practicability of a thing the Lord has commanded to be done, especially when it appeared to me as "good!"

Page 154, second column, our brother says: "Temporal concerns tend to divide or at least create distrust and suspicion." If this proves that we should not engage in temporal concerns, it also proves that we should not engage in spiritual development through doctrines and theology, for they divide men, cause distrust and suspicion in the same way as do temporal concerns. The brother thinks the church should not embark in "temporal establishments," because they tend to "divide," "create distrust and suspicion." Then he follows the above language with this: "Above all things let us preserve the peace of our cause and leave these temporal establishments till necessity demands them." Does the brother mean to say that "temporal concerns" are bad because they "divide," "create distrust and suspicion" now, but that after a while when we get farther along in the work of perfection there will arise a "necessity" that will "demand" those very things that cause division, distrust, and suspicion? It seems to me that is the substance of what he says. Now, brother, the thing that causes division and distrust is not temporal concerns at all, but the greed and selfishness in men's hearts who run those concerns. Neither do spiritual things cause distrust, but the bias in men's conceptions of spiritual things has caused divisions and distrust that have filled our planet with misery and superstition.

In the arrangement the Lord has made for the managing of these temporal concerns, he has recognized the fact that selfishness will cause division and discontent to result in the management of these concerns, so he has provided in his plan that if a man permits selfishness and greed to lead him to mismanage the concern of his stewardship, he "shall be delivered over to the buffetings of Satan until the day of redemption." (Doctrine and Covenants 81:5.) Again, "Ye can not escape the buffetings of Satan until the day of redemption."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:1. This is said of those within the order which God has directed to be organized for the managing of these temporal concerns, showing what will befall them if they do not faithfully manage the concerns of their stewardships for the benefit of the church, and cast the proceeds into the common treasury. This is the language I refer to: "And all moneys that you receive in your stewardships, by improving upon the properties which I have appointed unto you, in houses or in lands, or in cattle, . . . shall be cast into the treasury as fast as you receive moneys, by hundreds or by fifties, or by twenties, or by tens, or by fives, or in other words, if any man among you obtain five talents let him cast them into the treasury; or if he obtain ten, or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, let him do likewise; and let not any man among you say that it is his own, for it shall not be called his, nor any part of it."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:12.

In order not to be confused with the foregoing, let it be remembered that it was given of the Lord for the government of the order of Enoch, an organization of stewards for the managing of temporal concerns in the church, who were to be bound together, and to honesty, by a covenant. And at the breaking of that covenant they were to be turned over to the "buffetings of Satan until the day of redemption" as a punishment for their selfishness and greed. Read carefully everything in the Doctrine and Covenants on the Order of Enoch, and you will see there is a difference in the disposition and management of property within this order of stewards from that on the outside of this order.

I hope no one will get scared and run away because of the quotations made in a letter by Bro. Rannie in a recent HERALD, from the record of the case in court of the Temple Lot, to the effect that a religious organization could not hold property in Missouri, except church-buildings, etc.; and do not think from that, that our church can not run temporal concerns such as departmental stores, manufacturing establishments, etc. Far from it! In this light consider the following, and see whether the Lord did not consider all the facts and conditions in the matter of temporal concerns and the holding of them: "And your brethren, after they are organized, shall be called the united order of the city of Zion; and they shall be organized in their own names, and in their own name; and they shall do their business in their own name, and in their own names; and you shall do your business in your own name, and in your own names. And this I have commanded to be done for your salvation, and also for their salvation in consequence of their being driven out, and that which is to come."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:9. These stewards are to do business in their own name and names, and so will they hold the property in their own name and names, and it will not be a whitt's difference in effect, from the church doing business or holding property as a corporate body. They are to do it for the church. So if it is a fact that the church, as a church, can not hold property in Missouri nor launch out in merchantile pursuits, I lose no sleep over it, for it is all arranged in the system of stewardships to be organized within the church as the Order of Enoch. Read the whole of sections 101 and 81 on this subject.

Brother Editor, I sincerely hope we will be able as a church to come up a little higher in temporal things, for the time is ripe, and conditions among our people demand that we go to and avail ourselves of the good things of earth, as well as the good things of heaven, by putting into operation the laws and directions God has given us for the amelioration of our temporal conditions. Now, I believe, and sense, I think, the importance of being pure in heart as one of the conditions of God's people in bringing about Zion, but I am also convinced that we must do something as well as be good. I hope we well not get the idea that all we have to do in Zion's redemption is just to be good and stand still. In hope of the true order of things, I await, trying to do something.

J. W. GILBERT.

Dear Brother: I am trying to explain our work, and about the first day of the week, to an Adventist, and would like to have the references that you told us of at the reunion about the people of Israel being forced out on the fourteenth day. Please write them out on each citation so I may understand more about it. I have not talked much with them yet. We have had a good winter so far. We still have our prayer-meetings and are striving to do the Lord’s will. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion; we ask an interest in your prayers that we may hold out faithful.

WHEN SHOULD THE DAY BEGIN?

Editors Herald: The above is one of many letters of inquiry that I have received regarding the Sabbath day. If you will permit I will answer some of those questions through the Herald. Near thirty years ago in debate near Columbus, Kansas, I was sorely pressed by the champion sent from Battle Creek, Michigan, to meet me. He argued the evening and the morning was the day. (See Genesis 1.) The evening first, the day beginning at sunset as they kept it. All others must be wrong. The Sabbath was given at creation, neglected in Egypt because of Israel’s bondage, urged upon them in Exodus 16, and when some went out to gather manna on the seventh day, the Lord said, “How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?” thus showing that the Sabbath law had long been given and disregarded. I could not remove this from this.

In answer to prayer to God in my time of need, after the fourth evening session, after I had retired, talked long on the matter with my bed fellow, a sectarian minister, I again called upon the Lord, when a voice spoke to me, “Don’t you remember——“ I thought it was my bed fellow and asked, “What did you say?” when I perceived he was sound asleep. While pondering upon this, the voice came again as from a far distance, piercing through my entire being, saying, “Don’t you remember that in Exodus 12, the lamb was slain, cooked, and eaten on the evening of the fourteenth? The first-born of Egypt were slain at midnight. That then the Egyptians forced Israel out. That they journeyed from Rameses. A night much to be remembered, because of this, etc. And Numbers 33:3 says they departed from Rameses on the fourteenth day of the first month; on the morrow after the passover. So Israel left Egypt Saturday, it beginning at midnight of the fourteenth. And Exodus 16 says Israel led by Moses journeyed into the wilderness, it being Saturday (as the next morning the manna fell, being Sunday) but not Sabbath, as the law was not yet given.”

I arose early, and found all as told me. The next evening, Friday, I read those scriptures and they closed the debate, which was to have lasted over Sunday. Three converts they had resting on Saturday there went to work the next day and said, “It will decide the matter.” I read, “for in this self-same day have I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt; therefore shall ye observe this day, in your generations by an ordinance for ever.” (Exodus 12:17.) And the reason assigned in Deuteronomy 5:15 for commanding them to keep the Sabbath was the bringing them out of Egypt, which was done on that day. “No, sir,” he answered, “they came out on Friday, the fourteenth. I answered, “No, but on Saturday the fifteenth.” “Read it,” he demanded triumphantly. When I read Numbers 33:9, showing that Saturday began at midnight of the fourteenth; and that they left Egypt on that day, and therefore they were commanded to keep it by an ordinance; and therefore it was one of the commandments contained in the ordinances, this broke up the meeting, some railing upon me saying they would go to a private house half a mile distant and finish their meeting. “Oh, no,” I said; “we’ll go at once,” and we did go, but they rushed out and to another house. But those things I read caused division among them and they were soon broken up there.

In my last letter I spoke of preaching fifteen miles northeast of home. I returned there the next week, Bro. James Yates had vouched for me. Had very few interest, and five of them came to our conference February 2 and one was baptized here by Bro. Yates. I was going there last week but we were quarantined, no public meetings to be held for three weeks. Some cases of small-pox in half a mile of us, several in vicinity. All schools stopped. Sr. Crawley has two more subscribers, for Autumn Leaves; will send for them when I go to town.

Editors Herald: With pleasure I once more come to your columns. As you see by the heading of this, I am home again in the land of Zion again after an absence of ten months traveling in the mission field with my husband. The year’s work has been fraught with a degree of pleasure. Yet through the first four months’ work we had many things to contend against which made us feel we were not resting on flowery beds of ease. This making our third year traveling through the Western Nebraska District, we have become acquainted with all the Saints and have made many friends to the cause of Christ. There are but few Saints, comparatively speaking, in the Western District, and they are scattered very much. Hence there are only two branches—one near Bayard, Bro. D. W. Shirk president, and a faithful little band near Belmont, Nebraska, with the Brn. Mengels as officers.

Our hearts have been made to rejoice under the influence of God’s Spirit many times while trying to get the gospel before the people. On account of sickness and storms our tent season was much shorter this year than the year before. The various causes which hindered we had no control over, so could only submit and do the best we could. The fall and winter was fine and good for missionary work. The fore part of February we thought of starting east on our way home, stopping at various points on our way, and hoping the brethren would forgive us we stepped over into the Central District and made the Saints a visit at Longpine and Inman and enjoyed the few days’ stay with the Saints very much. On the morning of the 15th we were called back to Belmont by telegram to preach the funeral-sermon of Bro. (grandpa) Mengel, who had died suddenly on the 14th. He had lived long, was loved and respected by all, and it was remarked by some that it was the largest funeral ever held in that vicinity. Grandpa joined the church some eighteen years ago, and ever lived a faithful life to the same.

After a week’s stay we again took the hand and bade the dear Saints good-by, this time not feeling as we did before, for we felt greatly impressed that we would not be gone long, and it was only about two weeks before we did return. After a twenty-four-hour ride on Nahum's chariot we arrived at Adams, Nebraska, where we had the privilege of mingling our voices once more with those with whom we had spent many a pleasant hour in days that are past and gone. On arriving home we found the church completed which was started last spring—a beautiful home indeed for the children of God.

Stake conference convenes this week. All are looking forward for the same with joy.

Ever hoping for the welfare of Zion, I remain,

Your sister,

MRS. R. O. SELF.

Editors Herald: It was quite a surprise to read the sad news of Bro. Caffall's demise in the last HERALD. While we can not grudge this dear old veteran for the cause of truth his well-deserved rest, yet we shall miss his splendid, influential example. Permit me in behalf of this mission to pay affectionate tribute to the memory of him who for three years stimulated and labored with an assiduity and fidelity which will never be forgotten in the history of the Reorganization in England. Throughout the whole of this mission Bro. Caffall's name is spoken well of; maybe not as a brilliant preacher, not as one whose special purpose in life was to secure everybody's good will—no, our brother himself often said he was neither gifted with eloquence nor yet a time server. But his rugged, staunch, faithful allegiance to truth and duty have secured for him an enviable reputation. Bro. Caffall was reliable and honorable; and in this age of fakeliness and imitation these qualities are rare. Our brother was a diamond in the rough. All the qualities of value were hidden to many under a veneer of crudity and gruffness, but when you got to the man's heart and soul he knew the difference between character and reputation. With his characteristic fervor he stated, 'I would go to the gates of hell to defend my character.' This was his aim and purpose in life and surely he will not be last nor least when the Master shall say to his servants, 'Thou hast been faithful.' For in God's sight it is character that is the 'supremest thing,' and Bro. Caffall was jealous all his life for his character; and he knew the difference between character and reputation.

Sincerely,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

Dear Herald: Some few weeks ago I wrote to your columns concerning the sickness of dear papa. Now I write the sad news of his death. He peacefully departed this life Thursday afternoon, March 8, and was laid away on the 10th. He was conscious to the last, and of his own accord folded his hands gently across his bosom, as his spirit sweetly went to God who gave it. I feel to thank the good Father of all, who we know has been very near to comfort and strengthen us in our sorrow. We feel that it is only for a time; that if we remain faithful to the end we will meet our loved ones again in Heaven.

We miss dear father, but we know he is far better off. And he had no fear of death; was satisfied and contented to leave this life. Why should we wish him back? The rest of us just have to worry along a few short years, when our time will come, and I pray and hope that we will be ready and contented, as he was. Bro. John S. Patterson had charge of the funeral-services, and he spoke such cheering, comforting words, and we felt the holy influence of the Spirit pervading all around, and in us. Such has it been through it all. It is almost a marvel to us that we are so comforted; but we thank God for it, who alone sends us such blessings. I ask the Saints to still remember us, and, especially, our afflicted sister and daughter, and may God heal her, if it be his will. We truly feel grateful to him that she is so much better. If she were only well, we would be so happy, to have trust in God, for he knoweth best, and we know he will heal, if he so sees fit.

Praying for all God's children everywhere, and for the welfare of Zion, I am,

In the faith,

ADEANE HOPKINS.

DES MOINES, Iowa, February 26, 1906.

Editors Herald: I have written an obituary notice of Sr. Hurd. It is related that in childhood she gave her china play-dishes to be crushed and put into the cement into which the stones of the Kirtland Temple were laid. She expressed herself as desirous that her neighbors and friends should hear one gospel sermon, which because of prejudice they would not come to hear while she lived, but she said possibly they will come to my funeral, and in that way hear. Her old neighbors loved her in spite of their prejudice towards her faith, and she knew this, and thought that they would out of respect for her lay aside their prejudice to attend the funeral-service, and so they did. One of her daughters said, "Oh, how rejoiced would mother have been to have seen the neighbors at the service and heard the sermon that they heard."

Returned Saturday night late to resume the preparations that are being made for a two-weeks' series of services to be held at the Saints' chapel, beginning the 27th inst. It has been without any apparent hesitation that we have been permitted to put notices in stores and hang them in the street-cars, and we have the best advertisement of the services that could be made under the circumstances, and the results are already being seen, for several strangers were at the services yesterday, some of whom are in attendance at the legislative sessions from the different parts of the State. From those who were present yesterday this expression was heard, "This is not the last time that we expect to be at your services, and we will bring others."

Yesterday the Saints held fasting and special prayer for the recovery and spiritual comfort of Srs. Vice and Mather, who are still under the bondage of affliction, and patiently enduring with a cheerfulness characteristic of the results of the operation of the Spirit of God. The ladies' aid society will assemble at the home of Sr. Vice next Thursday to practice one of the beautiful principles that govern their organization in a spiritual way, and to give social cheer and comfort with their presence and prayers.

The services that were held at Youngstown since the Runnells conference, the 10th and 11th inst., resulted in encouragement to the Saints and helping others to understand the faith, and had it not been for the muddy roads preventing we looked for better results. Saints from the city attended and rendered help in singing, and by their presence have done good. It has been requested that regular services at least once in four weeks be held there, which the local brethren will try to satisfy. Some interest is to be seen among the Saints at Perry, who in the past were so active in the work there but became discouraged, and instead of always praying and not fainting they fainted, spiritually, and our prayer has been that again they would realize that one with the Lord was better than a thousand without the Lord in the accomplishment of good, and should they once more take hold of the work with the zeal they once did, and do so unwaveringly there will much good result yet to the work in that place. Saints should remember that the work is the Lord's, and when one fails to properly represent it in his life, in order that the work suffer not, others should be willing to bear a heavier responsibility, and God will supplement their efforts. We should remember that we as the Saints of God have made a covenant with him by sacrifice, and that the keeping of this covenant was not made with the provision, if others kept theirs, but with the thought that if all others fail we will by faithfulness secure the prize to be secured at the end of the race.

While there are some misunderstandings occurring now and then, and a privilege given to the carnal nature to represent itself among the Saints in the branch, the better spirit finally prevails, and while scars oftentimes remain, yet there is a desire to overcome more or less manifest, much less manifest than one bearing the name of the Christ should manifest. There is too little of the spirit of forbearance shown one towards another, and too great a willingness to believe evil rather than good, instead of overcoming evil with good as the scriptures advise. The officials are doing their utmost to correct the misunderstandings, and to bring about unity and peace, and yet save all, and with long-suffering towards the wayward ones are trying to correct all errors, and remove all evil from the church.

We are looking forward with hope and bright expectancy to the good that will be accomplished by the efforts to begin this week.

In the conflict,

J. F. MINTUN.

BERKELEY, California, February 15, 1906.

Dear Herald: I will relate this dream because I believe it will be a light to some, as it was to me.

A sister had joined the Utah church and was very anxious that I should. She talked to me a great deal and then gave me some reading-matter on the subject and said: "Now I know you are honest and prayerful, and I want you to read up on this subject and pray over it and I am sure you will join.

I read what she gave me, and also prayed to find out what there was in it. The more I read the more I could see the darkness they were in. This was at the time that so much was being said about the Mormons giving up polygamy. The papers were full of it and this sister said they had given it up, and had ceased to practice it, and of course I did not know how true the statement was, so the good Lord showed me in answer to my prayers.

I dreamed I came to a large building with nice, large, beautiful grounds around it, the walks laid out nicely; the lawn and flowers were beautiful. Standing there on the lawn was this sister who had asked me to investigate. I went to her and said, "Why are you here? You do not belong here. Come and go home with me"; but she never even looked up from the little book she held. It was of very fine print. She said, "I can't. I have got to get my lessons and it is very hard." Then I went into the building, and there the rooms were called wards. They were full of seats and desks like the modern school-desk, and the seats were full of people, only they were all grown up.

Then I went out here to the front end of the hall and get into our ship." I said, "No, that ship leaks and will sink." They then took me by the arm and tried to pull me onto it. Then I ran to get out of the building at the other end of the hall, but instead of getting out I found myself in another ward. This ward was dark except a little red light which reflected from a small lamp. This ward was the sleeping-apartment and there were large bunks—large enough to accommodate a half dozen adults each—and in these beds were Chinamen and women all together. I was frightened and said, "Why, I did not know this ward was here." Then one of the Chinamen rose up on one elbow and said, "Well, it is not generally known, but it is, all the same."

Then I awoke and knew that although it was denied, polygamy was still there, and that although they appear fair and orderly outside and keep perfect order among their subjects, they are literal subjects, as Chinamen are to the white man when they serve him. There was plenty of light in the schoolrooms, and order, too—just as they have light and order in the gospel but darkness in the rest of their doctrine.

When I met the sister again and tried to talk her out of her mistaken ideas she would not listen at all,—not even argue the question, because the subjects are counseled not to do so. She would not even look up from her "little book." She did not act her natural self. I have since learned that the members, or subjects, rather, are counseled not to argue with us, because I have talked to a good many of the elders of that church and as soon as they get cornered they always say they do not believe in argument. One can very plainly see from their conversation that they are counseled to keep out of arguments unless it is some of their head men. I have been to their meetings just for the sake of gaining information, and I have yet the first time to hear a sermon. It always takes about three of them to fill in the time for preaching; then after all one has not heard a sermon. They canvass the city and hand out cards with their faith printed on them, and the name of Joseph Smith at the bottom, but they never insert the name of Utah anywhere on their cards. In the one faith,

ADDIE DAVID.

There are some, methinks, who will be glad to hear from Boston again, for we are alive and our pulse is good.

As we begin to review the past since last we wrote you, there at once comes to our mind like a vision, a bride adorned for her husband—no, it is not one bride, but four. It was our Bro. Ralph W. Farrell who set the example, when he stole away one Sunday evening in July after the usual service at the chapel to the home of Bro. M. C. Fisher, who tied the knot, in the presence of a very few, which united him to one of the sweetest and noblest young women of the church, Sr. Lillian Sawler, formerly a head nurse at Emerson Hospital at Forest Hills. I am not sure whether or not we mentioned in our last that Ralph has desperately homesick spells and feels he must hie himself back to Boston occasionally; and who could blame? This is confidential, but next to the last time he returned to Boston, which was the first time in months, he was so homesick, finding his wife away on a case, nursing our Boston Postmaster Hibbard, that he did not appear out to church at all on Sunday. I heard that Bro. M. C. had something of importance to say to him, for he (M. C.) had to preach twice that day.

The next marriage was as great a surprise to us when Bro. Herbert Fairclough slipped off on the twenty-first day of October with Alta Tucker, a New York girl, and returned home that night a married man, ever since which time they have lived with her mother at Winter Hill. That was not the only important happening in Herbert's family, for shortly after Bro. Rushton's visit to us on his way to England with the other missionaries, his (Herbert's) father was a candidate for baptism, and later on his grandmother, Mrs. Littlehales, was baptized.

Next in order of marriages was Bro. George Carter to Sr. Lillian Cummings at the close of our district Sunday-school and Religio convention on Sunday evening, November 12, in the chapel, which made a pretty ending for the convention. Last but not least came the wedding of Sr. Mabel Fairclough to Bro. Albert Sanford in the chapel on the eve of December 22, Bishop Bullard officiating.

Bro. Albert Knowlton's brother, Raymond, was baptized on January 4. God's Spirit surely is working and

"He is calling now to battle
Both the aged and the youth."

In December we were made to realize that Bro. Arthur Crocker had really left us when by his request we granted him a letter of removal to the Second Kansas City Branch.
were granted letters of removal to Bro. and Sr. H. D. Simpson and their daughter Lillian to a new branch at Washburn, Maine, where we understand they are nobly striving to uphold the gospel banner.

Srs. Margaret, Anna, and Gertrude Wood are all in Worcester, Massachusetts, at present, living with or near their sister, Sarah Congdon.

Leonard Pierson (Laura’s brother) has gone to attend Grace-land; we hope he will like it there and feel at home.

Bro. and Sr. Farrell left on the Bangor boat March 7 for Ralph’s home in Maine, where they will spend a couple of months, their “honey-moon trip,” they call it.

We see very little of Bro. Bullard of late, as he is presiding over the Providence Branch.

Bro. Holmes Davison has not returned since he left us in the fall. He writes that he gets used pretty well sometimes and sometimes he does not. We understand he is in Maine at the present writing.

Genesee Lewis, who is recovering from an operation performed last October, is on the gain.

District conference convened with us in Somerville on Feb­ruary 24. The weather was fine, attendance excellent, and the good Spirit prevailed throughout the conference. The evening service on Saturday, after the business was completed, was occupied by Bro. F. M. Sheehy a few minutes, after which we had a general discussion on tithing, consecration, Zion, etc. The Sunday morning prayer-meeting closed at ten minutes of twelve, after which the good sisters served dinner in the vestry of the chapel to the visitors and all present, the younger present writing.

Extracts from Letters.

Mrs. Pearl Oliver, Toledo, Ohio: “The branch here has rented a room to worship in, and we expect to have it ready by March 24. My husband is also a member of the church, his parents and four brothers. The Lord has blessed us in many ways since we came into this work. I was baptized by Bro. Moteau.”

Mrs. Alice McGeorge, Terlton, Oklahoma: “The work is moving on nicely here. Brn. Aylor and Henson visited us a while back, and did us much good. We hope it may be deemed wise by the appointing powers to send them back to Eastern Oklahoma next year. We have many staunch friends who battle for us, and whom we long to see get the benefits derived from obedience to the gospel.”

Sr. E. J. Leeson, Shinnston, West Virginia: “We would like to have some of the elders come and preach for us. Also we would like Sr. Abbie Moler to write us.”

Rufus Culp, Sedan Fort, Ohio: “I am still trying to serve the Lord. There are but seven Saints here. My mother and brother are members. I am but as a child in the work, having been baptized the 12th of last March, and I need and ask the prayers of the Saints.”

Sr. Lizzie Vardaman Tappan, Fairmount, Indiana: “I would be very glad to have some of the elders come and preach for us. Also we would like Sr. Abbie Moler to write us.”

Florence Toovey, McTaggart, Saskatchewan, Canada: “We read with great interest the good advice of all as to Saints coming up higher, and preparing for the gathering, and pray that each one may live up to the privileges afforded. Pray for us that we may yet be pure in heart, and fit subjects to inhabit Zion. Seven were to have been baptized last Sunday. Three have been added to our branch by letter, and five more will be soon.”

A. E. Jones, San Bernardino, California: “We are having fairly good attendance at the Sunday services here, also Sunday-school and Religio, and are hopeful for the future. Although this locality is a pleasure-resort, and many care for nothing else, we are trying to keep the gospel work before the people as much as possible.”

P. Muceus, Borgsund, Norway: “In the city of Larvig where I commenced labor last October, several are much interested, and as a first-fruit two were baptized last Sunday here in Borgsund. More are expected to follow soon. Thus my feeble efforts are not altogether fruitless. God and his truth become dearer day by day, and it is my highest aspiration to become such a servant as would in all ways please him. The things of this world are unworthy our efforts and aim, for they are but transitory at best. It is peculiar to me how Saints who express their love for God, and interest in his work, will hold on to their means, when they know hundreds and thousands of souls are crying in vain for the gospel, whom the church can not reach for lack of means to send out representatives. There can not be much Christ in that, for he sacrificed all to save the world, and his examp lessen all should follow. May we follow Christ, not the world.”

Edwin and Ada Lambert, Alice, Ohio: “We are isolated from the Saints, and have not the privilege of hearing the preaching of our own belief. We desire very much to get nearer a branch, and ask the prayers of the Saints that we may be faithful workers for the Lord until the end.”

SMITH, Sarah Willoughby was born February 29, 1872, in Henry County, Tennessee. She was baptized at the age of fifteen, and remained firm in the faith until she fell asleep in Jesus, December 29, 1904, leaving her husband, William L. Smith, and six children to mourn. On the eve of her departure she had a spiritual vision and told her friends not to grieve, for she was in heaven, that it was a beautiful place, and exulted them to live righteously, that they might come to that beautiful place. She also sang a spiritual song that was new to all who heard it, and which no one could remember.

Funeral-service by W. W. Whiting.

Exposing Human Nature.

I have often been reproached because the National 'did not do its share' of the exposing.

Bless your hearts, dear brother kickers, the National has done its share. We were not satisfied merely to stake out a particular group or party or class of sinners of other, stronger men, we expose a wickedness that is inherent (and seldom dormant) in ourselves, lacking only the imagination and force of Rockefeller, say, and Rockefeller's chance (were born in the right place at the right time) would have made precisely as bad, and possibly worse, use of his powers as Rockefeller has made of his.

1. That when we expose the wickedness of other, stronger men, we expose a wickedness that is inherent (and seldom dormant) in ourselves, lacking only the imagination and force of Rockefeller, say, and Rockefeller's chance (were born in the right place at the right time) would have made precisely as bad, and possibly worse, use of his powers as Rockefeller has made of his.

2. That our selfish instincts are still so strong that any one of a group who had the same name,

3. That when we expose the wickedness of other, stronger men, we expose a wickedness that is inherent (and seldom dormant) in ourselves, lacking only the imagination and force of Rockefeller, say, and Rockefeller's chance (were born in the right place at the right time) would have made precisely as bad, and possibly worse, use of his powers as Rockefeller has made of his.

4. Finally, that upon the above showing of facts it is found to be not safe for the majority to trust any one of us to exercise the power that a few of us now do exercise. From 'Note and comment,' by Frank Putnam, in National Magazine for March.

General Conference Visitors—Take Notice.

All who are expecting to attend either the Conventions or General Conference are urged to report same to the secretary of the reception committee as soon as possible, in order to have proper arrangements made for board and lodging. By the action of the Independence branch the following arrangements have been made: Lodging and breakfast will be furnished at the homes of the Saints and friends for $1 per week. Dinner and supper will be furnished in the new, commodious, and well-equipped dining-hall now being erected at the rear of the church, for $2.10 per week of fourteen meals. The dining-hall will also serve breakfast on the 'short order' plan (get what you want, and pay for it), and no exercise. All arrangements have been made in order to give the families of the resident Saints an opportunity to attend services. Please write at once, giving information in full as to your wants, etc., addressing all communications to:

How to Obey the Law

The first requisite to an obedience to the law is a willingness to do that which the law requires. If the law is a mandatory one and what is to be done is pointed out specifically and clearly, there should not be much trouble in the premises. If it is a matter that is to be enforced by law, and administrative and executive authorities are provided for such enforcement, not a great amount of credit attaches to individuals for obedience to an enforced law; that is, where the disposition to obey is not present, but is forced.

It will be remembered that in a former issue we pointed out some of the things to be taken into consideration in the discussion of the question. As we view it for the purposes of the present article the financial law of the church may be briefly comprehended in the word tithing—the law of tithing. We know that objection is made to this, but we do not care to spend time now to consider such objection. There are three branches contemplated in the law of tithing: The tithing which is a tenth, either of an original amount set apart by the person who is tithed and devoted to the work of the church or the Lord under the administration of the Bishopric, followed thereafter by what is called a tenth of the increase. There is the second branch, that of free-will offering, and the whole obedience to the law is necessarily to the Saints a free-will offering in that it can not be forced from them; that is, that the monetary contributions can not be assessed and collected like taxes under the statute law of the state, but must be surrendered by the person paying them voluntarily. The third branch is what is called consecration. He who desires may comply with the law strictly by conforming to the clause under tithing and after he shall have begun to pay his tithing in an acceptable manner to the Bishopric, at the end of the fiscal year or conference year he makes up his yearly account, finds what his increase has been (and we mean the net increase not the gross), he sets apart of this increase one tenth, leaving the other amount to be disposed of as he may see fit, either turning it into his business, continuing his efforts in that direction, that his talents may be increased, or he may assess himself the whole amount in the way of free-will offering or consecration.
In doing this he complies with the law. If by reason of his surroundings and his business the member chooses to devote a larger portion of his income to the use of the church, he may hand any sum or any property that is available to the Bishopric by its agents or its bishops in the form of a free-will offering, be the amount large or small. This all is at his entire option.

As we have stated elsewhere, consecration is the setting apart of a portion of a man's means or property for some specific purpose which he desires should be accomplished and should partake of the nature of a sacrifice, though in many cases consecration may be made without the element of sacrifice entering into it.

We have stated that in order to comply with the law of tithing the member may present himself to the Bishop or his agents where he may reside and by consultation with the Bishop or his officers determine how much of his property he may wish to tithe himself of, and this being done, it may constitute the beginning of tithing.

Some question has arisen in regard to section 106, Book of Doctrine and Covenants, having been given in 1838 and incorporated in the Book of Covenants at or about the time of the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith; but it remains a fact that in section 42, paragraph 10, the surplus is mentioned in a different form, because the following words indicate the same principle: "If there shall be properties in the hands of the church or any individuals of it more than is necessary for their support," which is indicative of that which was contemplated in the section (see 42: 10) which was given in 1831, and in paragraph 8 of the same section the church is enjoined to remember the poor and "consecrate of their properties for their support that which they have to impart unto them"; so that the spirit of section 106 is found in the law of 1831. It seems to us unnecessary to find fault with the term used if the principle is found to be the same. We see no difficulty in this and it will be a compliance with the law.

Reasoning from the selfishness of human nature it may be urged that when once a man has complied with the law and has tithed himself and he subsequently confines himself to an increment or increase that he thereby may avoid the larger demands of the law which strict morality and the laws of charity might require. It may be true. It may be also true that the innate selfishness of man may intervene to prevent his complying with any form of the law, even his own interpretation of the law, and thus the entire object of the giving of one's means for the support of the poor and of the work of the church be prevented. But we are dealing with the proposition of law and ascertaining what it may require. If one complies with the law strictly he is within the law, and if he complies with it more liberally he is not only within the law, but he is within the Christian rendition of it precisely as the Savior has said, that if a man was smitten upon one cheek he should turn the other cheek also. There is nothing in the law which requires a man to smite his brother or his neighbor; but the teaching of the revelations to the church indicate that if a man is smitten and he bears it with Christian fortitude it inures to his spiritual benefit. If he becomes angry and places himself upon a physical defense of himself, he forfeits the blessings which a different course would give him.

Perhaps the most difficult proposition to understand and to make application of in this inquiry is that of consecration with a view to an inheritance. Looking at consecration as a branch of the law it would seem easy to reach an understanding how to comply with that law. For instance: it is understood to be the intention of the Lord to bring about in due time an equality. It does not seem right to assume that this term equality, qualified as it is in the revelations, signifies a reduction to a dead level, but that it does imply that each may have that which is equal to his necessities, his conditions, and the work that he is called upon to do. This seems to be a correct understanding of this equality, from the fact that in the revelations in which this equality is most persistently urged what are called stewardships are referred to, and not only the absolute necessities that a man may have so far as his personal wants are concerned and his personal necessities are considered, but his wants and the needs of his stewardship are brought into the account. If a man desires to consecrate and that which he desires to consecrate is in money, he can put it into the hands of the Bishopric and receive from the Bishopric a receipt showing what his consecration was, the object for which it was given, and any other information concerning it that would be essential to the one so consecrating. If all that he has is in money and he desires a stewardship or an inheritance, it may be provided for out of the accumulated funds in the treasury, provided there are any funds upon which he may have the same claims that other members of the church have as provided for in the revelations. But suppose that there are no funds, except possibly the amount which he himself pays in at the time he seeks to consecrate, is it reasonable to suppose that he would be satisfied with the decision which he and the Bishopric might reach in such a case? Or would it be anything out of the line of just probabilities that the Bishopric, not being able to furnish an inheritance as required, would return the amount paid in as a consecration as a stewardship upon which the man could occupy as he had done before and still be within the line of his duty in obeying the law?

And again, if one has lands or houses more than what he has need or his business requires, he can take these or all of them or any of them and conseconsecrate them to the work, either with a deed and covenant that can not be broken in that they are absolutely turned over to the church by legal enactment under the statute, or he may take back from the Bishop a writing establishing his stewardship according to his personal needs and the wants of his business, he to occupy as a steward with the understanding that whatever increase there may be is a part of his stewardship, a part of the consecration, and any that went over the needs of his living and his business should go into the general treasury of the church as a consecration, made so by the consecration of the original properties.

We think this is a fair rendition of this question of consecration and stewardship, that a man may file his inventory with the Bishop as to the character of his business, as to the nature of the property and its value as to its use, and the member to be continued as a steward over his own property. This understanding would cover every species of private enterprises,—private personal enterprises or private combined enterprises, cooperative laborers, business combinations, mercantile institutions, and in fact, every species of enterprises into which men could put means and labor.

It is a grave mistake that the church can take an impoverished business or worn-out properties or houses and lands which are not salable on the market and make them valuable as evidences of value simply because they belong to the church; and we are surprised, frequently surprised, that men are prepared to turn over to the Bishopric as a consecration properties which they can not use and which they can not sell or do not make an effort to sell because of the lowness of the price and expect the Bishopric by some process known to them to make those properties valuable. Now the old Mosaic law required that a man should not give to the Lord that that was maimed or halt or blind; and while this of course refers to animals, nevertheless it is an underlying principle that applies to every species of property; and to ask the Bishopric to take properties which individuals have tried to use and can not, and have tried to sell and can not, and expect the Bishopric to make money out of them, seems to us is a grave mistake, and it ought not to be made.

We are not cognizant personally of all the transactions in the business office of the Bishop, but we venture a guess that it is not seldom that the Bishop is offered property which he can not receive simply because it would prove to be a burden upon his hands, a means of expense which could otherwise be expended in better directions.

We stated awhile ago that we would give the matter further consideration, and we offer this as a matter of consideration to those who may be engaged in this inquiry.

THE WELSH REVIVAL.

The following from the South Wales Echo, February 8, 1906, sent us by Bro. Rushton, will be of interest to some as furnishing theories from a psychological standpoint for the phenomenal development of the revival, and the excitement and peculiar occurrences attending it:

A PSYCHICAL REFLECTION.

