The hand of the Lord is upon us; no time for resting upon our oars now. "Awake, Saints, awake; no time now for reposing." The Son of God is coming; the signs are on every hand; the hour is at hand. Many shall stand and many shall fall; the end is nigh. Many shall run and few shall be able at the time to get in or out of a vehicle of any kind. Am glad to be able to say that so complete a change has come as to make me like my old self again. A further noticeable and very gratifying change has been an increased degree of God's Spirit, in the enjoyment of which, however, both additional responsibility and light have come.

Fearing that it might become infectious, it was thought best to write nothing. It has caused both sorrow and pain to see these sharp personalities and I believe the proper course to pursue by the Editor with all such articles is to consign to the waste-basket. One of the editors certainly struck the key-note on this, in last week's HERALD.

After a four months' tussle with rheumatism, the writer left home July 5, hardly able at the time to get in or out of a vehicle of any kind. Am glad to be able to say that so complete a change has come as to make me like my old self again. Further noticeable and very gratifying change has been an added degree of God's Spirit, in the enjoyment of which, however, both additional responsibility and light have come.

The weight of added responsibility has manifested the necessity for deeper humility and a closer walk with God. This of course means the removal of selfishness and the cultivation of greater activity in the sense or being a coworker with God in all that such term implies. Whatever my brother's fault, it neither serves to palliate nor to condone my own, hence offers no excuse to me to become careless in the discharge of duty owed to self to both God and my fellow man. All efforts to pluck notes from others' eyes while my own are filled with beans, are not only fruitless but detrimental to me or the one making such effort.

In fact, if I even dare to enter but the border-land of the Zionic controversy, it would be to suggest that what we need most of all is a self-examination with a view to self-renovation, that will culminate in a unit regeneration, that the several units may be combined into a regenerated whole, so that all the parts thus compacted and fitly joined together may grow into Zion redeemed.

Editors Herald: This writing finds us at the home of Bro. and Sr. J. J. Jensen, who are trying to emulate the Christ character, by caring for the wayfaring man, and making him comfortable.

We reached here on the 2d inst., after having spent a week at Manti (one of the strongholds of Brighamism), where we found lodging with our aged Bro. and Sr. S. P. Rasmussen, and during our stay there we occupied the street-corner and succeeded in shaking things up a little. We are now holding forth in the county court-house. Our attendance is not at all flattering, but we are in hopes of having an increase both in attendance and interest.

Our intentions are to reach St. George before returning, and of course to work the towns between here and there as much as possible, and open up some new fields as we go. It is our first visit to this part of the State. Our traveling companion (Bro. A. M. Chase) was here once before, about three years since, to act as moderator in a public discussion. (Brn. Hansen and Swenson take note.)

Yesterday we attended the tabernacle service, and immediately after they closed we held an open-air service where Bro. Chase spoke to them on the Inspired Translation of the Bible, and it seemed to open the eyes of some of the young men who listened.
AYRSHIRE, IOWA, October 15, 1906.

Editors Herald: Leaving home on the 20th ult. for the purpose of ministerial work, I called at Cherokee, Iowa, and preached a few discourses, and did some patriarchal work, finding the Saints lively and spiritual, and their watchman looking carefully to the interests of the work, doing as well as circumstances will permit. Bro. A. R. Crippen presides. Sunday afternoon of the 30th ult. the Saints met at the house of Bro. N. Hayes and held a very testimony-meeting, in which it was manifest that the young could pray and bear testimony of the goodness of God and to the truth of his work. The good Spirit was present, and the Saints rejoiced. Bro. N. V. Sheldon and family were among the number, looking much improved and they seem to be much concerned about ministerial work. The kindness of these Saints will long be remembered.

While in that vicinity I was out six miles north of Cherokee at the home of Bro. and Sr. William Leonard and held four services in their schoolhouse, where the attendance was small but the attention good. I also gave blessings to their daughter and youngest son, Floyd, and felt much blessed in the work.

For eleven days I made my home with Bro. James O. Sheldon and family, near Melvin, Oseola County. Through the influence of Bro. and Sr. Sheldon, I was permitted to occupy in the Hardling Methodist Episcopal church, which is located five miles northwest of Melvin. Elder S. L. Eddy, who resides at Ashton, Iowa, and has a class at this point as a part of his charge, treated me very kindly the Sunday afternoon of the 7th inst., and gave out an appointment for me that evening. The Hardlings are members of his flock and they attended every service, he doing the junior work, and his wife taking part in leading the singing. Miss Maud Foster, who teaches school near by the church, presided at the organ for us and was an attentive listener.

It is a busy time with farmers in this locality, and the attendance at services was small; but they gave the best of attention. This is really a new opening, and we feel that some good was done. The writer presented what we call the first principles, knowing that it is the best spiritual food for those not members of the church. Sunday, the 14th inst., Bro. James O. Sheldon and family drove his team and buggy a distance of ten and a half miles to accommodate the writer, and have a visit with his brother Joseph and family. When within a mile and a quarter of our destination we stopped at what is known as Mr. Sauer's church and found the Sunday-school in session, with Bro. Joseph O. Sheldon installed as superintendent, and using his influence for the truth and the good of the people. At the close of the Sunday-school Mr. William Sauer invited me to take charge of the service. Bro. Sheldon kindly opened and closed the service, and I preached a discourse from John 10:27, using Mr. Sauer's Bible in doing so. I was much blessed in speaking by the help of the Spirit. I have occupied in this church before.

Mr. W. D. Sauer is a missionary of what is known as the "Assembly of God." He is a wealthy man, but does not believe in wearing gold or costly clothes. He manifests a spirit of kindness, for he is willing to hear, and likes to be heard. He is very zealous in his religious belief and work, and has a model family. The time not being opportune for continuing services at the last-mentioned point, Bro. Joseph O. Sheldon brought me on my way with team and buggy, a distance of four miles, in time to catch the six o'clock train in the morning at Hartley. Bro. Joseph Sheldon and wife, as well as those mentioned above, have the writer's thanks for their kindness. I arrived here about fifteen minutes of ten o'clock in the forenoon and found an open door and a hearty welcome at the home of Bro. and Sr. A. J. Chapin, though they are the only members of our church in this very prejudiced town. Aside from Bro. Edmond Ford and wife, now of Independence Stake, they are about the first-fruits of the restored gospel in these parts. Elder W. W. Whiting was largely instrumental in the hands of God of bringing this worthy brother and sister into the church. On a very cold, blustering April day in 1887, I led Bro. A. J. Chapin into the water of the outlet of Silver Lake and buried him with Christ in baptism.

The work seems to be onward and the good Spirit present where I have labored of late.

Yours in gospel bonds,
CHARLES F. BUTTERWORTH.

I am glad to think
I am not bound to make the world go round;
But only to discover and to do,
With cheerful heart, the work that God appoints.

In order to develop and open up the new coal-mining interests near Independence and also make necessary preparations for homes for mine-workers, it is necessary that sufficient capital be secured within a short time. The amount sought for is very small compared with the capital of other coal-mining interests and, for various reasons, the directors of this company desire to keep the working and controlling power with the church members, if possible.

The opening up of a new coal field at the edge of a densely populated community of 40,000 population is an admirable consideration, as the product is part of the necessities of life, with freight rates practically cut off, making this enterprise an exceptional one.

Five hundred and ninety-nine acres have been leased for fifty years and an additional fifty acres purchased, making in all seven hundred and twenty-nine acres of coal land in one body, on the line of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, two miles east of Independence.

The company already has coal-mines at Napoleon, Missouri, in operation and a successful and prosperous railroad business, making the company a bonâ fide, paying investment.

Money seeking investment can find no better place, and will bring the best kind of satisfaction, as it will bring good returns to the investors and results that are much sought for, also benefiting the unemployed, small dealers, poor church members by placing them in a position to help themselves.

The 545 acres are intended for homes for mine-workers, to be sold at a reasonable price, and we solicit the co-operation of the church to purchase stock according to their ability.

The promoters of this company are not working for any selfish interests. There is no watered nor fictitious valued stock. If the company is incorporated under the laws of the state of Missouri.

Capital stock, $300,000; shares, $100 each; amount paid up $40,000. The capital stock must be increased to the amount needed. Parties sending money can do so by bank draft. Further particulars apply to:

EDITORIAL:

HOW SAINTS SHOULD LIVE.

Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work, to speak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, but gentle, showing all meekness unto all men. For we ourselves were sometime foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another. But after that the kindness and love of God our Savior toward man appeared. . . . This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men. But avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law; for they are unprofitable and vain.—Titus 3:1-10.

For the first time the Associate Editor takes his pen in hand (mere figure of speech, we use a typewriter) to address an editorial to the Herald readers.

As we do so, no subject occurs to our mind as being more important than the one named above. For over three years we have attempted to explain that subject to one congregation. It is probably one of the most insistent questions that a Latter Day Saint may consider. Other questions he has settled in his own mind. The divinity of Christ and the sacrifice of Christ are settled questions to the one already engaged in the great warfare, and there remains simply the one great question, How shall he live that may make the greatest returns for that sacrifice and most completely enjoy the salvation of God's children?

It is important also that we should know how not to live. The finest craft may soon be wrecked if the navigator does not know of the rocks and shoals in the stream which he navigates, or knowing will not beware. In the scriptural quotation at the head of this editorial we find an enumeration of some of the things which we must avoid—folly, deceit, disobedience, lust, envy, and hate.

How often is it the case that folly and disobedience are the rocks on which we split. It can not be said that the average man or woman, either young or old, goes down to ruin without being warned, both by word and by the awful examples which they have seen in the lives of others. Yet we have observed it to be a fact that a man may be taken to the hospital raving with delirium tremens, and his neighbors, his brothers, his very sons, persist in the course which brought him there. A youth or maiden may fall from virtue. Their comrades see the consequences in a blighted life. They read of it in the papers. It is talked of in the community. Anxious parents advise them. Yet always a certain number of them will tread the same road to destruction.

We come now to the question of how to live. Some things in this world are useful and some are ornamental; some are neither and some are both. The religion of Saints should be both. If it makes no actual change in the life, throw it away. It is not worth while if it is not practical. While lofty ideals should actuate us in life, they should be practical as well as lofty. It is all right to talk of "hitching our wagon to a star"; but we must find a practical way of getting at the star,—and be sure that we do not select a comet.

Our religion should make the most radical change in our dispositions, our ambitions, our deeds, and our speech. Some one has said that religion is the "best armor in the world, but the worst cloak." The Pharisees thought of religion as a cloak to hide their sins; Paul thought of it as an armor with which to protect his immortal soul. He took the shield of faith and the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit,—and then fought the Devil and not his own brethren. Passing by erring, frail, human flesh and blood, over which the Master shed the pitying tear, he assailed "powers and principalities and spiritual wickedness," which his Captain and Leader had sworn to destroy.

As regards our manner of speech, how forcefully we are warned to be "gentle" and to speak "no evil." There is the greatest need that the Saints should heed that warning, "No man lives to himself alone." Every burst of ill temper, every grudge, injures others as well as ourselves.

True it is that those who are strong and spiritual may not be disturbed when they see division and lack of love in the church; but it is not that class of which we are commanded to take special thought. We are told to strengthen the weak. We are told to reach after the lost—those outside the church. Whether we speak from the pulpit or the pew or through the church papers, we should carefully avoid any word that might discourage some weak member or turn away some investigating outsider. As a branch president we would not for a moment tolerate on our stand two or more missionaries who would spend most of their time "replying" to each other; we could not afford to because of the effect upon both Saints and outsiders. Let them settle their difficulties privately and come into our branch and preach an affirmative gospel; and this they do so far as we have observed. The same thought may be carried into other fields, if you choose.

We call our church "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and we must not so comport ourselves as to justify the world in writing a question-mark after any part of that title. This paper goes out under the caption, "SAINTS' HERALD," and we do not wish to give any reader the right to place a question-mark after the word Saints'.

If a writer misquotes scripture or mistates history, a few words will correct the mistake. But (though we would never advise a sacrifice of principle or truth) if the man simply states the opinions that he has formed it is not always necessary that every one holding slightly different opinions should rise and do him battle. If one may do this, all may, and we might reach the stage where we would have one affirmative argument on January first, and three hundred and sixty-four "replies" to occupy the balance of the year,—until leap year came as a happy relief. It is not always necessary to reply and it is never necessary to reply with harsh personalities.

Over the head of at least one of the ministry, when he was ordained, the Spirit gave command that his ministry should be "a ministry of kindness." If we are ministers of Christ, how can our ministry be otherwise?

The mere fact that we teach correct doctrine will not establish our case with God or with thinking men. Both will look to see if we are actually practicing kindness and forbearance and love, for by that shall men know whose disciples we are.

Saints should not live for pleasure, though they are justified in looking for happiness, and it will be found in "being ready to every good work." Happiness is found only in the line of active duty. We are more and more of the opinion that the Latter Day Saint who lives his religion and has a fair share of the necessities of life will find it within his power to live a happier life than is lived by any millionaire in the world. What do you think of it, brethren? Would you trade your church fellowship for his wealth,—with his night-watchman, his burglar-alarm, his safety-vault, his worries, his dyspepsia, his sleepless nights, his evil conscience, and his future outlook thrown in?

The change in our speech and deeds must spring from a change in ourselves,—our disposition.

No brain can long dictate a course in which the heart is not enlisted.

The law of the land may stay the hand in mid-air and say that you must not steal your neighbor's money or his wife or his life. The law of God checks the heart in mid bound and says that you must not covet your neighbor's money or his life or his wife.

You must not think about these forbidden deeds, for thought is a seed that in time will surely germinate and break through the soil a deep-rooted deed.

Life is a sacred trust. Live it as best we may it fills one with melancholy to look back and think of the days so swiftly spent, the friends so soon parted, the homes so soon broken up. We can face the future or the present; but how hard to face the past! How infinitely harder if it has been misspent and ever the dread hand of remorse clutches the heart!

We are like some old Catholic woman who counts her beads and says her prayers. The prayers are repeated but not understood. The beads are counted but not noted. So the days slip through our hands like golden beads of an endless chain, and we hardly note them until they are quite gone and we find that the chain is not endless after all.

Let us take more earnest thought how by prayer and labor we may speed the operation of God's law that will change us from glory to glory into the likeness of our Master, who declared that "he that hath seen me has seen God." Few of us would dare to say that. Yet that is what we send ministers out for: to tell the people and show the people what God is like in thought and speech and act. That is what we maintain congregations for: that people therein may learn how to become like God. That is what the church itself is organized for: that it may be to the world the divine revelation of what God is. That is the great message of reconciliation and peace, and "blessed are the peace-makers, for they shall be called the children of God."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE STRIFE-MAKER.

Who is thy Master, O vain Contender, that leadeth thee on to the strife?
Who is thy Master—what is the power that beareth the blade of the knife?
Whose is the power that seeketh control
Now of thy body and soon of thy soul?
What is the prize that awaits at the goal, and is that the aim of thy life?
Who is thy Master, Child of the Kingdom, that causeth thee sorrow to bring?
Who is thy Master—whose is the power that giveth thy tongue its sting?
Whence is the spirit that dwellth in thine heart Causing thee mischievous thoughts to impart?
Break into fragments the love-killing dart that thou hast intended to fling!

Own him thy Master, heed thou his sayings, whose servants are noble and kind;
Own him thy Master—his be the Power that ruleth in mercy thy mind!
His be the Spirit, of truth and of love,
That draweth thee on, to the haven above:
His are wise servants and harmless as doves, who glory in Charity and peace!

"There shall be no disputations among you, as there hath hitherto been; neither shall there be disputations among you concerning the points of my doctrine, as there hath hitherto been; for verily, verily, I say unto you, He that hath the spirit of contention, is not of me, but is of the devil who is the father of contention, and he stirreth up the hearts of men to contend with anger one with another. . . . This is my doctrine, that such things should be done away."—Nephi 5:8.

FRED H. JOHNSON.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

Mr. Rodney Smith, one of the world's noted evangelists, is about to begin a campaign of some length in America. He comes backed by the great churches of both Great Britain and America, and is said to be a man of wonderful power and elegance of speech, though he is familiary called "Gypsy Smith." He was born in a tent, of Gypsy parentage, and led a roving life until about seventeen years of age, when he was coverted by Ira D. Sankey.

Commander Robert E. Peary has set his mark thirty-four miles nearer the North Pole than any known predecessor—at latitude 87 degrees 6 minutes. Explorers have gained five hundred and ten miles in three hundred and ten years at an immense cost of life and treasure.

In the days of their tribulation San Franciscans were confident that they could speedily rebuild the city, but now unforeseen difficulties and delays arise. Strangely enough the greatest difficulty is not found in inanimate nature but in human nature. At the first old standards were abandoned and every one sacrificed himself in the interests of all, but now the old spirit has returned with a rush and it is a struggle to see who can make the most out of the situation. Every landlord forces rent to the point where he bankrupts his tenants, and every laborer forces wages to the point where he drives the builder from the field.

William Allen White in Collier's Weekly defines our worst modern ailment as "clouded moral perception." The average man is honest when dealing directly man to man, yet the farmer will cheat in his road work, and the politician will graft, and the trust magnate will rob the widow, because they do not see their victims and do not really comprehend the nature of their crimes.

An echo of past times is heard in the Associated Press reports of a Ute uprising in Wyoming. A renegade band clashed with the Tenth Cavalry on Bitter Creek, October 31. The uprising was ended nearly as soon as begun.

Possibly it is significant of the times that the wealthiest bride to celebrate a honeymoon thus far in the present century is the daughter of a cannon maker—Miss Bertha Krupp.

Reverend Doctor W. W. Boyd, for thirty years pastor of the Second Baptist Church, one of the wealthiest congregations in St. Louis, announces that he has quit the ministry, declaring that all clergymen must be subservient to "the money power," or leave their churches.

"The modern fashionable city church," said Doctor Boyd, "is run by from one to six men who are the largest contributors to the funds."

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths has just concluded a tour of California and reports the branches in good condition, despite the fact that the members are badly scattered, which doubles the labors of the branch officers.

Encouraging reports from Brn. G. J. Waller and J. D. White, missionary in charge and missionary, respectively, at Honolulu, Hawaii, are received. Eleven baptized during the quarter ending October 8. Brn. Waller, in charge, writes, much encouraged by the outlook.

Thirty-seven baptisms in Bro. W. H. Kelley’s field, forty-eight in Bro. G. T. Griffiths’, one hundred and thirty-eight in Bro. F. A. Smith’s, and others in their proportion is not so bad a showing, after all.

Two of our elders who have been nearly disabled by sickness are reported as improving, viz.: Bro. F. J. Ebeling, who has been suffering with nervous trouble, and Bro. W. S. Pender, who has been afflicted with throat trouble. Bro. Pender has been laboring in Arizona, near the Mexican line, and has been improving the time in studying the Spanish language.

Brn. Chase and Vanderwood have been operating in Utah. Bro. Chase reports that he has tried the Irishman’s plan of surrounding the enemy. Spread out, Bro. Chase.

Elder W. E. Peak writes that the year has been one of the best in his experience. He has held a debate with Reverend W. L. Smith of the Baptist Church, and says that since the debate he feels the old spirit of contest returning, but will try to do nothing rash.

Address Elder J. C. Clapp, box 90, Tulare, California, and Elder J. M. Baker at 1115 West Sixth Street, Sioux City, Iowa.

In the Deseret News for October 18, 1906, there appears a letter written from Nauvoo, Illinois, signed by P. P. Christenson and J. W. Alleman, in which they say among other things: "One thing worthy of notice: the integrity and loyalty of the leaders of the church who proved true to their trust after the Prophet Joseph was killed have left monuments of inspiration to the rising generation in the buildings which they once occupied. They stand out boldly and denote the strength of character of their former occupants. While on the other hand they who proved traitors to the cause of God have left no monuments that stand to-day. If they left any they have crumbled to dust and blown to the four winds."

Our General Church Historian remarks that another thing "worthy of note," in connection with the above, is that Sidney Rigdon and William Marks have long been regarded by the Utah church as traitors, and their homes stand in a state of good preservation. These Nauvoo correspondents should look before they leap.

Bro. Richard Bullard, who has for a time been visiting and preaching to a lot of his friends and relatives in England, his native country, was to sail for his home at Boston Massachusetts, October 12, on the steamer Arabic. Weather had turned cool and foggy, making out-of-door services impracticable. Conditions were against any further stay and by the advice of Bro. Rushton he comes home.

As will be noted by the Des Moines items, Bro. Mintun has moved his family to Des Moines. His new address is 1211 East Twelfth Street.

The Deseret News for October 11, 1906, favorably notes the reply of Elder Hammond of the Mormon church to Elder Knisley of the Latter Day Saint Church, as printed in the Winnipeg, Canada, Tribune. The character of the reply is indicated by the statement of the News that they "do not care" to reprint it, for fear they will "be accused of setting forth an argument in defense of plural marriage." Evidently some folks rush in where others fear to tread, yet fain would "if" —.

It is reported that more than one hundred Jewish families move into Jerusalem every week. Though most of them are very poor, yet they find means to make a scantly living.—Exchange.

News From Branches

DES MOINES, IOWA.

One item we consider of interest, to us at least, is the removal of our city missionary’s family to the city—he having recently sold his property at Woodbine and located here. We rejoice with Bro. Mintun in that he can be with his loved ones and, at the same time, carry on his missionary efforts, and that to even better advantage. His daughter Ruth is teaching at Runnells, Iowa; his daughter Alice and son Guy are attending Highland Park College in this city—Alice taking the teacher’s primary course, and Guy commercial and shorthand.

Bro. George Emslie has been in the Mercy Hospital for three weeks, having undergone an operation. He is doing nicely.

Bro. Thomas Robinson’s daughter Ada received an accident from the interurban street-car and is very low.

Bro. Jasper Parmenter is also on the sick list.

Bro. Fred Blair was with us Sunday, October 21, and gave us a fine sermon in the evening.

The branch has purchased a mimeograph for the officers, thinking they could keep more closely in touch with the isolated members by writing them encouraging and helpful letters. Several replies expressive of appreciation and joy for being thus remembered have been received to a letter sent out by our branch priest, among them one from Sr. Mary Coil, of Perry, Iowa, stating a Sunday-school has been organized there under the auspices of the Perry Saints, who, since the branch there was disorganized, are members of the Des Moines branch.

Sr. Sarah Weir, with her daughter Hazel and son Orrie, have moved from the city and located on a farm near Afton, Iowa. We shall miss them very much, but wish them abundant success.

Bro. Charles Lilly was married to Miss Myrtle L. Shockly last evening by Bro. J. F. Mintun. We wish them much joy and a happy life.

LAMONI, IOWA.

The Religio society gave a reception in the church basement to the students and faculty of the high school and college Thursday evening. After a special program a novel contest on Book of Mormon people and countries was engaged in, which caused many of us to both realize and resolve—realize how little we knew of the book and resolve to know more.

The lecture given by President MacLean of the Iowa State University was well attended and very much appreciated by those who heard.

The college dormitory was opened on Saturday. The building is located about two hundred feet southeast of the college and will have accommodations for about thirty-six students, when completed, together with the rooms in the college-building. The dining-hall is in charge of Sr. Betty Smith, late of California, and is located in the basement of the college-building.

At the last business-meeting of the branch the improvement committee was instructed to recarpet, paper, and varnish the upper auditorium of the church. New steps in front of the church, and a new cement walk in front and on the south have recently been put in.

Our song-service at the church is taking on new life. The choir and Graceland Choral Society have united their efforts to improve this part of the service. Miss Hofer of the college faculty, who is in charge, is doing good, faithful work. The choir attended the stake conference at Pleasanton on the 28th ult.

College registration at present is one hundred and ten. This includes students from the following States: Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Utah, Arizona, Michigan, Illinois, Massachusetts, and Minnesota.

Work is being pushed on the buildings at Liberty Home (former residence of President Joseph Smith) to have everything in readiness for occupancy before the cold weather sets in. The buildings are to be heated by steam. The Ideal System is being put in, being one of the best obtainable and will make comfortable quarters for the aged Saints.

Brn. Herman Willert and family, of Rockwell City, Iowa, and Benjamin Chapman and family, of Persia, Iowa, have concluded to make their homes at Lamoni. The excellent high school, college, and church advantages are causing many to look toward headquarters for homes.

Regular stake high council meeting next Saturday afternoon and evening.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

We know there are many Saints who long to come to this central gathering-place—to Zion. Some may have preconceived ideas of Independence, but as a reality we introduce it as a very material city. Its people work like others. The houses are just like all other houses. All kinds of business, from a blacksmith shop to a bank. The streets are not yet golden like those of the New Jerusalem; indeed in some places there are no sidewalks. And the people?—there are ten thousand of them, and of that number there are sixteen hundred Latter Day Saints who are trying to be good, moral, religious people; trying to serve God.

Our General Conference visitors will doubtless remember the “dining-hall.” It is now used for the young peoples’ Wednesday evening prayer-service, and for entertainments by the auxiliary societies. Our Bro. J. D. White is in the islands of the Pacific (Continued on page 1070.)

SUGGESTION FOR CHART OR HANDBILLS.—No. 1.

Jeremiah 1:18, 19: "I have made thee this day a defensed city, and an iron pillar, and brazen walls against the whole land. . . . They shall fight against thee; but they shall not prevail against thee; for I am with thee, saith the Lord, to deliver thee."

With apologies to "Ram's Horn."

STREET-WORK IN A LARGE CITY.

Street-work has been in bad repute, and those engaged therein looked upon as not being the best representatives of moral philosophy. I have thought it was not the proper procedure for gospel workers, but time has wrought a change in my personal conviction. The Lord said that he would send out "fishermen and hunters," and that they (those sent) should go into the "highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage" that it might be supplied with "guests." This being true, I have concluded that the street-work was authorized; although it was against my peculiar make-up to become a curb-stone preacher, yet I had sung that beautiful hymn, "Any where with Jesus I'll go."

The General Conference having assigned me to operate in Kansas City, Missouri, as the objective point, the question arose as to what would be the best method of reaching the people. A tent had been operated for several years in and around the suburbs, with considerable expense and not very satisfactory results to those who helped to operate, and after consultation I concluded, though I did not fancy the idea of street-work, it would be less expensive and probably would do as much good in sowing the gospel seed as if we continued as hitherto.

After some preliminaries, to learn my metes and bounds, in the midst of branches and branch authorities, an agreement was reached between the presidency of the stake and missionaries in charge, and I launched out in the new enterprise or method of procedure, with Bro. H. J. Davison of the Eastern Mission force, Patriarch Ammon White, C. E. Guinand, F. C. Warnky, W. H. Hatty, B. J. Scott, of the stake bishopric, Fred Koehler, and J. A. Dowker as my assistants.

There being two points where the people are in the habit of gathering to hear speaking, I placed one of these brethren in charge, and divided up the workers so that there would be no need of one having to speak over twenty minutes as a rule. There being nine of us, we divided into threes, and commenced the work in dead earnest. Those who could play an instrument assisted the Parsons in the suburbs. In the residence portion, after trying several places we were able to raise a fair audience at two different points, which we kept up all summer, as well as one in which the Saints were largely the audience, yet seemingly very appreciative.

The brethren at the Market and the Eleventh Street appointments met some quite stiff opposition which their vocal organs were not sufficient to compete with, and often had to wait till these parties had concluded their harangue, before they could tell the beautiful gospel story. And often they would have to listen to the most contemptible epithets that could be assigned to mortal man. It seemed hard to bear sometimes, and some of the brethren thought I was wrong and committing an error in not permitting them to return the compliment. But time and experience demonstrated to them that I was right, when strangers congratulated them for manifesting the Christ spirit. It is evident that the late revisers of the Holy Bible failed to give us correct translation of the word of the Lord, wherein he said, Do unto thy neighbor as thou would have thy neighbor do to thee. That is, if we are to be known by our fruits, as Bible practitioners! The only proper translation the thee. That is, if we are to be known by our fruits, as Bible practitioners! The only proper translation according to modern practice is “Do thy neighbor before he has a chance to do you,” and this these would-be gospelers did their best to accomplish.

Music, though it may be poor, is an incentive for people to gather to see what is going on. This I discovered though an amateur on the clarionet.

Some of the brethren that were not on my list as helpers rendered assistance in speaking and singing, as well as some of the sisters, which is helpful in interesting an audience on the street-corner. It is very evident in my experience, that some good singing and instrumental music is essential to draw an audience and make street-work effectual.

A ready speaker, who has his subject in hand so that he does not have to stop and read, is the only kind that can make street-work effectual, as people as a rule will pass on when you stop to read from the scriptures. There may be exceptions to this, but they are few in my observation and experience. Sometimes permission to ask questions will have the desired effect to create an interest, but one that undertakes this method must have a good supply of grace and patience on hand, as he will be tried to the quick as a general rule.

I am inclined to think that our dear German brother was about right when he wrote that article on the use of the auto as a gospel machine. Take one that can be worked over and arranged so that it can be seated around the outer edge and carry about four good singers, a cornetist, two clarionetists, and an organist, with their instruments, would be an excellent investment for city work as could be made, and this exhibition of talent would attract the attention of the thinking people. Two or three points could be made each evening, and save street-car fare, and you would be able to go when you want and where you want, which would save time, as well as money. It will be safe to say that more people heard the gospel message in Kansas City during the summer of 1906 than have ever had the opportunity before. Three have been baptized already as the result of this campaign, and several others are near the kingdom. Besides this, it gives the local brethren an opportunity to do something in these cities that otherwise they would not be able to reach on account of their employment.

To win souls to Christ is a study, and we need experience, and I do not know of a better place to obtain it than in street-work. In gospel bonds I remain, in hopes of the final triumph of Zion’s cause,

A. H. Parsons.

STREET-WORK IN A SMALL TOWN.

While here, [Columbia, South Dakota.] after a severe mental struggle we finally got brave enough to go on the street and try to preach. We had a fair-sized crowd, and they were of a much better class than you usually find listening to the Salvation Army. They treated us with respect, and in no way sought to molest us (the people out here eat good eggs instead of throwing them at inoffensive citizens). We had neither music nor light, of our own, and this was a hindrance; but possibly the worst was our timidity and bashfulness. We felt like schoolboys making their first declamations; and it was not so easy to talk as in a regular place of worship.

Our little experience has taught us that the street is a good place to reach the public, and especially in a city of that size (four thousand). It is free from the rowdyism of a small town, and the surging masses of a large city. Every corner has a group standing or sitting down, spending their time in a social way.

All our elders can not make street-preaching a success any more than they can any other business. It requires a strong voice, an aggressive temperament, and a well-posted mind on the doctrine and history of the church, quick at repartee, so he can hold his own in debate; those who possess the qualifications of a good street-preacher can make it honorable and dignified in the eyes of the public, and it will be largely relieved of the odium in which it is held because of so much of the fake kind that is indulged in.

And let the writer here suggest, Is it not a mistake that is too common in our missionary work, that the novice, the inexperienced, the timid, are pushed to the front with the instruction to “open up new places,” while the experienced and well-qualified one is spending his time in branches, districts, and reunions? In war the veterans are given the post of honor and danger. They storm the trenches, and go where firmness is needed and the fight the fiercest, and the raw recruits are their supports.

Edward Rannie.

Polished stones have sometimes been made of rough ones, and we have put men in places where they have been trusted, and they have developed wonderfully. And when we talk about experience, is he is an inexperienced man, throw him into the stream, and he will get experience. I got mine hard, hard. I have learned a good deal of it by being severely rubbed. And if it is of any value at all it is of value because it has been made applicable. I would not give a cent for a man with a head full of knowledge and no ability to use it, with a heart full of impulses and no wisdom to guide him. But give the men a chance. Try them. See what there is in them. Watch over them as well as it is possible to do. But let the Spirit of the Master go with the calling, and he will qualify a good many men yet for this work.—Joseph Smith.

THE GENERAL FEATURES OF STAKE WORK.

[A paper read before the Lamoni Stake High Council at a meeting held October 15, 1906, and by vote of the council submitted to the Editors of the Herald for publication with the statement that "it was prepared by a committee appointed by the Lamoni Stake Council to write on the 'General features of stake work,' and the same having been read before the council."]

In the Rules of Order adopted by the church, it is declared that "stakes are formed under the direct command of the Lord," and that "they are for the purpose of bringing the Saints nearer together in their work and the more complete systematizing and honoring of the law of Christ in spiritual and temporal duties, than is found provided for in branch and district organizations." (Rules of Order and Debate, page 104, paragraph 108.)

So long as there are people out of Christ within the territory of a stake there will be need of missionary work, but the distinctive features of stake work is to build up the kingdom of God after the original pattern, to feed and nourish the flock of God, to teach them the law of life, to train and discipline the Saints in methods of labor in accord with the order of God, both in spiritual things and in temporal things, as distinct from the order of the world and the motives that prompt its labors.

As the world has reversed the order of God, has turned it upside down, and will make necessary, not merely a radical departure from present aims and methods but an entire reversal of procedure, a strong and abiding faith in God and the inerrancy of his law must be developed in the Saints in order to carry out the requirements of the gospel order. It must be constantly borne in mind that our work is not aiming at a reformation of the principles of action now in vogue. It is aiming at much more than that. The elders have ever claimed for this work that it was a restoration along original lines rather than a reformation of the existing order; therefore in the promotion of this work there must be inquiry made into the order of method and procedure which is destined to usher in the reign of peace and good will among men.

Whatever the new order is to be, there is one thing sure,—it must be of a practical character. Practical methods are those which secure the results aimed at. In this sense the methods of the world are not practical inasmuch as they have not produced a condition of contentment, good will, and true happiness among the people of the world; and this too after an experience of many hundreds of years. And if the centuries of the past have failed to make good the glittering promises that have been held out to humanity, can there be any hope indulged that the future will be successful where the past has failed? and failed so utterly? It is evident, then, that if peace, contentment, and good will are to be finally established among men, it must be in some other way than the way that has been in practice during the generations that have preceded us.

Perhaps at this juncture it would be profitable to get as clear an idea as may be of the differences between the order of God that promises peace, unity, harmony, and true happiness, and the order of things that has filled the world with strife and contention, with bloodshed and misery, with war and hatred, with want in the midst of plenty, with sickness and disease where health should abound, and with ignorance where there should be a fullness of light. This may not be an easy task, nevertheless it is a most necessary one, because the disease from which the world is suffering must be diagnosed before the remedy can be applied.

A proper diagnosis of the disease or sin of the world will require a brief consideration of the nature and constitution of man. Man is a compound in one of two great forces or principles, the heavenly and the earthly, the spirit and the flesh. On the part of the spirit he is allied to the heavens and is subject to good and righteous impulses that tend upward; on the part of the flesh he is allied to the earth and is prone to yield to influences of an earthly nature and that tend downward. In his natural state man is dominated and controlled very largely by the impulses and aspirations that proceed from his lower nature and produce the sin, suffering, and sorrow that prevail to such a large extent over the entire world.

The present order of things in the world being the product of man's lower nature, there must be a change in the dominant force before there can be any material or permanent improvement in the condition of mankind. The introduction of the gospel is intended to bring about such a change in the ruling power that obedience and joy and peace shall displace the present unfortunate and disastrous conditions that obtain in the earth. The Savior proposes to make the desired change by changing men, by converting them, by altering the point of view from the carnal to the spiritual, from the temporal to the eternal. The earthly part of man's nature is to be subdued and put under the guidance and control of the heavenly mind.

Man's physical nature and its needs are not to be abolished, but are to have a secondary place to the spiritual under the divine economy. Under the gospel plan the real needs of both the spirit and the body will be amply provided for, but it will be done upon a spiritual basis in such a way that men's outward life shall be a reflex of the life of the spirit. The missionary forces are sent out to induce men to enter into the life of the Spirit, and the pastoral arm of the church is to foster its development. Spiritual life, or in other words, eternal life, is the true life, the real life, as opposed to artificial or perverted life. When the real life is analyzed it is found to embrace two leading elements out of which proceed all others. These two elements are: first, love or charity; second, light or intelligence. Of the latter, faith is the first evidence, but it is a "faith that worketh by love," as the apostle puts it.

The Savior has made it plain that love is the first and great principle of his doctrine and of eternal life. He makes love to God and to one another to be the first and great commandment of the law. Paul says, "Love is the fulfilling of the law." And again, "All the law is fulfilled in this one word, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," "If ye fulfill the royal law according to the scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, ye do well," is what James says. Paul tells us, furthermore, that faith and all other principles are of no account without love. Seeing, then, that love is the leading and basic principle of the divine economy, it is absolutely necessary to give it the first place in our consideration of stake work, if stake work is to be in any just sense an expression of the divine economy. Let us do the best we can to learn what love is.

To begin with, love is a principle of sacrifice. We delight in making sacrifices for those we love. There can be no selfishness where true love exists. It is utterly opposed to the selfishness that is in the world that seeks to appropriate to itself the good of others without making amply adequate return. Love finds it more blessed to give than to receive, and it will do as much as it can for as little as it can. Its reward will be found in the pleasure derived from doing good, rather than in any material compensation that may be given for the doing of it. Love seeks to get good in order that it may do good; the world acts on the contrary principle, always seeking to do in order that it may get possession of things. And so the Lord in speaking of these things says, "Take heed, and beware of covetousness; for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."—Luke 12:17, I. T.

In this connection he speaks of a certain rich man who pulled down his barns that he might build greater and have room to store up his many goods for himself and be enabled to take his ease and eat and drink and be merry. In doing this, however, he lost his soul, and the Lord regarded him as a fool, saying also, "So shall it be with him who layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God." We are told in the revelations of the latter days that eternal life constitutes the true riches, "He that hath eternal life is rich."—Doctrine and Covenants 6:3. As love is the the chief element of eternal life, it is therefore the main factor in the true riches.

Our experience furnishes abundant proof that this is so. What a miserable, wretched being the 'loveless, selfish man is! He is the most miserable of humankind. His selfishness brings out and puts in exercise the worst traits of his character, causing him to be shunned and despised by all good men and women. He is completely shut out from that divine human fellowship which makes of earth a heaven. He makes his hell right here.

But before we proceed to the practical application of these things, we must consider another leading aspect of love or charity. It is the basis of real unity. It is what draws men and women together in right relations in the home and in society, in religion and in business. It is the true foundation of the state as well as of the church and of the home. Love unites men; selfishness divides them. In the love that produces unity there is great strength, strength to do good and to resist evil. Great power may be exercised by those who are thus bound together.

The apostle says that charity is the bond of perfectness. Love is the bond that makes for perfection; it is the tie that unites those who are working to bring about perfect conditions. It produces in those engaged in gospel work a desire to be together. There is a drawing power in it, and hence the gathering becomes naturally a feature of the gospel economy. For that reason stakes are a necessary provision for the carrying out of that economy, an economy in which love, and not self-interest, shall be the ruling principle. In view of the very work we now have in hand the Spirit of the Lord many centuries ago said through the sweet singer of Israel, "Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." The sacrifice referred to is evidently the sacrifice prompted by gospel love, love to God and men, and only those who are moved by gospel love are prepared to come together and live together in peace and harmony and the union required by the celestial law.

In the late communication from the Lord to the church, attention is called to the Fishing River revelation as the rule to govern in the gathering and, as a consequence, in the building up of stakes. Especial stress is laid upon removing selfishness from the hearts of the Saints and especially from those upon whom rests the burden of the church. The spirit of speculation and of greed for gain is denounced as unseemly in the Saints and officers of the church. These things are unseemly because they are contrary to the spirit of the gospel, and those who indulge in them can not enjoy the Spirit of the Lord with its gifts and blessings. The spirit of the late revelation upon this subject is in strict harmony with the Book of Mormon where it says, "But the laborer in Zion, shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money, they shall perish."—2 Nephi 11:15 (61). The context shows that charity will not suffer the laborer in Zion to perish.

And right here we are confronted with one of the most important features of stake work; namely, necessity of educating the Saints to the practice of that mode of life which is in accord with the divine mind; for that is what eternal life really is. It is a life of sacrifice; not merely an occasional sacrifice, but it is to be continual as prefigured by the continual daily sacrifice under the Mosaic order. It seems extremely unfortunate that what is known among us as the temporal law is associated in the minds of so many of the Saints with the idea of a financial scheme by which the necessary means for carrying on the church work may be secured. It is much more than that. A careful study of the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants makes it the chief element of eternal life; not merely an occasional sacrifice, it is a scheme of real life for every day continually, by which we obtain and retain a remission of our sins, as the Book of Mormon plainly shows. It indicates the order and mode of life into which we are introduced by the initiatory ordinances of the gospel. It is the way into which baptism is the opening door. It is the way by which we manifest our love to God and man.

It is for that reason that such a large proportion of the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants are devoted to the exposition of that subject. What we call the temporal law is really the celestial law, the law of celestial or eternal life. We have already noted that love is the chief element of eternal life, and for that reason it is the basis of celestial life also. Hence the Lord introduces what we call the temporal law, but should call the celestial law, with these significant words, "If thou lovest me," clearly indicating that its observance was intended to be a proof of love to God as well as love to men. Now let us carefully notice the connection in which these words stand: "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, . . . and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me." This is evidently the law referred to in the Ishshing River revelation as the law of the celestial kingdom which required them to be united and to impart of their substance to the poor and afflicted among them. Let it be remembered that stakes are stakes of Zion and can be built up only on the same principles by which Zion is built up, and as Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, the stakes must be built up by the same principles. According to this revelation God's people will be chastened and suffer until they learn obedience to the celestial law. It is by the keeping of this law that sin and sickness and death will be finally abolished upon this earth. When this law is fully observed the scourges of various kinds that now afflict the earth and its inhabitants will be overcome and done away, the Lord will rebuke the devourer for the sake of his saints, and the fruit of the ground shall not be destroyed thereby, and the vine shall not cast its fruits before the time in the field, as is stated in Malachi 3—this shall be the result when the people shall learn to keep the covenant made by sacrifice, the sacrifice prompted by love.

Speaking of Zion, we are told in Genesis 7:23, of the Inspired Translation, that "the Lord called his people, Zion; because they were of one heart and mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them." This was the effect of keeping the celestial law, and as the celestial law is not kept now it follows as a consequence that there are many poor among us. We are not of one heart and one mind; it can hardly be said that we dwell in righteousness, and therefore we have rather a poor claim on the name, Zion.

One of the chief features of stake work, now, is to educate the Saints in the theory and practice of the divine economy. One of the first things to be aimed at is to eliminate selfishness from the hearts of the Saints as suggested in the late revelation. Selfishness may be defined as the disposition to seek one's own advantage at the expense of the common good. It aims at the benefit of the individual as against the well-being of the general body. The purpose of gospel work is to reverse this way of doing. Therefore it will be necessary to set on foot such measures as will give the individual members practice in the exercise of unselfishness, of benevolence and good will toward all concerned. The elders have some practice of this kind in the sacrifice made in leaving their homes and families for the purpose of engaging in the preaching of the gospel, and the members have likewise some degree of practice in the development of that quality when they give of their means to support the elders' families and to help the poor and needy; but it is in the transacting of business that the greatest opportunity is presented for the practice of self-abnegation, and that is where the most of people fail most grievously in observing the golden rule to do unto others as one would have others do unto himself.

It is here, therefore, that the attention should be concentrated for the time being on the part of those who would be educators along gospel lines. A method of doing business and work should be sought for that, instead of fostering and giving free rein to the selfish instincts, should encourage and develop man's higher nature and its virtues. Such a method as would given him continual practice in the exercise of the principle of loving his neighbor as himself, which is the leading principle of the celestial law inasmuch as we can manifest our love to God only by being constantly engaged in labor tending directly to the general welfare.

The reference to speculation in the late revelation indicates that it does not come within the scope of those occupations which promote the general welfare. If the spirit of speculation and the exhibition of greed for gain is unseemly in the Saints, it is very necessary that those who occupy positions as officers and teachers in the stake should seriously address themselves to the task of evolving such a method of doing business as shall remove from before the Saints the constant temptation to speculate and to exhibit greed for gain, and thus assist in answering the prayer, “suffer us not to be led into temptation.” It is an exceedingly nice and delicate thing to draw the dividing-line between speculation and legitimate business, as business is now conducted in the world. If the principle of working for gain is admitted at all, where shall we place the bound and say, “Thus far shalt thou go and no farther”? Inasmuch as combinations for gain are denounced in the Book of Mormon, the query naturally arises, If a combination for gain is harmful, how can the effort of a single individual for gain be harmless?

What is the meaning of the word “gain” as used in the Book of Mormon, is another question suggested by this discussion, and the answering of such questions will give ample occupation to the stake council for some time to come. It may possibly be that the idea of “gain,” in the sense in which the word is used in the connection referred to, is not to be entertained under the conditions requisite for the carrying out of the celestial law. But those are the conditions that must obtain in a stake if the Saints are to escape the condemnation meted out in the Fishing River revelation. In that revelation the Saints are condemned for not having observed the principles of the celestial law, and they are informed that such failure had brought upon them the severe afflictions they suffered.

The apostle Paul adimadverts upon some in his day who supposed that gain was godliness, and he advises Timothy to withdraw himself from such, following up with the advice, “And having food and raiment, let us be therewith content.” When one thoughtfully considers the conditions that would obtain under the keeping of the celestial law, is there anything more required than food and raiment and shelter? And if a person would be content with that as Paul suggests, would he not forego and avoid a great deal of worry and care to which people are now subject? But it is not enough to dream and talk about such things. If they are within the bounds of possibility, active measures should be taken looking towards their realization. And that they are possible of accomplishment is indicated by the fact that they are enjoined in the scriptures.

They are possible only for converted people, for men of faith; and for that reason it is said we are saved by faith, saved from the afflictions and tribulations suffered in the world by reason of failure to live according to the requirements of the celestial law. There should be an earnest study of what the celestial law really demands. Section 102 indicates for one thing that the Saints must be united, that they must be one, of one heart and one mind. A greater increase of love will do that for them. For another thing it shows that they must impart of their substance to the poor and afflicted among them. This, also, love, a greater degree of love, will enable them to do. And we are told by excellent authority that “the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us.” The Spirit is given by obedience and the prayer of faith. We must live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. The school of the prophets is a necessity that soon will be forced upon us, for we can not look for a much greater endowment of the Spirit until that is established and the standing officers of the church are more fully taught their several duties. The teachings in that school will tend to promote unity of thought and sentiment. One of the First Presidency at the late General Conference suggested that circumstances might soon make it necessary to get the elders together for that purpose.

The elders must cultivate a teachable disposition, if they are to be fitted for admittance into such an assembly. There will be no place for wrangling or contention, or the seeking to get one’s personal ideas and notions adopted without regard to the dictates of light and truth. Hence there should be now an earnest effort among the elders to cultivate and foster each in himself that candor, simplicity, and docility which will preclude all liability to contentious disputes upon matters of doctrine and procedure. There must be a disposition to accord to all others all the rights and privileges that one desires for himself. The strictest order and decorum must be maintained, or else the light and intelligence of the Spirit of truth will not be enjoyed.

There would be more light in our assemblies even now, if there were a greater degree of solemnity and decorum observed by the Saints and elders in branch and conference meetings. If the spirit of Doctrine and Covenants 85: 18-21, 36-38, as also that portion referring to the school of the prophets, were more fully observed, there would be an advancement in wisdom and understanding such as we have no idea of now. If this were done, our whole bodies would be full of light, glory would be added to the kingdom which we have received, we would be endowed with power from on high, our bodies and our minds would be invigorated, we would be clothed with the bonds of charity as with a mantle, peace and prosperity would attend us in all our affairs, and the work of the Lord would advance amazingly.

CHRIST'S DEATH, RESURRECTION, AND VISITATIONS AFTER HIS RESURRECTION.

HARMONY BETWEEN THE BIBLE AND THE BOOK OF MORMON.

(Sermon by W. A. Sinclair, Somerville, Massachusetts.)

We find that a great many people, Saints as well as those outside the church, when reading the Book of Mormon in relation to Christ's visit to this continent get an erroneous idea and become mystified as to the correctness of the statement made by Mormon in relation to the same.

It is also a fact people do not search sufficiently for the correct solution of problems when they arise, but allow the particular inherited tendency of borrowing from their neighbors' knowledge to suffice for them, and in this way they continue to promulgate their errors, making themselves unreliable as regards the true facts of the matter.

Truly it has been said, Man is only about one third original, two thirds being borrowed from his environment. We are all possessed with this faulty idiosyncrasy, which greatly hampers our development, and lessens our capabilities as investigators.

Many persons in reading the account of Christ's visit to this continent, and comparing it with his visitations to the other continent after his crucifixion, think they see an incongruity, and hence sufficient reason to reject the Book of Mormon, because it must be incorrect and not the Bible account that is wrong.

Hasty conclusions have caused untold suffering from the beginning, and I suppose they will continue to do so to the end. Wise men judge by facts; foolish men have no judgment, and are carried about by every mind.

A comparison of the accounts relative to the subject before us will demonstrate the fact that, while a hasty, unmeditative perusal might seem inconsistent to the reader, yet with careful reading, and proper investigation, harmony exists between the two records.

We will be forced to read considerable from the two records in order to get this subject fully before us.

In the first place, we must find out what is written concerning the death of Jesus. In Matthew 20: 18, 19, Jesus speaking, we read:

Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify him: and the third day he shall rise again.

Mark 9: 31:

For he taught his disciples, and said unto them, The Son of man is delivered into the hands of men, and they shall kill him; and after that he is killed, he shall rise the third day.

Mark 10: 34, Jesus speaking:

And they shall mock him, and shall scourge him, and shall spit upon him, and shall kill him; and the third day he shall rise again.

Luke 18: 33, Jesus speaking:

And they shall scourge him, and put him to death, and the third day he shall rise again.

Luke 24: 6, 7, two angels speaking:

He is not here, but is risen; remember how he spake unto you when he was yet in Galilee, saying. The Son of man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again.

You will notice that all these witnesses agree that Jesus stated he should be put to death, and that he should rise again the third day; not that he should be in the grave three days, but that he should rise the third day after suffering death. His enemies also remembered this remark of his, and asked that a watch should be placed over the sepulcher until after the third day. (See Matthew 27: 53, 64.)

The crucifixion of Christ occurred sometime during the afternoon of Friday; but it was during the hours that were light, or daytime, and therefore could be called the first day. The next day after the crucifixion was the Sabbath (Saturday). During all this day his body was in the tomb, and on the first day of the week (Sunday), in the early morning he rose from the dead, it being the third day.

To prove that it was Friday afternoon, we cite the following:

John 19: 31:

The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the sabbath day, (for that sabbath day was an high day), besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away.

Luke 23: 54:

And that day was the preparation and the sabbath drew on.

Mark 15: 42:

And now when the even was come, because it was the preparation, that is, the day before the sabbath.

Again, we find from history that the following days were appointed for worship: Sunday by the Christians, Monday by the Grecians, Tuesday by the Persians, Wednesday by the Assyrians, Thursday by the Egyptians, Friday by the Turks, and Saturday by the Jews.

We think it has been conclusively proved that Jesus was crucified on Friday, during the afternoon, and that it was counted as one of the three days before he should rise again.

Turning now to the Book of Mormon, large edition, book of Helaman, page 368, chapter 5, verse 45, Samuel the Lamanite being the speaker, we read:

But behold, as I said unto you concerning another sign, a sign of his death, behold in that day that he shall suffer death, the sun shall be darkened and refuse to give his light unto you; and also the moon, and the stars; and there shall be no light upon the face of this land, even from the time that he shall suffer death, for the space of three days, to the time that he shall rise again from the dead.

This particularly applies to this American continent, and has nothing to do with the other portions of the globe. Samuel, the Lamanite, gave this prophecy from the walls of the city of Zarahemla, after he had been thrust out of the city, and thirty-nine years previous to its fulfillment.

Notice that the darkness was to remain on this land for the space of three days. (See Helaman 5:48.)

Jerusalem is situated on a portion of the globe so far remote from the inheritance of the Nephites that day in Jerusalem would be night in Zarahemla; and the late afternoon in Jerusalem would be the early morning hours in Zarahemla. Remembering this phase of the subject, we examine further into the account. We have already shown that Christ was crucified sometime during the afternoon of Friday; and we find in Mark 15:33-37, Matthew 27:46, Luke 23:44, that it was towards evening when he cried with a loud voice, and gave up the ghost (the ninth hour).

The evening or late afternoon in Jerusalem would be the early morning hours in Zarahemla; therefore the day of the crucifixion in the early morning hours it would be light at Zarahemla.

Referring to book of Nephi 4:4, 8, we read:

And it came to pass in the thirty and fourth year, in the first month, in the fourth day of the month, there arose a great storm, such an one as never had been known in all the land; and there was a great and terrible tempest; and there was terrible thunder, insomuch that it did shake the whole earth as if it were about to divide asunder; and there were exceeding sharp lightnings, such as never had been known in all the land. . . . And it came to pass that when the thunderings, and the lightnings, and the storm, and the tempest, and the quakings of the earth, the sea covered others, and the mountains covered others; and thus the cities were destroyed by fire, some sunk into the earth, the sea covered others, and the mountains covered others; and thus in many ways the cities and the inhabitants were destroyed.

The early hours of Zarahemla corresponding to the late afternoon of Jerusalem, we find that many of the things that happened on this continent were simultaneously enacted on the other.

Matthew 27:51:

And, behold, the vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent.

Mark 15:38:

And the vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom.

Luke 23:45:

And the sun was darkened and the vail of the temple was rent in the midst.

We see by these citations that the earth did quake and the rocks rent, and darkness to a certain degree overspread the land of Jerusalem; but not to the extent that it did on this continent.

After Jesus was crucified, Joseph took his body, wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, and put it in his own new tomb, where it remained until early the first day of the week; but we are given to understand that his Spirit was busy during this time.

Luke 23:43 (to the thief's question):

And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise.

This is at least one place he stated definitely that he would be on that day.

1 Peter 3:18-20:

For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened [made alive] by the Spirit; by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water.

He states here that it was by this Spirit he went and preached to the spirits in prison; whether it was during these three days, or a portion of them, or later after his resurrection, we can not positively determine.

Book of Mormon, book of Nephi 4:18, 24 (during some portion of the three days):

And it came to pass that there was a voice heard among all the inhabitants of the earth upon all the face of this land, crying, Wo, wo, wo, unto this people; wo unto the inhabitants of the whole earth, except they shall repent. . . . Behold I am Jesus Christ the Son of God.

We know not whether this happened during the time Christ's body was in the tomb, or during the last night of darkness on this continent. It is not definitely stated; but it was during the three days and nights of darkness that did occur on this land. By comparison we find that during the last two nights and one day of darkness that occurred here, Christ had already risen from the tomb.

Christ was crucified Friday afternoon at Jerusalem, early hours of morning at Zarahemla; and after the storm ceased it became dark. Friday night at Jerusalem being the first dark day at Zarahemla; Saturday at Jerusalem, first night at Zarahemla; Saturday night at Jerusalem, second dark day at Zarahemla; Sunday at Jerusalem, when Jesus rose, second night at Zarahemla; Sunday night at Jerusalem, third and last dark day at Zarahemla.

Christ had already risen. It was night at Jerusalem. He had left the room where his disciples were gathered together, and nothing would hinder his voice from being among the Nephites at this period. This was the last dark day at Zarahemla according to the prophecy; but there was still another night to follow this day, according to the natural order of things, so that Monday morning in Jerusalem would be night in Zarahemla, and Monday night in Jerusalem, would be the fourth day at Zarahemla, and we understand that this day broke clear.

So we see that there were at least one day and one night in which Jesus could visit this continent and make his voice heard, after his resurrection and visitation to his disciples in Jerusalem, before the darkness would be dispelled from off the face of the land of America.

The Bible does not state where he went Sunday night, but it gives us a very good description of how he spent his first day.

Mark 16:2, 6, 9, 12, 14:
And very early in the morning, the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulcher at the rising of the sun.... [The angel speaking:] Be not affrighted: ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified; he is risen; he is not here: behold the place where they laid him.... Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week, he appeared first to Mary Magdalene.... After that he appeared in another form unto two of them, as they walked, and went into the country. Afterward he appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen. [See also Luke 24:1-3; John 20:1:1]

We find him appearing very early Sunday morning to Mary Magdalene. (See John 20:16.) Later in the day we find him walking with two of his disciples to the village of Emmaus, and conversing with them. He entered into the house with them, and Luke 24:29 states that the day was far spent.

John 20:19:
Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and said unto them, Peace be unto you.

These verses account for a goodly portion of the day, although there is some time between his interview with Mary and his walking with the two disciples going to Emmaus. This period is probably accounted for in the seventeenth verse of chapter twenty of John, where Jesus states:

Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father; but go to my brethren and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God.

This probably occupied the time between his meeting Mary Magdalene and his joining the two on their journey, with whom he remained until the day was far spent, after which he assembled with the eleven until the day had passed.

This day, according to Mormon, was followed by still one more dark day on this continent corresponding to the Sunday night in Jerusalem; therefore, if it was the last day of darkness on this continent that the voice was heard, it would be after his meeting with the disciples in the closed room in Jerusalem.

According to the Book of Mormon record of this event, it would be Monday night in Jerusalem before the day broke clear at Zarahemla, so that there would be at least the period from Sunday night until Monday evening for the voice to be heard among the Nephites, and this period does not conflict in any sense whatever with his appearing in Jerusalem.

In Book of Nephi 4:44, 45, we find:
Thus did the three days pass away. And it was in the morning, and the darkness dispersed from off the face of the land.

This corresponds to Monday night in Jerusalem. It is claimed by some that there is lack of harmony between Nephi 4:53 and the Bible, wherein it states:
And it came to pass that in the ending of the thirty and fourth year, behold I will show unto you that the people of Nephi who were spared, and also those who had been called Lamanites, who had been spared, did have great favors shown unto them, and great blessings poured out upon their heads, insomuch that soon after the ascension of Christ into heaven, he did truly manifest himself unto them, showing his body unto them, and ministering unto them.

We notice it was to be soon after Christ’s ascension into heaven that he was to appear here, and not before; and some have objected because they say that after Christ ascended into heaven he did not visit the earth again. But this is not according to the record.

John 20:17; Jesus speaking to Mary (this is before he has visited any of his disciples):
Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father [giving the inference that no one should touch him until he had been to the Father]: but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend [meaning now] unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God.

We see by this language that he must ascend to the Father who is in heaven, even before his disciples could see him.

The Book of Mormon states that he manifested himself to the Nephites and Lamanites soon after his ascension into heaven.

We find his voice speaking to them out of the darkness, probably corresponding in time with Sunday night at Jerusalem, which was daylight in Zarahemla, although a day of darkness. The light breaks the fourth day on this continent, and we find the people gathered together viewing the ruins, and talking about this Jesus Christ of whom the sign had been given concerning his death, (probably the fourth day).

While thus conversing one with another, they heard a voice from heaven, though they understood it not. This voice was repeated the third time, before they understood, and it said unto them:
Behold my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, in whom I have glorified my name, hear ye him. And it came to pass as they understood, they cast their eyes up again towards heaven; and behold, they saw a man descending out of heaven; and he was clothed in a white robe, and he came down and stood in the midst of them, and the eyes of the whole multitude were turned upon him.—Nephi 5:3, 4.

Verse 5 states:
Behold I am Jesus Christ, whom the prophets testified shall come into the world.
This was probably some time during the fourth day, two days after his ascension into heaven, therefore it could be termed soon.

In Nephi 12:5, Mormon tells us:

Therefore I would that ye should behold that the Lord truly did teach the people for the space of three days; and after that he did show himself unto them oft, and did break bread oft, and bless it, and gave it unto them.

We find here that he taught them for the space of three days, corresponding to Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday nights in Jerusalem. There is no inconsistency in this statement, from the fact that after he met with the brethren in Jerusalem the evening of the first day after his resurrection, he did not appear again to them in Jerusalem until the eighth day, the next Sunday. (See John 20:26.)

Again it says he met with them oft; I see nothing to hinder this from being so, because he now only makes short visits to either place.

The next time Jesus showed himself to his disciples in Jerusalem must have been some little time later than the eight days, for the disciples were returned to their former labors of fishing when Jesus appeared to them. (See John 21:1-7.)

Who can truthfully say Jesus did not go into heaven many, many times during the interval of his visits to the people. Who can tell where he lodged during the greater portion of the time, before his final ascension? Is it not reasonable to suppose he would go to his Father quite often, when the advent could be made so quickly, as is demonstrated in John 20:17-19, wherein he states that he was about to ascend to the Father; and the same day a little later after his ascension we find him taking a walk into the country with two of his disciples; and later being with the eleven in a closed room, all in the one day, and during the light of the day, which, provided it was the longest day in the year in Jerusalem, would not exceed over fourteen hours.

I see nothing but harmony between the two records, so far as this account is chronicled.

John 10:16, Jesus talking to his disciples says:

And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd.

There is nothing to show from the Bible that he ever went to any other people than the Jews during the time of his ministry at Jerusalem, hence we must look for a fulfillment of this statement after his resurrection.

Book of Nephi 7:13-15, after his resurrection, we find this statement:

And behold, this is the land of your inheritance; and the Father hath given it unto you. And not at any time hath the Father given me commandment that I should tell it unto your brethren at Zarahemla; neither at any time hath the Father given me commandment that I should tell unto them concerning the other tribes of the house of Israel, whom the Father hath led away out of the land. This much did the Father command me, that I should tell unto them, that other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd.

Verses 19, 22:

And verily, I say unto you, that ye are they of whom I said, Other sheep I have which are not of this fold . . . And verily, verily, I say unto you, that I have other sheep, which are not of this land [America]; neither of the land of Jerusalem; neither in any parts of the land round about, whither I have been to minister. For they of whom I speak, are they who have not yet heard my voice; neither have I at any time manifested myself unto them. But I have received a commandment of the Father, that I shall go unto them, and that they shall hear my voice, and shall be numbered among my sheep, that there may be one fold, and one shepherd; therefore I go to show myself unto them.

Nephi 8:3:

But now I go unto the father, and also to show myself unto the lost tribes of Israel, for they are not lost unto the Father, for he knoweth whither he hath taken them.

We find he was with the Nephites at this time for three days corresponding to Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday nights at Jerusalem. And it is reasonable to suppose he would spend equally as much time among the "lost tribes of Israel" to whom he was now going, which, provided their day corresponded with the daytime at Jerusalem, would be Thursday, Friday, and Saturday; or if it should correspond to daytime at Zarahemla, would make it Thursday, Friday, and Saturday nights, according to Jerusalem time. In this way his time would be almost completely occupied; but still he would be free to assemble with his disciples on the next Sunday, or the eighth day, in Jerusalem, according to the record, and the accounts harmonize in every point.

Thus we find a little thought and careful comparison make the truth stand out in bolder outline than ever, no point in either record having to be discarded as incorrect, but each firmly planted so that it will stand the light of investigation, no matter how searchingly it may be applied.

Let us be as firmly planted in truth, that we may abide the day of his next appearing and so reign with him.

Of General Interest

HEALING BY FAITH IN THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

A movement in the Protestant Episcopal Church to revive the rite of unction is interpreted by the secular press as an effort to combat the inroads of Christian Science and other cults which makes a feature of healing the sick. A convocation in the diocese of Los Angeles has petitioned the council of that diocese to memorialize the General Convention in favor of the revival of "the ancient Sacramental Rite of Unction." Commenting on this, The Living Church (Protestant Episcopal, Milwaukee) says:

"Churchmen are, we believe, seeing more and more that cults outside of the church which perform physical cures by psychical and spiritual methods have obtained their foothold because the Anglican churches have been false to their own traditions in permitting that sacrament to fall into disuse. . . .

"Technically and potentially the Anglican churches have never abandoned the healing office, for at the consecration of a bishop a part of the commission given is, 'Hold up the weak, heal the sick.' The bishop's authority to administer the charismata of the church is therefore explicitly recognized, while the commission to a priest at his institution into the rectorship of a parish gives him full authority 'to perform every act of sacerdotal function among the people of the same.' In theory and potentially, therefore, the Anglican churches undoubtedly vest the authority in their bishops and, by delegation from them, in their priests, to perform the healing office. It is only in practice that the rite has fallen into disuse; and it needs practice, therefore, rather than legislation, to revive it."

Mr. L. H. Grant, in a letter to the same publication, reminds us of Christ's statement in regard to those who believe, that "they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover" (St. Mark 16:15-18). He writes further:

"How much longer are we to be told that the age of miracles has passed and that the 'extraordinary gifts' of the Spirit ceased with the apostles? As a matter of fact, they have not ceased in the Roman branch of the Catholic Church; they have not ceased in the Orthodox Eastern branches of the Catholic Church. Have they ceased in the Anglican branch of the church? No, thank God. Among the many signs of spiritual life attendant upon the wonderful revival of Catholic doctrine and practice among us, has been the restoration of the power of healing and other miraculous gifts, and many of our priests and people can testify from personal experience that the Christ who went about in Galilee, healing both soul and body, does the same thing to-day through his body, the church. . . . We may feel sure that when all our priests teach the whole faith, and show themselves ready to obey the word of God in using the sacrament of holy unction, our people will not be compelled to ally themselves with the followers of Mrs. Eddy or Joseph Smith or other sectarians who manifest more faith in the power of the Christ than many who profess to be of the true Israel of God."

A VISIT TO THE CLIFF-DWELLERS.

A letter, giving the account of a visit to the Cliff-dwellers, has been received by Colonel I. A. Benton, general agent of the passenger department of the Denver & Rio Grande, from Assistant General Passenger Agent F. A. Wadleigh, of Denver. The News is permitted to publish the letter, which will be of general interest here. The letter, under date of October 15, follows:

THE CLIFF-DWELLERS.

"I have just returned from a trip to the Cliff-dweller ruins located on the Mesa Verde in Montezuma County, Colorado, and for your personal information as well as for the information of prospective tourists, give you some data regarding the trip.

"The best way to reach the ruins is by rail to Mancos on the Rio Grande Southern Railroad. At the last mentioned point Mr. C. N. Kelley, proprietor of a stable, furnishes guide, team, food, and lodging for the trip, which requires three days to make—one day to go, one day at the ruins, and one day returning. Kelley's charge is fifteen dollars for one person, or twelve dollars and a half per capita for two or more.

PRINCIPAL RUINS.

"The principal ruins are located twenty-five miles from Mancos. The first fifteen miles to the foot of the Mesa Verde is covered by wagon, and the last ten on horseback. There is no wagon to the top of the Mesa Verde and the only way to reach it is on horseback or afoot. The time required to reach the ruins is approximately five and a half hours, two and a half hours by wagon, and three on horseback. Kelley has a cabin at the Spruice Tree House ruins where sleeping accommodations are furnished at night. The Balcony House is located about a mile and a half from the Spruice Tree ruins, and the Cliff Palace about the same distance in another direction.

"These three ruins are the largest and most important and all that the tourist usually visits."

"I. A. BENTON."

"There are a great many other ruins but they are at much greater distances and the time required to visit them is considerably longer."

"All three ruins are in a wonderful state of preservation, and now that the Government has made that portion of the Mesa Verde on which they are located..."
a Government reservation, there will be no more tearing down or carrying off of the relics.

ADVICE TO TOURISTS.

"Tourists should be advised to wear old clothes and heavy shoes, as climbing about the ruins is very hard on wearing apparel. As a rule men wear overalls and women divided skirts. Kelley can furnish the latter, provided women do not have their own. The food is plain, and the accommodations at the ruins primitive; there are no hardships, but there is a lot of rough and heavy climbing to be done.

"The ruins can be visited any time between the last of May and the 31st of October, but it is not well to recommend any other season, as there is a heavy fall of snow on the Mesa Verde in the winter months. Kelley has a good outfit and his horses are reliable and surefooted, and tourists can be assured that there is no danger whatever in making the trip.

"Another way to reach the ruins is by way of Dolores and Cortez, the latter point being fourteen miles from Dolores station. There is a daily stage-line between these points connecting with Rio Grande Southern trains, and there is a fairly good hotel at Cortez. The distance from Cortez to the ruins is approximately fourteen miles, the first four by wagon and the last ten by horseback over the same trail as from Mancos. Guides can also be obtained at Cortez at approximately the same prices as from Mancos.

"Although it is too late to work up any business for this tour this season, please bear in mind the data given above in order that you may answer inquiries regarding the trip; also endeavor to work up some excursion business for this tour.

"I might add that twenty-five is about the maximum number that can be well taken care of at one time, and smaller parties are decidedly preferable."

A MISSIONARY FROM ABYSSINIA.

A giant black man, spiritual envoy of King Ras El Menelik of Abyssinia and priest of a people no nation has conquered, is the guest of Doctor J. H. Hutton and Reverend John Albert Williams. His native land, one of the least known to the world, will be the subject of an address he will deliver Monday evening at the church of St. Philip the Deacon. He believes his race the noblest in the world, with the only true Bible and true religion, that it is unconquerable in war and that it will one day be ruler of the earth as the most powerful unit in a political and economical combination of the black and the red races, meaning by the latter the Japanese and Chinese. . . .

Father Checizilli if full of facts about his native land and is ready to answer any questions on religious customs, government, or other phases of the national life. Here are some of his statements:

"The government is 12,686 years old. King Menelik traces an unbroken line of ancestry back to Solomon and the Queen of Sheba.

"The people have never been conquered in war, and cherish the tradition they never will be. They overwhelmingly defeated the Italians in 1896 and the English in 1865. They are the only nation which could not be conquered by Alexander the Great.

"There are only three races in the world, black, white, and red, the sons of Ham, Japhet, and Shem. Adam and Eve were black and had six black children. All the inhabitants of the world were black until the time of Noah, and Christ was a black Jew.

"The original Bible came from Abyssinia, and the white man has no true Bible.

"For one hundred and twenty-five years the government has been a limited monarchy; previous to that, an absolute monarchy. The senate is composed of twelve men and the house of representatives of twelve women.

"Juries are composed of twelve men and twelve women, and a verdict can be brought only by a vote of nine men and seven women.

"When a king is ruling, capital punishment is meted out to no male; when a queen rules, no woman is put to death. This is to show respect to the throne.

"Capital punishment is consummated by putting the criminal in a walled inclosure in a dark forest in company with hungry lions and other wild beasts. If he can climb over the twenty-foot wall and escape, he goes free, for it is a sign to the people that God has forgiven him.

"The Abyssinians are a moral and law-abiding race. In my lifetime I have heard of only two murders in the kingdom. Robberies and adulteries and other crimes are few.

"The men in my country do not steal. Those Africans who came to America learned from the white man to steal chickens.

"Drunkenness is unknown, and it is an impossibility to find intoxicating liquor. Any one found bringing alcoholic drink into the kingdom would be put to death.

"We are a race of big people, the men averaging six feet two inches in height and the women five feet ten inches. No man can enter the army unless he is six feet and all who attain that height are subject to conscription from seventeen until they are twenty-one. We have a regular army of 500,000, and if need be, 1,000,000 soldiers can be mustered on short notice.

"No man is allowed to marry until he has ten acres of ground or other property equivalent to five thousand dollars. He then may take one wife. When he is worth ten thousand dollars he may have two wives, but no more. A priest may have four wives and a king may have as many as he chooses.

"Priests may not be married until they are twenty-eight. No man may be a priest who can not trace his ancestry back through a line of ancestry one thousand, nine hundred and seventy-five years to a priest named Jethro.

"Some day there will be no white men in Africa; all will be compelled to leave by the sword of the Abyssinian. No man may step now on the holy ground of Abyssinia except the envoy of another nation or a trader with a special permit from the government. Abyssinia will weld the nations of Africa together."

On the destiny of the blacks Father Checzelli says:

"Marvel not because the blacks are in some sections of Africa not as yet reached to the towering height of equal intellectual ascendency. Ah, watch the present glare illuminating the western horizon; climb over the gigantic pillars of prejudice and see the vivid glare of manhood arising from out the stagnant cavern of oppression.

"I am not pessimistic of the psychological future of the black race; the towering structural buildings, the artistic architecture, the boastful militias and powerful battleships of the white nations I envy not.

"No, I am glad to see the military and naval competitions of theirs, for a distant spark emanating from the domain of prognostication tells me of the awful disaster that must come to pass in less than one hundred years, when the various white nations will fight against themselves, while the black and red races shall watch in silence until the last battle-cry is given, then rush forward and stretch out their hands unto God in thankfulness, grasp the supremacy of the world and protect the remnant whites.

"In anticipation of these grand glories, be prepared and united, apprehended closer to religion and ethical ideas, that the political degenerate Vardaman, the diabolic fanatic Tillman and other intellectual parasites whose glory is to widen the psychologically racial chasm be quickly blown to the oblivion ocean."

"The "closed shop" and the clergy.

"How can we Episcopal ministers have the face to oppose the closed shop when the Episcopal ministry is the tightest kind of a closed shop." Thus spoke Reverend E. A. Wasson, rector of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Newark, New Jersey, in a recent sermon addressed to workingmen.

"Long years of preparation are required, then careful examinations, before a man is admitted to the ministry. And then when we accept a call, see how we stipulate with our employer, the congregation, concerning our control of the shop we are to run. Our control is supreme, and this is even embodied in the law of the church, since we will not run the chances that might come from individual contract.

"No man can touch the organ without consent. We have plenary authority as to the kind of choir. We determine the service, when it begins and ends, whom we will invite to assist us and whom we will keep out. No Episcopal minister can preach in a church of another denomination without asking the consent of the nearest Episcopal rector. No Episcopal minister can even preach the gospel on the street-corner in my neighborhood without first coming to me and getting my consent.

"And yet we ministers have the nerve to say we don't approve of the closed shop, and it is only the closed shop of the poor workingmen that we oppose or question. And our contracts with our employers are for life, and that when we are sick we are not docked, and that a lot of us get full pay, while our employer pays for our substitute."

THE EDITOR.

An editor has been wrestling with some bad manuscript and expresses his feelings on the subject in a way that will awaken a responsive chord in the hearts of his editorial brethren:

"Friends, countrymen! Hear us for our cause! Write—write—write. We are always glad to hear from you. But, oh, write with a pen, with good ink—write distinctly—take time—there is plenty of it. Write on good paper—not scraps—and not on both sides. Think on these things and teach them to your children and then will the editor in all generations rise up to call you blessed!"—The Messenger.

The Angel of Thanksgiving.

BY FRANCES.

"But to which of the angels said he at any time, Sit on my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool? Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?"

Is it not true, as the poet has said, that the mysterious realm which we call sleep 'has its own world'? and is it not as he further expresses it, "A wide realm of wild reality'? How then shall we separate the real from that which is purely imaginary? the true from that which upon testing may prove to be false? or is there in reality any use whatever in life for the purely imaginative?

It ought to be sufficient answer to the latter question for us to ask, If there exists no use for it, why did God endow man with it? God looked upon all the work of his hands and, as he considered it all, he pronounced it "very good," and there as the crowning glory of all this work stood man endowed with this grandly enabling faculty.

It has been said to us, "When you write for the children (or

for any one) that which never happened, it is simply false, and you are lying to them." We have not answered strictures like this because we felt that their injustice was too apparent to demand an answer. If this assertion be true, what shall we say of the vision of John upon the isle of Patmos, where under the most singular figures which imagination could possibly invent (and who was the inventor?) the Lord showed to John that which would yet come to pass, and taught him some of the grandest truths of all time. But mark you, they were truths. And here is the test to which we should put all things in this world, whether it be purely imaginative, or whether it be what is often called true. For let us not forget that that which really happens is often base and false, while that which the imagination produces often sets before us God's truth in colors never to be forgotten. If the man is pure and true so will his imagination be; but if he is false and vile then will his imagination be the same.

When Nathan the prophet of God was sent to rebuke David, the king, he was telling the truth, albeit he knew that Bathsheba the wife of Uriah the Hittite was not a lamb. But mark you with what skill God inspired the imagination of the prophet to bring home to David the sin he had committed, and to cause him to pass judgment upon himself. Surely none knew better than David the heinous nature of his crime. To him it was real and true. But he seemed not to realize it—it was dwelling at ease in Zion until Nathan by the use of his pure and God-given imagination—pure because the man was pure—brought before him the base facts in a way to make him see their base­ness, and to pronounce upon himself the justly deserved sentence of death. Then Nathan boldly and fearlessly said to him: "Thou art the man."

Unfortunately for some of us, it happens that when we see or hear ourselves described by the aid of this often reproached and often abused faculty of imagination, neither a prophet of God nor yet our ministering angel is near enough to whisper to us: "Thou art the man."

But to our story:

It was a raw, bleak day in November. The wind, which came at a fearful rate, bringing with it a misty haze, was cold and penetr­ating and as it caught up and whirled the fallen leaves, the branches from which they had been stripped bent moaning above them almost like human beings in pain.

All day has been running upon the work being done in the world for the advancement of mankind. I had been reading of some of the many stupendous undertakings of this kind in the world—undertakings which though stupendous, had in their commencement been almost so small as to appear insignifi­cant and entirely hopeless of results—and as I sat now and listened to the shrieking of the blast and watched the dull, leaden clouds as they swung past the limit of my view I gave utterance for perhaps the twentieth time to an exclamation which of late was becoming almost a habit with me, Oh, I don't know, I don't know!

"Don't know what?" said a clear, sweet voice close to my side.

"Don't know why it is that we as a people are so lacking in faith, so slow to obey the true intent and meaning of the gos­pel of Christ," I answered, looking intently towards the mild, tender face just opposite mine, and not realizing or even feeling it at all strange that it was there, and that, beaming from this face straight into my own, was a pair of soft but keenly pene­trating eyes, blue as the heavens upon a summer's day.

"It is well you should inquire," the voice answered me. "The Master said when he was yet upon earth, 'Except your right­eousness exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.'"

"Oh, but," I answered quickly, "the scribes and Pharisees were hypocrites. Jesus himself called them so. We have obeyed the restored gospel—have been adopted into the king­dom of God, and are not hypocrites as they were."

"Why, then," answered my visitor, 'is it that these good works which are being done in the world are not being done with even greater faith and earnestness by this people who pro­fess to teach the gospel in its entirety and purity? You say you are not hypocrites. Will you explain to me what it is that makes a man or woman a hypocrite?'"

"To say and not do," I answered quickly as though the words were uttered by the strong conviction which seemed taking possession of my very being, "and to profess love for God, when we manifest so little for man."

"You have answered well," said my visitor, "and now will you tell me the test Christ gave by which man could prove that they loved him?"

"If a man love me, he will keep my words," I again replied quickly, as though not I but a strong conviction within me were speaking.

"Again you have answered wisely and in the very words of the Master. How then think you the angels who are sent by the Father to minister unto this people must feel when time after time, Sabbath after Sabbath, they listen to your testi­monies when you say, 'I love God and am willing to do all in my power for this work, because I know it is of God.' How think you, I ask, must they feel?"

"Oh," and this time I answered slowly, as though not yet willing to admit all the truth being forced home upon me, "surely they must be glad and rejoice that there are yet some in this sinful world who can stand as witnesses for Jesus. It is a grand thing to be able to testify for him.

"Truly it is, and when the humble, the meek, and the lowly ones among you—those whose hearts are pure and whose lives are blameless—bear a faithful testimony, truly do rejoice and praise God for his tender mercies and loving kindness to the children of men. But," and here an expression of infinite pity rested upon the face and beamed from the sadly penetrating eyes of the speaker, "what of those who say and do not? Those in whom the god of this world, rightly named Self, reigns supreme? Do you remember what Jesus said of such?"

"'Well hath Esaias prophesied of you hypocrites, as it is written, this people honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me,'" I answered, while the hot blood of deep conviction dyed my cheeks crimson, and I cast down my eyes, no longer able to look my visitor, whom I now knew to be an angel, in the face.

"It is near the time of your Thanksgiving as a nation, Thanksgiving to God for countless blessings; and how will the nation—how will your people as a part of this nation—render their thanks? Will it not be mostly by feasting each other and themselves? There will be noble exceptions, where the poor and needy will be remembered; but they will be exceptions, not the rule. The Father has spoken directly to you as his people, and has told you that it was his will that a home for children should be built, and that it should be done as soon as it could be done consistently. How far do you think the money spent for feasting upon this day would go towards building such a home, and do you not think that we who are appointed to minister to these little ones would shed tears of joy, and lift our very souls in thanksgiving to God if it were so spent? I tell you there would be joy among all the heavenly host.

"Again, as a people you believe in prayer, and expect to be heard and answered when you pray. Now will you tell me how often you have fasted and prayed for God to make known his will to you? You can not remember, as it has been so often. Can you remember, then, how often God has spoken in answer to your pleadings; but what is of infinitely more importance, can you tell me how often God has been obeyed when he has spoken?"

"But," I said hesitatingly, "as a people we are poor and have not much to spare from our absolute needs and this is a great undertaking. Besides, where is the one equal to managing such a home?"
“O foolish one, and slow of heart! Is not God equal to providing one or many to do this work, and is it yours to question when he has commanded? Do not plead the poverty of the church! There are many members who could furnish the means to build this home and still have more than enough left for every reasonable want. But self is not cast out, and the love of God is not the one supreme motive of their lives. The children, your children, could build it if only they were encouraged to work and to sacrifice. It could be twice built by the people of moderate means, if only they went to work with the determination to do what God has commanded. Beware lest you fail through want of faith and diligence to do what the Lord has commanded, and be not gathered unto him in faith and diligence to do what the Lord has commanded, and be not gathered unto him in Zion with those Saints who have made with him a covenant by sacrifice.”

My head had been bowed, and when I lifted it the angel of Thanksgiving was gone; but from the depths of my heart I thanked God that it was not too late for me to obey and bring to the Master a thanksgiving offering. Not too late to make a covenant with him by sacrifice, that I might be gathered unto him in Zion.

Letter Department

SAN FRANCISCO, California, October 26, 1906.

Editors Herald: Just returned to this city from a tour of the Southern California District. The weather was delightful throughout the entire trip, a great contrast with the kind you have been having back East and in the South, judging from the Associated Press reports—snow, rain, floods, and (to climax it all) cyclones. And, by the way, I see that they have been having earthquakes down in Maine lately. It is immaterial in what direction we go upon this mundane sphere, it seems that the “judgments of God” are to be found everywhere, which is one of the reasons that we are living in the “last days” (perilous times), and, in fulfillment of the prediction of one Martyr, which reads, “And after your testimony cometh the wrath and indignation upon the people; for after your testimony cometh the testimony of earthquakes, that shall cause groanings in the midst of her, and men shall fall upon the ground, and shall not be able to stand. And also cometh the testimony of the voice of thunderings, and the voice of lightnings, and the voice of the waves of the sea, heaving themselves beyond their bounds.” Thousands have perished within the last few months because of these things befalling them; “and the end is not yet.” Notwithstanding these awful calamities the great majority of the people are sinking deeper into sin and degradation, becoming “lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.”

We would do well to heed the admonition of the apostle Paul: “But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness. Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober.” However, the weaknesses of the flesh, the pleasures of the world, and the Satanic influences are hard to resist and overcome. We pray that God’s grace and strength be given to all to enable them to conquer in the end.

My sojourn in Los Angeles, Santa Ana, and San Bernardino was productive of good to the Saints, and a source of encouragement to the Saints. All three branches are in fair condition spiritually. Not that all those whose names are recorded upon the church books are actively engaged in the service of the Lord: for I found to my sorrow that we have a good many drones in the hive, and it seems that the good workers are not able to get them all out, either. This necessitates the exercise of much patience and forbearance on the part of the true Saint. Brn. T. W. Williams, A. Carmichael, and A. E. Jones, presidents of these respective branches, with their assistant officers, are kept busily engaged caring for and looking after the interests of those under their charge.

The Saints in these branches are widely scattered, which makes it very difficult for these officers to keep in touch with them. Some of the head officers have been criticised to an extent for keeping so close to their home branches, because they are missionaries; but those who have made the criticism should remember that these men are high priests, and under the law it is their right and duty to feed and nurture the Saints.

These brethren must go miles in various directions to administer to the sick and visit others who are spiritually sick also; hence it is that they are kept well employed. Indeed they would be glad if conditions would permit of their leaving their home branch for a time, as a change is good and helpful, and would be appreciated by them. I found the officers in question alive to the interests of the church and faithfully at work. And what was gratifying to me was that the Spirit of the Lord was present at the various services, certifying to me that the Lord was pleased with them and their labor, and when God is pleased surely we should be.