The Society for Psychical Research has just published an account of an interesting inquiry which one of its members, the Reverend A. T. Fryer, has contributed into the recent Welsh Revival. Mr. Fryer attended revival services, read most of the daily reports of meetings, corresponded with men and women of all sorts and conditions, interviewed a number of people, and sent out nearly two hundred and fifty circulars asking for particulars of incidents. The result is published under the title of "Psychological Aspects of the Welsh Revival." Mr. Fryer says that he first heard of the revival in October, 1904, when a vivid account was given him of the "outbreak of fervor" amongst some young women at New Quay, in Cardiganshire.

WOMEN THE ORIGINATORS.

These young women, he states, were, in the opinion of some persons, the initiators of the revival in South Wales, but the movement soon became prominently associated with Evan Roberts. "Although Evan Roberts' name is the most prominent in the revival," says Mr. Fryer, "he neither created nor sustained it for the most part. He is the embodiment of the spirit of the revival, the most striking manifestation of the force that caused it, and to a very great extent its leader and director, but he did not produce the revival nor did the revival produce him."

Mr. Fryer says that the press fostered the revival. It was to the columns of vigorous matter provided day by day in the leading journals of South Wales that much of the rapid development of excitement over the revival was certainly due.

One of the conditions which appear to have been essential to Evan Roberts' success was the CREATION OF EXPECTANCY.

Mr. Fryer tells how he attended one of Roberts' great meetings, the members of which were in a state of "feverish expectancy, which made all present susceptible to the suggestion power of a man like the revivalist." Evan Roberts is described as possessing a strong power of suggestion, and as very sensitive to a certain class of telepathic influences. A great deal has been said of his power of prediction, which is chiefly exercised in correctly pointing out where coming conversions are to be found in this or that part of a chapel meeting.

"We may not be disposed to attach much weight to this feature of his work," comments Mr. Fryer, "since it is obvious that in a huge gathering of the kind many are present who are susceptible to a converting influence... We can only assume that Roberts' sensitiveness to deceptive, hostile, or sympathetic thought is abnormally developed."

STAMMERING FOLK SPEAK FLUENTLY.

There are several cases reported, says Mr. Fryer, of persons unable in ordinary conversation to speak without stammering who spoke with fluency and ease in prayer in public. But such instances, he remarks, of defective muscular power being made good under excitement are not confined to the revival and are easily explicable.

From two very different and widely separated districts Mr. Fryer had reports that a distinct change of countenance took place in some of the persons affected. "In one instance a girl's face, previously coarse, became refined and "Madonna-like."
Cases of apparent telepathy are also recorded in connection with the revival. Thus, a young man at a revival service in the Lynfi Valley was suddenly seized with an irresistible impulse to pray for his father, although he knew of no particular reason why he should do so, the father, up to that time, living about sixteen miles away, being in good health. The next morning the young man had a telegram to say that his father had died suddenly.

Equally remarkable stories of visions, unseen chiming bells, strange music, etc., are told.

REVIVAL AND LUNACY.

Mr. Fryer, having heard that the revival had caused an increase of lunacy, asked the medical superintendent of the Glamorgan County Asylum his opinion. From the report of this official, it appears that the increase of insanity can not be attributed to the revival, for "in only one per cent of the admissions was religious excitement deemed to be a contributory factor in the causation."

Mr. Fryer says of Evan Roberts that few men have more resolutely withstood the temptation to be lionized. People have crossed continents to see him in private life, but have had to return unsatisfied.

The story of Evan Roberts' visions (adds Mr. Fryer) is to be published.

EVAN ROBERTS' MENTAL QUALITIES.

Mr. Fryer analyses the mental qualities possessed by Evan Roberts. He quotes a Welshman, whom he describes as a "shrewd observer," as follows: "I detected a uniform method. Evan Roberts tests a meeting before he begins to speak. . . . His apparent indifference and immobility, before he says anything, breaks up all the composer an audience can command. Add to this his habit of transfixing each and every person with his homage-compelling gaze. He reviews methodically the rows of faces; it is the look of a practiced physician. By the time he speaks he has made a mental census of the audience. He knows who are ill at ease, he predicts conversions, he detects hindrances. A man of faith, doubtless, relying on the promptings of the Holy Spirit, but not neglectful of all the data available by human means." The article is all the more interesting and valuable from the fact that an appendix is supplied, giving the data upon which the statement has been prepared.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

To those who may value the information we state that those persons who write articles for the HERALD which are rejected by the Editor, whether those articles are returned or not, and who may be aggrieved because their written communications are neglected or rejected, the Editor is responsible to the Board of Publication, and application for inquiry or redress should be made to the Board of Publication. Those who may thus present cases for inquiry and consideration in this respect will find that the Editor will do all that he can within his power to see that the matter complained of, should complaint be made, is fairly set before the Board of Publication, and there the matter may be heard, the board having the authority to order put into the HERALD whatever it may see fit to do. In the meantime the Editor-in-chief is the responsible party for such rejection and will answer to such grievances as may be presented to the board at proper time and place. It may be that some have not understood this. If so they will now be informed in regard to it.

One of the beautiful characteristics of truth is that it loses nothing by careful and critical examination. Truth never fears investigation, but welcomes it. How ashamed we ought to be if upholding that which, though claiming to be truth, will flee at the first attempt to investigate, and cry, "Hands off; don't look at me!" let us be wary of professed truth that runs to cover like that.

In this issue will be found an article from Bro. James Yates which is worthy a careful reading by all. It is brief, piquant, and breathes a good spirit. Is there not an urgent need for a little less dealing with generalities, and for a more widespread recognition of the value of being definite?

The April number of the Autumn Leaves will be the best that has appeared for several years. The opening article is by Elder G. J. Waller on our work among the Chinese, Japanese, and Hawaiians, under the general heading, "How can we reach the people?" Elder Waller is president of the Hawaiian Mission. Four fine pictures accompany this splendid article. One a picture of Bro. Too Shau Chinn, our first Chinese convert; one a facsimile of our first tract in the Chinese language, with note by the author; one a picture of five little children of five nationalities, showing the material which we must draw upon in Sunday-school work in Hawaii; and one a picture of a scene in Honolulu. Subscribe in time to get this number of Autumn Leaves. Only one dollar per year, and this article alone is worth more than that to you.

An unusually large number of high priests have failed to report to the quorum this year. If you are one of the number better take note of the secretary's appeal in this issue.

By telegrams published in the Chicago and Kansas City papers for Monday the 26th we are pained to learn that Elder J. B. Lentz was stricken in death on Sunday the 25th, at Carson, Iowa, by a bolt of lightning which struck the church and was communicated to the speaker by a chandelier hanging above the pulpit. Bro. Lentz was a bright young man, an earnest worker, and had the respect and esteem of those who knew him. He leaves a wife and two children, who have the heartfelt sympathy of the Saints.

"The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord: and he delighteth in his way. Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down: for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand."—Psalm 37: 23, 24.

WHAT NEXT?

I have no desire to pose as a critic or rush madly into church periodicals, but I feel an interest in God’s preparatory work. Of late there have been a number of articles a part of the contents of which, to me, are quite peculiar to say the least. I have been connected with the church almost a third of a century, and I do not believe in indulging in the line of thought that is continuously discouraging and which in its very nature is calculated to cause distrust, dissatisfaction, and unrest and which will destroy the faith of the Saints to a greater or lesser degree. I do not think such a course can be productive of good and more especially when no remedy is prescribed for such conditions as is suggested as being prevalent.

In the HERALD of January 3, 1906, pages 2 and 3, is the following statement: “As we see things of this character in different departments [referring to that which preceded this] of the work, we are made to grieve for Zion, and to realize that there has not been a general response to the call, ‘come up higher.’ The young people of the stakes ought to be leading the way in the front ranks, spiritually—an encouragement to the young in outlying districts.” And the conclusion reached is, “It is not so.” Being closely connected with the local conditions at Independence I am prepared to state, without hesitation, that the young of our church, with but few exceptions, are a progressive, spiritual band of Saints, laboring to advance the cause of Christ and prepare themselves to occupy where and when duty calls, and it has been but a short time since I heard some young Saints in an outlying district who had visited Independence speak of the spiritual up-lifting they had felt while attending meetings of the young Saints at Independence. And as there are only two stakes, Independence and Lamoni, we have no reason to believe the young less faithful at Lamoni than Independence. So, brother, we must say from our knowledge of existing conditions that you have reached a hasty and unwarranted conclusion relative to the young. We do not claim perfection for the young, oh, no, but a steady and healthy growth and development.

My work has called me among quite a number of the branches and districts of the Southwest in Missouri, Arkansas, Kansas, Texas, and Indian Territory, and I have been quite familiar with conditions of the work in the above territories visited by me for the past eighteen or twenty years. Hence I believe I am in a position to say there has been in many localities a most remarkable “coming up higher,” both spiritually and temporally. At least four fifths of the Saints are honoring the law of God pertaining to temporalities, and the elders laboring in the fields in the above territories in my charge as bishop have not failed to receive their family allowances at the end of each month for the past three years, and this as a result of their disposition to “come up higher.” We certainly believe there has been a great upward movement; not by every one, but by the greater part of the household of faith.

Next we are told that we have two classes in the church to-day. One believe there are grave wrongs in the church, danger threatening, the work being hindered, and they are greatly distressed by these things. The other class are greatly encouraged and think everything is going on smoothly. It may be that I will be placed in the latter class; but I prefer to be called an optimist rather than a pessimist. The question is asked on page 3: “If there should be a crisis, such as the church passed through at Nauvoo, which class would follow ‘Brigham’?” We think this a straining of conditions, much more than the real conditions justify, and such conclusions are quite unnecessary. If the discontent exists, as is claimed, and can not longer be ignored without inviting disaster, we believe such a disaster will come from uncalled-for surmisings, men writing and preachers preaching that there is bad in the church and on every hand, thus causing a spirit of dissatisfaction and distrust and at the same time not pointing out the evil or the means of remedy and thereby causing unrest and spiritual indifference and destroying confidence of the people in men to whom God has intrusted his work. (See Doctrine and Covenants 122:1.) Here it is declared that some have not been willing to hear those whose duty it is to teach the revelations already received, and until the people shall hear and heed those who are set in the church to teach the revelations there will be misunderstandings and confusion among the members. “If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers; and if they do not, they can not expect the riches of gifts and the blessings of direction.” (See Doctrine and Covenants 125:4.)

Now when differences exist it is largely from the fact that men have confused the minds of the people by writing and preaching that which they have not been warranted or called upon to proclaim, giving instructions relative to the work of others and oftentimes criticizing, speaking distrustfully and lightly of those over different divisions of God’s work, and not observing the above instructions given in the revelation. In section 104, paragraph 44, the following is given: “Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand.” Here we find every man must learn his duty and when this is done there will not be an interference with the duty of others.

We also note in the HERALD for February 7, page 122, in an editorial, under the caption of “Unity,” quite an appeal is made for unity, without which, it is stated, we can not succeed in building up the church of God. All certainly can and do see the need of this all-important factor and admit the necessity of it, but I must confess my inability to comprehend the entire thought which the author seeks to convey.

Disunity is likened unto a corrupt tree, which is quite comprehensive, and it is further stated that the ax is laid unto the root of the tree, therefore, every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire. (See Matthew 3:10.) It is stated that to eliminate this feeling of disunity we must go back to the root and there make an adjustment and if we want to remove this unsightly thing for ever, go right back to the root of the matter and grub out all that is corrupt and bad, leaving nothing from which new roots may sprout up.

It is in this comparison that we are not able to comprehend the thought the brother desires to convey. The root of this work [Not the root of the latter-day work, brother,—the root of the trouble causing the disunity. You should have read the next paragraph before writing.—L. A. G.] in which we are engaged, is the organization of the church in the restored gospel under prophetic direction, hence, we can not believe that this God-ordained organization, through which our salvation is assured and expected, can be the corrupt root referred to. Now in the absence of any statement setting forth what corruptness or terrible doctrine is being taught, we with many others, feel anxious to ascertain from those that are preceptive the nature of this unsightly unity-destroyer—this monster which necessitates a going back.

Now we delight in plainness and not writings that are ambiguous. Be plain with us. As Nathan said to David, “Thou art the man.”

There have been of late quite a number of articles written by different brethren on existing economic conditions, and to me some have seemed quite extreme and offer as a panacea remedies not at all operative under the present conditions or in harmony with the revealed law of God as found in our accepted authority. At Lamoni, on May 1, 1903, there was a joint council convened, consisting of the First Presidency, the Twelve, and the Presiding Bishopric,—to me quite an authoritative body. At this meeting there was a line of procedure agreed upon, and as a result there was a small pamphlet issued, entitled Address to the Saints, and while not voluminous in size, this production thoroughly defined, under the law, the privileges and duties of the Saints, and all, everywhere, were asked to comply therewith as rapidly as possible, the duty of the Saints being fully set out, with the necessity of obedience explained. See pages two, three, and four, Address to the Saints. Now, many of the Saints are complying with this important law as defined in the Address to the Saints and many more are taking time to make their investigation of the law, and will, no doubt, in time comply therewith.

But this highly important proclamation, which is far-reaching, can not be comprehended by all in a day or a week, but time will be required and by some it never will be complied with. My experience is that many of the Saints are of a willing heart and mind, and so far as their duties are made plain, they are willing to perform what God requires at their hands and more especially so if not hindered by the acts of unwise brethren creating distrust and thereby hindering them in the performance of their work.

In conclusion, brethren, let us not become extreme above that which is written relative to the temporal arm of our work—the providing of lands, caring for the poor, and building of homes; God has made ample provision for this to be accomplished and it will be done just as fast as men and women will comply with the requirements of his law. This is a very important part of gospel economy and can not and must not be neglected, neither do we believe it will be; however, selfishness must be eliminated and the Saints become educated to their full duty and privileges; for the observance of God-given commands is a high privilege as well as a duty. The great boon to be reached is salvation in the kingdom of our God, therefore the preaching of the gospel of the law given relative to temporalities; caring for the poor, the storehouse, the complete organization of the church, building of temple,—they are all God-given commands, and a means by which we are to reach the final consummation of our hope and closer relation to a full redemption, but preaching the restored gospel, converting honest souls, warning the world of the coming of the Master, and building up God’s work must be the crowning purpose of our labors, making all things subservient to this.

With charity to all men and malice toward none,

Your brother in the faith,

ELLIS SHORT.

THE REDEMPTION OF ZION.

Until my people shall hear and heed those who are set in the church to teach the revelations there will be misunderstanding and confusion among the members.—Doctrine and Covenants 122:1.

To the writer the above appeals with as much force as any command found in any of the authoritative books of the church. We have accepted it as a direct commandment from Heaven and like Israel of old have said, “All that the Lord hath spoken we will do.”
Let us, for a moment, take notice of our contract: "Until my people," etc. Here without equivocation the statement stands that until a certain position is taken by "my people" we can not come to a unity. "Shall hear and heed" is the position the Lord expects his people to be in before oneness can come.

The command does not place any Saint in the attitude of hero worshiper, fawning sycophant, or a puerile parrot. Jehovah never gave a command enjoining ignorance. It is true that he said at one time, "of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it." From this we can not infer that our heavenly Father puts a premium on ignorance. We must not assume that God intended to let the crowning act of his creation—that in which he pronounced it good—be because the parents were cursed not because of disobedience. Knowledge through disobedience. Knowledge with­out wisdom is dangerous and nothing is said about this particular tree being a tree of wisdom. God made man to think and "he changes not." When we cease to think it will be because the Spirit of God has left us, for "the Spirit of God is intelligence" and who can conceive of intelligence without thought! "Hear and heed." The very expression—the very words indicate plainly what is meant. "To hear" means to listen to. "To heed" always applies to matters of importance to one's moral character and has moreover the sense of thinking on what is proposed to our notice.

We say to the world that inspiration is not necessarily plenary—that man is allowed to use his own phraseology. The one who penned the quotation from section 122 has for years been in a position to become well versed in the use of the mother tongue and no doubt when using the expression "hear and heed" did so advisedly.

"Whose duty it is to teach"—not to inform nor instruct. One informs by virtue of priority of knowledge or chance superiority, instructs by virtue of superior knowledge or superior position; but one teaches another by virtue of superior knowledge rather than position. A person can not teach without superior knowledge.

The Joint Council of 1894 decided that this duty devolved on the first, second, and third presidencies, respectively, but in case we find a clash in the exegesis given by these quorums, what then?

Doctrine and Covenants 104:13 places the Seventy under the direction of the Twelve. Section 122, paragraph 3, also section 105, paragraph 12, places the Twelve under the leadership and counsel of the First Presidency. Is it too strong an expression or assertion to say that, in case of conflict in the rendering of the law by these three quorums, the interpretation as given by the First Presidency is, at least, worthy of our first consideration? We think not.

How shall Zion be redeemed? Has this question been discussed by those who have delivered the oracles of God to us in these latter days? If the text so often quoted by our defenders, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets," has such a wide application as some of our elders seem to think it has, can we not apply it to the present status of this grave question? The manner of the redemption of Zion appears to be a profound secret (?) to some of the devotees of the latter-day message. If God is going to do something—redeem Zion—has the secret been made known to any extent as to how this work shall be accomplished? Again we think so.

One of the Gibraltar rocks behind which every exponent of the latter-day work can fortify himself, with perfect assurance of its impregnability, is the unchangeability of God—"The same yesterday, to-day and for ever." Yesterday he taught "all things common." (Acts 2:44; 4:34, 35; Book of Mormon, pp. 478, 479.) Has God taught it to-day? Assuredly.

It may not only save time but also a great many useless questions in the mind of the reader for us to first find out, if we can, what "all things common" is not. It will narrow our field in the affirmative side. We quote from Church History, volume 1, pages 152 and 153, (in this entire article all italics are the writer's,) an extract taken from the journal of Lyman Wight:

I now began to look at the doctrine of the apostles pretty closely, and especially that part contained in the second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles where they had all things common, . . . we entered into a covenant to make our interests one as ancienly . . . . Our labors were united both in farming and mechanism, etc.

Shortly after this, Lyman Wight with his partners in "all things common," as they understood it, were baptized into the Saints' church. On page 169 of the same volume we find Joseph Smith at Kirtland, the place where this "all things common" plan was being experimented upon and we quote from his history of this movement:

The branch . . . were striving to do the will of God, so far as they knew it, though some strange notions and false spirits had crept in among them. With a little caution and some wisdom I soon assisted the brethren and sisters to overcome them. The plan of "common stock" which had existed in what was called the "family" whose members generally had embraced the everlasting gospel, was readily abandoned for the more perfect law of the Lord: and the false spirits were easily discerned and rejected by the light of revelation.

Here "common stock" is designated as a "strange notion" evidently a doctrine of "false spirits." Why bother ourselves about this so-called phase of "all things common," or why teach it when it has been so plainly labeled? On page 593, same volume, we find the Prophet answering a certain gentleman who asks if he can "purchase lands and enjoy his possessions and property without making them common stock” as follows: “We have no common stock business among us. Every man enjoys his own property,” etc.

On page 307, volume 1, we find the elders in Zion counseling regarding this “common stock” business as follows:

It seems as though a notion [the Seer called it a “strange notion”] was prevalent in Babylon that the church of Christ was a common stock concern. This ought not so to be, for it is not the case.

This should have some influence in our final summing up of this matter, when we note what has been told us by revelation as to the importance of the advice of the elders. In section 58, paragraph 12, of Doctrine and Covenants: “Let the work of the gathering be not in haste, nor by flight, but let it be done as it shall be counseled by the elders of the church at the conferences, according to the knowledge which they receive from time to time”; also section 117, paragraph 11: “Let my commandments to gather into the regions round about and the counsel of the elders of my church guide in this matter until it shall be otherwise given of me.” After such plain statements as to how we should be guided, it seems that we might get some wisdom from noting what the elders have counseled.

How was this “strange notion” and these “false spirits” so easily discerned and rejected? “By the light of revelation,” so says the Seer. It is to be presumed that such an important revelation as this which would enable us to detect spurious articles labeled “all things common” would be preserved, especially when we consider the vast importance of this question of “the brotherhood of man.” Where shall we find this revelation defining “all things common”? Let us go to our infallible guide—the word of God as found in the Doctrine and Covenants.

We think that all will agree that the conditions known as “all things common” and that known as “equality” are identical. Can we get a definition of “equality” given to us by God? The only place I have been able to find it is in section 81, paragraph 4:

Behold, here is wisdom, also, in me, for your good. And you are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just; and all this for the benefit of the church of the living God, that every man may improve upon his talents, that every man may gain other talents; yea, even an hundredfold, to be cast into the Lord’s storehouse, to become the common property of the whole church, every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an eye single the glory of God.

“Ye are to be equal, or in other words.” Here it seems to me equality is plainly defined. The Lord evidently knew that the meaning of equality would be hard to understand, so he says “or in other words,” equivalent to saying I will tell you plainly what equality is and it is this, that “you are to have equal claims on the properties for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants and needs are just.”

Could the Lord speak plainer than this? Equality consists in the fact of every man having “equal claims on the properties” and the object of getting what they claim is “for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships,” not for their living. Every man capable is supposed to make his living and more if possible. All who are capable are expected to be producers.

“The idler shall not have place in the church.”—  Doctrine and Covenants 75:5. Why? Because an idler is a sinner. He violates the commandment given in section 42, paragraph 12: “Thou shalt not be idle.” We shall get rid of such in the same manner we handle all sinners—through the teacher and a court of elders. A man’s just needs and just wants is the only basis on which “equality” can ever be effected.

Here we find each man’s individuality retained. All business must be done in your own name and names. (See Doctrine and Covenants 101:9.) As I understand it private enterprises will flourish and these enterprises will require capital according to the talent of the man who is at the head of the business so that “every man may improve upon his talent,” that every man may gain other talents. Here it says too plainly to be gainsaid that the twofold object of this “stewardship” is, first, that every man may improve upon his talent; second, that every man may gain other talents. Without a gain there could be no profit.

The man of business ability has a talent just the same as the successful missionary and this talent to make money is a God-given one (see Deuteronomy 8:18), and according to the revelations of God the object of this “equality” is to place the members of the church, gifted in business, in a condition to use said gift. To-day, no doubt, we have such in the church, who can not utilize their business capacity for the want of a working capital. This defect is to be corrected by “equality.”

And what is the final object of all this? Answer: “And all this for the benefit of the church of the living God. (Not for the benefit of the individual.) As all are to have equal claims on the properties for managing the concerns of their stewardships and not for their living, so all are expected to cast what they earn above their actual needs for living purposes and expenses of their business into the Lord’s storehouse. In case of cash, at least, the Lord’s storehouse is the Bishop’s vaults. Doctrine and Covenants 77:1 gives the reason for this organization in temporal things, “That you may be equal in the bands of heavenly things; yea, and earthly things also, for the obtaining of heavenly things; for if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye can not be equal "in heavenly things." As "equality" in temporal things, as we have shown, consists in having "equal claims" on the "common property" so "equality" in spiritual things, consists in having "equal claims" on the riches of heaven, i.e., the Holy Ghost or Spirit of God. And as these "equal claims" in temporal things are to be measured by a man's "wants and needs," so "equal claims" in spiritual things are to be measured by a man's "wants and needs" spiritually.

The business a man works at is his stewardship. His home, his inheritance. Thus a man's stewardship and inheritance may be identical, as, for instance, a farmer. The stewardship of the ministry is to administer in spiritual things. The inheritance of the ministry is a tangible home the same as all the others receive. In spiritual stewardships (the ministry) the stewards' (ministers') wants and needs differ. For instance, the office work of the president of the church is to be a seer, prophet, and revealer to the whole church. No other man has this work, hence his (the president's) wants and needs are greater than any other man in the church, and so on down to the lowest office in the church. All having claim on heaven for our "just wants and needs," all are "equal." "To become the common property of the whole church." Here is where "all things common" comes in. Whatever is made above legitimate expenses goes to the common coffers of the church. And as each individual understands that his stewardship is held by him simply as a stewardship—fully comprehending the fact that all he has belongs to God, (held in his own name, that is, the stewardship is,) surely, we have the meaning of "all things common" or "equality." No matter how much a person gains, it all (after living and expenses of business are taken out) goes into the "common treasury." "Yea, even an hundredfold to be cast into the Lord's storehouse." Doctrine and Covenants 101:12 puts it like this:

All moneys that you receive in your stewardships, by improving upon the properties which I have appointed unto you, in houses or in lands, or in cattle, or in all things . . . shall be cast into the treasury as fast as you receive moneys, by hundreds, or by fifties, or by twenties, or by tens, or by fives, or in other words, [the Lord wants to make it so plain that we can not misunderstand,] if any man among you obtain five talents let him cast them into the treasury, or if he obtain ten, or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, let him do likewise; and let not any man among you say that it is his own, for it shall not be called his, nor [his stewardship may be called his own] any part of it.

In other words, this gain becomes "common property." Section 106 says the same: "I require all their surplus property to be put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion [presiding bishop] . . . and this should be the beginning of tithing of my people," (referring, evidently to the application of the law in stakes). "And after that." After what? why, after paying their surplus. They have already paid their tenth or should have done so. "Those who have thus been tithed shall pay one tenth of all their interest [gain or surplus] annually and this shall be a standing law unto them for ever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord." The priesthood in ancient-times were kept by tithing the people of one tenth of their gains. So it is now contemplated in the law. Before paying their surplus in to the bishop to go into the common treasury they must take out one tenth for the maintenance of the priesthood. The importance of freeing the ministry, is recognized in this provision. "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn."

The quotation from section 101, paragraph 12, plainly shows that "money's" and "talents" are used interchangeably. Let us apply this meaning in the parable of "the ten talents," as found in Matthew 25:14-30. Here the Lord (Christ) delivered to his "servants" (All are his servants, for section 119, paragraph 8, says "all are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toil eth in the affairs of the men in business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.)" "his goods." What are his goods? Answer: "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein."—Psalm 24:1. So "in a far country" (the land of Zion) Christ is to give his servants their stewardships and inheritances. Paragraph 15 makes a clear distinction between talents and ability. Five, two, and one talents are given to those servants who have the ability to use them. "To every man [not a few constituting the ministry] according to his ability" is the language used. Paragraph 18 gives talents and money as the same.

Paragraph 16 plainly tells what is done with these talents: "Then they that received five talents went and traded with the same and gained other five talents." The reward for those who used their talents according to their ability was the same, i.e., eternal life or "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," etc.

This it seems to me is a description of how Christ will do when we get our stewardships in harmony with section 81, paragraph 12.

The man getting only one talent evidently lacked faith in the efficacy of the equality plan, and being "unwise" would, of course, be "cast out."

The man with the "ability" to handle a fifty-thousand-dollar business will have a chance to use his God-given gift "for the benefit of the church of the living God," not for himself. "Seeking the interest of his neighbor," not his own interest, "and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God." Self will be entirely eliminated.
The same can be said of the man who has only a small business ability. He will do his best with his "talent" and all will be rewarded without partiality.

The individuality of the man who does this will shine out in its grandeur. The divinity within will then answer back to its Creator for the trust conferred upon it.

The meager account of "all things common" as found in the Book of Mormon, pages 478 and 479, is full of thought:

The people were all converted unto the Lord, upon all the face of the land, with both Nephites and Lamanites, and there were no contentions or disputations among them, and every man did deal justly one with another; and they had all things common among them, therefore there were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift. . . . And now in this two hundred and first year, there began to be among them those who were lifted up in pride, such as the wearing of costly apparel, and all manner of classes, and they began to build up churches unto themselves, to get gain, and began to deny the true church of Christ.

The bishop. According to that a man hath and not according to that he hath not. Another way of saying, It does not make any difference how rich or how poor you are, pay what you can—comply with the law and it will be all right. "For I mean not that other men be eased and ye burdened." Certainly not, for that would not make us equal. "But by an equality that now at this time your abundance [or surplus] may be a supply for their want ["every man according to his wants and needs"] that their "abundance [or surplus] also may be [if necessary] a supply for your want: that there may be an equality."

Paragraph 5, section 82, tells how long this order is to be—an everlasting order. The penalty for sinning (sin is a violation of law) against this order of things is to be delivered over to the buffetings of Satan, etc. Paragraph 6 says "this [equality, all things common] is wisdom" and virtually argues that by obeying this order we thus "make unto ourselves friends with the mammon of unrighteousness," giving a clearer exposition of the parable in Luke 16:1-15. In this parable please note that those who derided Christ were "covetous."

Let us note briefly some of the salient points in this excerpt. All were converted unto the Lord—as a result they had "all things common." How many of latter-day Israel are "converted"? There were no contentions or disputations among them. In harmony with the statement in Doctrine and Covenants 101:12, where it says that all must be done by the voice of common consent. "Vox populi, vox Dei." "And every man did deal justly one with another."

Here the word deal is significant. Webster defines the verb deal as follows: "To share out in portion—to do a distributing or retailing business—to manage," etc. Putting any of these definitions in the place of the word deal places the Book of Mormon in harmony with section 81 as to what "all things common" is. They were "to share out in portion" justly. How this agrees with the statement found in section 101, paragraph 2! "Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion [or deal] according to the law of my gospel [or justly] unto the poor," etc.

When these conditions obtain man will be devoid of selfishness, not because he has to but because he will not.

Any movement which seeks to take away man's agency is wrong. (See Genesis 3:4, Inspired Translation.) The gospel being perfect will provide for every exigency of man. If it fails in a single instance to do so, what guarantee have we that it will not fail altogether? The great principle as recognized in civics—that form of government which allows the greatest amount of individual liberty consistent with that of society,—is also recognized by God as an important factor in the emancipation and redemption of the human family. (See Doctrine and Covenants 101:2; 101:9, 12.) In section 57, paragraphs 4 and 5, the Lord again recognizes private enterprises by placing Sidney Gilbert and W. W. Phelps in private business. Here Sidney Gilbert was told to "employ clerks in his service." These clerks evidently received a salary or wages for their labor. That all are to be included in this "all things common" is evidently taught in Acts 2:44, also 2 Corinthians 8:9-15. Paul is here writing to "all the saints," etc. The idea that "equality" consists in having an "equal claim" on the "common property" is also taught by Paul. The apostle gives it like this and as his advice: "Now therefore perform the doing of it." The doing of what? "That there may be a performance also out of that which ye have." In other words, pay in your surplus. But "first a willing mind"; if so, "it is accepted." Who accepts? The bishop. "According to that a man hath and not according to that he hath not." Another way of saying, It does not make any difference how rich or how poor you are, pay what you can—comply with the law and it will be all right. "For I mean not that other men be eased and ye burdened." Certainly not, for that would not make us equal. "But by an equality that now at this time your abundance [or surplus] may be a supply for their want ["every man according to his wants and needs"] that their "abundance [or surplus] also may be [if necessary] a supply for your want: that there may be an equality."

As it is written, He that hath gathered much had nothing over. Of course not, for this "much" as surplus has been paid into the "common storehouse" and the member has "nothing over." "And he that hath gathered little [failed in business probably] hath no lack"; having claim on the Lord's storehouse he could keep from failing.
ments of heaven, who have been blessed of heaven with the possession of this world's goods, first prepare for the general gathering. Let them dispose of their effects as fast as circumstances will possibly admit, without making too great sacrifices, and remove to our city and county—establish and build up manufactories in the city, purchase and cultivate farms in the county. This will secure our permanent inheritance, and prepare the way for the gathering of the poor. This is agreeable to the order of heaven, and the only principle on which the gathering can be effected. Let the rich, then, and all who can assist in establishing this place, make every preparation to come on without delay, and strengthen our hands, and assist in promoting the happiness of the saints. This can not be too forcibly impressed on the minds of all; and the elders are hereby instructed to proclaim this word in all places where the saints reside, in their public administrations, for this is according to the instructions we have received from the Lord.

This contains important instructions to the Saints as to how Zion shall be redeemed. These men speak officially and declare that "This is agreeable to the order of heaven and the only principle on which the gathering can be effected." Can we now ignore this principle? If we can and Zion's redemption be brought about in some other way—by some other principle, these men will surely be placed in an unenviable position. The statement by them officially is tantamount to a prophecy. For one I believe they are correct and they knew whereof they spoke. They here speak of a "permanent inheritance" signifying that this preparatory state is only a temporary condition. It is evidently sound business sense. Where would be the wisdom of sending the poor to Zion and have nothing for them to work at to make a living? All "worthy poor" demand a chance to do something. It also shows that in this "preparatory state" we will have wage-workers in Zion. Just what will be the condition after Christ comes should not now bother us. I am sure we all will be only too willing to do as he says if fortunate enough to be there.

With this thought of wage-earners or laborers agrees section 58, paragraph 12: "And again as much as there is land obtained let there be workmen sent forth of all kinds unto this land to labor for the saints of God." "Let all these things be done in order." What order? "The order of heaven" as above stated.

In our research for facts regarding Zion's redemption, we must not lose sight of the conditions under which we must work until He comes whose right it is to reign. All our interpretations must harmonize not only with the law of God but also with the law of the land. As a people our message is one of peace. We can not run counter to the constitutional law of the land.

Very soon we expect a fulfillment of this: "And it shall come to pass among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor must needs flee to Zion for safety." As representatives of Christ, the ministry should uphold the law of the land—not decry it. All our preparations for Zion's redemption can be accomplished and we still remain loyal citizens. "Therefore, I, the Lord, justify thee and your brethren of my church, in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land."—Doctrine and Covenants 95:2. If we are justified in befriending the Constitution are we also justified in opposing it? Here then is one of our safeguards against a wrong interpretation of law. Again, "Let it be done as it shall be counseled by the elders of the church." What did the "elders of the church" counsel at our last conference? Let us see:

Resolved that we recognize in the work and findings of the joint council of the Presidency, the Twelve, and Bishopric, contained in the report of said council entitled "An address to the Saints" a proper presentation of this law, and outlines upon which to carry forward such work.—Conference Minutes, 1905, p. 790.

Then why should we try to muddle the minds of the Saints by presenting the law in some other way? We have said by the voice of conference that the present manner of presentation is proper. Proper means right. Would any other way be right? We admit that all men are fallible and conference may have made a mistake. What then? "Every law has its bounds and conditions," and this last rule of action by General Conference is no exception. If a mistake has been made, how shall we correct? The law of God being perfect, every emergency is provided for. Here it is:

Their [the ministry] right to free speech, their right to liberty of conscience, does not permit them as individuals to frustrate the commands of the body in conference assembled. They are sent out to preach the gospel and their voices if opposed to what may be presented to the conference should be heard in the conferences and not in the mission-fields, to prevent the accomplishment of the object with which the officers of the church have been intrusted.—Doctrine and Covenants 125:16.

What are some of the main features of this "proper presentation"?

1. A brief summary of the "necessity of fulfilling the law." As a people, we have agreed to this "necessity." A necessity is something as being absolutely requisite.

2. Manner of administering: a Willingly—no compulsion. b Demands a sacrifice of all.

3. What is required by it? a Recognize God's supremacy. b That we are simply stewards.

4. Surplus property: a Defined as that which a man has above his needs and wants. b This surplus to be sent to the Bishop.

5. Testimonies to be taken. Testimonies here simply means inventories of your property to be filled out and sent to the Bishop.

The object of taking these testimonies as stated in the headings of the blanks furnished by the Bishopric is "for the purpose of aiding in fulfilling the law relating to the duties of Saints in temporal matters in the church." Here the thought is recognized that these inventories are only an aid—a preparatory part of the work. No claim has been made, so far as I am aware, that these testimonies are "the whole thing." A great change in the economical system followed by the whole world is contemplated by God. He has chosen his people to demonstrate the beauty and grandeur of his way of doing business and thus by contrast show the world the miserable system under which they are groaning. To do this we do not need to rail against the world. Ours is a message of "Peace on earth, good will to men." Let us build our structure in harmony with the plans of the Great Architect, and the world, seeing its beauty, shall say, "Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law."—Isaiah 2:3.

This change in the ethics of economy must be an evolution—not a revolution—hence as stated by the above the rich and those who can must prepare the way for a permanent inheritance. We are told to wait until "the army of Israel becomes great." Greatness in the sight of God consists not so much in numbers as in integrity—complete obedience to his word. Let us "have faith in God" and demonstrate to the world "the brotherhood of man."

Our present duty is clear: File our inventories and trust God for additional light. While nothing can come amiss to discuss affirmatively coming issues, we should not be too dogmatic. We may be wrong. Added light gives clearer vision.

A. Carmichael.

UNITY AND SOME OTHER THINGS.

Taking a lively interest in the current HERALD themes, we can not refrain from offering a few words upon some of the matters of discussion. Discussion! The word would imply that we were not yet come to a unity in all things. Yes, and it would be folly for any one to try to conceal that fact. It would be inconsistent and unreasonable to claim perfect unity of thought and action of all in the church so long as there are any of our number who have not reached the high mark of perfection. There are a few of us who have not; and the one nearest to this pen and little bottle of black ink counts himself so far beneath that standard as to be unable to see the height; but we hope to be looking and moving in that direction.

Have we as a people reached anything like the unity of the faith in all perfection? The answer to such a question is, No. Not a voice to the contrary.

Very well, then, as we agree upon that, can there be anything wrong in trying to point out the specific imperfections in work, organization, or theory? There certainly can not, for no break or clog in any machinery could be remedied until definitely located. But none need to expect to point out the specific lack, imperfection, or error in any work with which man is connected, without meeting with vigorous opposition. He who undertakes such a work must expect opposition, and that from the very ones sought to be benefited. The very nature of the case tends to make it conducive to quiet and repose—for teachers to cry against sin and evil upon general principles. And to such teaching almost every one is ready to say, Amen. Even "Old Nick" himself can pretend to indorse anything which seems to oppose his work, just on general principles; for well he knows that the most of such shot will pass over his fort and leave it unharmed. But train a few guns upon a definite evil, and you have things stirred up, and will find plenty to do at once. When a wrong is apparent, let us "cry aloud and spare not," even though opposed or misunderstood; for the cause of eternal truth demands it, and the Lord is pleased with nothing less.

He who attempts to point out a supposed error or evil, may be wrong, and the opposition may be wrong; but a charitable exercise in the exchange of honest thought will surely do us good.

No one could indorse all that has recently been written upon the topics under discussion, for the conclusions are so diverse from each other; but we can glean good from the whole, and believe each writer to be honest and acting from the best of motives. Some, if not all of us, blunder; but it is said that the man who never blunders misses a great part of the benefits that life has to give, and that blunderers are explorers. There is a measure of truth in this which will apply individually or collectively.

It is, as has been pronounced, unfair to suppose that any of our brethren in trust are indifferent to what they see is wrong or lacking in conditions. To criticise another is easy; to find faults may be easy; but we would have to be placed in the other's shoes before it could be proved that we would have done better than he. So if the writer offers criticisms, it is done not to be thought more wise than others, nor more capable to do better work than others, but rather to assist in bringing out the truth more clearly.

The clouds which sometimes darken the horizon of human endeavor still cast their somber shadows upon us as a people; and that beautiful prophetic exhortation in the Ensign for February 22 certainly should encourage any who would be inclined to be of faint heart because of clouds. But in the light of the truth that the very nature of all clouds which arrest human progress requires the effort of men to remove the obstruction which is compared to a cloud, should not our zeal have full sway? Those prophetic words of encouragement may be a rebuke to fear, but how a rebuke to zeal, or anxiety to do? The cloud which bears needed rain, let all welcome, nor pray the Lord to withhold.

The Children’s Home.

Among the first petitions in the prayer that is usually designated “The Lord’s Prayer" is a petition for our daily bread. Many sections in our Doctrine and Covenants indicate the concern with which God regards our material wants.

A late writer in the SAINTS’ HERALD voices the thought that it is practically useless to give a starving man a religious tract.

These thoughts rest upon the basic principle that in order to develop man spiritually he must first be made physically comfortable.

In harmony with this principle, the Daughters of Zion are now trying to collect money sufficient to provide a home for homeless children—a place which will furnish physical comfort to its occupants so that in due time their hearts may be touched, and a realization that the life of the Master offers the only solution to the serious problems of humanity may be made clear to them.

Homeless children are to-day reaching out their hands to us asking for shelter and sustenance. We wish to answer this request and we feel certain that in this movement we have the sympathies of every thoughtful Christian in the church. Had we a proper home for these children we could teach them the higher truths while they are yet in their impressionable age; thus preventing the inroads which Satan will so certainly make unless his plans are thwarted.

The Bishop is in hearty sympathy with this movement, the good Shepherd has many times expressed his interest in child-life, and the Daughters of Zion request all those who feel that they can contribute money to this cause to send their offerings to Mrs. Minnie B. Nicholson, Lamon, Iowa.

If this appeal is heartily responded to we shall be enabled to provide a home which will contain within its doors such an environment that the divine mission, “I am come that they might have life more abundantly,” would have a depth of beautiful meaning to its occupants.

Such homes are proving the strongest factor in the redemption of Zion and is it not a gratifying thought that we are looking forward to securing such a home for those who are unable in their childish helplessness to provide one for themselves?

Again we invite you to contribute to this fund. Remember it is the cry of the child for its God-given heritage—a home.

Teaching Our Little Oases of God.

We appreciate the conscientious reverence with which some thoughtful mothers approach the seemingly difficult task of planting correct impressions within the minds of their little ones concerning God. God, who is the fashioner of the universe, the smallest part of whose majesty of dominion might and power man can scarcely comprehend, much less approach unto, though he be world-famed for wonderful erudition.

Our own minds would sink into the abysses of despair in fear lest we ourselves should not comprehend, and failing in this should miss the goal for which we are striving, were it not for some of those rare but brilliant shafts of light which He whose ways we are trying to understand has sent to lighten the darkness and bring us promise of a time to come when the wonderful light of Jesus the Lamb shall leave us no need for the flickering half-lights that now illuminate our winding pathway.

In this article let us endeavor somewhat to draw nearer unto one of the most brilliant of these wonderful shafts of light,

No person ever got a good sermon from above until he was willing to throw away his own brilliant production.—Ram’s Horn.
even Christ, both God and man. We presume that he, the ambassador, the viceroy of God on earth, to whom was intrusted the teaching of the plan on which was to depend the salvation of a whole worldful of striving, straining, struggling human beings, must surely have comprehended the scope and greatness of his task as well as the character of him by whom he was sent. And yet Christ, setting an example for all time to the wisest minds that earth shall ever contain, when approaching in prayer to the throne of the great King, the ruler both of heaven and earth said, “Our Father!”

Does it not seem simple? or is it the simplicity that staggered us? Yet the simplicity of Christ was no failure. No mind, however towering, can fully comprehend the scope and breadth of the attributes of God. All that any one can do now is to understand in part; and the spiritual parts that we can most easily comprehend will be those of which the things about us are a likeness. Hence Christ, setting us right in the beginning with regard to our relationship to him who was above about us are a likeness. Hence Christ, setting us right in the beginning with regard to our relationship to him who was above us, that the brain of an active child is bound to receive impressions and come to its own conclusions whether we teach it or not? Witness the little child who, when asked if she loved God, said, “No, I don’t!” When asked why, she said, “Whenever my mamma goes to prayer-meeting he makes her cry.”

If in the past we have allowed valuable time to slip by without attempting to teach our child of God, the Great First Cause, let us watch for an opportunity when both he and we are full of the spirit of love, and then gather him in our arms and let him of that Parent who loves us, and who made the beautiful world for us to live in, with all the things for us to use; and how he sent his own precious son to live on earth with people a while, that we all might be taught the best way to live and to obtain that which is good, both for ourselves and for others.

And after we have taught him in many different ways that God means good, and we are sure that the feeling of love and emulation has been planted in his heart, then when we find it necessary, we can teach him that God does not like to have children naughty, not even as much as his parents do. That God places all little children in the care of their parents to be taught and corrected as well as cared for by them until they know what is right for themselves. That then each one must learn to take care of himself, and if he does wrong he must answer to God, and sometimes be punished by him instead of by the father and mother, that he may stop and think, and stop doing bad things, and turn and do better. In this way we early expound God the Judge, though we have not used the word at all.

The occasions of daily life are all-sufficient and were arranged by the Father to be used as the foundation of spiritual teaching. But again we should be admonished to be perfectly truthful and obedient to principle in what we teach the children. Let us not teach our children to pray to Jesus, for Christ said to ask the Father in his name. Much study and care to see that we understand correctly ourselves before we begin our teaching, together with a prayer for additional light and wisdom, will be most effectual in helping us to avoid the errors we dread. Nevertheless the responsibility to teach is one that can not be ignored, and the sooner begun the better will be the results.

Letter Department

Los Angeles, California, February 14, 1906.

Editor's Herald: After reading your issue of February 7, containing the editorial on “Unity,” the sermon by Heman C. Smith entitled “Zion, the pure in heart,” also articles from Brn. Burton, Bullard, and others, I could not but exclaim, “There is dynamite in that.”

Hail the day when enough fearless, courageous men, men who have thrown off the shackles of conservatism, bigotry, and ignorance—all who dare to blaze the way in new territory, shall arise and direct the thoughts of the church along lines which will enable them to solve this question of all questions, “The relation between man and man.”

When men in Mississippi, hundreds of them, are held for months and even years as chattel slaves, sleeping at night in filthy stockades, and guarded by treacherous minions of the law and hard by yet controlled to work for a daily pittance of fifteen cents and that fifteen cents going to pay fines imposed on trumped-up charges; when thousands of little children, boys and girls, babies so to speak, are sacrificed every year on the altars of prostitution or starvation confronting them; when in some of our large cities hundreds of girls are working for from ninety cents to a dollar and a quarter a week; when a whole family earns as little as two dollars and fifty cents per week; when all this exists, why more, it seems to me that the church of God must meet this issue manfully, heroically, or we must for ever hide our face and hold our peace. Are we in favor of the present order, or are we not? Do we believe it just for men to barter and sell, when life is the forfeit? If the civilization of to-day is the reflex of Christianity, then may God have mercy on us. The early elders of this dispensation came as the harbingers of a new philosophy, now at least in the light of the practices of the people. They came teaching love for God, love towards our fellow man. We can not consistently present our modus operandi and at the same time uphold a system where one man's hand is for ever against his fellow. In most cases a man's immediate interests determine his line of action. If your interests and mine are identical we can blend our efforts, but if my success means necessarily your failure, or if prosperity for me means adversity to you, then it is folly to attempt to blend and harmonize our service. The dog and the fleas on his back do not have an identity of interests. So long as the fleas are on the dog's back he suffers. So long as the fleas are on the dog's back they are benefited. What would you think of a man who would advise the dog, "There is nothing wrong with the fleas, you must just love them as yourself and become brothers"? You would say such a man was mentally unbalanced. The wealth-producers of the world are suffering in like manner and carrying on their backs human leeches who are sapping their very life's blood. The duty of the church is to free men. The great, throbbing, wealth-producing portion of the world to-day are suffering, the unfortunate victims of man's avarice and greed. They are crying, loudly crying, for saviors to deliver them. True, for the most part they are vicious and debased, but they are the victims of heredity and environment. What have we to offer them? The golden opportunity afforded by God to his church in this dispensation is now in its zenith. The oppressed Russians are rising in might against the tyranny of ages. The hungry, starving unemployed of England are forming Coxy armies to impress Parliament. The whole world is an arsenal, needing nothing more than a flag to set it all ablaze. It is a veritable charnel-house.

Government, so called in the world, is too frequently only the right of the few to enslave the many. I remember some nine years ago while attending the general reunion at Woodbine, Iowa, I took occasion to censure the modern business methods of the captains of industry. I was publicly called down good and hard by the one in charge of the meeting, he affirming that he did not think that a man could get to the top and maintain his position by any other than honorable means. Surely in the light of the disclosures made in the lives of these captains of industry, the brother has changed his views on this! The brother has come to realize that the brotherhood of man does not exist. The brotherhood of man is a veritable charnel-house. The renting of houses and land, the renting of what was called the family whose members generally had embraced the everlasting gospel was readily abandoned for the more perfect law of the Lord, what was this "common stock" plan? It was Utopian, eliminating practically home and home relationship, and in no sense practical. The "all things common" of the Book of Mormon times was not like the Christ was a party to the "all things common" of the New Testament times. He was a party to the "all things common" of the Book of Mormon times. "All things common" does not mean uniformity. The "all things common" which God supports and which the church must preach and practice is simply equal opportunity, equal access to Nature's gifts. It means "special privileges to none, equal opportunity to all."

Landlordism. The renting of houses and land, the renting of anything must pass away. The time has come for us to inaugurate means whereby the people of God will not engage in any such things. If any of the Saints have more land than they need to support themselves, the Lord does not say, "Rent it out and make more money to buy more land, to make more money to buy more land"; but he does say, "Consecrate it to the church." This does not mean consecrating it with a string attached to it either! Consecration means giving the supplying of figures representing values for the Bishop.

Interest. The taking of anything for the use of money violates gospel ethics. While I do not think it just for a man to borrow money and use it in making more money without rendering equivalent compensation for the use of that money, still the call of the church is away from such things, making the borrowing of money wholly unnecessary. I do not think the means to redeem Zion is to come that way. If you have money or anything more than you need, the Lord does not say, "Lend it to some one poorer than you are, whose needs are such that under the system he must borrow." He does not say, "Lend it on mortgages and make big money." He does not say, "Buy stocks paying big dividends." No, but he does command us to "consecrate it unto the Bishop." And what is the Bishop to do with it? Is the Bishop to leave it in the hands of those who have consecrated it to speculate with, or to use in their business and make more money? No!! "The residue shall be kept in my storehouse to administer to the poor and the needy as shall be appointed by the High Council of the church and the Bishop and his council, and for the purpose of purchasing lands for the public benefit of the church, and building houses of worship, and building up of the New Jerusalem, which is hereafter to be revealed, that my covenant people may be gathered under the system he must make more money? No!!"

As I have not written anything for the Saints' Herald since my last letter. I am now in a position to write some history—relate some fact incidental to my work in the mountains for the past ten months, the length of time I have been from home. The first six months I labored continuously in the state of Montana; the remaining four months was divided between the states of Idaho and Utah. My labors so far as I know have been well received by both those in the church and out of it. I have been treated most cordially by all, and have reasons for believing my labors were appreciated by the Saints wherever I have labored amongst them. The kind treatment I have received by all has made the past year one of the most pleasant for me in all my ministry. There are conditions in which a missionary may be placed, that when he receives so generous and kind treatment as I have, from those he has been called to labor among, he can thank God from the depths of his soul for the friends that administer to his needs and wants. I for one certainly appreciate it, and will always hold them in kind remembrance. May the good Lord bless them one and all. I have not only spent the time pleasantly, during my labors in the mountains, but have tried to keep busy, and my labors have been crowned with a measure of success as the following will show.

In the ten months I was away from home, I baptized thirty-one, eighteen of that number in one locality, and that too, where our gospel (the gospel of Jesus Christ) had never before been preached. I had one public debate of eight nights duration at Whitehall, Montana, with one W. A. Gosmer of Seventh Day Adventist fame.

My labors extended from the Canadian line on the north to Salt Lake City, Utah, on the south. At one time I crossed the line, the first time to be outside of the United States and my first time to sleep in a haystack over night. That was not because I was out from under Uncle Sam's domain but due to the fact that I had got out on the broad prairie where houses were scarce, and far between. Trusting all to a loving heavenly Father, I am,

Your brother in the faith,

Editors Herald: As I have not written anything for the papers in the last year, and seldom see anything from the field where I have been laboring, I thought perhaps a line from one of the Rocky Mountain missionaries would not come amiss. Editors Herald: You are a welcome visitor at our home; hardly know how I could get along without you, as you are nearly all the minister we have. Our dear Bro. Sutton of Holden, Missouri, was with us a week, giving us six fine sermons and once more encouraging us all to be faithful, and strengthening some of the Saints here to a closer walk with God.

There are only two families of Saints in this neighborhood, since Bro. George Morey moved this spring. We will miss Bro. George sadly. We never had meeting but that he was there. Our nearest branch is sixteen miles, so you see it is not very often we can go. My prayer to God is, that we may some day live close to a good branch, so my dear children can have a better understanding of the gospel as it was taught in the days of Christ and the apostles—the only true gospel.

Praying you may have a spiritual conference this year, and asking you to pray for me, I remain,

Your sister,

MRS. NELLIE DIBBLE.

Editors Herald: Knowing that many have heard of the services in the Majestic Theater here, I thought an account of the closing day might be interesting.

Elder Evans preached his farewell sermon entitled, "Why I became a Latter Day Saint," on Sunday, 11th inst., which proved to be the greatest day in the history of the Toronto Branch. The morning service in the church brought out a full house. The interest was so great a special service was held in to the fact that we were not related to the Salt Lake faction, but repudiated them and polygamy.

Three fourths of a column was given us in which a synopsis was made of our lectures, and reminding the readers of the South Wales Gazette that a debate was pending possibly, between Mr. Rushton and the Christadelphians, upon “The kingdom of God and the soul question.”

However, about the debate we feel that good was done, and the few that are here felt encouraged in the effort.

Bro. and Sr. Morgan after a three years' mission in Wales will soon return to America. May they have a pleasant and safe journey. I trust that our brethren and sisters in Wales will be courageous, prayerful, and faithful in the work. And surely, the Lord will bless us if we sacrifice, in the enhancing of the blessed gospel, which is capable of bringing down from heaven the blessings which humanity needs to purify socially, spiritually, and politically. My experience shows me that the many noble efforts put forth to emancipate the race fail to achieve what they might, if accompanied and directed by the Spirit of our Lord and Savior.

Your brother in the hope of eternal life,

Dear Herald: The following clipping from the Aberdare Leader, January 27, 1906, was read by us with much pleasure, and thinking that many others would enjoy its contents I send it to you. It was sent by Bro. Silas Evans of Aberdare, Wales, to Bro. Evan Lewis of Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania; the latter forwarded it to Bro. George Morris of this city, and the writer used it yesterday as a foundation for the morning talk at our service:

“THE LATTER DAY SAINTS AT ABERDARE—GIFT OF TONGUES AND PROPHECY.

“On Sunday last I attended a conference of the ‘Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,’ which was held at the Aberdare Public Hall. The church disclaims any connection with the Mormons, who are held to be apostates and seceders from the true church. The meeting was mostly of a spontaneous nature, and had much in common with the revival meetings held in this neighborhood during the past year. There was, however, perfect order, and if two or more brethren would make a simultaneous attempt to speak, one of the elders would decide who should be the speaker, and the others would take their seats. The service was of a miscellaneous character. Fervid prayers were offered, hymns were sung with great heartiness, and there was no dearth of striking testimonies. One man gave a vivid history of his conversion to the faith of the Latter Day Saints nine years ago. His wife had also become a Saint. ‘She is no better than any one else,’ he said, ‘although,’ he added with unconscious Irishism, ‘she is much better than I am.’ One of the elders, a typical American in appearance, said that he had been associated with the church for thirty-nine years. He is an American elder, who has been engaged in mission work in this country, and who will return to America shortly. Many of the prayers and addresses were in Welsh, and the fervor and warmth which are characteristic of Welsh gatherings were very noticeable. One young man when giving his testimony labored under great emotion, and ultimately broke down completely. All of a sudden a lady in the congregation broke out in loud tones in a language which was neither Welsh nor English. A person who sat close to me, and who appeared to be like myself, uninitiated, believed that the strange tongue was Italian. However, a member of the fraternity who sat behind me, seeing that I was puzzled, explained to me that this was a manifestation of the gift of tongues referred to in the Scriptures. He assured me that no language except Welsh and English was known by any one of their mem-

NANTYGLO, Wales, March 4, 1906.

Editors Herald: We have been trying to open up the work at Abertyllyn. Three lectures were delivered there by Bro. J. W. Rushton, assisted by Elder E. B. Morgan. We had a couple of thousand handbills, and large posters, with these statements:

“NOT SALT LAKE MORMONS,

but the Reorganized Church, have arranged for three lectures,” etc.

The subjects were:

1. The kingdom of God; where is it, and how to enter it.

2. Are the spirits of mankind conscious between death and the resurrection.

3. Mormonism; what it is and what it is not.”

Nearly every one spoke very highly of the ability of Bro. Rushton on all the subjects. But his scriptural references and their application on the spirits of mankind, or the ego, the inner man, was a special treat to the audiences.

The scientific aspect of the composition of man was dealt with very creditably. What I wish to point out as encouraging, was the favorable notice given us by the press. The editor in referring to our advertisement of said meetings called attention of the elders declared that, while admitting that other churches convincing that their church is the one and only right church.

for God, he observed, was not the author of confusion.

It was nothing cold and informal about it, but were active and zealous, there could be but one church of God, were understood to be prophetic utterances. Before the close hear the interpretation,' said he. And sure enough, in a few meetings of the Saints when enjoying the Holy Spirit. The minutes a man got up and gave what he alleged to be an interrater observed this feature of the meeting when he said, its legitimate work, there must be something materially and pleased to know that our people had been holding conference prerogative enjoyed by the Saints. 'Wait a little and you shall ruin and entertainments—sources from which so much good has been derived in various ways. One writer says, January 3, 1906, prayer, and a host of other lines too numerous to mention. Now the church receives tithes, and offerings, and consecrations from members and from some nonmembers who are engaged in some of the above lines of business. I ask, Why can not a branch of the church appoint a committee to get up an ice-cream or oyster supper and let the net increase from such be applied toward building a house of worship or farming, and a church or restaurant business, why a branch can not receive funds from the same source. There is an old saying that it is a poor rule that will not work both ways. Tell me what can be wrong with a good ice-cream social or oyster super. I think both dishes are very wholesome, the first when it is ninety or one hundred degrees in the shade, the latter when it is zero weather, especially when the proceeds go toward such a good cause.

"Well," says one, "I do not believe in socials and suppers.
I prefer to pay cash for what we need and do away with them." Very well, you may do that, but why object to others if they choose to come together one evening every three or six months to an oyster supper or ice-cream social? Is it not a fact that tickets have been sold to people attending these suppers who were never inside of a Latter Day Saint church, and that because of that good, social, neighborly feeling manifested they have gone home with a warm feeling for our people, and have eventually come into the church and been a credit to the cause?
The same writer says, "The sisters can sew but let them give their products to the poor." No objection to that, and if the sewing-society should have on hand a large supply of articles they have made, what good objection can be urged against their offering them for sale at a bazaar or supper, when the prices and goods are within market bounds? Again, if it is all right for the sisters to come together one day each week, year in and year out, why not allow them to get up a Thanksgiving dinner or an oyster supper or ice-cream social when the proceeds go for such noble work? It seems there was a custom in the days of our Savior to sell ointment and give the proceeds to the poor.
(See Mark 14:3-5.) The Book of Mormon says that that which enticeth to good is of God. Long may the faithful sewing­ society live, whose labors have done so much for the needy, for others are near the door of the kingdom. They wanted me to enticeth to good is of God. Long may the faithful sewing­

DELOIT, IOWA, March 21, 1906.

Dear Herald: I am still at the above place where I have been near seven weeks. We have troubled the water nine times here the past seven weeks, and such a good spirit has been with the people. I have baptized forty-three at this place, and others are near the door of the kingdom. They wanted me to stay longer, but I could not at present. This makes one hundred and one baptisms the past year, but I have baptized forty­ two since sending in my report.

I expect to take the evening train to-night for Independence,
Missouri, to see loved ones, and I return home at the close of the year's labor with my heart full of praise to my heavenly Father for his blessings the past year.

May God bless all of his Saints is my prayer.

Editors Herald: Since our last writing we have been striving to hold aloft the banner of King Immanuel, and though we meet with things that are not encouraging, we are still in the faith; and while there are some who are seemingly growing cold and indifferent, we find each day renewed evidences of the strength of the gathering. Everything moved forward, so that all who were in the rear of the car received the benefit of the smoke second-hand.

In due process of time we found ourselves at Salt Lake City, where we missed our train and were compelled to remain over night. One of the heaviest winds prevailed that the writer has witnessed for some time.

Taking our leave next morning at eight o'clock, with the snow falling quite heavily and a winter breeze blowing, we soon found ourselves on board the train speeding along homeward, and then attended the Idaho District conference which was held at Malad, March 10 and 11.

On leaving our father's residence on the 12th inst. we rode about seven miles through snow, slush, and mud to the depot, where we boarded the train for the south, en route homeward. The train being composed of freight, sheep, and passenger cars, we had a pleasant (?) ride, and to make it more desirable (?) the passenger-coach was divided into two compartments, with a swinging door between that was open the greater part of the time, so British who appeared in the rear of the car received the benefit of the smoke second-hand.

The Saints of this part seem to be united, and we feel to extend to me, but they won my respect; the former passenger was a scholar, the latter a man of considerable merit, or so I judge.

The Saints of this part seem to be united, and we feel to rejoice in the gospel hope.

Ever laboring for the best, I remain,
A soldier for Christ,

Editors Herald: Since the district conference Bro. Wells and I held a week's mission here. The attendance was very ordinary, but just after, we held weekly lantern lectures. These lectures drew large crowds. I am now equipped with a lantern and two hundred and fifty views; these latter are constantly increasing in number. I have 'The life of Christ,' and several other Bible pictures; 'The signs of the times,' church history, British and American history, and Book of Mormon and archaeology. Have made some of these views myself. Would be pleased to receive photos of any of our church buildings with a history of their construction; also photos of any of our workers (male or female) accompanied by a sketch of the person's life. This sketch should not consist of juvenile episodes; we prefer a general history of secular events but a particular account of spiritual experiences, so far as time and space will permit. Please compare your experience in other churches, if you have had any, with your experience as a Latter Day Saint. These should be first-class photos; it takes good ones to make lantern views worth possessing. I have tried to use the pictures in the Ensign Photo Album and Autumn Leaves but because of defects in the original photo, the paper, or the printing of the picture, the results have not been satisfactory.

Elder W. J. Haworth has just arrived from Melbourne and is now looking for a place where he can install a new printing-press and establish a book depot. I leave for Newcastle to-day. My intention is to pass on up the north coast. Will be gone at least six months. Bro. Wells will, possibly, go to Victoria soon. Yours in the gospel hope, 65 Nelson Street.

TOPEKA, Kansas, March 17, 1906.

Dear Herald: Having left home and friends and God's people on the first of the year, to locate in Kansas, and being unable to find any of the Saints here, we were deprived of attending meetings for two months; but through the kindness of Bro. F. B. Blair we have found the church, and it is indeed a pleasure to meet with God's people once more. While they are but few in numbers, still they are God's people, and we were made welcome, and to feel at home among them.

They have a small church in one of suburbs of the city, with a scattered membership of about forty; so there are not many to attend meetings; but God's promise is true, that wherever two or three are met together in his name, there he would be in the midst of them. I am glad I have had the privilege of obeying this gospel, and desire to do what little I can in the Lord's work, and to live faithful to the end.

Your sister in the gospel,
MRS. BESSIE BURLINGTON.

Jerusalem, Palestine, February 21, 1906.

Editors Herald: My trip across the sea from Australia to Port Said was marked, with the exception of the first day out from Freemantle, by fair weather and a pleasant sea. While on board the vessel, the Grosser Kurfurst, I preached three times, once in the Indian Ocean, twice in the Red Sea. My last meeting was held on deck, and in the audience were a Church of England clergyman and a colonel of the Salvation Army. Both of these gentlemen treated me throughout the voyage with courtesy; of course this was only what they had a right to extend to me, but they won my respect; the former passenger was a scholar, the latter a man of considerable merit, or so I judged.

From Port Said I went to Jaffa on the Amphitrite, an Austrian Lloyd boat of about three thousand tons; left late in the evening, arrived early in the morning. Landing at Jaffa is effected with considerable difficulty when the sea is not smooth, and when it is rough passengers are often carried on to Beirut, thus causing a return journey. Jaffa having no harbor, the large boats have to anchor in the roadstead, and alongside them small boats, rowed by strong Arabs, come for cargo and passengers. In landing they pass through a narrow, dangerous entrance in a reef that runs along near the coast. Only small boats can enter within the reef, and here they find shelter.

Reached Jaffa February 14, took train in the afternoon for Jerusalem; started at one o'clock, and in three hours and forty-five minutes reached the Holy City—the distance is about fifty miles. Nothing that I have seen in the country has disappointed me. I expected to see evidences of a desolation having swept over the land according to prophetic word. Jerusalem is a large city, has a population of about seventy-five thousand people, fifty thousand of whom are Jews. Many large and substantial buildings have been built; many are in process of erection. The city's streets are thronged with camels, donkeys, carriages, and people of many nationalities.

Not many years ago the gates of the city were closed at eventide till morning, but now they are left open. No longer is the city confined within the walls; a great portion of it is on the outside. At night the streets are lighted. From the Mount of Olives a grand view may be had of the city, which is "beautiful for situation." The Valley of Jehoshaphat is just below, and down the mountainside, just in front to the left, is the Jews' cemetery where are to be seen close together thousands upon thousands of tombstones. The garden of Gethsemane, too, is just below the mountain towards the city; that is, the place that is marked out and called the "Garden of Gethsemane." From Olivet can be seen to the eastward the wilderness of Judaea, the Jordan Valley, Dead Sea, and farther to the east the mountains of Moab; Jerusalem, from its summit, wears a mantle of imposing majesty, with its domes, minarets, stone buildings, and splendid position. The Valley of the Kedron or of Jehoshaphat as it may be called, sweeps round from the east of the city and converges at the south with the Valley of Hinnom. Mount Nebo, afar off, can be discerned. The mountains round about Jerusalem are higher than the four on which it stands.

The Mosque of Omar, with its huge and graceful dome and grounds, just across from the Mount of Olives, in the old city, occupies the site of Solomon's Temple. Mohammedans have charge of this structure, and in it visitors are shown the rock where it is supposed the altar of burnt offering stood, and the point from which the followers of Mahomet believe he ascended to heaven. Consecrated slippers must be worn, and an escort for safety from fanatical Moslems is necessary.

The church of the Holy Sepulcher is also in the old city, or in other words, within the walls. Roman Catholics, Greeks, and Armenians have charge of this building and here Mohammedan soldiers frequently are stationed to prevent these Christians from killing one another. Some bloody conflicts have taken place, and the bitter enmity that still exists necessitates Turkish officials being constantly on guard. Some of the priests in this church are sly old foxes; they are guilty of pious frauds; they are digging a pit for themselves. Poor, miserable Russian pilgrims, shabbily dressed, come and go in great numbers; most of them have walked from their homes in Russia to the sea, traveled in steerage to Jaffa, and then by foot from the latter place here. The Stone of Anointment, on the inside of the church near the entrance, is very much worn by pilgrims' kisses.

Almost daily, but especially on Fridays, Jews assemble near a portion of the old temple inclosure and weep over their desolation and scattered state, and pray for deliverance. This part of the old wall has come to be known as the Jews' Wailing Place. Touching are some of the scenes that are witnessed here; some sob bitterly, kiss the huge blocks of stone, thrust their faces into the chinks of the rocks, read the scriptures, and in their own tongue ask for deliverance, and cry for the Redeemer to haste, haste to Zion and build up Jerusalem. I could not but join with them in tears. May Judah return, and may kings be nursing fathers to them, and queens nursing mothers. Judah is returning, the "latter rains" are falling, and residents of Jerusalem marvel at the onward march of the city.

The hand of the Turk rests heavily upon the land; there seems to be a determination to prevent, if possible, the land's improvement. For instance, one is taxed according to the number of olive-trees possessed; this has led in times when the trees did not yield heavily, to the cutting down of trees to escape being taxed, and frequently can peasants be seen with camels and donkeys bringing in from the country loads of olive-wood from good trees to raise money to pay taxes that perhaps have been thrice collected. I think the cause of this state of affairs in part is the opinion that if the land is improved the powers of the earth will get a foothold, and finally upon some pretext get control of the territory. If the land is kept down no power will be able so to build up interests. Not many Turks are resident here.

I have been to Jericho, the Jordan, Bethlehem, Bethany, and the Dead Sea. The Jordan was in flood. The water of the Dead Sea is very bitter; there is a greater difference between it and sea-water than between sea-water and fresh water. On the way from here to the Jordan the brook Cherith is seen running along in a deep gorge.

I have now been in Jerusalem a week; rain has fallen every day. Rain is now falling and the streets are muddy. The weather is cold, but not freezing. Almond-trees are in blossom, flowers are blooming, wheat is two and three inches high. Cisterns are full of water.

I am stopping with the "American Colony." It has one hundred members, or more. They claim to live on the "all things common basis," to have no leaders, and to live harmoniously together. Most of them live as one family in a large stone building, but as it has not enough room for them, some live elsewhere. Grace is sung at meal-time at the long tables where all are seated. New members cast all their possessions into a common treasury; if they leave the colony, they can not claim any of the property. The religious belief of the colony is one sense very simple; in another, complicated—that is a complicated belief, I think, that has no leaders, no organization, and includes but a part of the gospel. The people all dress well, are fond of music, and take an interest in educational questions. All have treated me with courtesy. I may say here that I have been informed until lately the colony did not believe in the ordinance of marriage. I regard one of the women, Mrs. Spafford, as the leader of the colony; all call her "mother." A religious service is held every day shortly after breakfast, when nearly all meet in a large, nicely furnished drawing-room; all stand and sing, a few prayers are offered, and after all are seated a man by the name of Jacob, who sits at the side of Mrs. Spafford in front of the main body of worshipers, reads a portion of some chapter in the Bible. Mrs. Spafford for about fifteen minutes interprets or gives her opinions on what is read. Jacob then speaks about the same length of time, after which the same program of reading and expounding is repeated. The whole session occupies about two hours. The colony has a well-stocked store of curios and souvenirs of olive-wood, etc., in the city; has among its members photographers, bakers, dressmakers, and some excellent workmen. I think the leader of the colony is a spiritualist, whether she would admit she is or not. The members seem to have great faith in her, and I fear are a little too much led by her. The members appear to be considerable and very kind toward one another. The colony is about twenty-four years of age—came from America.