I stayed a few days at Bakersfield, and was domiciled at the home of Bro. and Sr. Snively. They and family were enjoying excellent health and were as strong in the faith of the Master as in days of yore. Their straightforward conduct among the people has made them good and substantial friends in that locality. Bro. Clapp, though advanced in years, is doing a good work, and is highly respected by the people. May his days of usefulness be lengthened! Bro. Charles Crumley is a good supporter of the work and held in high esteem. Our worthy Bro. W. S. Pender’s health is improving, but slowly. We hope that he will soon be able to devote his entire time to missionary work. The branch in Oakland is in fine condition spiritually. The Saints there now fill their commodious chapel. Truly Bro. Terry’s untiring efforts and loving disposition have been means of bringing about this splendid condition of the branch. Sr. Terry does all within her power to supplement his good efforts. Bishop Parkin is traveling in the district, working in the interests of the finances of the church, and encouraging and cheering the Saints with his ready counsel. Good reports come from Brn. William Newton, C. Earle, and the ministry in the Northwest. Bro. C. E. Earle has been operating of late in the city of Stockton with the view of reviving the work there, and reports a measure of success. Bro. Edgar Smith will travel with the writer for a few weeks and then go north. Wishing you health and much peace, with all the Israel of God, I remain,

Your brother in the one faith,

Gomer T. Griffiths.

COOKES POINT, Texas, October 13, 1906.

Saints Herald: I am home again from a trip to Eastern Texas, where I went the first of this month, being called there by some scattered members of the church to meet a Campbellite preacher in debate, who had been making some assertions against us that he could not prove; and he also proposed to debate with us. I met said preacher, but he did not propose a debate to me, so we did not debate. He attended one service, when I preached, and went away to stay. I remained there about ten days, preached at nights to fair crowds, and had splendid interest. The Baptist preacher, who is pastor of the church at the town where I preached, attended all the services I held; did much of the singing and praying at the meetings. He preached twice while I was there, to his own congregation, and let me have the congregation he had to preach to. He told me in the presence of the people that he indorsed our claims. I presented the gospel in its fullness. I am hopeful that he and some others at that town will come into the church ere long. He has the name of being an honest gentleman, by our people and others that know him. I met some Utah people here, who attended two services, one at the commencement, and the last one. They took offense when I told what we did not believe that they believed. I emphasized the doctrine of polygamy, by telling the people that we did not believe that abominable and damnable doctrine of polygamy. They said they did not believe the doctrine of polygamy to be be true, yet got mad at me for denouncing it as false. God's work is still going on in Texas as well as elsewhere, over the head of all opposition.

In concluding this letter, I will ask some questions for information. Any one may answer them that wants to, and can: By reference to Genesis 5:15, Inspired Translation, we read that the gospel should never be taken from the world until the end. We, as a church, claim that it has been taken from the world, and restored. When was it taken, if taken from the world? Answer at once. I am still in the faith once delivered to the saints.

LEXINGTON, Nebraska, September 16, 1906.

Editors Herald: I have just finished reading the Herald and thought it would not be amiss for me to write a few lines in favor of this grand work. I have believed in God ever since I can remember, but having no father or mother to teach me I had to learn what I did from the sectarian churches. I, like Joseph Smith, soon found that I could not believe what they preached, but I learned from the Bible that I must avoid bad company, which I am glad to say I have tried to do all my life. In 1875 I first learned of this work. I studied it until 1877, when I was baptized and have held my standing in the church.

I have been afflicted with deafness for twenty-five years, and on that account it seemed that my friends had forsaken me. I would tell some of the brethren of it and they would tell me that it was not the case, but that did not take away the feeling. I finally heard that one of my uncles in Ohio was not expected to live, and I had been there and would not go to see him. I felt that I had done wrong, and I went into my closet and asked God to spare him until I could go there and see him. In the next letter I got the news that he was getting better. I went to see him and forgave him, although he did not ask me to. That was three years ago, and now I do not feel that way. I know that some will not say anything to a deaf person unless there is money to be made, and others will cherish them all they can.

Now if we want to build up Zion, God has given us a law, and he tells us that it can not be done any other way. When we obey that, we will not have these articles about banks and secret societies, for when we obey that law there will be no division among us. I feel I could not live without the church papers. Certainly I do not believe any one will lose anything by paying tithing and for the church papers.

Your brother in the gospel,

F. T. Dobie.

FLOODWOOD, Ohio, October 23, 1906.

Editors Herald: I came to this place the 19th. Met S. J. Jeffers, district president, and at seven o'clock in the evening the little band of Saints met, and, with Elder Jeffers presiding, we proceeded to organize the Hocking Branch.

Bro. Francis May (elder) was unanimously chosen president, Sr. Nola Douglas, secretary; Bro. H. W. Wilson, treasurer. No dissenting "No," was heard during the entire proceedings. The brethren are held in high esteem and unity prevails, and we look for other ascensions to their numbers here.

Brn. May, V. M. Goodrich, and O. B. Thomas have labored here with acceptance, and are gratefully remembered; but Bro. G. W. Hull was the pioneer laborer at this place. Other scattered members near will unite with the branch, we believe. The Co. Branch, where, by counsel of those in charge, my labors have been devoted almost exclusively for a season, is moving along peacefully, for the most part, and we hope for them still brighter days, and encouragement by additions to their numbers.

Bro. F. J. Ebeling is improving in health, and we hope that by continued moderation in labor he will be in regular labor again by the first of 1907.

We are sorry our Brn. I. N. and J. W. Roberts were forced to abandon their field of labor, Virginia, because of utter disinterestedness in the gospel restored, by the people. Is the "times of the Gentiles" about filled full? Strange times! Hope Bro. J. W. will soon find his health restored. I hope the Second Seventy may be able to maintain its record for diligence and accomplishment in God's great vineyard.

I am intensely interested in the searching investigation that has been, and is going on in church papers on the questions so fraught with interest to the cause of Christ, now. "Zion's redemption," as related to the gathering, "cooperation," "consacration," proportional "equality," also the discovery of the barriers to the progress of the gospel work; both in the church and in the world, are questions of deep, far-reaching, and solemn moment to us. We must not treat lightly the things we have received, included in the revelations, relating to the foregoing topics, even including the "Epistle" and revelation given through Apostle Joseph Luff. Some may see in the efforts of the brethren to know and understand, that which they can afford to "laugh at." But we see in it all a tremendous effort to go forward and be saved, and our great hopes realized, relating to the work of the Lord. And the light will be sufficiently strong soon to enable us to see and feel that where "societies" feel that their moral teachings make men sufficiently good, that the church is too narrow a field for their operations, the church is all right for women and children; that if men are good morally as individuals, church is not essential. Where does the atonement or regeneration come in? And men are "likely to be laughed at," for desiring to know where the barriers to our advancement as a church are, and what!

I say let the investigation go on, on right lines of course. Those problems must be met, and solved, sooner or later. They are related questions to the upbuilding of the kingdom of God. The gospel should claim the first attention of all men, and the redemption of Zion, next, of all Latter Day Saints. I hail gladly every item of light.

I am of the opinion that what of talent I may use will be counted when His results are measured, in what I have done in God's great work. Not for any individual use merely. And dollars and talents will be counted in proportion to what they effect in God's work, so far as the kingdom is concerned. (See Matthew 25:14, 15; Doctrine and Covenants 82:4.) As to what is used otherwise, "Verily, I say unto you, They have their reward," here in this life, with an emphasis on the word have.

C. SCOTT.

COLDWATER, Michigan, October 16, 1906.

Editors Herald: Inclosed I send you obituary notice of Sr. Starr Corless, as published in Monday evening edition of the Coldwater Daily Reporter. Sr. Corless passed along to the "rest" of the pure and the good to await the clearing away of the mists. Sr. Granger can sit up for a short time. Srs. Grace and Eille Willard seem much improved. Bro. Cudney is out and around. Sr. S. W. L. Scott can now "do chores." Sr. Fish, who suffered paralytic stroke on the right side, is better, we learn. But dear me, we just hear that Sr. Elsa Lockerby was brought to the "emergency hospital" (this city) Sunday, with fever. Bro. Wight's prophecy during the Coldwater reunion, the "warning," and "forewarning of impending danger and trial," comes up with impressive significance.

We have been "a bird of passage," going and coming, trying to fill preannounced appointments. Hope the Lord will restore the sick, care for his children, and administer the comforts of peace and solace to the mourning ones.

S. W. L. SCOTT.

Ocean, but doubtless he also can recall some dim recollection of the "dining-hall."

An entertainment was given last Monday evening, the proceeds of which are to be used in paying off the debt on the "dining-hall," now dignified by many as the "assembly-hall." The entertainment in charge of Bro. E. C. Harrington was excellent in character. Its success was contributed to by two numbers from our Sr. Allee Barbee who is back from Chicago on a visit. However, we long for the time to come when our people will not have to give entertainments to raise money for church purposes.

The prayer-meetings are doing wonders for us all, but especially the young people. The Wednesday night young peoples' prayer-meeting has a usual attendance of one hundred and fifty, and is affording excellent opportunity for development and spiritual growth. But the best part of it is, these opportunities are used. Also the Sunday morning prayer-meetings at eight o'clock are proving successful beyond all expectations.

The efforts of our brethren in street-preaching in Kansas City have not been without effect, and as a result, some have been baptized. We call to mind in this connection, the talk given us by Brn. Bailey and Russell during General Conference. It is the Latter Day Saint who does things that gets results.

J. A. GARDNER.

BURLINGTON, IOWA.

The funeral-services of Sr. William Morton were held at the church, Tuesday, October 30. Sr. Morton was a charter member of the Burlington Branch, and prior to her death was the sole surviving charter member resident in the city. Her husband was foreman of the HERALD Office at Plano when the first number of the SAINTS' HERALD was printed.

The young people held a Hollowe'en social at the house of Sr. Sena Bierman.

Committees have been appointed and the Sunday-school is making active preparation for the Christmas entertainment.

Bro. and Sr. Charles Craig, old members of the branch, now of Independence, Missouri, have recently made us a pleasant visit.

Our new pastor, Elder S. M. Reiste, began his ministry Sunday under difficulties. Bro. H. E. Jarvis, with whom he temporarily abides, departed for Mendota Saturday, and left a new latch-key for Bro. Reiste who came that day from Lamoni. The key would not work, so Bro. Reiste was obliged to lodge elsewhere and do without his "best store clothes" for Sunday, and his books as an aid in preaching. But apparently his sermons did not suffer thereby.

Bro. Smith, the departing pastor, says that when they began to load their goods they feared that possibly something might be lost or stolen, but before they were through with packing and unpacking they almost regretted that some things were not lost. He understands now why Joseph told his father and brethren to leave their "stuff" when they came to Egypt. We hear that little Ronald expressed himself at the other end of the line while the family was in the tumult of "settling" and bringing order out of chaos. He went to his Grandma Cochran with tears in his eyes and said, "Grandma, I am hungry. We have bread at our house, but we haven't any butter to put on it, and we have beans but no vinegar for them, and I have a handkerchief, but it is too dirty to wipe my eyes on."

Seventh Quorum of Elders.

Dear Brethren: Owing to the departure of our esteemed Bro. George Baty to the United States, it has been the good pleasure of the quorum to appoint our respected Bro. J. E. Meredith as its president, and he has selected as his counselors Brn. W. R. Armstrong and J. W. Taylor.

In addressing this circular letter to you, the officers of the quorum ask that we may all work hand in hand for the Master's cause, so that we may accomplish all that is possible in our quorum's capacity.

The president is very anxious to become personally acquainted with each member; or, failing this, to correspond with whom it is possible to meet. He hopes this letter will find you well in body, mind, and spirit, and that you are doing what you can, according to your circumstances, to build up the Master's cause. He further asks for your prayers for himself and all of us, that we may each be humble and faithful in our high office and calling, and that the good Spirit may be vouchsafed to us to help us to understand our duty, and that we may be willing to do the same in the spirit of true love.

Our president feels the call a very responsible one, and as the leader of the quorum, desires to be the "servant of all." He will be most pleased to hear from you at any time, and also to receive and will consider any suggestions for the quorum.

You will no doubt be pleased to know that the secretary has not pressed his resignation, and will at present continue in office.

We presume you are quite satisfied and pleased with our brother in that position.

We propose arranging in future for more frequent meetings of our quorum, and if it is not practicable to do so in a general capacity, to at least organize sectional gatherings in specially appointed districts or branches.

We have mailed to your address "blank form" for annual report. Will you kindly retain same until December 31, after which carefully fill in your record of all labors performed, including meetings at Sunday-school, Relief, etc.

Please forward after said date, as promptly as you can to the secretary, so as to enable him to report for us in good time to General Conference (America).

With very best wishes for your temporal and spiritual well-being, and praying that the best possible success may accrue from our individual and united efforts, to the glory of God and in favor of his great work, we are, your brethren and coworkers, in gospel bonds,

J. E. MEREDITH, President,

$25,000.00 NEEDED
By INDEPENDENCE COAL MINING COMPANY

In order to develop and open up the new coal-mining interests near Independence and also make necessary preparations for homes for mine-workers, it is necessary that sufficient capital be secured within a short time. The amount sought is very small compared with the capital of other coal-mining interests and, for various reasons, the Directors of this company desire to keep the working and controlling power with the church members, if possible. The opening up of an undeveloped coal field at the edge of a densely populated community of 40,000 population is a matter of considerable consideration, as this is part of the necessities of life, with freight rates practically cut off, making this enterprise an exceptional one.

Five hundred and sixty-nine acres have been leased for fifty years and one hundred and forty-four purchased, making in all seven hundred and twenty acres of coal-land in one body, on the line of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, two miles east of Independence.

The company already has coal-mines at Napoleon, Missouri, in operation and a successful and prosperous retail business, making this a bona fide, paying investment.

Money seeking investment can find no better place, and will bring the best kind of satisfaction, as it will bring good returns to the investor and results that are much sought after, also benefiting the unemployed, scattered, pressed-down poor church members by placing them in a position to help themselves.

The 154 acres are intended for homes for mine-workers, to be sold at a reasonable price, and we solicit the co-operation of miners to purchase stock, according to their ability.

The promotion of this company are not working for any selfish interests. There is no woolly nor ridiculous valued stock. The company is incorporated under the laws of the state of Missouri.

Capital stock, $40,000.00; shares, $150.00 each, amount paid up $65,000. The capital stock must be increased to the amount needed. Parties seeking money can do so by bank draft. Further particulars apply to as candidate for the Presidency, and a creature of his, named Bonnett, for the Vice Presidency. He went so far as to have views, and to publish them.

It seemed to this writer preposterous that Joseph Smith should aspire to the presidency of the United States, and he seems to attach criminal significance to this aspiration. It is the proud boast of every orator and statesman who is a lover of his country that any person born in the United States of native parents is eligible to any office within the gift of the people and may exercise a desire for the office of president without being criminal in intent or purpose. Of Joseph Smith's nativity there is no possible doubt. His parents can be traced back as residents in the United States to 1638, if not to an earlier period. He was born in Vermont, in the Green Mountain region, and undoubtedly had a right to aspire to the presidency. It may have been an improper ambition for him under the circumstances, but it certainly was not criminal. His views of laws and government were accounted sound at the time they were presented, the objection being made to the man and not to the views expressed by him in the proclamation put out by him with reference to his candidacy. Brutus said that Caesar was ambitious, and for that he slew him. Caesar may have been ambitious, doubtless was, and it may be conceded that Joseph Smith was ambitious. One of the greatest troubles in the case was that his friends were ambitious for him. Through their injudicious desire and advice he offered for the presidency. We may believe at this late date that it was a mistake, and if it was and was one of the elements which resulted in his being murdered by quasi-political enemies, he is no worse and no better for that consideration than Lincoln, Garfield, or McKinley, each of whom perished at the hands of an assassin. That Joseph Smith was killed by a mob without a shadow of excuse or lawful reason for it is conceded now by all historians and writers upon the topic of Mormonism, and by those who in Hancock County survived the effects of what was known as the Mormon War.

After stating that Joseph Smith failed to keep an appointment with an officer to whom he states he promised that he would go to Carthage on the next day, the writer adds:

But a day or two afterwards the Smiths came riding into Carthage unattended, except by their Common Council and the others accused of riot, and gave themselves up to the county authorities. They were taken before a justice of the peace, and entered into a recognizance to appear at court. They were at once discharged, but the Smiths were immediately rearrested upon a charge of treason,—levying arms against the government of the State,—and recommitted to the county jail.

The prospect was still not bad for them. The sheriff was their friend. They were sure of a favorable jury. The Governor—a man of the best intentions, that accomplished nothing but patching the infernal pavement—had come over to Hancock County to preserve law and order. The Smiths were sure of a speedy trial and acquittal. And the whole tiresome play was to begin again. There was only one way of getting out of the groove. The Dues ex machina, who alone could settle matters, was the mob.

In these statements the writer is near the truth, with the single exception of the alleged promise made to the officer by the Prophet that he would go to Carthage on the day stated. And when it is known that Joseph Smith attended by Hyrum Smith and others of the accused persons did leave Nauvoo on the day stated, but met messengers from the Governor who was at Carthage, requiring that they should return to Nauvoo, and did so and decided to stay at Nauvoo until the next day, when they did go to Carthage and deliver themselves, as stated, a good reason may be found why they appeared to evade the promises which were made. It must also be remembered that the justice of the peace who issued the warrant against the Prophet and his associates was the captain of the Carthage Greys, an independent military organization which was stationed for the time being at Carthage, together with a number of state troops gathered there by command of the Governor, who was himself in charge, which should go to the credit of Joseph and Hyrum Smith; and the statements made by this writer that they were sure of an acquittal upon trial, notwithstanding what the writer has already stated in the article respecting their guilt, shows conclusively that these men were conscious of being free from just accusation of wrong-doing. The statement that the god of the machine, the power behind the throne, was the only power which could settle the controversy, and that this power was the mob, clearly and definitely exonerates Joseph and Hyrum Smith from just censure of blame and criminality.

The writer's statement that Joseph Smith appropriated the exclusive right to deal in real estate, to sell liquor, and to marry and to give in marriage, is absolutely untrue. The only real estate which Joseph Smith the Martyr engaged in the sale of was that in which he had a proprietary interest, either as an owner in fee simple or as agent for others who voluntarily put their estate in his hands to be disposed of. We personally knew of firms engaged in the real estate business of which firms Joseph Smith was no part. The right to sell liquor was reserved in the council and mayor of the city, who controlled it by ordinance as did Chicago or Quincy or any other city in the State. Joseph Smith himself did not engage in the sale of intoxicating liquors. The right to celebrate marriage was controlled by the statutes of the State, and so far as the church was concerned, certain officers designated as church officers could officiate, and that too without the consent or knowledge of Joseph Smith as President of the church, or Mayor of the city. The church rule governing at the time and which was published in 1842 and 1844, clearly defined the officers of the church who might celebrate the right of marriage, and these are recognized by the several statutes of the States in which the church may be found at the present time. There have been no other. And when the writer made this assertion twenty-five years after the death of Joseph Smith, it must be attributed either to inexcusable ignorance or to the malice of prejudice such as has been shown by other quotations from the article referred to.

The writer charges the Governor, Thomas Ford, with vacillation and strange indecision of purpose and action. He says of him that during the day or two just before and at the time of the murder “the Governor seemed plagued by the foul fiend Flibbertigibbet. He changed his mind every hour, with the best intentions.” He states that the Governor seemed to be troubled with doubts as to the proper course to pursue. He had a large force at his command. He sent for General Singleton at Quincy to come into Hancock County and take charge of the military operations. A portion of his troops had started for Golden’s Point, eight or ten miles southeast of Nauvoo. It was supposed by the Governor that they were going to Nauvoo for the purpose of searching for bogus money, of which it was charged somebody at Nauvoo had been engaged in coining. The writer seems to think that the thoughts of the Governor ran something like these:

What if they searched for other things, and did not content themselves with a calm display? [of force]. These thoughts so agitated Governor Ford, that he wrote an order on the 27th, countermanding former orders and disbanding the militia. He then mounted his horse and rode to Nauvoo, to deliver a firm and paternal address to the Mormons. All this was done with the best intentions.

Then follows the story of the march of the force under Colonel Levi Williams, the rendezvous, the public meeting at Warsaw which had unanimously "resolved, that we will forthwith proceed to Nauvoo and exterminate the city and its people"; a manifesto which seemed too peppy even for the palate of Mr. Sharp, editor of the Signal, who, when he published it, added the saving clause, "if necessary." ‘Of course it will be necessary,’ said these law-abiding militia men as they marched out of Warsaw on the Nauvoo road.

Order reigned in Warsaw—for the men were all gone. The whole male population, with trifling exceptions, were in Williams’ regiment. Among the captains were William N. Grover, afterwards a distinguished lawyer of St. Louis, and United States Attorney for Missouri,—an eminently respectable and conservative man; Thomas C. Sharp, Editor of the Signal, who also on this day sowed the last of his wild oats, and was afterwards principal of the public school, and greatly esteemed as county judge; Jacob C. Davis, then State Senator, afterwards, member of congress from that district.

Let the reader recall the murder of Cesar by Brutus, Cassius, Casca, then note the sarcastic encomium passed upon these men by Marc Antony when he said, “But Brutus is an honorable man; so are they all honorable men.”

We knew these men, Levi Williams, Thomas C. Sharp, William N. Grover, and Jacob C. Davis, and while it is true that after the farcial and ineffective arraignment of these and others for the murder of the Smiths under influences which not only precluded but absolutely by threat and danger prevented the attendance of witnesses at the trial, were acquitted, the Scotch verdict, “Guilty, but not proved,” hung to them in the estimation of many, though they did attain to honors among the people. This is eminently true of Thomas C. Sharp, who made one of the ablest county judges the county of Hancock ever had; and it may be that the writer states truthfully that on the 27th of June, 1844, this man “sowed the last of his wild oats.” Who shall tell what the harvest will be in the final reaping-time for these men and their coconspirators?

The story of the assembling of the mob, the difficulty which seemed to be in the way of numbers of the leading men when the order for disbandment issued by the Governor reached them on their journey across the prairie, the turning away of some, and the adherence of others to the wild counsels of the leading spirits, the final reaching of the jail, and the killing of Joseph and Hyrum Smith and the wounding of John Taylor, is well told by the writer in his article.

Of the character of one of the witnesses, present at the scene, and who appeared at the trial of the men indicted for the murder of the Smiths, as stated by this writer, the following is worth reproducing:

I was one of the guards at the jail. Saw Smith when he was killed. Saw none of the defendants at the jail! Suppose there were one or two hundred there. They stayed three or four minutes. They formed in front of the jail and made a rush. Knew none that came up. . . . Heard nothing that was said. . . . Saw Smith die,—was within ten feet of him. . . . Perhaps a minute after he fell I saw him die. . . . I was pushed and shoved some fifty feet. . . . Did not see Sharp, Grover, or Davis. It was so crowded I could not see much. I know about one third of the men in the county, but none at the jail. I might have been some scared.

Of this evidence the writer says, “It would be difficult to imagine anything cooler than this quiet perjury to screen a murder. . . . There is but one force mighty enough in the world to twist such minds and consciences so fearfully awry, and that is the wild suspicion bred of civil strife.”

The writer mistakes again, either willfully or from misinformation. He states that this witness, Frank Worrell, was himself murdered by Mormon assassins not long afterwards. Who the assassin was may not be known at this late day, but the facts stated at the time as we heard them, were that this man Worrell and others were attempting to interfere with a posse in charge of Jacob B. Backenstoss, the sheriff or deputy sheriff of the county at the time, and was fired upon by one of the posse at the sheriff’s direction, which ended the pursuit and defeated the interference which it was supposed was sought to be made. But view that as we may, this trite saying in reference to this witness shows the length to which prejudice went, and also shows the difficulty in bringing malefactors to justice at that time. We believe that no effort was ever made to arrest the man who killed Worrell, and it passed into history as a part of the warfare raging at the time and which finally resulted in the expulsion of the Mormon people from Nauvoo.

(To be concluded.)

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

Elder Adolph E. Madison of the First Quorum of Seventy passed away at Neola, Iowa, Sunday, September 11, at the hour of noon. He had been ill for some time.

Elder Alvin Knisley has a two-column article in the Winnipeg Tribune for November 7, on the Mormon question.

Apostle C. A. Butterworth writes from Australia, reporting thirty baptisms for the past quarter. He says that some old difficulties in the mission have been settled, and new ones have taken their place. Just now a scarcity of funds threatens the removal of some missionaries from the field. The general spiritual condition is reported as good.

Elders J. Arthur Davis and James Hackett have been laboring, or attempting to labor, in Zion City, but were denied the privilege of preaching upon the streets.

One member of the Lamoni Stake council became discouraged recently and was about to resign his position and quit work, but at night he was given a dream in which he saw an open grave in which he was about to be buried alive. He decided to remain active. Brethren, keep moving.

Some orders have been received by the office for handbills printed from the design in "The Elders' Note-Book," SAINTS' HERALD, for November 7. A neat form has been arranged, headed by the cut printed in that number, and the elders will probably find it useful in their fields.

Some one has styled the newspapers "those purveyors of misinformation." Three of the leading papers of Victoria, Australia, have recently printed dispatches from New York City stating that Joseph Smith, President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, had been arrested, the reason being that he was alleged to have six wives. Brn. Butterworth and Mackie replied through the columns of these three papers setting the matter right, making the distinction between Joseph F. Smith of Salt Lake and Joseph Smith of Independence, Missouri. With the names of the two churches so similar, as well as the names of the presiding officers, it is perhaps not to wondered at that confusion occurs in the minds of the people. It seems to us that it must have been an evil genius that presided at the christening of Joseph F. Smith.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

The Boston Transcript has compiled statistics which show a falling off in the attendance at the larger colleges and universities in the East, and a corresponding gain in the attendance at Western colleges and universities. The greatest gain has been made by the Iowa State University.

President Roosevelt is to make a trip to Panama, where he will personally inspect the work being done on the canal. His flagship is the battleship Louisiana, with the armored cruisers Washington and Tennessee as escorts. He is expected to arrive in Colon about November 15. He will lodge in a new hotel at Ancon which overlooks the Culebra cut, one of the most difficult features of the work. He will visit Porto Rico on his return.

The North American Review prints some statistics gathered by Mr. Thomas Mosby, pardon attorney to the governor of Missouri. These statistics cover a period of two years in the Missouri state prison. Of seventeen hundred and ninety-four convicts received during that time Mr. Mosby finds more than one third from twenty to twenty-five years of age, the age of greatest criminality being twenty-three. He states that nearly one half of the convicts have led temperate lives, that religion is a greater factor in preventing crime than education, that marriage operates against criminal tendencies, that half of that number knew no trade or profession, and that apparently only about fourteen per cent again lapsed into crime. His comparisons show a slightly greater proportion of criminals among the native born than among the foreign born.

The respective denominations to which these prisoners belonged are as follows: Baptist, 386; Methodist, 335; Catholic, 312; Christian, 120; Presbyterian, 48; Lutheran, 29; Episcopal, 16; Hebrew, 6; Dunkard, 5.

The percentage of illiteracy among them was four times as great as the percentage of illiteracy among the noncriminal class in Missouri. Those professing belief in some form of religion constituted about seventy-one per cent of the whole number.
News From Branches

LAMONI, IOWA.

Sunday was a beautiful day in Lamoni. At the morning service the audience was pleased to see President Joseph Smith in the pulpit. This was the first time he had preached in Lamoni for over a year and we were thankful that his physical condition permitted him again to occupy. Bro. John Smith was in charge of the services and introduced the speaker as "one whom we all love and respect." This was borne out at the close by the many hand-shakes extended by the Saints and friends. We were especially impressed with the kindly feeling manifested by nonmembers who came forward to greet him. His presence is appreciated among Lamonians and we trust it may be among the citizens of his new home.

At the regular branch business-meeting Tuesday night the following were received on letters from other branches; Sr. Burch from Lucas, Iowa, Branch; J. M. Blood from Porcupine, Wisconsin, Branch; E. T. Dawson from Sacramento, California, Branch; Maude, Maynard, and Estel Trumble from Hartford, Michigan; Andy M. Turnbull from Porcupine, Wisconsin, Branch; J. M. Blood from Sagle, Idaho. Letters were granted to F. M. and Ruth L. Smith to Independence, Missouri, and Clara M. Johnson to Boston, Massachusetts.

The officers of the branch, Sunday-school, and Religion met Tuesday evening for consultation.

Bro. Earl Hall, of Des Moines, Iowa, has accepted the position of foreman of the press-room of the HERALD Office. Bro. Hall is an efficient man in his line, and leaves a responsible position with the Chamberlain Company of Des Moines, where he had charge of the presswork of that establishment.

We are pleased that the church can find men within her ranks who can assist in the printing of the word, and also that there are efficient men in the ranks who are willing to consecrate their services.

Bro. Nicholas Stamm (who is now in his eightieth year) is among the newcomers at the home. Bro. Stamm has labored many years as an elder in the field and is forced to abandon the active field on account of infirmity.

Bro. George Day of Sherwood, North Dakota, purchased a home in Lamoni, and arrived with his family last week.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

The last week has added three more families of Saints to Independence, and while the ranks are increasing there is consequently a corresponding demand for employment. Either Independence must have more business institutions, where our people may have the opportunity of obtaining employment, or else for the present they must go to Kansas City to work.

A great many of our people are talking of a Thanksgiving service.

The effect of the young peoples' prayer-meetings upon the young people is that they are taking part in the regular Sunday afternoon prayer-meeting of the branch. The prayer-meeting of last Sunday afternoon was unusually well attended and profitable.

Last Tuesday, the 6th, was the occasion of the seventy-fourth birthday of our President, Joseph Smith. In the evening a number of the young people surprised him at his home, bringing garlands of flowers as an evidence of their love for Bro. Joseph— their friend. Bro. Alma Luff as spokesman for the young people, made a very fitting address, which was responded to by Bro. Smith in his characteristic way, evidencing that at the end of seventy-four years his "heart is young." Music helped to make a pleasant evening pass quickly, and as the young people left and the strains of "God be with you till we meet again" died away there was abundant evidence of that good feeling so familiar to the heart of all real Latter Day Saints.

We are glad to have with us again Sr. Smith, but the name is so unusual that you would not know who we meant if we did not say Sr. Fred M. Smith.

The Independence Sunday-school is doing better in attendance this month than last, and present indications bid fair to make the winter a very successful one in Sunday-school work.

On last Sunday morning, on one of the principal streets of Independence were three boys. One was going west with a Sunday-school paper in his hand, and the other two were going east, each with a pair of boxing-gloves under his arm. The boy with the Sunday-school paper cried, "Hello." By way of reply, the other two boys held up their gloves. On which side of the street are you?

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

It pleases me to know that there is to be established in the HERALD a department for branch news. We trust, as time goes on, to furnish you with such items as may be deemed profitable. Every home in the church owes the HERALD a place of lodging, and it may appear as a fault of that worthy organ, if it does not take steps to force recognition of its claims.

Bro. J. Arthur Davis and James Hackett have been laboring in and around Chicago for a few weeks, and have preached a few good sermons to the Saints here. Bro. Davis presided at our regular prayer-meeting last week, and in closing the services made the remark that he did not make quite so much noise in his testimonies as some people, but that the testimony in his heart spoke loud for the gospel.

Bro. Hackett, assisting in the meeting, told us something about conditions in Zion City, where he and Bro. Davis had for some days sought to get a (Continued on page 1036.)

PRESIDENCY OF SEVEN PRESIDENTS, AND THE SEVENTY.
THERE CALLING, DUTIES, AND PREROGATIVES AS VIEWED BY ONE OF THE APOSTLES.

The object of the writer in giving this exposition is not with a view to instruct the men occupying the important calling and position named above, as he is cognizant of the fact that the great majority are conversant with the duties and prerogatives of said office, but it is because he has discovered by reason of his extensive travels, and his close relationship with the officers and members of the church, that there are but few who seem to realize that the Lord has such an important body of officers in his great organization, the church of the first-born.

The Lord has decreed "that every man should stand in his own office, and labor in his own calling," and has further decreed that all these officers should be sustained and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayers of his people. It is a query as to how they can be intelligently sustained and upheld if we are ignorant as to the character of the responsibility and the nature of the work required of them by the Lord and the church.

The law provides for seven presidents of seventy:

And it is according to the vision, showing the order of the seventy, that they should have seven presidents to preside over them, chosen out of the number of the seventy, and the seventh president of these presidents is to preside over the six.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 43.

My servants of the seventy may select from their number seven; of which number those now being of the seven presidents of seventy shall be a part; who shall form the presidency of seven presidents of seventy as provided in my law.—Doctrine and Covenants 121:5.

The seven presidents are called and appointed as follows:

My servants, the presidents of the seventy, may, with the consent and approval of their brethren of the seventy sitting in council together, select from their brethren one to take the place of my servant I. N. White, if he accept the appointment to the quorum of twelve, and his choosing be approved by the church; and in like manner they may fill any other vacancy that has or may occur; such selection and appointment to be made in the spirit of prayer and supplication and wisdom, and to be approved by the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 124: 5.

All seventy are designated through the seven presidents:

And those seven presidents are to choose other seventy besides the first seventy, to whom they belong, and are to preside over them; and also other seventy until seven times seventy, if the labor in the vineyard of necessity requires it.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 43.

They are to choose or select from elders' quorums:

The presidents of seventy are instructed to select from the several quorums of elders such as are qualified and in a condition to take upon them the office of seventy, that they may be ordained unto the filling of the first quorum of seventy. In making these selections the presidents of seventy should confer with the several quorums before selecting, and be guided by wisdom and the Spirit of revelation, choosing none but men of good repute.—Doctrine and Covenants 190: 10.

The writer often propounds the following question to officers and members: How are the Seventy called? The answer invariably is, "Through Joseph Smith, the president, the Twelve, or by the General Conference." And it is very seldom the correct answer is given, that they are called through the seven presidents. Strange, is it not, that so few in the church know how those men are called to such an important office, especially as the Lord has made the manner of their calling so plain, time and again, in the revelations given to the church in these last days? And if we were to ask the question, What are the names of the brethren who comprise the Seven Presidents of Seventy, not one in one hundred could give the name of one of them.

God directs that the seven presidents in making these selections be guided by "wisdom and the Spirit of revelation." These men go before the Lord in fasting and prayer, therefore all who are selected in this way (God's way) are chosen of God, as much as though they were called through the President of the church direct; for God designated that through this channel (Seven Presidents of Seventy) all those who are chosen to be his special witnesses, other than the Twelve, should be called, and their selection be confirmed by a High Council or General Conference.

It is the duty of seven presidents to preside over the seventy when assembled in council together:

It is according to the vision that the seven presidents of the seventy shall preside over the whole number of the seventy when assembled in council together: the senior, or chosen president of the seven presidents, shall preside over the six other presidents in their councils as presidents of the seventy; and when either quorum is sitting in council, as a quorum, then its chosen president shall preside over its sittings. When any quorum of the seventy may be sitting, any one, or all of the seven presidents, may at their request, or by invitation of such quorum, be present and take part in the deliberations of such council, but the president of such quorum only shall preside over its sittings. When any quorum of the seventy may be sitting, except by consent of the quorum obtained by vote properly taken.—Doctrine and Covenants 124: 6.

The duties and responsibilities of the seventies are as follows:

And these seventy are to be traveling ministers unto the Gentiles, first, and also unto the Jews, whereas other officers of the church, who belong not unto the twelve neither the seventy, are not under the responsibility to travel among all nations, but are to travel as their circumstances shall allow.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 43.

They are to travel continually and bear record of his name:

And again, I give unto you Joseph Young, Josiah Butterfield, Daniel Miles, Henry Herriman, Zera Pulsipher, Levi Hancock, James Foster, to preside over the quorum of seventies, which quorum is instituted for traveling elders to bear record of my name in all the world, wherever the traveling high council, my apostles, shall send them to prepare a way before my face. The difference between this quorum and the quorum of elders is, that one is to travel continually, and the other is to preside over the churches from time to time.—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 44.
They are a traveling and presiding council:
And also President Leonard Rich, Levi W. Hancock, Sylvester Smith, and Lyman Sherman, organized the council of seventy.—Doctrine and Covenants, page 327.
Resolved that it is the opinion of this joint council, that the words “presiding council” in the fourth and seventh paragraphs of section 120 [of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants] refer to the traveling ministry—the twelve and seventy.—Doctrine and Covenants 120:12.

When in branches and districts, their advice and counsel are to be sought and respected when given:
In both branches and districts the presiding officers should be considered and respected in their offices; nevertheless, the traveling presiding councils of the church being made by the law, their calling and voice of the church the directing, regulating and advising authorities of the church, and representing it abroad, should when present in either district or branch be regarded and considered as the leading representative authorities of the church, and be respected as such, their counsel and advice are to be sought and respected when given; and in cases of conflict, or extremity, their decision should be listened to and regarded, subject to the appeal and adjudication provided for in the law.—Doctrine and Covenants 120:4.

We have oftentimes heard it repeated by officers and members in districts and branches that the Seventy had no right whatever in branches or districts, but should spend their entire time out on the frontier, breaking up new ground, and pushing the preaching of the word into new fields. It is evident that those who make such statements are not acquainted with the law and the duties of these officers: for in the quotation made above the Lord emphatically points out that these men are among his leading representative authorities, and are to advise and counsel in districts and branches; and that their counsel and advice are to be sought and respected when given.
Had the Saints paid proper respect to the traveling ministry, the Lord would not have been under the necessity of calling the attention of the church to the following important fact:
It is my will that ye more fully honor and pay heed to the voice and counsel of the traveling ministry in spiritual things; which if ye do not the office which they hold is not honored in my service, and the good they should do is made void.—Doctrine and Covenants 118:3.
All admit that the Seventy and Twelve are the traveling missionary ministers proper of the church.
They are special witnesses for Christ in the world:
The seventy are also called to preach the gospel, and to be especial witnesses unto the Gentiles and in all the world—thus differing from other officers in the church in the duties of their calling.—Doctrine and Covenants 104:11.
The Seventy are to act in the name of the Lord under the direction of the Twelve, or the traveling high council, in building up the church, and regulating all the affairs of the same in all nations; first unto the Gentiles, and then to the Jews.
The Seventy with the Twelve are to push the preaching of the word into new fields:
The work now lying before the missionary quorums of the church is of such increased magnitude and importance—the field so white unto the harvest, and the need for laborers so great that the twelve and seventy under their direction, together with such high priests and elders as can travel and preach as missionaries, shall be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work, leaving the branches and districts where organization is effected to the care and administration of the standing ministers, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, so far as possible; thus freeing these spiritual authorities and leaving them at liberty to push the preaching of the word into the new fields now widening before them; in which work, if they will but now take counsel, saith the Spirit, they shall feel a peace and vigor of mind surpassing what they have enjoyed in the past.—Doctrine and Covenants 122:7.

They are to protect the law and usages of the church and may require local authorities to adjust difficulties:
In matters of personal importance and conduct arising in branches or districts, the authorities of those branches and districts should be authorized and permitted to settle them; the traveling councils [twelve and seventy] taking cognizance of those only in which the law and usages of the church are involved, and the general interests of the church are concerned.—Doctrine and Covenants 120:7.
The Seventy have no responsibility of presiding:
The difference between this quorum and the quorum of elders is, that one is to travel continually, and the other is to preside over the churches from time to time; the one has the responsibility of presiding from time to time, and the other has no responsibility of presiding, saith the Lord your God.—Doctrine and Covenants 107:44.
The position is taken by many that the statement made in the above passage that the Seventy has no responsibility of presiding, means that they should not preside under any condition or circumstance, but leaves the matter of presidency solely to the high priests and elders. To my mind this is an extreme interpretation of the clause referred to. It does not say that they shall not preside: the same language is used with reference to the high priests and elders, where it says that they have the responsibility of presiding, nevertheless they do travel as missionaries; but they are not under the responsibility to travel. However, the Quorum of Twelve can not appoint a hight priest or elder as traveling missionary without the consent of such officers, and in case they did appoint them they would not be under the necessity of prosecuting the mission assigned them, unless they were willing to do so; because they are not under the responsibility to travel. Therefore, does not the Seventy have the right to preside where the conditions and circumstances require, in the same sense that the high priest can travel where the conditions require? I have always urged the Seventy in my field not to preside when there were high priests or elders, who are eligible, upon the grounds that “every man should stand in his own office and labor in his own calling.” There have been emergencies where it seemed that for the good of the work it was absolutely necessary for the Seventy to preside over branches and districts for the time being, but this should not be done except in extreme cases.
The Seventy have the right to preside when it is necessary for the good of the work; the same language is used with reference to the high priests and elders.
voice of the church have the power of apostles in their administrations:

The seventy when traveling by the voice of the church, or sent by the twelve to minister the word where the twelve can not go, are in the powers of their ministration apostles—those sent—and in meetings where no organization exists should preside, if no member of the twelve or presidency be present.—Doctrine and Covenants 130:3.

In the past there has been misunderstanding, even on the part of some of the Seventy, and by reason of this misunderstanding there has been dissatisfaction felt, and confusion ensued as a result of it, some of the Seventy contending that one seventy was as high as another and equal in point of authority, power, and prerogatives, and when the church or the Twelve has appointed one of their number in charge of missions where they had been appointed to labor have expressed dissatisfaction with such appointment. It ought to be apparent to these brethren that there is a distinction in point of authority: for the Lord says that the seventy who have been appointed in charge by the church and the Twelve are apostles in their administrations, by virtue of the special authority delegated by said authorities; hence while acting in that capacity they should be recognized by seventies laboring in their mission as being higher than themselves in point of authority; as these men act by the authority of and in place of the Twelve where the Twelve can not go.

The decision of the Seventy is equal to the decision of the Presidency and of the Twelve:

And they [the Seventy] form a quorum equal in authority to that of the twelve especial witnesses, or apostles, just named.—Doctrine and Covenants 104:11.

They are one of the three quorums which protect the rights of the people:

In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern. I inquired what quorums of the church were meant, and I was answered, the three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law—the presidency, the twelve, and the seventy.—Doctrine and Covenants 128:10.

Much more might be written on this subject, but doubtless this will suffice for the present.

THE GENERAL FEATURES OF STAKE WORK.

(Concluded from last week.)

From a practical standpoint it may be inquired, What can this council do more than it is doing to further the work in the Lamoni Stake? For after all, what to do, and how to do it, should be the leading consideration with us at this time as at all times. No doubt we will all be agreed that the development of personal righteousness is the chief demand of the present hour. If personal righteousness is the great and crying need at this time, how shall we define just exactly what we mean by that phrase? It may safely be assumed that a leading reason why we meet with such poor success in attaining the ends aimed at is that our ideas are so vague and ill-defined touching the object we have in view.

Having in view the attainment of personal righteousness, or, in other words, personal right-doing, what do we mean by those words? What things are involved in right-doing, and what is the foundation or starting-point of any act of right-doing? The elders have been wont to say in their preaching that faith in God is the foundation of all righteousness. This assumes that God is or should be the guiding, controlling, directing, regulating power and authority in our affairs, in all our conduct and actions; that his will is the law that should govern in our decisions as to whether we shall do or not do the things that seem to call upon us for action. Then, if the will of the living Lord is to be the rule of our action, this implies that there is a means by which we may decide at any and all times of what that will may be in regard to any action that may, for the time being, be in contemplation. This means is commonly designated as the Spirit of God, that is to guide into all truth, or in other words, guide into all things that we are required to do. According to the promise this Spirit is to be with the obedient always, so that the obedient may always be aware what the will of the Lord is concerning their doings.

To take advantage of the leadings of the Spirit at all times requires that a man have perfect freedom and liberty. If he be subject to the dictation of another man, or set of men, he may not be free to follow the guidance that may be offered him by the Spirit of truth. Hence the great necessity that men should be free, not only politically and religiously, but industrially as well. We ought to take a leading part in getting our own people, and through them all other people, to see this. This is certainly involved in our divine heritage of freedom. So long as any man is subject to another man in the matter of his work, he is not a perfectly free man. It is a bad thing to have to beg for bread, but how much better is it when a man has to beg for work in order that he may get bread? It is indeed a worse reflection upon the present order of things that a man should have to beg for work than that he should have to beg for bread. A man may be obliged to ask for bread, when on account of ill health or some other unfortunate circumstance he may not be able to earn his subsistence, but under the working of the celestial law his subsistence would be granted him as freely as it would be granted the child yet too young or immature to make his own bread.

But when a strong man, able and willing to work, is, at the dictation of some other man or men, shut out from those avenues and resources by which his labor will secure to him a livelihood, there is something radically wrong in any system that is marked by such conditions. Under the new order money, if used at all, will play a different part in the economy from what it plays now. It will then have to take the place of a servant, instead of being master as it is now. Then no man who is able to labor will be excused from doing his share of the world's work simply because he may have inherited a lot of money. Neither the idle rich nor the idle poor shall eat the bread or wear the garments of the laborer, if able to work.

In some quarters there is a great ado about securing a proper division of the good things of this world, but such people had better try to secure a proper division of work first, then a proper division of its results will take care of itself. Our people must be taught that a reasonable degree of work is due from every man or woman, that the possession of wealth excuses no one. They must be made to understand that idleness never did and never will produce happiness, either on earth or in heaven. The Lord sternly rebuked idleness among our people of a former generation. And in Doctrine and Covenants 68:4 we read:

And the inhabitants of Zion, also, shall remember their labors, inasmuch as they are appointed to labor, in all faithfulness; for the idler shall be had in remembrance before the Lord. Now, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with the inhabitants of Zion, for there are idlers among them; and their children are also growing up in wickedness; they also seek not earnestly the riches of eternity, but their eyes are full of greediness. These things ought not to be, and must be done away from among them.

Idleness and wickedness, almost invariably, go hand in hand. That was the trouble with Sodom.

Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fullness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and in her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy. And they were haughty, and committed abomination before me: therefore I took them away as I saw good.—Ezekiel 16:49, 50.

Thus pride, fullness of bread, abundance of idleness, haughtiness, and the committing of abominations was what caused the overthrow of Sodom, and the same things will prove the overthrow of any people. All the effete nations of the old world went down to destruction under just such conditions as this. Israel, Egypt, Babylon, Rome are examples of the ruin that follows in the wake of riches and idleness with the inevitable attendant licentiousness.

A frugal and industrious life is the surest safeguard against falling into vicious and ruinous habits and practices. Many a promising boy has been ruined because he was given abundance of money with nothing to do but seek the pleasures that his own uninformed imagination suggested. This is the reason why the Lord insists that the children of Zion be not permitted to grow up in idleness, that they be taught to work, and as soon as possible learn faithfully to earn the supplies of their own needs. To provide for this is one of the greatest problems before us. While an intellectual education is a good thing in its own place, it is a mistake to require a growing, vigorous boy to spend all the working hours in cramming his head. At least half of those hours should be spent in healthful, stimulating, profitable labor; labor that will secure such a reward as will provide for his real needs. In that way half the hours of study would give as good returns as the whole do under present methods.

It would be a grand good thing if our people generally would enter into the spirit of Doctrine and Covenants 38:9, which says, "And again I say unto you, I give unto you a commandment, that every man, both elder, priest, teacher, and also member, go to with his might, with the labor of his hands, to prepare and accomplish the things which I have commanded." If the farmers and other business men living near school towns would be so imbued with the spirit of helping the young to a practical and useful education that they would be willing to permit industrious and capable boys to work for a fair compensation a part of the day while the remainder of the day was spent in school work, one set of boys being in the field or shop, while another set was engaged in study! This might be done, perhaps, if the craving for money and the greed to make large profits were not so intense, and if the idea could be once entertained that there is a better use for work than simply to make money. It should be understood that proper work is a leading factor in a boy's or man's salvation.

It would, doubtless, greatly facilitate stake work if circumstances would permit the assembling of the council at stated periods for the purpose of studying the elements of the principles involved in the building up of righteousness; for it must be clear to every one that successful plans for carrying forward any work can not be formulated until there is first a comprehensive understanding of the fundamental requirements of that work.

The organization of stakes should be regarded as a forward step in the movement to build up Zion. Zion being properly regarded as the pure in heart, its building up must necessarily take into consideration means for the promotion of purity of heart and its allied principles. In that light the building up of Zion does not concern itself with the purchase of lands in Jackson County, Missouri, and the erection of dwellings, business houses, or manufactories thereon except as these things provide an opportunity for the development of a Christlike character by the adoption in business of the principles involved in the golden rule, together with faithful adherence to the plan committed to us by the Lord himself to accomplish that purpose.

The building of character is an every-day work. It is not Sunday alone that is concerned in it. Every day in the week and every hour of the day contributes its quota of the elements that enter into a person’s character. Character being simply the sum total of a person’s habits, it follows that whatever influences affect his habits of working, of thinking, and of feeling, in any degree, to that extent determines the quality of his character either for good or for evil. With most people the effort to secure the daily bread and clothing and shelter occupies the greater share of the time and energy at their disposal, and because of this fact the chief attention should be directed to seeing that proper motives and incentives govern the individual in the putting forth of his energies; for it is not alone the work that is done that makes or mars character, but the spirit in which it is done, and the motive which prompts it must be taken into account, even more than the nature of the work itself. It is not going too far to assume that right here is where the most serious mistakes have been made by the great majority of people who have been trying to prepare for the better life.

Perhaps the chief thing to be kept in mind is that in the divine economy all men and women are held to be members of one common family; that all, without exception, are regarded as the children of one common Father, who loves all his children without partiality. All his blessings, both temporal and spiritual, are intended for the common benefit of all his children. Each one of those children should regard himself or herself as a member of one great family who is under obligation from the very nature of the case to apply his or her energies towards the common welfare of the entire body, and in the general sense that body includes not only every member of the church, but every human creature as well. When Paul wrote to the Corinthian church saying, “Ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular,” his language clearly implies that he regarded the rest of mankind outside of the saints as members in general, and because the saints were members in particular, this relation placed them under particular obligation to do particular service for the common good.

This principle was held to be true of Jesus Christ himself. John says of him, “He is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world.” And so while there are special blessings for the children of the covenant, there is a common salvation with its attendant blessings for all mankind.

The disciples of Christ share the more abundant life, not for their own behalf alone, but that its influence may be shed abroad upon the common life of the whole people. As the Son of God was given to be the light of every man that cometh into the world, so he in turn gave unto his disciples to be the light of the world—not of the church, but of the world.

Again, the Savior gave unto his disciples to be the salt of the earth, that their saving and preservative influence might keep the world from going to total destruction. He taught them that as their Father in heaven made his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sent rain on the just and the unjust, they were to show themselves worthy of such a Father by loving their enemies, blessing those that cursed them, doing good to those who hated them, and praying for those who despitefully used and persecuted them, and in this way becoming perfect as their Father in heaven is perfect. And one of the leading apostles instructed the saints to do good to all men, but especially to the household of faith; this latter on the principle that charity begins at home; not that it should stop there, but that it should go forth from thence and radiate to all the world.

In this regard there are very important lessons to be gathered from the beautiful illustration of Paul wherein he compares the church of Christ to the body of a man, showing that the members should have the same care one for another. For the body had need of the service of every member, because the different members performed their various functions, not for the sole benefit of the organ performing the function, but for the good and advantage of the whole body. The eye discharges the function of seeing, not for itself alone, but for the good of the entire man; the hands work and labor for the benefit of the whole being, and not for their own individual advantage only. And so with all the other organs and members of the human frame. They all work for the common good and the general welfare of the man.

Notice another thing. Under normal conditions no member absorbs more of the common supply of nourishment and support than is sufficient for its present needs, and if at any time the case is otherwise it is either a symptom or a cause of disease and a disturbance of the natural functions. Should there be too great a determination of the blood or other fluids to the head, we shall have apoplexy or congestion of the brain. For a similar reason there may be congestion of the lungs, of the stomach, of the bowels, and these different organs are hindered and interrupted in the execution of their functions and the entire body suffers as a consequence.

The abnormal conditions that exist in the body politic arise from analogous causes. Some of its members have been seduced from their proper labor for the common good to engage in storing up for themselves more than is necessary for the needs of the present, with the result that they have become congested and unfit to perform those functions of the general life to which the Creator assigned them. Thus the whole body of the people is sick and afflicted with disease and corruption as they were in the days when Isaiah wrote, “The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint. From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it; but wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores.”

By reading farther we learn the causes of these sorry conditions. It was found that those who should be interested in relieving the oppressed, in doing justice to the fatherless, and looking out for the cause of the widow, have become so absorbed in adding house to house and field to field that their proper functions have been neglected and the cries of the widow and the fatherless, and the hireling who has been defrauded of his rightful wages, are coming up into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth and calling for swift redress. Another cause assigned by the prophet is that the leading men are rebellious and companions of thieves; every one loveth gifts and followeth after rewards. Surely graft and bribery do flourish now as then, the law is ignored by those who are intent upon gain, and public franchises and privileges are stolen by those avaricious of power and wealth.

Bad and corrupt as it was, it was a very prosperous time that was alluded to by the prophet, “Their land also is full of silver and gold, neither is there any end of their treasures; their land is also full of horses, neither is there any end of their chariots.” This was the existing condition when “the day of the Lord of hosts soon cometh upon all nations; yea, upon the proud and lofty, and upon every one who is lifted up, and he shall be brought low.”

This is the kind of thing that we as a people are mixed up with, and from which by the help of the Lord we must extricate ourselves if we would assist in building up Zion. But let us not for a moment delude ourselves with the idea that corruption and venality are to be found only in the high places of the earth, among the wealthy and the powerful, the corporations and the trusts. No, rather let us see it as the prophet did, “From the sole of the foot even unto the head there in no soundness in it.” And the soles of the feet is where the cleansing must begin, this being figuratively expressed in the ordinance for entering the school of the prophets.

We may as well make up our minds first as last that the cleansing that is to be effective must begin with the common people. Let the politician, if he will, make an issue of cleaning out corrupt trusts and corporations, but as for us, let us apply ourselves to the feet; that upon which the whole structure of society stands, the common people. In this connection it is well to remember that it was upon the feet, composed of common things, that the stone cut out without hands smote the great image which Nebuchadnezzar saw, representing the kingdoms and institutions of this world. In the work of Christ the ax is to be laid unto the root of the tree, not unto the top, for when the roots are severed the whole thing, top and all, is bound to come down. The artificial things of the world, both root and branch, are doomed to destruction.

The “root and branch” phrase of Malachi indicates what radical work must be done with the corrupt institutions of this world. No compromise whatever is permissible. There can be no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. While there should be a free mingling with the people for the purpose of influencing them for good and maintaining a kindly interest in them, there should be no recognition of the corrupt practices by which the weak and the poor are robbed of their just rights. The governing and controlling institutions of the world are founded in selfishness and are perpetuated for the purpose of promoting the selfish interests of mankind, therefore there is a necessity for a new institution based upon the love of God and men, to replace the old institutions that have been established for the acquiring of gain and promoting selfishness.

To enter in good faith upon a work of this kind will entail great sacrifices as pertaining to many things that are highly esteemed among men, but it will not entail any sacrifice of truth and virtue, of goodness and right, of love and mercy, of faith and righteousness. It will not involve the loss of any good that is necessary for our present or future welfare. It will not deprive us of the favor and protection of our heavenly Father, nor of the respect and esteem of the pure and the good.

As has been noticed many times, love is the fundamental principle of the whole Zionic economy, and everything inconsistent with it is to be held as antagonistic and detrimental to its real purpose and intent, and is to be eliminated as speedily as may be practicable, though it take generations to do it. Indeed it will be a work of many generations to bring the people anywhere near the Zionic ideal. This is so because the undertaking involves a change in man’s nature, conversion so radical as to make of the man an entirely new creature; and this can not be done all at once; it is a work and result of the ages. Moreover, in this work the Lord must take the lead; for it is his work, and man at best can only be a helper in it. No man can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care. Missionaries may make proselytes without these qualifications, but they can not make disciples of the Christ without them.

A great many of the revelations in the Book of Covenants have been given for the purpose of showing how to give expression to the love of God. Section 42, paragraph 8, begins with these significant words: “If thou lovest me thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And behold, thou wilt remember the poor and consecrate thy properties for their support.” Matthew 25 shows that the test to be applied to those who come before the Lord in judgment will be whether they fed the hungry, clothed the naked, or ministered to those who were sick or deprived of their liberty. This is to be the final test of love to God and love to man. John puts it thus, “But who so hath this world’s good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him; how dwelleth the love of God in him?” And James is equally emphatic in showing that he who gives not what is needful to the naked and destitute has not the faith of Christ.

THE WHOLE DUTY OF MAN.

SYNOPSIS OF A FAREWELL SERMON BY ELDER ELBERT A. SMITH AT BURLINGTON, IOWA, OCTOBER 22, 1906.

In his celebrated funeral oration, Mark Anthony says, “If you have tears, prepare to shed them now!”

I suppose that this is the prevailing sentiment of a truly orthodox farewell sermon; but the world does not think much of our orthodoxy, and we do not think much of theirs, so we may depart from the usual pattern. Personally I like to see the darker phases of life lightened with a gleam of cheerfulness or even of humor. It is a sodden day that has no ray of sunlight, and it must indeed be a desperate situation that has no encouraging feature. Even Ingersoll at the graveside of his brother said that in the hour of death “hope saw a shining star.” If an agnostic, mourning the departure of such an intimate friend, could hope, surely Latter Day Saints may preserve their fortitude under most trials.

Three and a half years ago we landed in the city of Burlington. I do not recollect whether we had a dollar in our pockets or not, and by industry and frugality we have accumulated enough to get out of town on. But we have gained experiences and formed friendships that are above value. They will endure when the great dollar-mark has been obliterated from the minds of men.

I used to work with a certain man who would laugh when any of our fellow workmen were afflicted with an accident that was at once painful yet amusing. When reproached, he said that he laughed because he was glad that he was sorry. Now I am glad that when the hour for good-byes has arrived we are sorry. I should be sorry if we were glad. One of the orthodox ministers who has been in the city for twelve years is about to resign his pastorate, and having heard the resolutions of regret and read the press notices of his departure I ventured the other day to condole with one of his church followers. What was my surprise when she replied, “Oh, well! we have been wishing for a change, anyway.” I would hate to say farewell under those conditions even worse than I do now.

To-night at midnight my term of office expires, and promptly at midnight the branch presidency, with all its rights, privileges, and appurtenances passes into the hands of Bro. Reiste. Bro. Reiste and I are old friends. We met last Sunday morning, shortly after four o’clock, when he came knocking at my door. At that hour he was somewhat better dressed than I; but I had the advantage along other lines, so I took him in and made him a bed on the sofa where he spent the rest of the night. And since that date we have been old friends.

We have prayed that G-d would send the right man to labor here, and I believe that our prayers have been answered. I bespeak for Bro. Reiste one of the privileges that you have given me,—you have been kindly lenient with my faults and have rated my virtues, to say the least, at par, and I honestly think far above their real value.

Now I invite your attention to a statement of scripture found in Ecclesiastes, the eleventh chapter:

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man.

This is perhaps a fitting text for this occasion. It is the summing up of the wisdom gleaned by another preacher from many years of experience, observation, and study. It is the message of an old and experienced man and if young men and women would but heed it they would save themselves the pains by which he so hardly earned it. But alas! we are seldom willing to accept the wisdom of others until in anguish of soul it is borne in upon us.

This is in fact a message from God to man, stating the whole duty of man. What an important thing a message is! How important it is that it should be delivered exactly as given. Think of the expense we are to that messages may be delivered from friend to friend. Steamships plow the seas, fast mail-trains traverse the continents, telephone and telegraph lines encircle the globe, and even the waves of air bear the wireless message from man to man. Engineers, firemen, and letter-carriers face the summer heat and winter cold; and the United States mail-box is a sacred thing, simply that the message sent from man to man may be delivered speedily and unaltered. Now here we have a greater thing, a message from God to man, as couched in the commandments of God, and the ministers and members of the church are charged that they deliver it without violation of spirit or of letter.

In this age men have grown to think that the word may be altered, and some things commanded may be dispensed with. God foresaw that condition, and so when the angel was sent with the restored gospel he came, according to John, with the same unaltered message, “Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come.” So the very spirit of our work is couched in this text and to us ere the end come it is given to tell the world “the conclusion of the whole matter” that they should “fear God and give him glory,” or, as the preacher expresses it, “keep all his commandments.”
Our success or failure will depend upon obedience. We mean true success. It is strange that success and failure should at times be so confused. Mark Twain once told a reporter that his whole life had been shadowed and saddened by a mystery, that when a boy he was one of two twins who looked so much alike that when one died no one ever knew whether it was he or his brother. Now success and failure often look so much alike that when a man is buried no one but God knows whether the green grass will cover a failure or a success. The rich man who thought to tear down his barns and build larger thought himself a success. His neighbors undoubtedly thought so and gave him great honor at his burial. But God, who sent the grim messenger of death to knock at his door, knew him for a failure and said, ‘Thou fool, this night shall thy soul be required of thee.’” Lazarus was esteemed a failure and Diives a success; but on the other side the grave the verdict was reversed by a court higher than the court of public opinion.

Christ has given the test in the parable of the builders. The successful man was the obedient man, who heard the words and did them. The failure was the man who heard them and did them not.

It is the whole duty of man to obey God, as stated in this text, because God is in charge and if we do what he says the responsibility for disaster, if such could come under such conditions, will be upon him and not upon us. Every old soldier knows that the officer in command is responsible. We can afford to obey because back of the command is an individual who is a proper commander. At the Battle of Balac­lava, in the Crimean War, by mistake, six hundred British soldiers were commanded to fling themselves against a great Russian army. The famous “Charge of the Light Brigade” followed, and we are told that though they well knew “some one had blundered,” it was theirs “not to make reply, theirs not to reason why, theirs but to do and die!”

The soldiers of the cross have this advantage, that God usually tells them why,—“This do and thou shalt live.” And if at times he does not tell them why, they know that infinite wisdom and love are back of the commandment and no blunders will be made and no unnecessary sacrifices will be ordered.

Obviously it is impossible for me to recount all the commandments of God; but the Master has epitomized them, or rather given the two commandments which are the major notes in all the scale of divine authority and human obedience. He declared:

 Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.

The first commandment requires undivided consecration of might, mind, and strength, or brain, heart, and body. Some are required to perform mostly mental labor and some mostly physical labor; but each must give all of every faculty required in his line of service. And especially each must put his heart into the work.

In a late number of the Ram’s Horn there appeared a cartoon which seemed to me quite significant, especially in what we might term a sectarian paper. It represented a man before the altar. With one hand he placed upon the altar a prayer, with the other he held behind his back a bag of money which was indicated as tithing, and under the picture were the words from Malachi, “Will a man rob God?”

This man sought to give a divided service. The prayer which represented his brain was given, but the money which was the fruit of other powers, or of all his powers, was retained. Somewhere between the right hand which offered the prayer and the left hand which withheld the money there was something wrong, and that wrong was in his heart. Where the heart is enlisted there are no reservations. But when the brain alone indicates a certain line of conduct as policy, so that it may be “all right” with us in the beyond, the rebellious heart will so swerve us that it will be all wrong.

We note that the next great commandment is that we love our brethren as ourselves. I conceive that to be the rule which obtains in heaven and to be what we pray for when we pray thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. This means that our ambitions shall include our brethren and we will desire them to have as excellent advantages as we enjoy.

In conclusion permit me to invite your attention to the text which was inscribed on the souvenir bookmarks distributed at the farewell reception:

Finally, brethren, farewell. Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you.—2 Corinthians 13:11.

You see there is a promise attached to almost every commandment, and here we are promised that the God of love and peace will be with us if we abide the commandments which enjoin love and peace, otherwise we are not one and are none of his.

We have been blessed with peace, as a branch, for the past three and a half years, and for that we are thankful, and also for your cooperation and good will during that time. I have wondered that you should hold me so high in your esteem, and have talked with my family about it; and the only way that I can account for it is that it has been a blessing from God, and that his Spirit has been with us and has cemented our friendship and opened your hearts to us in a way that could not otherwise have been.

I am just as anxious for this condition of peace to continue as though I were to be here. I am just as anxious for the branch to flourish under Bro. Reiste’s management as I was for it to flourish under my management. In reality it is not his management or mine, if we are both directed by the Holy Spirit,— we can simply water the seed and pray God to send the increase.

I conceive the greatest difficulty in the way of peaceful advancement to be among ourselves. We are of varying dispositions and temperaments, and alas! are not willing enough to make allowances for that fact. Yet why should I demand that every preacher should stick his hands in his pockets when he gets interested, just because I have that habit?

We should be willing for men to do things in their own way. The man who has no individuality would not make you a good branch officer of any kind. He would not be worth the paper his license is written on. As a rule Latter Day Saint elders are not willing to be melted down and run into the mold of any man’s opinion. They have individuality because they are not of a factory-made ministry. You may find any number of machine-made articles exactly alike; but you will seldom find two hand-made articles exactly alike. It is so with God: he seldom makes two men exactly alike in form or temperament.

Every one wants his own way: and we should strive to get our own way, if after prayer and study and counsel it shall be fully determined in our consciences that our way is right. But if there is a reasonable doubt in the matter, better wait awhile until the mists have cleared away.

Now the voice of the Spirit to you at this time is that the words of scripture which I have just read are as though God spoke them to you now: If you will be of one mind and live in peace, the God of love and of peace will be with you.

VOLIVA PLANS GREATER ZION.

Wilbur Glenn Voliva opened his heart to a company of his followers in Kenosha yesterday morning and told of his plans for the erection of a new Zion, which he would make the greatest religious colony in the world. The plan of Voliva is to bring together again the scattered forces of Zion City. In speaking in Kenosha, Voliva started to talk on “The kingdom of God,” and then he outlined his plans.

At the climax of his address he qualified his faith so far as to threaten that if his religious plans should prove impracticable he would become an infidel and “smash the orthodox churches.”

“I am not as yet ready to give my policies to the world in a written statement,” he said, “but in a few weeks I will issue a statement which will make their heads swim at Zion City. These policies of mine shall be as different from those of John Alexander Dowie as day is from night.

“The first command that shall be observed in the new city is absolute freedom from debt. Neither Zion nor a man in Zion shall owe a cent. John Alexander Dowie went into debt and this sent him to the devil. In the last ten years John Alexander Dowie received from his followers between $12,000,000 and $20,000,000, and with this great hoard he made of Zion a gigantic failure. Simply give me one third of this amount and I will make Zion the greatest success that the world has ever known.

“In Zion now,” he continued, “I am cleaning up a horrible mess, but I am going to make changes soon that will bring into Zion tens of thousands of persons, and her support will be even greater than in the halcyon days of Dowie. I am going to make Zion a world-power. Some time not far distant I shall organize a political party, and Zion, if I am to dictate her future, will go into the world of commercialism and politics.

“It is my plan to establish colonies, I know not where at this time, in which the homeless and friendless of the world shall be cared for. I shall have a tract of thousands of acres of land, to which I will be able to invite the homeless of the world and ask them to take twenty acre tracts and to earn an honest living. To their question as to the rent for the land there will be but one reply, ‘This is God’s land and for God’s people.”

“Dowie declared that he had laid plans for the establishment of two other religious colonies. He stated that his plan included the building of another colony near it, in which there would be cottages for the use of people taken from the slums of the great cities. He declared that in his new Zion there would be no place for caste or position and that every man would be equal in the church and before his fellow men.

“It will be my plan to build factories for the working men and go down and work with them. I shall absolutely do away with the aristocratic circle that has grown up in Zion and henceforth the work shall be for the downtrodden and the poor and all shall be of equal standing.”

Voliva made a drastic attack on the orthodox churches and declared: “I have no use for your churches—not one iota—and if the churches of the day represent the modern religion I will take the platform as an infidel and smash them.”

Although the crowd which listened to Voliva was a small one, he was interrupted frequently by applause.—Chicago Tribune, November 5, 1906.

ANOTHER MODEL CITY.

Gary, Indiana, is to have the biggest steel mills in the world, and it is also to embody a more generous ideal of the relations of capital and labor than has yet been promulgated. It will be built and owned by the United States Steel Corporation, yet so absolute will be the avoidance by that trust in matters of local politics that the citizens will have free way in everything they wish: municipal ownership will apply to practically everything, except the mills, and Director Perkins says that "he wants to see a city where there will be no strife, no intrigue, and no dissensions." He believes that Gary will be the model town, and as thousands of people in all parts of the country own more or fewer shares in the much-bestocked company, the outcome of the experiment will be watched with interest.

This scheme differs from cooperative enterprises in the past, in that everything is done for the cooperators in advance. Heretofore the communards have pooled their money, their issues, and their enthusiasm, have bought some acres in a dismal spot, have started to prove to the world the virtues of poverty, deeper at the end than in the beginning, each accusing the other of wanting more than his share. The asset of these companies has been poverty, deeper at the end than in the beginning, but always deep. The asset of Gary will be possibility of interest in a billion dollar manufacturing enterprise, and protection of society and the home as an initial guarantee. How will these advantages be treated? Will the result be an effort to wrest the properties of the company from its creators and owners, or will there be an attitude of genuine thankfulness, friendliness, and adherence to fraternal duty?

There have been other attempts to pacify the laboring element in manufacturing settlements, and they have not always succeeded. So greatly has the lot of the mechanic been mitigated within the past dozen years that thousands of employers are forced to consider the health and almost the happiness of their working force, who, from a merely personal point of view, care for it only as a producing factor, like the machinery. But the free schools, libraries, rest rooms, restaurants, baths, gardens, lectures, clubs, picnics, and other blessings in the famous works at Dayton did not prevent a strike; nor did the late Mr. Pullman's provision of what was then regarded as a model town for his workmen, with quarters both cheap and attractive, with clean streets, pleasant squares, schools, churches, a library, and all that, prevent one of the bitterest contests in our industrial history.

In both these instances, however, the working force has no political authority or ownership. The care and kindness shown to the toilers in Dayton are thought to smack of paternalism, if not of charity, while in Pullman the mechanic occupied his house only so long as he worked for the Pullman company, which owned every acre and every building in the place. He could not acquire a personal right in the property, save as he became a stockholder; and it is the policy of the big corporations in our time to encourage the acquiring of stock by their employees. The man who has an interest, more than wages, in the concern he works for, is the last man to tolerate carelessness and waste by his associates, the last man to shirk and be idle, and the last one to vote for a strike.

But the Gary undertaking differs from others with which it might be compared, in that the workman is initially the citizen, and not the floator. Whether he acquires stock in the steel corporation or not he acquires, in the fact of working for it, rights that surpass those of any other voter in the country. He can municipalize every property, except the mills, he can abolish existing institutions, devise substitutes, close or open grounds, run free cars, have free gas, or any other thing not too openly inconsistent with the ten commandments, provided he can bring a majority to his way of thinking. Like England, the town will create its own constitution as it goes along, and will be free to adopt ordinances desired by the mass. Such is the intention of the creators of Gary. If they prosper in this intention another step is taken toward that socialism which is probably inevitable, but incidentally causes of misunderstanding and strife will be eliminated, and others put in place of them; or else human nature will prove otherwise than what it is.—Kansas City Journal, November 5, 1906.

PROPOSED NATIONAL DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH.

There are four great wastes to-day, the more lamentable because they are unnecessary. They are preventable death, preventable sickness, preventable conditions of low physical and mental efficiency, and preventable ignorance. The magnitude of these wastes is testified to by experts competent to judge. They fall like the shades of night over the whole human race, blotting out its fairest years of happiness.

The facts are cold and bare—1,500,000 persons must die in the United States during the next twelve months; equivalent to 4,200,000 persons will be constantly sick; over 5,000,000 homes, consisting of 25,000,000 persons, will be made more or less wretched by mortality and morbidity.

We look with horror on the black plague of the Middle Ages. The black waste was but a passing cloud compared with the white waste visitation. Of the people living to-day over eight millions will die of tuberculosis, and the federal government does not raise a hand to help them.

The Department of Agriculture spends seven million dollars on plant health and animal health every year, but, with the exception of the splendid work done by Doctors Wiley, Atwater, and Benedict, Congress does not directly appropriate one cent for promoting the physical well-being of babies. Thousands have been expended in stamping out cholera among swine, but not one dollar was ever voted for eradicating pneumonia among human beings. Hundreds of thousands are consumed in saving the lives of elm-trees from the attacks of beetles; in warning farmers against blights effecting potato-plants; in importing Sicilian bugs to fertilize fig-blossoms in California; in ostracizing various species of weeds from the ranks of the useful plants, and in exterminating parasitic growths that prey on fruit-trees. In fact, the Department of Agriculture has expended during the last ten years over forty-six millions of dollars. But not a wheel of the official machinery at Washington was ever set in motion for the alleviation or cure of diseases of the heart or kidneys, which will carry off over six millions of our entire population. Eight millions will perish of pneumonia, and the entire event is accepted by the American people with a resignation equal to that of the Hindu, who, in the midst of indescribable filth, calmly awaits the day of the cholera.—J. Pease Norton. Ph. D., in "The Economic Advisability of Inaugurating a National Department of Health."

OUR BOYS.—NO. 5.

"He who helps a child," says Philips Brooks, "helps humanity with a distinctness, with an immediateness which no other help given to human creatures, in any other stage of their human life can possibly give again."

This testimony of Philips Brooks is the testimony of thousands of other good and wise men and women who have loved and had much to do with children. But what is of far more importance is the testimony to which the Lord has affixed his infallible witness and seal, and the fact upon which the entire superstructure of his instruction to parents regarding their children, rests. Because of the importance of this first period of the child's earth life the Lord withholds from Satan the power to tempt him, thus giving to parents a period of time in which to instruct and lay the foundation upon which the character of the child is to be built. And of such great importance does he deem these earliest years that he not only requires the work to be done, but lest any should be careless and negligent he solemnly forewarns parents that if it is not done the sin shall be upon their heads. No room is left for any misunderstanding here, neither any excuse for shirking of responsibility. It rests upon parents from first to last.

In saying this we are not forgetting the work for which the church is responsible, neither the work of that very important arm of church service, the Sunday-school, which God has recognized as a help to the church. Far from it, for with gratitude we recognize not these alone, but are grateful for every help offered—every word written in behalf of the children, and for every effort which helps to make plain the will of the Lord in regard to them. But while this is so, we yet wish to make clear this one point upon which the Lord has placed such emphasis; namely, the responsibility of parents.

We notice first that God requires our boy to be presented to the church that a blessing may be given him under the hands of his servants—his ministry. This is no useless ceremony—no idle command. The height and depth of its purpose may not be revealed to us, but, depend upon it, it is there—in the wisdom of the Father, else would he not have required it, neither would Jesus have taken the children in his arms and blessed them. Between this period and the age of eight years children are to be so instructed by their parents that they are ready for baptism, and the law reads: "And their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old and receive the laying on of the hands and they [the parents] shall also teach their children to pray and to walk uprightly before the Lord."

Here we find that our boys is to be taught the beatitudes of the gospel, as well as its ordinances, and, to be brief upon this point, he must be taught to love and reverence whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, and of good report. He must be taught "to walk uprightly before the Lord." How can he walk uprightly without loving the things which God loves as well as doing the things which he requires to be done? In the gospel of Christ the beatitudes are found, and these the saint of God must love and think upon. There is no place in the gospel economy for anything which is not pure, just, and true.

Is the atmosphere in which our boy lives the healthful one which the practice of these virtues would naturally create? If not, then why not? The word of God is our standard, and it is possible for us to learn from that just what God approves of and what he condemns. That of which he approves is lovely in his sight and that which he condemns is sin.

We have dwelt at considerable length upon the great importance of obedience and the value God places upon it. "To obey," said his prophet, "is better than sacrifice; and to hearken, than the fat of rams." The Lord has commanded the members of his church in these words: "And their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins, when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands."

Are you a reader of Zion's Hope—the paper published by the church for our children? If you are, and if you read the letters written by the children to that paper, will you tell us how often you read something like this: "I am ten years old. I have not been baptized yet, but I hope to be some day." The age varies; sometimes instead of ten years it is eleven, twelve, and at other times fourteen, or even fifteen years of age. And yet these children often write, "Papa and mamma belong to the church." We confess to you that we never read such a letter without thinking: What an object lesson of disobedience! Well may the Lord say through his servant Joseph Luff, "To whom shall I speak? and by whom shall my counsel be observed?" But if this careless disregard upon the part of parents of the law God has given seems strange, what shall we say when it comes to the point of questioning what is the proper age for the instruction of our children? Of the practice of patience of our heavenly Father! "Unto whom shall I speak?" Is not this like the word of the Lord which came to Jeremiah concerning ancient Israel? "The Lord hath sent unto you all his servants the prophets, rising early and sending them; but ye have not hearkened nor inclined your ear to hear."

Hands can not be laid upon our boy for the reception of the Holy Ghost until after he has been baptized. Can we tell—dare we even try to estimate the full meaning of this? But one glorious promise in connection with it, yes, two, and even more the Savior has told us.

It is the fixed, unalterable policy of Satan—Satan the enemy of all righteousness—to persuade parents to disregard the instruction God has given them concerning their children. Just as well as the priests of the Catholic Church know the vital power of gaining the child before he is eight years old if they would hold him afterwards, just so well does Satan know that if he can influence the parent to disregard the instruction of the Lord and leave the child un nurtured and untrained during these early years, especially if he can so prevail that our boy is left without the fold—left unaided by the Comforter, so well does he know how wonderfully his power is strengthened and his chances of holding him afterward increased.

"Your boy," he whispers to the parent, "is not yet old enough to judge for himself.' "True, Satan, and for this reason God has judged for him." "He does not yet know his own mind, and hence can not choose wisely for himself." "True again, Satan, and for this reason God chooses for him, and the choice of God is that when he has come to years of accountability, and before he allows you to undertake to deceive him and lead him astray, he is to be gathered into the fold, and through the laying on of hands is to obtain the Comforter,—the guide into all truth, of which Jesus said, 'If I go not away the Comforter will not come unto you but if I depart I will send him unto you.'"

This guide, then, which we in our worldly wisdom are rejecting, cost the lifeblood of the parents of responsibility? Have we regarded the blessing of children so that they are intelligently prepared for baptism, will not come unto you but if I depart I will send him unto you.'

"Zion's Hope" referred to? When is the gift of the Holy Spirit promised? What are parents withholding from their children who do not obey this command? In what places are parents held directly responsible for the keeping of this commandment? Is there less need to keep it elsewhere? Will the blessings to follow be any less to those who are able to keep it in other places?

Letter Department

BISBEE, Arizona, October 17, 1906.

Editors Herald: After a long silence, I write again to the letter department of your interesting and always appreciated columns. During the past two years I have suffered from throat trouble and an annoying cough. This hindered me, sometimes little, at other times much, in my work. This likely accounts for my not writing oftener to the church papers.

Under the influences of the Spirit of the Lord, favorable conditions at home, and the warm and dry climate of Arizona, my health has gradually improved. There is now fair prospect of entire recovery.

Saturday, October 6, wife and I went to the ranch of Sr. L. L. Fike. On Sunday the writer spoke to a few in her house, assisted by Bro. James E. Kelley. Sr. Fike rented the opera-house at Naco for a week, and six meetings were held in it. The writer spoke five times and Bro. Kelley once. Bro. Kelley's effort on the principles of the gospel was forceful, and much appreciated by the hearers. He also acted as janitor, having the house in readiness promptly every night, and had charge of the opening services. The writer enjoyed an early horseback ride with him every morning after the cows, some of which were four or five miles distant. Only a few people attended the meetings, but some interest was aroused.

Naco is a small border town between Mexico and the United States. Of course we kept our own side and held the meetings for the benefit of the Americans. But the writer is diligently studying Spanish, hoping sometime to be able to write tracts and articles to translate our standard books into the Spanish.

Why not? It may be that Graceland students, who, I notice, may now study Spanish, will be sooner and better prepared to do this work than the writer. I have no objection, for I have long since learned it does not matter so much who performs a needed work as it does when and how the work is done. Let us shun the bad conduct of the proverbial "dog in the manger." He could not eat the hay, neither would he allow the ox to do so. Let us not get in the way of those who can and will work.

Through the Sunday-school and the successful rendering of a "rally-day" program, we have made the acquaintance and gained the confidence of a number of "outsiders," whose children attended the school. The Sunday-school is held in our own "hired house," at two o'clock, and a regular teaching-service follows at fifteen minutes past three, and a street-meeting at fifteen minutes past six in the evening. We usually have good LAMONI, IOWA, SEPTEMBER 17, 1906.

Editors Herald: I beg space in your valuable columns, to report a short dream which appeared before me in the following manner: Having prepared myself to attend the eleven o'clock service on yesterday morning, and finding that I had some time yet before I needed to start, and being strongly impressed with the idea of lying down and taking a little rest before starting, being somewhat advanced in years and also fatigued in body and mind, and having half a mile to walk, and my bed standing close by, it did not require a long time to yield to the impression, and I was soon wrapped in slumber, when I was shown the following:

I saw a woman dressed in very modest apparel. She seemed to be sitting quietly by herself, and seemed to be doing nothing only calling upon something or some one for water, and the water would come to her, I could not tell how. But one thing I saw distinctly; that whenever the water came, she absolutely refused to drink it, but would soon call for more; and for a long time she continued that process, and never drank a drop of the water which was brought to her. With things in that condition I awoke, and without arising I looked at my watch and found that I was too late for meeting, as it was then half past eleven. I lay quietly meditating upon the strange sight. The woman represents the church in full, who, while doing nothing according to the pattern given, are continually asking God for something they do not need, and with which they are not satisfied when they receive it; but continue to ask and receive while persisting in doing those things that are not pleasing to him, as you will find by examining his word given in Doctrine and Covenants, section 86.

The above interpretation was given last night, between the hours of ten and eleven o'clock, and was written as it was given, one word at a time.

CHARLES H. BARR.

ELSINORE, UTAH, OCTOBER 17, 1906.

Saints' Herald: We are on our way to Utah’s “Dixie Land,” and are thus far on our journey. We left Salt Lake City September 24. Of course we would have liked to stay to the big conference of the Mormons, but thought best to make as early a start for this trip as possible.

Bro. Vanderwood and the writer are traveling together, that is, we keep in touch with each other; but, because the field is so large, have divided forces and carry on two appointments at the same time. At present he is at Annabel. This is a trip that we have felt impressed to make for the last three years; so when the way opened up we were glad to undertake it. Our objective point is St. George, Utah. We expect to meet Brn. Stead and J. F. Curtis there, as they are on their way thither, via the San Pedro route. One place we have touched on our way thus far is Manti, where we preached one week, preaching upon the street. The attendance there was quite good. We did not ask for a house there, as we preferred to do street-work for the time we could devote to that town. Bro. and Sr. S. P. Rasmussen received us, and made us welcome there. On our way we made a stop of one night with Sr. Coleman at Nephi. Here we have relatives, but did not stop long enough to get acquainted with them. We spoke upon the street here, but did not consider it an opportune time to hold a series of meetings, so, leaving an appointment for our return journey, we struck Manti.

From Manti to Richfield was our next move. The weather now became too cool for successful street-work, and no other places opening to us, we secured the use of the courthouse. The attendance here was very small, but during the two Sundays we were there we held a street-service after the tabernacle service. The attendance on the latter meetings was better.

At Central we found a bishop who seemed to have a more liberal spirit, and who took us by the hand and bade us welcome, and gave us the use of the ward house. Our attendance and the interest here were good.

From this point we divided our forces, and now are trying the tactics of the Irishman who took his prisoner by surrounding him. Here at Elsinore the bishop has shut everything against us, as far as lay in his power. However, we have secured the use of the town hall and are preaching to small audiences. Bro. Hans Laurenson and family have made us welcome here, as did Bro. J. J. Jensen and family at Richfield.

We have found a few scattered sheep who are fasting the bread of life, and try to feed them as we go. This country is peculiar to one from the East, in that the farmers all live in town. From village to village is a succession of small farms and fields, but no dwellings or dwellers thereon. It makes the country appear very desolate, and our farmers are not able to farm to nearly so good advantage as where they live upon their holdings. It seems that when the country was settled, this order was necessary (and enforced by command of Brigham Young) for protection against the Indians, and so has been continued ever since. So a town of twenty-five hundred inhabitants here does not mean very much, as take the farmers out of it and place them on their farms and we would have only a very small town left.

Before leaving Colorado, we had the pleasure of attending the Denver reunion, and went from there to the Provo reunion; but you have already had an account of those meetings. From Provo we went to Salt Lake City, where, with Brn. J. D. Stead and J. F. Curtis, we held street-services until the 24th. We saw and received welcome greetings there from many who used to be regular attendants at our street-services in years gone by. We were glad to know they had not forgotten us. Perhaps others would be glad if they could.