I have made arrangements to preach here in the city in a private house next Sunday morning. Have met a well-known family in Jerusalem who have received me very favorably and are desirous of learning something concerning the Reorganized Church. They came over with a colony from the United States in 1866, led by a G. J. Adams of the "Church of the Messiah." This man appears to have been connected with the church in the days of Joseph the Martyr, or afterwards, for they inform me he defended Joseph Smith as a prophet, believed in the Book of Mormon, and, in literature of which he was the author, he teaches doctrines peculiar to our people, but he was astray on some points.

Mr. W. P. Brown, once an elder in the church, and his wife, resident here, were pleased to learn of my coming to Jerusalem, and received me very kindly. They have seen many changes in their fourteen years' residence in Jerusalem. A stroke of paralysis has rendered Mr. Brown inactive, and has kept him pretty well indoors for the past six years. Will be leaving Jerusalem the 26th of this month, if all goes well; hope to attend the coming General Conference.

May Zion and Jerusalem arise and put on their "beautiful garments"—may bright days be before both the sacred places.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a few lines from this region might be of interest to some. Our Minnesota Branch of the Reorganization was organized under direction of Elder J. L. Mortimer, on February 24th. Elder E. B. Anderson was chosen president, Bro. R. B. Anderson priest, and Sr. Eliza Anderson secretary. I believe there are nearly thirty members in the branch. Our Sunday-school was organized soon after our arrival here last April. So you can see that though we are far from the center of Zion’s land we are trying to keep the faith.

Bro. Alvin Knaible sought us out last summer (we live twenty-two miles southwest of Saskatoon); and he and Bro. J. L. Mortimer have both done preaching in our neighborhood, and also in places round about, and we think and hope are doing much good in their mission work in this great Northwest. They will always find a welcome in our homes. So will any others of your ministry, when they can come here.

We have not been able to hold meetings every Lord’s day since coming here, but we take HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, Hope, and Glad Tidings, in which we find much that is cheering, entertaining, and comforting. But like all other Saints over here it is often turn Zionward, and we hope the day will come when we can sometime throw the faith; and that conditions will be such that we can stay there and not be obliged to leave to find employment. It is the opportunity to earn their own living that the working class want, not to be provided for by others.

We often think of the Saints in Missouri, and wish to be with them. I wonder if some of them in Cedar County remember hearing my husband relate a dream about fifteen years ago, wherein he saw that the Lord was establishing, or planting, what seemed to be strong iron posts here and there in the land, scattered out, and calling some of his servants to take charge or stand by these posts. And to his surprise his own name was called to a far-away post, to come and take charge. At that time he held no office or authority in either priesthood. Shortly before this, he dreamed that a new pair of white shoes were given him, and he was commanded to put them on and wade right out into the stream and help to clear away the rubbish. He thought he did so and was surprised to find that no difference how much mud, filth, or rubbish he encountered, none of it would adhere to his shoes, but they remained as white and pure as when given him. As I heard him relating the dream to some of the brethren, the interpretation came to me in this way: Why, my husband is to be shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. He is to hold the same office that John the Baptist held. He will be a priest. It will be seven or eight years before that was fulfilled. I also call to mind once, when I was very sick, sixteen years ago, when the pain was so severe in my back it seemed I could not live and endure it. I said to my husband, “Edwin, it seems to me that if you would kneel by my bedside and place your hands upon my back and ask God to remove the pain, that it would be done.” He complied with my request, and instantly the pain ceased; and though I was not immediately raised from my sick bed, yet the pain never returned to my back. I fell asleep, and when I awoke these words were ringing in my head: “Every one shall be ordained according to the gifts and callings of God unto them.” From that time I have felt that the time would come when he would receive authority to lay on hands; but it was about fourteen years before he was ordained an elder. He has been blessed in his office and calling, for which we feel to thank our heavenly Father. In fact we have much to be thankful for. For the gospel comes not to us in word only, but in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance. And we are truly assured the power to heal the sick, and to be healed, and to give dreams and visions, and the discerning of spirits, also other gifts promised the believers, can and do attend the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. For we have been blessed in those lines, as well as in believing the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. We have been blessed in believing that Joseph Smith was a true prophet, and that his blessing should also be upon the head of his postterity after him. And we know that God confirms the work with signs following the believers in this day as well as in the days of Joseph the Seer, or of the apostles Peter and Paul.

So, dear Saints, wherever we are, let us strive to lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and run the race with patience, striving to add to our faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, charity. And above all things put on charity. For though faith is necessary, yet if we had faith that could move mountains and lacked charity, it would profit us nothing.

So “Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil-speaking be put away from you with all malice; and be ye kind to one another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ’s sake hath forgiven you.”—Ephesians 4:31, 32. And in Doctrine and Covenants 64:2 we read that in olden times some forgave not one another—and for that reason they were afflicted and sorely chastened. So let us watch and pray, lest we be overcome by evil; and let us seek for a spirit of peace, which shall heal all wounds, and help us to overcome all things through faith.

Resolutions of Condolence.

Whereas, Our Heavenly Father, in his infinite wisdom, has taken from our midst Bro. George H. Hulmes, president of Independence Stake and of the stake high council, therefore be it

Resolved, That we, his brethren and sisters and coworkers in Christ, in stake conference assembled, do hereby express our great sorrow and regret in our brother's departure, realizing that we have lost a good counselor, an efficient officer, and a dear and faithful friend.

Resolved, further, That we hereby extend to the bereaved family our profound sympathy and confidence, remembering, however, that our beloved brother kept the faith and honor his course, and has but gone on before to enter a higher and happier realm.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, and also a copy to the Saints' Herald and to Zion's Ensign.

Respectfully submitted,

Brown.—From her earthly home in Oakland, California, Sr. Mary Ellen Brown passed to her well-earned home of rest, March 13, 1906, aged 60 years, 4 months, and 28 days. She was the faithful wife of Bro. H. E. Brown for nearly forty-two years. A husband, four children, a brother, and a sister mourn their loss. She was taken to St. Helena for burial, where a short service was held at the grave by J. M. Terry.

Humphrey.—Horace B., at Auburn, Rhode Island, January 27, aged 73 years and 4 months. Funeral at their home, Park Avenue. Service by the Episcopal minister. Deceased was the husband of Sr. Mirta Humphrey, of Cape Cod. He leaves widow, son, and daughter, also three sisters and one brother.
all of whom are in the church. Horace was not a member of any church, but never opposed the work.

De Haven.—Sr. Malissa Ann De Haven was born in Indiana, October 29, 1845. Removed to Mercer County, Illinois, and from there to California, nineteen years ago. She passed away at her home in Haywards, California, March 17. The funeral services occurred on the 19th, sermon by Elder J. M. Terry. She leaves a husband and four children to mourn her departure.

Debord.—Sr. Elizabeth J. Debord passed away at her home at Stockton, California, November 7, 1905, at the age of 51 years. She was baptized by Bro. E. C. Brand in childhood, and remained faithful to death.

Thomas.—Sr. Sarah Thomas was born in Wales in 1821. She was baptized in 1839, came to Utah in 1861, saw her mistake, and found her way into the true fold. She died in the faith at Lockford, California, November 12, 1904.

Eukes.—Bro. M. J. Eukes was born near Buffalo, New York, August 20, 1850; baptized at Reese Creek, Montana, by A. B. Moore, April 24, 1886. Married to Sr. Eliza Green at Willow Creek, Montana, June 14, 1881. Died at Boxeman, Montana, March 5, 1906. Buried at Reese Creek, Montana, funeral services by J. D. Stead, assisted by A. B. Moore. He leaves to mourn, a widow and four sons. He died as he had lived, an honored citizen, and a true Saint.

McCord.—Sr. A. E. died October 3, 1905, at her home in Stewartsville, Missouri. She was a daughter of Bro. and Sr. I. N. Roberts, and wife of Arch E. McCord, the marriage occurring at Defiance, Iowa, July 17, 1887. Five children were born to them, three of whom have preceded her to the beyond. Two little boys remain to mourn, with the husband, parents, a brother, a sister, and a host of friends. She was baptized April, 1884, by her father, and ever remained a faithful member and a diligent worker therein. Funeral from the church; sermon by T. T. Hinderks.

Irish History and the Irish Question.

McClure-Phillips have recently published an important book, Irish History and the Irish Question, by Professor Goldwin Smith, author of Irish Character and Irish History. In order properly to lay the ground for an understanding of present conditions, Professor Goldwin Smith gives a clear account of the relations, since the earliest epochs, politically and historically, of Ireland, to England. The roots of the present difficulties thus clearly shown, the author devotes his closing chapters to an examination of the question of "home rule" as it exists to-day. Whether it could be or is advantageous to the Irish he debates temperately and without bias; exhibiting the influences which have combined to put Ireland in its present predicament, and pointing out how climate, over-population and other natural causes are quite as responsible for the poverty of the country as English oppression. He also considers the emigration to America and the Fenian movement and their relation to the problem.

New Boston Brown Bread.

Many a frugal New England housewife, who knows that to "waste not is to want not," never allows one bit of stale bread to be thrown away, and she is able to use many pieces in new Boston brown bread. Soak one or two cups of cold water in two cups of molasses, one and one half cupfuls each of rye meal, granulated corn meal, and graham flour, mixed and sifted with three teaspoonfuls of soda, and one and one half teaspoonfuls of salt, and one and one fourth cupfuls of cold water. Stir until well mixed and steam in the same manner as Boston brown bread.—Fannie Merritt Farmer in Women's Home Companion for March.

The National Magazine for April, 1906.

"Gotham in golden chains" is the title of a remarkable article by John Coulter in the National Magazine for April. He shows how the Ryan-Belmont-Rothschild-Morgan gang has got New York City by the throat, and outlines its plan to float a street-railway combine with a capital—mostly water—second in size to that of the United States Steel Company. The same magazine contains three striking character studies of famous men: "Joan Miller at the heights," a beautifully poetical essay by Charles Warren Stoddard; "Fighting Joe Wheeler," by W. F. Melton, and "A day with Marquis Ito," the foremost statesman of Asia, by Yone Noguchi. Minor notes on celebrities are: "In memoriam: Frederic Lawrence Allen," a poetic tribute to the late gifted young laureate of New England, by Aloysius Goll; "The passing of Jules Verne," by Sarah D. "Probably by the time this reaches the readers of the HERALD the conference will be in session at Independence, Missouri, and we trust that those who will be in attendance will be mindful of what the Savior says in reference to seeking and finding: "Ask and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you." We have taken pains during our years of ministry to note the truthfulness of the statements made by the Savior in this regard. If the Saints, delegates and representatives, go to conference with a disposition to cavil and to find fault, seeking material upon which to exercise these peculiar qualities, there is nothing surer than that they will find plenty upon which to feed the flame of their faultfinding. If they go looking for discrepancies in individuals, they will be sure to find them and will be able to make the most of them. If they go fancying that there is something hidden, dark or mysterious, that sentiment will be fed. On the other hand, if those attending conference are there with a view to do that which may be pleasing to God rather than pleasing to self, if they go looking for and desirous of finding men of upright intentions, as they themselves should be, they will find just such men. If they go with a feeling to discover that which is good and to assimilate it, they will find plenty to feed and grow upon spiritually. It largely depends upon the temper in which the visitor to conference conducts himself while there whether he has a good time or otherwise; and we mean by this term good time, not simply something to eat and drink and feed the body, but we do mean the spiritual enjoyment which men of like faith and spiritual attainment are sure to find when meeting together for great and good purposes. The exhortation may come late, but we feel like asking the Saints to keep the unhappy things by which their good temper and the enjoyment of conference is frequently spoiled safely out of sight.

NOTICE TO THE OFFICERS OF THE VARIOUS QUORUMS.

By concurrence of the First Presidency and the Independence Stake Presidency and Bishopric the following quarters for conference officers and the various quorums have been assigned.

The First Presidency and Standing High Council have quarters at the home of Bro. John D. White, 1214 West Short Street.

The Church Secretary, R. S. Salyards, at the home of Sr. M. T. Short, 1212 West Electric Street.

The Quorum of Twelve, at 330 South Fuller Avenue.

The Order of Evangelists and Patriarchs, Suites 7 and 8, third floor of Jackson County Bank building.

The Quorum of High Priests and Bishopric, at the old Ensign Building, corner of Osage and West Lexington Streets.

The Council of Seven Presidents of Seventy, in the East Tower room of the stone church-building.

The First Quorum of Seventy, in the upper auditorium of the Church of Christ church-building on the Temple Lot.

The Second Quorum of Seventy, in the center room on the ground floor of the Church of Christ church-building on the Temple Lot.

The Third Quorum of Seventy, in the East Tower room of the stone church-building.

The First, Second, Third, Fourth, and Fifth Quorums of Elders, in Rooms 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, respectively, on the third floor of the Jackson County Bank building, on West Lexington Street, near the Court House Square.

If the officers of such quorums of Priests, Teachers, and Deacons as will be present in sufficient numbers for quorum work will notify the Presidency, they will be provided with suitable quarters.

All mail addressed to visitors in care of the conference will be properly cared for at suitable quarters in the Dining Hall annex, where it may be called for by those to whom it belongs. Bro. Alfred White will have charge of the conference mail.

The Herald and Ensign Publishing Houses will also have suitable quarters provided for them in the Dining Hall annex, where Saints and friends will find a complete line of church literature.

A Bureau of Information will be maintained during the conference by the Reception Committee. Those needing information of any kind to assist them, need have no hesitancy in applying at the Bureau, as courteous efforts will be made to supply any information desired.

IS THE LOSS JUSTIFIABLE?

Estimated loss caused by the coal strike of 1892 was $142,372,000. Of this amount the miners lost in wages $28,030,000 and other workers in mines $6,457,000; mine operators lost $52,250,000; railroads lost $26,000,000, other business interests $35,935,000.

We suppose the term “other business interests” would mean the “allied industries,” i.e., all the various industrial enterprises in which bituminous and anthracite (hard and soft) coal are used for creating light, heat, and power, including street-railway service, gas- and electric-lighting plants, the water supplies of large cities; and as a consequence the domestic uses of public hosteleries and private family service.

If all these were taken into the account the estimate is far too low.

Whatever may be said in justification of the strike of 1892 referred to in the estimate, it is both fair and just to hold that the losses estimated were a loss, a wasted loss to every interest public and private affected by the strike.

An interesting question now might be asked fourteen years after, What was gained by the strikers, what by the businesses temporarily held at a standstill by the strike? Of course, the estimate is for a financial loss; hence, there could be no gain in that way. If there was a gain it was a moral, social, or political gain. Was there one of these? If there was, it would seem that the nature of it has not yet transpired, or it would have been made a part of the showing in the present agitation in regard to the now impending great strike of some two hundred and thirty thousand miners who, it is expected, will quit the mines April 1 unless some unlooked-for concession, or mutual agreement may occur to prevent.

Should this great strike occur, and be carried to the extreme that many now fear it may the estimated loss in labor, material, wages, damage to property, etc., will beyond doubt greatly exceed the estimate given above.

From one statement in the address of the labor leaders to the President and Honorable J. G. Cannon, speaker of the House of Representatives, if it has not been misinterpreted by some, there is a strong possibility that an effort will be made to force the issue raised by the demands made upon the President and Congress into the politics of the next presidential campaign; upon the hypothesis that what can not be gained by a demand for justice may be secured as the reward of policy. Of this, who is qualified to say?

As one of the mutterings of the coming storm, railways are getting ready to confiscate coal passing over their lines, and towns also are levying contributions on coal passing through them, all upon the plea of necessity—which of course “knows no law,” and does not regard right in quite an orthodox puritan way.

Where will it end? Ah! That is your question.

Nineteen hundred and twenty-eight net increase during the conference year is not so bad an account as some of our pessimistic brethren have been suggesting as the likely outcome for the year’s labor.

A LITTLE pessimism (?) may not be so hurtful after all. It seems that its expression has not prevented the reports from rolling up a larger net increase in membership in a few months than the yearly reports usually show. Did its expression hinder, or did it help some? One man may plant, another water, and another pull weeds and stir the soil, but God gives the increase. We are thankful for the increase.

"FOR THE WISDOM OF THEIR WISE MEN SHALL PERISH."—ISAIAH 29: 14.

While reading the arguments against the Book of Mormon by M. T. Lamb, I was impressed deeply with the following criticism, which to my mind seemed a fair and intellectual one:

There is no man on earth, who, with a modern geography in his hand, can locate a single one of all the magnificent cities mentioned in the Book of Mormon, whether in North or South America.—The Golden Bible, p. 316.

Again:

Is it not strange, dear reader, that not even one solitary name from the Book of Mormon has been unearthed by all the researches of the past, and that we are left without a solitary evidence of the truthfulness of this book? . . . this Mormon list of names [omitted here] never had an existence in fact—that they are absolutely a myth; and therefore the book that contains them a fraudulent fiction.—Ibid., pp. 278, 279.

Honest men are never influenced by the opponent who depends upon mud-slinging and falsehood to meet the Book of Mormon, notwithstanding pulpit, priest, and press have done their best to defeat it with such weapons. The honest man is able to realize that after seventy-five years of abuse, the Book of Mormon is more alive to-day than it ever was before, and that falsehood and slander have done us no more real harm than the man who shot boiled peas at the Rock of Gibraltar, hoping thereby to destroy it. Hence it has been said of us that "opposition and persecution are the benefactors of the book." And that the "blood of martyrs is the seed of Saints." Be that as it may, there is one weapon which will always influence the honest man, namely, "Honest, intellectual criticism." Hence the wise have been sought, their talent employed, and we are expected to meet them. Believing "there is nothing so bad but that search will find it out," I set myself to the task of searching for these Book of Mormon names, which I append below in the following order. Here we have the Book of Mormon list, and those lately found which correspond therewith:

Laman is also on the map of Central America, volume 3, page 282, of the Universal Geography.

Near MANTI, Ecuador, a remarkable archaeological relic has been found—one of the most interesting monuments in South America, of an unknown and extinct civilization. Upon a platform of massive rock blocks of stone, on the summit of a low hill, is a natural amphitheater, and arranged in a perfect circle are thirty enormous stone chairs, evidently, the seats of the mighty. Each chair is a monolith cut from a solid block of granite, and they are fine specimens of stone-carvings. The seats rest upon the back of a crouching sphinx which has a decidedly Egyptian appearance. There are no backs to the chairs, but two broad arms. This is supposed to have been a place of meeting—an open-air council of the chiefs of several tribes that made up the prehistoric nations which were subdued by the Incas of Peru several hundred years before the Spanish invasion.

See Rand, McNally & Co.'s Index Atlas of the World, revised edition, page 351, map of Colombia, "M. 10." Near the equator you will find the city of CUEMANI. Compare with our Archaeological Committee's Report on the Book of Mormon, map of the Land of Zarahemla, map No. 14, and you will find that Rand, McNally & Co. find Cuenani just where Book of Mormon map locates CUMENI.

See Prehistoric America by Nadaillac, edition of 1893, page 27: "In the French colony of Guiana . . . on the banks of the MARONI."

This Maroni River is the dividing line between the Dutch and French Guiana, and will be found on Columbia Atlas of the World, map of South America, and on almost all standard maps.

We also find a Morona River in Ecuador. (See Rand, McNally & Co., Index Atlas of the World, revised edition, page 367, Morona River, "B 3," in Ecuador.)

The writer has traced this word Moroni under the spelling of Maroni, the river dividing the French and Dutch Guiana, as far back as 1778 on various maps. For instance, the American Atlas, by the late Thomas Jefferys, Geographer to the king and others, London, 1778, shows this river at that early date, but marked it "source unknown."

"Departing from there we went farther for eight miles and came to a people called Marroni. They are a very numerous people, and received us very well." The above was taken from a book published in 1567 in German. A careful transcript of the title-page reads as follows:

The Conquest of the River Plate 1535-1555.
Voyage of Ulrich Schmidt to the Rivers La Plata and Paraguay, from the original German edition of 1567.
Translated for the Hakluyt Society, London, 1891.
Carnegie Library, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Almost three hundred years before the Book of Mormon was published and two hundred and seventy years before Joseph Smith's birth.

See Columbian Atlas of the World, map of South America: In the northern extremity of Colombia, (Central America,) you will find the city of David. Compare this with Book of Mormon map No. 5. Location is remarkably close.

Sam is a Book of Mormon name. Reverend Folk in Mormon Monster, page 186, ridicules it as follows: "This name Sam by the way sounds very modern." Now turn to the U. S. Bur. Ethen., vol. 19, part 2, pp. 605, 625, 628. Under the column of "men and boy's names" we find "Sami."

Professor Thomas of the U. S. Bur. Ethen. tells us this name was found among an ancient tribe, one who preserved their language and customs from contamination with foreign tribes or people.

Had we the time and space we could show Reverend Folk that this name Sam is as old as Egypt, if not older.

Mulek, which was after the sons of Zedekiah.—Book of Mormon, p. 394.
The people of Zarahemla, who was a descendant of Mulek.—Book of Mormon, p. 191.
The people of Zarahemla [Mulek] came out from Jerusalem at the time that Zedekiah, king of Judah, was carried away captive into Babylon.—Book of Mormon, p. 137.
And it came to pass that the people of Zarahemla [Mulek] and of Mosiah did unite together.—Book of Mormon, p. 137.

It will be seen that the people of Zarahemla were descendants of Mulek, and he a descendant of Zedekiah of Jerusalem. They were the third colony to emigrate to American soil, and when they met the people of Mosiah they discovered they were both from the same land in the East. And, after some years had passed away,—having traveled independent of each other,—they meet upon the same land here in the West, they unite and become one people. Keep this thought of their reunion in mind while we examine the evidence of John T. Short and others on this very point. See his work on North American Antiquity, page 438. "Mulue" means "reunion." Again, "Mulue"—"To join together." (See U. S. Bur. Ethen., vol. 6, p. 238.) "To gather together scattered things."—Brinton, p. 217.

These very people who were once scattered, were also joined together. The name and its meaning still preserved!

Universal Geography by E. Reclus, America, volume 4, page 425:

The long spear-shaped island of which it forms a part has been well named a "land of desolation" recalling at the southern extremity of the new world that other land of desolation which lies at its northern extremity.

What Mr. Reclus means by northern extremity of the New World, I do not know. If he means the northern extremity of North America, then this point is of no value to us. I have looked for a land of desolation in the northern extremity of North America, but could not find it. But if Mr. Reclus meant by "northern extremity of the New World," the land of South America, then would not the northern extremity bring us to Central America, and the very spot where the Book of Mormon records a Land of Desolation?

Why can not some Religious write to Mr. E. Reclus and try to remove the doubt? In meantime I will cite other authorities to show that "desolation" of Central America has always been preserved. See Stamford's Compendium of Geography, volume 2, page 487, edition of London, 1901: In the west central part of Nicaragua the west seashore, 12 north latitude, "Cape Desalado."

I have several maps in my library which show Cape Desalado and Port Desalado. I also have a Spanish American New Testament with a Spanish and American column, translated in 1852; and turning to two places where desolation is used in English I find that the opposite column (Spanish) in both places have used this very word, desalado, as the Spanish translation of this American word desolation. It is a well known fact that the Spaniards renamed many of those old Indian names, some partly in keeping with the original sound, and others so corrupted that one can see no resemblance on either side; but enough have escaped their destructive hand to establish the truth of the Book of Mormon.

In verification of Isaiah 29: 14 we cite another wise authority who has gone wrong on this very point, having borrowed his wisdom from Reverend M. T. Lamb. Reverend Folk says:

It is strange also that there is no record in those countries of any people by the names given in the Book of Mormon. If people by those names had been so numerous and so powerful there, certainly there ought to be some trace of their names in the literature and in the present names of the country. There are plenty of names; but they are very different from those mentioned in the Book of Mormon. And so as to the names of cities and countries, the names preserved in the traditions of the natives and in all their writings, are utterly unlike those given in the Book of Mormon. In Palestine and other Bible lands the names of the cities are preserved very much as given in the Bible, so that they can readily be identified, thus constituting a powerful testimony to the truthfulness of the Bible. But not so with the names of cities given in the Book of Mormon. Not a single one of them can be recognized in the present names of cities in the countries where they are said to have existed.—Mormon Monster, by Folk, pp. 175, 176. Its geographical errors...is a fraud of the deepest dye.—Page 187.

In a later article the writer hopes to show that the geography of the Book of Mormon is correct and that many of these cities mentioned above have been found in the very countries and exact locations where the Book of Mormon claims they once existed. I have ample evidence to satisfy any honest mind on this point.

E. H. THOMAS.

PITTSBURG, Pennsylvania, December 22, 1905.

RAINFALL IN PALESTINE.

Under the above heading, the Helper, an "anti-Mormon" publication, in its issue of June-July, 1905, publishes a statement which the editor says was forwarded to Professor J. W. McGarvey, of Lexington, Kentucky, viz.:

"They (the elders) claimed, among other things, that simultaneously with the coming of the Book of Mormon the Jews began to gather back to Palestine, and that the Lord restored the rains to Palestine that had been denied it for nearly nineteen hundred years, and that land, barren so long for the want of rain, or moisture, was now restored to its former fruitfulness, etc."

The Professor replied as follows:

"Dear Brother Neal: Overwork connected with closing our session has delayed this answer to yours of the 2d inst.

"There is not a word of truth in the statement about the rainfall in Palestine.

"It has remained about the same ever since the fall of Jerusalem as it was before.

"The only change is that the great reservoirs constructed by the ancient Jews have been allowed to go to ruin, that is, very many of them, so that the water is not saved and utilized as it once was. No increase of rain is recorded in the history of the country. Yours ever, "J. W. GARVEY.

"LEXINGTON, Kentucky, June 15, 1905."

After a little comment, the editor, in closing, asks "anti-Mormon polemics" to paste his article in their hats. I always thought "anti-Mormon polemics" had small heads!

Professor McGarvey admits that the "latter rains" are falling in Palestine, for he says the rainfall has "remained about the same ever since the fall of Jerusalem as it was before."

If, as Professor McGarvey says, the rainfall in Palestine has remained about the same ever since the fall of Jerusalem, as it was before, why did God, speaking of the restoration of his people Israel back to their own land, say, "Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord, your God: for he hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month."—Joel 2:23. Why did God say that? According to this prophecy the "latter rain" was to fall in the latter days, in Abib, which would be in about March and April.

To Palestine, since the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, Jews from all countries have been gathering, and, despite the oppression of the ruling Turkish government, the boundaries of Jerusalem have been extended far beyond the walls inclosing the old city. The city is fast building up. Imposing structures have been and are being erected, and its population is about seventy-five thousand people, fifty thousand of whom are Jews. There are in Jerusalem, stores, warehouses, and factories, bakers, bankers, barbers, bookbinders, carpenters, bookshops, China-stores, pharmacists, hospitals, dyers, millers, grocery-stores, gunmakers, hotels, butcher-shops, photographers, potteries, policemen, harness-makers, shoemakers, blacksmiths, tailors, watchmakers, etc.

Isaiah declared that shortly after the coming forth of the sealed book of which he was speaking, Lebanon should be "turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest." (29:17.) If Lebanon were not regarded as a fruitful field, the Zionists among the Jews would not endeavor to secure it as a home for the Jews.

I should be pleased if I could learn what has been the annual rainfall in Jerusalem from 1880 to the present time. I know of no one who kept daily records before 1861. In that year daily observations were begun by Doctor Chaplin, and were continued by him for the long period of twenty-two years; since 1883 they have been continued under the auspices of the Palestine Exploration Fund.

In a work entitled Meteorological Observations at Jerusalem, by James Glaisher, F. R. S., published by the Committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund, 38 Conduit Street W. (London), the author deals with "The fall of rain at Jerusalem in the forty-one years from 1861 to 1901 inclusive." Mr. Glaisher has subjoined tables indicating the fall of rain in inches at Jerusalem in every month in the years 1861 to 1901, and the number of days of rain in every month.

The Palestine Exploration Fund was founded for the purpose of conducting systematic and scientific research in the Holy Land. It was established on the basis of the following rules:

1. It was not to be a religious society. That is to say, it should not be pledged to advocate or attack any form of creed or doctrine.
2. It was not to adopt or to defend any side in controversial matters.
3. It was to be conducted on strictly scientific principles.

Mr. Neal says of Professor McGarvey, "There is no higher authority on the earth than he is on matters that pertain to Palestine." I will now let Mr. Glaisher, F. R. S., join issue with Professor McGar-
The average annual fall of rain, which is shown at the foot of the last column, is 25.87 inches, being very nearly the same as the fall in London, though the annual fluctuations are very much greater.

By taking the annual falls and laying them down as a diagram the results can be seen at a glance. The first thing noticeable is the evident increase of the fall of rain in the later years of the series. Up to the year 1873 no fall of rain had reached 30 inches, the nearest approach being 29.75 inches in 1874; but in the diagram in the years from 1873 to 1897 the points in twelve years, viz.: 1878, 1880, 1883, 1886, 1888, 1890, 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894, 1896, and 1897, were all well above 30 inches.

By taking the means of the annual falls in four parts, viz.: the ten years from 1861 to 1870, ten years from 1871 to 1880, ten years, 1881 to 1890, and eleven years from 1891 to 1901, the means of the four periods were found to be:

In the 10 years, 1861 to 1870 ..................... 21.84 inches.
In the 10 years, 1871 to 1880 ..................... 24.61 inches.
In the 10 years, 1881 to 1890 ..................... 27.69 inches.
In the 11 years, 1891 to 1901 ..................... 29.03 inches.

Therefore the mean fall in the second period was 2.77 inches larger than the first, in the third 3.08 inches larger than in the second, and in the fourth period 1.34 inches larger than in the third. This is very remarkable, for it shows that the yearly fall of rain, though not distributed over a greater number of days than was the case at the beginning of the series, becomes larger with each succeeding period.

"Anti-Mormon polemics can paste this in their hats." The prophet Isaiah declared that Lebanon should be "esteemed as a fruitful field," shortly after the coming forth of the "sealed book." Whether the land's fruitfulness was to be due to a change of political influences, an inflow of population, or the fall of the "latter rain," are questions of detail—Palestine is now regarded as a "fruitful field."

Paul M. Hanson.

Jerusalem, Palestine, February 27, 1906.

WHAT THE LORD IS DOING FOR PALESTINE, FROM 1854 TO 1904.

While in our "capital city" of Michigan doing ministerial work, January and February, current year, I was privileged to visit both State and "Carnegie" libraries in the search for authentic accounts of the modern restoration and settlement of Palestine. This is a subject of much interest, especially to Latter Day Saints, because it furnishes proof of the work they stand to represent. But "a little while," following the "marvelous work," of Isaiah, twenty-ninth chapter, and "Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field," and Judah's dispersed children begin to gather to their home; their "pale faces" gradually assuming normal conditions, under the favor of the Most High, and their "shame" rapidly disappearing. And, too, in the Orient especially, the Israelites believe that now is the time their nationality will be restored; that they will have a country of their own, and the days of bondage, or quasi-bondage, will have passed away for ever. What other land so appropriate as the land on which they first achieved a distinct and glorified position among the nations of the Old World? It was there the cradle of civilization was first successfully rocked. It was there the scepter was clasped in the hands of Israelitish kings, and at last departed from Judah, with desolation to the "House." It was there their priests reigned as kings. It is the land that Moses saw, but did not enter; where David sweetly tuned the tabret and the harp in the service of the Lord; where Solomon built the temple, and ruled, "arrayed in all his glory"; where a literature has been created that has come down the ages unapproachable in its splendor. They are a distinct people; the abrasions of the world, which have been terrible to them, have not changed their nationality.

The Jew is a cosmopolitan. They are ubiquitous everywhere, "from Greenland's icy mountains to India's coral strand." They rival the natives in bodily health and mental vigor. The prophecies that prognosticated the destruction of the various empires—the desolation of Babylon, Tyre, Nineveh, are met with the objection of the nonbeliever, that it is the fate of all governments to rise and fall, hence it was only shrewd guessing on the part of the Hebrew prophets. But what can be said to Moses' prophecy of the utter dispersion of the Jews among all the people of the earth? (See Deuteronomy 28: 25.) Here is noted, not a destruction, but a species of perpetual preservation. This is miraculous because no other people can exist under every climatic change or condition. From the fall of Jerusalem,—A. D. 72,—and the dissolution of the Jewish commonwealth, until the nineteenth century, has the prophecy of our Lord received vindication, that the Jews should "fall by the edge of the sword, and be carried away as captives among all nations" (Luke 21: 24), and the desolation of their house be continued until Gentile times were fulfilled. With the rejection of "light" shining through the long-looked-for Messiah, nineteen hundred years ago, was the ax laid to the tree of Jewish nationality; and the desolating torch thrown into the temple by Titus has not ceased to burn, until from the fertile, grain-producing fields, flowery lawns, olive-bedecked valleys, and hills of verdure capped with vines yielding tons of clusters, the Holy Land has been changed to one of curse,—a land of ruins,—as prophecy and authentic history attest.

Prophetic inspiration has said that one wave of ruin should follow another in the ravages of Palestine: "Hear this, ye old men, and give ear, all ye inhabitants of the land. Hath this been in your days, or even in the days of your fathers? Tell ye your children of it, and let your children tell their children, and their children another generation,"
Why, Joel, is it so important that you wish to send it down the line of years so far? Yes, hundreds of years in the future. What is it? "That which the palmerworm hath left, hath the locust eaten; and that which the locust hath left, hath the cankerworm eaten; and that which the cankerworm hath left, hath the caterpillar eaten." —Joel 1:2-4.

Of the ministry of Jesus among the Jews, and the dire calamity following the treatment accorded him, Isaiah prophetically portrays:

Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their hearts, and convert, and be healed. Then said I, Lord, how long? And he answered, Until the cities be wasted without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be utterly desolate; and the Lord have removed men far away, and there be a great forsaking in the midst of the land. —Isaiah 6:10-12.

Jesus applied this statement to the subjects of his ministry, the Jews, in old Judea, and the ministration of the gospel continued up until the work of desolation was ushered in, and "men removed far away," or were taken captive by the conquering Romans. Jeremiah, also, takes up a "lamentation and wailing for the inhabitants of the wilderness." He says the habitations "are burned up, so that none can pass through them; neither can men hear the voice of the cattle: both the fowl of the heavens and the beast are fled; they are gone. And I will make Jerusalem heaps and a den of dragons; and I will make the cities of Judah desolate, without an inhabitant." (Jeremiah 9:10, 11.) These troubles which came upon the Holy Land and its peoples soon after Christ ascended to heaven, are not viewed as a matter of ordinary occurrence which may deserve and attract little attention. They are something out of the ordinary—out of the common course of nature. According to the prophecy of Moses, and as a simple fact, the Jews have been laboring under the curse of God, and this sentiment has been universally taught and believed. Moses says on this point:

So that the generations to come of your children that shall rise up after you, and the stranger that shall come from a far land, shall say, when they see the plagues of that land, and the sicknesses which the Lord hath laid upon it; ... even all nations shall say, Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this land? What meaneth the heat of this great anger?—Deuteronomy 29:22-24.

This great desolation was thus to be looked upon universally, as a token of great displeasure. Volney has affirmed that the desolation and "sicknesses" have come upon Syria and Palestine, and assists in fulfilling the prophecy by asking the questions contemplated therein. In Ruins of Empire, pages 7 and 8, he writes:

I wandered over the country—I enumerated the kingdoms of Damascus, Idumea, Jerusalem, and Samaria. This Syria, said I to myself, now almost depopulated, then contained a hundred flourishing cities, and abounded with towns, villages, and hamlets. What are become of so many productions of man? What are become of these ages of abundance? and of life? Great God! from whence proceed such melancholy revolutions? For what cause is the fortune of these countries changed so strikingly? Why are so many cities destroyed? Why is not that ancient population reproduced and perpetuated?

Isaiah says:

I will lay it waste; ... I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it. —Isaiah 5:6.

Moses predicts:

Thy heaven that is over thy head shall be brass, and the earth that is under thee shall be iron. The Lord shall make the rain of thy land powder and dust; from heaven shall it come down upon thee.—Deuteronomy 28:23, 24.

That this prophecy has been accomplished in the withholding of the rains in Palestine, and the showers of literal dust coming down, we cite you to the testimony of Professor J. Leslie Porter, M.A., who visited those regions forty years ago:

On emerging from Bashan and the olive-groves of Gaza, the desert was before us—bare, white, and monotonous, without a solitary tree, or "the shadow of a great rock," or a single patch of verdure. As we rode on we had overhead the bright sky and blazing sun; and beneath, the flinty soil, reflecting burning rays that scorched the weeds and stunted camel-thorn, and made them crackle like charred sticks under our horses' feet. As the day advanced, the sirocco came upon us, blowing across the great "Wilderness of Wandering." At first it was but a faint breath, hot and parching, as if coming from a furnace. It increased slowly and steadily. Then a thick haze of a dull yellow or brass color, spreading along the southern horizon, and advanced, rising and expanding, until it covered the whole face of the sky, leaving the sun, a red globe of fire, in the midst. In a few minutes, fine impalpable sand began to drift in our faces, entering every pore. Nothing could exclude it. It blew in our eyes, mouths, and nostrils, and penetrated our very clothes, causing the skin to contract, the lips to crack, and the eyes to burn. Respiration became difficult. We sometimes gasped for breath; and then the hot wind and hotter sand rushed into our mouths like a stream of liquid fire. We tried to urge on our horses, but though chafing against curb and rein only an hour before, they were now almost insensible to whip and spur. We looked and longed for shelter from that pitiless storm, and for water to slake our burning thirst; but there was none. No friendly house was there; no rock or bank; no murmuring stream or solitary well. It seemed to us as if the prophetic curse pronounced by the Almighty on a sinful and apostate nation was now being fulfilled.—Giant Cities of Bashan, p. 210.

Doctor Alexander Keith says:

By the concurring testimony of all travelers, Judea is called a field of ruins. Columns, the memorials of ancient magnificence, covered with rubbish, and buried under ruins, may be found in all Syria. ... How marvelously are the predictions of desolation verified, when in general nothing but ruined ruins form the most distinguished remnants of the cities of Israel, and when the multitude of its towns are almost all left, with many a vestige to testify of their number, but without a mark to tell their name. —Evidences from Prophecy, p. 93.

Does it not seem strange that this land, once "flowing with milk and honey" for its Israelitish occupants, should be thus under this particular curse? And for what? Just permit the Lord to answer:

And it shall come to pass, when thou shalt show this people all these words, and they shall say unto thee, Wherefore hath the Lord pronounced all this great evil against us? or what is our iniquity? or what is our sin that we have committed against the Lord our God? Then, shalt thou say unto them, Because your fathers have forsaken me, saith the Lord, and have walked after other gods, and have served them, and have worshiped them, and have forsaken me, and have not kept my law; and ye have done worse than your fathers; for, behold, ye walk every one after the imagination of his evil heart, that they may not hearken unto me. —Jeremiah 16:10-12.

Thus, for alienating themselves from God, does "the land mourn." For this cause, does Isaiah say "the Lord takes away from Jerusalem and Judah . . . the whole stay of bread, and the whole stay of water"; also, "Jerusalem is ruined, and Judah fallen . . . And she being fallen, and desolate, shall sit upon the ground." (Isaiah 3:1, 8, 26.)

Now it is an historic fact that on the medals which were made by the Romans after A. D. 72, to commemorate the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, Judea is represented under the figure of a female sitting in a posture of grief under a palm-tree with this inscription, Judea Capta—an affecting image of desolation. As to the duration of these "ruins" and desolation, scholarship says:

Eighteen centuries of war, ruin, and neglect have passed over it. Its valleys have been cropped for ages without the least attempt at fertilization. Its terraced walls have been allowed to crumble, and its soil has washed down its ravines, leaving the hill-sides rocky and sterile. Its trees have been cut down, and never replaced. Its fields have been desolate. Its structures pillaged and all its improvements ruthlessly destroyed. A land of ruins without man or beast. Everywhere on plain or mountain, in rocky deserts or on beetling cliff the spoiler's hand has rested.—McClintock and Strong's Encyclopedia, article "Palestine."

How sad! This monumental nation, and monumental land, stands out as an object-lesson. But "God is no respecter of persons." Nations are composed of persons; therefore, God is no respecter of nations! But the black mantle of death was to be lifted from both soil and nation. The "curse" was to be supplanted by blessing. The long-expectant dawn is now beginning to illumne the eastern horizon. The blasted fig-tree of Jewish nationality begins to bud and bloom. Prophet-king, prophet-priest, and prophet-bard with inspired wand sweep the area of the past and present century. The Lord has "a long time holden his peace" (Isaiah 42:14); for a period of two thousand years has "taken his rest" (Isaiah 18:4). "I have been still, and refrained myself: now will I cry"; will "go forth"; "yea, roar"; "I will make waste mountains; I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known; I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them." (Isaiah 42:13-16.) The time of liberation of the sons of Israel, and the resurrection of their land from the dead, is fixed. Of this time the Lord says: "They shall lament for . . . the pleasant fields, for the fruitful vine. Upon the land of my people shall come up thorns, and briars; yea, upon all the houses of joy in the joyous city. Because the palaces shall be forsaken; populous city shall be deserted; the hill and watch-tower shall be for dens," (Revised Version) "a pasture for flocks." How long is this "ruined" condition to continue? "Until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high, and the wilderness be a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be counted for a forest. Then judgment shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness remain in the fruitful field."—Isaiah 32:12-17. This statement affirms that "the curse" will remain "until the Spirit be poured out from on high." When will that event occur? Joel says it shall come to pass after Israel begins to gather from their dispersion among the nations, that "God will pour out his Spirit upon all flesh," and this period he more plainly indicates by the words, "And I will show wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and the terrible day of the Lord come."—Joel 2:28-32.

In the Acts of the Apostles, second chapter, the Holy Ghost in the apostle Peter translates the word afterward, in Joel 2:28, as "the last days." In the last days, therefore, the dial reverts from a backward to a forward move, and the land of Palestine, on which is the Lord's watchful eye, from one year to another for ever manifests the thrilling touch of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Now is "the Lord jealous for his land, and pities his children." (Joel 2:18.) Jesus Christ puts the time when these "wonders" should transpire "in the heavens"—"sun, and moon"—and in the earth, far to the future of his day of earthly ministration, (see Luke 21:25-33; Matthew 24:29, 31; Mark 13:24-27. Therefore, the restoration of Palestine and its long-exiled children is an event this side of A. D. 70-72,) even in the time of "the fullness of the Gentiles." (Luke 21:24.) An event to occur in "the restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets," just preceding the revelation of Jesus in glory.

THE RESTORATION NOW IN PROGRESS, THEREFORE THESE ARE THE LATTER DAYS.

And the desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by. And they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined cities are . . . now inhabited.—Ezekiel 36:34, 35.

As proof, undeniable, that our day is the period of the fulfillment of the remarkable prophecies of restoration, I append the following, copied from the Jewish Encyclopedia, volume 1, page 246. This work was prepared by more than four hundred Jewish scholars and specialists. Date 1904, A. D.

In Palestine there are twenty-seven colonies, distributed as follows:
1. In the land of Judah—9 colonies occupy 9,254 acres.
2. In Samaria—8 colonies occupy 16,129 acres.

These are the larger and more prosperous colonies. Other smaller ones are also mentioned. Of the founding of these colonies and their conditions the encyclopedia continues:

When at the close of the sixteenth century, Joseph Nasi, duke of Naxos, began to rebuild the city of Tiberias "where only Jews were to dwell" he planted mulberry-trees to encourage the inhabitants in the breeding of silk-worms. His contemporary, Moses ben Joseph, of Trani, in his responsa (Venice 1629) relates that the Jews of Palestine devoted themselves at that time to such agricultural pursuits as cultivating cotton, growing cereals, raising vegetables, planting mulberry-trees, breeding silk-worms, and apiculture. These records show merely that agriculture was pursued, perhaps intermittently, by Jews in Palestine . . . but they do not point directly to the founding of agriculture as such. For the establishment of these, one must look to comparatively modern times. That Sir Moses Montefiore long cherished the idea of establishing agricultural colonies in the Holy Land is well known. On each of his seven visits there, he devoted much time and thought to the subject, particularly with reference to the problem of securing protection for the lives and property of any future colonists. Besides interviewing Boghurs Bey in 1888, [Diaries, 1:196.] on his second visit to Palestine he held a conference with Israel Drucker [who had a farm at Dzerneck] and other land-owners. On his fourth visit to the east in 1854, he was received by the Sultan and had an interview with the British ambassador, Sir Stratford de Redcliffe respecting the purchase of land in Palestine. After consulting with a committee Sir Moses selected thirty-five families from Safed, and provided them with the means necessary to begin farming. About 1860, several orthodox rabbis, among whom were Hirsch Kalischer, and Elijah Gutmacher, developed a plan for the colonization of Palestine with Russian and Roumanian Jews; and this plan was soon after supported by the Maskilim [Progressists]. The latter induced the alliance Israelitish Universelle of Paris to interest themselves in the matter, notwithstanding the circumstances that many members of the alliance doubted the adaptability of the Jews to agricultural work. This organization sent Charles Netter as its representative to Palestine to investigate. On his return he advised the Alliance to make a beginning by establishing a school for the purpose of training in agriculture the Jewish children of Palestine, and those of other oriental countries. The Turkish government presented the alliance with six hundred and seventeen acres of land near Jaffa on the road to Jerusalem; and in 1870 a farm school was established under the superintendence of Charles Netter at Mikweh yisrael. Here all branches of horticulture, especially viticulture, are taught after the most modern methods, and so successfully that the proceeds derived from the sale of produce are sufficient to defray all expenses. In 1877, several Jews of Jerusalem purchased seven hundred and sixty-seven acres of land from Selim Kassar, an Arab of Jaffa. In 1887, Baron Edmond de Rothschild bought some of the vacated land.

Oh, reader, permit me to pause just here, long enough to inject a prophecy: "And fields shall be bought in this land, whereof ye say, It is desolate without man or beast; men shall buy fields for money."—Jeremiah 32: 48, 44. Was it ever thus in the past? Did not they (Israel) take it by conquest even under the direction of God, during past ages of occupancy? But to continue:

Baron de Rothschild planted a number of Eucalyptus-trees around the marshes as a preventive of malaria. Emil Lachmann of Berlin, another philanthropist, also bought a part of the land and planted a large orange-grove, and a number of grape-vines. Upon this tract there are now growing [1904.—Scott.] more than a million vines, beside a large number of oranges-, lemon-, and other fruit-trees.

Ah, let me pause again to quote, and as I do so, will the "Anti-Mormon Association" kindly accept my regards? "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the mountains shall drop down new wine."—Joel 3: 18. Just "a little while" after the "marvelous work and a wonder," began. Does the Helper recognize that it is up against Moses, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Jesus Christ, Paul, and Joel in denying the facts here involved, as well as running up against the veracity of over four hundred Jewish scholars? But to hasten:

Some of the colonists grow wheat, others culture silk-worms. Another industry to which they give attention is floriculture. This began with the planting of the geranium, and led to the building by Baron de Rothschild of a perfume distillery. The population of this settlement in 1888 was eight hundred and two persons. The year 1885 witnessed the foundation of the first of the Russian Jewish colonies in Palestine called Rishon-le-Zion. It consisted of emigrants who established themselves on the road between Jaffa and Gaza. Baron de Rothschild took charge of them. The population covered 1,545 acres. The chief products of the colony are wine and brandy, which are exported to Egypt, Constantinople, Russia, Germany, and to the United States. Over a million and a half of vines have been planted. An enormous cellar has been built, fitted with modern machinery and presses for the manufacture as well as the preservation of wine. Most of the grape-vines planted have been imported from America and grafted with French varieties, the vines being thus made unsusceptible to the attacks of the phylloxera. This colony has produced as much as 366,300 gallons of wine in a year, besides a quantity of good brandy. Over 20,000 mulberry-trees used in silk-work culture, as well as a large number of fruit-trees, such as almond, fig, pomegranate, apple, and citron, thrive in the settlement. Every family in the colony inhabits a stone house, with a flower- and market-garden, and owns a horse and cart, together with at least one cow, and some poultry. The indebtedness of each family to Baron de Rothschild is being gradually liquidated. The colony supports a synagogue, a school, a public bath, a nursery-garden, a library, a town hall, and a hospital. The internal affairs of the community are administered by an elective committee of settlers. A party of ninety Russian-Jewish students, members of the Society Bilu, migrated to Palestine in 1882, and set to work as common laborers, hoping to save enough money to found a separate colony. They took for their motto, "House of Jacob, come let us go." They joined the Ghederah Colony, started by the Zion society of Paris. This colony is situated four miles southwest of Ekron and covers an area of eight hundred and fifteen acres. One fourth of this is under wheat, and on the remainder about 200,000 grape-vines, and different kinds of fruit-trees are planted. This colony has a synagogue, a school, and a pharmacy. The Nahalat-Reuben colony was founded in 1882. The population covers three hundred and thirty-six acres, and numbered in 1898, one hundred and twenty-one persons. It has a large orange-grove, 150,000 grape-vines, and many thousands of fruit-trees of various kinds. The founder, Reuben Lehrer, occupies himself with apiculture; two hundred hives brought an income of $772.

The Zikron-ya' akob Colony was founded in 1882 by emigrants from Roumania. It is located in Samaria, and is the largest and finest of all the colonies in Palestine. Population is one thousand (two hundred families) occupying 3,655 acres. The colonists engage in various occupations, such as breeding silk-worms, growing wheat, keeping bees, and raising vegetables. As evidence of the prosperity of the colony, reference must be made to the possession of a steam-plow, a steam-mill, an aqueduct, a large nursery-garden, paved streets, spacious wine-cellar, a library, a school, a synagogue, and a hospital. The colony has four branches—Tauna—the ancient Dor, where a glass-factory was established, but had to be given up, because of poor quality of sand. According to the latest information, the parent colony with its branches numbered two thousand.

The colony Rash Pina was founded in 1882 by emigrants from Roumania. No colony in Palestine is more picturesquely situated. It lies four miles north of Safed on the slope of a mountain and commands a magnificent view of Mount Hermon, and Lake Merom. It covered 1,581 acres which supported a population of five hundred souls—eighty families. A half million grape-vines and 20,000 mulberry-trees are growing. A silk-factory is located at this point.

The Yesod-ha-ma‘alah Colony was founded 1885 by emigrants from Russia Poland. It is located on the shores of Lake Merom, and occupies a tract of 583 acres, and numbers one hundred. Its irrigation facilities are unusual, receiving as it does an inexhaustible supply of water by steam-power from Lake Merom. Large nursery-gardens, and the cultivation of roses on an extensive scale, constitute the chief industry of the colony. A part of roses is made at a distillery erected by Baron de Rothschild. Fishing and cattle-breeding are also engaged in.

The Mazkeret Byta Colony was founded in 1884, by Baron de Rothschild, with eleven families of Jewish agriculturists from Russia. It is situated on the site of Ekron in the Bible, the Akir of to-day. In 1900, the colonists numbered one hundred and fifty in thirty families, and possessed 919 acres. A portion of the land is devoted to the culture of about 16,000 fruit-trees of various kinds; the remainder to the growing of cereals, the conditions being especially suited for the production of excellent wheat, sesame, and barley.

Mishmar ha Yarden: Founded in 1884 near the bridge of the daughter of Jacob, which is built over the Jordan near Lake Merom. It covers 988 acres.

Beer Tobiah: this colony was founded 1888, by Bessarabian Jews. It is situated eight miles from Ghederah on the main road to Gaza. It covers 1,580 acres. Its population one hundred and eighteen. This colony developed into a typical Palestinian colony, or Jewish village. It is devoted solely to the growing of wheat, and is in a prosperous condition.

Rehoboth was founded in 1890, by a party of wealthy Russian Zionists with Rabbi Samuel Mohilever of Bielostock at their head. It covers 1,566 acres. It is situated four miles from Rishon-le-Zion, and the same distance from Ramleh, a railroad station between Jaffa and Jerusalem. In 1898 its population had increased and eight hundred and fifty acres, 2,387 acres. A fine vineyard laid out by Jewish day-laborers contains 650,000 vines, and a great many almond, mulberry, and other trees. Some of the settlers grow cereals. Each household has a garden, horses, cattle, and poultry, indicating a farming spirit among the Jewish settlers. It provides a good school for its children. Instruction is given in the Hebrew tongue.

Ain Zeitun: In 1891, speculators bought 1,075 acres two miles north of Safed, and sold it to a party of laborers. Not having sufficient means to work the tract, they transferred it to Baron de Rothschild with whose benefit aid, 750,000 vines, and many fruit-trees were planted in the course of six or seven years. In 1899 those colonies in Palestine whose title lay in the name of Edmond de Rothschild passed over to the management of the Jewish Colonization Association of London.

As to the institutions and societies existing in Palestine, we copy from volume 8, page 152:

Free dispensaries are maintained in connection with the hospitals. There are four Jewish hospitals under the Rothschilds. Two orphanages for boys have been established. There are also an institute for training blind children, an asylum for incurables and insane, and a home for aged men and women. There are a large school for girls—the Evelina-de-Rothschild, (founded 1864), at present under the Anglo-Jewish Association of London; and a school for boys—the Edler Von Laemmel school, established 1856 under Frankfort Society; the elementary school for boys, the technical shops, the Alliance Israelite Universelle . . . a library containing 20,000 volumes.

Of Jewish settlements in and around Jerusalem, the city, page 142 says:

A change for the better came with the Russian Jews,—1881 and 1891,—who brought with them more modern ideas of life. It was impossible to find room for all in the old Jewish quarters between the traditional Zion and the temple mount. New portions were built up north and west of the city . . . by building societies. In 1891 there were eighteen such societies owning four hundred houses in front of Jaffa and Damascus gates, and fifteen houses on the mount of Olives. Other societies were founded to enable Jews to acquire landed property.

One of the strongest instrumentalities for promoting industry, and developing the colonies, as well as stimulating emigration to Palestine, is "The Jewish Colonial Trust." Of this institution, volume 7, page 176, states as follows:

The financial instrument of the Zionist movement. Its establishment was suggested at the first Zionists' congress at Basle, 1897, the first definite steps towards its institution were taken at Cologne, May, 1898. It was conceived by the political Zionists as a financial instrument which should hold in trust the moneys of the Zionists for the direct purpose of the movement, and at the same time should act as a bank, and carry on business according to the methods of the commercial world. These slightly conflicting ideas rested on a basic principle of the Zionists' movement, viz.: that it must not serve as charity, but must teach and foster independence. On the other hand, it was recognized by the Zionists that financial power is needed to support diplomatic negotiations. The idea of founding the trust met with Zionists' sympathy from the start, and in May, 1898, the preliminary committee, consisting of David Wolfsohn, and Doctor M. Bodenheimer of Cologne, and Doctor Rudolph Schauer of Mayence, issued the first statement of the proposed institution, and the first call for subscriptions. The purposes of the trust were described as the economic development and strengthening of the Jewish colonies in Palestine and Syria, the purchase of land for new settlements, on a "publicly and legally recognized" basis, the development of trade, industry, and commerce in the colonies, the leasing of money on bond and mortgage, and the making of advances for colonization, and the establishment of savings banks or banking offices in the colonies. The statement also referred to the purchase of concessions, etc., in Asia Minor, especially in Syria and Palestine, particular consideration being given to railway concessions and the building of harbors. Other points mentioned, were the administration of the national fund, and the carrying on of ordinary banking and exchange business. It was decided that the principal office of the bank should be in London, that it should be registered under the English Companies Act, and that the capital stock should be two million sterling, issued in one pound shares. Prospective shareholders were permitted to secure shares by a payment of ten per cent per share; the balance to be subscribed within a stated period. These prelimi naries were terminated on July 15, 1898, and the chairman of the committee was able to submit so gratifying a report to the Second Zionists' Congress that the establishment of the bank was immediately decided upon. A numerous financial committee was appointed to represent Zionists' interests in every country, and the institution was incorporated as a limited company, under the English Companies Act, on March 20, 1899. The sum of £2,061 5s. was paid in stamp duties. In August, 1899, the shareholders revised the first paragraph of the memorandum of the Articles of Agreement as follows: "To promote, develop, work, and carry on colonization schemes in the East, by preference in Palestine and Syria, and further to promote, develop, work, and carry on industries and undertakings in Palestine, Syria, or in any other part of the world." By the end of May, 1899, over 100,000 shareholders made the establishment of the trust certain. At the congress of 1900, the deposits from various countries having been drawn into the central office, the trust was declared ready to transact business, and in 1892 a subsidiary corporation was formed—the Anglo-Palestine Company—and a branch opened in Jaffa.

What beautiful testimonials contained in the foregoing, not only to the fact of the Lord turning to lift out of the dust the seed of Abraham, whence they have been so long hurled, but also to the "lifting up of the ensign" after Judah's dispersion to "the ends of the earth,"—to the restoration of the gospel by angelic ministration—1823 to 1830. It will be noticed that this thrill of new life throughout Lebanon has been since 1854, dating with Moses Montefiore's effort in stimulating colonization, and notably since 1882. The Holy Land swarms with its legal heirs. The dismal days of "blindness" are rapidly passing. They have journeyed on through more than eighteen hundred years, while their house remains "desolate." Soon will they see the Star of Israel. They are coming mid tears, and blood, and death, but have never lost their nationality. They are speaking all languages, and sojourning in all climes; controlling orders for wealth (money and bonds) that is miraculous in quantity, and Almighty in power, backed by law. God is making them an "eternal excellency." Their banking system enables them to "bring gold for brass, and silver for iron" (Isaiah 60: 17), and kings financially "nurse" them.

They shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; they shall plant vineyards and drink the wine thereof, they shall make gardens, and eat the fruit of them. I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God.—Amos 9:14, 15.

Fear not, O land; be glad and rejoice: for the Lord will do great things. Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field; for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, for the tree beareth her fruit, the fig-tree and the vine do yield their strength. Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God, for he hath given you the former rain moderately and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month.—Joel 2:21-23.

The query has been raised as to what the "first month" means. "Month," in the Bible, is in italics, indicating that it is not in the original. Spurrel translates it thus,—"And causeth the gentle showers to descend upon you; the former rain, and the latter rain, even as before." Or as Boothroyd translates, "as aforetime." These rains—these gentle showers, now fall "as aforetime," causing the soil to burst, bud, and bloom, covering the earth with a carpet of green, and sending the flowers to adorn the plains. The botany of Palestine is richly varied. Upward of three hundred species have been reported, chiefly by the labors of Doctor George E. Post, of Beyrout. "For mile on mile, in the proper season," says Universal Encyclopedia, "the ground is covered with flowers of all the colors of the rainbow. Everywhere one sees the scarlet anemone, which is thought by some to be our Lord's 'lily of the field.' The ranunculus, and the pheasant's-eye (Adonis Pales­tina) are also very brilliant. The narcissus, the crocus, and the mallow are all candidates for the honor of being considered 'the rose of Sharon.' Of shrubs, the most abundant and the most beautiful is the oleander."—Universal Encyclopedia, vol. 9, A. D. 1900. In Letters From Bible Lands, eighth edition, page 222, D. L. Miller says: "The broad, beautiful plain (Sharon) which is blooming like a garden, extends from the Great sea to the hill country, and from Jaffa to Caesarea. By the wayside, thousands of Solomon's roses [species of mallows] are unfolding their buds, whilst countless numbers are in full bloom, fairly dotting the plain with red and crimson. Among the flowers are to be seen the narcissus, meadow saffron, anemone lily—Savior's blood drop—little blue forget-me-not, all growing wild in the greatest profusion." Surely "the wilderness and solitary place shall be glad; the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice, even with joy and singing," (Isaiah 35:1, 2). "But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people Israel; for they are at hand to come. For behold, I am for you, and I will turn unto you, and ye shall be tilled, and sown: . . . and I will multiply upon you man and beast: . . . I will settle you after your old estates, and will do better unto you than at your beginnings: . . . I will also cause you to dwell in the cities, and the wastes shall be built."—Ezekiel, chapter 36.

All this wonderful transformation comes at the time the Lord takes the children of Israel from among the "heathen,"—"nations" (Revised Version) "whither they be gone." Just "a little while" after "the sealed record," followed by the "marvelous work" should be performed by the Lord. It is not the desolations and waste of the Babylonian and Roman campaigns before Christ, contemplated in this latter-day work, but "they shall build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities the desolations of many generations." (Isaiah 61:4.) At the opening of the eighteenth century, "the holy cities were yet a wilderness, and Jerusalem a desolation.” The beautiful house was desolate, and “all their pleasant things were yet laid waste.” The heavens were yet brass, and the rain powder. Social ostracism and political proscription were the national chains, forged by Gentiles, binding the sons of Israel to bitter bondage. A spirit of inquiry seized philosophers and kings; curious to know the cause of the downfall, from the highest of wealth, power, intelligence, and hitherto unknown lands, were explored, and now the almost universal belief is, the Jews have been smitten out of national organic existence, for rebellion against God! May this exploration continue until all the Gentile nations shall discover that God has “remembered his covenant” which he made with their fathers, and that he is now—in these, “the latter days”—setting his hand to fulfill that covenant in the restoration of the gospel by heaven-appointed ministry; and has caused “the clouds,” the genial showers, the arrows from the quiver of the sun, and the stony lips of the earth, with the Hebrew monument in Palestine, to give forth unimpeachable testimony to the angelic fact. S. W. L. Scott.

Mothers’ Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Enthusiasm and Sympathy.

Enthusiasm is a divine possession. Our mortal clay, filled with the presence of the Lord, becomes translucent; our laggard movements, feeling the impulse of heavenly energy, are swift and glad as those of the angels. Without enthusiasm, no earthly work ever goes bravely, no battle is ever won, no forward steps are taken.

“Onward, Christian soldiers, Marching as to war,
With the cross of Jesus Going on before,”

is a song of victory, for it is a song of enthusiasm. When enthusiasm flames we see beacon fires on every hilltop. We are conscious of reinforcements on the way, the land of great distances, the dear Jerusalem that is above, gives us of her glory while yet we struggle through the lowlands and fight the desperate conflict with Satan and sin. Without the ardor and courage born of a receptive heart may open wide its hopes of the ages have been carried forward to victory by the

and well-nigh irreparable wrong when we cripple their God-given imagination and tie them down to what we fancy reality because it is all that our own senses can measure. Thrice blessed is that human being who keeps unimpaired and unspoiled the sweet freshness and spontaneity of the child even to gray hairs; who realizes in every stage of life what the poet meant when he said that “... Trailing clouds’ of glory do we come From God, who is our home.”

Although by nature some have a larger endowment of enthusiasm than others, yet every receptive heart may open wide its doors and let the gracious gift fill it to the brim. Women should seek to retain enthusiasm in study, in friendship, in travels, in work, for as they hold it or lose it, so they hold or lose that which they justly regarded as most precious, youth and charm. Only when one is so old that she can no longer rise up at the voice of the bird, that she can no longer be stirred to emulation or joy or thrilled and elated at good tidings or moved to exultant hope or awakened to warm desire, are the fires of enthusiasm for ever dead.

In no sadder meaning does the fashion of this world pass away than in just this, when there are ashes where the embers yet should glow, where there is a cold hearth where the handful of live coals should give warmth and signify hospitality.

Because she can not help herself, the woman who lacks enthusiasm is a veritable wet blanket on the cheer of others. Automatically she chills the eager girl whose plans are radiant with hope, who fears neither rebuff nor defeat and is disposed to undertake any enterprise however arduous. The forlorn hopes of the ages have been carried forward to victory by the young and the great world conquests have been possible because generals and staff officers and drummers and buglers and the rank and file have had the daring of youth and the spur of enthusiasm. Never check this quality in exercise. Thank God for it, rather, and accept it as a manifestation of God in humanity.

Enthusiasm and sympathy are of kindred stuff and can seldom be divorced. An unsympathetic woman is out of tune with the universe. She gives an impression of sweet bells jangled and discordant.

In a very noble passage Ruskin, whom we can not do better than study, explains: "The path of a good woman is indeed strewn with flowers; but they rise behind her steps, not before them. Her feet have touched the meadows and left the daisies rosily."

"But," the great master of English prose poetry proceeds to say, "it is little to say of a woman that she only does not destroy where she passes. You have heard it said that flowers only flourish rightly in the garden of some one who loves them." A home in which a woman has queendom, as every woman has whether she will or not, yet has neither sympathy nor tact, will always be a barren spot. There you will find no roses blooming, nor lilies lifting pouter faces to the sunshine.

The children of a certain well-ordered, most respectable, and most honorable family have grown up without exception in narrowness, coldness, and cast-iron selfishness. They seem incapable of generosity though their integrity is unimpeachable. On inquiry it is discovered that their mother was a woman of mediocre powers, undemonstrative manner, and a self-absorbed nature, a woman devoted to the main chance and limiting her influence to the dispensing of tangible alms, but by their uniform joyous-bred kindness and gentleness which is extended to all with whom they come in the conviction of stewardship, to whom heaven was a reality and Christ Jesus a living inspiration and in them, too, cause inevitably has produced effect.

Among the high privileges of womanhood that peculiar one of offering encouragement to the timid and strength to the wavering and weak must always be prized.

In a very homely and commonplace way, to drop metaphor, may we women cheer and help the men of our own circles. First and most benignly by caring about what they do and what they are; not affecting to care, but genuinely caring. The child rushing in from school calls for "mamma," and is only satisfied when she answers from her room, always the children's paradise, "Here I am, darling." The older young people, returning from the pleasures or the business engagements of the day, think of mother as they run up the steps and turn the latchkey, and the father and husband needs wife and daughters, too, and his home-going, when the cares of the day are over, is sweetened by the anticipation of meeting them again. A deep gulf is fixed in a certain aspect between business and home life, but in another the two almost touch, and all day long the home, if its influence has been true and strong, has armed the man against temptation, fortified his courage, shielded him from evil and temptation. The man in his rough work in the open world must encounter all peril and trial; often he must be wounded and subdued, often misled and always hardened. But he guards the woman from all this; within his house as ruled by her need enter no danger, no temptation, no cause of error or offense. This is the true nature of home, it is the place of peace, the shelter from all injury not only, but from all terror, doubt, and division. Roof and fire are types only of a nobler shade and light, shade as of the rock in a weary land and light as of the Pharos in a stormy sea."

A familiar and tender lyric of Whittier emphasizes one side of feminine sympathy, where the little lad at school has missed and his companion spelling correctly has taken his place. Do you know the little red schoolhouse, hard by the road, to which the sturdy pupils come from homes tucked away out of sight under the trees, or nestled under the shoulder of a windy hill?

"Long years ago a winter sun Shone over it at setting,
Lit up its western window-panes,
And low eaves' icy fretting."

"It touched the tangled golden curls
And brown eyes full of grieving,
Of one who still her steps delayed
When all the school were leaving."

"For near her stood the little boy
Her childish favor singled;
His cup pulled low above a brow
Where pride and shame were mingled."

"Pushing with restless feet the snow
To right and left he lingered;—
As restlessly her tiny hands
The blue-checked apron fingered."

"'I'm sorry that I spelt the word;
I hate to go above you,
Because, the brown eyes lower fell,
'Because, you see, I love you.'"

A dear little genre picture this and it carries with it a thought of lovely meaning. Boy and girl are man and woman in embryo. The woman may not "go above" the man, except and unless she give him consolation, sympathy, and comprehension, and these are to him the daily bread, which she, true loaf-giver, evermore must break.

The fountain of all sympathy is Jesus our Lord. We may go to him as to an inexhaustible well, ever drawing, never knowing disappointment, but always receiving refreshment and health. Too often we keep on depending on ourselves, on our own shallow streams, which, unfed by celestial sources, soon run dry. Surely part of the daily prayer should be that we may remain large enough and loving enough to care for objects outside of ourselves, that we may keep the freshness of the child-heart and its springing enthusiasm over small pleasures and new discoveries; that we may live in other lives, not exclusively in our own. —Margaret E. Sangster, in Womanhood.
Letter Department

DALBY SPRINGS, Texas, March 20, 1906.

Editors Herald: I want to do all I can to advance this great and grand latter-day work. I have a greater desire to live up to the gospel law now than I ever have had before. It has been eleven years since I went down into the water grave to rise and walk in newness of life, but as I look back over the past to that event I see where I have made mistakes and have come short of my covenant with both God and man. I am thankful I can say that God does hear and answer prayer in this our day, and gives us power to overcome when we have reached the end of our own strength, and I can see my duty more plainly than ever before.

I ask you to pray for me that I may always be able to see myself aright, and that I may overcome self, for it is not what some one else does that hurts me, but my own faults and defects are what I need to see and overcome.

May the Lord help each and every one to learn his duty and help us all to pull together and try to build one another up and heal the call to come up higher and receive the blessings that the Lord has in store for the faithful, that Zion may be built up and Jesus Christ come to reign with his people, is my prayer.

W. H. COLLEY.

FLINT, Michigan, March 17, 1906.

Editors Herald: We are endeavoring in our weak way to spread the light that is now penetrating the darkness of tradition and skepticism that has so long enshrouded Mother Earth and settled down upon the inhabitants like a pall, hoping that by the faithful, consistent efforts of the people of God the veil may speedily be removed, so that the honest in heart may more and more clearly see the light that emanates from the perfect one who said, “I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness,” (St. John 12:46), and step forward to test the promises of the Master, who hath said, “If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine,” (St. John 7:17). Also, in keeping with the apostle Paul, “That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about by every wind of doctrine,” because we shall be children of the light. St. John 8:32 says, “And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.” Again, “If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.”

Where are there any who are more free than those who, after obedience to the law of adoption which makes us heirs with God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ, which entitles us to every gift and blessing that Jesus himself received, have put away the old man with his deeds, such as hatred, malice, envying, strife, backbiting, which belongs to his Satanic majesty? It matters not whether we are of the laity or those who come in the line of the priesthood, it is equally essential that we should depart from those things which gendereth to bondage and eventually to death, in order that we may be of one mind and one heart, that the Spirit of God may dwell in us richly, which will qualify us to do the great work which is before us, and without which no man or set of men have a right to teach; and should we have the hardihood to assume the right we would never be able to accomplish anything. “Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.”

Bro. G. F. Shippy of Detroit has been with us for the two weeks ending March 16, and he very ably, and in a most simple way, set forth the gospel and made plain many of the marvels and wonders of this marvelous work. May God bless and protect our brother and all those who go forth with an eye single to the honor and glory of God.