STOCKPORT, ENGLAND, OCTOBER 8, 1906.

Editors Herald: We are now within forty miles of Liverpool, where we will take boat for Boston on the 12th. We have been fortunate to secure berths on the American by our homeward voyage. It is a beauty, and behaves splendidly in rough water, and it is likely we shall have some this month.

The district conference convened in Manchester the 6th and 7th. It was a most enjoyable time because the influence which causes joy among and in the hearts of God's children was present. No jarrings or discord were in sight during any of the sessions, and it is good to see brethren dwell together in love.

The local brethren under the direction of the president of the mission, Bro. J. W. Rushton, were fully capable of handling the business in hand. They are certainly a band of intelligent, bright-minded men, and an honor to the cause. The hall was well filled with attentive listeners.

Bro. Rushton was the speaker for the evening, and was used by the Master to the edification and blessing of those present. He is advertised to hold a series of meetings in Manchester this week.

I wish here to state that it was no fault of Bro. Rushton's that I did not receive answers from him to my letters, as he had duly acknowledged them; but for some reason they never got into my hands, nor were they returned to him. The reason I mentioned the matter through the HERALD was because I was sure he would see it there; and as I was not sure of his receiving my letters, as no reply came, I took the best means I knew to reach him. So if any have thought him negligent in the matter, it is not so, as he informs me he answered my letters promptly on receiving them. Everything on his part satisfied me.

The work here needs financial assistance, if it is to be carried on successfully. There is much to do, and much could be done, if assistance were forthcoming, to spread out. The Utah Mormons are very active here, and are sending converts to America; but they have a financial backing, and it seems impossible to make any success without it.

I sincerely hope this forty-five millions of English-speaking people, who are unable under existing conditions to sustain missionaries as America does, may receive some material help at our next General Conference. I most earnestly plead that this most important matter may be properly considered.

The little band of Saints in Stockport is doing nicely under the presidency of Elder W. Worth, a young but promising minister. He has quite recently taken to himself a wife, who is a true helpmate to him, in the church as well as in home-life. They have been most kind and hospitable to me and wife during our stay with them. May the Master abundantly bless them, and all others here for their manifest interest in and for us while among them. The work here is in a very promising condition.

During my stay in London, Bro. and Sr. Clift, of 56 St. Paul's Road, made me very comfortable and entertained me as only true Saints do. Bro. Rushton came to London while I was there, where we held a series of meetings. My associations with him were of the most pleasant and enjoyable character during his two weeks' stay. He is indeed a busy man. Bro. John Worth is trying hard with his brother officers to keep the fire burning in the face of the most discouraging conditions. But a brighter day will dawn when they get through with their house-cleaning, and change locations. May the Father bless the faithful few in this wonderful city.

We are to spend the day at Sr. Clarke's, Manchester, the home for God's servants. Honorable mention is made by her of many of our American brethren. Joseph Smith, R. C. Evans, G. T. Griffiths, F. G. Pitt, W. E. LaRue, and others, have a warm place in her heart, and a corner in her home, and a welcome at her table. The Lord will bless all such who minister thus to him.

Very sincerely yours,

RICHARD BULLARD.

100 Havelock Road, DERBY, England.

Editors Herald: A few lines from this side the Atlantic, I dare say, will be welcomed. At the time of our last writing two had been added by baptism. Since that time we have met together each Sabbath, Bro. and Sr. Meredith, the writer and wife, and occasionally a few of our neighbors; and while we can not boast of increasing numbers, I believe we can report progress spiritually.

We have been visited at intervals by the ministry from adjacent towns, whose efforts have been appreciated by us, doing much to comfort and edify us in our isolated condition. The people in this town are very slow to receive the "angel's message." The words "Latter Day Saint" or "Mormon" are quite sufficient, for almost immediately they turn on their heels and walk away. This is due, no doubt, to the stigma that Utah Mormonism has brought on the church. Brn. J. W. Rushton and W. H. Greenwood arrived here September 1, and the following day commenced work. We gathered together a few friends and neighbors at our home. Bro. Rushton gave a short talk, and after partaking of the sacrament the meeting ended in social capacity. At six o'clock in the evening Bro. Rushton was again the speaker, assisted by W. H. Greenwood. At eight o'clock we went on the market-square and found the Utah Mormons in full meeting. Bro. Rushton waited until they closed and then proceeded to ask them questions. They were quickly engaged in a discussion. The Utah elders tried to back out, but Bro. Rushton managed to keep them to it. Their position was soon made manifest, and fallacies exposed. The people plainly saw the difference between the two churches. We really could not help feeling sorry for the Mormon elders. One of them openly admitted to the crowd that his father now has two wives. The discussion was continued in the market-place Monday and Tuesday evenings. Wednesday evening we again held meeting at our home, a few friends and neighbors being present. A splendid sermon was delivered by Bro. Rushton which was highly appreciated by all. Thursday evening found us again in the market-square, Bro. Greenwood opening with a good discourse which was followed by a masterly effort by Bro. Rushton. This ended Bro. Rushton's efforts here. The people crowded around him to grasp his hand before he left. The visit was altogether too short. They were just beginning to make an impression when previous arrangements compelled them to leave.

Bro. Greenwood stayed over Sunday, the 9th, preaching twice for us. Bro. Rushton left for London on the 8th, Bro. Greenwood for Manchester on the 10th. The writer being personally acquainted with the reporters of one of our daily papers, enabled Bro. Rushton to get an article inserted. No direct reply has yet been published. The editor did receive something purporting to be a reply, but not bearing the writer's signature; and being somewhat embarrassing, he was unable to publish it. The brethren named were successful in arousing an interest, also in removing a deal of prejudice; and if the efforts could have been maintained for a longer period, we have no doubt it would have resulted in attracting others to the work. It really does seem as though spasmodic efforts in this country are of little avail and (until we concentrate our effort in towns and cities where there are no organized branches) we can not hope for great success. Truly "the harvest is great, but the laborers are few." Our constant prayer is that God may send forth more laborers; but in the meantime we are endeavoring in our humble way to keep the camp-fire blazing. Ever praying for the success of this great latter-day work.

Your brother in Christ,

JOSEPH ECCLESTONE.

PORTLAND, Oregon, October 20, 1906.

Editors Herald: Owing to the fact that I have found many traveling Saints looking everywhere through the city in hopes of finding some of the Saints, I inclose my address, being president of the branch. We are permanently located now at 446 Hibbard Street, Montavilla, Portland, Oregon, and have a nice new building under way under the broad Street and Holiday Avenue, and would be pleased to see all traveling Saints who come to this "city of roses."

Your brother in hope,

W. A. GOODWIN.

GEELONG, Victoria.

Editors Herald: The semiannual conference of the Victoria District just came to a close, and it may justly be said that it was one above the average. Quite a company of visiting Saints came from other parts, and from what one could hear, they enjoyed themselves as only Saints can. The spiritual condition of the Saints has an upward tendency, but no addition by baptism was recorded for the last quarter, in this State. Other States for the last quarter report about thirty additions, which is quite an advance from the usual.

The social meetings were bright and spiritual. The preaching was plain, forcible, and well received.

Newspaper reports that "Joseph Smith of the Reorganized Church" had been arrested in New York and was the husband of six wives and the father of forty-three children, etc., may have militated somewhat against us; but the brethren have since got these false statements corrected.

The Saints as a rule have not sustained the financial arm of the church as they should have done; and as a result the work is suffering, and if a better effort is not put forth soon, some of the missionaries will have to be withdrawn from the field; for we have run behind fifty-five pounds sterling in six months. The Melbourne Saints are very much in need of a church-building, and are making arrangements to start building soon. Some of our old difficulties in the mission have been removed satisfactorily, and new ones have come to take their places, which keeps the officers busy. Taking all in all, I think a slight improvement is discernible all through the mission.

Yours in bonds,

C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

BIRMINGHAM, October 22, 1906.

Editors Herald: Once more I send a few lines to try to express my thanks to God and his people, and especially to the Herald for the splendid assistance received from time to time. What a joy and a pleasure it is when we read kind words from thankful hearts for what the Lord has done for his obedient children. I can not express my thanks and appreciation as I feel them on paper, but many times wonder if I shall be able to remain faithful to the end. When looking back at my past life and reviewing the pleasant times spent with God's children, and looking at some of the blessings the Lord has given me, I am filled with wonder and amazement, and ask myself the question, What have I done to merit such grand and glorious privileges? There are many things in my life's experiences I shall never forget.

Yours in bonds,

J. E. MEREDITH.

LAMONI, Iowa, November 5, 1906.

Editors Herald: Having been at the Saints' Home for some ten days I am now prepared to let my friends know how I like it here. So far I am quite well pleased. At first my health was very poor; I could hardly either eat or sleep. Now, as I am getting more used to things here, I have gotten a little better.

The furnace is not yet put in at the new home, where I reside [Liberty Home], but the work of preparation under the direction of the Bishop is progressing very well. I have been able to go to church but once, since coming here; but we have had church at the Home some three or four times.

May the Lord bless his cause in all departments, in every place, is my desire and prayer.

C. J. SPURLING.

A Few Experiences.

I do not intend to enter into a very lengthy detail of experiences through which I have passed in my lifetime since I first became connected with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in my boyhood days, but merely to notice one now transpiring and which is, thanks be to God, nearing the closing scene.

I have read in the Saints' Herald an expression like the following: "It is not our business to judge as to what God will or will not do. [Thank God we have the right to hope however.] The trouble is, we are prone to look upon administration as an opportunity for miraculous demonstration. God does not view it in that light. It is a matter of indifference to him as to whether we are healed by his power or by some other means." This latter sentence is the expression I am specially after. Thousands of years ago our heavenly Father declared, I am God and I change not. I am the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. I am a jealous God, and will visit the sins of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation. And thousands of instances of that kind can be found in the world to-day.

I will now pass on to an investigation of the expression above. About seven years ago I had a bruise upon my left leg commencing a little above my ankle, which spread out until it was fully four inches wide and six inches long, upward, and it was black all over, produced I presume by that leg having so much hard labor to perform in assisting my right leg which has been a cripple from the time I was brought into the world by an injury received at the time of my birth, so my mother informed me. I felt pretty well scared. I took up my Doctrine and Covenants and turned over to the Word of Wisdom, section 88, and read, "And again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly and is good for man but is the herb for bruises." Like a flash it crossed my mind that this word but meant except as "an herb for bruises." A friend of mine from the country came into the office for his mail. I told him of my condition, and he promised to get me some home-grown tobacco, which he did. I took some of it, doubled the leaves together, wet it with water, making a poultice of it, and placed it upon the bruise. I did that each day for four or five days, and it took all the soreness out, but left it of a dark color, and it did not trouble me again until about one year ago, when it began to trouble me badly and at length got so bad I could not step upon my foot at all. I renewed the use of the tobacco. My leg broke out in blisters all around, from a little above my ankle to within about three inches of my knee. The blisters would be, however, very thin, of them, two inches long and half wide. I was administered to whenever the elders came to see me, and sometimes I sent for them. The Saints prayed for me, and I kept it anointed four times during the day and night with consecrated oil, bound up snugly in cloth, the cloths being in part saturated; but there was something else. My friends brought vaseline and other medicines and insisted upon their use. I was entirely dependent upon them, so I humored them by letting them put it on. Oh, the pains that I endured, especially during the night; piercing, shooting pains that would keep me awake one half and two thirds of the night. This continued until perhaps four months ago. I neglected to note the date, but that night I had suffered terribly, and I lay upon my bed sorely perplexed in regard to the future—what, under these conditions, would become of me. I was wide awake, but the room was dark, when all at once it appeared to me that some one was talking to me, who said: "You call yourself a Latter Day Saint, and yet with the oil you use other things—patent medicines. Suppose your leg should get well, who would claim the glory? Why, certainly, the discoverer, either by his own sharp thought or by means of his educational powers, and he gets the credit. He may be an infidel and may not believe that there is a spirit in man and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding. Why don't you use the oil alone? You have the right, you have the power, and God will obtain the glory."

Before this my leg had made no improvement. If anything, it was worse. When I received that admonition, I dropped everything but the oil,—no more of their medicines for me—and have used the consecrated oil, doing the anointing myself, asking the Lord to bless it. And, praise the Lord, he has done it, for the sores are all healed, the scabs are peeling off slowly, and all that remains for me to do is to keep it moistened with a little of the oil morning and evening, and wait patiently. It is very tender, and I have to be careful lest I strain or bruise it. I have to keep my leg and foot bandaged during the day, and wear an old shoe cut to suit, so that I may be able to get around my room; but it is very slow business even with the use of my canes. My old crippled foot and leg is about worn out. During all this time of suffering I have not been sick, but terribly afflicted. I have all these rigid rules for meals per day, but must do something to keep my mind active.

There is another experience that has now become so closely allied with the above that I can not refrain from telling it, as the glory belongs to God—as much so as the other.

My grandfather upon my mother's side died of cancer when he was fifty-six years old. When my mother arrived at about the age of thirty-five she was attacked with cancer, but by good fortune she was placed in the hands of a doctor who was able to destroy it, and she was never attacked again, and lived to a ripe old age. When I was about forty years old, I was attacked with cancer, and it grew apace. I went to a doctor, a fine old gentleman, and stated my case in full. He studied a moment then gave me some medicine to put upon the cancer. It was very biting, but killed it. I carefully kept the medicine, and every once in a while another cancer would start, and I would treat it, and away it would go. And, during the years that have passed, I have had them start up upon my upper and lower jaw-bones, and above my eyes, and upon my nose, and one got pretty bad upon my forehead, which left its mark behind; but in every instance the medicine conquered. Finally, after I had received my lesson in regard to the use of the consecrated oil upon my leg, and I had begun to fully appreciate its use, I was attacked with cancer upon both sides of my mouth, where my lips come together. I applied my cancer medicine, but it took no effect. I applied it again and again, but the cancers got worse, and spread until they began to pain me considerably. It set me to thinking, and I came to the conclusion that the Lord my God was just as able to cure those cancers by the use of the consecrated oil as he was to heal my leg as he was doing. I put the cancer medicine away, and began to use the oil in the name of Jesus Christ; and in a very short time the cancers were gone. Praise the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless and praise his holy name; and the glory is his. Yea, my brethren and my sisters, there is a vast amount of difference to him, whether we are healed by his power or some other means. Our God is a Jealous God. He demands that we honor him with our bodies and our spirits, which are his; and thus he obtains the glory.

I am now in my eighty-first year upon this earth, and in looking back over my life I make the discovery that I have not always walked in the light; and I have learned that it is very good policy to watch as well as pray, lest I enter into temptation.

I must now close, praying that I, with you all, may ever be enabled to walk in the light as he, our heavenly Father, is in the light. Your brother in the covenant of peace, 1502 Holman, ST. JOSEPH, Mo. WILLIAM HAWKINS.

Northwestern Nebraska and Black Hills Reunion.

I think it but proper to give a report of the Reunion, which commenced September 25 and ended the 30th. The attendance was very small the first three or four days; and it was really discouraging; but we held our service daily: Prayer at half past nine in the morning, and preaching at eleven, three, and half past seven.

The speakers present were C. W. Prettyman, S. D. Payne, J. L. Detrick, and D. W. Shirk.

On motion C. W. Prettyman was chosen to preside; Sr. Viola Barkdoll, chorister; Sr. Grace Kipp, secretary; D. W. Shirk, treasurer.

All committees up to the close of our reunion were released. It was decided to hold a reunion in the fall of 1907, somewhere on the Platte Valley, J. L. Detrick, Sandford Barkdoll, D. W. Shirk being chosen a committee to forward the matter.

During the reunion J. L. Detrick’s child was blessed, and Bro. Perry Roberts, son of Uncle Tommy Roberts, was baptized.

Peace, harmony, and good will seemed to characterize the meetings, and I believe good results will follow the reunion.

We felt disappointed that Elder Heman C. Smith could not be with us, he being called to Iowa on account of sickness.

I am very glad to report that there was little light-mindedness, and a liberal financial support. Preaching-, prayer- and testimony-meetings, I may say, were quite spiritual. All moneys received and expended for missionaries, freight on tent from Grand Island, gasoline, etc., fourteen dollars and and seventy cents.

All donations received, outside of the Olive Branch, two dollars and fifty cents, for which we feel grateful; but we hope if we all live till another reunion, you will bring the money instead of sending it, for we need your presence.

And, by way of encouragement or exhortation, let me suggest to all who are interested, Deny yourselves, and come; and all try to be there at the very first meeting, and remain to the last. By so doing, I believe the Master could and would grant us more of his Spirit.

In bonds, D. W. Shirk.

Extracts from Letters.

Thennie Wadkins, Flamaton, Alabama: “There are many articles in the HERALD that I love to read. Bro. Booker was with us a few weeks ago, and we certainly enjoyed his visit. He said he was coming back in a few weeks. A number of Saints live right around us here, and some are talking of coming into the church; but they say they are not good enough yet. Remember us in your prayers that we may come up to the standard, and that we may have God’s Spirit to guide us in the way of truth and righteousness.”

hearing before the Christian Catholic people, but were unable to do so, and that they were even unable to secure permission to preach on the streets. He related how that in “Zion” the people were very enthusiastic in their endeavors to “show forth” many mighty signs and wonders, for the convincing of people that their claims were true.

The work here in the city, as in most large cities, moves along gradually, and slowly. Now and then there are promising signs, and then there comes a lull of such force as to almost discourage one. The Saints here have time and again tried to devise means for the raising of funds to start a new church-building, but so far the enterprise has been drowned in the depths of the impossibilities encountered. A new carpet has lately been added to the beautifying of our little meeting-place, and adds much to the looks of the otherwise oddness of a store-building for a house of worship.

Our missionary, Bro. McDowell, is out of the city at present, spending a few days at home for recuperation, if we are correctly informed.

Little by little, the mighty work moves on. Here in the confines of this great throbbing city, we have as pure in heart as ever breathed, and they have been tried by the fire that burns, and they have come thus far through the conflict with the forces of evil.

J. H. CAMP.

433 West Monroe Street, CHICAGO.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.

The Saints of St. Joseph are at present in the throes of a general house-cleaning at the church. We have for some time past been cheerfully worshiping amidst difficulties and discomforts, strong in the hope of soon being able to bring order out of chaos, and to enjoy a sweet sense of freedom and rest from the burdens of the past. We now see the goal of our ambitions in sight—the dedication of our church, and we will be able to present it to the Lord, cleansed, beautified, and fit for the abiding-place of his Holy Spirit.

Our dedication exercises will occur on Sunday, November 25. We expect to have Brn. Joseph Smith, E. L. Kelley, and others present to conduct the exercises; and the day will certainly be one of rejoicing to the faithful Saints here, who have labored so diligently to bring about this long-desired event.

On last Wednesday evening, at the regular business-meeting, occurred our semiannual election of branch officers. To show the appreciation of the Saints for their past services, the outgoing officers were reelected to a man. Presiding elder, James Moler; priest, D. C. Kinneman; teacher, C. H. Islieb; deacon, W. G. Bronson; clerk, Hale W. Smith. All good, faithful, and efficient men.

Our Sunday-school, with Bro. H. D. Ennis as superintendent, is prosperous and interesting. The Religio under the presidency of Bro. Hale Smith is looking up. There is some sickness among the Saints. Sr. Christiansen has been very ill indeed, but we trust she will recover.

Appointment of Bishop's Agent.

To the Saints of the British Isles Mission: Please take notice that upon the resignation of Bishop Thomas Taylor by reason of infirmities of age, Elder C. H. Caton, 189 Old Field Road, Spark Brook, Birmingham, England, has been duly appointed Bishop's agent. appointed and authorized to act as agent of the Bishopric of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in and for the British Isles Mission.

The Bishopric regret the loss of the earnest and reliable work of Bishop Taylor in the church finances, but under the circumstances it is but just and proper that Bro. Taylor should relieve himself of the burden of caring for and looking after financial conditions of the church in and for the Isles. He has been diligent and upright in his work and service and the Bishopric part with him with the highest commendation, and trust the Lord may bless and remember him in his declining years.

We also take pleasure in commending Elder C. H. Caton as Bishop's agent to the Saints and friends of the mission.

Caton is authorized to act in behalf of the Bishopric according to the rules and usages of the church, and as Bishop's agent will fully look after financial conditions and make due report of the same.

We trust each and every member in the British Isles may feel it a personal privilege, as well as a duty, to lend a helping hand, and perform his or her part in the sustaining of the Lord's work. If it is but the widow's mite dropped into the treasury, it is a blessing to the party who thus contributes, and so with each and every one of whatever station or ability in the performance of full duty. In a great household every member should be awake to the necessities and obligations resting upon us as members of the same; and he who fails to so recognize and perform his part will fail eventually to receive commendation from the head of the household. This is equally true in the household of faith. There should be no laggards; no failing of duty; no foolish virgins.

May the Lord bless and prosper his work in the Islands and give special remembrance to every helper.

In behalf of the Bishopric, very respectfully submitted.

J. W. Harvey, G. E. Turner, Fred Teale.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, November 7, 1906.

Resolution of Condolence.

Whereas, in the wisdom of our heavenly Father he has seen fit to call from earthly life our esteemed and beloved brother, George H. Smith, we, his associates in the great work of the gospel, and fellow citizens of the kingdom and household of faith, realizing our brother's love, sincerity, and faithful life spent in the service of the Master, desire to express our love and sympathy toward his wife and family in this their hour of sorrow and bereavement, and commend them to the keeping of him who is too wise to err, and too good to be undecked.

Our brother's pure and upright life was a true example. He was a worthy representative of the stainless One. His kind words and inspired thoughts will live when forget-me-nots are withered and dead—he has passed away, but he still lives in the hearts of those he left behind.

He is one of the blessed, for he died in the Lord, and his works will follow him.

$25,000.00 NEEDED
By INDEPENDENCE COAL MINING COMPANY
In order to develop and open up the new coal-mining interests near Independence and also make necessary preparations for homes for miners-workers, it is necessary that sufficient capital be secured within a short time. The amount sought for is very small compared with the capital of other coal-mining interests and, for various reasons, the directors of this company desire to keep the working and controlling power with the church members. It is possible the opening up of an undeveloped coal field at the edge of a densely populated community of 40,000 population is a matter of considerable consideration, as the product is part of the necessities of life, with freight rates practically cut off, making this enterprise an exceptional one.

Five hundred and sixty-nine acres have been leased for thirty years and fifty-four purchased, making all seven hundred and twenty-three acres of coal land in one body, on the line of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, two miles east of Independence.

The company already has coal-mines at Napoleon, Missouri, in operation, and a successful and prosper-able retail business, making this a bona fide, paying investment.

Money seeking investment can find no better place, and will bring the best kind of satisfaction, as it will bring good returns to the investor and results that have much sought for, also benefiting the unemployed, scattered, pressed-down poor church members by placing them in a position to help themselves.

The 184 acres are intended for homes for miners-workers, to be sold at a reasonable price, and we solicit the co-operation of miners to purchase stock, according to their ability.

The promoters of this company are not working for any selfish interests. There is no watered nor fictitious valued stock. The company is incorporated under the laws of the state of Missouri. Capital stock, $40,000.00; shares, $1.00. The capital stock must be increased to the amount needed. Parties sending money can do so by bank draft. Further particulars apply to R. MAY.

"THE MORMON PROPHET'S TRAGEDY."—No. 3.

Concluded.

The statement made by this writer in reference to the act of killing Joseph and Hyrum Smith misstates facts, as those immediately engaged in the affair inside the room who survived the event, and who undoubtedly had the best means of knowing, have clearly stated. He says that Taylor crawled under the bed with a bullet in the calf of his leg. Taylor was struck by the same number of balls as Joseph and Hyrum, one of which smashed his watch in his vest pocket and would have killed him had it not hit the watch. The bed was thrown over him by Elder Richards, who stood just behind the door endeavoring to parry with his walking-stick the guns poked through the door in an endeavor to deflect the balls from their intended victims. And this the writer makes light of by writing that Richards lied terribly about the affair, and saying that he was "warding off the bullets with a consecrated wand." This is but another evidence of the animus in which the writer penned his article.

The writer further states that Joseph Smith died bravely; that he had two loaded six-barreled revolvers in his room. As we subsequently learned the history, all the weapon that Joseph Smith had was a small six-barreled Allen's revolver, known at the period as a "pepper box," with barrels some six or less inches in length. This had been slipped into the Prophet's hand by one of the visiting brethren in the early part of the day when Joseph and Hyrum were leaving the jail to make a visit to the public square at the request of some of the authorities, this visiting brother thinking perhaps it might be means of preventing personal attack upon the Prophet while making this visit. We heard that this man's name was Philo Dibble. We do not know that we ever saw the names of those said to have been wounded by the discharge of this weapon in the hands of Joseph Smith before they were named by this writer. It appears that he avoided writing the names of the wounded who were still living at the time he wrote, though he mentions three of them by name who evidently were dead at the writing of his article, to wit., Wills, Gallagher, and Voorhees. He refers to another at the time who... was still living, but says he will not name him for the reasons that he is prepared to prove an alibi and besides stands six feet two in his moccasins.

Can anything be more pathetic and pay a better tribute to gallant bravery than the following from this writer:

Severely wounded as he was, he ran to the window, which was open to receive the fresh June air, and half leaped, half fell, into the jail-yard below. With his last dying energies he gathered himself up and leaned in a sitting posture against the rude stone well-curb. His stricken condition, his vague, wandering glances, excited no pity in the mob thirsting for his life. They had not seen the handsome fight he had made in the jail; there was no appeal to chivalry (there is chivalry on the borders as in all semibarbarous regions). A squad of Missourians who were standing by the fence leveled their pieces at him, and, before they could see him again for the smoke they made, Joe Smith was dead.

This writer pictures the dismay and the terror existing at Carthage and Warsaw when the news of this murderous killing spread to those places, and shows with what dread crime inspires those in a community who participate in such unlawful procedure and those associated with them. It seemed that there was wide-spread apprehension that sudden and exemplary vengeance would be visited upon these marauding communities by the Mormons. The writer pays a tribute to the people whom he has so frequently referred to slightlying and sneered at in his article, in the following words:

The appalling disaster that had fallen upon the church gave rise to no spirit of revenge. It was long before the Mormons recovered from the stupor of their terror and despair. A delegation went to Carthage to receive their dead. They brought them home and buried them with honors becoming the generals of the legion. The seceders, panic-stricken, fled from Nauvoo and never returned.

It is needless to pursue this matter much further. Suffice it to say that a number of men were indicted for the murder of the Smiths, but were acquitted. The press of the State and of adjoining States deprecated the murder and condemned in unmistakable terms those who committed it. A strong reaction in favor of the oppressed people took place, and notwithstanding the complaint was made against the Mormons, citizens of Nauvoo, that when officers visited that city for the purpose of serving writs upon those who were charged with criminality and who were supposed to be located in the city they were maltreated and their efforts to arrest rendered futile, the writer of the article referred to states that when the sheriff went to Warsaw he was treated with the discourtesy which so often in the West indicated a most sinister state of public feeling. He could find no trace of the men he was looking for. Nobody had seen or heard of them for weeks. In the morning when he mounted his horse to leave the town he found that his horse’s mane and tail had been sheared.

The few witnesses who were examined did not give sufficient evidence to warrant the conviction of the parties named and the case was closed. Of this, the writer referred to states:

There was not a man on the jury, in the court, in the county, that did not know the defendants had done murder. But it was not proven, and the verdict of NOT GUILTY was right in law.

Closing his article from which we have quoted, and writing of the contentions that took place after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, he writes thus:

'Tribes and religions can not travel against the sun. Young, during the troubled years that followed, exerted himself to gather all the reins of government into his own hands; and there was not in all the slavish East a despot more absolute than he when at last he started, with his wives and his servants and his cattle, to lead his people into the vast tolerant wilderness.

We have been thus prolix in reviewing this article written by John Hay in 1869, twenty-five years after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, for the purpose of showing that while the article may have been ably written from a literary standpoint, the writer did not write from his own knowledge, but from the ill-advised statements of others and drew conclusions from them which were untenable and incorrect. There is in this article no proof that convicts Joseph Smith of the charge of immorality which the writer made, only as the same had been echoed by others. These have long been offset by statements concerning the time when polygamy or plural marriage became a tenet of the church in Utah and by whom this tenet was foisted upon the people and the manner of its being done. It is unfortunate that there are those who, reading the article and knowing it to have been written by a man who subsequently attained one of the highest positions before the American people that it was possible for a citizen to do, and who became world-famed by reason of his brilliant attainments in the art of diplomacy, will catch at and believe conclusions formed by him, and statements in reference to them, sooner than they will take the statements of those who are acquainted with the facts of history and who are able to give the clearest reasons founded upon facts for their statement and belief contrary to the assertions made by this man.

We long have contemplated this review but have been prevented from undertaking it by conditions which we could not control. We regret the delay and hope that the light we have thrown upon the matter may help our brethren in the field in their efforts to make the truth apparent to the people. We knew the witnesses cited by Mr. Hay, Brackenbury and Daniels, who were the only men who appeared to have the courage to attend the trial of the parties indicted for the murder and give evidence. That some of the men whom this relation of Hay’s connects with the actual murder of the Smiths attained positions of prominence among the people may be conceded to be true. Governor Ford fell into disrepute and poverty. It is reported that one of his sons was lynched in one of the Western territories for an alleged horse-stealing, of which charge he plead with those who lynched him to examine his papers which he had to present to them in vain, and who discovered after they had lynched him by the documents he had in his possession that he was an innocent man. Like the murderers who killed Joseph Smith, they took it for granted that he was guilty and said, We will hang him first and examine his papers afterwards.

That Governor Ford was weak and vacillating is clear from every history that has been written of that period and locality in which the events referred to occurred. We do not hesitate to state that we believe as stated by Mr. Hay, that the intentions of the Governor were good, but he was not the man to deal with the elements surrounding him at the time. He left an inefficient guard at the jail. He had been specifically told on the morning of the 27th of June that personal threats had been made against the Smiths and that if he did not take due precaution to prevent it the Smiths would be murdered before night. One man who was with the McDonough County troops told us that he stood within a few feet of Governor Ford when he was told if he disbanded the McDonough troops and sent them home the Smiths were as good as dead men. We credit the Governor with the thought that being the chief executive of the State his presence alone would be sufficient to prevent any unlawful outbreak, and that when he pledged himself that Joseph and Hyrum Smith should have a fair and impartial trial he guaranteed their personal safety from violence. He fully intended that such should be their opportunity and the precautions which he did take were in his judgment sufficient to secure the safety of the men.

It is something of a travesty upon the respect and esteem in which prominent powers in the State were held at the very time when Joseph and Hyrum Smith were being killed in Carthage Jail, Governor Thomas Ford, who had pledged himself that they should be protected and have a fair and impartial trial before the courts of the State, himself was addressing a large assembly of the brethren and associates of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, a representative assembly, unarmed and inoffensive, in the city of Nauvoo.

There has been a great mistake made in regard to the Nauvoo Legion in connection with this charge of treason, upon which Joseph and Hyrum Smith were arrested as levying arms against the government. The Nauvoo Legion was an organization formed under the militia law of the state of Illinois. The title of Lieutenant-General was conferred upon Joseph Smith by the Legislature of the state of Illinois. It has been supposed by some that this Legion numbered thousands; this is a mistake. At a parade held in Nauvoo not long before the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith at which a grand review of the rank and file was had there were not to exceed twelve to fourteen hundred men and boys. And of these perhaps three hundred may have had the arms of the State, but not more. What other arms they had were their private rifles, squirrel guns, and shot-guns such as pioneers were in the habit of having and which the laws of the State required. The Governor's order for this legion to give up the arms of the State, the officer, whoever he may have been, with sixty men or less went to Nauvoo with the order, and these arms were delivered without any heitancy or question. The Prophet met the officer and indorsed the order and directed the officer upon whom to call at Nauvoo for the surrender of the arms.

It is not a little singular that so small a number of people as were gathered in Nauvoo and in Hancock County as members of the church should have been of such a formidable character in wrong-doing that the authorities of the State could not control them by the force and power of the civil law, and it is a travesty upon justice to the credit of the people gathered together under Joseph and Hyrum Smith's rule, that an appeal should have been made to the passions and prejudices of the lawless and law-defying to exercise mob rule against men who were at the time in the hands of the constituted authorities of the State awaiting the action of the court. It is clearly to the discredit of the State that they did not enforce by civil process the laws on behalf of both parties to this conflict, and the fact that a resort was finally made to irresponsible, mob violence absolves those who suffered from this violence from charges of wrong-doing or criminality for which their lives were taken.

That there were bad men among the members of the church is possible. Few communities are entirely exempt from such characters. That the conditions at Nauvoo after the exodus of the Mormons from Illinois were worse than they were before under the rule of the administration of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, is clear, and has been testified to time and time again. That the conditions existing at Nauvoo and in Hancock County from the fall of 1846 to 1855 were in badness not second to those at any point on the Mississippi River above or below Nauvoo, is a fact. And it was not until a strenuous effort was made for the suppression of evil and wrong-doing that the situation was changed. We were absent from the city from September 12, 1846, to February 19, 1847, and know what the conditions were from the time of our return to the city until we left there in 1866. We knew all of the leading men of the county, had business dealing one way or another with many of them, and are well assured that the Mormons were by no means as bad as their enemies and injudicious writers have painted them.
GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

Bro. Heman C. Smith, in charge of the Iowa and Minnesota field, reports one hundred and forty-nine baptisms during the past quarter.

In our items in the HERALD for November 14 it was stated that Elder A. E. Madison died September 11. This was an error of date, made in transcribing copy. His death occurred November 11.

Patriarch E. C. Briggs may be addressed at 343 South Sixth East Street, Salt Lake City, Utah. He is anxious that Saints having friends there whom they desire visited should write him inclosing letters of introduction.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

Perhaps the most interesting event of the past week was the suit begun in St. Louis by Attorney General Moody to dissolve the Standard Oil trust in which are merged seventy corporations. Thus the oldest and perhaps most powerful trust faces the threat of guards, and going upon the street with the uniform of an entering individual put on the uniform of a captain of guards, and going upon the street encountered a company of soldiers returning from drill. He commanded them to follow him. Being trained to unthinking obedience, they obeyed. With this detachment as guards he proceeded to the city hall, where he appropriated about one thousand dollars, then dismissed his guards and vanished. Every ounce of obedience should be yoked with an ounce of brains.

The case against the company owning the Iroquois Theater at the time of the great fire of December, 1903, has at last been settled. The company is declared bankrupt by Judge Lanning of the United States Court of Trenton, New Jersey. Thus they escape the two hundred and seventy-two suits for damages which were filed against them.

Mrs. Herbert Parsons, of New York, wife of Congressman Parsons and daughter of Henry Clews, has written a book in which she advocates probationary marriages—or marriage "on trial." Thus might we facilitate "marrying and giving in marriage," as in "the days of Noe."

Great is the American drummer. There are 500,000 of him in the United States and they draw an average salary of $4.00 per day, enough in the aggregate, it is said, to maintain all the armies of all the world.

It is reported that in a football game at the Northwestern University (Chicago), November 17, the dental students rushed the medical students and the latter brought forth a supply of ossified arm and leg bones of humans and with these gruesome weapons cracked the heads of their assailants. A close study of the "human form" divine must breed contempt,—among the "lower animals."

In the recent State election, national interest was manifested in the struggle between Mr. Hughes and Mr. Hearst for the governorship of the state of New York, because the successful candidate in a State election in New York is considered as a presidential possibility for the next presidential election. Mr. Hughes was elected by a majority of seventy thousand. Hearst, with his newspapers and his wealth, is still a factor in American politics,—whether good or bad our readers must determine, each for himself.

Reverend Alexander Torrey, the world-noted revivalist, is conducting a great campaign in Omaha, with audiences of seven thousand people.

The steamer Dix sank off the west coast of Washington, November 18, forty-two passengers reported missing. The Dix collided with the Jeanie.

True success is the educating and adapting of one's mind and soul in such a manner that he may be able to enjoy life and appreciate its highest conceptions, that he may partake of the sweetness of nature, and in his daily walks and labors be able to teach and enlighten the minds of others, thus making life a pleasure to his fellow-man as well as to himself.—Orison Sweet Marden.

The Morning Watch has been called by some old writer—if we are not mistaken—"The soul's morning bath." There is much significance in this expression. It is not only the time when the soul, lifted up into the ocean of God's presence, is washed clean from the stains of the past, but it is also a tonic, like a cold bath in the early morning, which refreshes, invigorates, and inspires for duty. Those who enjoy its refreshment never wish to get along without it. It seems as necessary to the beginning of the soul's day as the ablutions are necessary for the body on arising from sleep, and, throughout all the hours of the day, the soul feels the stimulus and refreshment of its beginning.—Selected.

News From Branches

TORONTO, ONTARIO.

President R. C. Evans commenced the Majestic services on Sunday evening, November 11. This is the third season in the theater. He was greeted with a full house, showing that the interest has not waned. It was the largest audience we had on an opening day. Elder Evans had been specially requested to speak on “Jesus from the cradle to the grave.” He excelled himself. A splendid feeling seemed to pervade the audience. It was as if old friends had met; and “welcome back” was everywhere felt. We noticed many familiar faces in the audience, which fact shows that many are following up his lectures. We are pleased with the opening day. It points to a splendid winter’s work.

Our past two seasons in the Majestic have so increased our numbers that our church will not seat all our branch members. It has been sold. A lot fifty-five by ninety-five on Soho Street purchased for three thousand dollars, and a brick church, forty-five by eighty-five, is now in course of erection. The walls are up to the plates; and as soon as the gables are finished, the steel spans for the roof will be put up and the roof put on as quickly as possible. In the meantime, the basement is being rushed through; and we expect to hold services in it by the middle of December. We expect to open the main auditorium early in the New Year, and then transfer the Majestic audiences to our new church, which is located in the center of the city, about six blocks west of theater. If we are successful in the transfer, we will find ourselves lacking seating-capacity.

Our auxiliary societies are busy helping to raise funds for the new church. The ladies’ auxiliary is holding a bazaar in St. Andrews Hall, November 29 and 30.

The city has been divided into districts, and the sisters go in parts canvassing subscriptions. They are meeting with fairly good success, and are distributing much literature and advertising our church.

Elder Alf Davis met with a serious accident, while at work in the foundry. He was hit in right eye with a small piece of steel. His vision is almost gone; but we hope that he may recover use of same.

A. F. McLEAN.

LONDON, ONTARIO.

Sr. Cambridge, one of the oldest members of our branch, has been very ill the past week. After administration by the elders she continues to improve.

President R. C. Evans, who is busy with the work at Toronto, paid a flying visit home for a couple of days last week.

Elder Fligg, our branch president, has gone into the mercantile business, having opened up a depart-ment store in a busy part of the city. All wish Bro. Will success in his new undertaking.

Srs. Cassie, Hannah, and Stella Charlton, who have been home with their parents on the Manitoulin Island during the past year, have returned and intend to make their home with the Saints here. They will be quite a help to our branch.

Bro. Alexs, from the Manitoulin Island, is working in the city, and will likely remain with us for some time. He is a promising young man and a priest, and no doubt will be a great help to us in our branch.

Resident Saints of London and those of the old-time members will be grieved to hear of the passing of Sr. Falkner, one of the oldest members of our branch. She had been ailing for quite a while, and the end came while she was at her son’s in Detroit, Michigan.

LONDON CORRESPONDENT.

LAMONI, IOWA.

The church, Sunday-school, and Religio are uniting in a revival effort at the church this week. Brn. H. C. Smith and J. W. Wight are the speakers. The introductory sermon of the series was preached yesterday morning by Bro. Wight. Bro. Smith spoke in the evening. All regular meetings for the week have given way for these special services.

The young people’s prayer-meeting at the Mite Society Wednesday evening was well attended, and the time was profitably occupied. A sister from a distant branch who was in attendance remarked, “People don’t need to tell me about the environment of the young people of Lamoni; I know for myself now.” While all conditions in Lamoni are not reflected by the prayer-services, yet those who have a desire to rise in spiritual and moral goodness will find much to help them. Church environments in Lamoni will not do what Lucifer proposed—save mankind whether they want to be saved or not; but will assist the good to be better and the sinner to turn from his ways, if he has the disposition to do so.

The furnace for the Liberty Home has arrived and the work of installing it will be rapidly pushed to completion.

Bishop E. L. Kelley left for Far West Missouri, to assist in the dedication of a church at that place. The building is located directly across the road from the old Temple Lot. This, with the dedication of the St. Joseph church next Sunday, will make three churches dedicated in the Far West District this month. The “waste places” are being built up.

The choir and Graceland Choral Society hold two meetings each week. The Choral Society is working on the “Holy City,” by Gaul, which they expect to present in a short time. The choir has ordered additional music, desiring to furnish a good service of song for the church-goers.

A CORRECTION.

Bro. Rannie writes that his street-work referred to in this department in the Herald of November 7 was done in Huron instead of Columbia, South Dakota. The mistake was ours.—EDITO

MIXED ON HIS TEXTS.

I once heard of a young elder who was sent to fill an appointment, and his first audience were outsiders but he greeted them with the following: Fear not, little flock, it is your father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. To an audience of Saints he said: 0 generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?—Elder J. Smiley Strain.

MORMONISM AND CATHOLICISM.

At our street-services in Salt Lake City we met an unusual feature in that a few zealous Catholics seemed to take exception to our paying our attention so exclusively to our Mormon brethren, and insisted on injecting Catholicism into the conflict.

Of course, while recognizing that for this mission Mormonism is the issue, still we were ready to touch up Catholicism and show the many parallels between the two churches. Some of those parallels are:

Priestcraft as found manifest in the complete domination of the membership by the ministry.

About four years ago, while listening to Elder B. H. Roberts, in the Ogden tabernacle, as he lectured upon "The authority in the presidency of the church," we heard him say:

Catholicism points to her strong central government as a proof of divine authority. Now we challenge Catholicism to produce any more absolute authority for her pope than the president of this church holds in his sphere.

Now, when we examine into the "sphere" of action or influence that has been claimed for this "priesthood," we find that it includes the whole world.

Witness the utterance of J. M. Grant as found in Journal of Discourses, volume 2, pages 13 and 14. It is as follows:

If you maintain the fact that the priesthood of God is upon the earth, and God's representatives are upon the earth, the mouthpiece of Jehovah, the head of the kingdom of God upon earth, and the will of God is done upon earth as it is in heaven, it follows that the government of God is upon the earth. I allude to the church which it dictates, and to the whole earth which it will dictate.... If Joseph had a right to dictate me in relation to salvation, in relation to a hereafter, he had a right to dictate me in relation to all my earthly affairs, in relation to the treasures of the earth, and in relation to the earth itself. He had a right to dictate in relation to the cities of the earth, to the natives of the earth, and in relation to everything on land and on sea. That is what he had a right to do, if he had any right at all. If he did not have that right, he did not have the priesthood of God, he did not have the endless priesthood that emanates from an eternal being.... This same priesthood has been given to Joseph Smith, and has been handed down to his successors.

Surely Catholicism can claim no more for her pope than Mormonism does for hers. And well might Thomas Marsh say, as he is reported in Journal of Discourses, volume 5, page 208:

I have now got a better understanding of the presidency of the church than I formerly had. I used to ask myself, What is the difference between the president of our church and a pope? True, he is not called a pope, but names do not alter realities, and therefore he is a pope.

Another line of similarity or parallelism is that in the Dark Ages if not now, it is claimed that Catholicism dealt in indulgences.

Mormonism, through her sealings in the temples, still deals in indulgences, the difference being that while Catholicism dealt with specific cases, or sins. Mormonism does the business up wholesale with her declaration:

Verily, verily I say unto you, if a man marry a wife according to my word, and they are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, according to mine appointment and he or she shall commit any sin or transgression of the new and everlasting covenant whatever, and all manner of blasphemies, and if they commit no murder, wherein they shed innocent blood—yet they shall come forth in the first resurrection, and enter into their exaltation; but they shall be destroyed in the flesh, and shall be delivered unto the buffetings of Satan unto the day of redemption, saith the Lord God.—Utah Doctrine and Covenants 132:29.
Shades of Tetzel, or any other vendor of indulgences! Can Catholicism or any other ism except Mormonism equal this?

Of course, when we presented this we were accused of abusing the Mormons. And in their continual cry of "abuse and persecution" they remind us very much of the infant who had been corrected for some fault, and who put up the pitiful cry, "They're 'bussing mamma's baby!"

Well, now, say, if you'll forgive me this time I'll get off of this hobby and bid you all adieu till later.

A. M. CHASE.

THE TABLES TURNED.

Once upon a time, when trade was slack,
A Latter Day Saint his grip did pack
And started out to look for work,—
Any honest labor he would not shirk.

In parlor-car he did not go,
For, to state a fact, his funds were low;
But his heart was light and free
And like the old-time preachers he rode "shank's mare."

One day as he briskly walked along,
Singing a lively latter-day song,
An old deacon heard, whom his notes did charm,—
He hired him at once to work on his farm.

This deacon and his wife were quite a span,
In theological discussions they were in the van,—
But with brother John it must be confessed
They always came out "second best."

Said John to his boss, as they sat on the hay,
"Do you believe in infant baptism, pray?"
"Why, yes, you know that Silas and Paul Baptized the jailer's family, one and all;

"And Lydia, of Thyatira, who purple did sell,
Was baptized, and all her household as well.
So from these passages we've the right to guess
There were babies amongst them, more or less."

"But have you not read that his Philippian jailer
Had a daughter called Ruth, who was married to a tailor.
And they, with a servant old and frail,
Were the only ones who lived with her father in the jail;

"And that Lydia who believed the words spoken by Paul Was a middle-aged woman and not married at all?"

The old man jumped up, being quite perplexed,
"Say, where in the Bible do you find that text?
I've read the Scriptures o'er and o'er,
But I never came across that yarn before."

"It comes next to where you get the right to guess
There were babies amongst them, more or less.
While you were guessing there were babies around,
I was guessing there were none to be found.

"And the logic is good, as well as true,
That I've the right to suppose, as well as you.
But I much prefer, I must confess,
An ounce of fact to a pound of guess."

The deacon went home, and said to his wife,
"Oh, that Latter Day chap is the plague of my life!
If it wasn't for religion I would get real mad,—
A deacon of the church to be flored by a lad!"

She said, "Dear, don't let your heart be faint,
We'll soon get the best of your Latter Day Saint.
You ask him something he does not know,
And he'll feel so cheap he'll want to go."

A plan was arranged that very night.
They laughed and chuckled with great delight,
As they thought of John and how shamed he would look
When he couldn't give an answer from the book.

While working in the field next day,
The farmer to his man did say,
"John, I have something to propound,
And if the answer can be found,

"I'll lighten your labor, raise your pay,
And ask no more questions from this day;
If you can from the Bible show
Where God came from. I suppose you know?"

"Oh that's very easy," said John, quite dry,
"Give me something hard, next time you try:
Habakkuk, third chapter and third verse tells the story,
That God came from Teman, in all his glory."

You have heard how Absolom hung in the tree,
And of Jocah being swallowed by a fish in the sea,
Of Balaam's ass that spoke to her master,
And Lot's dear wife and her sad disaster.

If these were surprises to the above-named four,
The old farmer was surprised a great deal more,
But he rallied, and said in a voice quite faint,
"It is no use to tackle a Latter Day Saint."

To conclude this rhyme I am happy to say
The deacon and his wife for light did pray;
They found the truth in answer to prayer,
Gave John their daughter, and made him their heir.

CRITICISM VERSUS FAULTFINDING.

Criticise.—To examine carefully; to judge; to exhibit or point out the faults or excellences of; to censure.

Faultfinding.—A censurer; an objector.

Censure.—To reproach; to blame; to condemn; to judge.

Objector.—One who offers objections.

The above definitions from a standard authority convey very clearly the difference between criticism and faultfinding, the former to be encouraged, the latter to be condemned. Whenever we shut off criticism, we block every avenue to progress in all departments of human endeavor, and we can find our most congenial place among the dumb brutes.

The only restriction that safely can be placed on criticism is that it be done at a proper time and place, and with a right spirit; done in this way it can result only in improvement.

The teachings of Christ were and will ever be a criticism of what was then and what still continues to be taught in the world. The Reformation was a criticism and protest of and against conditions as... they then existed. The Restoration in the latter days with the statement, “The creeds are all wrong,” was a severe criticism of conditions as they then existed in the religious world. All our preaching at present is, or should be, a criticism of the world or our own people, condemning evil and approving all that is good.

In the Fishing River revelation, Doctrine and Covenants 102:2, the Saints are criticised and reproved for their transgressions, and the Lord says they “are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them”; and he points out that Zion can only be built up by the law of the celestial kingdom. In April, 1906, he called our attention to that revelation, and further criticised by telling us that “speculation, the exhibition of greed for gain is unseemly in the Saints and officers of the church.”

The Presidency, the Twelve, the high priests, the elders, the Bishopric, the Patriarchs, the editors of our various publications, the Board of Publication, the college trustees, and every other man or woman engaged in the service of God, must be subjects of a proper criticism.

The Saints are anxious for light on all matters of interest to the church, and many of them seldom see any of the ministry, and especially of the leading men of the church. Those whom God has called to responsible positions in the church should contribute to our church papers. It is a duty they owe to the Saints as much as to preach; and if they do this, they will do much toward bringing about a greater unity in the church. The Saints need to be fed, not scolded, and I believe that I am representing the feeling of a large number of the Saints in urging the class of men above referred to to contribute for the benefit of those who are anxious to learn and who have but very limited opportunities to do so.

It ought to be plain to the readers of the HERALD that we need light on the temporal law of the church. One of the Editors has intimated that we are without sufficient details to carry out the law. How about the Bishopric? Can they help us? If not, there is only one other place to go, and that is to God. He has never failed us in the past, and we ought to seek him now. It would be better than quarrelling with each other.

From my experience as a missionary and local worker, and what I learn from those engaged in like service, it is a settled fact in my mind that our slow progress does not come from any opposition arrayed against us. The religious world makes no persistent opposition to us. It is only spasmodic—dies before it reaches proportions that could be considered dangerous, and the remainder of the world is absolutely indifferent toward us, and all other religious teachers. What follows seems to the writer to be the cause of our trouble. We are losing, or failing to get a large per cent of the children of the isolated Saints. There are too many of our people without the church publications. There are many transgressors that are neither reformed nor expelled from the church. There is no harmonious belief or action in regard to divorce and remarriage. There are many who are financially able to help the church who do not. Many of the poor are discouraged because they can not help themselves, and can not discern any effort on the part of the church to help them. Equality does not exist as between the missionary and his family as compared with those who “toil in the affairs of men.” As a missionary church the number of people we reach is too small. We fail as shepherds to properly care for the sheep. They are spiritually dying out “on the mountains bleak and bare.” Our losses among the isolated ones are too great compared with the gains. Our literature does not reach the people. We have no systematic plan of causing it to do so.

We will always need the columns of the HERALD open for honest and honorable criticism of everything that is of interest to the church. But the chronic faultfinder, whether in the home, the branch, or the HERALD, should be persistently frowned upon.

I will try criticising the Editors. You should return to the writers every article or letter that contains personal reflections, either direct or indirect, or “nicknames” applied to any other religious society. In this way the writers will improve, and the matter for the HERALD also.

But after giving the broadest latitude possible for criticism the line must be drawn somewhere. Would it be right or wise to publish an article from some one advocating polygamy or blood-atonement because he believes it? Is it right or wise to publish an article on some vital point in the temporal law in direct opposition to the views of the Bishopric? Would it not be better to refer such a person to the Bishopric, or to the General Conference, or to a general assembly?

JOY IN SORROW.

My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into many afflictions.

—James 1:2, Inspired Translation.

Searching the annals of ancient history, from the beginning of creation down to the present time, we find no record of any deed which has ever been for the bettering or uplifting of man that has been wrought without afflictions; and if an affliction had not been good for man, God would not have suffered it to have been so.

The most beautiful illustration given us is the afflictions of our Savior, whereby we mortals received our hope of eternal life. As we see the joy this affliction brought to mankind, let us not marvel at our own minute sorrows, remembering ever that all affliction... is crowned with a joy. Without a battle we would never have a hero. Without a sorrow, we would never know a joy. Without a cloud we would never know the sunshine. Without the affliction of sorrow and death we would never be the free nation we are today. Even the language we speak came to us from the affliction of war, when, in the eleventh century, the people of England were conquered by the Normans, a French-speaking people, the two races intermingling, so that much of our language came from Germany, until the great Norman conquest. The ancestors of these Normans came from Norway, Sweden, and Denmark. What good have we that has not come to us through afflictions? "Count it all joy when ye fall into many afflictions."

Yet, selfish mortals that we are, we ever grumble at the least affliction, forgetting that every sorrow, every cloud is given us to broaden our characters and to bring us closer to him who suffered the affliction of death for us.

To the trusting soul who relies on God for strength there is not fear or trembling, but the true faith that can say, "Oh! Lord, thy will, not mine, be done," knowing always that the Father knoweth best, and that God chasteneth most those whom he loveth best.

Dear Saints, who at times feel your affliction too great, go to the Father, cast your burden at his feet; ask of him strength. He knows what you suffer, and will always help you.

MYRTLE ROSE STEWART.

THE TRUE WAY IS THE GOSPEL WAY.

The following article will be put in tract form, and is especially designed by Bro. Tucker for use in the Southern Mission.

"For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed."—Malachi 3:5.

"Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever."—Hebrews 13:8.

Reader, this proves that God is unchangeable; and as he is unchangeable, so also Jesus Christ, his Son, is unchangeable. And inasmuch as the Father and Son are unchangeable the Holy Ghost, which is the Holy Spirit of God, is unchangeable. It also follows that just as these three are unchangeable, the gospel, which is the word or message of God, is unchangeable; and this being true it is just as certain that the gospel must be preached now as it was in the days of Christ and the apostles. Paul's statement is applicable now: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."—Galatians 1:8.

Regardless of what men may now preach, this forces us to search the Scriptures closely in order to determine what was preached by Jesus and the apostles.

MAN CAN NOT RIGHTFULLY CHANGE THE GOSPEL.

Man has no right to change one principle, command, or word; and when men fail to teach the gospel as Christ and the apostles taught it, their religion is vain, and is as "sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal." Jesus taught: "But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."—Matthew 16:9.

When men endeavor to teach an easier way, or a shorter route to heaven than the way our Lord and Master taught and walked in, they must do so at the displeasure of God, and suffer the consequences. This is done by some through ignorance, by others to court favor with the people.

Some say, "If my preachers teach and lead me wrong they and not I will have to answer for that." This is not good Bible logic. Jesus taught the reverse: "And he spoke a parable unto them; Can the blind lead the blind? shall they not both fall into the ditch?"—Luke 6:39.

HOW TO KNOW THE RIGHT WAY.

How then can we know the right way and the true gospel? Let Jesus answer: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself."—John 7:17.

Often it is said: "We know we are saved, because we received the Holy Ghost." Reader, do not mistake the spirit of joy and merriment for the Holy Ghost. Remember those people at Samaria had great joy after they had been baptized by proper authority; but as yet the Holy Ghost was fallen upon none of them until after prayer and the laying on of hands.

"Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world."—1 John 4:1.

FALSE PROPHETS AND TEACHERS.

False spirits make false prophets, false preachers, and false teachers, who will turn the ears of the people from the truth and unto fables, working upon their sympathies by relating death-bed and graveyard stories, and things wherein there is no profit: perverting the gospel of Christ, and making it of none effect, by opposing the right way and persecuting the children of God. By this you may know they are not of God, for a child of God will not be a persecutor; for such a spirit is not of the Lord.

Our Savior said to his people, "Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves."—Matthew 10:16.

The spirit of prejudice, hatred, malice, and persecution never built up the Lord's work or saved a soul in the kingdom of heaven, and never will; but it has led many to degradation and ruin. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."
PURE IN HEART LOVE GOD.

Many people seem to forget the statement of our Lord and Master: "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God. Blessed are the peace-makers: for they shall be called the children of God."—Matthew 5: 8, 9.

How can we become pure in heart and peace-makers? By truly loving the Lord.

WE MUST PROVE OUR LOVE.

Many people say they love the Lord, but how is our love for him proved? "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him and will manifest myself to him."—John 14: 21.

Not many passages of scripture contain more precious promises to those who love the Lord! To be loved of God and his son Jesus and have Jesus manifest himself to us! To manifest is to make known, to reveal.

REVELATION NOT DONE AWAY.

But some say God and Christ do not reveal things now.

Hold, friend! If you do not believe in present-day revelation, you do not believe in the God of the Bible, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. If Jesus has not revealed anything unto you, it is because you have not kept his commandments, and you are yet in your sins. His commandments are these:

PRINCIPLES OF THE GOSPEL.

"Have faith in God."—Mark 11: 22.
"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."—Matthew 28: 19.
"They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."—Mark 16: 18.
"Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man."—Luke 21: 36.

"Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust."—Matthew 5: 43-45.

"And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me. Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you."—Luke 22: 19, 20.

"But rather give alms of such things as ye have; and, behold, all things are clean unto you. But woe unto you, Pharisee! for ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."—Luke 11: 41, 42.

MONOGAMY BIBLE DOCTRINE.

"For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh."—Matthew 19: 5.

Remember, friend, Jesus said "wife" (singular) and not wives (plural). That church organization in Utah, which has taught and practiced polygamy for so many years, under the name or title of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, has no right to that name. That church has departed from the Lord, his church, and the true gospel. It is properly known as Brigham Young’s church, or "Brighamites," because he was the founder, organizer, and establisher of that church and doctrine. See periodical entitled Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 696; Life of Brigham Young, page 188. Also Kirtland Temple suit, Lake County, Ohio; Temple Lot suit before Judge John F. Philips, judge of the United States circuit court in Kansas City, Missouri; Chambers’ Encyclopedia, pages 449 and 450, volume 5, 1894 revised edition; Encyclopedia Britannica, American reprint edition, volume 16, pages 853 and 854.

Through the departure of Brigham Young and party some prophecies of the Scriptures were fulfilled. (See Jeremiah 17: 5, 6; Daniel 11: 35; also 2 Peter 2: 10-15.)

SIX PRINCIPLES OF GOSPEL OF CHRIST.

By a close study of the Scriptures we find our Savior taught:

First. Faith in God.
Second. Repentance.
Fourth. Laying on of hands.
Fifth. Resurrection from the dead. (John 11: 25.)
Sixth. Eternal judgment. (Revelation 22: 12.)

We also find these enumerated by Paul in Hebrews 6: 1, 2. They are there called the principles of the doctrine of Christ.

HE IS CURSED WHO TEACHES DIFFERENTLY.

Remember Paul said, "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." The apostle John says: "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed:
for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds.”—2 John 9-11.

RESPONSIBILITY OF SELECTING IS OURS.
It is necessary for us to be very careful and look well for the narrow path, for thus saith the Holy Bible, “There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death.”—Proverbs 14:12; 16:25.

Any prophet or preacher who teaches more or less than Jesus and his apostles did, does so on his own responsibility; and must sooner or later suffer the consequences for so doing.

BAPTISM BY IMMERSION FOR REMISSION OF SINS.
We find some people who believe and teach that sprinkling or pouring water on the head is baptism, but they fail to bring forth the scripture to prove it. Others believe in immersion, but do not believe it is for the remission of sins, or that it is essential to salvation, yet the Holy Bible teaches both.

LAYING ON OF HANDS.

Others believe baptism by immersion is for the remission of sins, but refuse to believe in the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Spirit, for blessing little children, healing the sick, and for ordination. Most churches practice the laying on of hands for ordination, but ignore it for the other three purposes for which it was given.

Why observe one fourth and ignore three fourths of what the Lord commanded touching this principle of his doctrine? How can people expect to enjoy the gifts and blessings of the Lord as enumerated by the apostle Paul in the First Corinthian letter, twelfth chapter, when they refuse to obey his teaching? Jesus asked the question, “And why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?”—Luke 6:46.

ONE MUST HAVE AUTHORITY TO OFFICIATE.

One other important part of the gospel which we must not overlook is that of authority from the Lord, the power and right which enables men to administer the sacred ordinances of God’s house. “No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron.”—Hebrews 5:4. Therefore all men should look up the subject of authority from a scriptural standpoint. For our Savior has said: “Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth me; and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that sent me.”—John 13:20.

How can we know whom the Lord has called and sent? Easy enough: “To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.”—Isaiah 8:20.

“For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God.”—John 3:34.

THOSE TRULY SENT TEACH GOD’S LAW.

Reader, you will never hear those whom the Lord has called and sent teaching that baptism is not essential to salvation: that it is not administered by immersion, and that it is not for the remission of sins. Neither will they teach that the laying on of hands is no longer needed for the four purposes recorded in the Scriptures.

ONE FAITH, ONE CHURCH.

Since there is but one true faith, one true Lord, one true baptism, there can be only one true church or body of Christ. (See Ephesians 4th chapter.) Whenever you find that church or body on earth you will find the same kind of officers therein; viz.: apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, bishops, elders, teachers, deacons, priests, etc., for God set them in the church “for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ: that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive.” (Ephesians 4:12-14.)

We have not attained perfection, neither are we all in the unity of the faith, neither have all the knowledge of the Son of God. Therefore these officers are all needed in the church to-day. When men say they are no longer needed, they speak not according to the law and testimony.

WHY NAME LATTER DAY SAINT.

Some object to the name or title “Latter Day Saint.” The name “saint,” is a scriptural one. We find the Lord’s people called saints both before and after the resurrection. It occurs in the Bible about eighty times, while the name Christian occurs but three times. The term “latter-day” simply designates the day and age in which we live. Those saints who lived before Christ came into the world were former-day saints; Those who lived at the time of Christ and since are latter-day saints. Paul says: “God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spoke in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds.”—Hebrews 1:1, 2. If it was the last days then, it surely must be the latter part of the last days now. So if there are any saints in the world to-day they are properly called “latter-day” saints. Paul said the whole family in heaven and earth are named after the Lord Jesus Christ. (See Ephesians 3:14, 15.) The bride takes the name of her husband. The church is known as the “bride, the Lamb’s wife,” and if she is the bride she will bear the name of the bridegroom. Hence, "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." The name and style is certainly a scriptural one, since the reorganization of the church. What other is found in the Bible that better points out the church of Jesus Christ? Why reject a scriptural name and choose one that does not occur there? By what authority can people do this?

NECESSITY FOR FEARING GOD AND KEEPING HIS COMMANDMENTS.

Reader, we are now living in the day and age spoken of by the apostle, when people "will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables."—2 Timothy 4:3, 4. Thus the time has come when people are "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God"; "having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof." The apostle says: "from such turn away."

"Thus saith the Lord, stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein."—Jeremiah 6:16.

Again: "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil."—Ecclesiastes 12:13, 14.

"And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be."—Revelation 22:12.

We send this little tract forth into the world, praying God's loving Spirit may attend it, to the enlightening of the minds of all who read it, that they may find rest to their souls in the kingdom of God and his dear Son Jesus Christ. Amen.

Do you say, "I can be a good man and not be a member of the church?" Certainly you can, and you ought to be. A man can be a good husband, father, citizen, and a good neighbor, and not be a Christian, but he can be a great deal better man if he will add Christianity to morality. But where is that Scripture which promises eternal life to the good man, as such? It is not in the Book.—Selected.

NEW RATING OF THE WORLD'S FLEETS.

If the system of rating the fighting values of the world's fleets adopted in the latest issue of "Fighting Ships" be correct, we must entirely revise our estimate of the relative power of some of the leading navies. France yields second place to the United States, and Germany, which before the Japanese War was considered to be at least equal if not superior to the United States, moves down to fifth position with Japan ahead of her, Russia being the sixth, Italy seventh, and Austria in the eighth position. The placing of the German navy below that of Japan in an estimate of relative fighting power would seem, at the first blush, to savor of absurdity; but when we begin to examine into the basis of comparison adopted in "Fighting Ships," we find that the change has been made on grounds which are at least plausible.

This startling advancement of some of the navies and depreciation of others is due to the fact that the new system of rating is based strictly upon the stern lessons of the Japanese War, in which, during a few short months, the third greatest navy of the world was practically swept out of existence. Outside of its reassertion of the value of a trained personnel, that war emphasized the importance of the big, heavily armed, and heavily armored battleship. Furthermore, it is the unanimous opinion of naval experts that the war established the overwhelming value of the heavy, long-ranged gun. It proved, once more, that the final command of the sea, other things being equal, will lie with the navy which can bring the largest number of big guns to bear, when the rival fleets are facing each other in line of battle. This fact has been so far accepted that the building programs of all navies for the present year are based entirely upon its recognition.—Scientific American, November 10, 1906.

ARE THE CHURCHES TOO LUXURIOUS?

We are reminded by the following that once in a while a man arises who defends the worldly church yet clamors for a spiritual pastor; but the two will never work long in the same yoke.—Editors.

STANDARD OF FRENCH "HONOR."

They have strange sentiments in France regarding the alleged rights of the nobility. This is being shown in the divorce suit pending between Anna Gould Castellane and the Count. After it had been proved conclusively that this insignificant sprig of snobbery squandered a large part of his wife's fortune, outraged her title to wifehood, humiliated her, slandered her, and beat her with his fists, he now comes into court with a "demand" for a settlement of his debts and permanent alimony. If this is not done he points out that he will be a pauper. Horrible! Horrible!
But why should not Castellane become a pauper? Why should not he do an honest day's work for once in his life and show that there is a little manhood in his miserable carcass? For the simple reason that "honor" forbids it. Who ever heard of a French nobleman going to work or behaving himself in any other decent manner? It is a violation of the code, and doubtless Count Boni would rather kill himself than earn a franc.

It is reported that the Countess offered the Count $200,000 to pay his debts of "honor" and $30,000 a year to live on. If this is true it was a most generous offer of a much-abused woman. But whatever the offer, it was indignantly spurned by the haughty Count. He would not take a cent less than the full payment of his debts, amounting to $800,000, and an income of $50,000 a year. This demand has been refused, and now the Count is bringing some sort of lawsuit to force his terms.

This whole Castellane business is disgusting, but it is too important a lesson to be ignored. Count de Castellane has spent millions of the Gould dollars which he wrung from his wife by all manner of duress, and yet he has debts of "honor" now amounting to $800,000. According to the French idea the Count must pay these debts of "honor" or he can no longer be rated a gentleman. There is no account taken of the manner in which he accumulated these debts nor the way he forced his wife to give him vast sums of money in excess of anything reasonable. That he took her by the throat and choked her until she signed checks is overlooked entirely, but if he lost at cards he must pay if he remains a "gentleman." Shades of Jay Gould and his mousetraps!—Kansas City Journal, November 9, 1906.

B. T. WASHINGTON AFTER PITCHER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 7.—[Special]—Acting under instructions from President Roosevelt, the War Department to-day wrote to Colonel William L. Pitcher, Twenty-seventh Infantry, calling for an explanation of his reported criticism of negro troops. He will be given a reasonable time to respond to this official communication.

Up to this afternoon he had made no denial of the remarks attributed to him, which the President considers as offensive as the acts of the discharged negroes. Should he admit he was correctly quoted, he will be court-martialed for violation of the army regulations, which forbid officers of the army to talk for publication on such matters.

There is reason to believe that Booker T. Washington is at the bottom of Colonel Pitcher's troubles, though this can not be established definitely. Still it is known that at a conference President Roosevelt had with Washington last week the negro educator earnestly besought him not to dismiss the negro companies involved in the Brownsville riot. The President refused to listen to his appeal.

Washington believed there should be "equal justice" administered and heartily approved the President's decision to call Colonel Pitcher to account for his purported statement that he never liked negro troops, that the farther away they were the better it pleased him, and that there were enough fine white young men in the country of whom to make soldiers without recruiting among negroes.

There are officers of the army who consider the President has been too severe on Colonel Pitcher. Many of them entertain the same views he expressed. They believe the negroes who are now in the army have degenerated from those who served up to the time of the Philippine insurrection.

The officials are hiding the fact as much as possible, but nevertheless it is true that the Filipinos detest the black soldiers and that in order to prevent trouble it has been necessary to station colored regiments in the Moro country, where the feelings of the inhabitants are not considered.

It was the case in former years that no objection was made by any city to quartering negro troops in its vicinity. But now their assignment to a post leads to a flood of protests—which generally are disregarded. . . .

The President is determined to show the country that whatever the color of a citizen he has the protection of the chief executive and of the laws.—Chicago Tribune, November 8, 1906.

AN ENGLISH EDITOR ON THE SIMPLIFIED SPELLING.

The Liverpool (England) Post and Mercury, August 27: With the exception of the two changes which we have the privilege of announcing exclusively, and which do to some extent outrage the philological principles conscientiously held by the British people, there is nothing in President Roosevelt's ukase or encyclical or bull which need ruffle the feelings of a patriotic Englishman. For instance, we that is, if the President's writ is to run in the old country—are to write "kist" instead of "kissed." This will be hard on the curates who always say, "Righteousness and peace have kiss-ed each other." Possibly they may make it a professional question, like the extended facilities, but other classes will be comforted by the knowledge that Shakespeare used to write it that way; as, for instance, when in Antony and Cleopatra he made Scarus say to Enobarbus, "We have kist away kingdoms and provinces." No ambiguity is likely to arise from the confusion between this "kist" and the Scotch "kist o' whistles." One is reminded that, seventeen years ago, when Tennyson published the all-perfect hymn which pedants sometimes pick at, the last line was printed, "When I have cross the bar," and a few young persons girded at him for spoiling his poem with a vulgar American-ism. But it turned out that "croot" was not an Americanism after all, and that it is to be found in English authors as early as 1600. So, too, without moulting a feather of our national pride we may give up "dipped" and take to "dipt," even if we happen to be Baptists, for "dipt" is the form used in Coverdale's Bible. We may feel inclined to kick against "domicil" for "domicile" and "fantasm" for "phantasm." But Lord Mansfield used to write "domicil," and "fantasm" was the original form of the word in English; it only became "phantasm" when it was adopted by the metaphysicians, who are always careful to use Latin forms of spelling. We may write "gage" for "guage" with the authority of Fuller as well as of President Roosevelt. Finally, if we are grown up and beyond the danger of the birch rod, English; we will have been induced to write "domicile" instead of "domicil," "phantasm" instead of "phantasm," "pedagog" instead of "pedagogue."—The Public, September 29, 1906.

Christ With Us.

"Inasmuch as ye did unto the least of these ye did it unto me."

I cried aloud, "There is no Christ
In all this world unparadised!
No Christ to go to in my need—
No Christ to comfort me and feed!
He passed in glory out of sight.
The angels drew him into light:
Now in the lonesome earth and air
I can not find him anywhere.
Would God that heaven were not so far
And I were where the White Ones are!"

Then from the gray stones of a street
Where goes an ocean drift of feet,
I heard a child's cry tremble up,
And turned to share my scanty cup,
When lo, the Christ I thought was dead
Was in the little one I fed!
At this I drew my aching eyes
From the far-watching of the skies;
And now whichever way I turn
I see my Lord's white halo burn!

Wherever now a sorrow stands,
'Tis mine to heal his nail-torn hands:
In every lonely lane and street,
'Tis mine to wash his wounded feet—
'Tis mine to roll away the stone
And warm his heart against my own.
Here, here, on earth I find it all—
The young archangels white and tall,
The Golden City and the doors,
And all the shining of the floors!
—Edward Markham.

Dear Sister Frances and All the Mothers of the Home Column: It has been a long time since I have appropriated your space, and I hope you will indulge me with a little now; just to say that I am interested in the efforts to build a home for the homeless little ones. There can be nothing that appeals more to the sympathies of mothers than do children bereft of parents, especially of those who are also destitute of the means to secure them against want.

The Scriptures tell us that the man who 'provides not for his own, specially those of his own house, hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel.' God has also made it the duty of the church to look after the needs of the poor and helpless. If the church fails in this duty, does it not also fail in its claim to Christianity?

But the homeless little children—the little ones who are all his whether they are found in the church or out of it—need to be provided with loving care as well as with food and raiment. But above all they need to be taught in "light and truth" the gospel of the Son of God. Has not this work been deferred too long? It is well that we dwell in luxurious homes, that our own are sheltered, clothed, and fed upon the best the land affords, while these are left uncared for? God has spoken of these little ones who if Christ were here he would go out and gather in his arms. Are we longing to be Christlike? Then, fathers and mothers, let us speed the work along in His name.

Love to all the household of faith.

ELEANOR KEARNEY.

How It Was Done in St. Louis.

"What will you take to call the whole thing off?" he said, putting his hand in his pocket.

"Why, what do you mean?" I asked, for I had only requested him to "bring his best girl" to our bazaar for the benefit of the children's home fund.

"How much do you expect to make on it?" he retorted, in the grandiloquent style of one who would add, "I will give the amount."

I hesitated to name the amount we hoped to clear, not because I expected him to offer it, but for fear we would fall short of our aim; but I grew courageous and said that I had hoped we would clear about two hundred dollars, "but if you would give us that amount ("which you won't"), I added laughing) that would not help us."

Then he asked: "Why, how is that?"

"Because," I replied, "if you put two hundred or a thousand dollars in the bank to-morrow and I were in sore need of money I could not draw on your account, could I? I could not even draw the interest on your money."

"I do not see what that has to do with the case."

"Well, I do. We believe our heavenly Father desires us to build a home for children who have no other home, and we know that if we obey his command we will be blessed;—if you give the whole amount and we do nothing we will no more reap the reward of a good or generous act than we could draw on the money of some one else deposited in the bank."

"Well, I never thought of that way," he said.

"It is time you did then, and time you realized that if you want a bank account here you must put by some of your earnings. And if you want to do a little banking business where moth nor thieves destroy you had just as well begin doing some good and so lay up your treasures in a safe place." I wondered if that little talk would do any good. When I tried talking to a sister, she said: "Oh, I won't be here. I'm lucky to get out of the work and worry and expense of a bazaar."

"Well, maybe you are; but I always feel that if I do what seems to be right, and help the gospel work all I can, I am in a better position to ask help when there comes a time that I am unable to help myself. At any rate I have more confidence—when going to pray—that I will get an answer, than if duties had been neglected."

"Well, maybe you are right," doubtfully; "I guess I'll send something."
And so it went on. Sr. D— said she hoped to clear one hundred dollars on her table—that was the fancy-work table, and of course the most likely to succeed—but then she had placed her figure too high; even though we knew her to be a worker, we did not expect her to succeed in so high an aim.

At last the bazaar was over, and not only old Sr. D— make the sum she hoped for, but we found at our “counting up” meeting that we had nearly two hundred and fifty dollars instead of only two hundred as we had hoped. Having a few accounts standing, and some bills to be met, we felt hopeful that we would make it two hundred and fifty dollars.

At the regular meeting we had full returns and were surprised and delighted to find that several donations of money and the outstanding accounts brought our total up to two hundred and seventy-six dollars and five cents. Now we congratulated ourselves, and several said, “Let’s make it three hundred!” and some gave a dollar each, so that soon we had two hundred and eighty-seven dollars and thirty cents. Then we decided to make up the amount from our treasury and trust to getting it later; so our secretary is going to send Sr. Holmes a check for three hundred dollars and we are telling you of our success, hoping to encourage other branches or societies to try the same method. Christmas is coming! and it is a good time to work for the home and please him who said, “Ias much as ye do it to the least of these ye do it unto me.”

We want you all to do a little banking business where the principal is safe and the interest sure. E. B.

HARTFORD, Missouri, November 12, 1906.

Editors Herald: Bro. Allen and I just closed a splendid meeting at above place last night. The attendance and interest has been very gratifying, and while there have been no baptisms, some are very near.

We were cared for by Sr. Sarah Johnson, who with her daughter Anna was baptized last fall by Bro. Tanner, and whose faithful, consistent life has done much to remove prejudice.

We very much missed Bro. George Fenner and family, now of Blue Rapids, Kansas, who are highly respected here, where they lived a number of years.

Sr. Fenner and son Glen were in on a visit, and attended the services. We sold three copies of Book of Mormon, ten Voice of Warning, and four copies of Zion’s Praises.

A new church (union) is being built, with a Masonic hall overhead; seventy-two dollars donated by church-members, and six hundred and twenty-eight by nonmembers toward the cost. These books and the Bible, and an elder a little advanced in years, will be all you need. The cost of the translation. Woodbine, Missouri, on the church proposition: Resolved that the Christian Church is in harmony with the teaching of the New Testament, etc. Although Black claimed no fellowship with the progressive Christians, yet he affirmed the Christian Church.

I need not tell you that he never showed one quotation in favor of such a name. In fact I never heard such a complete failure on the part of a Campbellite preacher to try to sustain his proposition.

Bro. Davis carried the people with him even from the first, on our proposition; and it was universally declared by those present outside of a few of the “Campbellites,” that Black lost out even on the first proposition, and it was much worse on his own. It was a complete landslide in our favor. And you could see the few “Campbellites” looked like they had taken too large a dose of their own medicine. Black is like many others of the same faith—he was hard to keep in order, and one of his brethren was under the necessity of apologizing to the chairman for Elder Black.

We had a fine chairman in the person of a Mr. Powell, a well-informed Methodist, and a good man, I think; at least he tried to do the best he could, I am sure.

Bro. Davis is only a pony debater (this is the third time), while Black is an old debater and has “knocked out” almost every Baptist, Methodist, and Latter Day Saint he ever met. But his brethren here do not feel over-jubilant over this kind of a “knockout.” Black fought very hard to disconnect himself from the “progressive wing.” He first said he started at Pentecost. Then said he was a nonprogressive “wing” of this reformatory movement. He denied Campbell was disfellowshiped from the Baptist Church, but later admitted it. He made a statement that surprised almost everybody, even his own followers, when he stated that a person could not get salvation ten feet from a preacher. That came like a thunder-clap when he was excited, I suppose. It was plain to all he knew very little of what salvation consisted. And about all there could be in salvation was “baptism.” Bro. Davis showed where he took in a Methodist into that church on sprinkling; also a Utah Mormon on his baptism. He fought a discipline, but Bro. J. T. was well supplied with such, and proved them in the minds of all outside of Campbellites. Bro. Davis says, “Here is the first, introduced by Bro. Campbell. Next is Green’s Manual, A Guide to Young Ministers. Third is A Light Wax Church Discipline, by M. P. Hayden. Next is a double-header entitled The Christian Worker, by J. H. Foy. All these can be got of the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Missouri. A person meeting these so-called nonprogressives needs Reformatory Movements, by John F. Rowe. Also Grafton’s Life of Campbell, Haden’s History of Disciples, and Christian System and The Living Oracles, by A. Campbell. They all deny they translated them. You will find it on page 121 Grafton, also in the preface of Living Oracles, also on page 88, Bothy Reading Course, called “Concerning the Disciples.” In another little book called Sketches of Our Pioneers, page 43, you will have all you need to show that this was A. Campbell’s own translation. These books and the Bible, and an elder a little acquainted with the tricks of these Mormon-eaters, as they style themselves, will be all you need. The cost of these Campbellite books will be about five dollars. They can be bought of the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Missouri.

Those letters the writer got from the Christian Standard, Firm Foundation, and Gospel Missionary, which I had published in Glad,Tidings, February, 1905, also printed later in the Ensign, were also republished in Gospel Missionary March 3, 1906, excusing themselves for writing me, and saying they wrote me candidly supposing me to be a member of the Church of Christ. Ahah! I got the truth for once.

BURLINGTON, Colorado, November 15, 1906.

Editors Herald: It is two years since I left the Saints in Sioux City and came to this beautiful country of health, and I have not heard the gospel sound since that date. I do not believe that it is God’s will, that his children who have made a covenant with him should become lost; sheep of his flock, and I surely confess my weakness that I have not lived as I would.
had I not been isolated; but as I think over my life and see what I have had to pass through, my heart goes out to the heavenly Father for his love and mercy. It has seemed at times that I have had more sorrow and care than I could bear; but now I see that these things were only for my good. And I regret that I was not more patient; where there was darkness there is now sunshine, and I will ask the Saints to rejoice with me and pray with me that if it be God's will I may again renew my covenant, and taste of the blessed food.

ANNA WINEGAR.

RAYMOND, Idaho, November 7, 1906.

Editors Herald: I am just recovering from an attack of rheumatism which confined me to the house for a while. But yesterday being election-day I got so patriotic, or idiotic, (I leave you to judge which,) that I had a bed made in the gospel wagon on which to recline and, my son acting as driver, I went to the polls and voted the—the—well, it must have been the mug-wump ticket, for I voted for men on the Republican, Democratic, Socialist, and Independent Prohibition tickets. But I hope none of my brethren will accuse me of being a politician, neither a sore-head, for the Lord has said where the wicked rule the people mourn, and he has enjoined upon his Saints the necessity of seeking to place in office men only who are wise and good.

This has been a busy year with me so far. Having been appointed to labor in the Rocky Mountain Mission, I left Independence, Missouri, about the first of May, and went to Lamoni, Iowa, to confer with the General Church Recorder concerning branch records in the Idaho District and did all I could toward correcting them. I then went to Kansas City, Missouri, to meet my brother, J. Ed Layland, who was sick and had concluded to go to the mountains for his health. So on the evening of the 7th of May we boarded a Union Pacific train for Cokeville, Wyoming.

I began my labors in the Bear Lake country, and there I succeeded in baptizing two. I then moved on to Eightmile, where Bro. Stead and I had labored last winter. Did what I could to strengthen the Eightmile Saints; then I went to Blackfoot, Idaho, where I attended the Sunday-school convention and the Idaho District conference. Was in the Snake River country for some time. Visited Idaho Falls, Lewisville, La Belle, and Otis; afterward, accompanied by Elder J. M. Smith, I visited Soda Springs and Eightmile. At the latter place we organized a branch of the church, with sixteen members and a full set of officers. Here I parted company with Bro. Smith, he going to Salt Lake City, while I moved on through the Bear Lake country and into Wyoming. Here I visited Smoot and Afton, in Star Valley. I preached at Smoot, but could not get a house to preach in at Afton. I then went to lower Star Valley and called on Bro. John Coy and family. But owing to unfavorable conditions prevailing at this time, I did no preaching there. From there I went into the Teton Basin, in Fremont County, Idaho, and labored in the Cedrine and Teton Branches. Having concluded my labors here, I went to Blackfoot via Rexburg, Salem, Lewisville, and Idaho Falls, visiting Saints and friends at all these places.

My object in visiting the branches of the Idaho District was twofold. As secretary of the district (which also includes the duties of district recorder) it was my duty to correct the records of the district, and also to instruct the branch secretaries, if any were found who needed instruction. Another reason for visiting the branches was to feed the sheep and lambs which Christ has purchased with his own blood. And while part of the labor that I performed in branches really belongs to the district president, yet I know that our worthy president could not attend to all the duties that devolved upon him by reason of his time being taken up with business cares, and there being no money in the treasury to defray his traveling expenses, which would be car and stage-fare for nearly one thousand miles, at Western local rates. So I visited every branch in the district, seven in number, besides doing work outside of branches.

At Malta, where there used to be a branch of the church, I visited and preached to the dear Saints who are living there without a shepherd to look after them. Then after attending the district conference held at Hagerman, Idaho, September 22, I went into the Big Wood River country, and visited the few Saints who live at Hailey and vicinity. From there I went to Little Wood River (passing through Silver Creek Valley enroute, where live a community of followers, called on some of them and had considerable talk with them). At Little Wood River there are some faithful Saints, without an organization, except a Sunday-school. I tarried with them a short time and preached to them. From there I drove to Anco, on Big Lost River, and stopped with the family of the late Bro. Herbert Jones, who departed this life on the 3d of October. I preached the funeral-sermon.

Leaving there I crossed the desert and came to Blackfoot, and tarried a few days with the Saints there. Here I met Bro. A. A. Baker, who arrived the same day that I did. We held a couple of meetings at Blackfoot. I then drove to Pocatello, and visited Saints there, and the next day I drove to McCommon, and called on the brothers Goodenough, and tarried over night with them, then on to Soda Springs and Eightmile. At Soda Springs, where there used to be a branch of the church, there are now only a few members. Some of them are live members, while others are lukewarm. May God help them all to live right.

After visiting Saints at Soda and Eightmile, I came home to Raymond, Idaho, where I am at present. A. J. LAYLAND.

REACH, Maine, November 9, 1906.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading your good news. I can find lots of good instruction. I especially like to read the letters. I can say as I have said long ago, I know this is God's work; and I know if we are faithful to our calling, we shall reap the reward that is laid up for his people.