Hoping and praying that we may be enabled by the Spirit of the Master to grow in grace and knowledge of the truth—God’s work—and come out more than conqueror, I remain as ever,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

TOM COLLINS.

LEHIGH, Indian Territory, March 17, 1906.

Editors Herald: Your efforts are grand, encouraging, comforting, inspiring, and educating, hence we wish to say, “Go on in faith, ye Saints go on,” and let us not fear nor doubt the Lord’s chosen. True they are much of a family, and families, and was it not much that way that Moses and Aaron? So with St. John, our Master, and the apostles. While they continue to be true, and enjoy the favors of the Lord, that is enough for me. Just remember how they have labored, sacrificed, and endured with such patience you and I and those poor deluded people of Utah.

I have had some experience with from two to six of their elders at a time in Coalgate, many times, until the wee hours, then walked home five miles. They usually stayed with as good an old man as is in town, for all I know, and he admitted there were lies somewhere, and if there was one thing above another that he hated it was a liar; and he believed the Utah people told the truth; and of course the Reorganized ministry and members told lies. I showed the cunning and evil in Elder Young and others, all along immediately after Elder Young began to exalt himself and bring in one innovation after another as fast as the people would stand it, until they were all rebaptized, reconfirmed, and reordained out of the church into one of their own, just as the apostles and prophets saw they would.

C. M. FULKS.

MESSINA, Sicily, March 4, 1906.

Editors Herald: I reached Alexandria, Egypt, about six o’clock in the morning, February 28, from Port Said, fully expecting to start by a German mail-boat about four o’clock in the afternoon for Naples; but shortly after my arrival information came to me that the boat had put into Crete with a fractured shaft. Many of the passengers, including myself, who intended going by the German boat started next day by an Italian boat, the Irione, four thousand tons.

The sea was smooth when I reached Jaffa, outward bound, so I was enabled to embark without difficulty, but shortly after the passengers were aboard the wind changed, and the loading of cargo had to cease. There were six large steamers lying not far from the shore and all seemed to be very busy handling import and export goods. There are many lines of boats calling at Jaffa, some weekly, others fortnightly. The sea was very rough to Port Said and delayed the boat five or six hours. About all on board were sick.

About fifteen attended my meeting in Jerusalem the Sunday morning I preached. Mr. Rolla Floyd, a well-known tourist agent, kindly offered me his house in which to hold the meeting. Five Jews, students of a college in the city, were present, also the president of the institution. The aged widow of Doctor Newman, the gentleman who held a discussion with Orson Pratt in the Tabernacle of Salt Lake City, and denied that the Bible taught polygamy, and who I think did well in maintaining his position, was in attendance. The same day she invited me to her home, and before I left she generously made me a present of a few books of which her husband was the author. Several were pleased to learn of the existence of a body of Latter Day Saints that has ever been monogamic in belief and practice. The Lord greatly blessed me in holding out to my auditors’ view some of the eternal principles of truth on which the Reorganized Church is based.

I am now in the Strait of Messina; on the one side of the strait is Italy with snow-capped mountains; to the west is Sicily, where on the mountains are tinges of green, and red, and brown, merging into the blue sky.

With the exception of many of the passengers who are on board on account of the mishap to the boat they had previously booked by, the majority of the passengers are French or Italian. The sea has been smooth from Alexandria. Fine weather here; a little cool, but not unpleasant.

Paul M. Hanson

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, March 7, 1906.

Editors Herald: I wish to tell of an accident which happened to me at Sugar Creek, February 28, 1906. While soldering a tap in a washing-machine, I was applying acid on the place in the bottom of the machine where the tap was to be placed, and not having a brush I used a feather with which to apply the acid. Unfortunately, after having dipped the feather into the acid I struck it against the machine, causing the acid to fly into my left eye. This caused a burning, stinging pain, and I knew that the chances were that I would lose my eyesight in a very few minutes. I thought, "What can I do?" and the thought came to me at once, "God can heal, if I will trust him." I gave up all hope except in God, and in a low whisper I asked him to give me relief from the burning poison. I got very nervous but through the mercy and power of God I got relief before leaving the place where I had done the soldering. I feel to thank God that he gave me such faith and answered my prayer. I could see real well out of my eye the same afternoon. I relate this to show that God is willing to help us in the hour of need if we will only put our whole trust in him and not in the skill of man.

We as saints of God should consecrate our lives to him that we may be able to receive of him the power of his Spirit which is able to guide us into all truth. I am thankful that I was led to receive the angel's message and I pray God that I may be able to live worthy of his blessings. I can truly say that I know that this gospel is of God, and it is worth living for if we were only promised the reward we receive in this life. But I often think of a statement made in Paul's writing where he said if we only had hope in this life, of all men we would be most miserable. But we have a greater promise than any in this life if we only live for it. Trials we will have in this life, but the reward is in the next one.

Every praying that we may be given strength to hold out to the end, I am,

Your brother in the one faith,

W. R. Rush.

Cash, Michigan, March 19, 1906.

Editors Herald: I have for a long time been wanting to write a few lines to your letter space as I have never seen any from our branch. We have a fine branch and Sunday-school, and, more than that, God has enabled us to erect a fine church-building, finished throughout, to worship in.

Bro. O. J. Hawn was here and added quite a number to our branch again. He is an able speaker and has removed a lot of prejudice. He baptized ten. I believe there are others yet to follow if we Saints live right and let our light shine. There are so many ways that Satan has of sowing tares among the good seed.

I heard the glad message when a mere boy. I will never forget it. I was over the world a good deal after I heard this message, but oh, how it rang in my ears! I came back to Michigan in 1903, and during September, 1904, Bro. Goodenough was here and held a few meetings, and I was baptized on the 19th. While in the East I was in McKeesport, Pennsylvania. There I got my companion who was opposed to this gospel, but, thanks be to God, we are both in the same fold now. She joined just a year to a day after I did. Oh, the load I had for that year! It seemed at times as if I could not stand it, but I often sang, "O for a faith that will not shrink," and knew that God would not burden me more than I was able to bear. I am not sorry for the step, but am sorry I have not been more humble.

While in McKeesport we often used to go to Pittsburgh to attend meeting. I was a long time finding the right Saints. I used to go to the Congregational church and came in contact with some Latter Day Saints. They had a conference at West Elizabeth and I was invited to attend. Well, I knew they were not what I wanted. I stayed with President William Cadman. They called themselves Bickmortites, taking William Bickerton as their founder. I also met Alen Wight and others of their leading men, but they were very weak, as their leading men chewed tobacco. I see by the Herald that William Cadman is dead. He was the best they had. I do not think there are any there now, since Cadman has died.

Then I went to Pittsburg and there I met Elder Pitt. I hope if he sees this he will let me hear from him.

We have some real good friends in McKeesport. I have a sister living at 841 Scott Street, and think if she would hear this gospel she would obey it. There is a nice little church on Stewart Street that any of the elders can get if they go there. My wife's people are all there. Her mother has heard some of this gospel and I am sure if any one in that locality would call on them they would be made welcome. Their name is Howard, and my sister's is J. A. Wampler. My earnest prayer is that they may hear the glad message restored again and obey it,—that I may continue faithful and bring no reproach upon this great work, and that I will have on the wedding-garment and be permitted to enter in at the marriage supper of the Lamb, where we will never say good-bye again.

Yours in the one body,

FRED W. CADON.

36 Hamilton Terrace, HAMILTON, Scotland.

Editors Herald: I rejoice that I have heard the restored gospel. I have been a member of the church over three years and have received many blessings. I have been administered to four times and got great relief, and have felt God's influence when I have been in trouble. Some trials are very hard to bear yet God will remove them if we remain faithful to our covenants. The greatest desire of my heart is to go on in the good way. I feel I have a duty in teaching our children the way of truth, that they may grow up to obey the gospel, and that we may all be faithful and partake of the celestial glory. We Saints in Hamilton are very thankful to God for sending Bro. Kelley to labor among us, that others may hear of this glorious latter-day gospel, for we know it is the power of God unto salvation. We hope that he will be allowed to stay with us, as there is a great deal of work in Hamilton to do, and I am sure he is the right one for it. We have only a small branch in Hamilton now, but we are trying to live and let our light shine that we may be the means of bringing others to an understanding of the everlasting gospel. There are but a few that will come to our meetings on Wednesday evenings to hear our elders, but that does not discourage us. The only thing we can do is to wait and pray for them, and we know that the prayers of God's people will be heard, and answered according to his will.

I pray that God will bless and help each individual who is earnestly striving to do his will.

Your sister,

MRS. W. BROWNING.

ANDERSON, Missouri, February 20, 1906.

Dear Herald: What a source of joy you are to the scattered Saints! No one with the privileges of branch meetings can begin to estimate the blessing the church papers are to us. Here in McDonald County we have quite a good many members, but there is no one here to organize a branch. I wish some good preacher would come and stay about nine months and preach, and organize a branch of the church. I think that much good could be accomplished here if an able preacher would come and stay. Bro. Warnke was here last week but on account of larcippe had to go home. He preached at Honey Lake three evenings. We are very sorry he is sick, and we pray God to bless him and to send others like him to help the Saints in this place. Why can not the missionary force find some way to this country? Is it not as necessary to keep the members encouraged and in order as to bring in new members? Jesus said, "Feed my sheep."

I became a member of the church when I was nine years old, but was led astray by the world and went to dances. When I was eighteen years old I studied over my condition and the way I had been doing. My mother was a Christian woman and taught me to read the Bible, to pray, and to be good to the poor. I concluded I ought to be baptized again, so I was. Bro. Hugh Lytle baptized me and John Conyers confirmed me a member of the church, and I am trying to do all I can for my Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. I know that God is just and merciful.

Bro. Pruitt preaches here sometimes. He preached in the Langly Schoolhouse once and at Honey Lake two or three times. He administered to a woman, Mrs. Shultz, who did not belong to any church then but she is a Latter Day Saint now. She was sick and sent for this brother although she had never heard him preach. Bro. Pruitt told her that in three weeks she would be able to walk. He went to see her in three weeks and she met him at the door and was strong and well. She was able to do her own housework and has been ever since until last fall, when she had a nervous attack and was quite sick. There were no elders here and they sent for me. I appointed her with oil in the name of Jesus Christ, and asked God to remove the disease far from her, and he heard and answered my prayers. It makes me rejoice to know that if we try to do as near right as we can, God will bless us abundantly.

Sr. Shultz is a good Latter Day Saint and does the very best she can under the circumstances. Her husband and youngest son belong to the church. They are poor people but they are trying to get a start here on a homestead.

We hope for a prosperous year in the gospel cause and I do not see why it should not be if all the ministers will set about the work with a will to do something.

I have heart trouble. Please remember me in your prayers. Sometimes I think my lack of faith is the reason I cannot be healed. I want to live as near right as I can, and have my lamp trimmed and burning.

"Soon we'll hear the watchman say, 'See! the Son of God is coming; Go and meet him on the way.'"

Your sister in the hope of that glorious consummation,

E. Patrick.

Marcus, Washington, March 18, 1906.

Editor, Herald: Well, it is Sunday evening and being disappointed because my Herald did not arrive to-day I feel lonely, so will drop a few lines from this part of the country.

Since leaving our branch in Humboldt County, California, we have been among strangers to the gospel, and but few listen to our message. In the mad rush for land and dominion it seems as though the minds of the people can not be centered on anything but riches. I tell you, Saints, we do not appreciate the fellowship of our people nearly so much till we are scattered among the masses.

I have been made to know the truth of the Lord's saying, "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled." A few years ago, when I was a Methodist, I used to wonder if that ever was to be realized in my case. I can call to memory one time when I had become faint and weary for want of spiritual food (of which I found very little in that church), and instead of going to church one Sunday I took my gun and started to the woods. (That was at Fisher, Arkansas.) I did not go to hunt particularly, but to meditate. After reaching my destination I sat down and began to wonder if there were any hereafter at all. I had become so discouraged and distressed in mind that I resolved to inquire of God if there were a God, and if so to give rest to my brain, and immediately it was as if a great light shone all around me, and it seemed as if a voice spoke to my soul, saying, "Look around you and see my handiwork"; and never in my life before did the woods and grass reflect such beauty to me.

Well, time rolled on and I cared but little for our church. Years after when I had been reduced to the necessity of working by the day for a living (humiliated) I was induced by the earnest desires of a Bro. and Sr. Smith to investigate the Latter Day Saint doctrine and in due time heard some preaching by an elder, Bro. E. Keeler. (This was at Field Brook, California, a little over a year ago.) After hearing Bro. Keeler, I was undecided, not believing in a millennium. One night, while he was still preaching, I had a dream in which I was shown many things new to me. I saw the first resurrection and a beautiful land, also Bro. Keeler standing with the Bible under his arm, evidently looking for me. I went to him and remarked how different this was to what I supposed, and asked him where he was going. He said to preach to the nations. So you see I was ready to be baptized.

I have been blessed many times since with blessings that give me hope continually. Wife and I both thank God for his watchful care. Recently I was much troubled about tithing. After prayer for light in that line I was given a dream in which I was shown a great table, spread bounteously. All things seemed to be in readiness, even to the bread being sliced and buttered. The personage that showed me through the Hebrew tongue but I understood. He left me to myself a little while and as I looked at the table I thought, That is nice bread—I'll take a piece; and reaching out took a piece, which I held behind me, and immediately the personage returned and mildly rebuked me, telling me that the bread and butter was soiling my garments, which I saw was a fact when I looked. I awoke immediately, asking myself, "Will a man rob God?"

I am ever looking forward to the time when we will meet him face to face and will find no secret societies. Then we will crown him Lord of all.

building churches like our Savior did, namely, pure hearts, so we can have that faith that follows believers, and do not pollute and defile the temple of God, we will then begin to realize what the kingdom of God is. I never had the pleasure of being in but one Latter Day Saint church, and, to my regret, I did not find that inspiring love there that I found in the little old schoolhouse or at some residence where a few of God's loving Saints had met to sing his praises and pour out that heartfelt love to him that can wash us and make us whiter than snow, but I saw an imitation of worldly worship, namely, singing by note and using the pipe instruments, and making way with those old-time melodies which fill our hearts with love. Then one Saint, if you call him that, sat up by my side during services, when he ought to have been praying, and said, "How is business?" Then I noticed one say that he had received sick benefits from his lodge, praising that institution. I thought then of the great benefit God had promised in James 5, but he did not say a word of a lodge. I also noticed that time was limited for testimony- and prayer-services, but we noticed that Paul and the Savior tarried until late into the night. If we will only build the church that Christ built, rescue the perishing, care for the dying, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, visit the sick, pay our tithing, quit swearing, quit chewing tobacco, quit drinking, quit talking about our neighbors, quit voting for corruption, and establish clean, pure hearts within, we will then have a church that will guide us to the eternal home where all is love and joy, and great will be our reward.

For the hope of purer hearts and greater love, I am,

JOHN ZAHD.

DE S MOINES, IOWA, MARCH 7, 1906.

Saints' Herald: On February 27, Bro. J. F. Mintun and James McKiernan began a series of meetings at the chapel, Bro. Wardell Christy also is here now assisting the brethren. While the meetings have not been attended, so far, as largely desired, still quite a number of strangers have been present. At the sacrament and social service on last Sunday morning we were blessed with a portion of the Spirit of God. The Saints were shown why some of the children of parents in the church had become cold and indifferent to the work of God. The reason was this: that their parents had complained before them about conditions in the church which did not suit them and especially against the officers, thus causing the children to partake of the same spirit which resulted in their turning to the world. With this rebuke was also manifested the mercy of God unto salvation. This same principle I hold to be divine and an unalterable decree from which no nation, people, or individuals can deprive me; nor can deprive me if I remain in the bounds of my creation. This same principle I hold to be true of all others. But here is where the great difficulty comes in. We will not remain in our bounds or sphere. We get dissatisfied with our surroundings and conditions, like the fallen angels spoken of by Jude, and our fore-parents in Eden, and thousands of other instances. We then advance to regions and conditions unknown and unexplored by us and we soon find ourselves confronted by all kinds of obstacles and difficulties. But too ignorant or unwilling to retrace our steps to our once happy sphere, we now engage all our abilities to bring all opposing conditions into subjection to our will. But alas for us, the greater our efforts the more our difficulties increase. This seems a divine and an unalterable decree from which no nation, power, tongue, church, or individual can escape. Repeated history and experience tell us all of this; and yet in the face and facts of all this we still advance with a fool's bravery, regardless of the consequences.

Is it a wonder that Solomon said he found one wise man in ten thousand? Ah, poor man, himself perhaps was not worthy to be the one in ten thousand, when we consider the follies of his later life. O Lord God, grant us wisdom and power to remain in our God-given sphere.

But why is it that we will not learn? Can we not learn that simple philosophy given by the wise man: "Surely the wringing of the nose brings blood, and the churning of milk brings butter"? And have we yet to learn that all things are governed by law in heaven, earth, and hell? Have we yet to learn that a man can not serve two masters at the same time? Have we yet to learn that a fountain can not at the same place send forth sweet and bitter water; nor the fig-tree produce olives, or the vine figs? (See James 3:11, 12.)

Have we yet to learn the law of affinity, "That they all may be one"? (John 17:6.) Have we yet to learn that ye can not be partakers of the Lord's table and the table of devils? Have we yet to learn that if we are not gathering, we are scattering? Have we yet to learn God brought his people out of Egyptian bondage? And have we yet to learn, or learn to believe, why God caused his church to be organized on the 6th of April, 1830? Was it not for spiritual and temporal benefits and protection? Is God or man the author? Who will answer? Shall we rest our case here, and be willing to trust God who created the heavens, the earth, the seas, and the fountains of waters, or shall we trust man whose breath is in his nostrils? O God, in Jesus' name, send deep convictions to thy people. Amen.

IONE, California, March 22, 1906.

Editors Herald: I wrote a report of our district conference to the Ione Valley Echo which appeared in the number for March 17. I reported that at the conference members, friends, and strangers were alike peaceable and happy. That Elder J. M. Terry of Oakland was reelected president of this northern district, and seven delegates were appointed to represent the district at the General Conference to be held at Independence, Missouri, April 6 to 14. That there are only two hundred and thirteen members in the Sacramento Branch and only twenty branches in California. That "strait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." (Matthew 7:14.) That we are all to be judged and rewarded according to the work that we do in this life, and the more good we do the better it will be for us. (See Matthew 16:27; 1 Corinthians 3:18; Revelation 20:12-15); but the scripture was omitted in the paper for want of space. I had written the name of the church in full and the place of our chapel which appeared in the Echo.

Yours in the work,

EDWIN T. DAWSON.

PORT ELGIN, Ontario, March 25, 1906.

Editors Herald: I am laboring among the Indians or Lamanites at a place called Chippawa, Ontario; and a good work is being done. They are much interested in our preaching. I am preaching in a private house but a large room, and it is full of earnest listeners. Some have spoken of being baptized, and I am satisfied after we bring the work more closely to them, quite a few will come into the church.

I am preaching at Bruce, Port Elgin, Chippawa, with good interest at each place, with divine evidences that some will obey the gospel at each place. A good work was done at Davisville, Ontario; in less than one year a church built and a branch organized with now twenty members, also a Sunday-school and Religio organized. Since coming from there, have heard one more was added to them by baptism. So the Lord's work rolls on. The conference will have my prayers, and trust that each one going will, as was the command to former-day Israel, consecrate himself to God, that the Holy Spirit may richly dwell with him.

Yours in the struggle for victory,

R. B. HOWLET.

MIMI, Indian Territory, March 23, 1906.

Dear Herald: Your weekly visit to our home is one to which we look forward in eager anticipation, as it gives us encouragement to hear of the great work being done throughout the land by the servants of God.

Very seldom indeed do we have the pleasure of hearing a sermon from one of our faith, and the doctrine as taught by some others often makes us wonder how and where they find such teachings. For instance, not many days back a "learned" man came to our town and began a series of meetings in the Baptist church. He "converted" some one hundred and fifty-seven persons, and when they asked him to baptize them he replied that as he was only an evangelist and had never been baptized, he could not comply with the request until he first entered the waters of baptism; so the following Sabbath he was immersed that he might immerse others. To me, not very old in years or well-versed in religious creeds, the whole proceeding seemed very strange. Much comment was made by people of all denominations, and I was glad indeed no one could point out a similar circumstance among our people.

There is much prejudice here, and no one not of our faith enters our church. When on the eighteenth of this month the Angel of Death entered our home and took from us our infant brother, Marion Edmund, we had the sweet assurance that he was in better hands than ours; and though it was hard to part from him, our pain was not such as it might have been if we had not the hope of meeting him where parting is no more.

This is a glorious gospel indeed, and each and every one of us should try very hard to live up to its pure and holy teachings. Ever praying for the Saints, and for the welfare of Zion, I am, Your sister in the gospel,

FLORENCE I. CATO.

Pride.

I thought I would write a few lines on the subject of pride. Although it is a greater subject than I ought to attempt to write on, still, what was said of the widow's mite, She hath done what she could, may be applicable here.

Pride is one of the great evils abroad in the land to-day. The ancient worthies of the Book of Mormon warned us in many places in this grand old book to beware of pride, showing us the misery which came upon the people who became so weak as to indulge in it. Alma 2:5 tells us how the people of the church began to wax proud because of their riches, their silks, their flocks, and herds, and a little farther on tells of those once happy and good people turning their backs upon the sick and afflicted, the poor and needy. Saints, think of the blessings the Father bestowed upon those people and how they were prospered as long as they were obedient, but when they rebelled the Father withdrew his protecting hand, for we are told that when we do what he says the Lord is bound to keep his promise to us, but when we do not we have no promise. Shall we follow in their steps or will we profit by the lesson?

How many of us who possess them would be willing to give up our stylish clothing and riches in general and put ourselves on a level with the poor and needy, and relieve the sick and afflicted? How many of us are heading the command, Let your garments be plain, etc.? If this were practiced more there might be more of us keeping the law of tithing, and a little more money would be ready to help the missionary on to the next point of labor. Love of the world's foolishness is about what it might be called. It does not look as if we had obeyed the command, "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate." The world in general knows what our doctrine is in regard to dress, and when we come short of practicing what we teach, I, for one, believe it hinders the work. Ye elders' wives, who are looked upon as examples, (and should be too,) are you letting the world see by your dress that you do not practice what your husbands teach?

And I believe when a person goes to church and finds the church full of its own members, and then can hardly get sight of the minister on account of the high hats in front of them which the sisters may have on (in order to be in style) that such persons can see that there is something wrong.

One man said to me once when I was contemplating uniting with the church (he was a bitter opposer), "You could not be a good member of that church for you are too proud, and the doctrine of that church is plain dress." So we see the world is watching. Others, who may have known me in former days, on reading this might say, Physician, heal thyself, but I will say in self-defense that I was at that time an alien from the commonwealth of Israel—-a stranger to the covenant of promise, etc. Dear Saints, let us crush out pride. Let us not be called to order by the world because we are not practicing what we teach.

And I do not mean to say that pride exists only in dress. There are many other points, but I will not speak of them now.

MINERVA JOHNSON.

Independence Items.

Our congregations are still on the increase. One of the visiting elders while taking part in the Doctrine and Covenants class yesterday morning spoke of the good people like ours here should do, which has reached the sixteen hundred, and we could but query what of the great value to the church, who preached at the tent during the Saints' revival service, and through the columns of the church publications, if only persons can see that there is something wrong.

There are many other points, but I will not speak of them now.

During his remarks he spoke of the Jews here, few in number, who on their New Year's Day met in the little obscure Baptist chapel, which during "the week of prayer" were attended by about forty, mostly women, and as a result a few became converted. Reverend J. J. Martin, who preached at the tent during the Saints' revival services here about three years ago, was the first speaker at the union meeting; and he felt to say concerning "Freedom in Christ," which was the first subject on the program, that the scriptures written concerning Christ's commission to his disciples are in part correct; but the words "and these signs shall follow," etc., to the end of the chapter are interpolated, "and I know it!" said he with emphasis.

In the early part of last month the Metho-bapti-presbyterian or "church of Christendom," as one minister called it, held union services daily at the Baptist chapel, which during "the week of prayer" were attended by about forty, mostly women, and as a result a few became converted. Reverend J. J. Martin, who preached at the tent during the Saints' revival services here about three years ago, was the first speaker at the union meeting; and he felt to say concerning "Freedom in Christ," which was the first subject on the program, that the scriptures written concerning Christ's commission to his disciples are in part correct; but the words "and these signs shall follow," etc., to the end of the chapter are interpolated, "and I know it!" said he with emphasis.

During his remarks he spoke of the Jews here, few in number, who on their New Year's Day met in the little obscure shoe-shop and amid their praying and wailing cried out, "What have the Jews done that they must mourn so bitterly?" and Reverend Martin's reply was, "Because your people have refused to turn toward the life-giving Son of God."

To use the words of Bro. H. O. Smith in a late sermon, "Men are quarreling everywhere on religious questions, such as the intermediate state, the sacrament, etc. But an angel told Alma there is a state between death and the resurrection and the warning continues sure and steadfast, 'Thou shalt teach the things that are contained in the three books.'"

There is in the sermons preached from time to time that which will tend to build up the faith of those who hear in the sure fulfillment of the word of God.

Bro. Arber a short time ago chose for his text Ecclesiastes 5:14, and speaking of his arrival here from the old country said, "A supreme feeling of thankfulness possessed my soul after the long days of cloudiness and drizzling rain over the sea whence I had come to these pleasant shores where the sun shines day after day, and I felt thankful that God had set in the heavens the means for our rejoicing and benefit." He showed us the difference between the teachings of Christ and many of the popular doctrines of the day. In the evening Bro. Alfred White also said "the true servants of God in the latter days had always performed the ordinances in, conformity with that which Jesus Christ had taught, imparting trust and confidence in God, the Spirit giving life and light." Bro. I. N. White in a later speech on the same line of thought, and this word of the Lord had been given to him: "It is upon record in my defense that I have blessed you by reason of your keeping my word, the Word of Wisdom, and you have not known this sacrifice for this work and you will receive a crown of life at the end of the race."

Another good word proceeds from the utterances of Bro. Bond: "Let us adopt the motto," said he, "'The Word of Wisdom: plain living and high thinking go together'; and again, 'We ought to fast and pray to get rid of this covetousness, for it takes courage, it takes faith to so order our steps that we can say, 'I have kept the faith, I have finished my course'; our real and final interests which should most concern us.'" This poor record of the discourses of the elders contains but a very meager portion of the good word imparted and in the words of the last speaker quoted we conclude: "How important the work of the heavenly messenger! and the thought that the uncertainties pertaining to religion have with us as a people passed away, and that we have for our guide the faithful and true witness, Jesus the Christ, fill our hearts with joy."

Within the last month three of the Saints have passed away, Bro. Charles A. Griswold, Bro. J. Cole Moxon, and Sr. Harriette A. Bear. Quite a number have had attacks of serious illness and there have been a few cases of accidents. Bro. George Frick, who about a month ago was thrown from his wagon and received much injury, is getting along tolerably well although not yet able to walk. Bro. W. M. Aylor returned home from his western mission quite ill from lagsrippe but is well on the way to recovery. Our brother's grandfather, Adam Rodecker, died at Darlington, Missouri, on the evening of the last day of the old year. He was over ninety-five years of age and left nine children living. He had twenty-nine grandchil­dren, fifty-two great-grandchildren and one great-great-grandchild, all now living. His faith in God was firm and he lived a Methodist seventy-five years; was active and strong to the last and rejoiced in the knowledge of his grandson's work in the gospel.

Several of the pioneers of Jackson County have lately closed an eventful career,—among them Judge Joseph Mercer, late president of the National Bank and at one time county treasurer. Those of our number who with us possibly hold dear their recollection of Boston, the hub of the sixties, will perhaps remember the struggles and achievements of the few and honorable patrons of abolition and woman's suffrage, among them Mary Livermore, Lucy Stone, Doctor Mary Walker, and Susan B. Anthony, who has just passed on before; she would possibly have been more successful in a different and no doubt as despised a cause.

There was a season of hearty hand-shaking yesterday—Sunday afternoon—at the close of the prayer-meeting, where, mingled in harmony, were heard the voices of the Saints in songs of praise and prayer and testimony, also in gifts of vision and prophecy to the cheer and comfort of all present.

Among those present were Brn. P. M. Smith, R. C. Evans, Brn. Sheehy, Griffiths, Chatburn, R. Etzenhouser, and others, also H. C. Smith and U. W. Greene. Little Master Archibald
Arber was blessed by these last two brethren, also Bro. Jesse Roberts and Horace Roberts were ordained as priest and deacon respectively by the stake presidency. Bro. May, one of the speakers of the afternoon, uttered his sentiments with much respect by the stake presidency. Bro. May, one of the island across the high rolling sea; and he expressed the sentiments in fervent prayer, also all the afflicted and bereaved ones, far and near.

The weather-man has furnished us with many and various kinds of atmosphere lately, namely: first warm and balmy, then cloudy and cold; next, freezing with plenty of the beautiful snow; then winds from the south wafted this way, and we experienced after a night of electric storms the change from three months. G. W. Bootman and W. A. Brooner were appointed delegates to General Conference, with instructions for delegates present to cast full vote of delegation. S. J. Jeffers was elected president next conference. D. E. Fri was sustained as secretary, A. B. Kirkendall, E. S. Fannon, G. S. Lincoln, T. J. Lawn, Samuel Wyatt, A. M. Starkey, Sr., S. B. Robinson, J. S. Hommes, J. A. Saxe, M. Cannon, W. H. Barker, and Lytle White. Statistical reports: Alma, Bishop's agent, J. M. Terry, Creola, George Williams, Francis May, and J. L. Goodrich, were named as delegates to General Conference, with instructions for delegates present to cast full vote of delegation.

Utah.—Conference convened at Pleasant Grove, Utah, March 17 and 18, the president of the district, J. E. Vanderwood, preceeding, Sr. Sadie Radmall acting as secretary. Branches reporting: Ogden, Union Fort, and Pleasant Grove. Agent reporting: A. J. Layland, W. A. Brooner, J. F. Cunningham, William Taylor, W. A. Brooner, G. W. Bootman, J. E. Vanderwood, received, $283.25; paid out, $279.25. The report was approved and the agent adjourned. Adjoined to meet at the call of the district president, the time and place to be named by him.

Southern Missouri.—Conference convened with Springfield Branch March 17, 1906, at 10 a.m., district president A. M. Baker, in the chair. Ministry reporting: A. M. Baker, J. T. Davis, O. E. Erwin, W. P. Bootman, J. W. Quinley, T. J. Simpson, C. E. Erwin, W. P. Buckely, W. H. Hutchinson, J. C. Christensen, J. F. Cunningham, William Taylor, W. A. Brooner, G. W. Bootman, J. E. Vanderwood, Grant Burgin, D. N. Tillman, J. Kirby, A. J. Fletcher. Branches reporting: Springfield 173, Beaver 60, Ava 92, Pomona 75, Denhol 35, West Plains 50, Thayer 27, Bishop's agent; A. W. Duometer, reported: On hand last report, $15,53; received, $154.46; paid out, $161.05. Financial secretary and treasurer, J. C. Christensen, reported: On hand last report, $6,80; amount collected, $6,40; amount expended, $7,88. On motion all the district officers were sustained for the ensuing three months. G. W. Bootman and W. A. Brooner were ordained to the office of elder. Elders acting as branch officers, and all priests, teachers, and deacons, in all branches of this district, resolved to make their reports to the president of their respective branches (at business-meeting), to summarize and report the same to each district conference. Resolved that as officers and ministers of this district, we will not from this time forward give our sanction or consent to the ordination of any addicted to the use of tobacco. Resolved that as the Saints of Springfield Branch have organized a cooperative company for the good of all the Saints in the district, we as a conference look with favor on such a move, and are willing to give it our support. Signed by H. Sparling and J. W. Quinley, carried. On motion H. Sparling and wife, J. T. Davis and wife, E. E. Long, and all the brethren and sisters of like precious faith befallen our beloved brethren and sisters of like precious faith, our love for our brethren afar off by contributing our means for remembering them in fervent prayer, also all the afflicted and bereaved ones, far and near.

The spiritual forces of the unseen ushering into our presence a feeling of expectant good company seem to evince activity developing a renovating process in the corners, and a quiet influence among the faultfinding lovers of the old uts.

Great changes are on, and we of the bird-millinery tendency after perusing the article in the last issue of the HERALD on "Hurtful pride" are laying away in our last year's band-box all our red hats, white wings, and luxurious quills in conformity with the teachings of The Society for the Prevention of "Saints" HERALD.

The work of preparation for General Conference is progressing, and every effort is being put forth for the completion of church improvements. May the toils and sacrifices of all the laborers throughout the church for the good of Zion and the welfare of her children be amply rewarded. March 23.

Died.

HIDY.—Joseph Lafayette Hidy was born in Fayette County, Ohio, November 29, 1825. In 1832 he was married to Joanna James at Jeffersonville, Ohio. To them were born five sons: A. W., of Perrin, Wisconsin; W. C., of Kansas City, Missouri; J. C. and E. L. of Collins, Iowa; all are living. He and his wife joined the church in 1871, four sons following. He was a faithful member until his death. Died at Nevada, Iowa, February 11, 1906. Funeral conducted by W. C. Nirk at Collins, Iowa. Buried in Collins Cemetery beside his wife.

JOHNSON.—Mrs. Hattie Hawkins Johnson, wife of J. T. Johnson; daughter of J. J. and Julia Hawkins. She was born May 4, 1878, was baptized September 4, 1894. Married to Mr. Johnson July 26, 1895, and died February 26, 1906. She leaves husband and one child, father, mother, brothers, and sisters; and other relatives to mourn their loss. Funeral in the church and was conducted by Elder F. A. Smith.

WICKES.—Ettie, wife of Robert Wickes and daughter of William and Phoebe Chandler. Born April 18, 1875; died March 22, 1906, at Des Moines, Iowa, of diphtheria. She leaves a husband, one son, and one daughter, a heart-broken mother, one sister, and two brothers, one sister having died with same disease some years ago.

WICKES.—Lilly, daughter of Robert and Ettie Wickes. Died March 22, 1906, at Des Moines, Iowa, just twenty-five hours after her mother, of diphtheria, aged nine years. She was a bright and loving child, greeting everyone she met with a smiling face, and daughter of the side, by side in one grave to await the resurrection of the just.

WHEELER.—Catherine Wheeler was born April 9, 1840; died at the home of one of her sons, at Knox, Indiana, January 10, 1906, aged 65 years, 8 months, and 10 days. Her husband preceded her five years. To them were born seven children. Two sons and one daughter are left to mourn their loss. Funeral held in the Saints' church at Knox, Indiana. She died strong in the faith. Sermon by W. A. McDowell.

PERRIN.—Elizabeth Jane Perrin was born April 19, 1832, at Utica, LaSalle, County, Illinois. Married to Charles Q. Perrin January 1, 1857; unto them were born one daughter and three sons. The daughter died in infancy. She was baptized by W. S. Pender June 25, 1893, at Florr, Wisconsin. Died at her home near Beetown, Grant County, Wisconsin, March 4, 1906. Though greatly afflicted for years, she bore it with patience and died strong in the faith. She leaves to mourn their loss, a husband, three sons, and three daughters-in-law who are members of the church. Funeral sermon preached at her home by W. A. McDowell, assisted by J. O. Dutton.

YARTON.—At Kansas City, Missouri, March 24, 1906, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Yarton. Thus the little bud of parenthood was snatched from us. Her name was Mary Leland. Died March 24, 1906. She leaves to mourn her loss, a husband and seven children, as many delegates as possible please attend as an election of district officers will be held. All make plans to come Thursday to be in attendance at the convention also. Branch clerks please send reports early to Mrs. Rillie Moore, Neecedah, Wisconsin.

Sylvester.—Louise C. Sylvester, wife of Isaac Sylvester, was born December 28, 1860, at St. Louis, Missouri; died at Omaha, Nebraska, March 29, 1906, at their home. She was the daughter of Nicholas Rumel, (deceased,) and Amanda Rumel and was a member of the church since childhood. Her life was one of service to others. Was married March 17, 1887. Funeral services were held in the Saints' chapel in Omaha by Edward Rannie; interment in Prospect Hill Cemetery.

TERRY.—Mary Ann Terry was born in Cecil County, Maryland, May 17, 1819, and died at the home of her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. John Allen, at Millersburg, Illinois, January 1, 1906. Her mother was married to her father in 1839. To this union were born three sons and five daughters. She united with the Christian Baptist Church soon after marriage and was baptized into the Reorganized Church by J. F. Adams, June 19, 1865. There remains to mourn their loss, two sons, two daughters, twenty-eight grandchildren, fifty-five great-grandchildren, three great-great-grandchildren, two nephews, two nieces, and a host of friends. Funeral in the Saints' chapel conducted by M. D. Murdoch.

QUAINT.—At Reedsburg, Wisconsin, Sr. Louise F. Quandt, of Bright's disease and pneumonia, March 8, 1906. She was born in Schwenin, Mecklenburg, Germany, June 27, 1844; was married to John Quandt at that place August 22, 1862. To them were born twelve children. Came to this country February 5, 1867. She was baptised into the Catholic Church March 30, 1873, by John P. Bierline and ever remained faithful to her covenant. She leaves to mourn her departure husband and seven children, besides a number of grandchildren and other relatives and friends. Funeral sermon by Rev. H. Hackett. Interment in the Oak Hill Cemetery at North Freedom.

from where it has lain for millenniums and assigned to a man for writing an article about it, or as we say "publishing" it, it stirs the blood. There is nothing like it.

Of this exquisite joy the members of the Roman school are deprived. The British government allows no foreigners to excavate. But they can do much that is nearly as important; articles on extant monuments, collations of old manuscripts, for example. But they have not the intense excitement of those who take part in excavations. —From "Schools of classical studies in Athens and Rome," by Professor Rufus B. Richardson, in the Chautauquan for March.

Plutocracy.

The March Arena contains a notable conversation with David Graham Phillips on the American plutocracy. In it the brilliant young novelist and essayist deals in the direct and succinct manner for which he is justly famous with "The menace of plutocracy." Mr. Phillips is a graduate of Prineston and for several years was an editorial writer on the New York Sun and World, before his great success as a novelist and as a special journalistic writer made his contributions eagerly sought by magazine editors and book publishers. His romances, "Golden fleece," "The cost," "The plum-tree," and "The deluge," have enjoyed enormous sales and he is one of the most popular novelists of the day. He is a sturdy democrat, using the term in its broad signification, and regards with the gravest apprehension the rapid encroachments of corrupt and privileged wealth and its progressive Constantinopolitan ambition, in the face of the American government. In the March Arena Mr. Phillips appears at his best, and it is a discussion that should be widely read now that the American people are awaking to a realization of the grave dangers that menace the Republic. A charming character sketch by Mr. Flower precedes the conversation.

Among other notable features of the March Arena are "Main currents of thought in the nineteenth century," by Professor Robert T. Kerlin, A. M.; "The trust evil as illustrated by the smelter-trust," by Honorable J. Warner Mills; "The march of direct-legislation," by Eltweed Pomory, A. M., president of the National Direct-Legislation League; and an extended editorial upon various classes of the wealth in the face of the American government. In the Arena, Mr. Phillips appears at his best, and it is a conversation that should be widely read now that the American people are awaking to a realization of the grave dangers that menace the Republic. A charming character sketch by Mr. Flower precedes the conversation.

The Arena has taken its old place as the leader of the liberal and progressive reviews of America.

Planked Eggs.

These are a decided novelty, and take any planked dish they are a feast to the eye as well as to the palate. Butter an oval plank and arrange a border of duchess potatoes, also cases for eggs, using a pastry bag and tube. Put in the oven to reheat and brown the potatoes, then slip a poached egg in each case. Garnish with hot broiled endive and celery and play up!

The April Housekeeper.

In the April issue of the Housekeeper begins the new serial, by Emily Ruth Calvin, entitled, "The quaintness of Bobby." Despite the name, Bobby is a girl, and a girl with decidedly queer but charming ideas of the world about her. But the editor of The Housekeeper Corporation, Minneapolis, Minnesota. Tree-Planting on the Prairies.

In the States of the Middle West there is pressing need of more trees, both for wood and for windbreaks and shelterbelts. This need has been felt since the prairies were first settled, but the attempts made to supply it have, as a rule, fallen short of the benefits which might have been secured. The early planting was done chiefly for the sake of ornament or shade; the usefulness of the species for wood was seldom considered. In many cases, also, trees were planted outside of the range to which they were adapted, and on soil and in locations unfavorable to them. On the other hand, many valuable species were neglected.

Experience has now furnished the basis for better practice. Various kinds of trees can be grown in the various kinds of soil and at various altitudes. They will serve just as well for protection and ornament as those which have been most used, and which at the same time will furnish valuable wood. For several years the Forest Service has been investigating this subject, with results which are recognized throughout the prairie region as of great practical value. The work consists of field studies of the existing forest growth, both natural and planted, of its relation to soil and climate conditions, and of the effects of fire.

In carrying on the work Service party examine and make measurements of representative groves. From these measurements of volume and yield tables are made which show how fast trees grow in cord-wood. These tables can be expected in a given time for each of the species studied. In addition to the measurements, the characteristics of growth and reproduction of the trees are noted, and valuable data on the natural distribution and advisable planting range obtained.

The work in the eastern part of the two Dakotas, Western Minnesota, Illinois, Eastern Nebraska, and Western Kansas is already done. A bulletin based on the study in Western Kansas has been published, giving information concerning the species most suitable to the locality, and telling how and where to plant them. Bulletins of the same character covering other States are in preparation. This summer Iowa will be studied, and later other States of the Middle West, until the whole region is covered.

Important tree-planting has been done in some of these States, occasionally with success; but there has never been many, so long as the task is regarded only in part. As a rule, the lack of success was due to lack of knowledge of how and what to plant. But these plantations, whether successful or not, provide valuable object-lessons in respect to future planting.

An important part of the study will be to determine to what extent the natural forest growth along streams and elsewhere is encroaching upon the drier upland in consequence of the protection given from fire which otherwise, if uncontrolled, the growth can be utilized, it may be advisable to encourage it. Generally, however, the planting of species obtained from one of these States, occasionally with success; but there has never been many, so long as the task is regarded only in part. As a rule, the lack of success was due to lack of knowledge of how and what to plant. But these plantations, whether successful or not, provide valuable object-lessons in respect to future planting.

Successful Fire Protection in California.

An item of news of wide importance to timberland owners is the announcement that a California lumber company, which applied a plan of fire protection to a single township during the summer of 1905, is now preparing to extend the same protection to the rest of its large holdings of cut-over land.

Except in the National forests, but little attempt has as yet been made to protect from fire the forests or cut-over lands of the Pacific coast. In California, it is true, the State forester has taken up fire protection as one of the most pressing problems of his administration. But in Oregon and Washington particularly, and on private holdings in California, fires are so destructive that little hope is cherished by owners securing crops on cut-over land before fires have reached them. The severe losses which have come from these fires have, however, made a deep impression upon lumbermen. Where timberlands are owned, too often the investor must be content with the protection given from the destructive power of fire, since, despite the excellent natural reproduction which would, under better conditions, restore the lands to forest, fire is almost certain to burn over, killing seedlings, scorching larger trees, and so deferring growth indefinitely. In the summer of 1904 the McCloud River Lumber Company, of McCloud, California, appreciating the seriousness of the fire losses common to lumbering operations in the region, agreed to attempt to protect the land according to the advice of the Forest Service, provided the plan of fire protection could be shown to be practicable and not too costly. The area chosen for the plan was sufficient to warrant expending something to guard it until it should establish a renewed forest.

Last summer the plan was put in operation. It called for clearing and burning broad fire lines from two hundred to three hundred feet in width, to serve as base lines from which to fight possible fires; organizing a patrol; locating tool-houses for the storage of fire-fighting tools; erecting telephone lines to summon aid; and other similar measures. In making the fire lines, the old logging-trams were followed as far as possible. Twenty miles of lines were cleared.

During the dry season of 1906 the operation of this plan proved so successful that the company took steps to extend the protection to the rest of its holdings—from three to four hundred thousand acres—and may now apply to the Forest Service for another plan to cover an additional twenty thousand acres recently purchased in Southern Oregon.

The holdings of the McCloud River Lumber Company are in a region where the danger from fire is unusually great, since the long dry season and the abundance of slash and chapparel not only make the starting of fires very probable, but also render their control difficult in a high degree.

One of the most important and significant points in connection with the use of this fire-protection system by a private owner is the fact that it means the recognition of the future value of young timber, proof that forestry has made rapid strides in California.

Vines as Screens.

The first thing is to take a survey of the new premises. It will always be the case that there are some features to be concealed, and also some to be beautified and improved. The first must be considered. Is there a tumble-down fence, a rickety old building or outbuilding to cover or conceal, a neglected summer house to cover, or trellises to restore to their former state of beauty? If so, they demand the first attention. Use some of the quick-growing annual climbers, as the wild cucurbit, the vine of Benedict, cypress vine, or the delphinium morning-glory, and any of the ornamental gourds. Many of these planted as late as the first of June in very rich soil and kept freely watered will make a quick growth, and by the middle of summer make a fine growth. If the soil is not naturally of the best for these vines enrich it with one third its bulk of well-rotted cow manure, subsoil comes up with it.

The next thing to consider is the matter of screening, and the making of imitation shrubbery. If the back yard or vegetable garden is unsightly or it is desired to cover any feature of the garden with a screen, plant rather closely (a foot apart) Ricinus, or castor bean. These must have the same soil as the climbing vines, and in addition be well mulched as soon as the dry season arrives, and they will require a great quantity of water to stimulate them into quick growth. By midsummer they should form a screen or hedge, or whatever shape they are planted in, six feet high, and impervious to the sight. From “A one-summer garden” in Woman’s Home Companion for April.

A Road Four Thousand Miles Long.

The Roman road was the pathway of the legion; it was preeminently a military road, viae militares. Road-building did not precede conquest, but, rather, completed it; for with a firm road into any province and with posts established every six miles provided with two score horses, intelligence could be conveyed with great rapidity and a conquest begun was made complete. The itinerary of the great road referred to from the wall of Antoninus in Scotland to Jerusalem shows the route and important towns on it. From the wall to Antoninus to York, 222 Roman miles; London, 227 miles; Rutupiae (Richborough) 67; Boudicca (by water), 45; Rheims, 74; Lyons, 330; Milan, 924; Rome, 429; Brussels, 350; Dyrrachium (by water), 40; Byzantium, 711; Antioch, 828; Tarsus, 381; Antioch, 141; Tyre, 252; Jerusalem, 165. Total 4,971. From “The Roman road builders’ message to America,” by Archer Butler Hulbert, in the Chautauquan for April.

The world's best timekeeper is said to be the electric clock in the basement of the Berlin Observatory, which was installed by Professor Forster in 1865. It is inclosed in an air-tight glass cylinder and has frequently run for periods of two or three months with an average daily deviation of fifteen-thousandths of a second. Yet astronomers are not satisfied even with this, and efforts are continually being made to secure ideal conditions for a clock by keeping it not only in an air-tight case, but in an underground vault, where neither changes of temperature nor of barometric pressure shall ever affect it.—New York Herald, December 4, 1904.

"Men have certain work to do for their bread, and that is to be done strenuously; other work for their delight, and that is to be done heartily; neither is to be done by halves or shifts, but with a will, and what is not worth that effort is not to be done at all."—John Ruskin.

Bro. C. J. Hunt sends us the following clipping from the Iowa Health Bulletin, Des Moines, Iowa, March, 1906. It emphasizes what may be accepted as true, that there is a growing disposition upon the part of medical authorities to recognize the valuable medicinal and food properties of olive-oil:

"Olive-oil as a Food.

"Olive-oil is a highly concentrated food, a valuable article of diet, and should be used by American people as food, and not merely as a condiment. The body wastes away when deprived of fat, and a pure vegetable or fruit fat is superior to any other.

"Olive-oil is a valuable aid to digestion, a marvelous tissue builder, blood and nerve renovator, and its purifying and healing qualities are of superior value. Appendicitis would die a natural death if olive-oil were freely used.

"But many people raise the cry 'fats are so difficult of digestion, they produce gas, and a bad complexion, they are bad for the liver and cause biliousness, and besides the idea of eating fat is repulsive.' All these things may be true of animal fats, butter, lard, and even fat meats that are so carefully left on the plate once formed the article in question becomes delicious. The human laboratory will digest and assimilate every drop of this highly nutritious oily food. The skeleton frame calls for it; the wasted flesh and starved nerves demand it. The sluggish blood stream needs a lubricant, the pale cheeks a rosy hue, the dead scalp and falling hair, the dry skin call for it.—New York Herald, December 4, 1904.

"Set aside all these excuses, for one can become accustomed to the use of almost anything—the habit once formed the article in question becomes delicious. The human laboratory will digest and assimilate every drop of this highly nutritious oily food. The skeleton frame calls for it; the wasted flesh and starved nerves demand it. The sluggish blood stream needs a lubricant, the pale cheeks a rosy hue, the dead scalp and falling hair, the dry skin call for it.—New York Herald, December 4, 1904.

"If you desire a different flavor add lemon or other fruit juices, milk, or salt until you can take it clear.

"How many drawn, wrinkly, dried-up faces we meet, with a ghastly smile now and then—they all need oil. Try it as an article of diet, and see the freshness return to such faces that now look so careworn, hurried, and worried. Do not expect the miracle of an immediate fresh face, for you have been years in growing those special features, and it may require months to remodel those lines into artistic health.

"Observe all the conditions leading healthward. The body is the only thing we have for the manifestation of the real self. We must carry it about all the time, be it fat or lean, be it sick or well, active or sluggish—hence it is our duty to prepare it for the most perfect work of its occupant, and see that it is always in the best condition.—Ellen Goddell Smith, M.D.

"[Two years ago, when journeying in the eastern Mediterranean countries the Editor and his companions were impressed with the sleek, well fed, healthy looking condition of the people. They showed evidence of awful poverty in clothing and dwellings, but they did not show it in body. Syrians of all nationalities, Arab, Turk, and native, seem vigorous, alert, and healthy. Everywhere the food is simple. There are two great staples, bread and olives. They are eaten together, and seem to form a perfect diet. The missionaries themselves have in many cases adopted the native fare as a basis of their dietary, to their health and profit. The need of fats is universal. It is not unlikely that other sources than our American hog may be more desirable and satisfactory.—Editor.]

"The Healthy Home."

There are those who insist on their wives keeping their homes clean and beautiful—who are in favor of all manner of vice and foulness in the city. Why should men insist on purity in their own homes and stand for impurity in the homes of others? There is only one reason—their hearts are impure.—American Issue.

General Conference

APRIL 6.

Promptly at ten o'clock the assembly was called to order by President Joseph Smith, who, after the singing of hymn No. 156, offered the opening prayer.

ORGANIZATION.

The First Presidency were chosen to preside over the conference. Richard Salyards was selected as secretary of the conference, with right to select assistants. He named F. A. Russell, Charles Fry, and J. R. Salyards.

The chair, being so authorized, appointed as committee on credentials Myron Fisher, Charles Crumley, and Alvin Knisley.

Arthur Mills was chosen as chorister with power to select assistants; R. G. Smith organist with power to chose assistants; local janitors and ushers authorized to act for the conference; press committee, W. W. Smith, Frederick Gregory, Calvin H. Rich; Leon A. Gould stenographer, authorized to select assistants. Sr. Belle James was named as associate stenographer.

The Presidency were authorized to arrange for seating the assembly, fix time and determine character of meetings, appoint speakers and officers in charge.

Committee on credentials reported showing that the following-named districts, with the number of votes to which each are entitled, have forwarded proper credentials: New South Wales, Australia, 22; Brisbane, 1; Manchester, England, 17; Western Wales, 3; Chatham, Canada, 36; London, Canada, 118; Nova Scotia, 2; Mobile, Alabama, 29; Arkansas, 2; Central California, 15; Northern California, 42; Southern California, 29; Eastern Colorado, 28; Florida, 14; Honolulu, 4; Idaho, 13; Central Illinois, 8; Kewanee, 23; Nauvoo, 19; Northeastern Illinois, 35; Southeastern Illinois, 33; Des Moines, 36; Fremont, 29; Gallands Grove, 39; Lamoni Stake, 100; Little Sioux, 68; Pottawattamie, 35; Northeastern Kansas, 22; Spring River, 48; Western Maine, 12; Massachusetts, 34; Northern Michigan, 80; Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, 35; Minnesota, 21; Clinton, Missouri, 35; Far West, 61; Independence Stake, 120; Nodaway, 11; Northeastern Missouri, 18; St. Louis, 28; Montana, 8; Central Nebraska, 12; Northern Nebraska, 23; Southern Nebraska, 31; Evergreen Branch, 1; New York and Philadelphia, 17; North Dakota, 8; Kirtland, 25; Oklahoma, 12; Portland, 6; Southwestern Oregon, 5; Pittsburg, 23; Central Texas, 8; Northeastern Texas and Choctaw, 31; Northwestern Texas, 2; Southwestern Texas, 7; Utah, 18; Seattle and British Columbia, 10; West Virginia, 17; Northern Wisconsin, 15; Southern Wisconsin, 16.

The recorder's report was read, and among other things showed that there has been the largest growth in numbers during the past year of any since 1898. That year showed a net gain of 2,269, and the year before that a net increase of 3,556. But since then the average increase during the seven years was but 1,500.

There have been placed upon the church records during the past year 2,843 as new baptisms, and a net gain of 1,928. Five hundred and eleven of these have been gained in foreign countries, and 1,417 in the United States. The net membership as shown by the records is 53,781. The number received by letter in the branches is 1,377, and the number receiving letters of removal, 1,423. There have been recorded 677 deaths, and a loss of 192 by expulsion. New branches organized, 11.

Missouri leads both in baptisms and in net gain. Baptisms have been 360; net gain 420. These items

Of seventy-five districts, only ten failed to get reports for record.

In his report Bro. Henry A. Stebbins asked to be released from the office of General Recorder, believing that a continuous discharge of the duty for thirty-two years was enough for any one man to be required to perform.

A motion prevailed that the request of Bro. Stebbins be granted, and that he be released upon the appointment of his successor.

C. I. Carpenter and W. R. Smith were nominated to succeed him, and it was then decided by motion that further action be deferred until Monday afternoon at three o'clock.

Bro. R. Etzenhouser, Duncan Campbell, and T. W. Chatburn were appointed a committee to draft resolutions expressing the appreciation of the body of the long services of Bro. Henry A. Stebbins as Recorder.

Report of the Church Secretary, R. S. Salyards, was read and received. The suggestion that a committee be appointed to compile late conference resolutions, and that they be added to a republication of General Conference Resolutions was acted upon, and the chair authorized to appoint a committee of three to do this work. A motion that this committee be authorized to revise the present edition was lost.

The following was read and received:

To the General Conference; Greeting: The Quorum of Twelve passed the following preamble and resolution of condolence, with instruction that it be presented to the conference:

"Whereas, By the hand of death during the last year, there has been removed from the ranks of the church militant our beloved colaborer in the gospel ministry, Elder James Caffall, whose close association with us as a member of the Apostles' Quorum and whose long record of faithful service and sacrifice as a minister of Christ and servant of the church has given him permanent place in our affection and made his name to us a synonym of integrity and diligence,

"Resolved, That, while weekly resigning ourselves to this interposition of Providence, we, nevertheless, record the grief his removal has occasioned us and join in this expression of our assurance that to him the change was a promotion to higher good and the enjoyment of well-earned rest. His memory will ever be to us an inspiration and his devotion and fidelity an incentive to holy emulation,

"Resolved, That a copy of this expression be sent to his widow, together with the assurance of our sympathy, and our action be also reported to the General Conference at its convening, April 6, 1906."

F. A. Smith, Secretary.

Independence, Missouri, March 22, 1906.

The order of seating was announced as follows: On the rostrum, the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, Order of Evangelists, Bishopric, and the council of Seven Presidents.

On the left wing of the floor, the High Priests' Quorum, and on the left, back of the High Priests' Quorum, the priests, teachers, and deacons.

On the right wing, and as far back on the right side as necessary, the various quorums of Elders in their order.

In the center, the three quorums of Seventy, the remainder of the floor to be given to the delegates.

Adjourned till two o'clock. Benediction by President Joseph Smith.

A request from the Daughters of Zion for the use of the lower auditorium on Tuesday, April 10, from nine to twelve o'clock was granted.

Request from E. Peterson for use of the church in which to deliver a lecture on the 'redemption of Zion, the building of the ideal city, and kindred topics was read. It was moved that the request be granted, and the time appointed by the Presidency. A substitute was moved that the matter be left in the hands of the Presidency, they to do as wisdom might direct. A substitute for the substitute was offered that on account of all of our evenings being occupied, the request be not granted. The substitute for the substitute prevailed.

A request for the reorganization of the First Quorum of Teachers, signed by a number of regularly ordained teachers of the Independence Branch and Stake, was referred to the Quorum of Twelve.

A report of the matter submitted by the conference to the High Council last spring, a report of which was published in the Herald, was presented and, without reading, received subject to order.

A petition for division of Oklahoma District was referred to a committee appointed by the chair consisting of F. A. Smith, H. O. Smith, and Hubert Case.

Petition asking for the division of the Northern Michigan District was referred to a committee appointed by the chair consisting of Heman C. Smith, C. G. Lewis, and A. S. Cochran.

Church Historian’s report for 1905 was read.

It was moved that hereafter the Historian’s report be published in the HERALD previous to the conference, thereby saving the time it takes to read it in the conferences. Motion lost.

The following was read and its adoption moved:

INDIANAPOLIS, Missouri, March 28, 1906.

To the General Conference Assembled; Greeting: The Quorum of Twelve passed the following preamble and resolution, and instructed the secretary to present it to your honorable body.

> Very respectfully,
>
> F. A. SMITH, Secretary.

> "Whereas, There are several editions of the Book of Mormon extant, differing in the divisions of chapters and paragraphs, thereby rendering it impossible to prepare concordance and works of reference. Therefore, be it

> "Resolved, That we recommend to the conference the appointment of a committee composed of F. M. Smith, Heman C. Smith, R. S. Salyards, F. M. Sheehy, and C. Scott to investigate and prepare a uniform plan for the divisions of chapters and verses, and, if thought advisable, to prepare or adopt a system of references."

> It was moved to amend the resolution by adding the names of E. L. Kelley and F. B. Blair. It was moved to amend the amendment by striking out the name of E. L. Kelley and inserting the name of Joseph Smith; but President Smith declined. Motion to amend the resolution carried, and the motion to adopt prevailed.

Closing song 145; dismissed by E. C. Briggs.

Praying at a quarter of eight by U. W. Greene, assisted by Henry Kemp.

APRIL 7.

At nine o’clock the prayer-service was in charge of J. W. Waldsmith and S. J. Jeffers.

Praying at a quarter of eleven by Joseph R. Lambert assisted by Charles Derry.

At two o’clock conference assembled for business, President Joseph Smith in the chair. “Redeemer of Israel” was sung; prayer by W. H. Kelley.

Additional report from the credential committee recommended that delegates named be accepted from Ohio District, Southern Missouri, Spokane, Society Islands, and Eastern Iowa.

President R. C. Evans was called to the chair.

Report from Religio was read showing sixteen new locals organized, a present membership of about six thousand, and about three hundred dollars collected for the Book of Mormon translation fund.

Reports from the following were read and will be published complete in the minutes: Church Librarian, Seventh Quorum of Elders, Sixth Quorum of Priests, Second Quorum of Teachers, and Second Quorum of Deacons.

In the last, a request that Daniel Anderson be ordained first counselor to the president of the quorum, C. F. Church, was granted and the ordination authorized.

A resolution that the sense of this body is that the chapters and verses in the new edition of the Book of Mormon contemplated should conform with the chapters and verses in the large-type edition was laid on the table.

Report of the Quorum of Twelve was read concerning the adoption of new missionary report blanks, and the discarding of the old forms as inadequate to meet the requirements.

It was ordered that the Ensign Office be requested to furnish printed copies of the proposed new blank, so that the members and delegates can see what it is, and that this matter be made the order for Monday at two o’clock.

Report of the committee on appeal case of H. L. Holt was read, and by motion referred to the First Quorum of Seventy for further consideration, and all except a reference to the case and its final disposition be expunged from the record.

The committee to whom was referred the matter of division of Oklahoma District recommended that the matter be referred to the district conference and the minister in charge with authority to divide if found advisable.

Invitation was read from Lamoni Branch and Stake asking that the next General Conference be held at that place.

Lamoni, Independence, Kirtland, Chicago, and Toronto, were placed in nomination, and the vote resulted in the choice of Lamoni.

Praying in the evening by F. J. Chatburn, assisted by Arthur Allen.

APRIL 8.

Prayer-meeting at eight o’clock in the morning in charge of F. G. Pitt and W. H. Garrett.

At half past nine Sunday-school in charge of the local authorities.

At eleven o’clock there was praying in the upper room of the church by A. H. Smith assisted by T. W. Chatburn; in the basement by Columbus Scott, assisted by F. J. Ebeling; in the old Ensign building by Alvin Knisley, assisted by C. H. Rich.

At half past two in the afternoon praying in the upper auditorium by Heman C. Smith, assisted by W. H. Garrett; in the basement by Isaac M. Smith, assisted by Charles E. Harp; at the old Ensign building by Warren E. Peak, assisted by J. F. Curtis.

In the evening at a quarter of eight praying in the three places respectively by E. L. Kelley, assisted by S. B. Kibler; Walter W. Smith, assisted by F. A. Russell; and W. A. Smith, assisted by R. Baldwin.

Religio Convention

At the hour of eight, April 2, a happy, smiling, hand-shaking crowd assembled in the lower auditorium of the church, at Independence, Missouri, renewing old acquaintances and establishing new ones. Shortly after eight the murmur of voices was hushed by President J. A. Gunsolley calling the meeting to order. Sr. Stella Wight was chosen secretary for the preliminary organization, and a credentials committee consisting of John A. Gardner, David L. Morgan, and Mary O. Lewis was appointed by the chair.

Pending the report of the credentials committee it was moved that the evening be spent in five-minute speeches, and Walter W. Smith, vice-president, S. A. Burgess, librarian, Elbert A. Smith, editor of “The Religio’s Arena,” Louise Palfrey, editor Religio Quarterly, Sr. L. A. Schmutz, Albert Carmichael, A. H. Parsons, M. C. Fisher, F. G. Pitt, Allie Thorburn, and Alma Booker responded in earnest and encouraging words.

APRIL 3.

A devotional service was held at nine o’clock, with the presidency in charge, and at five minutes past ten, after a few minutes’ intermission, the convention proceeded with the transaction of business. A report on credentials was read and approved as corrected. The temporary secretary was appointed secretary pro tem., and authorized to select assistants. She selected J. F. Mintun. F. G. Pitt was chosen chorister, and empowered to select assistant chorister and organist. Motions prevailed as follows: 1. That the chair appoint ushers. 2. That the chair appoint three as a press committee. 3. That the courtesies of the floor be extended to all present. 4. That the chair appoint a committee to report to the Presidency and Twelve that the convention was in session and ready to receive any communication from them.

For the latter committee the chair named Edward Rannie, Arthur Philips, and Arthur Lane. As press committee, D. A. Anderson, J. W. Gilbert, and C. A. Rich were chosen.

Reports were read from J. A. Gunsolley, president; Walter W. Smith, vice-president; Etta M. Hitchcock, secretary; W. J. Mather, treasurer; S. A. Burgess, librarian; Catherine Haines, superintendent home department; and an auditing committee consisting of Charley May, Joseph Tanner, and M. A. Etzenhouser was appointed to audit the financial portions of these reports.

Lyman Fike and Vern Newberry were appointed by the chair to take charge of the ushering, authorized to select the helpers needed.

At two o’clock the convention came to order and the reading of reports continued. Reports were received from the editor of the Religio Quarterly, Sr. Louise Palfrey; editor of “The Religio Arena,” E. A. Smith; librarian, S. A. Burgess; committee on credentials, lesson revising committee, and auditing committee. Expenses incurred by vice-president and librarian were ordered paid.

Proposed amendments to the Constitution were taken up. It was moved to amend section 2 of article 4, page 13, by adding “and those who are under twelve years of age shall enjoy all the rights and privileges of the society, except to vote.” Moved as a substitute to add the words: “Excepting that wherever local sessions are held at night, children under twelve years of age be discouraged from attending, unless accompanied by parents.” It was finally moved and carried to lay the whole matter on the table. At this juncture the regular order, as announced for half past three, the election of officers, was taken up, resulting in the selection of J. A. Gunsolley, president; Walter W. Smith, vice-president; Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser, secretary; Richard Trowbridge, treasurer; and S. A. Burgess, librarian.

The consideration of amendments was then continued. The proposed amendment to section 4 of article 3, to strike out the words, “There shall be no nominations to office,” was adopted. The same section was also amended to provide for semiannual elections at the first meetings in January and July; and it was moved and carried that this amendment take effect at the close of the present term of office for which the local officers were elected.

The superintendent of the Sunday-school Association announced as committee on credentials for the Sunday-school convention, W. R. Adams, Carrie McPhee, and Archie McLean.

The convention adjourned until a quarter of eight in the evening when it reassembled for business. The following communication from the Presidency was read:

To the General Convention of Zion's Religio-Literary Society:
The Presidency has been waited upon by your committee and formally notified that your annual convention has begun its sessions. I have been authorized by the Presidency to extend to you fraternal greetings, to acknowledge the courtesy of your action, and to convey to you the hearty good wishes of the Presidency that your efforts in the work which the Religio Society is endeavoring to accomplish may be richly blessed. May the Spirit of the good Master be with you through the sessions of the present convention and throughout the coming year.

We wish to express our confidence in the Religio Society and its corps of earnest workers, and shall pray that nothing shall intervene to prevent a closer and closer cooperation of the church and its auxiliary societies, and that every effort shall be put forth to promote a spirit of brotherly love and confidence. The success of the work which lies near to all our hearts demands cooperation, and this in turn demands confidence in those who have the great burdens to bear.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
Secretary First Presidency.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, April 3, 1906.

It was moved that it is the opinion of this body.
that all locals should appoint a temperance committee whose special duty is to discourage the use of tobacco in all its forms.

Moved as a substitute that the General Convention disfavor the use of tobacco by our members, and urge our local temperance committees to discourage the use of tobacco in all its forms.

It was moved to amend the substitute so as to read: “That we disfavor the use of tobacco by our members, and urge that our locals should appoint a temperance committee who shall discourage the use of tobacco in all its forms.” The substitute as amended prevailed.

A petition from the Northern Michigan District association asking that provision be made for a division of the district, the boundary lines to conform with the boundary lines of the district as they may be determined by the General Conference, was referred to the executive committee with power to act.

The following was moved: “Whereas, a history of the church adapted to the needs of our young people is greatly needed, therefore be it resolved, that this convention appoint a committee of three to confer with the Presidency, Church Historian, and Board of Publication for the purpose of having such a history written and published.” A substitute was offered as follows: “Believing that it would be to the interest of the young people in their efforts to become familiar with the history of the church to have an abridged edition of the same, resolved, that we communicate to the First Presidency our desires to see such publication made as soon as practicable.”

APRIL 4.

The closing session of the convention opened at half past eight Wednesday morning.

It was moved to indorse the suggestion in the president’s report in regard to appointing a field-worker, providing the Sunday-school in their convention take similar action, and that the executive officers be constituted a committee with full power to confer with a similar committee from the Sunday-school convention, the Religio Society to contribute its proper proportion toward maintaining such officer as necessity demanded.

It seemed from the discussion that the majority were of the opinion that the time had not come when it would be wise to undertake, even in conjunction with the Sunday-school Association, to maintain a field-worker, and a motion carried to refer the matter to the executive committee and request them to report at the next convention.

The question of authorizing a gathering at Nauvoo came up and the following was adopted: “Resolved, That we order an assembly of Religio workers in the city of Nauvoo during August of 1906, the exact date being left with the executive committee, and they to have the power to determine the program and to appoint all necessary committees.”

Moved that we invite the Sunday-school Association to take similar action and unite with us in the meetings. Carried.

It was also moved and carried that the citizens of Nauvoo be notified of the action taken.

In harmony with a motion adopted, the chair appointed Mark H. Seigfreid, Floralice Miller, and S. A. Burgess a committee to express the thanks of this convention to Sr. Hitchcock for her past services as secretary.

The following from the retiring secretary furnishes interesting information concerning the past year’s work:

To the Religio Convention; Greeting: We are glad to report that the work this year has about kept pace, in organizations of new locals and numerically, with last year; but, owing to the fact that there were no mid-summer reports, the secretary has gleaned from some of the letters the past three months, a lack of interest at various places, and a decided carelessness in the manner of keeping the records. A number of local reports have not yet been received, corresponding delegate certificates are not in, although we have waited until the very last. The carelessness noticeable is due, your secretary believes, to the fact that yearly elections in locals are not the proper thing; it may work all right in the large districts, but we have not found that it is a good plan for locals. We do not even admit that it is a good thing in the larger districts; we do not say any of this in a fault-finding spirit, but as one who in a measure feels the pulse of the Religio life as determined by itemized statements and promptness of replies.

During the year April 1905 to April 1906 we have had sixteen locals organized, with an increased membership of two hundred and ninety-six.

The present membership of the Religio, all over the world, may be conservatively set down as 6,177.

Again have the ministry shown their willing spirits and helpful cooperation; Brn. J. W. Wight, L. G. Holloway, Bro. Enge, Edward Rannie, and Alma Booker have been instrumental in organizing Religios.

The Canadians, whom I have ever characterized as hustlers, have shown their wonted energy this year, and reports from there are encouraging.

Bro. Alma C. Barnmore, Australiz, writes in a personal letter: “Just a few words to acquaint you with the status of the Religio in this country. No doubt the secretary of New South Wales District has reported to you since the convention of last Easter. I will, therefore, give you a general view of the situation. To begin with: The societies at Hastings and Richmond, Victoria, have died. This leaves Victoria without any Religio. The societies which were organized at Nambucca, Bulahdelah, and Stockton have also died. All of the last were, I think, home classes. To offset these losses, which, in the main, occurred over a year ago, the Hamilton Religio has been reorganized during the past year and is now stronger than ever before. Our societies now are Balmain, Wallsend, Tuncurry, Hamilton, and Dudley. The last named is a home class. On the whole we can truthfully say that 1905 was a year of progress, and we are expecting more for this year. Everything is shaping for a good convention at Bulahdelah at Easter-time.