The Lord has no respect of persons. He that will keep his commandments will be accepted of him.

We have meetings and Sunday-school in our branch every Sunday. We have a nice little chapel, and the Lord is blessing us in many ways. Our conference will meet November 24.

We have been having some fine meetings here at North Deer Isle and Reach, held by our worthy Bro. W. E. LaRue. He is a good worker, and a fine speaker, and is liked here very much in every respect. We are sorry to think the time is so near at hand when he will leave us; but we hope it will be our good luck to have him come back next year. We think he will do a good work if he comes back. Your sister,

ELLEN BILLINGS.

RUNNELLS, Iowa, November 1, 1906.

Dear Herald: Allow us a few lines in your column to tell of the work in this part of the vineyard. The Saints here are striving to live as best they can and some progress is being made. Our regular service is Sunday-school and social meeting on Sunday morning, and preaching-service in the evening.

This branch has extended an invitation for the district conference to meet here at the next session, which will likely be in February.

Elder Nicholas Stamm, who is quite well known to nearly all of the Saints of the district, has decided to go to the Saints' Home to live, and will leave here this week. He has been a member of our branch for many years, in fact ever since he came into the district. The Saints under the direction of Sr. Emma Park thought it fitting to express to our aged brother our esteem in a substantial way. On Tuesday evening, October 20, the Saints assembled at the home of Sr. Nancy Park for a prayer and social meeting, Elder Stamm being asked to be present. The hour together was spent in a most enjoyable way in prayer- and testimony-meeting. During the time it was mentioned that Elder Stamm had been in the district since about 1869, thus being acquainted with all the early Saints. Part of this time he spent in the missionary field. When he first came here he had his hearing to a limited degree, but for the past several years he has been entirely deaf. When all had taken part in the evening meeting Bro. Stamm was handed a paper conveying to him the best wishes of the Saints of this branch and wishing him well in his new home, and presenting to him two nicely-knotted comforters and a pair of good heavy blankets. Bro. Stamm arose and assured the Saints of his deep appreciation of the gifts, and spoke at some length of his acquaintance and association with the Saints, and bore a strong testimony to the truthfulness of the latter-day work.

Bro. Stamm has been one of our number for years and all wish him well in the remaining years of his life.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. E. LAUGHLIN.

SCRANTON, Pennsylvania, November 5, 1906.

Editors Herald: I came to this place three weeks ago to-day, and have been busy ever since. A week ago yesterday I baptized three, two men and a woman; and on Monday evening baptized four more, two women, one man, and a boy, and blessed three children. Brn. Bishop and Lewis assisted in the confirmations. The Spirit of the Master was present in the confirmations, and in blessing the children.

There is a lively band of Saints in this place. About all of them take part in the meetings. The prayer-services are quite encouraging. Both old and young join in the worship.

The outlook for this branch in the future seems quite encouraging, if properly handled. There are some back-lots but they will roll off by and by. I enjoy good liberty in the presentation of the word, and enjoy the peace spoken of by our President that we should have. I organized a Religio November 5.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

SAMUEL BROWN.

Dear Herald: It is nearly two years since I occupied in your pages before. Since then many events have transpired for our development.

The foremost event in my experience has been the changes in the organization of the Stockport Branch, with which I have been associated since my joining the work a little under four years ago.

Our esteemed Bro. George Baty was our president, and fathered the little flock in a very able manner, and so guided us that perfect peace and harmony has always prevailed. June 30, this year, our brother stated his intention to leave us, and called us to elect another president in his stead. It came as a severe blow to us at the time, and we hardly felt able to act. However, a ballot was taken and I was appointed. It seemed too much for one so young, with almost all the branch members older than I, both in years and in church-work. But so it was decided, and I have not had one reason to regret, but many to rejoice, for it has been a privilege and not a duty to act in that capacity.

We have recently had laboring with us our esteemed Bro. Richard Bullard, of Boston, and his visit to us is in answer to prophecy. It transpired thus:

About twenty years ago, our late president, George Baty, resided in Brooklyn, and visited a reunion held in Maine. He had been instructed by the Spirit that he would be spoken to in prophecy ere he returned home. The forty meetings of the ten-day reunion were attended with this thought filling his mind, "Will it be at this meeting?"

But he was not spoken to. He, however, was not home, and in calling at Boston was persuaded to stay the week end. At one of the meetings there he was spoken to. Bro. Richard Bullard was on the stand and came to the front, and among other things stated, "it was God's will that George Baty be now ordained to the ministry . . . for his voice shall yet be heard in the islands of the sea preaching the unsearchable riches of the gospel of Christ."

The brother did not accept ordination; and quite a time after came to England, intending to stay only a short time. His stay has, however, extended over fifteen years, and during that time the prophecy has been fulfilled. He was eventually ordained, came to Stockport, and by untiring labor among his workmates and neighbors, witnessed to the truth of the latter-day work.

For over seventeen years ago, November 5, is the anniversary of the opening of services in our meeting-room, the result of the labors of this man. Now he has gone but his impression remains with us.

We saw in the Herald that R. Bullard was coming to visit England, and Bro. George, as he was leaving England, asked me to write him to remind him of his prophecy.

I wrote to him, invited him to come to Stockport and labor for a short time. He came on September 29, and held forth six nights, and left a marked effect for good among the Saints.

To manifest that work is being accomplished in England, and to publicly acknowledge my indebtedness to God for his kindness in directing me in paths that I knew not, I write at this time. Circumstances seem much against the publishing of the gospel here in England, and it is especially difficult for the missionary staff. There is an untiring pillar of the work to sustain us in our efforts. I speak of our dear Bro. Rushton. He seems especially adapted to the needs of the English people. I am pleased to be associated with the Saints of this district, and our district president and district officers try hard to further the work. George Baty is missed in the district, he being vice-president. He was also president of the Seventh Quorum of Elders.

I look forward to the time when brighter days will come over the work, when souls shall be brought in plentiously, and the kingdom of God be established in greater numbers.

To Richard Bullard, W. H. Kelley of Indiana, George Baty, and all the Saints, especially those who, knowing us, have our interests at heart, greeting. Yours sincerely,

WILLIAM WORTH.

Editors Saints' Herald: Since last writing for the information of your readers I have moved my family to the city of Des Moines, where we are all working together for the good of the glorious work being represented by the Herald. For over seventeen years I have been continuously away from my family except to prepare them that I might be away when I would be at home a few days or weeks all the time preparing to go away, my two younger children not knowing till now what it is to have me at home for only a few months. I truly appreciate the privilege now enjoyed, and believe that the move will be an advantage to the city work, besides a blessing to my family.

Since moving I am again ready to give my time to the work of this mission, and have been busy all the time while moving in ministerial work. I enjoy being busy, but enjoy that work most which results in the glorifying of God in a perceptible way. City work is very slow, and yet I can see improvement, and hear such expressions from others that give me encouragement that good is being accomplished when I feel somewhat discouraged at results.

We have one regular appointment in this mission besides at the church, and go to Valley Junction in a few days to see about making another opening if we have time; besides we have requests from Norwoodville and from Enterprise to do some ministerial work. I expect to go to Pilot Mound in a few days to fill an appointment in the Adventist church by special request.

So much to do and only so few to do it; I pray that God may send forth more laborers into the vineyard, and bless the Saints that they may comply with the law that will sustain those who are sent. The Saints are doing quite well so far in the city in sustaining the work in a financial way, and all are so kindly disposed. Some few are indifferent, and do not seem to realize the financial needs of the work, or else think that: it is the duty of others to bear that part of the work, or the missionary to work by faith alone. I have found at times that faith without works is dead, and destroys the vitality of the work that would otherwise be done.

Much sickness has been endured by the Saints in the city. Bro. Robert Robinson was injured in the mines while at work last Thursday, in which he had his right arm fractured, and his head and face mutilated beyond recognizing who he was, but he retained his consciousness. Through administration he rested well the night after the injury, and is improving nicely.

The interest at the church services is increasing, and the prospect for a few to be numbered with us soon is brightening. We are laboring with hope brightening every day.

Hoping and praying for the redemption of Zion, I am,
Your brother,
J. F. Mintun.

THAMESVILLE, Ontario, November 9, 1906.

Dear Herald: I have just been reading the letters in the HERALD, and I love to hear from the different parts of the Lord's vineyard how the work is going on.

I love to hear the Saints testifying that this gospel is true. It causes me to rejoice to know that the Spirit is with them; and I also bear witness that this gospel is true. We have Sunday-school here in our house, and it is going along fine. I know that the Sunday-school has taught me a good lesson; that is, to fear God and keep his commandments as near as I can. I may have wandered in by and forbidden paths, but yet I have hope beyond this life. (See 1 Corinthians 15:19.)

I saw the Editor's invitation to write, so I thought it might be of interest to some one to hear from this part of the vineyard.

Dear Saints, I ask you to pray for us. We are a little band of Saints, trying to discharge our duty before God. I will try to remember you all in my humble and weak way, God being my helper. I ask you, dear Saints, to remember my father before the throne of grace, that if it be not contrary to God's will, he may be healed. He is helpless, and has been for a long time.
Your brother in the one faith,
GEORGE E. PERRITT.

MT. VERNON, Washington, November 8, 1906.

Dear Herald: I still am an isolated one, but remain strong in the faith; and, oh, so hungry for the companionship of the Saints, and for the bread of life. Were it not for the HERALD and church papers, Bible and Book of Mormon, I would suffer spiritually indeed. We do not have a preacher this way very often; and, living so far from any branch, do not get much spiritual food, only what is contained in HERALD, Hope, and Autumn Leaves. I dearly love to read the letters from the brothers and sisters, for it helps me ever so much. I would like the Saints to pray for me that I might have my hearing restored if God so wills; and also pray for my family that they may be gathered in, as my husband and one daughter are out of the fold.

I am very thankful that I am not any one's judge; for no one knows what is in the human heart but God, and he is ever merciful and kind, sometimes more than one deserves. I desire to obtain that crown promised to the faithful. Praying for all God's children, I remain,
Yours for truth,
SR. SAVAGE.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Independence is having a series of evangelical meetings conducted by our aged yet faithful Bro. Henry Kemp. The Saints here are being impressed with the demand made upon them for their hearty support of our worthy patriarch in the effort being made. The young people have evidenced a willing desire to help.

The stake Religio association meet in convention next Saturday and Sunday at Holden, Missouri. This stake has now eight hundred and nine Religions, ten locals, and three home classes.

Our energetic Religio presidents, Bushnell and Sandy, together with their fellow officers, have made Religio stake work a feature, which hitherto has been lacking.

We are glad to see Sr. J. A. Robinson with us again, who has just arrived from Tulsa, Indian Territory. We learn that Bro. W. N. has disposed of his hotel business in Tulsa, so possibly Independence may see more of him in the future.

Our young people's Sunday morning prayer-meeting is still progressing in spirituality and attendance. Some months ago this meeting started with five young men who met every Sunday morning at eight. Last Sunday morning there were fifty-five in attendance, which tested the capacity of the north room of the church to the limit of comfort. Those who were first to lead out in this line of work were Bro. Harry Hatty, Paul Craig, Charles May, Harold Bullard, John Lentel; and many others quickly fell in line with a hearty support.

As a result of the entertainment given last month under direction of Bro. E. C. Harrington for the assembly-hall fund, a net amount to exceed fifty dollars was realized. As well as having a good result in dollars and cents, the evening was a very enjoyable one. Sr. E. S. McNichols, now of Atchison, Kansas, visited relatives and friends in Independence last Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, and gave a very enthusiastic account of "frontier work."

On Monday, the 13th, we had the first snow of the season.

To the Saints of the Central Madison District: As the month of November is fast passing, and we have not as yet received very many little gifts, which we so much hope and expect from all of you. We have all love so well, will each one give five cents per week? There being nine hundred members in the district, that will make $45.00 per week, or $180.00 per month, and $2160.00 per year. If the members of the Church, dear Saints, do not rise up and sacrifice, will you seek God so much for the needed money? There is a principle involved. A statement which we are sure is true of all real, genuine men or women may by inheritance fall heir to many dollars, but for help to do it are interested in the carrying out the gospel work necessary that such a fund or funds should be raised.

The Lord has declared that they that fail to keep this law of consecration and tithing shall not be found worthy to remain in Zion. We have now about two hundred members in the district, that will make $2,360.00. Where are the members of the various branches to do their duty? Let us all be workers and consecrated to the work of God. The Lord has said that Zion might even now have been redeemed, if the Saints had been more faithful in keeping his commandments. Elder J. A. Grant, district president, has a receipt book for the translation work. Will you fill the same, as though paid to me. Each time you do you will make the sacrifice.

Will you take God at his promises? Will you rely on his commandments? If you ever get to Zion, it will be by reason of keeping faith with him, for this is the most important part of the law of God. In Doctrine and Covenants 106:2, the Lord declares that they that fail to keep this law of consecration and tithing shall not be found worthy to remain in Zion. We have now about two hundred names. Will you give the names of nearly all on our books this year. Will those reading this notice in the HERALD tell those that do not take the HERALD? Will the sub-agents, after reading this, prompt the members of the various branches to do their duty? Let us all be workers and consecrated to the work of God.

Saints of Little Sioux District: Do you love the Lord and the gospel, and do you wish to see souls saved? Have you a desire to see the poor cared for? Are you aware that there is a temporal law, as well as a spiritual one, and the two are closely associated? Then let us awaken to present duty. The close of 1906 is near at hand. Will you have your name entered on our Bishop's Agent's books? We will make the sacrifices. The Bishop's Agent.

What will You do? Now that "College Day" has passed, and we presume all zealous Saints have done their part toward that good work, we have another worthy cause to call your attention to, and as we do so we trust you will not think us radical or extreme. We refer to the translation fund. By order of the General Conference, as perhaps almost all are aware, Thanksgiving was set apart for a special "translation fund collection"; and while the air has been quite full of collection breeze for some time, we trust as we make our little bow and piea for this special collection, you will carefully and prayerfully consider the headline: What Will You Do?

In asking your indulgence and that you will not think us radical or extreme, we do so for the reason that we are going to vary a little, perhaps quite a little, from the ordinary method employed in raising funds for such causes.

That the translation fund work is a worthy cause we feel sure will all agree. The very statement itself "the gospel [the Book of Mormon and] the truth shall be preached to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people as a witness," makes it absolutely necessary that such a fund or funds should be raised. If it goes "as the Lord has said" or "as he has said" that it must be in their different languages, or it will not be a fact, and we believe neither we nor our children should be further educated in this erroneous mistake.

What will you do? Let us suggest: Thanksgiving (a very appropriate time for giving to this good cause something,—or we trust it does. The harvest is past; we have gathered during the summer from the bountiful hand of our heavenly Father,—some more, some less. All have gathered some. We give thanks (or should). We are grateful for the blessings that have blessed our pathway. We are grateful that our trials have not been more. What, as you contemplate this, is the prompting of the "fullness" of your heart? Is it not to give—to love and to do other less or better in your own self? Is it not the same prompting that moved the "poor widow" with her mite to cast in all that she had? Our experience says it is, and we are sure if you thoroughly consider the matter you will agree with us.

We appeal, therefore, in behalf of the "translation fund," that all Saints (and their friends and helpers) think over this matter, and see if you do not come to the conclusion that even after the Saints have had a good dinner they may have some more. That it really does not warrant you in depriving yourself of the real good and satisfaction in knowing that you have helped the cause, that you have added to it—that you have done it for the "mess of pottage," but "in the name of a disciple." We truly believe that if we all go at this work in this manner, doing what we can though it be small, with earnest, heartfelt efforts, and an eye single to God's glory, that the "Thanksgiving" returns will decidedly show, not only in the money turned in, but in the good derived by the givers, that the old method will be so deeply "snowed in" that it will be completely and for ever done away. What will you do to help this work? Individually, as societies, as districts, as a general society, carefully, prayerfully, and wisely consider this matter, and let the fruits be made manifest in the remittances sent in and the blessings gathered.

Send all remittances to the undersigned.

May God bless this work, and its workers!

RICHARD B. TROWBRIDGE.

Treasurer General Z. R. L. S.

Lay aside the songs and music,
Touch the silvery chords no more,
For our darling Roy has left us,
For a brighter, happier shore.

How we'll miss him from the circle,
When again we gather homes;
He was always kind and gentle,
Giving each a welcome warm.

God saw fit to lend him to us,
He, so noble, bright, and true,
And our weary hearts are yearning
For our loved ones gone before.

Yes, God saw fit to lend him to us,
Now again he's called him home;
Though we'd always have him with us,
Not our will, but God's be done.

While our hearts are torn and bleeding
Of the spoils that death has won,
We must not recall our darling,
For God's will, not ours, be done.

—By his sister Sadie.

Negro Progress in the South.

Generally speaking those high in authority in the Southern States are trying their best to keep order. Negro agitators in the South, they are told, are making the negroes feel that when they agitate they are doing remarkably well in this country. They are better off than most labor elements in any country whatsoever, and far better off than any inferior race elsewhere. Human society in our day and generation is in a condition in which nearly every laborer, through all the dust of conflict and strife, a keen observer can behold real and steady progress. It is to be regretted that pessimism regarding the race question in the South should within the past twenty years become so widespread and profound. The existence of the two races in great numbers side by side, however unfortunate, is a fact that can not be changed for generations yet to come. Brave and wise men, therefore, will face the facts, they are doing remarkably well in this country.

Union of Child Labor Reform Forces.

The child labor evil is fast reaching a degree of importance when national legislation or national recognition, will become imperative. Laws designed to regulate or restrict the evil have been passed by almost every State legislature, but the indifference or ignorance of officials supposed to enforce the laws and the treachery of the people who have profited by the trouble have come from a lack of public interest. The people as a mass have not understood or appreciated the real danger to the nation and to the individual bound to result from the working of mere children for gain. The subject has more in it than sentiment; it almost reaches the degree of a grave national peril.

For several years an organization known as the National Child Labor Committee has been doing excellent work influencing legislation, and this committee, former President Grover Cleveland and Cardinal Gibbons are members, has to its credit the passing of many laws. The national committee has just announced that the Anti-Child Slavery League, organized last fall in Wisconsin that gets "Home's Companion," as part of its systematic efforts to protect the American home, is now amalgamated with it and this union of forces is bound to result in more efficient work for the cause of childhood.

The principal function of the league was to give wide-spread publicity to the reform movement, and this particular function will continue to be carried out by the Woman's Home Companion. A monthly magazine will publish each month a department of notes, brief articles of national interest, and reports of reform work in general. This information will be officially furnished by the National Child Labor Committee.

Cost of Producing Farm Products.

Bulletin No. 48 of the Bureau of Statistics, U. S. Department of Agriculture, entitled Cost of Producing Farm Products, by William M. Hayes and Edward C. Tucker, which will soon be issued, deals particularly with Minnesota field crops. It is designed to show by example how the cost of producing a farm crop may be accurately itemized and recorded. The investigation upon which the report is based is being conducted by the Minnesota Agricultural Experiment Station in cooperation with the Bureau of Statistics. A large number of farmers have also cooperated by taking note of money spent for implements and other material used and the cost of hired labor spent in the various kinds of farm labor, etc. Each day the farmer is visited by one of the young men engaged in the investigation and gives an account of his operations for the day before he returns home. Figures are here presented of the work of practical farmers who are actually producing crops for profit. The farms examined are situated in three different counties of Minnesota—Rice County, in the southeastern part of the State; Lyon and Norman Counties in the northwest. At the beginning of the investigation in 1902 fifteen farmers in each county were enlisted, but later the number was reduced to eight.

The crops studied include corn, flax, hay of several kinds, mangel, millet, can. potatoes, rye, and wheat. Taking barley as an example, the cost of production is itemized under the heads seed values, cleaning seed, plowing, dragging, seeding, cutting, winnowing, stacking and threshing: depreciation of machinery, and land rental. The farms in each county are grouped together, and the figures given are the average of all farms in the group. The final figure, or total, is the cost of the crop, being $1,400 for Rice County, $1,444 for Lyon County, and $6,41 for Norman County. For one large farm in northwestern Minnesota the figures are kept separate, showing a cost of $5.57. Cost of production is given per acre, rather than per bushel, because of the liability of the yield to vary as a result of differences in temperature, rainfall, etc.; but usually the yield and the selling price are given in a note following the table for each county.

After giving the statistics, the bulletin proceeds to show how they may be used in preparing for a system of crop rotation. Several problems in farm management are fully worked out and the figures obtained, such, for instance, as the saving of thrashing from the stack compared with the shock, and the relation between cost of production and net profits for different kinds of forage.

The bulletin is illustrated by a number of scenes on Minnesota farms, showing the nature of the country. There are also several pairs of maps of farms, showing on one page the farm as now arranged, with the crops grown in the different seasons, and on the opposite page the farm as it might be arranged in a scheme of systematic rotation such as will at the same time bring a profit and preserve the fertility of the land.

The bulletin may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office.

The Arena for November is rich in discussions that will appeal strongly to thinking men and women interested in economic, political, and social advance. Many of these papers are exceptions to the commonplace and the unimaginative. We mention the following: "N. O. Nelson: Practical cooperator, and the great work he is accomplishing for human upliftment," by George W. Rads; "Concerning those who work," by Maynard Butler; a paper dealing in an authoritative manner with the methods employed by German cities to meet the demand of the out-of-works for temporary employment; "Polygamy and the Constitution," by Theodore Schroeder, a scholarly paper by a writer who spent many years in Salt Lake City and made a deep study of Mormonism; "Consumption of wealth: Individual and collective," by C. C. Hitchcock, an admirably clear presentation of the Socialistic contention that toward wealth and property and its disbursement; "Shall educated Chinkmen be welcomed to our shores," a protest against the admission of Chinkmen, by Helen M. Gougar, the well-known lecturer, author, and traveler; "Richard Seddon: Demagogue and statesman," by R. L. Hamilton, a somewhat remarkable editorial that recently appeared in the number of scenes on Minnesota farms, showing the nature of the country. There are also several pairs of maps of farms, showing on one page the farm as now arranged, with the crops grown in the different seasons, and on the opposite page the farm as it might be arranged in a scheme of systematic rotation such as will at the same time bring a profit and preserve the fertility of the land.

The bulletin may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office.
against himself. When the crack of a tall building appears we know that there is something giving away at the bottom. We do not need a detective service to find it out. As sure as night follows day, wrong wrecks its perpetrators, first morally, and then in business usefulness. Such a man may live out the full measure of years allotted to him, but from the time he has become a whitened sepulchre, his presence in his country and his community, however great his wealth or high his station, is just so much of a burthen to carry. Nature has her own slow way of destroying the individual who in his heart has turned his better self and to the moral judgment of a self-respecting community.” —The Commoner, October 12, 1906.

Moss and Polish.
If you’ll give me your attention,
There’s a proverb I will mention,
That a stone which keeps a-rolling never gathers any moss.
Now, although you may admit it,
As a guide you’d better quit it,
Or it surely will betray you into detriment and loss.

“Moss,” in fact, is over-valued,
For it’s really not much wanted
By the man who seeks an opening that his purpose may succeed.

“Moss” to him means mere stagnation—
Or “suspended animation”—
And he knows that “dead ones” never in performance take the lead.

Having thus the maxim broken.
Let us learn what is the token
Of a life that’s always hustle, rustle, getting “on the move”;
“Polish!” Isn’t that a better hallmark of a business getter
Than the “moss” of all creation in a thousand years would prove?

Making effort match ambition,
Overcoming opposition.

“Genius of hard work” possessing, forcing issues with the Fates—
All winners are in the striving;
Thus the man who keeps “arriving”
Gets a high degree of “polish” but no “moss” accumulates.

It’s by testing, trying, doing,
By great patience in pursuing,
And by effort “good and plenty” that our victories are won;
And its “movers” win the prizes
Big and small—assorted sizes—
Each and every man according as his race is ably run.
L. C. Ball, in Business Philosopher.

Helping the Children.
The cause of child labor reform has been given a decided impetus by the union of forces represented in the National Child Labor Committee and the Anti Child Slavery League, the two most important anti child labor organizations in this country. The National Committee, with President Roosevelt as an honorary member and such prominent men and women as former President Cleveland, Cardinal Gibbons, Secretary Taft, and Professor Felix Adler as members, has been able to secure the passage of child labor laws in many States.
The Anti Child Slavery League illustrated the extreme value of well-directed publicity in connection with reform movement.

Organized less than a year ago by the Woman’s Home Compания as part of that magazine’s systematic efforts to protect the American home, the League became such an important factor in child labor reform that the National Committee pro-pessed a combination of the two organizations, which was affected. The Woman’s Home Companion will continue its active campaign of publicity and will publish each month a department of notes, brief articles and items of interest relating to the movement in all parts of the country.

A Chart of Conduct.
A prominent merchant of New York City carried these Rules of Conduct in his pocket-book, accompanied by a memorandum to this effect: “Read these rules once a week.”

Never be idle.
Make few promises.
Always speak the truth.
Never speak ill of any one.
Keep good company or none.
Live up to your engagements.
Be just before you are generous.
Earn money before you spend it.
Drink no kind of intoxicating drinks.
Good character is above all things else.
Keep your own secrets if you have any.
Never borrow if you can possibly avoid it.
Never play at any kind of games of chance.
Keep your poor house in order if you would be happy.
Make no haste to be rich, if you would prosper.
When you speak to a person, look him in the face.
Ever live (misfortune excepted) within your income.
Spare when you are young to spend when you are old.
Never run in debt unless you see a way to get out again.
Avoid temptation, through fear you may not withstand it.
Small and steady gains give competency with tranquility of mind.

Good company and good conversation are the sinews of virtue.
When you retire think over what you have done during the day.
Your character can not be essentially injured except by yourself.
If any one speaks evil of you, let your life be so that none will believe him.
If your hands can not be usefully employed, attend to the cultivation of your mind.—Business Philosopher.

By INDEPENDENCE COAL MINING COMPANY

In order to develop and open up the new coal-mining interests near Independence and also make necessary preparations for homes for mine-workers, it is necessary that sufficient capital be secured within a short time. The amount sought for is very small compared with the capital of other coal-mining interests and, for various reasons, the directors of this company desire to keep the working and controlling power with the church members, if possible. The opening up of an undeveloped coal field at the edge of a densely populated community of 400,000 population is a matter of considerable consideration, as the product is part of the necessaries of life, with freight rates practically cut off, making this enterprise an exceptional one.

Five hundred and sixty-one acres have been leased for fifty years and one hundred and fifty-four purchased, making in all seven hundred and twenty-three acres of coal land in one body, on the line of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, two miles east of Independence.

The company already has coal-mines at Napoleon, Missouri, in operation and a successful and prosperous retail business, making this a bonafide, paying investment.

Money seeking investment can find no better place, and, with the best kind of satisfaction, it will bring good returns to the investor and results that are much sought for, also benefiting the unemployed, scattered, pressed-down poor church members by placing them in a position to help themselves.

The 154 acres are intended for homes for mine-workers, to be sold at a reasonable price, and we solicit the co-operation of miners to purchase stock, according to their ability.

The promoters of this company are not working for any selfish interests. There is no watered nor fictitious valued stock. The company is incorporated under the laws of the State of Missouri. Capital stock, $40,000.00; shares, 2000.00 each; amount paid up $35,000. The capital stock must be increased to the amount needed. Parties sending money can do so by bank draft. Further particulars apply to R. MAY, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

THE OLD JERUSALEM GOSPEL

Under this title Elder Joseph Luff has published twenty-nine sermons delivered by himself, covering almost every subject connected with the LATTER-DAY MESSAGE. Its value as a missionary can not be estimated. If you have friends that desire to hear the restored gospel, you can gratify the desire by placing this book in their hands. The following are a few of the subjects treated upon:

"The Modern Stumbling-Stone."

"Is Water Baptism Essential to Salvation?"

"Authority from God—Is It Essential?"

"A Living Church."

"Does Death End All?"

"Probation After Death."

"Wounded in the House of His Friends."

"Many Ways or One?"

"No Doctrine, No Christ."

This book is now the property of the Board of Publication, and we are anxious that a copy be placed in the home of every family of Saints. PRICE ONE DOLLAR.

CHEERFULNESS.

"Smile awhile. While you smile another smiles, and soon there are miles and miles of smiles."

There is a certain modern magazine writer who refers to himself as "the cheerful idiot." Now of the two evils, we prefer the cheerful idiot to the dismal philosopher.

But is it necessary to be either a cheerful idiot or a dismal philosopher? Why not be a cheerful Christian?

"What," we are asked, "would you bid us be cheerful under conditions existing in both the world and the church?"

First, are you sure that things are so bad as you have imagined? especially in the church? You know that a great many things conspire to induce one to put on the blue spectacles; and once they are on, nothing looks very sunshiny,—a bright May morning at once puts on mourning and we begin to strain our ears to catch the "crack of doom." Sickness, pain, disappointment, envy, even a slight biliousness may cause "motes and beams" to develop within our eyes.

In the second place, granting that conditions are bad, still you may be cheerful, or else the Lord made a mistake when he said that the Saints should "be cheerful in their warfare that they may be joyous in their triumph."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 6.

In their warfare, you note. That is, while they are yet opposed by powers and conditions which might be used as an excuse for melancholy. Also Christ evidently understood the limitations of human power when he commanded his disciples to lift up their hearts and rejoice even when they saw dire calamities coming upon the earth.

As already stated, one need not be an idiot, ignorant of or ignoring existing conditions, in order to be cheerful. He may be hopeful in spite of that which might dismay one who had not a hope which was like an anchor to the soul and which reached within the vail.

Every schoolboy is familiar with the story of John Paul Jones, and how when his defeat seemed inevitable he replied to those who urged him to surrender, "I have not yet begun to fight." He knew that his decks were strewn with dead, that his guns were bursting, that his French ally had gone over to the enemy, that he was out-manned, that the chances were against him, and that the old Bon Homme Richard was shot-riddled and wallowing to her doom; but he refused to be downcast, and in the language of the Fourth of July orator, "He snatched victory from the very jaws of defeat."

Men admire a deed like that, irrespective of nationality. They say that is pure grit. Well, we need a little "grit" in church work,—enough to whet the sword of the Lord upon. And thank God we believe that we have it, because as a people we have never backed down before opposition and no committee on music has ever eliminated from our hymnal the good old song:-

"Ye that are men now serve him,
Against unnumbered foes;
Your courage rise with danger,
And strength to strength oppose."

Cheerfulness does not necessarily consist in the politician's way of going about pounding people upon the back and laughing with the long distance system; but rather that quiet, persistent good-humor that has faith and hope back of it; and it does not preclude a serious and thoughtful scrutiny of life and its problems.

Surely there is enough in life to render one serious. Every young person faces life knowing that he will make of it a success or a failure, and the possibility of being branded as a failure ought to sober any man. None but the foolish or the insane will go laughing along the road to ruin. Every middle-aged man who has not hopelessly failed, or been disabled by misfortune, is too busy for frivolity. Every old man looks back with a tinge of melancholy upon the dream-tinted pictures of the past.

Yet despite the seriousness of life, there is enough in the gospel to brighten and make joyful every life. That was the very message which the angels brought: "We bring you glad tidings of great joy."

Under our commission to preach the gospel in all the world it is ours to scatter these "glad tidings of great joy"; and that this may be done, the Lord has commanded:

"The elders and men of the church should be of cheerful heart and countenance among themselves and in their intercourse with their neighbors and men of the world, yet they must be without blame in word or deed. It is therefore not seemly that they indulge in loud and boisterous speech."—Doctrine and Covenants 119:3.

There is good, sound philosophy in this commandment, because discouragement is contagious, and a messenger who is despondent can not carry tidings of great joy. It is quite possible that one such might cultivate depression throughout an entire district, among the Saints, and cause the nonmembers to hesitate to enter a life assurance association whose chief policy-holders seem panic-stricken.

It is equally true that courage and cheerfulness will affect those around us, and soon there will be "miles and miles" of cheerful people.

Now it is easy to find fault. Men may find fault even with creation. You know the old song says, "The world was made in six days, sing a song of seven, And according to the contract it ought to have been eleven."

It is easy to find fault; but no man picks out all the easy jobs in life. Besides the Lord has not commissioned us for that work; but rather has said that we should be cheerful and forgiving and patient, among ourselves, among our neighbors, and among men of the world; this for the benefit of ourselves, our neighbors, and the world, and also that we may please God, in whose ears even a song is discordant when sung "with grievous sadness in them that sing and bitterness of spirit in them that hear."

Let us look upon the bright side. Let us cheer others. Let us rejoice to find honesty in men and virtue in woman and music in songs and good in sermons.

Leave the bluing to the washerwoman and the laundryman.

God forbid that we should speak lightly of the real and great sorrows of life. We approach them with reverent sympathy, having both seen and experienced the grief which comes with the dispensations of death, and also the greater burden sometimes entailed by the inscrutable providences of life, imposing upon one years of waiting in which hope deferred turns the heart sick. But the gospel was not designed to deal with trifles alone. It would not be the power of God unto salvation which it is, if it were not equal to any stress of life or of death. And so it rises to every emergency and cheers the disciples under trials which in the world drive men to the suicide's grave.

Christ said that he would not leave his followers alone but he would pray his Father and he would send them another Comforter. That Comforter is just as near to-day as when it cheered Paul and Silas, who in bonds and prison sang at the midnight hour. Just as near as it was to the long procession of men and women who cheerfully went to glory through a life of persecution and a bloody death of martyrdom.

THANKSGIVING.

Don't talk to me of solemn days
In autumn's time of splendor,
Because the sun shows fewer rays
And these grow slant and slender.

Why, it's the climax of the year—
The highest time of living!
Till naturally its bursting cheer
Just melts into Thanksgiving.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

Almighty God, our heavenly King,
Accept the thanks we this day bring.
Awake, my soul, thy noblest powers
And praise thy King through waiting hours.

We thank thee, Father, for thy love
For gifts and blessings from above.
For pleasant home and children dear
And all the comforts of the year.

We thank thee, O our heavenly King,
For all the joys each day doth bring.
But most of all to us has come
The gospel message of thy Son.

Help us, O God, to thee impart
Sweet tribute of a contrite heart,
And this Thanksgiving Day to bring Immortal fruit to our heavenly King.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

Beasts that hunt in packs sometimes fall out and devour each other instead of the intended prey. So it happens that under the head, "Anti-Mormon Association," in the columns of the Christian Weekly, Reverend D. B. Turney, D.D., LL. D., of the Methodist Church and Clark Braden of pleasant memory are calling each other "screed-writers," and "pettifogging shysters," terms no doubt well applied, and all because they can not agree as to the best way of killing Latter Day Saint sheep. On general principles our sympathies are with Turney. We do not know the man; but it is inconceivable that he should be the meaner of the two.

Elder A. M. Merrill, of Castlerock, Washington, reports that his home was washed into the river by the recent flood, and at present he is housed in the Saints' church. The family escaped.

Elder W. A. McDowell has changed his place of residence in Chicago, and should be addressed at 165 Thirty-seventh Street.

The reports from Philadelphia, Sioux City, and St. Louis, this issue, show the wisdom of locating pastors.

Speaking about live branches and missionaries, there is Spokane; and where Spokane is Bro. Chatburn is and where Bro. Chatburn is stagnation never stagnates very long. We will hear from them next week.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

Joseph F. Smith, President of the Utah church, appeared in the district court at Salt Lake, November 23, and pleaded guilty to the charge of unlawful cohabitation. Judge Ritchie imposed a fine of $300. This is the maximum fine. The law permits a sentence to jail for six months or less; this was not imposed. It is said that the forty-third child precipitated the trouble.

The famous theological school at Andover, Massachusetts, is in a serious decline, and an effort is being made to remove it to some point in the Mississippi Valley, and revive it. While formerly it had an enrollment of one hundred, its entering class for this year is only three.

The Amana Society, of Iowa County, Iowa, is incorporated as a religious organization, yet as a society they engage in manufacturing and farming. Suit was brought against them some time ago to dissolve the society on the ground that they could not as an incorporated religious body engage in these industries. The church was sustained in their position by the district court, and now the supreme court decides in their favor. Saints will take note, as this decision has a bearing on our work.

Mayor Schmitz of San Francisco and other officials of that city have been indicted for extortion. They are charged with extorting bribes from certain houses whose reputation is bad, and also with misusing funds contributed for the relief of San Francisco. We recollect that Mayor Schmitz was the man who issued the proclamation at the time of San Francisco's disaster, ordering that all parties found engaged in looting should be shot. We trust that he will be able to clear himself; but if not he should not complain at any lesser penalty than that which he visited upon others.

Octavia Labarbe, formerly with Barnum and Bailey, whose act, leaping the gap in an automobile, was especially hazardous and blood-curdling, has sued the show company, and it develops that she risked her life daily for exactly three dollars and thirty-three cents. Life is cheap at that figure. The old proverb is recalled by some one that "that which people hold most dear is the cheapest thing in the kingdom."

The battleship Louisiana, bearing President Roosevelt and family on their return trip from Panama, was sighted off Cape Henry, November 26. A wireless message reported all well.

An individual signing himself "A Zion City Officer" writes in Physical Culture for December concerning the downfall of Dowie. Strangely enough, when one reflects that one of Dowie's cardinal doctrines was temperance, this follower attributes the fall of his chief to gluttony, which wrecked him, first physically and then in every other way. He charges that Dowie refused to take exercise even to the extent of walking a single block, that his meals consisted of from seven to ten courses and occupied two hours of time, that despite this a private kitchen was fitted up in the rear of his office and a maid installed to furnish him hot lunches at all hours; that he frequently drank twenty glasses of Swiss wine at one meal and as much as three quarts of egg-nog during hours of time, that his meals consisted of from seven to ten courses and occupied two fitted up in the rear of his office and a maid installed council meeting with his officials.

Doctor J. Wilbur Chapman is to begin an evangelical campaign in Des Moines next Sunday. His methods are somewhat unique. He works along the line of the "simultaneous movement." Instead of centralizing and massing everything as the ordinary revivalist does he superintends a great array of workers who hold simultaneous meetings in all churches and in theaters and saloons and on the streets.

Enrico Caruso, the world's greatest tenor, is in serious trouble. He was arrested in New York City charged with indecent conduct toward a woman of that city, and was found guilty in the police court and fined ten dollars. This case has attracted worldwide attention. London sympathizes with Caruso, Berlin says that he got his due, while Paris is amused at the whole matter.

The counsel for the defense made this plea, "If this charge is sustained by the action of this court, it will mean more to this defendant than any of us can know. He will be ostracised, and that will mean personal dishonor and professional failure. This man who has appeared before kings, and queens, and princes, and potentates, and in the private homes of the best in this and other lands, must go into seclusion, disgraced and dishonored, and with his great career blasted."

It should be remembered that it is the act and not the penalty that disgraces a man.

Two great ocean liners collided off Cherbourg, France, November 22. The German steamer Kaiser Wilhelm de Grosse was struck by the British royal mail steamer Orinoco. Thirteen lives were lost.

An epidemic of crime has been reported from Pittsburg of sufficient importance to attract the attention of the larger journals and reviews. One hundred robberies and burglaries in a single month, culminating in the murder of several prominent citizens, mark another upheaval from the lower world of sin and violence whose forces constantly break through the crust of law and order, now here, now there. Press dispatches of November 25 also report a series of "graft" cases.

The clergy are our spiritual advisers, preparing us for a good place in another world. The lawyers advise us on legal themes—showing us how to obey the law, or else evade it, and they protect us from lawyers. The doctors look after us when disease belief attacks our bodies.

And until about the year 1876, we called Theology, Law, and Medicine "The Three Learned Professions."—Elbert Hubbard.

"The delight in fishing comes from the uncertainty—you never know what is in the pond—unless you fall in, in which case you deal with a fact and romance flees."

News From Branches

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.

The work in Philadelphia is making marked progress, as evinced by attendance at the various meetings; the November sacrament-service showing an attendance of one hundred and thirty-two out of a membership of one hundred and sixty-seven, a number of whom live out of the city. Other meetings are as well attended. But the keeping up of these services requires almost all of the leisure time of the Saints, as almost every week has something besides the regular services. On the evening of the 20th the priesthood meeting was held at the home of the pastor.

Apostle F. M. Sheehy came to visit us some weeks ago and was kept here several days longer than he wished, on account of very painful and severe illness—renal calculus being the affliction. The grip of the disease was broken by administration supported by fasting and prayer of the Saints.

Bro. J. C. Farnfield, who has been laboring at Elk Mills, Maryland, has spent a few days with us, also at Germantown Mission. His efforts were appreciated by the Saints.

Pastor Walter W. Smith, accompanied by his wife and sons, spent a week at Elk Mills, Maryland, holding services there. An organization of a society of Daughters of Zion was effected there, with the counsel and aid of the writer. The work there is looking upward.

Bro. Schofield, of Buffalo, New York, was a visitor at the church all day Sunday, the 18th.

The Religio here is booming. We have been able to get the crowds to come, and now the question is how to take care of them in the Book of Mormon work. We think we can solve this problem too. The Religio is becoming the weekly gathering-place for the young of the branch, as it should be.

The Sunday-school has started its preparation for a Christmas program, which will probably be in accordance with the progressive spirit of the school.
There have been some sick among us, but they have all been healed through administration, for which we are thankful.

EUNICE WINN SMITH.

SIoux City, Iowa.

Perhaps some of our old friends will be glad to hear how the little branch at Sioux City is getting along. At present the Saints are all hustling, trying to raise two hundred dollars which comes due the first day of January on our church-building.

The sunshine band will give an oyster supper Friday night in church basement for the benefit of the church debt.

Bro. J. M. Baker, our pastor, was called to Salix to baptize Sr. Russel's daughter. Also the 11th and 14th he was called to Deloit, to preach the funeral of Bro. Brogden's daughter, and Sr. Wyen's daughter.

We have some good, wide-awake officers that go ahead with the work in the absence of their pastor.

Bro. Baker for the last three weeks has been laboring in the cornfield earning his winter fuel.

Bro. J. L. Parker and Bro. David Jennings have gone into the grocery business.

Sr. C. Dobson, of Deloit, stopped over Sunday and attended church. She was on her way home from South Dakota.

The little child of Bro. and Sr. Newberry was blessed Sunday, and the name of Alma Moroni given.

A special business-meeting was called by the president, Wednesday night, for the purpose of devising ways or means to liquidate the church debt.

The branch number in membership one hundred and twenty-three, more than as large again as it was three years ago.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

A branch with sixteen members was organized on the east side, October 14, to be known as the Lansdowne Branch. Bro. I. N. White, assisted by Brn. Hilliard, Tanner, and Sparling, had charge. The following officers were elected: T. J. Elliott, president; George F. Barraclough, presiding priest; W. Weidman, presiding teacher; Sr. W. Weidman, secretary.

By direction of the Spirit Bro. George Vandel was called to the office of deacon and ordained by Brn. Hilliard and Tanner, and was elected as deacon of the branch. Words of advice were given the new organization by I. N. White.

We have had excellent and instructive sermons by Brn. Tanner, Archibald, and Burgess during the past month. The blessed Spirit's presence has been felt in our prayer-services. Splendid interest in our Sunday-school and Religio work.

Letters of removal were granted Bro. and Sr. Weidman, Philip Hitchock, Bro. Carl, Bro. and Sr. F. J. Elliott, Bro. G. F. Barraclough, and Bro. and Sr. G. Vandel. They placed them with the Lansdowne Branch.

Bro. Tanner united in marriage, October 31, Sr. R. Ethel Taylor and Bro. Lewis Smith.

Bro. and Sr. A. Kinder have moved to Kansas City, Missouri, Bro. Kinder taking up a new position. Sr. Kinder was our organist, and the choir tendered her a farewell party and presented her with a beautiful cut-glass water-pitcher.

Bro. D. W. De Jong and wife are rejoicing in the arrival of a dear baby girl.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

A heavy snow-storm, beginning Monday [19th] and ending Wednesday noon, has to an extent hindered the attendance at our series of meetings.

The snow and the rigor of winter calls to mind the narratives of those who passed through the trials of the early church. Then the people of Jackson County and Northwestern Missouri drove us from our homes. To-day they will brave the weather to come to our churches to hear us preach. Prophecy fulfilled! It is up to the Saints to be loyal, faithful, and true to their covenant.

The "translation fund" which the Religio has created in the interest of the Book of Mormon, is now engaging the attention of all local societies, we presume. The Independence local has the matter in hand, and its local home class turned over forty dollars and forty cents to this fund. This is material evidence of the appreciation, by this department, of the Book of Mormon and their interest in giving its benefits to others. Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser in Independence and Sr. Deam in the stake, deserve great credit for their untiring efforts in this line of work. Also the Religio Book of Mormon class of Sr. Etzenhouser contributed thirty-seven dollars and thirty-five cents to the translation fund. Here is a chance to "go thou and do likewise."

The young people's prayer-meeting last Sunday morning [the 18th] was indeed one of those times "long to be remembered" among Latter Day Saints. Individual encouragement was given to several by the influence of the Spirit.

Last Sunday morning quite a number of the older Saints came to the meeting, and while they are always welcome, particularly the stake presidency, yet it has a tendency to intimidate those who are making their first efforts. The five young men who started this movement met first in the woods, that they might be alone—just themselves and God, until they grew stronger.

Preparations are in progress for an entertainment the night of November 29. The proceeds will be used to furnish the church with hymnals, the idea being to encourage congregational singing.

THE PERFECT LAW OF LIBERTY.

OPENING SERMON OF THE REVIVAL MEETINGS AT LAMONI, IOWA,
BY ELDER J. W. WIGHT, NOVEMBER 18, 1906.

I wish to call your attention to a portion of the first chapter of the general epistle by James, beginning with the sixteenth verse and reading to the end of the chapter:

Do not err, my beloved brethren. Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. Of his own will he begat us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of firstfruits of his creatures. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath; for the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. Wherefore lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls. But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass: for he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed. If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain. Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

I do not know of any more fitting thought for the present occasion than the twenty-fifth verse of the chapter from which we have read our lesson:

But whose looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work [that is, the work connected with this law] this man shall be blessed in his deed.

Now I apprehend that we are all desirous of attaining to that condition that shall qualify us to dwell with God, that we may truly merit, when standing in God’s presence, that welcome plaudit, “Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.” I am of the opinion that we will never hear that statement until we shall have reached the qualification by which we will merit it. God can not say that to us until we merit it. In him or with him there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.

In fact, as described by the apostle Paul, in Hebrews 13:8, concerning the Christ, he is “the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever.” Or as said by the prophet Malachi 3:6: “I am the Lord, I change not.” In fact did he change he would cease to be God.

There is one thought with which I am especially pleased this morning; that in the life to come we shall receive in harmony with our merit; and therefore there will necessarily be degrees of reward and punishment. In fact, I do not believe that God metes out unto humanity, or will mete out unto humanity, condign punishment, but rather that it will be remedial, or in other words a remedy for sin. I am especially well pleased with that thought, that the punishment, whatever its nature or kind, will be intended by the author of life to be a remedy, that by virtue thereof we may become qualified to turn away from evil, even in the life to come. I know that some think this is a terrible thought; but it seems to me just the opposite. Rather than to feel that it is terrible that even in the life to come God will give unto us an opportunity to turn from the evil of our way, it seems to me to be a very pleasant thought, and to outline the better, the grand character of God, when I read relative to that character that he “so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him [the Son] might be saved.” Or as described by him in the beautiful language found in John 10:10, he says that “the thief [that is, Satan] cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy: I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.” And this brings us to this particular thought, that Jesus came that we might have life, and have it more abundantly, presenting at once the thought that since God is the author of life, and commissioned his Son to come into the world that we might have it, the prescription is on the part of God. He is the one that had the right to say as to what it would be necessary for us to do in order that we might obtain that life more abundantly; and since he had the right to say, you and I have not, so that it will be much better for us if we comply with the prescription, rather than to try to determine some other way.

Jesus himself was not sufficiently presumptuous to determine some other way, for he said in substance, I speak nothing of myself. My Father gave a commandment what I should say, and what I should do, and I know that his commandment is life everlasting.

After all, when it comes to this question of religion, it is a practical matter, far more so, I fear, than some of us conclude it to be. Somehow or other, whether or not we receive it from the misty ages of the unknown past, we mix up the thought of religion with too much myth, and conclude that after all it is a sort of mythical affair, and that it is not for the common people, or the “common herd,” as the expression is sometimes used, to understand religion; but that it is for a certain set of men to give their lives to the study of theology and dispense it. They being the dispensers, we have the right and should take in harmony with the prescription, whether we like it or not.

Now I do not believe that is the proper way to look at the religious phase of life; but on the other hand, that it is just as practical a matter as it is possible for us to cope with or find. And with all its practicability, I believe it to be very simple; that is to say that God designed to reach down to the simplicity and comprehension of the human mind, and give unto us a code of thought an observance of which would qualify us to become men and women, so that in the final day, acting in harmony with this perfect law of liberty, we may indeed be prepared to have it said unto us, "Well done." No grander thought can possibly find lodgment in the human mind. I say no grander conception can come to the human mind than the thought than finally, standing in his presence, we may be prepared to stay there, and dwell with God.

Everything that surrounds us in life we strive to cope with, in a practical way, it seems to me, outside of this question of religion. Now why not make it just as practical as anything else? Why not make it an every-day affair? Why not take it right into our business, no difference what the vocation may be? Make religion so practical that we will take it right along with us day by day, and did we do it our word would be equal to our bond. There would not be so much suspicion in the world, and no hypocrisy, and the consequence would be that we could make heaven right here upon the earth. Whereas on the other hand, we look away, sometimes, some of us "beyond the bounds of time and space," and immediately conclude that when we shall reach there, there shall be that immediate transformation that will qualify us to stay there, if upon our part we simply say, "Lord, I believe."

Now, I tell you I think we are making a grave mistake. It is one of the errors of our lives to reach a conclusion of that kind. Until we shall have grown in grace and the knowledge of the truth as revealed through the Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, up to that exalted height that we shall become full-grown men and women in Christ, we can not dwell with God; we can not have it said unto us, "Well done." Now, why not look at it from a business standpoint? Why not look at it from a commercial standpoint? Why not look at it from a social standpoint or phase? And, looking at it from all these standpoints, make it so practicable that, living it, we may indeed be found growing in grace and in a knowledge of the truth day by day.

Let me tell you that the individual that draws nearest to Christ will feel most his humility and his littleness. Just so certainly as you and I begin to conclude that we have done all that is necessary, so certainly it will be time for us to examine ourselves, and see whether we be in the faith; prove our own selves; for as the apostle beautifully describes it, "Know ye not, how that ye be reprobates, except Christ be in you?" But Christ can not be in us the hope of glory, until we have done that which merits his divine approval and qualifies us for the reception of the divine power.

I am glad that so far as God's revelation is concerned, as made manifest in what we are pleased to call the sacred word, that it is there pronounced that every man shall be rewarded according to his deeds, whether they be good or whether they be evil. And when the Christ was about to take his departure, soon to leave those whom he loved, he said unto them, "I go to prepare a place for you, that where I am there ye may be also." And he said in connection therewith, that "in my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so I would have told you." Paul beautifully outlines, it seems to me, the grandeur of the thought of humanity's home in the future, in the thought that we will be rewarded according to our deeds, when he says, "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead." Ah, when you and I are resurrected, we will come up then in different conditions of glory, or in other words, prepared to enter into different conditions of glory. A beautiful thought, that which ought most to concern us, that which should take hold of us from the spiritual phase, that we should engage in with energy and diligence, is the thought, as found so closely allied and connected with our text: "Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed."

Now the question naturally arises—it must come home to you and me, if we stop to reflect: What does the apostle mean by the phrase, "law of liberty"?

Let me call your attention, before we proceed further, to this thought, that until you and I have attained unto perfection, we can never dwell with God. We may go there in the hour of arbitrament, in the great day of eternal judgment, and after the investigation has been made we may hear the words, "Depart from me, ye cursed, ye never knew me." Let me repeat the thought. Take it home with you; think about it: Until you and I have attained unto perfection, we can not be qualified to dwell with God. And you and I can never attain unto perfection only by obedience to a perfect law. And a law to be perfect must come from, originate with, a perfect mind. And, consequently, as Jesus had entered into conditions of imperfection by virtue of the fact, as stated by the apostle Paul, that he became sin for us, it necessarily involves the thought that this law must have originated with God himself; and hence Jesus said, I speak nothing of myself. The Father, he gave me a commandment what I should say, and what I should speak, and I know that his commandment is life everlasting.
Now, my friends, let me call your attention to another, to me, very important thought, that where you have a law, it is made up of parts. We call them fundamentals; sometimes we say the integral parts. And being made up of parts, you can not take one of those parts away and leave the law intact. It is impossible to do so. Hence, if we find what the apostle James meant when he spoke of the perfect law of liberty, we shall have discovered these parts are necessary in their place,—just as essential in their place, as the law is in its entirety. Let me call your attention to a very important thought directly connected herewith: The apostle in writing to the saints at Galatia is troubled concerning the condition down there, and marvels that they are so soon turned unto another gospel, “which be not another [gospel]; but there be some,” said he, “that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ.” Mark that thought. “There be some [among you, right in the church, mind you] that would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, [listen,] or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.” What? An angel coming down from the courts of glory, standing with his feet upon the earth, walking to and fro among mankind, has no right to preach any other gospel? Nay, verily. Why? Because the gospel, the perfect law of liberty, originated with God; and since angels are beneath God, they would have no right to preach any other gospel than that which had originated in the mind of God, and which he had given to the world through the divine mediumship of his Son. Can you see? And he goes on to say in the ninth verse, “As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed.” It seems to me that this is the rational way to look at the matter. Why, since the gospel as presented by the Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, was intended to save, to bring you and me in standing before you this morning, to preach unto you, and that ye have already received. For as we comprehend the gospel, it becomes more in harmony with your needs and mine. For as we comprehend the gospel, it starts, according to the apostle Paul, with the principle of faith. And you remember that he was writing, “Must believe that he is.” Note here that he uses the present tense, “Must believe that he is.” There are too many people in the world to-day satisfied with the belief that God was. Do you not know that that is what caused the Jews to kill Christ? “We have Moses and the prophets, but as for this fellow, we know not whence he is.” Yes, they were living in the past so far as revelation from God was concerned, and they believed that God was; but when it came to the question of believing that he is, it seemed entirely to have escaped their minds, consequently it became necessary for the apostle to write, “must believe that he is.” And you remember that he was writing to that very class of people, in his letter to the Hebrews. He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. You know there are people in the world to-day, and I believe they are sincere, I believe they are honest, I believe they are earnest, who are living too much in the past. They say, "Oh, yes, eighteen hundred and more years ago it was all right for Jesus to say, 'These signs shall follow them that believe'; but that is not intended for us." Who said so? Where do you find it? He that cometh to God "must believe that he is." I tell you faith means something. It is not simply an assent of the mind to the conclusion that God exists. Nay, verily. "must believe," not may; "must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

Jesus made the promise, and he will certainly reward: "These signs shall follow them that believe," and I can not find it anywhere in the word of God that that was limited either as to time, condition—I will stop there—or people. It was limited as to condition: You "must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him"; but as to time or people, so far as those people are living in harmony with the divine mind, or seeking to live in harmony with the perfect law of liberty, "these signs shall follow them that believe." Let me tell you, I will go over the thought hurriedly this morning, that if you have true faith in God, you will believe in a church having in it apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, bishops, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons; all the officers, in fact, found enumerated in the New Testament, as found in the church established by the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, with all the gifts, blessings, and signs following the believer.

So, then, it means something to have faith in God; and if you have not that faith, get it, and stay with it, and live it. This is not only to you who are in the church, but to those out of the church as well. It is intended for all of us. If we have not that faith, then we want it. We must get it, or else we can not receive the promises, and failing to receive in harmony with these promises we will fail to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth as revealed through the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Paul goes on to outline it, and says the next step in the great gospel truth is repentance. Ah, you see it started down there when you were in the mire of sin, did it not, and, taking hold of you, you took hold of God with faith, did you not? And as soon as you took hold of God in true faith you had, if you never had before in your life, a desire to repent. And, say, repentance means something. It does not simply mean to get up in a congregation and say, "I am sorry." The biggest hypocrite that ever walked the footstool of God can say that; but repentance means to show our sorrow, to turn from our evil, and live a consistent life in Christ.

And now, my friends, let me call your attention to what Paul calls "the perfect law of liberty," as I understand it. In writing to the Hebrews, in the sixth chapter, first and second verses, he enumerates the first principles of the doctrine of Christ. Do you school teachers, you professors who may be present this morning, know anything about first principles? In every department of your school-work you come face to face with first principles; in mathematics, in reading, in orthography, in every branch of learning. Are you prepared this morning to say that you can do away with any of them? Not one. All right, Now, Paul calls these "the first principles of the doctrine of Christ," and enumerates them as faith, repentance, baptisms, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. See! It started with you down in the very depth of degradation and sin, and lifted you out of the mire, and took you right on, upward and onward, until you stand in the very presence of God, at the great day of eternal judgment.

You will likely during the next week or two hear more upon the principles of the doctrine of Christ. Thank you.

THE SPIRIT OF TEACHING.

The proof that the statement, "If ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach," is scientific. God uttered those words, and everything he says is scientific if the word science is properly defined.

The purpose of all teaching is to edify, to build, to create (in a sense) character; but words are such poor vehicles of intelligence (however, the very best we have in our present state of development) that we are continually called upon to define our meaning. That I may not be misunderstood I will give you the meaning I wish to convey when I speak of character. The body and the spirit is the soul of man. Character is simply the varying states of the development of the soul.

"There is a spirit in man [the body] and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him [the spirit and the body] understanding." But how is this accomplished? Does God in some indefinable, mysterious way, contrary to all known law, select some individuals and endow them with special faculties which the ordinary person can not ever hope to possess and by inspiration through them alone convey his intelligence to mankind? This is the idea which always has been, is to-day, and always will be the foundation of priestcraft. No, this can not be true. "Let us make man in our own image," was the conclusion of God himself; and it was so. Moses, in sorrow, said, "Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets." Why were they not? For no other reason than that they would not develop the faculties which were inherent, but dormant, in every one of them.

What is a prophet? Just a man or woman who... because of his or her faith, consecration, and preparation, or, if you please, development, knows more along the lines of development than the man or woman who is not willing to pay the price of attainment. Paul is reputed to have said, “The Spirit dividing to every man severally as he will”; but I think if his attention had been called to the matter (if he really said it that way) he would readily agree to change this: “Dividing to every man severally as he can,” as the development of the individual will permit; or, because of his ignorance, inexperience—by exercising all of his active faculties—that which is given is all that he is able to use wisely for his growth and for the edification of the body. But think you that the Spirit is satisfied with the gift he bestows? Does he not rather, knowing the infinite possibilities couched in every soul, but not manifested because of disobedience, of sin, turn away with sadness and long for the time when, through the proper use of the one he has given, he may come again and bestow other talents? Truly, “every man whose spirit receiveth not the light [continually more light, all truth] is under condemnation, for man is spirit.”

But we do not intrust a delicate piece of valuable mechanism to the care of a babe. The very things which give a watch its value would, because of uncontrollable joy at hearing the rhythmic sound of its operation and seeing the brilliancy of its polish, cause the child to dash it to pieces. There must have been some good reason for the command, “Cast not your pearls before swine,” and the swine, in the sense here intended, unfortunately (nor can it be otherwise under pro-millenial conditions) are not all on the outside of the church.

Can we not now see the absolute necessity of having the Spirit when we teach, if we would have our teaching be successful? Nor does this apply only to those who preach what we call sermons, or only when the preacher is in the pulpit. It applies with even greater force to those who write upon sacred themes—and there is another word, sacred, which badly needs a definition in the light of modern revelation—because that which is put upon the printed page is far more potential either for good or ill than that which is spoken, for two reasons: first, because it reaches more people; second, because it may be read and reread and studied until it becomes a very part of our being, and, oh, how hard is the operation for us to eradicate an idea thus implanted!

But I am thoroughly convinced, after testing the matter many times to my own satisfaction (and nothing in this article is for others unless the Spirit testifies to them that it is the truth) that the spirit in which an article is written accompanies the printed word; so if we have the spirit of discernment, which we all should have, we need not be deceived.

If an article be written in the spirit of criticism (the Devil continually accused the brethren to God, we are told) or of personal ambition, which never can be for the benefit of the whole body (this is selfishness and is what caused the downfall of a son of the morning and a third of the hosts of heaven), or to advance some pet theory, of no practical value under present conditions (this is unwise, to say the least), no matter how one might seek to avoid personalities, solely as the result of the very positive “suggestion” of our new Associate Editor and not because of repentance, no matter how he might interpolate the words, “love,” “self-sacrifice,” “obedience,” “forgiveness,” and “fairness,” there will be an impression made upon the reader, if living up to his privileges, quite contrary to the result, perhaps conscientiously intended and fully expected. And the writer may wonder why his mail is not filled with letters of congratulation from appreciative Saints on his masterpiece, why the whole church does not say, Amen, and be immediately, instantaneously, prepared for the millennial reign. Why is it not so? Why does the light shine in darkness and the darkness comprehend it not? Puzzle: Find the darkness.

Let us look at another picture. An article is written in the spirit of charity. The writer knowing full well his own weaknesses, does not look for perfection in others and is not, therefore, disposed to make a man an offender for a word. If his brother or sister does yield to temptation his first thought and his last is to save, to bring the wanderer back to the fold. Every word he writes seems filled with love, encouragement, and help; self is so far eliminated that the light of truth, even Jesus Christ, predominates throughout, and we behold, beyond, the intelligence of God. We can, with the eye of the Spirit, look down into the heart and find there no guile, and are made to realize that they are following the pattern given to Oliver Cowdery: “You must study it out in your mind; then you must ask me if it be right, and if it is right, I will cause that your bosom shall burn within you; therefore, you shall feel that it is right; but if it be not right, you shall have no such feelings, but you shall have a stupor of thought that shall cause you to forget the thing which is wrong; therefore, you can not write that which is sacred, save it be given you from me.”—Doctrine and Covenants 9:3. “Now, behold, this is the Spirit of revelation; behold, this is the Spirit by which Moses brought the children of Israel through the Red Sea on dry ground.”—Doctrine and Covenants 8:2. The method is always the same; the difference is only in degree of manifestation.

Which picture appeals to you most strongly? which is the most desirable to possess? Let us then seek earnestly the best gifts.

As our prayer- and testimony-meetings, and all meetings, should be conducted under the guidance and direction of the Holy Spirit, so should be our church papers, which are, in fact, the greatest single meetings being held by the church to-day, both testimony and preaching. But as we are seeking for more spirituality in the meetings which we personally attend, let us also try to improve the meetings which come to us in our homes each week, in the form of the church papers. I, indeed, rejoice in the testimony and preaching. But as we are seeking for meetings being held by the church to-day, both tests or choruses. It gets beyond the gospel hymn or trashy anthem transcription stage. We are inclined to think that there would be less complaint of the modern choir if its members were required to enunciate more clearly and with more evident appreciation of the text. This is the great difficulty with all choirs, be they quartets or choruses. It is an insufferable bore to sit and listen to a long-drawn-out anthem not a word of which can be understood.—The Des Moines Capital, November 14, 1906.

IGNORANT OF THE BIBLE.

"If I were appointed a committee of one to regulate the much debated question of college entrance examinations in English," wrote Professor Phelps, in a communication to the Yale Alumni Weekly, "I should erase every list of books that thus far has been tried or suggested. I should confine the examination wholly to the authorized version of the Bible. This is a radical suggestion, but something may be said in its defense.

"The ignorance of college students in biblical literature is universal, profound, and complete. Students at Harvard and Yale, different as they are in many respects from their brothers in small colleges, resemble them closely here. If all the undergraduates in America could be placed in one room and tested by common examination on supposedly familiar stories of the Old Testament—I mean on such instances as Adam, Eve, the garden of Eden, Noah, Samson, David and Goliath, Moses, and Pharaoh—the result would be a magnificent contribution to American humor.

"The experience of teachers with other books is almost never the same in the institutions of learning, but ask any teacher in the United States what luck he has with the Bible and he throws up his hands in despair. I inquired of one fine young specimen of American manhood what he thought Shakespeare meant by the phrase, 'Here feel we not the penalty of Adam,' and he replied: 'It was the mark put on Adam for having slain his brother.'

"To another lad, who is every inch a gentleman, I put a question involving an explanation of the word 'Golgotha,' and his face became blank. I came to his relief with the remark, 'Golgotha is a New Testament reference.' The light of intelligence illuminated his handsome face and he replied: 'It means Goliath.'

"Instances like these two are constant and almost of daily occurrence in the work of the American college teachers. It certainly is unfortunate that the best book ever printed should be so little known that the frequent references to it of practically every English author should be meaningless.

"I would, therefore, refuse to allow any candidate to enter the university until he had satisfactorily passed an examination on the Bible. The Bible has within its pages every single kind of literature that any proposed list of the English classics contains. Priests, atheists, skeptics, devotees, agnostics, and evangelists all are agreed that the authorized version of the English Bible is the best example of English composition the world has ever seen. It combines the noblest prose and poetry with the utmost simplicity of diction."—Chicago Daily Tribune.

ARE THE CHURCHES TOO LUXURIOUS?

We are reminded by the following that once in a while a man arises who defends the worldly church yet clamors for a spiritual pastor; but the two will never work long in the same yoke.—Errors.

To the ordinary mind it would seem immaterial where the churches are located, on the side streets or in the blaze of a brilliant boulevard. In fact if churches are good things it would seem reasonable to locate them where they could attract most attention and draw the largest crowds. In these modern days of publicity and push and scientific advertising there could be no impropriety, and it certainly would be better for the cause of religion, if those who have the Lord's business in hand should advertise it as bravely as the rest, and wherever possible set the churches on hills where their light could shine upon a naughty world and call sinners to salvation so loudly and insistently that the deafest could not fail to hear.

For the same reasons the churches can not be too fine. When sky-scraping business structures are being multiplied on every side, dedicated as temples of Mammon, why should not magnificent and imposing buildings be erected to celebrate the most important matter that engages the attention of mortal man, the preparing of souls for the life hereafter? If millions can be piled on millions in marble and stone and fine wood to facilitate the transitory works of this fleeting life, what measure or limits could be put upon the labors for eternity?

No, the churches are not too fine or too ostentatious, as Mr. Gladden argues. Neither can there be any reasonable objection to the congregating of people according to their social culture and station in life. It is natural and proper for people to prefer, even in religious worship, to meet together in congenial surroundings and to preserve the associations which mark their daily walks in life. A self-respecting poor man will not care to have his wife and children brought into humiliating contrast with the rich. God doesn't care for dress, but the best and purest men and women recognize the propriety and wisdom of associating with their own class and kind even though the difference be only in superficial worldly matters.

The real trouble with the cause of religion, and its average increase of but a fraction over one member in each church in the past five years, is not in the churches or congregations. It is in the preachers who care more for the fleece than the flock.—Kansas City Journal, November 12, 1906.

KING STOPS SMOKING.

Some months ago King Edward's physician, Doctor Treves, ordered him to stop smoking,—a prescription which he ought to have had many years ago. Being a real king, Edward obeyed his physician's orders. A man who is not a king would probably have declined to take the prescription on the ground that he enjoyed his cigar so much that he could not dispense with it, or that he had smoked so long he could not stop. But the man who rules the great British Empire has proved his capacity as a ruler by ruling himself. "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city." But the result of following his physician's advice is that which interests us most.

According to a dispatch received not long ago by the Chicago Tribune from its London correspondent, King Edward has improved so much in general health since he gave up smoking that he is obliged to keep up vigorous exercise to keep down his flesh.—Good Health; October, 1906.

TWENTIETH-CENTURY PILGRIMS.

Greeted by a crowd that had gathered from all parts of the city, the steamship Wittekind anchored in the harbor of Charleston, South Carolina, on Sunday of last week. The vessel had on board four hundred and seventy-six immigrants. They were welcomed like invited guests. The mayor of the city boarded the vessel to facilitate the landing of the passengers. Men from other Southern States were present to witness the incoming of these foreigners. Commissioner Sargent, head of the Immigration Bureau, was there personally to supervise the inspection. Mr. Neill, United States Commissioner of Labor, was also an interested spectator. The transportation of these newcomers was arranged by the Commissioner of Immigration of South Carolina, Mr. E. J. Watson. The landing of those pilgrims may mean much, not only to the South, but also to the whole nation. Several Southern States have undertaken to divert a part of the stream to their own territory. They have organized societies, and even governmental departments, in order to attract the population which is needed for the development of their resources. The voyage of the Wittekind marks picturesque the first-fruits of their efforts. If the people who landed in Charleston are satisfied with their venture, they will influence others to follow their example; it may be that thus Charleston and other Southern ports may become gates through which a host of immigrants may enter to make their homes in the South. This would have the effect, first, of reinforcing the industrial strength of the South; second, of confronting the negro population with competitors who will challenge them to such exertions as they have never yet been called upon to make; and, third, of helping to solve that most serious aspect of the immigration problem—the question of distribution. The Wittekind may become a historic name in American history.—Outlook, November 17, 1906.

FURS, FEATHERS, AND BARBARIANS.

Tears and hysterical denials on the part of women delegates, who had heard themselves called “barbarians and murderesses,” marked the close of the convention of the American Humane Association in the Fine Arts Building last evening.

The women for half an hour had listened patiently while a speaker bitterly denounced the wearing of furs and bird carcasses. Adornment of such character was evident in all parts of the hall.

Apparently unable to listen further, two women finally left the convention hall. Another burst into tears, while the husband of a fourth arose to his feet to defend the action of women who wore fur pieces.

It was the address of J. Howard Moore on “The cost of a skin” that caused the stir.

“Nobody but a barbarian would adorn her head with the carcass of a bird or the heads of grinning weasels,” said Mr. Moore. “Such things appeal only to the vulgarian. Such a woman is about as attractive as if adorned with a string of dried skulls. She excites pity, for she is a murderess.

“Furs are the most costly of luxuries because to secure them men must be the most conscienceless and inhumane. When I think that in this day of advanced education and supposed refinement brutalities such are necessary to secure the furs of these little animals are practiced I am heartily ashamed of the race to which I belong.”—Chicago Tribune, November 16.

WRONG JOSEPH SMITH.

Owing to the fact that the heads of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and of the Mormon church are both named Smith—the one Joseph Smith and the other Joseph F. Smith—the Journal, on October 2, confused the pictures of the two men, and published that of Joseph Smith for that of the head of the Mormon church. Joseph Smith, in calling attention to the error, says that he is head of the “Reorganized Church,” and adds:

“I am the eldest son of the prophet, Joseph Smith, who was assassinated at Carthage, Illinois, in June, 1844. I am the husband of but one living wife; I am and have ever been a monogamist in theory and in practice, in harmony with the laws of my country, state and national, and in accordance with the strict teachings of the faith introduced to the world by the ministry of my father and his coworkers.

“In the face of a record of this kind, and being the husband of but one living wife, I protest against being published as a polygamist and as under duress as a violater of the law of God and man.”

In view of this statement it was manifestly unfair to couple Joseph Smith’s picture with a report of the arrest of Joseph F. Smith of the Mormon church for living unlawfully with five wives. —Minneapolis Journal, October 20, 1906.

Mothers' Home Column
EDITED BY FRANCES.

The Shepherd’s Question.
Where are my little lambs to-night?
Are they all within the fold?
My precious lambs, so pure and white
Are they sheltered from the cold?
Have ye gathered them in with care,
And housed them safe and warm?
Hast nourished them with gospel fare,
And kept from every harm?
Wolves and dogs doth roam about
When the light of day is closed;
Is one of my helpless lambs left out,
To the woes of the world exposed?
And beasts more fearful doth affright,
And watch to rend and tear;
Where are my precious lambs to-night?
Are they house! i with tender care?
Mothers, when ye gather your own
So close to your warm, true heart,
Think of the many left alone
To the cheerless orphan’s part.
And say, what will the answer be
When the Shepherd asks for them?
How many jewels shall he see
That ye saved for his diadem?

A Home For the Little Ones.
A home for my children,
Oh! glorious thought,—
To the mother, that’s hastened
From this life away,
A home in the church;
Protected I from sin,
Where in safety my children may stay.
A home in the church
'Neath the good Shepherd's care
Yes, Lord, I can safely
Leave them there.

Dear sisters, have you ever stopped to think how hard it is for the mother with small children, when she realizes that the time is near when she must leave them?

When she knows that no matter how kind and loving the father is, he will have to go out to work and leave the little ones to the care of hired help, who would be working only for wages, not for the love of the children; and without a thought of their souls’ salvation?
The Father of all has at last seen fit to call upon us as his sons and daughters to build a home wherein the motherless little ones can find safe refuge and loving care, that the souls of those mothers may not cry unto him because of their home­less little ones; and the father can safely place his babies in this home and feel that when he comes to claim them he will find them comfortably clothed and fed, and taught only that which is pure and good, and know that if they are sick they will receive tender, loving care. And it will cost him less to keep them in such a home than to depend upon a hireling to give them half care, and waste enough each month to keep them a week.

Any true father would be willing to try very hard to help all he could to keep up a home where his motherless little ones could have good care.

Of course there are a few hired nurses that try hard to fill the absent mother's place; but they are few indeed. And the greater part of the women who go out for such work are not in the church.

Then think of the little ones who have lost both father and mother. Truly we need a home for the little ones. And we afflicted mothers can more fully realize the need of just such a home and feel that when he comes to claim them he will find them comfortably clothed and fed, and taught only that which is pure and good, and know that if they are sick they will receive tender, loving care. And it will cost him less to keep them in such a home than to depend upon a hireling to give them half care, and waste enough each month to keep them a week.

If the branch here seems united, and the Saints are kind to me, doing all any one could wish, to make life pleasant. The work is moving here to a better understanding of the law of heaven. We are having excellent meetings now. Two were baptized in the Tuscarawas River last Sunday, and I am expecting more to follow. Of course we can yet make improvement, and hope to come up higher, and continue to go on and on. God has heard prayers in behalf of the sick ones, for which we praise him. It seemed last Sunday like the angels must rejoice because of the work being done by the Saints. Excellent prayer-meeting on Wednesday evenings. All the Saints are happy because of the victory over the recent past influences for evil.

If Bro. I. M. Smith reads this, know that our fasting and prayers a year or more in the past were not in vain; but all that we labored for has been realized. Let Cleveland, Akron, and other branches beware; New Philadelphia Branch will shine bright and still brighter.

G. A. SMITH.

Victor, Montana, November 14, 1906.

Editors Herald: Thirty-two years ago this last summer, I subscribed for the HERALD and, since then, it has been coming to my address and I have been a reader of its pages. Its readers, then, were few; and those who contributed to its columns were, of course, fewer than its readers. But the HERALD has grown since then, its price has been cut down, its readers have increased in numbers and in knowledge too, and it has proved itself to be a power for good. May it live long and its usefulness increase.

At present writing, I am at the pleasant home of Bro. and Sr. John Johnson, in the Bitter Root Valley, Ravalli County, Montana. And those who have been here will know, when they learn where I am, that I am well cared for. There is only one unpleasant feature connected with my stay here, and that is the thought of leaving. I came here on October 15, and three days later was joined by Bro. L. G. Holloway. We held twenty-three preaching-services in the Fairview Schoolhouse. Audiences were not large but, most of the time, were fair sized; and the attention and behavior were exceptionally good.

After closing our meetings here, we made an effort in Hamilton; but rain and indifference kept the people away, and our efforts, so far as we could see, were not a success. But I was pleased to visit in the homes of Bro. and Sr. N. G. Whitney and Bro. and Sr. S. G. Sargent who, with their children, made our stay there pleasant indeed. They are nice Saints, and have nice families: wish their children, with the children of other Saints here, could have the advantage of church and Sunday-school privileges, like our young people in Independence and Lamoni have. May the Lord bless, strengthen, and direct the dear children of the Saints here, and bring them safely to Zion; for it takes wisdom, strength, and courage to hold young people in the faith, when their environments outside of the family are all pulling the other way. But the time has not yet come or, in other words, conditions are not yet ripe for God's people to be all gathered in one, and hence some of them must be out on the frontier; and it is a blessed good thing for the missionary that it is so, too.

Bro. Holloway went to Deer Lodge, last Saturday, to preach a funeral sermon. I expect to make an effort in Victor and in Woodside, here in the Bitter Root Valley, and then return to Deer Lodge, stay there a few days, and then on to Helena, East Helena, Whitehall, Bozeman, and other places in Montana, as the way may open up and the Spirit seem to direct.

For so far I have found the Saints in Montana alive to the work, as a rule. It is a pleasure, indeed, to labor among Saints of that kind, and one soon becomes very much attached to them.

W. C. HAWKINS.
As for myself, I am as well as might be expected; am still in the faith, and am trying to labor cheerfully and hopefully for the Master, with an eye single to his glory. Self, bowing, is ever coming to the front, forcibly reminding me that the victory is not yet won and that I must continue the fight until self is crucified. And when will that be? When? When? Editors Herald: I am your sister in the gospel, and wish to be remembered in your prayer-meetings and in your secret prayers. I am an isolated one, but the Lord is good to me in the hour of loneliness. I am wishing a day will soon come when an elder will come stepping in my door. If there is a work to be done here, the Lord knows I am willing to do all I can to help. An elder can make his home here, and I have a good, comfortable home. I think there is not another Saint in this city.

E. F. Conrad.

Knobnoster, Missouri, November 20, 1906.

Editors Herald: It is a great pleasure for me to say through our paper that I am still in the faith and enjoying the influence of the good Spirit. I am now on my way to my field of labor, after being at home over a month on account of the sickness of my little boy and also for the purpose of performing other duties required at my hands. I have stopped here a few days on account of being requested by Saints to visit and preach a few times. I find it a great pleasure to be in company with those that I associated with in the work years ago. I find several families who have lately located here from other parts that are determined to be true Latter Day Saints. The indications are that there will be an excellent branch here in the future. I have tried to tell the gospel story to them on three different occasions and Bro. S. J. Madden has preached twice. I am still in the faith and take great delight in telling the old story. To be a true, genuine Latter Day Saint has been the greatest and chief aim of my life during the last twenty years; and as I look back over that time I am led to praise God and thank him for the day when I was born into his kingdom. If I can only serve God and retain that childlike simplicity that I desire, I shall have nothing to regret. To walk in the gospel road is not only a duty but a pleasure indeed and the peace, love, joy, and satisfaction that has thrilled my soul can not be fully described by mortals.

In my experience in the past, I have learned one important lesson which seems to linger continually in my soul, and that is that prayer and humility should be truly and firmly established in the heart of every individual in order that he may become strong and successful. I am glad to know that there is room for work and improvement all along the line. No one has advanced so far yet that there is no room for him to work and make improvement; and there is no danger of any one monopolizing all the work there is to be done.

I have a burning desire to help fill the requirement of Jesus as enjoined in the statement: “By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another.”

Your brother in the faith,

F. M. Slover.

Cockburn Island, Ontario, November 15, 1906.

Dear Herald: I am pleased to inform you that God’s work is onward and upward upon the Algoma Islands. It is true we are living in the day of wickedness, and as the Lord has told us the people have turned their hearts from him because of the precepts of men, and as a result of this and other evils we find it hard work to convince the people of the gospel in its fullness and purity, yet there are a few here and there willing to stop and ponder the path of their feet. There is a way that seems right to many, yet will end in death (or as the writer understands, separation from God). Some are inquiring for the old path, and we are teaching them to walk therein, that they may find rest,—true and pure rest to their souls.

The mission is a large one, and the calls from the many islands are not a few; and as I am the only missionary of the true church of Jesus Christ on the same, I feel the great need of living so as to be a pure light, and that silt by which the people may be salted with truth, that they may be made free by first obeying the principles, then acquiring those pure graces. Trusting truth will triumph and God be glorified and souls be saved is my prayer.

R. B. Howlett.

Taylorville, Illinois, November 16, 1906.

Dear Herald: It is with pleasure I write once more in my feeble way to thank my heavenly Father for his grace toward me and mine. In perusing the Herald on “General features of stake work,” my whole heart and soul is overjoyed. Of all the writings that has been done of late, the standard of the stake officers is my choice. I knew of myself I was not to the occasion. I know what the books proved; but I could not portray it with language sufficient for the occasion; and my prayer is that the Holy Spirit may continue with all God’s children, that the perusal of the word may be edifying; for I can testify that the Holy Spirit has been with you, brethren, in the discourse you have undertaken, and I do believe it will help to lift many up. May the whole church in general be directed by God’s Holy Spirit, is my prayer.

Morgan D. Lewis.

Woodbine, Iowa, November 17, 1906.

Herald Readers: It is with pleasure that I share with you the benefit from reading the church periodicals. Nor is it in any spirit of selfishness that I have failed to contribute my quota of good news to your enjoyment; but for the greater part of this last year, I have felt it my duty to remain by the side of my sick and helpless companion, who has been my faithful helpmeet for over fifty-two years. Faithful to her trust as a wife, and mother to my children, faithful to her God amid all the privations and trials incident to the wife of a gospel missionary, willingly making every sacrifice demanded, now for the first time in over forty-five years of my missionary labors in the Reorganized Church she has requested me to remain by her side, and feeling in duty bound by the laws of God and true humanity to comply with her reasonable request, I have remained at home, not, however, altogether idle. I have tried to do what I could in a local capacity, ministering to the Saints in the word of life to the best of my ability, seeking to encourage all in the great warfare in which we have enlisted. I want to tell you that I am not discouraged because thousands do not flock to the standard of truth, and seek refuge under its ample folds. The history of the church of God in all ages testifies emphatically to the truth of the Master’s saying, “Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.” “Wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat.” I do not expect to see it reversed.

The gospel of Christ is competent to accomplish all that God designed it to do, to save to the uttermost all who will accept and obey it. Its promises are yea and amen to all who will accept God as their king. There is no cause for any discouragement, whether the world receive or reject the angel’s message. God will perform to his people all that he has promised.

On the 15th I preached the funeral of Bro. Colby Downer. He was eighty-three years, eleven months, and twenty-eight days old. He embraced the gospel over forty years ago, remained strong in the faith, was singular in his manners, but had a large and generous heart. His door and hand were always open to the ministers of Christ. Honest in his deal and true to his word. In his declining years his mental powers failed him, and it became necessary to send him to an asylum, where he died on the 12th of November. He was known to many of the Saints in Western Iowa. He leaves a poor, blind, and helpless widow, who will need the watchcare of the Saints in ministering to her necessities. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."—James 1:27.

I have this to say of the Woodbine Saints, that in our affliction during Sr. Derry's illness they have manifested the true spirit of the gospel, giving evidence of their high esteem for him, administering to her comfort in many ways; and our brother, Doctor Charles H. Kennedy, of Logan, has given his valuable service, and would not receive any remuneration. We appreciate the kindness of all, and are assured that the Master will say unto them, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me!"

Sr. Derry is far from well and is still helpless to a great extent, and I ask the Saints in the district to accept this as the only reason why I do not visit them as I should. My health is excellent, thank God; but I would be in a measure powerless to render the help needed, but our daughter Alice, whom I consider as our guardian angel, is, unto her, all that a daughter can be.

Charles Derry.

NEBRASKA, Arkansas, November 17, 1906.

Editors Herald: I wish to report the death of Bro. Cory A. Yandell. The deceased died the 9th inst., at nine o'clock in the evening, at his home, near Stringer, Arkansas, leaving a widow, "who is a sister in Christ," and six children, and many friends to mourn his departure. Bro. Yandell and wife were the first to see the light and accept at Stringer. Bro. Yandell was loved and esteemed by all who knew him. He always lived to the best light he had. His home has often been the home of the elders.

A debate will commence here with the Christian people, the 27th—H. N. Hansen, Latter Day Saint, and Binem Black of the Church of Christ.

C. C. Chrisman.

CHICO, California, November 19, 1906.

Editors Herald: This concludes my three months' tour of California. I leave here to-day for Oregon, Washington, and other points in the Northwest. Since my last communication to you, I have visited San Jose, and found the branch there in a fair spiritual condition. Bro. John Carmichael, president, and the rest of the local officers are laboring faithfully to keep the work moving in that city. Bro. Hawkins (elder) is rendering what assistance he can in view of his trying condition (his wife being an invalid). One of our young sisters, Weldon, of this place was engaged in the Agnews Asylum during the earthquake. She was working in the fourth or fifth story when the building went down to the ground and she was covered over with the debris, remaining for some time in that condition before her voice was heard crying for help. She was finally rescued and was hurt but very little. It was wonderful that during this earthquake none of the Saints were hurt or killed, notwithstanding we had a number of Saints in Santa Rosa, Oakland, San Francisco, and San Jose where the earthquake was most severe. It was evident that God was mindful of his people and protected them in the hour of great danger. Surely those who were thus spared should feel very grateful to the Lord for his mercy and protection to them, and ought to double their diligence in his service, and I am confident that the Saints in California are more spiritually minded and more actively engaged in the work than I have ever seen before. It is very gratifying indeed to see so many of our young people becoming interested in our latter-day work; and we have quite a number of bright and intellectual young men coming to the front who, if faithful, will make their mark in the church.

At San Francisco, Bro. John Lawn is developing into a very useful man, and will be the president of that branch ere long. He has able assistants in Louis Daguer, John F. Wilds, Cecil Hawley, and C. C. Day. Bro. Anthony is still in the fight and hammers away at the infidels and all other kinds of "isms" on the street, and keeps his Book of Mormon banner floating to the breeze. Our worthy young brother, Doctor W. P. Bush, is advancing and striving "to make himself approved, a workman that need not be ashamed," in Oakland. This branch has recently lost an efficient worker in Joseph Ferris, who has lately removed to Independence. Bro. John Cockerton, "policeman," is still to be found standing at his post as priest of the branch. Here is an evidence that a brother can be an officer of the church as well as an officer of the law. If we had more of them holding offices in the government, we might have less graft. Our old standbys, Elders Ferris and Willie, are as much alive in the work as in the days of yore, and both are growing old gracefully. Bro. Joseph Pressley is deacon at Oakland, and works cheerfully as ever. Bro. E. Williams, teacher, has been having some severe trials; but the Lord is bringing him through safely. His son was shot some time since, and the father had two of his fingers cut off, and also other accidents in the family. Bro. Terry has good supporters and a number have been baptized in that branch of late as a result of unity and faithfulness on the part of the officers and Saints.

We held a number of successful meetings at Sacramento. Bro. T. J. Lawn president, William Dawson priest, and Charles Milgate teacher, comprise the branch officers there. Bishop Parkin is residing there temporarily; Bro. Charles Crumley's family is located there also. This branch is in good condition, and the prospects are bright for the future. Srs. Blair, Milgate, Twaddel, Morrell and others are faithful armor-bearers. The ministry who have visited this branch in the last twenty years will remember these sisters for their integrity and kind hospitality. We have been favorably impressed with the Saints in Chico, and have felt greatly blessed in the services here. Brn. A. M. Starkey, Sr., president, Walter H. Barker, priest, Aide and Foss, teachers, Lytle White, deacon, are the efficient corps of officers of this branch. Bro. A. B. Phillips, who opened up the work here, is kindly remembered by many of the Saints. Bro. J. S. Hommes, who assisted Bro. Phillips, is still in the faith, and actively engaged in spreading the truth. This branch has good supporters and a number have been baptized in the missionary field, and we hope they will so arrange their affairs that they can take the active missionary work next spring.

I wish to express my gratitude to all the officers and Saints in California for the kindness shown me, and the support of the brethren of the local ministry; for truly they have given me a kind reception in the districts and branches that I have visited. The Lord has greatly blessed my weak efforts among them.

Your brother and collaborator,

POPE VALLEY, California, November 18, 1906.

Herald Editors: I have a daughter who is not well, and I ask the prayers of the Saints in her behalf. She is not a member of the church, but is anxious to have an elder come and baptize her; when the opportunity affords I would be very glad to have one come and do so.

Yours truly,

Rena Tomblinson.

ONAWA, Iowa, November 20, 1906.

Editors Herald: I very much enjoy reading the Herald, and from it I get much that is spiritually good to me. I note with others the harsh criticisms that have at times passed through it columns. Aside from this the pages of the Herald have been laden with joyous and glad news, and to me it has been a source of pleasure to read its pages of sacred devotion to the upbuilding of a cause that seeks to lift humanity to a condition of heavenliness— a cause that seeks to bring about the happiest condition that man has ever dreamed of or hoped to attain, the redemption of Zion. And my sincerest desire is that we may all appreciate the opportunity we have of helping to bring about the result. There are various ways in which we may help. One way is to purify our hearts: “Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.” And in another place we have the statement that nothing that defileth can enter his presence. Consecration is another element necessary to the accomplishment of the redemption of Zion. The chief thing thatbinds in that respect now is selfishness and distrust, a lack of faith in God. “Love thy neighbor as thyself.” Complete obedience to this commandment eliminates selfishness. Faith in God eliminates distrust. The lack of any one of these disfranchises us from a promise of inheritance. My prayer is for all, that we may be able to attain our inheritance.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

G. W. Lindsey.

SRY HILL, Saskatchewan, Canada, Nov. 17, 1906.

Dear Herald: We have very stormy weather to-day; a regular northwest blizzard, although the thermometer is not very low. Alvin Knisley paid us a visit for about two weeks. He is certainly a wonderful speaker, and does a great deal of good. He went from here to Winnipeg. He had a congregation of about eight hundred there. Elder A. Dorsett is doing missionary work at Gilbert Plains. There are a few sections of prairie land here to be bought yet at fifteen dollars per acre, but it will soon all be gone. Improved lands range from twenty-five dollars per acre up.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

J. E. Dorsett.

CLIFFORD, North Dakota, November 20, 1906.

Dear Herald: Having a little more than ordinary leisure at this time, on account of a severe snow-storm which has left at least a foot of snow on the ground, my thoughts are carried back, somewhat sadly, nearly twenty-seven years, to the time I first obeyed this beautiful gospel, and I well remember how my heart bounded with joy and gratitude to Almighty God to think that I had been permitted to hear the true gospel and become a member of his own church. Then why sadness? Is it because we have since discovered that we were mistaken and our hopes based on a delusion? No, indeed! But to think how little it because we have since discovered that we were mistaken and it for that loving Savior, who did and is still doing so much for me!

Out here in this extreme north, weather conditions and isolation are somewhat of a barrier; but, alas! our own indifference is worse yet; and in my travels I see so many things that distress me, and that, too, at the houses of the Saints. One thing is light, trashy, literature, poisoning the mind. And here I feel impressed to relate a dream that I had many years ago, when my family was quite small, and I used to often read aloud of an evening to the household. I may say by way of preface that I had then discarded all the cheaper “yellow-backed” detective, “blood and murder” variety, and at that time was engaged on a volume of Dicken’s works which I then classed as superior, and of which I was very fond. The Lord opened my eyes in the following dream: I saw myself, my wife at my side, and all the children seated in a cool, beautiful grove. It seemed to be hot weather and I looked around for water to quench our thirst. I found a spring close by, and began to hand water in a mug to all, and drinking myself. I thought the water did not taste exactly right, but no particularly bad effect seemed to come to me or my wife; but the children were taken very ill. And then I looked more closely and saw that at the bottom of the spring there was a foul sediment. At that time a voice seemed to come to me and say, “How careless you are about the welfare of your family. See here.” And then I noticed close by, evidently not ten feet away, was another spring, beautiful and clear beyond comparison, and the voice said, “Use that.” This was before the days of Autumn Leaves, Zion’s Religion, Exponent, Church History, and many other excellent helps that we have now. So, dear Saints, fathers and mothers, as Christmas is drawing near, I know you all love your children, and have great hopes for them. If you want to give them a present at Christmas, send for a catalogue to Herald or Ensign office and pick out what you want, and let the children choose some for themselves. It will be better than brassy jewelry or fancy “gewgaws.”

With an earnest desire and prayer that we may all become pure, even “as thy littles,” and so be ready to enter Zion when Jesus shall “send his angels,” I am,

Yours in the gospel,

WM. SPARLING.

Editors Herald: My dwelling-place has been swept into the Cowlitz River by the flood, and I find myself housed in the Saints’ church with my wife and two children, where I am to stay until an old house can be repaired enough for me to move in. I have been in feeble health, and it is quite a tax on my present strength. We had to flee and leave the house nearly surrounded with water. I was out at twelve at night to the river bank and saw it was within a half-foot of overflowing. I awakened my wife and children and went out, warning people of the danger as I went, so all escaped except one man. I then went back to my family. The night was so dark it was impossible to leave. My two children, five and three years old, would have to be carried, an impossible task for me; we were caught in a trap. I did all I could to ally fears, prayed for help, and in a short time Bro. George Appleman came wading up to the door waist deep in water and taking the two children disappeared with them; my wife and I picked our way through. Sixty persons found shelter in Bro. Appleman’s home for that night, and he rescued our goods which are now in the church where I am now writing. Bro. John Kaler has worked hard in rendering aid. John is a man of God—every inch of him. We do not propose to lose any ground, by God’s help; we willingly suffer that we may still preach Christ’s restored gospel, believing God works in destructive floods and earthquakes, as a testimony, and when he says enough we only go to reign in glory.

ST. LOUIS, Missouri, November 21, 1906.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I wrote a letter to “our” valuable paper, which I appreciate very much and in which I find much comfort. It seems like any who desire to keep posted and to know what is going on in the church should have the Herald coming regularly to their homes. Unfortunately this is not the case with many, and some of them quite able to subscribe for it. I can not say that its pages should be closed to a discussion of proper subjects. I think all matters for the good of the body militant which may be clouded in the minds of many, should be fully ventilated; however, I think much of what is said would be better said on the conference floor (see Doctrine and Covenants 125:19) than in the Herald or from the pulpit.

In coming to St. Louis to do city work it has not been without its trials and perplexities, and it is a work that is so much different from district and rural work that one enters upon it with some apprehension of mistakes or failure; but the great Giver of all good is just as considerate of his servants’ necessities to carry on city work and meet the demands as he is of those who do the rural work, and his divine light and wisdom is given when humbly and earnestly sought for. We are glad to know that while there are some exceptions here to right-doing among the Saints, the majority are working for higher and better conditions, many of them being a noble, self-sacrificing people, and their kindness and benevolence to me and my family can never be forgotten, neither their efforts for, and their activity in the work, which is worthy of commendation. We have a good, live Sunday-school here under the management of Brn. T. J. Elliot and Gomer Evans, superintendent and assistant, with an able corps of officers and teachers, and a splendid Religionly conducted by Bro. Arthur Smith and his band of earnest officers and teachers. We are glad to see the increased interest manifested in this local of late. These auxiliaries are doing much in preparing the younger element for branch services; and it would be quite uncharitable not to mention the sisters' Mite Society here. They are all (?) busy bees. Of late they have in various ways accumulated two hundred and eighty dollars for the children's home fund, and a rummage sale ahead this month. Many of them being a noble, self-sacrificing people, it would be quite uncharitable not to mention the sisters' Mite Society here. They are all (?) busy bees. Of late they have in various ways accumulated two hundred and eighty dollars for the children's home fund, and a rummage sale ahead of them for December. Push right along, sisters, and may the Lord bless you in your efforts for good.

The organization of a branch in East St. Louis, October 14, so far proves to have been a wise act, and we are glad to see the activity on the part of the priesthood there to spread the truth and reach neighboring villages. It is encouraging, and it must be a source of enjoyment to those who are about to lay the armor down because of old age and infirmity to see the young arise and enter into the heat of battle. The church needs every worker it can get and local men can do much towards building up the kingdom of God. The fear and agitation of the leading minds of the world, political corruption, increased wickedness in high places, national and international uneasiness, along with the destruction of life in wrecks on sea and land, and the peculiar convulsions of nature, as well as many other physical evidences, all tend to warn us we are living in portentous times. We should be on the watchtower. This is a grand work, a marvel and a wonder.

May the kind Father help us all to live faithful.

Your brother in Christ,

J. A. TANNER.

The regular sacramental services were postponed on account of the funeral of Sr. Hazel Noble's little daughter, the funeral sermon being preached at the home, in Denison, by Elder G. A. Smith. Sr. Hazel is certainly passing through a severe trial of sorrow, her mother, Sr. Bell McMillen, having passed away only a few months ago. I would kindly ask the Saints to pray for her, that the clouds may be rolled back, and that the sun may once more shine into her young life.

On last Sunday morning at ten o'clock the regular session of Sunday-school was held, and at two o'clock the sacrament was administered, after which the meeting was turned into a prayer- and testimony-meeting which was one long to be remembered by all the Saints who were present. The Spirit of God was certainly with us. It seemed like olden times, with so many brothers and sisters present, and yet our hearts were saddened, for some have been removed from our midst by the hand of death, whose prayers and testimonies we loved to hear. But when we think of God's promise to his children, we can lift up our heads and rejoice, for we know that on the morrow we shall meet them face to face.

After the close of the afternoon meeting Bro. G. A. Smith baptized two bright and intelligent young women, who for some time have been taking quite an interest in the Sunday-school work, one being a teacher, the other an organist.

Saints, especially those of you who are interested in the Saints of New Philadelphia, pray that this Spirit of peace and unity may remain with us, and that we may continue to work shoulder to shoulder, until by our works and example to the world many more precious souls in this little city may be brought into the kingdom.

Your sister in the faith,

ETTA J. DARST.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a few lines from this part will be of interest to the readers of the Herald. On the eleventh of this month our church which we recently purchased was dedicated to the service of the Lord. We expected Brn. Joseph and Kelley; but they were not here, but Fred A. Smith came in their stead, and preached the dedicatory sermon. We had J. N. White and others of the missionary force with us also, Bro. White offering the dedicatory prayer. The church was very nicely decorated, and a large audience greeted the speaker, who gave us a very interesting sermon; Bro. James Moler spoke in the afternoon, and Bro. Smith again at night. He has been with us every night since. Last week the attendance was good, and Saturday night the house was well filled, Bro. E. L. Kelley being the speaker, as he was on his way to Far West to attend the dedication at that place, which took place November 18. On Monday Brn. Joseph and Kelley both returned from the above-mentioned place, and Bro. Joseph spoke for us that night, then Bro. T. A. took up the line and has continued nightly; but owing to the stormy weather the attendance this week has been small, though the interest was quite good. We rejoice to know that we have a place of our own in this city in which to worship.

Next Sunday the church in St. Joseph is to be dedicated, making three churches dedicated on three successive Sundays in this district, something out of the ordinary, I think.

Editors Herald: A year has elapsed since I made use of your columns to convey to many brother inquirers news from my undertakings. Since then I have had a hard experience, for on my return journey to the mines I encountered a nasty fall which necessarily rendered my progress very slow and painful; but thank God, the many prayers of my brethren were at last answered; for I arrived at my destination with my outfit intact and my health quite restored. If sometimes during the trials and tribulations through which I have passed in my checkered career, my faith in the promptings of the good Spirit had weakened, I am now more than ever sure of the guiding presence of the omnipotent One; for the result of my last few months' labor has shown the predictions of his prophets to be true; and I can see now that in the near future my prayers are to be answered. I am convinced also, that the object I have ever in view will be accomplished, and that I shall be able to contribute in a very substantial way to the building of our Zion which will be handed down to our successors, and we pray will be a blessing to them, aiding them in their worship, love, and faith, until they too shall be gathered into his vineyard.

I can quote several instances in which my prayers have been answered in a most astonishing way; one in which my partner and myself had lost our way; every chance of ever recovering it seemed out of the question. Nothing but the trackless snow lay before us, and our trail was completely covered up behind. We could not make out neither hill nor bears and had it not been for our faith in the guidance of the Good Shepherd, we should have perished through hunger and exposure. But his presence, like the mariner's compass, ever pointing out to us the true course, ended in our safe arrival. I will not take up too much of your valuable space by describing my journeys too minutely, and the cold and hunger to which one is necessarily exposed in this northern region; but I feel that I should fall short of my duty to him in whom I place implicit faith, were I not to express the good and comfort which I receive by placing my trust in his guidance.

I will describe briefly one more instance of the marvelous answer to prayer. A serious accident happened to two of my dogs when on a long (mush) journey, they having got wet by breaking through the ice when the thermometer was registering fifty-five degrees below zero. Their feet began to swell, and there appeared to be nothing for it but the loss of both dogs, the consequences being so serious to me that my own safety depended upon saving at least one of them; after offering up earnest prayers, I ministered to the dogs, and in three days one had entirely recovered so that I could proceed on my journey, rejoicing in thankfulness to the Great Spirit for his merciful deliverance.

I have often met with brothers who, though living in comparatively well-populated cities, complain of their isolation and want of spiritual intercourse with other Saints. To them I would say, Cheer up, brothers; there are worse off than you; for I may tell you that for months at a time I have been without even the companionship of any human being; but I held on alone and obeyed the voice of the invisible One directing me not to give in; and thank God if I am alone in one sense, I have the presence of the Holy Spirit ever with me, guiding me into the right path, strengthening me in the time of weakness, and helping me over the pitfalls of temptation.

And now, Mr. Editor, in conclusion, I wish to thank you for the opportunity afforded by your columns of wishing my brethren every good wish; reminding them that though some must be miners, some ranchers, and some professional men, we all desire to contribute our utmost to the one great cause, the carrying out of the divine will of the Master.

Your brother in Christ,

Editors Herald: This morning I received a letter from Elder E. B. Morgan, stationed at Lucas, Iowa, in regard to my experience with cancer. He stated that he thought it would be a good thing for me to send you the original receipt for the cancer medicine I had used forty years, and with so much benefit to myself. For the benefit of my brethren and sisters who have not sufficient faith to be healed by administration, you might publish it. I find the receipt upon the label upon the original bottle, as written by Doctor King when I first bought it, as follows:

Sulphate of zinc two drachmas to four ounces of water. It is a four-ounces bottle. And now for a little instruction as to its use. I used to apply it if the cancer was young and small by placing my finger upon the mouth of the bottle, turn up the bottle so it wet my finger, lower the bottle and apply my finger to the cancer. This may be done two or three times during the day, and the cancer will soon die. But if neglected it soon begins to grow, and if it gets any size, the best plan is to use a fine and small camel's-hair brush, wet it by dipping it in the bottle, not too wet, then put it around the outer edge of the cancer a few times, then draw in as the cancer dies. It bites and pains terribly but may be borne if used as I direct. I have given the directions for its use as plainly as I can.

THE LOSS OF THE LUTIN.

The tragic fate of the French submarine boat, the Lutin, may serve as an inspiration for some modern romancer, and it may lead to further improvements in this style of vessels. It also recalls the fate of another French submarine that went down in the same way about a year ago.

And it brings to memory the fact that a submarine was built here and was experimented with here during the Civil War. A bright Southerner, one of the men who wore the gray, conceived the idea. The Northern blockade was ruining the South, Northern ironclads were working havoc among the Southern war-ships, and the Confederate officer dreamed that the submarine would destroy the Northern iron-clads and break the blockade. And others of the men in gray dreamed that dream and became enthusiastic over it. And a submarine was constructed in one of the Southern ship-yards. It was a very crude affair according to twentieth century ideas and methods, and yet the Monitor was a crude affair and the hated Manassas would be greeted with derision anywhere upon earth to-day. It was a crude affair, but there was a possibility that it might do the work that was expected of it, and the bravest of the brave men of the South pinned their faith to it.

It was a mere nut-shell and carried perhaps five or six men. The work was hampered by lack of the proper material to work with and by lack of the mechanic of the highest skill and experience. All sorts of makeshifts had to be devised. In a modern shop or yards the boat might have been so constructed that it would have answered the purpose, but under the circumstances the boat could be submerged, but it refused to again come to the surface. A volunteer mechanic of the highest skill and experience. All proper material to work with and by lack of the sorts of makeshifts had to be devised. In a modern venture. And the second crew died as did the first. and going to death as cheerfully as when the officers put a stop to the useless waste of lives. The cheered by the knowledge that their comrades and their officers were watching them, but cooped up in a small box beneath the sea, they were to struggle themselves. Fame and honor are played before the submarine boat.—Burlington

Madison.—Adolph Edward Madison, born December 17, 1871, at Aalborg, Denmark. He labored several years as a teacher, and in 1902 was ordained a priest, entering at once into the missionary field. Three years ago he was ordained an elder, and last April by direction of the General Conference, to the office of seventy. He was taken ill about the first of September but continued to labor until his end. Every effort of loving hearts and hands proved of no avail and he gradually declined until Sunday, November 11, when he fell peacefully asleep. Ten days before the end he became resigned to his fate, and cheerfully awaited the end. When asked if he had any word to leave to the people he said, "Yes! tell them that the gospel is true; I know that the gospel is true." He was married August 9, 1905, to Sr. Christina Christensen, of Nordby, Norway; left to mourn: also a little daughter June, two years old, father and mother, two sisters, and one brother, and many brethren of the ministry, and Saints and friends in many places. Funeral services at Hazel Dell church. Sermon by Charles Fry, assisted by Charles Beardsley. Interment at Frout Cemetery near Council Bluffs.

He retained his faith in the church, and a few days prior to his death smilingly told the writer [Elder J. W. Wight] that he had no fear of death, for "I have made my peace with God." Will a genial friend and generous to a fault. Failing a victim to a general plague," he has left to mourn, two sisters, and four brothers: Elder J. W. Wight baptized him and conducted the funeral before an immense crowd.

Keck.—Jesse M. Keck died at Joy, Illinois, September 8, 1906, from internal injuries received while erecting a building. Bro. Keck was born October 26, 1881. Keck was united in marriage to Luella Lutz, of Joy, who survives. Besides the members of his immediate family, he leaves father, mother, one brother, and one sister. Funeral services were at the Methodist Episcopal church, conducted by E. T. Bryant and Reverend E. S. Sutliff.

Was married at the age of seventeen to John K. German, who was also a member of the church, and who died twenty-one years ago, at New Salem, North Dakota. She leaves two sisters, two brothers, and one aged mother about eighty five years of age. She was baptized when about twelve years of age, and was 60 years and 8 months old at death. She has been a constant sufferer for over ten years.

Eugene Field won his undying fame through writing very tender and lovable children's verse. His "Little toy soldier" was a long time the language of childhood, and it is the memory of this poem which makes the appearance of an unpublished manuscript by Eugene Field a notable occasion. The Woman's Home Companion for December contains a two page poem by Eugene Field entitled "The old blue bear and the rabbit" written in the winter of 1884. It was secured from Mr. Frederick S. Field, son of the poet, who tells in the same number of the Woman's Home Companion why the poem was held twenty-two years before being published.

By INDEPENDENCE COAL MINING COMPANY

In order to develop and open up the new coal-mining interests near Independence, and also make necessary preparations for homes for mine-workers, it is necessary that sufficient capital be secured within a short time. The amount sought for is very small compared with the capital of other coal-mining interests and, for various reasons, the directors of this company desire to keep the working and controlling power within the church membership, if possible. The opening up of an undeveloped coal field at the edge of a densely populated community or even a population is a matter of considerable consideration, as the product is part of the necessities of life, with freight rates practically nil, making this enterprise an exceptional one.

Five hundred and sixty-nine acres have been leased for fifty years and one hundred and fifty-four purchased, making all seven hundred and twenty-three acres of coal-land in one body, on the line of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, two miles east of Independence.

The company already has coal-mines at Napoleon, Missouri, in operation and a successful and prosperous retail business, making this a bonafide, paying investment.

Money seeking investment can find no better place, and will be paid a high rate of interest. It will bring good returns to the investor and results that are much sought for, also benefiting the unemployed, scattered, pressed-down poor church members by placing them in a position to help themselves.

The 164 acres are intended for homes for mine-workers, to be sold at a reasonable price, and the company will co-operate with mine-workers to purchase stock, according to their ability.

The promoters of this company are not working for any selfish interests. There is no watered nor fictitious raised stock. The company is incorporated under the laws of the State of Missouri. Capital stock, $40,000.00; shares, $20.00 each; amount paid up $30,000. The capital stock must be increased to the amount needed. Parties sending money can do so by bank draft. Further particulars apply to R. MAY, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

EDITORIAL:

INDIVIDUAL LIBERTY AND ITS LIMITATIONS.

We must not ignore the line fences which separate between our rights and the rights of others—between our rights and the rights of God.

The case of Doctor Crapsey has attracted general notice in religious circles of late and raises in our minds the old question of individual liberty in ecclesiastical matters and in fact in others matters.

Doctor Crapsey has resigned his charge in Rochester, New York, and has withdrawn from the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church because he could no longer indorse the doctrines of the miraculous birth and the literal ascension of the Master. Under the circumstances his withdrawal seems the only honorable course.

Has a man the right to controvert the accepted teachings of his church?

To our mind he has not that right. Two honorable courses are open to him: he may refrain from teaching that which the church denies or denying what the church teaches, if he can consistently do so; or he may withdraw himself from it and then teach the truth, as he sees it, on his own responsibility or that of such other church as may see the matter as he sees it.

When a certain number of men band themselves together to teach certain doctrines, no one of them has a right to teach anything not believed by the organization and to do it in their name and as one of them. If he draws his living from the organization while doing so, he is obtaining money under false pretense: and, worse, he is obtaining moral support under false pretense.

One of the old continentals in "his ragged regimentals" might have decided that the cause of the loyalists was right and he might have severed his allegiance to the new Republic and have gone over to fight with the men of King George and still have been an honorable man; but if he still wore his uniform and kept his place in the ranks while giving "aid and comfort" to the enemy, he became a common traitor.

Judas Iscariot had the same opportunity to reject the claims of Christ and go out to join the world that others had who "followed no more after him"; but he chose to remain a supposed follower while not belonging as a follower. He still gave the kiss of a brother while his heart was the heart of an alien.

In fact when one man begins to fellowship with and cooperate with one or more other men in any way or in any work his own wishes cease to be the only factor in the matter, and in determining the extent of his liberties he must respect the rights of others the while he seeks to maintain his own.

It is apparent also that if there are limits to one's liberty in preaching or teaching as a member of some church or society, there are limits to his liberty as regards his conduct.

If a man choose to teach polygamy, we can not prevent it; but obviously we have the right to say that he shall not teach it as a member and representative of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. It is equally true that we have the right to say that as a member of the church a man shall not pursue certain lines of conduct. It would seem that the honorable thing for any man or woman who does not wish to conform to the teachings of the church regarding deportment would be to get out of the church. It is unjust that the preacher alone should be hedged about with restrictions.

In fact, in many lines of activity one will come to a period which indicates a full stop. Liberty ends right there and something begins which you may call license or anarchy or bondage as you choose.

Liberty in which there shall be no restrictions set upon thought or speech or act is a dream; and it is not desirable that it should become real.

Perfect liberty means the opportunity and power to do, think, and say anything which is right and the opportunity and power to refrain from doing, thinking, or saying anything which is wrong.

If we chafe under this restriction against wrong, we are not yet free, we are bound by evil impulses; and if we pass over the bounds of right with the idea that we wish to be absolutely unhampered, we come into the worst bondage of all, commented upon by the Master as follows:

Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. They answered him, We be Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man; how sayest thou, Ye shall be made free? Jesus answered them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whosoever committh sin is the servant of sin.—John 8:31-34.

We must not ignore the line fences which separate between our rights and the rights of others,—between our rights and the rights of God. Our interests may be mutual but many of our rights are individual. God himself respects the rights of others, and God of course enjoys the highest type of freedom.

The man is not free who is dominated by an evil impulse which leads him to trespass on the rights of others; and if he persists, some higher power will ultimately step in and restrain him by force. That is why we have hell and the county jail.

In every community certain rules are in force which are not the result of any one man's whim; they exist because of necessity.

An individual searching for the "land of the free" might come to the United States. He might congratulate himself that he had reached a land where no restrictions are imposed upon humanity.

His eyes have hardly turned from scrutinizing the statute of "Liberty enlightening the world" before the customs officials and the health officers are busy with him. If he does not then revise his ideas of personal liberty, the police, the tax-collector, the sheriff, the janitor, and the coroner will help him to make a few emendations.

If he is spared, he may in time learn to keep to the open road and turn to the right when meeting a fellow man.

We used to boast that a man might say what he pleased and he could be held to account for the results only; but one or two bloody tragedies have taught us that it is folly to hang the assassin and leave free the pen and unbridled the tongue that teach the assassin's code.

Anarchy claims so much liberty that it robs itself of the fruits of liberty, and extended through the universe would make every fixed star a wandering comet and every man an Ishmael.

God himself has set certain limits to liberty, if we may use that term for want of a better. In one particular he has said, through his servant, "Ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another. . . but if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another."—Galatians 5:13, 14.

Saints are called to liberty, but not to the liberty of the beasts who quarrel and devour.

God has imposed this condition and it devolves in a general way upon every man who has any charge of any department of God's work to see that that condition is respected, so far as he can. We all hate a despot and no good man aspires to be a "boss"; but the man who stands where God placed him and enforces God's law is not a despot. Of course, if he has not the gospel spirit and does not work in harmony with law we make no defense for him. He will fall.

God has been specific in giving this power of oversight to certain men in too many instances for detailed comment; but we note a few of his commissions:

Of the teachers he says that they are to "see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking" (Doctrine and Covenants 17:11), thus giving them the right to advise people as to certain restrictions which are placed upon the conduct, speech, and thought of a Christian. If these rules are ignored they may take such steps as shall insure an observance of them.

Of the elders God says, “It always has been given to the elders of my church, from the beginning, and ever shall be, to conduct all meetings as they are directed and guided by the Holy Spirit”; and under this warrant and with the knowledge that the “house of God is a house of order,” if one comes into any meeting and becomes abusive, disorderly, obscene, or quarrelsome, or occupies more than his just portion of time, those in charge may put a full stop to his further progress along the line of what he may conceive to be his liberty.

The Rules of Order and Debate affirm that it is the right of an officer presiding over a business-meeting to “restrain the members, when engaged in debate, within the rules of order, to enforce on all occasions the observance of order and decorum among the members,” and to secure “due respect and regard for the laws governing the church, as contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants; and prevent these books from being treated lightly, jestingly, or disrespectfully.”

Speech and conduct are to be regulated by law, especially in an assembly of God’s people; and certain men are appointed to see that these rules are observed.

Again, a minister sent out to preach the “perfect law of liberty” must not arrogate to himself the right to teach anything contrary, though to him it might seem right. For instance, if one should begin to preach the doctrine of polygamy the missionary in charge or other proper official would quickly arise to tell him what he must not teach the people, as was done in the case of Hiram Brown in 1844.

These lines are written with the desire which must actuate every true Latter Day Saint to induce a more strict observance of the laws of the church and to help the various members of the priesthood in their work of preserving order, harmony, and good fellowship. Speed the day when branch officers, missionaries, and others who are attempting in legal ways to bring order out of chaos in branches or in any department of church-work will not be regarded as intruding.

Now we are aware that the title of this editorial may be subject to improvement. It may not be exactly proper to refer to law as a limitation to liberty. The time may come when no one will regard it as a limitation, because one would hardly consider an enactment a restriction which merely said that he must not do something which he did not wish to do. But alas! we have not all reached the stage where we never wish to do anything which we ought not to do. What we mean by the term may be understood, and probably no one will wish to make us an offender for a word.

We are aware that the rights of society are greater than those of the individual; but what one loses as an individual he gains in society. For instance, while angry, one may resent the church rule which prevents him abusing another; but he gains this, that no other angry man may abuse him.

God grants the fullest possible individual liberty, yet has placed within the church means by which she may protect herself against those who, like Doctor Crapsey, might preach another gospel or like others might live another gospel “which is not another.”

The vital point in life is to find the straight, narrow, undeviating path which lies between the two extremes of undue license and illegal repression,—the “perfect law of liberty.”

ELBERT A. SMITH.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Dear Brother: On page 920, Conference Minutes, I read:

“We have not yet reached the period when we can carry into its fullest execution the requirement of ordaining high priests over districts and setting them there.”

Is it to be understood that when that period comes, the high priests who are chosen and set apart over districts as presidents are to be ordained as such: namely, presidents?

No, not necessarily. High priests are by virtue of their office presidents, and may be chosen to occupy when the necessity occurs, or is created. An ordination to preside over any specified district would confer no more authority than the simple ordination to the priesthood itself; the choosing of one already ordained to the office, and defining the district, would only designate the place the church required the work done. It might be well to set one apart to such district by consecration and blessing, but not for conferring additional authority.

The same brother asking the foregoing writes thus:

I heartily indorse your instructions on page 920, to give those called to offices a trial. I certainly believe that the time has long since come when the traveling and standing ministry should be placed in their proper field of labor; by so doing we would show respect and honor to Him whom we all claim to love and worship. He has said that if we love him we will keep his law, which is, “Let every man stand in his own office, and labor in his own calling.”—Doctrine and Covenants 82:21. For years some of the traveling ministry have labored in the office of the standing, when the standing have been sent to do the work of the former. Why not honor the law? Year after year we ignore it, and, I believe, greatly please the law-giver.

The following questions came from another source:

Is it an understood thing in the church that the only peace-makers there should be in a branch should be the teacher? Or should we all be peace-makers?

No, to first; Yes, to last question.

If we see a friend going wrong is it right to warn that friend and plead with him to quit the wrong, and tell him the things that are being justly said about him? Or should we instead go and lay a complaint before the officers and let them deal with him?
Yes, to first question.
If it is right to counsel and help our brethren, how far may we go without interfering with the teacher's office?
As far as the occasion warrants, without offending.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

At their last meeting the trustees of Graceland College christened the new dormitory "Marietta Hall" in honor of Sr. M. Walker, who has labored so long, so faithfully, and so successfully in many lines of church-work. She has given most generously of moral and financial aid to Graceland. May those who in future years sojourn in Marietta Hall keep the name as clean and honorable as it has ever been.

Des Moines papers chronicle the death of Anderson Martin of Pleasantville, Iowa, who passed away November 22. He was a man of some property, and various charitable institutions as well as needy individuals are remembered in his will, among them the Saints' Home of Lamoni, Iowa, which is to receive a legacy of three thousand dollars. He was not a member of the church. His life seemed to have been spent in doing good, and the papers make the ingenuous comment that he was "considered eccentric."

Bro. G. E. Harrington, president of the Independence Stake, writes of their revival meetings as follows: "It was encouraging to note the increase of attendance from the commencement; so we feel at liberty to report success. We believe when the Saints are made more acquainted with the work of patriarch, we shall see greater interest manifested."

Elder A. M. Chase reports splendid success in Escolante, Utah; crowded house and audience eager to hear. From one hundred to two hundred in attendance.

Bro. E. T. Atkinson, writing from old Far West, Missouri, says: "I think that the dedication-meetings have had a good effect upon the neighborhood here at old Far West. There were some at the dedication who never had been to our church before. So the Lord's work goes on."

Probably most of our readers have received the Autumn Leaves announcement for 1907. Some appear to have misunderstood it. One brother, or sister, (name not signed,) writes the office complaining that the "American eagle" is used on the first page as an emblem. The associate editor of the HERALD has it "straight" from the editor of Autumn Leaves that no offense to other nationalities was even dreamed of. The illustration typifies the whole land as a "land shadowing with wings," just as described in prophecy.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

Rosa Handfield entered the office of the Standard Oil Company November 28 and threatened that unless given one million dollars she would burn down the company's offices. She was given the required check, and later was arrested when she attempted to cash it. When arraigned in court she stated that she was a "saint of the sun, moon, and water," and that she came to the office intending to save Mr. Rockefeller's soul, and, in case he refused to be saved, to save him by "blood atonement."

An explosion of roburit in a factory at Annen, Germany, resulted in the death and injury of three hundred persons. Roburit is an explosive second in power to dynamite.

The annual report of the military secretary shows that in the year ending June 30, there were six thousand, two hundred and fifty-eight desertions in the United States army—about seven in every one hundred soldiers. This is a considerable increase in the past two years.

The dire predictions of the counsel for Enrico Caruso, the great tenor singer who was convicted and fined in New York City for insulting a woman in Central Park, seem not to have been fulfilled. So far from retiring with a blasted career, Caruso greeted a well-filled house at his first public appearance, and was given an ovation of cheers.

The negro problem is causing a feeling of foreboding in the country at large. Several things have happened of late to aggravate the situation and it is filled with grave possibilities of danger. Such fiery agitators of race hatred as Senator Tillman pour oil upon the water. Under police protection he delivered a speech in Chicago November 27 in which he declared "to hell" with the law which gives the negro a vote. He predicted "a race war which will begin with South Carolina, where the negroes already outnumber the whites by two hundred and thirty thousand."

"Young men and women, cling to the old family Bible." Civilization is founded on it, and civilization has a sure foundation. The old Bible is sacred with many a precious memory. Fathers have put it into the hands of their boys as they have sent them out into the storms of life. Mothers have put it into the hands of daughters, and it has taught them how to live true lives and die in holy places.—Selected.

News From Branches
SPOKANE, WASHINGTON.

We are pleased to note the innovation that in the HERALD columns space will be given for brief items from the respective branches. With increasing interest in our branch we hope to furnish you items of importance from time to time.

Like the St. Joseph Branch, for which we have great regard in consequence of our connection with it while in the "Far West," our goal is in sight or almost so—another struggle and we shall conquer. We have a beautiful church-building, thirty-six by eighty-two, all completed except seating. Church lot is seventy-five by one hundred and forty-two, situated on corner of East Third and Smith Streets, on Union Park car lines, one immediately on the south of church (front) and one a half-block to the east. Fifty dollars will cover the entire indebtedness on church and grounds, and it stands as a loyal, faithful monument to the efforts of the Saints of this city, and those adjacent thereto.

We number about one hundred and fifty enrolled, but as is always the case, a few do not and will not respond, and we fear will never stand on Zion's hill because of sacrifices made. "Verily they have their reward."

Audiences at church services are good, many outsiders attending; and from indications they feel at home.

We are adding from time to time by baptism, about twenty being added this conference year—also a few by letter.

T. W. CHATBURN.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Independence has had its share of good weather up to Thursday, when, early in the morning, it began to rain and has rained continuously forty-eight hours since. However, the rain did not dampen the ardor of eighty of the Saints, mostly young people, who met at the Stone Church at eight o'clock Thursday morning for a Thanksgiving prayer-service. An hour and three quarters was profitably spent in listening to six songs, six prayers, and twenty-five testimonies. Our aged Bro. Henry Kemp gave us much needed encouragement under the influence of the Spirit.

At eleven o'clock President Joseph Smith addressed a goodly number of the Saints on the theme of the day, prefacing his remarks by saying, "I appear before you as a man, and as a citizen of the State and nation." His remarks were fitting. What church and state both need is more of these real men.

A collection was taken up in the interest of the sanitarium at the close of the services, about one hundred and fifty dollars in cash being realized.

On the evening of Thursday an entertainment was given of a musical and literary character. Sr. Cordie Hulmes, who directed the chorus of fifty voices, and Bro. Ralph Smith and Paul Craig, are mainly responsible for its success. A collection amounting to thirty-five dollars was taken up, and will be used to supply the pews with church hymnals.

We learn that the stake Religio association will occupy the last three days of this year in special services at the church in the interest of institute work relative to the Religio and its work.

Friday night, ten o'clock, November 30, and it is still raining.

J. A. GARDNER.

WINNIFRED, IOWA.

Winnifred was one of the primary Sunday-school teachers. May they prosper in Zion.

There seems to be much sickness in the branch and in the city at large.

On Thanksgiving Day no services were held at the church; but the hour of three o'clock in the afternoon was set apart for the purpose of offering praise and prayer to the Lord, praise for the blessings daily received; prayer for the sick and afflicted, and for the upbuilding and progress of the church.

IRENE REED.

LAMONI, IOWA.

Brn. Heman C. Smith and J. W. Wight were the speakers at the church Sunday. These services were the concluding meetings of the special services which have been conducted by these brethren for the past two weeks. Good attendance has been maintained throughout, and the Saints have been edified and the latter-day work placed clearly before the hearers.

WHAT THE CLEVELAND BRANCH (OHIO) IS DOING.

The "gospel literature committee" of the Cleveland Branch is getting out a little illustrated four-page periodical tract under the title of The Grain of Mustard Seed. The October-November number which has reached us bears a picture of the local church, a card giving time of meetings, and some brief and pointed explanations of our faith.

The distribution of this little tract has already brought some new faces into the audience and the effort is to be followed up, as every effort must be to win success. A member of the committee writes the Editors as follows:

"The mission leaflet sent you, The Grain of Mustard Seed, is the outcome of our gospel literature committee’s effort to provide a concentrated exponent of the latter-day work.

"The chairman of this committee has for the past ten years catered to large advertisers and successful business men and has therefore a practical knowledge of the public pulse. We believe that ‘goods of merit commend themselves,’ and that thorough publicity, if we can get a fair presentation, must gain us converts; many read who can not listen! The Grain of Mustard Seed, then, caters to the class of people who have but a few moments to give for consideration of our claims. It caters to the modern educated taste for good printing and illustrations."

GETTING THE GOSPEL BEFORE THE PEOPLE.

"And it becometh every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor."—Doctrine and Covenants 88:22.

I sometimes wonder if members of the church realize that the responsibility of extending what we call the "latter-day work" devolves as much upon the laity as upon those actively engaged in the ministry.

Is it not a fact that we sometimes think that work should go on in other places, and that it is indeed making progress elsewhere, but "there can be nothing done here"?

How often I hear the expression, "I don’t think there is any use in trying to get the people to listen to the gospel in our community"; and this one: "There’s no use in trying here."

Have you ever thought, my brother, that perhaps your own indifference and carelessness is to a great extent responsible for the indifferent attitude of the people in your vicinity? In many places where Saints reside, I find that there is never a suitable time for meeting. Always "too busy now"; or, "if you could come a month or two later." And then, if you should happen to make the effort a month or two later, there are other excuses; "weather too bad now"; or, "not moonlight nights now."

Why is it that there is so often manifest among the Saints a disposition to constantly defer the making of an effort to reach the people in their localities until "some time later"? Do we realize how swiftly time is passing away, and that there are opportunities coming to us now that never come to us again?

Are we, as Saints, keeping our lights under bushels? How can we be the light of the world unless we are letting that light shine? How can you let it shine, my brother, when you shun making an effort to let your neighbors know what you believe, and why you believe it?

In the last few weeks I had arranged to work certain points, some of them where I knew there had been but little preaching done, and others not any. And though I had written to six different localities, there came from each place different excuses. Of course I suppose that each thought that conditions were better in other localities than in his own. And I really believe that had they known that all others were answering as discouragingly as themselves, they would have said, "Come along, and we will try." To an elder hundreds of miles from home and in a strange field, such responses were a little discouraging, though perhaps not so intended by those replying. What can an elder do, when he knows of not a single place in all his appointed field where he is wanted?

If we had been better acquainted with the field, we might have taken the initiative, and gone without an invitation. But as it was, we did something else, never having felt contented in idleness, whether enforced or otherwise.

Although the season for open-air meeting had passed, we braved the cold, frost, wind, and Oklahoma sand and went out on the streets of Woodward... and began work. Here, we did not have to ask any if they thought it was an opportune time, but went right to work, just as soon as the rain would permit. Taking my little organ, so kindly furnished by the Saints of Baldknob, Arkansas, and with what singing we could do, (with no Russell or Bailey to assist,) we soon gathered the people around us, as we have so often done before. The results were, a good hearing, good attention, questions asked, and requested to come to four different points in the country.

To one man who asked me to come to his vicinity and hold meetings I said, "Why, I hear it is a busy time in the country."

He replied, "Yes, but we'll get a crowd, anyhow."

People often stood with overcoats on and shivered with the cold, but they remained and listened, and many said, "That is just what we need."

Street-work is not pleasant—not always—but often it is the best we can do. And in this new country, where people come for long distances to railroads and county-seats, and remain over night, these railroad towns and county-seats are splendid places to hold street-meetings, and to get the work advertised all over the counties; and we have done considerable of that kind of work since our arrival in this field.

Of the one hundred and forty sermons preached since coming to this field, sixty sermons were preached on the streets; and twenty-four sermons in tents and open-air meetings in groves.

I am not writing thus to complain of my lot, but with a view to call the attention of the Saints to the necessity of their asking themselves these questions: "Are we doing our duty? Are we warning our neighbors? Am I really interested in the spread of this work? If so, why not be interested in its spread in my own neighborhood, and among my associates?"

I can not forbear mentioning a brother who was a model in this regard, when I was associated with him. I refer to the president of the Creola, Ohio, Branch. Though always busy with temporal affairs, being storekeeper, station-agent, and railway-operator, he was far too busy to find some place for an elder to preach. His decision always was, "Well, we'll try and see what can be done." How often he has said to the writer, when passing on the train, "Get off and preach for us a while." This was quite a stopping-place for elders passing to and fro, being near a junction point, and this brother was never so busy but that he was always ready for meetings. I may add that the brother was an able preacher himself. If this brother, whose whole time seemed to be taken up with business, could always be interested in pushing the work in his locality and surrounding country, why can not others, all others, be equally concerned?

Dear Saints, do not be discouraged, no matter where you live, or what your environs. Keep doing what you can. If there is no place to hold meetings now, perhaps you can furnish some of your neighbors with HeraldS or Ensigns to read: you can, at small outlay, equip yourself with tracts on different topics of the gospel, which you can judiciously and cautiously hand out to those who will read them. Are there no meetings of your own faith where you reside? Then attend other meetings, and especially Sunday-schools. When asked about your faith, you have opportunity to give a "reason for your hope," and to tender reading-matter. If you will do this, and by all means see to it that you live lives truly reflecting the light of this glorious gospel, the way will surely open so that the gospel can be taught in your vicinity. And when that time comes, and there are those who accept the gospel, they will bless you for your influence in leading them to the light, and you yourself can rejoice in having done your duty in letting your light shine. But if, after the word is preached, no one should accept it, you should not be discouraged, you will have warned your neighbor, and can rejoice in the assurance of having done your duty. If no one should accept at first, do not be too ready to give up. As long as circumstances make it necessary for you to live in that locality, keep up the effort; not by harrassing your neighbors with your views constantly, but by kindness to all, consideration for their views and feelings, and meekly occupying the opportunities afforded.

There is no higher object that Saints can have in view, aside from their own souls' salvation, than to labor for the spread of this everlasting gospel. "Awake, Saints, awake." H. E. Moler. Woodward, Oklahoma.

A VOICE FROM THE PAST.

SOME EVIDENCES SUPPORTING THE CLAIMS OF THE REORGANIZATION.

(Compiled and arranged by Elder Joseph Luff.)

For years we have believed that a patient delving into the things of the past would bring to light evidences which would be contradictory to some of the ungodly wise who are at enmity with the Reorganized Church. For instance, it has been repeatedly stated by the elders of the Mormon church in Utah, that the idea of "Little Joseph" succeeding his father was a fragment of history of which nothing was known until the "Garleyites" manufactured it for the use of the propaganda of the Reorganized Church. In his late trip to the East, Bro. Joseph Luff came across some issues of The Prophet, a paper published in the interest of the Mormon church under President Brigham Young, in 1845, by Elder Samuel Brannan, and edited by Elder Parley P. Pratt. Bro. Luff secured from these copies of The Prophet the following, which will be "mighty interesting" reading to those of us who are acquainted with the many subterfuges and falsehoods by which that institution known as the polygamic church has belittled and made light of the contention of the Reorganized Church.

If the claims of "Little Joseph" were agitated by Elder George J. Adams, who was a member of the church and in good standing at the death of Joseph the Prophet, it does not matter whether President Young had him severed from the church afterwards, it is absolutely indisputable that Samuel Brannan, publisher, and Parley P. Pratt, one of the apostles and editor of the Prophet-Messenger, knew of that claim being made at the time; and these extracts are like the testimony of Abel, though Brannan and Pratt are dead, yet they speak as from the ground.

As a fitting introduction of these extracts we give an excerpt from Bro. Luff’s letter accompanying them to us.—EDITORS.

New York: Having had occasion to make a stay in this city and before entering upon the work that now engages my time, having had a “spare” day, and acting upon a suggestion from Elder W. W. Smith when I saw him in Philadelphia, I visited the Lennox Library, where I found a file of old “Mormon” publications, which proved somewhat interesting.

As you are aware, Elder Samuel Brannan published a paper, called The Prophet, in this city in 1845, which, toward the close of that year, was succeeded by The Messenger, of both of which papers Elder Parley P. Pratt was editor.

Thinking it would possibly be interesting to you and the HERALD readers, I copied verbatim the following excerpts from two articles—one signed "B," evidently meaning Brannan—the other being a regular editorial by P. P. Pratt. I also copied entire the editorial, “Apostates’ last hobby.”

The spelling and punctuation are exactly as they appear in those papers. I mention this, so that you will know why some words are spelled as they are herein, such as eminated.

These excerpts will show clearly that the rights of “Young Joseph” were recognized though not honored as early as 1845, and that, if spiritual wifery and plurality of wives, which Utah celebrities now claim were known and in vogue in “Joseph’s day,” were really in existence, these leaders and representatives were conspirators in lying and deceit. If in 1845 the practices and doctrines were not “known, held, or practiced,” there is a busy liar’s nest in Utah to-day, and has been for years. If the truth is being told about it in Utah to-day, then they were horrid liars in 1845.—Joseph Luff.

From New York Messenger, (successor to Prophet,) Saturday, September 20, 1845, S. Brannan, publisher; P. P. Pratt, editor:

“APOSTATES’ LAST HOBBY.

“G. J. Adams wanted to be a ruler or great one in the Church of God, but not having merit or virtue of his own sufficient to insure him the object of his wishes, he became very officious in behalf of the son of our late prophet and martyr. Why did Adams espouse the cause of little Joseph so warmly? Was it because he was really friendly to the lad and his mother? Did he attempt to force into public notice a boy at that tender age to be exposed to an enemy’s dagger? Or did he wish to make that tender youth his hobby to ride into power after being legally excommunicated from the Church? The latter no doubt was his object. But his bubble burst so soon as it began to swell.

“Now let all the Saints know throughout the country, that if any man comes advocating any such notions upon his own responsibility, independent of the united councils of the church, he is corrupt at heart, seeking to divide that he may devour. He is willing to jeopardize the life of an innocent lad, and sacrifice the union of the whole church upon the altar of a vain and extravagant ambition, with an ungodly thirst for power that never can be quenched. Little Joseph is not the secret spring that incites to action, but my own dear self wants the power; and I must make him my cat’s paw to get it, for I have not influence enough to obtain it upon my own merit. But he that cannot obtain upon his own merit is unworthy to have, and incompetent to judiciously apply.

“The church understands what she is about—She knows when to speak and when to be silent and if every member would be silent until she authorizes him to speak upon these subjects, he would not disgrace himself nor dishonor the body to which he belongs. If any move shall ever be made in regard to the lad, it will be at a proper time when he who holds the keys of the Presidency shall be moved by the spirit of God to make the proposition. Should that time ever arrive, the proposition will be carried by the universal acclamation of God’s people, and what they bind on earth, in this way, will be bound in heaven. Thus, you see, if he come into power at all, he will come boldly in at the front door, and not like some miserable vagabond creep in by the cellar kitchen. Every Saint however will be silent upon this subject until the whole church speak. If any speak before that time upon these matters, and try to urge a premature action, he cannot be a Saint. Be still then and see the salvation of our God.”

“But if Elder Adams (that was) comes east to proclaim Young Joseph, the head of of the church how will he reconcile the loud and long testimony in this city, Boston, and other places during his eastern mission last season. That the twelve were the head of the church, ‘and in the name of the Lord I call on God to witness my testimony.’ We do not believe there is one individual in the whole church that would lift a hand to deprive one member of that martyred family, of their rights and privileges. And why this desperate move by Mr. Adams?

Excerpt from The Prophet, Saturday morning, May 24, 1845, Brannan, publisher; P. P. Pratt, editor. Editorial:

“And should it fall to my lot to be absent from the eastern presidency for a season, I wish to caution the churches and their presiding elders, and officers, and to give them my strict charge on some particular points, viz.:

"Beware of all influences calculated to draw your minds away from the gathering to the West, the building of the Temple and city of our Lord, and the endowment promised therein, for herein are the Keys for the fulness of the priesthood ordained, for the salvation and exaltation of the living and the dead; and for the dispensation of power to Israel, and thus restoring their tribes and remnants.

"Whatsover spirit, prophet, seer, angel, devil, or man, undertakes to divert your minds for one moment from these important interests, the same is under the name of the Pittsburg seer and his followers under the same title.

"It is but another name for whoredom, wicked and unlawful connection, and every kind of confusion, corruption and abomination.

"Should any elder or member, come unto you professing to hold to any such doctrine or practice, either secretly or publicly, you may be sure he is not of God; and it becomes your duty to reject him, and report him to the presidency of the church, or to some tribunal of the church where he is responsible for his doctrine and conduct. If this is done and testimony adduced he will be immediately disfellowshipped and expelled from the church.

"For know assuredly that no one has been authorized to teach, practice, or introduce any such doctrine in any of the branches of the church. Nor is there any such doctrine known, held, or practiced as a principle of the Latter Day Saints.

"If a man has a wife according to the law of God and the regulations of the church, she is his REAL wife, body, soul, spirit, heart, and hand, and not his 'SPIRITUAL' Wife; she is bound to love, honor, obey him as her lord, head, and ruler, and to devote all her energies to the mutual welfare of her husband, herself and family. In short to use the language of Paul, she should, if possible, bear children; guide the house, and give none occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully! On the other hand the husband of a woman is bound to be her REAL husband; to provide for his wife and children, and to be their head and father, and bring them up in the fear, and love, and truth of God, as did Abraham, Isaac and Jacob of old.

"As to sealings, and covenants, to secure the union of parents, children and companions in the world to come, or in the resurrection; it is a true doctrine, and as holy and pure as the throne of God, having emanated from his own bosom. Its laws are strict, and it admits of no confusion, unlawful connection, or unvirtuous liberties."

This is followed by a statement as to its exalting qualities and the fact of its being lawful only in connection with the building of the temple, the gathering, and the endowment. Then occurs the following:

"These holy and sacred ordinances have nothing to do with whoredoms, unlawful connections, confusion or crime; but the very reverse. They have laws, limits, and bounds of the strictest kind, and none but the pure in heart, the strictly virtuous, or those who repent and become such, are worthy to partake of them. And an awful curse—a dreadful weight of condemnation await those who pervert or abuse them.

"'THE SPIRITUAL WIFE DOCTRINE,' of J. C. Bennet and numerous other apostates is as foreign from the real principles of the church as the devil is from God, or as sectarianism is from Christianity.

"Beware then all ye Saints, and ye watchman of Zion: follow no such men; but follow the principles and examples set before you by such men as Elders Benson, Brown, and others of like Spirit, which have been sent among you. And I believe I can with propriety say, follow me, and my precepts and example, for I have in all things taught you the true principles of Godliness and salvation, wherever I have associated with you.

"In so doing you will be blessed, gathered, anointed, ordained, sealed, sanctified, and saved in the celestial Kingdom of our God.

"P. P. PRATT."

THE ANGEL'S MESSAGE.

SERMON BY ALEXANDER H. SMITH, AT NAUVOO, ILLINOIS, JULY 29, 1866.

(Reported by Annie Allen.)

It has been a very difficult thing for me this morning to make selection of a subject that would be most appropriate on the present occasion. One of the remarks of the speaker of last evening, perhaps, will be the leading influence for making the selection for what I might speak upon. Of course, when I made the remark to one of my brethren, "What shall I speak upon to-day," the answer was, "Why, speak upon the gospel."

As I cast my eyes above me, and find inscribed the words, "Preach the Word," the difficulty that exists at the present time in the religious world is to define what the Word is that is to be received and accepted as being essential to the salvation of the human family. Of course, the preaching of the gospel is the duty of all preachers, but if we examine history carefully, we discover that there has been such a difference of opinion as to what the gospel is, that there has been created a great deal of confusion.

Last night our brother quoted from the fourteenth chapter of Revelation, "And I saw another angel flying in the midst of heaven." This angel's message is what we of this latter-day work are endeavor-
I have been told we cannot accept the testimony of the Bible. We quote a better book. What is that book? The book of nature. And if it should be that the book of nature is a better book than the Bible and its testimonies are more to be depended on, I want to ask the individual to give me the chapter and verse in the book of nature that reveals God, that reveals the law of God, that even reveals the name of the Deity anywhere in nature. I do not care where you go, how deep you may delve in the earth, you can not find the name of the Deity; you cannot find the nature of his law respecting the human family, and what will be the ultimate, or whether there will be a life beyond the present one, or whether you will be permitted to partake of that life or not. Nowhere in the book of nature is that found. We may look for information in the earth, go down as far as man has been able to go in the earth, seeking to uncover the mysteries of the earth, its age, etc., and every foot of the distance you will discover testimonies that there has been a creator; there has been a mind at work that is so far superior to the mind of man that there is no comparison. You are no more ready to determine who that creator was, when you have gone as far as man can go, than you were when you threw the first shovelful of dirt.

Of course, when you read of the character of the Creator, he is superior and grander than man in every respect. You wander on the face of the earth, in the forest, you ask the old trees who planted them, who ordained the law that caused them to grow; and they are silent. Talk to the rocks upon the mountain tops, as you go up through the clouds, and pass beyond the clouds into the light of the everlasting sun, and ask the old rocks up there who created them, and they are silent; they can not tell you any more than the little drops of rain that fall from the clouds. They can tell you no more than these drops of rain can tell you, who ordained the law that caused the water to rise in vapors forming in the clouds, and dropping in rain. Do you seek to go farther, to enter the north where nature has been at work causing the waters to rear themselves as rocks into mountains seemingly to defy the strength of man, and seeming to say, Thus far shalt thou go and no farther? Ask these ice rocks, these ice mountains, seas, ice fields, who ordained the law that created them. They can not answer. Ask the aurora borealis in the north of the wonderful power that brought into existence that result you see in the beautiful lights as they radiate, and whose was the mind that created them. None of them can tell you.

These few instances to which I have called your attention for information, that are found in the book of nature, are grand and beautiful, but they are all silent so far as the information they give relative to a knowledge of Him who created them.

Let me say to you that we are teaching the testimony of men who have lived previous to us, who have taught men the ways of salvation and the history of God and God's dealings with the children of men. It is simply useless for us, it is a waste of time for us to make the effort to pursue in ourselves that which we know no more about than those who have lived before us, who were touched upon by higher influences. It has been wisely said "that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe."

Well, it is foolishness to some, but to us it is the wisdom of God. We feel encouraged when we realize this, when we realize the stupendous efforts that have been made. We look over past history for nineteen or twenty centuries, and what has been the result. Where can we read the result of the efforts that have been made by the preacher? Confusion, and a multitude of churches! It may seem that there has been a failure, and yet it presents to us one of the grandest themes that exist in all the universe of God, that which has been claimed to have been the revelation of God through Jesus Christ, and the revelations of God through those who have lived previous to his coming as a man among men.

The principles of truth which he declared have been preserved through all the changes that have taken place in the world's history, the rise and growth of nations, the decline and decay of nations, and still there remains to us the testimony of the inspiration of Almighty God as he moved upon those men as a witness of God's love to the human family.

Now, "I saw another angel," we present to you as the thought. Is it inconsistent to believe that angels will come and visit the human family now? We have been taught to believe that this statement made in the revelations of the Lord was the inspiration of God to John, that Jesus Christ presented to John what John saw; and it is no strain to our faith to believe that John saw an angel. The words, "another angel," carry with them the conviction that he had seen another angel or angels before, and it is very easy for us to believe that John saw a multitude of angels, because we have been so educated to believe.

Now, I am going to call your attention to the thought that you base your belief in the thought of John seeing angels upon your education. There is no other witness, so far as I have ever been aware of, that announces and testifies that John saw these angels. But he said he saw them when he wrote down that history which has been and is accepted.

Now is it an easy thing for us to believe that angels will appear to us to-day? I want to ask the question. You will readily see that it is a hard matter for many to accept the thought that angels will visit us now, and yet after the exhortation of one of the inspired writers, "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers; for thereby some have entertained angels unawares," it ought not to be hard. This reveals the thought that angels might appear and yet not be understood and known as angels; but they may mix among the affairs of men; they may visit men and women at times and yet not be understood as angels. "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers; for thereby some have entertained angels unawares." Where was the good of giving this exhortation, where is the benefit of this teaching, unless the truth remains that angels will visit, that angels will come?

Of this lady, to whom I called your attention, who said she could accept the most of what I said if I would leave that out, I asked the question, "Did you ever think the whole basic structure of Christianity rests upon the office work of angels? Do you disclaim that truth?" What is the testimony of the Bible?

In the book of Genesis, seventeenth chapter, the statement is made that the Lord appeared unto Abraham. That is not a very strange thing that the Lord should appear unto him, and yet there are those who have made strenuous efforts to show that it is an impossibility for the Lord to appear, for man to see him face to face, and yet it is stated that it is possible for man to so live that he may be worthy to communicate with God, that it is possible for him to place himself in such a condition of purity and humility before God, that he may stand and converse with God. Moses did it.

The Lord appeared unto Abraham and commanded him to walk uprightly before him and be perfect. That is one of the first commandments we find in the Old Testament relative to man keeping in harmony with the law of God. In the next chapter, we discover this man (whom God visited and changed his name) sitting in front of his tent and three men approaching him. When he looked upon them he arose and ran out to meet them. I have wondered sometimes why he ran out to meet them, and how he could recognize them, and if I had not read the preceding chapter, where the Lord appeared and talked to him, I would still have been in the dark relative to how he recognized these three men. He had seen at least one of them before.

Now he says here, You stop with me, and I will go out and get a calf, and we will have a feast. I will have some water to wash your feet; do not go away. And the record says they stayed with him. In their conversation (evidently while he was going about) they said, Shall we conceal our mission from him, seeing that he is a worthy man, shall we withhold our mission from him? And when the old man returned, they relate the fact that they were going down to Sodom and Gomorrah, for it had come up before the Lord that these two cities were very wicked cities, and they were going down there to see if it was so; and if these citizens were as wicked as they were represented to be, they would destroy them.

What is the nature of the circumstance? There are the cities God was going to destroy right on the start, and here come those messengers, angels, from the courts of glory, to commune with this man about what was to be done.

God works like himself. In the prophecy of Malachi it is stated, "I am God, I change not." Think of that statement; think what it means to be God, the ruler of the universe, to be the ruler of the destinies of the world, and it may be worlds without end. As we look into the starry heavens and realize their existence to be from God, we realize that that God on whom we should fix our affections must be a God that is unchangeable. "I am God and I change not." Just the moment we permit the idea to enter our minds that God is changeable, we have no dependence on him. He must remain the same to-morrow that he is to-day. We can not for one moment accept the thought that God is changeable. If he changes not and his ways are one eternal round, if that was his way of dealing in the early history of the world, when he came to the old patriarch as he sat in the cool of the day before his tent, it will be his way of dealing in the last hour at the end of time. He will reveal himself and his purposes to those whom he shall recognize as his servants. One of the prophets has said, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants, the prophets." If that is the case and there are no prophets, God is not doing anything. That is what a good many people would like to believe the case to be.

Let us follow the thought again. In the nineteenth chapter of Genesis, there is a statement found that two angels came to the city of Sodom, they went into the city, and told Lot to get his household together and go out from the city.

Later on, we find the Israelites in the land of Egypt in bondage, in distress, and God saw fit to move to their salvation temporally. What did he do? He did not send an army of soldiers to call all the Egyptians off. What did he do? Moses became a leader of the children of Israel. He was an impulsive man, a lover of right and fair play, or he would not have killed the Egyptian. He was a leader by lineage. He was on the mountain when he saw a bush burning. It must have been a wonderful sight to see a bush all on fire and yet not consuming away and dropping in ashes. Moses said, I will turn aside and see what this thing is. As he approached the bush, the voice of God came to him, saying, "Moses, put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the ground whereon thou standest is holy ground." There is a conversation between the Lord and Moses, the "angel" of the Lord appearing unto Moses in the bush. And Moses was called of God. What is the occasion? There is a chosen people of God, with whom God made a covenant to give all the land of Canaan, to be a possession. They were in a condition of servitude, and the occasion was to free them, and the angel appeared to Moses.

Here is the angel come to destroy the wicked in the one instance; and here is the angel come to save the righteous in the other instance.

Again, the children of Israel have wandered in the wilderness. Moses has passed away. They have come in sight of the promised land, the land of Canaan. There is a wall set before them. In the walled city there are armies of men to resist their entrance. Joshua has become the commander of the children of Israel. Now, as he is walking out he sees a man standing over against the entrance. Joshua asks the man, "Art thou for us or against us." The man has a sword in his hand. There is Joshua, the leader of the children of Israel, desirous of capturing and taking possession of the city. The man answers, "I have come as the captain of the hosts of heaven."

We have been led to consider that the captain of the hosts of heaven might be recognized as the Lord or as Michael. In this instance we may recognize that it is the angel of the Lord. I do not wonder that Joshua took courage, and how this heart must have thrilled as he conversed with the captain of the hosts of heaven.

What was the occasion? The deliverance of Israel, or enabling Israel to overcome their enemies and take possession of the land. The Lord was working for Israel. He threw down the walls of Jericho, or he informed Joshua what to do to cause them to fall down, and they fell down. Do you not wish the angel would come now and tell us how to capture some of these modern Gomorrahs and Jerichos? I think I would blow a ram's-horn if I thought I could convert one.

Israel got into trouble all along the history. I have not time this morning to quote all those instances when Israel got into trouble and the Lord sent an angel to get them out. I will call your attention to some of them, anyway. Israel wanted a leader for his armies and the Lord appeared to Gideon. Gideon was a mighty man in Israel. The angel appeared and told him what to do. He was a mighty man, a general in Israel, to help fight the nation's battles for Israel, so that Israel would be successful and overcome their enemies. Angels work.

Again Israel got into trouble, and the Moabites threatened them. The Moabites, realizing there was some virtue in the prophets, sent for Baalam to come and curse Israel, so the Moabites could arise and sweep Israel from before them. Well, the old prophet inquired of the Lord, and the Lord told him not to go, but the king was so persistent, and kept persuading, that Balaam was rather inclined to go, and the second petition he put up, the Lord told him he could go but he must not curse Israel. I touch upon this revelation, because in touching upon it, there is a thought that comes to me. In the latter days a prophet was commanded not to do a thing, and because it was done very serious loss resulted. I will call your attention to the history of that loss. A part of the Book of Mormon was translated and was given into the hands of a man who was a professed friend, and that history was lost. The Prophet inquired of the Lord whether he should let the manuscript go into the hands of this friend; the Lord told him, No; but the friend persuaded. The prophet asked again, and he said, Let it go, and it was lost.

Baalam went out ostensibly for the service of the king, but instead of cursing them he blessed them. But he got into difficulty before he went, because as he was riding along, the animal that had been faithful to him refused to go, he urged him, but he would not go. Still the old prophet urged him, and the animal crushed his foot against a wall, and then the old prophet became a little impatient, and began to beat him. The animal asked him why he was beating him. It does not seem from the record that it was a strange thing that that animal should talk. And then the prophet’s eyes were opened, and he saw standing before him the angel of the Lord, with his sword. It shows how wise some men may be; and also how foolish they may be. His ass would not go on because the angel was in the way.

Here again, what was the object? The preservation of Israel. The angel was sent to instruct the prophet what to do, and the prophet gave the king of Moab a lesson with that which he did, whatsoever God commanded him to say, that he said.

There are a multitude of such instances in the Old Testament, and if God worked along that line in the early history of his own work among men, to convince them that he is God, will he not work in the same way in the latter-day? Read the history of the life of Christ as found in the New Testament. Right in the beginning we are confronted with the issue that the angel of God is made prominent in the performance of the work. Mary, the beautiful mother of Jesus, in her virginity, was warned that she was a chosen vessel of the Lord in his work, so it would not come upon her in such a way that she would feel humbled and disgraced. God was very tender of her feelings. He sent an angel to the old prophet, Zacharias. And on the night of the birth of our Lord and Savior, we are told, the angels appeared to the shepherds upon the mountains bringing the glad message, “Peace on earth, good will to men.” They brought the message also. This night the Savior of Israel is born. And the angel told the shepherds where to go to find the babe.

Read the testimony of Luke, and you will discover right at the outstart of the life of Christ, the angel was sent with his ministers from the courts of heaven with this instruction relative to the events that had transpired.

Is it inconsistent, with this record before us, for us to believe that God in the latter days will send his angels to help us establish the kingdom of God in the earth, for the Son of God; that when he comes to reign as King of kings and Lord of lords he will find his people prepared to occupy with him and labor in the conversion of the world to that condition of perfection it shall be in when Jesus, the Son of God, shall be able to give the church and his kingdom to his Father without spot or wrinkle or any thing of that kind? To me it is not a strange thing; perhaps it is because I belong to that peculiar family that have been blessed sometimes with vision.

I remember upon one occasion I was troubled over the latter-day work, and the final gathering together of the people of God, and the building up of the city of Zion. I could not think of a city without houses, without buildings. Did you ever notice that God in revealing the beautiful city as recorded by St. John, does not say anything about the houses? He says something about the streets, about the walls, the tree of life, the river of life as being within the city, but he does not say much about the dwellings. Did you ever couple with that the sayings of the Savior, “I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also”? “In my Father’s house are many mansions”? What is the Father’s house but the city of God?

“In my Father’s house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you.” I once was permitted to see the building of a city. I saw the city laid out in beautiful squares. I saw men working, mixing mortar, laying brick, putting the framework in the houses. I saw men bringing the material from a distance, and some angels were at work side by side with the men. These angels and these men worked together in laying the foundations, in building the superstructure, in finishing the houses. I saw the city grow into an enormous city, and people going to and fro in that city. I saw it all in vision.

I believe that if the servants of God will be faithful, the time will come when the angels of God will go forth with the servants of God, the men holding the priesthood of God. They will carry the gospel and preach it to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people upon the whole earth, and men will understand each other better by reason of the work of angels.

Is it too much to believe? It is what the scriptures teach, and if we understand the scripture, is not that strong evidence that we must accept the truth? That is the fulfillment of the love of God to the whole human family. May God bless you. Amen.
FEAR THE LORD.

David.—Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord, that delighteth greatly in his commandments.
O fear the Lord, ye his Saints.
The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring for ever.
Behold, the eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy.
Peter.—Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling.
Serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear.
Peter.—In every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him.
Jesus.—Fear God.
Solomon.—A wise man feareth, and departeth from evil.
Wise man.—Fear the Lord with all thy soul, and reverence his priests.
Love him that made thee with all thy strength, and forsake not his ministers.
They that fear the Lord are a sure seed, and they that love him an honorable plant.
Great men, and judges, and potentates, shall be honored, yet is there none of them greater than they that fear the Lord.
They that remain shall know that there is nothing better than the fear of the Lord, and there is nothing sweeter than to take heed to the commandments of the Lord.
The fear of God is the glory of old age.
There shall no evil happen unto him that feareth the Lord.
Malachi.—They that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels.
Solomon.—The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom.
This fear is a filial fear. We do not fear God because of dread of punishment, but because we understand his greatness; that he is infinite in all the attributes that constitute him God; and our heart is touched with his love.
We see in a child implicit confidence in its parents. This confidence continues until there is revealed to the child faults or imperfections in the parents, or its mind becomes poisoned through misrepresentation.
So our fear towards God is governed by the manner in which we are educated. As long as our conception of God's greatness is in harmony with the gospel of Jesus Christ, which reveals God to us, we will fear him with a true fear, or we will "worship him in spirit and in truth."
The conception of God in the mind of the heathen is varied indeed. Misrepresentation or superstition governs him. A false Christianity is as misleading. To teach that hell is never ending; and that the wrath of God for all ages to come is poured out upon all that are not predestinated to salvation, throwing thieves, liars, drunkards, murderers, hypocrites, and good, honorable people that are not church-members because all they see is confusion, into one box, into this awful hell, and little children too if they happen not to be sprinkled, does not inspire men to fear God because they love him, "but their fear towards him is taught by the precepts of men." Their understanding will consequently be narrow; their ideal will be low, hence their spiritual development very meager.

To advocate that God is changeable; that the plan of salvation needs patching from time to time to suit the times, does not establish true confidence, does not give a correct conception of God—that he is a perfect being. We learn that "the foundation of God standeth sure." The foundation of God is his immutability, hence the clearer that is understood the higher our ideal.
People may be wise in the things of this world. They may have dug deep and may be very learned, but unless they apply their learning in the right way, to find out God, acknowledge him as the source of all intelligence, in the language of the prophet, "The wisdom of their wise men shall perish." "The understanding of the prudent shall come to naught." Hence, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom."

But to have a proper conception of God, to fear him, we must be properly taught. There is then a great necessity for God-sent preachers, men who will expound the gospel in the proper way, that the true fear of God may be the result. Jesus said, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate, for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able."

The children of Israel, while under the Mosaic law, feared God because of a physical fear, more than of love. Penalty stared them in the face, and impelled them to obedience; but that kind of fear is a dishonest fear. A man that resists doing wrong because he fears punishment, or because of shame that may follow if detected, or a loss to him from a financial standpoint, is a dishonest man. He is not to be trusted. But he that resists wrong because he will not thus sell his integrity, because he loves a clean character better than wrong-doing, and in whose mind is uppermost the consciousness that the eye of the Lord is ten thousand times brighter than the sun and looks upon the heart, that man has the true fear. Like when the tempter, the fair mistress in Egypt, stood before Joseph, his eyes flashed heavenward and he said, "How then can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?" Love is the moving power in the fear of God. That love comes to us as God's greatness is revealed to us. If Satan does not put in his work to mislead and corrupt, we will expand in wisdom, in knowledge, in love, our desire for right-doing will grow stronger, strong in the fear of God like Joseph's, and we will be favored and blessed.

THE COST OF SOUL-SAVING.

DENVER, November 24.—"This is the toughest town for gaining converts I ever worked in my life," declares Parson Tom Uzzell, of the People's Tabernacle, "and, as a whole, the clergy of the city agree with me."

In Atlanta, Georgia, it costs $62.50 for every soul saved, and Atlanta is a good-sized city.

The figures are compiled by Edward Clarke Young, after long and careful study. He places Denver fourth on the list. Indianapolis is the most expensive city in the United States for soul-saving. There it costs $620 for each soul saved. It costs $450 in Boston and $545 in New York. New Orleans is low on the list with $78, and in Louisville the cost is but $55.

The figures are really startling. The cost is increasing every year, according to Mr. Young, and the laborers are decreasing. He declares there is less individual effort in the churches of the cities, and that unless a change comes speedily they soon will be facing a problem difficult of solution.

The cost of saving souls is much smaller in the country districts than in the city. The average per capita in the rural districts is about $19.—New York Journal, November 25, 1906.

PEARY'S FINAL DASH FOR THE POLE.

It was evident that I could not longer count in the slightest degree upon the supporting parties, and that whatever was to be done must be done by a dash, with the outcome hanging entirely upon the weather and condition of the ice.

At Storm Camp we abandoned everything not absolutely necessary and bent every energy to setting a record pace. In the legacy of retrievable damage which the storm had left us was one small codicil—such snow as the wind had not torn from the face of the floes was beaten and banked hard and the snow which had fallen had been hammered into the areas of rough ice and the shattered edges of the big floes so that they gave us little trouble. North of Storm Camp we had no occasion for snowshoes or pickaxes.

The first march of ten hours in the lead, with the compass, sometimes on a dog trot, the sledge following in Indian file with drivers running beside or behind, placed us thirty miles to the good; my Eskimos said forty. Four hours out on the second march I overtook Mr. Henson in this third camp, beside a lead which was closed. When I arrived he hitched up and followed behind my hurry party. I had with me now seven men and six teams, with less than half loads for each.

As we advanced the character of the ice improved, the floes becoming much larger and rafters infrequent, but the cracks and narrow leads increased and were nearly all active. These cracks were uniformly at right angles to our course, and the ice on the northern side was moving more rapidly eastward than that on the southern.

As dogs gave out, unable to keep the pace, they were fed to the others. April 20 we came into a region of open leads leading nearly north and south, and the ice motion became more pronounced. Hurrying on between these a forced march was made. Then we slept a few hours, and, starting again soon after midnight, pushed on till noon of the 21st.

My observation then gave 87 degrees 6 minutes.

I thanked God with as good a grace as possible for what I had been able to accomplish, though it was but an empty bauble compared with the splendid jewel for which I was straining my life. But, looking at my remaining dogs and the nearly empty sledges, and bearing in mind the moving ice and the unknown quantity of the big lead between us and the nearest land, I felt that I had cut the margin as narrow as could be reasonably expected.

My flags were put out from the summit of the highest pinnacle near us, and a hundred feet or so beyond that I left a bottle containing a brief record and a piece of the flag which six years before I had carried around the northern end of Greenland.

Then we started to return to our last igloo, making no camp here.—New York Herald, November 21, 1906.

PITTSBURG'S CARNIVAL OF CRIME.

An epidemic of crime in Pittsburg, proclaimed in frantic scareheads by the newspapers of that city and further witnessed to by a hurried forty-per-cent increase in the police force, and by the formation of vigilance committees to patrol the streets at night under instructions to "shoot first and ask questions afterward," is attracting the shocked attention of the press at large. A record of no fewer than one hundred highway robberies and burglaries in one month, culminating in the murder of several leading citizens by midnight assassins and the crucifixion of a young woman, have wrought the town to a state of tension, dispatches tell us, almost equal to that in Atlanta on the eve of the recent race riots. "A wave of crime and death sweeps the country," "Red mist of crime envelops the greater Pittsburg district," "Late developments of the crime situation," are typical examples of the headlines that adorn the local press, whose readers are posted by no less an authority than Superintendent of Police McQuaide on what to do when the burglar comes. "Criminals are always at war upon society, but in Pittsburg to-day an extraordinary state of war exists between the two, and extraordinary means of defense must be resorted to," affirms the Pittsburg Leader, while the Sun of that city, in the following paragraphs, asserts that the only way is to "strike at the thugs in their lairs." Thus:

"The dragnet is out," we hear. Where is it cast? Around low saloons, evil amusement places, and houses of ill fame. Yesterday another crowd of suspects was gathered in just as was done after McMillen was so brutally slain.

"Where and why do the police pick up these suspects? They have no visible means of support. They consort with those whose cry is that of the daughters of the horse-leech: 'Give. Give.' These idlers are criminals in the fact that they have refused to work.

"Yet they can go and come as they please. Nine men out of ten will hotly resent police inquiry into what they are doing and who they are. And this is the sure defense of the tenth, who prowls and rob and murders.

"If honest people would live in safety they must demand that not only should there be many more police, but that they should be empowered to investigate everybody when circumstances justify. This will make thugs play closer to cover.

"They must see that those who have no visible means of support are more adequately dealt with than by fine and brief imprisonment. No man should be released until it is arranged that he goes into honest occupation and stays at work."—Literary Digest, November 24, 1906.

CONTROL OF THE RAILROADS.

Railroads in the United States are pretty well under the control of the people. The latest evidence of their mastery appears in the conviction of the New York Central Railroad Company for giving freight rebates to the American Sugar Refining Company.

The published rate by rail from New York to Detroit was twenty-three cents a hundred pounds. The rate by water was thirteen cents. To meet the competition by water, the agent of the railroad company secretly agreed to pay back to the sugar company five cents a hundred pounds on all sugar shipped. The company paid back many thousand dollars under the agreement.

The railroad company has appealed the case to the Supreme Court. Whatever the outcome of the appeal, the conviction itself is important. It indicates the vitality of the law intended to secure uniform rates and fair treatment to all shippers. The Supreme Court of the United states had already rendered decisions that secure the rights of the people upon the railways, which are, in a certain true sense, public highways. The companies may not charge exorbitant rates, according to a decision made in March, 1898; but on the other hand, under the same decision, neither a state legislature nor Congress may make a freight rate so low that it will be unprofitable to the company. Such a rate would deprive to supporting a complex institution, quite as much as to crying its message of divine mercy. Who does not observe the stress now laid on the collection of money in the street-meetings nowadays? That is the central fact. And it is necessary. For there must be money collected to pay the rent charged by the "Center," which owns the Salvation barracks the whole country over, to pay a tithe and a tribute for the support of the central office, and such other sums as may be indicated by the "Center" before the workers themselves are entitled to one penny for salary. A recent writer, Mr. Manson, in a book packed with formidable documents, indicates that the machine is an ingenious contrivance for exploiting the life-blood of its devotees. He quotes a number of painful illustrations of how the religious fervor of the simple devotees has broken them in their efforts to feed the machine—efforts we may see illustrated in the street-meetings anywhere, and which seem to be becoming more tense and even heart-rending. Already one of the big schemes of the "Center" has broken down; the Salvation Army Building Association, Limited, has gone into liquidation. Rich and omnipotent as the "Center" is, what would become of it if the intense pressure for collections on our streets were relaxed?—Central Christian Advocate.

SALVATION ARMY DECADENCE.

The Salvation Army, in this country as well as in England, has passed on to social schemes. It has now to raise money for central bureaus far remote, persons of their property without due process of law, in violation of the Constitution.

Thus we have three established rules: That the owners of the railroads are protected in their property against confiscatory freight rates; that the shippers are protected against exorbitant rates, and that the rate for a given service shall be uniform for all shippers enjoying that service. Congress has provided for an enforcement of these rules by the law governing interstate commerce, passed at its last session. Under these rules equitably enforced there can be no oppression of the people on the one hand, and no injustice to property on the other.—Youth's Companion, November 22, 1906.

FATHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

The Cedar Rapids Republican comes to the support of Mark Twain, in his conclusion that his daughter died fortunately at the age of twenty-four. The Republican pictures the trials and temptations the years must inevitably have brought, and concedes a fond father is warranted in hesitation at wishing his daughter to undergo them.

All of which is a cheap and maudlin flying in the face of providence. There are no trials nor temptations in life that human nature has not been especially endowed to undergo, nor are there any that are not here for the beneficent purpose of strengthening and solidifying human character. That there are maladjustments may be conceded. That some get more of the cares and burdens than their share is apparent. But nature, careless of the individual, is careful of the race. On the whole, human progress is possible because of what in a blind sort of way we denominate hardships:

The whole struggle of present-day existence seems to be to avoid unpleasantness and pain, when it is as true now as it ever has been in every relation of life that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." The race is running away from physical pain. And yet every physician will say that this flitting from pain marks physical decadence. Softer beds to lie on, predigested foods to live on, and avoidance of physical exertion during waking hours, these are the dreams of a people who are about to give up the ghost.

If Mark Twain's daughter was not prepared to go out into the serious duties of life with courage and energy and good heart, it was because she had not been properly fitted. Some women there are who must meet the world as it is, with good cheer and with confidence. It was never intended that women should be hothouse plants, nor angels before their time. And such women there are. The frontier prairies of Iowa are full of them, the grandmothers who saw the covered wagon and the sod house, who to-day in good health and good cheer are spending a ripening old age blessed in the health and prosperity of children and grandchildren in no stinted numbers.

The father who wishes most wisely his daughter a robust and hopeful outlook on life wishes her the ambition to meet life half-way and the energy and endurance to grasp and hold its great opportunities. To wish her anything else is to confess defeat, defeat that can not be covered with any thin veneer of cheap sentimentality, or cynical philosophy.—Des Moines Register and Leader, November 27, 1906.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Christmas

Christmas, to many the day of all days, is now very near. How are we preparing to celebrate it?

Some time since in these pages we made a plea—it was intended for all, but especially for mothers and the friends of little children—a plea that this year we share our Christmas cheer with those homeless little ones whose cries and sobbings have entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabbooth, and who has said to us, his people, "Build for them a home."

But we, his people, are not rich. We have no command over millions or thousands, as have many of our fellow men. Besides this we must not interfere with the Lord's work in other ways. The ministry must be sent out to preach the gospel, and their families must be supported. There are many demands upon the Lord's treasury, all of which must be met or the work of the Lord be hindered. How then can we do this? We believe in God, do we not? If we answer that we do, then ought we not to remember that we must prove our faith by our works? Fathers, mothers, and friends of the children, there is a way in which we can do this—do it and not interfere with other work of the church, and the Lord himself points to that way when he says, "Gather my saints together unto me; those who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."—Psalm 5:5.

Christmas is very near, and every one is doing more or less planning for the day. How much will we save of that which otherwise we would expend, and give for this purpose?

How many of you read the Ladies' Home Journal? We wish all of you could read in the December number of this year the fine editorial on the subject of Christmas. Mr. Bok, the editor, has written many excellent things, but to our mind never a better or more timely one than this one on Christmas.

After saying that we ought to return to the original idea of the day—which was a day exclusively devoted to making the children happy, he adds: "Now it is a practical as well as a proverbial truth that the presents children enjoy most are those of the simplest order. The significant story is told of the child of rich parents who received a heap of the most expensive presents only to glance at them and brush them all aside to play the rest of the day sailing a pond-set shell in a dish of water. A child is the truest and simplest thing on the face of the earth, and the simplest toy appeals not only in the strongest sense to his nature, but it is the only kind of toy that he can understand and therefore enjoy."

It takes very little plus love and kindness to make a child happy. Let us give only these to our children—for this one year if no more—and keep for the homeless ones the rest we can spare. If we would, as a church, unite upon this one simple plan, we would all be astonished at the result. Not only this, but we would roll from our shoulders this burden of Christmas expense and work, which to very many is reaching the unbearable point.

There is another feature of our observance of Christmas.
which Mr. Bok handles in a characteristic manner, and after reading his comment we feel sure that you will regard with added interest the testimony of Sr. Emma Burton which follows it. Mr. Bok says:

"The first thing to do, however, is to disentangle the sorry mess we have made of Christmas in its double meaning of the Holy Child and Santa Claus. We are perilously near the root of the whole present version of the modern Christmas at this very point, and it is a fact worthy of notice how much the modern Sunday-school has done to emphasize this mix-up. Just consider, for one moment, the marvelous inconsistency of the average Sunday-school in this respect: For an entire year our children are taught about Christ and what he has done for the world, and particularly is the childish mind told how Christ came into the world and what he came for. This goes on for a whole year, and then comes the season when the school celebrates what we accept as the time when he came into the world, and would you not think that in any celebration of that time, the time of all times, Christ's own birthday, his birth would be emphasized? But no! Instead of the Holy Child we have substituted, in nine out of every ten Sunday-school celebrations, a pagan idea, a gnome or elf who comes down the chimney and gives gifts! In other words, instead of the holiest example that ever lived to teach our children, we have Santa Claus standing in the pulpit as the children's preacher or saint at Christmas! And then a Sunday-school superintendent—with Santa Claus standing by his side, please bear in mind—was surprised last Christmas when he asked the question of "Whose birthday is this, children?" and over eighty per cent of the scholars answered, "Santa Claus's!" And afterward this man deplored to me the hopelessness of bringing Christ to the minds of the children!"

A TESTIMONY.

"I have ever been mentally opposed to Christmas-trees being held in a house that has been dedicated to the service of God, because of the first experience I had of the kind in this church. Many years ago, by effort and sacrifice, a neat little church was built by the Saints of a certain locality, and God manifested his pleasure in that infant branch for their zeal and good works, and spirit of self-sacrifice, by the rich outpourings of his Spirit, upon every occasion of the Saints' meeting together for worship, so much so that the very influence of it was felt as soon as one stepped within those hallowed walls. People came from all around the country to attend those meetings, though they were only the regular branch meetings, and for about a year there was hardly a week passed that there was not one or more baptisms (twice as many as fifteen at the same time). The Saints were too much of one heart and one mind for Satan to attempt to make trouble by the way of discord. But he had other resources. Christmas was coming, and he could beguile them into thinking that wrong was right.

"It came, and the children wanted very much to have a tree. The Saints thought it would be nice. Then the question was, Where will it be set up? Why, in our church of course; there is no other place.

"This was the answer of those who made reply, but some objected. Others were only partly in favor of the church being the place, but since the majority wished it, and it was in honor of Christ's birthday, and to make the children happy, perhaps it was all right, at least there did not seem to be any very great wrong about it. So the objectors were overruled.

"The next step was worse yet. The children, and many of the older ones too, were not satisfied with the choice of any other to be Santa Claus but the very one who ought not to have been, because he was a leader in spiritual things, and who only a few evenings previous to that of the entertainment, had stood before the people clothed in such power from on high that those who were not of us were awed to a spirit of reverence for the words of light and knowledge that fell from his lips; while he hardly knew whether he was wholly mortal, or partly spiritual.

"It was because of those things his wife pleaded for him not to accept that position, saying that the same people who were at first bitter enemies to the church, but were becoming friendly and interested, would be at the entertainment and it would spoil all the good that the preaching had done, knowing, as she did, that for him to say comical things was as natural as his breath.

"But she was overruled, and 'Santa Claus' was acted out to the full satisfaction of the children, at least. The wife spoken of kept her eye on those upon whom the power of the Spirit had made such an impression a few evenings before; and if she read rightly their thoughts from the expression of their countenances it was something like this: 'I had begun to think there was something divine in this religion; that truly the power of God attended that man when he preached, but he acts this role just as well, so the other may have been put on also, and am glad we found them out.' Whatever their thoughts were they did not come any more except upon rare occasions, and then it seemed only to ridicule.

"Nor was the same power felt in the house afterwards; though there were many good meetings in which the Spirit was with the Saints, yet it had been grieved, and could not restore what was lost. That was the first step aside, but not the last one.

"The tree had not been set up by a few—that is, a committee—but by some of the members of the branch, more than were needed. All felt festive and happy; and there were jestings and merriment in getting the tree ready. There was no one thing in the whole affair that was condemnable, but the occasion was not in harmony with the sacredness of the place. The one chosen for Santa Claus did not wish to take that place, but the children would not take no for an answer, so it was drawn on step by step.

"In the revelation to Bro. Luff, those who held their peace about these things were reproved, hence I have written this true experience trusting it may help to overcome the practice."

Editors Herald: A word in defense of the wage-earner of San Francisco.

I see in the SAINTS' HERALD for November 7 a statement like this: that every landlord forces rent up to a point where he bankrupts his tenants, and every laborer forces wages to a point where he drives the builder from the field. Now it would appear from this that the landlord and the laborer were the chief factors in retarding the rebuilding up this city. So far as the labor unions are concerned, they were about the last to make a move in raising prices, and then only when they were forced to do so by the rise in rents and the price of other commodities of living, and then I consider them very mild in their demands, when we compare them with the other trusts who have us by the throat. The lumber trust was the first to hold

Editors Herald: I beg space in your valuable columns to report a short dream which appeared before me in the following manner. I dreamed that another lady and I were looking at the sky. We saw just one red cloud. It looked like the blood was dropping out of it. We were looking at the cloud, when it parted in the middle and there we saw three men standing. It seemed as though we were so close by them we could see them smile, and one had on a crown. Then I awoke.

Can any of the brethren or sisters give me the interpretation?

Editors Herald: Our meetings here have been very much of a success so far. Not less than one hundred have been in attendance at each service and from that to two hundred. We could not have the church last night nor to-night on account of those (or these) two nights and it was filled last night. More would have been in but could not get in very well. I think there were fully one hundred in the room. That was our smallest audience so far, and that would have been larger had there been room for them. As usual I found the church organ here in very bad condition, and cleaned and repaired it for them. Of course all these things help. They seemed very glad to have it done. Bro. Vanderwood and I speak night about. Last night was my “preach” and my subject was “The marriage law.” The house was so crowded, and there were so many children and young people present, that I feared there would be considerable confusion; but the Spirit was with us, and all seemed to feel it. The order and attention could not have been better. One young man said, “Even the children were spell-bound.” He said, “Up at the Provo Academy we paid a man one thousand dollars to deliver a sermon for us and I was not nearly so much interested in it as I was in yours to-night. You proved up everything as you went along,” etc. I am not bragging. That is not my intention. I only want to tell you of the hunger for hearing the word of God, “famine for the word of God,” I believe the prophet of old calls it. We were at the two o’clock service here last Sunday, and there were only about sixty present all told, while I see from two to four times that number attending our services and giving such eager attention. We expect to continue here until the 25th inst., closing that night and driving to Henrieville the 26th. When we reach that point there are two places within four miles of each other, and we may run two appointments at the same time. How long we shall be on this trip will depend upon the conditions as we find them from this on. When we heard from Brn. Stead and Curtis they were at or expected soon to be at Parowan. We are expecting letters from them any day now. They are having a good hearing also.

One man said to us here, “Well, I’m a —— good Mormon, but if this church has not changed some things then I don’t know anything. I am fifty-six years old and have been raised a Mormon; but I don’t pay tithing. Tithing is a good thing if they’ll use it right; but I can’t find out what they do with it. They preach tithing and want tithing and then if any one needs help, the Relief Society comes around begging for a little flour or anything you have for them, while the tithing is turned into money as far as possible and sent up to headquarters, and the Presidency and Twelve handle it. The poor get none of it, and I don’t believe in polygamy. My father was a polygamist, and I’ve had all I want of that. I do not believe Joseph the Seer ever had but one wife.”

The way these people come for our tracts each night makes us think we will have to send back for more before the trip is over, and we had nearly two hundred pounds of them when we started on this trip. This is the region of the Cliff-dwellers’ ruins, and we want to take a couple of days and visit some of them before leaving here.

Editors Herald: We are striving as a little band to keep the banner afloat, though we have our ups and downs. The work does not seem to progress here in the city as well as in the country, though we find some trying to be lights unto the world, willing to sacrifice, helping to bear the burdens, both spiritually and temporally. The fruits of the flesh, or worldly environment; pride, self-exaltation, seem to hinder our progress; nevertheless the beauty and grandeur of the restored gospel brings with it the glad tidings of good news.

“Every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.”—1 John 3:3.

Reading the church papers and books and mingling with Saints bring untold comfort to learn of the success of the good work in the different branches throughout the land. The good Lord blesses us from time to time, when we meet to worship. We have found him always near us, but we sometimes wander from him.

Hoping to be in the great gathering,

A. M. Boomer.

Lamoni, Iowa, December 1, 1906.

Dear Herald: As a matter of duty I make a statement of the ministerial work I have done since my resignation and release as general recorder last April. The church may desire to know that it is being done by those laid by from special duties, but who, no doubt, are expected to do that they can in the Lord’s work and for this people. Therefore will say that I have endeavored to labor according to conditions and opportunities, as diligently and continuously as possible. On April 13 I was called home from Independence to preach a funeral-sermon and thus was at home Sunday, April 15; but excepting that and two other Sundays I have been away from home every Sabbath since March, that is, during seven months’ time, laboring in Lamoni Stake or elsewhere.

On April 22 I preached at Davis City, Iowa, and that evening at the home of Bro. and Sr. H. A. Hartshorn I married their daughter Agnes Rose to Mr. Boyd E. Craig. On April 27 I went to Cleveland, Iowa, to see Sr. H. E. Birchell, who was nearing the end of her life. While there I preached, administered to the sick, and blessed a child. On May 6 I filled my appointments at the Evergreen chapel, and on the 13th my appointments with the Greenville Branch. Also that day united in marriage Bro. Oza Lovell and Miss Gertie Daniels, near Davis City.

On May 14 I went to Burlington, Iowa, where my wife’s father, Bro. W. R. Selton, died that night, aged eighty-two years. As I had promised to visit my aunt in Wisconsin this season, and now being so far on the road, I decided to go on. Hence I went to Chicago on May 18 and out to Wilmette, where lives my wife’s sister, Sr. H. S. Cramer.
But I was with the Saints in the city on two Sundays, with one branch on the 29th and with the other the 27th, by invitation preaching at both halls, also during the week attending Religious prayer-meeting at the West Side place.

On May 30 I reached Wisconsin, and during the most of June I was in that State, with the Saints in and near Janesville, Evanston, Oregon, Madison, and Belleville, preaching as opportunity was found, and otherwise doing what good I could.

At Belleville lives Sr. Hannah Loveland, my aunt, now nearly ninety-three years old, also crippled with rheumatism and other diseases. She became a member of the old organization in Kirkland in the thirties and later was at Nauvoo. Her husband, Levi Loveland, was one of the elders there. They went across Lorentz with many others and he died sixty years ago, in the fall of 1846. She became satisfied as to the evil doctrines introduced and went no farther with the Calls, but returned to Lamoni June 29, and since then, have labored within the bounds of the Lamoni Stake, namely, at Davis City, Greenville, Pleasanton, Leon, Eliston, Lamoni, Lucas, Norwood, Allendale, Evergreen, Wood Schoolhouse, and Thompson Schoolhouse. On September 30, at Graceland College, in the home of Bro. and Sr. Weedmark, I united their daughter Annie to Mr. George E. Greenman, and on October 20, at the home of Bro. and Sr. Samuel Shakespeare, west of Lamoni, was the wedding of Bro. J. Charles May, of Independence, Missouri, and Sr. Ethel M. Shakespeare, of the Evergreen Branch. The bride I had known since her infancy and it was a pleasure to join her life to that of one whom I believe to be a faithful young Saint, Bro. May.

The times of my absence from the stake were a few days in Des Moines where I spoke one evening in the tent and on Sunday in the Saints' chapel, and the other time when I was called to St. Joseph, Missouri, to unite another worthy pair in the marriage bond, namely, Bro. Henry C. Danielson, of Lamoni, and Sr. Lena Jessiman, of St. Joseph, September 12. By invitation I stayed over Sunday and preached twice, also on Saturday a funeral-sermon. Here, as elsewhere, the friendship and brotherly love manifested were beyond any other thing that could have been given.

Since April I have baptized only five persons and officiated in confirming only six, but I have administered to the sick nearly two hundred times in that period. As a member of the stake high council I have met with my brethren several times to consider the affairs of the stake and its needs.

Will add that now that winter has come I dare not make stated appointments that require riding far in the cold or risk much exposure. But I desire to go whenever I can and to do all that I can of good while I live.

H. A. Stetbins.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

(Concluded from page 1149.)

The regular monthly sacrament-meeting was held Sunday afternoon, the Stake Presidency in charge. Very few vacant seats evidenced that the Saints are making a special effort to attend this service. The word of the Spirit was given through the Stake President to the comfort and admonition of the Saints. An exhortation to faithfulness and performance of present duty was given by our Sr. Walker. As an illustration of how by our works and sacrifices we can bless those who may live hereafter, she related an instance when the call was made years ago by "Bro. Joseph" for means to purchase a press on which to print the HERALD, a sister who was in the condition where she had only one dress and two dollars to buy a change of garment, resolved to go without the new dress and send the money to "Bro. Joseph" for the press. She did so although it necessitated her going to bed while the only dress she had in the world was drying. Yet how many are being blessed to-day through the HERALD by that special sacrifice of this humble sister? What is there where we can do to-day that will cause those of to-morrow to rise up and call us blessed?

Sr. Carrie E. Coiner, of Oklahoma, registered at Graceland College Monday. This makes a total of seventy-three students not including those of the Departments of Music and Oratory.

President Stewart conducted the funeral of a little child of Mr. Ora Teale and wife, last Friday morning.

The Sunday-school met Monday night to consider exercises for Christmas. The school is raising one hundred dollars for different funds: twenty dollars for college dormitory; twenty-five dollars for branch expenses; twenty-five dollars for church improvements; thirty dollars for college scholarship.

Bro. O. C. Rook, of Mills County, Iowa, arrived at the Saints' Home, Saturday. This brother, while not one of the aged Saints, is in very poor health, and, like quite a number now in the Home, he should be in a sanitarium. The Home is not a place for sick but a place for the aged Saints. The church not having the sanitarium in readiness must do the best she can. Let us all turn to and assist to see that the sanitarium is erected in harmony with the divine command "as soon as it is found to be practicable, and without unnecessary delay."

President Stewart announces the first number of the college lecture course will be given December 22, by Gilbert E. Eldredge, impersonator; the second by Professor E. B. Swift, January 31 and February 1, on the "Wonders of the microscope"; and the last February 26, 1907, a concert by the Wathena Concert Company of Chicago.

Lamoni is without a town hall and jail. By some unknown cause it caught fire about midnight Saturday night and was completely destroyed. The fire was confined to this one building, and did no further damage. Had it not been built of cement block veneer and with a tin roof the adjacent buildings would undoubtedly have gone. The cause is thought to be incendiary.

President John Smith arrived home for Thanksgiving, having been visiting the branches in the northeastern part of the state.

Bro. F. B. Blair, secretary of College Board, etc., in company with President Stewart, expects to visit Kansas City, Independence, and Parkville, Missouri, in the interests of the college the latter part of this week.

FEATURES.

The Sunday-school is increasing both in attendance and interest. The classes have joined in preparing a Christmas program.

One of the most marked improvements of late in the branch was the organization of the Religion. Under the able leadership of Sr. McNichols this society is indeed doing a commendable work. From a membership of half a dozen it has steadily increased until it has twenty-five earnest Religions. Five of the members are not Saints, and have entered into the Book of Mormon study with a zeal that might be emulated with profit by some of the Saints.

Bro. and Sr. Frank G. Hedrick have been received as members upon letters of removal from the Fansing, Kansas, Branch.

Bro. Tibbles came up from Tonganoxie, November 25, to worship with us.

Sr. Boston has returned from Concordia, Kansas, where she has been attending at the bedside of her mother, who has been sick for some weeks.

Central California.—Conference convened at Tulare, California, October 27 and 28. C. E. Crumley chairman, J. B. Carmichael, assistant. Mollie A. Flory secretary pro tem. Branches reporting: San Jose 100, Tulare 98. Ministry reporting: J. C. Clapp, C. E. Crumley, J. B. Carmichael, C. W. Earle, Joseph Flory, C. W. Hawkins; Priest E. H. Lawson. Tulare was chosen as place for next conference, time left with district president and sub-missionary in charge. Mrs. Mary E. Lawson, secretary.

To facilitate prompt issue of clergy credentials for the year 1907 corrected lists of all general officers of the church, including all under general missionary appointment, have been forwarded to the several passenger associations that issue said credentials—the Western, Central, Southwestern, Trans-Continental, and Southwestern. The Trunk Line, which issues credentials only to pastors located on its lines, will have necessary statements. The Eastern Canadian and New England associations do not issue clergy credentials. Bishop lists include those appointed since the General Conference and eliminate those released—so far as published or reported.

In harmony with long established practice, all local appointees are referred to their respective general missionaries in charge for endorsement. Application blanks may be obtained from the joint agents or chairmen of the various associations or bureaus named. A close inspection of rules and regulations, old and new, governing issuance of credentials will prove helpful to all applicants and prevent unnecessary correspondence with the clergy bureaus.

Pastoral.

As I have been transferred from South Dakota to Nebraska, will the Saints and friends of the Northern and Central Districts please inform me where there may be a chance for preaching in their vicinity, and I will respond as soon as possible. I enjoyed many pleasant seasons among the Saints here some years ago, and hope they will renew them. My address will be Clearwater, Nebraska.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of the Kentucky and Tennessee District: As the year is fast drawing to a close, and as we have as yet received but little tithes as compared with former years, I wish to impress upon the minds of the Saints the importance of attending to this part of the Lord's work. I had hoped to see the name of each member in the district recorded on the Bishop's book, though the amount were strinct and it is too late yet, if we will be prompt. The report for the year is made up the last of December.

There are over three hundred members in the district. Two years ago fifty-four paid tithes. Last year seventy. And this year it should be double that; in fact, each member should pay his tithes, or at least make a start.

The Lord says none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God. (See Doctrine and Covenants 70:3.) And many are the promises held out to those who are obedient, and transgress not the law. There are but few, if any, who are too poor to pay tithing. If you have one dollar that is your own, you can pay one cent; if you owe no debt, if it is not the amount, great or small though it be, but the willingness on the part of the giver that is pleasing to the Lord. Then, Saints, let us give according as we are prospered, let it be much or little.

And remember the sanitarium and orphans' home. Some have donated liberally, and others have expressed themselves as being desirous to help. Those who desire may send tithes and donations to the undersigned, or if convenient pay to Elder C. L. Snow, who will receive you; and all money paid him will reach me as though paid to me.

Ever praying for Zion's weal, I am,

Your brother in the faith.

J. R. McCLAIN, Bishop's Agent.

Died.

KNEFFER.—Gottfried Kneffer was born in Itingen, Switzerland, January 3, 1850. On about Friday night, November 2, he received a wonderful demonstration of the power and love of Jesus. He at once decided to obey the ordinance of baptism, having been shown that it was necessary. The rite was administered November 4, at about 4 p.m. He departed this life November 5, at 1:50 a.m. He had been ailing about two weeks with tonsillitis or quinsy. He leaves to mourn a wife, six sons, three daughters, a brother, and a neighborhood of sympathizing friends.

CHARTERS.—Henry Charters died at Mercy Hospital, November 21, 1906, from injuries received at the West Bay City shipyard, being struck on the head by a falling plank, and not regaining consciousness. Bro. Charters was born October 16, 1872; married Miss Ella Chase, June 8, 1891. Of this union were born five children. There are left to mourn, a wife, four children, an aged mother, five brothers, and four sisters. He was baptized in 1889. Funeral from his home, in charge of E. S. White, sermon by J. A. Grant, was held to rest in Oak Ridge Cemetery, to await the final call.

OWEN.—Owen Owen of Fleetwood, Lancashire, England, died November 15, 1906, at the advanced age of ninety, and was interred at the Fleetwood cemetery, November 19. Was baptized October 2, 1870, by O. F. Duzham at Burlington, Iowa. Was ordained a teacher, April 14, 1872. Received into the Manchester Branch by letter, April 21, 1889. The only fault urged against him: "he was so persistent in speaking of his religion." But those who despised his religion and his church were still ready to testify to his integrity and upright Christian character. Funeral-service was conducted by a clergyman of the Church of England.

SEEGER.—Sr. Amy Seegers was born July 20, 1887, at Surprise, Nebraska, and was baptized January 17, 1900, at Sandy Point, Utah, by W. A. Smith. She was a candidate for ordination to the Order of Elders in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, November 4, 1906, by F. C. Seeger, May 10, 1904. She fell asleep in Christ November 10, 1906. Funeral-service preached by W. A. Smith, assisted by John Pratt, at the United Brethren church at Sandy Point. She leaves her husband, four brothers, two sisters, and many friends to mourn their loss.

DAVISON.—Sr. Bico E., daughter of Elder Holmes J. Davison, passed from earth's life November 29, at 9 p.m. She sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. She was born in Lockhartsville, Nova Scotia, August 24, 1889; baptized by her father in July, 1900. She sang four lines of that beautiful song, "Holy City," just a few days before her departure. Her remains were taken to Independence and laid to rest in the Mount Grove Cemetery.

NOBLE.—Helen Margaret Noble, born April 8, 1906; died November 3, 1906; daughter of Charles M. and Hazel M. (McMillen) Noble. Funeral services by Elder W. A. Smith, assisted by Ebenezer Parker. Special car was chartered for the occasion. She was laid to rest in the same grave on the bosom of her grandparents, who so recently preceded her to the other shore.

To Remove Stains From Table Linen.

Dissolve five cents' worth of oxalic acid in a pint of water; also dissolve five cents' worth of chloride of lime in a pint of water; then the two liquids may be mixed; pour the mixture on the boiler, dip the stained parts in the solution—first the chloride of lime and then the oxalic acid; then boil and finish as usual. Years of experience have proved the recipe infallible.—From the Home Department, National Magazine for December, by Fannie Blodgett, Ripon, Wisconsin.

And what a jumble it sometimes is when it chances to be a local Religious secretary’s record which is opened.

In the December Autumn Leaves, “Arena” Department, Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser, general secretary, gives explicit directions for the keeping of secretaries’ records, both local and district. Three printed forms illustrate the article and make her plan clear. (See cut above).

$25,000.00 NEEDED

By INDEPENDENCE COAL MINING COMPANY

In order to develop and open up the new coal-mining interests near Independence and also make necessary preparations for mine-workers, it is necessary that sufficient capital be secured within a short time. The amount sought for is very small compared with the capital of other coal-mining interests and, for various reasons, the directors of this company desire to keep the working and controlling power with the church members, if possible. The opening up of an undeveloped coal field at this edge of a densely populated community of 400,000 population is a matter of considerable consequence, as the product is part of the necessities of life, with freight rates practically cut off, making this enterprise an exceptional one.

Five hundred and sixty-nine acres have been leased for fifty years and one hundred and fifty-four acres purchased, making in all seven hundred and twenty-three acres of coal-land in one body, on the line of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, two miles east of Independence.

The company already has coal-mines at Napoleon, Missouri, in operation and a successful and prosperous mining business, making this a bona fide, paying investment.

Money seeking investment can find no better place, and will bring the best kind of satisfaction, as it will bring good returns to the investor and return what is most sought for, also benefitting the unemployed, scattered, pressed-down poor church members by placing in their possession to help themselves.

The 254 acres are intended for homes for mine-workers, to be sold at a reasonable price, and we solicit the co-operation of the bankers in this respect, according to their ability.

The promoters of this company are not working for any selfish interests. There is no watered or fictitious valued stock. The company is incorporated under the laws of the state of Missouri. Capital stock, $400,000.00; shares, $200.00 each; amount paid up $60,000.00. The capital stock must be increased to the amount needed. Parties sending money can do so by bank draft. Further particulars apply to R. May, Independence, Missouri.

THE OLD JERUSALEM GOSPEL

Under this title Elder Joseph Luff has published books delivered to the church by himself covering almost every subject connected with the LATTER-DAY MESSAGE. Its value as a missionary cannot be estimated. If you have friends that you desire to hear the restored gospel, you can gratify the desire by placing this book in their hands. The following are a few of the subjects treated upon:

"The Modern Stumbling-Stone."
"Is Water Baptism Essential to Salvation?"
"Authority from God—Is It Essential?"
"A Living Church."
"Does Death End All?"
"Preliminary After Death."
"Wounded in the House of His Friends."
"Many Ways or One?"
"No Doctrine, No Christ."

This book is now the property of the Board of Publication, and we are anxious that a copy be placed in the home of every family of Saints. PRICE ONE DOLLAR.

Some day to ears of faith the funeral knell will be as a bell that dismisses school.—Ram’s Horn.
planting and the sowing were resumed; conditions of comparative happiness and peace, sadly mixed with sorrow, pain, perplexity, persecution, and death; the seed-time and the harvest of God's promises and their fulfillment, denunciations and their consequences, filled the years full of the common events which happen to all alike; and after the long, long nightmare of darkness, wandering, hopes deferred, hearts sickened unto death had passed, the word of the Lord given to the oppressed and fleeing host of Israel, in 1834, was remembered of both God and men; the sons and grandsons of those once scattered gathered with the newly converted hundreds of modern Israel, in an edifice, which if not so grand in size and adornment within and without as the ancient temple, or still more ancient tabernacle, is definitive of the gospel of the Morn, Meridian, and Evening of Time: a waymark in a goodly land, where the fulfillment of one of the latest of the promises of the Lord to the Saints, through the Prophet of Palmyra, cheers, comforts, and makes confident the people. This building is twenty-eight by forty-two, one story, of good height, well situated just across the street from the southwest corner of the Far West Temple lot, neat, well built, well lighted, well appointed for the uses it was intended to serve; and paid for by the efforts and sacrifices of the Saints and their friends, of whom it was prophesied long ago, "they shall help rebuild the waste places of Zion." The cost, including labor and materials donated, and moneys solicited and collected, is in the neighborhood of twelve hundred dollars. There are some forty members of the branch, so that it may be easily understood what devotion and effort were manifested, and the result be the better appreciated.

As at Cameron, the exercises were in charge of Bro. I. N. White; the opening service of prayer was by Bro. F. A. Smith, a grandson of the prophet Joseph; the sermon was by Bro. Joseph Smith, the eldest son of the Prophet; the dedicatory-prayer was by Bro. Edmund L. Kelley, the Bishop, a grandson of one of the elders of the church in the days of Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum. There were a goodly number of the Saints from all the "region round about"; together with many of their friends and neighbors as the house would accommodate comfortably. The day was nearly perfect as a day in November can be, clear and pleasant; neither too warm nor too cool; and it was believed by several that the favorable day was by the intervention of the Lord in behalf of his people, and indicative of his good pleasure in what they had done. The omen was a good one and was so taken.

The song-service was good, the stand was beautified by a tasteful array of flowers loaned for the occasion, showing the good will of those outside towards their neighbors of the church.

It is needless to say that the exercises were impressive; that is conceded by all those in and those not of the faith; but something more than that may be stated; not a shade of discord, nor a jarring note of distress or dissatisfaction, not a regretful word or wish marred the peaceful passing of the hours the Saints were together on this notable occasion. We noticed in the congregation those known to us to be the sons and the grandsons of "former day Saints"; those who had seen the dark and cloudy day, and whose faith, unshaken by the passing of trial and affliction, shone out of happy faces in witnessing "what the Lord had done for his people."

The afternoon and evening were occupied by Bro. F. A. Smith and Bishop Kelley respectively, in the discussion of gospel topics of profit and interest to all; so that it may well be said, It was a day well spent and long to be remembered; a day on which one of the spiritual waste places of Zion was made to blossom like the rose by the fruit of the Spirit shed abroad in the hearts of his Saints and manifest to them that are without.

Of the general officers President Joseph Smith, I. N. White, F. A. Smith, E. L. Kelley, W. P. Pickering; of the local force Brn. James Moler, J. C. Elvert, E. T. Atkinson, S. W. Simmons, and George Swenson, may be mentioned among those taking part at Cameron and Far West, either one or both. The building at Cameron is thirty by fifty feet in size, is well located, and cost the branch some eleven hundred dollars, being bought of the South Methodist brethren, after the late coalition between the North and South Methodist Churches; so, whether any good came out of Babylon or not, some good did come to the Saints by the confederation of these two hitherto contending portions of the churches the foundation of which was laid within the reach of modern history by John and Charles Wesley. Long may the Cameronian Saints live and thrive to enjoy the fruits of their labor and the love of God.

And now what of the dedication at St. Joseph? It can not be said that no importance attaches to this forward movement of the branch at this Western metropolis.

Quite a number of years ago there were few of the faith in St. Joseph; and these few worshiped in private homes and in hired halls. In the days of Brn. George Smith, John Burlington, Albert Bishop, Senterlow Butler, Robert Winning, and others, some of whom remain, other some of whom are passed on, the struggle was hard and arduous, and courage of no mean order was requisite in facing the pressure from without and the adverse criticism from within; but faithful endurance and long-suffering patience won standing-room in the arena of conflict; new material joining with the old made success attainable; and the necessity for a more commodious and certain place of worship roused the dormant energies.
of the Saints, and a committee was appointed to secure a lot and build a church edifice. Through the difficulties usually attending such enterprises the committee and the Saints with them labored long and faithfully; the result being that some sixteen years ago the present structure was raised, inclosed, and occupied, but left a debt which clung like an incubus on the energies of the branch. Just who all of the committee were from first to last we do not remember; but Robert Winning, William Lewis, Carl Kinnaman, Henry Islieb, Charles Hubacher, Coventry Archibald, Gilbert Whitehead, “Zach” Best, and perhaps several others were more or less involved in the struggle, which after a number of vexatious delays culminated this fall in the final finishing of the house, the paying of the long-standing debt, and the service of dedication on the 25th of last month, as stated at the opening of this article.

By a special invitation of long standing we were permitted the pleasure of taking part in the exercises of that day. We reached the city on Saturday, the 17th; and with the Bishop for a roommate were assigned to the care of Bro. Carl Kinnaman, of the “up-to-date restaurant” fame, the doors of which have not been closed by bar or lock for so many months that the memory of the oldest frequenter of the place runneth not to the contrary. We rested, were refreshed, and on the morrow were ready for the services.

At eleven of the clock in the forenoon, with Bro. I. N. White again in charge, an anthem was sung; prayer was offered by Bishop E. L. Kelley, the sermon was preached by the Editor, and the dedicatory-prayer was pronounced by Counselor F. M. Smith.

Services were held in the afternoon at half past two and again in the evening at half past seven. The Bishop occupied in the afternoon and President Joseph Smith at the evening hour.

Thus the story of these two notable dedications has been briefly told. How much the lives and characters of those who were engaged in the long effort to gather the moneys and the materials to build with; the final and crowning struggle by which success was won, who may say? And what effect the simple but strikingly forceful exercises of the dedicatory-services may have been at the time and still may be, who can say? But that the Saints as a body, referring to the branch, have been and still are deserving of praise for the constant and persistent effort that has been made, and which has resulted in such a complete and pleasant success, is beyond all question. Nor should commendation be withheld from any of those who at any time in the past aided the enterprise by voice, influence, or means, be it either little or much. No detraction should occur to mar the whole accomplished object, rounded out as it was on that memorable twenty-fifth day of November, last past.

Elder A. M. Baker has just closed a debate with A. L. Scott of the Christian Church, at High Point church, Webster County, Missouri. Bro. Henry Sparling, who was moderator for Bro. Baker and Sparling were ambushed and rocks were thrown at them but they were not harmed.

Elder H. E. Moler writes to correct an error which crept into his letter in HERALD for December 5, page 1151, paragraph 9, where he is made to say that a certain brother was “far too busy to find a place for an elder to preach.” It should read that he was “never” too busy to do so.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

The press generally is noting the fact that the country is being swept by a craze for mining stock investment, more especially in copper and silver stock. As many as eleven pages of mining-stock advertisements are noted in a single issue of one of the important Eastern dailies. That this wave of excited speculation will carry sorrow and misery in its wake is certain. The New York Times quotes a mining expert of national reputation who states that the chances of success in these mining operations are about one in three hundred. Not only will individuals suffer; but the mining industry, which is a legitimate and necessary business, will suffer as well by this exploitation.

It has been reported that Senator Burrows intended to call up the Smoot case during this week; possibly it will be under consideration before this reaches our readers. It is said that the majority of members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, of which Senator Burrows is chairman, are opposed to Smoot retaining the place. The action of the Senate can not be predicted,—policies and politics may decide the question.

It is just possible that tithe-gathering might be made popular. One of the prominent London papers tells of an ancient custom in Hungerford in Ayer-shire where on a certain day in April of each year two men are selected to visit each house and collect tithes. A part of the ceremony is to kiss the lady of each house visited. The tithe collectors are called “tithe men” or “tithe men,” and it is said that there is considerable competition for the honor.

The Salt Lake Tribune for December 8 has a cartoon entitled “The Sport of Prophets.” Joseph F. Smith is portrayed as a referee in a boxing bout between a stake bishop and a stake president. Possibly this gives an insight into the dark side of a “tithe gatherer’s” experiences.

The man with the muck-rake has been so much in evidence upon the political horizon and so much meanness and general depravity has been uncovered that one begins to question whether goodness has perished from the face of the earth. Now appears an entirely new publication, illustrated and gotten up in the finest style and avowing its intent to look for all things good, the Circle, published by Funk & Wagnalls. They take for their motto the well-known words of St. Paul:

“Whosoever things are true, whosoever things are honest, whosoever things are just, whosoever things are pure, whosoever things are lovely, whosoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.”

The Koran says that two angels guard every man on the earth, one watching on each side of him; and when at night he sleeps, they fly up to heaven with a written report of all his words and actions during the day. Every good thing he has done is recorded at once and repeated ten times, lest some item may be lost or omitted from the account. But when they come to a sinful thing, the angel on the right says to the other, “Forbear to record that for seven hours; peradventure, as he wakes and thinks in the quiet hours, he may be sorry for it, and repent and pray and obtain forgiveness.” We should be slow to record the evil others do us and swift to set down every kindness we receive from them.—Selected.

On Monday night last, our regular business-meeting was held (First Branch) for election of officers, and other business. All previous officers were sustained without any changes, with the exception of having placed Sr. Grace Horton in charge of the choir. The question of securing a church was discussed at some length. We are nearer a church of our own than many of the Saints realize, and yet not so near as to be quite victorious in our struggle. Bro. James Keir offered an ideal plan, which was adopted by the branch, viz.: the Saints are to get fresh eggs and butter from the country and sell to their neighbors or grocer man. Bro. Keir states having tried this and found it successful, making from one dollar and fifty cents upward on each case of eggs, and selling one and two cases each week. He has been doing this for some time, and, by twenty families joining in this plan, sufficient can be raised to give us our much needed first start. Plans for the carrying into effect of this scheme will be perfected at once, and a call will be made on the Saints in the outlying districts to send in their eggs at market price, and we will dispose of them. This will work the year round.

A Thanksgiving supper was given at the First Branch, Thanksgiving, proceeds to the sum of twenty-six dollars and fifty cents going to building fund. A good sociable evening was spent and enjoyed by all. The Central Branch held devotional exercises in the forenoon, which really seems to be more in keeping with the spirit of Thanksgiving.

At the Central Branch, Bro. Fred Johnson, branch teacher, addressed the Saints at the morning hour, last Sunday, on “The office-work and duties of teacher.” The speaker enjoyed good liberty to the edification of all present. At three o’clock in the afternoon sacrament-service, the Spirit being present in the voice of prophecy, to the instructing and encouraging of the Saints in their daily warfare. At night Elder McDowell addressed a full house, which rendered the speaker the most rapt attention. Some of our Seventh Day Adventist friends were present, and took exception to some points advanced by the speaker: claimed that the ten commandments would be in force in heaven, but failed to explain the question urged by Bro. McDowell, viz.: what need would there be of an “injunction” against “petit larceny,” “Sunday fishing,” adultery, murder, and idolatry. A queer kettle of fish it would be, indeed, if St. Peter had to keep a muck-rake under his arm and a hatchet in his hand. For urgent business reasons they excused themselves and went away murmuring about the weather.

The work is on the move everywhere here, and good meetings are enjoyed.

BURLINGTON, IOWA.

Our numbers are increasing gradually. November 4 there was one baptism and on the 18th two more. The latter are two of our young Sunday-school and Religio workers and we were especially glad to welcome them as sisters, for we know something of their ability to “help.”

On Tuesday, the 13th, Bro. and Sr. Reiste took their first trip to Nauvoo, by boat. Evidently they found the place all they expected, for they gave an enthusiastic report of their trip to the places of historical interest, and their visit with Bro. M. H. Siegfried and his wife.

Sunday morning, November 18, our recently ordained priest (Ed Schweers) occupied the stand. He made a very commendable effort.

In the evening, Bro. Frank Cochran was with us. We were doubly glad to see him, for he “looked like Lamoni.”

That same evening, one of our members, Bro. Ortleb, sustained quite a serious accident. He was the last of the family to leave the car, on the way home, and it started before he was off, throwing him to the track. His face was badly cut and bruised, but we are glad to report that he has improved considerably.

The members of the Ladies’ Aid discovered somehow that the pastor’s wife has birthdays, and that November 22 was the date of that notable event. Accordingly, about twelve invaded her home during the afternoon. Simply because he was the pastor’s wife’s husband, there was one man present, making thirteen in all.

November 13, Miss Kunz arrived in Burlington. We trust we shall see her in the primary class in the course of time. She is the fourth daughter.

We heard that Bro. James McKiernan was in town the other day. We should like to have seen him also.

Sunday, December 2, was the President’s day in Independence according to the stake schedule, and at the eleven o’clock service our stake president, Bro. G. E. Harrington, gave us one of his characteristic practical talks on the subject of the “Divorce” (Concluded on page 1187.)

"THE REORGANIZED CHURCH VS. SALVATION FOR THE DEAD."

LAMONI, IOWA, NOVEMBER 17, 1906.
PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Dear Brother: In harmony with your suggestion I offer a few criticisms by way of review of the pamphlet entitled, The Reorganized Church vs. Salvation for the Dead, by Elder Joseph F. Smith, Jr., of the church in Utah.

My first impression on reading this production was that Mr. Smith was unworthy of notice as a controversialist for three leading reasons:

1. He uses a coined word as an epithet to designate those whom he is opposing, a word that he knows they do not acknowledge as being their proper name, and further a word without significance. Mr. Smith and his associates may be of sufficient repute as scholars to entitle them to the right of coining new words and phrases; but if so they certainly ought to have regard to some rule in doing so. We see no possible application of the word Reorganite, by which he designates members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, to the people to whom he applies the word. The noun Organ has various meanings according to Webster. They are as follows:

1. An instrument or medium by which some important action is performed.
2. A natural part or structure in an animal or plant.
3. A component part performing an essential office in the working of any complex machine.
4. A medium of communication between one person or body and another.
5. A wind instrument.

The prefix re is used according to Webster as follows: A prefix signifying back, against, again, anew.

We suggest that Mr. Smith (or some one for him) explain what a "reorgan" is, applying any of the various shades of meaning of the prefix re to any of the various shades of meaning of the noun organ, and tell us what "reorgan" means. The suffix ite will then indicate the sympathizer with or adherent to this thing, whatever it may be.

This use of a senseless and inappropriate title to designate a people certainly puts Mr. Smith in a very bad light as a controversialist.

Another thing in connection with this. The issue between the people in Utah and the Reorganized Church is that the Utah people claim the church organized in 1830 has continued in an unbroken line; and the Reorganized Church claims that it has been disorganized and subsequently reorganized; hence if it is proper to call the adherents of the Reorganized Church "Reorganites," then as a logical sequence the other party should be called "Organites," whatever that may mean. Strange to say, this name used in this pamphlet has been adopted by other writers of the same faith; and instead of the word Josephite in the columns of the Desert News and other publications, we frequently see the word Reorganite. There is some significance to the word Brighamite or Josephite; for the suffix ite means a sympathizer with or adherent of. So a sympathizer with or adherent of Brigham or Joseph could with some sense of propriety be designated by the use of the suffix ite attached to the name.

2. This writer, while recognizing the issue between the two bodies to be on the rejection of the original organization, states on the fourth page of his pamphlet as follows:

It is not my purpose to discuss the foolish question of the "rejection of the Church," but to examine the Reorganite position in regard to salvation for the dead; and to show their lack of harmony with the teachings of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints pertaining to the dead, as those teachings have been revealed through the latter-day Prophet.

For a man to undertake to discuss the issues, or make an attack upon a people, and then brush aside the real issue with the statement, "It is not my purpose to discuss the foolish question," certainly relegated him to a low order as a disputant.

3. On the thirty-second or last page of his pamphlet he publishes what are entitled "Articles of Faith of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and attaches Joseph Smith's name to them. When we examine these articles of faith we find they have been changed and do not appear as they appeared over Joseph Smith's signature during his life. The fourth article reads in Smith's pamphlet as follows:

We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, while every publication of these articles during the lifetime of Joseph Smith that we have ever seen or examined reads, "We believe that these principles are." This may seem to some a slight and unimportant change; but a little closer examination will convince any one that the idea of Joseph Smith was that the principles and ordinances of the gospel as set forth in the epitome of faith were sufficient to save men; while the idea in the pamphlet by Joseph F. Smith, Jr., is that these are only the beginning and that something else of importance to the salvation of men was to follow.

Those acquainted with the history of the people of Utah will understand this, that the way is hereby paved for the introduction of that "New and Everlasting Covenant," which was published in 1852 for the first time, providing for a patriarchal order of marriage, including plurality of wives, thus making Joseph Smith responsible for leaving this inference that something else was to follow necessary to the salvation of men other than that which he had preached. We do not object to the Utah people changing their articles of faith to suit themselves; but what we do object to is that they forge the name of Joseph Smith to a document which he never signed. This smacks so much of dishonesty that we have thought that the author has shown himself unworthy of recognition.

For these three reasons we were inclined to let his publication pass with but incidental notice; but, as you suggest, we may succeed in getting the truth before the people upon these points by giving a little more attention to this disreputable document.

Mr. Smith, after refusing to discuss the real issue, undertakes to define the faith of the Reorganized Church as the title of his book indicates, “The Reorganized Church vs. Salvation for the Dead,” not even allowing us the courtesy of answering for ourselves as to whether we are for or against. After declaring, however, that he would not discuss the issue of rejection, he proceeds with the following profound piece of wisdom and logic:

It stands to reason that if the Lord rejected His Church with its dead because of transgression, or any other cause whatever, that He would not raise up a substitute church to carry on His work on earth and still keep the dead—who could in no wise be held responsible for the rejection—in suspension, and deny to them the privilege of receiving the ordinances of the Gospel by proxy according to the revealed plan of God as it was ordained from before the foundations of the world were laid, as a means of salvation to those who die without a knowledge of the Gospel. To any reasonable mind this truth would need no argument. Yet the “Reorganized” church declares that the Lord did this very thing; and in the light of the revelation given to the Prophet Joseph as well as those in the ancient Scriptures, which bear on this subject of salvation for the dead, their declaration is fatal to their organization; it stamps it as fraudulent and their officers as impostors. A church without salvation for the dead, according to the revealed will of God to the Prophet Joseph Smith, cannot be the Church of Christ.

This reasoning, if of any force whatever, militates against the church in Utah as forcibly as it does against the Reorganized Church, for the reason that there was an interim in which they did not practice baptism for the dead; and though the interim is not of so long duration as with the Reorganized Church, the interim, if it exists at all, would reflect as much in the shorter period as in the longer against the people who failed to practice.

On page 7 Mr. Smith tells us that baptism for the dead was discontinued in the river at Nauvoo by command of God, October 3, 1841, and resumed in the font in the Lord’s House November 21, 1841, an interim of nearly two months. Subsequently another interim occurred when they were driven from Nauvoo and the Lord’s House, and they did not practice this ordinance until some time after they arrived in the valleys of the mountains; and the inference from Mr. Smith’s writing is very plain that their position was that they were not to resume this practice without a direct command from God. He says:

These ordinances continued to be performed until the Temple was completed and the Saints were driven from Nauvoo. The spirit of Elijah’s work, which had rested so mightily upon the Prophet Joseph, continued with Brigham Young and the “Mormon” people during their travels in the wilderness, and when they arrived in the valleys of the Rocky Mountains, the first commandment to them from the Lord, was to build a Temple to His name, where the ordinances of salvation for the living and for the dead could be performed. This work was done as speedily as possible and from that day to the present the spirit of Temple building and of Temple work for the salvation of mankind has continued with the Church.

If, then, they were directly commanded of God to resume this work, and that after this command the spirit of temple-building and temple-work rested upon them, they are in theory exactly in harmony with the theory of the Reorganized Church with which they find so much fault, namely, that baptism for the dead could not be performed without a direct command from God. The issue, then, according to Mr. Smith, is not in the principle involved, but on the command of God, they having accepted what they consider a command, and we rejecting that which they produce as a command of God. But he does not produce the revelation, nor a citation to where it can be found; he simply affirms that the command came. If it did, they are right in resuming the ordinance of baptism for the dead; and the Reorganized Church is also right in waiting until satisfied that the command has been given from the Lord.

We think we are justified in questioning the correctness of the statement that the Lord has given a command; for no less an authority than Brigham Young, then their prophet, seer, and revelator, whom Mr. Smith affirms the spirit of Elijah’s work had rested upon mightily, affirmed on February 14, 1853, at the time the ground was consecrated for the building of the temple in Salt Lake City, that no command of God was necessary. The following are his words, as found in the Millennial Star, volume 15, page 391:

“Some might query whether a revelation had been given to build a house to the Lord, but he is a wicked and slothful servant who doeth nothing but what his Lord commandeth, when he knoweth his master’s will. I know a temple is needed, and so do you; and when we know a thing, why do we need a revelation to compel us to do that thing? If the Lord and all the people want a revelation, I can give one concerning this temple. “In a few days I shall be able to give a plan of the temple on paper, and then if all heaven, or any good man on the earth will suggest any improvements, we will receive and adopt them.”

The position taken by Mr. Joseph F. Smith, Jr., that the Lord commanded, is a reasonable one; but in strong contrast with the blasphemous statement of Brigham Young, that no revelation was needed; and that if the Lord or the people wanted a revelation he, Brigham, could give one; that he himself would give a plan for the temple and then hold himself in readiness to receive suggestions from Heaven in regard to improvements.

We are interested in knowing where the revelation is that Mr. Smith refers to. Would like to examine it. When we see it we shall be better able to determine as to its genuineness. Until we do have it presented to us surely we are not to be blamed for demanding that a revelation from God shall be presented to us for temple-building and baptism for the dead before we resume the practice. H. C. Smith.

DEFECTIVE LEGISLATION.

All legislation should have within itself a clear, definite setting forth of what is intended to be covered by it. Giving limitations as to the rights of plaintiff and also defendant as far as possible, we presume it has been the bonafide intention of all good men to so construct the phraseology of their enactments as to meet the necessities of each and every case. This will apply to the several enactments made by the church as well as to the different legislatures of our country. From time to time it becomes painfully apparent that even the wisdom of our wisest senators comes far short of meeting the acute conditions that arise. A medley of interests makes it a perplexing problem to legislate without doing violence to some other points necessary to the points necessary to the carrying out of the intention of the bill, or the incorporating of some items that do violence to some other enactments or the interests of other individuals.

This is patent from the fact that in Ohio they got their code so mixed they secured a commission of judges to correct the code. And so did the Iowa legislature get the code so complicated that they saw the necessity of having it revised by a commission. As a church we have and are making some mistakes, and, to the mind of the writer, some that leave too wide a range for the individual opinion to be substituted for what might be reduced to writing and be recognized as the universal law of the church.

Without further prefacing this article, the writer wishes to call attention to the question of adultery or fornication as it relates to married people. The church has passed a resolution that adultery or fornication is the only just cause for divorce, and that the innocent parties are at liberty to marry again, and may remain in the church as members in good standing. In this we as a church have taken liberties that are not granted us by the words of the Savior. For in Matthew 5:32 Jesus says:

Whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery: and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery.

Again:

Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and whoso marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery.—Matthew 19:9.

Then again in Luke 16:18 we have it:

Whosoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery: and whosoever marrieth her that is put away from her husband committeth adultery.

Thus we have three statements: "whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery," "whoso marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery," and "whosoever marrieth her that is put away from her husband committeth adultery."

Why the above inhibition we fail to understand. Why the innocent should be restrained from a full enjoyment of all the rights and inurements that those who never were married are entitled to, is a mystery.

The Inspired Translation affords us no relief, for it teaches practically the same thing as almost the same wording is used as in the King James Translation. The only recourse I see for the church to justify its present attitude is that offered by Jesus Christ in justification of what Moses did in giving divorces, Matthew 19:8: "He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it was not so."

It should be remembered, however, that this statement was given in answer to the question propounded by Pharisees, "Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause?"—Matthew 19:3.

While there is provision for the putting away of an adulterous woman or man, there is no authorization for the remarrying of the guilty or innocent parties. The fact that Jesus makes the statement, "but from the beginning it was not so," precludes any interpretation that we by inclination may desire to offer upon what he has said.

I am aware that many are wont to bring in Paul's statement as found in 1 Corinthians 7:15, thinking to offset the words of Christ thereby. It is as follows:

But if the unbelieving depart, let him depart. A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases, but God hath called us to peace.

This may furnish some kind of a pretext as a convenience to construe and modify the words of Jesus Christ to those who would have it so. But even this fails. Paul says in the same chapter, 1 Corinthians 7:10, 11:

And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord. Let not the wife depart from her husband; but and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away his wife.

Here Paul tells us, "Let not the wife depart from her husband; but and if she depart, let her remain unmarried."

If the sister that separates from her husband is not permitted to marry, and the only relief offered is that she become reconciled to her husband, would it not apply equally to a brother or an unbeliever? If the believing sister is forbidden to marry after she leaves her husband, would not the same prohibition stand good if her husband would leave her?

I have tried to reason the above from a scriptural standpoint. It is strange that the latter-day revelations have not given something more along these
1. A man marries a woman all in good faith believing that she is a pure, virtuous woman. Shortly he discovers that she is and was otherwise. The man leaves the woman—they separate. Is he justified in the separation and the marrying of another woman?

2. A brother puts away his wife. They live apart for years. He does not accuse her of adultery. She desires to live with him. Has the church any right to action while neither of them marry again?

3. If desertion is a presumptive evidence of adultery, what length of time is granted the deserter before the presumption is good that he is guilty of adultery?

4. Why should the presumption of adultery fall upon the one that deserts his wife and goes to other parts, and not to the one who has put his wife away and lived apart for years?

5. A brother or sister continues to live with his or her companion after it becomes known to each that the other is guilty of adultery, and continues in it. Is this adultery? and has the church the right of interference? and would condonation on the part of the injured interfere? and would condonation on the part of the injured mitigate the evil and stand as a bar to any action by the church?

6. Where divorces are obtained because of physical inadaptation, where does the church stand, it having taken the position that the only just cause for divorce and remarriage is adultery?

7. Where it is found that members of the church are guilty of the crime of incest, having married near relatives, and are bringing children into the world that will not only be a charge to themselves but to the state because of mental defectiveness and physical inability, has the church any right to action? and which will be the greater sin, to encourage them to separate or to let them remain together? If they separate after discovering their mistake, and are divorced, and marry others, where will the church stand in this case? the church having decided that adultery is the only cause for separation and legal dissolution of the marriage vow.

8. Where parties were once married, separate, and are divorced, some time after being divorced they meet, become reconciled to each other, and live together as husband and wife for days or even weeks, and finally marry, how are we to regard them? If as adulterers, would we be justified in expelling them from the church if either or both of them had been guilty once before? or if they refuse to consider their living together as adultery, even where they were not guilty of adultery before, should we expell them?

9. If a man puts away his wife for legal cause, and marries again, and his wife by the second marriage is put away for legal cause, or dies, and he returns and is married a second time to his former or first wife, does the church interfere? and is he guilty of sin? Is it adultery?

In Deuteronomy 24:1-4, we are told:

When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favor in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and send her out of his house, and when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife. And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement, and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife; her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the Lord; and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

This article is written simply as suggestive of conditions as they exist.

It does not necessarily follow that every one of those conditions exist now. All are possibilities. We should treat the marriage relation as a sacred matter. For by any unwise action on our part as a church or as elders we may cause much misery. Better lean on the side of mercy.

While I do not see any provision for a divorce save for fornication and no permission for remarriage, yet under the existing conditions I fail to see how we can avoid it. While in London, England, in conversation with one that is in close touch with the legal profession of that country, I was told that many of the leading lawyers were in favor of changing the laws governing divorce cases, and to modify them so that it will be easier and less expensive to obtain a divorce, thereby preventing much of the murdering that is being committed now as the only means by which they can find relief from their present obligations, and be at liberty to marry again.

Many will say that they know how we should act in each of the cases enumerated above. A lack of understanding causes irregularity, distrust, and confusion; and in the absence of any law by the church, who can speak authoritatively in such matters?

THE PLAN OF THE ATONEMENT OR THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS.

The necessity of the plan rests in the fact of the fall from the first or primitive condition, (which for convenience we will call the Edenic life). Man's condition before this fall was one of innocence and purity, in harmony with God his creator. As God was to him so was he to the lower order of created beings over which God had made him ruler.

He also was provided with means of prolonging that life, as well as a law by obedience to which when the time was ripe he (and his kind) might pass from the Edenic to a higher life—the immortal.

Sin came and man was driven out of the garden, (in mercy), and thus prevented from the use of that which, under the altered conditions, would have rendered it for ever impossible for him to regain the primal purity of the Edenic life. When he could no longer perpetuate mortal life on which he was now entered, by means of the fruits and herbs which he might find outside of the garden, he must undergo a separation of the spirit from the body.

Here we begin to trace the details of the plan. As none of Adam's posterity could, in justice, be held to the Edenic life. When he could no longer perpetuate mortal life on which he was now entered, by means of the fruits and herbs which he might find outside of the garden, he must undergo a separation of the spirit from the body.

And why a restoration? These great masses, born, reared, and dying in ignorance, amid sinful environments, will in the resurrected condition need teachers. As Adam had God for his companion and instructor, so these will need instructors who are conversant with the divine plan, for their future advancement to a still higher plane. It is also reasonable and just to suppose that all of Adam's posterity are entitled to an equal opportunity and trial with their primal ancestor. We shall see as we proceed that the Eden life was to be the transition period to a yet higher plane, and to Adam would have been granted an opportunity to pass beyond the Edenic to a higher condition, that of absolute immortality; so to all his posterity must be given a like opportunity under equally favorable conditions. If this were not the case, why the tree of life in the midst of the garden? Was it to be a mere mockery? If there be any reason or logic, it must be that Adam had not yet partaken of that fruit, for he was driven out to prevent him from eating of the fruit, and thereby becoming an immortal sinner as well as frustrating God's purpose in the creation of the race, as a Savior would have then been useless and God's work in vain.

The logic and trend of events show that there must be a careful preparation by right living in order to secure a partaking of those means by which immortality will be realized. As man is combination of the material and spiritual, so the transition or change must be wrought by a commingling of both material and spiritual forces.

Having now ascertained the fact of man's fall from his primitive estate, and some of the means or provisions for his restoration to the primitive condition of earth-life, which was and will again be the transition period or passing from mortality to immortality, we will now notice that there is a general as well as a special provision in the scheme of atonement; and as the general plan will be worked out or evolved during the millennium and continue beyond that time after the general or final resurrection, we will now consider the first part or special feature of the great plan.

This part is contained in the gospel by which those who accept its terms or conditions may be born into the Eden life as to the spirit, and through the first resurrection pass into the condition of immortality and become the educators of those who will not as yet have passed through, or completed their time of trial, or mortal state. Living the Christlife (which is the Edenic life) here, they will pass through death but without corruption, experiencing an instantaneous change from mortality to immortality, that condition into which Adam might have passed while yet in the garden had he continued obedient to the command given him.

It is further evident that the Eden life was not intended for the ultimate or final state. If it were, why permit man to fall, and thereby prevent him from fulfilling the purpose of his creation, and then through death, redemption, and resurrection elevate him to a vastly higher plane of life than that from which he fell?

The simple fact, revealed through holy writ, that by compliance with certain definite conditions men have passed, and will continue to pass to that higher plane, furnishes the strongest possible assurance that the Eden was not and never will be the final state.

Man must either go beyond, or pass below it. God placed the tree of life in the garden, and both Ezekiel and John saw with prophetic vision the time when that tree and others of its kind will again be on earth.

We read that God walked in the garden in the cool of the day and the presumption is that he thus walked for the purpose of talking with Adam and Eve, as is evident from the fact that they hid, or thought to hide themselves from the view of their divine friend. When he came for his accustomed walk, they were not in their usual place of meeting.

Now why did he walk and converse with those whom he had created? Was it a merely idle purpose? or was it that he might instruct them in the principles and duties of their present and future life?

We can now see that the plan of the atonement, which includes the gospel, has in view two classes. 1. Those to whom the gospel is presented in this life. 2. Those who will be spared of the nations who are alive at the time of our Lord's second coming, and those who will be born to the earth-life during his thousand years' reign on the earth, also many who will come forth in the final resurrection. The first class are those who, through a pure or Christ-life developed through the gospel are trained and educated to be kings and priests unto God, or instructors and rulers over those who have not as yet had the privilege or opportunity of learning the gospel lesson, as well as those who will not have reached the age of accountability when the millennium will begin.

We can here see the reasonableness and justice and love of God for the works of his hand as evinced in the great plan of atonement. How plainly it now appears that “God will have all men to be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth”; not a part, but all truth concerning their relations to God and their own destiny. As one of old said, “All things are yours, whether things present, or things to come.”

All things and all truths are the prospective possession of all the children of God. If then the Saints or people of God are by virtue of divine sonship and relation to Christ to come, through knowledge, into possession of all truth, will they not thereby be amply qualified to instruct and govern the nations?

Jesus said to his disciples on a certain occasion, “Ye that have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye shall also sit on twelve thrones, judging [ruling] the twelve tribes of Israel.”

That this judging should be understood in the sense of ruling, may be seen from the parable where the Savior says to one, “Have thou authority over ten cities,” and to another, “Have thou authority over five cities.”

Again, Daniel says, “And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever”; and again, “and the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him.”

John the Revelator says further, “And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it [the city].”

If we would inquire who are these kings here spoken of, we may find the answer in Revelation 5:10: “And hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign [rule] on the earth.” And this answer is further confirmed in the twentieth chapter and fourth verse: “And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.”

Sixth verse: “Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: . . . but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign [rule] with him a thousand years.” We now come to a very brief consideration of a most interesting subject,—“The millennium.”

This very interesting subject is one on which most of the so-called Christian sects are strangely silent, while yet professing a belief in the Bible as the word of God.

It will, I believe, be profitable to look upon it as in some sort a sequel to the first resurrection, or a transitional period between the first and second resurrections; and also a school-time to prepare the world or its inhabitants for the final and complete restoration to the Edenic life or primal condition.

We are told in God’s word that it is his purpose to reconcile all things unto himself in Christ Jesus. Now if this be true, what more reasonable than to suppose that there must be a time for instruction in the Christ-life, by which alone any or all of the human family can come into harmony with, or reconciliation to God. Justice on God’s part requires this, no less than mercy and love. We must not forget that no man or woman, other than Adam and Eve, can be held responsible for the primal sin, which is the sole cause of the perverse environments into which they find themselves thrust; neither for the intellectual malformation which hinders so many from entering into the Christ-life while in this present physical condition.

God’s plan for the restoration of the race must, in part, be regarded as a failure, if the period of punishment of the wicked was to be final, or even a prophecy of their future state.

We come now to the consideration of the future of those of the second class, i. e., those who have never had the privilege of the gospel in this life, being born in sin and ignorance, yet for whom Christ died just as much as any. Let us not forget that “As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive.” What for? To again consign to a condition of ignorance and woe? The wonder is that so many will even profess to believe in a god who would do thus. Annihilation were more merciful. This dying in Adam being the separation of body and spirit, as well as a separation of man from God, the being made alive in Christ will be the reuniting of the body and spirit through the resurrection. And what then? As to Adam was given under the most favorable conditions an opportunity of a development in Eden, so to his posterity must be granted a like opportunity; and as he was in his first estate untrammeled by sin, so to these also.

Hence the binding of Satan and shutting him up in prison, making it impossible for him to tempt mankind until the little time at the end of the thousand years. But to those of the nations who will be born during the millennium must come their time of trial by temptation. Hence the loosing of Satan for a little season. Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, we can now see that the opportunity of a victory over self and Satan is not for a few only but for all God’s creatures.

JOSEPH F. SMITH’S “DEFENSE” BEFORE JUDGE RITCHIE.

Upon request of Attorney F. S. Richards, the case of the state of Utah against President Joseph F. Smith, charged with unlawful cohabitation, was today transferred from Judge Armstrong’s division of the court to Judge Ritchie’s division, before which President Smith appeared forthwith and entered a plea of guilty and was fined three hundred dollars. . . . President Smith himself made a statement to the court which follows in full: “May it please the court: I desire respectfully to present a brief statement in my behalf. My first marriage was contracted in 1866, and my last in 1884, more than twenty-two years ago. These marriages were all entered into with the sanction of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and, as we believe, with the approval of the Lord. According to our faith and the law of the church they were eternal in duration.

“In the tacit general understanding that was had in 1890 and the years subsequent thereto regarding what were classed as the old cases of cohabitation, I have appreciated the magnanimity of the American people in not enforcing a policy that in their minds was unnecessarily harsh, but which assigned the settlement of this difficult problem to the onward progress of time.

“Since the year 1890, a very large percentage of the polygamous families have ceased to exist, until now the number within the jurisdiction of this court is very small and marriages in violation of the law have been and now are prohibited. In view of this situation, which has fixed with certainty a result that can be easily measured up, the family relations in the old cases of that time have been generally left undisturbed. So far as my own case is concerned, I, like others who had entered into solemn religious obligations, sought to the best of my ability to comply with all requirements pertaining to the trying position in which we were placed. I have felt secure in the protection of that magnanimous sentiment which was extended as an olive-branch in 1890 and subsequent years to those old cases of plural family relationships which came within its purview, as did mine.

“When I accepted the manifesto, issued by President Wilford Woodruff, I did not understand that I would be expected to abandon and discard my wives. Knowing the sacred covenants and obligations which I had assumed, by reason of these marriages, I have conscientiously tried to discharge the responsibilities attending them, without being offensive to any one. I have never flaunted my family relations before the public, nor have I felt a spirit of defiance against the law, but, on the contrary, I have always desired to be a law-abiding citizen. In considering the trying position in which I have been placed, I trust that your honor will exercise such leniency in your sen-

[Christ before Pilate made an effectual defense. His defense of silent innocence was such that Pilate could not pronounce him guilty. Christ had broken no law! Paul before Agrippa and Festus made a noble defense which was a masterpiece of eloquence and led them to say, “This man doth nothing worthy of death or of bonds.” Paul had broken no law! But the defense of Joseph F. Smith before Judge Ritchie was hardly in the same class. In substance it was, “I have presumed on the tolerance of the people and have broken the law and I hope your honor will be easy on me.” He claims that having obeyed the law of “celestial” marriage, so called, he is placed where he must break the laws of the land; this notwithstanding the fact that God says that “he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land.” (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.) Let us cite two facts and draw one deduction. First, those who have not obeyed the law of plural marriage have not had difficulty with the law of the land. Second, those who have obeyed the law of plural marriage have violated the laws of the land, on their own confession. Third, the law of plural marriage is not of God or its devotees would have no need to violate the laws of the land.”—EDITORS.]

MEN SHOULD WEAR WEDDING-RINGS.

Is there any reason why a woman should go around with a ring on her finger saying to all the world, “I am disposed of, don’t look at me; I belong to a gentleman, and if you show the slightest interest I’ll call the police,” unless her husband does the same?

We believe that it would be even better for men to wear wedding-rings than for women to wear them.

For instance, the ring would save a lot of explanation when a sensible man is asked to waste his money in drink or in gambling or otherwise. He would simply lift up his hand with the wedding-ring on it, look solemn, and go his way. The others would hang guilty heads and say to themselves at once, “He means that he has got a wife and children at home and he has better ways of spending his money than with us. Let us honor that ring.”

The wedding-ring on the man’s finger would also be a necessary indication and guide for young women. Nothing is more deserving of sympathy than the average unmarried girl wandering through the earth conscious of the fact that she must select some imperfect creature and reconcile herself to live with his imperfections all the rest of her life.

She owes it to herself and the future generation to be very particular. It is her principal duty and business to investigate men as a class and as individuals. She ought not to be allowed to waste her investigating powers on men already married when such a simple little badge as a wedding-ring could act as a red flag and warn her away.

The wedding-ring also would act as a useful reminder and deterrent for a good many men inclined to be foolish. And the sight of a wedding-ring would keep men of good character from asking the ringed man to take things to drink or otherwise play the fool.

Many a man misbehaves himself because he thinks it will hurt no one but himself. But with a ring on his finger to tell of a wife and a family at home, he would be ashamed to do anything unworthy of them.

We not only recommend that husbands wear wedding-rings as their wives do, but also that the husband’s ring be fastened on so that it can not come off.

That is the least, it seems to us, that wives could reasonably ask. It would do a great deal of good, absolutely no harm; so it could not be objected to.

We are aware that many husbands—especially in Milwaukee—wear wedding-rings to-day. But the number should be vastly increased. And we advise the young bride now, at the beginning, when the new husband is like putty in the hands of the window-glass man, to get the ring on his finger and fasten it there without the loss of time.

Do not fail to select a big one. Twenty-three pennyweights would be about the right weight.—Arthur Brisbane, in Purity Advocate, vol. 6, no. 2.

CONTINUOUS REVELATION.

There are three conceptions which underlie religious thinking. They may be defined as, No God, Some God, All God.

The first conception is entertained by very few. Atheism has no place in modern philosophy. There are, says James Martineau, three forms under which it is possible to think of the universe: “Given the first, it is intellectually thought out; the second, it blindly grows; the third, it mechanically shuffles into equilibrium.” The last is the atheistic conception of the universe, and it no longer has any standing among thoughtful men.

The conception of Some God is that which formerly underlay the current theology. God was conceived as having wound up the universe as a man winds up a watch, and as interfering with its operations from time to time by special acts. These acts were variously designated as miracles, special providences, revelations, inspirations, and the like. They were all conceived of as special episodes in the history of the world of matter and the world of men. Our correspondent, bred in this view, finds it difficult to harmonize its assumptions with the modern teaching of science, history, and literature, and he would find it equally difficult to reconcile it with the modern teaching respecting the world religions.

The third conception is All God. There are in nature no natural forces; there is only one eternal and infinite force; there are in life no beneficent influences; there is only one infinite and eternal beneficent influence. God is, to use Paul’s phrase, “the all in all.” According to this view, God is the source and the foundation of all material life. All its springs are in him. All providence is special providence. Miracles are only striking manifestations of his perpetual presence. There can be no such thing as a violation of the law of nature, for this would be a violation of the laws of God’s own being. Revelation is not an episode. [Italics ours, HERALD Editors.] God does not now and then emerge from his hiding and show himself to men. He is always manifesting himself to men and in men. Inspiration is not an episode confined to one epoch of human history, or one nation among nations.—The Outlook, December 1, 1906.

\[IL SANTO.\]

We had just arrived in a prominent North Coast town of New South Wales for a few hours, and, from the large number of people at the hotels and still coming, I surmised there was some special function coming off that night. By inquiry, I found it was the fancy-dress ball given by the Roman Catholic Church.

“I can’t understand it,” said my informant; “the Roman Catholics had a bazaar lately, with plenty of raffling and gambling, and now a ball, to get money for the church. The puzzle to me is, why do so many Protestants attend them and spend their money freely to make it a grand success, while their own churches have to go begging for support when they have anything on. No, we don’t believe in balls and we don’t allow any gambling at our bazaars any more. Yes, we used to have it.” To this I suggested that possibly their people still liked that sort of thing and dancing too, or they would not go to the Roman Catholics to get it. He said it looked very much that way.

While waiting for tea, we thought a lot about the present apostate state of Christendom and longed for the time when the restored gospel could be preached in this place—yet wondered what kind of reception the message would get among the people who seemed of the same mind as those in the days of Noah. Then I considered, How shrewd is the “Mother” church in catering to Protestant tastes, as well as to their own members, to get money to carry on their work, making money out of the modern tendency prophesied by Paul, “lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God”; “having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof” (2 Timothy 3:1-7); the church getting revenue out of everything she was warned against. Protestants who patronize such affairs should be ashamed to own they belonged to any church.
And I thought of how the foregoing links into the following facts lately received from over the waters: Last year, a Roman Catholic layman, Antonio Fogazzaro, of Milan, Italy, published a book entitled "Il Santo" (a romance), in which he seeks to raise the Roman Catholic Church in the estimation of all right-thinking people. His book asserts the claim that true Catholicism consists not in blind subservience to the priesthood, nor yet in mere ceremonies, but rather, in right conduct on the part of its members and ministry.

One would think the church would at least silently allow its people to read such a book, but not so. Last April "Sacred congregation of Cardinals, Officers and Delegates of the Holy See" condemned "Il Santo" and placed it in the list of forbidden books. The zeal of all enlightened Catholics must have received a shock when they read the decree, which says, "Therefore let no one of whatever rank or condition dare to reprint the above-mentioned books in any place or language; nor, if printed, dare to read or keep them at peril of the penalties in the index of forbidden books." Even the gifted writer of the book is reported to have submitted meekly to this oppression.

And it seemed to me that a church which will suppress a book having such excellent teaching and at the same time countenance the many questionable ways used by her devotees in raising church funds, can not stand very high in the estimation of right-thinking people.—G. R. Wells, in Australian Gospel Standard, October 1, 1906.

VALUABLE FIND IN PAPYRI.

LONDON, November 28.—It now is possible to give further details of the remarkable find of papyri as a result of the efforts of Doctors Grenfell and Hunt of the Greco-Roman branch of the Egypt exploration fund at Oxyrhynchus. The find consists of no fewer than one hundred and thirty boxes of papyri ranging in date from the second century B. C. to the sixth century A. D. They comprise all classes of literature, many fragments of lost or even unknown classical works, and some most important fragments unknown to Christian literature.

A most important find is a vellum leaf containing forty-five lines of gospel which has a variation from the authorized version. The subject is the visit of Jesus and his disciples to the temple of Jerusalem and their meeting there with the Pharisee who rebukes them with their failure to perform the necessary ceremonial of purification. In the dialogue which follows, which resembles in some respects Matthew 23: 25, the Pharisee describes with considerable fullness and detail the formalities he has observed, whereupon Jesus delivers an eloquent, crushing reply, contrasting outward with inward purity.

As regards the literary value of the fragment the discoverer makes some interesting remarks. He says:

"Among the most remarkable features of the fragment is its cultivated style, picturesqueness, vigor of phraseology, which includes several words not found in the New Testament, and its display of curious familiarity with the topography of the temple and the Jewish ceremonies of purification. There can be little doubt when the fragment is published, as it shortly will be, that there will be as much controversy among theologians as was provoked by the discovery of "The sayings of Jesus" in another mound.

Other Christian fragments of considerable value were found, including a vellum leaf of the fourth or fifth century of the lost Greek original of the acts of St. Peter, which are known only in Latin, and a leaf of papyrus of an unknown version of the Acts of St. John.—Chicago Tribune, November 29, 1906.

A CITY FIVE HUNDRED MILES LONG.

A city five hundred miles long and one hundred miles wide, extending over a strip of the Atlantic coast from Portland, Maine, to Washington, District of Columbia, is actually in making. This unified metropolis of the East—the greatest New York, if one may so call it—was proclaimed some years ago by John Brisben Walker as a dream of the distant future, and others have forecasted such a growth of the larger municipalities that overlapping must eventually take place. The present disposition of civic populations to spread out gives renewed force to such predictions. People are unwilling to spend more than two hours a day, that is, one hour each way, in getting to and from the business center. Such a prescription in the pedestrian days circumscribed a radius of less than four miles as the outer limit of a town's expansion. With the introduction of omnibuses the radius was doubled. Afterward came the railway with its local and express services, making it possible for the homeseeker to live twenty-five or thirty miles from the business center and still be within reasonable distance of his daily work.

But transportation facilities are in process of constant development. It has been demonstrated experimentally in Germany that train speeds of one hundred and twenty-five miles an hour are feasible. When these have been rendered commercially practicable, a man living in Hartford or Springfield will be only an hour from his business office in Wall Street or State Street. The resident of Chester or Wilmington may be either a Government employee in one of the departments of the federal ward on the Potomac or may be engaged in private enterprise on Manhattan Island.

Mothers’ Home Column
EDITED BY FRANCES.

Dear Mothers and Friends of the Children: Are you a friend of temperance and a lover of this latter-day work? If so you can not fail to include among the gifts you intend for your own and the children of your friends at this holiday season, the seventh number of the Birth Offering Series soon to be on sale at the Herald Office. It is the story by Frances which has been lately running in the Hope, entitled, “Object-lessons on temperance; or, the Indian maiden and her white deer,” and is a story intended to teach the young to abhor even the name of liquor. With one exception, every incident in it is taken from real life. Through the courtesy of Mr. C. H. Engle of Hartford, Michigan, the book embodies an epitome of the beautiful love story told by the Indian chief, Pokagon, in his book entitled, Queen of the Woods.

It may also interest mothers to know that the names of those little ones who have Birth Offerings to their credit, and which have not appeared in other volumes, will be in this.

Will you not send fifty cents to the Herald Office for this volume, and by so doing place good reading in the hands of the children of your friends? All money sent for books, or as Birth Offerings, is used for that purpose. Price of book, neatly bound in cloth, 50 cents.

At Christmas-Time.

“Unwrap thy life of many wants and fine:
He who with Christ will dine
Shall see no table curiously spread
But fish and barley bread.
Where readeast thou that Jesus bade us pray,
Give us our sumptuous fare from day to day?”

All day I had been toiling until body, brain, and spirit were weary—weary even unto death. Nor had the toil begun with the day. All through the previous night I had tossed restless upon my bed, for my busy brain, even in sleep, was not willing to let the body rest.

I had risen in the small hours of the morning for this was the day before Christmas and to-morrow would bring—what? I found myself asking.

Yes, to-morrow was Christmas Day. Guests had been invited to spend the day with us, and though for the past month I had every day been working beyond my strength, I must not fail now, not at the very last when so much of all that had been wrought before depended upon the finishing touches of this day. So hastily rising and donning my clothes—please do not ask if I forgot to say my prayers—I had stolen quietly down to light the menu for my dinner. This I will follow with roast. After this an entree will be proper and—yes, I believe I will have mushrooms on crust.

This I will follow with roast. I really find it difficult to decide which I prefer, a saddle of venison or turkey, but will use wild plum sauce and have green peas and saratoga potatoes with either one.

Ah, here is something dainty. I must have this, salpicon of fruits (oranges, bananas, grapes, and sugar served in glasses). Next I will have—let me see—yes, I will have frozen punch followed by game and salads. Now how many courses is that? One, two, three, four, five, six, seven.

Seven; then I need only one more and as that is the last I may choose a variety. I will have either puddings or mince pie together with ice-cream, cakes, nuts, and coffee. That is all, I believe, and I do hope Martha will prove to be skillful both in preparing and serving—and—and—

“And you have time for all this,” said a sweet, gentle voice which I instantly recognized, “and yet have not time to heed—not even to recall the plea which has been made in behalf of the Christ-child—the one whose birth you have set apart to-morrow for celebrating?”

“Nay, you are mistaken,” I said. “To-morrow, it is true, we celebrate the birth of Christ, but no plea has been made for him. Indeed, he needs nothing which we can give and asks only that we honor and obey him. It was for homeless children that the plea was made, not for the Christ-child.”

“That those are homeless little ones,” the angel asked.

“They are,” I answered, yet reluctantly, and could not understand why I felt no joy in the presence of my visitor whose coming at the Thanksgiving season had made my heart throb with joy.

“If they are his, then you should remember his words: ‘Inasmuch as you have done it unto one of the least of these ye have done it unto me.' Have you forgotten your answer to me upon a former visit? 'To say and not do. To profess love for God, when we show so little to man is hypocrisy?'

I hesitated as if not knowing what to answer. Had I said this? Yes, I must have said it else my visitor would not so assert. But what was the matter with me? I took no joy in being reminded of that, which at the time had given me exquisite pleasure, and I felt both pain and humiliation that this was so. At last I said slowly and with downcast eyes, "I must have said it, but—I do not remember."

"Do not remember!" and there was in the voice of my visitor an inexpressible tone of sadness. "You have forgotten then. But what is this?" he added, as he laid his hand softly upon the sheet of paper upon which the menu for my Christmas dinner was made out.

Up to that moment I had felt not the slightest compunction of conscience, but rather had taken pride in the dinner which I should serve on Christmas Day. But with this question there swept over me as it were a burning wave of shame, for all at once I realized that there had not been one single thought of the Christ-child or his suffering little ones in it. But, feeling constrained to answer, I said in almost a whisper, "It is a list of what I shall serve to my guests at to-morrow's dinner."

"May I see it?"

The voice seemed to penetrate my very soul and I would have given worlds, had they been mine, could I only have said No. But there was left me no alternative but to answer, "Yes, if you wish.

Then I sat with beating heart and downcast eyes, while until silence he scanned the page I had written. When at last he came to the end he lifted his eyes to my face and there was in them a pathos, a depth of utter sorrow such as I had often thought must have been in those of Christ when he asked, "Could ye not watch with me one hour?" and then he said slowly, "Could you not have spared one of these courses—just one—for the Master?"

God pity those who are banished from the presence of their Lord, if they feel worse than I did at that moment; and when he said to me, "Look, and see how the Master dines," I had hardly power to turn my eyes where he pointed.

Before me there opened a wide vista of land and water. Upon the wet sands which met the blue waves of the lake, just as the rising sun was gilding their sparkling crests, I saw beside a lighted fire—a fire upon which some fish were broiling, the solitary but majestic form of a man engaged in watching them. But while I looked I saw his attention drawn from his fish by the fire, when he asked, "Children, have you any meat?" and when they answered, "No," then he commanded them to "cast the net on the right side of the ship." I saw them laboring to drag to the shore the multitude of fishes, and one too impatient to wait I saw cast himself into the lake and swim to the shore. Then I heard the voice of Jesus say to them all, "Come and dine," and "he took bread and gave them and fish likewise;"
The vision slowly faded from my view, and opening my eyes to my inexpressible delight I found I had been dreaming. It is true I had been weary upon retiring; but thank God, though it was with work connected with Christmas, it was not in preparation of any such dinner as in my sleep I had been preparing. Curiously enough the description of a dinner like this, which the day before I had been discussing with a friend, had mingled with my dream in a strange fashion. But oh, the joy to know that it was only a dream. That though Christmas was near, it was not too near for me to make provision to share a part of its cheer and brightness with God's homeless little ones, and to lay up for myself memories so pure and precious, though obeying the counsel of God, that I would not fear—whether sleeping or waking—to talk of them with his messengers, the angels.

And as I lay there waiting for the dawn to grow brighter, there came to my memory that beautiful poem of Alice Cary's, "The fire by the sea," and I softly repeated to myself the last two stanzas:

'Tis long and long and long ago,
Since the rosy lights began to glow
O'er the hills of Galilee;
And with eager eyes and lifted hands
The seven fishers saw on the sands
The fire of coals by the sea,—
On the wet, wild sands by the sea.
'Tis long ago, yet faith in our souls
Is kindled just by that fire of coals
That streamed o'er the mists of the sea,
When Peter, girding his fisher's coat,
Went over the net and out of the boat,
To answer, "Lovest thou me?"
Thrice over, "Lovest thou me?"
As I did so, I said, God grant that I may give at this Christmas-tide as true an answer to the thrice repeated question as Peter gave that far-away day by the sea.

Saints Herald: Since writing an article in Herald of October 5, "On Prohibition not understood," I have been hearing from several of the Saints, some in foreign countries, asking various questions. I can not answer all unless through the columns of the Herald.

"What is the initiative?"
The initiative is the right of a given percentage of the voters to call for and compel a vote on any sort of law which they wish to propose.

"What is the referendum?"
The referendum is the right of a given percentage of voters, within a reasonable length of time, to demand a popular vote on any bill which has been passed by the legislature, or by congress, or by the city council, a petition of such voters operating as a stay of proceedings until a vote can be had. Thus the people can veto any franchise, any corrupt act of the legislature, or any steal of congress at any time they may see fit. The referendum is merely the right of veto in the hands of the people just as the right now exists in the president, the governor, or the mayor.

The recall is merely the right of the people to discharge or recall any official who proves to be unsatisfactory. Who would be so foolish as to employ a lawyer or a doctor or a clerk or a farm-hand or a chambermaid, under such conditions that he or she could not be discharged if unsatisfactory? Why then should people elect an official whom they can not discharge?

JOHN ZAHND.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, December 1, 1906.

*Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I have contributed a few lines to your interesting and valuable paper. I love to read and treasure its sacred truths. I have perused its pages for forty-five years, and have been greatly benefited, and educated in the gospel line of work. I am thankful that the Herald still lives to bless the Saints and all lovers of truth.

Having been appointed to labor in this stake the last three years, I have reported the most of my labors to the Ensign. I have worked chiefly as an evangelist and enjoyed the best of liberty in my work, in Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, and Indian Territory, and in all the branches in this stake; and I have conferred as a weak instrument in the hands of God many spiritual blessings.

In all my administrations amongst the people, God has been with me, and abundantly blessed me with the Holy Spirit of promise; also with those who have reported for me. Sr. Marie Clark Morgan did a good work, yes, a laborious work for two years and a half while she traveled with me. She worked with a will, and was faithful in all that she did. Also Sr. Estella Wight did exceedingly well the last two years. May they both be blessed and prospered in this life, with all they need, that shall be for their best interest and good, and eternal life in the world to come. Others also have come to my help in time of need. God bless them all, is my prayer.

And now let me speak to my brothers and sisters with whom I have labored so many years in this glorious latter-day work. We have shared each others' troubles and sorrows, and enjoyed each others' presence when we have been together in "heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Oh, then, dear Saints, let us be faithful the few short fleeting years of our lives here, and firm and steadfast to the end, and gain the rich reward of eternal life.

HENRY KEMP.

WISNER, Nebraska.

DEAR SAINI: I love to call you such, for I love you all. I am acquainted with only a few in the church. I have been provided for in time of need. I have had many trials. And I thank God for sending them to me. I thank him that I am worthy to suffer, and thank him most that I am still of the faith. Our trials are nothing when God is so close by our side.

My health is much better but has been very poor. I have distributed many HERALDS and Autumn Leaves among my friends, and will be very glad to have other books or papers.

MINA L. DE FRATES.

COLLINSVILLE, Indian Territory, December 4, 1906.

DEAR HERALD: I am now in Indian Territory visiting my brother-in-law and two married nieces. I have been busy preaching over since I came here. I am now in my second schoolhouse. House full first night. At the last schoolhouse I was in, some nights all could not get in. Last year when I visited here I preached during the time I visited. I baptized two noble women. One woman who is part Indian just gave her name for baptism,—a fine, intellectual woman. Brethren, it pays to preach while we visit. If the work is properly looked after here, there will be a branch raised up.

While at Ketchum I preached to the most full-blood Indians I have ever reached in one meeting.

I am aspiring to see the HERALD. I have not seen one for over five weeks, and I have seen the cars only once in that time. I am enjoying the best of health and a good measure of the Spirit to preach the beautiful angel's message. May our dear Father in heaven hasten the time when Zion is redeemed, when the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, and when the universal reign of peace shall be ushered in. Who would not like to dwell there? No drunkenness, no lying, back-biting, swearing, grafting, or adultery.

Respectfully,

F. C. KECK.

TAYLORVILLE, Illinois.

Editors Herald: I have been presiding over the Taylorville Branch a period of time and am now presiding over it. I was wounded in the house of my friends, and it crippled me sorely, until I became inactive. But as the psalmist David says, If I go to the nethermost part of the earth, thou art there. And I can truthfully say that the Spirit of the Lord recalled to my mind Jeremiah 9, the calamity of the Jews, their grievous judgment,—and I felt so sorry I pondered within my mind, Will we as Saints fall into that rut? Then the presentation came to me that the gospel of Jesus Christ was to purify us through his truth: his word is truth, and we will be sanctified by refrain from our errors.

I am one who uses that filthy weed, tobacco, and it seems that every missionary that comes runs right into that subject; whether running out of material is the cause I do not know. However, this much I can say, tobacco should be avoided. But my sympathy is for every one, whatever his failing may be; for what is a great burden to one would not affect another.

The Doctrine and Covenants teaches that tobacco is not good for man and its teachings should be adhered to. And Doctrine and Covenants 127:7 teaches that the spirit of speculation, the exhibition of greed for gain is unseemly in the Saints and officers of church, and should be avoided.

I would like to hear from the leaders of the church as to what is to be done with those that use tobacco. It is not my wish to use tobacco; but it seems almost an impossibility to stop it. I did stop it for many years, but when trials came, there was my weakest point.

Yours truly,

MORGAN D. LEWIS.

SALINA, Utah, November 22, 1906.

Editors Herald: It has been two years and a half since my husband and I came into the true church of Latter Day Saints, and, as we live way down in the southern part of Utah, and can not enjoy church privileges as if we were living where there was a branch, I would like to bear my testimony through the HERALD. I know this is the true work of God, and I can not give him enough praise for giving me the light and the blessings he has given me. I know I am weak, but I ask the prayers of the Saints, that I may come up higher. My wishes and prayers are that I may some day have the privilege to live in Zion, to raise my little family. They are all Mormons here, and it is hard to raise a family where all they care for is dancing and all kinds of abominations.

Your sister in Christ,

BIRTHE BIRD.

PEORIA, Illinois, December 1, 1906.

Editors Herald: But once before during the present year have we sought admission to your columns, so we venture to call again.

We have not a full season's work to report for the reason that, feeling the need of giving the voice a rest for a while, we imagined self to be entitled to the "popular" vacation, hence spent the months of August and September in Nebraska and Colorado, accompanied by my wife and little ones. We stopped enroute at Omaha, where we had the pleasure of meeting our brother auditor, Elder Charles Fry. We found him busy but determined to lay off while we were there, so the duty was ours to perform. All right, brother, come this way and we will "check up."

After a very pleasant visit with my wife's folks in Nebraska, we went on to Colorado Springs, where we remained till October 2, returning via Denver, staying over night there to enjoy a few hours' visit with the family of Bro. J. Keck.

Our western trip was a blessing to us in many ways. My wife, who has been afflicted with hay-fever for several years, was free from it there. My throat profited by the rest and while we returned financially poorer yet we are richer in many ways.

For me to describe, or to try to do so, my feelings as I entered that mountainous region would be useless. It seemed to me that every trip up among those rocks would bring added inspiration; and when the day came to start home we were loath to leave. We confess that it taxes memory to make it more than a dream to us now.

Our acquaintance and association with the Saints in the Springs were enjoyable to us and will long be remembered, and we feel richer because of more friends.

After reaching Davenport, we moved into new quarters at 604 West Fifteenth Street. As soon as the family was settled here, the writer began a series of meetings in a schoolhouse about eleven miles north of Galesburg. Bad weather and indifference opposed us, and these meetings were not very satisfactory.

At this place Elder J. W. Davis was with me the first week, Bro. O. H. Bailey the second. Succeeding in rousing the "zeal" of an old gentleman of the Primitive Baptists, who thinking he was miscused by us began a series of articles against us in Galesburg papers, we are on the watch. From here Bro. Bailey and I went to another schoolhouse about five miles distant. It was a little better over there, but we count the effort largely in vain. At both these places we were very kindly cared for by the families of Bro. and Sr. Boulton and Mr. and Sr. Hendricks. And say, Bro. Thorburn, we have had quail, squirrel, and rabbit, etc., plenty. You know how it is over there.

Well, some time before the meetings closed the writer received summons to appear at 207 Callender Avenue, Peoria, on November 23, and be able to recite such portion of section 111, Doctrine and Covenants, as should be required. So down we went and found that the president of the branch, Bro. William R. Norris, had "entered suit" and demanded a decree should be rendered at eight o'clock in the evening. Suffice it to say, Sr. Fiora Epperson entered a plea of guilty of love in the first degree. Indications were that a mutual agreement had been reached prior to this time, and the preacher was needed just to obtain the official stamp. The writer has been personally acquainted with both the bride and groom for years, and we feel that the best we can say for them is that their lives bear indisputable evidence to the fact that both are true saints of God.

Expect to begin meetings near Moline with Bro. Davis soon.

F. A. RUSSELL.

Modoc, Indiana, December 2, 1896.

Editors Herald: Inclosed you will find fifty cents, saved by a little six-year-old girl who wishes to help in the home for the orphans. I think it is a grand thing, and hope it will soon be built. I love to read about it in the Herald, which is all we have to strengthen us. We have not heard a Saint preach for over a year. Would be glad to entertain any of the elders who will come this way. We would love hear the gospel story once more, and have our neighbors hear it. I humbly ask an interest in your prayers, that I may have the good Spirit, and raise my children right and set a right example before all that are about me. I want to do right, but evil is always present.

Lizzie (Vardaman) TAPPAN.

Otway, Ohio, December 2, 1896.

Editors Herald: Since I last wrote to your columns I have been encouraged and strengthened in this work, and have many things to be thankful to the Lord for. Bro. Beatty and Bro. L. R. Devore have been with us two weeks, and did some good preaching, and the few Saints that are in this part have been strengthened, edified, and built up in faith. Bro. J. P. Colvin got hurt while working on the pike and was thought to be dying. He sent for Brn. Beatty and Devore; they went and administered to him late in the evening of November 27 and he was at a meeting at my house on the morning of the 28th, and this was the wonderful work of the Lord. Our little three-year-old boy took sick with a very high fever, the elders administered to him, and, praise the Lord, he was restored, and is up playing this morning as I write. Brn. Beatty and Devore left here the last day of November for Crabtree to hold a series of meetings.

The writer feels truly glad that the church of Christ still is in the land as Christ left it, with all the gifts and blessings. Praise God for a full and free salvation!

We are glad that no good thing is withheld from them that walk uprightly before God.

I know this work is of God. Although I do not live as I should I may fail to reach the celestial glory; if I do it is my fault, not the fault of this work. The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; and it is the keeping of that perfect law that secures to us a home in the celestial kingdom.

J. T. MITCHELL.

Editors Herald: My experience this summer was a good one for me. It was the old-time missionary life. I held one debate with a Reverend Mr. Roe, a Free Methodist. The debate was to last nine nights but on the seventh night he took his books and hat and left because the chairmen would not let him have everything his own way but tried to make him stick to the proposition. The chairmen decided in our favor, saying we had proved every point from the Bible, and that Mr. Roe had used supposition only. He told the people how he had made one Latter Day Saint elder take his hat and run. But the hat was on the other fellow's head this time.

I am very thankful to our heavenly Father for the liberty and good spirit which I enjoyed. Last Sunday was a very busy day for me. I drove twelve miles, spoke twice, baptized and confirmed four, then administered the sacrament, blessed four children, and administered to the sick. It was three o'clock in the morning when I retired to rest. I am feeling splendid, and hope to be faithful, and do all I can for the latter-day work.

O. J. HAWN.

Editors Herald: You are not overburdened with news from this part of the vineyard. My object in writing is not to sound a trumpet, but simply that my predecessors to this land might know that we are doing our best in the interests of truth and principle. And also that their labors of the past few years are not forgotten. The visit and labors of Brn. Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans, of the Presidency, together with the labors of our respected president of the mission, Bro. J. W. Rushton, also Bro. G. Thorburn, J. Asher, W. H. Kelley, and Bro. James Baillie, resulted in good. The Saints have very kindly remembrance of all these brethren and their labors. I came here at the request of the missionary in charge and have been with the Saints now two months. The kindness of the Saints in Scotland and the welcome I have received at their hands will live long in my memory, and I am satisfied that their reward is sure if they will continue in faithfulness to the end. The Scotch welcome is a true, homely welcome, and if the Highland welcome excels, I do not wonder that "Burns" should write these lines:

"When death's dark stream I Ferry o'er A time that surely shall come, In heaven itself I'll ask no more Than just a Highland welcome."

I have visited Newarthill, Salamanan, Clyde Bank, Glasgow, and Hamilton. Our meetings have been very fairly attended and interest and attention marked throughout.

What is really needed in this mission is two good, earnest men who will work with tracts from house to house and visit and talk to the people and also hold open-air meetings. Send out the elders two by two, see that they are sustained when they are sent, and there is salvation for the work in Scotland.

Now, ye brave elders, who will face the foe? Who would like to come and see Bonnie Scotland? Yours for truth,

W. H. GREENWOOD.

evil,”—why it exists, why it should not exist, and how to keep it from existing. Bro. Harrington has a peculiar way of getting a grip on his hearers by reason of his frank, straightforward, plain way of putting things.

On Sunday afternoon the sacrament was carried to our Sr. Barbee, who on account of her invalid condition can not meet with us at the church. Also thirty-two of the young people went with us and spent an hour in testimony- and prayer-service, twenty out of the thirty-two present taking part, and an abundant outpouring of the Holy Spirit was enjoyed.

On Thursday evening (December 6) “The Laurel Club” gave a bazaar and oyster supper in the assemby hall for the benefit of the sanitarium fund. This society is composed largely of members of the old Hawthorne Society, whose efforts made the pipe-organ a possibility. The articles for sale and also the attractive booths showed forth the artistic sense of our sisters. The fried oysters prepared by Sr.
Rose Wheeler called forth the appreciation of both “men folks” and “women folks.”

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.

On Sunday, November 11, with sorrowful hearts, we laid to rest all that was earthly of Sr. Carrie S.
Christiansen. Besides delivering the funeral-sermon for our sister on that day, Bro. John Davis, of Stew-artsville, preached in the morning and evening two stirring, characteristic sermons.

Wednesday, November 14, Bro. Coventry Archibald united in marriage Sr. Lizzie McSparren and Mr. Daniel McGinness.

To say that Sunday, November 25, was a red-letter day for the Saints at St. Joseph, but faintly expresses its significance to us. It was the occasion of the dedication of our church, the event so long looked for, hoped for, toiled for. When we awoke on that eventful morning our ears were saluted by the gentle “patter of the rain upon the roof,” but it was a large, cheerful, smiling congregation that assembled in our beloved church. How beautiful it appeared to our admiring eyes. How lovely were the decorations of numerous stately palms and masses of cut flowers.
Surely God the Father would set the seal of his approval upon our earnest efforts. President Joseph Smith delivered the dedicatory-sermon, and it was, as the newspapers reported it, “a powerful one,” filled with the fire of the Holy Spirit. His son, Bro.
Frederick M. Smith, uttered the dedicatory-prayer in a solemn, earnest manner. Altogether the occasion was one long to be remembered and enjoyed. There were many visiting brethren and sisters with us, notably, Bishop E. L. Kelley, Apostle I. N. White, Bro. and Sr. D. J. Krah of Lamoni, and Bro. and
Sr. David Powell of Stewartsville. In the afternoon
Bro. E. L. Kelley preached and in the evening President Smith again addressed us. He was assisted by his son, Hale W. Our church edifice is now doubly sacred to us because it is ours no longer, but God’s.
Bro. Hale W. Smith and wife have returned to Omaha to make their home, after remaining with us long enough to make us miss them sorely.

Bro. David Wilke was elected to fill the office of president of the Religio, made vacant by the depature of Bro. Smith.

A number of the Sunday-school workers have organized a Sunshine Band.

The Sunday-school is busily preparing for its annual celebration.

We note a number of new arrivals among our number: Brn. Curtis and Ethridge and families and others.

Bro. Moler is visiting his family this week, at Holden.

The week following the dedication, a series of sermons was given and some splendid efforts were put forth.

Brn. Faul and Sheldon held a two-day meeting here last Saturday and Sunday.

EDITH M. FIFER.

TULARE, CALIFORNIA.

It was by no means agreeable to my personal wishes that I was made president of this branch at the last district conference; but as Bro. Earle was much needed for the more active field, I yielded in order to liberate him for that work.

There are about one hundred members in this branch, but they are so scattered that not more than one half of them attend the meetings regularly; but the few that do attend seem earnest and hopeful.

Bro. John Walker is the priest, Edwin Walker Flory is an elder and a useful as well as a very exemplary man.

A son of Bro. Flory was ordained to the office of priest at the late district conference. He is a young man of promise.

The Sunday-school work is in the hands of Sr. W. A.
Bedford; Religio in the hands of Sr. Dora Glines.
With these faithful sisters and their willing helpers,
we expect nothing short of success.

We are a little handicapped on account of not having a suitable place to meet in, and we are talking of building a place of our own. And as soon as the committee agree upon what kind of a house they want, work will begin in earnest.

J. C. CLAPP.
LAMONI, IOWA.

President F. M. Smith was in Lamoni on business a few days last week but departed before Sunday. We trust he may arrange to be with us over Sunday, sometime soon.

Some little excitement was experienced last Monday evening because of the coal in the college basement igniting. Diligent work on the part of students and citizens in the use of shovels soon removed the danger.

Bro. F. M. Weld left for Pasadena, California last Wednesday on account of his serious physical condition. Bro. Weld has had a severe attack of pneumonia and has so far recovered that he is able to take the trip. Bro. Salyards accompanied him as far as St. Joseph.

A “Farmers’ and Teachers’ Institute” is to be held here Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of this week. Addresses are to be given by Professor J. C. Guthrie, Professor P. G. Holden, and Professor H. D. Snyder of the State Agricultural College, at Ames, Iowa. Professor Holden is acknowledged as a leading authority in the United States on the cultivation of corn. Some of our leading farmers are on the program for talks on special subjects pertaining to farming and dairying. We are pleased to note the desire to give this work studious attention. Two declamatory contests will be held during the institute. The first, on Saturday morning, will be by the pupils of the rural schools. Three prizes are offered of one year’s tuition in the high school of Lamoni, or three other places in the county. In the afternoon a declamatory contest will be held by pupils of the high schools of Decatur County. The prize is one year’s scholarship at Graceland College.

Bishop’s Agent’s Notes.

To the Saints of the Des Moines District: A glance at the calendar reminds us that the year 1906, with its opportunities, will soon be beyond our reach; and in the hour of meditation and thoughtful consideration of the opportunities that were afforded us, as “laborers together with God,” to put our hands to the plow, that some portion of the great vineyard of God might be cultivated and brought forth in an abundant harvest. I hope none will be made to feel the tinge of shame because of our small sacrifices, or that we have been slothful or negligent, in the work of the Master.

"He that goeth into the deep does so at his own risk, and an idle soul shall suffer hunger." This axiom is as applicable in a spiritual sense as in a temporal. In view of the wonderful provisions that God has made and provided in the gospel of Jesus Christ, it seems inexcusable that spiritual poverty should exist with any of God's people.

During the year that is just past the very powers of heaven and earth have combined to provide for the temporal comforts of the Saints and the great blessings of the earth; but many of us have paused and taken time to consider from whence came these wonderful provisions, and have lisped the song of "Praise God from whom all blessings flow!" And how many have manifested their thankfulness and reverence for the covenant and association that God has bestowed upon us by a fulfillment of the injunction of Paul "to do good, and to communicate forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased!"

Let us ask ourselves the questions: Have I imparted in any way to the great work of God, or has the year been spent in providing for self? Have I made any real sacrifice during the year, that I might be able to contribute my mite to aid in the multiplication of the vineyard of God? Have I made any real sacrifice during the year, that I might be able to contribute my mite to aid in the cultivation of the great vineyard of God, as in a temporal. In view of the wonderful provisions that God has made and provided in the gospel of Jesus Christ, it seems inexcusable that spiritual poverty should exist with any of God's people.

The Lord has commanded that "whosoever shall give to drink unto one of this least in the kingdom of righteousness, shall receive of the righteous judgment of our just and holy God; and shall obtain everlasting life from the God of truth." (D&C 133:3.)

If our love has not reached beyond ourselves and our own home circle, we are only standing at the littke tinkle rill, the first small spring of the river of life in this world. Think not that the river of life in this world is the river of life in the next, or that this little spring is the full stream. KRUZER.—Ellen F. Kruzer was born January 4, 1872, at Frankfort, Franklin County, Kentucky. Was married to Andrew H. Krutzer, February 28, 1889, at Louisville. One son, two brothers, and two sisters, are left to mourn. Bro. Terry in infancy. A son living. March 13, 1898, she was baptized by James M. Owen Owen of Fleetwood, who departed this life August 14, by an accident, having passed from this life last May.

Letter of Condolence.

We, the undersigned, on behalf of the Priesthood Association of the Manchester District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, do hereby place on record our deepest sympathy with those who have been bereaved by the death of Bro. Owen Owen of Fleetwood, who departed this life November 15, 1906, and was interred at Fleetwood, November 19. He was baptized at Burlington, Iowa, October 2, 1870, and united with the Manchester Branch, April 4, 1889; and for many years has been indentified with the South Manchester Branch, also serving as one of the teachers. While we regret the severing of the ties which continue as a source of regret, and mourn the loss of one whose example of integrity and honor has ever been an inspiration, whose zeal and intense love for the cause of truth were so conspicuously characteristic, we can not but realize the loving wisdom of our heavenly Father in giving so triumphant an entrance into the rest provided for the pilgrims of life to this veteran disciple. Having been born October 21, 1816, his ninety years of experience has secured for him the faithfulness and trust which he so well deserved.

Social Conditions and the Liquor Problem.

The poor man or woman whose earnings are too meager to provide sufficient food, and who tries to cheat nature by the attempt to draw strength from the use of alcoholic stimulants, is the victim of our economic conditions.

The altar house, the saloon, the shanty or in a filth-reeking tenement-house, from which the poor laborer flees to the saloon to seek warmth and light, recreation and companionship, is the product of economic conditions prevailing in human society.

If a laboring man should happen to lose his job, and if, as sometimes happens, he searches in vain for weeks or months for another, so that at last despair seizes upon him, or if, in a moment of loneliness, he should think of his future, and the entire hopelessness of his condition should dawn upon him, if then in his despair he should take recourse to drink, who is to blame for it? Is not the cause for his efforts to drown his sorrows in drink in our economic conditions?

The drunkard has a right to enjoy the care of a loving companion who is unable to read in his heart. With the exception of comparatively few cases of heredity, the drunkard is the victim of economic social conditions, and where the vice is one of heredity, the ancestor was the victim.

Sometimes poverty is the result of habitual drunkenness, but such cases are individual. As a social factor, poverty is a cause of habitual drunkenness, and it is the cause in probably ninety-nine cases out of a hundred.

There are also rich drunkards, of course, but as a result their families do not suffer from want of the necessities of life. The cause, however, may also be ascribed to economic conditions, for the life of a gambler, and a large part of modern business is nothing but gambling. . . .

There is only one reliable radical temperance measure, and that is the betterment of the economic conditions, brought about by a change of the economic system which makes extreme wealth and extreme poverty equally impossible, and secures a distribution of the products of human industry in a manner more just than the present . . .

A society which produces multi-millionaires and paupers with all that these terms import, will produce inebriates with the same certainty with which it produces thieves, grafters, and gamblers.

I venture to say that among those people who follow a congenial occupation that enables them to procure a reasonable amount of comfort, such as modern civilization requires, with­out overburdening with work and cares, drunkards are almost as rare as cherry-blooms in mid-winter.—Philip Rappaport, in the Arena, September, 1906.

The approaching session of the State legislature will furnish him with material for many clever sketches on state issues and public events.

The addition of Mr. Darling to its staff will further strengthen the position of the Register and Leader as the best newspaper in the State.

Our Preparation for Growth as a People.

Until we learn to think in billions we can not measure the meaning of the material development of the United States during the last quarter of a century. Never did less than much less const­duct by our brother. And, while we reverently bow to the will of God, mourning the loss of his companionship and example, we be­grudge not the well-earned rest from his labor promised to the faithful and true; nor do we sorrow as those without hope, but look forward to the coming day when these severed ties and interrupted associations shall be resumed without shadows, doubts, or fears in the light of perfect understanding and immortality.

Signed on behalf of the Priesthood Association, November 24, 1906.

the Western farmer to work his prairie soil and the Southern planter his cotton land in a way to get the largest immediate results. Nothing else than what we have done in this way could have been expected by any one who looked at these things from any other than a superficial point of view. Now a point has been reached where it can be seen that all that has come before is but the preparation for the real work of national growth,—growth in agriculture, in manufacturing, in mining, and, in all the other varied business interests of the country.—From the most prosperous period in our history by Richard H. Ancient Order of Happy Habiters.

As I sat rocking to and fro, and looking into the flames, it seemed to me that if each human being were conscious of the real heart warmth of every other individual, there would be little friction. You see I had a curious conversation between myself and myself. Did you ever try it? Sit down and chat with yourself in some of those dismal moments which are likely to be leaden. I felt a little flattered to discover that I was good company for myself. I was well entertained; but this sitting was not actually a monologue, for there was a comrade, personalized presence of all readers with whom I almost felt myself—for the nonce (that sounds good)—in personal contact. Arising, I rubbed my hands, ready to tell you a story, and that "reminiscence of a good friend" who had written that his membership in the Ancient Order of Happy Habiters was a permanent, paying investment. He sought a lodging in Boston, and the sedate and prim landlady, on hearing his mild-mannered application, thoroughly scrutinized him. She looked him through for several generations. During this process, he gave her one of the Happy Habit smiles—the high sign of the opposite, personalized presence of all readers with whom she would be. As she was almost perfectly sincere, she must have a curious conversation between herself and herself. I might have said a good-natured man, not likely to make us trouble. We charged the former tenant of that room five dollars, but I don't mind telling you that he was very rude. Your price will be four dollars, because you look like a happy man," and she actually unbuttoned into a genial smile, while the Happy Habit bowed gracefully.

My friend has recorded: "I am now practically earning a dollar every week on that job Chappell smile. Am trying to live up to that good lady's deal. When I stumbled the other night over a trunk in the hall, because the gas was not lighted, and then went another step and hit the hat-tree aback, I had no difficulty in establishing my perfect innocence, because the landlady met me in the upper hall just in time to catch the smile that I had been carefully nursing all the way upstairs, in my effort to forget scurrilous stories."

During a recent trip over the arid plains of the West, it occurred to me that the deserts are showered with the largest shadows, the rain and storms are necessary for fertility, so when I look out upon the troubles that confront me, I remember that everything has its purpose and aids in mellowing my disposition and making me more considerate for my fellow man. Hold on—I find that the fire needs another poke—so I real ize how incongruous it is to deliver a sermon in a smoking jacket—and I relax with a few more pokes at the fire, and I find myself talking to myself, and not yet asleep.

Once more the fire emphasizes the thought. Is anything more essential for a perfect Christmas-time than warmth—just genial, hearty, friendly warmth? After all, isn't that the essence of the message of "peace and good will?" For the nonce (I tried that word again) it seems indeed fortunate that Christmas comes at least once a year, that we may burnish up these better impulses of our nature. On this very gloomy day, the virtue of heart-warmth grows upon me. You are all busy thinking of Christmas-time, and of those little gifts to go around among the family and friends, and I fancy I can see busy hands at work and bright faces wearing a Happy Habit smile. The great prosperity that has blessed our land, Santa Claus will be even more generous than usual this coming Christmas-tide.

With all the gifts and remembrances—remember to give your self!—"The gift without the giver is vain." How much it means to bestow a little time on some lonely soul who needs the appreciative warmth of human sympathy. In these prosperous days, we are likely to measure our gifts by the dollars they cost, but haven't you noticed how the little children, when they revel among the toys and trophies that "Santa brought," will sometimes neglect the more costly gift for some simple rag doll or explosive tin horn—because it is what they like? If all the Christmas horns and drums could be gathered into one mighty band, what a clatter of martial procession there would be—what a tooting of horns on Christmas morn, what crowds of happy, chattering and laughing children there would be—it would indeed be a surprisingly joyful symphony.

Here's hoping that every reader of the National and every human being—for that matter—will open his eyes on Christmas morn with the feeling of "joy to the world!"—Joe Mitchell in National Magazine for December.

Home Seekers' Excursion, December 18.

It is stated here at Plains that December 18 is the last home-seekers' Excursion. If so, it will be well for you to take advantage of the low rates, and see the great wheat belts of Southwestern Kansas; while we claim it is a wheat country, other crops do well here. 1906 was a good year for all kinds of grains. The corn yield was from forty to fifty bushels per acre. There are some claims that can be had yet, but they are quite a distance from the railroad. Bro. George Herbert, late on Fitzgerald, Georgia, got a good claim recently for $250. He will be able by spring to turn it for $1,100 or $2,000.

Send me your names and I will mail you a copy of the Plains Journal. It will give you a good deal of information regarding this country. There is a good opening here for nearly all kinds of business, especially for a cash grocery, furniture and Undertaking; and an attorney at law—none here; blacksmith, corn and feed-mill, etc.

Let me hear from you.

Yours in bonds,

PLAINS, Kansas.

$25,000.00 NEEDED
By INDEPENDENCE COAL MINING COMPANY

In order to develop and open up the new coal-mining interests near Independence and also make necessary preparations for homes for miners, it is necessary that sufficient capital be secured within a short time. The amount sought for is very small compared with the capital of other coal-mining interests and, for various reasons, the directors of this company desire to keep the working and controlling power with the church members, if possible. The opening up of an undeveloped coal field at the edge of a densely populated community of 400,000 population is a matter of considerable consideration as the product is part of the necessities of life, with freight rates practically cut off, making this enterprise an exceptional one.

Five hundred and sixty-nine acres have been leased for forty years and one hundred and fifty-four purchased, making in all seven hundred and twenty-three acres of coal land in one body, on the line of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, two miles east of Independence.

The company already has coal mines at Napoleon, Missouri, in operation and a successful and prosperous retail business, making this a bonanza, paying investment.

Money seeking investment can find no better place, and will bring the best kind of satisfaction, as it will bring good returns to the investor and results that are much sought for, also benefitting the unemployed, scattered, poor church members by placing them in a position to help themselves.

The 184 acres are intended for homes for miners, to be sold at a reasonable price, and we solicit the co-operation of miners in purchasing stock, according to their ability.

The promoters of this company are not working for any selfish interests. There is no watered or fictitious raised stock. This company is incorporated under the laws of the state of Missouri. Capital stock, $60,000.00; shares, $100.00 each; amount paid up $35,000.00. The capital stock must be increased to the amount needed. Parties sending money can do so by bank draft. The Saints’ Herald
The Only Prince of Peace.

From Thanksgiving until Christmas most of us live in an atmosphere of deepening gloom.—December World To-Day.

Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.—Luke 2:10.

The very nations that are preparing to send delegates to the approaching Hague Conference are also enlarging their navies with almost feverish haste.—Literary Digest, December 8, 1906.

On earth peace, good will toward men.—Luke 2:14.

It is a matter of surprise at this holiday season to note the number of the great periodicals which sound the note of melancholy. Yet perhaps it is not surprising when we reflect that the world desires happiness but refuses to seek it in the only way in which it is to be obtained.

It ought to be pretty well determined by this time that a man's life "consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth," because there never was a time when this bountiful earth was more generous to her children than now, and there never was a time when some men could obtain a larger individual portion. Yet it is a matter of observation that those who have the most wealth and leisure furnish more than their proportion of suicides, or of moral, mental, or physical wrecks who had better be dead.

If those who are most amply provided for in a material way can not buy peace of the world, it is evident that the world has not peace for sale.

The December World To-Day complains that those who have the means with which to buy have made the custom of giving at Christmas-time such a commercial affair that it is a burden. We are so fearful that we will forget to give a gift to some one who may give one to us and attach so much importance to the cash value of each gift that the joy of giving is lost; and "from Thanksgiving until Christmas we live in an atmosphere of deepening gloom." A still darker picture is drawn of the poor who can not buy, and of their bitterness of spirit when receiving on one special day as charity that which they ought to be enabled to earn and enjoy every day as a right.

The December Cosmopolitan tells of the press of work which falls upon clerks, sales girls, delivery boys, and others during the holiday season; and more especially upon the armies of poor little children who are set at work overtime in candy- and toy-factories to prepare surprises for other little children.

Next week: Senator Burrows' speech on the Smoot case is a remarkable document, from the standpoint of the Reorganization, especially touching the introduction of polygamy and the Reorganization in succession. We will reprint important extracts from this speech in our next number. This is a sample: "In order to induce his followers more readily to accept this infamous doctrine, Brigham Young invoked the name of Joseph Smith, the Martyr."

The Literary Digest for December 8 in speaking of the peace congress says, "The very nations that are preparing to send delegates to the Hague Conference are also enlarging their navies with almost feverish haste."

They have stated the matter correctly. It is only a moment since the great British battleship Dreadnought was launched into the sea, at that time the largest and swiftest warship ever built; but in that moment of time Japan has troubled the waters with a ship larger and swifter than the Dreadnought, and the United States is preparing to eclipse them both.

The December Atlantic contains an article in which it is stated that so much of the literary output of the day is "steeped in gloom" that there is danger that the holiday spirit will be tinged by it.

What is the meaning of this melancholy tone at a time which men have thought to be the happiest season of the year and which falls in an age esteemed as the happiest and most prosperous of all ages?

What is the meaning of these warlike preparations at a time when so many great men are working in the interests of peace?

It means that Christ came at one time with a plan by means of which men might have obtained universal peace and happiness.

His plan was rejected and is still rejected, and the sure word of prophecy is that the days come when peace will be taken from the earth.

The Saints need not be troubled or depressed in the matter, but they may rest assured that neither churches nor organizations nor parties nor reformers nor legislators can forestall that result in any way.

There remains but one course for the Saints to pursue if they would be found worthy to stand in that evil day; and that is that they prepare themselves to abide in holy places.

We may be troubled about means and methods now, but the great and important work is to teach and practice the true religion of love and unity and personal purity, and then, as surely as God lives, when the time is ripe and we come together in prayerful deliberation the Red Sea of our difficulties will be divided.

On the other hand we might prepare our plans with all the precision and minutiae of a Napoleon on the eve of battle, and if we were not willing to abide the condition of personal holiness we would go down in the common ruin which overwhelms every such undertaking.

A significant prophecy is found in the third chapter of Joel, "Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let the men of war draw near; let them come up: beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning-hooks into spears: let the weak say, I am strong."

And again, "Let the heathen be wakened."

Those whom we have regarded as "heathen" have been awakened to take their part in the arena of war. The awakening of Japan has surprised the world. The message, "Prepare war," has been proclaimed among the Gentiles of every land. Kaiser and king and president have made it the burden of their messages. Their respective governments are urged to increase their armies and navies.

In England and Germany and in the United States the peculiar doctrine is taught that the best way to insure peace is to increase the armaments until none will dare to fight.

Thus in the very name of the Prince of Peace the weapons of war are forged. The man who provided the "Noble Peace Prize" which was awarded President Roosevelt by the Norwegian government some days ago, was the man who invented dynamite.

In more than a figurative sense plowshares are forged into swords and pruning-hooks into spears, because there is scarcely a farmer in the world who is not wearing out his instruments in helping to increase the armament of his particular nation.

This condition is not unknown to God, who has told us in these last days, "I have sworn in my wrath and decreed wars upon the face of the earth, and the wicked shall slay the wicked, and fear shall come upon every man, and the saints also shall hardly escape."

Why should such conditions obtain?

Because there has been and will be a general rejection of the gospel among the Gentiles, as we have been plainly told should occur.

Christ came to explain the perfect way of escape and the plan by which men are saved in every sense, whether temporal, spiritual, or political; and Paul after carefully examining that plan exclaimed, "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?"

The answer has never been given because there is no escape.

At intervals an epidemic of crime breaks out in some great city and we catch a glimpse of the fierce depravity of "the lower classes," as they are termed. At intervals the lid is lifted and we discover the power exercised by the saloon and the house of ill repute in the politics of cities. At intervals the curtain is blown aside and we catch a glimpse of the political corruption which goes on between acts. At intervals some one's cunning fails and we learn how greed and graft prevail among the "higher classes."

All these are evidences that the prophets spoke the truth when they said that though costly churches should abound in our times the gospel would be rejected. If the gospel were accepted these conditions would not be found.

Now though we admire the many able, honest, perhaps inspired reformers who are operating in every political party at this date, as well as the able men who are working in various churches and schools, and think it the privilege of Saints to cooperate with their ideas and learn what they may therefrom, we have no confidence in their ability to save a world or nation or individuals who reject the gospel.

People can not be saved by placing wealth within their reach, or by legislation, or by secular education, or by improved environments, so long as the divine plan is ignored and the one name unhonored which is the only name under heaven by which a man must be saved.

Christ with unerring wisdom put his finger upon the spot where regeneration must begin and said that man must be born again. He devoted his time and expended his strength toward securing that one first great reform without which all others are useless; knowing well as he did that man, yes, even the Devil, had at one time enjoyed the benefits of excellent environment, just government, and the access to high education, yet lost it all by reason of a disease which began in the heart, was approved of the brain, and finally controlled every part of the being.

Ere the kingdom of God will come back to a man he must be rid of that which caused him to lose that kingdom. Or as the Master said, “Except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God.”

Evil men would transform paradise into a place of violence, and so Christ gave his first attention to the work of transforming men; and that improved conditions might obtain as fast as they were worthy of improved conditions he taught them to pray, “Thy kingdom come.” Previous to that change in themselves they could not discern the kingdom. Not only did he teach them to pray, but to work for the coming of that kingdom. If any have prayed and have not worked, a mistake has been made.

On the other hand if any have sought to establish that kingdom without a close association with the one who has power to direct and establish it, they have made the mistake mentioned in the fourth chapter of Acts. “This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner.”

Though such men may be profound reasoners, far surpassing any found in the little flock to whom God intends to give the kingdom, they will ultimately help to fulfill the prophetic statement made concerning the times in which the latter-day work should be established: we refer to the statement, “The wisdom of their wise men shall perish.”

Though Zion may seem lost in the rush of modern events, and though, as already quoted, the Saints shall hardly escape, the definite promise is made, “In Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call.”—Joel 2:32.

If we are ever to be worthy of such deliverance, it will be because of a close cooperation with Christ. If the people of the world ever come to Zion to be “taught” of us, it will be because we better than they have learned the lesson that we are colaborers with God and that the secrets of salvation are with Christ and not in the brains of Paul or Apollos or of some more modern leader.

We point to Christ as the Great Savior, and we are convinced that the need of the church now is a greater endowment of power from on high so that selfishness may be cast out, men be regenerated, and an unflinching observance of the law be made possible.

What a wonderful power that was which operated with the Saints of old, not only giving needed revelation and explaining revelations already given, but operating upon the hearts of humble, prayerful, willing men so that they placed everything on the altar; and where if one was not willing to abide the conditions he was detected and stricken down as were Ananias and Sapphira. That is a power not lightly to be invoked yet it is indispensable in the transformation of this old world.

The very name of Christ means “God with us,” and until he is admitted to his rightful place as a “leader, a witness, and a commander,” peace and joy will not abide in the world. Scenes of violence will be enacted before men learn that lesson. But it will be learned at last and a proper basis will be established for the millennial reign of peace and joy, and for the new earth which is to come.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

Before the National Civic Federation at New York City, December 13, Andrew Carnegie delivered a rather remarkable address in which he advanced the thought that at the death of its owner, a large fortune or estate should revert to the public, the heirs to receive only such part of the estate as would give them a proper start in life. Carnegie seems to be feeling his way towards the doctrine of consecration.

New York City has been visited by a negro evangelist from Los Angeles, California, who seems to be the originator of a new sect. At their gatherings in their mission in New York City, they speak nightly in unknown tongues, those taking part or receiving the gift in the meantime rushing wildly about the room.

The French law separating church and state went into effect December 12, severing the bonds which have bound the two together in France for nearly a thousand years. By the terms of the law the state ceases to pay salaries to church officials, and ceases to make appropriations for the support of religious institutions. Church-buildings temporarily pass into the control of the state until the local churches form associations, appoint trustees, and take over the property to hold it as church property is held in other lands. The Catholic Church has fought this law in every possible way. The Pope has forbidden Catholic officials to make arrangements to take over property, but in some cases laymen have done so.

The Mexican government has taken control of all the important railway lines in the republic. These lines will be managed by an organized company, but the majority of stock is to be held by the Mexican government.

The Smoot case came before the Senate December 11, Senator Burrows making the opening speech. In giving a history of the church his utterances regarding the Reorganization were very favorable.

The Protestant Episcopal Church has discovered that there are more Jews in New York than there are Protestant Episcopal communicants in the United States, and they are soon to begin an active campaign for the conversion of Jews in New York.

Doctor Chapman closed his meeting in Des Moines, Iowa, and December 18 departed eastward. The free-will offerings tendered him amounted to something in excess of $13,000. About fifteen hundred conversions are reported.

A strong cordon of troops and cavalry was necessary to guard the vatican against a demonstration of mob violence made December 16. The non-Catholic residents were incensed at the Pope's efforts to resist the French government in its separation of church and state.

Japanese Christians declare that no more missionaries are needed in Japan. An open rupture between the missions and the government has been narrowly averted and the situation is still critical. The tone of the missionaries in referring to the Japanese as "heathen" and inferiors is said to have aggravated racial antipathy.

Mrs. William Ziegler, widow of the capitalist, has supplied funds for a magazine for the blind. She has turned over the work of getting the publication under way to Walter G. Holmes, of 1931 Broadway, New York City, who has long been interested in work for the blind. The magazine is to be edited and printed in New York City, and will be distributed free among the blind. It will contain current news, short stories reprinted from periodicals, and contributions from the blind. Mrs. Ziegler estimates the cost of production at $60,000 a year, without postal charges. The name of the magazine will be the Ziegler Magazine for the Blind. It will be printed in both the Braille and the New York point, so that every one who has had training in either may read it.

The most expensive man you can hire is one who is willing to work for his board. This simply because he always cares more for his board than he does for his work. A worker works and a boarder boards. It costs two dollars a day to hire a man to keep a boarder doing something besides board.—The Philistine.

Senator Beveridge proposes to introduce a bill dealing with child labor. The federal law can not invade the domain of States and regulate conditions in factories, but it is proposed to reach the situation by forbidding every carrier of interstate commerce to transport products of factories and mines employing children under the age of fourteen years.

Christ knew what we call the art of putting things. —Joseph Parker.

Genius darts, flutters, and tires, but perseverance wears and wins.—Success.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

At Monroe, Utah, the Mormon bishop refused our representatives, Brn. Chase and Vanderwood, the use of the ward meeting-house. Bro. Chase with some of his resident friends nothing daunted opened up by the wayside with music and singing and the bishop's congregation coming out from the afternoon meeting flocked to hear them. So after all they got to hear some of the tidings which were for their edification if not for their peace of mind.

Soon it will be time to make those New Year's resolutions. Be sure there is "resolution" back of them.

Autumn Leaves for January will contain an excellent article on Latter Day Saint missionary work among the Indians. It is profusely illustrated with pictures of some of our Lamanite elders, and other cuts, among them being a picture of Joseph Smith preaching to the Indians in Nauvoo in an early day.

Elder D. A. Anderson writes from Pittsburg that the priesthood of that district at their last district conference entered into an agreement to the effect that when notified they would unite in fasting and
The attention of the church is called to the following points and plans concerning the work for the winter term in Graceland College, beginning January 2, 1907. We are planning, as we planned last year, to arrange new courses so that every student coming for work may find just what he needs. There will be begun a sufficient number of elementary courses to keep every one busy all of the time. Some of the new classes to be formed are: Elementary arithmetic, United States history, general spelling, penmanship, physiology, English grammar, bookkeeping, shorthand, typewriting, Greek history, Latin I, trigonometry, etc. Additional classes will be formed if sufficient demand is made.

The opportunity for self-help has been remarkable, and especially for young ladies. We could not fill the demand made upon us for ladies, most of them in the very best of homes. It is evident that there are scores of young people throughout the church who ought to be in Graceland this winter. The cooperation of the ministry is asked in getting these young people interested in education and Graceland.

A line to me, or to Elder A. B. Blair, secretary of the Board of Trustees, will bring answer to any inquiry you may wish to make. Let no young person in the church spend the winter in idleness, when a term in Graceland would mean so much.

Thanking the readers of the HERALD in anticipation of their interest and cooperation, I am,

Most cordially,

R. M. STEWART, President.

News From Branches

PLANO, ILLINOIS.

The Rising Star Sunday-school of our branch is making strenuous efforts in practice to celebrate the coming Yule-tide. One by one legends and customs have been disproved and overthrown, yet none have, with any success dared attack the legends and customs sacred to Christmas-tide. Here and there a savant has tried to prove that December 25 does not mark the birthday of Christ. Men and women read, smile, and pass on.

Plano is the historic spot where the headquarters of our church was located for a number of years; in fact it was nearly, if not quite, the very place of its incipiency.

The branch is not dead, as some would try to make it appear, nor does it sleep.

At times our branch seems to wane, then again it comes back to its place numerically. A number lately have come from other places. This encourages us and causes our hearts to rejoice. A cheerful spirit and a true spiritual countenance is truly a feast and a joy for ever.

This brings us to the thought of the article written by Bro. Elbert A. Smith in the HERALD of November 28. He has hit upon the keynote of much of the dissatisfaction existing, not only in the church and its surroundings, but also with people in general, and more especially in many Saints' homes. We do not exhibit that true devotional joyousness that we should. Neither do we let that joyousness enter into our daily lives, in our business intercourse, etc. As he says, many of our troubles are enlarged by the use of the blue spectacles.

Let us cultivate friendship, good fellowship, love, joy, hope, and cheerfulness, then those around us will partake of this joyful sunlight, and be cheerful with us.

WILSON L. GORTON.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.

The work on the new church is being hurried forward. Our first meeting will be held in the basement on December 20, when the eleventh annual Sunday-school Christmas-tree entertainment will be held. The scholars are all agreed over being the first to enter; and we are glad to see their happiness. They were one of the first auxiliaries to come to our assistance financially. One Sunday afternoon in September, when figuring and scheming on building the church, Elder Evans was impressed to go over to the Sunday-school and appeal to the children for one hundred dollars. They responded with one hundred dollars and sixty-five cents cash.

The services in the Majestic continue with unabated interest. The house is filled every night, and many are turned away. The theater is inspected by the police at every service to prevent overcrowding, which is against the law governing public buildings. Water baptism has been the subject of Elder Evans' lectures the past three Sundays. The following letter sent up among the questions on the collection plates represents the feelings of hundreds: "To President Evans, (mistaken name, Latter Day Saints, should be, Primitive or only true Christians.) Two imperative reasons why you should change the name Latter Day Saints: 1. It is suggestive of Mormonism and its detestable polygamy. 2. You diagnose so truthfully, and explain so clearly, the Bible that the proper name of your section of pure Christianity should be, Primitive or true Christians, or some such suggestive name (as short as possible); you will then save the ever-recurring question you hate so much. Again, hundreds, if not thousands, would join your division of pure, unalloyed Christianity if Latter Day Saints were not the name. I myself should be inclined to join, and say that I belonged to the Primitive, pure, or any such title that you could "NEVER THE LESS, WHEAT FOR MAN." D.G.C.

This chart shows the value of a dime when invested in different sorts of food, such as wheat, potatoes, baker's bread, beef, etc. It is reproduced from chart 2, page 4, of "Principles of Nutrition and Nutritive Value," by W. Ogden Armour and other meat-packers are quoting biblical authority for their meat-packing habits, as follows: "Thou shalt not eat anything that dieth of itself; thou shalt give it unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat; or thou mayest sell it unto an alien."—Deuteronomy 14:21.—Appl. to Reason, December 1, 1906.

"Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself; thou shalt give it unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat; or thou mayest sell it unto an alien; for thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God."—Deuteronomy 14:21, King James' Version.

THE MESSENGER AND HIS MESSAGE.

Professor Elmslie, that noble Scotchman who a few years ago went to his reward, was to preach his first sermon in the parish of Rayne. His mother was anxious to hear her boy preach for the first time, but unable to attend, she wrote to a friend to hear him, and to tell her frankly how the boy did. The answer was returned, but was never heard of by him till a few days before his death; his sister, finding it among his mother's papers, read it to him. It was this:

1. He held the lamp of truth that day
So low that none could miss the way;
And yet so high, to bring in sight
That picture fair—"The World's Great Light,"
That, gazing up—the lamp between—
The hand that held it scarce was seen.

2. He held the pitcher, stooping low,
To lips of little ones below;
Then raised it to the weary saint,
And bade him drink, when sick and faint,
They drank—the pitcher thus between—
The hand that held it scarce was seen.

3. He blew the trumpet soft and clear,
That trembling sinners need not fear;
And then with louder note, and bold,
To raze the walls of Satan's hold!
The trumpet coming thus between—
The hand that held it scarce was seen.

4. But when the Captain says, "Well done,
Thou good and faithful servant—come!
Lay down the pitcher and the lamp,
Lay down the trumpet—leave the camp!"
The weary hands will then he seen,
Clasped in those pierced ones—naught between.

A PREACHER'S TEMPTATION.

Close after the temptation of criticism comes the temptation of praise. The love of praise reigns more or less in every heart. The speaker, the singer, the actor, whoever seeks to move men by the power of thought or emotion, by fit words fitly sung or spoken, is liable to the temptation that lies in "the sacred lust of praise." This is the Delilah who has shorn many a young Samson of his strength. The soul eager to tell itself, body and mind vibrating like a locomotive just in from a hundred mile run, the young clergyman goes to the foot of the pulpit stairs and some one says, "That was a fine sermon to-day"; another, "That was a great sermon." How natural to be grateful, to be pleased that he had not spent his strength in vain! How pleasing to the marksman who, aiming at a target a thousand yards away, sees hoisted the flag that tells him he had hit the center, and how natural for his comrades to say, "Well done!" At first it is a spur in the side of his intent; too often repeated, and too much accounted of, it has the subtle effect of making the mind feel that it is as really great as is the praise.

Presently the young man is seen going about carrying the incense with him wherever he goes. The consciousness of it is in the cut of his hair, in the lilt of his voice, in the beat of his step, in the wave of his hand. His condescension to ordinary men is charming and ludicrous. Because he has brought a spray of autumn maple-leaves from the hills and heard it praised, need he wear his hair long, forgetful of the infinite wealth of color he saw sweeping to the very mountain-top and which he could not bring? Because a bare-legged boy, first dabbling in the stream, finds and brings a minnow or a chub to his mother and hears her say, "Great fisherman!" need he strut, unmindful of all the myriad trout that leap and flash in a thousand streams which he could not catch? How little of what the awakened mind sees can the most facile tongue tell. Why should the eyes be for a moment blinded to the abundance escaped by the flashing praise for the little secured?

The temptation lies in this, that, when for any of many reasons, the usual meed of praise is not forthcoming on any given day, there is a note of resentment in the mind, of dissatisfaction, not with itself, but with those who are thought to have either failed to respond or to have been incapable of appreciating. "Oh Simon! Simon! Satan hath desired to have you!" —Robert Mackenzie, D. D.

CROWDED HOUSES.

We are at Keeler, Michigan, in the midst of a series of meeting, where the restoration banner has never hitherto been unfurled. Great crowds attend. The people come at half past six in the evening in order to get seats. The two churches here refused to open their doors to us, and a Mr. Roberts opened a vacant store-building, seating, lighting, and heating it. We began Tuesday evening, December 4, and have occupied successively up to date, and have appointments over the Sabbath. The people simply jam the building. The harvest is in the hands of the Lord. But the "rumors" of the work are extending out into the rural districts. Keeler is an inland village sixteen miles northeast of Benton Harbor, and has about three hundred population.

'Tis a clean, up-to-date hamlet.

SUCCESSFUL TENT-MEETING.

At our Niagara conference last June there was much speculation as to whether or not a tent campaign would be successful in Hamilton. However, Bro. Frederick Gregory and I were delegated to give it a trial. We worked at it for five weeks and nine have been baptized, while four others are billed for Friday next, and several others are almost ready. A Religio with over twenty members has been organized, and interest is good.

"THE REORGANIZED CHURCH VS. SALVATION FOR THE DEAD."—LETTER NO. 2.

LAMONI, IOWA, NOVEMBER 20, 1906.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH:

Resuming the review of the pamphlet by Mr. Joseph F. Smith, Jr., I note that he has considerable to say about Zenas H. Gurley and others prominent in the Reorganized Church, speaking of it as "the New Organization," and seems to think that we are committed to its being a new organization, when the fact of their using that term and then entirely abandoning it is evidence that they saw the term was inappropriate to conditions, and that to use it was an error; for this term is found in the writings of the Reorganized Church only for a very short time after the church was reorganized in 1853.

In the quotation made in my last letter from this work of Mr. Smith, page 4, you observe the following statements: He opens this quotation by saying, "It stands to reason that if the Lord rejected his church with its dead because of transgression, or any other cause whatever, that he would not raise up a substitute church to carry on his work on earth and still keep the dead." Further on he says: "Yet the 'Reorganized' Church declares that the Lord did this very thing."

This is a gross misrepresentation. The Reorganized Church has never declared any such thing; has never admitted that the church is a substitute church; but has maintained that it was the original church reorganized; and in this has been sustained by legal decisions. Judge L. S. Sherman, of the Court of Common Pleas, for Lake County, Ohio, decided in the Kirtland Temple suit as follows:

That the church in Utah, the defendant, of which John Taylor is president, has materially and largely departed from the faith, doctrines, laws, ordinances, and usages of said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and has incorporated into its system of faith the doctrines of celestial marriage and plurality of wives, and the doctrine of Adam-god worship, contrary to the laws and constitution of said original church.

And the Court do further find that the plaintiff, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is the true and lawful continuation of, and successor to the said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized in 1830, and is entitled in law to all its rights and property.

This decision was rendered February 23, 1890.

In the case of the Temple Lot, Independence, Missouri, Judge Philips, of the western division of the Western District of the Circuit Court of the United States, for Missouri, also decided that the Reorganized Church was the original church in fact, and entitled to its rights and properties. And though the Court of Appeals subsequently denied the Reorganized Church possession on the ground of "laches," this decision so far as it pertained to succession was not overruled.
In view of these facts, and that the position of the church was before him in its publications, a man who will affirm that the Reorganized Church declares that God raised up a substitute church, either willfully misrepresents or is very dull of comprehension.

In the quotation made from page 7 you will observe that Mr. Smith affirms that the ordinance referred to continued to be performed until the temple was completed and the Saints were driven from Nauvoo. In thus making the statement that the temple was completed, he not only contradicts your testimony and that of your brother, Alexander H. Smith, and others, frequently published, but contradicts the testimony of Brigham Young, whom he declares in the next breath the spirit of Elijah rested mightily upon.

On January 1, 1877, in the temple at St. George, Utah, President Young said:

Joseph located the site for the Temple Block in Jackson County, Missouri, and pointed out the south-east corner of the Temple in the year 1831, also laid the corner stone for a Temple in Far West, Caldwell County, Missouri. These Temples were not built. We built one in Nauvoo. I could pick out several before me now that were there when it was built, and know just how much was finished and what was done. It is true we left brethren there with instructions to finish it, and they got it nearly completed before it was burned, but the Saints did not enjoy it. Journal of Discourses, vol. 15, pp. 393, 394.

If the temple was nearly completed it certainly was not entirely completed. Just how much of it was completed you know as well as any one else living, perhaps.

In a foot-note on page 7 Mr. Smith betrays his disposition to exaggerate, and to deduc conclusions that are not justified by the reading. He says "the font was dedicated November 8, 1841, by President Brigham Young" in the presence of and under the direction of the Prophet, Joseph Smith." He refers to Millennial Star, volume 18, pages 744 and 745, for evidence of his statement. Turning to these pages we find not a word in regard to Joseph Smith's directing in the matter. Perhaps he did; but to cite a passage to prove a thing when the proof is not there, is an indication that the writer is inclined to draw upon his own imagination as to what a passage proves.

While on the subject of baptism for the dead, which, as we have before stated, Mr. Smith declares was forbidden to be performed in the river on October 3, 1841, and resumed in the temple font the 21st of November, 1841, we have this to say: If the font was dedicated on the day set forth in the Millennial Star and from that time henceforth the ordinance of baptism for the dead was performed, then it is evident that these baptisms were only to be accepted temporarily; for an epistle of the Twelve, published in the December following, and signed by Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Orson Pratt, William Smith, Lyman Wight, Wilford Woodruff, John Taylor, George A. Smith, and Willard Richards, warns the church of danger of rejection with its dead. This document is dated December 13, 1841. It states:

The building of the Temple of the Lord, in the city of Nauvoo, is occupying the first place in the exertions and prayers of many of the saints at the present time, knowing as they do, that, if this building is not completed, speedily, "we shall be rejected as a church with our dead," for the Lord our God hath spoken it.—Times and Seasons, vol. 3, p. 622.

The italics as we give them are in the original publication.

Mr. Joseph F. Smith, Jr., has the ordinance of baptism for the dead permanently restored prior to the time of this statement signed by the Twelve. The above epistle was published in the Times and Seasons for December 15, 1841. Nearly a year afterwards, in the Times and Seasons for October 1, 1842, Joseph Smith then being editor, there appeared an editorial under the caption, "The Temple," which commences with these words:

If there is any subject in which the Saints of the Most High are interested more than another, it is in the completion of that edifice, etc.

And near the close of this same article we find the following:

The word of the Lord is build my house, and until that command is fulfilled we stand responsible to the great Jehovah for the fulfillment of it, and if not done in due time we may have to share the same fate that we have heretofore done in Missouri.

If the ordinance of baptism for the dead had been permanently resumed as early as November 21, 1841, the statement of the Twelve a month later in regard to the church being rejected with their dead, would be of no force. Nor would be the words of Joseph Smith nearly a year later. We are therefore of the opinion that the paragraph in the Millennial Star, page 744, which asserts that this font is for the baptisms for the dead until the temple should be finished, is to be understood to convey the idea that after a sufficient time is given for the completion of the temple the privilege to perform this ordinance in the temporary font was to be withdrawn. Further, it is possible that we have been led into error in concluding upon the authority of the Millennial Star that baptisms for the dead were performed in that font at all; for the history of Joseph Smith was tampered with before being published in that periodical and after his death. We are justified in this assertion by the concession made by these Utah people in the preface of the first volume of their church history. Quoting from the statement of their historians, George A. Smith and Wilford Woodruff, this preface has the following (see pages 5 and 6):

The history of Joseph Smith is now before the world, and we are satisfied that a history more correct in its details than this was never published. To have it strictly correct, the greatest possible pains have been taken by the historians and clerks.
engaged in the work. They were eye and ear witnesses of nearly all the transactions recorded in this history, most of which were reported as they transpired, and, where they were not personally present, they had had access to those who were. Moreover, since the death of the Prophet Joseph, the history has been carefully revised under the strict inspection of President Brigham Young, and approved by him. We, therefore, hereby bear our testimony to all the world, unto whom these words shall come, that the history of Joseph Smith is true, and is one of the most authentic histories ever written.

The history of Joseph Smith here referred to purports to have been written by himself; and yet we have the concession that these historians and clerks in preparing it were competent to do so because they were eye and ear witnesses of nearly all the transactions recorded in this history. And where they were not personally present they had access to those who were; thus conveying the idea that they did not publish the history as Joseph Smith wrote it, but as they or those whom they interviewed afterwards related it. And in addition to this the statement is made that the history had been carefully revised under the strict inspection of Brigham Young, and approved by him. Nothing can be clearer, if this concession is to be credited, than the fact that Joseph Smith did not write all that was published over his signature as history.

We think it possible, therefore, that this young man, Joseph F. Smith, Jr., has been led astray by the statement made in the Millennial Star.

Another point we wish to notice while on this, that is, that the question of rejection of the church did not originate with the Reorganized Church. The possibility and danger of its rejection were mentioned by the Twelve as early as 1841, and the dispersion of the church by Joseph in October, 1842. The inference from Joseph's language is that the church would not be driven from Nauvoo if they completed the temple. If Joseph was right in his statement, the fact that the church was driven from Nauvoo is evidence that the temple was not finished. Place this statement of Joseph Smith, the Seer, in juxtaposition with that of Mr. Joseph F. Smith, Jr., "the temple was completed and the Saints were driven from Nauvoo," and how does the production of Mr. Joseph F. Smith, Jr., appear?

Mr. Smith's pamphlet makes assertion that the keys and powers were bestowed upon the Twelve by Joseph Smith. In support of this he quotes the testimony of Orson Hyde, Wilford Woodruff, and Bathsheba W. Smith. These statements, with the exception of that of Bathsheba W. Smith, together with several others, we examined in our book entitled, True Succession in Church Presidency, pages 80 to 83; and without repeating the statements here, we insert our conclusion:

Examine these several statements carefully, and one thing will be very evident; viz., that we are not sure that we have the words of Joseph Smith, for the language is not given twice alike. If we have his words, tell us in which statement they are, that we may consider it. Another point we notice; that is, that the further we get from the time spoken of the stronger is the language used. This looks suspicious, manifesting as it does a disposition upon the part of the witnesses to exaggerate, which grew upon them with time. Brigham Young first speaks of that which was bestowed being the keys of the "apostleship," later he mentions it as the keys to lead into the celestial gate.

Elder Pratt says nothing of keys or leadership.

Elder Hyde is a little more modest than Brigham; he does not say a word about keys, but simply that the responsibility to lead was upon them.

In 1844 Elder Woodruff speaks freely of keys in his prelude, but does not quote Joseph as using the word, but simply that the responsibility of the kingdom rests upon the shoulders of the Twelve.

None of these testimonies is inconsistent with our position. But when this growing tendency to exaggerate manifested itself in 1892, how was it? Then it was made to appear that Joseph bestowed upon the Twelve every key, power, and principle which he (Joseph) had held. Yet this is too indefinite for the purpose, in 1888, and hence it is stated that every key, ordinance, principle, and priesthood belonging to the last dispensation, and which Joseph Smith held as Prophet, Seer, and Revelator, was bestowed upon the Twelve. This story has not lost anything; but if any man can tell what Joseph Smith said upon that occasion, let him come forward with it and we will give it respectful consideration.

In the meantime we will concede the probability that Joseph Smith told the Twelve that the responsibility of the work would rest upon them, and that by the legitimate exercise of the authority vested in them the people could be led into the celestial gates; but if so it would not justify them in assuming to act outside the duty of their calling as defined in the law.

Further, if in addition to the duty of the Twelve, as defined in the law, Joseph bestowed upon them as a quorum all the priesthood, power, and authority of the First Presidency, what needed they for a First Presidency? And what advantage was gained to the church by the forming of a First Presidency in 1847, and upon three different occasions since?

If in 1844 the rights of presidency were bestowed upon the Quorum of Twelve, or the members of it as it was then organized, why was the quorum set aside in 1847 and a new presidency established? Or why were other members of the quorum set aside and all the rights of presidency vested in Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, and Willard Richards?

Again, if the rights of presidency were vested in Brigham Young and his associates by virtue of that bestowal of keys in 1844, did not the same rights inhere in William Smith, Lyman Wight, and John E. Page, who were members of the quorum at the time? Why should the Utah people brand these three men as apostates for not following the lead of fellow apostles who at the most were only their equals in holding keys of presidency?

Respectfully,

HEMAN C. SMITH.

TRUE REPENTANCE AS THE TEST OF FELLOWSHIP.

And now I speak concerning baptism. Behold, elders, priests, and teachers were baptized, and they were not baptized, save they brought forth fruit meet that they were worthy of it; neither did they receive any unto baptism, save they came forth with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, and witnessed unto Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church.—Doctrine and Covenants 17:7.

The writer is of the opinion that when these prerequisites are evinced on the part of those who make application for membership, no undue urging is necessary on the part of the minister. In fact, if urging at all is necessary, it is evidence that they do not understand the importance of that ordinance, baptism, and have not made the required preparation.

All sin is the transgression of law, and when the gospel law and its requirements have fully been presented, and those who hear it are not willing to comply therewith, it is evidence that they have not repented of those transgressions—and repentance means a forsaking of them.

Paul says: “How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?”—Romans 6:2. Hence, if one is not dead to sin he is unfit for a burial in the waters of baptism in the likeness of Christ’s death, and therefore could not arise to walk in newness of life.

How can we expect to build a spiritual house, the church of Christ, with carnal material? Or do we fancy that he will accept any kind of material regardless of whether or not it is molded or fashioned according to his divine instruction?

Is it not possible that this lack of observance is to a great extent responsible for nonspirituality in the church?

The Lord tells us:

He that receiveth my law and doeth it the same is my disciple; and he that saith he receiveth it and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you. Doctrine and Covenants 41:2.

What benefit is it to the church to swell its ranks with that kind of members in addition to some who are already there, who are not willing to do as he says, when he positively says that they are not his disciples and shall be cast out from among you?

Is not a good spiritual condition of the church more to be desired as a factor for good and as a light to the world, than the swelling of its ranks by untempered material?

The word of the Lord to his servant Joseph Luff is very appropriate and points in the right direction. Listen!

Behold, and consider: If my weapons are not sufficient for your faith, shall those things give them increase or shall ye add that which is carnal to make effectual the work for which my Spirit hath been given? Shall I be content while this evil doth pollute my estate? Behold the brick that is not burned and the mortar which is not tempered; yea, and the material which I have not selected shall not find permanent place with that of my choosing; for my fires shall consume and my floods shall overwhelm, and men within and without my church shall yet learn that but one pattern hath been given by which ye shall build, if I shall accept your labor; and but one line hath been given by which to measure; and whosoever shall not gauge himself

thereby and crucify himself to the world, shall yet be gauged thereby and shall lose his all—for “whosoever shall fall upon this stone shall be broken, but upon whomsoever it shall fall it shall grind him to powder.”

If “having truly repented of all our sins and come forth with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, and truly manifest by our works that we have received of the Spirit of Christ,” is the pattern, line, or measure by which he will measure men without the church, who seek admission, have we any right in the least to change the measure, or to admit any one who refuses or fails to thus be measured? If we do, how can we still maintain our standing before God and keep his law or measurement inviolate?

“Men within and without the church shall yet learn that but one pattern hath been given by which ye shall build.” This is in harmony with all scripture, hence he does not erect one standard for the ministry and another for the members, and still another for nonmembers; but only one line and one measure has been given by which to measure, and that is his test of fellowship in the true sense of the word.

In the writer’s opinion the counsel and advice of the Lord is tatamount to a command in this sense, that by obedience thereto blessings will follow; and condemnation will follow a failure to obey.

Now, while perhaps one transgression should not be pointed out over and above another, as all are equally objectionable before God, and without the forsaking of such the doors of the church should forever be closed, yet I feel to present for your consideration one or two to which the Lord has called our attention, right in the beginning of the history of the church, namely, strong drink and tobacco. They are both mentioned together. Who shall draw the line and say that one shall be a test of membership and the other not? The Lord has made no difference. We are told in the scripture that drunkards shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Tobacco was not in use at that time or likely that would have been put in the list of those things prohibited; but the Lord is not forgetful as to existing conditions, and when the time came for the establishing of his church, he again reminded them that “strong drinks are not for the belly, but for the washings of your bodies”; and he associates tobacco with the strong drinks by saying: “And again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man; but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill.”—Doctrine and Covenants 88:1.

The same instruction was repeated with a little more emphasis to the Reorganization, and is addressed to the ministry in order that they should set the example (and that means that others should follow that example): “Avoid the use of tobacco, and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example.”—Doctrine and Covenants 119:3.

Evidently the Lord’s counsel had not been made effectual by his instruction given in 1833, and now a positive command is given the ministry to avoid the use of these things in order to set the example and make the command effectual. Thus we see that he will measure all by the same measurement, and that all must yet learn this, both men within and without the church, is clearly portrayed, and all the excuses that men may make to justify themselves will in no sense alter or abrogate the decree of God. That the Lord knew it was an evil, and that it would increase in the land and cause untold misery, poverty, and want, and hence forbade his people to use it, is in evidence from the following statistics and extracts.

Comparative cost of liquor and tobacco in the United States:

Liquor, $900,000,000; tobacco, $600,000,000; bread, $565,000,000; meat, $305,000,000; iron and steel, $286,000,000; woolen goods, $257,000,000; sawed lumber, $235,000,000; cotton goods, $210,000,000; boots and shoes, $157,000,000; sugar and molasses, $155,000,000; public education, $96,000,000; clergymen’s salaries, $12,000,000; Christian missions, home and foreign, $5,500,000.—Facts for the Times, p. 288.

The figures can best be appreciated, and the enormity of the curse best be understood, when we take into consideration that the liquor and tobacco bill is forty seven million dollars more than the cost of bread, meat, sugar, and molasses, woolen goods, boots and shoes, and education all combined. Shall we as a church or church-members continue to pay in our mite to the upholding of such an institution, which is the curse of the world, the ruination of homes and family relations, the root of disease, and the destruction of our will power?

The United States is not alone engaged in this soul-destroying business: the world is engaged in it. The following is from the same work:

The distilleries of Edinburg, Scotland, produce annually over 4,000,000 gallons of whisky. When speaking of the world’s curse, tobacco must not be forgotten. In 1841, when the population was twenty-six million, twenty-three million pounds of tobacco were used. In 1887 with a population of thirty-seven million, fifty-three million pounds were used.—Page 291.

The following shows the condition of Germany:

Germany’s enormous drink bill is explained in letters to the bureau of manufactures from American Consuls Brittain and Guenther. Each inhabitant consumes a yearly average of 6½ quarts of wine, 129½ quarts of beer, and 9 quarts of brandy. For a population of 60,000,000 people, the liquor expenditure is $672,588,000. The average for male citizens over 15 years would be $37.36. By contrast, German expenditures for schools were $39,722,000, for working people’s insurance, $104,244,000, and the army and navy, $203,847,000.

Thus it will be seen that her drink-bill cost $264,775,000 more than the keeping up of the army and navy, educational institutions, and the working people’s insurance combined.

Who can fully grasp and comprehend these figures, and the crimes, misery, and poverty they represent; and shall those who profess to be followers of Christ, and who seek admission into his kingdom, persist in using these soul-destroying agencies?

The following extract will show the condition in France:

Drunkenness is the beginning and ending of life in the great French industrial centers. Against this vice, what can the salaries of women and children do? The woman’s labors help the drunken husband on the road to ruin. The child is born with disease in his bones, and with evil example before him. There are manufacturing towns (Lille, for instance) where the women have followed the example of the men, and have added drunkenness to their other vices. It is estimated that at Lille, twenty-five out of every one hundred men, and twelve out of every one hundred women are confirmed drunks. — Facts for the Times, p. 292.

Other countries might be cited where conditions are no better. Is it any wonder that the Lord should warn his people against these things?

Why do not the churches make such indulgences a test of fellowship, and especially we who profess greater light and inspiration than others, and to whom this command to avoid the use of tobacco and strong drink in any form has been given?

Are not men transgressing God’s law by using these things?

Is not sin the transgression of law?

Are not men required to repent of all their sins before they seek admission into his kingdom by baptism? Has not the Lord said: “By this ye may know if a man repenteth of his sins. Behold he will confess them and forsake them”?

I do not wish to be understood that these things alone referred to should be laid aside before entering the church or having membership in the church; but everything that will come under the heading of “having truly repented of all our sins” (forsaken them). Then, and not until then can we come worthily.

EVANGELISM AND SENSATIONALISM.

We are fully persuaded in our own mind that doing the work of an evangelist does not contemplate the utilization of the peculiar arts of the ecclesiastical buffoon. It does not mean the approval of the professional sensationalist. Yellow preaching is as indefensible as yellow newspapering. It does not mean abuse of other denominations.

And in the asserting of these negative propositions it is not intended to warrant the inference that sin is something to be handled with kid gloves and subject to rose-water treatment.

Sin is the ugliest thing in the world. It is a hideous scar upon the human soul. It cannot be eradicated except by the touch of the Great Physician.

It is the proclaiming this stupendous truth to the world which constitutes the true work of an evangelist. There can be no valid criticism of the most unsparing denunciation of sin. The Man of Galilee delivered the most withering arraignment of sin that ever found expression in language. But in the present state of the world’s thought the appeal which is going to find quickest repose in the hearts of men and women is that which brings home to their consciousness the fact that they are not getting out of life that which is really in store for them; that they are walking within the shadows when they might enjoy day after day the radiance of the sun; that they are constantly bending beneath burdens and forgetting the words of Him who said: “My yoke is easy, and my burden is light.”

An evangelist campaign organized for the promulgation of this truth can not fail of the most wholesome and uplifting influence upon any community. All efforts to make men and women better are worthy of all commendation. But the world is more thoughtful to-day than it ever was before, and appeals for the betterment of mankind should be made to the head as well as the heart. The problem of saving men is a reasonable one, and to the reason appeal should be made. The scheme of human redemption as outlined in the inspired word will never be fully understood this side the veil which separates mortals from the world beyond, but the crusade has been going forward for twenty centuries. Christianity is the most dominating force in the world to-day. Those who not only profess it but live it are doing the work of evangelists. “He that winneth souls is wise,” and “they that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars for ever and ever.” — Des Moines Capital, December 1, 1906.

OUR COMMERCIALIZED CHRISTMAS.

From Thanksgiving until Christmas most of us live in an atmosphere of deepening gloom. We begin that pre-season shopping by which we hope to save money, time, nerve, and the health of the shop-girls, but even the bargain sales afford but a dreary time. We are in terror of forgetting to give a present to somebody who will give us one.

The only star of hope in our horizon is the certainty that some of these people whom we shall forget will send us presents so far in advance of Christmas that we can square our account without their suspecting our neglect.

Once Christmas was quite another affair. Christmas Eve we hung our stockings on the mantelpiece in full confidence that Santa Claus could find his way through a six-inch stove-pipe. We tried hard to keep awake long enough to see him come, but we never caught him. Christmas morning found the stockings bulging with gifts and with a barley-sugar candy cat in the toe, which, as a concession to the day, we were allowed to eat before breakfast. But the Saint had escaped unseen.

And there was the Christmas-tree, with a grandfather to distribute the gifts and a strong force of uncles and aunts to maintain peace among the cousins. And there was skating in the afternoon with the choicest sort of mêlée to give the finishing touch to a day to be remembered until it was forgotten in the more specialized joys of a birthday.

How far away those days seem! It is not merely that we were boys and girls then and are men and women now, although that probably makes some difference. It is not even that to our unending surprise we find ourselves in the place of our fathers and mothers.

The spirit of Christmas itself has changed.

When we talk about Santa Claus to our children they look at us reprovingly as those whose eyes have been opened. What reality is there in that classic of blessed memories, " 'Twas the night before Christmas," for youngsters who think fireplaces are always heated with gas-logs and who live in steam-heated flats?

We still have our Christmas-tree, subject to the regulations of the fire department, but we are really slaves of our Christmas shopping-list.

Christmas, like ourselves, has been commercialized.

It is in fact the Decoration Day of a commercial age. Then, as on no other day, we face with compassion those who have fallen in our battles for wealth.

For a moment we think of the thousands of children who have no share in that easy life we give our children, and must find the season's joy in the charity dinner. Along with the barter to which we have debased our giving within our circle of acquaintances, we play at extending the spirit of the day to those who are the pawns of our industrial games. The Salvation lass, standing cold and numb on the street-corner, collecting funds for Christmas baskets for the poor, reminds us of the wreckage left in the wake of our prosperity.

We give a trifle to help the poor temper the bitterness of the year with a couple of hours' good eating. However sincere we may be in our efforts to spread Christmas cheer, our charity is none the less a test of the spirit of the day to those who are the pawns of our industrial games. peace" Mr. Balfour, in a recent debate on the navy estimates, dis­countenanced "any changes in the naval program which would weaken the existing forces." Mr. Lee followed him by saying that the British "naval supremacy" is securing an "era of peace"; it is "the best safeguard of peace," declared Earl Cawdor, in the House of Lords. But Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman was reported at the same time the naval program which would weaken the existing forces.

Discussing these utterances in the Westminster Review (London), Mr. Harry Hodgson denies that preparation for war is the best way to secure peace. For those who make this contention, he goes on, do not mean that by all nations making equal preparations for war peace will be secured, but by England's obtaining a dominancy this end is to be obtained. He claims that such a dominancy merely results in a national rivalry in armaments which is disastrous to all. To quote his own words:

"How will preparing for war tend to prevent war? We are not told; those who promulgate this doctrine don't give the rationale, so we must seek it.

"What is the exact meaning of this doctrine? The phrase which expresses it proves on examination to be of a very indefinite nature. We are to 'prepare for war.' If we were quite unprepared for war—if we were without army and navy, these words would have a definite meaning; the meaning would be that we ought to have an armed force; but as we are already prepared for war it is evident that the words are not used in the literal sense. What the supporters of this doctrine mean is that we ought to have further preparation for war. But how much further? To this question they have given no answer. They do not fix any degree of preparedness as the point we must reach to attain the greatest security of peace. Their cry is ever for more, and more, and more. If we are to give any clear meaning to this doctrine, then, what can it be but this: the more we prepare for war, the more likely we are to avoid it; and since we value peace very highly, we can not devote too much of our time to making engines of destruction and exercising ourselves in the use of them. The more, the better.

"How will increase of armaments tend to preserve peace? To take a somewhat lawless community, to exemplify the working of the theory, among whom fighting is not uncommon, would an increased arming of the turbulent elements commend itself to a man of sense as a means of making fighting less frequent and less disastrous? To have more and better weapons would not make them less disposed to fight; it would only facilitate the expression of their fighting disposition, and thus cause them to fight oftener." —Literary Digest, December 8, 1906.

the words of our modern teacher, Du Bois: "There is no true, healthful atmosphere but that which emanates from the Divine Man; no perfect light but the Light of the World; no substance of foo, but his truth; no safe exercise of will but in the will of God."

Has not God commanded the windows of our homes to be opened wide for the admission of this healthful atmosphere? Has he not commanded us to bring up our children in "light and truth" which he reveals to us "is intelligence," and which constitutes his own glory? And finally, in his admonition to three of the leading elders of his church, to Fredrick G. Williams that because he had neglected to teach his children light and truth that wicked one (Satan) had power over him to afflict him, and to Joseph Smith that unless his family repented and gave more earnest heed to his teachings they should be removed out of their place, does he not clearly and most emphatically announce to his people (and to the world if they will receive it) the importance which he places upon "the nurture and admonition" of children.

Thus far, it may be said by some, we have not been practical! have not taken the boy just as we find him in ordinary life—full of life, energy, activity, and mischief, inclined to unruliness and disobedience. In short, the natural boy, manly but full of faults—we have not taken such and by helpful suggestions, hints, and counsel tried to give such aid as parents who are "everywhere stretching out their arms for help" really need.

We admit that we have not. However, it is not our intention to overlook this, but rather to first call the attention of parents to the fact that prevention, not cure, is the plan God has laid down for us to follow, and that much—very much—in the early years of the child's life depends entirely upon the parents.

Largely endowed with the faculty of observation, in his early years before his sphere is broadened by contact with the great world outside of his home, this faculty finds in the home its fullest exercise. Hence the need—the paramount need—that the home life be all God intended it should be in order that the first lessons of childhood—lessons which will never be forgotten—be lessons such as Ruskin remembered of his own home.

To illustrate the power of observation in children, it is related that a Sunday-school scholar upon being asked by the superintendent: "Is your father a Christian?" answered, "Yes, sir, but he is not working at it much." Is it possible that this may be truthfully said of any of us? "Not working at it much." If so, there is small hope that our children will profit by any testimonies, any teachings of ours, or by any stress laid upon faith, works, or doctrine, for:

"Thou must be true thyself
If thou the truth wouldst teach," and if we would train up our children in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord," we ourselves must obey his law. It may also occur to some that we have laid all stress upon citizenship in heaven, and very little if any upon citizenship in our own government. This also is true, but we have no apology to offer, for we hold that if our boy is fitted to be a loyal and true citizen of the commonwealth of heaven, he is thereby fitted (and that, too, in the best possible way) for becoming a true, intelligent, and loyal citizen of our own government. We would have our boy so trained, so nurtured in the admonition of the Lord, that he might grow up to be the man Archbishop Farrar thus describes:

"Whenever you see a wrong deed and have the courage to say: 'It is wrong, and I for one will have nothing to do with it'; whenever you come in contact with a low and unchristian standard, or a bad, unworthy habit, and are man enough, first to refuse to succumb to it, and then to do your best to overthrow it, you are a prophet, and by acting thus you can help to improve the moral judgment and raise the moral standard of the world."

Truly such a man is the prophet of better things, of higher motives and principles which are yet to rule the world.

Sins are built as temples are—
Based on truth's eternal law.
Sure and steadfast, without flaw,
Through the sunshine, through the snows,
Up and on the building goes;
Every fair thing finds its place,
Every hard thing lends a grace,
Every hand may make or mar.
—Susan Coolidge.

Every true parent, be that parent father or mother, cherishes the desire to see his children occupy positions of trust and usefulness in the world and to see them honored and respected in the community in which they live. Every influence which surrounds the boy must be reckoned with and he must be forewarned of the evils in the world or how can he encounter them and come off victorious? Upon this point it is our intention to be brief. Not because we consider the subject of small importance. To the contrary we deem it of the very greatest importance, but we have not time or space to enter upon it otherwise than briefly. In treating upon this subject a recent writer says:

"Mothers and fathers will have much to answer for at the bar of God, because they allowed a false modesty to prevent them from explaining to their children the use and abuse of their sexual nature as they teach them the use and abuse of the stomach or any other organ. . . . the innocence of ignorance is as frail as the virtue of knowledge is impregnable. Hence, I would have children protected by the knowledge of parents imparted in that candid, simple, and sincere manner which is so impressive to the young mind and so become to them great and sacred truths. I would show the child that a great and awful trust has been given him, and that while no part of the body is impure, vicious, base, yet in the perversion of his nature or the degrading and misuse of his functions come pollution, disease, and that degradation which will poison the soul as the garment dipped in the blood of Nessus poisoned Hercules, Though it merely touched his skin. A child properly taught by the parents whom he loves and reveres will be clothed in an armor such as ignorance and concealment can not give.

"Every child who comes into this world has a right to the environments best calculated to call out all that is most divine in his being. Through unjust conditions, through the selfishness of man and the low ideals which prevail in society, comparatively few of the little buds of life unfold in this congenial atmosphere; but there is a growing conviction in the minds of thoughtful people that children have sacred rights, which form a part of the broad vision of justice which is gliding the dawn of the new time; and to those who appreciate the solemn responsibilities resting upon their souls, I address the foregoing thoughts, which may be summarized in a few easily remembered lines:

"1. Fill the childish mind with high, pure, and attractive ideals.

"2. Familiarize him with the most luminous expressions of the divine which have blossomed along the the pathway of time, and give him the essence of the highest thought which they who have scaled the Himalayas of spirituality have given to the world.

"3. Unfold to him the great pages of history which have shaped civilization, and which illustrate the presence and growth of the democratic ideal in the heart of man.

"4. Teach him to draw inspiration and pure pleasure from the beauty of flowers, fields, and streams as did Burns, Wordsworth, and Whittier, and awaken in him that deep, reverential love for nature and art which is essentially a religious passion, uplifting and onward, impelling in its influence, and which at all times inspires moral rectitude; not in a tedious or didactic

BARTLETT, Iowa, December 13, 1906.

Dear Herald: I am at present holding meetings in the King's Schoolhouse, near Bartlett, with fair interest and good attention. Came here from Council Bluffs, where I preached on last Sunday twice in their neat church. Prospects are good there for advancement, all seemingly working in harmony under the genial leadership of Elder S. Harding. Please correct my name in Bro. W. H. Greenwood's letter of this week's Herald, page 1186. It should read J. Arber, not J. Asher. I expect to leave here next week for Sidney. Still hopeful, and in the conflict, Yours in gospel bonds,

J. ARBER.

ANTELOPE, Oklahoma, December 9, 1906.

Editors Herald: There is no church branch here. My mother, brother, and sister are the only family of Saints in this neighborhood. I am a member of the church, but I do not live here. I am here on a visit. My husband is not a member of the Latter Day Saint Church but holds to the Christian Church. I would be so much pleased if he would embrace the gospel. It would be so nice if we could both belong, and live where we could have the benefit of attending church and enjoy the society of Saints. I ask the prayers of the Saints in his behalf. I do not have the privilege of association with God's people, but if I had I would not hesitate to visit them. Now the Saints at times seem to be neglecting one duty, in not visiting each other. I believe if they would associate more they would feel better, and be able to do better in the work. I would like very much to take the church papers, and will as soon as I get located again. My husband is now in South America as traveling salesman. Will be gone all winter. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may live faithful, and be able to raise my two little boys as I should. I am, as ever.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. G. H. GRIM.

GRINNELL, Iowa, December 13, 1906.

Editors Herald: I have not been in the field as much as I would like to have been; but my health would not permit me. I opened a new place in Frakerville in October. I was there over three Sundays, then I took a terrible cold and had to quit. I was sorry to do so, for there were several very much interested, and I believe they will obey if they get the proper chance. I organized a fine Sunday-school there. Bro. and Sr. Joseph Young and Bro. and Sr. G. Longdon had it in operation when I got there. They are workers, and are doing all they can to get the gospel before their neighbors. They gave me a very pleasant home while there, and with some others supplied my wants when I left them. I hope that I may soon be able to go out again, for I delight to be about my Master's business.

In gospel bonds,

Editors Herald: Thanksgiving Day at this place was one long to be remembered by all that were present; and there were a goodly number present, among whom were Bro. Alexander H. Smith and Bro. T. C. Kelley. Grand sermon was preached Wednesday night, the 29th, by Bro. Kelley. At eleven o'clock on Thanksgiving Day a grand sermon was preached by Alexander H. Smith. And then we fixed dinner as best we could for the entire congregation, about one hundred people in all. After dinner, preaching again by T. C. Kelley. The good preaching by the brethren called to the minds of all that every day ought to be thanksgiving day. The good Lord has commanded his people to pray always, and to watch and be on their guard. Bro. T. C. Kelley's daughter has set a pattern here that is worthy and honorable to all the Saints that met her. Her mildness and kindness and plainness are to be cherished, and should be by all Latter Day Saints.

Your brother in Christ,

SAM DIXON.
Editors Herald: I am devoting my time to district work, especially to the branches: visiting the isolated Saints as far as possible and preaching where opportunity offers. I was called to Roton, New Mexico, the 1st inst. on important business connected with the Colfax Branch, which has been adjusted, we think, in a satisfactory way and according to law.

I visited Van Houten, a large coal-mining camp, where some of the Saints are employed, and preached twice last Sunday in the company schoolhouse. In the evening there was a large attendance and good attention, some of the officers of the company being present. Ours is the only church-services in the camp. Bro. Hardin and Young are doing a good work in connection with a union Sunday-school at that place.

We ordained Bro. Thomas Hardin to the office of elder, Came to this place yesterday to remain over Sunday, and as much longer as necessary. There seems to be need of a branch organization at this place, but have not taken in the situation sufficiently to decide as to the future. There are many faithful Saints in this part, but they are very much scattered.

Do not know where I shall go from here; maybe home until after the holidays; or over the Range as wisdom and necessity shall direct.

Your brother in the faith, E. F. SHUPE.

Dear Saints: I feel it my duty to write a few words in regard to my past experience, and future desires, as my experience, it seems, has been the only lesson that could turn my heart to God. I came into this church when I was young; but it was only a few years until I began to wander away from God, as the young Saints were few in number at that place, and the company that I was thrown into was such that I should have shunned. Therefore I was led on and on until I took to strong drink, which has and will ruin all who use it. It was not my intention then to lead such a life the rest of my days, for I had already received enough to know that this great latter-day work was of God. But I intended to see what I then called "a good time" while I was young. But now it makes my heart ache to think how the last few years of my life have been wasted in darkness and sin.

I was in the city of St. Louis, my parents then living in Southern Illinois, when I received a letter from home stating that they had sold out and were going to move to Knoebuster, Missouri. Being so tired and discouraged with the life I was leading, I longed to be some place where there were Saints who might encourage and help to lift me up, that I might live the life of a true Latter Day Saint. And I will say this much, let it strike whom it may: a person who will not forgive and help to lift up the fallen by speaking an encouraging word to them, has not the true Spirit of God and he will stand no more show to reap a reward than the one who has fallen. I do not care how few people may have fallen, either men or women, they have hearts and most of them have hearts that are easily touched.

I have seen the time myself when just one kind word would have helped me a great deal, when a few minutes' encouraging talk would have turned my footsteps back toward God; but it seemed as if it had been my lot until lately to be shunned and kicked on down. But now I have turned my footsteps toward God and even though all humanity turn against me, I know that God will forgive, and by his help I will live a godly life and as to intoxicating drinks, even though I should be bitten by the poisonous serpent, I shall never touch one drop, for I have now turned my back upon it. And, dear Saints, my object in writing this is that the Saints who know me personally may watch me to see that I do live up to what I have said, and that by my future living you will know whether or not I am in earnest, and above all, I do hope and pray, and I will ask the Saints to pray for me, that by the help of Almighty God I may be able to resist all evil temptations.

Your brother in the one faith, OAKLEY R. MILLER.

Editors Herald: While sending you this small order of $5.30 for church books and the papers, would say this is from Saints who were baptized within the past year, who are desirous of learning their duty and gaining more light and coming up to the standard of perfection required of them. They are surrounded by enemies of the gospel who throw all possible hindrances in their way. Yet with all this they say the more they understand of the gospel the better they understand and grander it seems, and they rejoice that they broke away from the evils of the world and made covenant with God to serve him with his people.

I have been laboring here for the last month and also a month last June, and know their surroundings are not as pleasant as they might be, and yet their hope in the future grows brighter every day.

There are only a few Saints here but they have their Sunday-school, and more outsiders come than there are Saints. All seem to enjoy studying the scripture and are trying to learn of the better life. I feel that God will bless their efforts for good. They are all young in the work but are doing fine. I ask the Sunday-school workers and all the Saints to remember them in their prayers. I have met with them the last four Sundays, and had charge of their school, and taught a class, and helped them all I could. Spoke seven times for them, had one sacrament-service, have encouraged them by counsel and advice, and taught them of the laws of the church by the fireside. It is a busy time in this country at present. It is quite discouraging for the missionary; in the spring it is hurry to get the crop in, and people do not have time to go to church. Then for about six weeks, June and first half of July, we can do missionary work provided we can find some place to work in. Then from July until it freezes up in the winter, it is hurry to get the harvesting and thrashing done, and people can not go to church. Last but not least winter comes, and it is too cold.

Bro. H. E. Moler, you are not the only one who fails to get his letters answered, but you have the advantage of me, for it is too cold in this northern country to go on the street in the winter. I have sent out lots of letters inquiring for places where I could get a stopping-place and an opportunity to do some preaching, and only a very few replies came back. So we can not form plans for future work. It is like working in the dark. May God direct and help us to improve every opportunity.

My boy has been quite sick with the typhoid fever, but thanks to God's goodness to him he is able to be up again. I leave here to-morrow (December 13) for DeSmit. There are no Saints there, but I received a request from a family there (entire strangers) to come. I hope to be able to do some good for the Master's work. I ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints that I may be faithful to the work intrusted to my care.

Yours in hope of eternal life.

Dear Herald: I can truly say I am in the faith and enjoy the few privileges that I have. God often blesses me, and our son, of thirteen years. It is very lonely to be where we can not attend church; but we look ahead with hope that it will be different by and by. We enjoy the Herald very much. It is a very welcome visitor at our home.

BARBARA DAVIS.

Arlington, South Dakota, December 12, 1906.
Dear Readers: I have noted in these columns of late some articles concerning the "carnival of crime in Pittsburg" and I am unwilling that any one should entertain the thought that all the citizens of the "Smoky City" are bad; so I write in behalf of the better class. Many of the reports of the social conditions prevailing here are true, but we can as truthfully say that many are abnormal, and that some are absolutely false. The accumulation of industries that are found here is something marvelous beyond expression or description by me, and these industries have brought within our borders a cosmopolitan population with the good have come the bad. While we are not at liberty even though they are not so widely advertised. While the four winds are heralding the messages of evil, the deeds of charity with the good have come the bad. While we have been reading of the lawlessness of Pittsburg, I wonder if you have thought of it as did Nathaniel of Nazareth: "Can there any good thing come out of Pittsburg?" To those who may have entertained such a thought I would respond with the words of Philip, "Come and see!"

To those among and with whom I have labored in the past I am pleased to state that the seasons spent together in the service of the Master remain fresh in my memory, and that my frequent recollections thereof bring constantly thoughts of good, and they afford material for strength in times of severe trial and arduous labor. These numerous enriching experiences of the past when recounted tend to the elevation and edifying of the soul as did the original experience. Hence it is with the most peaceful thought that I remember our associated labors.

On December 2, 1905, I came to this city to labor in the interests of the great work of God, and my field of operations has been confined to the city and adjacent suburbs ever since. When I came I found a peculiar mixture of favorable and unfavorable conditions. Realizing the futility of man's powers, we have depended upon that of the divine, and have received of it in direct proportion to our willingness to submit to his requirements. Among the unfavorable conditions was a heavy burden of debt, which by a diligent effort and quite general cooperation was reduced several hundred dollars. The principal problem seems to be very general among the branches and is a fruitful source of contention and ill feeling. I wish the Saints everywhere could see the necessity and value of a united and continuous effort to prevent debt, or if already incurred, to overcome it. I am made to rejoice when I hear of the dedication of our churches for I can realize something of the feeling that must be experienced by those who have accomplished so noble a work.

I can not recount all the experiences of the past that have been fraught with divine favor, but I do feel to bear testimony to the efficacy of fervent prayer, especially when many earnest souls are united therein. I have witnessed much of the power of God in restoring the physically and mentally afflicted to conditions of normal health, but of late my experiences have far transcended those of the past. At the last conference of this district in a priesthood-meeting it was generally agreed that when they were notified they would all unite in fasting and prayer and in the administrations. At times conditions that would, as a rule, militate against the exercise of faith have been so transformed by the power of God that everything seemed to inspire a greater faith and to make its exercise a delight. We bear testimony to the truth of the statements of scripture which read: "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty," and "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." My soul delights in returning thanks, but words fail to express the feelings, "But Jesus, listening, can hear. The songs I can not sing."

We have, in this branch, what we term "rally day," and we have now made it an occasion for rallying all our widely scattered forces together once in three months, having as a special object the spiritual upbuilding of the Saints. We find it a good thing, and can recommend it to others widely scattered branches. It does not only bring a large crowd together on those occasions, but has a tendency to increase the attendance at all services. To enjoy the association of the Saints, and to receive of the Spirit that attends, increases our appetite for such experiences, and is an inducement to the making of greater effort in order to be present as frequently as possible.

At present I know of no heavy clouds to disturb the atmosphere of our spiritual environment and for this we are duly grateful. The vapors that occasionally arise serve as reminders that we are all human and that it is highly necessary to pray continually, to fast oft, and to labor diligently for our advancement as individuals and as a body. I have found in Pittsburg a noble band of Saints who seem to ever deem it a pleasure to provide against the recurring wants of the ministry of Christ, and who support the work in every way possible. Our prayer-meetings are of a nature that bring light and a halo of peace to all. We have also felt comforted in preaching the word. As we ought, we are trying to render to our Master a service that will be expressive of our appreciation of his abundant favor.

In conclusion, dear Saints, I ask that you count not my silence an evidence of a dearth of interest in the work, for I can truthfully say that my interest in the well-being of the Saints, their growth, and the improvement of the church, in all ways, is becoming greater daily.

With a heart filled with gratitude to God and his saints everywhere, and with brightening hopes of final triumph over all that is evil, I am,

Your comrade in the harvest field,

809 Bluff Street.

I improve on. I have thought of this note for two years but only now have courage to give it. Yours, 'A Presbyterian.'"

Space will not permit me to give Elder Evans' reply; but it was to this effect: God always called his people "saints." Primitive would not be correct, for we live in the latter days. If we wear the crown, we must 'carry the cross.' His splendid reply brought great applause.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
The foregoing note reveals the stumbling-block; but many are getting over; and baptisms are now taking place at every service in the church.

The Methodists, who have criticized us severely for preaching in a theater, are now advertising that they are going to commence services in the Grand Opera-house, which is a few doors east of us, on the same street. Guess two or three thousand drawn from their congregations produce some empty pews; and they are going to come down where the crowds are. They will make a splendid comparison. A great advantage for Bro. Evans. We were grateful to Torry-Alexander last winter, and here is a warm welcome to our Methodist friends. They advertise that they will have the best speakers from all over America. They will need them if they preach next door to R. C. A. F. McLean.

FIRST KANSAS CITY BRANCH.

For the last six months our branch has been gaining, both in spirituality and in attendance. Our meetings are a blessing to all who attend; almost without an exception perfect harmony exists with all the members. For a month past our speakers have been D. F. Winn, president of the branch, F. C. Warnky, E. F. Atwell, also G. E. Harrington and M. H. Bond of the stake presidency, who gave us good advice and instruction on the law and rules governing the branch.

Two weeks ago Bro. John Creverton, our presiding priest, went to Nevada to be gone for some time, and Bro. L. Fowler was elected to act pro tem. Our aged and beloved Sr. W. W. Blair in here with us, visiting her children; we all enjoy her testimony. Sr. George Hidy has been quite sick for several weeks, but is now improving nicely.

Sr. Tussy Johnson Gillispie returned from her visit to her parents in Illinois, bringing back a beautiful little girl baby one month old, blessed by Bro. Warnky and Winn, named Clemma Vivian; on account of Mr. Gillispie’s health they have moved to Hereford, Texas.

Ivanhoe Mission, Bro. Scott in charge, and Eighteenth Street and College Avenue Mission, Bro. Clow in charge, composed largely of members of this branch, are making progress nicely.

Bro. Warnky has made another new opening at the home of Bro. and Sr. Salander, 2406 Monroe Avenue, where he will preach every Thursday night.

Felix.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Last Friday night the Religio held an informal reception after its regular lesson hour in honor of the representatives of Graceland College, President Stewart, and our genial brother, Fred B. Blair. Each made a short talk to the Religio members, being introduced by Bro. F. M. Smith. Light refreshments were served in the assembly-hall, where we were glad to shake hands with two men whose willing sacrifice and devotion has made them “bulwarks of Graceland.”

At the eleven o’clock service President Stewart addressed the Saints on the subject of education. A close attention testified of an appreciative audience. One thought among many others was his statement, “He that gives, hath yet, and more, but he that keeps, shall lose what he hath.”

A movement is on foot to start a special class to study the Doctrine and Covenants. A need is felt that we should become more familiar with God’s direct word to us. Excellent opportunities are being afforded our young men to develop along the preaching line, in several new missions that are opening up.

Sr. Edna James of our number is seriously sick, being threatened with diptheria. We hope for a speedy recovery.

J. A. Gardner.

CENTRAL CHICAGO BRANCH.

Amid the noise and confusion of city life, in our hall a little gathering of Saints is holding its sacrament-meeting the first Sunday of the month. The peace of God prevailed within the building and within the hearts of the Saints. God met with us, and a beautiful prophecy was received with thankful hearts to the edification of all.

The regular business-meeting of the branch was held on the 3d, the same officers retained with the exception of Bro. W. Cochran being elected as assistant priest. The session passed very pleasantly, a good spirit prevailing.

We are more than elated over the advance movement of the Religio, our energetics Bro. Fred Johnson having it in charge. With his original ideas and his up-to-date bulletin, he is drawing a large attendance. I have heard it remarked by many that the Religio is getting very interesting, and the beautiful truths contained in the Book of Mormon are shining brighter than ever in the study of the lessons. May God bless Bro. Johnson’s efforts.

Among the visitors, we note Bro. Marten from Pittsburg, Sr. Rew and daughter from Lamoni, also Sr. Allie Barbee from Independence. Sister E. J. Lang.

LAMONI, IOWA.

It may be of interest to the Herald readers to know that Lamoni is one of twenty-two towns in Iowa mailing the largest amount of second class mail-matter. The postal receipts at the office have increased rapidly during the past few years. It requires about five hundred pouches and tie sacks each month to dispatch the mail.

The college winter term begins January 2, 1907. Indications are that the enrollment for the winter term will swell the attendance materially. The board is forced to make additional room for students at the dormitory. If you contemplate coming better write President Stewart at once.

The Sunday-school will conduct their Christmas exercises next Monday afternoon and evening. In the afternoon the children (intermediates and primaries), and in the evening the “grown-ups” will render a program. Election of Sunday-school officers is to be held on the 31st.

Bishop’s Agents’ Notices.

To the Saints of the Nodaway District: The Bishop’s agent’s treasury is now empty and quite a bit overdrawn. We have been trying to keep our families supplied, but failed, so had to call on our beloved Bishop to help us. Now, dear Saints, this ought not to be, but we have so many who have never been converted in full to the angel’s message. Now, dear Saints, let us wake up and help roll on this great work. We should come up higher, as we have often been admonished by the Lord. Will we do this? O Saints, do we believe this work is of God? If so, let us show our faith by our works. Some of our brethren and sisters have done well, and I feel that the Lord will bless them in many ways. Our elders’ families must be looked after.

R. K. Ross, Bishop’s Agent.

Missionary Released.

D. C. White, because of physical disability, has asked release from missionary work for the remainder of the conference year. The Presidency and the missionary in charge, Heman C. Smith, concurring, this release has been granted. Fred’k M. Smith, Secretary Presidency.

Conference Notices.

Spokane District conference will be held in Saints’ chapel, corner Third Avenue and Smith Street, Spokane, Washington, Saturday and Sunday, December 29 and 30, beginning at 2 o’clock. All branch reports should be in my hands by the 22d of December. M. Fordham, secretary.

$25,000.00 NEEDED
By INDEPENDENCE COAL MINING COMPANY

In order to develop and open up the new coal-mining interests near Independence and also make necessary preparations for homes for miners, it is necessary that sufficient capital be secured within a short time. The amount sought for is very small compared with the capital of other coal-mining interests and, for various reasons, the directors of this company desire to keep the working and controlling power with the church members, if possible. The opening up of an undeveloped coal field at the edge of a densely populated community of 40,000 population is a matter of considerable consideration, as the product is part of the necessities of life, with freight rates practically cut off, making this enterprise an exceptional one.

Five hundred and sixty-nine acres have been leased for fifty years and one hundred and fifty-four purchased, making a total of seven hundred and twenty-three acres of coal-land in one body, on the line of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, two miles east of Independence.

The company already has coal-mines at Napoléon, Missouri, in operation and a successful and prosperous retail business, making this a bonâ fide, paying investment.

Money seeking investment can find no better place, and will bring the best kind of satisfaction. It will bring good returns to the investor and results that are much sought for in benefitting the unemployed, scattered, pressed-down poor church people by placing them in a position to help themselves.

The 8A acres are intended for homes for miners, stores, and houses, and, as a result, we solicit the co-operation of miners to purchase stock, according to their ability.

The promoters of this company are not working for any selfish interests. There is no water nor fictitious valued stock. The company is incorporated under the laws of the state of Missouri. Capital stock, $400,000; shares, $100 each; amount paid up $20,000. The capital stock must be increased to the amount needed. Parties sending money can do so by bank draft. THE SAINTS' HERALD
The Extent of Guilt.

The question of how much of wrong and evil a man may do and remain in safe standing with God, or how little of what is right and good he may do and be safe from damnation, is frequently revived in the minds of the lookers-on in society, being suggested by what a man sees others doing, and by what he is incited to do, or refrain from doing through the influence from within and the environments without.

Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet. Behold, the laws which ye have received from my hand are the laws of the church, and in this light ye shall hold them forth. Behold, here is wisdom.

This statement is found in a revelation given to the church through the prophet Joseph Smith, in 1831. The church was not yet two years old when it was given; and whatever may have been the circumstances of the people at the time it was given, it is only giving the Lord the credit for prescience and wisdom which is his due, to conclude that he knew the people and their environments, together with all the conditions to the fullest extent to which they were then subject, or would thereafter be subjected. Any other conclusion takes from the Lord the attribute of foreknowledge with which all of the written word and the wise men have endowed him. This we can not afford to do.

It is a perfectly safe conclusion to draw from the revelation quoted, that at no time after August, 1831, would there be a revelation, or a commandment given to the church by the Lord requiring or commanding the church as a body, or any member of it as an individual, either to do or to say anything which the law of the land forbade to be said or done, or which if done would subject the one doing it to arrest, conviction, and fine or imprisonment, in the county jail or the state penitentiary.

As God does not change in his attributes nor vary in his counsel, the duty of the church as a body corporate, and as individual members of it, to observe the statute enactments of the States and the municipal regulations of the towns and cities where they may be citizens and dwellers is clear and imperative.

Whatever excuse other men may make for transgressing the ordinary rules of human intercourse, and the demands of legal enactments, "the rules of civil conduct prescribed by the highest authority of the state," Latter Day Saints, of every shade of factional division who accept the revelations of God to the church which came through the first apostle and elder, Joseph Smith, can make none successfully, as there came to them the direct command of God to be obedient to the requirements of the laws of the land.

There is no uncertainty in regard to this command. It opens up to the view the wonderful provision made by the Deity for the accomplishment of the bringing forth the restoration of the primitive gospel in these last days, designed that it should be done under the constitution and laws fitted for the establishing and developing of national institutions which in some form should continue till Christ the Lawgiver and Ruler should come to establish his kingdom for an everlasting reign. Hence, the period to be covered by the duration of this keeping of the laws of the land extends from August, 1831, unto the coming of Christ, at the least.

If any claim is made that there has been a law or command of God given through either Joseph Smith or any other of the prophets, the keeping of which has brought men into conflict with the laws of the state, and made them lawbreakers because they did the things thus commanded, such claim can not be sustained without impeaching the validity of the things before given of God, and disputing what the Lord said in the revelation from which the command to keep the laws of the land is cited, in which the statement is made, "Behold, here is wisdom." If it was wise then, since when did that commandment become folly?

So when we hear of a man being arraigned before the courts of the land, charged with a statutory crime or misdemeanor, who is either convicted or confesses guilt and is fined or imprisoned for such crime or misdemeanor, we are assured that he has broken the law of God. And if he is or has been a Latter Day Saint, we can reach no other conclusion than that he is guilty of having broken both the law of God and the law of men, the laws of the land, the crystallized public opinions of the people. There is no question as to the guilt in such a case as this.

"For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."—James 2:10.

It is difficult to understand how it is possible to say that the man who commits some minor offense, by doing some small thing forbidden in the law, or any of its provisions, should be adjudged as guilty of the heinous offenses of adultery, or murder; yet at the first glance, this seems to be the meaning of the text. The sense of common justice prevailing in the hearts of men stops at such a rendition, and refuses to accept it as a just interpretation of the apostle's writing. How else can we understand it? The evident intention of the apostle's effort was to impress upon the minds of his brethren the thought that the same authority which had said, "Thou shall not kill," had also said, "Thou shall not commit adultery"; and hence, when condemning any one transgression committed by another, the one so condemning being himself guilty of any other offense by which the law was broken no matter how small or trivial that offense might be, was equally guilty of breaking the law as his brother who had committed the greater sin; that is, he was a lawbreaker, and as such he could not justly expect to escape the punishment provided in the law as a penalty for the transgression which he had been guilty of.

Whoever makes a profession of love for the law, and regards himself as within the law, claiming the care, privileges, immunities, and blessings available to him as to others, must submit to the restrictions, the limitations, disabilities, and penalties for transgressions of the law which are found in the law. Nor can any one, no matter who he may be, alien or citizen, peasant or prince, of low or high degree, poor or rich, of humble station or in position of renown, plead exemption from the penalty provided in the law for transgression because of the position he may perchance hold among his fellows, subject to the same rules and regulations as himself. If a man breaks the law no matter in what degree of criminality, he is guilty; and until the penalty is paid, or intervention by condonement, forgiveness, pardon, or remission has occurred, he will continue to be adjudged as guilty under the law, and that without regard to the smallness of his error, or the greatness of his crime.

This is the argument of the apostle. It agrees with the ethics of the gospel teaching; for in no sense is guilt to be finally overlooked. He that is guilty is not justified in the law, neither indeed can he be. If he continues in guilt he is without excuse, and can neither be justified nor glorified. It may be that the apostle was writing of the old law, and in the spirit of it, as the Israelites to whom it came understood it; as for example:

"Cursed be he that confirmeth not all the words of this law to do them; and all the people shall say, Amen."—Deuteronomy 27:26.

Under the rigor of this law there was no excuse for crime; any transgression of the strictest provisions in it must meet the award of punishment; the law was broken, the law must be vindicated; he that would not submit to the requirements of the law, but would violate them, must get out from among his kindred and his fellow men to the wilderness, or the house of refuge, and must stay out. Hence the apostle reasoning upon it added this:

"For he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shewed no mercy; and mercy rejoiceth against judgment.”—James 2:13.

And then to save the situation as against the weak and the erring, who might lack courage under the law, he wrote still further:

“So speak ye, and so do as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty.”—James 2:12.

Reasoning from the foregoing teaching by the apostle James we may conclude that the way of the transgressor was hard, as he understood the law. It remains for an inquiry based on the direct teaching of the Master, to see the coincidence or the contrast, if there be one. After declaring the beatitudes, as they are found in Matthew’s testimony, the Savior said:

“Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven.”

The character depicted in the descriptive poesy of the beatitudes is wondrously grand. Poor finite man can only hope that when the final arbitrament of human affairs shall take place, the pleadings of mercy against judgment may be heard in that august lawbreaker, either the law of the land, or the law of the master, to see the coincidence or the contrast, if there be one. After declaring the beatitudes, as they are found in Matthew’s testimony, the Savior said:

“Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven.”

The character depicted in the descriptive poesy of the beatitudes is wondrously grand. Poor finite man can only hope that when the final arbitrament of human affairs shall take place, the pleadings of mercy against judgment may be heard in that august lawbreaker, whether he wears the toga of the chief ruler of the nation or of the senator, the ermine of the judge, or badge of the sheriff, the dress-coat of the religious leader and preacher or the layman, the garb of the artist or the artisan, the toil-stained work-a-day clothes of the laborer, or the lime- and soil-marked overalls and jumper of the hod-carrier and the railway shoveler, or the dress-coat and white vest of the business man and the man about town; it is the act of the man within the clothing, and in his standing in community which mark him as an honest, law-abiding man, or a dishonest, law-defying, lawbreaking being unworthy the name.

Reader, you know the type depicted by the apostolic writers, and in the commands of God; it is within you to make yourself to conform to the type and become a man worthy of the company of the spirits of just men made perfect; the good on earth, and the good in heaven.

About forty members of the various Smith families met at the home of Patriarch Alexander H. Smith on the evening of December 23 to celebrate the anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith, the Martyr. A program of music and speeches was rendered. Those present then proceeded to organize a permanent memorial society with a view to continuing these celebrations. President Joseph Smith and Patriarch Alexander H. Smith were elected presidents, with Elbert A. Smith as secretary. Heman C. Smith, B. M. Anderson, and R. S. News From Branches

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.

After our regular sacrament-service of the month we took the emblems to one of our two “shut-ins”—Sr. Howard. She is ninety-four years old and strong in the faith; keeps house for herself and a son who is sixty-seven years old. They live in a former home of William Marks.

We have one other “shut-in”—Bro. Gifford, who lives about five miles out of town; is seventy-seven years old, and has kept house alone for ten years. His is a beautiful location, the river flowing past not fifty feet away. This land includes the famous “Mormon Springs,” which some thirty-five hundred people have visited this year. This number was only excelled two or three years ago when about forty-one hundred came.

Besides this aged brother and sister, there are eight of us located here. We have our regular Sunday-school and two preaching-services each Sunday. (We try to have everything that all the rest of you ought to have.) It requires a continual struggle, and some few “battles” against disappointment.

The Religio-Sunday-school convention certainly did good, for through it we have gained friends to the cause, destroyed much prejudice, and some few are really interested. Our pastor, assisted by his flock, has tried to keep up this interest by making what calls he has had time for, but is kept very busy teaching five grades in Third Ward school, together with the care of the above mentioned “flock,” and other duties to the church.

Our Sunday-school averages eighteen in attendance. (Now that is not bad!) We use blackboard, song-service, and all we can do to create and sustain interest, and seem to be succeeding.

We possess a very active ladies’ aid society, with Sr. Ellison as our earnest, energetic president. It has earned a snug little “sum total” in its day, and keeps church and Sunday-school out of debt, and “some” on hand for the “rainy day.”

The Catholics have a stronghold in town. Their academy, and large brick boys’ school in course of erection, together with other buildings, simply crown the hill. They are putting in improvements on their land, amounting to seventy-five thousand dollars. Twenty new pianos have just arrived for the academy; had eighteen previously.

The Utah people are still holding forth, but with decreasing numbers, we hear. Recently a former Utah member “exposed Mormonism” at the Presbyterian church, one evening. We were pleased, to say the least, when he explained to the goodly audience that he had no complaint to make against the Josephites: they were not breaking the law. But he did truly expose the Utah people and presented good historical proof, and had evidently kept posted on the Smoot investigation. He being son of a polygamist knew a few things also. The three Utah elders present (substituting for their congregation to all appearances) created quite a sensation at the close of the service. One shook his fist in the lecturer’s face and each seemed altogether deeply injured.

For Thanksgiving the Nauvoo Saints were invited to unite with the Rock Creek Branch and enjoy the day. We drove the nine miles, listened to a historical sermon by our pastor, Elder M. H. Siegfried, in memory of the day. Then arranged the seats to accommodate tables. You know what farmers’ “spreads” are like! We sang from our church books and had a splendid social time, even though the day was cloudy and somewhat threatening. We all met full of the true spirit of Thanksgiving, we believe, and certainly we were blessed spiritually through all the day.

Our bishop, George P. Lambert, and counselor M. H. Siegfried, have sent out announcements according to previous plans, to spend their Christmas holidays in the mission field on duty! They will make a tour of the district, beginning with preaching at Montrose Christmas night. The days of the week and number of branches in district just “come out even,” enabling them to visit all, and bringing them into their respective homes for New Year’s.

Mr. and Sr. Lester Haas have just moved into their beautiful new home on the hill here. Mr. and Sr. Will Kemler are moving further into town, so we are all living within a half mile of each other.

Come to Nauvoo to live! Don’t crowd Independence!

We are in Zion; and you also may enjoy as much of spiritual blessings here as elsewhere, and be blessed temporarily also.

MADGE SIEGFRIED.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

District conference was held at the Rock Church on December 8 and 9. The following officers were elected to serve the district: J. A. Tanner, president; T. J. Elliott, vice-president; C. J. Remington, secretary; J. J. Billinsky, treasurer. The morning sermon was delivered by Bro. R. Archibald, the subject was the “Comforter,” and his effort as usual was good. The prayer-service at half past two in the afternoon in charge of Br. Tanner and Ivor Davis, was well attended and a profitable time was spent. The evening service was in charge of Br. Tanner. He used the text from Job: “If a man die shall he live again?” The sermon was very interesting and instructive.

Saints from Troy, Illinois, Lansdowne, Oak Hill, Belleville, and Cheltenham were present.

We have had four baptisms this month. Three little ones from Oak Hill were baptized by Bro. Tanner, and a brother was baptized at one of our Wednesday evening prayer-services by Bro. W. C. Carl. He is of the Lansdowne Branch and promises to be a good church-worker.

The Lansdowne Branch hold their regular services. Bro. George Vandell preached his first sermon recently.

Our Sunday-school and Religio have been doing good work the past month. The Sunday-school has elected new officers and all are in readiness for another year’s work.

The various committees of the Religio have been giving some excellent programs. Many expressions of thankfulness were given in our Thanksgiving roll-call, for the advancement our Religio has made during the last three months. This we believe is due to the fact that our president, Bro. Arthur Smith, and the other officers and committees work harmoniously together.

A number of the young ladies of our sunshine band assisted in the Union Station district in taking the annual hospital collection.

A number of the young friends of Gomer Evans tendered him a surprise in honor of his twenty-first birthday. A beautiful set of Walter Scott’s works was presented to him.
Among the sick of the branch were Sr. J. J. Billinsky, who was operated upon. She is improving very slowly.

Sr. Anna (Lloyd) Shaw and Sr. Lulu Robyn are both convalescent. The little babe of Bro. and Sr. C. J. Remington is quite ill.

We are anticipating a good time at our Christmas entertainment Christmas Eve.

Thankful indeed are we for the greatest gift—the gift of God’s dear Son.

E. M. Patterson.

LONDON BRANCH, ONTARIO.

Christmas greetings are all the go, and our branch president is not behind in wishing the members of his flock a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

On Friday evening, November 16, a parlor concert was held at the residence of Bro. and Sr. Gray. A very pleasant program was announced by Elder Henley, chairman of the Sunday-school library board, under whose auspices the social was held. During the evening refreshments were served under the direction of Srs. R. C. Evans and Clara Timbrell. A silver collection was taken up, which amounted to nearly eighty dollars.

The committee did well, and the success of the social is largely due to their efforts. Between forty and fifty dollars was realized.

Bro. Atkinson is a newcomer in our branch. He formerly lived in Stevenson, Ontario, and had been an active worker in the Sunday-school there.

Sr. Durent, who has been visiting relatives and friends at Vanessa during the past summer, is at present making her home with her daughter, Sr. Winegarden, Cartwright Street.

Sr. Everett, one of the old-time Saints, has been very poorly the past summer, her illness at times being critical.

Mr. and Mrs. Copner, who had been in business here for some time, have removed to New Ontario. Sr. Copner is a daughter of Bro. and Sr. Everett.

The Religio society of our branch held a very profitable session the first meeting of the month. After the Book of Mormon lesson the Religious reassembled for prayer-meeting, which was very much enjoyed, many of the young taking part for the first time.

The regular business-meeting of our branch was held the first Monday of the month, and the following officers elected for the ensuing term: Elder Fligg, president; Elder Pope, priest; Elder Henley, assistant priest; W. Hardey, teacher; P. Philippin, assistant teacher; R. Martin, deacon; J. Judkins, assistant deacon; W. Constable, secretary. Sr. Pope was appointed organist, with Sr. Edith Dent to assist. Elder T. R. Seaton, chorister.

Sr. Winegarden, Sr., has been very ill the past couple of weeks. Her two youngest children have also been sick.

Sr. Hunter, of Windsor, who has been attending the normal school here the past few months, has gone home to visit her parents during the Christmas holidays. Sr. Hunter by her amiable disposition made many friends in and out of the church during her stay in the city.

The Srs. Dent, Edith and Beatrice, are visiting home and friends at Zone, Chatham District. The Saints of Zone Branch are holding out great inducements to keep Sr. Edith. We hope they will not succeed.

Preparations are about completed for the annual Christmas-tree and entertainment of the Sunday-school, which is to be held at the church on Thursday evening, December 27. Besides the entertainment and presents from the tree, prizes will be awarded according to merit for the several classes. A big time is looked for.

Bro. and Sr. Pugaley, Jr., are visiting in Toronto.

W. A. Hardey.

INDEPENDENCE MISSOURI.

The spirit of the Christmas-time is everywhere in evidence, and we have reason to believe that among our own people, here in Independence, as well as elsewhere, the outward manifestations of Christmas giving is the overflow of heartfelt love of Christ, appropriately expressed on his birthday.

Our Sunday-school is preparing a program for Christmas Eve, the central theme of which will be “God’s gifts to man, and man’s gifts to God.” The greater part of this program is original with our local workers, and so doubly interesting to us.

At last report in August our branch records showed a membership of sixteen hundred and forty-eight. Since then many have been added to the list, which is now not very far from seventeen hundred.

We are glad to welcome Bro. and Sr. Madden from Bay City, Michigan, who arrived but yesterday.

We learn that the Willing Helpers have started a bank account, and if their past record of energetic service is any indication, then we know the bank account will grow and be used in God’s service.

The artist who arranged the last Autumn Leaves cover may well be complimented on his work. We ought to know because we have “the real thing” here to compare it with.

We hope that the love of Christ shed abroad in our hearts will give all a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year.

J. A. Gardner.

SIOUX CITY, IOWA.

At a business-meeting recently held it was decided to have a church fair to raise means to clear up the church debt. Committees have gone to work in earnest. Twelve hundred dollars must be raised if the debt is paid. Any help will be gladly received. Our fair will be January 15, 1906.

It was decided to have a Christmas entertainment. The committee is quite busy preparing a cantata.

There is a good deal of sickness in the branch at present. Glad to state that Bro. George Williamson’s son, who is in the hospital, is slowly improving.

The pastor and family was kindly remembered on Thanksgiving. Bro. and Sr. Horr of Bronson sent in a nice goose, also. Bro. William Stewart and family of Mondamin sent some nice young chickens, which we truly appreciate.

The prayer-meeting the first Sunday in the month was well attended and spiritual, in charge of branch officers. We have had the gift of prophecy twice lately, something that has never before been known in the history of the Sioux City Branch.

Sunday, the 9th, our meeting was poorly attended, bad weather and so much sickness being the cause. Sunday, 16th, meeting fairly attended.

The approaching holidays finds us busy and happy, matters in a church way being well with us and of an encouraging nature. Some few of our number are sick, but nothing very serious so far as we know, administrations generally bringing the desired blessing.

A short time since Brn. Walter W. Smith and John Zimmermann were called to Elk Mills to administer to Bro. Harry Mann, who was suffering from appendicitis, two physicians being in attendance—they being of the opinion that the only way to obtain relief was by an operation. When he was administered to he arose, dressed, and ate his dinner, to the astonishment of neighbors and doctors and to the glory of him whom we serve.

The Sunday-school held its annual business-meeting and election of officers the last week in November. The date of the SPEECH OF SENATOR J. C. BURROWS.

As many of the readers of the HERALD will not have the privilege of reading this speech made in the United States Senate by the able chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the question of Senator Reed Smoot's right to a seat in the Senate, delivered December 11, 1906, permit me to copy his statement regarding the status of the church. (See Congressional Record, December 13, 1906):

"The regular and legitimate Mormon Church had its origin in and grew out of an alleged discovery of some metallic plates, said to have been found near Palmyra, New York, by one Joseph Smith, bearing certain inscriptions which were said to have been translated by him and embodied in what is known and accepted as the 'Book of Mormon,' belief in which formed, in 1830, the basis of an organization styling itself 'The Church of Latter-Day Saints,' which for fifteen years increased in membership and extended its influence, until in 1844 it numbered about 50,000 adherents. On the 27th day of June, 1844, Joseph Smith, the founder of this cult, while confined in jail at Carthage, Illinois, was set upon by a mob and killed.

"With the details of the early history of this people, from 1830 to 1844, and their tenets we have nothing to do. It is sufficient for the purpose of this discussion to state that previous to the death of the prophet there were no dissensions in the organization so far as known, all subscribing to a common creed and holding a common faith. Judge Phillips, in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Missouri, in delivering the opinion of that court in 1894 in what is known as the 'Temple Lot Cases' involving the title to certain real estate, said:

"'Beyond all cavil, if human testimony is to place any matter at rest, this church was one in doctrine, government, and purpose from 1830 to June, 1844, when Joseph Smith, its founder, was killed. It had the same federal head, governing bodies, and faith. During this period there was no schism, no dissensions, no parting of the ways in any matter fundamental or affecting its oneness.

"The death of Joseph Smith in 1844, however, carried dismay and demoralization throughout the entire membership of the Mormon Church, scattering its adherents in divers directions and for the time being seeming to pressage the complete overthrow and dissolution of the organization. Recovering, however, from the shock, the scattered bands soon reappeared in various parts of the country and promulgated their doctrines with increased zeal, and set to work to reassemble and reorganize their scattered forces, resulting finally in the formation of what is now known and recognized as the 'Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints,' with headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa, and presided over by Joseph Smith, a son of the prophet. The courts have repeatedly declared this organization to be the legitimate successor of the original Mormon Church, and its adherents, numbering some 50,000 peaceable, patriotic, and law-abiding citizens scattered throughout the United States in small church societies, conforming to the laws of their country wherever they may be and adhering to the faith of the founder of their creed, repudiating and denouncing the doctrine of polygamy and its attendant crimes, without temple, endowment-house, or secret order, worship in the open like other church organizations, unquestioned and unmolested.

"During this period of disintegration one Brigham Young, who had identified himself with the Mormon organization as early as 1832, a man of indomitable will and undaunted courage, bold and unscrupulous, seized upon the occasion of the demoralization incident to the death of the prophet to place himself at the head of some 5,000 Mormons, and marching over desert and mountain, established himself with his adherents in the valley of Salt Lake, July 24, 1847, then Mexican territory, where he undoubtedly indulged the hope that the new doctrine of polygamy about to be publicly proclaimed by him might be promulgated with impunity and practiced and maintained without interference by the United States. These hopes, however, were destined to be blasted, for by the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo of February 2, 1848, this territory passed from the jurisdiction of Mexico to the sovereignty of the United States, and its inhabitants thereupon became amenable to its laws.

"Upon this transfer of sovereignty, and in 1849, Brigham Young and his followers, without authority from any source whatever, proceeded to set up a government of their own, embracing a territory of imperial dimensions, christening it the 'State of Deseret,' electing Brigham Young, the head of the church, governor; Heber C. Kimball, an apostle, lieutenant-governor, and filling all other official positions in the proposed State with their trusted adherents. At the same time a general assembly was chosen, which in 1849 petitioned Congress to admit the State of Deseret into the Union, and commissioned a delegate to the Lower House of Congress, who subsequently presented his credentials and the memorial praying for statehood.

"Shortly previous to this time it began to be bruited that the leaders of this organization and founders of the new State were fugitives from justice and apostates from the true Mormon faith and were living in polygamy; and it is an historic fact that when Brigham Young arrived in Salt Lake, in 1847, he had seventeen wives, and all the so-called apostles, twelve in number, except possibly one, from two to twenty wives each. This rumor gained credence and confirmation by a protest against the admission of the State of Deseret sent to the Congress of the United States December 31, 1849, and now on file in its archives, from which I make the following extracts:

"Your petitioners respectfully represent that whereas efforts are now being made by the Salt Lake Mormons to obtain, by false representations and fallacious presentations, from the government of the United States, a State organization to be called the State of Deseret; and whereas we believe that it would be highly detrimental to the best interests of our country to comply with their request, we do therefore respectfully petition your honorable body to provide some other way for the government of the Salt Lake settlement. Your petitioners know most assuredly that Salt Lake Mormonism is diametrically opposed to the pure principles of virtue, liberty, and equality, and that the rulers of the Salt Lake church are bitter and inveterate enemies of our Government. They entertain treasonable designs against the liberties of American free-born sons and daughters. . . . They have elected Brigham Young, who is the President of their church, to be the governor of the proposed State of Deseret. Their intention is to unite church and state. . . . We have authentic information that more than 1,500 Salt Lake Mormons took the following oath in the Temple of God at Nauvoo: 'You do solemnly swear, in the presence of Almighty God, His holy angels, and these witnesses, that you will avenge the blood of Joseph Smith on this nation, and teach your children, and that you will from this time henceforth and for ever begin and carry out hostilities against this nation, and to keep the same intent a profound secret now and for ever. So help me God.'

"The rulers of the Salt Lake church hypocritically pretend to venerate the name and character of the prophet Joseph Smith, that they may retain their popularity among that people who believe that he was a true prophet. These rulers are apostates from the true Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, which church Joseph Smith was president of. They teach and practice polygamy. . . . Surely your honorable body will not lend your aid to legalize adultery and all manner of wickedness. These men have left their country for their country's good. They have left it that they might escape the punishment which their crimes have invoked. . . . They have been guilty of murders, treason, robbery, counterfeiting, swindling, blasphemy, and usurpation of power, both political and ecclesiastical. This is the character of the man who is the political and ecclesiastical governor of the Salt Lake colony. The Salt Lake settlement is like Sodom and Gomorrah. Save the rising generation of that land from being trained up in such a sink of corruption, blasphemy, and treason.

"The practice of polygamy by this band of apostate Mormons received further confirmation in the official report of the Indian agent for the Territory of Utah, dated March 29, 1852, in which it was stated: "Among these men (speaking of the Mormons) was Williard Richards, who kept a harem of some dozen or fifteen women, to all of whom he is wedded. He is acting secretary of state and postmaster of the city.

"Upon the presentation of the remonstrance referred to, the National House of Representatives declined to consider the petition for the admission of the 'State of Deseret' into the Union, or receive its representative, but in lieu thereof and on the 7th day of September, 1850, Congress passed an act providing for the organization and government of the Territory of Utah. In 1850 President Fillmore appointed Brigham Young governor of the Territory for the term of four years, who entered upon the duties of the office in February, 1851, and thus the chief polygamous saint and head of the church became the chief executive of the Territory. These public and official declarations confirmatory of the rumors of the practice of polygamy by Brigham Young and his apostles, made further concealment of their crime impossible, and it became necessary in some way to excuse or justify so flagrant an assault upon public decency and the civilization of the age.

"To that end a special conference of the sect was called to convene at Salt Lake City on the 28th day of August, 1852, over which Brigham Young presided, attended by the so-called apostles and high officials of the church to the number of over two thousand, at which conference, for the first time, the doctrine of polygamy was publicly proclaimed and declared to be an accepted tenet of the Utah Mormon faith.

Preliminary to its formal promulgation, and to promote its reception by the followers of Brigham Young, it was deemed expedient that some of the high dignitaries who were associated with him should bear testimony to the saintly character of their master and the divine origin of the nefarious doctrine. To this end Heber C. Kimball, one of the first presidents and a polygamist, in calling the meeting to order, took occasion to say:

"Brother Brigham Young is the successor of Joseph Smith and a better man never lived upon the earth, nor ever sought the interest of this people more fervently.

"Elder Benson, another polygamist, joined in the laudation by saying:

"I know that the principles that have been taught by the prophet Joseph and Brothers Brigham, Heber, and Willard—

"Composing the first Presidency—

"And by every other good man in this church are correct principles, and that these men have been borne on triumphantly over every trial and difficulty they have been called to pass through. The elders, therefore, can go to the nations with their consciences as clean as drifting snow, and with the satisfaction that all is right in Zion and we are led by the best men upon the face of the earth. I am glad in my heart, and I say, God bless Brigham, Heber, and Willard. They are the counsel of heaven to this people, and I mean to honor them in the earth wherever I go, and I would preach down in the bowels of hell the same as I do here and not be ashamed of it.

"Pandemonium would be a fit place for its promulgation.

"My story all the time is, Hurrah for Mormonism. . . . I only throw out these few hints that you may be prepared to act when you receive the proper instructions from your president.

"Then came Orson Pratt, one of the oldest and most famous of the apostles and the husband of three wives, who publicly declared:

"It is quite unexpected to me to be called upon to address you on the subject of the plurality of wives. It is rather new ground to the inhabitants of the United States, and not only to them, but a portion of the inhabitants of Europe. A portion of them have not been in the habit of preaching a doctrine of this...
In order to induce his followers more readily to accept this infamous doctrine, Brigham Young himself invoked the name of Joseph Smith, the martyr, whom many sincerely believed to be a true prophet, and ascribed to him the reception of a revelation from the Almighty in 1843, commanding the saints to take unto themselves a multiplicity of wives, limited in number only by the measures of their desires. Why and how this revelation had been kept a secret for nine years Brigham Young explained as follows:

"You heard Brother Pratt state this morning that a revelation would be read this afternoon which was given previous to Joseph’s death. It contains a doctrine which a small portion of the world is opposed to. Though that doctrine has not been preached by the elders, this people have believed in it for many years.

"The original copy of this revelation was burnt up; William Clayton was the man who wrote it from the mouth of the prophet. In the mean time it was in Bishop Whitney’s possession. He wished the privilege to copy it, which Brother Joseph granted. Sister Emma burnt the original.

"The revelation will be read to you. The principle we believe in. And I tell you—for I know it—it will sail over and ride triumphantly above all the prejudice and priestcraft of the day; it will be fostered and believed in by the more intelligent portions of the world as one of the best doctrines ever proclaimed to any people. I am now ready to proclaim it. This revelation has been in my possession many years and who has known it? None but those who should know it. I keep a patent lock on my desk, and there does not anything leak out that should not.

"Such the mythical story palmed off on a deluded people. Let me now quote the material part of the pretended revelation of polygamy as given out by authority of Brigham Young in 1852.

"Verily, thus saith the Lord unto his servant Joseph: . . . behold and lo, I am the Lord thy God . . . therefore prepare thy heart to receive and obey the instructions which I am about to give unto you, for all those who have this law revealed unto them must obey the same, for behold, I reveal unto you a new and everlasting covenant, and if ye abide not that covenant, then are ye damned; for no one can reject this covenant and be permitted to enter into my glory; . . . and as pertaining to the new and everlasting covenant, it was instituted for the fullness of my glory, and he that receiveth a fullness thereof must and shall abide the law or he shall be damned, saith the Lord God. And again, as pertaining to the law of the priesthood, if any man espouse a virgin and desire to espouse another, and the first give her consent, and if he espouse the second, and they are virgins and have vowed to no other man, then is he justified. He can not commit adultery, for they are given unto him, for he can not commit adultery with that that belongs to him and to none else; and if he have ten virgins given unto him by this law he can not commit adultery, for they belong unto him and are given unto him; therefore is he justified.

"Thus did Brigham Young and his associates attempt to explain and justify a practice revolting to every sense of public decency, subversive of the home, and destructive of the very foundations of society. Thus were laid with unholy hands what Brigham Young was pleased to call the foundations of ‘Zion,’ upon which it was proposed to erect the kingdom of God on earth.’ But a doctrine so monstrous needed something more than the unsupported testimony of Brigham Young to insure its reception and give it credence, in view of the fact that it had no warrant in the Book of Mormon and was specially condemned in the book of ‘Doctrine and Covenants,’ wherein it is declared ‘One man should have one wife, and one woman but one husband.’ To give this creed the semblance of authority and insure its permanency as an article of this Utah Mormon faith the doctrine of monogamy was torn from the book of ‘Doctrine and Covenants,’ and the doctrine of polygamy inserted in its stead, where it is still retained as a cardinal principle of the Utah Mormon faith. In this way was the practice of polygamy inaugurated in the Territory of Utah and fostered and encouraged by the leaders of this sect.”

While there are some immaterial errors in the above statement, it is the clearest and best presentation of the facts that has ever been prominently placed before the public by so prominent a man, and we were pleased to see that Senator Burrows has so clear an idea of the situation, and that he has the courage to present it. It will do good, and we hope that the elders will note it and avail themselves of the benefit of this able presentation by a competent and noted man who has presented his opinion after the most searching investigation of the subject that has ever been made, and made by a committee of able lawyers as the world can produce, of which Senator Burrows was the honored and worthy chairman.

Whether Reed Smoot retains his seat in the United States Senate is of no particular importance to us more than to other citizens of the Republic, but it is of special importance to us that our position should be clearly and correctly defined, and in this we are fortunate.

HEMAN C. SMITH.

SPEECH OF HONORABLE FRED T. DUBOIS.

Since writing the above I have had the privilege of reading the speech of the above-named gentleman (who was also a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections), delivered December 13, 1906, in the United States Senate, and published in the Congressional Record for December 17, 1906.

It will be seen that he indorses what Senator Burrows has said on the subject, and adds his own opinion in the following explicit language:

"It is only fair, I think, for me to say—and I am glad the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows] treated upon it the other day—that there is a branch of the Mormons, called the 'Josephites,' who ought to be separated clearly in the minds of all the Senators from the Brighamite Mormons. The Josephites claim that they are the custodians of the church as it was founded. They claim that Brigham Young has interjected doctrines into the church which the Mormons did not accept in the beginning. At any rate, however that may be, the Josephite Mormons, with their headquarters at Lamoni, in the state of Iowa, and wherever they are, no matter in what part of the country, are among the best of our citizens in all respects. They do not believe in polygamy; they never practiced polygamy. They discontinue it. They do not believe in church dictate in political affairs. They are the same as other church organizations, and to their religion no one has any objection. I am glad to call the attention of Senators to it, so that in the future we may not confuse the Josephite with the Brighamite Mormons."

These extracts speak for themselves, and further comment is unnecessary. H. C. S.

HOPE BEYOND THE GRAVE, AND LIFE BEYOND THE VEIL.

Our minds have been made to reflect upon the language used by the minister and servant of God, in his declaration of the gospel to the Hebrew saints:

And, thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundations of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands. They shall perish; but thou remainest: and they all shall wax old as doth a garment; and as a vestment shalt thou fold them up; and they shall be changed: but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail.—Hebrews 1: 10-12.

In viewing the history of the different dispensations of the gospel, we are cognizant that the best minds of the best ages have been the broadest minds; and the central thought of the apostle in the language cited is that all things shall wax old, but they shall be changed.

All things are governed by law. The sun, moon, and stars, as well as the earth, all are governed by an indispensable law, each dependent upon the other. And as the earth is governed by a celestial law, and as man is a part of the earth, he too must be governed by the same law in order to be a participant in the celestial environment where God and Christ shall dwell.

Man was given the privilege to enjoy that celestial environment, but suffered himself to be contaminated with that which was contrary to a celestial law, (through his own agency,) since which time he has been deprived of that enjoyment, hence is known as fallen humanity. And because of this condition, many have supposed that the entire race is living in a depraved condition; and some have gone so far as to teach the doctrine of total depravity.

There are two component parts of man, the inner man and the outer man, or the spiritual and the physical. In the meridian of time God sent his only begotten Son into this world to redeem man from his fallen condition. His redemption was to be based upon divine principles. Thus Christ places himself in a mesozoic condition between God and man.

"Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures."—James 1: 18. And through an acceptance of this truth, the spiritual germ is planted; hence an antecedent, "that which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again."

There are two forces in the world that man comes in contact with: the forces of good and the forces of evil, which run along side by side, not in parallel lines, but in convergent lines, which means that these two forces shall come together for a final struggle. Through the principles of truth, we hope to win the victory, in a state of perfection before our heavenly Father.

Whence comes the spark we call existence? and in what obscurity is it to be extinguished?

The great Architect has placed the phenomena of birth and death under the veil at the two extremities of our earthly career. The one produces the inconceivable gift of life, which the other is ever ready to devour.

In Matthew 18: 11 we are told: "For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost." "It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life."—John 6: 63.

From this language we ascertain that there is something about man to be saved; the words of Christ were of a spiritual character, and as the physical man could not comprehend this wonderful truth (because that which is governed by law is also preserved by law), so we discover at once that there is an immortal spirit in man.

"For there is a spirit in man and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."—Job 32: 8. In Ecclesiastes 12: 7, we read: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." The physical part of man cleaves to its element, the earth, and the spiritual part to its element, God. So the apostle Paul makes the statement in his Roman letter that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth. And as Jesus came to give eternal life, the law that he taught was a spiritual law, adapted to the spirit within man.

All the things of this world, including health, wealth, and power, fail to satisfy the earnest longings of the soul; nothing short of faith in God and a proper obedience to his word will bring perfect peace and rest, and satisfy the demands of the "inner man." This proves the existence of immortality in man.

If there is no good in man, then there is nothing to be saved, no basis from which he can build up a Christian character; and it is this character alone which will admit him through the pearly gates into the golden city.

The same is true of immortality; where it does not exist, in any degree, there can be no conception of God; hence no faith in him, no possible connection between this world and that which is to come.

Redemption and salvation are accomplished through obedience to law, for “that which is governed by law is also preserved by law.”

The apostle Paul understood there were certain definite laws that governed man. “For I delight in the law of God after the inward man: but I see in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members.”—Romans 7:22, 23. “There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death.”—Romans 8:1, 2.

Then as light and truth and purity can not be appreciated nor comprehended where they have no existence, so an eternal and immortal God can not be sought and found by any being who is wholly incapable of immortality.

We see the little flower that blooms and sheds forth its brilliancy, also the trees that grow by the wayside, and in the springtime they send forth their beautiful leaves, and a subject of meditation is presented to us as to what produces this life, and in what obscurity it is concealed.

But in the language of Paul, “they all shall wax old as doth a garment . . . and they shall be changed”; so the flower has faded, the leaves have lost their beauty. And as we look upon the withered stem we say, Life has been extinguished. Ah! has life been extinguished? Oh, no, it is only hidden from our observation by that which is called earth. We move the dirt away and examine the roots, and we discover that there is life; it has only been hidden from our view.

Many times we have been called to look for the last time upon some dear friend and loved one who has passed through the valley of death, and as we meditate upon the earthly tabernacle we say, Life has been extinguished. But it is only hidden from that part which is called carnal.

So it is a comforting and consoling thought to a child of God, that there is eternal life within the gospel. And our hearts are made glad by the words of the apostle in his Colossian letter, third chapter and third verse: “For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God.”

So there is hope beyond the grave, and life beyond the veil.

The prophets and apostles have told us that there shall be a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. So all things must undergo a change. And as the earth abides a celestial law, it, too, must be brought back to its perfect condition. And only those who obey that celestial law shall be permitted to dwell with Christ upon the new earth. Thus the bodies of those who have died in the Lord, as well as those who remain at Christ’s coming, shall be changed by the power of the gospel.

“And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the spirit is life because of righteousness. But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you.”—Romans 8:10, 11.

So, dear Saints, let us not become discouraged, but let us try to exercise more faith in God, and establish more confidence among one another, clothing ourselves with the spirit of humiliation, that in the sweet by and by we may enjoy eternal life.

George J. Brookover.

KEEP YOUR CHILDHOOD DAYS IN SIGHT.

Old times and old ways should not be forgotten. Do not let the yesterdays of life become dim. Let the days of childhood, and even babyhood, tinge the soberness of matured manhood and womanhood. The things that childhood treasured and held most dear, if permitted, will increase the milk of human kindness, and this leads us up to the prevailing thought of the season—“The Christmas Time.” Even in the writer’s short experience he can notice a change in the theme of Christmas.

The Christmas of to-day is not what it was seventy years ago, and far from what the New England Christmas was even fifty years ago, and almost entirely foreign to the spirit of that first great Christmas,—and it is the spirit of the thing that counts, that weighs heaviest in the balance where success is concerned. The first Christmas was one of “glad tidings,” good cheer, and peace on earth. To-day the “glad tidings” are narrowed down to a few gifts given to a few who may not need them and whose appreciation is expected and given according to the amount of money they cost. The original good cheer has been dwarfed. “Pure and simple peace on earth” has been misinterpreted,—“glad tidings” lost sight of.

The touch of little hands, the aches, the joys, the gratefulness of little hearts,—how quick to forgive, how ready to kiss and make up!

Value these sermons from baby lips. Let it arouse within you the dim memory of childhood—the Christmas Eve longed for by little hearts, that only best know how to long and yearn—the Sunday-school entertainment, the weeks of practicing, and when the time came, our anxiety to do well our part.
The innocent expectation and exhilaration so dear to childhood is everywhere in evidence, although the surroundings of the little country church or schoolhouse, may be so simple as to border on the verge of poverty. The bubbling-over-soul-freshness of childhood is there, and with it the purity and sweetness of the Christ-story, with the accompanying thoughts of the manger, the star, the three wise men, and simple Christmas carols sung by children’s voices.

Christ could afford to be the Friend of the children and so can we. And then the Christmas Eve at home. The hanging up of the stockings the last but legislation of this kind is a sure product of the poverty. The bubbling-over-soul-freshness of the Christ-story, with the accompanying thoughts can heiresses thing at night, and the wild rush of the little bare future.

We need the warmth of heart and soul, coupled with brightness of intellect, to fan into flame the divine spark. And now, a plea for a real, true Christmas season. Get the spirit of the theme. The theme was Christ, and Christ’s life was one long, uninterrupted stream of giving. The last thing he gave was his life, but more than his death was his life, that affords the Great Example.

President Stewart, of Graceland College, nicely concluded this matter when he said, “He that giveth hath and more. He that keepeth shall lose what he hath.”

Of General Interest

“MUCH CASH MAKES OUR GIRLS UNHAPPY.”

WASHINGTON, December 11.—“Unless the Supreme Court should change its views, there seems no question that the General Government may constitutionally impose an inheritance tax,” was an opinion laid down to-day by Representative Perkins, of New York, who spoke at some length on that subject.

 Expediency, according to the speaker, was the only question that should be debated in connection with an inheritance tax. He said that there was no reason why a man having fifty millions to dispose of should assert the right to give every dollar of it to his children.

“If the father harbors the desire that his descendants should be enormously rich people in the community, this is a vulgar desire, entitled to no consideration,” he said. Recent scandals gave Mr. Perkins an opportunity to say that “it is no advantage to Miss Vanderbilt or Miss Gould that enormous fortunes attracted the eager gaze of foreign fortune hunters.

“Our,” he added, “is still the only land of romance, the only land where the majority of men marry without considering solely the patrimony of their brides. If diminished inheritances keep American heiresses at home and render them ineligible in the eyes of foreign husbands, their happiness will be increased and the prosperity of the land will not be diminished.

“The form legislation will take we cannot now say, but legislation of this kind is a sure product of the future. It will benefit the state, it will assist in the solution of social problems, it will not check the development of enterprises or the desire to acquire wealth on the part of individuals, it will lessen some of the evils of our present condition, it will harm none and help all.”—New York Journal, December 11, 1906.

DOWIEITES NOW SPLIT INTO FOUR Factions.

CHICAGO, December 9.—A fourth faction of Zionists entered the field at a meeting in Christ Church, Thirty-seventh Street and Indiana Avenue, this afternoon. Deacon W. H. Piper, who with Overseers Mason and Excell revolted because of Voliva’s refusal to hold a conference of Zion churches next summer, is at the head of it, with the title of overseer. Zion is now split into the following classes: Volivas, Dowieites, Parhamites, and Piperites.

It is the intention of Overseer Piper to collaborate with Overseers Mason and Excell and hold a conference, at which time they promise to establish a sound foundation upon which the new branch will stand.—Buffalo Courier (New York), December 10, 1906.

CARNEGIE’S VIEWS ON WEALTH.

NEW YORK, December 13.—[Special.]—Andrew Carnegie, in an address before the National Civic Federation, to-day advocated the startling proposal that the immense estates accumulated by American millionaires should upon their death practically be confiscated by the Government for the benefit of the whole people. He was preceded by M. E. Ingalls, the railroad magnate, who spoke in favor of an income tax as well as an inheritance tax.

The great ironmaster, whose own wealth is supposed to run into the hundreds of millions, declared that it is the people who make these great fortunes possible.

The millionaire, he says, never created wealth. He simply bought real estate, dug ore out of the mines, made steel, and built railroads. These things made them millionaires only because the people were compelled to rent their real estate, buy their steel, or use their railroads. All wealth, he said, was made by the people and should return to the people.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Mr. Carnegie opposed an income tax, but favored an inheritance tax so heavy that it would be almost confiscatory.

"Don't interfere with the bee when it is making honey," he said, "but when it is through, take a big share of the honey."

He said: "Now, Mr. President, the subject of wealth-distribution will not down. It obviously is unequal, strangely unequal. Let us see, for a moment, how wealth arises. We will take a farmer with two sons. He says to them: 'I can give you each a farm.' They marry nice women, known in the neighborhood, of good kith and kin, and are happily married, thank fortune. They find two farms, one in the northern part of this island and the other across the river in Harlem. They both are the same price. They draw lots to see which shall get the Harlem farm and which shall get the Manhattan farm. The Manhattan farm falls to the younger. They go on and cultivate their farms with equal ability and assiduity. They are splendid neighbors, thoughtful of every poor neighbor, by accident or otherwise; helping everybody; public-spirited men; irreproachable citizens.

"The children of one become millionaires. The city has expanded. There are large buildings now, from which they draw rents, where once the farm stood. The other farmer keeps along, well doing, in comfortable circumstances, has children, having (fortunately for them, I think) an advantage over their cousins; they have to do something in order to justify the world in supporting them.

"They go on, generation after generation, and the first are millionaires. Ten to one—from my experience with young millionaires—ten to one they are far from being the useful, creditable American citizens that the children of a poorer man are. Who made the wealth of the one family? Not ability, foresight, industry, labor. Nothing of the kind. It grew while the man slept. Probably the best thing that man ever did was to forget he had it. He might have sold it if he had been thinking of it.

"Now, tell me, my fellows of the civic federation, is there anything of equality in that? Is there anything to glorify one family or reward one family against the other? Who made that wealth? The community, the population, the people. Then you tell me that wealth is sacred. I say the community is the leading partner who made that wealth. It is the hundreds of people settling up there and thousands of people settling around there. Here are these millionaires, who have toiled not, neither have they spun. They come; they die.

"I am not in favor of touching the bee when it is making honey. Let the bee work. But when he passes away, then, I say, the silent partner—the community that made that wealth, Mr. President—should receive its dividend, and a large proportion..."

"I say that these men, when the time comes that they must die and lie down with their fathers, I say the community fails of its duty, and our legislators fail of their duty, if they do not exact a tremendous share, a progressive share—with no idea of making his children paupers, with no idea of interfering with his right to leave them a competence, but it is an enormous sum, those millions which should really have a different name from property..."

"We do not want a class to grow up in this community, a greater class than we can help, who will not be compelled to render some service to the community to justify that community in giving them all their privileges and their luxuries.

"My experience is that I would as soon leave a curse to my boy as an almighty dollar. There are exceptions every now and then. Here let me say that the millionaire's son who does spurn the coarse pleasures that we see so many of them indulge in and devotes himself to the service of the community in any form is entitled to double honor. But we must legislate not for the exceptions. We must legislate for the general public."—Chicago Daily Tribune, December 14, 1906.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Notice.

Dear Mothers and Friends of the Children: Are you a friend of temperance and a lover of this latter-day work? If so you can not fail to include among the gifts you intend for your own and the children of your friends at this holiday season, the seventh number of the Birth Offering Series soon to be on sale at the Herald Office. It is the story by Frances which has been lately running in the Hope, entitled, "Object-lessons on temperance; or, the Indian maiden and her white deer," and is a story intended to teach the young to abstain even the name of liquor. With one exception, every incident in it is taken from real life. Through the courtesy of Mr. C. H. Engle of Hartford, Michigan, the book embodies an epitome of the beautiful love story told by the Indian chief, Pokagon, in his book entitled, Queen of the Woods.

It may also interest mothers to know that the names of those little ones who have Birth Offerings to their credit, and which have not appeared in other volumes, will be in this.

Will you not send fifty cents to the Herald Office for this volume, and by so doing place good reading in the hands of your child, and at the same time help the office to publish other books for your children? All money sent for books, or asBirth Offerings, is used for that purpose. Price of book, neatly bound in cloth, 50 cents.

A Plea for Our Work.

Dear Friends: We do not come before you to-day, as women full-fledged in wisdom and experience, prepared to tell you just how every department of woman's work can be carried on most successfully. We are not writers to convince you with our long-drawn arguments. We are not speakers to please your ears with the music of our voices. We are just a band of earnest women trying to learn how we may become good wives, good mothers, good sisters, good neighbors and friends. There are some things we do know, some things we can do, and some things we hope for. We know that our homes are not up to that standard of righteousness that our heavenly Father requires, we can improve their present condition by an earnest and prayerful effort to do so, and we hope that parents everywhere may become so thoroughly aroused to a sense of the possibilities open to them that they will leave no stone unturned in the endeavor to make their homes a foretaste of the home in heaven.

We may have nothing new to offer. What we say may have been said many times before; but you know it is not the first drop of water that leaves its impress upon the stone, but the abundance of the repetition of them. So once again we make our plea for the Daughters of Zion, and ask for them your support and hearty cooperation. It is a work worthy of your interest, as we shall endeavor to show you.

We wish your support not only by your presence at our public meetings, which we very much appreciate, but by your sympathy and good will all the time; not as one brother gave it, when he flippantly referred to us as a society of sisters who never had any children trying to teach those who have how to raise theirs. Does he know a knowledge of child-nature, judgment, discernment, tact, and patience are inherent with motherhood? If so, we should have better homes and more obedient children than are common with us now. He may think that mother-love will enable the mother to understand what is best for her child better than any one else can; but mother-love is often blind and will lead her to do the very thing that will be injurious to the best interests of her child. If I, as a mother, were doing those things that were calculated to work evil for my child, I should be glad to receive counsel from some one looking on from the outside who could give an unbiased judgment.

We do not boast of our wisdom in these matters, but come before you in our weakness, asking your cooperation with us. If we did not know there is need for just this line of work, we would not appear before you here to-day. Some may think it commendable to work together for money to assist in the temporal affairs of the church, and certainly it is; but provision has been made for those purposes in the law of God: while our heavenly Father has placed upon parents, individually, the responsibility of training their own children, and is it not more consistent and necessary that they should study and counsel together, that they may be the better prepared to save those souls to the church and to God, than to spend days and days together working for a few dollars to turn into the coffers of the church?

We especially invite the assistance of the priesthood, by preaching sermons on the home-life, and writing short articles on subjects pertinent to our work, for our columns; but if you write, be sure to send your signature with what you write, that the weight of your influence may go with it.

One elder, whom the Daughters of Zion had always looked upon as a friend to their cause, was asked to contribute to one of our departments and accepted, and wrote a short eulogy, but without signature. Now why was it? Was he ashamed to be known as an advocate of the cause of the Daughters of Zion? If so, why? It advocates nothing but the purest principles of virtue and morality, and all that goes to make dear the sacred name of home. One would think any elder would be glad to advocate such a cause. Some of the brethren think, because it is a society of sisters, they have no part in it; and, as one elder puts it, they "let the sisters look after their own work." But, my dear brother, it is not the work of the sisters alone. If your children are not brought up in the fear of God, and your home is not conducted on moral and social principles, do you expect to stand acquitted before God, because your wife has neglected those things, or been unequal to the emergencies of the case, while you have made no effort to help her? You certainly will not. It was not the mother of Eli's children that was held responsible for their conduct, but Eli himself. It was of Abraham, and not of Sarah, that God said, "I know Abraham that he will command his children." All of God's commandments given concerning the training of children are given to parents, if not to the father himself; so then we must work together in this matter.

It is true that the mother's constant presence with her children gives her greater opportunities to influence them than the father has, and that makes it more especially necessary that she should be careful and judicious in her management of them.

By some it will be urged that mothers would be more faithfully attending to their duty by staying at home and looking after the welfare of their households, than to be running around attending mothers' meetings. To this we would answer, that it is not the purpose of the Daughters of Zion to lead mothers away from their home duties. No mother can be justified in neglecting her family to attend meetings of any kind; but we think there are but few women of industry and tact who may not leave home once in a while without being under censure for neglecting her family, and be the better fitted to carry on her work for the change. God himself has established a precedent for just such meetings as these in his plan for carrying on his work. He does not say that each elder shall continue in his field of labor, preaching the gospel all the time; but he has commanded that the elders shall assemble in conference once in three months to counsel together and attend to the business of the church. In the business affairs of the world every craft has its association or conference, where its members meet to confer with one another as to the best interests of their respective callings; and educational interests are conserved not only by associations, but every school board is required to allow its teachers two days of each year for visiting other schools that they may be benefited by comparison of methods in teaching. If the benefits of such meetings are recognized in other lines of work, why should they not be helpful in that of motherhood, which far exceeds any other profession in the varied qualifications and training required to properly fill the position? And, as Dean Russell says, "There is no profession that induces greater physical strain or nervous waste, calls for more of the moral virtues, or profits more from the use of common sense, than that of the wife and mother." And yet, so little preparation is given the young girl to fit her for this important position! And some would even debar her from meeting with others of her calling to counsel together with them, after she has attained such position.

Again, it will be urged that the gospel covers all those things. We know the gospel covers all. But there are so many lines of gospel work. In the days of the apostles it was thought best that the apostles be not burdened with serving tables; so others were appointed for that work. And so it is now. We have the eldership whose time is given to the preaching of the word, and the bishopric whose duty it is to look after the financial interests of the church; and now, if the laity everywhere will see to it that their homes are set in order, and their children are taught to respect authority, do you not think that our elders would go out into the world to preach the gospel with more assurance? If they could testify of the righteousness that the gospel had wrought in the homes of its adherents, would it not be an added strength to them?

How often we hear the elders say that when they go to preach in a branch where the members of the church are living as they should, they experience a freedom in preaching that they can not in places where those who should be lights to the world are living careless and unworthy lives. It is not the word preached, but the word practiced that carries the full weight of its truth to a criticising world.

When urging others to join our ranks, we are sometimes met with the question, "Well, what are the Daughters of Zion doing, anyway?" To such we answer by referring them to our columns in our church papers, as they now are, and reminding them of the dearth there was of anything relative to home life in our church papers prior to the organization of the Daughters of Zion. One dear sister had seen the lack, and the "Home Column" had been started; but she soon saw that something more must be done to help the sisters realize the importance of their part in the redemption of Zion, and the Daughters of Zion was organized. And if it had done nothing more than to have furnished such matter as has appeared in its departments in each of the church papers, besides the thousands of leaflets that have been distributed by it, it has not lived in vain. But we feel that the day-star of its usefulness is just beginning to shine, and instead of the question being asked, Why do you belong to the Daughters of Zion? it will be asked, Why do you not belong to the Daughters of Zion?

FARGO, North Dakota, December 10, 1906.

Editors Herald: I wish to tell your readers about what we are doing here in Fargo, the principal city of North Dakota. Being sent to a Dakota mission by the General Conference last spring, I brought my wife with me, and after looking the situation over decided on Fargo for our home. The Lord seems to have directed in this, for we soon found enough Saints to organize a little Sunday-school, and now our numbers have increased until we have preaching when any of the elders are with us, and sacrament-services at times. We have no organized branch yet, but the Spirit has promised that if the Saints are faithful "the work will be built up and established here ere long."

Fargo is on two of the great railroad lines to the West, and we would be pleased to have any of the Saints and elders stop off and meet with us. Services are held in a private house, the home of Bro. and Sr. Brown, 1311 First Avenue North: Sunday-school at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, preaching at half past seven. Any of the Saints and brethren will be made welcome at our home, 1948 Front Street, only about seven blocks west from the Northern Pacific depot, and only two blocks from the car line. If any of the Saints have friends or relatives in Fargo that they would like to have me call upon, I will do so if they will write me. We have had a very great amount of snow already, and winter seems to have closed in upon us with a promise to be a severe one. Praying and working for the cause of Zion,

JEROME E. WILDERMUTH.

ALLENDALE, Missouri, December 13, 1906.

Dear Herald: I am still in the Lord's service, and preaching every night to fair-sized crowds, and having fairly good attention. Some I believe are convinced that we have the truth, but for some reason do not feel to accept it yet. We have some very spiritual Saints residing here whose influence goes out for good; and if they continue they will be the means of building up the kingdom of God here, and the Lord is truly blessing them. Having moved into Lamoni from North Dakota with my family, I can say we are all well pleased with our new home and surroundings and we feel thankful to our heavenly Father for the many blessings He has bestowed upon us. He has permitted us to live now among the Saints in Zion, and it is our desire to seek to please him so we can remain here.

We truly appreciate the church privileges here, and we have met some very humble, active Saints, who are doing a noble work for the Master. I wish to say to the Saints of Dakota, that I have not forgotten them and their kindness and their generous disposition to receive the servants of the Lord, and their desires to see the gospel spread among their neighbors. The Lord will bless us according to our desires and efforts to serve him. We are living in perilous times, when people are not concerned about the truth. We see some of our own people depart from their standing in the light. We should be more deeply concerned about ourselves, and strive more than ever to keep God's law.

I am just as interested in the work to-day as I have ever been, and it is my determination to press onward to the end; and we shall all reap if we faint not.

I pray God may bless his Saints, and that none will be tired of doing his will; and as he has a holy people according to the election of grace, I desire to be numbered among them.

Your brother in bonds,

GEORGE DAY.

HAMLET, Scotland.

Editors Herald: I have much to thank my heavenly Father for; he has blessed me with the light of the gospel and a portion of his Holy Spirit which helps me to overcome all trials and difficulties. I rejoice in the gospel of Christ and value the privilege we have of being laborers with God for the good of his people. My husband and I are striving to obey the gospel in its fullness, and I know if we are trustful and humble as we should be we shall meet our Lord when he comes to reign as Lord of lords and King of kings. We Saints in Hamilton are ever thankful to God for sending Bro. W. H. Greenwood to labor among us. I hope he will be the means of bringing all the honest-hearted people in Hamilton and Newarthill into the kingdom. My testimony is that this work is true, and I can truly say that I have had more comfort and enjoyment since I was led into the light than I had in my life before; for I am confident now that the promises and the assurance of the Savior to his followers are now for me; in order to enjoy these promised blessings I must be faithful, not only this day or this year, but through all time, even unto death. Please pray for me and my husband that we may be as a shining light wherever we go, that those who are still out in the world will know that there is something in living a good and faithful life.

MRS. W. BROWNING.

PISGAH, Iowa, December 14, 1906.

Dear Herald: I am endeavoring in my weak way to help the gospel work along to the best of my ability, by the help of my heavenly Father. Without his help I realize that we can not do anything. When I sit down and read the Herald and Ensign, and read of the poor isolated Saints, I often wonder, if we who have church privileges enjoy and improve our opportunities as we should. I have all church privileges, including Sunday-school, preaching, Religio, and prayer-meetings. I hope that I may so live that when the time comes for the Saints to gather to Zion—with the rest I may be ready and prepared to go. Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may live faithful to the end.

C. R.

SOUTH PORTLAND, Maine, December 14, 1906.

Editors Herald: Your most esteemed paper is a weekly visitor at our house, bringing the glad tidings of great joy, for which we are truly thankful. So far as I know, my wife and I are the only Latter Day Saints in this place, and we seldom see any of our people, so the Herald is all the more prized.

Bro. W. E. LaRue came to see us a few weeks ago, but did not have a chance to preach while here. It is a hard thing to get through the crust of prejudice.

This city has a population of about six thousand, and Portland about ten thousand; the two places being so closely united, are almost as one city. I trust some time the gospel will be sent here. The people seem to regard Latter Day Saints as Mormons, and as very few will read our literature, it is hard to teach them the difference. I have found one man, a Universalist preacher, who is a broad-minded enough to call on us and take some reading-matter home with him. I enjoyed his visit and hope he will call again.

The writer attended a revival meeting in Portland, Sunday. The great English revivalist, Gipsy Smith, is holding a series of meetings there. My impressions are that he is a real, live man, and understands his business well. Being a student of nature, he knows how to handle human nature. His talk is plain and simple and his delivery with the ease and grace of a natural speaker, and he holds the attention from start to finish. I should judge between two and three hundred went into the inquiry room. Mr. Smith certainly knows how to draw them out.

Any of the ministry coming this way are invited to call on us and to preach if they can get the opportunity.

Yours in the one faith,

21 Kincaid Street. WENTWORTH S. POWERS.

News From Branches

(Concluded from page 1221.)

Christmas exercises was set for Christmas night. Inspired Translation of the Bible is to be used in our class work, henceforth; King James’ Version being used for comparison only. We are working on a cantata for Christmas.

A Sunday-school teachers’ normal class was organized recently, thirty-seven enrolled, with a view to taking the International Sunday-School Teachers’ Diploma.

Brn. John Zimmermann and Walter W. Smith made a visit to Scranton, Pennsylvania, remaining over Sunday, where the former taught the temporal law with no uncertain sound, and the latter discoursed on gospel themes and assisted in Religious work. An encouraged increase of interest seems manifest in that place, which they attribute largely to the tent-work done recently, thirty-seven enrolled, with a view to taking the Religious interest very good, judging by attendance. We are working on a Christmas program to be rendered by the young men and maidens on next Friday evening. Bro. Hosea H. Bacon put in an application in behalf of the Religio for a square piano, one hundred of which were being given away by the Huppe Piano Company here, as a Thanksgiving advertisement.

Out of the twenty-two hundred applications we were one of the successful candidates, and a very good-looking “square” now graces our lower auditorium.

The dedication of our church-building will take place on January 27, and we are preparing to follow it with an excellent effort to reach the honest in heart in this great city.

We have arranged for one of the most popular auditoriums in the city, Odd Fellow’s Temple, where we shall hold services every evening. We expect to have with us as speakers President Joseph Smith, Bishop E. L. Kelley, and Apostles John W. Rushton and F. M. Sheehy. The music will be assisted by Sr. Wallace N. Robinson of Tulsa, Indian Territory, in the role of soloist. The advertising will be done by a press agent, and we shall have excellent newspaper notice. The Saints have been and will continue fasting and praying on Sunday mornings for the good of this meeting. The effort will close with the district conference, February 2 and 3.

President Roosevelt Breaks Another Precedent.

President Roosevelt shows his deep interest in child labor reform by contributing to the January number of the Woman's Home Companion an authoritative statement giving his attitude on this important social question. In contributing a signed statement to a magazine while in office and on a topic directly touch the President the shatters another precedent. He was asked by Arthur T. Vance, editor of the Woman's Home Companion and Secretary Lindsay of the National Child Labor Committee to make plain to the president of the nation just what his position is on this grave national problem and responding with this ringing declaration:

I am glad to have you give the widest publicity to my previous utterances on child labor. I am pleased to go on record in this statement expressed terms as in fact I have done by both State and national legislatures, for the purpose of doing away with the evils of child labor. I believe that the recent action of the legislature of Georgia, a State which leads the nation industrially, in placing a statute-book's child labor law which contemplates the gradual adoption of a standard approximating that of the best legislation either north or south, makes it now incumbent on Congress to provide an adequate child labor law for the District of Columbia and the Territories. With the single exception of Nevada, the District of Columbia and the territories are the only American communities which have no legislation at all on this subject. Suitable action by Congress for the area over which it has exclusive jurisdiction, however, is inadequate or merely nominal to a realization of their duty to improve their legislation and to render its enforcement effective. Our American civilization will then be unable to protect those children for gain; and, greed, whether it be that of employer or that of selfish and indolent parents, will be justly restrained.

Business Methods Applied to Reform Work.

Child labor reform had its innings last Saturday at Cincinnati. The National Child Labor Committee held its third annual meeting and discussed with the aid of Senator Albert J. Beveridge (Indiana), Professor Felix Adler, Jane Addams, Doctor Samuel McCone Lindsay, Arthur T. Vance, and others, including bright lights in child labor reform work, the present efforts to abolish this national evil. Mr. Vance, who is editor of the Woman's Home Companion, described the very important connection of publicity, or printers' ink with present day reform movements. He said in part:

The manufacturer who has a product in which he believes, spends thousands of dollars in buying publicity in the newspapers and the magazines, telling people about the virtues of his product. We call this sort of publicity, advertising, and it is good advertising if this product lives up to the claims he makes for it. We, who are interested in reform, precisely the thing we take steps to interest the newspapers and magazines in our pet theories, and if our reform is a good thing the people of the country will stand by and back us up. In other words, advertising publicity and the mass publicity accomplishes the same thing. They arouse public interest and public sentiment in favor of the object which they have in view. We have come to place a greater dependence than ever upon the power of printers' ink in making public opinion.

It was publicity that brought about the downfall of the Louisiana Lottery. It was publicity that prepared the way for the famous investigative series of the St. Louis Post Dispatch. It was a magazine article that stirred up all this talk about the conditions in Panama, that finally led to the President himself going down there to investigate. Legitimate printer's ink has been foremost in the fight for pure food, and for the regulation of patent medicines. It can be safely said that publicity to-day is the greatest power for public good in the country.

The Arena for December has two very important discussions of the railroad question. One is from the pen of Professor Frank Parsons, Ph. D., the eminent economist and author of "The railways, the trusts, and the people," and of "The heart of the railroad problem." Doctor Parsons states: "The nationalization of railways in Switzerland," this paper being the opening contribution of a series of papers prepared expressly for this Arena. In the Swear Switzerland when the government was buying the railways and made an exhaustive personal study of the railroads of the Alpine Republic. Last summer he returned to Switzerland to note the results of government ownership and operation. Hence this story of the nationalization of the Swiss railways and the result is an authoritative paper. It is told in a clear and interesting manner and is a very valuable contribution to the growing literature on the railroad question. The second noteworthy paper on the railroads in this issue of the Arena is by Edwin F. Grubl and Edgar E. Robinson and is entitled "Is railroad rate-regulation a step to government ownership?" It is the view of a great number of business houses, economists, educators, and lawyers of national reputation are cited, the consensus of opinion being that railroad rate-regulation is a step to government ownership. Other important and timely political, social, and economic articles in this issue are:

- "Broad aspects of race-suicide," by Professor Frank T. Carlton;
- "Child-labor," by Elinor H. Stoy;
- "William Morris and aesthetic socialism," by Thomas Dickinson, Ph. D., "Our vanishing liberty of the press," by Theodore Schneider; "The bringing of the kingdom," by Jesse F. Orton; and "Governor Folk of Missouri," a character sketch by Honorable Thomas Speed Mosby. The last paper is a fine study of Governor Folk, his identification with the work the State has done under the auspices of the Governor accompanies this article. There are also a number of live editorials on the political and economic events of the hour, discussed in Mr. Flower's vigorous manner, as well as several interesting literary features, including a study of William Wheelwright: “The Yankee pioneer of modern industry in South America,” by Professor Frederic M. Noa, and an extended book-study on Porfirio Diaz and the work he has accomplished, by the editor, based on Mrs. Alec-Tweedie’s recent biography of President Diaz. The two short stories, “The bishop’s ordination,” and “Nude lips” are excellent.

Mr. Dooley’s New Observation.

In the language of a friend “Dooley is gittin’ gayer and wiser all th’time.” He has never written so brilliantly as in the new series of Dooley articles which are now appearing in the Chicago Sunday Record-Herald. His views on “Me young friend Count Boney’s love affairs,” “Th’President’s activities,” and other timely observations in the new series are the choicest things the author has ever offered his thousands of admirers, full of witty sayings which will be quoted for years to come. These “Dooley” articles, each complete in itself, will appear in successive Sunday issues of the Record Herald.

Take time to be merry, to “have a good time,” and you will double your possibilities of health, wealth, and happiness. Anglo-Saxons are made fun of because they take even their pleasures sadly. Their American cousins, with characteristic energy, make a business of it. Ian Maclaren’s story of the American’s doing in the United Kingdom is a good illustration of Johnathan’s method of pleasing. A visitor’s card was brought to Doctor Watson (Ian Maclaren,) in his study, but, before he had time to read it, his visitor stood before him, and announced himself. “My name is Elijah K. Higgins,” he said, breathlessly, “and I am a busy man; you also are busy and have no time to fool away. Four days are all I can give to the United Kingdom, and I wished to shake hands with you. Good-bye, I am off to Drumtoochy!”

By INDEPENDENCE COAL MINING COMPANY

In order to develop and open up the new coal-mining interests near Independence and also make necessary preparations for homes for mine-workers, it is necessary that sufficient capital be secured within a short time. The amount sought for is very small compared with the capital of other coal-mining interests and, for various reasons, the directors of this company desire to keep the working and controlling power with the church members, if possible. The opening up of an undeveloped coal field at the edge of a densely populated community of 60,000 population is a matter of considerable consideration, as the product is a part of the necessities of life, with freight rates practically cut off, making this enterprise as exceptional one.

Five hundred and sixty-nine acres have been leased for fifty years and one hundred and thirty-four purchased, making in all seven hundred and twenty-four acres of coal-land in one body, on the line of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, two miles east of Independence.

The company has coal-mines at Napoleon, Missouri, in operation and a successful and prosperous retail business, making this a bona fide, paying investment.

Money seeking investment can find no better place, and will bring as good a kind of satisfaction, as it will bring good returns to the investor and results that are much sought after, also benefiting the unemployed, scattered, pressed-down, poor church members by placing them in a position to help themselves. The 194 acres are intended for homes for mine-workers, to be sold at a reasonable price, and we solicit the co-operation of miners to purchase stock, according to their ability. The promoters of this company are not working for any selfish interests. There is no water nor floodless valued stock. The company is incorporated under the laws of the State of Missouri. Capital stock, $60,000.00; shares, $100.00 each; amount paid up $6,000.00. The capital stock must be increased to the amount paid up. Parties sending money can do so by bank draft. Further particulars apply to R. MAY, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.