“Praying that God’s richest blessings may rest upon both conventions and the conference, I am,” etc.

Numbers in Australia, as gleaned from the secretary’s report of last year, 145.
England, Scotland, and Wales are, up to date, among the delinquents, but the work is gradually becoming stronger, better organized, and accomplishing more good, under the wise care of Bro. Rushton and his collaborators.

Gain in district organizations for the year, two.

Bro. Waller writes thus cheerily from his far-away home:

"I thought I would just write and let you know that our local Religio society is still flourishing, and we are hopeful of extending our influence. We use, as you know, the Religio Quarterly in our Book of Mormon classes and find them very helpful.

"I trust that you may have a profitable and enjoyable time at the convention and that good to the society and church may result from your efforts. Hoping that the Lord will bless and guide you by his Spirit, your brother."

Our work as your general secretary is concluded; the Religio and its interests will ever be dear to us! In putting aside the duties of this office we do so, praying God to bless the one who will take them up. With a prayer for the cause whose "Onward and Upward" motto has been of thrilling heart-interest in the years that are past, and ever will be, we are pleased to sign ourselves,

Faithfully yours,

ETTA HITCHCOCK.

St. Louis, Missouri, March 29, 1906.

Sunday-School Convention

At twenty minutes of eleven of April 4 the Sunday-school Convention came to order with Superintendent T. A. Hougas presiding. His appointment of the credentials committee was indorsed, and the report received. Sr. Belle James and J. F. Min-tun were appointed secretaries to assist the general secretary, D. J. Krahl. D. A. Anderson chosen chorister, and Sr. Brocaw organist, and a motion prevailed to extend the courtesies of the floor to all. The chair was instructed to appoint a committee to notify the Presidency and Twelve that the Sunday-school Association was in session and ready to receive any communication from them, and the chair named Edward Rannie, Charles Fry, and R. O. Self as such committee. A press committee was also appointed consisting of R. Etzenhouser and E. A. Smith.

At two o'clock in the afternoon the convention reassembled and reports from the following were read: Superintendent, T. A. Hougas; first assistant superintendent, J. A. Gunsolley; second assistant, A. Carmichael; secretary, D. J. Krahl; librarian, Sr. L. Etzenhouser; home department superintendent, Sr. T. A. Hougas; treasurer, John Smith; Revising Committee; Sr. R. O. Self, field worker for Western Nebraska and Black Hills; Roxana E. Anderson, field worker for Kirtland District.

The treasurer's report showed receipts for the year to be $3,700.21; expenditures, $2,594.94; and a balance on hand of $3,139.35.

Petition from Northern Michigan association asking for division contingent upon a division of the district by the General Conference, was referred to the executive committee with full power to act when conditions are such that the division can take place.

A resolution from the Lamoni Stake was read asking the General Convention to express itself upon the question of the propriety of awarding banners with the giving of the Christmas offering. It was moved that the convention approve of the policy of awarding banners to the Sunday-school in connection with the giving of the Christmas offering. A letter from Sr. M. Walker was read, and the chair announced that further consideration would be deferred until the evening session.

At the evening session a report was read from the editor of the Quarterlies, also from the Home Class superintendent.

The following communication was received:

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, April 4, 1906.

To the General Sunday-School Association in Convention Gathered; Greeting: The First Presidency is pleased to acknowledge the receipt through your committee of your formal notification that your annual sessions are now being held. We appreciate the courtesy shown by this formal notification.

We are disposed to think that there is an end to be served in this courtesy other than a compliance with mere formality or a tendency to string red tape. We cherish the hope that there is a closeness of cooperation between the church and the Sunday-school organization which will not only dispose the Sunday-school Association thus to go through the formality of notifying with due degree of dignity the Presidency that the convention has begun its sessions (which formal notification can generally be construed as an indication that harmonious relations exist) but that there shall be a growing disposition on the part of the Sunday-school authorities to promote closer relations and understanding between them and the general authorities of the church, so that the question, "What are the Sunday-school authorities doing and what do they contemplate doing," can be answered by some other reply than, "We do not know."

It is gratifying to us to know that the work of the Sunday-school is meeting fitting recognition throughout the several missions of the church. We hail with gladness every evidence of success attending the efforts of the Sunday-school Association; and while we do not feel inclined at this time to offer any suggestions upon any particular part of your work, yet we join the many others in bidding you God-speed in your important mission.

With fraternal feeling,

The First Presidency, per F. M. Smith, Secretary.

The discussion on the subject of the association favoring the giving of banners was continued. By motion the speeches were limited to three minutes. Previous question was ordered, and the resolution favoring banners lost by a vote of 146 to 40.

Resolved, That we as a convention look with disfavor upon keeping rolls of honor, awarding of prizes, and the printing of the Blue Hope as incentives to punctual attendance or individual effort.

Previous question was ordered and resolution lost by a vote of 40 to 142.

APRIL 5.

At nine o'clock a social service was held, and fifty minutes pleasantly spent in prayer, testimony and song.

At ten o'clock business continued with J. A. Gunsolley in chair. The following communication was read from the Quorum of Twelve:
To the Sunday-School Convention in Session at Independence, Missouri; Greeting: In response to your official notice to the Quorum of Twelve of being in session and in readiness to consider matters relating to Sunday-school work, the quorum has nothing before it at present claiming the attention of the convention, but it assures the convention of its hearty concurrence in the work of the convention, and are in deepest sympathy with the Sunday-school movement, and take pleasure in keeping in touch with its ready workers and encourage whatever contributes to the good of the Sunday-school cause.

We congratulate the convention on the favorable auspices under which it has assembled, the good work done in the past, and the hopeful outlook for achieving good in the future; and be assured that the workers in this most commendable work of the church will always find sympathy and encouragement from the members of the Quorum of Twelve.

May success attend your present and future work.

Respectfully,

Wm. H. Kelley, for the Quorum.

The following resolution was adopted:

Whereas, This convention recognizes with true brotherly love the noble effort put forth by Sr. M. Walker in connection with the Jubilee offering of the past year, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we as a body extend to her a mark of our appreciation, and sincerely commend her to the favor of the kind Master whom she serves, for the peace and consolation which he will surely bestow upon his faithful servants.

The executive committee of the Sunday-school Association was authorized to confer with the Board of Publication, with authority to take such steps as necessary to have the work of preparing marginal references for the Inspired Translation performed.

It was moved and carried that the church treasury be designated as the depository for Sunday-school funds, and that these deposits be without interest.

A motion providing for the appointment of a field-secretary was lost by a vote of 30 to 104.

At the two o'clock session the election of officers was taken up. T. A. Hougas was chosen superintendent; Mark H. Seigfreid, first assistant; A. McLean, second assistant; D. J. Krahl, secretary; John Smith, treasurer; Lucina Etzenhouser, librarian.

Moved and carried that we reelect the present Revising Committee. Report from committee instructed to report on reunion at Nauvoo was read.

It was moved that the Association hold a reunion at Nauvoo in August, time and place left to executive committee, they to cooperate with Religio executive. Resolution prevailed.

An appropriation of $225 for contingent expenses for next year was ordered.

The Exponent was recognized as the official organ, and the executive committee authorized to provide for its editing and publication.

At the evening session a communication was read from Superintendent T. A. Hougas offering resignation to take effect immediately. It was moved to decline to accept the resignation, and to request Bro. Hougas to act as superintendent of the association. Bro. Hougas stated that for the coming year he would endeavor to do the best he could, and his resignation was withdrawn.

The appointment of a home class superintendent was left with the executive committee.

The secretary was authorized to notify the city clerk of Nauvoo of the action of the convention at the afternoon session.

Adjourned to meet at time and place provided for in the Constitution.

ANOTHER VIEW OF ZION AND THE GATHERING.

For which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first, and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it? Lest haply, after he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to finish it, all that behold it begin to mock him, saying, this man began to build, and was not able to finish.—Luke 14:28-30.

The above language of Christ is just as applicable to us in attempting to build up Zion as in any other work we may undertake and, if we follow it, it may save us many heartaches and from the ridicule of the onlooker which we will receive if we do not pay sufficient heed to what the Master has written for our profit.

We have no precedent to guide us only the historical fact that the Nephites and Enoch succeeded in eliminating poverty from among their people. The details of how they accomplished their work we have no knowledge of, and at present extreme views are discernible and it seems as if it will be necessary for God to give us more light and it is quite likely the truth will be found between the two extremes and some of us will have to come down from our self-exalted positions.

When the message reaches the world that we have the true Zion and that poverty is not found among us, no need for insurance against death, accident, and misfortune as a result of fire and storms, and no need to provide for a rainy day, for the Lord’s storehouse will always be full; and the widow and her children will have no need to fear that the wolf will gnaw at their door.

There will be two classes which will flock to Zion like bees to a clover-patch. One is the honest, industrious, and pure minded who seek to serve God in the spirit of truth and humility, and there will be thousands of them when they see the fruits of righteousness and when they see the faith of God’s people manifested by works. Many people now believe our work, but fail to unite with us because we do not practice all that we believe. Suppose we have five hundred missionaries out in the field. One hundred baptisms each per year would not be too high an average, which would be fifty thousand, and with the local work and several children to each family added you have an influx of about one hundred thousand yearly to Zion. The majority of them will be poor and all must have an inheritance. Suppose there are one thousand families that needed assistance; five hundred dollars for a home for each would be five hundred thousand dollars per year. The other class will be those who are after the loaves and fishes and they may be more numerous than the other class above referred to. Who is going to determine who is worthy or unworthy to enter the church? and when they enter, do they not become entitled to the privileges of Zion, after they have been invited to come?

Our missionaries will be in all nations and what a steady stream will pour into Zion and they will have to pass the rigid examination provided for by the Bureau of Immigration. China, Japan, India, Russia, Turkey, Greece, Germany, Austria, Italy, France, and the British Isles—what a cosmopolitan class of people, all to be assimilated and made good Americans and become a useful class of producers—a real benefit to society. Who is going to manage such a stupendous enterprise, the like of which the world has never seen? The bishopric will need an army of competent and well-trained men, another great army of priests and other branch officers to teach them their duty in spiritual things, and they will have to practically begin life over and adapt themselves to new occupations under new conditions and in a different climate.

God knows about all these difficulties and has a divine plan to carry on his marvelous work, but we do not know what it is and are we going to guess at it and go into it blindly and realize to our own shame the saying of our Master, "When the blind lead the blind they both fall into the ditch together''? Where are the wise men whom God needs to carry out his wonderful undertaking, if we have none wise enough to tell us what God’s plan is and the details to carry it out? How can we expect men to do a work of which they have no knowledge, and it seems an evident fact to the writer that the majority of mankind are incapable of taking care of themselves and the great task will depend on the few until under favorable conditions all can be brought to a higher condition where they will be better able to help themselves and be less dependent on others. Will the careful, prudent, and industrious man that has a surplus of material wealth cast it into the church treasury without he sees a reasonable probability of its being used wisely by men who have shown their wisdom in the management of temporal affairs?

Another important consideration is, Who will make good the losses from failures in these various enterprises that the church is supposed to control if the church must make good such losses? How long can we stand it? Will it not be a temptation to extravagance and to run unusual risks in business enterprises when the losses are to be paid by some one else? Everything that the church has done in recent years has caused dissatisfaction among some; how will it be when we embark in larger enterprises?

Omaha, Nebraska.

Edward Rannie.

Although my whereabouts have been incidentally referred to in the Herald and Zion’s Ensign during the current conference year, I have said nothing of labors and experiences during the time indicated. I have not, however, been idle, nor has my hope in the ultimate triumph of the great work of God, as set forth in the prophecies relating thereto and the latter-day revelations, waned. No. On the contrary my faith in the work has been confirmed in some regards during the year.

Our Savior said, speaking of the last days, “Because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold”; “And all things shall be in commotion.” (Matthew 24: 12; Doctrine and Covenants 45: 4.) A moment’s survey of the condition of things abroad in the world displays the fulfilling of these statements now, undeniably.

That the nations are being distressed with perplexity, (see Luke 21: 25,) needs only to be mentioned to be clearly seen. Again: “And it shall come to pass that he that feareth me shall be looking forth for the great day of the Lord to come, even for the signs of the coming of the Son of Man.”—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 6. And to note the startling events as they crowd the world’s canvas with such marvelous rapidity, it but surprises us into wondering silence and great admiration! Historical epochs are made in a day, as was the fate of Russia in the far East, on both land and sea; as was church and state separated in France just a few days since. (See Revelation 17: 15–18.) And only poor little Spain, of all the ten horns of the Apocalyptic beast, seems willing to bear the burden of the bondage of the union of church and state! The words of God are being fulfilled. Since 1800 A. D. when the deadly wound of the beast was inflicted, the deadly wound was healed in Italy, France, and Spain, but at present Spain alone bears this yoke of bondage. Serious troubles harass Turkey in Europe, and ere long Europe will spew Turkey out, and the Sultan will “plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain, [in Palestine]. Yet he shall come to his end and none shall help him.” (Daniel 11: 45.) And when this shall be accomplished, the way will be opened for Israel to go home and occupy the land promised them. After this restoration, and Israel’s establishment in their own land, the “time of trouble” (of Daniel 12: 1 and Ezekiel chapters 38 and 39) will be fulfilled, and Israel be saved as predicted.

The revelations of such astounding character brought to light in the Reed Smoot trial before the Senatorial Committee, in the statements of President Joseph F. Smith and other witnesses in the case, wherein it is stated that some of the authorities of the Brighamite church are living in open and confessed violation of the law of God and of the land, also revelations coming to light before a committee of examination into the conduct of management of some of the old line insurance companies in New York, compel belief in the prophecy which reads: "And it shall come to pass, that there shall be a great work in the land, even among the Gentiles, for their folly and their abominations shall be made manifest, in the eyes of all people; for I am God, and mine arm is not shortened, and I will show miracles, signs and wonders, unto all those who believe on my name."—Doctrine and Covenants 34:3. All indicates that the perils predicted by the apostle Paul, when men were to be self-lovers,—full of selfishness, "individualism," (stop and look at that word, and then scan society and see how so many are "without natural affection,"”) all this plainly indicates that the day predicted is upon us now!

Paul, too, proclaims that the last days will witness "perils" because of the universal "covetousness," the love of money that prevails. Who that desires to can fail to see its fulfillment in the religion-blighting, soul-withering commercial waves that are sweeping society everywhere, and that say to religion, "We have no time for you," "We have this world and we must make the best of it"? It is a deadly enemy to religion, and happy are Saints who are not carried away with it, and thrice happy is he that is delivered from its thraldom—its death. "Its substance is that of an idol." The souls of so many are wholly set on its attainment, and as this is the day when the character of the "foolish" "virgins" are to be formed, it well becomes us to be wise, build on the rock of the word of God, (see Matthew 7:24; 25:1–13; Doctrine and Covenants 45:10,) to "seek first to build up the kingdom of God, and establish his righteousness," and afterward, or secondarily seek for the needed things that perish.

Never in the history of the world have the irresistible waves of evil assailed the influences of righteousness as at this time. They seek to assail with invincible force the citadel of gospel righteousness in its utmost strongholds, and they intend to carry to captivity, if possible, the heavenly ramparts. It is not being done by vile opposition in the form of persecution. They are organized to cultivate and cause to grow up strong prejudice to shut out even a hearing of the truth, to stifle free investigation.

Species of literature are being quietly circulated diligently to this end. Some on whose account the way of truth is being evil spoken of are used as a pretext for this kind of opposition. Satan’s devices are subtle. He—his children—assume the role of charity apparently, and through feigned sociability woo the children of God,—some of them from the truth. We must not forget that to counterfeit if possible the virtues of the truth is to be a part of the wiles of man’s enemy in the last days, (see 2 Timothy 3:8: "Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these," (which creep into houses and lead captive silly women.)] Also “resist the truth, men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith.”

How did Jannes and Jambres withstand Moses? By teaching things that Moses taught, and apparently doing the same wonders that Moses did. And when Moses stretched out his rod to indicate the sending of a plague on the Egyptians, the “magicians did so with their enchantments,” and so far as Pharaoh could judge, or cared to, they brought the plagues also. (See Exodus 8:7.) Already some are asking: How is it some are healed, or have tongues, and yet they do not accept the principles of the doctrine of Christ nor acknowledge the restoration of the authority to minister the gospel, as taught in the Bible? (See Zechariah 2:1–5; Matthew 24:14; Acts 3:21; Revelation 14:6, 7.) Our answer to the above question is: Satan is willing to heal you now, or counterfeit the gift of tongues in order to have you stop right there, and discourage your seeking further for the gospel. The gospel is God’s power unto salvation, and Satan does not want you to go on unto salvation. His object is to cause us to believe we are saved—will be—whether we adhere to all God’s law, as administered by divine authority, or not. So he takes “a cinch” on us here, in order to secure us to himself hereafter. The gospel of Jesus Christ includes the gospel gifts of First Corinthians twelfth chapter, but the genuine gospel gifts may not be expected to grow where gospel seed has never been planted, and especially where any prefer not to hear or receive it. "He that is of God heareth God's words," is God’s own test; "He that is not for me is against me." All these tests apply where opportunity has been offered to investigate.

And right here wrapped up in this question is one of the problems of the hour, and an elaborate one. Christian Scientists heal, Dowites heal; spiritualists heal physical maladies. Healing of physical ills is growing into a popular proposition for public advocacy. And the mystery connected with the fact is said to be "the key to the Holy Scriptures." Ought we not, and in view of these things, shall we not "contend for the faith once delivered to the Saints"? Shall we at this late date in the world’s history forget that "strong delusions" will be permitted to circulate among the peoples in these times, that many false prophets are to appear and show great signs that deception may reign? And such is to be the case because the truth will not be desired, (see 2 Thessalonians 2:11,) but on the contrary the people are to have "pleasure in unrighteousness."

The world to-day are on a money- and pleasure-excision. And when it is to end is the question. Extreme indifference to religious matters is the result. Also spiritual dearth.

And so conditions have changed, and the elders, many of them (us), hardly know how to adapt ourselves in our labors so as to meet the emergencies and catch the public ear with the gospel. What we might be able to do by inaugurating a campaign of circulating literature is a question. Some religious bodies engage extensively in endeavoring to propagate their claims by spreading their religious literature among the people. Christian Scientists, Adventists, and some others do thus; also our friends, the Brighamites. Should the church be able to supply the elders with suitable literature in sufficient quantities, the trial could be made, the question with us could be answered.

But now is a time, and conditions make it so, for men, the ministry, to be strong to resist evil, to seek for the special endowment of the Spirit to advocate and defend the right, the truth of the gospel, and successfully set forth the interests of the kingdom of God. We can not well afford to take steps backward at this time, by lessening our missionary force, or lessening our energies as a people to keep our missionary force up to the required demands.

A brother once said that to be engaged in this work was like riding a bycicle: one must keep going, as to stop meant 'get off.' And I strongly opine this to be true. If we are not going forward, we are falling to the rear. We may think to stand morally level and keep our names on the records, but are we not then waning in spiritual light and strength? To go forward in the line of duty both spiritually and relating to the temporal duties under the law, is our only hope of final success; not to continue thus to do, is surely to fail at last. To conform to the divine law is to result in success. It has always been so from Abel of old to the present. And to do, in the service to God, that which he has not by law required, is to meet disappointment and failure absolutely, and it ever has been so from Cain's attempt to offer "the fruit of the ground," instead of the lamb. Cain was willing to worship, to make an offering, but he adopted policy as a rule of action instead of the law given. King Saul once thought to compromise Deity, in deviating slightly in the face of a plain law, but he failed and fell, lost his kingdom and died with God's disfavor impending. (See 1 Samuel 15:20-23.)

If we are to see that the converted of the world are to obey the law of adoption in full in order to a standing in the church, shall we in keeping our watch as citizens of Zion stop short of seeing that the law governing us "is kept"? "I command," says God, "ye fail to keep the command; I then revoke," then we say the work is not of God. But such failure is ours, not of God or his law. A system of law necessarily includes a judgment. The law must be kept by those to whom the law is given that the promised blessings may be realized. If not kept, judgment and loss is inevitable. There is no escape. Sometimes the judgment may linger for a time through mercy and divine long-suffering that peradventure repentance may be wrought in the transgressor of the law. But should the law fail of being fulfilled the judgment will come, the penalty of a broken law must be inflicted. Such has always been the case in all past history, and such is principle. Principles are eternal. No evading it. Are, therefore, conditions in the world morally, now, as in Noah's day? (See Matthew 24:36-39.) Our Savior prophesied it would be. But the people in Noah's time, knew not the judgment was upon them till too late—"And knew not," says Jesus, "till the floods came and took them all away." "So shall it be" again, is the prophetic word. What were the charges preferred against the world in Noah's day? Here is one: "For the earth is filled with violence through them."—Genesis 6:13. A glance only need be taken by the observer at daily events as now occurring, to convince of its truth. Deadly violence is stalking abroad and no hand seems able to stay the continuously deepening and widening tide of violence on the earth to-day. Forty-one deaths in Detroit during the year 1905, by murder and suicide, attest irrevocably this charge. A bloody wave passing over Chicago, resulting in seventeen deaths in twenty-four hours since the new year 1906 began, is astonishing beyond all explanation;—only the spirit of violence is crazing the people. We are not prepared to give the average statistics of violent deaths and other casualties of the world or the United States, at this writing; but look at Armenia and other states bordering Turkey in Europe, and behold destruction by violence carrying men, women, and children by scores and hundreds,—then consider how death in terrifying waves carries its thousands upon thousands to destruction in its most violent modes, in the empire of Russia, and Russia's liberators and benefactors go down powerlessly before enthroned violence! Surely Jesus' prophecy in this regard is being fulfilled to the letter.

Another grievous charge made against the antediluvians was: "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was evil only continually."—Genesis 6:5. What is the cause of the ever-increasing, overshadowing wave of evil now darkening the earth and spreading moral death over the earth except the evil imaginations of men's hearts? Imaginations, or evil thoughts, are the roots whence grow the trees of evil and their fruits—fruit even unto sin and death. Where are the hearts of mankind, with the religious indifference now prevalent everywhere? What must be the hearts of men who "hold the truth in unrighteousness," as is the case with many, largely at least, in Utah, and neighboring vicinities?

They have not scrupled to cast unjust odium on the prophet Joseph Smith and his faith in God, have caused his name to be evil spoken of so unjustly. They have falsely made his memory, after his death, to do service to a cause of heinous criminality against civilization and the law of God. And after he had said authoritatively to the church restored by heavenly command, in the marriage institution, that "fornication" and "polygamy" were "crimes," are "crimes," and further: "marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain [two] shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end [purpose] of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made," (see Doctrine and Covenants 49:3; 3:4.) God ordained, according to this revelation through the Prophet, that in the marriage institution, one man—husband—and one woman—wife—in wedlock, that the earth might answer the end or purpose of God, in its and man's creation. Moreover God set the example to man at creation, creating but one woman—one wife for Adam. Also in Noah's family before and after the flood had destroyed the ungodly. Likewise at the founding of the Nephite kingdom. This, too, was revealed to us by the prophet Joseph. And when, in after-years, some of the wicked, degenerate Nephites imitated the lives of Kings David and Solomon, in multiplying to themselves wives, so called, and concubines, (I say multiplied to themselves concubines, for there is not one isolated command from God in all the realm of accepted, divine revelation, giving a right to man to have more than one wife at a time, nor any provision in the institution for man to live with more than one wife at a time in this world.) God reproved them for their "grosser crime" than pride, and denounced the sin of polygamy in David and Solomon, and in the Nephites as being "abominable" in his sight, and said further to them "there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none, for I the Lord God delighteth in the chastity of women." (Jacob, chapters 1 and 2.)

But the Nephites did not desire to enter polygamy till they began to "indulge in wicked practices" and grow "in iniquity," and historically wickedness, iniquity, and crime have generally attended polygamy. The book containing these repeated denunciations of polygamy is given to us as containing the terms of "the new and everlasting covenant" or "the fulness of the gospel!" to Latter Day Saints. Because of this crime of polygamy among the Nephites, God's prophet further said: "Ye have broken the hearts of your tender wives, and lost the confidence of your children, because of your bad example before them; and the sobbings of their hearts ascend up to God against you."—Jacob, chapter 2.

Hence, it may be stated with additional force that no authority is found for any man to have more than one wife at one and the same time. Nowhere can such divine authority be found in any divine revelation, ancient or modern. And after these divinely authorized statements have been given of God to govern man for over six thousand years, to attempt at this late date in the history of the race to change the preordained marriage institution, and seek to give it credence by making the Prophet-Martyr responsible for the pretended change, and to make it go with the followers of the leaders of the Utah or Brighamite church, savors in its nature of "evil imaginations," and of "evil imaginations" only. The originators of that bungle called "A Revelation on the Eternity of the Marriage Covenant" ought to have known that when they presented it as a "new and everlasting covenant." If the claim was valid, it necessarily rendered null all other divine covenants binding. It would take away the first that the last might be established. (See Luke 22:19, 20; Ephesians 2:13-15; Hebrews 10:9.) Ah, but you say, it is not intended to be a "new covenant" save in regard to the marriage institution. If this be all, it subverts that institution as ordained of God at man's beginning at Eden, and as confirmed later by the Christ. (See Genesis 2:18-24; Matthew 19:5-9.) But that we are not extreme in our position on this matter; that if this strange document is "a new and everlasting covenant," it does away all previously existing ones, will appear from the following two quotations:

1. There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated; and when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated.—Doctrine and Covenants, Salt Lake edition, 1890, section 130, paragraphs 20, 21.

This statement is evidently true, and harmonizes with all former gospel truth, that all blessings coming from God are based on obedience to that law upon which it is predicated. In harmony with this truth, all the blessings of God designed for man in time and in all eternity to come, including the fullness of divine glory, may be obtained by obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ as ordained before the foundation of the world and ratified by the precious blood of Christ; it being "the everlasting covenant," as attested by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. But so far as God's everlasting covenant through Christ is concerned, God, and our Lord Jesus Christ, are denied, and the efficacy of the blood, the atoning blood of Christ, is denied (see 2 Peter 2:1) by the following words of this so-called revelation, or rather a parody on divine revelation:

2. For behold! I reveal unto you a new and an everlasting covenant; and if ye abide not that covenant, then are ye damned; for no one can reject this covenant, and be permitted to enter into my glory; for all who will have a blessing at my hands, shall abide the law which was appointed for that blessing, and the conditions thereof, as were instituted from before the foundation of the world: and as pertaining to the new and everlasting covenant, it was instituted for the fullness of my and he that receiveth a fullness thereof, must and shall abide the law, or he shall be damned, saith the Lord God.— Utah edition of 1890, Doctrine and Covenants, section 132 paragraphs 4-6.

According to the conditions of this so-called revelation, (each point of which is argued, as though if it were not it might not be true,) a person must be married by the authority provided by it, or they “are damned” and can not enter the exalted glory; and if a man be joined by said authority to ten virgins, the nine giving their consent to admit the tenth, they may commit all manner of sin except the shedding of innocent blood; they may ultimately enter their exaltation. Unmarried persons may be saved—be angels—but can not be “enlarged,” can not multiply their seed and people kingdoms in the future world, nor can they attain to “the glory” of the celestial kingdom, nor become Gods! It is strange that all this “new and everlasting covenant,” with its enlargements, its glories and exaltations, was never revealed to man till August 29, A. D. 1852! Neither angels, ancient worthies, nor the prophets of any of the ages previous to that date ever even dreamed of it. Strange! At the same time God is no respecter of persons? And he infinitely just!?

Contrast the foregoing with the teachings given to the church through Joseph the Martyr, as before cited on this question—of the marriage institution, and then read the following and study its logical sequences, and the character of Joseph Smith stands clear of the gross and evil charge urged against him in the title of this so-called revelation.

And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remem ber the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom, otherwise there remaineth a scourge and a judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion; for shall the children of the kingdom pollute my holy land? Verily, I say unto you, Nay.
—Doctrine and Covenants 83:8.

This revelation is dated September, 1832. This new covenant, even “the Book of Mormon” and all “former commandments” on the marriage institution and its relations had enjoined and provided monogamy, and condemned polygamy; especially the Book of Mormon as before cited, and the Doctrine and Covenants, (see Matthew 19:3-5; 1 Corinthians 7:2.) “Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh on a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit, and if he repents not he shall be cast out.” (Put out of the church.—
C. S. Doctrine and Covenants 42:7. Also see Jacob, Book of Mormon, chapters 1 and 2.) The church was to remember and “do” the things enjoined in these revelations and “the new covenant” under the penalty of continued “condemnation,” and a scourge if they did not obey this with all other commandments given. And the “scourge” meant to be sent out of the land of Zion, as to remain there and not obey would be to “pollute” the land.
The being sent away to the intermountain region is prima-facie evidence that they did fail to observe the law of God given to Zion.

Joseph Smith never feared, never failed to submit to the church for its examination and acceptance a revelation given to him for its guidance. He was apprised of all this array of law on the subject under consideration. He knew that all gospel institutions are based on principles, and he knew that principles are eternal elements, and not susceptible to change.
He knew by sad and sacred experience that “God doeth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he turn to the right hand nor to the left; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round.” (Doctrine and Covenants 2:1.)

It does not seem reasonable that the inspired prophet Joseph would represent God as moving in “one eternal round” on every principle of the truth except this one relating to the marriage institution, and on this, God changed after nearly six thousand years’ experimenting, and sought to improve by changing, and allowing greater license to men on this subject. We have no unquestioned evidence that Joseph the Martyr ever saw or heard of the so-called revelation on celestial marriage, handed out for the first time to public gaze August 29, 1852, by Brigham Young, eight years after Joseph’s death.

Brigham Young in presenting the so-called revelation to the assembly on that date, made the statement that it “contained a doctrine ... the elders had not [to that date] practiced,” although a num ber of the women of Utah were put on the stand some years after to swear that some of the elders had practiced the doctrine of polygamy before that date, even back in the state of Illinois, where the State law forbade bigamy and polygamy under severe penalty, thus throwing Brigham into a lie, if they told the truth, and rendering the elders and women so practicing this grosser crime against God transgressors of the law of the land.
And all this in the face of a statement of divine revelation to the church, that the lawbreaker, man or woman, “shall be delivered up unto the law of the land.” (Doctrine and Covenants 42:22.) Again, “Let no man think he is ruler, but let God rule him that judgeth, according to the counsel of his own will; or in other words, him that counseleth or sitteth upon the judgment-seat. Let no man break the law of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet. Behold, the laws which ye have received from my hand are the laws of the church, in this light ye shall hold them forth. Behold, here is wisdom.”—Doctrine and Covenants, edition of 1897, 58:5. Every item of “law” given to the church up to and including this one, all relating to the institution of marriage, in the New Testament, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, enjoined monogamy and also forbade and some condemned polygamy as being an abomination unto God. And no honest man can hold the laws referred to in this citation forth as the laws given to the church of God, and enjoin and practice polygamy. And the judge in the church, which includes the president of the church, is to let God’s given law rule, govern in this as in all other matters. But by the so-called revelation on celestial marriage, this paragraph of God-given revelation is nullified, for we are unable to see how any man can hold forth as a law of God to the church, the law of marriage as set forth in the books, and hold this document forth as a law to the church at the same time without being the most arrant of hypocrites.

And, now, after heaping all the obloquy attaching to attributing to Joseph Smith the hypocrisy of giving to the church this disgraceful document, and the perpetuating of it for all these years—all after he is dead and unable to resist this traducing of his character in the eyes of the whole world—they have added sin to their iniquity by carrying to the place of his birth this unholy besmirching of his character and name,—and by the erection of a monument to cover his whole life from birth to death, and his character ever after his death with this false and unholy and accursed cloud, all as a covering and an excuse for the sins of the followers of Brigham Young. It is almost an undefinable sin to crucify an innocent servant of God, but how are we to describe the degree of heinousness of memorializing to future generations by the erection of a monument of the unholy traducing by the traducers? It may be all right to erect a monument to the memory of Joseph Smith the Prophet, but it should be done by his friends, those who truly represent his faith, his holy life, his true character, as a servant of God, according to the gospel of Christ, and not by his worst enemies, those who after his death grossly misrepresent him as being a vile subverter of the laws of both God and the land that he ever honored in his life and manhood, by his every act and word. Surely “the imaginations of men’s hearts are evil only continually before the Lord.” Surely the prophecy of Jesus is being fulfilled. (See Matthew 24:37.)

The third charge made by the inspired Bible writer against the antediluvians was this:

And it came to pass, when men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, that the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair, and they took them wives of all which they chose. And the Lord said, My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh; yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years.—Genesis 6:1-3.

These sons of God were flesh, subject to their evil fleshly propensities as other men. Though they were “sons of God,” had received and obeyed the truth like Enoch and Abel, yet like other weak men in other ages of the world they departed from the path of rectitude, like some in the apostle John’s day, (see Revelation 2:6, and verse 15,) who adopted the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, (history of those times and events say this doctrine was a community of wives,) which God still hated as before the flood. Those “sons of God” were men as were Brigham Young and those associated with him. Once in the church of God, adopted sons of God, but like those referred to in the text above, they fell by the same device, going into polygamy, taking wives such as they chose, contrary to the law of God and of our land.

This sin, so far as the records show, had its beginnings, in each dispensation of grace, among the children—sons—of God: But those wicked, apostate sons of God suffered the vengeance of his wrath, being drowned in the flood, while Noah and his sons the monogamists were saved, and were declared to be “perfect in their generation,” (Genesis 6:9,) and like Enoch “walked with God,” and was a “just man,” and was “a preacher of righteousness,” and by his righteousness and holy life and teaching, “condemned the world [including the polygamists of that age—C. S.] and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith” (Hebrews 11:7). At a later time the sons of God, including David and Solomon, dipped into this polygamous abomination, and incurred the disfavor of God, and he said, of this grosser crime: “Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord.”—Jacob, chapter 2. And again: “Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer this people to do like unto them of old.” That which is an abomination to an infinitely just, and truthful, and unchangeable God, is an abomination eternally, for truth and justice are based on principles, and principles are, in their nature, eternal.

We know of no enactment contained in the law given through Moses to Israel, providing for an institution of polygamy. Nowhere does any enactment of that law—no statute—authorize it, any more than it does divorce. No man is in any way authorized or commanded by that law to enter into this condition. It would have been a strange way for an almighty, an immutable, an infinitely truthful and just God to have done, to have given a law to Israel, permitting the practice of polygamy, even in exceptional cases, and then to denounce it as being “abominable” in his sight, in David and Solomon! Yet this is the inconsistent and crooked thing God did, if Brigham Young and others in Utah tell the truth. But it was evidently because that law did not authorize polygamy, that the later prophet in Israel reproved Israel for practicing this evil in violation of their law in later times. Hear him: “Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them.”—Malachi 3:7. The marriage institution as originally ordained contained one of the “ordinances” that Israel had departed from, and hence, reproving the people for their grievous sins, he says:
