of the one who started the church, or the people who compose it. We find a church called the Baptist Church, and the members call themselves Baptists, and say that John the Baptist was a Baptist, also Christ and the apostles, and that the people of God should be called Baptists and therefore the name of the church should be the "Baptist Church."

The Catholics, Christians, and some others offer about the same argument, but the same people claim that their church is really the Church of Jesus Christ, though it is called by some other name.

And so it is with all the many churches of various names. They all claim to be the church of Jesus Christ, or part of it. I do not think there is a true Latter Day Saint who would claim the real name of the Church of Jesus Christ to be the "Saints' Church," or even the "Latter Day Saints' Church." But then why do we hear it so called sometimes by some of the Saints, and even a few times I have seen it so entitled in print, and also heard it so proclaimed from the pulpit, and by our representatives as the "Latter Day Saints' Church." It might be more appropriate if such names were used in reference to church buildings only, but I have heard them used in reference to the great organized body of God's people.

Is it because in this fast age we do not want to take the time to say the whole explanatory official name, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints? If that is the case, why not use the part that tells whose church it really is, and through whom we hope to gain salvation? In Acts, fourth chapter and twelfth verse, we are told that there is no other name under heaven whereby we must be saved, but by the name of Jesus Christ. Not desiring to criticise and one especially, but just to call our attention to this matter that we may consider it, I am,

Your brother in the conflict against error,

HOW RECONCILED.

A scientific hydra has appeared. Evolution declares that "organized forms have been evolved from jelly-like matter, in the sea, simple, homogeneous, without organism, without parts, without life."—Darwin and others. But, as Bro. S. W. L. Scott observes, "this theory fails to account for life." True, but the evolutionist insists that life originates from dead matter, and light is born and begotten of darkness, and that intelligence is the offspring of blank non-intelligence; and, independent of created faculties, the faculties of perception, reason, discernment, judgment (ability to decide right from wrong), conceptions, and so on, are alike children of evolution—blank absence of all life.

If evolution can originate all these principles and powers, that make the world of existing things—living creatures, light, life, and infinite intelligence—why can not evolution by its infinite power perpetuate eternally the mighty organism,—world? If it is such an infinite and fruitful force, such a progressive force, it can perpetuate itself eternally. Why not? It is absolutely independent. Nothing, however powerful, can hinder or interfere with its operations or their results. It makes all things. All things depend on it—evolution—for their existence. Either this is true, or its claims are untrue.

Evolution limited—development from a created basis, is another thing. Limited evolution, or development from created origins, implies creator and designer. We see and know by experience and absolute demonstration, that all creatures in our world that we know anything about, are dependent, and limited in their existence. Our world of things is, in its existence and career, subject to two antipodal laws, viz.: Organization and decomposition. Both seem to be in operation always and everywhere. The former apparently is the stronger—holding its own.

When life ends or becomes extinct in a given creature, a living thing, it decomposes, ceases to exist in its living form and condition. But if evolution can originate and perpetuate things, worlds and their living inhabitants, why can it not only develop and form, but also reform, reproduce, resurrect from the dead? Life once being born of death could just as easily be begotten again. Why not? Is it unable to repeat its own act, or reëxert its own power? Why should not evolution not only organize life forms, but claim to resurrect to life again, each existence returning in its original form? One is just as possible as the other, admitting its claims. Minor dependent living forms reproduce. Are they endowed with power not possessed by their parent—evolution? If the inspiration of living existences with intelligence is floating in the air as protoplasm is, why are not all living things, as man and other beasts, inspired alike and to the same degree? Some animals have larger brains than man. They ought to take in more of this distributed intelligence than man, ought they not?

But we will get to the bottom of evolution sometime, and the discovery will be made that unlimited creative evolution is but an idea; one, however, that will have done good. It will expose the error of denying the doctrine of creation.

Now, in the face of the claim made for the almighty achievements of this almighty force, evolution—power to create a world of living, rejoicing, intelligent beings, man, beasts, birds, fishes, and other creatures—science asserts that our earth, with all its elements of life, is to perish, die, within a hundred years; but especially the human race.

Science now asserts this. As to how this will come about, we will let Mr. Edgar L. Larkin explain. He does it from a scientific standpoint, and our copy is from the Denver Rocky Mountain News, for Monday, October 14, 1907. But we ask the question, If the forces in the earth essential to man's existence thereon, are to disappear, now, within a hundred years, is not evolution a failure? On which side of science is safety here?

Mr. Larkin sounds an alarm: "Dismay, panic, and dire distress will reign." Earth's coal, gas, and oil are to disappear in "one short century." Where-with, then, are we to be kept warm, and live?

We are looking for the earth to pass through a change not long hence, equivalent to death. Was it David and Paul who said: "And, thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands; they shall perish; but thou remainest; and they shall wax old as doth a garment; and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed; but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail."—Hebrews 1: 10, 11; Psalm 102: 25. "Behold, I make all things new." It is to die and be regenerated, renewed, or quickened.

Away back in 1832, when Joseph Smith the Martyr was only twenty-seven years of age, this was said through him to the church:

And again, verily I say unto you, The earth abideth the law of a celestial kingdom, for it filleth the measure of its creation, and transgresseth not the law [of its being—C. S.]. Wherefore, it shall be sanctified; yea, notwithstanding it shall die, it shall be quickened again, and shall abide the power by which it is quickened, and the righteous shall inherit it; for, notwithstanding they die, they also shall rise again a spiritual body: they who are of a celestial spirit shall receive the same body, which was a natural body: even ye shall receive your bodies, and your glory shall be that glory by which your bodies are quickened."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6.

But let us all hear from Mr. Larkin, a delegate to the Irrigation Congress, at Sacramento, September, 1907, on this "world-wide question." C. SCOTT.

WRAY, Colorado, October 17, 1907.

MAN HATH NO PERMANENT CITY.

It has long been known to geologists that the human species can not exist for ever on this earth. All coal areas at present known will be exhausted in one hundred years. There may be new discoveries of coal, but it is doubtful. Of course they can burn water—that is, mix the oxygen with some hydrocarbon gas—but this would only be a makeshift, for the gas would have to be made of either coal or oil. The carbon question will soon loom up into a world-wide query. For one-fifth of one per cent of the energy in coal only, appears in the electric light; that is, ninety-nine and four fifths per cent of this precious energy is wasted in the production of light by electricity. All steam engines waste over ninety per cent as well. Oil will vanish within seventy-five years, for it is now being allowed to run into rivers in some places and burned to be rid of it in others. With an almost incredible perversity, billions of cubic feet of natural gas are now escaping from many wells into the air. The race is simply allowing carbon to disappear from the earth. The question of fuel will startle mankind in about one hundred years. Dismay, panic, and dire distress will reign. This is the sure event to come. Now what can be done? But two things—take energy direct from the sun, or plant millions of square miles to trees. Edison and other electricians have racked their brains to rescue energy from the sun's magnetic field. It is known that energy enough falls on the deck of an ocean liner from the sun to run it across the sea. All is now wasted, for this electro-magnetic potential can not be converted into electricity by any means at present known.

In the World's Fair at St. Louis, an electrical engineer in speaking to a vast audience, in which were many civil engineers, said: "You prepare the earth, turn it over to us and we will wire it, converting it into an electrical machine." But this can not be done without immense supplies of carbon or energy direct from the sun. Wood will be the only source of carbon when coal, gas, and oil disappear at the end of one century. But every square mile of the earth's surface must be planted to trees or food producing vegetation. This involves a scheme of irrigation beyond all imagination. One speaks of irrigation in a commonplace sort of way at times. But the long-continued existence of man depends entirely upon this one mighty fact. A loud cry will soon resound throughout the world for carbon, and there is only one source—wood and wood from water in arid soils. Let us denude the earth of trees now, as we are at a rate startling in rapidity, then our grandchildren will suffer and die, and call us so narrow and near-sighted that we bordered almost on criminal negligence in this good year 1907. The keynote of this great congress is sounding and keeps on ringing louder and louder the close approach of a world panic—the vanishing of carbon. At St. Louis we heard the swelling wail for nitrogen, in nitrates for fertilizing. But here, the alarm is ringing like a clanging bell for black diamonds, a million times more valuable than the white. That is: man must soon end his career on this planet. Now, is it possible that human ingenuity can make Congress at Washington hear of this nearby menace?

Will this great nation let four fifths of all its trees be cut down in the next twenty years by private corporations? What right has one man to own an area of forests as large as a State of the Union? One of the greatest problems ever encountered by man is here, not on the way, but actually here. Do we wish to leave a heritage, a legacy to the next generation—yes, to our children—of misery and approaching dissolution? Let the human species increase, as in the past, then there is not land enough upon which to grow food, nor nearly enough to grow forests for fuel.

One speaker said that every river in the world must be as completely under control as water in city mains. The cost of a great dam in the mountains to store floods is about equal to that of one warship. It taxes the extreme limit of amazement to see why human beings fight. Yes, but they will fight and kill with a ferocity beyond all things that have happened in the bloody past, when they begin to starve and freeze. To make this thing clear, a number of carefully prepared papers by scientific men mentioned this carbon problem. The longest estimate of any was that it would practically come to an end in one hundred years—one short century. And human beings will still go on, no doubt, wasting their time in absurd politics and war until they begin to freeze. Why not substitute economics, science, and civic wisdom. Unless every arid area is irrigated and covered with trees, your children will begin to freeze and die within one hundred years.—Edgar L. Larkin, Irrigation Palace, Sacramento, California, September 16, 1907.

REVELATIONS.

Oh how precious are the revelations of God to me! In them I do rejoice, because they are beneficial to my soul. Not only those grand ones reaching from Adam to the present time, and throughout the millennium, as contained in the standard books of the church; but also those that are from time to time being given in the churches. For instance, one was given at the Stewartsville, Missouri, reunion, which is in part as follows: "Never speak with lightness, never act in a light manner about the sacred things of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. . . . look upon the blessed things of the gospel with respect and reverence."

While this was given to the young people, it certainly is applicable to us all, as also is one given to Bishop Bullard, of Providence, Rhode Island: "This is the adorning unto me, even of the spirit with meekness, with chastity, and with holiness. . . . Cease from faultfinding and complaining."

Oh, how good is this instruction! We may read much and pray much, yet if we are continually finding fault with our neighbors, or even our enemies, we will not be happy.

A revelation given to Sr. Julia Lamb, of Illinois, is as follows:

"When revelations come from God
Or his dear Son,
Then we must their commands obey,
And say, 'Thy will be done!'"

Another given to Apostle Joseph Luff, of Independence, Missouri:

"Whoso lusteth after pleasure,
High estate, or mammon's store—
Envious and proud remaineth—
Though he gain the world, is poor.

"If you would be rich, be holy!
Would you dwell all heights above?
Heed ye, then, this admonition:
Climb to atmosphere of love.

"Love ye me and love all people—
Love as I have loved you;
This your calling—this my purpose—
Thus be my disciples true."

Another given through Joseph the Seer, Doctrine and Covenants 2:1: "The works, and the designs, and the purposes of God, can not be frustrated, neither can they come to naught." How consoling! Human wisdom often comes to naught; but God's can never fail.

Last, but not least, I quote a revelation given through the Prophet of the whole church, now living at Independence, Missouri, Doctrine and Covenants 118:2: "It is my will that ye more fully honor and pay heed to the voice and counsel of the traveling ministry in spiritual things; which if ye do not, the office which they hold is not honored in my service, and the good they should do is made void."

C. J. SPURLOCK.

WHO SHALL BE JUSTIFIED?

By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned.—Matthew 12:37.

Words are but the expression of sentiments and thoughts arising in the mind and heart of an individual, and therefore we can measure an individual by the sentiments voiced by him; for "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." And what is true of an individual is also true of a body or organization, and therefore we can determine the result of teaching. If a man teaches by precept and example that which is good, and constantly holds aloft a standard of truth and virtue, we would conclude that his life and character were pure and devout; but if his language were uncouth, profane, and demoralizing, we would naturally and consistently suppose that his life was not of the highest type, and that he was lacking somewhat in character because his expressions revealed the fact that he had not developed morally and intellectually.

So also with an organization. If its teachings are true, pure, and elevating, its fruits, of necessity, will be good also; and if it adheres strictly to the laws of God and man it will become a benefactor to mankind, a means of developing the social circles, and of developing within its members a character to be admired by all lovers of truth and right: and by continuing to pursue the principles of truth, and love, and respect for law, the influence of such society or organization will increase and spread and be known among men as an ideal, to whose precepts every true person can well afford to adhere. Should the opposite of this be true, the opposite results can be expected. For example, it was the nature and character of Christ that has made apparent the need of truth; and the effect his teachings have had upon those who accept it and conform to its requirements gives us assurance that mankind is benefited thereby. Christ being the greatest exponent of truth the world has ever known, we can well afford to follow him and gain truth upon truth, until we have gained a perfect knowledge of all truth, and have learned ever to speak the truth, that we might be justified thereby in the day of judgment, as well as gaining the confidence of all who know us. Now let us take a glimpse of the other side of the matter, and see what it will produce. Suppose we see an individual constantly telling that which is not true; would we not soon lose confidence in him, and guard on every hand to keep from becoming a victim of his untruth?

So also with an organization. If we discover in it a spirit of untruth, would we not be forced to conclude that it was not reliable, and that the elements of life and salvation could not be found therein?

Now, as an organization, the Mormon church in Utah has been resorting to falsehood in order to maintain its ground, and we wish to cite a few examples. John Taylor denied the doctrine of polygamy in the strongest and most emphatic terms while in France in the year 1850, and his subsequent history reveals the fact that he was at the time living in polygamy, being the husband of six wives. On the 1st of October, 1842, thirty-one witnesses signed a statement and had it published, among whom was Eliza R. Snow, that they knew of no system of marriage being taught or practiced save the one wife system prescribed in the Doctrine and Covenants, and later after becoming a plural wife of Brigham Young she testified that she was sealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith as a plural wife, June 29, 1842. Now the question is, when did these people tell the truth? There is a falsehood out somewhere. And further, in the early part of the summer, 1904, Joseph F. Smith, of the Utah church, testified before the Senate Committee that he would use his influence to have the manifesto of 1890 published in the next edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, of which there has been mention made on different occasions (in the HERALD). And, while the late editions of their book have been deprived of a date line, we have succeeded in securing a copy of their Doctrine and Covenants, the Sunday-school or vest-pocket edition as it is called, with the following on the title-page:

"The Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Containing the Revelations given to Joseph Smith, Junior, the Prophet, for the building up of the Kingdom of God in the last days. Divided into verses, with references, by Orson Pratt, Sen., Salt Lake City, Utah: Published by the Deseret Sunday-school Union, 1905."

So it is very apparent that they have published at least one dated edition since Smith promised to publish the manifesto prohibiting polygamy; and this edition has no such manifesto in it, but contains the same sections as do all their editions published since Professor Orson Pratt divided said work into verses with references in 1879; so it is quite apparent that the promise made at Washington was not made in good faith, and hence, "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

Is it not time the people of this cult were awakening to the awful situation they are being plunged into by those false leaders who persist in telling that which is foreign to the truth?

Of General Interest

THE CONSERVATION OF NATURAL RESOURCES.

The most prosperous nation of to-day is the United States. Our unexampled wealth and well-being are directly due to the superb natural resources of our country, and to the use which has been made of them by our citizens, both in the present and in the past. We are prosperous because our forefathers bequeathed to us a land of marvelous resources still unexhausted. Shall we conserve those resources, and in our turn transmit them, still unexhausted, to our descendants? Unless we do, those who come after us will have to pay the price of misery, degradation, and failure for the progress and prosperity of our day. When the natural resources of any nation become exhausted, disaster and decay in every department of national life follow as a matter of course. Therefore the conservation of natural resources is the basis, and the only permanent basis, of national success. There are other conditions, but this one lies at the foundation.

Perhaps the most striking characteristic of the American people is their superb practical optimism; that marvelous hopefulness which keeps the individual efficiently at work. This hopefulness of the American is, however, as short-sighted as it is intense. As a rule, it does not look ahead beyond the next decade or score of years, and fails wholly to reckon with the real future of the nation. I do not think I have ever heard a forecast of the growth of our population that extended beyond a total of two hundred millions, and that only as a distant and shadowy goal. The point of view which this fact illustrates is neither true nor far-sighted. We shall reach a population of two hundred millions in the very near future, as time is counted in the lives of nations, and there is nothing more certain than that this country of ours will some day support double, or triple, or five times that number of prosperous people if only we can bring ourselves so to handle our natural resources in the present as not to lay an embargo on the prosperous growth of the future. We, the American people, have come into possession of nearly four million square miles of the richest portion of the earth. It is ours to use and conserve for ourselves and our descendants, or to destroy. The fundamental question which confronts us is, What shall we do with it?

That question can not be answered without first considering the condition of our natural resources and what is being done with them to-day. As a people, we have been in the habit of declaring certain of our resources to be inexhaustible. To no other resource more frequently than coal has this stupidly false adjective been applied. Yet our coal supplies are so far from being inexhaustible that if the increasing rate of consumption shown by the figures of the last seventy-five years continues to prevail (and there is every reason to believe that it will grow rather than lessen), our supplies of anthracite coal will last but fifty years and of bituminous coal but a little over one hundred years. From the point of view of national life, this means the exhaustion of one of the most important factors in our civilization within the immediate future. Not a few coal fields have already been exhausted, as in portions of Iowa and Missouri. Yet, in the face of these known facts, we continue to treat our coal as though there could never be an end of it. The established coal-mining practice at the present date does not take out more than one half the coal, leaving the less easily mined or lower grade material to be made permanently inaccessible by the caving in of the abandoned workings. The loss to the nation from this form of waste is prodigious and inexcusable. The waste in use is not less appalling. But five per cent of the potential power residing in the coal actually mined is saved and used. For example, only about five per cent of the power of the one hundred and fifty million tons annually burned on the railways of the United States is actually used in traction; ninety-five per cent is expended unproductively or is lost. In the best incandescent electric lighting plants but one fifth of one per cent of the potential value of the coal is converted into light.

Many oil and gas fields, as in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and the Mississippi Valley, have already failed, yet vast amounts of gas continue to be poured into the air and great quantities of oil into the streams. Cases are known in which vast amounts of oil are systematically burned in order to be rid of it.

The prodigal squandering of our mineral fuels proceeds unchecked in face of the fact that such resources as these, once used or wasted, can never be replaced. If waste like this were not chiefly thoughtless, it might well be characterized as the deliberate destruction of the nation's future.

Many fields of iron ore have already been exhausted, and in still more, as in the coal mines, only the higher grades have been taken from the mines, leaving the least valuable beds to be exploited at increased cost or not at all. Similar waste in the case of other minerals is less serious only because they are less indispensable to our civilization than coal and iron. Mention should be made of the annual loss of millions of dollars worth of by-products from coke, blast, and other furnaces, now thrown into the air, often not merely without benefit but to the serious injury of the community. In other countries these by-products are saved and used.

We are in the habit of speaking of the solid earth and the eternal hills as though they, at least, were free from the vicissitudes of time and certain to furnish perpetual support for prosperous human life. This conclusion is as false as the term "inexhaustible" applied to other natural resources. The waste of soil is among the most dangerous of all wastes now in progress in the United States. In 1896 Professor Shaler, than whom no one has spoken with greater authority on this subject, estimated that in the upland regions of the States south of Pennsylvania three thousand square miles of soil had been destroyed as the result of forest denudation, and that the destruction was then proceeding at the rate of one hundred square miles of fertile soil per year. No seeing man can travel through the United States without being struck with the enormous and unnecessary loss of fertility by easily preventable soil wash. The soil so lost, as in the case of many other wastes, becomes itself a source of damage and expense, and must be removed from the channels of our navigable streams at an enormous annual cost. The Mississippi River alone is estimated to transport yearly four hundred million tons of sediment, or about twice the amount of material to be excavated from the Panama Canal. This material is the most fertile portion of our richest fields, transformed from a blessing to a curse by unrestricted erosion.

The destruction of forage plants by overgrazing has resulted, in the opinion of men most capable of judging, in reducing the grazing value of the public lands by one half. This enormous loss of forage, serious though it be in itself, is not the only result of wrong methods of pasturage. The destruction of forage plants is accompanied by loss of surface soil through erosion; by forest destruction; by corresponding deterioration in the water supply; and by a serious decrease in the quality and weight of animals grown on overgrazed lands. These sources of loss from failure to conserve the range are felt to-day. They are accompanied by the certainty of a future loss not less important, for range lands once badly overgrazed can be restored to their former value but slowly or not at all. The obvious and certain remedy is for the Government to hold and control the public range until it can pass into the hands of settlers who will make their homes upon it. As methods of agriculture improve and new dry-land crops are introduced, vast areas once considered unavailable for cultivation are being made into prosperous homes, and this movement has only begun.

The lowest estimate reached by the Forest Service of the timber now standing in the United States is 1,400 billion feet, board measure; the highest, 2,000 billion. The present annual consumption is approximately 100 billion feet, while the annual growth is but a third of the consumption, or from 30 to 40 billion feet. If we accept the larger estimate of the standing timber, 2,000 billion feet, and the larger estimate of the annual growth, 40 billion feet, and apply the present rate of consumption, the result shows a probable duration of our supplies of timber of not more than thirty-three years.

Estimates of this kind are almost inevitably misleading. For example, it is certain that the rate of consumption of timber will increase enormously in the future, as it has in the past, so long as supplies remain to draw upon. Exact knowledge of many other factors is needed before closely accurate results can be obtained. The figures cited are, however, sufficiently reliable to make it certain that the United States has already crossed the verge of a timber famine so severe that its blighting effects will be felt in every household in the land. The rise in the price of lumber which marks the opening of the present century is the beginning of a vastly greater and more rapid rise which is to come. We must necessarily begin to suffer from the scarcity of timber long before our supplies are completely exhausted. It is well to remember that there is no foreign source from which we can draw cheap and abundant supplies of timber to meet a demand per capita so large as to be without parallel in the world, and that the suffering which will result from the progressive failure of our timber was but faintly foreshadowed by the recent temporary scarcity of coal.

What will happen when the forests fail? In the first place, the business of lumbering will disappear. It is now the fourth greatest industry in the United States. All forms of building industries will suffer with it, and the occupants of houses, offices, and stores must pay the added cost. Mining will become vastly more expensive; and with the rise in the cost of mining there must follow a corresponding rise in the price of coal, iron, and other minerals. The railways, which have as yet failed entirely to develop a satisfactory substitute for the wooden tie (and must, in the opinion of their best engineers, continue to fail), will be profoundly affected, and the cost of transportation will suffer a corresponding increase. Water power for lighting, manufacturing, and transportation, and the movement of freight and passengers by inland waterways, will be affected still more directly than the steam railways. The cultivation of the soil, with or without irrigation, will be hampered by the increased cost of agricultural tools, fencing, and the wood needed for other purposes about a farm. Irrigated agriculture will suffer most of all, for the destruction of the forests means the loss of the waters as surely as night follows day. With the rise in the cost of producing food, the cost of food itself will rise. Commerce in general will necessarily be affected by the difficulties of the primary industries upon which it depends. In a word, when the forests fail, the daily life of the average citizen will inevitably feel the pinch on every side. And the forests have already begun to fail, as the direct result of the suicidal policy of forest destruction which the people of the United States have allowed themselves to pursue.

It is true that about twenty per cent of the less valuable timber land in the United States remains in the possession of the people in the National Forests, and that it is being cared for and conserved to supply the needs of the present and to mitigate the suffering of the near future. But it needs no argument to prove that this comparatively small area will be insufficient to meet the demand which is now exhausting an area four times as great, or to prevent the suffering I have described. Measures of greater vigor are imperatively required.

The conception that water is, on the whole, the most important natural resource has gained firm hold in the irrigated West, and is making rapid progress in the humid East. Water, not land, is the primary value in this Western country, and its conservation and use to irrigate land is the first condition of prosperity. The use of our streams for irrigation and for domestic and manufacturing uses is comparatively well developed. Their use for power is less developed, while their use for transportation has only begun. The conservation of the inland waterways of the United States for these great purposes constitutes, perhaps the greatest single task which now confronts the nation. The maintenance and increase of agriculture, the supply of clear water for domestic and manufacturing use, the development of electrical power, transportation, and lighting, and the creation of a system of inland transportation by water whereby to regulate freight rates by rail and to move the bulkier commodities cheaply from place to place, is a task upon whose successful accomplishment the future of the nation depends in a peculiar degree. This is the problem to which the Inland Waterways Commission, recently appointed by President Roosevelt, has begun to address itself.

We are accustomed, and rightly accustomed, to take pride in the vigorous and healthful growth of the United States, and in its vast promise for the future. Yet we are making no preparation to realize what we so easily and glibly foresee and predict. The vast possibilities of our great future will become realities only if we make ourselves, in a sense, responsible for that future. The planned and orderly development and conservation of our natural resources is the first duty of the United States. It is the only form of insurance that will certainly protect us against disasters that lack of foresight has repeatedly brought down on nations since passed away.—Gifford Pinchot, chief of the forest service of the United States, in the New York Outlook, October 12, 1907.

"Just One of the College Girls."

Such a beautiful, crisp, December morning as it was! The air was clear and invigoratingly cool, and the sun shone joyously! It seemed as if all nature had conspired to cheat King Winter out of another day which he might rightfully claim as his!

And in addition to all this,—it was the Sabbath! In quietness and rejoicing, the Saints gathered into the big church,—first for the Sunday-school lesson, and then for the preaching-services which followed.

The vast congregation seemed touched by the gentle joy of the beautiful day, and the hum of quiet conversation died away as the lovely, worshipful notes of the organ voluntary swelled forth. The tones thrilled into the hearts of the people, palpitated, rich and full, about them, and then soared aloft, as if on wings, to join the music of love, praise and adoration, ever best and supremest, which is always about the great white throne.

In the midst of the service I caught sight of a young face near the window; and I well-nigh gasped at the great contrast between that face and the prevailing spirit of the hour. It was gloomy and sad—trouble, anxiety, and desolation seemed plainly stamped upon it. "Who is she?" I whispered to my nearest neighbor.

"Oh, just one of the college girls! She stays out at the dormitory, I think," was the reply.

Oh, that was it, was it? "Just one of the college girls"! I flushed indignantly, and, as I watched the sad face, drooped in sorrow and loneliness, my mind quickly traversed a few short years of my past, and I saw myself once more "just one of the college girls and staying at a dormitory." I saw, as if it were but yesterday, the great bare dining-room, with its fifteen long tables set for ten each. I saw the coarse linen and heavy dishes of the table service. I smelled again the boiled dinners,—the onions, potatoes, beans, and fried mush, served in such an unattractive way that one involuntarily sat "and viewed the landscape o'er," before shutting one's eyes and "going it blind" to get through the necessary ordeal. How tired we grew of the monotony of those meals, with their lack of daintiness, and the many tempting little side things to which we were accustomed! How glad I am that Graceland—our own beloved Graceland—is managed very differently from the one I remember.

Memory took another turn, and pictured for me one dreadful Sabbath there, when my head ached, my throat was sore, my pulses throbbed with fever, and my heart cried out, with all the fervor and desperation of my sixteen summers, for home and mother! O, for one touch of her loving hand, her gentle ministrations, and the tender sympathy of brothers and sisters which I knew would be mine were I but home! How I longed for comfort—yes, for just the mere petting.

Ah! Just then memory turned another page—such a beautiful, wonderful page! My heart yet responds to the surprise and pleasure of that time, and I thank God from my heart, for the good men and women everywhere. For into my cheerless room that afternoon there came a sweet, gentle lady, who seemed like the veriest angel to me. She recognized, at a glance, my desolation and real illness, and took me to her own pretty home. There she put me into a dainty, comfortable wrapper, with warm house slippers for my feet, a pillow for my head, and proceeded to "doctor" me with both skill and tenderness, petting me all the while, even to my hungry heart's content. Can anything ever drive from my grateful memory those merciful, kindly ministrations? The warmth, the cheer, the comfort of that cosy home, the peace and security, the sense of being cared for and protected, are with me to-day, as fresh and strong as when they first surged over, and filled my girlish heart!

I dashed a tear or two from my eyes as I arose with the others to join in the closing hymn; and, as the words of the benediction fell upon my ears, I realized that I had heard but little of the sermon. But, I had been touched with the finger of God's love, in a gentle way, it is true, but one which none the less plainly pointed out to me my duty and my opportunity! And what sermon could do more?

I sought out the young girl and took her home with me for dinner. There I learned that she had indeed much to cause her sorrow and anxiety. Her little sister, so far away at home, was seriously ill, and the family exchequer did not allow of her going home to see the little one, and for four days she had been without word from her.

Add all this to her loneliness, which at the approaching Christmas season seemed all the greater, she felt friendless and desolate indeed. As she warmed and brightened in the friendly atmosphere of our home, I was made to realize as never before, the great, and too often neglected, opportunities which are in our midst, to befriend and comfort these young people, who are so tender and so susceptible to every influence. They come from sheltering arms—strangers in our midst. Are we thinking enough of them? Are we remembering to show little kindnesses to them, as we would that others should show to our own loved sons and daughters?

It would be no great trouble to throw open our homes occasionally to a few of these young people. They are so appreciative of all good and all pleasure that comes their way!

What right have we, anyway, to urge the Saints to send their children here, if we utterly neglect them after they come? They may need just a word or two of advice or counsel, a guiding hand, such as loving parents should ever be ready to extend where needed,—whether to their own or not. Who knows what moment may be the turning point in these young lives? Who knows but that our influence upon them, exerted just then, may send them in the right direction—foiling the tempter, and thus saving a precious one for the fold of the good shepherd? MAY JUNE.

Dear Home Column: It has been a long time since I have taken up any of your space; but for some time I have felt impressed to write regarding our Sunday-schools.

I always have loved the Sunday-school, since I was a child, and love it yet; and always feel it a place where much good can be done for the benefit of the young, and where the principles of the gospel can be taught in their fullness. It has been a long time since they have been taught in our Sunday-schools. Our lessons are from one quarter to the other continuously from the Old Testament, and I feel our time is being thrown away, so far as the gospel is concerned. The very part that they ought to learn is being put to one side, and how are they ever going to learn unless they are taught? Now, we may read the Old Testament to them until they are old and gray, and they will never know what the Lord requires of them in the gospel. They care nothing about how Solomon built his temple, or how David fought his battles; but the quiet, peaceful, gentle life of our blessed Savior is the one thing of all else that will interest them, and one that we all want our children to study and follow as nearly as possible.

When the Quarterlies first came out they were full of the teachings of Christ; and we would read the lessons and would read chapter after chapter to our children, and they would be so interested we could scarcely get them to stop reading to go to bed; and they would be so anxious to continue the reading that I could not get the supper dishes washed before they had the lamps lighted and the books opened, hurrying me up to come and read. But since the lessons changed into the Old Testament I can not get them interested in the lessons. They say they do not care anything about those lessons. Did you ever stop to think it may be the same way in other homes as well? I was talking to one of our Sunday-school teachers a few days ago, and she told me she could not get her class interested in the lessons at all. We know there is something wrong when you can not interest a child, and I hope something may be done to make a change in our Sunday-school lessons before another quarter comes around, and not let the children grow up in ignorance of the teachings and commands of Christ. There are many children who go to Sunday-school, that never hear the gospel taught in their homes; and if they do not hear it taught in Sunday-school, then where and when are they going to learn and know of this glorious gospel? I can not express my real thoughts and desires on paper, as I would like to do to make it plain; but I hope there are others who can, and, if they feel as I do, will take the matter up and see what can be done for the sake of the dear children. Ever praying for the grand success of the Sunday-school, and the onward and upward march of Zion, I remain,

A MOTHER.

PALMS, Michigan, October 10, 1907.

Editors Herald: While reading some of the letters telling of the progress of the work in different parts it did my soul good. In company with Elder George M. Shippy, we have started a series of meetings in the Gleaner Hall, near Richmondville. The interest has been fair, but the weather has not been good. We held forth at Mills about four weeks with good interest and fair crowds. The writer baptized three, and there were many warm friends made to our cause, who, we hope and pray, will soon covenant to serve the God whom we love and trust. Through their influence the Saints here were enabled to secure the free use of the Maccabee Hall at Mills to hold a Harvest Home supper in, Tuesday, October 8. The funds received were thirty-three dollars and eighty cents, which goes to help finish the church of the Delaware Branch.

We are meeting with new experiences to one who has only been in the mission field a short time. My whole desire is that I might have power given me from our Father in heaven to do the work that has been assigned to me to perform, realizing the fact that our strength is in him and in him alone.

The Seventh Day Adventists have been near McGregor, making great claims in support of their work; but, when Bro. Shippy sent a challenge to them to come and prove their claims in debate, they had to reply that they did not have time to debate, also that debating was not profitable. We do not suppose that it would be for them.

We feel very thankful that God has sent his servants in these last days, and that we have come in contact with the beautiful gospel, which we need not be afraid to hold before the world.

The Saints throughout the district, where we have labored, have been very kind, and have cared for us nobly.

We feel that the Sunday-school work is on the increase in this district. I feel sorry that I have not been able to visit more of the schools than I have; but our work along missionary lines keeps our hands tied most of the time. We find many Saints who seem to be sleeping, and are not alive to their duty. We have many calls for help, and many calls for preaching; if the church only had the means to send out more men to care for the needs of the work.

I hope I shall be supported by the prayers of the Saints. Praying for the welfare of Zion, I am, as ever,

Your brother in the gospel bonds,

Dear Herald: It is now a year since I gave obedience to the gospel that you send forth weekly to the world, and it has been the happiest year of my life. Although at times I stumble, my desire is to take a firmer footing until I gain that state of perfection that I will be counted worthy to stand when Christ shall come to claim his own.

The Saints here were disappointed at not having a missionary sent to this part of the field, for which there is pressing and ever-increasing need; but truly the harvest is great and the laborers are few.

The Utah elders are gaining ground here. They have a hall not far from where we have our meetings. They tell people we are apostates from them. The Saints here have started a building fund, and I hope it will be one of the many things that has a small beginning and a good ending.

I am sending money for renewal of HERALD that we delight in reading and then hand around to our friends, that they may be able to find the straight and narrow way wherein we must tread to attain the celestial glory. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion,

Your sister in gospel bonds,

E. ROBINSON.

Editors Herald: I believe that we as a church are making rapid strides to higher conditions. I think I can see signs of improvement all along the line. That was a splendid move by the Eastern reunion in providing normal work for the local ministry. This should be followed up by the various district conferences and other gatherings, wherever opportunity affords, to aid our local brethren in securing an education along spiritual lines, so difficult for them to attain unaided.

I notice two excellent resolutions passed by the Independence Stake conference. One making it necessary for branches to grant letters of removal to those requesting the same, or proceed to deal with them as the law requires. The other, that no minister shall have to remain under silence more than thirty days without trial or a chance to vindicate himself. These rules should obtain in all parts of the church.

I am glad, too, that one brother has sprung the question as to who should preside at a district conference. One can but admire the good spirit and frank and open manner with which he deals with the question. The most good must result, if this matter is to be discussed, and no doubt it will be. We trust that all who enter into the controversy will avoid personalities and impugning motives. The great question is, What is right? I believe that the local brethren are just as anxious to know what is right and to have this matter settled as any other men or class of men. But as some one has said,

"No question is ever settled,
Until it is settled right."

In reading the brother's letter, there were some questions that presented themselves to our mind, which we hope some may be able to answer. First, Why is it that this matter of who shall preside is limited to district conferences? If the views of the First Presidency have been rightly interpreted by the brother, where they say that the traveling presiding council has the active supervision and presidency, under the First Presidency, over the entire field of ministerial labor, and control over districts, branches, and the ministry as a whole and as a church organization, why not apply the same rule to all the different organizations in the church, such as branches, quorums, conventions, Sunday-school and Religio? Have they no control over any of these? If they have, under the same rule, why do they not claim the right to preside in all of these organizations?

Second, What is it to regard and consider these men "as the leading representative authorities of the church"? Does that mean that they shall preside over every assembly when they shall be present? If so, what does the Lord mean when he says, "In both branches and districts the presiding officers should be considered and respected in their offices"?

In all organizations, so far as we know, among the first duties of the president, is that of presiding. The Lord has said that a district may be presided over by a high priest or elder. Under certain conditions the lesser officers may preside over branches, and a priest may take the lead of meetings when there is no elder present. If the Lord had said that a high priest could take the lead of meetings when there was no apostle present, all would have been clear, but as he has not so stated, some question the matter.

If an apostle is to preside over local organizations, or conferences, why did the Lord specify "the quorums in respect to authority are designed to take precedence in office as follows: The presidency, the twelve, the seventy in all meetings and gatherings of the membership, where no previous organization has been effected." Why this reference to "no previous organization" if they are to take the lead in all meetings? But he explains further, "Where organization has been arranged and the officers have been ordained and set in order; the standing ministry in their order; high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons."—Doctrine and Covenants 122:9.

But is it true that an apostle is hindered in his work as an apostle when he does not occupy the chair? In some assemblies when they want to tie a man's hands, so to speak, they place him in the chair. When the writer was in charge in England, he was nearly always requested to preside when present at a district conference, but always declined in favor of the district president, and never took his place excepting when urged to do so for some special reason by those in charge of the district. I did this because I believed I could do the work required of me better by sitting beside the presiding officer, than if I had been in his place. I remember at one conference where I was prevailed upon to preside, and they were about to adopt a measure that I knew to be wrong, I was glad enough to yield the chair, in order that I might prevent a wrong measure from being passed. I succeeded, as I never could have done, had I been in the chair.

The brother's reference to what occurs in the army or navy is rather against his position. When an officer of higher rank appears upon an active field, at no time does he take the place of the lesser officer. It would be humiliating to both the captain of a company and to the colonel of the regiment, if the colonel should dismount from his horse and make the captain stand aside, while he presumed to command the company. Instead of this, whatever commands he has for the company, he delivers to the captain, or whoever is in command of the company, and not until that company with others are formed into a batallion does he take command.

Some of us can not see why the same rule will not work in the church. We all recognize the fact that an apostle is a leading officer of the entire church, and when he is present in conference and sitting on the platform or off, in a sense he is presiding not only over the body, but also over the one who may be in the chair. So that if the chairman goes wrong, he has the right to correct him. And that, too, without "butting in." The law gives him that right.

Of course there is a great deal that can be said upon this subject. These are a few of the thoughts that present themselves to my mind that cause me to see a little differently from my brother, but if I am wrong, I shall be only too glad to be set right. It is just possible that in this matter, extreme ground has been taken on both sides. If so, let us hope that through this discussion a happy medium may be reached that will be right, that all may work together in harmony and love. But let us leave out all reference to "love of preëminence." That has nothing to do with it. It is simply a question as to what is right. Settle that, and the rest is easy.

Dear Herald: We moved here that we might have the associations of God's people. There is a fine band of Saints here who are trying to do the will of the Master, and to let their light shine as people of God. I feel it a blessing as well as a pleasure to be numbered among this class of people, never before having had the opportunity to live where there was a branch.

I thank the Lord for the gospel which has been restored in these last days, and for the knowledge that I am worshipping an unchangeable God. And I pray that all who have obeyed the gospel may stand firm until the end.

This world's pleasure is no comparison to the joy we will have in the world to come, if we continue true and faithful to our God. Hoping and praying for the success of all God's people,

Your brother in bonds,

Z. M. SANTEE.

Editors Herald: We are here accompanied by Bro. Sheldon, and in our feeble way are trying to hold up the banner of truth, and display its grandeur and beauty. The stormy weather has hindered us some since we have been here, but hope to have it better now for a while, since it has cleared up again.

We have the use of the Methodist church here, and our audience averages about twenty, so we are battling away the best we know how, and have succeeded in getting some to renew the interest that was manifested last year when Bro. Chase and the writer were here, and also later in the season when Chase was here alone, and the people have not forgotten him yet, even Mr. Magleby.

We have found a home with Mr. Jukes, who is in sentiment a Latter Day Saint, but has not yet become one in name; but hope to see the day when not only he but a number who are investigating will be. The work in this part seems to be more promising than any other part that we have visited for some time; it seems that there are disciples here.

We hope that the interest will continue to grow and the work be looked after not only in this part of the State but elsewhere, as well, where work has been done and interest shown.

Your brother in bonds,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

Editors Herald: We are getting along quietly here in the "West," no great show of increase; but we are making many friends and are hoping soon to see some gathered into the net. The officers hold forth on the street regularly every Sunday evening to fair crowds, but the people generally seem indifferent; not anxious for the truth.

This is a great place for street-preaching. On nearly every corner there are different sects holding forth, and in some instances as soon as one lot finishes, another steps in, hence the indifference—people bewildered. The branch decided at the last meeting to "sanction and give its practical support to a bi-weekly paper, published in the interests of the kingdom of God, and the spread of light and truth in Western Australia." We have everything arranged, and expect to bring out the first issue of the Gospel Messenger on the 9th inst. It is intended to issue five hundred copies, supported by subscriptions and advertisements, and use same as tracts.

The Utah folks have been very busy tracting here and have gained several converts. They are keeping them "covered," but we hope to get on their tracks. We expect to be able to follow up with the papers. The Utah elders will not stand now when faced in the street, and open debate is out of the question. They say Bro. Joseph counseled against "contentions." So he did, but not in the sense they would like to have it read.

Bro. Davies, the branch priest, whose employment takes him over a considerable portion of this State, reports three ready for baptism at Busselton, about one hundred and eighty miles from here, with much interest in other towns. The brother does not neglect many opportunities for presenting the truth, and at Boyanup a gentleman who has become interested in the gospel as presented by Bro. Davies, has offered to pay for a hall in which he might preach when next he goes that way. Offer gladly accepted.

We could do well with a missionary here. Several warm-hearted Saints with open houses could find room for one. We have only had two flying visits from missionaries since we started to meet in the "West," Brn. Hanson and C. A. Butterworth favoring us with one month each.

Now I desire to write somewhat on that discussed chapter, the thirteenth of Revelation, and in doing so I want to declare from the start that I do not profess to know it all. I realize that every one can be deceived, and can err; but I have felt strongly that I should write, and if the matter as presented proves of assistance to any one, I shall be satisfied. It was not with "knowledge puffed up" I went into the matter. I had a reason.

One Sunday evening recently when the officers of the branch were holding forth on the street, they were subjected to interruption and criticism by one Bervy Cass, a street-preacher well known in this city. Among his many objections to the work was the one that the fourteenth chapter and sixth verse of Revelation had not yet been fulfilled, as events recorded in the thirteenth chapter had yet to transpire. Mr. Cass contended that the anti-Christ portrayed in the thirteenth chapter from the eleventh verse to the eighteenth verse had not yet appeared, that this anti-Christ was a man, and that no man had yet done these miracles, etc. Now, in the debate which followed, he was forced to admit that as the woman in the twelfth represented a system, and since "things equal to the same thing are equal to one another," the man in the thirteenth would represent a system also; while it was admitted that apostasy had set in and a restoration was foretold. Mr. Cass, on the police stopping the discussion, went away protesting that no man had yet been able to tell (explain) the number of the beast, and that he was not yet come.

This number puzzled me. I had seen many attempted solutions of it, but had never been satisfied with them. It concerned our work, and I felt that our heavenly Father would, if I asked in faith, nothing wavering, give to me that wisdom which I desired, so I asked in harmony with the advice of James 1: 5 that he would give me the interpretation of the number and clear my mind with regard to the beast.

Rising from my knees, still pondering over this matter, I reached to my books that I might read before retiring. The Compendium of Faith and Doctrine happened to be nearest and I took it up. As I did so I opened at page 237 of the historical appendix, and my eyes lighted on the paragraph devoted to the epitome of the thirteenth century events. There I found recorded: "What was known as the Holy Inquisition was established in this century by Innocent III and Gregory IX; that is, men were sent out as inquisitors to discover and bring to judgment those accused of heresy. This beginning resulted in the dreadful tribunal called the Inquisition."

"Two orders of mendicant monks had their beginning in this century, the Franciscans and the Dominicans. In the hands of the pope they became the power, the mainspring of the Inquisition, and the author of its terrors."

The thought flashed to my mind, here is the key to the whole situation. This beast as recorded in the thirteenth chapter and eleventh verse had two horns (power, authority,) like a lamb, yet spake as a dragon. These two orders of monks professed to be ministers of, having power, and authority from, the Lamb of God, yet their speech and their actions were those of the dragon, the Devil (see Revelation 12: 9). These two orders then, represented the horns of the beast which clearly seems to be the Inquisition. "And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them that dwell therein to worship the first beast whose deadly wound was healed." (Revelation 13: 12.) Here this combination of monks and Inquisition is represented as trying to cause the world to worship the Devil as represented by the Roman apostasy, not seeking, mind, to be honored himself; and I think we all know sufficient of the Inquisition to know what its objects were. Now it is generally admitted that the beast of the first verse of the chapter under consideration with its seven heads, i. e., hills, is Rome, and the ten horns, kingdoms (powers) who gave their allegiance to Rome. This kingdom has been enumerated as follows: The Huns, Ostrogoths, Visigoths, Franks, Vandals, Suevi, Burgundians, Heruli, Anglo-Saxons, and Lombards.

Power was given this beast to continue forty and two months, fifth verse. If we take these months as prophetic months of days, averaging thirty days to each month, we get the number twelve hundred and sixty. This equals the number in the sixth verse of the preceding (twelfth) chapter, which number was the period of time the woman, the bride of Christ, was to remain in the wilderness, so the two clearly run concurrent; and taking 360, the only number which will go equally three and a half times into 1260 we find we have good cause to believe that we harmonize with the fourteenth verse of this twelfth chapter.

But we set out to find the number of the beast. We Latter Day Saints claim that the restoration of the primitive church authority took place when Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery had the commission given them by John the Baptist, the church being organized shortly afterward. Now if we go back 1260 years from the year 1829 we find ourselves at 569 A. D. This then appears to be the time when the complete apostasy took place, when the Lord completely withdrew his Spirit from the children of men. The number of the second beast spoken of in the thirteenth chapter is 666, and if we add that number to 569 it brings us to the year 1235. Now I could see that this was in the very century in which the Inquisition was founded, and it was just a question of fixing the year and the solution would, to me at least, be plain. But I had no histories, so I decided to look up the dates at the public library. A few days afterwards Bro. Hurley called on me and I communicated my thoughts to him and asked him to accompany me to the library. Bro. Hurley asked, "Have you an encyclopædia?" I answered, "No;" but it occurred to me that my Webster might solve the problem. Turning to "Inquisition" I found in the explanatory note the following: "R. C. Ch. A court or tribunal for the examination and punishment of heretics fully established by Pope Gregory the IX in 1235. Its operations were chiefly confined to Spain, Portugal, and their dependencies, and a part of Italy." I tell you there were two delighted young men in the room when we read that, for did it not seem like an answer to prayer? I have since verified the above dates, also the two orders of monks from Mosheim.

On pages 234 and 235, book 3 of Mosheim's Church History we read: "As this new class of functionaries, the inquisitors, performed effectually the duties assigned them, and purged the provinces in which they labored of numerous heretics, similar papal legates were stationed in nearly all cities, whose inhabitants were suspected, notwithstanding opposition from the people, who often either expelled or massacred the Inquisitors."

"The council of Toulouse in which Romanus, Cardinal of St. Angelo, presided as pontifical legate A. D. 1229, proceeded still further; for it ordered the establishment of a board of Inquisitors in each city, composed of one priest and three laymen. But Gregory the IX altered the institution in the year 1233 and conferred on the preaching friars or Dominicans the Inquisition for heresy in France, and by a formal bull freed the bishops from that duty."

"From this period we are to date the commencement of the dreadful tribunal of the Inquisition which in this and the following centuries subdued such hosts of heretics, either by forcing men back to the church or by committing them to the temporal authorities to be burned."

And thus we can see how that professing to have authority to act in the name of heaven, they caused fire, as it were, to come down from heaven in the sight of men (twelfth chapter and thirteenth verse). The beast, whose deadly wound was healed, Satan, received his deadly wound when Christ rose triumphant from the grave and shed forth his spirit, power, and authority upon the children of men; as it is written, "The seed of the woman shall bruise his head." Satan's wound was healed when the apostasy set in, when Christ withdrew his Spirit from the earth. The two heads may mean his two periods, before and after Christ.

Since starting this letter we have succeeded in bringing out the paper, the Gospel Messenger, and we rather like its appearance. We trust the blessing of God will be with it and every other effort made to further the interests of his kingdom.

Yours in the one faith,

GEORGE W. MILLARD.

KINGSTON, Missouri, October 15, 1907.

Editors Herald: I wish to relate a little circumstance that occurred on Sunday, October 13. First will state, having been transferred to the Far West District, my first work brought me to Kingston to labor with F. C. Keck, at a schoolhouse about three and one half miles from town. I continued meetings there one week after Bro. Keck left, then commenced meeting in Kingston at the Saints' church, in which we still hold forth with good interest.

On Tuesday, the 8th, in company with Elder W. P. Pickering and Bro. Ackerly, the latter furnishing the conveyance, we took a trip to the old historic spot, Haun's Mill, now known as Marshal's Mill, which stands about one half mile down stream from the old mill, as I had this place in mind to go and open the work there. I gathered many relics from the old place, such as some pieces of wood off the old mill-dam, some pieces off one of the mill-stones, a piece of a stump which stands about ten feet from the well where the Saints were buried, and some odd pieces of iron from the blacksmith shop, where the two little boys were shot. There are no signs of the buildings; the place is a corn-field now. There is living across the road from this field a Mr. John McLallen, who piloted us over the old grounds; a very fine old gentleman, who moved there in the 40's. After having a good friendly talk, we made arrangements for a basket dinner at his place, and to preach a couple of sermons on the following Sunday.

In walking over the grounds, the words of the Master, revealed through the Palmyra Seer, that if his children were faithful they should return, with songs of everlasting joy, to build up the waste places of Zion, came to me; and seeing this being accomplished in so many different places, the thought came that this will come in its turn. Well, Sunday came, arrangements being made, with baskets well niled, at seven o'clock twenty-six of the Saints were on their way to the historic spot, a distance of about fifteen miles, with a good supply of Hymnals, and one four-horse team hitched to a hack carrying thirteen passengers. And the songs of Zion could be heard all along the way. We arrived at Mr. McLallen's at half past nine. The day was beautiful, the sun shining clear and bright. Our minds reverted back to October 30, 1838, as the sun had risen clear and all was quiet except the water rushing over the mill-dam, when the charge of the infuriated mob was made upon the Saints; causing conditions to be as they are to-day.

Seats were arranged in the yard, and, at about eleven o'clock, service began, Bro. Pickering being the first speaker (giving them a brief history of the church), and Bro. A. R. Daniel, of Cameron, Missouri, being the second speaker. A minister by the name of Butterfield, of the Christian Union faith, was invited to the stand, he making a short talk on all churches being united in one. Tables were spread about half past twelve, fifty-three persons taking dinner with us, and there were several baskets full taken up. Immediately after dinner we repaired to the water, the writer having the pleasure of leading one precious soul into the watery grave to rise in newness of life. The scene was solemn, and we were made to rejoice in seeing the fulfillment of the promise of the Lord that his children should return to build up the waste places. A sweet influence passed from heart to heart of the Saints. At the two o'clock services the one baptized was confirmed. The writer gave a short explanation of the laying on of hands. About one hundred were present. Bro. Pickering was introduced as the first speaker, followed by the writer with short talk on the difference between the people of Utah and of the Reorganization, and a short gospel sermon. We closed with a goodly feeling, with strong invitations to return. We hope to have the privilege of returning and occupying there.

There was one man who stayed at the barn, and would not come to the services. Said that he was in the mob that drove the Mormons out of there. He was not over forty-five years old, so we just concluded that it was barnyard gossip.

Hopefully yours,

W. P. BOOTMAN.

DES MOINES, Iowa, October 17, 1907.

Editors Herald: Desiring to be a giver as well as a receiver, and having received so much of good from our church paper, the HERALD, I undertake the task of giving a few thoughts of timely interest, as well as a brief account of some experiences that I trust may be of value to some.

The missionary efforts in the city this summer have not been very flattering. Several proposed plans have been disposed of by conditions that neither the missionary nor the combined efforts of the active workers in the city could counteract. We had thought to make use of a missionary wagon, and one was purchased for that purpose, but we had no team, and after trying at various places and in various ways to secure what we thought would be necessary in the way of heavy shafts, and the privilege of the use of a horse, we had to abandon this project for reasons too numerous to mention. But we secured the use of a conveyance from one of the brethren that we made use of to begin our street-work; but after trying under somewhat adverse conditions of weather and multitudes of mosquitoes, we were compelled to close this effort. The people claimed that they could not endure the mosquitoes. We left several investigating, and hope to hear good results from the labor; although if we do not, we trust others may see results in days to come. During the service the Saints, or a few of them, did some good work, and assisted what they could, for which may the heavenly Father reward them. Several times during this summer I have been called to minister in funeral-services, several of whom have not been members of the church, and in each instance I have heard very favorable comment upon the doctrines of the church, and some have been led to investigate as a result. In one or two places, there came a request for services resulting from these funeral-services. At one place where I held a funeral-service, and only gave a short talk at the grave, quite an interest exists, and I have sent several tracts and have done some correspondence. This was at Buckeye, where Mr. Ferma Taylor, and Sr. Ivy Taylor laid their first-born to rest. I was taken to the cemetery in the conveyance of one of the grain buyers, and in conversation with him found that two of the Brighamite elders had been preaching on the streets, and had been entertained by the druggist of the town, a very hospitable man, they telling him that they did not believe in polygamy. I called on him, and by inquiry secured one of the tracts they had left with him, and in a conversation with himself and wife convinced them that they did believe in what anybody besides Brighamites would call polygamy, the leading men of the church living with more women than one and claiming them to be wives and raising children by them. They certainly practice something, and this practice all grows out of polygamy; for had there never been anything like polygamy practiced, even according to their views, there could not be the same practices going on there as are now being practiced, and they making the same plea they now do. I learn that the result of my visit caused them to discontinue their preaching on the streets, but now the people desire to know more, and I am trying to supply to them the information.

I attended the Rhodes reunion, which though not largely attended was a spiritual feast. The preaching was excellent, and practical, and the Saints and friends in attendance seemed to appreciate these efforts very much. The patriarchal labors of Bro. C. E. Butterworth were very much appreciated. Several sessions of normal class work were held and some interest was shown on the part of the few who were privileged to be present. A unanimous decision was rendered that another reunion be held, and a committee appointed in whose hands the arrangements for it were left. This district has a district reunion association, which, were it more perfectly understood, would supply the necessary funds to pay all expenses without taking up any collections at the reunion, and it would equalize the expense among the Saints of the district, and be but a slight expense to any.

I was also accorded the privilege of attending the Moorhead reunion, and assisting those whom I have labored with in years past, some while they were not in the church, but have since entered, and others whom I baptized and who have since my departure therefrom grown up to be excellent workers in the vineyard of the Lord. The preaching at this reunion was of a high order. Very little if any theorizing was done. The sermons were of the practical character that is so needful in this day of indifference and worldliness. I found that the normal class work in this part had not taken the advanced steps that it had in the Des Moines District, but I found that there was a great interest taken in all the work done along that line, and several entered at once into the study of the normal lessons. The work of Bro. J. A. Gunsolley was truly of great value to the Sunday-school and Religio departments of the church. I enjoyed my associations with the Saints at the reunion, although I was unwell nearly all the time I was there. I had been sick a week before leaving home, some of the time not able to be out of bed, but most of the time trying to be doing something even when suffering. There is no real enjoyment to me except in active service, and the more that I can see done that is in harmony with the law of God the better I enjoy life, even though I do not see the results which I would like to.

After the reunion, I visited and ministered at Magnolia, Woodbine, and Dow City. At Magnolia I had an excellent visit with Bro. Alma Fyrand, and believe that but few have passed through as many peculiar experiences under the hand of affliction as has he, and yet he keeps cheerful most of the time, and is growing stronger physically. I can see no reason why he will not in time be delivered from the bondage of affliction, and since my visit feel more hopeful than before, if that be possible. At Woodbine I enjoyed visiting and receiving words of encouragement from Father Derry, whose ministrations are remembered by me to have taken the deepest effect of any of the early elders whom I heard preach. I found Bro. Hawley about the same, and cheerful under his severe affliction, and Sr. Hawley, with all her great burden uncomplainingly trying to cheerfully carry these burdens. At Dow City I fulfilled my longed-for visit with Bro. Romanan Wight, and feel that he is truly worthy of special favors from our heavenly Father. A spirit of calm resignation to his trial is prominent, though he anxiously desires to be about his Father's business. Truly I enjoyed visiting old friends and hearing of their faith in God, as I did while on my journey in Western Iowa.

Since returning I have opened up a new place at Enterprise, where I was accorded the best of attention, and experienced that which has never been my lot in the thirty years of my ministerial work, and that was to have to preach to a congregation of about equal numbers of white and colored people. I was never shown more respect, or attention in all my life. One has given her name for baptism, and I just learn that she intends to come to the city to be baptized next Sunday. Several expressed regrets that I was not to remain longer, but I felt that I was needed at my home, and returned to find my wife sick, and had been for two days, but is better at this writing, so that she is about her daily avocation again, yet suffering some. I left an assurance of my return in the near future. There was a tent-missionary effort going on there all the time I was there. I will return when it is cooler, and when we have nothing of this kind to contend against. I am assured that there are others there near the kingdom.

We expect to begin a series of meetings at the points that we have previously occupied in this mission, and there is an invitation to open the work at Norwoodville, where I was called to administer to a miner who had met with a serious accident, and who was speedily helped. This has caused some desire for preaching. I anticipate going there next week, the Lord willing.

While the efforts put forth have not been all that I wish could have been done, yet I feel that all has been done that I had strength to do under the circumstances, and from God and the result of seed previously sown by some one, have resulted in baptisms in the city about every two or three weeks, and in several other ways the results have been very satisfactory, the most satisfactory year since coming to the city mission. Yet, with all this, some are not satisfied, and no wonder: the more we see to do the more we wish to see done, even when we have not the means or ability to do it. I hope to see even better results as the months pass by, and the opportunities for doing so numerous that everybody will be occupied without having any time to find fault with their associate laborers, all being busy, studying to know how best to work together with God for the furtherance of the great work in which we are engaged.

The branch officials are doing commendable labor, and good is resulting. They are all laboring men, all in debt financially, and yet with all these hindrances their work is felt for good by all who are willing to, in a humble way, support them in whatever efforts they are permitted under divine guidance to put forth.

The branch officials, like the missionary, would be much better satisfied if they had more time and means to do the work assigned them. The prayer is continually on our lips to send more laborers into the vineyard. Bro. Thomas Cook has returned from Oakland, California, and we feel that the Lord is answering this longing.

I desire to keep humble, and do all that my hands find to do that will be a help to others; but pray that I may do nothing that will be a hindrance to a single soul.

May God bless all the laborers for Zion, whether it be in temporal or spiritual efforts.

Editors Herald: I will for the first time write to our valuable paper to let the Saints in America know of our doings in this far away country. In company with Bro. Swen Swenson I arrived in this land on the 24th of June, 1906. We began our work in the city of Gothenburg, as some work had been done there by John H. Hansen. Quite a few members of the Utah church were convinced that this was really the true gospel and church established by the latter-day prophet; and through the earnest work of the before-mentioned brother, they were made to rejoice in the glorious gospel of our Lord. One of them, an old sister, said: "I have now been a member of that church for forty years, have been living and have struggled for what I thought to be the church of God, and when my lifetime was soon to be ended I had the privilege of hearing the plain teachings of one of God's servants, and to feel the power of God." None of them were rich in this world's goods, but rich in the Spirit; and they tried to do all that they could for the cause, and for the building up of God's church on earth. We enjoyed many good spiritual meetings in their company, which will always be remembered by me.

I labored in that city all winter. In the spring I started for the middle part of Sweden, round about Stockholm, which was my former home, or the place where I was born. Here I met Bro. Oscar Okerlind. He had just arrived here from America. We then went together to the city of Eskilstuna, which place we intend to have as our stopping place. Bro. Okerlind is well acquainted there, as he had been there laboring as a missionary for the Utah church for two years. The warning from Utah was here ahead of us, that they (the Mormon people) should not listen to us because we were apostates and had fallen from the faith; but the warning worked the wrong way. It was for our good. It made the people think for themselves a little. A few of them are interested, and we hope they will be with us in the near future. We have lately been out to a place called Skottvang; that is the place where Sr. Hanna Johnson and her folks live. We preached a few times while there and had a good turnout. Sr. Johnson will be a good help to us by the way of playing and singing. She will also do some good by conversation and talking to the people in that community.

My health has not been the best since coming here. Seems that the climate does not agree with me, being very damp. I have been troubled with throat catarrh the greater part of the time; but I am getting better now. Food is very high here, and we have to buy nearly every meal, as we have no members here to help along. It also takes a good deal for renting of halls to preach in, so we will say to our American Saints, and especially the Scandinavians who feel and have a desire to see this mission move forward, that if you have a dollar to spare, and you feel like you would like to help us a little for the spreading of this glorious gospel to those that are in darkness, it will be gladly accepted.

May we all work together for this great and marvelous work of God, that the blessing of the Lord may be ours in this life, and eternal life in the world to come.

Your brother in the one faith,

DAVID G. LUNDQUIST.

Editors Herald: I see by some of the writers to the HERALD that it is the duty of the missionaries to write letters to the HERALD. If that be true, then I beg pardon for my negligence, and will write now. After the Rhodes reunion, I went to Marshalltown and preached in a private house, and baptized a young lady. Then I intended to hold meetings three or four miles south of town in a schoolhouse, where Elders Thorburn and Christy opened up about a year ago, but it was in threshing time, I was advised not to try it till later on. Visited some of the isolated Saints and encouraged and instructed them. Called on the Saints in the Richland Branch. That used to be my old home branch, but, oh, what a change since I was there last! Elder C. E. Hand, the old stand-by, had sold his farm, and was getting ready to move to Holden, Missouri. Also his son William and family, Philip Shimmel and family, and his son Jesse and family, and others. That leaves the branch broken up. I preached my first sermon in their schoolhouse more than twenty-six years ago, and the house was so crowded that one could hardly turn. The Saints had held, as they supposed, their last meeting the Sunday before I got there; but when I got among them they wanted me to preach for them once more. So they got out an appointment for Sunday afternoon, and, instead of having the house crowded full, as it was at my first sermon, there were one or two outsiders there; and I think I am safe in saying that I preached the last Latter Day Saint sermon in that house that will ever be preached there. For the members of the church of Revelation 17 have taken that whole neighborhood, with a few exceptions, and they want no gospel. A feeling of sadness came over me when I saw the change there. The Holden Saints will get a good addition from the Richland Branch.

After that I went back to Marshalltown to try preaching in the schoolhouse south of town; but it set in raining, and the roads got so muddy, and as I was stopping in town, and had to go six miles or more every night to meeting and back, it was a little too much for me, so I did not stay long. When a man gets into his sixty-sixth year, he can not stand the fatigue that he could twenty-five years before. That is my experience at least.

From there I went to Colo to visit some more isolated Saints. They are not dead by any means; for as soon as I got there Bro. Henry Dewey got the use of the Christian church for me to occupy. The crowd was not very large, yet there were only two or three less there than attended their own meeting on Sunday night, and they all paid good attention. One of the leaders of their church, after the meetings closed, said that I preached the truth, but he would never join a church that would not allow their members to commune with other churches. See, how we miss it? We used the house over two Sundays, and on the last Sunday I organized a Sunday-school and a Religio. Bro. and Sr. Henry Dewey and two children, Bro. and Sr. Frank Lhommeieu and four children, and Grandma Belt are the Saints there. Three of the children are quite young yet; but here is an example worthy of emulation. After they were organized in school and Religio, the next thing was to get supplies. They took up a collection for books and supplies, and it was twelve dollars and fifty-three cents, besides a dollar and a half for the HERALD for Sr. Belt. That is what can be called GRIT or ZEAL. May the Lord bless them.

From there I came to Nevada. I had but just landed, when our energetic brother, W. C. Hidy, started out to get the hall which we used to occupy, for me to preach in. But the man said, "No, sir, you can not use it." But, as usual, Sr. W. C. Hidy invited us to use her house, also Mr. and Mrs. Pool said their house was open if we wanted to use it. I began meetings at Bro. and Sr. Hidy's at once, with a fine crowd, and splendid interest. I was there about a week. About ten or more are just on the water's edge, but, as some said to me, they did not know what they were waiting on.

I fear that some of them will wait too long, so that the Spirit will leave them. I closed the meeting last night with a sermon of an hour and three quarters, with good attention and interest, and "Come again, soon."

I received a few letters of criticism on my article in the HERALD, "Meditations," and I am truly glad to say that the criticisms were written in a Christ-like spirit, with the exception of one, and that one is quite raspy in places. One brother says that he thinks my ideas or intentions were all right, but that I did not use the correct words to convey my thought. And that may be true; for when we examine the "King's English," it is indeed a wonder that we get sense at all out of some of the words used, when comparing them with words used in some other tongues. For instance, in Luke 14: 23, we read: "Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled." Webster says: "Compel, to drive by force. To necessitate." I have seen considerable coaxing done, more than I thought should be done, to get some to come in. But if we are to go out and take them by main force, or violence, and bring them in, I want to be excused. But when I take Luther's translation on that, it does not sound quite so inconsistent. He says, "Nathega sea heraine zu komman." There is not one word in that which can be construed to mean or even hint at the thought of "compelling them to come in." No, brethren, I would not for anything in this world advance anything to injure this church, much less to throw discredit on our heavenly Father. One brother says, "I can not defend some of the positions you take in your article." Well, I was not aware that I took any position. And I am really sorry that some have so understood me. I was not aware that if one asked questions, that he must affirm those questions when answered by some one, and defend them; for I am sure that I had no such intention. I asked some of those questions to show to what extreme some will go. And a number of them, yes, all of these that are objected to, have been handed to me to answer from the pulpit. Take for instance the twenty-third one; "If men are totally depraved, must not children be so also?" You will notice, that it is based upon the "if," not that I believe that for a moment. But we all know that some make that claim, and upon that claim, the question is based. Also the 27th: "If belief and good works are essential to salvation, how can infants be saved?" The intention there is, to draw out the thought that God has provided for their salvation, etc., etc. One man sent me a bunch of tracts to prove without a doubt (?) that the whole church, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and, in short, all is false. Well, it caused some to get down their old Bibles and look them over, at least. No, brethren, I do not want you to defend anything in those questions that is extreme; for I did not ask them for that purpose, only to show the extreme on the other side; for I do not propose to defend the answers that would be given to some of them myself. So I hope that with this explanation I am better understood. I do not believe that God will save any man unless he wants to be saved, and complies with the law of salvation. You will find my position fully defined on that subject in my reply to Mr. Welton, as published by Glad Tidings in tract form. I am truly thankful to those who wrote me, that their criticisms were so mild, and seasoned with the Spirit of Christ. Thank you for the criticism; and hope that this explanation will be satisfactory to all. I may reply by letter to the outsider, who sent me the tracts; for he gets too loud in his condemnation of ALL that we hold sacred. May God bless the right and truth to all.

J. S. ROTH.

YALE, Oklahoma, September 9, 1907.

Dear Herald: In your last issue I see quite a lengthy letter from Bro. I. N. White, giving an account of his travels, and his experiences in missionary work in Oklahoma. He and his "boys" certainly had a lively time at Morrison with the preachers, a thing for which Bro. Isaac has a peculiar faculty. All along we watched, and labored with more than usual anxiety, the coming of the annual Eastern Oklahoma reunion (held at Ripley this year), because we were notified that I. N. and Ammon were going to be there. I am now in my forty-sixth year. Counting back, I have known the Whites since I was sixteen years old, first at Newton, Iowa. My wife, then Fannie Shellhart, was baptized about the time Bro. Isaac was, and by old Bro. Gordon E. Deuel. She tossed Ammon some when he was yet in long dresses, and language fails me to express how sorry we were when we drove up to the camp-ground and looked in vain for that old soldier of the cross and his boy. Fanny wanted to hear that baby preach, and we both had a desire to once more clasp hands with an apostle of the Lamb, whom you might say we have personally known and watched the greater part of a lifetime.

Well, we enjoyed the reunion while there, listening to good, spiritual, scriptural sermons by Brn. Aylor, Case, Maloney, and Yates, and to the hymns and prayers and testimonies of the Saints, and renewing acquaintances and making new ones; but we were disappointed in not seeing I. N. and his boy. May be it was for a lesson. We will try next year to attend more of the time. We live about twenty-three miles northeast of Ripley, and there is but one family of Saints nearer than twelve miles. People here are mostly Methodists, Baptists, Campbellites, Advents, Freemasons, Oddfellows, Woodmen, K. Ps., Knights and Ladies of Security, W. O. W., A. H. T. A., etc.; so they think they have enough and don't care to take any more. I occasionally discuss religion with them, and of course reject their creeds, and they accuse me of being so stuck on my church. I do not deny the charge, but ask if they are not troubled a little with the disease they accuse me of having, when they refuse to go forty rods to hear a Latter Day Saint preach, while we frequently go to hear others preach. I loaned the Christian pastor at Quay the tract, "The old Jerusalem gospel," also "Latter Day Saints, Who are they?" In due time he informed me that he had read sufficient to satisfy himself that he did not need or have time to investigate every claim made by everybody, but afterwards he thought it convenient to put Joseph Smith and Brigham Young in the same class, comparing their wickedness and polygamous sins to David's and Solomon's. I asked him if he was not a little reckless in the pulpit with his comparisons of men, for a man who was supposed to know what he was talking about; told him we stoutly objected to Joseph Smith being put in the class with Brigham Young; and that there was no excuse for him doing so when literature that would inform him to the contrary was so easily obtained; and that a man of his position ought to know the subject he was talking about, or else not talk; that he misrepresented Joseph Smith and our religion in public; and that if he wanted to do right he would correct his errors in public. He acknowledged he perhaps had done wrong, and that I had good ground for complaint, and agreed to make amends the best he could, and I guess he did do the best he could the next time he preached at Quay; but it was rather a weak effort in defense of Joseph Smith against the charge of practicing polygamy. If he had read, "Latter Day Saints, Who are they?" there would have been no need of his making the blunder. This minister's name is Charles Smoots, address, Cushing, Oklahoma. I told him the church founded by Joseph Smith never taught polygamy. Smith had been accused of it, but up to date there was no evidence that would pass muster in the court to sustain the accusation; while on the other hand we had the best evidence in the world to prove his innocence. He took address of Herald Publishing House, and said he was going to send for the Doctrine and Covenants.

Yours for the right and truth,

O. E. COINER.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, October 16, 1907.

Editors Herald: I believe I have not burdened your pages by frequency, and would like a little space to tell my Eastern friends I am still living. After eight consecutive years of missionary work in Maine and Massachusetts, I am this year a little nearer the spot called Zion. How we do miss the old Atlantic, and those good fish. I have not seen any good fresh salt-water fish on sale at any price. I have been promising myself we could make up our loss of fish by an abundance of fruit; but, alas, fruit is so scarce here this year. With provisions soaring in prices, what will we poor mortals do?

On my arrival in Columbus the Saints willingly showed a good missionary spirit by purchasing a gospel tent. Finding a suitable location for it in this city was difficult, so a suitable lot for a future church was purchased, and our tent erected thereon.

Our audiences have been fair and the interest good all summer. The brethren have assisted in preaching when called upon; and while we have not converted hundreds, yet I am satisfied we have reached many people with our message. I have had the pleasure of baptizing four, with a good prospect of more in the near future.

I often think of our many friends in the East, and the grand gospel experiences we have had together.

May the Lord raise up wise shepherds to care for the flocks there.

I have moved my family here, and we like it far better than we anticipated.

Yours in the faith,

CALVIN H. RICH.

LAMONI, Iowa, October 14, 1907.

Editors Herald: There recently died (August 4) in the National Home at Leavenworth, Kansas, a man by the name of William G. Keith, some incidents in whose life I am sure will be of interest to many Saints, and since he loved the church papers and his faith and hope in the gospel was indeed great, it seems but fitting that this memorial be written. Bro. Keith spent a week in our home in Kenosha, Wisconsin, the last of April, and I shall attempt only briefly to state a few incidents as nearly as I can, as he told them to me while there.

He was born in Kansas in 1864, where he grew to manhood, then drifted west. In 1893 he enlisted as a private and was transported to the Philippine Islands. He was soon stricken with the fever and returned to Hawaii. Here he secured the services of a native nurse, into whose family he seems to have been taken.

This native was a faithful Saint, who by her life and talk gave him his first ideas of the gospel. After partially regaining his health he often went with her to hear Bro. G. J. Waller and others preach. Some time later he secured his return to the States and was placed, after what later appeared as providential experiences, in a certain hospital ward in a National Home in Oregon. The matron of his ward was a Miss Buell, evidently an active Saint, from the fact that he did not remain long under her care before he heard more of the gospel and was supplied with literature. I am sure my words can not convey to this sister the gratitude that Bro. Keith felt and often expressed to me for her loving deeds.

In the fall of 1904 it was decided to remove him farther east, and he was transferred to the Home at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Sr. Buell subscribed for the Autumn Leaves for him, which since she has annually sent him, and then put a notice in the HERALD asking nearby Saints to hunt him up.

Not more than five minutes before taking the train for Milwaukee on returning to my year's work in Kenosha, I read the notice. I found it possible to gather up a bundle of papers and to stop at the Home. What a pleasant surprise for both of us our meeting was, when I found him propped up in bed reading an Ensign. Afterward visited him occasionally, and supplied him with both papers, and know that he read them and the Leaves thoroughly, when he was able, and lost no opportunity to spread the glad news among his ward mates when they would read or listen. Not a few heard the gospel message through his efforts.

Although without any means, through the help of a few staunch friends which he seemed to win everywhere, and by dint of his iron will and the help of Providence, he twice crossed the continent in quest of his health and a pension which was certainly due him from the Government. The failure of all his efforts seemed sad indeed, yet his hope and trust in God never seemed shaken, and his only source of happiness was in his friends and the gospel.

Realizing that his days might be nearly numbered, he wrote in the spring that he was anxious for me to make plans for his baptism. As soon as possible I brought him to Kenosha, although in a very feeble condition, and made arrangements to take him to Chicago for baptism in the font on Sunday. Life seemed bright to him then, through his hope in the gospel. Many lessons of patience and cheerfulness we learned from him, and would that we, with our strength and prospects might ever manifest such virtues correspondingly.

He loved to talk of the building of the sanitarium and his greatest hope was that he might be spared to go there for treatment among the Saints and possibly at some time to be able in turn to do something for some one less fortunate than himself.

Yet all our hopes were blasted at the last by a letter calling him back to the Home, and not allowing for any change in our plans as to his baptism.

It might have been possible for me to have baptized him in the Lake, yet the weather was cold and the water very difficult of access. After considering the matter we learned that he could be sent to Leavenworth, Kansas, where he would be near the Saints of Kansas City and Independence, and his desire of obedience could be gratified.

His transfer was secured, and by the aid of friends his ticket was purchased, and we received letters from him enroute and one on his arrival at Leavenworth. Previously I had written for him, to the Saints of Kansas City, and received assurance that he would be looked after.

I wrote him last on the morning of August 4, only to get word later that he passed away on that day. Thus ended the life of one of earth's faithful pilgrims. Whether he was privileged to obey the gospel in this life or not, surely the Lord will recognize and reward his efforts. It is a pleasure to come in contact with such a life, and a joy to be able to do some helpful deed, and the more when it seems to be so thoroughly appreciated.

Before leaving Milwaukee, Bro. Keith gave to me for safe keeping a much-prized collection of Autumn Leaves, and a copy of an almost extinct work on Hawaiian history; the latter with instructions to see that it was properly presented to the church library.

Trusting these leaves from an otherwise unrecorded biography (among men) may interest and benefit some of God's children, I submit them in memory of one who longed to be a Saint indeed, to have performed his part in Zion's redemption, and finally to enter into the rest of the redeemed. May his wish sometime, somewhere be rewarded.

Your brother in Zion's cause,
CHARLES B. WOODSTOCK.

GRANDVIEW, Texas, October 15, 1907.

Editors Herald: It is with pleasure I write these few lines. My mother has written a few times in thanksgiving to the Lord, and this is the reason I write, and to try to encourage others. There is a little band of thirty-five Saints in this county. I know that I have been wonderfully blessed. I have been a regular tobacco-worm for about sixteen years, until about a month ago, and was leading my three younger brothers right away from the Lord; but with the help of the Lord I have quit the filthy stuff, and my brothers quit when they saw I had, so I guess I have done a little good for myself and brothers, and the Lord, and my mother also, for it was revealed unto her that she would be taken from us if we did not quit it. I read where the Lord commanded his people not to use it, and it was strictly a command from the Lord, for he says positively, Avoid the use of tobacco, and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example. (See Doctrine and Covenants, Section 119, paragraph 3.) That is enough to make any one quit the evil weed that wants to serve the Lord aright. I want all praying people to pray for me and my brothers that we may be resolute and firm enough never to take another chew; and pray with me that other weak ones may quit it.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
SAMUEL A. GOODSON.

AKIN, Illinois, October 13, 1907.

Editors Herald: Allow me space in your columns to write a few lines. I rejoice in this great latter-day work, and in striving to do God's will, and to keep his commandments, although I realize I have many temptations to overcome. But the Lord has blessed me many times, and has heard and answered my prayers. There are but few Saints in this locality. We have church once a month. Bro. F. M. Davis preaches for the Saints, and I think if the Saints would attend and do their duty, that we would be wonderfully blessed. Bro. Davis gives the Saints many good instructions. My desire is to live a humble and prayerful life; that I may be able to do anything God would have me do. Dear Saints, I ask an interest in your prayers, that I may ever be found faithful and ready to do God's will.

Yours in the true faith,
ELLA NORMAN.

SOUTH AUBURN, Nebraska, October 18, 1907.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a few lines from Southern Nebraska District will not come amiss, as we are striving to hold forth the banner of Immanuel to the people here in South Auburn. There are a few Saints here that are anxious to have the Lord's work set before the people, and we have been striving in our weakness to do so the past week; and with the help of the Lord we hope to accomplish some good for the Master. We have had a very spiritual conference, held at Fairfield, Nebraska, and the Saints at that place were much encouraged and strengthened. Our district is on the advance in spiritual things, and we feel hopeful for the future, believing that the Lord will recognize all good intentions by his servants who strive to unfurl the banner of truth to the people with the wisdom given of him. We hear him say, "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light." And again he says, "Come, learn of me, for I am meek and lowly." So that we could all learn of him and put on the mantle of humility that our work might be effectual among our brethren and the world. How quick the people notice the general bearing, or the attitude of the speakers! How quick they catch his impulses and the seeming disposition of him who strives to set forth the Christ character, and what effect it has on the people for good or otherwise, as the case may be! We trust our efforts are for good, and if our labors are seasoned with the love and character or nature of Christ, the results will be of lasting benefit to all that may hear the words of the gospel of truth.

I am in the conflict for righteousness. WM. SELF.

HEMET, California, October 14, 1907.

Editors Herald: I wonder if there are not among the Saints a family or two who would like to make this part of California their home? We own a nice little church building, seating fifty people, but there are but two families of Saints, Bro. Frank Burton's and my own.

We have a nice little Sunday-school, but need some new faces to make it interesting. We occasionally have an outsider or two, but not often.

This is largely a fruit country, growing nearly everything in fruit from strawberries to oranges; peaches and apricots being probably the largest crops; and all lines of fruit-raising have been very profitable for several years.

We irrigate nearly altogether for fruits, and raise also alfalfa, potatoes, melons, and all kinds of garden stuff. Outside of our irrigation district, we raise wheat, oats, and barley, without irrigation, and the farmers have done remarkably well for several years. Land outside irrigation district sells for twenty to fifty dollars per acre, while irrigated lands unimproved are worth one hundred seventy-five to two hundred dollars per acre; and five to ten acres are enough for an ordinary family, if worked properly. Schools are excellent. Our irrigated district has water piped in pressure pipes to every dwelling, telephone lines everywhere, also rural delivery, and free delivery of groceries, meat, ice, etc. Hemet is a nice town of perhaps nine hundred people.

We would be very glad to welcome one or several families of live, spiritual Saints, and any information I can give leading to such an end will gladly be given.

In bonds,
T. S. BROWN.

St. JOSEPH, Missouri, October 9, 1907.

Dear Herald: After quite an absence from your columns, and some rest from the active missionary duties of a seventy, I pen you a few notes of a pleasant and much enjoyed visit to "Zion's Land." I left Wellston, Ohio, on the 13th of September, and landed at Holden, Missouri, on the 14th to attend the stake reunion then in session at that place. I was domiciled with my old friend Longley Bierly (once my pupil), and his excellent wife and daughter Lillian, whose faith and works since hearing the latter-day message have ever been foremost in their lives. Old time memories were renewed, and their association and fellowship greatly appreciated. Here also I met with Bro. and Sr. Money-maker and their most esteemed daughters Miss Lyda, Cora (now Mrs.) Katie, and Tica, with whom I became acquainted when on mission in Virginia in the early 90's; also, I here again met with Sr. Landis, and her daughter Carrie.

I baptized two of the above (Srs. Lyda and Carrie) while on that mission. This brought to my mind many pleasant recollections of those bygone days, when we had to contend with the infidels in that section, as well as the sects around them. I look back and see the sacrifice that the brethren made, including Bro. and Sr. Coffman, who still remain in that country. I hope the land may some day be redeemed from error.

I also met several from West Virginia who had left its hills for the "beautiful Zion," and for the opportunity of better association with the people of God. Bro. Odell and family, several of the Osmers, (the dear old mother absent by death, however,) the Thompsons, one of whom I ordained to the office of elder, and others whose names do not occur to my mind so readily. I here met my old neighbors and associates in the latter-day work from Limerick, Ohio, also Bro. and Sr. Bruton, Bro. Moler and family, and Sr. H. E. Moler, Bro. and Sr. Spawn, and Sr. Devore, and others of the old-time Saints now residing in Holden, and far removed from the "bounds of the habitation" where they first heard the "angel's message." It brought vividly to my mind many recollections of the past, and in them I see with pleasure some of the beautiful "green spots" in the history of my past life. I was again permitted also to greet the pleasant faces of many of my ministerial brethren, among whom were the prophet and patriarch, Joseph and Alexander, Frederick M. Smith and R. C. Evans of the Presidency, and Bishop Hilliard and his excellent companion. I enjoyed the excellent sermons and fellowship, and the various services of the reunion, and became acquainted with many new faces in the work of the Master, among whom I might name as most excellent teachers, Sr. Etzenhouser, Sr. Blair, and Sr. Dora Young.

The reunion was a success from every standpoint from which I could view it, and I shall ever look back to it as one of the beautiful green spots in my religious life. I here also met my sister-in-law, Mrs. V. M. Goodrich, and accompanied her home to St. Joseph, where I have since been domiciled with my brother and enjoyed his association and fellowship with hers, and that of the Saints of St. Joseph. I have been very much gratified with the high esteem the Saints here have of the labors of my brother as the pastor of the branch. All seem to be working in harmony, and are united in the effort to promote the work of the Lord in the city. By request I occupied the pulpit in the first branch three times, and in the second branch once since coming here. I was pleased to find the congregation at the sacrament-meeting almost as large as at the preaching-services. To me this speaks much for the spirituality of the branch. I have here made the acquaintance of some excellent Saints, whom I shall ever remember with a grateful heart. With thanks to my heavenly Father for health and strength, and gratitude for the kind and pleasant associations of Saints, I start this eve for my Ohio home.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,
J. L. GOODRICH.

WEIR, Kansas, October 8, 1907.

Editors Herald: The Saints here have finished their church, and the branch is moving along nicely. I had the pleasure of baptizing two members of the First Baptist Church two weeks ago, and it seems that it had a tendency to ruffle the feathers of the flock a little. They made arrangements for their presiding elder to meet me at a private house and spend the evening in exchanging views in the presence of two of our members and two of theirs. I met the Reverend Flood, a man of about seventy-three years, who has been preaching for forty-five years. He seems to be a very learned man, a Greek and Latin scholar. It was some time after we both had prayer, before I could get him settled down to good plain reasoning. He seemed to be overanxious to talk a little of Greek and Latin, so I spoke a few words of it for him, and it seemed to give him ease, or at least he did not care to spring it any more.

Well, our meeting resulted in the baptizing of his other two members, making four in all. Now, they claim we had a trap set for the Reverend; but I am sure I never had any other trap sprung than usual. When I offered him the Manuscript Story to read, he jumped up and wanted to leave, and would not even as much as look at it. His story ran as usual. He was a boy in Bro. Smith's day, when they went to people and demanded their horses and cattle, saying the Lord sent them after such and such. I offered him ten dollars for an affidavit; but "No, no," he says in a boastful tone, "Do you think I have lied?" I told him if it were the truth he surely could afford to take my offer; but he only seemed to get mad.

Well, I suppose this old world wags the same way elsewhere. I have baptized ten in this branch this year. Those four received from the Baptist Church are now bearing strong testimony of the work. I feel well in the work. Hoping, trusting, and praying, I remain,

Your brother and coworker,

W. H. SMART.

News From Branches

LAMONI, IOWA.

The stake conference met at Lamoni, Saturday the 25th. The spirit of progress marked its sessions. The name of Elder John F. Garver was presented, to act as second counselor to the stake president. The nomination was approved by the conference, and at the Sunday prayer-service Bro. Garver was ordained high priest and counselor to the stake president, by Heman C. Smith and W. H. Kelley. The resignation of Bro. D. J. Krahl as a member of the stake high council was accepted. Bro. Krahl resigned because of his removal to Independence, Missouri. He also resigned as secretary of the stake, and L. A. Gould was chosen to fill the vacancy. W. R. Dexter was selected as assistant secretary.

The preaching Saturday was by Bishop G. H. Hilliard. Bro. Hilliard expects to labor in the stake for some weeks, visiting all or nearly all the branches, laboring in conjunction with the local bishopric.

The Sunday-school was in charge of the local officers, with an attendance of four hundred and ninety-four. Preaching Sunday morning by W. H. Kelley; in the evening by Heman C. Smith; at the Saints' Home by J. W. Peterson; at Liberty Home by R. M. Elvin.

W. R. Dexter spoke at Andover, E. E. Long at Terre Haute, and C. J. Peters at Wion. * *

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

Our sacramental service was a spiritual feast to all in attendance. Three little ones were blessed during the month. They were children of Bro. and Sr. Thomas of Cheltenham, Mr. and Mrs. Mowry, and Mr. and Mrs. De Laney.

The wife of Bro. Dornberg was baptized by Bro. Tanner, and confirmed by Brn. Tanner and S. A. Burgess.

We had some excellent instructive sermons the past month, which, we trust, will be put into practice.

A series of meetings was held at Oak Hill one week this month by Brn. Tanner and Sparling.

Bro. Sparling took very sick, and owing to his serious illness was compelled to go home. He regretted this very much, as he realized there was much to be done in his field. We trust he will soon recover.

The members holding priesthood met October 8, and had section 106 of Doctrine and Covenants under consideration.

The Sunday-school had two splendid programs recently. Parents' day and cradle roll were well attended; six little ones were placed on the roll. The nineteenth anniversary of the Sunday-school was celebrated October 13, with a fine program by the first members of the school.

We had a fine sermon on college lines October 6, by Bro. S. A. Burgess; also a collection was taken for the college that day.

We extend our sympathies to Sr. Tanner, who recently lost her mother.

Two children of Bro. and Sr. Tandberg were confirmed October 20, having been baptized elsewhere.

Mite society will hold a bazaar and supper at Bro. and Sr. G. Trowbridge's, October 31.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.

At a recent special branch business-meeting, quite extensive repairs and improvements were authorized, chief among which are the sheathing of the lower auditorium, the installation of an additional lavatory, the repairing or rebuilding of the chimney, the refinishing of the upper auditorium floor, and the fitting up of a ladies' parlor in the basement. By vote of branch, Sr. Annie Chellin was elected official branch stenographer, and the writer branch correspondent for the church papers.

Returning delegates from the recent district conference held at Boston, report one of the most harmonious and profitable sessions ever held in this district.

Bro. Daniel F. Joy, branch priest, occupied at the morning service last Sunday, delivering an edifying discourse upon "Riches: the false and the true," using as a leading thought words found in Ecclesiastes 5:10. The ordinance of baptism was administered to Alice Smith in the church at half past five, her confirmation occurring at the evening service, Bro. J. D. Suttill officiating in both instances.

Bro. J. D. Suttill, branch president, occupied at the evening service, preaching from Mark 9:24.

Plans have been perfected for the holding of a two weeks' series of services in the church, beginning November 2, by means of which the branch hopes to be able to place the latter-day message before a greater number of the people of this city than has, heretofore been reached. It is expected that Apostle U. W. Greene, and Elders A. B. Phillips and R. W. Farrell will be present, and materially aid in the presentation of the gospel message. C. E. L. A.

PORTLAND, OREGON.

The work in Portland is not losing ground, but the reverse. About the first of October, Bro. F. A. Simpson and wife succeeded in making it possible for the writer to open the work in a new place in the city, "Riverside," and on Sunday, the 6th, at seven thirty in the evening, about thirty met at the home of Sr. Hudson, and, with the aid of God's Spirit, we broke the news to them concerning what we believe from our standpoint. Such attention and interest are not often seen.

The next Sunday at eleven o'clock, also at half past seven, we met with them again, with over forty present.

Yesterday, the 20th, we baptized four in the blue waters of the great Columbia River, and at half past seven met again with over fifty in a private house; and truly did God's Spirit fill the whole house. Not a move or sign of unrest was seen, and for an hour and a half we told them of the great plan of salvation, once more delivered to men by angels sent from the throne above. How the hungry, sin-sick people listened, drinking in the great truths, which to many seemed like the beacon-light to sailors on a storm-tossed ship. Some said, "I have always longed to know why God would not speak like the Bible says he used to do." Another said, "I and mine have given up all churches because we longed for more than they could give." Others had belonged to some of the popular churches of the day; but when sickness came in their homes, and at a time when a smile, a hand-shake, a cheerful word, a "God bless you," would have been worth more than untold riches, they got a dunning letter, telling them they were in arrears in church dues. These, with many other things, are the reasons why people do not attend or belong to churches.

For fear I would get tired paying car-fare so much, they presented me with a book of tickets worth $2.25, and asked that we keep up the meetings, which, if the Lord wills, we shall do. Of course when one must work all the week, early and late, then every Sunday extra, it is quite trying; but the Lord has already condemned the slothful servant and we do not care to be classed among such.

Should Bro. F. A. Smith, our missionary in charge, see this, I would like him to write me, as I do not know where he is.

W. A. GOODWIN.

CENTRAL ILLINOIS.—Conference held at Pana, Illinois, October 6, 1907. At 9 a. m., a prayer-service was held at which a good portion of the Spirit was felt. Conference called to order for business at 10 a. m., by the president, Luther Simpson, with David Smith assistant. The regular order of business was taken up in the forenoon, the afternoon being spent by debating a proposition given by the Religio and Sunday-school, that the conference give them the fore part of the day in which to transact their business. All seemed to think the district was advancing. At the Sunday service a goodly portion of the Spirit was felt, at which the Lord admonished us to be faithful. Charles C. Simpson, secretary.

Convention Minutes.

LITTLE SIOUX.—Religio Association convened in Woodbine, at 7.30 p. m., October 3, in a joint session of prayer-service with the Sunday-school workers in the district. An excellent paper was read on "The need and good derived from parliamentary work," by Bro. Carl Ballantyne. The enrollment in the district for the past quarter is 306, with an average attendance of 125. We are pleased with the new Quarterlies. Hope each local secretary will at once get one of the new local secretary's records, that we may all work in harmony. Lou Mann.

Church Secretary.*BOUNDARY LINES OF DISTRICTS.

District presidents and secretaries are requested to report as soon as practicable to the undersigned the respective boundary lines of their respective districts. Please see that such report is made at once, as it is necessary to have a complete record of such boundary lines, for present and for future needs. The former record was destroyed in the HERALD Office conflagration.

Please include names of all branches, organized or disorganized, in your district.

Died.

BLACKMAN.—William Hudson Blackman, son of Mr. John W. and Sr. Minnie Blackman. Born July 4, 1900, at Leon, Iowa; died at St. Joseph, Missouri, October 8, 1907, being 7 years, 3 months, and 14 days old. Sick only two days and thought to be seriously ill only four hours. Laid away in Mount Mora Cemetery. A mind of more than usual capacity as attested by statement of both Sunday-school and day teachers. Many were the tear-dimmed eyes of the friends who gathered at the services, in sympathy with the parents in their sorrow. Services by Elder M. Shaw.

EBELING.—Ivan Francis, son of Bro. Joseph Ebeling, was born in Wheeling, West Virginia, September 3, 1895. Died September 11, 1907, of inflammatory rheumatism, which settled around his heart. Funeral from the Saints' church. Sermon by U. W. Greene.

Mark Twain's Story of His Life.

Mark Twain refuses to let his captivating autobiography be published in book form until after his death, but journalistic enterprise has come to the rescue, and we are to have Mark's masterpiece after all. He has consented to let it appear as a serial. It has been secured at enormous cost by the Sunday Magazine of the Chicago Record-Herald, which has a name for capturing big prizes of this sort, such as Conan Doyle's "Sir Nigel" and Kipling's "Sons of Martha."

Thus it falls out that the readers of the Sunday Record-Herald are to have a delightful treat without extra cost. For months to come Mark Twain will go on telling in his droll way about the famous people he has met, how he came to create Colonel Sellers and Tom Sawyer, and all the funny things that have happened to him. The whole is to be profusely illustrated. The first installment—in the issue of October 27—is accompanied by a magnificent portrait of the humorist. Everybody who likes Mark Twain will want to read this great biography.

The November Housekeeper.

The Housekeeper for November celebrates its thirtieth anniversary by issuing a double number. In fiction there is a long Thanksgiving story by Edith Livingston Smith and short stories by Emily Ruth Calvin, F. J. Splitstone, and Mary Heaton Vorse. One of the most interesting pages is a reprint of short extracts through the thirty years, the references to antiquated styles and fads being of special interest to women. There are several excellent cookery pages devoted to the celebration of the Thanksgiving festival, and the other departments of the home are amply covered. The Housekeeper Corporation, Minneapolis, Minnesota. Sixty cents a year.

JACKSON COUNTY BANK

I take the liberty of soliciting your patronage as we are in a position to do BANKING BUSINESS BY MAIL very satisfactorily. Open accounts can be placed with us for safety at your convenience and command. We have opened a savings department, paying interest on accounts of $1 or more and each member of the family should become interested in having a bank account building for future needs. We also pay interest on time deposit certificates. A number of the brethren are living here, others are looking forward to this location as a future home, and late revelation and admonition foreshadow coming events, adding materially to our spiritual holdings necessary to signs of the times, and in this connection our Board of Directors propose to safeguard the financial interests of the Saints by offering to them a depository proof against graft, greed, or calamity, governed by a kindred feeling born of the interest we have in common. It is not popular men, large capital, heavy deposits, National or State laws, that offer absolute security to depositors, but directors and officers progressive and conservative, possessed of the virtue of true manhood, shorn of all political ambition, with no taste for frenzied finance or mining speculation, and no inclination to furnish funds for others in that line. I point with considerable just pride (I assume) to our Board of Directors as named below. Feel at liberty to write us on matters that concern you in Jackson County, Missouri.

OFFICERS: Ellis Short, President; M. H. Bond, Second Vice-president; William Crick, First Vice-president; J. D. Briggs, Cashier.

DIRECTORS: Ellis Short, William Crick, M. H. Bond, J. D. Briggs, G. H. Hilliard, Doctor Joseph Mather, Doctor O. H. Riggs, Horace Sheley, A. L. Yingling.

Very truly yours,

DEDICATION AT HONOLULU, TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

By arrangement of the Hawaiian Branch of the church located in the capital city of the United States Territory of Hawaii, made through Elder Gilbert J. Waller, resident pastor and in charge of the work in the Island, Bro. F. M. Sheehy and the Editor left San Francisco on the morning of October 5 on the steamer Alameda, of the Oceanic Line, and after a pleasant and uneventful voyage reached the city of Honolulu on the morning of the 12th, where we were met at the wharf by Elder Waller, who gave us the usual hospitable Latter Day Saint reception and welcome. We found that our coming had been heralded through a message sent by some reporter from Kansas City to the Commercial Advertiser, with a characteristic notice furnished by Elder Edward Ingham.

After securing our passage on the steamer we sent a message to Bro. Waller announcing the date of our sailing, knowing that the six or seven days occupied in the passage would permit of Bro. Waller making the necessary preparation and advertisement of the intended dedication of the first church edifice erected by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints on the Hawaiian Islands.

Elder Waller, and the branch under his charge, were indeed ready for our coming, and for the dedicatory exercises which were advertised to take place at eleven o'clock, October 13, 1907. Extensive notice had been given, and expectation was rife as to what the day might bring.

Reporters gathered about us, and reports more or less accurate or faulty of the interviews held, as is usual, appeared in the evening papers, from which it was hoped that our dedication would be fairly well attended.

At the time appointed, the house, which will seat some two hundred, was well filled. By request Bro. Waller was put in charge, the program arranged, and the services began and were carried to a conclusion. We here insert the report and description of the building as given in the Advertiser in its morning issue of Monday, October 14.

CHURCH DEDICATED BY THE SON OF THE PROPHET.

With simple but effective ceremonies and services, the first church edifice of the body of Christians known as the

"If in our attitude toward one another and toward our fellows, we are able to demonstrate that our lives harmonize with our professions, then the world will be led to think there is something connected with us that should be investigated."

"Repentance is a restriction, or righting the wrong done so far as lies in the power of the individual so to do."

Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was dedicated yesterday morning.

The church is a frame structure on the mauka side of King Street, opposite the Catholic Cemetery. It is of the pleasing ecclesiastical architecture of which many examples may be seen scattered through the rural regions of the Mississippi Valley and the Alleghany region. There is adaptation to this climate, however, by an abundance of windows to secure ventilation. The entrance is through a square vestibule formed by a tower terminating in a pleasing cupola. The pulpit platform, with small rooms on either side, occupies the mauka end of the church. The platform is raised higher than is usual in most churches, and is reached by steps at the left. The interior of the church is finished in natural wood. The ceiling is vaulted and supported by framed trusses. The pews are in dark stained wood and exceedingly comfortable. The pulpit platform and the organ were pleasingly ornamented with ferns and great jardinières of cut flowers, carnations, and asters.

The dedicatory services were at eleven o'clock. There was an audience that practically filled the seating capacity of the church, about two hundred. The opening hymn was one by Lowell Mason, whose recent death recalls the high place he had in Christian hymnology. A quartet consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Harbottle, Miss Piikoi and Mr. Kahana-moku sang an anthem.

On the platform were President Joseph Smith, eldest son of the Prophet Joseph Smith, Elder F. M. Sheehy, who with another has charge of the missions of which this is one, and Elder Gilbert J. Waller, who has been in large degree the pillar and support of the church in these Islands for many years.

The formal acceptance of the church was symbolized by the presentation by Elder Waller on behalf of the congregation of the key of the church edifice to President Smith, who accepted it on behalf of the Bishop, and returned it to Elder Waller for the use of the congregation.

The sermon by President Smith was a simple, straightforward presentation of the purpose of the church to be, to present the truth to all men as it was presented by Christ to his disciples and those whom he sent, to be by them presented to those who should follow after, until all should have the opportunity of hearing the gospel.

President Smith is a benignant figure, gentle, kindly, yet not lacking vigor nor strength. He is a tall, well built man, erect in spite of his seventy-five years, his gray beard softening a face which a slightly aquiline nose would otherwise make too severe.

The dedicatory invocation following the sermon was by Elder F. M. Sheehy, who has a voice of marvelous richness, and a diction that is almost eloquence in itself.

After the regular services, there was the blessing of an infant, and the confirmation of a number who had been baptized at an earlier service. The babe presented by the mother was taken in the arm of Elder Sheehy, while the venerable president commended it to the care of a loving Father and of Him who blessed little children, in an invocation dignified and gracious.

The confirmation was accompanied with the laying on of hands, and in this service President Smith was assisted by Elder Sheehy, Elder Waller, and Elder J. D. White of Kauai, who had come over for this service.

At the evening service, the sermon was by Elder Sheehy. There will be special services throughout the week, Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings, at which President Smith and Elder Sheehy will preach.

Following the opening hymn, prayer and anthem, Elder Waller began the services thus:

"My brothers and sisters and friends, I take much pleasure in introducing to you President Joseph Smith whose visit here at the present time to our hospitable shores was undertaken at the earnest solicitation of the local members who have long desired to see him.

"The recent completion of this church edifice, which was very largely made possible by the generosity of our many friends, whom we take this opportunity of thanking, afforded our local branch the desired opportunity of extending to President Smith an invitation to come here and conduct the services connected with its dedication. There had been some misgivings on our part as to whether Elder Smith would undertake at his period of life so long a journey, but his presence here testifies to the willingness with which he responded.

"We are pleased to welcome him in our midst, feeling assured that his prominent identification with the work which we have endeavored in the past to represent here will obtain for him an interested hearing, and knowing as we do by reason of long and pleasant association that his frank manner and kindly disposition will win for him a warm place in your hearts.

"We therefore bid him a hearty welcome, and trust that his visit may open up to him a vista of pleasant associations and agreeable experiences that shall add an interesting chapter to his long and eventful life.

"We feel sure you will accord him a patient and attentive hearing."

Then, turning to President Smith, Elder Waller continued:

"Now, dear brother, as president of the branch of the church here, I take pleasure in turning over to you, the president of the church—representing the Bishop, the custodian of the church property, this key of the building, stating for your information and for the information of others, that there have been expended in the purchase of the lot, in the improvement of, and in the erection of the building about $7,000, and that there is no debt upon the property."

Replying President Smith said:

"I return this key to you, Elder Waller, to be used for the benefit of the local congregation, and I also trust that from this pulpit and from out these walls nothing but good shall come—good thoughts and good words—and that there shall be exemplified here what our church stands for, an open Bible and a free pulpit. Also, Brother President, I thank you, and you, my brothers and sisters, and your friends, in the erection of this building, for the kindly welcome extended to me.

"I have long had the desire to visit the Islands of the Sea, and they have long been within the circuit of my labor. I am pleased that the opportunity has come to me. I thank you for the kindly interest you have taken in the work which I represent.

"There is a question which arises from and exists within the great diversity of religious thought. It is important, at the inception of every religious movement, especially anything considered new, or that has borne the appellation of being new, that those who inaugurate such a movement should be prepared to give to the community in which it takes its stand, reasons why they assume the positions which they do in this religious controversy; for, disguise it as you may, the question is not settled. It is still open for human inquiry, for human discussion, and so far as possible, for human determination. In teaching this, there arises the question of what should be the doctrine discussed from this pulpit by those in whose interest it has been erected. Possibly I may be answered, as I many times have been, that the discussion of doctrine is not profitable—that to discuss doctrine in the Christian church has a species of fatality to it, that it is introducing controversy, controversy resulting in excitement, contention, and apparent separation. This, we know, has been the history of the churches from time immemorial. This is the only answer, that if it can be conceded that Jesus Christ has so carelessly wrought in the mission which his Father sent him upon, and in the interests of which he called his disciples, so carelessly, that the preaching of the doctrine of Jesus Christ is calculated to destroy its own organization, it is time this event occurred and that the character of the doctrines of Jesus Christ, which he came to teach, and for which he died, should be well known everywhere."

"This from the seventeenth chapter of John's gospel—the prayer of the Master for his disciples, and also for those who should believe in his name.

"The question, as I have said, in this religious movement, is this: Is this mission of Jesus Christ a world-wide one? Was that to be the intention of God? Were all portions of this world to be reached and to have declared to them the word of God by those sent to continue his work until the end of time? Was it those other portions also that were to be sanctified by the word of God? Our inquiries, our desires, and our interests for all, declare these questions to be just as vital now as ever; and the question is just as far-reaching as it was when uttered by the Master, and when he made this statement: 'As thou hast sent me, I will also send them.' They should continue for ever unto the children of men and be that which is to be found imperishable. They should be such that they will never pass away though everything else of the human character should pass away; because or the wondrous love exhibited to men, mankind might come to know that the price of truth alone should stand, and that everything else that could be shaken, should be shaken and fall.

"We come this morning with the idea to do that only which has been declared to be the word which shall be found upon our lips. We have no interest other than that in our effort to preach to the children of men; and while it may be said that the price of life and salvation are open to the inquiry of every man who chooses to read the Sacred Word, there are evasions everywhere of the Master's meaning, and when men pray: 'Our Father who art in heaven; hallowed be thy name; thy kingdom come; thy will be done;' these very men will arise from their knees and absolutely and positively deny the strictest and straightest deductions that any one may draw from the meaning of the word itself. We have a statement made by him like this: 'My doctrine is not my own, but his that sent me.' Found in the seventh chapter of John, and the seventeenth verse. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine. He makes this statement in answer to inquiries by those around him: 'My doctrine is not my own, but his that sent me.' Christ has never called a man to misrepresent him, but endowed each to preach that which he had confided to him. Christ came to teach men and to discipline them in taking out from themselves those evil and wrong things with which men have always been afflicted, and to teach them to secure uprightness and justice among men, which is in men, because of God's love for them. And there has never been anything accomplished by instilling fear in men. It is not productive of good results to teach by trying to scare men. It is not fear, but love, that is constantly required in teaching. It was love that sent the Master. It was love that characterized every act of his life. On one occasion he was angry; it was only once that he was excited. Then, when in the courts, he saw that his Father's house was made a house of merchandise instead of a house of prayer."

Continuing, President Smith sought to show that enforced goodness had no moral excellence, that goodness must be from within; it was from the impelling power of religion in the heart that evil tendencies must be subdued. He and his people did not believe in total depravity; if total depravity in the individual exists, it must be at the end of life and not at the beginning, for men may resist all impulses for good and the strivings of the Spirit until evil is unrestrained.

The teachings and doctrines of Jesus Christ are to make men better, to sanctify them to godly lives. Not that men shall reach a state in this life in which they can not sin, but that habits of righteousness may become fixed so that men shall not have the desire to sin.

The doctrines of Jesus, he declared, were not his doctrines, but those of the Father who sent him. They were taught by him so clearly, either directly or by necessary inference and implication, that the apostle Paul preaching them for fourteen years, congratulated himself on his return to the brethren at Jerusalem, that he found that he was in harmony with them.

This is the continuance in his word which is promised.

In conclusion President Smith spoke of his own seventy-five years of life and forty-seven of ministry during all of which he had tried to preach the way of life.

The membership of the branch is composed of the Caucasian, Hawaiian, Chinese, and Japanese races; the larger part being Hawaiians. The song-service in charge of Bro. F. W. Klein was exceptionally good. The leader, with young Sr. Klein at the organ, and his native Hawaiian singers, young and old, making the choir, sang the songs chosen in good time and excellent emphasis, making the service very enjoyable.

The report of the sermon is fairly good, though much shortened, presumably for want of space; as the Advertiser is well disposed towards us as a religious body, and tries to deal fairly with us as with others, which is all we could ask. The reporters sent to us were kind, and though inquisitive, as is their right, were not obtrusive or offensive. Thanks to the press of Honolulu.

Bro. John D. White from Independence, Missouri, came in from the Island of Kauai, where he is practicing as an attorney at law, and was with us during the services of the day, and assisted at the close of the morning service in confirming five, whom Bro. Waller had baptized in the morning hours in the font in the church building. We were much pleased to see one of our nearest neighbors, though so far from home.

As items of interest incidental to the busy day of the 14th, we note meeting the members of the branch with the handshaking of fellowship; and it was very pleasing to note the smiles of greeting and looks of love with which these Island Saints gave us welcome in words of cheer and confidence. Their names, though we were told them, we can neither remember nor pronounce, save very few. Bro. Mahuka, the deacon, a native, is a fine, solid looking man in the prime of life, and is an efficient officer, looking after the interests of the congregation quietly and readily, with a promptness and alertness very commendable.

We were greeted by a Mr. Minston who was a guest at the mansion house in Nauvoo, Illinois, in 1850, as we understood him. We also met a Mr. Francis, resident here, who for a time was a resident of Richmond, Missouri, and was acquainted with a member of the Whitmer family, "Uncle" David, Philander Page, General A. W. Doniphan, and others whom we had met in that historic town in Missouri. We were pleased to meet him.

We dined at the house of a native brother, Robert Pahau, where food deliciously prepared tempted the preachers' appetites, including the national dish poi, made from a plant called taro as near as we could get the name from pronunciation. It is by no means an unpalatable dish, looking much like mush, but having a slightly sour taste. Bro. Sheehy ate his with sugar and milk, and appeared to relish it, and we, although not disliking it, ate of it sparingly and without trimmings. Fish cooked, wrapped in leaves, giving a slight spicy taste to the white flesh, is most excellent, chicken, and fruit made a good meal for any one. A visit at the residence of a Bro. Harbottle, wife and family, natives near by, and where the Waikiki Religio class held its weekly meeting, gave us an opportunity to see some of the Saints at close view. There is also a Religio class which meets in the church. We took part in the lesson as conducted by Bro. Waller, and were much pleased with the exhibition of earnest attention and shrewd comment, and application of the matters discussed arising in the discussion of the subject, "The fall of man."

The evening service was well attended, the sermon by Bro. Sheehy being a good dissertation of thought from the commission, "Go ye into all the world," etc. The speaker dwelt in force upon the command to preach, and what must be necessarily connected with it.

One child was blessed at the morning service, by the Editor and Bro. Sheehy, and named Lily.

There is a flourishing Sunday-school under the efficient supervision of Elder Edward Ingham, as superintendent. Bro. Ingham also has a Religio class which meets in the church building at a suitable hour. With the usual Sunday services, the Sunday-school, and Religio classes, the elders are kept busy and out of mischief, as must be apparent to all who read.

We note with great pleasure the presence of the Spirit in the several meetings, including the study series, and discover that here, too, the Lord remembers his people, to give his Spirit of testimony, comfort, strength, and peace, as in other places where the Saints are trying to build up.

THE GALLANDS GROVE ANNIVERSARY.

The forty-eighth anniversary of the Gallands Grove Branch and the forty-fourth anniversary of the Gallands Grove District was fittingly celebrated October 19 and 20. Sr. Vida E. Smith was present and sends in the following interesting account of the services:

On Friday, October 18, the trains at Dow City and Dunlap were met by a committee with carriages, and visitors to the anniversary were conveyed over the beautiful, rolling hill-country to the church in the valley. Here the district tent was ready with tables and heating-stove, a small kitchen-tent, with cook-stove and work-table just outside. That night the church was quite well filled to hear Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser conduct a normal class. The work was new to nearly all, and no books at hand; but the blackboard and Sr. Etzenhouser's active brain kept them busy and interested, and eager to hear more. On Saturday morning, the anniversary was formally opened with prayer by Bro. Drayton Holcomb, and a short speech by Bro. C. J. Hunt, who was the instigator and spirited promoter of the project. In a happy moment he unfolded the plan to the district, and it met with a grand response. In his little speech Saturday morning, he sounded the keynote to the meeting. A good social-service followed. Then came a few moments of welcoming handshakes. Then the choir gathered, Bro. Pearsall leading, furnishing stirring music. Elder Heman C. Smith introduced Bishop C. J. Hunt, district historian, who gave a pleasing and highly interesting historical sermon on the Gallands Grove Branch and District in history. Following this Bro. Drayton Holcomb, general man of affairs on the ground, led the way to the tent where the good housewives of the branch had joined in spreading a feast of earthly good things, Mrs. Floy Holcomb and Nora Crandall having general management of the tent. Did you ever go to a feast in the Grove? If you have not, go. If you have, you want to go again. At the close of the meal, order was called, and Sr. Etzenhouser gave a clear, earnest talk on Religio committee work, the kind every branch needs at some time, and especially more isolated ones. Then came the historical event by the people, old members occupying front seats and responding to name call according to program. Some were not present. Some in timidity declined; but nearly all gave some interesting and touching narrative of old times. Sr. Chloe Hawley Grigsby was asked to represent her mother, and did it with a good portion of the Spirit. After this good time, some hurried home for evening work, some lingered with reminiscent stories in the tent, some about the organ, and others sauntered off to find haunts and scenes of long gone days.

At night Bro. Charles Butterworth delivered a practical, helpful sermon, assisted by Bro. Orman Salisbury, district president.

Sunday morning the old hills, and what is left of the grove, lay gold and brown in the warm October sun; and Bro. Hunt almost shouted, it seemed promise of such a good time. It came true to promise. A fine, spiritual, social meeting at a quarter of ten, then a general historical sermon by Heman C. Smith from the text, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants, the prophets." He was assisted by Bro. Leonard Butterworth. The house was packed. Then another feast in the tent, and more reminiscences and greetings. At a quarter of two, Sr. Etzenhouser gave one of the most spiritual talks on Sunday-school work that it has been our lot to hear, the listeners, many standing, giving close attention throughout. More such words in such a spirit would build up the part of the Sunday-school work languishing to-day, the spiritual part. Do we not sometimes forget that "the letter killeth," "the spirit maketh alive"? After a short intermission, Elder Charles Derry occupied the pulpit, assisted by Alfred Jackson. There was age written in the white locks of the speaker, but youthful vigor in the tones, and the fire of the spirit of youthful days in the message delivered. Then came a short visit in the aisles; on the steps, and handclasps, and moist eyes; for some felt that the good-bys might be final. Many started home, many remained and chatted or sang. Many returned in the evening, surely, for the full moon looked down on load after load of people alighting at the church to hear Bro. J. C. Crabb. The choir rendered music sweet and inspiring for all these meetings, with Sr. Eliza Smith or Sr. Edith Dobson at the organ. Elder Crabb held the attention of his listeners in his interesting, characteristic manner, and the anniversary was over.

The old camp ground near looked still and lone. Here they used to set posts in the ground and make a platform thereon; upon this was placed soil, and on this a fire builded to light the camp. Where once stood great, wide-spreading, forest-trees, now in many places are cultivated fields, and green, open pastures. There were tears for the grand old forest, and sadness for the vacant places and stilled voices; but how glad the notes sounded there by old and young: "I know this work is true, and I am glad I am in the faith of my fathers." For us the sun shines always on the hills and groves of that district; and the people, kind and faithful, may their one hundredth anniversary find them increased in knowledge, wisdom, peace, and prosperity, a live Sunday-school and Religio in every branch.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

Samuel T. Packard of Amesbury, Massachusetts, writing in the New York Times book review, October 26, 1907, traces the origin of the work "Kim," as used by Rudyard Kipling, to the Book of Mormon. Kim is the name of a book published some years ago by Mr. Kipling. Joseph Smith has so often been accused of plagiarism that it is a novelty to find one of the most popular writers of the day borrowing from him without credit. We quote from the Times:

"ORIGIN OF THE NAME OF KIM.

"I have before me a copy of the 'Book of Mormon,' published at Nauvoo in 1840, and am interested to find the name of 'Kim' in the wonderful collocation of worthies (and unworthies) whose deeds were recorded on the plates of gold, as translated with the aid of magic spectacles by Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

"Kipling, in his lively account of his adventures in Salt Lake City, says he went about 'armed with the 'Book of Mormon' for better comprehension.' He adds: 'Very sincerely did I sympathize with the inspired brothers, as I waded through their joint production. As a humble fellow-worker in the field of fiction I knew what it was to get good names for one's characters. But Joseph and Hyrum were harder bestead than ever I have been; and bolder men to boot. They created Teancum and Coriantumy, Pahoran, Kishkumen, and Gadianton, and other priceless names which the memory does not hold.' He does not here mention 'Kim,' but evidently this was a name his memory did hold most tenaciously.

"The Mormon Kim was the son of Morianton, and when his father died he reigned in his stead for eight years, but did not reign in righteousness, 'wherefore he was not favored of the Lord,' and his brother dispossessed him and kept him in captivity all his days. He begat many sons and daughters in captivity. One of his sons is reported as being restored to the throne of his father. But the best of good luck befell Kim when Kipling read his sad story, and made his 'priceless' name immortal by bestowing it upon one of the finest creations of his genius."

One good mother writes to the secretary of the College Board of Trustees, as follows: "Inclosed you will find money order for one dollar to apply on the Graceland fund, sent by Orien and Walter Adair, my two sons. It seems quite a small amount, but the boys go to school every day, and have to chore night and morning, and generally work all day Saturday, so they do not have much time to earn money. This was given to them by their father to buy a box apiece at a box supper, and they concluded not to spend it that way, but to send it to Graceland. The boys are doing fine in their studies, and we hope to some day send them to Graceland. They are twelve and fifteen years old. Credit the money to the boys, and send receipt back to me."

President R. C. Evans opened the winter campaign in the Majestic Opera House, Toronto, Canada, Sunday evening, November 3. He was greeted with a crowded house and hundreds were turned away. This, we believe, is his fourth winter in the Majestic, and it bids fair to be more successful than any of the preceding series of meetings held there.

"One thing more is needed—a standard. We guess at the length of this room, and differ. So we must measure. You put your rule on and it is 75 feet; I put on my rule and it is 50 feet. What's wrong? We have no standard. If we can not measure a room without a standard, how can we measure a church without a standard? The world has different standards, hence differs widely on theological questions. What standard will be the best to use? The gospel is God's word. The standard is the truth, and we must measure ourselves by it. God's word is truth. It was manifested in Christ,"

The Straight Road

ETERNAL LIFE.

Japanese Tract No. 2 written by Elder Edward Ingham, for use in the Hawaiian Mission.

ELDER EDWARD INGHAM OF HONOLULU.

Christianity, the religion of Jesus Christ, is unique amongst the various religions of the world, because it embodies a salient characteristic that is absent from all the rest. It does not, like the systems of Confucius and Buddha, confine its teachings solely to the moral code; but recognizing in humanity the common desire for continued existence, it supplies that which human skill and wisdom could never hope to formulate:—a plan to endow mankind with the gift of eternal life. It is this fact that makes Jesus Christ the “desire of all nations.” He has revealed a plan for the guidance of all mankind, irrespective of color, race, or nationality, and the sole condition upon which the great promise of eternal life is guaranteed under that plan, is one that imposes strict obedience to its laws.

This plan, containing God’s principles of life and salvation, is not dependent wholly upon human testimony for its support, but refers to its divine author for ratification in this language of Jesus Christ: “If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself.” We perceive at once the wisdom of this provision; for if this important matter had been left to our own speculations and vague surmises, our fertile imaginations would have led us all to endless confusion, as is clearly illustrated by the condition of those so-called Christians who have ignored the requirements of the divine plan. It is not the purpose of this paper, therefore, to defend the position of those who have presumed to be wiser than the revealed law of God, and have thus brought about this divided condition of the Christian world; but rather to present the true system, as described in the divine record, and as expressed in the life and character of Jesus Christ. We find when we turn to this record that it is very clear and pronounced on the subject of testimony relating to Jesus Christ and his mission. It says:

If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater: for this is the witness of God which he hath testified of his Son. He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. . . . Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed.”

Such plain language as this can not be misunderstood, and hardly needs any comment. All we ask is that it be given a careful reading, and if the following facts are not readily apparent to the reader we would like to have explained what other possible meaning the language could convey:

1. No man is entirely dependent on outside testimony relative to the identity of Jesus Christ and the character of the promise of eternal life, for the reason that every one can have the witness in himself.

2. This witness can only be obtained by believing in the Son of God and abiding in his doctrine, for Christ and his doctrine are inseparable and must not be disassociated.

Just what is meant by a person having the witness in himself can be best explained by relating an incident in the life of Jesus Christ. It is said that on one occasion he restored the eyesight to a man who had been blind since his birth. Some of those who did not believe on Christ and who would not obey his doctrine, chanced to hear about this miracle, so they sent for a man whose eyes had been opened and questioned him about the matter. They could not deny the fact of the miracle, because the man was well known to have been blind during all his previous lifetime, so they said to him, “This man who restored your sight is a sinner.” The man replied, “Whether he be a sinner or no, I know not; one thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see.” You must readily see how this man had the witness in himself, and no argument that others might urge to the contrary could shake that testimony. Such is the character of the testimony promised to those who have the courage to test with sincerity of purpose, the truth of the promise of eternal life offered through obedience to the doctrine of Jesus Christ to true believers on his name. It is true there are many who have already come to the Chinese in the name of Jesus Christ, but they have not brought his doctrine. They have not offered God's perfect plan as revealed in his record, but have been parading man's counterfeits of that plan. They are referred to in God's record as those who believe not God, but have made him a liar because they believe not the record that God gave of his Son, preaching for doctrines the commandments of men; and of such he says: "Receive him not into your house, neither bid him God-speed."

The church which we represent and commend to your confidence, however, has no apologies to offer for anything that God has seen fit to reveal for man's guidance, and we present to you his plan just as he has described it in his record, without any addition to it or subtraction from it; and upon that rock we are ready to stand and successfully answer the objections of any honest, though skeptical, mind. This plan is arranged upon definite principles of law. The world in which we live is governed by law; that is to say, the forces of nature operate upon definite principles of law, and nothing in nature happens as a mere matter of chance or caprice. Scientific men tell us that the whole universe is governed by law. They tell us that science, though gathered from this small sphere of ours (which is merely an atom in comparison with immensity, is yet the deciphered law of all spheres. We mention this because the Author of the plan or system which we wish to present is "God that made the world and all things therein." He it is, therefore, who controls the laws by which the world and all things therein are governed. Now, if our natural life depends for its existence and perpetuation upon well-defined laws, is it not reasonable to expect that the higher life promised to man by God should also be dependent upon laws fully as definite? We believe so, and find ample warrant for this belief in the following statement by one of the most able of the earlier exponents and defenders of the doctrine of Christ: "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." This statement shows that he understood and appreciated, by reason of his own personal experience, the meaning of Christ's words, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, if a man keep my sayings, he shall never see death." Having yielded obedience to the law of the Spirit of life as revealed in the doctrine of Christ, he had been made a partaker of the more abundant life that Christ came to bring to mankind: a life that physical death could neither terminate nor interrupt, because his obedience to this higher law had saved him from the law of sin and death. He had discovered and followed the avenue that Christ had opened up to the longing desire of all the human family, for perpetual existence, when he said, "I am the way, and the truth, and the life. No man cometh unto the Father but by me"; and had proved through obedience that this announcement made by Christ to the effect that he was the sole author, and interpreter of the law of the Spirit of life, was indeed the truth, and therefore worthy of the confidence of all mankind.

The principles of this law of the Spirit of life we propose to take up and discuss in their regular order, showing their relevancy to the perfect and complete plan devised by God for the endowment of us mortal beings with immortality. The order of their presentation will be as follows: 1. Faith. 2. Repentance. 3. Baptisms. 4. Laying on of hands. 5. The resurrection. 6. Eternal judgment. These subjects will receive separate treatment in subsequent papers, to which the reader's attention is invited.

SPEECH OF ATTORNEY LINAS H. BASSETT.

[Mr. Bassett is a resident of Little Sioux, Iowa, and his speech was made during the Moorhead reunion, in favor of holding the next reunion at Little Sioux. It was reported by Sr. Ella Rich Hawley, and is given space here because of its historical interest.]

I want to say to you, ladies and gentlemen, that if you will give me your attention for a few moments I will not burden you with a long speech.

We come here and present our petition, asking you to come and meet with us, and the greatest promise that we can make is that we will give you a welcoming heart and a neighborly and welcoming hand. That is the best that we can do for you. We want to meet you if possible. We want you to come there and hold a reunion. We do not understand that this is a mercantile affair. Now, I look at these propositions, and I do not see that they are altogether mercantile, so far as the propositions are concerned. The places are all good places, and you have a fine place here, and I know that you have enjoyed yourselves here, but you have had it here for some time, and now we come and ask you to hold it in Little Sioux.

I can say this and feel it to be true, that all the rights and privileges we have will be extended to you, and it is one of the most beautiful places in this part of the State. Now, more than that, we turn over to you the key of the town. We say there is nothing too good for the Latter Day Saints. Why? Our town with all its morals and good influences that it has come up to, and all that it is with the prosperity it now has, has certainly been because of the influences of the Latter Day Saints' Church. One of the founders of that place was one of the pioneer members of the church,—old Father Conyers. And I also remember Father Blair, that eloquent man who resided with us, whose boys played in our streets, and fought with our neighbor boys, swam in the river, and was in every sense a boy.

We look over this audience and we find many here of the rising generation connected with the family of Conyers; the Vredenburgs, and the Condit, and all these. And Little Sioux holds many things that are sacred to the members of the Latter Day Saints' faith. Not only that, but Little Sioux has been a sort of battle ground in early times of the faith, and I know it is true, brothers and sisters of this faith, that when any one throws down the gauntlet there is no lack of warriors to go forth and fight for the faith that they believe is true; and not only that, but all of Little Sioux is a monument sacred to the memory of these old revolutions. There is also another, the one who wrote the book of expose of Latter Day Saints, you remember. Now we have this to say, and I do not want to say anything wrong, nor anything to hurt the feelings of any one; but I have sat as a boy and listened to that man as he preached the truth of this doctrine and the power of it, and what faith he had in it, and that he knew it was true. Now I do not know whether he was a hypocrite and liar in the first place, or whether he was in the second place; but on account of our standard of morals I know that we had less respect for that man in the last times than we had in the first, whether we were members of the church or not.

And so I want you to come with us in 1908 and hold your reunion there. Come with us, and we will give you our city park. There is plenty of room. We will vacate either the south or the north streets at the end of the park, and you will have it just as quiet there as you would in the wilderness of the forests; and at the same time you have cement walks to lead you to the park of our little town. The train service there is good. There are two trains north and two trains south a day that stop here. The water is good. I have heard it said the water is not good there at Little Sioux, but there is a strata there that produces what you would call the tincture of iron, and they say some of the water there tastes of iron and is not healthful, but I do not know. There is one old man there that they say is dying. It is his kidneys, and they claim it is from the water that he drank, but the old man has drunk the water for about ninety years. It is a fact that when you are in need of a tonic the doctor will prescribe iron. We could have given you something away back there before the Latter Day Saints built up the strength of the town,—something besides water,—to drink, but we can not do it to-day.

Now our park there is roomy. It has hardwood trees. It is a grassy plot. And you, ladies and gentlemen, will find that with these streets that we vacate, there is room enough on the edge of the park there to erect your tent. There is one thing further that I wish to say, and that is in regard to the river. The river furnishes a nice place for baptisms, and if it is not in condition, we have one of the finest lakes in Northwestern Iowa, very convenient for the purpose. Now, I have made these few remarks, and I agreed to talk but a little while. As I said in the first place, all that we can offer you, or that we can do for you outside of the mercantile part, is a welcome, a glad-handed welcome, an open-hearted welcome. And I say to you when you come to consider this, I do desire you to come to the conclusion that you should locate it next year at Little Sioux. I thank you.

THOUGHTS ON MARRIAGE.

Thus saith the Lord that created the heavens, God himself that formed the earth, and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited.—Isaiah 45: 18.

Behold the Lord hath created it that it should be inhabited; and he hath created his children that they should possess it.—Book of Mormon, p. 34, large edition.

The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's: but the earth hath he given to the children of men.—Psalm 115: 16.

The above scriptures show the purpose of God in creating the earth; the following will show his plan in peopling it.

God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply and replenish the earth.—Genesis 1: 27, 28.

For this purpose, having created them male and female, he ordained the order of marriage, which order was intended to be observed throughout all generations, as will be seen by referring to Genesis 2: 18 to 26. One woman was given to one man, and his decree was perpetual, and has never been changed. It was passed by infinite wisdom—the wisdom of him who comprehends eternity—hence there could never arise a necessity for change. "Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh."—Genesis 2: 24.

If ever there was a time when it would have been necessary to multiply wives for the purpose of raising up a righteous seed, that time was in the days of Noah, when "all flesh had corrupted his way." But we find the same order was observed by Noah and his sons that was established in the beginning. God, through Malachi, rebuked Judah because of his departure from the divine order, and says, referring to the creation of Eve, "And did he not make one? And wherefore one? That he might seek a goodly seed." (See Matthew 2:15.) This order is confirmed by Jesus Christ. (See Mark 10:6-8.) "They twain shall be one flesh." The prophet Jacob in the Book of Mormon, pages 102, 103, condemns this practice of a plurality of wives, and says: "Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none." This is further emphasized in a revelation given to the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in 1831, section 42, paragraph 7, thus, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else." Again, "And again I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man."—Doctrine and Covenants 49:3.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints considers the marriage covenant, next to the covenant we make with God, the most sacred, solemn, and important contract mortals can enter into; it involves obligations and duties from which we can only be justly released by death, except by the violation of God's law on the part of one of the contractors. Hence it requires the utmost care in the choice of our companions. Love, not lust, should be the motive power. Divine wisdom is needed to direct our choice. The injunction, "Be not unequally yoked," demands that we should weigh well the conditions and the obligations we are about to take upon us, and see that we are prepared to abide the one, and fulfill the other. Lust is the antipodes of love, and its bitter foe. Truth, purity, and faith are the strength of love; without these there is no true love; and without that, the marriage bond becomes a galling fetter. True love is a citadel of strength to the household; where that abides the heart is satisfied. The eye never wanders after greener pastures, and the soul is full of bliss that language can not describe. But love must be cherished by both parties to the contract. It must be mutually given, or there can be no union of hearts, and where union of hearts is not found, there needs no hotter hell. I repeat, true love is a source of strength, light, and life, and where this priceless gem is lacking it is darkness, despair, shame, and death in their worst forms. The smiles of love are like the healing of the tree of life. Its language soothes, cheers, and gladdens the heart, and chases away the gloom from the desponding soul. True love always seeks the interest of others in preference to its own. No words can define its nature better than those of the inspired penman. Love never fails, it suffereth long, is kind, envies not, vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth. A palace without love is hell garnished. The humblest cottage is heaven when love reigns there. But to be loved we must be lovable, graciously yielding to others that which we long for. Selfishness must have no part in us. Suspicion of evil will gnaw as a viper at our hearts; it breeds jealousy, the blackest demon of the infernal pit. It will be well to remember that perfection is not now an attribute of humanity, hence patience and forbearance are priceless jewels. A smile for a frown, a kiss for a blow, a word of kindness for an outburst of anger will go far toward warding off trouble; but it will require great effort on our part, and much earnest prayer for divine help to enable us to govern ourselves thus; but we shall be stronger for the conflict. A pure life leaves no opening for the demon to enter. Let no look, word or sign incite to jealousy. If misunderstandings arise, try to reason together in love, always remembering your own liability to err. Unity is the offspring of love, the secret of happiness and prosperity, the strength of the home circle. Discord is the foe of your peace, the destroyer of your happiness, and a curse to your posterity; it entails upon them an heritage of shame, implants a spirit of strife in their young breasts, destroys confidence, begets suspicion, engenders hate, and opens the heart to all the infernal brood of evils that are seeking to take captive their young souls and drag them down to perdition. If we love our children and desire to bless them by planting their feet in the path of virtue, we must walk therein ourselves. But this subject is inexhaustible. It enters into all the ramifications of life, for the family is the foundation of the home, the community, the state, the nation, and of the world. The peace, happiness, and prosperity of all depend upon the condition of the family. Hence the sacredness, solemnity, and importance of marriage, the necessity of wisdom in our choice, and the due preparation of ourselves that we may be properly qualified to take upon us the sacred obligation.

May God bless these few thoughts to all who read, is the prayer of the writer. CHARLES DERRY.

THE BOOK OF MORMON: WHAT IT IS.

I think myself happy, king Agrippa, because I shall answer for myself this day before thee touching all the things whereof I am accused of the Jews.—Paul.

In a previous chapter we are told that the Jews who came down from Jerusalem laid many and grievous charges against Paul which they could not prove; declaring among other things that he had been teaching everywhere against the people, the law, the temple, and against Cæsar. In answer to this arraignment, when permitted to speak for himself, he declared, "Neither against the law of the Jews, neither against the temple, nor yet against Cæsar, have I offended any thing at all."

Here we have the accusation and the denial plainly defined; and while we are informed that the complainants were unable to prove the charges made, we are not told that the accused was able to establish his innocence to the satisfaction of the court of appeals; and, if we should drop the investigation at this point, might never know whether Paul were innocent, or guilty as charged.

Fortunately, we have an abridged record of the life of the accused in the Acts of the Apostles, and also numerous epistles written by him, which we are not too prejudiced to read, and which prove conclusively that he was a man of excellent character, thoroughly reliable, who loved his nation better than his own self, and desired nothing but her good, and "had done nothing worthy of death or of bonds."

We have a parallel case to this in the subject under consideration in this paper. Men have come from various places and laid many grievous charges against the Book of Mormon, which they could not prove; and have undertaken to tell what it is, and what its teachings are, some claiming it to be the Spalding Romance, others a fraud, a golden bible, or Mormon bible, accusing it of teaching polygamy, denying, or failing to teach Christ, etc., etc.

We feel ourselves happy in permitting the book to speak for itself, and, while we give attentive audience, hear it declare itself to be "an abridgment of the record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites; written to the Lamanites, who are a remnant of the house of Israel; and also to Jew and Gentile; written by way of commandment, and also by the spirit of prophecy and of revelation. . . . An abridgment taken from the Book of Ether; also which is a record of the people of Jared; who were scattered at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people, when they were building a tower to get to heaven; which is to show unto the remnant of the house of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off for ever; and also to the convincing of Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, . . . manifesting himself unto all nations. And now if there are faults, they are the mistakes of men; wherefore, condemn not the things of God, that ye may be found spotless at the judgment seat of Christ."

As in the case of the apostle Paul, we have the accusation which can not be proved, and the statement of the accused as to what it is and why written, and if we should proceed no further in our investigation, as is too often the case, would never know whether this book is a reliable witness for itself or not. All we ask is that, as in the case of the apostle Paul, the character of the book be examined, and, if found pure and good and in harmony with the word of God and with its own claims, that it be acquitted of the charge made against it.

It is not the purpose of this brief paper to produce the manifold witnesses to the truthfulness of the claims of the book, as revealed by prophecy, tradition, myths, and archæology, but those of us who have examined the book find it true in every detail to the claims made by itself. We find it pure and lofty in character; valiant in its testimony for Jesus and his sure, unchanged, and unchangeable gospel. So far from teaching polygamy, we find it condemning the practice in no uncertain terms; we find the truth verified in its pages that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation those who fear him and work righteousness are accepted of him; that he has made of one blood all nations to dwell on all the face of the earth, as it is written; that after the "confusion of tongues" at Babel, the Lord scattered the people over all the face of the earth; and that God did not leave the inhabitants of Ancient America ignorant of the great atonement made for them, of the resurrection of Christ, and the means of grace, whereby they might be saved.

We find faults in the book, as claimed by itself; but they are the mistakes of men truly (as we know God makes no mistakes), and are principally in the use of a language imperfectly understood, and used only because there was not room on the plates for the more elaborate Hebrew tongue, which was more perfectly spoken. While the hand of man has been busy uncovering the monuments of the past, revealing to all the unmistakable evidences of an ancient civilization on this continent surpassingly excellent, this book lifts the veil, revealing to the student the harmony of the record with these silent witnesses, shedding light on that which would otherwise remain for ever obscure, and confirming the promise of God to Abraham, that in him and his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed.

Jesus declared to his accusers: "Therefore if I bear witness of myself, yet my witness is true"; and so, as in the case of the apostle Paul, when guided by the Spirit of truth, we are convinced that the Book of Mormon bears witness of itself, its witness is true; and we can say, with king Agrippa: "This man [book] doeth nothing worthy of death or of bonds."

"I CAN CAST OUT DEVILS AND CURE INSANE," SAYS HEALER.

SPRINGFIELD, September 28.—Declaring that he has the power to cast out "evil spirits" from people, Doctor Alexander Proctor, a magnetic physician, living at No. 69 St. James Avenue, told a Boston American reporter to-day that he could enter insane asylums, if permitted, and cure ninety per cent of the inmates.

"I believe that ninety per cent of the patients of our insane asylums are possessed by evil spirits that could be driven away," said Doctor Proctor.

"I really believe that if the insane asylums were to be thrown open to those having such power as I possess the results would be wonderful. I, myself, have obtained access to them a few times, always with favorable results.

"For many years, hundreds in fact, physicians have made practically no advancement in methods of curing the insane, and the ratio of cures they accomplish is not increasing to any appreciable extent. This is because they do not know how to go about it and they never will until they approach the matter from the standpoint of a psychic.

"When I am called to attend a person who is what is commonly called 'insane' I discover at once whether evil spirits have my patient in their control. This is easy with me, for I am endowed with that psychic sense that enables me to discern their presence at once.

"I study my subject intently and, through sympathy, seem to take my patient's bodily and mental condition right upon myself.

"There is an aura about every person which I quickly discern. I set up spiritual communication by means of vibration. This vibration is more or less similar to the pulsings of sound, heat, light, and radium.

"I then drive out the evil spirits by the coöperation of the good spirits.

"Often I can witness the conflict between the powers of light and the powers of darkness for the possession of some poor unfortunate. I can see and hear clairvoyantly, and for this reason I can see the struggle—sometimes frightful—and hear the voices of command of the good and of the protest of the evil as the struggle is waging.

"Once I was called into the northern part of this State to treat a young woman whom the doctors had pronounced to be hopelessly insane. When I reached the house I found that she was raving, wild, and on the point of injuring herself or her dearest friends, none of whom she recognized.

"I saw at once that the girl was tormented by evil spirits. 'Leave her to me,' I said. 'I believe I can cure her. If I can not, then send her to an asylum.' This was nine o'clock at night. I sat by the bed, called up the powers of light and within a very few hours, but not until an awful battle had been waged, did I triumph over the evil ones and drive them from the poor girl. She dropped into a quiet sleep and the next morning awakened in her right mind." —Boston American, September 29, 1907.

SEE DEVILS IN MRS. ROMADKA.

That Mrs. Charles J. Romadka, confessed burglar, is a Jekyll and Hyde character, "possessed of devils" as truly as were the Biblical persons whom Jesus restored to moral sanity, is the contention of two Chicago physicians. One of these is Doctor Axel Gustafson, who attended Mrs. Romadka. The other is Doctor Sheldon Leavitt, a well known practitioner, and connected with numerous medical societies and Chicago hospitals.

In outlining his startling beliefs the latter frankly admits that the position he is taking "would be regarded as mere nonsense by the orthodox pathologist."

"But," he continued, "it must be remembered that he is wedded to materialism and has no definite faith in a conscious existence beyond so-called death."

Both physicians do not hesitate to express the belief that the woman is under the influence of "disembodied spirits."

"This woman, when herself, was all a woman should be," said Doctor Gustafson. "When another spirit overpowered her personality she was what the police declared her to be."

Doctor Leavitt, whom Doctor Gustafson consulted, said in his letter of reply:

"I have found enough to justify your belief and mine that it is another case of obsession, as it is commonly called—'possession,' as I am disposed to call it. By the orthodox medical specialist I suppose it would be regarded as a case of 'dementia.'

"The term obsession, as used by the latter, signifies a mere delusion, no evil spirit being recognized by him as actually existing. But to certain of us who have returned to the more archaic diagnosis, it is supposed to mean that the term possession better expresses. I really believe that modern scientific physical research has gone far enough to justify the assumption of such a state in many cases hitherto classed under various heads, but more particularly under that of dementia.

"I don't know what was the matter with me. The devil was in me,' says this woman. 'You can do nothing for me. No one can. There's something bad in me I can't control.'

"Even medical men who believe most implicitly in a future existence, are not willing to admit the possibility of a disembodied spirit taking possession of the body of another. Christian people are put into the anomalous position of believing most emphatically in the 'divinity' of Jesus Christ, and yet confess that his conception of the alleged demon-possessed people whom he cured, and with whose evil spirits he was said to converse, was utterly wrong.

"I formerly trained in the same company and believed in the orthodox medical translation of symptoms like those manifested by this poor Mrs. Romadka, but have come to take a different view. In doing so I have not departed from a rational and scientific line of reasoning.

"The accused is amenable to psychic treatment. She ought not to be punished, but ought to be placed under the care of a good psycho-therapist for cure."—The Chicago Sunday Tribune, October 13, 1907.

UNIVERSAL PEACE.

Bishop H. C. Potter, of New York, preached a sermon last Sunday in which he showed the utter futility of the hopes of the professional dreamers of universal peace. The failure of the long-winded peace conference at the Hague was probably the inspiration of his sermon.

The Capital has sharply criticized Bishop Potter for some of his words and some of his deeds in times past, but it is free to confess that he is much nearer right than wrong in his view of the universal peace crusade.

There is not a nation on the face of the earth—no matter how peaceful its traditions or how conservative its people—that can not be transformed into a veritable passion of war feeling in twenty-four hours.

Americans represent as high a type of civilization as can be found on the globe. American people know the awful cost of war. They are lovers of peace and stand ready to do all in their power to promote peace among all the nations of the earth. But how much of a spark would it take to ignite a flame?

Supposing a fleet of Japanese battleships should suddenly appear in the vicinity of the Philippine Islands and there was any reluctance on the part of the Japanese officials in explaining the mission of the fleet. What would happen?

We all know that a roar would sweep across this continent which would shake the world. Recruiting stations would be swamped with the thousands and even millions of red-blooded Americans who would want to enlist for the conflict they thought was impending.

Americans love peace so dearly that they would preserve it with shot and shell if necessary. So will it be until human nature itself shall have been transformed.—Des Moines Capital, October 3, 1907.

CREEKS AND TEN LOST TRIBES.

"The Indians are the most superstitious people on earth," said a man a few days ago, who had taught for years in a Creek Indian School. "They have myths and legends by the score. Some of them are as beautiful and picturesque as the legends of the old Greeks and Romans.

"I boarded for five years with a Creek Indian who had been educated at Carlisle. He knew the Indian legend that they are one of the lost ten tribes of Israel. This Indian was the son of a medicine man who was once great and powerful in the tribe. All his knowledge of Indian lore came from his father, the medicine man.

"This medicine man said that the Creeks were one of the lost ten tribes of Israel. The legend ran that they were once associated with the other tribes and that they had wandered and became separated. They wandered for years far to the north until they came to a sea. There they built boats and embarked. They steered their course by the wand of a medicine man. Each morning he went to his teepee and set up his divining rod and told them which direction to pursue. They followed this rod from a warm country to a cold sea on which they set sail. The sea was crossed and then they traveled toward the south again.

"The Creeks have a covenant of their tribe which is kept with the chiefs. No one but the elect is ever permitted to see this guarantee of the genuineness of the Creek faith and origin."—Pittsburg (Kansas) Headlight.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Memories.

There is many a page folded down and worn
In the book we have christened memory.

We think there are few readers of the Home Column that will not appreciate and deem most timely the article in the last issue by May June, "Just One of the College Girls." In our heart it has awakened a flood of memories—memories sweetly pleasant, which seem to emerge from the past like visions from a well remembered dream; and so vivid are they we have but to close our eyes and we are living them over again, and our pulses are thrilling as though all were reality.

If the gospel of Christ means anything, it means love and good will. As believers in the gospel restored by the angel in its primitive purity, can we afford to be less kind, less thoughtful of the welfare of others, than are those who have less to incite them to kindness, and less to be responsible for than have we?

But are we? is the question. And it is a question which the writer can not answer. Each resident of Lamoni, each member of our church must answer for himself or herself.

"How the years have come and gone" until more than fifty have passed into eternity. She was only a college girl—one among two hundred others—a stranger in a strange place, but full of hope and ambition, with high ideals of what the future held to be gained by persevering work and honest effort. Only a girl who had been born when her parents were journeying to Zion—who had fled with her parents from Missouri and again from Nauvoo—whose father was now dead, and whose life had known little of ease or luxury. Not one of the faculty knew or could recommend her, and but one other (a girl from her own town) was personally acquainted with her.

Both girls were members of the Methodist Church, but the college was under Presbyterian control. "When I am in Rome I will do as Rome does" said her friend. "You may do as you like, but while I am here I shall go to the Presbyterian church with the rest of the girls." The girls were allowed their choice, and so the one of whom we write chose to be true to her faith at home or abroad, and went to the Methodist church entirely alone. She had not taken her church letter with her—had no letters of introduction, but was simply "a stranger within their gates."

And now how fared it with our college girl? Was she left to feel herself a stranger, unnoticed and lonely? Far from it. No sooner were the services over than the minister came to where she was waiting to pass into the vestibule, and, with a cordial shake of the hand, inquired if she was not a student? After a brief conversation in which explanations were given, he introduced her to some of his members and said, "Mrs. Harris and I will call on you this week, and I bid you a most cordial welcome to worship with us while you remain at school." Thus was laid for our college girl the foundation of a lasting friendship, which remained during her three years at school and afterwards until the Civil War (which found her in the South) came as a barrier between them.

Nor was it the minister and his wife only who offered pleasant and kindly attentions. Many members of the church called on her, and often sought and obtained permission for her to dine with them, and sometimes to take pleasant walks or drives; and, looking back at it now, through the mist of years, she can truly say, "I was a stranger and ye took me in."

And now, no longer a girl, she comes to-night to ask of those in whose midst are the boys and girls of Graceland, Can you afford to do less than this for them? Can you fail to make them welcome to every privilege of church, Sunday-school, and Religio, and to let them know that you welcome them, without feeling that you fail in the duty you owe them? If, indeed, we have pastors—men whom God has made "over-seers of the flock," is not this their opportunity, and can they afford to pass it by? But socially, most of all, do these boys and girls justly demand of us a measure of attention. The fact that they are here to study, to obtain an education, does not make them into blocks of wood or stone. It does not petrify the heart which in each of them is fully alive to the need of love and kindness. May June has told you all of this, and her own experience is not so very far in the past. If it was your girl, your boy, away from you and home—from your love and home influence—just as you would have others do to them, will not you do to these? Take them home with you, occasionally, to a social meal. No elaborate menu is necessary. Just a cordial welcome to the family board; a manifestation of a kindly interest in them. It means much to them, and will make upon them impressions never to be forgotten. Then:

"Comfort one another,
For the way is often dreary,
The feet are often weary,
And the heart is often sad.
There is heavy burden-bearing,
When it seems that none are caring,
And we half forget that ever we were glad.

"Comfort one another,
With the hand-clasp close and tender,
With the sweetness love can render,
And the looks of friendly eyes.
Do not wait with grace unspoken,
While life's daily bread is broken;
Gentle speech is oft like manna from the skies."

Letter Department

St. EDWARD, Nebraska, October 8, 1907.

Editors Herald: We are leaving Nebraska for Idaho. Expect to start in less than two weeks, if possible. It fills my heart with pain to leave our old home. We expect to sell, and that hurts worse.

Mr. Gill, daughter Hazel, and I, spent two months out there this summer. My daughter stayed, and is teaching school and music. We did not expect to go till spring, but the children think it best for me to come back, as some of the places are being contested. Our two boys went last March. So, away over the mountains I shall have to go again. I expect to go alone, but have not felt much afraid. It seems to me God will take care of me.

When I attended the conference at Independence, April, 1906, the engine ran off the track, but I did not feel afraid. On our way west this summer we went into Salt Lake City over a wreck, and when we came back we again went into Salt Lake City over a wreck which was still burning, the one Bro. Alvin Knisley wrote about in the HERALD.

My brother, Edward Hall, is at the hospital, Columbus, Nebraska. Has been very sick. Is able to sit up a little now. Some who read the HERALD will be glad to hear of him.

While in Idaho this summer we heard of but one Saint, a young man by the name of Taylor, but did not see him. If any Saints live in that county I hope they will come to see me. We are only twenty miles from the Union Pacific main line. Minidoka is the station where we leave the main line, and Heyburn is only two miles from our land. We will welcome any of the ministry. We hope Bro. Briggs and Bro. Condit will not forget us.

Your sister,

MRS. E. A. GILL.

BAY MINETTE, Alabama, October, 16, 1907.

Editors Herald: I wish to say that victory still perches on the gospel banner. We have had the pleasure in this place of seeing one more victory won for the truth.

Bro. T. C. Kelley was challenged to meet Doctor Love of the Christian persuasion, or Campbellite order, to be better understood, in discussion in this place, which discussion came off last week. Twelve sessions were held. The propositions related to the apostolicity of Love's church, and the divinity of Joseph Smith's prophetic calling and the Book of Mormon, both in negative form.

The Saints are all well pleased with the results, and, so far as we have heard from outsiders, the cause did not suffer from the attack made on it. One, a Methodist lady, who had never heard the faith presented before, said she was ready to unite with us, but desired to have her father hear it, that he might join at the same time. Others said they learned lots about the work, and were well pleased. A great deal of prejudice was removed.

Bro. Kelley, as in the past, was amply able to meet every opposition, and present the matter clearly before the people. He was prepared.

I acted as moderator for Bro. Kelley, and presided over the meetings. My task was easy, as no questions of order arose. Two more debates were talked of, one at McKenzie, Alabama, next July, and one at Highland Home, Alabama, in August.

Since last writing, I preached some at Lone Star, and Jones' Mills. I baptized seven at Lone Star. I was not able to get to Stedham, as I expected. Bro. Kelley, and Alma and Fayette Booker and myself are on our way to the reunion in Florida. The world still moves, and the gospel work too, but not so rapidly.

Yours in the faith,

J. M. STUBBART.

Dear Herald: Seeing nothing from this district for some time, I wish to say that the reunion of this and the Gallands Grove Districts at Moorhead, September 13 to 22, was very successful. A season of spiritual uplifting was enjoyed. The preaching was instructive and helpful. The gifts were manifested to the edification and encouragement of the Saints. Bro. E. L. Kelley and J. F. Mintun remained in the district for a day or two after the reunion closed; Bro. Kelley at Woodbine, and Bro. Mintun at Magnolia and Woodbine. Also Bro. Heman C. Smith remained in the district for two weeks, preaching at Pisgah, Magnolia, Logan, Bigler's Grove, and Woodbine, dedicating the church at Bigler's Grove on Sunday, September 29. We are all thankful to these brethren for their kindly aid, and extend to them a cordial invitation to call whenever they can, and assuring them a hearty reception.

It was my privilege to accompany Bro. Heman C. Smith part of the time while he was here. He had the kindness to permit me to arrange his itinerancy in the district. His dedicatory sermon at Bigler's Grove was a splendid effort, and we all felt that Heman was accompanied by the power of the Holy Ghost.

Our district conference at Woodbine, October 5 and 6, passed off pleasantly, and an enjoyable time was had by all. Our next district conference will be held at Moorhead, February 8 and 9, 1908. It is hoped that all will take notice, and as many as possible be present. I am just now holding a few meetings at Little Sioux, where I find the Saints, "the old guards," augmented by some later accessions, firm in the faith. This is the condition in all the branches of the district. The old reliables, adding now and then to their numbers, are holding the banner aloft; while, sad to relate, some seem to be straggling in the rear, being liable always to capture by the enemy. The district as a whole seems to be moving forward, the Saints learning their duties more perfectly. As witness we cite the increased payment of tithes and offerings.

Praying for added strength for all God's people, I remain, in the bonds of love,

SIDNEY PITT,

President of Little Sioux District.

BICKNELL, Indiana, October 26, 1907.

Dear Herald: I moved to this place about the first of March, 1907. It is an old town, become new by the development of coal mines in this vicinity. It is located in Knox County, about nine miles from Plainville. I visited the Plainville Saints shortly after I came here. Bro. Lambkin was holding meetings with good interest at the time I was over there, and left word for Bro. Harpe to come over here, which he did shortly afterward. He and Bro. Peter Flinn held meetings on the street. An immense amount of good was done for the cause. Men and women heard the gospel who had never heard it before. Many expressed their disappointment at the meetings closing when they did. None were baptized, but many are interested; and I expect something to be done here in the spring, or before, as I expect Bro. Harpe back this fall or winter. If he does not come, we want him or whoever is sent to this district in the spring, to come here, and I will try to spare about a month, and we will see what can be done for the cause here. In the meantime I will tract the town.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

ROBERT GRIEVE.

NEBRASKA CITY, Nebraska, October 10, 1907.

Editors Herald: This evening my mind is wandering to our dear church papers, and the great good and comfort they are to all of like precious faith, and how much I do enjoy the letters from our brothers and sisters from week to week. Their experiences are ever a benefit to me, and each week the pages are read with great delight. I find by reading, the experiences of the Saints are much alike, that none are going through life on flowery beds of ease, but all have hope and faith in that day of rest which we often sing of in that sweet by and by. Many have been the changes since I penned a line for your pages. Two years ago this fall my health began to fail, and I have suffered much since; but, thank God, this fall I feel that health and strength have returned, and I feel to rejoice, hoping and trusting that I may again be able to work and do more in the Master's cause. At the present I am at the city visiting, and trying to be company for our brother, Walter Self and family, as they are now left without the guarding care of a mother, she having passed away to her home prepared, on August 22 last, leaving the family lonely and sad. As death has invaded our family three times in two months, which has caused much sorrow and loneliness, we feel the tie on the other shore is becoming stronger day by day. Our aged mother, at the ripe age of eighty-eight, passed away August 3, and again October 3 our niece died, leaving a sweet baby girl of two summers. While the hand of affliction has been laid heavily upon us a family, yet we are trying to be resigned to God's will. The more we learn of the plan of salvation, the hope we have after this life is ended, the easier it is to bear the trials of this life; as we realize they only work out for us a greater weight of glory, if only we bear them with patience. I expect to go home to Holden, Missouri, sometime in November, if all goes well. We got located there this spring, after trying to reside there for four years. Many of the sisters from Western Nebraska, where we traveled for three years, have written to me; but being troubled with nervousness, I have not been able to write. Trust that none will feel that I have forgotten them. Far, far from it. Day by day I meditate and think of you all, and our hearts were pained when we read of the sad news of Bro. Payne's death. May the Father's blessing be on his loved ones, bringing comfort and cheer to their lonely hearts.

We were permitted to attend the Independence Stake reunion this fall, held at Holden, and enjoyed the same very much.

Heavy frost, leaves falling fast. I feel much like the birds, like going south to a warmer climate.

Ever wishing to see Zion redeemed in all her beauty, as God desires her to be,
MRS. R. O. SELF.

St. JOSEPH, Missouri, October 22, 1907.

Dear Saints: I thought I would write a few lines, thinking that perhaps I might say something that would encourage some one. Speaking of the work, it is the best on earth. It is certainly divine, because this fact has been demonstrated to us many times. Truly has Jesus said, "He that doeth the will of the Father shall know of the doctrine." Many have been the times when we have sat under the influence and power of the Spirit, and great trials and burdens have been lifted from us. How many times and how many people have been lifted from a hell, a hell of misery and distress by the loving-kindness of God, and the power and influence of the Spirit resident in the church! Is God mindful of his own? Yea, verily, the power of God has been made manifest among us lately in the restoring of our Bro. Kinnaman to health, who was very near death's door, and the healing of Sr. Tilden of a tumor. We go back a little farther and call to mind the raising of a sister from a bed of sickness nigh unto death. When I would call at the house in the morning and evening I expected to be told that the sister was dead; but she was raised to health and strength through the administration of the elders. We sometimes forget these things; but when we are tried, and get blue, if we only look back upon the years that have passed, we read sometimes wherein God has made his power manifest, and our hearts have rejoiced. We are human, subject to the weakness of human nature, and our finite minds become darkened, and we are not able to look through the veil.

I call to mind a story that I once heard, which is something like this: A little child and her father were walking along through a dark place, and the child said to her papa, "Papa, where are we going? It is so dark." Her papa said, "Never mind, dear, I will take you by the hand and lead you, and it will be well." The child, putting full confidence in her father, was willing to be led, and all was well in the end.

There is much evidence from a scientific standpoint that proves the divinity of the work. It is encouraging to see how nicely the scientific discoveries of this century sustain the historical claims of the Bible and Book of Mormon. Truly the apostle said, "The word of the Lord endureth for ever."

I wish to call the attention of the Saints to the following advertisement: "The Biblical Guide is a work composing eight volumes, is said to be the best rebuttal of the higher criticism ever published. The terms are twelve dollars cash, or twelve dollars in monthly installments of one dollar." The S. S. Scranton Company, Hartford, Connecticut.

cut. The Technical World for November, 1907, contains a description of the Largest American mastodon, measuring twenty-three feet seven inches long and nine feet two inches high. The Christian Science Sentinel for January 24, 1901, contains an account of a buried city in Mississippi.

Let us build upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, and so study and mold our characters as to be fit for the kingdom of God.

Your brother in Christ,

BERT L. WHITE.

EAST PHARSALIA, New York, October 14, 1907.

Editors Herald: I leave this place to-morrow enroute for Brooklyn to attend the district conference, after a stay here of a little over five weeks; and during that time all manner of lies and credulous stories have been in circulation about Joseph Smith and the Saints. Surely Satan rages and the people imagine a vain thing. It is strange how such rumors get afloat, especially when an elder comes into a neighborhood. I had thought that in a place like East Pharsalia, where the work had been preached for a period of over ten years, and a church built, the people would have become naturalized to the work.

When I came here I took stage from Norwich, a distance of ten miles. When on our way I was making inquiries from the driver if he knew a man by the name of Griswold. He answered in the affirmative, and as Bro. Griswold was handling land plaster he took me for one of the firm looking after the business. He felt like talk, for he had got enough of Paddy's eye-water in him to make his tongue go freely. So we got to talking about churches. He had to tell me about the Saints' church in this place. "And," said he, "I often thought that I would like to put or paint an inscription on that church: 'Griswold's folly.' Such a religion as that!" As we got near our destination I told him who I was, and what I was, and my business here. "Well," he says, "you will have to excuse me for my talk; but I don't give a d—— if you are a preacher, for I am a plain talker." His religion was: Do unto others as you would have them do to you. As for him he was going to live by it and die by it; "for," says he, "they are a lot of hypocrites in the churches." He considered himself as good, and better than most of them.

Bro. Griswold was at the hotel awaiting my arrival, and took me to his home. We arranged for meetings, and got to work holding as many as the Saints could conveniently attend. Not many attended; but those who did became interested, and advocated the doctrine to others. The sanctified ones of so-called Christian churches got alarmed, and a terrible commotion was in the place. The baser sort threatened to smash all the windows in the church, and drive us out. The night was set for it. We got word of it, and about the time Bro. Rathbun came, a little late, he met one of them at the church. Seeing that he was recognized, he made his exit, and the boys left, doing no harm to the church.

So the next was an application of tar and feathers for the preacher; for he was the cause of it all. One good Christian woman volunteered to give a feather-bed for that purpose. Another good woman would furnish the tar. So they had it all arranged, but lacked one important part, and that was a leader. No one had the courage to carry it into effect. So the preacher was permitted to go unmolested.

One report afloat was that I had come here to take two girls who belong to the church to Salt Lake; and, of course, every person who heard it believed it. On Sunday last the Baptist preacher could not finish his sermon without telling what he knew about Joe Smith and the Mormons. He said Joe walked on the water on a table at Sherburne, near here. Joe had the planks concealed under the water, and a man took a saw and sawed the plank from the underside within an eighth of an inch from being off, so Joe would not see it. Joe started walking, singing, "Nearer, my God, to thee," and as soon as he stepped on the plank that was cut, down he went; but it did not drown him. So that is the way he used to deceive the people. And of course the congregation believed the story, because the preacher told it in the pulpit, and it is just as true as the gospel he preached to them that morning.

Another story that has been in circulation is about Joe trying to walk on the Susquehanna River, at Afton, this State. He had his planks all laid under water, each plank anchored, so as not to be seen. And the person who removed one of the planks, in ten feet of water, was a boy about four years old; and the people believed the story. Another one, and that is the latest, runs this way—being a history of the career of Smith. This all happened near here. This is Chenango County, and to make it of more authority it is written by his first wife. When he married his second wife he made No. 1 put the ring on No. 2's finger, and she had to do it. I wanted to see that history. Well, he had not got it yet. He went the day before to get it, and the parties told him they had loaned it, but they would try to get it for him. He was satisfied of the truth of its contents, for a Baptist deacon told him of it in the first place.

In one conversation I presented to him some of the Bible men; for instance, Samuel, who hewed Agag, the king, to pieces; also Moses killing the Egyptian; David's actions; also Solomon's. I wanted to know if their actions destroyed all the good ones they ever had done. He admitted he did not consider that they did.

Well, now, we present some of the claims made by Joseph Smith from a Bible standpoint. We do not hear of him killing anybody. He was not a man of blood; so that will make him a little better than some of the other fellows. The reformers have a hard record,—some of them. "Now," I said, "the teachings of Mr. Smith are more closely in harmony with the Bible than the most of the others, and still you are willing to believe those slanderous reports about him in preference to truth." It is true, they are willing to believe a lie rather than the truth; no matter how black it may be, it is truth to them because it is in opposition to the gospel of Christ.

While here I have been blessed with the Master's Spirit, both in the pulpit and in private conversation. God is willing to own these people as his. They have done well, built a neat little church chapel, seated with chairs, and the floor carpeted; paid for, and dedicated to the Lord—his house, an ensign in this part of the country of the restored gospel. They have held to the work; have no officers; only five in number, six now; I baptized one since coming here.

The world's people thought Latter Day Saintism was dead here until I came, and now the whole neighborhood is in an uproar. One woman prayed that I might be struck by lightning. Another woman invited me to come to her home and visit them. I took Bro. Rathbun with me, and when we rapped at the door she met us, and wanted to know if I was going to talk religion. I replied, "Yes, ma'am." "Well," says she, "you can not get in here." She was a Christian. I suppose if I had said I would hang my religion outside, she would have invited me in. I hope I shall never see the day when I will leave my religion out of doors for the sake of getting into a house, to please anybody. God forbid. I feel, with my soul, to say, "Nearer, my God, to thee," every day of my life.

Before bringing my letter to a close, let me say to you editors of HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, and Hope, who frame the articles that go into the homes of the Saints (and many who are not of the faith), bringing tidings from far and near of the glorious message of Christ, how it wins its way to honest hearts, also bringing good tidings to the man at the battle's front, giving him cheer, comfort, and encouragement; while you have thought you needed the prayers of the Saints as well as does the man in the field, we agree with you, and have no doubt that thousands remember you in this way. And while I write, the Spirit of the Master brings tidings to me that his watchcare is over you; so be of good cheer and work on. Your sermons and articles have comforted the Saints here, though no elder gave them a call for so long a time.

Peace and prosperity be to Zion and her cause.

SAMUEL BROWN.

BOLCKOW, Missouri, October 22, 1907.

Editors Herald: Having seen nothing from the Nodaway District for some time, I thought I would assume the task of writing. Our district conference convened last Saturday and Sunday, October 19 and 20, with the Sweet Home Branch, near Ravenwood. The weather was ideal; roads very good. A large number of Saints were present from different parts of the district. About twenty young ladies, and twenty young men, all Saints, attended and manifested an interest in the work of their Master. About fifty-one adults, mothers and fathers, in the kingdom, with several children, and quite a number of outsiders attended the Sunday services. The good Spirit was enjoyed, and was manifest throughout the conference. Bro. F. C. Keck was with us, also Brn. M. F. Gowell, W. E. Haden, and W. P. Bootman. The preaching was of a very high order, plain and convincing. The next conference will convene in Guilford in February, 1908.

The district is ably presided over by Bro. A. E. McCord, who is endeavoring to bring the branches up to their highest possible spiritual attainment. Three branches that he had visited the past quarter according to his report, organized a priesthood meeting and are endeavoring to understand their duties more clearly than heretofore. The Sunday-school department of this grand latter-day work is also accomplishing good in this part of the Lord's vineyard. About sixty young men and women, as many children, and about fifty mothers and fathers, avail themselves of the privileges most every Sunday. There is one Religio society, in the Sweet Home Branch. It is very interesting. One class in Doctrine and Covenants in the Guilford school, and one class in the Bedison school study the Book of Mormon Quarterly. A normal class has been organized in each of the following schools: Guilford, Ross Grove, and Sweet Home, with an aggregate of twenty-five or thirty members.

We held an institute in August, an account of which appeared in the Exponent. Another is talked of, to be held during the holidays. Plans are being formulated for it. We hope for a good time.

The Saints here are blessed this year with good crops, the majority of the Saints being farmers. Corn, oats, wheat, and hay were all very good. No fruit. Some berries. Saints should be thankful for these bounties of life. God is the giver of all that is good.

I, for one, rejoice in this latter-day work. I know it is of God. I hope to live worthy of the name Saint. My duties are now principally in the Sunday-school department, being district superintendent. I hope to be able to do my work well, that it may be effectual for good. I hope to see more of the Saints manifest a zeal for the Sunday-school. I also have charge of a class in the Doctrine and Covenants, which is indeed interesting to me. Much can be learned by careful study.

Space forbids me to mention many of the faithful, zealous ones, who are getting to be effectual laborers. There are five now where there was one twelve years ago. May God bless every honest effort put forth by all, and Zion be speedily redeemed, is the prayer of,

Your brother in the gospel of Christ,
W. B. TORRANCE.

WOODBURN, Ontario, October 22, 1907.

Editors Herald: Bro. Hill, of Belding, came here three weeks ago, and on Friday got permission from the members to preach in the Methodist Hall on Saturday night and Sunday. I can not describe our joy while thinking we were going to hear a Latter Day Saint sermon; but when we (my husband, and son, and an organist I had got to play, and a gentleman, a member of their church who had told Bro. Hill to go ahead and preach, and if they charged anything he would pay it, and a few others got there,) Bro. Hill came to us and said the preacher would not let us have the hall more than one night. We waited quite awhile, but no one came. The organist thought she could call them by playing, but still no one came; so Bro. Hill suggested it might be better to preach on the street, which he finally did. Bro. Hill did well in telling why he was a Latter Day Saint. He had quite a good crowd, and good order; but it was so chilly that he had to give it up. I have handed out some Glad Tidings since then, and different ones said to me, "Do not think I believe you are Mormons; for I do not." I never was treated better in my life, and mostly by the Methodist members.

I wish the Saints would pray for my husband, that he may obey the gospel, so that we may work together in this work; for I know it is of God, and the time remaining in which to work is short.

Every praying for the upbuilding of Zion,
MRS. A. N. DAVIS.

CENTRALIA, Washington, October 20, 1907.

Editors Herald: I thought a few lines from this part of the world might be of interest to some of your readers. We are alive to the work over in this corner. Centralia is a bustling little city of seven thousand people, in a beautiful valley abounding in farms, fruit, and fine timber, the lumber industry being one of the leading industries. It is also becoming a leading coal mining town; a number of new mines have just been opened up. It is also a railroad center, and close to one of the leading summer resorts. The climate here is fine, neither hot nor cold. Saints who are looking for a home in the West, or employment of most any kind, can not do better than to come to Centralia. We came here first by request of Bro. Millard Wells, who had lived here with his family, isolated from the Saints, for sixteen years. I came the 12th of March, held some meetings, and got the scattered Saints together and organized a Sunday-school. Since that time I have baptized nine, and several others are investigating.

Our beloved brethren, George Thorburn and John Davis, have been with us holding a series of meetings. Their preaching was of the highest order, and very instructive. They had a fair hearing, and splendid interest, and we feel that they did a grand work in getting the gospel before the people here. And the "jots man" has promised to be with us. Come along T. W., and let us show you a good time.

Ever praying for final triumph,
S. P. Cox.

BERLIN, North Dakota, October 27, 1907.

Dear Herald: I write to you that all the dear Saints in Clitherall, Minnesota, may know I have not forgotten any one of them. I should like to write to each one personally; but I have not time. I had expected to have help; but so far Laura and I are alone. But we are getting along all right with the help of my husband. I will always remember the kindness of the dear Saints at Clitherall; and may God's choicest blessings rest upon them. To those that I did not get to visit, know that I indeed wished to; and should God spare me that I may go to the conference there in June, I will surely make them a visit. And now, dear Saints, remember me when it is well with you, in the Lord. I need your prayers, that I may not fall by the wayside. Oh, how I miss the church and Religio. Yet I am glad to be in my own home once again.

The dear HERALD comes as a blessing every week. I want every Latter Day Saint to remember where we are, and if passing through stop to see us; and at all times are the elders welcome here. Some of my friends wish to see Elders Sparling and Houghton here again. I know that Elder Sparling will rejoice to know that my husband is at last in the fold of our Savior, and is now doing well. May the dear Father's blessing rest richly upon all the dear Saints, is my prayer. God is mindful of his children, even when we sometimes think he does not hear us; he will do what is for our best good when we trust him. All things work together for good to those who love the Lord. I can say with the beautiful hymn:

"Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee,
E'en though it be a cross
That raiseth me."

I shall be so glad to hear from any of the Saints who will write to me.

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. NETTIE LANGDON.

GRAND RAPIDS, Michigan, October 26, 1907.

Editors Herald: I have been a reader of the HERALD for several years, and a member of the church since 1889. I write with the desire to encourage some one, as I have no other desire in this probationary state but to build up my brother or sister in this great latter-day work. I feel the Lord has wonderfully blessed me in my family circle, and even from the earliest period of my life. We regretted very much to hear of the death of our niece, Sr. Elsie Spencer, of Madison, Wisconsin; but the Lord knows best. We hope to so live that we may meet her in the great beyond, where parting will be no more.

I feel somewhat isolated here in Grand Rapids, because we are not organized, for some reason unknown to the writer; but we expect to make the grade at this fall conference. We ought to have a good Sunday-school here. I am keeping up the home class work; but I feel that there are many more who might be taught the beautiful principles of the gospel in their youth. But I feel it a special duty resting upon me in the teaching of my little ones, as it was given to me through the patriarch, J. J. Bailey, that a sacred obligation rested upon me, even in the training of my little ones. Oh, how thankful the father of a family ought to be, when he has in his home a patient and prayerful mother to exercise a constant watch-care over the children. Dear Saints, pray for me and my companion, that we may have more patience in bringing up our little ones, and that I may be able to accomplish the work assigned me in life.

Your brother in Christ,
FRED J. MILLER.

NEBO, Illinois, October 27, 1907.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a few of your readers will remember that last spring I secured and occupied a schoolhouse near the county-seat of Calhoun County, to tell the story of this gospel of the kingdom, and with a buoyant reception. This was too much for a certain divine, whose bread and butter comes not "by the sweat of the face," but by what he does to tickle the ears of, at least, some of the people. "They're all Mormons"; "All sprang from the same source"; "Don't you go to hear him"; "If you go to hear that Latter Day Saint preacher I shall not preach for you," etc., came to me as an echo from the reverend, a Presbyterian minister. The Sunday-school superintendent was transformed from a smiling "God bless you and your efforts"; "Come again"; "Come often," etc., to a haughty can-just-barely-see-you, and, to others: "I'm not going to their meetings again."

These conditions I found on going back to that place last Saturday. Had appointment out for Friday night; but failed to get there till the crowd was just leaving, owing to having to preach a funeral near Nebo, Illinois. I met a fair crowd on Saturday night. Went to Sunday-school the next day at ten o'clock; but the superintendent was somewhat late. We waited long. She came at last, just barely spoke, and offered me no recognition whatever. She opened the Sunday-school, repeating the Lord's prayer in concert. After dismissing she hurried out, with as many of her pupils as she could induce to go with her. I confess this was somewhat humiliating; but I tried to be brave, tried to have faith. 'Twas no trouble to be humble. After some few long respirations, I called the remnants to order, which consisted of the entire family where I was stopping, the school teacher of that place, and a few others. I took for my text the Lord's prayer. I, of course, tried to use it to show equality of right before God; what "thy kingdom come" meant, and what "thy will be done in earth," meant. Scores of elders know something of the peculiar sensations of such experiences. It seemed that a complete freeze-out was the ultimatum. This experience, however, proved to be valuable. Oh, I can never find words to tell how valuable, spiritually. Some time in the evening of the same day I repaired to the woods, and there begged and plead with God for his help and influence, both in influencing the people of that community to give his cause a hearing, and to give me liberty, and above all, humility, and charity, with the liberty to vindicate his cause, and latter-day servants.

The hour came. People gathered by ones, twos, and whole families, till the house was full, most of whom were thinking men and women. May I say, without being charged with egotism, that that event will ever remain a bright spot in my spiritual memory, when, from the opening prayer, to the close of a one hour and forty minutes' talk, like an avalanche my mind was flooded with such brilliant rays of divine light, which vividly brought to my mind things read, things experienced, things heard, with tongue loose at both ends as it were, and the audience enrapt, that I felt it impossible to be thankful enough. And in all this there came to me this additional evidence of the truth of this wonderful cause: I there experienced a love for that misinformed people that nothing short of the Spirit of the gospel could give. The story of the angel's message, the deceptive power of the adversary, the latter-day apostasy, the teaching of the standard books of the church, all had their attention.

During my stay I visited a certain ex-judge-congressman, now state attorney, who has charge of the town hall of Hardin, the county-seat. Got permission to use it, and a promise to come out and hear, as he "liked my views," etc. I expect to accompany one of our St. Louis District appointees, if they get time. If not, shall in the future go into that place and try to remain till the story has been told, and slanderous attacks answered.

The funeral referred to was in response to a phone message from an ex-sheriff and county treasurer of Pike County, Illinois, to preach the funeral-sermon of his brother, one Jim Windmiller. I understand the entire family were well pleased.

I will close by saying I am optimistic regarding this great cause of humanity. I do not believe God called us to go out and preach this wonderful message just to condemn men and women; but that his design was and is to reach and gather in the honest, that our joys may be shared by them. So, one and all, let us continue to present and carry this great proclamation of the angel to the martyred prophet of the nineteenth century, whenever and wherever propriety will permit, by well-directed lives, and in, at least sought-to-be-inspired words, from the most prominent to the most humble of God's creations. To the local part of the priesthood, may I not suggest that opportunities may be sought, made, and accepted? Surely God has not called any of us, just for us to have it said, "That is Elder So and So."

Ever hopeful in the faith,

W. A. GUTHRIE.

Testimony of Margaret White.

(A dying testimony of Margaret White, found in her trunk after her death, and read at her funeral by E. A. Erwin, September 8, 1907, and by request of her husband and children copied from her own writing by W. T. Bussell, a son-in-law of the deceased.)

MARGARET WHITE'S EXPERIENCE AS A CHRISTIAN.

When fourteen years old I began to seek God. I wanted to do right and be saved. Orphaned as I was, I had no one to tell me what to do, so I began to read the Bible, and from it I learned that to be saved I must have faith and repent of my sins; then I must be baptized for the remission of sins. But how was I to get baptized? as the people I lived with would not let me go to church. So I began to beg them to let me go to church. Finally I prevailed. I had never heard a sermon, so it made no difference what denomination I went to hear, for it was right so far as I knew. The people I went to hear preach were Baptists. The minister said they believed the Bible and were God's people, so I thought his church was the place for me. So I lived in all good faith that they were right until about four years later, when I went to hear the Christian people preach, and I found, as I thought, a people that were nearer right. So I united with them. In about five years the Holiness people came and completely wrecked my faith that I had in all other churches that I had ever heard; so I was of the Holiness faith to some extent.

I was not sure I was on the firm foundation, and I was continually praying to be led aright; and when I was about forty-four years old, I, for the first time, heard the long-prayed for truth, and it came from the despised people falsely called Mormons. I had a faint idea of what those people were accused of, but I knew that I had heard the gospel, so I commenced to investigate by reading and praying; and finally God made known to me by a direct revelation that the Latter Day Saint people were the people of his church. Peace of mind came then, and not till then; and now I have but to do God's will to the end and the victory is mine.

Northwestern Kansas Reunion.

Editors Herald: The Northwestern Kansas reunion met with the Twin Creek Branch at Downs, Kansas, September 12, 1907. Elder W. E. Peak was chosen to preside, with Elder S. Twombly to assist; Elder John Teeters was elected secretary and chorister. Sr. Blanche Atkins was elected organist, with Sr. Mary Drovalta to assist. Financial committee elected were as follows: Srs. Myrtle Coop and Mary Drovalta, and Brn. George Anderson and William Marshall. An amount of something over twenty dollars was collected. The two sisters should have the burden of praise, however. The money was properly disbursed at close of reunion. Excellent order prevailed throughout. Seven young people were baptized. Those who ministered in spiritual things were Brn. W. E. Peak, S. Twombly, Ammon White, L. F. Johnson, F. E. Taylor, and John Teeters. The greater part of the preaching was of an excellent order, well ordered, and to the point. We feel that much good was done, especially for the Saints. Voted to hold a reunion next year, selection of time and place to be left to a committee. Committee appointed, W. E. Peak, John Teeters, and F. E. Taylor.

JOHN TEETERS, Secretary.

Moorhead Reunion.

I have been requested by the president of this district, Bro. Sidney Pitt, to send to you some of my notes taken at the Moorhead reunion. I have been delayed in doing so, however, so that we will not find fault if you do not publish it all. There may be some things, though, that may be of interest to the HERALD readers.

The speakers were H. C. Smith, E. L. Kelley, Charles Hunt, J. W. Wight, C. E. Butterworth, W. A. Smith, Eli Hayer, J. M. Baker, Oscar Case, and others. Some very fine sermons were listened to, some of which I hope to send you later. The spiritual gifts were enjoyed in the prayer-service to a considerable extent, words of admonition and encouragement being given in prophecy and the gift of tongues. I am inclosing an interpretation of a tongue given by J. W. Wight on the last Saturday of the reunion. The auxiliary work, of the Sunday-school and Religio, was in charge of Brn. J. M. Baker and J. A. Gunsolley, the normal work being especially enjoyed.

There were several invitations extended from the surrounding towns for the reunion to be held with them next year, among them being a proposition from Denison, which agrees to furnish one hundred dollars for expenses, to give the free use of the park, furnish electric lights, to have a free delivery from the depots for both passengers and baggage, and to furnish homes for at least twenty elders and their families, all free.

An invitation extended from Little Sioux, however, was accepted, and I am inclosing a speech made by Linas H. Bassett, of that town, of which some of the elders desired a copy, on account of its historical interest. You may be able to use something from it. Respectfully,

ELLA RICH HAWLEY.

Provo Reunion.

The reunion at Provo, Utah, was held from August 31, 1907, to September 6, 1907, inclusive. Seven meetings were held, and the sermons were good and elevating, and were enjoyed by a good-sized audience of visiting Saints. On Friday afternoon Thomas G. Thornton was baptized by J. T. Curtis. The reunion was a success. Ogden Branch cordially invited the Saints to hold their next reunion at Ogden, which was taken under consideration.

ADELE CARLISLE STRAUSBACH, District Secretary.

"O, common are sunshine and flowers,
And common are raindrop and dew,
And the gay little footsteps of children,
And common the love that holds true.
So, Lord, for our commonplace mercies,
That straight from thy hand are bestowed,
We are fain to uplift our thanksgivings—
Take, Lord, the long debt we have owed."

News From Branches

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON.

Things are moving off nicely with us; the branch is still growing by baptism and additions by families moving in. Bro. Keeler is with us, giving blessings. He has given fifty or more. Saints are as a rule well, our meetings well attended and spiritual; Sunday-school, Religio, last but not least Aid Society, are all in a flourishing condition.

F. J. Chatburn has been here and gone. Preached several interesting sermons. A. J. Layland is in the southern part of the district, at work in the gospel cause. We have a new carpet on the church floor, thanks to the Aid Society, also the many donors at the social held at the spacious residence of Bro. and Sr. Duncan.

Preaching the past month by Brn. Keeler, Smith, Winegar, F. J., and T. W. Chatburn. We are still holding forth on the streets of Couer d'Aliens every two weeks, to increasing audiences.

The prospective preachers that have arrived are located at Brn. George's, Smith's, Yates's, and Woods'. All have great lung power and appetite, the essentials necessary to final success.

The church papers are very welcome visitors to this northwest corner; we can see substantial advancement on all lines adequate to the "onward and upward" of our great work, which is generally much appreciated by Saints.

The weather is ideal, the flowers are still blooming. The gentle frosts have touched the foliage, and the death-touch gives brightness and radiance to the passing life. The fall is here, and winter is coming on apace; then the springtime and HOME.

T. W. CHATBURN.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

We are glad to welcome back to our numbers Bro. and Sr. Thomas P. Cook, lately returned from Oakland, California.

One was baptized October 20, one on October 27, and on the 28th one received on certificate of baptism, and two on evidence of membership. Thus our branch is growing, now numbering over three hundred members.

At a recent business-meeting our branch extended an invitation to the district conference to meet with us at the coming session.

The branch officers report satisfactory progress in the adjustment of some difficulties of long standing. We feel that as long as diligent efforts are made in this line our spiritual development and progress is assured.

We enjoyed a visit by Bro. Heman C. Smith and wife, who were in the city a few days last week.

A missionary effort is to be commenced at Norwoodville, a mining camp, about six miles northeast of the city, this week.

A. A. REAMS.

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.

The Philadelphia Branch celebrated the sixty-eighth anniversary of the first baptisms in the city on October 6. The Sunday-school had a short program after the lesson hour; the choir furnished special music, which was very good; the morning preaching hour was occupied by the pastor, Bro. Walter Smith, in a discourse on the history of the branch; the afternoon service was a prayer-meeting, at which the sacrament was administered; and the evening hour was filled by Bro. U. W. Greene. All services were largely attended by our own members, and a great many of our friends and neighbors met with us. Occasions of this kind serve to make us better known in the locality of the church, and among our friends. One young man was baptized by the pastor and confirmed at the afternoon session, and two children were blessed.

The Saints here have been rejoicing because of the healing of Mrs. Neumann, wife of Bro. Julius Neumann. Her illness was so severe that physicians said nothing more could be done for her; then the Saints fasted, and met in various homes throughout the city, and prayed, and while they were praying the elders went to administer, and after the administration she became conscious; and her recovery dates from that time. It was a great comfort to the sorrowing husband, who is young in the church, and had not realized the privileges contained in the gospel; and it was a source of strength and encouragement to all of us when we see our prayers so marvelously answered.

The district conference met with the Brooklyn Saints, Saturday and Sunday, the 19th and 20th. Quite a large delegation went from Philadelphia. The business of the conference was finished at rather a late hour Saturday evening, but we felt fortunate in being able to use the new church at all, as the morning of the conference found it in an almost unoccupiable condition; but, thanks to the energetic Saints of Brooklyn, it was made ready, and served the purpose of the meeting. Bro. A. D. Angus was reelected president of the district. Bro. Ellsworth B. Hull, of Philadelphia, was ordained to the office of priest, and Bro. Edward A. Lewis, presiding deacon of the Philadelphia Branch, was referred by the conference to the branch president to be ordained to the office of teacher. The preaching of the conference was by Bishop E. L. Kelley.

At the close of the conference the Brooklyn Branch held a week's revival services in their new church, under the direction of Bro. U. W. Greene; preaching by Brn. Greene, E. L. Kelley, and Walter W. Smith.

The branch here is preparing for a two weeks' revival service in the church, beginning November 10. Bro. F. G. Pitt is expected to assist the pastor in conducting the services.

All departments of the work here are progressing; the Religio is especially good; the Doctrine and Covenants class gives stability to the society; and the Book of Mormon teachers and students express themselves as highly pleased with the new Religio Quarterly. EUNICE WINN SMITH.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

The fortnightly priesthood meetings are to be resumed, and, for the present, a course of study along doctrinal lines has been proposed.

"Are you going to join the singing class?" This is the common question now, among Independence Saints, and favorable reply is quite general. There will be a meeting to effect a permanent organization on Tuesday evening, when it is hoped to enroll at least one hundred and fifty members in this class; and if this number can be had, the cost of the term of twenty lessons will be brought down to an exceedingly low figure. We hope this movement will meet a well-deserved success.

Bro. Earl Corthell resigned as superintendent of the Sunday-school. This action was deemed advisable by Bro. Corthell, on account of his continued ill health. His years of service as superintendent of the school have not been without benefit to the Independence Sunday-school, and we regret exceedingly that for the immediate present he can not actively engage in Sunday-school work with us. At the regular business-meeting of the school, Tuesday evening, the resignation will be acted upon, and a successor elected to fill the unexpired term.

We regret to record here, too, the departure from our midst of Bro. W. N. Robinson and family to Oklahoma, and so we are again to miss our genial friends, whom we had hoped were here to stay. A large number of Saints and friends surprised them at their home on Saturday evening, to bid them good-bye. The free-hearted, congenial spirit of those present, together with music and readings, made the evening a pleasant one, long to be remembered.

Sunday was a beautiful day, and the services were well attended. Bro. W. H. Garrett occupied the morning hour, and Bro. J. E. Vanderwood at night, both to the edification of the Saints. At the afternoon prayer- and sacrament-service every seat was occupied in the lower room, and the service was most impressive, Bro. Garrett in charge, assisted by Elders H. R. Mills and H. H. Robinson, and presiding priest, W. H. Deam. It took twelve priests to administer the emblems to the large assembly; and to see the young men and old working harmoniously together in the office of their calling, and every thing being done in perfect order, was a sight well worth seeing. J. A. GARDNER.

NORWALK, CONNECTICUT.

A dedication of the church at Broad River, occurred October 27, 1907. Bro. U. W. Greene, Bishop E. L. Kelley, Bro. Benjamin McGuire, Ephraim Squires, and wife, from Brooklyn, were present. Sermon by E. L. Kelley. After sermon, deeds and keys were presented to Bishop E. L. Kelley by the president of the branch, Homer Butler. Also a short history of the doings of the several missionaries, who have been here to do their part of the work. The church was erected in the fall of 1896, through the exertion of the Saints. The church was clear of debt, a little more than three years ago; but through some delays and hindrances, the dedication was put off. Am glad to say, now, the house is the Lord's, and the deed in the hands of Bishop E. L. Kelley.

Agent's report: Balance on hand last report, $6.58; received, $527.22; paid out, $485.33. Next conference will be held at Nevada, Missouri, March 7, 1908. At the Sunday afternoon prayer-meeting, Bro. A. R. Moore was ordained by James Moler and George Jenkins, to the office of priest. A. C. Silvers, secretary, Walker, Missouri.

Notice of Amendment.

Notice is hereby given that at the General Sunday-school convention of 1908, the following amendment to the Constitution and By-laws will be moved: Under "ELECTIONS. 2. Voting."—After the word represents and before the word in, insert as follows: "or otherwise, as the district may determine," so that as amended it will read:

"2. Voting.—In the election of officers of the district association and of the delegates to the General Association, the vote shall be taken by the yeas and nays, each delegate casting one vote for every ten members or fraction thereof of the school he represents, or otherwise, as the district may determine. In all other business a majority of the members present shall rule. Delegates elected to the General Association shall be elected at the meeting held preceding the session of the General Association."

J. W. Wight was chosen by the Central Michigan District convention to draft and publish the above amendment, the convention, after hearing the amendment read, unanimously ratified it. The Eastern Michigan District also indorsed the amendment. J. W. WIGHT.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of Western Nebraska and Black Hills; Greeting: As the year's harvest is over, and believing that the Lord has blessed us with a bountiful harvest, it becomes the duty of each and every one of us to manifest our thankfulness to him by rendering unto the Lord that which he requires. I urge all to send in, according as the Lord has blessed you, and I feel assured that greater blessings will follow every effort which is made toward keeping this part of the law.

I greatly desire to hear from every Saint in this mission, whether you are in a position to remit tithing or not, so I may obtain your name and address, and thereby get the work better in hand. If you have only a small amount to send, do not hesitate to send it; but remember the widow's mite; that it was said of her, "She gave more than they all." On the other hand, will we be held less responsible for withholding our mite than the man who withholds his abundance?

Dear Saints, let us not forget that if we would hear the plaudit, "Well done," when we reach the other shore, it will be for having obeyed God's law. Trusting I may hear from you all, and that I may be able to place a credit opposite each name, I am, as ever,

Your brother in bonds,
R. S. MENGEL, Bishop's Agent.

BELMONT, Nebraska, October 24, 1907.

To Saints of Little Sioux District: We have no complaint to make in the amount of moneys received; only encouragement. The year 1907 promises to far surpass any previous year in the district; but it is being done by a few, and the same ones (or nearly so) that respond from year to year. Are you one of them? If not, why not? Have you been prospered? You owe the Lord one tenth. Have you paid, or are you making an effort to pay this obligation? Less than two months of the year remain. May we not enter your name on our financial record? We believe that a compliance with the financial law brings peace, satisfaction, temporal blessing, spiritual gain, increased faith, spreads the gospel, makes the poor rejoice, and is for your good for time and for eternity. Do you desire these things? If so, we await to receipt you.

ALMA M. FYRANDO,
Bishop's Agent of Little Sioux District.

MAGNOLIA, Iowa.

The Saints and friends of the Pottawattamie District who may have occasion to write me, will hereafter please address me at Weston, Iowa, R. F. D. 1, instead of Council Bluffs.

The Lord has blessed us with a good crop, therefore let us manifest our love for him by keeping his commandments, striving to do all we can that others may be brought to a knowledge of the truth.

Ever ready to acknowledge and receipt for any sum, I am,
Your brother in Christ,

JOHN A. HANSEN.

Treasury Work and the Translation Fund.

Since the last General Convention we have had a number of inquiries as to our understanding of the work of the treasurer, and what it comprehends. We have been doing quite a good deal of thinking and corresponding along this line, with a view of broadening out and arriving at a better understanding of this department of the Religio work—as well as the other auxiliaries, and perhaps along church lines as well. Common custom—which by the way is a very erring prompter—has in times past given little importance to this department of the work. The treasurer has been merely the "holder" of the funds, when there were any to be held, and of the bag when it was empty. He has not been the "custodian" of them, for properly speaking a "custodian" is responsible, in a manner, for the way in which the funds are used.

As suggested above, we believe that the common and prevailing idea is a mistake, and that the possibilities along this line of work ought to be better understood; and if properly understood, we, as auxiliaries and as a church would attain far better results with less trouble. We have found private correspondence a slow and not altogether satisfactory manner of getting to the subject, and as we noticed the General Secretary has outlined the correct manner of keeping secretary records in the Autumn Leaves, we thought perhaps this subject might be handled in this way to a better advantage.

It is not our intention to call to mind the ordinary duties of this officer. They are outlined in the Constitution.

1. He is to take charge of all moneys of the society, etc.
2. To pay out on order of president and secretary.
3. To be chairman of relief committee (in locals).
4. To act as a member of the Advisory Board, in connection with the other officers, to promote the work.

The first two of these are very easily performed, and need no comment. The third makes the work a little more extensive in connection with locals, but even this is fairly well comprehended, we believe—that is, that as chairman of the relief committee he should make it his business to see to it that none of the Religians, or for that matter any worthy, are left to suffer when any reasonable effort can relieve them. We might here suggest, however, that we believe better results might be obtained in this line of work if our local treasurers would consult more often with the branch deacons or bishops in this part of their work; and as our society is really an auxiliary—and the auxiliary idea should be kept prominently in mind—they might make themselves able and valuable assistants in this way, and it might, as it should, prepare them for future usefulness in the church. Who knows but what the schooling had in Religio work might be the means of preparing, in the Lord's own time, a deacon or a bishop.

The last named department of the treasurer's work is, we believe, the most important, and is the one we wish to emphasize most. He is to act as a member of the Advisory Board. On the Advisory Board depends largely the responsibility of the success of the society. Outside of the assembly it is the "head of the society," and we believe that in choosing a treasurer care and judgment should be used. Don't overlook this part of his work. In no department of this latter-day work do we find a place where "one man" can carry the work alone. God seems to have ordained that it should be carried on by united efforts, and the overlooking of this principle (locally) has, in our opinion, caused much of the confusion and failure with which some of our work has met, we having in the past put too much responsibility on some, and left those who should share it without anything to do. While we believe this, and that in a multitude of counselors there is wisdom, yet not only in this office of counselor are the members of the Advisory Board chosen to occupy, but they each have their respective duties as such members, and a failure to occupy means a failure to get full benefit from the promises made in their appointment. This is a day of specialists it is true, and in selecting officers for the different places in our work their special qualifications should be considered; and when the qualification is found, then the principal burden in their respective lines should be left with them as a part of the controlling head, and they should be specially blessed along their lines. For instance: the president (the chairman of the board) is the "general"; the vice-president is his assistant; the secretary's speciality is the keeping of the records, organization of societies in general and district organizations, and looking after members in the locals, and duties along that line. This is her speciality. The librarian looks after the library. This is his speciality, and we believe that to him should be referred all matters pertaining thereto, for his special consideration.

The treasurer's speciality is finance. Not only the holding of the funds, the expending on order of the president and secretary, but why not refer all matters of a financial nature to him for recommendation—as to manner of raising funds for various, and in fact all purposes, and perhaps also get his recommendation as to the disbursement of them? Do you not think this would be more in line with the spirit of his calling? If wisdom be exercised, as it should be, in the choice of your treasurer, and this suggestion be carried out, could not much of the confusion in money matters now existing be done away with? As we understand the Lord's plan, the bishop is for this purpose in the church, and we are convinced that if more heed were paid to those whose duty it is to recommend, and they more fully came up to the requirements at their hands along these lines, we would not be continually confronted on every hand with appeals for help.

This may be a new idea along the line of a treasurer's duties; but what do you think of it? If this responsibility should be placed on the treasurer, and he humbly and earnestly went about it, acceptably to the Lord, do you not think that the Lord would bless him in this special work as much as any "help" in the church?

In your locals, if the good literature committee wants funds, do they ask the treasurer to recommend to the society an appropriation, or a way to raise it? When your flower committee needs help, do they consult him? We are afraid not often. Should they not? How many times do they forget him and his special duty and "get up a social" or call for a special collection? Do you think this is the right and proper way? Would it not be better to leave the matter of raising finances to the special officer chosen for the duty? Would we not, instead of having to continually dig at our members and friends with a social, one night for the flower committee, a few nights later for the good literature committee, or for this or for that, or have a special collection so often that it becomes a regular collection, when funds are needed for these good causes be ready in ample supply? Is it not a fact that because of our overlooking this suggestion in the past that we have become so accustomed to these frequent calls for money that we pay little attention to them, and their object is defeated. It is true that perhaps the literary committee only call once in a while. So do all the others, and by the time we get around there is a continual call, with but small and unsatisfactory results.

We believe that the office of the treasurer should be broadened out. That he should be the financial provider, and that his recommendation should be sought for in the raising and disbursing of the funds. We would not want him made a dictator or despot; but if God's plan is worth anything to us as an example, we can well afford to consider these suggestions, for surely we have not been following the Lord's plan very closely.

In relation to our annual translation fund offering: We hesitate to say much about this worthy cause, owing to the very fact that so many appeals for help have been made. We do not believe Saints wish to shirk their duty along the financial lines, yet we believe few do their duty. Why not? Simply because of the careless methods adopted by us by which we seem to seek to improve on the Lord's plan, and in this, like in all such improvements they are very apparent failures. We hope, however, that in connection with the thanksgiving translation fund offering the different treasurers place this matter properly before their various districts and societies in line with the suggestions sent them, and that all may be able to see what their duty to this commendable work is, and that returns will show that we are "waking up."

Last convention we appropriated $800 toward the translations in German; $200 of this we must yet raise. Last year our offering exceeded that of the year before, and we desire this year to increase over last.

The importance of the translation work is well understood by all Religians, and we believe that it is only necessary to properly call attention to it, and to carefully consider our duty toward it, and all will be well.

In this treasury work, as in all the work of the Lord, we trust we will be led to see and understand our duty in the proper light, and improve thereby. Personally we would be pleased with any suggestion to improve our work.

May the Father ever direct us all, and teach us our duty, is our prayer.

Yours for success,

RICHARD B. TROWBRIDGE,
General Treasurer, Zion's Religio-Literary Society.

Convention Notices.

The convention of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District Sunday-school association will meet with the Coldwater Branch, at Coldwater, Michigan, November 8, at 1.30 p. m. All schools of the district please have your reports in, also each school see that they have at least one delegate, and as many more as you can send. Would be pleased to have one or more of the general Sunday-school workers with us to more thoroughly discipline us along the line of Sunday-school work. Elsie Lockerby, secretary.

Addresses.

J. E. Vanderwood. Changed from Pleasant Grove, Utah, to 634 South Willis Street, Independence, Missouri.

Marriages.

TRYON—EDMUNDS.—Bro. David W. Tryon and Sr. Sophia Edmunds were united in marriage, Wednesday, October 23, at 2 p. m., at the residence of Elder F. T. Mussell, who performed the ceremony. They were attended by the sister and brother of the bride and groom. They were the recipients of several useful and valuable presents, and have the best wishes of their large circle of friends and acquaintances, for a long and happy life.

Died.

DAVIS.—Myrtle A., born at Green, Iowa, June 23, 1878; departed this life October 10, 1907. To know Sr. Myrtle was to love her, for her quiet, gentle way. She lived a life above reproach, and so had many friends, who, together with her father, mother, brothers, sisters, and other relatives, feel keenly their loss. She united with the church July 30, 1896, and spent her life trying to follow the leading of her Savior. Funeral-services were held at the home of her parents, in charge of J. E. Wildermuth; sermon by William Sparling.

SMITH.—Elizabeth Smith, at Manchester, England, September 20, 1907. Sr. Elizabeth was born December 17, 1871, at Stafford, England; baptized March 5, 1886, at Manchester, by Joseph Dewsnup, Sr. Married to Bro. R. W. Smith, March 27, 1897. She leaves a loving and devoted husband, father, mother, one brother, and four sisters to mourn. She lived a life of a true follower of the Lord Jesus, and was much devoted to her religion. J. W. Rushton officiated at the interment; also preached the funeral-sermon at North Manchester.

NELSON.—Nicholas Peterson Nelson was born in Sweden, November 26, 1832. He lived with his parents till the age of fifteen, when he went to Stockholm to learn shoemaking. November 26, 1855, he was united in marriage to Catharine May Clawson. Of them were born five boys and three girls.

In 1865, Mr. Nelson, with his family, came to America, settling at Nebraska City, where Mr. Nelson followed his trade. February 4, 1869, he united with the Reorganized Church. Funeral from the residence, October 21, 1907, conducted by C. H. Porter; sermon by J. W. Waldsmith.

POLLARD.—B. F., at Avery, Texas, October 16, 1907. Was born at Spartanburg, South Carolina, in 1839. Moved to Arkansas in 1855, and there married Miss Bettie Moses. Moved to Red River County, Texas, in 1867. Ten children were born; four still living. Baptized November 21, 1877, by A. J. Cato. Lived thirty years a grand Christian life. His house was always a home for the elders, and he remembered their needs. Was loved by all who knew him, and will be greatly missed. A light to the gospel; a noble citizen; a good man. Funeral conducted by E. A. Erwin.

MOYER.—Near Woodstock, Ontario, April 26, 1907. Sr. Rosa Sailer, was born February 22, 1851, in Germany. Came to America with her father's family, in 1853. Married to William Moyer, February 27, 1872. Baptized February 27, 1897, by R. C. Evans. She leaves a sorrowing husband, four sons, and two daughters-in-law. She was never ashamed of her religion; always ready to advocate it when opportunity offered. Her life was one of toil and care; always ready to care for the missionary.

CIVEY.—Hattie Elenora Riley, was born October 14, 1876, at Modena, Mercer County, Missouri. Baptized January 16, 1897, at Olatha, Kansas, by Bro. J. Arthur Davis. Married August 7, 1901, to Mr. J. F. Civey. Died October 12, 1907, at Rosewell, New Mexico. Buried October 16, 1907, at Blythedale, Missouri. Service held at Christian Church, D. C. White delivering the sermon.

The Best Timber Trees.

Timber owners and manufacturers will be interested in the results of the detailed studies of commercial timber trees which the Forest Service of the United States Department of Agriculture is making. These studies are not confined exclusively to the well-known trees of recognized value, but, owing to the rapid decrease in the supply of our valuable woods, include those cheaper woods whose properties are imperfectly known. Such studies of the tupelo gum and western hemlock have done much to overcome the common prejudice against these species and have added materially to their commercial importance.

Commercial tree studies begin with the tree in the forest and follow it all the way to the finished product in the market. The intermediate steps are many and complex, but a little explanation of them may not be amiss, since they typify the field methods of a forest investigation.

The selection of a suitable place is the first step. In this the aim is to obtain average conditions as far as possible. When the range of the species to be studied is small, one locality may be sufficient, but generally it is necessary to take at least two localities, the data from which, if similar, can be thrown together or, if markedly unlike, kept separate for different regions within the range of the species. For example, the yellow poplar, or tulip-tree, has a very wide range, but a study of its growth and form would show very different results in the North and in the South.

In getting at the rate of growth of a species, the annual rings on the stumps are counted and the distance between each tenth ring is accurately measured. In other words, beginning at the outside of the stump, the rings are counted inward along the average radius, which is obtained by actual measurement and indicated by a pencil line. The layers of ten rings are marked off along this line and then the distance to each mark from the center of the pith is measured and tallied. Additional data as to the relative width of sapwood and heartwood, the width of the bark, the height of the stump, and so forth, are obtained at the same time. These figures are taken for a great many stumps, in order to secure a fair average.

The results show the growth of the average tree inside the bark at the average stump height. In order to reduce this to diameter growth outside the bark at breastheight (4½ feet above the ground), the taper of the average tree must be known. This is found by measuring the diameter of a great many trees at 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 feet above the ground, and averaging the results. The bark width is already known, so that all that is necessary is to add to it the figure obtained for growth inside the bark and subtract the loss through taper between stumpheight and breastheight.

As a rule, a number of seedlings are measured to find out how long they have taken to reach stumpheight. By adding this period to the age of the average tree on the stump the measurement of the height growth of the average tree is complete. This would not be the case except for a peculiarity in tree growth. A given point on the trunk never moves upward with the growth of the tree. Only the tip grows, and a nail driven into the trunk at a given height will hold the same height always.

The taper measurements also serve as a guide for fixing the proper height of stump in felling, so as to avoid waste but still get above the stump-swelling peculiar to some species.

Frequently, felled trees are measured, noting the diameter breasthigh, the length or distance without branches, the "clear" and actual merchantable lengths, and the total height of the tree. Where this is done in conjunction with the stump analyses, a table of age and height is readily made from the table of age and breasthigh diameter already explained.

In order to apply the tables described, the stand on average acres of different types of land is determined by means of sample plots, usually of an acre each, on which the diameter of every tree is carefully measured and tallied. The future yield on average acres is then figured out from the diameter growth tables and tabulated by decades.

Cutting over an area often markedly increases the growth of the remaining trees, so that a separate yield table is frequently made for second growth after lumbering. This forms an excellent basis for an estimate of the future stand on logged areas.

Besides the more purely technical matters of the life history of the tree; the best methods of management and reproduction; the distribution of the species; the soundness; the damage by fire, wind, insects, and fungi; and the general form and development of the species, a study of the methods of lumbering is undertaken, especially as regards waste and damage to young growth.

Finally, a market study is made throughout the range of the species. Figures are obtained by measurement at some mill of the actual cut and grade in board feet of the logs from trees previously marked in the woods. From these measurements the actual value of trees of all diameters is found. The present uses of the timber are looked up, and the practicability of extending its uses or substituting it for other species is considered. In connection with this, timber tests of the wood are made at one of the Government timber testing laboratories.

To sum up, every detail and aspect of the problem receives careful attention in these commercial tree studies, since it is their special object to set forth all facts that will assist forest owners in managing and improving their timber-lands.

DEDICATION AT WEBB CITY.

[The following editorials regarding the dedication at Webb City and the reunion at Holden were written during the visit of the senior Editor to Honolulu, where they act accounts for the delay in their appearance.]

There has been a branch of the church at Webb City for nearly or quite twenty years; but not until lately have the Saints had a suitable place of their own. Necessity, however, in this as in other cases, pointed out the way. Bro. Orson P. Sutherland and family, with a number of others of like faith, gathered the energies of the flock, bought a lot, and in due time a building was erected, and when the debts were paid an invitation was sent to the missionary in charge to arrange for a day of dedication. The missionary in charge, Bro. Heman C. Smith, turned the affair over to President Joseph Smith, at Independence, Missouri, who in correspondence with Bro. Frank C. Cowen, secretary of the branch committee, reached an agreement for services of dedication to be held Sunday, September 29, past. President Smith arranged with Bro. R. C. Evans to call at Independence on his way home from the far West, and give some few days at Holden, and also to visit Webb City with him to assist in the dedication. In pursuance of the agreement Bro. Smith and Evans reached Webb City in the afternoon of September 27, were hospitably received at the home of Bro. O. P. Sutherland, 705 Daugherty Street. During the interim between Friday evening and the morning of the dedication, Bro. Charles Sutherland escorted us to the Baptist College, a large, well situated and well built college building, built by subscriptions from the citizens, and under the supervision of the Baptist Church; but which failed for the reason that it did not receive the individual support of the denomination which built it, and the shifting mining population of the city and the surrounding county did not take the interest in education which was expected, and in a sense relied upon by the college officials to sustain the effort. The building and site cost some one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, and can now be bought for twenty-five thousand dollars. The building is sound, so far as may be seen; though it would cost some ten thousand dollars to rehabilitate the building as an entirety, and fit it in complete repair. It is a great

On the morning of the 29th the house was full, many standing around the walls, and outside, the day being an ideal one, neither too warm nor too cold. Bro. O. P. Sutherland was in charge, and at half past ten the service began. Bro. Orville James and wife having come in from Tulsa, Indian Territory, he was put in charge of the song-service, which borne by the local singers was creditable. Bro. Walter Taylor, of Weir City, Kansas, made the opening prayer. The sermon was delivered by Bro. Joseph Smith, and dedicatory prayer was by Bro. R. C. Evans. The services were very impressive. Saints had gathered in from Weir City, Scammon, Joplin, Blendville, and the country round about, so that the two hundred of the branch was greatly added to for the day. Bro. R. C. Evans occupied the afternoon and evening in characteristic discourses on gospel themes, illustrative of the beliefs of the church, and the day of dedication was past.

The Saints of the Webb City Branch are entitled to great credit for the effort made by them to build and thus secure a place of worship. There are fifteen thousand inhabitants of the city, nine churches and fourteen saloons, about fifteen hundred church members, the Saints having two hundred of that number. The growth of the branch has been phenomenal under the prevailing conditions. May they continue to thrive is the wish of all.

Bro. Charles Sutherland took us to Carthage, the county-seat of Jasper County, and to the Yellow Dog Zinc and Lead Mine, the largest at Webb City.

THE HOLDEN REUNION.

The Independence reunion was not very largely attended by the Saints of the stake, including those of the Holden Branch, except at the Sunday and week evening meetings, which attracted large audiences of both classes, those in and out of the church. Notwithstanding this apparent peculiarity in attendance, meager at the week-day services, and that chiefly of the Saints, the reunion was very satisfactory as a whole. No reunion occurring of late years has had larger or more attentive audiences at the preaching-services, and if the general comment is to be taken as evidence, no better or more far-reaching sermons have ever been delivered at reunions. We heard great encomiums passed upon the efforts of Brn. A. H. Smith, F. M. Smith, Heman C. Smith, R. C. Evans, and others who spoke on the various services. A new feature or two had been provided by the committee on program, which proved to be very acceptable to the Saints, especially so to teachers, both Sunday-school and Religio. A general class study, conducted by Bro. W. H. Garrett in the early forenoon of each day, was very much enjoyed by the studios, and was attended by good results. The Religio and Sunday-school studies were much enjoyed, and can not fail of good results.

The Editor and R. C. Evans, with a number of others from the branch, left Independence the 19th of September, early enough to be in time for the morning service in which the Editor occupied the stand in a talk to the Saints, at request of the stake and reunion officers. Beginning Thursday evening service, Bro. R. C. Evans occupied as speaker each evening of the week, and on Sunday afternoon, the Editor occupying Saturday afternoon and Sunday evening, the Saturday afternoon being directed to the Saints.

The camp was made on the fair grounds, a spot without shade, except what was furnished by the buildings, judges' stand, and the grand stand. The latter was spacious and well occupied, at evening services especially so. The temporary pulpit was placed in front of a tent pitched on the racetrack opposite the middle section of the grand stand, was surrounded on three sides by chairs, benches, carriages, and buggies, giving an audience chamber, the roof of which was the starlit dome, and the sides the horizon of Johnson County, Missouri. The other meetings were held in the Horticultural Hall, which was practically large enough for all the day meetings, except the Sunday services. Of these Bro. I. N. White was the speaker in the forenoon, and Brn. R. C. Evans and Joseph Smith afternoon and evening as stated.

Were it not for another reason than those recited above, this article had not been written; but the Editor found an object lesson in Holden which should teach the value of concentrated effort and self-help. The branch had been for a number of years meeting in their "hired house." The conditions became intolerable, so a few canvassed the subject, projected an effort to build a church. This met a ready response. The result is a building, well located, worth some four thousand eight hundred dollars, below the sills of which no money was paid for labor, and above the foundation of which but twenty-eight dollars were paid out for the labor, the remainder of the work having been done by the Saints and their friends by voluntary service to a good cause. We do not know of another instance where so large a house of worship has been built, or of such a value by such effort and sacrifice. There remains the sum of one hundred and twenty-five dollars due on material, which will be duly raised in a short time, and the church will be dedicated. We visited the church and found it an "up to date" building, so far as the requirement of the service, and their means would permit. We were pleased with so clear an example of what unity of purpose in a congregation could do, if the object desired was kept in view, and selfish opinions, ambitions, and designs, were kept out of sight. Long may the little branch at Holden survive, and the shadow of their congregation never grow less; the example set by this four hundred be an incentive to others who may feel the need of a place to worship.

Elders' Note-Book

AN EXPERIENCE WITH THE SALVATION ARMY.

At one time I had occasion to visit the city of Oshkosh, Wisconsin. At that time old Bro. Daniel B. Rasey and two of his daughters were living in that city, and the old brother was quite anxious that I should hold some preaching-services in the place, and suggested that I try to get the use of the Free Methodist Church, as he was in the habit of attending that church, and was quite intimate with the pastor, one Reverend Wolfe.

Accordingly, I accompanied Bro. Rasey to the prayer-meeting one evening, and asked the privilege of preaching in the church, which was quickly denied us. The following day I visited the oldest daughter of Bro. Rasey, who, by the way, I found to be a member and staunch defender of the Latter Day Saints' church. During our visit, and in answer to her inquiry, if I were not intending to hold some meetings, I told her of my request, and the denial of the use of the Free Methodist Church. After a few minutes' thought she said, "Bro. Burr, I think I can get a place for you to preach," and she named the Salvation Army Hall, saying she was quite well acquainted with the captain, and had used her influence to procure a place for them, and now she would ask him to return the favor, and let her have a place for one of her faith to preach in. She said that she expected the captain to call that afternoon, and if I would call the same evening she would let me know the result. I did so, and learned that after considerable persuasion on her part, the captain had consented to let me hold one service on the following Sunday afternoon.

Saturday evening I happened to be down in the business part of town, and, hearing the drum which signaled the approach of the Salvationists, thought I would tarry a few minutes and hear what might be said. And, sure enough, at the close of their service on that particular corner, the captain in stentorian tones said that "a real Mormon" would preach in their hall on Sunday afternoon, and invited the people to come out and hear what he might have to say. They moved to another part of the city, where this performance was repeated, thus advertising the "Mormon" as an attraction and drawing-card for the Sunday afternoon service.

To say that I was disgusted is putting it mildly; but in the meantime an old soldier comrade with whom I was stopping, had advertised that an old veteran and comrade would preach at the time and place named, and had published the announcement in the Saturday issue of the city paper, so there was nothing to do but make the best of it and fill the appointment.

It was in the month of July, and the weather was very warm; and when we arrived at the hall, we found it quite a large room on the second floor, under a flat roof, poorly ventilated, and very warm indeed.

The first thing to catch our eye as we entered was a box fastened to the door casing, marked "Silver Offering," and nothing less than a dime was supposed to be put in it.

The Army was out in force on the platform, making the usual din with drum, horn, cymbals, and tambourine. We also discovered our Reverend Wolfe, of former acquaintance, on the platform, and was escorted to a seat by his side. By the time the hour for services had arrived, the hall was quite well filled, and the first thing on the program was a statement by the captain, that as the weather was quite warm he presumed that everybody wanted a fan, and said he would be very glad to furnish each one with one free of charge if he had them, but as he did not they would do the next best thing, i. e., the sisters would pass through the audience and sell them the War Cry at five cents each. This part of the program was carried out. Next, an announcement that the regular collection would be taken, and everybody present invited to contribute generously to the running expenses of the Army; while this collection was being taken, and drum and horn and tambourine seemed to each struggle for the supremacy, so far as noise was concerned, the captain came to me, and in a stage whisper asked, "Are you ready to take her?" I told him that I was ready to occupy when there was an opportunity.

I had noticed on the illuminated cover of their paper, the War Cry, a picture in colors representing a stone wall with the word "IF" in large letters painted on its face, and somehow it appealed to me as a fit text for the occasion, and I used it till I reached what I considered a proper place in my discourse, when I quoted 1 John 1: 6, 7. "IF we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth: but IF we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

I laid especial stress upon the if, and coupled with it the import of the text, the importance and necessity of doing all that God has commanded to do necessary to walking in his light. So far as I was concerned, individually, I felt very well satisfied with the effort, for during its delivery I saw several in the audience indorse by their nods their approval of the argument. But this was too good an opportunity for the Wolfe to lose, and I had no sooner taken my seat than he was on his (two) feet, and said, "The brother has given us an excellent discourse on the necessity of doing something; now, how many in this audience are willing to do something? Who will give me a dollar? Raise your hands, every one who will give me a dollar, and I will myself bring you the tambourine." After he had pulled that string as long as he saw any prospects for dollars, then "Who will give me half a dollar?" Next a quarter, then a dime, and finally a nickel, until he seemed to be satisfied that he had squeezed out the last drop of financial blood in that audience, and I think it was quite a successful squeeze, for the head of the big drum was well covered with coin; I judged from eight to twelve dollars.

The audience was then dismissed, but not all went at once, for several of the comrades and their wives came and shook my hand, and expressed themselves as having been pleased and edified by my sermon, and I have always been of the opinion that many of them were under the impression that I was to receive at least a portion of that collection; but I never had the opportunity to decline one penny of that collection.

I was not, however, done with the Wolfe; for as soon as he could get the opportunity, he asked me if I belonged to that class of people who believed in "Old Joe Smith, the Mormon Prophet?" I answered him by saying that I believed that Joseph Smith was the chosen means in the hands of God to fulfill his word and restore the gospel in these latter days.

It is unnecessary to prolong this further, for nearly every one of my readers can conjecture as to what followed; but out of this experience I learned what I considered a valuable lesson, and from that day to this have not been anxious to be again used by that particular religious faction as a drawing-card to put dollars in their coffers.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

After reading Bro. Pitt's article in one of the late HERALDS, I thought perhaps I might write a short sketch of my experience in this life. I was born December 22, 1855, in Henderson County, Tennessee, and lived in that county during my boyhood days. I always had a great desire to please the Lord in all things.

I remember when the Civil War broke out, and the many hardships we had to undergo during that war. My father was a rebel, but never joined the army; but my two oldest brothers did, and went through the war. We lived near enough to Pittsburg Landing to hear the guns that rang for two days when that bloody battle was fought called the battle of Shiloh. I knew I had two brothers in that battle, and of course my father and mother knew the same, and it was a sad time with us all. My father was compelled to lie in the woods during the most of the war, to keep from being forced into the army. Well, I was like the rest of my older brothers at home. I was a rebel boy of course, and was in lots of fights during the time of the war with what we called Yankee boys. I remember working hard all the week to build breastworks to be ready for the enemy that was to attack us on Sunday. It seemed the war spirit was raging among the boys of the South, as it was among the men. One thing I remember well, and that is, we always routed the Yankee boys, and put them on the retreat, and we could hear of the different battles fought by the soldiers, and most every time the rebels whipped the Yankees. This would cheer us boys up so we would fight more manfully next time. So it was not long before we concluded the Yankees were a set of hired cowards that had come down south to fight us for the money that was in it. Well, it has been hard for us people to change our minds on that point. Some think the same thing yet. I will mention here one fight I was in, when it was the Snow boys on one side and the Cherry boys on the other. The Yankees often came and robbed our house, and took everything they could get. My mother had made us boys all a new shirt apiece, and the night after she got them made the Yankees came and robbed our house, and one of our neighbors, the father of the Cherry boys, was with the gang that came to rob us; and of course this man Cherry took our new shirts, as he had some boys about the size of the Snow boys. Next day at school we found our shirts on the Cherry boys, and we demanded our shirts, and of course the Yankee boys refused to give them up, and the fight began and lasted till the shirts were not worth anything to either party. But this closed the war with us boys, as peace was made between the North and the South about this time, and then my mind was led in other directions.

It would not be right not to mention one thing that is worthy of note before I leave the above subject. The Yankees stole all our horses. We could not keep one to plow with on account of them. Now, I do not mean the regular army; but there were what we called the bushwhackers, who claimed to be in the Northern Army. They were the ones that robbed us. The second year after the war began there was a man that lived near us by the name of Bill Smith. He was a captain in the Union Army. He came here on a visit to see his family, and while at home he learned of the way my father was treated, and how he had lost all of his horses. Mr. Smith came over to see us to find out if it were true that our stock had been stolen; and, finding it true, he gave my father a nice young gray mare, and told my father to keep her till the war closed, and work her, and make a living for his family. He said to let everybody know that the mare belonged to him, and he would notify the neighbors of the same, and he would look after the man that took that mare away from us. Well, true, as Captain Bill Smith said, she remained with us to the close of the war, and by this means we were able to live, and you need not wonder if I still reverence and like the name of Smith, and will never forget that man.

At the close of the war the thing that attracted my attention was what we call "big meetings." The first man I ever remember hearing preach was a Methodist preacher by the name of William Steele. He made a good impression on my mind. He was preaching a funeral-sermon, and although in after years I could see he could not preach much, yet I always believed him to be a good man, and still think he was. When I was fifteen years old, I attended a big meeting held by the Methodist people, and it was there I went up as a mourner. A man whom I had great confidence in had been converted not long before that meeting, and he came to talk to me. I was glad he came. Pretty soon he put his mouth right close to my ear and told me to trust the Lord, and to just believe. Well, I soon got the scent of whisky. It smelled strong, and I soon discovered that the scent was coming from the man that was instructing me to trust the Lord. This brought me to my proper senses. I began to reason a little, and I thought, Can it be possible that I should come to such a place as this to get religion? At this thought there was a still small voice spoke to me and said: "Get up from here. This is no place for you." I refused to get up till the voice was repeated some five or six times; then I felt sure God had spoken to me, and that I could not serve him there, so I got up and went out of the house. I do not remember what became of my instructor who first came to me with his breath perfumed with whisky. I guess he was too drunk to notice me when I got up and went out, or he would have started out and claimed I had got religion.

Well, it might be well for me to mention the first time I was ever made to believe there was a higher power than man, and that He can and does exercise that power. I was about ten years old when I was made to realize the wonderful power of God, and that time has never grown dim to me. I kept the matter to myself about the voice speaking to me and commanding me to get up from the mourners' bench. I also kept the experience I am now going to mention, until after I was baptized into the Latter Day Saints' church. Then, some years after, I related it to Bro. G. H. Hilliard, then to others.

Now, as I was going to say, when I was ten years old I was with my older brother visiting our traps. We were trapping for minks, some two miles away from home, on a creek called Middleton Creek. It had rained the day before and the creek was level with its banks. We went early that morning to our traps, and on reaching the first trap we caught two minks. They were worth two dollars and a half apiece, so this put us in a state of some excitement, and we started on a run to the next trap, which was on the other side of the creek. We cut across the bend of the creek and came to the foot-log. The log was about half covered with water, and it was just getting daylight, so that I could see about fifty yards away. My brother could run faster than I could, and when I came to the foot-log I could see him across the creek, some fifty yards ahead of me. I made no halt, but jumped right on the log and started across the creek, which was some forty feet wide and twelve or fifteen feet deep. I was running at almost full speed when I struck my right foot against my left leg, and this threw me to the left with my face up the creek. I noticed that I was clear loose from the log and was falling with my face down and my hands stretched right above my head. I was in the act of striking the water. It seemed my face was about eighteen inches from the water; then I do not remember anything more till I struck the ground, running some fifty yards on the other side of the creek. I knew at this time that I had been taken up by a power that was greater than man's power, and the thought came to me that it was God that had saved me from drowning. I could see I was not the least bit wet, and that all my clothing was dry; so from that time on during my life I have had great faith in God, and there is no use for men to tell me that God will not protect us, and manifest his power in doing so, if need be. These two experiences, with one I had a short time after I went up to the mourners' bench, were all that I had of any note until after I came in contact with the latter-day work.

Soon after I heard the voice speaking to me, telling me to get up from the mourners' bench, I began to seek the Lord in prayer. I continued to pray to him to know if I would be saved. I was anxious to know. So one night, just as I lay down on a bed made on the floor in the hall, I began to pray as usual. It was warm weather. The hall door was open. As soon as I began to pray I noticed myself moving towards the hall door that led into the front yard. I was about one foot from the floor. I kept moving, and looking back I could see the bed upon which I had lain down; then looking towards the door found myself passing out. I was laid down on the ground, right under the eaves of the house, and I was wondering at the way things were being done. It was clear, and the stars were bright. I could have counted the planks on the side of the house, up to the eaves. Then I turned and viewed the front yard gate and the paling fence; then I looked at the small trees that stood in the yard. This convinced me, beyond a doubt, that I was out of the house. I looked straight up into the skies. I saw a bright light, like a circle. It seemed to reach miles above the sky and stars. I presently saw at the upper edge of this circle numbers of pleasant people looking right down towards me, and a voice spoke to me and said, "You shall be saved." Then I was raised from the ground and was brought up and was moved right back into the house, just as I was taken out, and laid down upon the bed as I was before. I lay there for a long time and thought over the matter before I could go to sleep.

After becoming a young man, I began to associate with bad boys, and took to drinking with them; but I never forgot to pray to God to lead me and help me when I needed help. I was married when I was about twenty-eight years old, but still kept on in my wild ways, till one day I was sitting in front of the door at my home, where I could see some half a mile up the road. I soon saw a man come in sight. Something seemed to say, "That man is coming here to see you on important business."

Well, the attraction was so strange that I kept watch of the man till he rode right up to my gate and asked me if he could feed his mule and have the privilege of sitting by the fire while he ate his dinner. He had a lunch with him. I granted him the privilege, and while he was feeding his mule I was so anxious to know his business I asked him what his occupation was. He said he was a Latter Day Saint preacher. I asked him if he would preach there in that neighborhood. He promised to do so, and the arrangement was made. He returned in about two weeks, and I had a large crowd out to hear him. His name was W. H. Griffin, and I had told the people he was the smartest man I had ever seen; and I did think that he was, for he seemed to know the Bible.

Well, when he was talking to me when he came to my house the evening before he was to preach that night, I was anxious to get down to the school-house. We took a little brass lamp with us to the meeting, and there were one or two lanterns. This was all the light we had. Well, the house was so crowded I could not get a seat without sitting right by the preacher. This I did, but I surely did not like to do so. He got up to read a chapter,—and he was a man that could hardly read, and the light was bad, so he made such blunders in reading that he asked me to hold the little brass lamp while he read. I did, but, oh my, how bad I felt! I wished that I never had seen that man; but I was in for it, so I braced up the best I could. He tried to preach from the chapter he had read, but it was a failure from start to finish. He had left his horse at my house that night, and we had walked to church, so there was no chance for me to get rid of him. Next morning I saw he was fixing to go back to fill his appointment at eleven o'clock, but I did not mind going with him as much as I thought I would. I fixed it up in my mind that there would not be any one present; for I was sure if those people that were present the night before had as much sense as I thought they had, they would not come back to hear such a green man try to preach. To my surprise, there was a large crowd present. I took my seat in the back end of the house to hear another failure, but to my surprise Griffin spoke that day with power. I had never heard anything to compare with it. I was not ashamed that day, so he continued to come once a month to preach for us, and finally brought Elder P. B. Seaton with him. After awhile I was convinced they were preaching the true gospel, but thought I would just let it pass. But one night after hearing Bro. Griffin preach from Romans 6:17, 18, this text was kept before me most all night, and I heard that same still, small voice urging me to obey the form of doctrine taught by the Latter Day Saint elders. Just before day I resolved to be baptized by Bro. Griffin, and the next day, I believe it was, I was baptized; so it was soon confirmed by the Spirit and the angels of God that I was accepted.

I was soon called to preach the gospel, and have done the best I could to magnify my calling. I can say the Bible is true, where it says the signs shall follow the believer, and where it says the angels shall encamp round about them that fear the Lord and will deliver them.

I will mention one time when I was called upon to administer to a young lady. They claimed she had been dying for several hours; and it was true. She was dying, and I was made to know the truthfulness of the statement in the Bible: "No man has power to retain the spirit in the day of death." But here I learned the angels had not lost that power, and were able to retain or deliver any one from death. There was an angel present in the administration, and the young lady was delivered from death, and is living to-day, or was a few days ago.

I have seen the sick healed, the lame made to walk, the eyes of the blind opened, and evil spirits cast out of several people. All the above have followed me as a believer in the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom he has sent into this world to teach us the way of life. I can say that the gospel I preach I never learned from man, neither was I taught it by man, but I was taught it by the revelations of Christ; and I can say to all the sinners in this world who may read this article, if they will truly repent of their sins and be baptized into this church by one of the elders, they shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost that shall lead them into truth, and show them things to come.

May the above experience, as related in my weak way, cause some one to have more faith in God, is my prayer in Jesus' name. Amen.

SINCERITY.

Sincerity is the keynote to success in seeking salvation. Paul said, as the closing thought in his letter to the Saints of Ephesus, "Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity."

Sincerity is:

1. Speaking as we think.

If our minds are full of evil thoughts, and the frivolities and follies of the world, and we say we love Christ more than such things, then we may deceive others, and even deceive ourselves. Other thoughts and speeches are as water spilled upon the ground; but thoughts and speeches of and to God are never lost. Yes, we should speak what we think; but we should be rulers of our thoughts. If the tempter should give us an evil thought, which spoken would hurt or harm, we should not give it a home in our minds and thus make it our thought; but drive it from us by filling our minds with better thoughts; for there is a limit to the capacity of the mind, and, if our minds are filled with good thoughts, there is no room for evil. In Philippians 4:8 we read: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." Doing this, we can speak as we think.

2. Believing as we pretend.

Romans 10:9 tells us "that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." To simply confess

ELDER JEROME E. WILDERMUTH.

Christ will not save us; but we must believe that he has conquered death, and that his promises are true, that he is unchangeable, and our exemplar. Then we shall be found

3. Acting as we profess.

"So many professed Christians do not act like Christ," is the excuse given by many non-believers for their unbelief. God does not ask us to die for the gospel; but to be living witnesses that it is true. "Let your light so shine," said the Master, that others "may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." We may say we love Christ; but he said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments," and so our actions tell what we really want, though we may say we are seeking salvation. If we say we have faith, we must prove it by our works, else it is dead and worthless.

4. Performing as we promise.

This is a part of sincerity that is too little dwelt upon. The real Christian should make no promise but what he can see his way clear to fulfill, and then make it his life work to keep it. Jesus said "he that endureth to the end shall be saved." When we enter the kingdom of God and become members of the church, we have promised to serve him, and to follow his example to the best of our ability, and if we do not seek to keep that promise, we are lost.

5. Being as we appear to be.

We may deceive men, and make them think we are faithful and true to our covenant when we are not; but that will not save us, for we can not deceive God. Our reputation may be good, but our character evil. A good reputation can not help us beyond this life; but a Christlike character will take us through the gates into the city. So sincerity is essential to salvation.

OBEY COUNSEL.

That the doctrine of "obey counsel," as taught by Brigham Young and his followers, has been the cause of many people being led astray from the path of righteousness, will be clearly seen by the reader, in the examination of the statements made by the leading men of the Utah church. As it is frequently denied in Utah that such a doctrine was ever taught by them, we offer a few quotations from their leading publications.

In an address by Daniel Spencer, December 25, 1852, to the priesthood in London, he said:

The first principle taught us in the valley, was to be obedient to counsel; and I would recommend the same to you, and if you accept it, all will be well; then the weight is off your shoulders, and so far you are no longer responsible. Ever since I have been in this Church, there has been something to enlarge our hearts, and to enable us to comprehend things. It is not like the sectarian religion that comes to perfection in twenty-four hours; no, it is a progressive system, and we must progress with it, or be left behind, for it will not wait for us. If you are found obedient to counsel, nothing will stumble you, neither "Spiritual Wifeism" nor anything else. You will swallow all good things down, and that, too, without any oil.—Millennial Star, vol. 15, pp. 90, 91.

In an address by Brigham Young in the tabernacle, July 31, 1853, he said:

I will give you the pith of the last orders issued: "That man or family who will not do as they are told in the orders, are to be treated as strangers, yea, even as enemies, and not as friends." And if there should be a contest, if we should be called upon to defend our lives, our liberty, and our possessions, we would cut such off the first, and walk over their bodies to conquer the foe outside.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 167.

Hear him again:

I have not the least fear of any division in this church, for I can turn them whithersoever I will.—Millennial Star, vol. 15, p. 386.

I will now give some of the statements of Heber C. Kimball, Brigham Young's first counselor. At the General Conference in Salt Lake City, October 9, 1852, he said:

If Brother Brigham tells me to do a thing, it is the same as though the Lord told me to do it. This is the course for you and every other Saint to take.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 161.

Again, on October 8, 1852:

If you refuse to obey the counsel that is given to you, you will wither away like a limb that is cut off from an apple-tree, or the grass that is mown down, when the sun strikes it.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 206.

Again in a discourse by Jediah M. Grant, February 19, 1854, we read:

What would a man of God say, who felt aright, when Joseph asked him for his money? He would say, "Yes, and I wish I had more to help to build up the kingdom of God." Or if he came and said, "I want your wife?" "O yes," he would say, "here she is; there are plenty more."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, p. 14.

Again on March 23, 1856, Heber C. Kimball said:

As Brother Grant has just remarked, and as others have often taught, Brother Brigham has understanding, through the power and influence of the Spirit, sufficient for teaching the Saints their duty, and if they do not perform it, if this people do not save themselves by obeying his counsels, they are bound to go to hell.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 3, p. 269.

Again, August 30, 1857, he said:

I will ask you this question, gentlemen and ladies, Can you live your religion, except you do as you are told? I have said, again and again, that if we live our religion, and do as we are told, those men [United States soldiers—J. F. C.] will never come over those mountains; for we shall slay the poor devils before they get there. I do not know of any religion, except doing as I am told; and if you do, you have learned something that I have never learned.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, pp. 162, 163.

To the elders on November 8, 1857, he said:

Learn to do as you are told, both old and young; learn to do as you are told for the future. And when you are taking a position, if you do not know that you are right, do not take it—I mean independently. But if you are told by your leaders to do a thing, do it. None of your business whether it is right or wrong.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 6, p. 32.

Again, the following will show how much more important "obey counsel" was than prayer:

Well, now, if you will do just as you are told, you will increase in knowledge ten thousand times faster than you will to pray six hours; and if you follow that course, you will not advance in your religion one hundredth part so much as that man that will do just as he is told, no matter what.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 6, 34.

In an "Address to the young Saints," by J. W. Young, I find the following:

No matter how contrary to our views counsel may come, it is our duty to obey it, as long as it comes from the right source. And it is not our business to judge those whom God has placed over us, nor to counsel them.—Millennial Star, vol. 14, p. 155.

This counsel was for the purpose of substituting the teachings of their leaders for the written word, as the following from the same discourse, same page, will show:

Brethren and sisters, it will not be the words of ancient prophets and apostles that will judge you; but the words of modern ones.

The following is from a discourse by Lorenzo Snow, in the tabernacle, January 18, 1857.

The people are under obligation to obey the counsel that is given; they are necessarily required to apply the counsel of Brother Brigham, because that counsel possesses those objects [family happiness.—J. F. G.] No man can be more happy than by obeying Brigham's counsel. You may go from east to west, from north to south, and tread this footstool of the Lord all over, and you can not find a man that can make himself happy in this church, only by applying the counsel of Brother Brigham in this life; it is a matter of impossibility for a man to receive a fullness who is not susceptible of receiving and carrying out Brother Brigham's counsel.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 184.

Wilford Woodruff, in a discourse April 9, 1857, said:

Now, whatever I might have obtained in the shape of learning, by searching and study, respecting the arts and sciences of men,—whatever principles I may have imbibed during my scientific researches, yet, if the prophet of God should tell me that a certain principle or theory which I might have learned was not true, I do not care what my ideas might have been, I should consider it my duty, at the suggestion of my file leader, to abandon that principle or theory. Supposing he were to say the principles by which you are governed are not right—that they were incorrect, what would be my duty? I answer that it would be my duty to lay those principles aside, and to take up those that might be laid down by the servants of God.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, p. 83.

The reader should bear in mind, that at the time Wilford Woodruff made this statement he, himself, was being sustained twice a year, by the people of Utah, as prophet, seer, and revelator.

Heber C. Kimball's advice to the sisters:

Sisters, love your husbands, and encourage them to listen to their file leaders and to their officers pertaining to this church; for this is their calling, and not to sit down and cry, snuffle, and find fault with their leaders and the other authorities in the church; for there is where so many go over the dam.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, p. 220.

That the reader may judge for himself, of the quality of the counsel given by these file leaders, we will quote only two statements, one from Brigham Young, and one from J. M. Grant, his second counselor. In a discourse February 8, 1857, Brigham Young said:

All mankind love themselves, and let these principles be known by an individual, and he would be glad to have his blood shed. That would be loving themselves, even unto an eternal exaltation. Will you love your brothers or sisters likewise, when they have committed a sin that can not be atoned for without the shedding of their blood? Will you love that man or woman well enough to shed their blood? That is what Jesus Christ meant. He never told a man or woman to love their enemies in their wickedness. . . . I have known a great many men who have left this church, for whom there is no chance whatever for exaltation, but if their blood had been spilled, it would have been better for them. The wickedness and ignorance of the nations forbid this principle's being in full force, but the time will come when the law of God will be in full force. This is loving our neighbor as ourselves; if he needs help, help him; and if he wants salvation and it is necessary to spill his blood on the earth in order that he may be saved, spill it. Any of you who understand the principles of eternity, if you have sinned a sin requiring the shedding of blood, except the sin unto death, would not be satisfied nor rest until your blood should be spilled, that you might gain that salvation you desire. That is the way to love mankind.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, pp. 219, 220.

Here is J. M. Grant's statement:

I say, that there are men and women that I would advise to go to the President immediately, and ask him to appoint a committee to attend to their case; and then let a place be selected, and let that committee shed their blood. We have those amongst us that are full of all manner of abominations, those who need to have their blood shed, for water will not do, their sins are of too deep a dye. . . . I would ask how many covenant breakers there are in this city and in this kingdom. I believe that there are a great many, and if they are covenant breakers we need a place designated, where we can shed their blood.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, pp. 49, 50.

THE HOME WITHOUT A CHILD.

Suppose a baby—an ordinary American baby—were to write a book!

"I have come into such a delightful world," he would say; "it is a paradise for babies. Everybody is kind and loving and unselfish.

"The big, strong people are so gentle with the tiny helpless ones, and so patient and forgiving when we trouble them.

"Here I am—a feeble little bundle of bother, quite useless and unable to do anything well, except cry. I have no money and no knowledge. Yet the moment I lift my voice every one runs to see what I want. I am washed and dressed and petted as though I were the most important person in the house; and the strangest thing about it all is that these big people really enjoy waiting on me. Plainly, I see, from the way I am treated, that every one in this world loves babies."

So, of course, must life look to a baby who is nestled warm in his mother's arms, watched with tenderest care, and brooded over with fondest love. How could he, in his soft, safe shelter, imagine that any heart or any home could ever be closed against him?

"Every one in this good world loves babies." It ought to be true, but is it? Is there another side to the American home—a side that our baby-author does not know? Let us see.

Of one thing at least we are sure—that fewer babies come to us than filled the overflowing homes of our great grandparents. Only five generations ago, so George Washington tells us, one third of all the nation was made up of laughing, dancing, merry children, and cooing, crowing babies. Now, less than one quarter of us are little people and all the rest are men and women grown.

Eighteen million children there were, when Uncle Sam last counted his family. A vast army—yes, but if we of to-day had kept pace with our great-grandmothers, there would be seven millions more.

Seven million babies missing! Send out the crier—“Lost to America somewhere between great-grandmother's day and ours, seven million little children!”

But they can not be found—those seven million lost babies. They are missing because they have never come. They were not invited to come, to “this good world where every one loves babies.”

Seven million missing babies! Where are their empty places? Eight to a family was the record, so we are told, “in old Ben Franklin's days.” And even eight must have seemed few to a man who had been accustomed in childhood to the crowding and pushing, the play and laughter, of seventeen small Franklins,—of whom he was number fifteen. But to the average American of the twentieth century—eight! Why, we barely average two!

This shrinkage of the family does not prove that children are less loved. Far from it! While the family of eight has dwindled to three or two or one; while the riotous noise of a houseful has softened to the quiet play of a few; while the tramping of a miniature army has given place to the lonely foot-falls of an only child, still, as in the olden days, the hearts of parents overflow with love, and the promise and glow of springing life brightens and fills the home.

Seven million children are missing, and the family is two or one!—such is the American story. But not all the story; there is more, much more.

Recently, out from the old mother-State of Massachusetts came the cold figures of an investigator, telling not only of dwindling families, but also a startling story of childless homes. Of every one hundred couples, eighteen are without a child. More than one hundred thousand homes and not a baby!—so runs the Bay State record.

All over the State they are scattered, those homes without a cradle. Count six, and then a childless couple; count six again, and then an empty home. So it goes—count six, then six, and you find them; homes without the care or the comfort of a baby; lonely, silent, childless homes.

A home without a cradle! Never, since the days when our first savage, ancestral grandmother swung her little one from a bough and crooned some wild strain that meant

Rock-a-bye baby, on the tree top;
When the wind blows, the cradle will rock, has home ever been home, in all the warmer meanings of that sweetest word, unless within its shelter children played and tired babies fell asleep to mother's soothing lullaby.

Homes without babies! Why, homes were made for babies. If every one sprang into life full grown, and needing no care, the human race would never have had a home. Always we would have wandered here or there, looking for food, and sleeping wherever night fell.

But the little fragile baby demanded care, and a place where he could be sheltered from storms, and kept secure from harm. The very first home was just the safest and warmest cave that the barbarian mother could find, of this we may be sure. For the child came the cave, which grew into the hut, the house, the home. Yet in every sixth home in Massachusetts to-day, the baby has no place.

Nor is there any special reason to suppose that the situation in Massachusetts differs widely from that in her sister States. She has given us figures, has told the truth about herself more frankly than any other, that is all. However, let us allow that she is thirty per cent worse than all the rest. Still it will be true that there are in the United States two million married women who have no child.

Two million childless homes!

We find it in the new West, as well as in the historic East—this abolition of the child. On a recent visit to Iowa, that elysium of farmers, I came upon the same condition—less than two children to a family and a declining population in three quarters of the counties.

This is Iowa—a State without a tenement or a slum; where the yellow corn of one year's growing is worth the revenue of the whole city of New York. Homes without babies,—in a State where the homes are worth more than five thousand dollars apiece; where the banks hold a million of money for every day in the year; and where there is a square mile of country for every ten children to play in! At this rate we will soon have pushed France from her unenvied place, and be first among the nations as the land of the small family and the childless home!

Seven million babies missing! Two million childless homes! These figures sound incredible. But some experiences of my own have proved to me that parts of our greatest city can show a record almost twenty-fold worse.

It happened that a friend of mine asked me to find a suitable apartment in New York for herself and husband, with their family of five. The first agent applied to cheerfully furnished a list of over a dozen apartments in a desirable section, whose rents ranged from nine hundred dollars to one thousand five hundred dollars a year. They were all house-keeping suites large enough for a fair-sized family.

The agent was affable, even urgent, until I mentioned my friend's children. Then he was plainly startled, even overcome.

"We take children," he said faintly, "but—five! Well," at length, "you look them over and make a selection and I'll see if anything can be done. Of course five is a big family to have in a good apartment. It is the tenants who object, you understand, not the landlord."

The next agent was evidently charmed when I asked for a seven or eight room apartment, for seventy or eighty dollars a month.

"We have the very place you want," he assured me. "Five houses, all quite new, three in seven-room and two in eight-room apartments," and gave me the address.

"That location suits me," I acquiesced. "Now, do you take children?"

"Yes, certainly," he replied, briskly. "Have you one or two?"

When I explained that there were five, his face fell. "Now, that's what I call a nice family," he said, with what cheerfulness he could muster. "Your friend ought to be proud of them. Still, so many tenants object to children, that I'll just phone the landlord, who lives in one of the houses."

He telephoned. Result: refusal.

With eight other agents I had similar experiences. All assured me that they took children. Personally, they almost adored them. But when it came to getting definite quarters for five healthy, noisy little ones, I could only obtain addresses in undesirable localities.

Then I made a quest through the houses themselves. The first building had housekeeping suites of five, six and seven rooms, renting for seven hundred, eight hundred, and nine hundred dollars. The superintendent was out, so I questioned the elevator boy. There were forty families and just six children. Another house contained thirty-five families and only one child. Two blocks distant, one had sixteen suites of eleven rooms each, yet only four children were in the building.

Two houses side by side, each containing a dozen eight-room suites, were the next visited. These were especially large apartments, there being one hundred feet of private hall, running from the drawing-room to the dining-room. The drawing-room was twenty-three feet long and twenty-one feet wide, and the dining-room was almost as large. The rents were from a thousand to fifteen hundred dollars a year, indicating comfortable incomes. Yet in one house there were three children, and in the other none.

The superintendent who showed these apartments was a good-hearted German, the only person I met who took kindly to my friend's large family. He urged upon me the desirability of one particularly sunny suite. "The little ones could have plenty of sunshine here," he said, "and that's what they need to make them grow." It was a distinct surprise to meet any one in charge of a nice apartment house in New York who had a welcome for a family of five little children, and it was with a feeling of keen relief that I entered the address in my note-book.

"We have only two children in the house," said another superintendent. "We are fortunate in not being asked to take them very often. Of course, to a family with more than one child, I would only let the ground floor, for we couldn't have them in the halls."

"We have sixty families and only five children," complacently remarked the last superintendent whom I approached. "They are very quiet, too," he added. A doll-child, in silk and velvet, sitting demurely in the elevator in charge of a nurse, confirmed the recommendation.

This search revealed to me that there was a famine of babies in the well-to-do neighborhoods of New York. In twenty-two apartment houses that I had visited, there were four hundred and eighty-five families; yet the children numbered just fifty-four—one child to every nine families. In twenty-two houses, in one little section of one city, I had found four hundred and thirty-one of America's childless homes. It was not hard to believe that the whole great country held two million more.

A short time ago an investigation of a part of Fifth Avenue, New York City, showed one stretch of fifteen blocks where just fifteen children lived—one child to a block, in the richest section of the richest city in the country. On another affluent avenue, forty out of forty-five homes were childless; and the remaining five had only ten children among them.

"Only married people, without children, need apply," is the rule of not a few of New York's apartment hotels. Towering houses and hotels, so restricted, are multiplying rapidly; and almost before the plaster is dry, or the elevators are running, they are filled. And still the childless couples come.

"Have you any children or dogs?" Such is the brutal question that too often meets the home-seeker who ventures into the down-town region of New York, unless her quest is limited to the tenements of poverty on the far East or West fringes of the city.

Is there a crusade against children?

In the daily gossip of the press, at least, there is frequent evidence of a hostility to families whose only sin is their size. Looking over the newspapers of the past month I find that a mother of eight knocked in vain at the doors of forty-seven flat houses; a father of nine asked for an injunction to save himself and his children from being turned into the street; the parents of another group of eight had to tent on a vacant lot; a landlord applied for a dispossess notice because a tenant had claimed to have only one child and had smuggled in a couple more, one in a clothes basket and the other in the folds of her skirt; another landlord raised the rent fifty cents a month for each child; and one editor, commenting indignantly upon these things, ironically suggested that excluded tenants shall reply to the landlord—"Yes, I have children, but I'll chloroform them if you like."

Neither is all this merely the heartlessness that grows up in a great city. At beach or mountain there is the same question—"Have you any children?" And frown or favor greets the answer. Over the door of the exclusive apartment, of the handsome house, of the luxurious hotel, might often be written—"Abandon babes, all ye who enter here."

Side by side with the landlord marches the economist, with frightening figures, in this crusade against children. It costs upper-middle-class parents twenty-five thousand dollars to raise a boy, and half as much to raise a girl, so says Professor John Graham Brooks, of Harvard. Just to get the tiny garments ready, to pay the doctor and nurse, and launch the little life, costs, so some one else has figured, from ninety-five dollars in some small Western towns to four hundred and fifty dollars in lavish New York.

"It costa too mucha have a baba here," said a dusky mother of six—five little Italys and one Young America. "In my country the doctor come for one dolla. For this baba I pay twenta-five."

Nor is the money cost the only charge counted against the baby. There are many other items that swell the bill.

"I would give ten years of my life for two boys like yours," said a childless woman earnestly to a mother.

Quick and incisive came the reply; "That is just exactly what you would have to give."

Never were the drawbacks, the faults and the failings of children so trumpeted as now. The baby is under the social microscope. He is examined and weighed and tested. His cost is reckoned, his disposition analyzed, his capacities measured, his future value estimated, and he has to answer the great American question—Does it pay?

When the world was young this was not so. Then the little ones were welcomed gladly—eagerly. There could not be too many of them. "Thy children shall be like olive branches about thy table;" they shall be "as the stars of the heaven and as the sand upon the seashore." Strange that these promises were once counted for blessings; and that by the people of those Palestinian hills the children that came were accepted gratefully. A baby to them was a baby. How could anything be better or more?

Dishonor fell upon the childless tent in Israel. Within it there was a saddened woman, brooding over her misery and her disgrace. Listen, and you will hear the wild, rebellious cry of Rachel,—“Give me children, or I die!” Out of that far-away land of Judea, down through the centuries, it comes ringing. For four thousand years the hearts of women have thrilled to its anguish.

What kinship can you find between that fiery, Eastern nature-woman, furious at the denial of motherhood, and the soulless creature who turns coldly from a child to lavish caresses upon a pedigreed dog or cat? Instead of Rachel's insistence, "Give me children, or I die!" you hear, in soft, lisping tones, "Give me a Teddy-bear, or I'll be out of fashion."

Fortunately, the women to whom the cult of the dog or the Teddy-bear is more than motherhood are much fewer than the attention they attract would lead us to suppose. They are far too few to explain, for a moment, our two million childless homes.

Always some homes are empty, because to the yearning, outstretched arms the baby has never come. To others, children have paid a visit, brief as bright, and then slipped back into the unknown, leaving hearts haunted by bitter-sweet memories.

But what of the rest? Most of the women who might have been "the joyful mothers of children," and are not, have simply been terrorized, so it would seem, by the crusade against the child. They have been frightened by the figures of the economist, by the analyses of the sociologist, and by the landlord's forbidding frown.—By Lydia Kingsmill Commander.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Thine for Service."

"Father, I beseech thee
By thy matchless grace
Beam thou down upon me
Brightness of thy face.
For thy hands' caressings,
Tender, true and kind,
And for nameless blessings
What praise can I find?

"Great, how great thy favor,
Only to be meet
Hour by hour to labor
In thy service sweet!
On thy strength relying,
Father, give me skill—
Every need supplying—
To perform thy will,

"In the path of duty
Walking day by day
Life is clad in beauty
Of celestial ray.
Purest joys are given
With thy work begun;
And our earth is heaven
When thy will is done."

"Life is clad in beauty
Of celestial ray—"

"It is wonderful, the power of service, of the expression in other life of something of the light and joy that has entered our life from the Heavens, has to make beautiful the seemingly commonplace.

"Ole Bull, the great violinist, was one day standing at the end of a point of rocks that ran far out into the sea, playing upon his violin. When he was asked what he was doing, his answer was that he was listening to the music of the breaking waves, that he might reproduce it on his violin.

"To catch the grand bass of the waves, he needed to listen as they broke upon the rocks. He was then able, as a master of the violin, to make his audience hear the surf beating on the shore and see the white-capped waters.

"The men who live the noblest life must listen for the Voice that has in it the divine music, and that speaks 'as never man spake.' Then, alone, will they be able to reproduce the harmony of a perfect life.

"And this harmony, heard by the world, will lead it to the love of harmony, and far away from all discord."

Beautiful the simple smile, the outstretch of a hand through the sorrow-stirred air of earth, because we have listened to the tremulous whispers of love.

"Wear a sunny face, it is your privilege. It has the quality of mercy; it is twice blessed. It blesses its possessor and all who come under its benign influence; it is a daily boon to him who wears it, and a constant, ever-flowing benediction to all his friends. Men and women, youth and children, seek the friendship of the sunny-faced. All doors are open to those who smile. All social circles welcome cheeriness. A sunny face is an open-sesame to heart and home. By it burdens are lightened, cares dispelled, sorrows banished, and hope made to reign triumphant, where fear, doubt, and despondency held high carnival.

"Get the glow and radiance from such nearness to the throne as God permits to his own. Bring from a loving communion a face luminous with light, and let it glow and shine on all around. A little child on a street of a great city, wishing to cross at a point where the surging throng and the passing vehicles made the feat dangerous to the strong, and especially to the weak, paused, hesitated, and then asked a sunny-faced gentleman to carry her across. It was a sunny face that won the child's confidence. Childhood makes no mistakes."

Just a tiny gleam of the great Love.

"No kind deed is too small to be worth doing. One afternoon a crowd of people stood at a street-corner, where they transferred from one line of cars to another, waiting for the transfer-car. A sudden shower had come up, and the rain was falling steadily. A car came up the street, stopped, and left at the corner a well-dressed girl, who had no umbrella. She came over to join the waiting crowd, looked for shelter to the doorway of a drugstore on a corner, then, finding it already full, took her stand on the walk, with the rain dripping steadily down upon her. A girl of about her own age, standing near, under the shelter of a large umbrella, glanced at her, then stepped quickly forward and said pleasantly:

"May I share my umbrella with you till the car comes? It is not in sight yet."

"Thank you very much," the other answered, gratefully. "I shall be only too glad. It was pleasant when I left home this morning, and I thought I should not need an umbrella."

"So the two stood side by side under the umbrella till the car came, and had its shelter to the car-steps. Only a little act of kindness, but was it not worth while?"—Mary P. Denny, in Christian Home.

The Loving Kindness.

Not always the path is easy;
There the thickets hung with gloom,
There are rough and stony places,
Where never the roses bloom.
But oft when the way is hardest,
I am conscious of One at my side,
Whose hands and whose feet are wounded,
And I'm happy and safe with my Guide.

Better than friends and kindred,
Better than love and rest,
Dearer than hope and triumph,
Is the name I wear on my breast.
I feel my way through the shadows,
With a confident heart and brave,
I shall live in the light beyond them,
I shall conquer death and the grave.

Often when tried and tempted,
Often ashamed of sin,
That, strong as an armed invader,
Has made wreck of the peace within,
That wonderful loving-kindness,
Patient and full and free,
Has stooped for my consolation,
Has brought a blessing to me.

Therefore my lips shall praise Thee,
Therefore, let come what may,
To the height of a solemn gladness
My song shall arise to-day.
Not on the drooping willow
Shall I hang my harp in the land,
When the Lord himself has cheered me
By the touch of his pierced hand.

LOSOTO, North Dakota, October 29, 1907.

Editor Herald: Bro. Houghton and myself were compelled to close our tent work at Moorhead and Fargo on account of cold weather. He went home to make some preparations for winter.

On the last day of September I was called upon to unite in marriage the well-known (in Minnesota and North Dakota) Elder T. J. Martin, of Detroit, Minnesota, and Sr. Nye, of Bemidji; I feel that all who know them will wish them joy.

October 13 I was called to the funeral of our beloved Sr. Myrtle Davis, of Lankin, North Dakota. May our heavenly Father comfort the bereaved ones.

I then went to Loma in company with Bro. William Sparling, he staying over night, then on to Thorne, and I remaining for a time. Bro. Robert Newby and family have gone to their claim in Montana.

October 28 I broke the ice, and led three precious souls into the water, at Calvin. The Dunkards, at Roosevelt, have challenged us for a public discussion, so will have to attend to that soon. So the good work is slowly moving on, in this north country.

Yours in the conflict,

JEROME E. WILDERMUTH.

IRONTON, Ohio, November 2, 1907.

Editors Herald: As I have been permitted to spend a short time in the Ohio District among the branches, I would like to express my appreciation of the kindness shown me by the Saints. There are some fine Saints in Ohio; but the branches are suffering for a full standing ministry. Oh, that greater provision could be made to care for and save the branches. Some of the branches where I have been have officers in them, but not sustained by the branch as branch officers; and in some places the sacrament is neglected, even in a large branch where there are over a hundred members. It is very needful that each branch have active officers, that it may be in a healthy, growing condition. May the dear Lord provide, is my prayer.

I met my old friend, I. N. Roberts, battling away against sin and darkness, also Bro. H. E. Moler. Bro. S. J. Jeffers met me at Wellston, and took me with him to his comfortable home. May peace be with them all is my prayer.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion,

LAMONI, Iowa, October 5, 1907.

Editors Herald: Of course it is important to appear in the HERALD occasionally, but noting that my last communication drew heavily upon HERALD space, have concluded to confine this to just a few incidents that may be of interest to some. To begin with, October 26 the Lamoni Stake conference convened at this place, affording the writer the opportunity, for the first time, of attending a stake conference. Our stake president, John Smith, opened the meeting by song and prayer, and recognizing the common consent rule, announced that the missionaries in charge were present, and that their authority and appointment should be recognized in the organization of the conference; whereupon a motion was made and carried that the missionaries in charge and the president of the stake preside over the conference. The organization being complete, the chair was yielded to President Smith, who took charge of the business in hand, with which he was familiar, the missionaries cheerfully aiding in every essential way. Bro. Smith is an old soldier, and knows what order and a proper recognition of others' rights means; is a good presiding officer, and just discreet enough to secure all the backing and aid at hand to begin with. This would show the part of wisdom from a utilitarian point of view, as there are no infallible presiding officers, and none so wise as not to be counseled. President Smith retained the chair during the transaction of the greater part of the business. The missionaries in charge did not assume to act in the office of the president of the stake in order to do their work, but acted in their own office and calling, as on all similar occasions, and the president of the stake acted in his. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." Order and harmony prevailed all through the sessions of conference. The missionaries did not assume too much, nor the stake president too little. If there is any especial honor attaching to the mere act of presiding, the stake president was covered with glory, for he occupied the chair the greater part of the time, and was fully sustained by his associates. There is no trouble about any of these matters (now under agitation) where the right proceeding is recognized, and obtains to begin with. An excellent spirit prevailed all through the conference, and those in attendance were comforted and strengthened in the faith. So the good work goes on.

September 21 I attended the reunion being held at Bayard, Nebraska. Services were held in a tent pitched in a convenient place in the town. A nice company of Saints were in attendance. The meeting was in charge of Brn. C. W. Prettyman, J. L. Detrick, and Sr. Grace E. Kipp. The reunion committee was Brn. J. L. Detrick, S. H. Barkdall, and D. W. Shirk. Provision was made at the commissary tent to accommodate every one in the eating line. The preaching-services were well attended, until the last evening, when the town people secured a temperance lecturer for the evening. This detracted from the interest of our meeting as to numbers. Some had the gall to say that we should have discontinued our meetings and attended the lecture, when our meetings had been announced for weeks before. Straws show which way the wind blows. The prayer-meetings were entered into with zeal and devotion. The Sunday-school and Religio societies received consideration in their places, a number of workers being present. Although these Saints are living away out on the borders, with many disadvantages confronting them all the time, they appeared hopeful and happy and devoted to the work, and prize these meetings more fully than many who possess every convenience, and opportunity to attend at will. Another union was provided for, to be held at Tryon, Nebraska, in 1908.

Bayard is conveniently situated, on the north side of the North Platte River, on a branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, between four and five hundred miles west of Omaha, in one of the most healthful climates to be found. Splendid air to breathe, which never gives out. For the last three years they have had an abundance of rainfall to produce good crops, though away out on the arid lands, where at one time it was thought impossible for civilized man to subsist by tilling the soil. It is now an inviting place, even for invalids. "Young man, go west."

While east last summer the writer was permitted to visit the Saints at Somerville, Boston, and Fall River, Massachusetts; Brooklyn, and Saratoga, New York; and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, rendering what aid he could on limited time. Kind friends and sympathizers were met with in every place. Thanks for kindness. Yes, tarried over at Kirtland, Ohio, attended the town fete held near the town hall in charge of Bro. G. T. Griffiths. Supper with extras were served, and music, with a large gathering in attendance; a social time enjoyed with old neighbors and friends. A neat little sum was realized, to be used in the way intended.

The visitor was cared for by Bro. Stone, the keeper of the inn. Sunday morning following found him occupying in the famed old temple on the hill, Bro. J. H. Lake following in the evening. Providence, Rhode Island, and Cleveland, Ohio, were passed by for lack of time. It takes more than a few weeks to see folks and see things. Just now the writer is yielding to first call, at home, tied for awhile by environment.

WM. H. KELLEY.

GLIDDEN, Iowa, October 29, 1907.

Dear Herald: I am near Glidden at this writing. Though it has been a long time since I penned a line for your columns, yet my desire for the spread of the truth, and the success of the work of God has not abated. I have been busy with ministerial duties the greater part of the time, earnestly desiring to do my part toward its final triumph. In my work I have felt greatly blessed, feeling sure that the assistance of the Spirit was understood and enjoyed. Some instances of divine guidance might be mentioned, but I will withhold for the present, at least. At some future time I may feel more like mentioning things which have been encouraging to me.

I was permitted to attend the last reunion held at Rhodes, Iowa, and greatly enjoyed the services and spirit manifested in the meetings. I felt that my faith had been strengthened by the good spirit that was present during the meetings, and the work done while there. A few days later I attended the reunion held at Moorhead, Iowa, where I was permitted to listen to some excellent discourses, and enjoy the association of missionaries, officers, and Saints, and the Holy Spirit which was at those meetings also. At the two reunions mentioned, I gave a goodly number of patriarchal blessings, and felt greatly blessed in my work, for which I feel very grateful to God.

By invitation, I attended the anniversary exercise held in honor of the forty-eighth anniversary of the Gallands Grove Branch, and the forty-fourth anniversary of the Gallands Grove District. The reminiscences of the Saints were interesting and encouraging, as all seemed to be firm in the faith. However, in spite of the good things said, a feeling of sadness crept over the writer as the mind ran back over the past, and recalled the faces of so many who were once full of life and activity, but whose bodies now quietly sleep in the tomb, awaiting the resurrection of the just. Though dead, they still live in our memories. Did I say dead? Ah! they only sleep while their spirits rest in the "paradise of God," or else would there be but little meaning in the Savior's words: "And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." We hope to meet all worthy Saints when the Lord Jesus shall come in the power and the glory of the Father, to reign with his Saints on the redeemed and sanctified earth.

At times it seems to be necessary to let the mind run back over the past, that we may note our own mistakes and make needed corrections, and live over again, in a sense, the good things of the past. But, do the best we may, some things are much better if forgotten, as we pass into the brighter realms of the present, and seek to prepare for the good things of the future, endeavoring to so live and labor as to be recognized as the loyal sons and daughters of God. Paul's words may be quoted here, with all their force, as follows: "Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. . . . Nevertheless, whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing."

How true it is that the faith of the humble child of God grows stronger, and his hope grows brighter as the days and years go by, "For now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." Jesus was encouraged because of the joy set before him, and why not we?

It is best to have an aim in life, and keep the eye steadily fixed on the ideal character, Christ Jesus, as we press onward. If we are ascending heavenward, as we should be, there is danger in looking down. Try an experiment by climbing to a high tower, looking down all the while. Unless you are skilled in the art of ascending, you would fail by such a course. But if you keep your eyes fixed on the point you desire to reach, without thinking of the height to be reached, your nerves will be steady, and you can ascend with safety. So it is in religious work and development. That which inspires hope and gives courage is still before us.

In gospel bonds,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

LEXINGTON, Tennessee, November 1, 1907.

Editors Herald: I have often thought of writing to your columns. I wish to express my thanks to the brethren and sisters for the encouraging letters which give me such pleasure in reading. If it were not for the general church papers I might be more in the dark than I am; but through the papers I can see that others have their ups and downs, as well as myself. I have no reason to doubt this being the only true church of Christ. I have had many evidences of it. I have seen the signs following the believer more than once, even the blinded eyes opened, and the sick healed. I have also had my prayers answered, for which I feel thankful.

I will relate an instance that comes to mind. I had just moved to Lexington, and my wife was at that time subject to nervous headache to the extent she would have spasms, and it seemed would almost die. She, having overworked in the moving, took the headache, and was very bad. Nobody was there but the little eight-year-old boy and myself. I had some oil which had been set apart for the healing of the sick. With this I anointed her head, then bowed by the bed and prayed the Lord to bless the anointing and to heal her, as we had no elder, and had no way of getting one at that time. The Lord healed her at once, and she got right up, dressed, and went to work. I have not told this to boast, but thought it might help some one else under similar circumstances. When we do the best we can, that is all the Lord requires of us.

I feel my weakness, and earnestly desire the prayers of the Saints, that the Lord may enlighten my mind, and broaden my understanding. It is my desire to do the will of the Lord in all things. I can say that the Lord has blessed me in some of my efforts to present the word, while at other times my mind has been blank, as I feel that it always will be when the Lord is not with me. May the Lord bless his people everywhere, that they may put forth their best efforts to advance his cause.

Yours in the faith,

U. L. GOWER.

DIXONVILLE, Alabama, October 29, 1907.

Editors Herald: I presume you will desire to know that the Florida reunion was a success.

A good, enjoyable time was held by all who attended. The attendance, considering it was the first reunion there, was good; the weather was lovely, the preaching fair, the social-meeting fair, and practically no complaint. Another for next year was voted unanimously. Brn. T. C. Kelley, A. and N. L. Booker, Jeff Hawkins, C. J. Clark, G. T. Chute, and the writer did the preaching. Three sessions were spent profitably, we think, in Bible drill and normal work. Friday night, the 25th, a splendid program was rendered, for which credit is largely due to Bro. and Sr. Clark.

Yours respectfully,
J. M. STUBBART.

HOLDEN, Missouri.

Editors Herald: As the Saints are looking this way (Independence Stake), and often inquire as to opportunities for business, I now have two openings in the town of Holden.

1. A blacksmith shop, with two forges, gasoline engine; a general repair business is carried on. The brother has been here for more than thirty years, but is getting too old and desires to retire.

2. Coal, wood, and feed business. A good location and a growing business, in the midst of a growing branch of the church.

3. A hardware store. As I have been asked by letter a number of times for such chances, and not having the names of those parties, I take this opportunity to inform those who may desire to engage in either line.

In gospel bonds,

Gleanings from the Field.

Editors Herald: I am now at home with loved ones, after an absence of three months. I have enjoyed my last trip very much; have been blessed much with the Spirit, being shown and directed in my work.

Just closed a sixteen-session discussion with F. M. Strickland, of the Christian Church. Had a good time all the way through. My opponent's attitude and actions (while sometimes hard to bear) did me no harm, but much good. Am more persuaded than ever that no weapon formed against this work shall prosper. I am a firm believer that when it becomes necessary to meet our opponents in debates, if we are humble and faithful, the Lord will lead and direct to the confounding of all spirits and powers arrayed against the truth. The debate was a complete victory for our side. My opponent was heard by a disinterested party to advise his elders not to allow a vote to be taken to decide the debate. Said it would prove disastrous to their cause.

I baptized one, Sunday, October 27, and left about a dozen or more dry-land Saints who stood by me, giving me the best their homes afforded, and helping me with their means. I also feel I owe to the dear Saints of Bald Knob an acknowledgment of their kindness, and sacrifice made for my financial welfare, and giving me every attention and help needed while I was sick with Arkansas chills and fever. I feel truly proud to say we have a branch of Saints there that many other branches would do well to pattern after, though their advantages are but few. May the Lord bless them abundantly for their kindness toward God's servants. I expect another debate with Strickland here in Springfield, with all books, as he was not satisfied with the debate on the Bible.

Men are qualified for civil liberty in exact proportion to their disposition to put chains upon their own appetites; in proportion as their love of justice is above their rapacity; in proportion as their soundness and sobriety of understanding is above their vanity and presumption; in proportion as they are more disposed to listen to the counsels of the wise and good, in preference to the flattery of knaves. Society can not exist unless a controlling power upon the will and appetite is placed somewhere; and the less of it there is within, the more there must be of it without. It is ordained in the eternal constitution of things, that men of intemperate habits can not be free. Their passions forge their fetters.—Burke.

News From Branches

FIRST BRANCH, CHICAGO.

Last Sabbath, our regular sacrament day, was made of good account to the Saints here, by many attending the services, and manifesting the signs of real spiritual life. The Saints ought to be the most lively, and "always doing" people of any, for their message to the world is a live one, and their means of salvation that of hard, earnest work. The elements of opposition which try, and prove us, are well mixed in the world to-day, and either we must answer the call for the courageous, or else take our place with those who fail, and regret.

Just now the Saints are astir in the egg business. As last winter, fresh eggs are procured, and sold out as best can be. A small profit is realized, which goes to the building fund. We are just beginning to realize that each little success only whets our efforts, and makes the next task the more easy. Too, it seems as though the end is in sight, and already we realize what our love for the little church will be, when once we enter it as our own, to give to God as an offering to be used to his glory.

The day of Thanksgiving is drawing nigh. Bro. McGurie is out with both hands full of tickets for a turkey supper to be given Thanksgiving evening, proceeds of which are to go to the building fund. He will sell you a ticket whether you can come or not, and not feel the least slighted. Try him.

Our work here is being carried on principally by the local force, and though we have suffered some, prospects are now brightening, and everything seems to be adjusting itself to our former normal condition. It is not the lack of a missionary that is the real cause of the decline of a branch, but the failure of the members to live up to their possibilities. Our meetings ought to be just as good where a branch officer presides, as were a high priest or an apostle present. Our gatherings are not for the purpose of being entertained, but for prayer, for worship, and meditation. The association and communion of Saints figure in our salvation only so far as we make it a means of self-development along the lines of the law of charity, and lending aid to those whom our influence will better.

We are pleased to say that the work here, so far as represented by the First Branch, presents a pleasing front at present, even though we have had some discouragements in the near past.

Bro. E. J. Goodenough has labored with us considerably, and what we have had of him has been good enough for any one.

Preparations are being made by the Sunday-school for a Christmas-tree and entertainment.

The Sunday-school is active in announcing its existence, by handing out cards to passers by. A well printed and neat little card about the size of a postal, bearing recommendations of the school, and an ample explanation which differentiates us from the Utah people.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

The singing-class, of which we made mention last week, held its first meeting Tuesday evening. Those in charge of the work are well pleased with the excellent attendance, and all are impressed with the competency of the leader, Professor Homes, of Kansas City.

At their regular monthly business-meeting, the Sunday-school sustained Bro. David J. Krahl to succeed Bro. Earl Corthell as superintendent of the school, upon the latter's resignation.

Also, the matter of Christmas entertainment was brought up and referred to the executive committee.

The attendance at Religio last Friday evening was two hundred and thirty-seven, and collection three dollars and forty-nine cents. We were favored with the presence of a number of the priesthood who attended an earlier meeting and stayed at Religio afterwards. A particularly excellent paper was read by Sr. Tessie Smith on the subject of Mohammedanism. The conference visitors who come in the spring to General Conference will notice many improvements in Independence since they were here, particularly in the "west end." Streets have been graded, granitoid sidewalks have been put down, some streets have been paved, and many comfortable homes built. A street is being graded now which will give a convenient approach to the sanitarium tract from the south.

Sunday was a day well spent at the Stone Church, and attendance was good despite the fact that the weather was very cold. Bro. M. H. Bond, of the stake presidency, preached at the morning service on the subject of the "ministration of angels," and Bro. Joseph Luff in the evening, using for his text

Conference Minutes.

SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.—Met in conference in Tarona, Papeete, April 6, 1907, at 8 a. m. The following officers were chosen: J. F. Burton, president; C. H. Lake, assistant president; Turatahi, secretary; Taaroa, assistant secretary; Takehu, Matahuria, and Tetohu to take care of the chapel, and keep order during the conference; Kehauri, Mahinui, and Roo to oversee Tarona and keep order on the grounds. The following reports were received from ministers: High Priests J. F. Burton baptized 1, C. H. Lake; Elders Teraitua, Tahua, Turatahi, Tepoaitu, Taroi, Tuteirihia baptized 4, Tai, Lui, Tupotahi, Marere, Teahu, Taihia, Tiho, Haroatea, Tikihi, Maruake, Pohemiti baptized 1, Proi, Alfred Sandford, Tapu, Tehu, Huoi, Teotahi, Rua, Parepare, Hotu, Tara baptized 4, Tevivi, Hepava; Priests Tane a Temai, Tehautupu, Fariua, Teare, Fakatoro, Tanenui, Tetautua, Taruia, Taihia, Tehautavi, Teopa, Hiti, Tehania, Haorea; Teachers Taaroa, Tahua, Maro, Tavi, Roo, Taura, Faarii, Mahinui, Moe; Deacons Matahuria, Tetata, Teata, Taia. Adjourned for Sunday were as follows: Preaching at 7 a. m. by Elia; at 10 a. m. by C. H. Lake; at 2 p. m. Hotu and Tahua to administer the sacrament, and lead the testimony-meeting; at 7 p. m. preaching by Marere. A son of Tanenui and Putaki was blessed at the morning service by J. F. Burton, C. H. Lake, and A. Sandford, and named Tanenui.

April 8, at 8 a. m., conference opened as usual; minutes read and approved, after which the six propositions of the conference of July 26 were read, and are as follows: "It is expedient that we agree to the things mentioned below: 1. Leave off the company called the priesthood. 2. Cease leading companies into the bush. 3. Cease talking evil of one another. 4. We will all become one people as formerly, and we all will be subject to the law of God, and likewise to the law of the church, and to the officers of the church according to their office. 5. And if we agree fully to these things, we will recognize all the officers of this church, according to their offices and callings as formerly. 6. And we will recognize the branch in Faava in good standing in this church, and all the officers and members also therein." Twenty-eight speeches were made for and against the company called the priesthood. At the afternoon session Teura desired to read from Doctrine and Covenants 18: 4. The point he tried to make was that they were commanded to go to the mountains and to the sea to pray, upholding their thought that it was right and best to go to the bush and wade into the sea to pray. He was answered, We were told to pray in public and in private, and to preach on the mountains and to all people, and nothing said about wading in the sea to pray. And after twenty-two speeches had been made, the president of the conference asked all who desired to abandon the company called Priesthood Company to stand up, and most all stood up; he then asked all who desired to hold fast to that company to stand up, and fourteen brethren and one sister stood up; and as they were all officers in the church, except the sister, the officers were requested not to act in their office till they repented. April 9, met at 8 a. m. Minutes of last session read and approved; afterwards opportunity was offered to those not present yesterday to express their desires concerning the Priesthood Company. Six brethren stood up expressing their desires to stay with the company. The following elders were appointed as a court of elders to try any case which may be presented to them: Elia, Turatahi, and Marere. The following branches reported their officers chosen: Tiona, Amanu, Avatoru, Makatea, and Niau. Elders' quorum reported their work and the offices held by them the past year. Neri asked concerning the law of Anaa which says, an "officer of this church who sanctions his child living with a companion unmarried, must give up his office." His question was, Supposing a child had married and separated from the married partner, and took up with another companion, would he lose his office? After twenty-nine speeches, Neri asked the president of the conference to decide it, who decided as follows: As under the French law children were subject to their parents till they were twenty-one years old, therefore, if an officer of this church sanctioned his child, under twenty-one years old, living in adultery, he must give up his office. The subject of filling up Tarona land and making a wall was discussed. The committee, Metuaore, Hotu, and Elia reported the work divided among the following six districts; Tahiti, Hao, Rairoa, Fakarava, Kaurā, and Manihi, each district to burn its own lime for the wall, of 375 meters long, around Tarona from the road back, the wall to be four and a half feet high and twenty-two inches thick, and the land built up two feet higher than it is now, the wall to be of coral rock, ten men of each district to build the wall, the lime to be brought here from February to March, 1908, this work to be begun after the conference in April of next year. All this was agreed to by vote.

April 10 met at 8 a. m. The report of the committee on ordinations received, recommending the ordinations of Noia, Rua, and Tane as elders, Rootaura and Taaroa as priests, Taia and Ratia as teachers. The proposition was made of getting mountain rock for the wall around Tarona rather than coral rock. The statement was made that it would cost about $2,000, American money, for the rock alone. It was finally decided to use coral for the wall. A report from the court of elders was read concerning the company called Priesthood Company, as follows, partly: "We, the court of elders, met at 2 p. m., April 9, on the Priesthood Company case, and considered it till 5 p. m.; met again April 10, at 8.30 a. m., and again considered that question, the Pupu people generally being present; J. F. Burton and C. H. Lake were sent for on both days by the court of elders, and spoke their views before the court and the Pupu, and then they retired; and when we saw that the Pupu would not change their minds, we condemned them on the two charges, that is, they would not be subject to the six propositions of the conference of July 26, 1906; and they were rebelling against the church and its officers and laws; and put upon the conference the work of affixing their penalty. Elia, Turatahi, Marere, court of elders." After much talk for and against the charges and decision of the elder's court, twenty-nine brothers and twenty-three sisters were cut off from the church, by vote of the conference on each name separately, after they had stood up and requested it. The president of the conference requested all officers who desired to do the work of missionaries for the coming year, to report to him. The committee on the grounds reported there were three hundred and fifteen persons attending conference.

April 11, 8 a. m.: The following was presented and received by vote: "All members of the church—men or women—who live with companions unmarried, must give up their membership. This will take effect on April 6, 1908." It was stated that Pai Tahutu had been appointed by the committee to oversee the building of the wall, and Pou, Tenenui, and Roo to build the scow to bring stone for the wall from the reef. Marere and Tane were appointed a committee to examine the bishop's book. The following persons were then ordained: Noia, ordained elder, by C. H. Lake; Tane, elder, by J. F. Burton; Taaroa, priest, by Elia; Rootaura, priest, by Hotu; Taia, teacher, by J. F. Burton. Rua and Ratia not being present, their ordinations were provided for. The conference of April 6, 1908, will meet at Tarona, Papeete, at 8 a. m., done by vote of the conference. The officers of the mission, divisions, and districts, were requested to try all members who would not agree to the six propositions of the July conference of 1906, and if they would not give up the Pupu to cut them off. The president of the conference was then asked, how those cut off yesterday could return if they wished to. He replied, As they were cut off from the church by conference by their own request, therefore if they wished to return they would have to be baptized; but if they came before the conference and stated truly that they would abide the six rules of the July conference of last year, probably the conference would restore them; but if they waited till after conference finally adjourned, they must be baptized if they wished to enter the church. April 12. The elders' quorum reported they had chosen Alfred Sandford as first counselor to the president of the quorum, and Kehauri as second counselor, and Hiti Temanava secretary. Metuaore, the bishop, reported that he had chosen Alfred Sandford as his second counselor. Arrangements were made for their ordinations, which took place on Sunday, April 14; Sandford and Kehauri ordained as first and second counselor to the president of the elders' quorum, and Sandford as second counselor to Bishop Metuaore. Tevari of Faaa, and Hotu of Tikahau, repented before the conference of their connection with the Pupu, and stated that they received all the propositions of the conference of July 26, 1906, and wished to be received again into membership. They were received by the unanimous vote of the conference. The court of elders reported having examined into the matter of Taia, of his son living with a woman unmarried. He stated that he desired his son to marry, but he would not. He tried to separate them, but they would not hear him. He cast his son out of his house because of his unbelief; the vote in favor of allowing him his office was 16 in favor and 9 against, which he took as a denial of his right to hold his office. Conference adjourned.

April 13. Report of the auditing committee on the bishop's books received. The bishop received $284.70 Chili, disbursed $75.05, in the safe $209.65 Chili money. Hotu reported he had $30 French money in his hands of Tarona land money. The following appointments were then made: C. H. Lake, president of Fakarava division; Turatahi, assistant secretary of the mission, to visit that division to correct the record of names in that division, and also to act as missionary; William, president of Tahiti division, and Tane his assistant. Presidents of districts, Hotu, in Takaroa district; Marere, in Rairoa; Tehakeke, in Hereheretue; Teihoarii, in Fakarava; Putoa, in Kaukura; Tapuni, in Tubuai; Markuake, in Raiatea; Teponitu, in Tahiti; Temarei, in Taenga; and Elia, in Hao. Missionaries: in Tahiti, Tai; in Hao, Pinga; in Manihi, Tetaku; in Kaukura, Hiti, and Niuarai. The bishop also reported the money still due of tithing loaned in Anaa, and asked the branches to return it; he also notified the conference of the following agents he has appointed in the following places: Tahua, in Rairoa; Rua, in Tikahau; Teopa, in Makatea; Tetai, in Niau; Elia, in Amanu. The following officers were sustained by several unanimous votes: Joseph Smith and his counselors, the apostles; the Bishopric, seventies, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, and all Saints here, in America, and in all the world. The president of the conference advised all the officers and missionaries of the church to preach the gospel of Christ, and do not speak evil of any people, but try always to lead others into the light and truth. Conference adjourned at 10 a. m., April 13, 1907. Minutes of Turatahi, secretary of the conference, translated by J. F. Burton.

BRITISH ISLES.—Annual conference met in the Priestley Road meeting-room, Birmingham, August 3, at 6.50 p. m. Apostle J. W. Rushton occupied the chair. Proceedings opened with the singing of hymns, and prayer was offered by Elder C. H. Caton. The minutes of the 1907 conference were read and corrected. The mission president's report, in which was embodied his report as delegate to General Conference, was read, and its consideration deferred until a later stage of the meeting. Missionary reports; William Newton, of Plymouth, stated that he had labored one month in London but he did not accomplish much on account of sickness; and no meeting-rooms available for preaching. Also labored one month at Heavitree (Exeter). Some labor had also been done in Enfield. In lieu of a report a communication was received from Thomas Taylor, of Leeds. W. H. Greenwood, of Manchester, reported labor in the Sheffield District, including Derby and Nottingham. Thomas Jones, of Nantyglo, reported labor at Penrhwi-ceiber, Aberaman, and Tredegar, especially the two latter places, where the seed was being liberally sown, and house to house visitations carried on. George Morris reported labor in Penrhwi-ceiber, Aberaman, and Tredegar, too, where tract distribution from house to house and street-preaching had been carried on. G. W. Leggott reported labor in the Manchester District. Visited Warrington and Morton: He had commenced open-air meetings at Droylsden with good interest, and at Stevenson Square, Manchester. The letter of Bro. Thomas Taylor was now objected to, and its consideration deferred.

Reports of district presidents: Manchester was reported by H. Greenwood. The work is onward, the ministry generally are active, out-door meetings and street-preaching are being carried on in the branches. Pleased to report that the brethren were carrying out the duties of their calling. Birmingham was reported by William Ecclestone. The branches were doing their work faithfully. All were doing what they could. Leeds District was reported by Walter Aveyard, who said that he had to resign his office as president on account of infirmity. He had not been able to fulfill his several duties. The Burley Branch had been passing through an ordeal, yet they had good spiritual times together. In the Wortley Branch a number were attending to their duty. He said they needed young, healthy, and strong men in Leeds. Men who are whole-hearted for God, who know their duty, and are willing to do it. Their two branches are presided over by priests. Eastern Wales was reported by Thomas Gould, who said the work was moving along slowly, yet the spiritual condition was fairly good. We have some drones, but the majority are active and doing their best. Bro. Thomas Jones and George Morris are doing active missionary work. In harmony with the law, they are opening up new fields, and we are hopeful for their success. Western Wales was reported by H. Ellis, who stated that the work was more hopeful and encouraging than heretofore. Pontyeates had added three promising men during the year. The branch president here had paid him over $50 in tithing and free-will offerings. At Llanelly, conditions were not favorable. Officers were needed here, where there was a large meeting-room, to carry on the work. Llansamlet is in an improved condition, David Lewis, an old veteran, being president. The outlook is hopeful. Penygraig Branch is not in a good condition. The members are scattered over a wide area. They hope to revive the work. Aberaman Branch has been recently reorganized, and Bro. Lilas Evans is president. The only drawback to the work here is lack of education. The report of Bro. Aveyard was withdrawn for later consideration.

On Sunday, August 5, the morning service opened at 11 a. m. J. W. Rushton presided, assisted by H. Greenwood and W. Ecclestone. Several speakers occupied the stand, viz.: H. Greenwood, G. W. Leggott, and Bro. Angus, of Philadelphia. The addresses were good and were listened to with close attention. During the service a solo entitled, "The promise of life," was well-rendered by Sr. Edwards, a promising contralto singer. In the afternoon an old-fashioned fellowship-meeting was presided over by C. H. Caton and John Dyche. Eighteen interesting testimonies were borne. The evening service at 6.30 p. m. was in charge of H. Greenwood and William Ecclestone. "I know my heavenly Father knows," was sweetly rendered by Sr. Green. Bro. Rushton was the speaker. His discourse was pointed and interesting. An open-air service was afterwards held in a busy thoroughfare, under the direction of J. Dewsnup, Jr., Bro. J. Dewsnup, W. Ecclestone, G. W. Leggott, W. R. Armstrong, J. W. Rushton, and J. E. Meredith addressed the crowd.

Monday, August 5, business was resumed about 9.40 a. m. Bro. Rushton again occupied the chair, being assisted by C. H. Caton. The financial secretary stated that his books were ready for audit, whereupon the chair appointed J. E. Meredith, Charles Walton, and E. Nixon to audit and report. Reports of patriarchs James Baty (Manchester), and Joseph Greenwood (Stafford), were read. The Bishop's agent's report was next presented by Elder C. H. Caton: "Income, including balance from 1905, was £355, 18s. 1½ d. Of this sum, £160, 17s. 4d was received from Bishop E. L. Kelley, and £195, 11½ d, tithes and offerings in this country. The total expenses were, £311, 2s, 9d, leaving a balance of £43, 15s, 5½ d, to start the present year. The income for the present year up to July 15, has been £125, 10s, 0½ d, of which sum £60 has been received from Bishop E. L. Kelley, leaving £65, 10s, 0½ d, from tithes and offerings. This, compared with last year up to same date, £78, 5s, shows a falling off of £12, 15s. Adding the balance of 1906 to this income, we have £173, 3s, 9½d. The expenses during the year, to July 15, are £160, leaving me £13, 3s, 9d, to meet liabilities falling due August 1, of £31. In laying these figures before you, I beg to call special attention to the matter of free-will offerings. Thinking it would give the brethren and sisters of small means a chance of paying into the general fund of the church and thus have credit on the Bishop's books for such help, I appointed collectors in the branches, hoping thereby to materially swell the income. I am very sorry to say my hopes have been very greatly disappointed. While thanking those who have added their mite in this way, I can not help deploring the apathy of the general membership in this matter. As Saints we should always remember that the only means the Lord has enjoined for the purpose of raising funds to carry on the work, is by tithes and offerings to be paid in to the bishopric of the church. These funds are to be used for the spread of the gospel and assistance of the poor. I know of no other financial responsibility which the church, as such, is under. I hope the remaining part of this year will show an improvement in the work of branch collectors. There is much anxiety in connection with this agency, but I have learned to be patient, knowing it is the Lord's work, and he will provide. I am still desirous of doing all I can to further the cause, and in asking for financial aid for the church, I, too, ask the prayers of the Saints that my labors may be serviceable for the remainder of my days. C. H. Caton, Bishop's agent, British Isles Mission." The mission book agent, Bro. Alfred Fysh, reported having "sold books to the value of £17, 2s. There has been delay with some owing to fire, and miscarriage of orders through post. Several books are out of stock at headquarters. They are having a first-class plant put down in the new printing-office at Lamoni, so that all work done will be of first-class quality. I have sent for catalogues, which I will supply to applicants later."

Reports of standing committees: 1. A committee to draft and forward letters of appreciation of labor to the late Bishop Thomas Taylor and his counselors upon their retirement from office, here reported, when it was resolved that the report be received, and the committee discharged. 2. The following report was presented by the auditing committee on the Bishop's agent's accounts. "To the President and Saints in Conference Assembled: We, your brethren appointed to audit the books and accounts of the Bishop's agent for the British Isles, wish to state that we have attended to the said audit, and have found the accounts correct. John E. Meredith, Frank Swan, Charles Walton, committee." A communication from Priest William Maddock, of South Manchester, respecting marriage with deceased wife's sister, was read, when it was resolved that: "Whereas the church has not declared on the question of marriage relationship, we do not feel ourselves competent to pass judgment on the question raised by this letter, therefore, we respectfully refer the letter back to our brother." Another communication from Priest William Maddock, respecting a priest's duty when visiting the Saints, was read, and it was resolved that, "Whereas this is a question affecting the Manchester District, we respectfully refer the matter back to our brother." The financial secretary's report, being presented read as follows: "During the conference year 1906 and 1907, I have received cash, £43, 1s, 11d; paid out, £16, 13s, 5d. Of this amount the 'one thousand shillings fund' has contributed £23, 2s, 9d; the tract fund, £8, 3s, 7d; and expended, 3s, 8d. The conference account has expended £11, 15s, 1½d. The incidental expenditure account has expended £3, 13s, 8d, and the postal account, £11, 11½d, leaving a balance in hand of £26, 8s, 6d. I thank the Saints for the support given, and ask for a continuance of their support in the future. I have done all that I could and trust that I have given satisfaction to the body." Auditors reported foregoing account correct. At this juncture, and during the discussion of the financial secretary's accounts, the president of the mission stated that no member of the church in this country has any right to frustrate the resolutions of this body passed in conference capacity, and if any missionary do this, he is liable to have his appointment withdrawn. Elder Caton was granted permission to read his report, and address the conference upon his own work and that of his collectors, in obtaining tithes and offerings. The report of the committee on the illuminated addresses presented to Presidents Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans was next presented, and the committee discharged. The committee on the revision of conference rules reported, when the committee was granted further time. The objection to Bro. Thomas Taylor's report was now taken up, when it was resolved "That the communication from Elder Thomas Taylor be deleted from the reports of missionaries, and further, whereas Elder Thomas Taylor has declined to report to this conference, be it resolved that we regret that he has declined to report to the body and show the courtesy that has hitherto been shown by all missionaries appointed to this country in the past." The report of the Leeds District was now considered, and questions asked respecting the condition of the work in Leeds, which were answered by the president of the mission, Resolved, That the secretaries forward to the relatives of the late Bishop Taylor a letter of condolence. Resolved, That the 1906 conference minutes be corrected to include the resolution on the report of the committee on district boundaries, and the resolution be carried into effect. Resolved, That the financial secretary be authorized to purchase a bag for financial documents. The report of the mission president was received, and ordered to be printed and distributed at the president's discretion. The general, mission, and local authorities of the church were sustained by vote. Votes of thanks were awarded the officers and members of the Birmingham Branches for hospitality and kindness experienced by the visiting members of the conference. Cardiff was chosen by vote to be the place to hold the 1908 sessions of conference. A peaceful, orderly, and enjoyable conference closed, with suitable remarks by Bro. J. W. Rushton, who also offered the closing prayer.

At the late mission conference it was resolved to have the report of the president printed and circulated among the various branches. The following extracts are therefore selected as representing and embodying the main features which may be utilized as a working basis for the better equipment of the several branches of the church in this country.

Speaking of the work of the Sunday-school, Zion's Religion, and also the Daughters of Zion, as represented in the Conventions and the General Conference, the report continues as follows: My experience has taught me that in our mission we are very much behind in these vital matters. It is true, we have in most of our branches, Sunday-schools, a few of which are in earnest about the work of caring for the needs of the children; but in the main this work is amorphous and tactless, and carried on in a nonchalant manner. Many of our children are lost to us, and in all probability will never be recovered, because we lack properly organized effort to retain them intelligently. We have almost innumerable instances where the law has been complied with, and the almost irresponsible children have been baptized when eight years old; but when the child has got beyond the period of dutiful subjection to parental authority, attendance at church and interest therein has been conspicuous by its absence in many instances. We very much need properly organized schools in which our children may be trained and educated in our faith and doctrine; we need also organized endeavor to arrest and interest the youths and maidens who, passing out of their childhood and not yet fitted for the matured pleasures, nor appreciative of the attractions of the adults, do not have in this mission the environment which adequately supplies this great need. Other churches have long been alive to the urgency of this demand, and have secured a large measure of success by specializing on this question, and have 'sanctified' what things were once regarded with suspicion, viz., games, music, gymnasiums, and even theatricals. I strongly feel that with due care and proper limitations, which, of course, would have to be determined by experience rather than by prescription, we could profitably utilize some of these methods to keep in touch with our young people; for if they will seek such pleasures, and experience shows they will, it is much better for all concerned that their pleasures and recreations shall be enjoyed under proper conditions and in a congenial environment, rather than in questionable places, among companions who are not in sympathy with the spiritual ideals of our church. By this means we shall in all probability not only effectively provide against this leakage, but gain a number of strong and robust young men and women, who will voluntarily devote themselves to the work of building up the church and kingdom. I therefore very strongly recommend that in the various branches Sunday-school work and Religion work, or something of a similar nature, be seriously and methodically undertaken; and so place ourselves on an equality with the church in America. I think it would be a wise step to select a committee of capable brethren and sisters to arrange some method of dealing with this matter with a view to organization, and suggest that the committee correspond with the association in America to obtain a knowledge of their methods and routine. These matters are very urgent and ought not to be longer delayed.

Regarding the sisters in the church in this mission, it is a common want that has been stated time and again, and only those who have come out of other churches where they have enjoyed the 'mothers' meeting,' or the 'sewing classes,' or some of the various organized attempts to interest the mothers, can sympathize with the feeling of loss and utter uselessness which seems to be the experience on joining our church. Surely, we can find some way in which to gladden the usually monotonous lives of the wives and mothers who, week after week, are drudging at home, and can only have a brief and uncertain interlude on Sundays, and not always that.

If we could secure the services of some energetic sisters in each branch, who would sacrifice to find the time and devote the energy to accomplish this work, what a wonderful work could thus be realized, bringing joy and blessing into the lives of those who have not much opportunity for visiting, or attending the usual services, and besides would be the means of increasing the spiritual and material prosperity of the church. I mean that it shall be a sister's work, uninterfered with by the brethren.

Regarding the conditions of the work in the branches, there is yet much to be desired. Speaking generally, though there are exceptions, there is a prevailing lack of organized and consistent effort on the part of those who have charge of the local congregations. This, in my opinion, is responsible for the apathy and indifference among the membership. It is very much to be desired that the branch officers, especially the elders and priests, will put themselves more fully into touch with the flock over which they have spiritual supervision. I am fully aware, in every case there are claims made upon the local ministry which make it very difficult to find the time to attend to church matters as often as they feel they ought to. But after making due allowance for the strenuousness of daily life and the lack of health of which some may justly complain, I am still convinced that much that could be done is left undone. The branch needs more thought and attention than what is simply called for by the usual services, and it would not be time wasted if the brethren would spend more time in thought and careful attention to the needs of the work under their care, together with the opportunities, and arrange, order, and provide for the matters as a steward or foreman in the employ of a master having the interest of the firm at heart, for which of course he is paid, takes his duties conscientiously to heart, thinking how to better do this or save that. In a sentence, we want more of the spirit of commerce, mellowed by the spirit of sacrifice.

I believe it would be a matter that could be attended to without a very distressing sacrifice to have the members visited by the elder and priest pastorally (by the way I don't like that word officially, in this connection), stimulating brotherly love and social sympathy, and giving the individual member evidence that the church really does put a valuation on him or her and the family, and he feels that he 'counts'. So many have felt they were not needed. It is these little attentions, in themselves so insignificant, that are very potent for good if performed, and for evil if neglected. The branch president and the priest are the ones who can get nearer to the membership than any one else, and if they would only seek to put into practice the polity of the church in these matters, I am sure the effort would repay those who would thus serve the church.

I would also ask again that more prompt attention be paid to the quarterly reporting, which has been approved and is now adopted by the church, and the church is now supplying the forms upon which the reports are to be made out. We have asked all the officers to make this a matter of more careful attention; but the success thus far has not been encouraging. We only get a meager response, and some that do come in are so belated that they do not serve the purpose intended, viz.; the requisite data to the church Presidency.

There is another thing about which we have spoken before; that is, the ever-increasing necessity for our ministry to study and become acquainted with the 'signs of the times.' There is not the slightest doubt that conditions are changing, and as never before it is becoming imperative that we shall be able to give 'a reason for the hope that is within us.' The spirit of the age is growing bolder, and no longer does Agnosticism sneak along in the dark, as if afraid of discovery; but it is rapidly becoming 'popular.' Huge crowds in all parts of the country eagerly gather around the open-air Atheistic lecturer, and the Socialist orator who, having an easy accessibility to the cheap editions of the weighty literature has originated a new species of socialism which has proved a menace in some regards, but in the main has given a healthy stimulus to study and research among the common people, who have vigorously set to work to do their own thinking.

Unfortunately, we have very many to-day who are pleased to have a philosophy which relieves them of moral responsibility, and so does away with the necessity of exercising self-restraint. It is for these reasons that I earnestly plead with the young men of the church, especially, to strive by prayerful study and meditation to equip themselves for the work of God in the evangelization of the world and its redemption by obedience to the truth revealed in Christ.

The expert advice of the veteran preacher, Paul, to the novice, Timothy, is worthy of our deepest consideration: 'Study to show thyself approved unto God'; for he that will so labor as to win the approval of his divine Lord will surely win the approval of all good men; and if there is any possibility of awakening the public conscience, this is the preacher that alone is equal to this work.

I now invite especial attention to the categorical statement of the needs of the mission at the present time as it seems to the writer.

1. We need methodical and persistent Sunday-school work properly organized.

2. We need a Religio or its equivalent, also properly organized, and persistent endeavor to attract the young people.

3. We should arrange for weekly sisters' meetings, conducted on a similar plan to the 'mothers' meeting.'

4. The local ministry to systematically care for the interests of the branch over which they have oversight in pastoral visiting; methodical tracting and persistent open-air work.

5. To realize efficiency in our work, we should have periodical priesthood meetings to be devoted to the studying of church doctrine and polity.

6. Please send in your reports, whether branch, district, or mission, promptly, learning to do everything we have to do with a businesslike accuracy and diligence.

7. Lastly, I would advise that we revive the old time fasting- and prayer-services, by which we shall season all our work, and so, at least, place ourselves in the proper attitude for the Spirit of God to guide us.

Touching the finances, we have these interests in the hands of capable and earnest brethren, in whom we all have the highest confidence; Bro. Caton of Birmingham having charge of the tithing and general bishopric work in this mission. It is very encouraging to know that the average income has been maintained this past conference year. I believe that if only the Saints would adopt method in this matter, and instead of allowing emotion to control the giving, to have the sense of our obligation to God and a desire for the welfare of others as the 'motive,' and the emotion to be the accompaniment of our acts of benevolence, there would be better results. It will be very helpful to the officers of the mission, if the members in the various branches will try to pay their tithing to the duly appointed agent in the branch regularly each week or month as may be convenient, remembering always that it is not the amount so much as the spirit and the regularity of the gifts which is worthy.

The mission fund is in the hands of the financial clerk, Joseph Dewsnup. He does not require introduction, as his diligence in this office is known to all of us, and the success of the scheme inaugurated by our brother last year, by which we were able to pay our expenses and provide for other matters without the usual distress, which has been in evidence for some time in the past, is proof of his zeal and capability. He hopes this year to have the help and coöperation of all the Saints to make the 1908 conference glad in the realization of the ideal he presented in 1906.

In conclusion, we are thankful for the harmony and concord which has obtained among the officials of the mission, and we believe that all have striven to accomplish the work imposed upon them. Thanking all for their kindness towards myself, trusting ever to prove worthy of the continued confidence and esteem, I am, yours very sincerely, LEEDS, England, August 1, 1907.

MOBILE.—Met in conference with Three Rivers Branch, September 21, 1907, at 10 a. m., Bro. Alma Booker presiding. Three branches reported: Theodore 72, Bluff Creek 81, and Three Rivers. Three Rivers report found incorrect and referred back to branch for correction. Ministry reporting: Elder O. O. Tillman, Alma Booker baptized 3, W. L. Booker baptized 2, F. P. Scarelliff, T. C. Kelley, G. W. Sherman; Priests L. C. Goff, C. R. Mizelle, G. W. Bankster, G. W. Entrekim, N. L. Booker; Teachers David Goff, James Powell; Deacon Frank Stiner. Bishop's agent reported: On hand last report, 40c; collection, $116.45; expended, $56.87. Adjourned to meet with the Bluff Creek Branch, December 14, 1907, at 10 a. m. Mrs. Alma Booker, secretary, Theodore, Alabama.

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.—Conference convened at 10 a. m., September 28, 1907, with the Blue Rapids Branch. Samuel Twombly presided, assisted by W. E. Peak. The following reports of branches read: Atchison 76, Topeka 48, Blue Rapids 104, Netawaka 52, Fanning 90, Scranton 94, Centralia 22. Ministry reporting: Elders W. E. Peak, Samuel Twombly, F. J. Pierce, A. L. Gurwell, Mahlon Smith, W. H. Murphy, W. S. Hodson, Frank G. Hedrick, Henry Green; Priests A. C. Ingle, H. C. Shriner, William Burlington, George Johnson; Teachers Albert J. Carney, George R. Ketchum, H. Boston, B. F. Thomas, G. W. Shay; Deacon William Blunt. Thirteen of the local ministry reported a total of 330 meetings attended, 26 sermons, 5 baptisms, 3 confirmations, 67 administrations, 3 children blessed, and 1 marriage solemnized, for the past quarter. Bishop's agent, John Cairns, reported: Receipts, $319.12; expenditures, $327.54; balance due agent, $8.42. District treasurer reported: Balance on hand last report, $4.25; paid out, $4.25. Conference adjourned to meet with Fanning Branch. Frank G. Hedrick, secretary.

KEWANEE.—Conference convened with the Tri-City Branch, at Rock Island, Illinois, September 28, 1907, at 10 a. m. Associated with the district president, O. H. Bailey, in presiding, were J. W. Wight and Amos Berve. Branch reports: Joy 49, Kewanee 156, Buffalo Prairie 57, Tri-City 84, Media 21, Peoria 52, Dahinda 45, Canton 77, Millersburg 107. Ministerial reports: Elders John S. Patterson and Ezra T. Bryant. Bishop's agent's report read, audited, and adopted. Total collections, $647.36; disbursements, $627.45. District treasurer's report showed total collections, plus balance, $68.38; total disbursements, $44.48. Secretary reported total membership in district, 649; gain of 17 since May. Holding priesthood, 63. Greatest gain made at Joy. O. H. Bailey and J. W. Wight were authorized to make provision for such two-day meetings as they may see fit. Voted to hold the next conference at Kewanee, February 1 and 2, 1908. On Sunday afternoon three were baptized by J. W. Davis. The meetings throughout seemed peaceful, and the preaching good. The counsel and testimony given by visiting brethren were timely and acceptable. Mary E. Gillin, secretary.

GALLANDS GROVE.—Sunday-school and Religio associations met at Gallands Grove, Iowa, October 18, 1907. At 7.30 p. m., Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser very interestingly introduced the normal work. On the 19th she conducted a session pertaining to the work of the Religio committees, and on the 20th gave an excellent talk on Sunday-school in the home. Her efforts were greatly appreciated, and we trust that those present may be as anxious to "do" as they were to "hear" the inspiring instruction, that better homes may be established, and consequently better and more noble workers developed for service in the cause of Christ. Floy Holcomb, secretary.

PRESENT STATUS OF CLERGY CREDENTIAL BUSINESS.

The following information concerning the present status of the Clergy Credential Business is given for the benefit of the ministry located in the territory of the various passenger associations. The letters published are replies to inquiries addressed to the Commissioners or Chairmen of the associations named by the undersigned:

TRUNK LINE ASSOCIATION.

"NEW YORK, November 4, 1907. Beg to advise that under the rules of this Association clerical certificates are issued only to ordained ministers living on the line of the issuing road, and are not available for any person resident west of Buffalo or Pittsburg. The Trunk Line Association does not maintain a clergy bureau, all clerical permits being issued by individual lines, and applications should therefore be addressed accordingly."—L. P. Farmer, Commissioner.

CENTRAL PASSENGER ASSOCIATION.

"CHICAGO, November 1, 1907.—I beg to say that the Clergy Bureau of the Central Passenger Association is still in operation, and that a rate of two cents per mile may be obtained upon all its outstanding certificates. In view of the substantial reductions in passenger fares made by the General Assemblies of the several States covered by this credential, it seems probable that the Bureau will be discontinued on December 31, current year."—F. C. Donald, Commissioner.

WESTERN PASSENGER ASSOCIATION.

"CHICAGO, October 26, 1907.—We are in receipt of your inquiry of the 22d inst., with regard to the territory within which our clergy certificate is still honored, and in reply beg to advise that it is honored locally in the Northern Peninsula of Michigan, South Dakota, Colorado, Wyoming, and the States west as far as the Pacific Coast. No definite arrangements have been made regarding clergy arrangements for the year 1908, hence we are unable at this writing to give you any advice regarding same."—E. E. MacLeod, Chairman.

SOUTHWESTERN PASSENGER ASSOCIATION.

"ST. LOUIS, Missouri, October 25, 1907.—In regard to the territory covered by the joint clergy certificate, these certificates are no longer good for interstate trips in the Western and Southwestern territory, but may still be used for these trips in the Trans-Continental Clergy Bureau territory. As regards local travel, they will still be honored in all States in the territory of those three bureaus in which the two cent law is not in effect."—J. E. Hannegan, Joint Agent.

TRANS-CONTINENTAL ASSOCIATION.

"In reply to your favor of the 22d inst., I beg to say that at last meeting of Trans-Continental Lines held in Chicago, October 9 to 11, 1907, it was decided to continue clergy fares after January 1, 1908, upon the following basis:

"1. Between points west of a north and south line consisting of the eastern boundaries of the States of Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, and New Mexico, one half of the thirty-day first-class fare, or one half of the regular standard first-class limited fare in the absence of a thirty-day fare.

"2. From points east of the north and south line designated in Section 1 to points west of that line, or vice versa, clergy fares shall be made two cents per mile from starting point to destination, except that the fare from the first INTERMEDIATE point west of such line shall be the minimum fare from points east thereof.

"Further exception: From points east of Colorado common points and Cheyenne fares shall be made two cents per mile on those points; fares so made not to exceed established fares from governing points.

"3. Between Missouri River points, Omaha to Kansas City, inclusive, and California common points and between Missouri River points and North Pacific Coast common points, and between Texas common points, Houston and Minneola, and California common points, and between St. Paul and Minneapolis, Duluth, Superior, and North Pacific Coast common points, the clergy fare shall be $36.

"From points east of Missouri River or St. Paul, including from Memphis and points north and west, through clergy fares shall be made by the addition of locals to the basing gateways.

"Between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth, Superior, and Spokane the clergy fare shall be $30, and between Missouri River and Spokane $30.

"4. Clergy fares between intermediate points not to exceed those between eastern and western terminals designated above.

"Further provided, that the clergy fare between Salt Lake or Ogden and Los Angeles, San Francisco, or Portland be not less than $17.50, and between Salt Lake or Ogden, and Missouri River points, not less than $20.

"Further provided, that the clergy fare between New Orleans and El Paso be $23.20, and between El Paso or Deming and Los Angeles $17.50.

"Clergy certificates issued by Trans-Continental Clergy

Bureau, of which I am in charge, will be honored within the territory and upon the bases of fares set forth above.

"It is possible that it may later be determined not to honor certificates, as follows:

"(a) Between points in Colorado and territory east thereof.

"(b) Points in Wyoming east of and including Cheyenne and points east and south thereof. If that is done, the fact will be clearly set forth in the application blank.

"If further information is desired, please advise me."—J. Charlton, Joint Agent.

SOUTHEASTERN ASSOCIATION.

"ATLANTA, Georgia, October 24, 1907.—Beg to advise that the Southeastern Clergy Bureau continues to issue clergy permits under the same conditions as heretofore."—Joseph Richardson, Chairman.

The New England and Eastern Canadian Associations do not maintain clergy bureaus, as clergy credentials are not issued by them.

Lists of ministers under general appointment will be furnished the associations named about December 1, for the credentials of 1908.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, November 8, 1907.

A Warning to the Saints.

I wish to warn all the Saints against being deceived by one Harry H. Masters, who was expelled from the church some time ago, he having proved himself altogether unworthy of any consideration whatever, as a number of persons here can testify.

ROBERT SMITH.

WATERLOO, Iowa, November 4, 1907.

Religians, Take Notice.

Thanksgiving is the appointed time for taking the annual translation fund collection. If your district or local treasurer has not called attention to this and is not making efforts to have a good showing, WAKE HIM UP.

We want all to get the benefit from helping in this work. We want it as a Thanksgiving offering, be it little or much.

DO NOT FORGET.

Any wishing to help who are not in locals may send it direct and be given proper credit therefor.

RICHARD B. TROWBRIDGE (General Treasurer).

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, 205 West Lexington Street.

Special Conference Notice.

There will be a special conference of the Southwestern Texas District held at San Antonio, Saturday, November 16, commencing at 10 a. m., to attend to some special business of the district made necessary because of the failure of the Tuff conference to take place as ordered by the district conference held at Pipe Creek.

By order of I. N. White, minister in charge.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, November 2, 1907.

Notice.

To Branch Presidents and Clerks of the West Virginia District: Will you please favor your district secretary with early reports for our coming district conference? Blanks were sent to each branch in August. Only two have responded. We desire all who can to send their branch records for a comparison with the district secretary's records. It is much needed. Any not having statistical report blanks, will be furnished upon application to the undersigned. Trust we will have a good conference, and one long to be remembered. Let us pray and labor to that end. Joseph Briggs, secretary, Adamston, West Virginia, Box 47.

Died.

MCQUEARY.—At Urmston, near Conifer, Colorado, Grant McQueary was shot and instantly killed by the hand of a cowardly assassin, on August 23, 1907, at 7 a. m. He was the husband of Sr. Nellie McQueary, and son-in-law of Elder James and Sr. Frances M. Kemp. Nellie, a frail little body with two children, father, mother, two sisters, two brothers, with many relatives and friends, are left to mourn this sad event. Grant was born July 31, 1872. Funeral-sermon by E. F. Shupe, at the Conifer schoolhouse. Interment in the old home cemetery.

CRUSE.—At Pine, Colorado, October 7, 1907, Charles Wesley Cruse, son of Mr. J. R. and Sr. Lucy E. Cruse, grandson of James and Sr. Frances M. Kemp. Another bright gem plucked from the family casket, and we are again called to mourn the loss of another bright, beautiful boy, kind and affectionate, highly esteemed by all who knew him. Charlie was born August 4, 1891. He leaves father, mother, three brothers, many relatives and friends. Funeral-sermon by W. T. Bozarth, at the Conifer schoolhouse. Interment in the old home cemetery.

LONG.—At Pittsburg, Kansas, Edwin L. Long, aged 29 years, 2 months, and 20 days. Died October 26, 1907, of abscess of the lungs. A mother, a good stepfather, a dear wife, three children, five brothers, and two sisters mourn his departure. Buried at Rich Hill, Missouri. Funeral-sermon by J. C. Foss, in the Saints' church, at Rich Hill, Missouri.

How One Young Lady Secured Her Position.

During the last two years I have been writing either about the dead or those I sometimes wish were dead, when a mistake occurs in a news-item which I have written about them.

I am news-editor on a country weekly that has a circulation of 1,600, and is published in a town of about 1,700 inhabitants. I like my work, and only now and then would I rather be washing dishes instead of reading proofs. I didn't step right into the place, nor was it thrust upon me. I commenced working for it when I was in my early teens, and after persistent diligence I climbed to the throne.

When I was in school, at the age of fifteen years, I wrote every week society personals for the Saturday supplement of the Louisville Times and the Courier-Journal. I did this nearly every week, without fail, until I was graduated, which was four years afterward.

My school commencement was two years ago this last June, and the night I was graduated I really felt it was the commencement of my life, but I did not want to turn one stone. To be frank, I was in love; I was happy and content to sit and look at the American beauty roses my lover sent me for my graduating present. But my roses faded and my lover went away to seek his fortune. So my mind did the practical thing and turned my attention to work.

It was on the eighth day of August, two months after my school closed in the year of 1905, that I got a position as clerk in the printing-office in my home town. Taking orders for printing-matter, writing subscription letters, making out newspaper bills, and helping with the bookkeeping was the work required of me.

However, doing what was not required of me is how I secured my position. Every time I got a chance I wrote every news-item I heard and gave it to the editor. Sometimes he would use it, and sometimes he would not. When he did I was made glad and his reporter was annoyed. Along with my other work, I did all I could to please others in every way, for it did not take me long to see that the secret of success in newspaper work is to please the people even when you are not pleasing yourself.—From the Business Circle of the Circle for November.

Tainted Food.

Under the cliff opposite our camp in the Canyon de Chelly, was the corral of a mixed flock of sheep and goats, and it was a picturesque sight on our first evening to see them come home in the twilight and swarm into their primitive fold—their little Navajo David meanwhile making the echoes ring with some wild song of his people. He was a grave-faced little fellow, moccasined and blanketed, and paid us a visit the next morning as his flock grazed about our camp. He leaned silently upon his staff, watching us breakfasting, and we offered him bacon and coffee, than which the Navajo knows no greater luxury. Instead of accepting the proffered hospitality, he looked at our camp-fire and asked where the wood came from.

Red owned to some sticks of it having been gathered from the debris about the dwellings of the dead-and-gone cliff people above us.

Now that which is of the dead is to the Navajo chin-di—possessed of evil spirits—and the wood of a dead man's house, if burned, makes evil all that is cooked with it. So in David's philosophy our breakfast was of the Devil, and

Coming Year Full of Interest.

More history-making events will take place in Iowa in 1908 than ever before in a single year. A successor to President Roosevelt is to be chosen; Iowa's first state-wide primary is to be held; a United States senator, governor, and a new legislature are to be elected.

In this most interesting year, the Register and Leader will be indispensable to every Iowan who desires to be well informed from day to day. The Register and Leader will publish all the news, fairly and accurately told. With over three hundred correspondents in Iowa, it covers every State happening of interest. "Ding," the Register and Leader's popular cartoonist, will depict events as he sees them.

Every new subscriber to the Register and Leader paying now for the year 1908 will receive the paper free for the remainder of this year. Daily, except Sunday, to January 1, 1909, $4.00. Daily, and Sunday to January 1, 1909, $6.00.

Hand your subscriptions to the publisher of this paper or send direct to the Register and Leader Co., Des Moines, Iowa.

How Will Motherhood Rank?

"What is the influence of the business woman on the home life of America?" writes Anna Steese Richardson in the November Woman's Home Companion. "If commercial success becomes the aim of the intelligent woman in this country, where will wifehood and motherhood rank in the scale of social economy?"

"A nerve specialist, who has counted among his patients scores of overworked business women, remarked, in closing a discussion of the woman wage earner:

"In considering the business woman, whether as an economic or a social factor, whether for her own health or her own happiness, you must divorce her entirely from the home."

"I gasped. So wise a man as to nerves! So ignorant as to the heart, the soul of the woman!"

"No woman can be divorced from the home, either as an individual, instinct with life, or as a social problem. Home and woman—they are indissolubly linked together, even though some women do not realize the fact.

"Every woman in business is a factor in some family circle, or holds possibilities of establishing such a circle. Nor is her influence confined to her own immediate family. All unconsciously she permits her very independence and prosperity to touch in an ever-widening circle the homes of her girl friends, now married, and to arouse in the hearts of women singularly suited to the domestic, sheltered life, feelings of discontent and envy. So the financial independent sister, cousin or girl, is often the real serpent in the twentieth-century Garden of Eden. Her commercial success, which passes for unalloyed happiness with her married friend, who has never been in business, is an evil influence which the most willing and devoted Adam can not always counteract."

the substance of four passages of scripture, the basic one of which was Paul's words, "Do I persuade God or men?" Both sermons were exceptionally instructive and edifying.

LAMONI, IOWA.

The preaching at the chapel Sunday was by Bishop G. H. Hilliard. C. J. Spurlock spoke at the Saints' Home and H. A. Stebbins at Liberty Home.

The local ministry were well engaged Sunday. C. J. Peters occupied at Downey morning and afternoon, and at Andover in the evening; A. S. Cochran at New Buda morning and evening; R. M. Elvin at Jack Wood's morning, and Greenville evening; R. J. Lambert at Evergreen in the evening; J. R. Lambert at Thompson in the morning; S. D. Shippy at Wion in the evening; and J. F. Garver at Terre Haute in the evening.

A branch is to be organized at Oland, Missouri, six miles southwest of Lamoni, on Saturday afternoon of this week. On Sunday the Oland church will be dedicated, the stake president and the missionaries in charge having the dedication in hand.

Wardell Christy closed a series of meetings at Davis City, Sunday evening, after an effort continuing four weeks. A good interest was shown through the series. One was baptized.

Bishop Hilliard, in connection with Bishop Anderson, has been laboring among several of the branches of the stake, teaching the financial law. They have visited Lucas, Cleveland, Hiteman, Centerville, and Evergreen.

The Hiteman Branch is enlarging its chapel to meet the demands of the growing branch. A wing fourteen by twenty-two is being added. J. F. GARVER.

The Principle of the Sliding Scale as Applied to Boston Gas.

The Boston Sliding-Scale act, which embodies with some modifications the main provisions of the system widely used in England, provides as follows:

First: Ninety cents per 1000 feet of gas (that is, the maximum price then actually charged by the Boston company) is made the "standard price" of gas.

Second: Seven per cent (that is, 1 per cent less than the dividend which was then being paid by the Boston company) is made the "standard dividend."

Third: The company is prohibited from paying more than 7 per cent dividend unless and until one year after it shall have reduced the price of gas below 90 cents, and then may increase its dividend at the rate of 1 per cent for every 5 cents reduction in price of gas.

Fourth: New stock can be issued only with the consent of the Gas and Electric Light Commissioners, and must be sold at auction at such minimum price and under such other conditions as the commissioners prescribe.

Fifth: Provision is made for determining annually, and publishing in detail in the newspapers, the cost of manufacturing and distributing gas.

Sixth: After the expiration of ten years, the Gas and Electric Light Commissioners may upon petition "lower or raise the standard price per 1000 feet to such extent as may justly be required by reason of greater or less burden which may be imposed upon the company by reason of improved methods in art of manufacture, by reason of changes in prices of materials and labor, or by reason of changes in other conditions affecting the general cost of manufacture or distribution of gas."—From "How Boston Solved the Gas Problem," by Louis D. Brandeis, in the American Review of Reviews for November.

The good sermon is the one that moves us to better every day living. It is told of a woman who kept a little shop, that speaking in commendation of a sermon on honesty, she was asked what she remembered of it. She replied that she could remember very little so as to tell it, but she added: "I remembered to go home and burn my bushel." And that was enough to remember. The sermon had done good work.

I take the liberty of soliciting your patronage as we are in a position to do BANKING BUSINESS BY MAIL very satisfactorily. Open accounts can be placed with us for safety at your convenience and command. We have opened a savings department, paying interest on accounts of $1 or more and each member of the family should become interested in having a bank account building for future needs. We also pay interest on time deposit certificates. A number of the brethren are living here, others are looking forward to this location as a future home, and late revelation and admonition foreshadow coming events, adding materially to our spiritual holdings necessary to signs of the times, and in this connection our Board of Directors propose to safeguard the financial interests of the Saints by offering to them a depository proof against graft, greed, or calamity, governed by a kindred feeling born of the interest we have in common. It is not popular men, large capital, heavy deposits, National or State laws, that offer absolute security to depositors, but directors and officers progressive and conservative, possessed of the virtue of true manhood, shorn of all political ambition, with no taste for frenzied finance or mining speculation, and no inclination to furnish funds for others in that line. I point with considerable just pride (I assume) to our Board of Directors as named below. Feel at liberty to write us on matters that concern you in Jackson County, Missouri.

OFFICERS: Ellis Short, President; M. H. Bond, Second Vice-president; William Crick, First Vice-president; J. D. Briggs, Cashier.

A VISIT TO THE ISLANDS OF THE SEA.

The French proverb, "It is the unexpected that always happens," is doubtless often verified, but in no one instance in the experience of the Editor more than in the visit to Honolulu, Oahu, territory of Hawaii, to take part in the dedication of the church building lately erected by the branch there holding its organization under the care of Elder Gilbert J. Waller, assisted by Elder Edward Ingham, and Priests Keaulana and Kanui, and Deacon John M. Mahuka, the last three named being Hawaiians.

An account of the dedication already has been given in the HERALD, but much of interest transpiring in the visit remains untold, and likely will not be all told; for the "half can never be told."

The week following the day of the dedicatory services was filled by taking advantage of the day time in seeing places of local interest, and visiting men of historical renown, and the buildings of the monarchy ending in the deposition of Queen Lilioukalani, the establishing of the republic with a provisional government, and the final annexation to the United States, the final transfer of sovereignty being made on August 12, 1898, and the flag of the United States raised over the executive buildings in Honolulu.

On Monday evening meetings to be continued during the week began, the Editor occupying the pulpit, Bro. Sheehy on Tuesday evening; Wednesday evening the usual prayer-service, and Thursday and Friday evenings were occupied in the same order. Saturday being the busy day of the week, no meeting was held. Sunday, October 20, the Editor occupied the morning hour, and Bro. Sheehy the evening. The services, however, began by a baptism at eight in the morning by Bro. Waller; Sunday-school at half past nine, and at half past one a Chinese Sunday-school at Waikiki, a suburb of the city, with a Religio class at half past two which filled the hours full, a Religio class occupying the church at half past six, before evening service.

Bro. Lorenzo Moore, with an interesting family of wife and four children, all girls, the oldest Madeline, being fifteen years old, the youngest about six, lives some hundreds of feet above sea level, well up in Nuuanu (pronounced Noo-an-oo) Valley, and here, we, Bro. Sheehy and the Editor, spent Monday, October 21, taking dinner (lunch) and supper (dinner) at their hospitable board. Bro. Moore is the care-taker of the three or four small reservoirs in the upper part of the valley from which a part of the city of Honolulu is supplied with water. The reservoirs are fed by the copious rainfall of the upper valley, coming from the clouds driven before the trade winds, striking the ridges of the mountain range, condensing their moisture on the hither side in frequent showers, more or less heavy according to the season. The Nuuanu Valley is the one into, and through which, the conquering King Kamehameha drove the local Hawaiians of the Island of Oahu over the pali (precipice) at its upper end, when the brave defenders sacrificed themselves by plunging down the steeps rather than submit to capture and its consequences. By this victory the king succeeded in uniting the islands under one government, over which he held sway for many years.

"One whose morality is based upon a nice calculation of benefits to be secured, spends time on mathematics that he should spend in action. Those who keep a book account of their good deeds seldom do enough good to justify keeping books."—W. J. Bryan.

Since the coming of the white people the sheer wall at the end of the valley has been broken, and a good wagon road made up the valley over the crest, and down the northeastern side of the mountain, into the valleys along the coast, a fertile region now pretty well occupied by gardening settlers, Portugese, Chinese, Japanese, with an admixture of Hawaiian blood here and there.

At the close of our visit with Bro. Moore, we returned to the city in the evening, and the Editor, by request, took up the subject of marriage, and stated, as clearly and exhaustively as the evening hour permitted, the attitude assumed by the church on that much discussed topic. Quite a number of the Utah people were present, including elders Anderson and Wooley. We used no harsh terms, spoke disrespectfully of no one; but dealt with principles and the commands of God to the church only.

The island of Oahu is evidently of volcanic origin. A local evidence of a one time eruption near the eastern portion of the city is called the Punch Bowl, possibly from a fancied resemblance to that receptacle of social mischief brewing refreshment in fashion's circles in society. To a visit of this sightly elevation, with its hollowed top, we devoted the afternoon of Tuesday, October 22, accepting the escort of Bro. David Piikoi, his daughter Marie, a teacher in the public schools, and little granddaughter Gardie. The sight from the top was an excellent view of the city and its suburbs, up the valleys and along the ocean shores, including Pearl and Honolulu harbors. The day was lovely, as the schoolgirls use the term, and the drive enjoyed.

Returning we called at the Luualilo Home, a place established for the use and benefit of aged native Hawaiians. Our escort introduced us to Mrs.

Weaver, the matron, who is a sister of General Armstrong, who is connected with the negro school at Hampton, Virginia. The matron gave us a cordial invitation, and we not only saw the accommodations afforded the inmates, but were permitted to see them at their evening meal, the principal article of diet being poi (evidently a word equivalent to our porridge) made from the root called taro, boiled and pounded into a thick paste. The root is also eaten baked, and is in texture and taste much like the yam, or sweet potato. It is quite palatable. The poi is usually eaten without trimmings, but we found sugar and milk a welcome addition. Poi and fish are the staples of native Hawaiian food; however, there is upon the tables in the city where we have been entertained, a variety of food not excelled in quantity and quality in the States whence we came. At one of our meals Bro. Sheehy remarked, "We can not add to your menu. We have nothing, apparently, that you have not."

On Wednesday at three in the afternoon we left Honolulu in company of Bro. G. J. Waller and Bro. David Piikoi for a trip around the island by wagon, including a visit to Laie, the Mormon settlement and sugar plantation; but that is another story.

DARKNESS AND LIGHT.

DARKNESS.

1. Iniquity.
2. Sorrow.
3. Death.
4. Perdition.

LIGHT.

1. Righteousness.
2. Joy.
3. Life.
4. Glory.

"And darkness was upon the face of the deep. . . . And God said, Let there be light; and there was light. And God saw the light, that it was good: and God divided the light from the darkness."—Genesis 1.

"The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth; light and truth forsaketh that evil one.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6.

We notice that in the first instance God is the author of light, and that he has separated it from darkness. He has drawn a line between the two. He calls the one day and the other night. In the second instance he is the author and incarnation of light—spiritual light—and has separated it from spiritual darkness. To him we must ever go to learn the line between iniquity and righteousness.

That which is spiritual is often understood by that which is natural. The laws run parallel. It is quite natural that deeds of evil should be done under darkness. The beasts of prey go forth at night to kill and destroy. Man does his deeds of iniquity then, that he may hide them under the wings of darkness from his fellows and from his God.

So, in the spiritual sense, Christ himself tells us that "every one who doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God." So we may set it down as a safe proposition that anything which courts darkness is in the nature of iniquity, while righteousness loves the light of day and of truth.

It appears, then, that it is something more than a figure of speech when we speak of the "powers of darkness" or of the "children of light."

We should note also that even as God has separated day from night so has he drawn the line between iniquity and righteousness. We may dispel the gloom of night with artificial light, but at best it is a poor substitute for sunlight—we can not make night into day. Likewise we may argue that a shady proceeding is all right, we may say that the end justifies the means, we may say that some one else set the example; but we can not make wrong right. God has divided wrong from right, and he has called one iniquity and the other righteousness.

When the sun is shining brightly, when the landscape is radiant, when there is work to do, one feels happy; but when the shades of night begin to fall, any tinge of melancholy or sorrow or homesickness in one's nature begins to assert itself. Also, night is a time of fear. The day passes without a thought of danger, but at night the doors must be locked and the windows bolted, and most people prefer not to be alone.

So, when we come to the spiritual, it is evident that those whose works are works of darkness are not happy. The criminal is not happy. He fears the prison walls or the hangman's noose. He fears the future. He fears the very darkness that sheltered his crime.

On the other hand the children of light are happy, even in the midst of adverse surroundings. In the world they may have tribulation and sorrow, but in Christ they have rest and joy. Their message is "glad tidings of great joy." The closer they keep their eyes upon the light, the more diligently they are at work, the greater is their joy. That is their universal testimony. No one will deny it.

Isaiah stated the case strongly, in speaking to the wicked: "Behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart, but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart."

We may set it down for our second proposition that obedience to the power of darkness brings proportionate sorrow, while obedience to the Prince of Light brings joy.

God has separated the two, and the pleasures of the wicked he has called sorrow, while the satisfaction of the righteous he has called joy.

Light encourages life, but darkness destroys it. A healthy plant removed from light to darkness will soon die. Plenty of sunlight prolongs human life. It is probable that in complete obedience to God's law is to be found the secret of a long life, and that any infraction of it shortens one's days. Certainly it is true in a spiritual sense that the "wages of sin is death"; that to be "carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life everlasting." An increase of light and truth, or intelligence, means a broader and deeper life—more life. Christ came that we might "have life, and have it more abundantly."

Our third proposition then is that the children of darkness are walking the path of death, while the children of light walk the path of life. He that loses his life for Christ's sake shall save it.

Now we come to the last proposition. Some of the Oriental people have a theory that a man's future punishment will be, that he must for ever continue the sin that he loved while here. Perhaps there is a portion of truth here. We see it operating thus in this life, to an extent. A man starts out to gratify some immoral passion or taste: at first it brings him pleasure; but by and by he begins to feel the yoke upon his neck, and realizes that he is no longer free. He would like to break away, but he is in the grip of habit and can not. So it comes about that his greatest shame and sorrow is in the gratification of that which once brought him pleasure.

So it will be in this case. In the passage quoted from Doctrine and Covenants it is said that "light and truth forsaketh that evil one." As it is with the master so shall it be with the servant. They choose darkness and love darkness; so darkness shall be their future portion and punishment. The light shall forsake them. They shall be "thrust into outer darkness." As Jude says of the angels "who kept not their first estate" of light and truth, they shall be reserved in "everlasting chains, under darkness."

On the other hand those who love light here will inherit light hereafter. "The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory."—Isaiah 60:19. "And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof."—Revelation 21:23.

On the one hand we see a descent through iniquity, sorrow, and death, to perdition and total darkness. On the other hand there is an ascent, line being added to line, precept to precept, through righteousness, joy, and life, up to glory and everlasting light.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

INTERPRETATION OF A TONGUE GIVEN AT MOOR-HEAD REUNION,

SEPTEMBER 20, 1907, BY ELDER J. W. WIGHT.

(Reported by Ella Rich Hawley.)

Thus saith your Lord and your Redeemer unto you, my people:

There are many things that you need to be reminded of. I have warned you time and time again. My people meet together and tell of their love for me, separate and forget the promises they have made, and turn again into the ways of the world.

It is needful that my people put from them the pride of heart and the pride of life; be less mindful of the things of this world; yea, come out of the world indeed and turn unto the ways of life; do that which I have commanded you. It is needful that I remind my people because of their forgetfulness.

I have told the young of my people to cultivate the gift of music and of song, and inasmuch as you are more heedful in this direction I will give unto you of my Spirit, by which you shall be enabled to sing in harmony with the Spirit; and this gift of song, cultivated and made manifest by the power of my Spirit, shall become a blessing in my church.

In the years which are gone I reminded my people that they had turned from me; that they had robbed me. Let not my people of this time have need to be chided in this direction, but inasmuch as my people give heed to my law in every department thereof, I will grant unto you my Spirit, that you may be qualified indeed as my people, and so continue in faith and in my service.

And unto my ministry: Inasmuch as they shall be more humble and more faithful the day is not far distant when I will pour out my Spirit in enduing power, and will grant unto them that assistance that will enable them to stand before the congregations of the world and break the bread of life as they have never been able to before. Yea, let all my people be faithful in the discharge of their duty before me, and I will sanctify you unto myself. Thus saith the Spirit. Amen.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

Another Fall Campaign of the Little Missionary, Zion's Ensign: From November 1 to December 31, for two months only, we will accept subscriptions for the Ensign to go to non-members at fifty cents a year. Remember, this offer does not continue all the year, but just two months, from November 1 to December 31. Two whole months are given in which to take advantage of this half rate for those not belonging to the church. This offer does not apply to new subscribers who may belong to the church, but to non-members, whether they pay themselves or some one pays for them, and whether they have been getting the paper before or not. This half rate to non-members the past two years has accomplished a vast amount of good, and has been the means by which many have accepted the gospel and have united with the church, as letters testify. Do not put it off too long. If possible, notify the party you wish to send the paper to, so that he will understand it, and not think the publishers are trying to force him to take the paper. Please note, that this rate can not apply to those going to Canada nor to foreign countries—any outside of the United States possessions will not be entitled to this rate, because it costs fifty-two cents a year postage on each Ensign going to foreign countries. The new law requires all papers going to Canada to be stamped.

The Straight Road

THE BOOK OF MORMON; WHAT IS IT?

It is the history of the peoples who inhabited this continent in the far distant past. The first colony came from the Tower of Babel, at the time of the dispersion to all parts of the earth. (See Genesis 9: 18, 19; 11: 8, 9; Acts 17: 24-26.) This colony first occupied Central America, building its finest and oldest structures. This colony became extinct about 600 B. C. The second colony came from Jerusalem, 600 B. C.; another joining them a few years later. The second (Nephites) landed on western South America, and occupied the whole continent. They found the record of the first colony (Jaredites), adding it to their own.

Mormon was one of the fourteen writers of the Nephites, and he abridged the entire history, hence the name, "Book of Mormon."

The history of the Nephites includes that of the degenerate Lamanites, whose descendants the Indians are.

The high culture and civilization Peruvian ruins show, diverse from oldest Central American, establish, as also do the reconstructed buildings, and the later architecture of Central America, the two civilizations. Not all built by the same people, and certainly not all built at the same time, as say Pidgeon, Baldwin, Bancroft, and Short.

The Book of Mormon gave the Cliff-dweller history forty-four years before the first discovery, in 1874. So, discovery certifies all its history.

Besides being the history of the people, it is also the record of God's dealing with them, bearing the same relationship to this continent and its people, that the Bible does to the other. People in general know the Bible was not here till brought by Columbus, or since. The millions of civilized ancient Americans then did not have it. Why object to this book, their sole supply?

At the judgment, the "books," plural you see, are to be opened. One for each continent, as God created both, peopled both, furnished both his word. Revelation 20:12: "Dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened"—including all created and their books.

Ancient Americans had God's word in the Book of Mormon, but did not have the Bible we have. Hence their book must be at the judgment for them to answer to; as, for others, the Bible.

The Book of Mormon says: "For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none."—Jacob 2:6. So it upholds all good, and condemns all evil.

Again, it says: "The right way is to believe in Christ, . . . and worship him with all your might, mind and strength, and your whole soul."—2 Nephi 11:9.

It teaches God's whole unchangeable gospel plan. That is what the Book of Mormon is.

EARLY DAYS IN WESTERN IOWA.

(Written for the Gallands Grove Anniversary Service.)

BISHOP CHARLES J. HUNT, Deloit, Iowa.

It was with great pleasure, interest, and surprise that I received your letter of August 5, and invitation to attend your anniversary of the organization of your branch and district at Gallands Grove, Iowa. Not anything would afford me more pleasure than to attend your meeting, if it were possible; but present mission field at this great distance, in the "salt land and desert," foreseen by the prophet (see Jeremiah 17:5, 6) forbids my attendance at this time; but I shall be happy at some time in the many years of the future yet left us, to avail myself of the opportunity in your annual gathering for mutual renewal of your anniversary, which will evidently be perpetual from now until the coming of the Son of God.

I must also say your letter brought to memory many events of my life work in 1859, in Western Iowa. You will bear with me, if I mention some of them, associated as I was with so many of the fathers of the latter-day work, who spent so much time in the church at Independence and Far West, Missouri; Nauvoo, Illinois; and Kirtland, Ohio. Their beautiful experiences, as well as their hardships during persecutions, were indelibly imprinted upon the tablet of my heart, as they also endeared upon me their personal worth as God-fearing men and women who loved the right. I also had the pleasure of preaching the first sermon in Western Iowa, as also in the eastern part of the State, as a representative of the Reorganization, in July, 1859, at Bro. — Badam's, on Farm Creek. We, Bro. W. W. Blair and self, had stopped in Wheeler's Grove Friday night, with Bro. Levi Graybill, and the following Saturday night with Elder Calvin Beebe, and Sunday accompanied Bro. Beebe to their regular meeting, then held at Bro. Badam's (he was father of James, I can not now recall his given name). I was introduced as the speaker of the hour by Elder Beebe. I had splendid liberty in presenting our hope, in contrast to the "latter-day apostasy," to a full house of old Latter Day Saints and their children. At the close of my service Bro. Blair spoke a few words, bearing testimony, and then Bro. James Badam arose and spoke in tongues and immediately gave the interpretation, which was a revelation and prophecy indorsing the work of the Reorganization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as the work of God, and that it would triumph in the accomplishing of a great work in reclaiming and reviving the hope of many of the Saints of God in Western Iowa.

Bro. Blair was blessed in many services, as we held quite a number of meetings during the week, and then Bro. Levi Graybill conveyed us by carriage to Council Bluffs, or to speak more properly, near Council Bluffs, where we next held meetings at the Scovill schoolhouse, near Wix Mills. Bro. Blair there preached the first sermon to a house full of old Saints. At Council Bluffs I met my brother, E. R. Briggs, whom I had not seen for many years, and, by the way, he had been baptized at Nauvoo by Apostle Wilford Woodruff, and lived at his house during the winter of 1844 and 1845, and was now son-in-law of Archibald Patton, brother of David, the apostle, who was killed in Far West; and he conveyed us to Union Grove, Harrison County, where we held our next meetings, at the house of Bro. Samuel Boods, to a house full of the dear old Saints of that place, who greeted us with hearts of welcome. We held several meetings there, and from thence we went to Bigler's Grove and held the first two-days' meeting of the church in Iowa at Elder James M. Adams'. I think a part of the sessions were in his house, and others in a grove or under shade trees in his garden. Elder William Vanansdall, an old veteran of the cross, presided at the meeting. Brn. (elders) Uriah Roundy, Gehial Savage, Judge Jonas W. Chatburn, and his son Thomas W., and Bro. Phineas Cadwell, I remember, attended that meeting. Also one of President William Marks' daughters. He (William Marks) was president of the High Council at Nauvoo in the life of the first Joseph. I spoke of her as a historic character in full faith in the latter-day work,—and that the time would certainly come when little Joseph, now President Joseph Smith, would be called of God to take his father's place as president of the church. After that meeting (though we held several meetings during the week at Bro. Adams' house) we visited Gallands Grove Saints. Stayed the first night with Bro. William Vanansdall, and second night with Bro. Uriah Roundy, and appointments were made for meetings in the Gallands Grove schoolhouse for us; but Bro. Blair, for some reason I do not now recall to mind, left for Council Bluffs the next morning, so I was left to fill the appointment. I remember how badly I felt to have him leave me to fill the appointment alone. Thursday I, for the first time, met and visited Bro. John A. McIntosh. I had called late in the afternoon at his house. He was in town. Sr. Melinda prevailed on me to stay until her husband returned home. As evening shade came on and husband not at home, oh how anxious she was that I should remain until Bro. John A. returned home that evening. I shall ever remember her while life and reason are spared me. But upon his return late at night I understood all her anxiety. She introduced me to her husband, and he just as gentlemanly as he could, said, "Be at home," begged pardon, and passed on into another room. I soon after retired, weary and heartsick, and the next morning he awoke me by using in a very loud manner some very strong adjectives to express his indignation and ruffled feelings over the fact that all of his early garden potatoes had been dug up during the night by some unruly swine. I wonder if Sr. Melinda, his wife, remembers that now.

Well, to reach the object of all this reference, breakfast was ready. The storm was silent. I was bidden to be seated at his table, with his humble, timid wife, and four or five little children. Bro. McIntosh picked up his knife and fork and then looked over the table at me and laid them down, picked them up a second time and looked at me, and again laid them down. Again the third time he laid them down and said to me, without calling me by name, "Will you say grace?" I do not remember that he spoke another word to me at that visit, except "Good-morning," as I left his house. Poor Melinda looked forsaken. Oh, how sad I felt as I left them. Good Melinda had told me that her husband was an elder and preached five years in the days of the prophet Joseph, and lived at Nauvoo; and I thought, and that man an elder of the church and so far off now! But mark my surprise when meeting convened the next Sunday—I saw McIntosh was in the audience. Oh! I felt my entire weakness! What can I say to comfort him, or any one else, was my absorbing thought. A good, respectful-looking audience! Many of them had gone through the troubles of the church at Kirtland, in Missouri, and in Illinois. There were the Roundys, McIntoshs, McCords, Williamses, Hunts, Jacksons, Vanansdalls, and their families all there, and I remember them all well. I do not think the Holcombs had ever been members up to that time, but they were there. The blessed Master gave me of his Holy Spirit, and I had the best of liberty in speaking on the glorious gospel of Christ; and as I gave opportunity for others to speak, you may judge again of my surprise, to see Bro. John A. McIntosh was the first one on his feet, tears streaming down his cheeks, and his first words were, "Brethren, pray for me, but the rest of you speak"; and he sat down. Bro. Uriah Roundy then arose and said, "This is the gospel come to us again, and I bear testimony that indeed the church is again reorganized, and little Joseph (now President Joseph Smith) will soon be with us in his father's place." Bro. McCord followed, in a few words of gladness to once more hear the sound of the gospel as he had heard it in Canada, Far West, and Nauvoo, in the prophet Joseph's days. And again Uncle John, yet in tears, said, "Brethren, why do you not all speak? I am only noted for wickedness, but all the rest of you speak," and sat down.

Well, my dear brethren, my letter is becoming too long, but I must say the dear Saints commenced from that glad hour to renew their faith, and the third Sunday from that they were organized into a branch, (at Gallands Grove) and I soon learned after that that Bro. J. A. McIntosh was one of the best of men all the time in reputation, only some said of him, that he was his own enemy sometimes. He often told me that the happiest time of all his life was when for five years he preached the gospel until the martyrdom of the prophet Joseph; and, said he: "When I returned to Nauvoo and found Brigham Young at the head, and in the mire of apostasy, and teaching polygamy privately and denying it publicly, I was in despair, and I tried to drown all my hope and faith in God and his glorious gospel. And while in my darkest hours of trial I had a vision, and I saw you, and in your hand was a pillowslip, and inside of the coarse pillowcase was another fine one, and you handed it to me, saying, 'Bro. McIntosh, in these cases there is a precious pearl for you, if you can secure it and take it out; but you must be very careful or it will slip out of your hand.' Upon this information I rolled up my sleeve, took hold of the pillowcases and held on to the mouth of the cases with one hand, and then slipped my hand and arm into the cases until I grasped the precious pearl and took it out. Then you said, 'Bro. McIntosh, you have gained salvation, and are sealed up unto eternal life.' I understood the two pillowslips represented the two priesthoods, the Aaronic and Melchisedec, but I did not understand what the precious pearl meant. But, Bro. Briggs, when you asked the blessing at my table the first time you were at my house, I knew you were the man I saw in my vision five years before."

Oh, dear brethren and sisters, that grand old man, Uncle John, was a dear, faithful soul ever after, and you all know the rest of his grand and noble work in Western Iowa. Brethren and sisters, it is said now that I look older than I did when I first visited you in Gallands Grove in 1859, but I assure you that I feel in my very soul that I am now as young as I was in 1859, and I love the gospel of Christ with my whole heart, and can see indeed the redemption of Zion is drawing near, though it is a day of great tribulation for the wicked. And as you are now celebrating the anniversary of your forty-fourth and forty-eighth branch and district organization, so I believe the dear ones of this far-off people from the land of Zion will yet celebrate on the seventh day of August the anniversary of the advent of our missionaries who landed in Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1863. Your fellow townsman and brother and defender of the faith, Alexander McCord, with another missionary, was honored to raise the standard of the true gospel here on that day, and those who greeted them welcome on that ever memorable day, the 7th of August, 1863, were United States civil officers. Governor Dana Doty, and Lieutenant-governor Reed, the United States Judge C. V. Wait, and the next day General Connor of the military department. They had all been apprised of our coming, and about when we would land in Salt Lake City, through the Chicago, New York, Sacramento, and San Francisco papers, by some one who had interviewed us on the way, unawares to us. We were surprised to see our names thus published in the leading papers of the land as missionaries of the church, to reclaim, if possible, the apostate Mormons to their original faith and good government; but such are the facts.

I am here again on the same mission, and feel as young as I ever did in my mission work. Of course I can not stand as much grief and fatigue as I once could, but my hope and faith is growing with my rich experience in the blessed work and cause of Christ, and I congratulate you on your forty-eighth anniversary, and I will be with you in spirit. Say to dear Sr. Melinda McIntosh that I remember her to-day as vividly as though it was but yesterday I first met her; also Bro. Black, also Sr. Mary Miller, niece of Bro. U. Roundy. She was a dear, humble girl then, that loved the gospel. Oh, so many are gone to await us on the other shore; if we are so happy as to be worthy to meet there; and may God bless you more and more, is my earnest prayer. I would be pleased to hear from you by letter at any time you feel to write. I am in the best of spirits and hope.

In gospel bonds,

E. C. BRIGGS.

THE INDIAN SITUATION.

PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE OF THE LAMANITES.

ELDER H. A. STEBBINS.

While noting the signs that betoken the progress of events in the world, and the unfolding or working out of God's purposes, I have continued to be interested in the subject indicated by the above heading, and have decided to add something to that previously written, some of it more than thirty years ago.

In a 1903 HERALD was published a short article from a brother's pen, entitled, "Indian progress toward Book of Mormon fulfillment." It was based, as to statistics and facts, upon an official report of the progress and successes of the Government Indian School at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, in the work of teaching the Indian youth, not only book learning, but also manual labor in the useful arts. It was stated that in that school alone, during twenty years, about four thousand Indian youths had been under instruction, and the most of them had graduated. And such had been the improvement and development that whereas the grammar grade was for years the highest instruction given, there had later been added high school studies, so that young men and women were graduating in these, and also in vocal and instrumental music. And not only this, but the boys had been taught systematic labor at farming, and in the various trades of the artisan. Many of these had become sufficiently skilled to be in demand in the vacation times; and thereby they had earned good wages from the surrounding people, even from those who at first distrusted their fitness, or their having the energy to labor, but who had learned through experience to have confidence in the honesty, faithfulness, and integrity of these young men, and also the quality of their labor.

By such practical experiences did these young Indians demonstrate that they had advanced, not only in capacity, but also in adaptability, and in intellectual achievement. These acquired powers made them qualified for place in the world's work, and for success in life. And this combined ability to lay the stepping-stones, and to pass on upward in a meritorious climbing, calls for the admiration of all just people, and especially of that portion of American citizens who are known as members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ. Because when not a few other people of this land have said that the last Indian will either be "driven into the sea," or else the race, being the weaker one, must naturally die out, the believers in the Book of Mormon have persistently asserted that God will surely preserve them, and that no matter what dreadful evils come upon them, or what destructive powers assail them, he will certainly fulfill the word of his prophecy, which says: "and many generations shall not pass away among them [after the Book of Mormon is published], save they shall be a pure and a delightsome people."—2 Nephi 12: 12.

And not only have the Indian boys been trained, but also the girls and young women have been taught and developed into efficient cooks and housekeepers, and at sewing and laundry work have proven their ability, that they are capable of doing these things as perfectly as the white girls can. Therefore, they also, as well as the boys, have met their own expenses, and more; for both the boys and the girls were not only paying their way at the school, but were laying up money for future needs. Up to the 1903 report, they had altogether earned over two hundred thousand dollars, and they had been frugal enough to live on less than one half of this total, and, therefore, had at that time over one hundred thousand dollars in the banks to help them in business when they should finally graduate from the school. So states the report. Further than this, it has been said that on graduating many of them were entering the normal department and fitting themselves for teaching. And these the Government wanted to employ in the schools established in the Indian Territory, and in other parts of the West. It was believed that in various ways they can assist their own race in ascending the scale better than the white teachers can.

Now while this work is not so easily done, nor its immediate success assured, and also the trials and the failures will be many before complete success comes, yet the Lord did not promise that it would be accomplished in one generation. And the remarkable success had in the past twenty-five years shows what can be done by effort, under the blessing of God; for the Lord is the power by which the movement comes. He works on the hearts of both the red race and the white. On the former to be willing to be lifted out of darkness, and on the latter to help lift them up to that happy condition that Jacob wrote of when he said: "And one day they shall become a blessed people."—Jacob 2: 9.

And the Lord spoke through Nephi about their degradation and subsequent oppression, and then he added: "Nevertheless, I will soften the hearts of the Gentiles, that they shall be like unto a father to them."—2 Nephi 7: 2. Strange enough, the Indians speak of the United States Government at Washington as the "Great Father." Perhaps the Lord, by his Holy Spirit, influences them to bestow this name. I do not remember that in any other part of the world a dependent people so speak of the government which rules over them, and it is a pity that ours has not more fully done the work of a father toward its wards.

But, in continuation of the main thought, I will say that there is to-day an increasing number of good men in our nation, who manifest a deep interest in the destiny of the Indian; and they are now, by speech, and pen, and action, striving to create a better sentiment among the white people in behalf of the native race of North America than has ever before existed. These men certainly show that they desire justice and righteousness to be brought into effect for them; and who can say that the Spirit of the Lord is not moving upon their hearts, or that God is not, with a special purpose, raising up men to plead the cause of his old-time people, and to labor for opportunity to be given them, that they may approve themselves and come forth to the light of day? They indeed come from the tomb of centuries wherein their fathers chose darkness instead of light, and death in place of the life in God that they might have had. And can we believers in the Book of Mormon read of their efforts and not be deeply interested? And who shall say that this is not more or less a fulfillment of the promise that God would in latter days soften the hearts of men, and that it is because of the influence of his Spirit that they urge a systematic and determined effort on the part of the Government and its officials for the real lifting up and practical advancement of the Indians, so far as men can do this. Surely they can do much by working in harmony with God and his purpose. And men are seeking that the assistance given the red men shall include every department of human improvement, mental, moral, and intellectual; and also the conditions, advantages, and qualifications for proper growth in material things, as to business and homes and possessions, as fast as they can be made to see the need of personal endeavor and effort, and the benefit of having permanent homes and individual property for their comfort and happiness, or as rapidly as they can be prepared for better things after the many centuries of their bondage, ignorance, and incapacity.

In the magazine, the World To-day, March, 1907, Mr. Forbes Lindsay has an article entitled, "Shaping the future of the Indian." I make some extracts as follows:

Our past treatment of the Indians seems to have been based upon the idea that they were neither amenable to civilization nor assimilable by the population of the country. We herded them from reservations that were secluded from the outer world, cut off their accustomed industries and activities, closed every field of endeavor, and in fact suppressed even the fundamental instinct of self-preservation. The old reservation policy afforded the Indian no opportunity for usefulness. He was restricted to eating his rations and loafing. His only relief from a monotonous and enervating life was found in degrading dances and ceremonies. It happened in cases that the Government was forced to find some occupation for a band that betrayed symptoms of unrest, but the object was merely to keep them out of mischief, and no thought of training them to labor and to a civilized method of living was ever entertained. But with sufficient food, enforced abstinence from liquor, and hygienic surroundings, the Indians ceased to diminish, and to-day we have two hundred and eighty thousand of them upon our hands, and they display a tendency to increase in numbers.

With the spread of the white people through the southwestern country, covetous eyes began to be cast upon the reservations, many of which embraced valuable lands, occupied solely by scattered tribes. In response to persistent clamor the Government began to open up the Indian country to white settlers, and its former occupants were for the first time disturbed in their long continued lethargy. The breaking up of the reservations began in the early nineties, but the movement has proceeded so rapidly in recent years that its completion is probable within the next decade.

In the distribution of lands, which they formerly held on the communal system, the Indians are now provided for individually. The general allotment act in its present form, insures to each Indian eighty acres of farming land, or one hundred and sixty acres of grazing ground. These provisions were designed in a spirit of liberality, but having been made without any consideration for the varying conditions in different sections, they commonly operate to give the Indian either more land than he can possibly make use of, or else less than enough to make him a comfortable living.

Mr. Lindsay states further that from natural conditions and lack of means to start with, few Indians were using their farms or grazing lands. Probably he means that their lack of knowing how to conduct work, and their natural inclination against work, together with having no one to show them how, or to guide and encourage them, for these reasons the majority of them did not cultivate the farming land, nor put stock on the grazing land; and as they received their rations from the Government, the most of them continued to live as they did before, only a part of them trying to improve themselves or their lands. Then he tells of the change that has been made during the past two years, stating it as follows:

But with the entrance of the present Indian Commissioner, Mr. Francis E. Leupp, a radically different policy was begun. This new movement aims at the substitution of independence and freedom in the place of charity and being separated from other people. Every inducement is now being offered to the able-bodied Indian to go out into the world and seek work side by side with the white man, and a free competition with him. It is the doctrine of labor and citizenship for the Indians, in place of rations and nonentity. We are at last giving the redskin the white man's chance, and are asking him to assume the white man's responsibilities. . . .

The best friends of the Indian admit, and the Government fully recognizes the fact, that he is quite capable of taking care of himself at present, so that while endeavoring to make him self-supporting, we are still keeping him in leading strings. His allotment of land and his citizenship are conferred upon him with necessary restrictions. The land of each is held in trust by the Government for ten years, at least, and in other respects this adult citizen is treated as a legal minor. . . .

At the outset we have to contend with the racial dislike of the Indian to manual labor, and the ill effects of the reservation system, which encouraged laziness. . . . Regular and sustained labor is entirely foreign to his habit and experience. He has been accustomed to work or play as the inclination moved him, and it is no small matter to train him to pick up a shovel at the sound of a whistle, and to wield it until relieved by a similar signal. By nature he lacks the sense of responsibility, has no thought for tomorrow, nor any ambition to benefit himself. These would appear to prevent the success of our new policy of standing the Indian upon his feet and teaching him to walk alone. But the one year of experiment in this direction, which has just closed, seems to hold out hope of the ultimate accomplishment of the purpose.

Notice the last sentence by Mr. Lindsay, and the hope that the friends of the Indians now have that the leaven now working will, in time, result in their redemption from the former evil condition. We can sympathize with the view of how hard it is to bring them to the light, and to bring them out of their former idleness and degradation; for we know what the Book of Mormon says of this, and of how seldom any of them were ever recovered from that condition in the olden time. More than four hundred years before Christ was born Enos stated of the Lamanites as follows:

But our labors were in vain; their hatred was fixed, and they were led by their evil nature, that they became wild, and ferocious, and a blood-thirsty people; full of idolatry, and filthiness; feeding upon beasts of prey, dwelling in tents, and wandering about in the wilderness.—Enos 1:5.

Again we read of them, about one hundred years before Christ:

And the skins of the Lamanites were dark, according to the mark which was set upon their fathers, which was a curse upon them because of their transgression and their rebellion.—Alma 1: 16.

But in the time of King Lamoni there was quite a conversion among them, as we read of in Alma 12: 22, and a still greater one about thirty years before Christ. (See Helaman 2: 25.) But later they relapsed (see Mormon 2: 2,) until about the year 370 A. D. (see Mormon 2: 2) they sacrificed Nephite women and children to the idols they had previously set up and worshiped (see Alma 12: 4; 16: 12), having now added to their crimes the hideous one of offering human sacrifices.

Upon this point it is worthy of note that the translator of the Book of Mormon had no other source of knowledge that the ancients of Central America and Mexico worshiped idols or offered human sacrifices than that given to him by inspiration. These facts of history were not at that time (1829) published in the English language, or known to English speaking people, not even to the educated and traveled ones of England and America, so far as I have been able to learn during nearly forty years reading upon American antiquities. In one of Mr. John L. Stephens' books was published the first account of its being found in Central America. His first explorations were made in 1840, and the results were not published until 1842-3, by Harper Brothers, in New York City. The next account of the idols was given by the Honorable E. G. Squier, who was sent by the United States to Central America to examine conditions in view of the proposed interoceanic canal through Nicaragua. He was there in 1849 and 1850, and his two volumes were published by D. Appleton & Company in 1856. In them I find fifteen illustrations of idols, and one of a stone sacrifice. Thus, many years after the Book of Mormon was published, the evidences came to light to establish this point, as well as many other remarkable statements in that book, and thus its divinity is proved.

To return to the article of Mr. Lindsay. He says that the most serious danger that menaces the Indians and their future prospects is that of strong drink. "They can not safely touch alcohol. It crazes them and causes much greater physical damage than it does to the white man." Plenty of white men sell it to them, and now that they have been made citizens the Government can not control the matter as it could when they were under its care as the nation's wards. However, the prospect is good that the most of the young men can be educated to let it alone, and of the old ones Mr. Lindsay says that Congress last winter "originated more legislation of vital importance to the Indian than any of its predecessors," and that it "furnished the Indian commissioner with a special fund for the purpose of suppressing the liquor ring, and prosecuting violators of the liquor laws." It is to be hoped that he is not only correct in this, but that also the officers have done their duty and accomplished something of value in protecting the poor Indian from the rapacious and heartless white men who make them a prey.

I make the following extracts from the last page of Mr. Lindsay's article. He says:

It is upon the comparatively plastic material of the youth who come within our educational influences that we must depend for the molding of the Indian of the future. There are about forty thousand Indian children of school age, and it is hoped that they may be so trained as to leaven powerfully the whole. In conformity with the general plan the school system has been modified, and is now regulated upon the most practical lines. The girls are taught the domestic arts before everything. The boys learn reading, writing, and simple arithmetic; but for the rest, the effort is directed to making farmers, smiths, or wheelwrights of them. This is cultivating the weakest side of the Indian whose greatest deficiency is that of the practical sense. . . .

However the efforts to induct the young able-bodied redskins to the field of labor have been crowned with remarkable success during the past year. Two thousand or more young men under agents of their own race were employed upon irrigation works and in mines, and on railroad construction. Their transportation home was made conditional on the performance of at least thirty days of consecutive labor. The fulfillment of this requirement taxed the Indian's staying powers severely, but hundreds of them have at the present time been steadily at work for six months or more. Every employer speaks highly of them, and is well satisfied to pay them the same wages of white men.

He states, however, that these faithful Indians are the "pick of the reservation," and that a large portion of them have had the influence of our educational system. Some of the hardest work done toward reclaiming the arid land of the Southwest through irrigation projects has been done by the Indians; even the survivors of Geronimo's bloody band are working well at one of these. In conclusion Mr. Lindsay writes good words of commendation about the red man. He says:

Undoubtedly he is destined to make his mark on the community that shall furnish the field for his future activities; for the Indian is a man of strong fiber, and of exceptional individuality, with inherent qualities of a very high order."

I have italicized these last words because they mean so much to those who know the origin of the red race, that they are of pure Hebrew descent, and of the tribe of Manasseh, the son of Joseph of Egypt, and therefore by nature they have "inherent qualities of a very high order," as Mr. Lindsay appears to be directed to say or admit, as well as the idea that he is "destined to make his mark."

Appropriate with this is a clipping from the Chicago Tribune of September 25, 1907. Its title is, "Beauty of Mexican Indians." I make the following extract:

But the beautiful faces one takes in memory away from Mexico are those of Indian women. Fine eyes are universal, and what one hardly expects, fine features according to Caucasian standard. . . . The expression is generally intelligent, and often one is struck both in Indian men and women with the nobility and refinement of the countenance. One frequently sees types among the peons that seem to belong to some highly civilized ancient caste, an Egyptian priest of royal blood, a Roman centurion, or an Aztec emperor. . . . The men at their best, in carriage, in manners, and in countenance, are strikingly like the advanced product in civilization.

This brings to mind the question of difference between the Nephite people at their best, and the Lamanites at their worst, and again at their best, as many of them were, when converted and counted among the Nephites. Then we think of the wide difference between the intellectual, capable, and noble-born ruling class of Peru, the Incas, were found by Pizarro in 1531, and the common people of that country so marked a distinction as to make it clear that if they had the same origin there must have been a wide divergence at some remote period. I believe that the Inca people were the descendants of the Nephites, of whom Mormon wrote when he told of those who remained alive with him, and besides were, "also a few who had escaped into the south countries." (Mormon 3:3, small edition.) And these were the rulers over the Lamanites, or degraded people of Peru. Prescott's "Conquest of Peru" shows the wide difference in every way between the two classes.

The difference in complexions, and in the hair, and in intelligence of natives as noted by William Penn and other students of the Indians, must be ascribed to the varying mixture of the Nephites and Lamanites in Book of Mormon times. According to that book there was quite a commingling, and no doubt much intermarriage. (See Helaman 2:4-25, 26.) This may account for the varying types of natives in the United States, Mexico, and Central America, as noted by explorers, scientists, and historians.

In a Washington dispatch, dated December 18, 1906 (published in the Des Moines Register and Leader), it was shown that the exact number of Indians in the United States was 284,079, and that where ten years ago but 33,000 could read English, in 1906 there were 63,000 who could. Also 116,000 wore citizen's dress, 70,000 spoke English, and 38,000 were members of organized churches.

The Riverside (California) Enterprise, of June 21, 1907, has the following good words.

The California Indians are much farther advanced than many of the tribes of the middle west. They have been taught to cultivate the soil, and to work in the vineyards.

. . . An Indian makes one of the best of laborers. The railroads can testify to this fact.

Take white men and give them all they need. How many of them would work hard if some one was providing for them (whether they worked or not)? This is the position of the Indian. We have cared for and protected him, and allowed him to depend on the agent for practically everything he needed. This policy is gradually being done away with.

We want the Indian to assert his manhood, and to help him to become an American citizen. . . . Many underestimate the power of development inherent in an Indian. All he needs is a chance. The Indians' Friend, August, 1907.

An editorial in the Chicago Inter-Ocean states that the remnants of the original tribes in the State of New York have increased in total twenty-seven per cent in the past fifty years, now numbering over five thousand. It may be well to note that the original "six nations" were the Mohawks, Cayugas, Tuscaroras, Ouandayas, Senecas, and Oneidas. After the American Revolution the Mohawks removed to Canada, and the main body of the Oneidas are said to be now near Green Bay, Wisconsin.

In the Chicago Tribune for November 2, 1907, I note a Washington dispatch telling of "a serious breach between the Ute Indians in South Dakota and the Indian agent, and he is charged with having cut the rations in half," so that the Indians "are hungry, and the women and children are suffering." So reports an inspector sent to investigate. But another authority says those are permitted to go hungry who "will not accept the opportunity to make a living." Thus there are troubles in the way, and it will take time, patient labor, wisdom, and just dealing before the purposes of God can be fully wrought out. The white tutor needs not only a kind heart, but also good judgment and wise understanding in his soul, and the red pupil needs to be chastened and instructed. To develop well, he needs loving encouragement, and also a firm directing power by those having good discretion and a capable management.

Speaking of the wrongs the Indians have suffered at the hands of our nation and its people, I make a few quotations from authorities whose words show that our Government should do good things to make up for those evils.

In his 1870 report the Indian commissioner remarked that while the Government evinced a desire to deal justly with the Indians, yet he said, "It must be admitted that the actual treatment they have received has been unjust and iniquitous beyond the power of words to express." The shameful cheating and defrauding that they suffered is warrant for those words, to say nothing of the debauchery and drunkenness caused by white men. I have emphasized the words with italics.

In the Sunday Magazine for August 4, 1907, General Nelson A. Miles, in his historical article on "The uprising of the Nez Perces of Idaho against the injustice of the white man," in 1877, makes the following plain statement: "There has never been a case where a valley or valuable tract of land was occupied by the Indians between the Atlantic and the Pacific that some white people did not covet it, and endeavor by some means, just or unjust, to obtain it." Though General Miles was a great Indian fighter, when sent by the Government, yet he could see the wrongs, and he commends their efforts to preserve their rights against the rapacity of the unscrupulous white aggressor. He also uses the following emphatic language: "No wonder that the stalwart, active, brave, and heroic Indian races contended for their native lands, the homes and burial grounds of their ancestors, with a tenacity and fortitude unequalled in the history of any race of people." He feels a strong sympathy for his old opponents because he knows the wrongs they have endured. He says that after the surrender of the Nez Perces in 1877, he tried to have the Government leave them in their native lands, the mountains and valleys of Idaho; but instead they were placed in the "malarial district in Indian Territory, where fifty per cent of their number died" before he obtained their restoration to Idaho.

General George A. Custer in a Galaxy Magazine in 1873 said that some Indian agents had given the Indians one half of the goods sent by the Government for them, and put the other half into the hands of the traders to be sold to the Indians at enormous prices. He said:

The Indians, in gratifying their wants, are forced to purchase from the trader at scores of times the value of the article. I have seen Indians dispose of Buffalo robes which were worth from fifteen to twenty dollars each for ten to twenty cups of brown sugar, the value of which did not exceed two or three dollars.

Custer perished in July, 1876, in the uprising of the Sioux under Sitting Bull. In a message, in 1872, President U. S. Grant said:

My efforts in the future will be by a humane course to bring the aborigines under the influences of civilization. It is either this, or a war of extermination, and wars of extermination are expensive, and are demoralizing and wicked. . . . Can not the Indian be made a useful and productive member of society by proper teaching and treatment? When the effort is made in good faith, we will stand approved before the civilized nations of the earth, and in our own consciences for having made it.—Saints' Herald, June 22, 1873.

The Honorable Jared Sparks, in his "Life of George Washington," published in 1873, states that "Washington's policy was always pacific and humane"; and that he said that the Indians should be treated with tenderness and forbearance, and their lands be obtained only by fair purchase, and that the nation and people should strictly make good every pledge.

With such excellent words have great men of the nation spoken well of those we call Lamanites, sincerely urging that they ought not to be the objects of national or individual robbery, to be debased, defrauded, and destroyed by whosoever will. The Lord is indeed softening the hearts of men, as he promised to do. Also their number is increasing, and we can confidently look for a complete fulfillment of the prophecies, those mentioned early in this article concerning their becoming "a delightful people," and "a blessed people."

Much more could be written, but I forbear for this time. There may not be a general interest in this subject, even among our own people, but a few may be considerably interested in it, including some of the Religio students.

MAN.

WHAT IS HE? WHAT ARE HIS CHIEF DUTIES? AND HOW CAN HE OBTAIN THE GREATEST HAPPINESS?

These are three very important questions; in fact I know of none more significant.

The first question,—What is man? My answer is this, He is a human being, made to be upright, a conscious, responsible, sensible, organized factor of the human race, composed of the elements which surround him, and also of spirit element, which is in itself intelligent matter, occupying organized form. The separation of these two is called dissolution, and the physical man is then dead: but it takes both to complete the soul of man. The man in his normal state has five distinct senses: seeing, hearing, feeling, smelling, and tasting. All these, unimpaired, properly trained, constitute one of the most refined and noble pieces of mechanism of all the works of nature or of God. It is said that man is like his Creator in physical appearance, and only a little lower than the angels of heaven. "God hath made man upright," says Solomon, "but they have sought out many inventions."

Man is a mortal being, and begins to die as soon as he begins to live.

Man, being composed largely of animal matter, it is difficult to determine just how these are held in solution, and how one principle acts upon another, and often causes physical or mental change, which may be wholly unexpected.

I said a man is conscious, and so he is—this is a wonderful principle of the creature,—so soon in life to begin to pass judgment upon right and wrong, and decide with respect to matters of equity. Man is also responsible, because of his high state of intellect and acute sense of judgment; sensible, because of the five distinct senses which he possesses—so organized that he is provided with all necessary accomplishments for his success.

What are man's chief duties? In regard to this question, I may not be able to meet the issue satisfactorily. My idea is that he should know himself as soon as possible; should study his own nature and environments, and adapt himself wisely to the conditions, keeping himself clean, pure, lovable, and noble in every respect, and trying to see that these rights and privileges and duties are accorded to all others. Besides, he should love to contemplate the works of God, and should adore and serve him, with his mind and substance, in an intelligent manner. Man should use his abilities to contrive and govern his forces in a legitimate manner, for the accomplishment of the greatest good, not only for self, but for all others. He should consider the source from whence he came, and whence or whither he is traveling, and occupy the time industriously, and according to sound wisdom. He should study nature, as well as mechanical arts, and the history of nations and their countries as well as his own, and profit by all the experiences of past ages. He should seek knowledge after a godly sort, for this, in my estimation, is chiefest of all. To love God because we discover his majesty demands this, as the part of true wisdom, and wisdom is the principal thing in this world.

The exercise of the faculties of man, when undisturbed or unmolested, is among the highest privileges as well as duties to be sought, as well as indulged and protected in any and all other fellow beings.

To alleviate the distressed and unfortunate, contributing to his relief, is among the chief duties. Also to be subject to the laws and usages of the country in which he lives, seeking to promote the social and intellectual benefits of his community, are by no means to be neglected. These, with all well-regulated habits, will constitute the highest duties of man.

How shall man secure the greatest happiness? is the third question; but by no means the least. Neither do I presume to exhaust the subject in so short an article as I here submit. To be brief and to the point, I believe that when man pleases his Maker, i. e., keeps the law of the Lord, then and then only is he the happiest. To love God—and to know what it means to love him by keeping his commandments—is supreme happiness. Akin to this is love of his family, which must go hand in hand with our love for Deity. It does not consist in being king, prince, potentate, or president; neither does it consist in vast fortunes, either in moneys or lordly estates; neither does it obtain in owning or controlling the finest automobile or the most palatial residence in the world; nor does it consist in making great show to be seen of men, either in word or works; neither do the truer riches of happiness consist in giving help to the poor or needy, except it be with that kind of charity known as from a motive of pure love. There lies the secret of genuine happiness. Where this principle moves the man, he is not far from the royal road to success, true success in this life and in the life to come; and herein is unbounded happiness. Short of this, life is worse than a failure. And the beauty of the matter is, that it is within the reach of all classes of men, so far as race or color is concerned; but more especially is true happiness for the poor and meek of this world, who are more inclined to observe the first great commandment, to love God with all their might, mind, and strength, and love their neighbors as themselves—the foundation of all true happiness.

Love begets love; and man should learn to cultivate love, for it is in the human breast, and only awaits development. A child is lovable because it is pure and sweet; and a mother's love for her child is approaching the higher happiness. Man should be happy, because he is the crowning workmanship of the great Father. He loved man, and has done more for man than man can possibly conceive of, when he gave his Only Begotten to be a sacrifice once for all, for the race. When we comprehend this mystery; then, and then only, may we be considered in the highest state of true happiness for time and all eternity.

LAMONI, Iowa.

Read by Pearl Jamison, at Religio Book of Mormon home class, October 17.

“Man might imitate an acorn which by the side of the product of nature might seem to be like it. But there is a test which will determine which is the production of God and which was made by man. The declaration is, the seed should produce after his kind. And man's limitations will appear here. Subjecting the two acorns under conditions of moisture and heat, and one will sprout and appear above the ground and grow ultimately into a tree, the other does not, but finally passes back into its original elements. God made one, man made the other. Man with all his knowledge and power could not place in the acorn the germ of life. The whole wisdom of the world though in one mind could not plant that germ in the acorn. The works of God, therefore, always answer the full extent of the purpose for which they were created, while man's work is limited. Note the Savior's expression, 'The Spirit quickeneth. The flesh profiteth nothing. The words I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life.' These words were intended to be planted somewhere and to produce their kind.”

HOW SHOULD THE PORTRAIT OF JESUS BE DRAWN?

Painters of religious subjects, especially in Germany, are engaged in an effort to determine how the portrait of Jesus ought to be drawn. Traditionally the semblance of Jesus is conceived as a full and somewhat pointed beard and long flowing hair. This, besides representing what is ideally correct, is also supposed to possess historical accuracy; but the latter point is contested by Ludwig Fahrenkrog, the well-known religious painter, in a long discussion found in Turner (Leipsic). His argument is as follows:

"The traditional type of Christ pictures, with full beard and flowing hair, can not possibly be a true portrait of the Savior. Christ certainly never wore a beard and his hair was closely cut. For this we have historical proofs. The oldest representations of the face of Christ, going back to the first Christian centuries and found chiefly in the catacombs of Rome, all picture him without a beard; but they differ to a certain extent with reference to the hair, the Hellenistic type of Jesus pictures representing him with somewhat longer hair than does the Alexandrian type. All the Christ pictures down to the beginning of the fourth century at least, and even later, are of this kind. The further fact that Christ must in his day have worn short hair can be proved from the scriptures. Among the Jews none but Nazarites wore long hair. Christ was indeed a Nazarine, but not a Nazarite; the facts of his life supporting this view. To be a Nazarite was contrary to his character and spirit; and as it is more than probable that he drank wine at times, he could not have been a Nazarite according to Numbers 6: 3-10. If he was not a Nazarite, then like the rest of the Jews he wore his hair short. Further evidence is furnished by Paul in 1 Corinthians 11: 14, where it is expressly declared that it is a dishonor for a man to wear his hair long, something that the Apostle would not have said had his master worn it thus."—The Literary Digest, October 26, 1907.

"Come unto Me."

Hark to the voice of thy dear loving Savior,
Tenderly, pleadingly, calling to thee;
Why wilt thou labor and be heavy laden?
Cease all thy wanderings and come unto me.

Light is my yoke and my burden is easy,
Thy guide and thy teacher fain would I be;
Come and thy soul shall find sweetest resting,
Doubt not the promise, but come unto me.

Many have been the days of my yearning,
Thy love to secure, and thy soul to make free;
Let nothing hinder thy faltering footsteps;
Tarry no longer, but come unto me.

Come, for my love is both strong and abiding;
For thee I suffered and bled on the tree;
Come while the Spirit and Bride are now pleading;
Leave the world's follies, and come unto me.

Come ere the night shadows gather around thee;
Many sorrows await which thou canst not foresee;
Gladly I'll shield thee from every disaster;
Oh, hasten, thou loved one, and come unto me!

The Twenty-Third Psalm.

The Lord is my Shepherd, no want shall I know;
He leadeth my soul where the still waters flow;
He giveth me rest in green pastures of love,
And restoreth my soul to that mansion above.

In the path of the righteous he leadeth the way,
For the sake of his name he has taught me to pray;
Though I walk through the valley and shadow of death,
I'll worship the Lord while he giveth me breath.

No evil I fear, when thy power I see;
Thy rod and thy staff are a comfort to me:
My table is spread with thy gifts from above,
Thou anointest my head with the oil of thy love.

My cup runneth over with blessings from thee,
And my enemies fear when thy goodness they see;
Surely, goodness will follow the rest of my days,
If I trust in the Lord and walk in his ways.

Thy mercy, O Lord, I will ever implore,
I'll dwell in thy house 'til the tempest is o'er;
Direct me aright to the end of my days,
And assist me, dear Lord, to sing to thy praise.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Mothers and Sunday-School Teachers Take Notice.

Christmas is nearing. The very spirit of it is in the air. If you are looking for something for that bright boy or girl of yours, what is more to be desired than a good book? If you are a lover of temperance, if that cause appeals to you, you will find no stronger object lessons anywhere than are furnished you in The Indian Maiden and Her White Deer, a book soon to be issued from the HERALD Office. It is the sixth volume of the Birth Offering series. One brother in Pennsylvania, desiring to be a public benefactor, has already written, inquiring the price per fifty copies. He wants to distribute them among the boys in his home town. Can you afford to be without one of these books in your home? It would mean much if just one of these books were purchased by every Sunday-school in the church; but think what it would mean if the teachers used them as their Christmas gift books. It would help the cause, assist in the publishing of other juvenile books, and besides that you would have value received for every penny expended.

TWO PICTURES.

No. 1.

It was the night before Christmas, and the children were hanging up their stockings around the fireless grate.

"I'm glad we have a chimney for Santa Claus," said Clara, "even if our house is heated by a furnace. I should think he'd be glad there wasn't any fire in the fireplace, wouldn't you?"

"Say, mamma," broke in Harry, "Billy Gibson says there isn't any real Santa Claus; but there is, isn't there?"

"Of course," replied Mrs. Hayes, winking at her husband. "How would we get our presents if there wasn't any Santa Claus?"

"That's what I told him," said Harry, "but he said our folks gave us the presents. He don't know much, does he?" And Harry laughed in derision of his ignorant little friend.

"I'm going to keep awake and see Santa to-night," piped up little David, as he kissed his father good-night and scampered off to bed.

After seeing the children safely tucked in, Mrs. Hayes returned to the sitting-room, remarking, as she took her place by the table: "Mrs. Gibson called on me to-day, and tried to enlighten me on the Santa Claus question. The family would seem to be quite distressed by our heathenish belief in Santa Claus. She thought that I ought to tell the children at once that he is only a myth; but I think life is prosaic enough at its best, and I want them to have just as much poetry in their lives as possible. I don't believe in doing away with the fairies and brownies and dear old Santa, and having only hard Gradgrind facts. I told Mrs. Gibson so, and she said she only hoped I wouldn't destroy their ultimate faith in me by teaching them to believe in something that isn't true. It seems to me that is pretty far-fetched, don't you think so?"

Mr. Hayes smiled his assent, and both busied themselves with filling the row of empty stockings.

As soon as the first faint streaks of light illumined the house, the children were awake and scampering down to the living-room to examine their stockings, not heeding their mother's command to put on their clothes before going downstairs. Mrs. Hayes began hastily dressing herself, at the same time saying to her husband, "Tom, you'll have to go down cellar and hurry up that furnace fire, or the children will all take their death of colds."

"It's a pity if a man can't sleep late on Christmas morning," growled Mr. Hayes. "He has to get up early every other morning in the year. I had supposed he would be left in comfort when he had a rest from business."

"Well, I know, Tom, it is too bad; but the children are downstairs in their night-clothes, looking at their presents, and you know how cold the house is this time of day. Can't you go down and fix it, and then come back and have your nap?"

Still grumbling, Mr. Hayes donned a part of his apparel, and went sleepily down the two flights of stairs to perform the allotted task. Meanwhile his wife gathered together the garments belonging to the little people, and hurried down to them, saying, as she entered the room, "Children, come here at once and put on your clothes."

Her words fell upon unheeding ears, however. The room was full of clamor as the children unwrapped their presents and exclaimed over what they found inside.

Raising her voice, she called again to them, "Children, did you hear what I said?"

Just then a cry went up from David. "Mamma," he wailed, "Harry took my locomotive, and won't let me have it."

"I didn't either," retorted the older boy. "It was my locomotive. Do you suppose Santa Claus would give such a beauty to a little boy like you? It's mine, I tell you."

"It isn't, either," shrieked the little fellow. "It was in my stocking; and I unwrapped it and put it down here and you took it."

"I didn't, either. I took it from my stocking."

"Children, stop your quarreling this minute."

"Well, mamma, it is mine, isn't it?" pleaded David.

"How should I know whose it is? I don't know whose stocking it was in. Can't you tell?"

"Well, mamma," said Harry, "we took everything out of our stockings at once and piled them on the floor; and that's what makes David think it was his, 'cause my pile was right next to his."

"Now, Harry Hayes," suddenly cried out Clara, "you get off of my new doll. Mamma, just look where he stepped on it."

"Well, you shouldn't have your doll on the floor in the way, then," growled Harry.

Seeing that it was useless to try to get the children into their clothes, Mrs. Hayes pinned shawls about them, and hurried out of the room to begin her preparations for breakfast. Even in the kitchen she was not free from trouble, however; for every once in awhile one or the other of the children would come out with a tale of a broken toy or some question of ownership to be decided, until the mother was fairly distracted and ready to wish there was no such day as Christmas.

Her spirits were not cheered any by the appearance of her husband, who came into the kitchen with a scowl on his face as he said: "Might as well try to sleep in Bedlam as in this house! How soon will breakfast be ready?"

"I can have it ready in fifteen minutes if you are in a hurry for it. But the children aren't dressed. Can't you do that while I get the breakfast on the table?"

While the volume of sound issuing from the living-room did not diminish after the father's entrance, the character of it changed perceptibly, giving unmistakable evidence of the rebellion with which the paternal authority was met.

It was not a happy row of faces that surrounded the breakfast table. The children were already surfeited with sweets, and had no desire for food, but deeply resented being torn away from the contemplation of the many charms of their presents.

As soon as they could escape from the table, they were back in the living-room, and the uproar began again. Mr. Hayes hurried from the house to escape the noise; and Mrs. Hayes tried in various ways to stem its current, but all to no avail.

Thus the day wore on; and when at night the weary, restless, unhappy children were put to bed, and the mother gathered up the broken and scattered toys, both she and the father rejoiced that Christmas came but once a year.

No. II.

It was the Sunday evening before Christmas, and Mrs. Gibson was having her usual Sunday evening talk with her children.

"We had a Christmas story in Sunday-school to-day," said little Margaret, as she took her place on the sofa by her mother's side.

"So did we," said Billy, as he seated himself on the opposite side of his mother.

"Tell us a Christmas story," said little Winnie, climbing up on her mother's knee.

"Trismus story," echoed Robbie, perching on the other knee.

So the mother began to tell them the sweet story of the Christ-child, who was born in far-off Palestine, and whose life had brought so much joy and gladness into the world. "And so, you see, Christ was God's gift to us," she said in conclusion, "and because he gave himself for the world we remember his birthday by giving gifts to others. We give not only to our own family, but we give to the poor and needy 'in his name.'"

"Well, but mamma," broke in Billy, "why do people say that Santa Claus brings all the presents? I told Harry Hayes there wasn't any Santa Claus, and he said there was, because his mamma said so and she never told any lies. Doesn't she know there isn't any Santa Claus?"

Mrs. Gibson ignored the last question, and asked,—

"Do you remember the story I told you—oh! a year or so ago—about Mr. Wind, how he liked to grab a boy's cap and run away down the street with it, and how he played with the leaves in the fall?"

"Oh, yes, of course I do. I always have lots of fun with jolly Mr. Wind when he's around."

"And do you remember that other story I told you about Jack Frost, and how he paints pictures on the windows?"

"Yes, yes," cried all of the children together.

"Do you think there is really a Mr. Wind or a Jack Frost?"

"Oh, no, that's just make-believe," said Billy.

"How about fairies and brownies?"

"They're just make-believe, too; but they're lots of fun."

"Well, that's the way it is with Santa Claus. Years and years ago, away over in Holland—and other countries as well—the people used to make believe that all the kind deeds were done by an old saint whom they called Saint Nicholas, or Kris Kringle. There had been a man named Nicholas, many, many years before that, and he was so good to the children that he was called their saint. So when a father and a mother gave presents to their children, and the little ones asked where they came from, the parents would say, 'Saint Nicholas must have sent it to you.' Or when some one wanted to give a present to one who was in great need, but was too proud to take a gift, they would say that it had been sent by the good Saint Nicholas. So in time everybody came to look upon the loving, giving spirit that was in the world as the expression of the spirit of the kind old saint. They personified the giving spirit, as we would say, and called it Saint Nicholas, only in America we call it Santa Claus.

"So to-day we all take a great deal of pleasure in 'playing Santa Claus.' We make presents for all our loved ones, and then we tell them that 'Santa Claus must have brought them.' We remember the poor and needy, trying to make their lives a little brighter and happier; but we tell them that it was all Santa Claus. Don't you think it is a nice play?"

The children were unanimous in their appreciation of the play; for the story, though not new, came to them every Christmas with added charm.

As soon as the first faint streaks of light illumined the house on Christmas morning, the children arose and quietly dressed themselves. They stole about the house like veritable little brownies, trying to keep quiet, while performing their allotted tasks, so papa could have a morning nap. It was a well understood custom of the household that no gifts were to be opened until the morning duties were properly disposed of. The parlor was a room of mystery which was scrupulously avoided by all; for within its boundaries the gifts had all been placed the night before, with many whisperings and gigglings and ostentatious secrecy.

At about half an hour before time for the breakfast bell the children gathered in the hall and softly sang a little Christmas carol, the sweet notes of which brought Mr. Gibson from dreamland to a pleasant realization of home.

With happy faces and wholesome appetites the family gathered around the breakfast table. At its conclusion many willing hands made light work of the remaining tasks, and soon all were gathered in the parlor, with a forenoon of uninterrupted enjoyment before them. The children seated themselves near the mother, turning expectant faces toward their father, who had taken his place beside the large table, whose top was completely covered with an array of miscellaneous packages.

"One at a time, as usual," remarked Mr. Gibson, cheerily, as he picked up a large package, read "For Mother," and handed it to Mrs. Gibson.

With eager eyes the children watched her as she opened the package, and the "ohs" and "ahs" which greeted the gift were as delighted as though it had been the particular property of each child.

The next was a gift for little Robbie. All waited patiently, while with eager, trembling fingers he untied the string, for all recognized that half of the joy of receiving a gift was unwrapping it for one's self. When this had been fully admired by all, the next gift was handed out. In this way each gift brought joy to every member of the family, and no one was surfeited by receiving all of his presents at once.

When the last gift had been dispensed, the two older children brought in a bushel basket and gathered up in it the wrappings which had been thrown on the floor, while mamma and the two other children wound up the string, and in a few moments the room was in comparative order.

"Let's make a new Christmas game, children," suggested the mother. "Suppose you all play with Robbie's gifts for an hour and help him to enjoy them. Then you can put them on the table, and all play with Winnie, and so on, until all the gifts had been enjoyed."

The children had been trained to play harmoniously together, and this suggestion of the mother's filled the day with happy, united enjoyment of all the gifts.

At night the mother called upon them to choose the gifts for the next day's enjoyment, and the rest were put away with the promise that they should all be brought out again on Sunday and a choice made of those which were suitable for Sunday games.

Thus the happy day drew to a close; and when the children, gathering together their toys and putting them away, said "Wouldn't it be nice if Christmas came oftener?" their wish was echoed in the hearts of their loving father and mother.—Mary Wood-Allen in American Motherhood.

The following true incident illustrates our lesson:

Little Charlie was with his older brother watching him sow wheat, when he inquired: "Why do you throw the wheat on the ground? Why do you not take it to mill and get flour to make bread?"

"If we throw it on the ground and then cover it over with dirt, it grows and makes more wheat, and we have many more bushels than we put in the ground, and by doing this every year we have enough to make bread every year, while, if we ate what we have now, it would all be gone and we would never have any more."

"But what makes it grow?"

"God causes it to grow. He gives us the soil to plant it in, and then sends the rain and the sunshine to warm and moisten it, and puts a germ in the wheat that responds to heat and moisture, which produce growth."

"Now tell me honest, 'cause I don't believe there is any God?"

"Why, Charlie, if there is no God how could there be so many of these pretty things in the world? Somebody must make them, and man could not."

"I don't know who makes them, but I don't think there is any God, 'cause folks said there was a Santa Claus, and there ain't—they just play Santa Claus, and I think they are playing God, too."

There was nothing else to do but to acknowledge that one was a lie and try to convince the boy that the other was true.

Would it not have been easier to teach the truth if there had been no lie in the case?

Letter Department

CANTON, Ohio, November 2, 1907.

Editors Herald: I am at the home of Bro. True and family, and well cared for by them, although peculiar conditions prevail. I am receiving especial favors by his son-in-law and his noble companion. Although not members of our church it confirms my previous stand taken, that we must recognize good wherever it is found. Some may say it is because of especial favors I say this, but this is not the case. It is because of the principle involved, and should teach us not to get too narrow and clannish, but broaden our minds, expand our intellects, acknowledge good everywhere. I came here from New Philadelphia, where I was in conference with Bro. Griffiths and Bro. Hansen. Bro. Griffiths went on his way south on the 25th. We came this way. Bro. Hansen remained at New Philadelphia. We only expected to stay one or two nights here, but found, as we thought, reasons for more time here; hence, if some others are disappointed because of delay, we hope this will explain. There are some excellent Saints in Canton, so far as we have made their acquaintance, and all are anxious for the advance of the work. They are patient, enduring, and faithful. Bro. True is zealous, sacrificing, and doing all in his power, as he sees it, for the advancement of the gospel, but sometimes conditions arise that seem unfortunate for all. Sometimes I wish I could only move such conditions out of the way, but I wonder, I pray, and work to change environments of this character, but can it be done? Bro. True tells me there are about twenty members, all told, in and around this city. There should be a pastor here, one of the high or Melchisedec priesthood, a branch organized, and great care taken to keep the church free and clear of any reproach. The Saints here look for aid from Bro. Manchester, of Akron, and a good man he is, but he is working hard in a secular way, for a living, and has the care of the Akron Branch, together with those that help him, and is very busy. He is loved by all here.

Bro. Griffiths suggested that I visit Toledo, which I expect to do. I called there in May and again in July, and had an urgent request to come there in September. I could not respond just then, because of work elsewhere, but prevailed on Bro. Eben Miller (my counselor for the western part of the district) to visit Toledo. He did, and I assure you did the very best he could under the circumstances prevailing. When I was there in May I told them Bro. R. M. Elvin would be there ere long. Again in July I promised them Bro. Elvin. From what Bro. Greenz, our missionary, wrote me, I supposed he would come; but alas, a loss has been sustained,—it is hard to tell how much. I want to visit Shelby and other new points where there should be preaching. Cleveland, Akron, Sharon, and some other points are well cared for, have good pastors. All of the high priests in the district are in use, and one seventy at least. Oh, the need of pastors to take the oversight of the flocks! See how they prosper when cared for. See how they scatter when left alone. Why gather them in, then leave them to the mercy of wolves. Harder indeed to rebuild, than at first, with clean new material! Will the Saints awake and pray the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers into the harvest-field? The Lord is willing if the Saints are prepared to receive them, and will appreciate and honor the laborers. There seems to be a lack of appreciation and honor due the priesthood. "A royal priesthood." Did you ever stop to think and consider this? "Well," says some one, "the writer has been snubbed, is what calls this out." I say, Nay, verily. I have never been treated better, nor cared for as well in all my ministerial life as in this district, not casting reflections on any one before, by my superiors as well as those that help me in my work; for indeed we are workers together. My counselors have entered into the work with a will, and have cheerfully helped and supported me in my weakness; for I feel my inability to always do as I would like to, but stumble, fall, and get up again. We have excellent Saints and officers (except the district president) in this district, the finest of all, the Bishop's agent included. I expect and hope he, with others I have in mind, may be set in their places soon. I call attention to Bro. W. H. Kelley's article on recognition of authority from the Presidency down to the deacon, every one in their office and calling, and further than deacon, every member honor one another, then shall the church prosper, Zion be built up, confidence established, God and his royal priesthood honored, the Saints gathered, temple built, Christ come and reign with his Saints by his Spirit until he comes in person to be glorified, honored, and reign, whose right it is to reign.

Well, it is a cloudy, rainy day. It does affect me in my broken, nervous condition. This may account for some things referred to here; but look at it some time when the sun shines bright. See how far I am out of the way. I would like to associate with the man who is perfect in the absolute sense of perfection. I write this, not in the spirit of fault-finding, but with love to all, and malice to no one on earth, or above or below.

Your brother in Christ,

G. A. SMITH.

N. B. Bro. Greene was far east when we heard of him last. We expect to hear from him when we reach Akron, Ohio, and hope his health may be improved, for indeed we know what it is to be away from home, sick.

Dear Herald: As scribe of the Sheffield District I deem it my duty to give an account of its doings, although this is the first time I have ever written to your paper. On Sunday last, October 13, the reunion of the district was held in the Saints' church, Revill Street, Clay Cross, Derbyshire, which services are held between the annual and semi-annual district conferences, and vice versa. Morning services commenced at half past ten, presided over by Elder J. Austin, district president, associated with Elder W. H. Greenwood. The district president gave a short address, expressing thankfulness to our heavenly Father for his numerous benefits bestowed upon us since we last met, and pointing out the reason for which we had met. He then called upon others to speak.

The fellowship meeting in the afternoon commenced at three o'clock, presided over by Elder W. H. Greenwood, associated with Elder J. Austin. Eight brethren and one sister bore testimony to the truth of the work of our Lord and Master, and its work among men as revealed in these last days. A good Spirit prevailed throughout the afternoon. Our faith and prayers are solicited on behalf of a sister at Luton, who is severely suffering from three diseases. Open-air service was held in New Street, at half past five, when a good discourse was given by Elder J. Holmes, with results which must be left with the Allwise. Evening service at six o'clock, Elder C. Cousins, associated with Elder W. H. Greenwood, presiding. Bro. W. H. Greenwood was called upon to preach. Text may be found in Hosea 4:1-6. The speaker, in his usual earnest and eloquent appeal, drew attention to the state of Israel in those days because there was no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the land, thus necessitating the controversy which the Lord had with them, and in the fullness of time God sent his Son into the world who was the embodiment and revelation of the word which is full of grace and truth. Yet again the world fell, by words of second verse. God has held a controversy with us, as in the words of the prophet Hosea. (See text, Hosea 4:1-6.) Terms of the controversy might be found in Revelation 14:6, 7. Yet we also in our day and age lack the fullness of God's precious gifts and blessings because we are devoid of truth, which is light and life, and Spirit and power, which should be in every one who is born again. So God's controversy with man must go on until all have a chance of hearing and obeying the truth. "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn." Verse 6: "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge; because thou hast rejected knowledge." "For if any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." Thus we see the controversy of the Lord with man goes on, and must go on to bring him back into that life which man lives when assimilating every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

At this period, the writer, together with eight others of the brothers and sisters, reluctantly had to leave to catch train home, having come from a distance. Justice can not be done to the words as uttered by our brother, through lack of ability of writer. All felt the benefit of the day's feast of spiritual things. Thus another notable milestone was passed, and recorded to our weal or woe.

Allow me to record my testimony to this work as restored in these latter days. It may be strengthening to Saints and friends, I having been brought up in the doctrine of the Church of England until years of discretion and understanding were given me to know the fullness of the gospel was not taught there. I was a proselyte to the Methodist New Connection, Wesleyans, Baptists, and Friends. Each in their turn was found unorthodox, as revealed in the gospel. I had been five years seeking truth in the church, but could not find it; but God be praised, a new neighbor came in the person of Bro. F. Cousins, now in America, who apparently came but to bring me the gospel in its fullness, for he stayed only a short time before emigrating Zionward, and this after I had grown weary seeking. After hearing the word which was and is so full of sustenance spiritually, I accepted it. Now, dear HERALD, I became obedient to the truth as contained in the Bible and taught by the Church of Jesus Christ in its reorganization, and became satisfied, and received that rest which Christ promised to those that sought him. Now I know this to be the work of God as revealed for the last time, and providing I remain faithful and assimilate the word of the gospel which is the power and Spirit and light and life of God, the growth into perfection, which is eternal life, will be mine. This end I am striving for, praying not only for myself and mine own household, but for the whole church. Your constant patron and well-wisher, whose motto is, Onward and upward, moment by moment.

GEO. GAYDON, secretary.

Ninth Street, Albans Road, Bulwell.

SCRANTON, Pennsylvania, November 5, 1907.

Dear Herald: The branch at this place is making some progress. For several months it has been a struggle on the part of some to press on. It is too bad that good, honest people will get at outs, some that have been friends all their lives, and permit evil thoughts and harsh words to cause them to lose confidence in each other. When will we learn obedience to the wise instructions of the Savior, If thy brother has aught against thee, go to him, and thee alone? We are commanded to love our enemies, "Bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." "For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? Do not even the publicans the same? And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? do not even the publicans so?" At this date I can see a desire on the part of many to get into line and do their duty. We hold Sunday-school at ten o'clock, average attendance about thirty; Bro. Richard Hawkins, superintendent; Walter Lewis, assistant; William Davis, secretary; Sr. Margaret Lewis, organist. The Sunday-school is proud of these faithful workers, who are always at their posts, and well versed in their lessons.

Our Religio meets Thursday evenings; Richard Hawkins, superintendent; Margaret Lewis, assistant; Nellie Davis, secretary. Average attendance at the Religio is about twenty-five. Bro. Richard Hawkins was lately ordained a priest, and if humble he will make a strong pillar in the work.

Bro. George and Sr. Alice Morris have again taken up their abode with us. They spent fifteen months in Wales. Bro. George labored in the missionary field there, in company with Bro. Thomas Jones, the past summer. The Saints here welcome them home. They are so much help to the work, especially in the singing. There are several gifted with good voices in song, in this branch. While none are graduates in music, they have natural ability, and should heed the admonition to cultivate the gift of music and song. We have also quite a number of good singers among the children, who, if given proper training, will be heard from in days to come. What a sad mistake is made by parents in neglecting to encourage their children to cultivate the natural gifts in them.

Our faithful Sr. Engle gave birth to handsome little triplets, October 14, 1907; two daughters and one son. Bro. Evan Lewis and the writer had the honor to present them unto the Lord and ask his blessings upon them. They were named Mary, Martha, and George. They weighed five pounds each, strong. The day they were blessed, little Martha was not expected to live, as she had convulsions off and on for twenty-four hours. To-day they are three weeks old, and are doing well. The Saints and friends are very much interested in the welfare of these little ones. Sr. Engle and husband, "Charles," as we call him, have been married ten years, and have seven healthy looking children; five daughters and two sons. They are carrying out the instructions to husband and wife of long ago, "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth." They are of Welsh and German descent. Being asked by near relatives if they would let two of the little ones go to other homes, for a few years, answered, "Oh, no, thanks, all we ask is for health and employment, then we shall take pleasure in caring for them under our own roof." If we have ever so many there are none to spare. President Roosevelt, and Governor Stuart, of this State, and the Mayor, Mr. Dimmick, of Scranton, have been informed of the arrival of the little triplets, also the Borden Condensed Milk Company. The latter sent a case of two dozen cans of their best Eagle Brand, free of charge, and made them a special price for what milk they would need for the little ones for the next three months; after which, if the little ones live, they promise to furnish the milk free of charge. The Scranton Times has taken their picture, and promise to have the same in their paper shortly. When they do, I shall send a copy to the HERALD. May the Good Master continue to bless this home, and its precious inmates.

We are holding preaching-services two nights a week, in residences, and are encouraged. I enjoy the cottage-meetings, for there is more of that feeling of sociability than we observe in halls and public places; for at those cottage-meetings we spend a half an hour or more, after the close of the services, answering questions. The congregations are not very large, but interesting, and we look for much good to result. We intend to have about four preaching-services every week, and have some of our local brethren do part of the preaching. They will magnify their calling, and develop, and do good.

Our services consist of Sunday-school at ten o'clock; preaching at a quarter after eleven, Saints' meeting at six o'clock; preaching at half past seven. Prayer-meeting Wednesday, at half past seven.

There is material here that will be of much benefit in days to come, if they abide in the spirit of the work. Brn. Tally Jones and William Hawkins have been in the past ten years the main support of the work. Both are men of good understanding, and competent to present and defend the same.

Bro. Evan Lewis moved from Aberaman, South Wales, England, to Lucas, Iowa, March, 1903. Because of the mines closing down they moved to Wilkesbarre, this State, remaining there fifteen months. No Saints there, so they concluded to move to this city, so as to be where there was a branch of the church. Last Fourth of July their younger son, Albert, fourteen years of age, while playing with fire-crackers and powder, was badly burned. It was a miracle that he was not burned to death. Those that witnessed the flames leaping all around him and above his head, thought that he would lose his eyesight, and if he lived be disfigured for life. To the joy and surprise of all, there was not a mark on his face. However, his right arm and side and back, were burned very deep, and have kept him from his work for four long months. He will begin to work the 4th of this month. Albert is a good, faithful boy. Out of the little pocket money he received he would pay the tenth. One person said to him, by way of testing his faith, "I thought the promise was, that they who paid their tithings should not be burned." Albert answered, "Do you suppose that if I take a lighted match and set it to the powder that the Lord will come and take that match out of my hand?" Albert had several inches of powder in his pocket, and a spark from that which he set on fire ignited the powder which he had in his pocket, and he was in a flame of fire. We are all glad that he is about over his Fourth of July celebration. He does not wish for any more along that line. Bro. Lewis and family are great help to the branch Sunday-school and Religio.

Two of our young sisters are attending the Lackawanna Business College, viz.: the daughter of Bro. Evan and Sr. Mary Lewis, and Ruth, the daughter of the writer. They are taking a course in stenography. They are doing well, and the faculty speak very highly of them. The parents would have been pleased to have sent them to Graceland; but the distance is too far. This city is well supplied with institutions of learning. This is the home of the International Correspondence School, which has students in all parts of the United States and other parts of the world. On the banners of the Elks, in their parade last August in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, was inscribed, "Scranton, Pennsylvania, the SCHOOL HOUSE of the world." If I were to send my children away from home to college, I would give Graceland the preference. I have in mind some bright young people who went to other colleges for three years, that were in the faith, and when they returned home had no interest in church work, and have not had since. The society they were in was such as had no use for the church, and they gave away and came home spiritually dead. While all who attend Graceland are not as spiritual as they might be, I must say that those who do attend have advantages over others that go out into the world, where the faith of the church is looked upon as unworthy of notice. Graceland has church privileges, and should be appreciated.

Bro. Lot Bishop, brother to the late Alma Bishop, missionary in Wales, at the time of his death, 1901, is located here, and is a very willing worker. His wife and five of the children are in the church, and are very much interested in the work, and strong in the faith.

We miss good, faithful, Father Adam Robinson, who went to his well-earned rest last March, at a good old age.

A sad home is that of our esteemed sister, Sr. Morris. Bro. David Morris met with an accident in the mines last May, which caused his death fourteen hours later. He was a kind, honest-hearted man, and did his part well in a financial way, with his limited means. He was in the prime of life, thirty-eight years. Sr. Morris was left with six small children, the oldest but twelve years of age. Two months after his death, the seventh was born. I am pleased to say that Saints and friends have been good to the family.

Bishop John Zimmermann and District President, Bro. Angus, paid us a flying visit September 28 and 29. Both spoke Saturday, at half past seven in the evening. At eleven o'clock Sunday, Bro. Angus spoke to the edification of all. At half past seven, Bishop Zimmermann explained the law of tithes, offerings, and consecration. It was a good, solid talk, very many comments. Hope some of the seed fell into good ground, that will bring forth at least thirty fold, if not the sixty or one hundred fold.

Sr. Helen Angus, of Philadelphia, has been spending several weeks in Scranton. The mountain air agrees with her, as she is feeling much stronger, and has good, healthy color. She has made warm friends, by her kind, humble deportment. She returns home the ninth of this month, to the regret of many of her friends here.

Bro. S. Brown paid us a short visit on his way to and from district conference, held at Brooklyn, New York, October 19 and 20. Preached twice for us, and he is a plain, forcible speaker, and does not believe in sugar-coating his remarks.

We have placed on our branch records the names of some who used to hold their membership in Plymouth and Hyde Branches, which became disorganized some years ago. These members have been lost to the church, and some have gone back into the follies of the world. We hope to see them all return to their first love, and become lively stones in the building.

We have changed halls. Are now located at the Ivorite Hall, 126 South Main Avenue, and have the exclusive right of the hall Sundays, and one night each week, and the fifth Tuesday and Thursday of every month. Rent is ten dollars per month, light, fuel, and janitor furnished.

On the fifth of September, 1907, we received word that our son-in-law, Bro. D. C. Kinnaman, of St. Joseph, Missouri, was very low, and to come at once. The message was twenty-six hours old when we received it. Thinking that a change for the better had come, we wired our daughter to let us know at once how Carl was. After waiting some eighteen hours with no answer to our telegram, and having failed to get St. Joseph, Missouri, by telephone, I left for St. Joseph at forty-five minutes after six, September 6, by way of Chicago. As I bade my folks good-bye, wife spoke and said, "I believe that Carl is dead." I answered, "No, I do not think so." I made a note of our impressions, and other matters not necessary to mention. The next day, September 7, seven in the morning, Cleveland, Ohio, I looked over my notes and wrote, "I still believe that Carl is better." And from this point to Chicago, a distance of three hundred and forty miles, I was very much encouraged. Arrived in Chicago on time, four fifty-nine in the evening. Left on the Burlington, one hour and twenty minutes later. Arrived in St. Joseph, at eight o'clock. Shortly after leaving Chicago, I was very anxious to hear from the sick. I had tried to send a message from Chicago; but owing to the strike, the office was closed. Later on I got out at Galesburg, Illinois, and asked the operator if he would send a message for me, and to have an answer to come to Brookfield, some hours later. He could make no promise as to whether the message would get through, so I did not send it. I returned to my seat, and I can truthfully say, as did John in Revelation 1:10, "I was in the Spirit," and I saw myself at the bedside of the sick one. I said, "Carl, my dear boy, I am so grateful that I have not been disappointed. Ma and Ruth have mourned as if you were dead. You came almost within reach of grasping the hands of loved ones on the other shore, and you would have been made welcome; but you are spared and shall have the privilege to attain to a higher standard than you have ever before occupied. Yes, my dear son, the noble husband of our esteemed daughter, the powers of darkness have waged a strong and bitter conflict to destroy your life; but the prayers of the Saints, far and near, for you have prevailed, and now take comfort, that you are in the Lord's hands." Much more was said that I shall not mention now. How grateful I was that I had been permitted to see and understand that our dear one was in the hands of God, and that he would be spared.

Notwithstanding I had received the above, and had written it down, as best I could with the train in motion upon the back of an envelope and old letters, as I did not have any writing paper, I was severely tried. On arriving in Brookfield, four o'clock in the morning, one hundred miles east of St. Joseph, I was lying back in my chair, the lights turned down, when I noticed a lady and a little girl come down the aisle and take seats in front of me. She had just got on the train at this place. I thought she was our daughter-in-law and her little girl, Bertha. This was their home, it being one of the division points of the Burlington railroad. Our son Daniel was in their employment. As I could not see in that dim light the features of this lady and her child I heard their voices, and I was positive that it was our own Ida and Bertha going up to St. Joseph. "Something serious must have taken place to cause them to take that early train," I said in my mind, "for there are other trains later on in the day." I thought again to myself, "Is it possible that Carl is dead?" I was left alone; that sweet peace of mind I had had, was gone. I could see nothing but gloom, sadness, and death at that home where I had but a few short hours before seen and conversed with our dear ones, and all was joy. I became so doubtful of what I had previously enjoyed that I imagined that I could see the crepe of mourning on the doors of the place of business, and also at their home. Oh, what a tried condition to be in. I said, death itself was hard, but nothing to be compared with the disappointment that came to me by the withdrawal of the good Spirit, with its light, love, peace, and intelligence, and the entering in of doubt and fear. I cried and asked, "Is it possible that I have been deceived?" So strong was the power that tried to blast my hopes of meeting our loved ones as I had seen them. For at least thirty minutes I could not take courage to arise and see if this was Ida and Bertha. At last the words of the one hundred and thirty-third hymn, Saints' Hymnal, the last verse, came to my mind with much force.

"Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan his work in vain;
God is his own Interpreter,
And he will make it plain."

At this I discovered that the lady and little girl were not Ida and Bertha. "Yes," I said, "blind unbelief has erred in this case," and I sought as best I could the forgiveness of him who had been so kind in giving to me his Holy Spirit.

"Well," says one, "I do not see how you could have doubted the truthfulness of that manifestation." I can only say this, that I am sorry I did; and if I had been left alone I would not have permitted the mind to go into the dark and gloomy mist of unbelief. We have the world, flesh, and the Devil to fight, and in this experience I can see the powers of darkness bringing their forces on one that was weak. I believe had that power kept out, the coming into the coach of that lady and little girl would have had but a passing thought in my mind. But when the crepe was seen upon the doors I was overcome.

On reaching St. Joseph, I was not altogether free from doubts and fears. My first thought was to go up to the home without informing them by phone that I was in the city, or to make any inquiry as to how matters were. Upon second consideration, I looked to see if I could see any one who was acquainted with the family. I wanted to see some one, and I was afraid to. I stepped to the phone, and asked central to give me the residence of Mr. Kinnaman. Central replied, "I can not get them." "Then please call the place of business." Again central said, "They do not answer." "Well, well, what does this mean? Please try the residence again, central." Every second seemed as long as minutes. At last central cried out, "There they are." I stepped into the little closet, placed the receiver to my ear, and inquired, while I could hear and feel the pulsation of my heart in my throat, and my knees trembling, "Who is this?" Answer: "Mrs. Collins" (Carl's sister). "Oh," I said, "no death in that home, this morning." The tone of the voice was too clear and pleasant. Although I had heard that voice off and on for over thirty-one years, it never seemed so sweet to me as it did then. I have heard her sing some soul-stirring songs of Zion with her rich, melodious voice, but this was the sweetest it ever had sounded in my ears. I inquired, "How is Carl?" She answered, "We have strong hopes of him now." Not until then did the powers of unbelief and fear leave me. Like Thomas of old, when he saw the prints of the nails, and the wounds in the side of the Savior, his unbelief disappeared, and he cried, "My Lord, and my God." Yes, man is weak. Peter, who had been in close touch with the Master, when left alone went so far as to deny the Lord. I believe, however, that it was only from the lips. May the good Master deliver us from the powers and influences of unbelief.

In a few moments I passed the place of business, all busy and cheerful within. Arrived at the home, when I was so overcome with feelings of gratitude that I sat down, and there I beheld in the eyes and faces of those dear ones, that had been so highly favored of the Lord, in sparing the life of the noble husband and kind father,—feelings of gratitude that the pen can not describe. I entered the room of the sick one, and kneeling by his bedside I kissed the face that had been almost cold in death. I gave utterance to the same words as I did when permitted in the Spirit to see him. "Carl, my dear boy, I am so grateful I have not been disappointed," etc.

While I have already said much, I do not think it wise to close without giving some of the experiences of the Saints of St. Joseph in this case. Wednesday evening, September 4, after the doctors had held their consultation, they informed our daughter, Sr. Kinnaman, that there was no hope, and advised her that if they had friends that she would like to have present in case of death she had better notify them. That same night message was sent us, and many others. The Saints were holding their monthly business-meeting at the church, and were singing the last verse of the opening hymn when Mary, the oldest daughter of the family, entered and walked up to the stand, and said to the officers in charge that "Mamma wants the elders to come over; for the doctors had no hopes of father's recovering." Bro. Goodrich and Best were in the stand and said that a motion to adjourn their business for one week would be in order, and that as many as felt like going over to the home of Bro. Kinnaman could do so. This met with unanimous approval by all present. About thirty went to the home and there, in charge of Bro. V. M. Goodrich, a season of prayer was had, and the brother administered to. Twelve earnest, short prayers were offered, and, in the language of our good Bro. McCormick, it was a time long to be remembered. This brother had been in the church not quite two years and, while he was satisfied with it, he never had witnessed the outpouring of the Spirit as he did that evening. He said to me that he would not have missed that service for all the world. He remarked, "I was strong in the faith prior to this; but I am ten times stronger, if it can be so, now."

Bro. G. W. Best had an open vision while they were engaged in prayer. He saw two powers, light and darkness, seemingly struggling for the supremacy. It would get dark, then light again, dark and then light. At last the darkness disappeared and the light remained. At the close of the service Bro. Best related the vision to several who were present.

Bro. (Doctor) Luff, came up in answer to a telephone message, and he said that from a human standpoint Carl had only half a chance in a thousand; but, he said, "We have a God whom we can call upon, when the arm of flesh is too short." He offered prayer for the brother, that never will be forgotten by those who were present. He gave some valuable instructions and, as he could not remain, he called upon Doctor Kate Hickox, and had her to take charge of the case under his instructions and directions. His selection was certainly a wise one; so, with the judgment and skill of those whom I believe the Lord had raised up, and the faith and prayers of the Saints, the brother was spared. Some four days after Doctor Hickox had waited upon Carl, she remarked, "It is wonderful, how he is improving. Just think that four days ago his eyes were so weak that he could not keep them open, and the color of death was on his lips, and this afternoon he will be sitting up a little while."

News From Branches

LONDON, ONTARIO.

Our district conference is over. The attendance was large, and the interest good. Elders Leverton, F. G. Pitt, and R. C. Evans were the speakers. Many of the missionaries were present, and Elder Buschlen was added to the missionary force. The spring conference will be held at Corinth.

Mr. Bernard was baptized the other Sunday evening, by President R. C. Evans, and was confirmed by Elder Fligg. Vera Constable was also baptized and confirmed by President Evans.

Elder A. E. Mortimer, who has been laboring in Toronto, is home for a rest.

A very pleasant "at home" was held in the church on Thanksgiving Day. President Evans was with us, after which he left for Toronto to hold special services the coming winter. We have heard the interest is good, although much opposition is being brought to bear against the work there.

W. A. HARDY.

LAMONI, IOWA.

Sunday was a pleasant day at Lamoni, and the services were well attended. Wardell Christy was the speaker at the chapel in the morning; A. H. Smith, in the evening. H. H. Gold occupied at the Saints' Home; C. I. Carpenter at Liberty Home.

The following is reported from adjacent branches and missions: W. R. Dexter at Andover, H. A. Stebbins at Thompson, R. M. Elvin at Ellston, Moroni Traxler at Wion, C. J. Peters at Terre Haute.

An evangelical effort is being made in Lamoni this week, continuing from Sunday to Friday evenings, inclusive. Patriarchs A. H. Smith and J. R. Lambert speak alternately. It is hoped that the Saints will be encouraged and revived by the effort.

A branch was organized at Oland, Saturday, as mentioned in these items last week. The following officers were chosen: R. S. Salyards, presiding elder; R. E. Haskin, priest; C. E. Bootman, teacher; Ernest Haskin, deacon. The branch has a membership of about thirty. On Sunday the Oland church, which has been erected and furnished by the sacrifices of the Saints and their friends in that vicinity, was dedicated. The dedicatory sermon was by Heman C. Smith, the prayer by John Smith. John Smith spoke in the evening. The location of the church building is six miles southwest of Lamoni. This little branch enters upon its career under encouraging circumstances. May it prove a monument of good.

NEW ALBANY, INDIANA.

The work at New Albany has made nice progress for the month of October. The Saints' meetings were much blessed of the Spirit of God, and many blessings received.

The Sunday-school is progressing nicely. We added five more to our number last Sunday.

Bro. Bing and family from Central Illinois, moved into our midst of late, and we welcome them.

Preaching-services have been of much interest every Sunday night, and it seems that some are near the kingdom. Bro. Hanner, of Louisville, and the writer have been holding forth, trusting in God's power to give us strength and wisdom, that we may accomplish a good work here. We have been advertising with dodgers of late, and hope to give all a chance to come and join us.

On last Sunday, fifteen of our number crossed the river to the Kentucky side to join the Louisville Saints in a union meeting at half past two, where we partook of the sacrament, after which we enjoyed several good prayers and testimonies, the meeting being in charge of the writer, assisted by Bro. Hanner. The Spirit was present.

Bro. J. W. Metcalf is in Southern Ohio on a mission trip. 2017 Culbertson Avenue.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.

The visit of our esteemed Bro. and Sr. M. H. Bond, of Independence, has been a matter of history for some time, yet it lingers with the Saints of Providence Branch as an exceedingly pleasant memory. May our heavenly Father abundantly bless and prosper them; and when, with advancing years, infirmities physical shall announce the gathering twilight, foreshadowing the evening of life's brief day, may they have an abundantly increased assurance that "at evening time it shall be light."

Our efficient Sunday-school secretary, Sr. A. M. Ball, kindly supplies the following report for November 3. Officers present, 9; teachers, 14; pupils, 63; visitors, 4; total attendance, 81; officers absent, 2; teachers, 2; pupils, 38; full classes, 3; total collections, $2.13.

We announce with regret the decease of Bro. Charles Holmes, which occurred on November 3. Those who remain to mourn their loss have the sincere sympathy and earnest prayers of the Saints.

Bro. Adolph Leckney, our efficient church organist, and Sr. Florence Smith were united in marriage November 2, at the home of Elder J. D. Suttill, who officiated.

Your correspondent was in error in announcing November 2 as the opening date of the special services now in progress, as the correct date was November 3. These services have been well attended, the speaking has been excellent, and the interest good. Thus far not many outsiders have attended, but some of those who have been present have evidenced a lively interest in our doctrines as presented by Elders Greene, Phillips, and Farrell; one gentleman, a communicant of another church, stating that Bro. Greene's sermon of Monday evening, in which he showed the gospel message, which is to be preached in these latter days as a witness would be identical with the gospel of our Lord preached during his ministry upon earth, was the finest thing he had ever heard, and that he would like to hear more of it. C. E. L. A.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes.

Ordinations, 15; marriages, 23; numbers absent from branches, 906; branches organized since last report, 9; viz.: Bon Accord, Davisville, Iowa, Millet, Minnesota, Mitchell, Niagara Falls (New York,) Sault St. Marie, St. Edmunds. Branches in district at last report, 42; now, 51; branches reporting, 48. Ministerial reports were received from Elders A. E. Mortimer, R. B. Howlett, John Shields, R. C. Russell, William H. Gray, and N. E. Leeder. The question of enlarging and increasing the price of the Canadian Messenger was discussed, and it was decided to make no change. Officers elected for the coming year: President, R. C. Longhurst; vice-president, G. Buschlen; secretary, H. Leeder; treasurer, D. W. Cameron; Bishop's agent, R. C. Evans; on library board, James Pycock. Officers of Canadian Messenger: F. Gregory, editor; D. MacGregor, manager; Sr. Eastwood, mailing clerk. Delegates to next General Conference: R. C. Evans, Sr. Evans, Sr. Lizzie Evans, F. G. Pitt, Sr. Pitt, R. C. Russell, Sr. Russell, D. MacGregor, Sr. MacGregor, J. P. Buschlen, and John Shields, whose expenses are to be paid by the district. In case of division, the delegates are empowered to cast a majority and minority vote. Resolved, that whereas we, the Saints of the London District, have feared that since Elder Evans has been called into the Presidency of the Church, and believing that in the interest to God's work it is our opinion that the church should still continue to let him have charge of the work in Canada, we make this appeal, and authorize the secretary of this conference to present a copy of this resolution to the Presidency of the Church, the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, and the Quorum of High Priests. Upon request, the motion to notify the various quorums was withdrawn. Collections: Saturday evening, $10.91; Sunday morning, $11.90; afternoon, $10.97; evening, $12.43; Monday morning, $8.45. Expenses: Blank reports for missionaries, $6.05; chairs and piano, $8; small bills, $3.50; banner, $11; janitor, $3; R. C. Evans re railroad certificates, $4.40; due secretary on account, $1.56; allowance to secretary, $10; current expenses of secretary, $10. The president of the district was authorized to appoint the auditor's previous to the convening of conference. The secretary of district was appointed to arrange for delegate certificates and to publish the notice of arrangement in Canadian Messenger three issues previous to the convening of conference. Auditors reported that they had audited books and reports of Bishop's agent, secretary and treasurer, and had found them correct. They were unable to audit the books and report of manager of Canadian Messenger on account of his not submitting the right books. Zion's Religio-Literary Society reported that their society was in a prosperous condition, five new locals being organized during the past year. The Sunday-school association reported that a gain of five new schools had been made, and a net gain of 206 members. Rapid advancement has been made in the home department, it having made a gain of seventy members. At the Sunday afternoon service, the day being the occasion of President Evans' forty-sixth birthday, it was suggested by Elder Russell that we make a suitable presentation to President Evans, as a token of love and respect. It being adopted by the congregation, the ushers took up a collection of $24.21, which was presented to him in a neat address by Elder William

The Bishopric.

NOTICE OF APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

This is to certify that Elder John A. Teeters, of Alexander, Kansas, has been duly appointed Bishop's agent of Northwestern Kansas District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in place of former agent, Bro. F. S. Ward, at present of McDonald, Kansas. This appointment is made pursuant to resolution of the district conference of said district.

We trust the Saints and friends of said district will place themselves in communication with Bro. Teeters. Remember his address is Alexander, Kansas, and let him hear from you before the close of the present year. The Lord does not ask unreasonable or impossible things from any of his children, but he does ask that we do the best we can.

The Bishopric also extend thanks to Bro. Ward for his services, and trust he may be prospered in every good work.

Commending to the Lord the helpers, I am,

Very respectfully in behalf of the Bishopric,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

Fourth Quorum of Priests—Request for Prayers.

Dear Brethren: On Sunday, November 24, 1907, we request all members of the Fourth Quorum of Priests to unite with us in prayer and fasting in behalf of our dear brother, George Edwards, who has been afflicted with an abscess since the 15th of last May. The brother is not bedfast, but is only able to do a day's work now and then, at intervals. May heaven's richest blessings abide with him and all the brethren.

Your brother,

JAMES SCHOFIELD, Corresponding Secretary.

STANBERRY, Missouri, November 17, 1907.

Conference Notices.

The Spokane District conference will convene with the Spokane Branch December 29, 1907, at 10 a. m. A complete report from each branch, and a report of all labor done in the district is earnestly requested. Visitors will be cared for, therefore do not hesitate, but come from far and near, bringing the good Spirit with you, and we will see to it that you do not lose it by any actions of ours. T. W. Chatburn, president, 2704 East Sixth Street, M. Fordham, secretary, 2507 Second Avenue.

THE VALUE OF AN IDEAL.

At the first or second show of the International Live Stock Exposition, a young farmer from Iowa was attracted by an exhibit of improved corn. The uniformity and excellence of the product appealed to the eye, and the words of the young man in charge of the booth kept ringing in the farmer's ears. He resolved to test the merits of improved blood in seed corn. He purchased a bushel of the best corn he could buy, at what seemed like a long price. Then he prevailed on a successful and reliable corn breeder to let him have ten ears of his choicest corn at a still higher price. He took this corn home to his Iowa farm and went to work to reproduce it and make it better. He gave it close and intelligent attention for several years. Last winter he came to the short course at Ames with an exhibit of corn and won the grand championship for a single ear. The ear of corn was pronounced the most perfect that had ever been seen. It sold at public auction for $150, a rate of over $8,000 a bushel. This ear in corn competition was as outstanding as a young Abbotsburn in Shorthorn excellence. It was not a freak or an accident. The same exhibitor, the same year, produced two other ears each good enough for grand championship, with the first out of the way. This young farmer, who got his inspiration and higher ideals at the International Live Stock Exposition, has sold seed corn to hundreds of farmers in Iowa and adjoining States, a number of whom have been winners at prominent shows.

This is a single instance of the value of a higher ideal in agriculture. There are hundreds of similar cases at each recurrence of the International Live Stock Exposition, though the results may not be as striking as in this case.

When John Ruskin, the great creator of higher art and ideals, was a boy he often accompanied his father on his travels. In visiting the great art galleries the father always preceded him and selected the pictures representing the higher types of art and took care that the son did not see those of inferior grade. The father was molding the son's mental conception to higher ideals in art. The result was that Ruskin became the master mind of his time in his chosen field.

The International Live Stock Exposition affords the same high ideals in agriculture. Its value from year to year to this the greatest creative industry known to man can not be measured or fully estimated. Its lessons become more potent, more practical, and more imperative with each succeeding year.

I take the liberty of soliciting your patronage as we are in a position to do BANKING BUSINESS BY MAIL very satisfactorily. Open accounts can be placed with us for safety at your convenience and command. We have opened a savings department, paying interest on accounts of $1 or more and each member of the family should become interested in having a bank account building for future needs. We also pay interest on time deposit certificates. A number of the brethren are living here, others are looking forward to this location as a future home, and late revelation and admonition foreshadow coming events, adding materially to our spiritual holdings necessary to signs of the times, and in this connection our Board of Directors propose to safeguard the financial interests of the Saints by offering to them a depository proof against graft, greed, or calamity, governed by a kindred feeling born of the interest we have in common. It is not popular men, large capital, heavy deposits, National or State laws, that offer absolute security to depositors, but directors and officers progressive and conservative, possessed of the virtue of true manhood, shorn of all political ambition, with no taste for frenzied finance or mining speculation, and no inclination to furnish funds for others in that line. I point with considerable just pride (I assume) to our Board of Directors as named below. Feel at liberty to write us on matters that concern you in Jackson County, Missouri.

INSPIRATION AND THE ELDER.

"It has always been given to the elders of my church, from the beginning, and ever shall be, to conduct all meetings as they are directed and guided by the Holy Spirit."—Doctrine and Covenants 46: 1.

"And if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.

"Verily I say unto you, He that is ordained of me and sent forth to preach the word of truth by the Comforter, in the Spirit of truth, doth he preach it by the Spirit of truth, or some other way? And if it be by some other way, it be not of God. And again, he that receiveth the word of truth, doth he receive it by the Spirit of truth, or some other way? if it be some other way, it be not of God: therefore, why is it that ye can not understand and know that he that receiveth the word by the Spirit of truth, receiveth it as it is preached by the Spirit of truth."—Doctrine and Covenants 50: 5.

Thus God emphasizes the need of inspiration in preaching. Nor should we be surprised at the emphasis when we consider that the preacher is a man who represents God. Few business men care to send out an agent when they have had no communication with him and do not know that he is in close touch with the house. The closer in touch with the firm the better; and that intimacy must be maintained. Each day he must report his whereabouts and indicate his plans the morrow. Each day, if possible, he receives instructions from headquarters, and is encouraged, praised, or censured as his case demands. One of the great trusts of modern times is said to have failed because it ignored this principle, and did not keep in touch with its agents.

During the days of the apostles an ideal condition was maintained in this regard by many of the missionaries, who wrote and spoke "as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost." During the Dark Ages men lost touch with God on the principle laid down by John "that whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God." Worship became merely a dead form; a vain repetition of set speeches and prayers. Men never again learned to trust inspiration. Even the reformers, whose preaching betrayed a certain amount of lofty communion with God, could calmly undertake the reformation (the remaking, if you choose,) of the church of Christ, without any direct command to do so. And since their day men have come wholly to depend upon thoroughness of education and keenness of intellect to make them acceptable ministers.

Let no man presume to give advice to others who has not first given good counsel to himself.—Seneca.

Action may not always bring happiness; but there is no happiness without action.—Disraeli.

Never say you know a man till you have divided an inheritance with him.—Lavater.

Perhaps not all would go so far as the man who declared that no more was required in preaching a sermon than in making a political speech, the conditions being to "make up your mind what to say and then say it"; but, consciously or otherwise, that thought has gained credence, and at no time (either while choosing what to say or while saying it) is God invited to take any part by way of inspiration.

This is not the true theory along which God's work progresses. Two forces must work together in the saving of man. These forces are God's intelligence and man's intelligence. The latter, according to every statement of holy writ, can not accomplish the work alone; the former will not. Man can not save himself or others alone; and God will not save the man who refuses to make any effort for himself or others. To hope for salvation along either line is to cherish a delusion and invite disappointment.

Paul had in mind man's part in the work when he exhorted Timothy to "study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." Christ had in mind the work that God must do when he said, "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things." Paul states it like this, "Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities." Some infirmities are peculiar to the individual, while others are inherent in the race and are of that character that they can not be overcome other than by help of the Spirit.

It is well to note that the Spirit as a teacher is spoken of as a guide; it is in no sense a compelling force. What is a guide? It is one who takes you into regions known to himself, unfamiliar to you. He does not carry you. You are expected to ride or row or walk, as the case may be. Some have waited for the Spirit to take them up and set them down on the topmost pinnacle of the heights of wisdom, and the result is they are where they were years ago. Others have felt qualified to search out all truth alone, and so they have gone into the wilderness without a guide, and the result is that they are lost. At the very least they miss many a pleasant prospect, many a view from some vantage point, many a glimpse of God's power revealed in green forests and running streams. The Spirit alone knows the way; and God speaking again, in an age that had forgotten this fact, restates it in the language that we have quoted.

The method of recruiting the ministry in the world to-day does not encourage a dependence upon inspiration. Among young men of good social standing it is expected that an occasional one, in looking around to choose a profession, will hit upon the ministry. Then he will place himself in the hands of some college that will in a stated length of time, for a stated sum, make him a minister. It is all a choice between avocations and is the opposite of Christ's proceeding in calling his ministry. He said, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain."—John 15: 16. It seems to have been the thought of men that they could educate themselves to the point where inspiration would be no longer needed. God's plan is by inspiration to help men use their education. Proceeding on the first theory the best education will fail; on the second the poorest may succeed.

God, in casting about for men to use, will choose those best equipped mentally and by education, providing they have other spiritual traits that are satisfactory; but alas, he finds few men thoroughly educated in the schools of the world who care to submit to the restrictions placed upon the ministry of Christ. In the absence of such God has often called illiterate men, who were spiritually equipped with humility, love, and patience, and an intense thirst for righteousness, and then he has proceeded to educate them in his own blessed school.

The natural result of depending upon men to fill the ministry will be that when it becomes an undesirable work there will be no ministry. That is exactly what is occurring. When the clergy held great power, and social honors and emoluments were given them first of all men, it was an avocation sought after. Now, however, fortune gives her gifts to the inventor, the politician, the business man, and the clergy has lost its influence to an extent. As a result, over three years ago Professor Shailer Mathews, of the University of Chicago, (see Literary Digest, September 17, 1904,) deplored the fact that few young men of standing were being educated for the ministry. He feared that the church would be forced to depend upon "untrained men, who pass into the service of the church from the farm and the workshop."

The condition that he pointed out has since become acute. The cry goes up from conferences everywhere that no young men are entering the ministry. Only a few weeks ago the Kansas City Times stated that forty more ministers were needed in Missouri in the Presbyterian Church, which, of course, is only one of many denominations in that State.

At the Presbyterian Synod, recently held in Kansas City, the Reverend Joseph Cochran is reported to have said:

We depend too much upon clubs, social gatherings, gymnasiums, and music for spiritual inspiration in the modern church. What we need is more of the old-time religious spirit—that spirit that impels people to go church, not for the musical and literary attractions, but the spiritual good.

Conditions in the world, among the churches, and among the ministry of the popular churches emphasize the wisdom of the provision which God made that he should call and inspire his ministry. Nor should we minimize the need of being so near to God that in all meetings and at all other times our elders may be guided by the Holy Spirit.

Owing to sickness in his family the Associate Editor has been obliged to move to Colorado for the winter. This will interfere somewhat with the editorial work; but those who contribute to the columns of the HERALD can help to minimize the difficulty by observing the following instructions when writing: Address "News from Branches" and all letters and notices intended for publication to the Herald Editors, Lamoni, Iowa. Address all original articles, clippings, or contributions to the "Straight Road" or the "Elders' Note-Book," to Elbert A. Smith, 322 North Prospect Street, Colorado Springs, Colorado. All contributions to Autumn Leaves should be sent to the last named address.

When you write on business, send in subscriptions, or anything of that kind, write to the Herald Publishing House. Do not write to the Editors about those matters.

THE HOLIDAY NUMBER OF "OUR" MAGAZINE.

The holiday number of Autumn Leaves need not fear comparison with the bright and attractive magazines of the world. To begin with, the cover design, by Earnest Webbe, is a gem. It is a moonlight scene. In a clearing in the snow-clad forest stands a little schoolhouse and groups of people are crowding in at the doors to attend Latter Day Saint preaching-services, which are announced by a placard tacked to a mighty oak in the foreground. The opening article is a story by Bishop R. Bullard—the true story of the shipwreck of the Orie V. Drisko, and the miraculous escape of Bro. (Captain) John Richardson and his crew. The number contains three typical Christmas stories. Sr. Vida E. Smith contributes a poem, "The three Nephites." Elder Charles Lake continues his "Experiences in southern seas." Patriarch Joseph R. Lambert closes his series of reminiscences. The second number of Elder J. C. Clapp's autobiography appears; in this number he gives an account of his experiences in Utah in the early days, and by way of contrast adds a few personal recollections of the Martyrs, Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Altogether, this is one of the best holiday numbers of Autumn Leaves that has ever appeared.

The winds and waves are always on the side of the ablest navigators.—Gibbon.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

Senator Hopkins, the junior senator from Illinois, has made a discovery. He has found out at last by Bro. F. M. Cooper's help, that there are two religious bodies called Latter Day Saints, and that one of them repudiates polygamy. The Chicago Tribune for November 18, has the following to say under the heading and subheads, "Hopkins hits wrong chord"; "Senator sticks up for Smoot, and Mormons don't like it"; "In controversy at Plano"; "Talk to anti-polygamy branch of the church but doesn't know it":

"The next time Senator Hopkins undertakes to discuss the Reed Smoot case in a Mormon community—but there isn't going to be any next time, according to the friends of the senator. Instead, he will try to forget the last time, which was at a dinner he attended last Friday night at Plano, Illinois, an old stamping ground of the Latter Day Saints.

"Some time ago Postmaster George Faxon invited the senator to address the members and guests of the Maramech Club on the attempt to unseat Senator Smoot on the charge of polygamy. The senator, who opposed the expulsion, accepted with alacrity. Plano, with its old stone Mormon church, seemed to offer as safe a proposition as could be desired.

"The dinner was attended by one hundred and seventy-five persons. Senator Hopkins made a lengthy address, reviewing the part he took in the successful opposition to the expulsion of Smoot. At its close Doctor I. E. Bennett, president of the club, called on Elder Cooper, leader of the local church of the Latter Day Saints, for 'a few remarks.'

"In the course of an hour's talk Elder Cooper made it apparent that the position of Senator Hopkins in defending Smoot was disapproved by the Plano Mormons, who disavow polygamy. He pitched into the senator so acrimoniously that the latter lost his temper and called the elder a 'bigot.' After a heated colloquy the senator was induced to withdraw this appellation."

A sample of "Arkansas" cotton was lately received by the Herald Office from a brother, who writes as follows: "I have mailed you a sample of Arkansas Big Boll Long Lint Cotton. If you will hang the boll up by a cotton cord, they will open up all right. It takes an average of eighty bolls for a pound of seed cotton, and fifteen hundred pounds of seed cotton will make a five hundred pound bale of cotton ready for the market. An 80-saw gin stand will gin fifteen pounds of seed cotton in thirty minutes. From eight to twenty bolls are produced by a well developed stalk of cotton. Plants are about eighteen inches apart in the row, and rows three feet apart. One bale to the acre is a good crop."

Elders' Note-Book

"THE HYPOCRITE'S HOPE SHALL PERISH."—JOB 8:13.

In a nice little town not far from this place,
There were two Christian churches, both lacking in grace;
One was holding revivals, where sinners by scores,
Came nightly, and filled up the church to the doors.

'Tis supposed that the other church felt rather jealous,
From the fact that they suddenly got very zealous
And at once called a meeting, to decide what to do,
To wake up their members, and start things anew.

The minister said, "Since I've been your pastor,
I have failed to bring one blessed soul to the Master.
I feel so discouraged I could almost resign,
But I've no other call." (This he said in his mind.)

"And you people are all either dead or asleep;
God help me, poor shepherd, of such scaly sheep.
Like Paul, the apostle, I am happy to state
That I've baptized none of you up to this date."

Then up jumped a deacon and said, "Brother Jones,
Those who live in glass houses should never throw stones;
We're as good as our neighbors, and I must disagree
When you call us lepers, for there's no scales on me."

At last 'twas agreed if they hoped to survive,
Or be in the fashion, they must surely contrive
To get an exhorter to come in post haste,
And start a revival; there was no time to waste.

A committee of three who were chosen, did wait
On Evangelist Eccles, and asked him to state
How much he would charge to give them a boost,
For to speak in a figure, "They had fell from the roost."

In a soft, gentle voice he said, "Brothers and friends,
It will please me to serve you, when my effort here ends;
With no thought for myself, but God's glory to seek,
For the trifling sum of two hundred a week."

These terms did not suit, as their coffers were low,
Which they told him quite plainly, and wanted to know
If he could arrange it in some other way,
And what'er was agreed on, he would sure get his pay.

This answer was given by the smooth Mr. Eccles,
Who cared far less for souls than he did for the shekels,
"There is one other way in which sometimes I'm led,
I agree to save sinners at so much per head."

A bargain was made all legal and right,
Eccles planned the campaign, and prepared for the fight;
Souls he must have, from palace or gutter,
'Twas all one to him, for it meant bread and butter.

The people excited heard the evangelist tell
About heaven with its glories, and the torments of hell;
But he failed to make plain to his poor erring brother,
How to enter the one and keep out of the other.

He thundered away on the rights and the wrongs,
He read from the Bible, told stories, sang songs;
He tried to quote Hebrew, and he murdered the Greek,
Yet he made fifty converts in less than a week.

The church had expected he would convert but a few,
Such wholesale salvation left them quite in a stew;
A paradox here they found to their cost,
Though they longed to save souls, they wished these were lost.

They begged Brother Eccles the amount to reduce,
Their prayers and their pleadings with him were no use;

This church, as fish had got into the mesh,
Like Shylock he wanted his "full pound of flesh."

They offered to pay him one half of the bill,
But he vowed most emphatic, he'd not take off a mill;
So he sued them at law, did this unsaintly scholar,
He'd break every commandment to get the last dollar.

In this church was a member well skilled in the law,
Who, like Sampson, great numbers had slain with his jaw;
He bade them take courage, he would save them their cash,
Take in all the converts and send Eccles to smash.

The day came at length, and the trial began,
Eccles had all the converts in court, to a man;
They most solemnly all on the Bible asserted,
That without the least doubt they were soundly converted.

The church's counsel arose, the court's pardon he craved,
"Please remember, your honor, that converted's not saved;
That these people are saved, the plaintiff must prove,
Or for a verdict in favor of my client, I'll move.

"The evangelists Matthew and Mark both agree,
That salvation in this world no man can e'er see;
But he who unto the end doth endure,
The same shall be saved, and God's favor secure."

The judge saw the point, and this judgment he gave,
"Your bill can't be collected on this side the grave;
The Bible's against you, you have had a fair deal,
But if it's not pleasing, you've the right of appeal."

And now let a moral be attached to this story,
If we trifle with God, or rob him of his glory,
Like the hypocrite, Eccles, we'll get beat in the end,
It will pay to be honest, and have God for our friend.

SERVICE OF THE BOOK OF MORMON TO HISTORY.

At first sight it may seem that the service of the Book of Mormon to history is very small. In the eyes of the world in general that view is most fully accepted, since they either wholly reject it as a work of authority, or else hold it to be merely a book of fables, crudely and grotesquely romantic; but with us Latter Day Saints a better conception of the merits of the Book of Mormon as an aid to history should obtain. A slight acquaintance with it (Book of Mormon) might, and often does tend to place a lesser value on it as a work of worth and reliance. But no Latter Day Saint, who is a saint at heart as well as in name, can forego the pleasure, as well as the great and lasting benefit to be derived from a close and careful study of its sacred pages.

This service can be said to be of a two-fold nature, since in itself it partakes of an historical character. In the first place, when compared with the fragmentary and very incomplete profane history, it tends to corroborate, affirm, and establish it wherever and whenever incidents concur simultaneously in both. In the second place, and that is wherein it renders by far its greatest service to profane history, it brings before us, in itself, a connected and complete narrative of historic events; thus not only corroborating and affirming the fragmentary history of the world, but putting it on a firm, authentic basis, by showing through its completely connected trend of events the parallelism that exists between the two. A better understanding of this relation may be had by drawing two lines parallel to each other, the first to be a complete line throughout to represent the Book of Mormon; the second to be marked by an occasional dot along its supposed course to represent profane history of this continent prior to its discovery by Columbus. This is the actual relation of the two works at the present, viewed from a Latter Day Saint standpoint; but when viewed as the world views it the case is reversed, since they think that this history, broken and unreliable as it is, is yet the only source from which to draw facts and incidents of the early history of this continent, or its prehistoric times; and they dismiss the true and only reliable record with a shrug and a knowing wink, as something ludicrous and beneath their wisdom.

But to go a step further, it can be shown most conclusively from their own works that they have no real history of the early times of this country, but simply the faintest shadow thereof. Is it not a well-established fact, and one most generally admitted both by historians and archæologists, that all the evidences upon which the facts of profane history have been built are conjectural and wholly indirect in their nature, hence without weight or force of authority, or lacking authenticity, as the saying is, and therefore without direct and commanding authority?

This condition, as I have endeavored to show by the foregoing remarks is, and would be, if the world would have it thus, entirely removed by the corroborative evidence of the Book of Mormon, placing it at once on a firm and authoritative basis, thereby enhancing its value many fold and ultimately saving it from the realms of the obscure and doubtful.

This, then, is the debt that profane history owes to the Book of Mormon, a debt which never will, and never can be fully appreciated by an unbeliever, because, as we have learned from the Bible, spiritual things can only be spiritually discerned; therefore the full scope of Book of Mormon history is impossible of comprehension by any one not regenerated by the Spirit of God.

But now, if upon further inquiry we study this purported or so-called profane history, we find it to be no history at all, but a mere collection of imaginary facts deduced from archæological researches, and greatly enlarged and supplemented in their make-up, hence suppositional and conjectural in nature. This, as I have already remarked, is proved most conclusively by the names given to such records or writings by all those who have had anything to say upon the subject of the early history of this continent as, "Ancient America," and "Prehistoric America." In the latter term, especially, we have the true significance of what kind of history it is. "Prehistoric America" means America before history, i. e.: before there was any written history. The real and only genuine history, as we all know, and understand it, begins with the discovery of Columbus. The earlier and traditional discovery by the Northmen is not seriously taken by historians in general, since no permanent facts or results remain as testimony thereof.

Again, the word history, which is nearly identical in both the Latin and the Greek as historia, comes originally from the Greek with the same meaning, and it is a derivative, while the primary or root word means to know. And this meaning, we find, accords perfectly with Webster's definition of history, viz.: a record of facts and events. And after a careful and close scrutiny of all the definitions and explanations given, we must at last come to this, that history is a relating of facts and events by some one who was an eye witness in the more or less remote periods of its making. Further, these materials must show that natural and related sequence in all respects, that will prove them reliable, as facts.

When the historian sits down to write history it is his aim and business to surround himself with all known records, as well as to inform himself of all traditional facts and incidents, and from these to collate and gather out all that which bears evidence of a connected and reasonably proved chain of events as having originally been related by some living witness. This, it will be readily seen, rids history at once of all that mass of traditional verbiage, of all hearsay, and finally of all things not in accordance with a reasonable ascertainment of facts. This, then, is history in its true sense, and this is what makes it authoritative, and a source of truthfulness to be relied upon. Lastly, the primary aim of all history is to set forth all facts and events, the doings and actions of living men in their simplest and most truthful garb. And when we consider this most seriously we shall be forced to admit that only a living witness can know fully the truth, and set it forth in the broad light thereof to its fullest and best advantage.

Now, if we have come to a better understanding of what history really is and should be, let us return with this knowledge to our original theme, the service of the Book of Mormon to history. We thus find in applying this newly gained knowledge that the so-called history, speaking of that history in particular best served by the Book of Mormon, has decreased greatly in value, while the Book of Mormon has gained immeasurably, if it can not truly be said to stand alone as a record of facts and incidents; first, as witnessed and inscribed by man, and lastly as being inspired by the Spirit of God.—GEORGE PEARSON, before the Religio Society of Seattle, Washington.

THE BEGINNING OF THE WORK IN COLORADO.

SERMON BY ELDER F. C. WARNKY, AT THE CONFERENCE IN DENVER, COLORADO, MARCH 5, 1906. (REPORTED BY SR. EVA POWERS AND SR. NELLIE WIND.

BRO. AND SR. WARNKY.

Dear Saints, having been requested by those in authority, and also the Saints, I shall speak to-night upon the subject of the rise and progress of the church in Colorado, I being the first pioneer missionary of our church in this field, coming here in 1874 and continuing my labors until 1880.

Now the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ in Colorado was in this wise: In July, 1874, Mr. and Mrs. John Ellis, who had many years previous to this united with the church in England, were living at Conifer. About the year 1852 they came from the old country and went to Utah. They soon discovered that the preaching of the gospel in the old country and the practice of the people in Utah was not the same, and they realized the fulfillment of the prophecy of Jesus Christ concerning the church in the latter days, Matthew 24:12, "And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." Their faith was shipwrecked, and they left Utah heart-sick and discouraged. I will omit relating the acts of the leaders of the church of Utah when they started west from Iowa.

About the year 1858 Mr. and Mrs. Ellis left Utah and moved to Nebraska City, Nebraska, living there a number of years, and then coming to Colorado and settling in what is now called Conifer, then called Hutchinson, thirty miles west from Denver. As stated before, it was in July, 1874, when by chance a TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD came into their hands, and they were pleased, it seemed, with the little paper. There seemed to be a good spirit accompanying it, and they read it over and over and over. They concluded that they would write to Joseph Smith, as he was the Editor of the paper, and in the latter part of July Mr. George Kennedy, a son-in-law of Mr. Ellis, wrote a letter to Joseph Smith.

At the fall conference in October, 1874, this letter was read and the conference decided that they would send a missionary out to Colorado. I believe Bro. Caffall's name was mentioned, but they decided that your speaker should go to Colorado, and I, knowing my wife to be a good missionary, brought her with me to Colorado, starting immediately after the close of the conference.

The first place where we stopped was at Greeley. I tried to get a foothold there, but did not succeed, and came on to Denver. From thence we went on up to Hutchinson and received quite a cordial welcome, and stayed a few days and preached the gospel in a private house, and God seemed to be with us right from the beginning.

We came back to Denver and located on Eleventh Street, near Larner Street. The front room of our house being quite a good sized room, we made some temporary seats, and on Sunday we held preaching-service, having quite a nice congregation. We continued to preach on Sundays and some in the evenings during the week, and wife and I both visited around among the neighbors, and the result was that God blessed our efforts.

I again went up to Hutchinson, now called Conifer, and held a series of meetings there, and I baptized three. Mrs. Maggie Kennedy was the first one who desired to be baptized, and is the pioneer convert in Colorado. I also baptized Mr. John Ellis and Mrs. Elliott, and these three became coworkers with us.

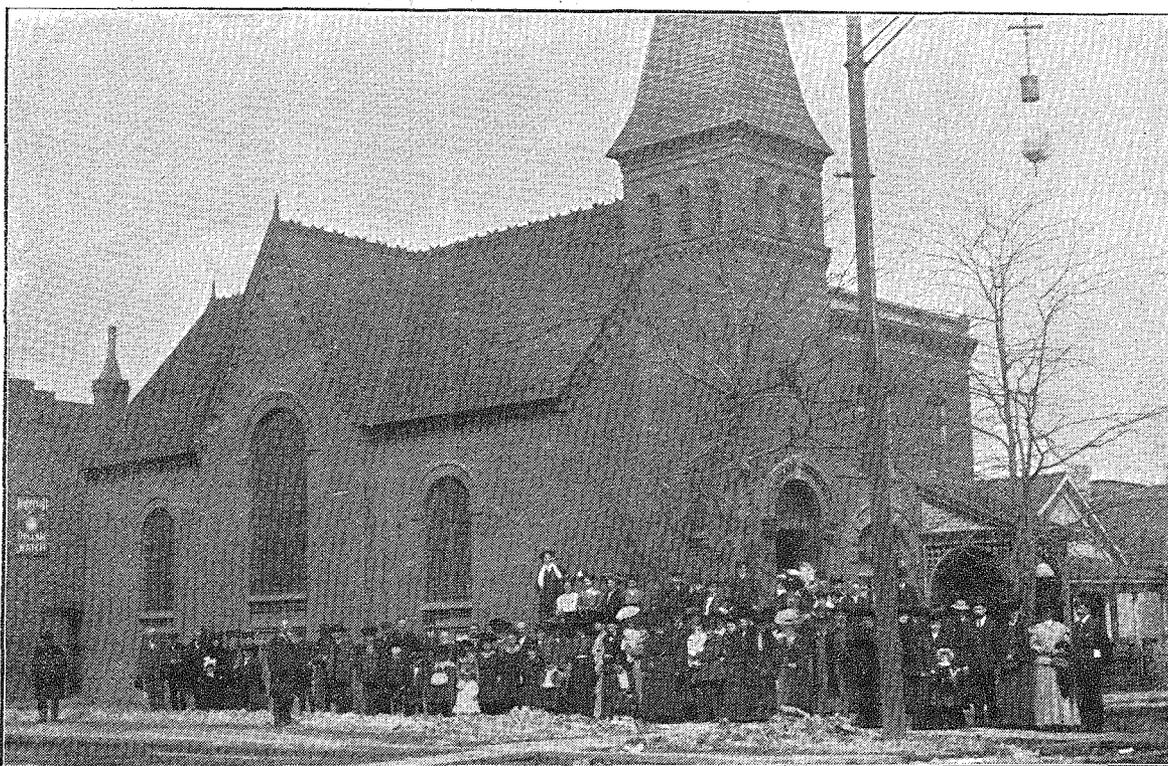

While I was gone my wife attended to the meetings in Denver, and we soon had enough with us to organize a little Sunday-school of about ten or twelve members, which soon increased to about twenty-two or twenty-three. I preached in our little house every Sunday and some evenings in the week, and organized a prayer-meeting, wife and I visiting among the people every day.

A man by the name of Fields (I don't remember his given name, I think it was Benjamin), a minister of the Congregational Church, came to me privately, after attending the meetings for some time, and said: "Bro. Warnky, I have conceived in my mind that I would suggest to you that we organize a new church. I have listened to your preaching here, and it seems that those first four principles of the gospel, as you call it, that is, faith, repentance, baptism, and the laying on of hands, are presented by you in such a manner that I am convinced that they are a fact; and I propose to you that we organize a new church, and that we adopt in this new church these four principles, with the promise of the signs following." I said, "Bro. Fields, if you and I organize a church, whose church will it be? It won't be the Lord's church, it will be our church; and the result will be, probably, that the signs won't was that she was a good woman from Utah. However, at last I found her, preached the gospel to her, and baptized her and her four children. This woman is Sr. Ward, who became a very good helper to us in the work of the Lord.

On the first day of January, 1875, I had baptized seventeen, and gathered up two more members, making nineteen; and upon that day (I remember how cold it was) I baptized Mrs. John Ellis and Miss Jennie Butterworth, who is now the wife of Elder J. M. Baker, of Sioux City, Iowa. We organized the branch on the first day of January, 1875, with twenty-one members, and elected Bro. Robert Butterworth as president of the branch, ordained Bro. E. G. Ward priest. Amanda Galland acted as secre-follow." And I told him that I couldn't consent to it.

I continued my preaching, and I baptized, in the month of December, quite a number. I learned of a man by the name of Butterworth, and one by the name of Allen, who were or had been Saints. They were carpenters and lived somewhere in Denver. I soon found them, both working on the same house. When I found one I inquired where the other was, so I had them both there. This man Butterworth is the father of Bro. C. Butterworth, now one of the Twelve, in Australia at present. So I began to gather, and had two more in the fold. I heard of a woman who was a Saint but could not learn her name nor where she lived. All that I could find out tary, and I as teacher. That is the beginning of the gospel in Colorado.

Our Sunday-school grew so that our house was quite full. It was about fourteen by sixteen feet. We had most excellent meetings, and God was with us.

I made a trip up in the mountains, and it was in winter time, and snow was on the ground, and I footed it. I went up to Black Hawk, Georgetown, Idaho Springs, Caribou, and Boulder. I made this trip on foot in the snow, and preached. Had a series of meetings at each place, and the result was that many believed the gospel, and God worked with us. I do not remember the number of baptisms, but we continued to labor; and in May, 1875, I had already baptized Robert Standering and Mrs. Standering; also ordained Bros. John Ellis and Robert Standering elders.

We organized the Rocky Mountain Branch with twenty members that I had baptized there at Hutchinson; Elder John Ellis, president. Soon after we had a conference here in Denver, at my house, and we organized the district, myself as presiding elder of the district.

I made another trip to Fair Play, Alma, and Hall's Gulch, on foot, and I succeeded not only in baptizing a few, but also made a great many friends to the church. I found it was a nice thing to go on foot, because when I was tired I would stop at every house I came to and preach the gospel.

I returned here to Denver and we had our meetings, and a wonderfully blessed time we had, Brn. Ellis, Butterworth, Standering, and myself as elders; and God was with us and confirmed our words and works with signs following; the gift of tongues, the gift of interpretation of tongues, the gift of prophecy, and the healing of the sick were enjoyed. It seemed that every one who came into the church came in for the love of God, and if any one got sick they would just send for me, and it seemed to be a foregone conclusion that they would be marvelously healed. I have a little bone I broke in my wrist, chopping wood. Bro. John Ellis administered to me and I was healed instantly.

My wife and I both worked. I was working wherever I could get something to do, and so was my wife, and we got along very nicely. We never went to bed hungry, if we were tired.

I was reminded by Bro. George Kennedy and family, when I was down to Monte Vista last week, in regard to the kind of meetings we had. Why, it was a joy and a comfort and satisfaction to our souls. It was a feast every time we came together.

Then Bro. Ellis came in contact with a minister of the New Jerusalem Church, by the name of Wray, and we had a discussion of six days, and it resulted in about fifteen more converts.

Bro. John Ellis took his team, and he and I made a trip through the southern part of the State, went up to Hall's Gulch, Fair Play, and over near what is called Creede now, on the river up there in the mountains; and we went over into Del Norte, preaching at every place. When we got through preaching there we went down the Rio Grande River, and every ranch that we came to we would stop and tell the story of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ. We found a man by the name of Jackson, who kept the stage stand; they changed horses there. Mr. Jackson said, "I am very glad you have come. I joined the church many years ago in England. I went to Utah and stayed there a few years, and I became disgusted with the polygamous abominations, so I came away and got established here." We stayed and preached there several days, then went down to Fort Garland, where we received a hearty welcome by the officers in charge, and we had a series of meetings there. I also married a couple at this place. We continued the meetings and baptized three soldiers, who were all musicians.

We went from there to Mountain Home, where we preached the gospel. A man by the name of Thomas Stewart, and his wife, who went to Utah with the hand-cart company, came to the meetings. They had both joined the church in Scotland many years previous, and had shipwrecked out in Utah, and had located at Mountain Home. We had a series of meetings, and I baptized Mr. Stewart, and a few months later Mrs. Stewart and one of her sons.

From there we went over the mountains to Pueblo. There we got the hall over the People's Bank, and we preached there every night for a week to large and attentive congregations. After the first sermon I stated that if there was anybody in the congregation who wanted to ask a question, or had any remarks to make, either for or against the sermon, they would be at liberty to do so. An elderly gentleman arose in the back part of the hall and said: "I thank the speaker very much for the liberal offer that he makes that if anybody wants to ask any questions or make any remarks, he is at liberty to do it. I like the spirit of that young man. Now I have some questions I would like to ask. We have been listening to a most excellent sermon. It is the finest thing I ever heard in my life. Why, it is better than anything I ever heard Brigham Young preach. It is the most deceptive thing I ever heard in my life. It was so beautifully presented that I was almost inclined myself to believe. That sermon was just calculated to deceive the very Devil himself. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman, How do you justify the Mountain Meadow Massacre in Utah? How do you justify the murder of Doctor Roberts in the street in Salt Lake City?" And with that he let loose with a good deal of oratory. Said I, "Hold on, my dear sir, I don't think it is fair for you to ask the questions, and then go on to answer them yourself."

"All right, I will hear you."

Said I, "I see you are laboring under a mistake. As far as the Mountain Meadow Massacre is concerned, I don't justify it at all, and furthermore I have no more to do with it than you have. As far as the murder of Doctor Roberts in the streets of Salt Lake City is concerned, I do not justify it at all; I have nothing at all to do with it. I perceive that you imagine that I am a representative of the church of Utah, and in this you are mistaken. I am not a representative of the church of Utah, and have no fellowship with that people. I am a representative of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and, seemingly, by the remarks you have made, you have done me and this congregation an injustice, and I think you ought to apologize, etc."

He came right up to the front and introduced himself to me as Judge Henry, the first Gentile judge in Utah, and he apologized before the congregation, and nothing would do at the close of the meeting but that I should go home with him and spend the night. So that was what happened in Pueblo as an introduction.

We came on to Colorado Springs. We had a series of meetings there, and Bro. Ellis got tired and wanted to go home, as missionaries do, to see wife and children. So we went home. Our branch was just flourishing, and we had a splendid time. We baptized a few more. I heard favorably from where we had been, and it was necessary for me to go again, and I was quite successful. While at La Veta, a Mr. Adams, a minister of the Baptist Church, challenged me and wanted a debate. He was an elderly man. I was a young man in those days. So we arranged each one to affirm his own church. The next day I got word that his people did not want to do that, they wanted to debate on the principles of the gospel, to which I agreed. The next day I got word again, saying, "No, there is only one thing that we will debate, and that is for you to affirm that the church that you represent is the only true church on earth." I told them all right, I would do that because I believed what I preached, dear Saints, and I can bear my testimony that that which I preach is the power of God unto salvation. I can bear my testimony as did the apostle Paul that that which I preach was not taught me by man, but by the revelations of God; and I know that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the tree of God's own planting, and blessed are they who partake of its fruit.

So we entered into the discussion to be held in the Baptist church. I suggested as my moderator, as some one suggested to me, a young lawyer, Honorable Charles Haight, who afterwards became judge. He acted as my moderator, and a discussion of eight days followed. At the close of the debate the judges decided that I had clearly proved my point, his moderator as well as my own. My moderator stood by me like a good fellow when he saw I was right. Mr. Haight is now a citizen of Denver. I have not seen him yet, but I talked with him this morning over the telephone, and I promised I would try to see him this afternoon. I want to tell you, in regard to any legal matter, that Honorable Charles Haight, when he seemingly stood alone, in opposition to prejudice and everything else, stood by that which he knew was right. If you have any legal matters that you want to have attended to, there is a man you can tie to. He is the kind of man I would like to see in the church, a man that loves right because it is right. The result was good. Reverend Mr. Adams was a perfect gentleman in every respect during the debate, before and after; and after the debate was over Mr. Adams and I went to the photograph gallery and had our pictures made together.

I refer to that debate that I held with Mr. Adams, because there is a point there in presenting the doctrine of baptism for the remission of sins, as the Baptists do not believe that baptism is essential to salvation. I referred to what the apostle Paul says, recorded in the sixth chapter of Romans, and, said I, "There is an illustration, Bro. Adams. The apostle says that, as Jesus Christ was buried and rose again, therefore we are planted in the likeness of his death, we shall also be in the likeness of his resurrection. Now, see that figure. Jesus Christ was buried a mortal body. He was buried an earthly body, subject to decay; but in the grave a change took place, and he came up out of the grave a heavenly body, an immortal body. In like figure as he went down into the grave and came up, so we also are buried with him by baptism, and like as he rose from the grave by the glory and power of God, so also shall we come up out of the watery grave a new creature to walk in newness of life with him. Bro. Adams, let me call your attention to this. Baptism is for the remission of sins. We go down into the watery grave a sinner, and we come up out of the watery grave a new creature in Christ Jesus, our sins are all washed away. Don't you see, Bro. Adams? It was essential for Jesus Christ to be buried, and the change took place in the grave, from mortal to immortal. So we go down a sinner, and we come up a new creature in Christ Jesus. Is there any other salvation than that marked out by the Savior in the Bible?" etc. I saw many of the Baptists look at each other with a look that showed their thoughts.

In order to assist Bro. Kennedy in temporal matters, I located my family at Hutchinson. From there I made a trip to Golden. I remember I started with a couple of biscuits that my wife had prepared. I walked about eight or ten miles, and I thought I could carry those biscuits better in my stomach than in my pocket, so I sat down and ate them. I heard a wagon coming. As the driver passed he looked up and said, "Want a ride?" I rode with him eight or ten miles, to Morrison. There we parted, he going to Denver and I to Golden. I will show you how God was with me to provide for me; but sometimes he would not open the door until I would get right there; but it would open and I can bear testimony that I know whereof I speak, and how God would provide for me. When Jesus sent his disciples out without purse or scrip to preach the gospel and heal the sick, and they came back, he said, "Did you lack anything?" "No, we didn't lack anything, and the devils were subject to us." I got out of the wagon and there was along hill of seven miles. When I got about half way up (and by that time I felt as if I wanted two more biscuits), there was a little house on my left, and I knocked at the door, and a young woman came to the door, and I told her that I was a missionary, a minister of the gospel, and that I traveled without purse or scrip, as preachers used to do in the days of Christ. "All right," said she, "Come in. Have you had any dinner?" "No." So she fried me two eggs and a couple of pieces of bacon, and I talked the gospel to her. The house was all one room. She repeated nearly half a dozen times, "Oh, I wish my husband was here to hear you talk, you are the best preacher I ever did hear." I thanked her for the dinner, and she gave me a pressing invitation to be sure and stop as I came their way. By and by I got to the top of the hill, and the sun was pretty nearly down, and I looked over into Golden below and I breathed a long breath, and wondered who was there to receive me. I walked down the hill one or two miles, and there was a creek; on the left side was a mill, and the Spirit told me to go in there. So I went in, and the miller came up and said, "What can I do for you?" "Well, I don't know that you can do anything for me. I am a minister of the gospel. I represent the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." He did not answer for a minute. Said I, "Do you know whether there are any Latter Day Saints in Golden?" "No," said he, "I don't think there are." I could not see why God should send me into the mill. He mentioned a Christian minister by the name of Williams, and when he mentioned the name of Williams, the Spirit told me that was the place to go. I was hungry and tired. He showed me the way and I went up to Mr. Williams' house. He and his wife had just been to supper. I told him that I was a minister of the gospel.

"Where are you from?"

"From Hutchinson."

"How did you come?"

"I came on foot."

He looked at me. The distance is about thirty miles.

"Have you been to supper?"

"No, sir."

"Wife, fix the brother some supper."

What a nice supper. Oh, how thankful I felt to God. Everything was good and I had a good appetite, too. Just before I got through he began to tell me something he knew about Pratt and Pratt's work, and he commenced to talk very ungentlemanly, until his wife reproved him. Said I, "Mr. Williams, you invited me in, and you have given me my supper, for which I thank you, and I hope God will bless you. But as for your talk, it is unbecoming. You don't know whether I am an angel or a devil. I think it would be just as well for me to go somewhere else. So I went out. He said he was going to prayer-meeting. It was pitch dark. I walked along behind them, no money, a stranger in a strange place. They walked a little ahead until we came to the main street, where the church was. There was no light in the streets, but a light in the window of the church. They went in. I was still a little behind them. I stopped in front of the church a moment and then I went in also, went about half way up the aisle, and sat down. There were only five or six, and they were near the pulpit. I had been there two or three minutes when the door opened, a man looked in, but did not come in. I sat there for a minute, then I thought, "There is no place here for me," and walked out.

As I was about ten or fifteen feet from the church I saw a man come up close to me and he said, "Is that you?" (As I said before, it was pitch dark.) I answered, "This is I." "Are you the minister that was at the mill? The minister that called this evening?" "I am the man." "After you passed, I thought of some questions I wanted to ask. I want to have a little talk with you. I have a double bed at the mill, and I want you to come and stay all night with me." Oh, how my heart went up in prayer and thankfulness to my heavenly Father, in his wonderful arrangement in providing for his servants. You see how God provides. God seemingly went right with me wherever I went, and provided for me. I worked on the road, I labored with my hands every opportunity. I preached every night, and three or four or five sermons every day. So I preached there at Golden, a number of sermons, and from there went back home again.

There was a people out at Clear Creek who had a strange doctrine, and I thought I would go out and see what they had. They met on Saturday. They were organized something after the order of our church, had a very strange spirit, and it was a wonderful thing. My wife and my two children were with me, and they were just as kind to us as they could be. I arranged to preach for them. Mr. Sims was the presiding elder, and Mr. Despaine was the prophet. He was an elderly gentleman. The third time I was there he was strangely possessed and commenced to prophesy to me that God Almighty had sent me out there and that I was the man chosen of God to lead that people back to Jerusalem, etc. My children were frightened and tried to hide behind their mother, he talked so loudly and so strongly. I preached for them once a month for some time.

A Baptist minister by the name of French came one Saturday and attended the meetings. After the morning services Mr. French and Mr. Despaine got into a controversy, and they both got angry, and the old gentleman began to prophesy to him. Mr. French quoted to him the apostle Paul, Acts 13: 10: "Oh, full of all subtilty and all mischief thou child of the Devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord?" Upon that Mr. Despaine said, "I curse you in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and you shall be cursed before you reach home." Mr. French appealed to me to know if that spirit was of God. Elder Despaine said, "Yes, I will leave it for Elder Warnky to say, for he is God's true servant, and he knows that you are possessed of the Devil, etc." It was a very bitter, cold day. About a week after that I met Mr. French in the post-office, and, bless my soul, he had his head all tied up, and he said that he had frosted his ears on the way home that day. And he said, "If Mr. Despaine should hear of this he would think that his curse had surely come to pass." His ear was in a horrible condition.

I baptized Bro. and Sr. Standering, who with others were of excellent service in those days in the church. Bro. and Sr. Standering made me a present of a pony, and Bro. Ellis gave me another one, and I rigged me up a little team, so I got around much better.

I made a trip to Littleton, and thence to Castle Rock, where I baptized three, thence to Fountain, Pueblo, Canyon City, and Coal Creek. While preaching at Coal Creek I had a dream. I dreamed that I was fishing and caught four nice fish. I put my line down, and a fish got on the hook, bit the line off close to the hook, and ran away with the hook fast in him. In my dream I felt sorry for the fish and wished that he had not been caught, as the hook would kill him. When I awoke I wondered what it meant. I continued to preach there and forgot the dream. I extended an invitation to those who had become fully persuaded that the gospel was true to unite with the church by baptism. Mr. and Mrs. Peter Adamson, Doctor and Mrs. Smith, and Mr. T. Scott arose. It was on Thursday evening. I announced that baptismal services would be held at the river next Sunday morning at eleven o'clock. We gathered at the time and place. A very large concourse of people came. I preached to them for an hour on the subject of "baptism," and then proceeded to attend to the ordinance of baptism. I baptized Doctor and Mrs. Smith, Mr. Peter Adamson and his wife, but where was Mr. Thomas Scott? My dream came to my mind, and I have never seen nor heard of him since.

I made a trip up into the mountains to Lake City, where I tried to get a hall or a church. I called upon the sheriff for the use of the courthouse to preach in. He answered me very short, "No, I understand that you are a Josephite and preach against polygamy, and I would not give a [using a profane word] for religion without polygamy. You can't have it." I went home to the place where I was stopping and prayed to God for him to help me that I might get a house in which I might present the glorious truths of the restored gospel to the people. Next day I met the sheriff in the street, riding in a buggy, and driving a beautiful span of sorrel horses. His wife was with him. He stopped as he saw me and said, "I have decided to let you have the courthouse, and preach all you please." I could hardly conceal my feelings, my heart was so full of love and thankfulness to God for his goodness and loving-kindness to me, and his assurance that he was indeed with me, and we were co-workers together. Saints, lift up your heads and rejoice, for God indeed hears and answers our prayers. Let us keep our spirits and bodies pure, and the gates of heaven will be wide open to receive us.

I at once had bills printed and scattered. I continued there about three weeks and baptized five precious souls, among whom were the parents of Elder James Yates. He was a baby at that time. I then returned home, and notified the Saints that I wished to close my labors in Colorado and return to the Eastern States.

We appointed Bro. Stewart as president of the district. I looked for a location for a photograph gallery. We went up as far as Cheyenne and returned. We wanted to preach a little more down south in San Luis Valley, and God blessed me in my undertaking. I went up to Leadville with my photographing tent. God seemed to be with me in that and I made about a hundred dollars a week. In six weeks I had made six hundred dollars, clear of expenses. I came back home rejoicing and singing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

I went over into New Mexico and labored four weeks, clearing about four hundred dollars. "Now," said I, "wife, where do you want to go now? To Lamoni or Independence?" She answered, "Write to Joseph and see what he says." So we wrote to Bro. Joseph Smith and he replied, "I don't see any reason why you should not locate at Independence." So we did.

Bro. Stewart presided over the district about a year, and things went slow, and the work went down considerably spiritually. After that Bro. James Caffall came. Bro. Butterworth had gone to Iowa and the members were scattered considerably. Bro. Caffall revived things and then by and by some good folks moved in here, and helped him, and they have been gradually adding to the number until we are here to-day at the conference, with this beautiful room, with one hundred ninety-one members. Now, can we not at the conclusion sing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow"?

Thus I present the history of the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ in Colorado, and while many of you are strangers to me, the fact of your being here in Denver makes me love you. Here is Bro. Frank Curtis, from Independence, whom I have known ever since he was a little boy. When he was a very small boy he was a good boy, bore his testimony, and I used to say in my mind that he was going to be a great worker in the church. His father, Emsley Curtis, was one of the best missionaries we have ever had in Missouri, neither Bro. T. W. Chatburn, who is present, nor Bro. Warnky excepted. The Schmutz family here were a power for good in Kansas City. I used to preach a good deal in their house, and they rendered me much assistance there in my labors. When they came out here I knew you would have good support in them. I pray that God's blessing may rest upon you, and that God will bless those missionaries as he blessed me, and just as sure as you put your trust and confidence in God, he will bless all your efforts.

I thank you for your undivided attention, and I want to ask a favor of you, that is, that you will remember me in your prayers, that God may bless me. I am human, I have my imperfections. A sister remarked not long ago, "Oh, Bro. Warnky, if I could live my religion as easy as you can, I would be glad." But she did not know me as I know myself. I desire an interest in your prayers that God will bless me, and help me that I may continue steadfast unto the end; and, if we do not meet again in this life, that every one of us will meet in the paradise of God, and dwell in his divine presence. Amen.

THE SANITARIUM.

This specially directed institution is now building;—but how long it is to continue in this state, depends upon the help afforded by the Saints.

The responsibility of building this home and help for the sick and afflicted is upon the entire church. He who fails to perform his part, or tries to evade the duty, can hardly appreciate the sacred relationship of a member of the body under the covenant of grace and true discipleship.

Are we indeed children of God and yet when he calls we refuse, or neglect, to answer? When he directs we fail to obey? Jesus said, Why is it ye call me Lord and Master and do not the things which I say?

The child must answer when the father calls;—it should be esteemed a pleasure to do so: and we all prove our faithfulness and devotion to our heavenly Father in proportion to our readiness to hear and faithfulness to obey him.

The sanitarium does not belong to a few, but to all; it is not for the benefit of a few, but all; it was not a few who were directed to build it, but all. Why should any one for a moment then hesitate in making an earnest effort to fulfill his or her part in the matter?

The building is under way, and it should and will be finished and ready for use within eight months' time if the Saints will, every one, help in the work. Now, who will be content to do nothing to help? No indebtedness must be incurred in the building; and all must see that the work must stop unless the means is furnished with which to prosecute the same. We earnestly urge upon the Saints the following:

1. All who have as yet made no contribution for the sanitarium, that they do so at once. Do the very best you can and the Lord will accept and bless the effort.

2. All who have contributed and who can supplement the effort so that the Lord's will in the matter may be accomplished, let them do so, and receive his special blessing.

It may be said that the times now are close and distrustful. But what has this to do with excusing us from the performance of duty? Do we trust more in a few dollars in hand, or the bank, than we do in God? If so, how are Saints different from the world?

With the signs of the times breaking in upon us from so many view points, let us be found children of the day, and not of the night; children of faith, not of fear; and fully prove ourselves obedient to him who has given us a special instance and time in which we may do this work.

Saints and friends may hand their offerings to Bishops, Bishop's agents, elders, presidents of branches, all of whom will see that proper receipts are furnished, or themselves send directly to the undersigned, addressing care of Box 125, Independence, Missouri.

In confidence, and hopeful of the final triumph of the Lord's work, we earnestly enjoin that each member faithfully perform his or her duty and obligation to God, and all for his cause.

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

Of General Interest

QUEER IOWA RELIGION.

SIoux CITY, Iowa, November 15.—Healing the sick by prayer, going into trances daily, and having Sioux City officials conducting a personal investigation, are the latest developments in the Open Door Mission on Jennings Street.

Humane Officer Reeve, Police Matron Thurston, and Chief of Detectives Richard have visited the mission and attended the meetings in an effort to secure information leading to the possible interference with the meetings through the arm of the law.

"They may investigate us all they wish," said Harry Booker, the leader, "but they must be sure they are right before they start anything. We are healing the afflicted by prayer, and while we do not claim to be Christian Scientists, we still maintain that we can aid any ill person through the power."

Stretched at full length on the floor, unable to move her arms or legs, and with her jaws locked as in a vice, Mrs. Ralph Miller lay for hours in a trance yesterday.

On the cold floor, not ten feet away, reposed the form of Miss Nellie Hommer. Her body was rigid, her hands twitching, her eyes staring. She, too, was under the "power." On the opposite side of the room lay Charles Archer. He mumbled incessantly the name of God. His muscles seemed paralyzed, his eyes fixed and glassy. He also was under the "influence."

An aged woman, whose name could not be learned, was lying against the altar. She was a resident of Sioux City. She had fallen headlong to the floor while praying fervently.

Other converts who had gone under the "power" remained on the floor for several hours. None, however, could speak the "gift of tongues" when they arose, but all were permitted to see strange visions of heaven, they declared.—Burlington Hawk-Eye, November 16, 1907.

NOTED WRESTLER WHO OBSERVES THE "WORD OF WISDOM."

Farmer Burns, veteran wrestler, now almost fifty years old and still undefeated by a man of his weight at catch-as-catch-can, says the most important thing for a mat artist to learn if he desires to remain long at the profession, is to acquire the "knack of resting."

According to the former heavyweight champion of America this "knack of resting" is a really wonderful thing. To it Farmer Burns attributes his remarkable ability to cope with the strongest and most agile men in America, men who are young and in their prime, and still emerge from the conflict the victor, in spite of the fact that most men at his age are fatigued after a brisk walk to lunch. . . .

"To the fact that I am able to rest during a bout together with the fact that I have never used intoxicating liquors, tea, coffee, or tobacco in any form, I attribute my good physical condition at this age. —Denver Republican, November 18, 1907.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Mothers and Sunday-School Teachers Take Notice.

If you are looking for something for that bright boy or girl of yours, what is more to be desired than a good book? If you are a lover of temperance, if that cause appeals to you, you will find no stronger object lessons anywhere than are furnished you in The Indian Maiden and Her White Deer, a book soon to be issued from the HERALD Office. One brother in Pennsylvania, desiring to be a public benefactor, has already written, inquiring the price per fifty copies. He wants to distribute them among the boys in his home town. It would mean much if just one of these books were purchased by every Sunday-school in the church; but think what it would mean if the teachers used them as their Christmas gift books. It would help the cause, assist in the publishing of other juvenile books, and besides that you would have value received for every penny expended.

A Visit to the Old Home.

I recall a wedding I once attended, where the bride went from her father's house a slender lily-white girl, who had been brought up most delicately in an atmosphere of ease and luxury. She accompanied the husband of her choice into a rough, hard pioneer life in a new State, and there, far from neighbors, from church privileges, or any social advantages, she spent many years. Children came rapidly. Her cares were numerous. She grew old and hard-handed and prematurely bent. At last there was received a pressing invitation from her girlhood's home for her return there, to make a long and restful visit. True to her habit of self-abnegation, she was reluctant to consent, and desired to send a representative in her graceful Maud, the image of herself at seventeen, or her dimpled Agnes, a lovely child of fourteen, but the children were firm. Mother must go, they said, and so she did. A new black silk gown for occasions was an unheard of extravagance, but it was procured; her wardrobe, though very simple, was augmented until she felt that it was presentable, and a shy, reserved, timid stranger, the woman who had forgotten the lightness of her youth, appeared again in her olden place. At first she described her sensations by the homely comparison of a cat in a strange garret; but the unfamiliarity wore off, the rough hands smoothed, and she found that leisure had attractions of its own. People did not know her when she emerged from the enfolding solitude of her far-off home, but bit by bit they discovered her to be the same that she used to be, and when, after three swift months had gone, she said that she must turn her face again to husband and children, it was predicted that they would hardly know her there. Nor was it quite the same mother who went home; it was a mother rested, refreshed, and wonderfully rejuvenated; freed from the fettering grooves, and with new strength, new interest, and new delight in living. Such a new lease might be given to many a tired out mother.

Letter Department

SOUTH BEND, Indiana, November 7, 1907.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a word from this angle of the compass would not be amiss. The world moves on, and the people of this intermediate territory seem to be keeping pace with the onward march for weal or woe. The great latter-day work, like the continual dropping of the water, is gradually making impress on the obdurate materialism of the age—gradually molding the religious thought of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries; but in such case, as in many others, the limits of propriety are left unnoticed, and radical extremes follow, resulting in carelessness and unbelief; often dogmatism and vice. Happy, yea thrice happy is he who abides the golden mean—there is where the truth is usually nestling.

Since the merry month of May, I have been in correspondence with representatives of the Disciple Church, with a view to airing doctrines in public debate; but they have failed to appear. I have met the date suggested by them five times, but in every instance they have been conspicuous by their absence, and, latterly, our correspondence has been consigned to the regions of silence, leaving us to believe, yes, hope, that they have, as a bantering Sanhedrin, crept into "innocuous desuetude" for ever.

We are enroute from Knox, Indiana, where we have conducted a series of services, helpful, spiritual, hopeful, resulting in the spirits of some being perturbed, and rejoicing to others. On Tuesday evening, November 4, we repaired to the banks of Yellow River, and there, beneath the waves rolling so silvery and grand, we buried four precious souls with Christ, in baptism unto life. Two were heads of family, and two talented young ladies, whom, we hope, will give their talent to the cause of God. We were also called on to preach the funeral of an excellent town lady, Mrs. Shaw, who had been an invalid for nine years, and finally went out with the paralytic tide. We felt great liberty in presenting our hope to the large congregation which packed our church.

We must not omit the important item that we were requested to officiate in the marriage of Mr. Mitchell and Miss Casper, of Knox, Indiana. We responded. May the sunbeams dance on the rippling waters as they glide adown the matrimonial stream.

The Saints at Knox are cheered, and stimulated to higher endeavor. We organized a Religio for them, and they rejoice in the work. I am on the way to conference at Coldwater, the 9th and 10th.

Hopefully, and hastily,
S. W. L. SCOTT.

LAMAR, Indiana, November 10, 1907.

Dear Herald: Perhaps a few lines from this place might be appreciated by some. As some already know, this is a Baptist community, which has taken a decided stand against the doctrine advocated by the Latter Day Saints. And, although we have lived among them for over five years, and have been honest and upright in our dealings with them, and have tried to live so that our church need not be ashamed of us, not a Baptist came out to hear Brn. Harpe and Flinn when they held meeting here last summer. A few, but a very few, outsiders came out; but, judging from appearances, very little good was done, although the elders did their best.

And these same people, who treat our religion with such contempt, treat us with much respect in other things. It does seem strange that people who claim to be Christians will persist in such foolishness. But it seems as if God was beginning to take care of his own, and show the truthfulness

In every age, in every clime, the tendrils of the heart cling to the mother. Alike in the far East as in the newer West, she takes precedence of others, with a singular and compelling charm that has its origin in human nature. The one who nursed us in infancy must be dearest and nearest in one exquisite and intimate relation until the end of her life. Mother-love is sacred, is unexact, is glorious. Though poets and painters prefer to dwell on the love of the young mother, holding in her arms the little child, in real life the mother grown old is just as beautiful and as fondly cherished as her youthful sister. King Solomon rose and seated his aged mother beside him on the throne when she entered his royal presence, type in this of every loyal son who does honor to a venerable mother.

The mother to whom we pay no homage is the one, rarely seen, whom Dickens drew under the name of Mrs. Skewton. Artificial, aping juvenility, heartless, fastening her poor old hands in a frantic clutch on the fringes of fashion, her very existence a thing of shreds and patches, one can scarcely tolerate such a travesty of motherhood. One hopes it is a caricature; and yet to this degradation a woman may come in old age, if she live for this world only.

"She has chosen the world and its Misnamed pleasure,
She has chosen the world before
Heaven's own treasure."

When mother is blue, or a little difficult, or set too much in her own way quite to suit the headstrong willfulness of the juniors, bear with her and set about bringing back her sunshine. Half the every day sorrow of this earth would melt into thin air if we were all more anxious to give joy than to get it, to be rather love-worthy than grasping, and to make others happy whether or not we were happy ourselves.—Margaret E. Sangster.

It Is All There.

There was a little cottage on the border of the sea from whose windows one could see the broad spaces of tossing waters, an arch of sky, and long stretches of yellow beach fringed with shining grasses. The air that blew across the waters, or came over the salt meadows bringing the scents of tree and blossom, was laden with the very breath of life.

Inside the cottage sat a woman, sad, bereaved, hopeless. She would not go out into the beauteous ocean-world and drink in the stimulating breezes, letting them brace her nerves and invigorate her soul; she would scarcely look at the curling, white-crested waves, the wondrous curve of the horizon where the ships sailed on their path of shifting mist, or at the pink wild roses springing from the hot beach and rejoicing in the glowing sunshine.

"Well," said a friend who had appealed to her to open her heart and let those blessed sights, the healing air, the cheering sunshine, have their way with her, "if you will not take them, they are all there."

And so it is with the influences of love and beauty and joy that are ready for the help, the healing, the stimulating and cheering of our spiritual natures. They are all there. We need but to go out of ourselves, out of our earthly thoughts, out of the plans and cares and frets concerning the body, out of criticism and revenge and unkindness, and lo! all that we need for joy, for health, for growth, will be found ample, abounding, far exceeding our power to receive. Who can tell what we might become, would we let the Spirit-influence, the God-influence, have its way with us? Thus only can we be faithful to our high calling and worthy of our great inheritance as dear children of the Father.—Selected.

of his word, "For verily, no weapon formed against thee shall prosper." This same Baptist church is now in very bad condition. Most of its members now own that it is "dead," although a few are striving to keep up some appearance of life. They have just closed a long protracted meeting, seeming to awaken but little interest, even among the members, who are nearly all "crossways" with each other. The church is now divided into about three or four parts, and some of the members do not even speak.

If such conditions continue, as I am sure they will, I wonder if there will not be a chance for our people to get a hearing.

If Elders Harpe or Sawley see this, and, after praying over the matter, decide that any good can be done, we will welcome them back to our place some time in the future; or whether any good can be done or not to the outside world, it will strengthen us and better prepare us for the battle of life to have them visit us and talk with us. How we sometimes long to be with those of our faith. To have the privilege of meeting together often would indeed be a great blessing! As did our forefathers ages ago, I long to be where I can worship God according to the dictates of my own conscience, and to bring my children up in church and Sunday-school.

If we can not make an opening here, I think we will some day move to a Latter Day Saint community. Life seems too short for us to live out of the church, though it be for a short time only. Pray for us that we may always have strength to do our duty, under whatever conditions we may be placed.

Your sister,
ANNA M. CUMMINGS.

Editors Herald: It is with pleasure I pen a few words to your valuable paper, that carries the glad tidings of joy to many hungry souls, who are eager to receive its truths. They are precious to all lovers of truth and light.

I am still alive and in the faith of the gospel, which has cheered my heart and comforted my soul for sixty years of my past life; and the hope of immortality and eternal life grows brighter within me daily. God has truly been with me in all my labors of love in this most glorious work. I am still willing to labor in its interest, and perform the important duties imposed upon me as his humble servant, knowing, as I do, that the Master will, as he has ever done, crown my humble efforts with success.

I am unable to work as I have done in the past, on account of my age; but will surely do what I can, God being my helper. I have worked in this stake, and attended several reunions, preached when called upon, given quite a number of blessings, administered to the sick many, many times, talked and given cheer and comfort under the influence of the Holy Spirit to the dear Saints in nearly all the branches I have visited.

I wish to say to the dear ones I have labored with so many years in the past, sharing with them the joys and sorrows common to the lot of all. Let us stand firm, and steadfast, that we may be able to endure to the end, and be saved.

HENRY KEMP.

HARRISVILLE, Michigan, November 10, 1907.

Dear Herald: Just received the picture of your new home. It makes me glad, yes happy, to be able to read your articles of instruction and encouragement from week to week. I have taken the HERALD for the last thirteen years. Ever since I heard the gospel, you have been my instructor in righteousness. I have also taken the Ensign lately.

Dear Saints, do take the church papers; for one can sit down in a quiet place, and glean from them the words of life, which are so comforting to our weary souls, especially if we are isolated, and denied church privileges, being thrown among the enemies of righteousness.

It makes me rejoice to hear of the success of R. C. Evans in Toronto, or any other brother whom God blesses with power to build up his kingdom. May God continue to bless your editors, and may he also bless your readers with teachable spirits or minds, that we may be able to come up higher in the divine life, is my prayer.

CASTANA, Iowa, November 12, 1907.

Dear Herald: How glad I am you are in your new building ready for business. And I am glad and willing to help all I can, when the call comes for help. If every one would help all he could, if it were but a little, what a blessing it would be! My subscription will not expire till January; but I will renew for Autumn Leaves and HERALD. If I could have but one church paper it would be the HERALD. It is all so good and true. It keeps me in the faith. It is all I have, as I live away from church privileges. I will send draft for five dollars. What there is above the subscription price, will give to the HERALD Office with best wishes, SOPHRONIA E. DAY.

Editors Herald: I herewith assume to answer in part a letter in HERALD, volume 54, number 40, pages 908-912. The conference to which the brother refers to first, was held at Dow City, Iowa, and in the Gallands Grove District, the president of the district being myself, assisted by Bishop C. J. Hunt. The district, I am told, has never elected its presidency to preside at the opening of its sessions of the several conferences held since its organization. And to confirm the fact, as they looked at it, that the district presidency had the right to preside over the conferences without an especial election at each assembling, they, some years ago, passed a resolution to the effect, "that the presidency of the district should preside over the conference until the close of its next session." The presidency were acting under this rule when interfered with by the brother, as referred to in his letter. The brother was asked (and he for a time consented) to take a seat with, and form a part of the presidency, and the intention was to ask him (not dictate to him) to take the chair in the afternoon and complete the business, as the routine business had been completed in the forenoon session. This, to my way of thinking was giving to the brother all the recognition necessary so far as presiding was concerned. Of course if Bro. Hunt and myself had felt like shirking our duties, we could have asked the brother to preside; and still I do not see how we could have done so and acted consistently with the resolution above referred to. When first elected to preside over the district, I thought to suggest a change and have them elect their presiding officers at the beginning of each session, as I had been the first to suggest the adoption of that rule in the Little Sioux District, when elected to preside over the same. But when I came to look up the law, I could not find anything but the law of precedent, and when I came to think of it the law of precedent has never made the baptism of babies right. But the brother thinks he was not accepted in his place, "and was not left free to advise and counsel," and had to "butt in" "abruptly, with a high hand and in a disorderly manner, to the disparagement of others and their work, and producing confusion." Now I am sure that I do not know why he did it. No one asked him to, and I really think, after due deliberation, that it would have been far better for all concerned, if he had not "butted in."

Now as to who should preside over a district, conference sessions included:

"The work now lying before the missionary quorums of the church is of such increased magnitude and importance—the field so white unto the harvest, and the need for laborers so great—that the twelve and the seventy under their direction, together with such high priests and elders as can travel and preach as missionaries, shall be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work, leaving the branches and districts where organization is affected to the care and administration of the standing ministers, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, so far as possible; thus freeing these spiritual authorities and leaving them at liberty to push the preaching of the word into the new fields now widening before them; in which work, if they will but now take counsel, saith the Spirit, they shall feel a peace and vigor of mind surpassing what they have enjoyed in the past. . . . And when those officers are ordained and set in their order, in the church, they should be left to administer in the things unto which they were ordained, having charge over the affairs over which they are called and set apart to preside; the twelve and seventy administering as those prosecuting the work of preaching with the warning voice, baptizing, organizing and setting in order, then pushing their ministry into other fields until the world is warned. It is the will of God that they do this; yea, verily, thus saith the Spirit, If they will now enter upon this work, leaving the burden of care in organized districts, or conferences to the standing ministry, under the presidency of the church; observing the law already given to ordain and set high priests or elders to preside in large branches and in districts, and also evangelical ministers, then will those officers set in the church be useful and he who gave the law be honored; the differences between the quorums be healed, confidence be restored and good will and peace come to the people as a cherishing fountain."—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 7, 8.

"So far as possible" in verse 7 is explained in section 120: 7 as follows: "In matters of personal importance and conduct arising in branches or districts, the authorities of those branches and districts should be authorized and permitted to settle them; the traveling councils taking cognizance of those only in which the law and usages of the church are involved, and the general interests of the church are concerned. Where cases of difficulty are of long standing, the council may require local authorities to adjust them; and in case of failure to do so, may regulate them as required by their office and duty."

This likewise explains the duty of the Twelve in part as to regulating the "affairs of the church in all the world." So far as I am concerned, I would like to see "he who gave the law honored, the differences between the quorums be healed, confidence be restored, and good will and peace come to the people," but do not think it will ever be done by "butting in." I am surprised at the brother in his quoting the First Presidency in support of his theory as found in Doctrine and Covenants 123: 23: "Presidency of the twelve, and meaning of the word abroad." . . . "As traveling, presiding council, your quorum has the active supervision and presidency, under the first presidency, over the entire field of ministerial labor, and control over districts, branches, and the ministry as a whole and as church organizations, and not as local presiding officers in these several organizations; holding special local presidency where no organization has been perfected; in a similar way as the first presidency presides over the whole church, differing in this, that the first presidency is necessarily local, while your province is not localized." Notice: "And not as local presiding officers."

The law provides in section 120, paragraph 4, that "the traveling presiding councils of the church" may "direct, regulate and advise," and render "decisions." Can they not do all of these, and yet not preside over a district conference or branch meeting while doing so? In fact should they render a decision while presiding over a district conference, would it not be the decision of the president of the conference only? In acting in the lesser office would he be any higher than the office that he occupies places him? While if he were only sitting on the platform and not directly in the chair, he would not lose his office for the time being by dropping into a lower one. Neither would such position hinder him from "directing." Does this brother mean to tell us that in order for a general to "direct" a captain in the army, that the general must take the captain's place? Would it not be the better way, yes, the lawful way, to keep the captain in his own place? It would be much better, to my notion, than for the general to "butt in," and sit down on the captain.

"And it shall come to pass, that they shall go forth into the regions round about, and preach repentance unto the people; and many shall be converted, insomuch that ye shall obtain power to organize yourselves according to the laws of man."—Doctrine and Covenants 44: 2.

From the above it would be expected that some similarity would exist between the church in its organization and the government in its organization. So we have a president in both, a legislative body in both, a judicial body in both, an executive in both. Then we have the government as a whole, and the church as a whole; the States in one, the districts in the other; the counties in the one, the branches in the other. Now what would we think if either the president of the Government, or the governor of the State, should step into a meeting of the county board of supervisors, and demand that they elect him to preside, that he might direct the chairman of the board to perform his duty? Would the chairman of the board have any more right to perform his duty as chairman, than he had before such an election took place? The Lord said, Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8, "That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same." So I conclude that in case one is elected to preside over a district, that it is his duty to do so. In fact I find no law which says that the president of a district may preside if certain others are not present.

Again Doctrine and Covenants 104: 44. "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence." Is presiding over conferences a part of the district president's duty? If so, then he should not be disturbed in his work, according to Doctrine and Covenants 122: 8; will not be if the law is adhered to: "And when those officers are ordained and set in their order, in the church, they should be left to administer in the things unto which they were ordained, having charge of the affairs over which they are called and set apart to preside." But one may ask, where does the presidency of the Twelve come in? Answer: "The quorums in respect to authority are designed to take precedence in office as follows: The presidency, the twelve, the seventy in all meetings and gatherings of the membership, where no previous organization has been effected. Where organization has been arranged and the officers have been ordained and set in order; the standing ministry in their order; high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons."

Now if the above is not plain enough, the Lord will have to try it again; for I do not think that any one else could make it plainer. Now, with good will to all, and harm to none, and that the law may be kept, I remain,

Your brother and colaborer in Christ,

Dow City, Iowa, October 23, 1907.

[Editor's Note.—So far as the occurrence at Dow City is concerned, we have now heard from both sides involved, and it will be well to avoid further discussion of that particular incident. The main question, who shall preside at district conferences, is now squarely before us, and may be discussed on its merits.—ASSOCIATE EDITOR.]

AALBORG, Denmark, October 31, 1907.

Editors Herald: I arrived in this city one month ago, finding Bro. P. T. Andersen here, who, together with Bro. Peter Anderson, the minister in charge, had begun operations a while ago, the latter having departed for Norway before my arrival. My experience here exceeds, in some respects, anything that I have met with in over thirty-two years, during which time I labored in several of the States, including several years in Utah, and also a former mission to this country. If opposition is an indication of good to be accomplished, we certainly have reason to be hopeful.

Shortly after my arrival, it was learned that a resident Lutheran bishop named Miller, together with another minister from Aarhus, also named Miller, would speak in one of the churches on the subject of "Mormonism." We of course attended. I am not informed if the two Millers sustain blood relationship, but they certainly were imbued with the same intolerant spirit, and agreed that Mormonism ought to be banished from this Christian (?) land. The minister from Aarhus had been in America, visited Salt Lake City, and was brimful of information about the Mormons.

While their efforts were mainly against Utahism, yet they made statements like the following: "Joseph Smith claimed to have a revelation authorizing plural marriage." "A notorious money-digger, claimed to have translated the Book of Mormon, which teaches a gospel that panders to the lusts of the flesh." "Upon the Book of Mormon is based all corruption in Mormonism." We deemed it our duty to do something, so advertised a reply, and an immense crowd came, filling the large hall to overflowing. We answered the part that concerned us and our work, and improved the opportunity to show that the original doctrines of the Saints were not responsible for the evils of Utah. The Bishop was reported ill and could not attend; but the other Miller came by train from Aarhus, but too late to hear any except my closing remarks. He wanted the floor, which was granted. Armed with the Utah edition of the Book of Covenants, the Pearl of Great Price, and other Utah publications, he started in; but when he learned that these works were not indorsed by us, he stood without weapons, and was forced to admit before an audience of at least two thousand people, that the Book of Mormon condemns polygamy in stronger and plainer terms than any text found in the Bible. He finally informed the people that had he known it was the Josephites he would not have been present.

Our meetings since have been largely attended; but now the opposition comes in a different form. The "baser sort" and rowdy element have thronged our assemblies and done all in their power to break up our meetings. They succeeded a week ago to-night, and we were compelled to close; but having announced meeting again for Tuesday night we found the only thing to do was to appeal to the police for protection, and by the aid of several of the force present we managed to maintain a degree, at least, of decorum until we got ready to close in the regular way. We were not afraid of personal violence, but the apparent object seems to be to prevent our work, in which they feel sure they have the approval of the clergy.

Were it not that a goodly number are glad to hear, we could well afford to direct our efforts elsewhere; but we find many friends that are willing to give our message consideration, and who think the treatment we have received a disgrace to the city. People have come to us at the close of our efforts with tears in their eyes expressing their regret; so in the hope that we may finally do some good we are still determined to try. We are making an effort to secure a hall in a more quiet part of the city, in the hope better to escape the disturbing element, but hitherto have been unsuccessful.

We have also preached regularly at a little village named Hasseris, about two miles from the city, and there had excellent attention, and good order. Some are interested, and we trust they may have courage to accept the truth. Here, too, opposition is beginning to rage. Last night the local Lutheran minister, a Reverend Petersen, tried his hand in a lecture on "Mormonism," aimed directly at us, referring to our efforts in the place. He gave the people to understand that he would not be responsible for them unless they would refrain from listening to our preaching. He acted as unfairly and as unchristianlike as any man I ever met; charged us with polygamy, and said we were doomed to hell, as were all who would listen to us. He advised his flock never to go near to where a "Mormon" preaches, and for them to close the doors of their homes against them. He gave me an introduction to his audience that I will never forget: In company with Bro. Andersen and some friends, residents of the village, we attended his meeting. Arriving a few minutes before the minister, we took a seat in the chapel about half way from the entrance to the stand. He soon arrived, went to the front, deposited his books and overcoat; turning around he beheld me, and a look came over his face giving him the appearance of a wild or crazy man. He came back down the aisle, walking back and forth, then he spoke up, saying, while pointing at me: "That man over there is a Mormon! That man is a Mormon! That man with the whiskers is a Mormon! That Mormon will not be permitted to speak here; there will be no discussion!" It was with some difficulty that I refrained from speaking up; but I concluded it was best to patiently bear his abuse. I had never met the man so as to speak to him, but heard him once in his church, and had seen him in the audience at the time I replied to Miller. His attack was malicious, contemptible, and mean. He knew I was not a Utah Mormon, that I was opposed to polygamy, but these arrogant, state-appointed preachers hate us worse than they do the polygamists, as they find themselves without weapons wherewith to meet us in an honorable way. He did us no harm, unless his procedure shall give additional encouragement to the rabble, which it may do. Otherwise our friends became more warmly attached to us, and I believe some of his flock felt disgusted at his conduct.

I have found Bro. P. T. a congenial companion, a good missionary, and well adapted for the work here. This is his first mission; but he has developed well and bids fair to become a useful man to the church. Those who feared that his appointment to this field was unwise because of his lack of experience, can rest easy on that score, as we are both getting plenty along that line now. Friends have helped us some; but it has not gone very far towards meeting our expenses, which have been quite heavy, in securing halls for preaching, besides paying for our room and board, together with other minor expenses; but we deemed it an opportune time to do something, and, we trust, though the Devil may rage in all his fury, that good shall accrue to the cause of truth. Or, even if we shall not be permitted to behold visible results, we shall have the satisfaction that we tried to do our duty. We desire an interest in the prayers of God's people; and if any of the Saints have time and inclination to write, a few lines will be highly appreciated.

AALBORG, Sténgaden 7.

H. N. HANSEN.

PLAINS, Kansas, November 8, 1907.

Editors Herald: I would like to state through the HERALD that there will be a new town to begin building up about the first of the year here, seven miles west of this place. It is on the main line of the Rock Island Railroad. I believe it will make a good town—better than Plains; and it is conceded to be the best little town on the Rock Island Railroad. Plains has a population of about two hundred and fifty, and has a business of a town of several thousand population, owing to the large territory to draw trade from.

This new town will have a better territory than Plains to secure trade from. The man who is starting the town is a Methodist, and wants only good people. He will not sell to any one who wants to run saloons, billiard halls, etc. If any of the Saints are interested in a business way, or otherwise, I will be glad to give any information I can, if they will write me.

There is still some Government land out here, but quite a distance from the railroad; but it is good, and will be valuable in the near future. Saints ought not to hesitate to come out here, even if they had to sell part of their home place, as this is a good country; but do not come here to speculate. We want people to farm.

We would like to have our elders come and do some preaching. I do not know who the brethren are that are appointed to this field, but would be glad to have them come. Other churches have been quite active here of late, and it would be a good time to follow up with the real truth.

Yours in bonds,

R. S. MALONEY.

COALGATE, Indian Territory, October 30, 1907.

Editors Herald: Owing to my age and inability to carry a proper stock and put in a harness machine and material for making and repairing saddles, harness, shoes, etc., I want a partner, or to sell. I have a lot of hand tools and a Singer Shoe Machine, and a small stock, the only shop in a good, healthy, growing town. Have some families of Saints, and a good little church now rented to the Holiness people, and the school-board. If interested, write, and I will give additional information. We are hopeful of a revival in the church work next year, as many are leaving, and a better class of people coming in. This is a good stock and farming country; markets for produce of all kinds.

Yours hopefully,

C. M. FULKS.

PACKARD, Iowa, November 14, 1907.

Dear Herald: Have not seen anything in the papers from Eastern Iowa for some time, but the work is advancing in some respects, and while we feel to rejoice over the progress made, yet we can see much room for improvement. Tent-work was carried on under adverse circumstances this year. The heavy rains were a great hindrance, and once, while at Emeline, a tornado, which blew down and broke over great trees, compelled us to lower the large tent. The wind got under it, and the writer, being alone, got it down with great difficulty. The storm came about half past six in the evening; but we had it up again and ready for use by eight. But few came, however, the people having heard over the telephone that the tent was blown away. Sr. Farr proved herself to be a brave and efficient tent-worker, pulling at the ropes and tugging at the canvas with a good will that would put to shame some of her brethren with far more strength. Had good crowds and fine interest at Edgewood, where we were joined by Bro. J. B. Wildermuth. Seemed like old times to have him with us again. Five were baptized at this place, and we left others almost persuaded.

While there we visited what the writer considers to be one of the wonders of the world, the Ice Cave. Some years ago some men were drifting back into the hillside, supposedly for lead ore, when they encountered an ice cold draught of air and were compelled to withdraw. Ice immediately began to form in the hole, and to-day it is nearly filled with it. When we saw it, on a hot day in August, great clouds of steam were arising from the opening, and it looked strange enough to see the green grass growing right up to the mass of ice. Picnickers come there with their cream, and freeze their ice-cream after getting there. What the cause of it is no one seems to know. Truly this old world of ours is a strange place. They must have an ice-house, as well as a furnace, down below.

Our district conference at Green Valley was largely attended, and was quite a spiritual one. Bro. J. J. Bailey, the patriarch, was with us, and was kept busy giving the Saints their blessings.

Receiving an invitation from some of the brethren of the Kewanee District, to attend their conference in Rock Island, the writer and wife availed themselves of the opportunity to get acquainted with our neighbors across the river, and greatly enjoyed both conference and the association of the Saints. Quite a number from our district were there. The two districts are so close together that it seems as if they might unite and hold reunions in some of our river towns.

Going from there to Baldwin, we assisted the Saints in organizing a Sunday-school of about forty members, and had a spat with some Brighamites who were preaching on the street. Our part of the State has been full of those fellows this fall. They put on a very meek air, and when we show them up they will sneak away like whipped curs; they "don't believe in contention" you know. They will deny polygamy until forced to defend it, and it is a good thing to have one of their Doctrine and Covenants along to show how they have done away with it.

After preaching at Baldwin, Joinerville, and Chattanooga, we came home to see our mother, who is very ill, and to get winter clothing. The writer has felt blessed in trying to do his duty this year, and desires to press forward in the conflict. Have had to endure some trials, but they are undoubtedly for our good, and we feel to thank the kind father for anything that will help us to overcome. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,

Your brother,

FRED B. FARR.

ROSETTA, Idaho, November 5, 1907.

Editors Herald: Perhaps some of your readers would like to know what has become of Bro. A. J. Layland, and why he has not written to the HERALD this conference year. For the information of all HERALD readers I will say, that soon after receiving my appointment to labor in the Spokane District (Eastern Washington, and pan-handle of Idaho), I came west to my home at Raymond, Idaho; but on account of sickness and death in my family, I did not reach my mission until the latter part of June, when I arrived in the city of Spokane in time to attend the Spokane District conference, where I became acquainted with a goodly number of God's dear children from various parts of the district. After counseling with Bro. T. W. Chatburn I went into settlements of the backwoods, in the vicinity of Lake Pend D'Oreile (pronounced, Pond-dah-ray', and meaning "lake shaped like an ear.") Here I preached for some time among the Saints of the Sagle, Idaho, Branch, giving such counsel to them as seemed necessary. Also preached a few times at another place, the name of which I have forgotten. I then returned to Spokane, and from there, in company with T. W. Chatburn and James Bell, I went to Seattle, Washington, and attended the Seattle and British Columbia District conference. From there I went into the Snoqualmie Valley, Washington, and visited some Saints living near Fall City; but conditions were not favorable for holding any meetings, so I did no preaching there, but boarded an automobile and went to Lake Washington, where I boarded a steamboat and crossed the lake, and was soon in Seattle again. From there I went to Ellensburg, Washington, in the Yakamah Valley. Tarried there over Sunday and preached to the few Saints who live there. Then I went to Spokane City, where I tarried for a short time, by request, did some work in the branch. From there I went to Lewiston, Idaho, and did some preaching. Visited Clarkston, Assotin, and Jerry, in Washington, but did no public speaking; but visited a few Saints and friends at their homes and taught them the precious truths of the gospel. I then went on to Craig's Mountains, into the big timber, and there in the backwoods settlements of Deer Creek I found a few of God's dear children who had made the name of Latter Day Saint honorable among their neighbors by righteous living, and I tarried with them two or three weeks, and preached the gospel to them and their neighbors, and baptized three precious souls. That settlement is about seven miles southwest from Forest, Idaho. Visited other places, perhaps a half dozen in number, but only preached once. I then returned to Lewiston and preached a few times in the home of old Bro. Jacob S. Goble, who is nearly eighty-six years old, and his wife seventy-seven years of age, yet I found them firm in the faith, and always willing to do all they can to assist the cause of Christ. While there I baptized one, a man seventy-eight years of age. I then went up the Clear Water River to Myrtle, Idaho, where Bro. James Thompson lives; preached a few times in his house, then preached several times in the Glasby schoolhouse. I then came to Rosetta, Idaho. I found about a half dozen Saints residing in the vicinity of Rosetta, but they have not held any branch meetings for a long time, so I have been holding some preaching-services in the schoolhouse, and will remain here until after Sunday, the 10th of November, when I expect to go to Winchester, Idaho, for a while, and then to Stites, Idaho, in which vicinity I understand there are a few Saints living whom I desire to visit, and will try to preach the gospel of God's dear Son to them and their neighbors.

To the dear Saints residing in Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming, where I have previously labored, I wish to say: the reason I have not written to the HERALD for publication is, I have been so busy trying to present the great plan of salvation to the people of a sparsely settled country that I really had very little time for writing, and most of my spare time was used in writing to individuals. So please excuse me, and I will try to let my whereabouts be known in the future. As ever,

Your brother and colaborer in the gospel of Christ,
A. J. LAYLAND.

DANVILLE, California, November 13, 1907.

Dear Herald: Six weeks upon a sick bed has (when not in pain) given me the opportunity and pleasure of reading the HERALD, Ensign, and several volumes of Autumn Leaves, much of which would not have been possible otherwise. So let us say, sometimes sickness is a blessing in disguise.

I am a tramp upon the face of the earth, so far as home is concerned; but fortunately at this time am in the home of my sister, Mrs. Belle Russell, a loyal Latter Day Saint of about forty years, and quite isolated, though not forty miles from her branch in Oakland. Danville, Contra Costa County, is their post-office, yet it has seemed an inconvenient place to be reached by the gospel exponents. The country schoolhouse near here has been used at times. Bro. Terry was here last year and gave a course of meetings and baptized my sister's son, W. H. Russell. We rejoice much in that event.

But the principal reason for this writing is, through your columns, to reach a sister who signs, Mrs. George E. Carpenter, Wilson, Michigan. After reading her letter I offered a simple prayer for her, then concluded I would send a few words to her, which may prove a help. It is now nearly two years since I became the possessor of a Red Letter Testament, and it is my constant companion, and full of marked places, but easy of reference. And I want to say to her, to begin with Matthew, chapters from five to eight, the sermon on the mount, the seventeenth chapter of John, Jesus' prayer in the garden of Gethsemane, and the thirteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians. This is read and reread by me, and how I wish I could absorb every word of it and live it, making it my very own. I could keep on and on, telling where to find words precious to me; but feel that with these and Bible reading and searching out, and marking the chapters and verses quoted in the church papers, reading the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants, will furnish this dear sister all the reading that there is time for. And if she honestly desires to be free from the other class of reading, the Lord will help her, and the charm of light reading will depart. There is nothing that can take the place of his revealed words to those that love him, and earnestly endeavor to follow his laws and keep his commandments. May the Lord watch over us all, and keep us in the gospel of Jesus Christ, is my prayer.

Yours in the unity of faith,
M. A. WHITNEY.

BESSEMER, Alabama, November 12, 1907.

Editors Herald: We are strangers here, and feel lonely, so far from home and friends; but we have the same Comforter here as elsewhere. I believe we are all the Saints here. Would be glad if an elder would call this way, and try to open up the work. He would be made welcome by us. My husband was baptized by Bro. W. H. Mannering, on the 31st of last month, at Houston, Texas, the day before we left Texas; and also my youngest son was baptized. We are striving to do our Master's will. Pray for us that we may continue to be faithful. Sr. Post, of Katy, Texas, if you see this, please write to us.

Your sister,
MOLLIE YARBROUGH.

LICKING, Missouri, November 16, 1907.

Dear Herald: I left home October 31 to do missionary work on the frontier; landed at Niangua, Missouri, and remained two days with Bro. and Sr. Bradley, old pioneers in the gospel work. Preached two sermons in the Union church. The rainy weather militated against us in securing a good audience. November 2, came on out to the Grove Springs Branch, preaching on Sunday to a small crowd. The Saints here are sleeping and neglecting their duties.

In company with Elder Anderson, who furnished the conveyance, we proceeded to Pulaski County, where Sr. Minnie Chandler lives. Our stay here was very brief, as the people would not come out to hear us. Before leaving, Bro. Anderson baptized Sr. Chandler's daughter Ida, a very promising young lady.

On November 14, as the morning sun lit up the scenic hills of the sparkling Roubidoux, we, with "Old Fly," emigrated for Licking, Missouri, the scene of the present writing. Just as we passed Sr. Chandler's spring we saw a notice on the fence, notifying the preachers to leave within the next twelve hours or the "hide would have to be slit." Fortunately for us we had finished our work, and were on the road before we knew of the notice, or we might have remained and took a whipping.

At present writing we are preaching in the neighborhood of Bro. A. Souders, who is always ready to help the work of God. This afternoon we shall go down town to preach on the streets.

Saints, what about the sanitarium? Do you not want to help erect this institution? If so, send your donations to me at Springfield, Missouri, 2219 Keelit Street, and I will receipt for the same. I am still in the faith.

A. M. BAKER.

PAONIA, Colorado, November 11, 1907.

Dear Herald: I am still in the faith. Came here about two months ago. Found a few Saints here, and they seem to be glad that we can have some meetings of our faith. We were out to a schoolhouse last Sunday evening; had a nice crowd, and you might have heard a pin drop while I was speaking. I feel there are some honest people there, and that good can be done. I felt the Spirit of the Master present in my effort, and thank God for the same.

I rejoice in this latter-day work. It is of God's own planting, and we can trust him for all. May God bless each dear Saint, that we may live worthy the name we bear. We may be poor in this world's goods; but we can have eternal life abiding in us. I send love to the Saints in Glenwood and Council Bluffs, whom I have learned to love. May God speed the right.

Your brother in Christ,
GARRY WALLING.

MILESTONE, Indiana, November 5, 1907.

Editors Herald: A few lines from these parts may be of interest to some. July 31, in company with Elder P. A. Flinn, we came to this place and preached the funeral of Sr. Marietta Taylor (let the recorder take notice as this branch is past reporting). She leaves husband, two sons, and one daughter. She died firm in the faith, and was ready for the change. The elders laboring in Southern Indiana will remember her, as her home was ever open for the elders. Elder James McKinney was a brother of hers, and he preceded her only a little over two months. He told her she soon would follow him.

This branch has lost by removal five families, and these two by death; so you see, out of a small branch, it does not leave very many to hold the fort. From here we went down to Spencer County. Found Bro. William Cummings and wife in the faith; also their son and daughter-in-law and daughter. Held a few meetings, the interest not being very good, as it was "fair" week. From here we went to New Harmony and held about three weeks' meetings. We have some noble Saints here. I. P. and V. D. Baggerly are held dear in the memory of the Saints.

We opened a new place in Knox County, at Bicknell, a coal-mining camp of about twenty-five hundred inhabitants. Our place of meeting was upon the streets. The congregation numbered from two to five hundred. We enjoyed excellent liberty in telling of the angel's message. We have two or three calls to return; but when can we go back? We held out almost four weeks west of Corydon, Bro. F. L. Sawley assisting one week. We were promised some eggs providing we did not pull up and seek other quarters, but this did not tempt us to leave; so they threatened us in a more severe way, but we had come to stay as long as we could find anything to do; so we baptized four and finally left. We have so many calls for preaching, and only three men in a district of fifty-five counties. Truly the "harvest is great and the laborers are few."

Will the Saints kindly remember that Bro. Johnnie Boswell is the agent of the district, and is ready to receipt any time for any amount of tithing you owe the Lord. Who shall be first? Address him, Wirt, Indiana, R. F. D. The first of the year is drawing near, when all accounts should be balanced. How are you standing with the Lord? Are you going to pay every debt before you settle with him? Spirituality gets to a low ebb here in this district, as well as elsewhere. Will the appointing powers please consider the advisability of sending a high priest to the district another year? Here is where this district has been lacking, in having some one to preside over it. Thousands of dollars, besides time, have been put into the district. Will we lose what we have put into it? We were called here to preach the memorial sermon of Bro. and Sr. Joseph Weatherholt's daughter. This was attended to last Sunday, before a full house.

Trusting I have not wearied ye editors, and with a knowledge of a large waste-basket, I will close. Ever laboring for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God.

Yours in the faith,

CHARLES E. HARPE.

News From Branches

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.

You will doubtless be glad to know that we are carrying on one of the most successful preaching-meetings I have had the pleasure of engaging in for some time. We opened up here at the church, Howard and Ontario Streets, November 10. Bro. F. G. Pitt, of Buffalo, New York, was with us, the principal attraction, so to speak. We distributed two thousand circulars on the tract order, visiting the houses of two thousand of our neighbors, inviting them personally to come, and giving them the tract. We found the public mind much altered, as the result of our last winter's campaign and newspaper publicity.

The circular had as a caption, "The Saints' Advocate," on the order of a periodical. On the front page we had our announcement and invitation, as also the picture of Bro. Pitt. On pages 2 and 3 were short articles on our views of the gospel, and man's duty to God and his fellows, in which we strove to tell who we are, and not who we are not. On page 4 we had a picture of the Philadelphia church, and local church directory, with the motto, "Our Creed All Truth."

The interest awakened by this means was amazing. Large crowds greeted us on Sunday, and continued far above our expectation all week, and on last Sunday, the 17th, we had fifty-five outsiders out in the evening. One gave in name for baptism. Scores of friends were made, and we are all rejoiced. On Saturday, we distributed another two thousand tracts, inside the same as before, but outside changed to suit conditions, and we will distribute two thousand more on next Saturday, a new tract this time, all local print suited to the neighborhood.

The Spirit of God has been with us, and one family has been drawn to our consideration who knew nothing of the meetings, no tract having been left at their house at all. The mother was just moved upon to come to the house and inquire concerning the gospel, etc. Bro. Pitt and I called later and blessed their child, and the father came to preaching, and two children were offered for our Sunday-school. We have daily prayers for the meetings at noon, and have fasted several times, and prayed for the honest in heart, and God has heard our prayers, and blessed us with fruit already, and the end is not yet.

We have very good singing, congregational, solo, and anthem work, with cornet solos, and instruments with all the singing. God has been with us in the preaching, and altogether we have had a very good time. Thanks to our heavenly Father.

Your brother in Christ,
WALTER W. SMITH.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

We are pleased to report a steady and faithful interest in the work here by the Saints. We hope some day to win recognition. Meanwhile our people are keeping the banner untarnished, that it may shine out bright in that day. Local ministry are holding the post well, occasionally being relieved by visiting ministry, of whom the most recent was our esteemed district president, Bro. G. A. Smith. Would such visits were oftener.

Last month the Religio invited Bro. C. Ed Miller to deliver a series of lectures here; same were much appreciated. City politics counteracted our efforts to get such an audience from without as was merited.

Bishop E. L. Kelley made a brief stay recently and was taken in custody by our young people, for one evening at least.

Sunday-school gives a promising appearance, and good interest taken by the pupils. Truly a look into their bright faces as they come to their early classes each Sunday morn, reveals in them Zion's hope.

E. A. WEBBE.

FIRST KANSAS CITY.

The first Monday in this month we held our business-meeting, and elected officers for the next six months. Presiding elder, D. F. Winn; priest, H. Sandy; teacher, John Jackson; deacon, S. Sandy; secretary, A. Larkey.

We feel quite proud of our Sunday-school effort in the Christmas Offering for the benefit of the sanitarium and children's home. Last year our offering was thirty-five dollars. This year we started in to raise fifty dollars, and we did so well that we changed to one hundred dollars. We have now one hundred and five dollars, and yet one month to go on. How is that, with an average attendance of forty-five members?

Bro. D. F. Winn is on the sick list.

Mr. Mary B. Spillman, one of our faithful members, and Mr. James M. Strawn were married October 20. A large number of relatives and friends were present, and a very happy time was enjoyed by all. They are at home at 1416 Oak Street. We join in congratulations.

Our speakers during the month have been D. F. Winn, H. and S. Sandy, R. Etzenhouser, and A. Allen. Many of our members attended the Religio convention at Chelsea Branch last Saturday and Sunday. A very spiritual and profitable time was enjoyed by all.

F. C. WARNKY.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

We were glad to hear from the stand Sunday morning the announcement that President Joseph Smith has safely landed in America, returning from his trip to the Islands, and is expected in Independence Thursday of this week.

The Independence Stake Religio Association held its semi-annual convention at the Chelsea Park Branch in Kansas City, Kansas. Some excellent papers and talks were heard on Religio work.

The local option movement is still being pushed, and in behalf of the same Doctor Albert Bushnell of Kansas City spoke at the courthouse Sunday afternoon at three o'clock. The Religio last Friday evening appointed a committee of its members to report to the city committee and offer the support of Independence Religians to the movement. The society also voted five dollars of its treasury fund to aid in this work. The election on December 3 will decide the matter.

November 18.

LAMONI, IOWA.

D. C. White and R. J. Lambert were the speakers at the chapel Sunday. George Hicklin spoke at the Saints' Home, Eli Hayer at Liberty Home. The attendance at Sunday-school was 479.

C. B. Woodstock occupied at Wion; R. M. Elvin at Terre Haute; Fred Turnbull at Jack Wood's and Greenville; H. A. Stebbins at Davis City; A. S. Cochran at New Buda; J. F. Garver and Moroni Traxler at Downey; Heman C. Smith at Andover; and William Anderson at Pawnee.

Conference Minutes.

GALLANDS GROVE.—The one hundred and thirty-eighth conference was held at Gallands Grove, Iowa, October 21, in charge of Orman Salisbury, assisted by C. J. Hunt and Heman C. Smith. Floy Holcomb acted as secretary pro tem. Branches reporting: Gallands Grove, Dow City, Deloit, Harlan, Cherokee, Mallard, Coalville. Elders reporting: O. Salisbury, J. C. Crabb, C. E. Butterworth, C. J. Hunt, A. R. Crippen, Frederick Hansen, A. Jackson, John Rudd, and David Brewster; Priest J. H. Bullard. One new opening was made at Lehigh, Iowa, by John Jordisen and C. J. Hunt. The ordination of Bro. Jay Myers to the office of elder was asked by Deloit Branch, which was accepted, and the brother ordained; also that of Bro. Carl Winey to the office of priest, which was referred back to Deloit Branch for ordination, the brother not being present. Bishop Hunt reported: Tithes and offerings, on hand and received, $990.41; expended, $811.35. Itemized report of sanitarium, children's home, Graceland College, and district tent funds were also read. There was held preceding the conference a two days' celebration of the forty-eighth anniversary of the organization of the Gallands Grove Branch and the forty-fourth anniversary of the organization of the district. Four preaching-services, one historical sermon, and three social-services were held, in which many historical narratives and spiritual reminiscences were related. The blessed spirit of peace and good will prevailed throughout all the sessions. The gifts of the gospel were manifest, to the joy and edification of all. Edith C. Dobson, secretary, Deloit, Iowa.

NODAWAY.—Conference convened with the Sweet Home Branch, near Ravenwood, October 18 and 19. Bro. Arch E. McCord presided, assisted by Bro. F. C. Keck; W. B. Torrance, secretary. Statistical reports of branches: Guilford 101, Bedison 81, Ross Grove 45, Sweet Home 64. Ministry reporting: A. E. McCord baptized 2, W. E. Haden baptized 10, W. P. Bootman baptized 2, John Hawley, J. T. Ford, T. A. Ivie, M. F. Gowell, Joseph Powell, J. L. Gunsolley, R. K. Ross, C. C. Nelson, R. Lorensen baptized 2; Priests R. F. Hill, W. B. Torrance, A. Jensen, Jacob Hansen, Frank Powell, J. D. Schofield; Teacher Eber Hawley; Deacons C. Kalstrup and R. Nelson. The soliciting committee for running expenses of tent reported, through Bro. W. E. Haden, who received funds: Total collected, $41.88. Committee selected to visit Northwest Missouri reunion at Stewartsville, reported through T. A. Ivie, A. E. McCord, and F. C. Keck. By motion the report was approved, and committee discharged. A statement was made by Bro. W. E. Haden that the new tent purchased proved to be short in dimensions. It was moved and carried that those constituting the purchasing committee have power to take up the matter with the tent company and correct the deficiency. A motion prevailed that the lesser priesthood be not required to report to the conference hereafter, except when engaged in missionary work. A suggestion was offered by J. L.

Gunsolley that the district, to be more correctly organized, have a presidency of three instead of one. This will probably be considered at next conference, which will convene in Guilford, Saturday and Sunday, just before the full moon in February, 1908. W. B. Torrance, secretary.

FLORIDA.—Conference convened with the Santa Rosa Branch October 19, 1907. The district president being absent, conference called to order by secretary at 10 a. m. Bro. T. C. Kelley was chosen to preside, with privilege of choosing assistants. C. J. Clark and G. T. Chute were chosen. B. L. Jernigan sustained as clerk, choosing Alma Booker to assist. Reunion committee reported: We, the undersigned committee, appointed at last conference to determine time of reunion to be held in Florida District, appoint that the reunion shall convene Monday, October 21, at 9.30 a. m. We also recommend: 1. That the presiding officers of conference preside over reunion. 2. That the reunion continue until Sunday night, October 27. 3. That the services be as follows: Prayer-meeting each day at 9.30 a. m.; preaching at 11 o'clock and 7 o'clock, except Friday, October 25, which we recommend as a day for Sunday-school and Religio work. Sunday-school, October 27, at 9.30, and sacrament at 2 p. m. Signed W. A. West, B. L. Jernigan, G. T. Chute. Report received, after amending, to strike out all the recommendations of committee. Branches reporting: Calhoun 65, Santa Rosa 59, Pleasant View 29. Ministry reporting: Elders W. A. West, C. J. Clark, Alma Booker, G. T. Chute, E. Powell, J. M. Stubbart, B. L. Jernigan, W. J. Booker, J. N. Hawkins; Priests W. M. Hawkins, Lafayette Booker; Teachers J. G. Dixon, Willoughby Dixon; Deacons J. N. Jernigan, Mack Barnes. The elders' court appointed at last conference to attend to some business in the Calhoun Branch, reported their work and asked to be released. Report accepted, and request granted. The question of boundary lines was taken up, and the following resolution adopted: That the conference appoint a committee to confer with a like committee to be appointed by the Mobile and Alabama Districts, to determine suitable boundary lines for the three districts, and their decision be ratified by the conferences of the districts, to be reported to General Conference for ratification. The committee appointed for the Florida District was B. L. Jernigan, J. M. Stubbart, and W. A. West. Bishop's agent, G. T. Chute, reported: Received from former agent, books and cash, $62; received since, $30; paid out to Bishop E. L. Kelley, $65; on hand, $27. Conference adjourned to meet at Calhoun at call of district officers. B. L. Jernigan, clerk.

MASSACHUSETTS.—Conference convened at Somerville, Massachusetts, Saturday and Sunday, October 12 and 13, 1907. U. W. Greene was chosen to preside, assisted by M. C. Fisher and John D. Suttill. Clerks chosen: W. A. Sinclair and A. L. Sanford. Ministerial reports were received from M. C. Fisher, John D. Suttill, R. W. Farrell, G. H. A. Gates, H. W. Howlett, J. E. Rogerson, J. B. Pierce, G. W. Ames, G. W. York, N. R. Nickerson, I. B. Ames, and George Burnham, with detailed labors as follows: Sermons, 168; services attended, 509; meetings presided over, 376; baptisms, 40; confirmations, 40; ordinations, 4; marriages, 7; children blessed, 3; administrations, 171; families officially visited, 83. Branch statistical reports: Attleboro 50, Brockton 29, Dennisport 69, Haverhill 23, New Bedford 27, Providence 274, Boston 176, Cranston 36, Fall River 153, Little Compton 13, Plymouth 41. Branches, 11; membership, 891; baptized, 40; net gain to district, 24. District treasurer's report: Income, $76.61; expenditures, $35.22; balance on hand, $41.39. Bishop's report: Tithing, $2,907.93; redemption fund, $26.50; children's home fund, $11; Graceland College fund, $12.37; sanitarium fund, $142.47. District historian tendered her resignation, which was accepted. W. A. Sinclair was chosen historian. A motion prevailed that the bishopric of the district cooperate with the Brockton Branch officers, looking to the purchase of church property available in that city, estimated price of purchase, $3,500. Report of reunion committee: Income, $349.30; expenditures, $888.58; deficit, $39.28. One baptized and the following ordained: John French Sheehy, priest; Charles L. Kelley, priest; William Baldwin, teacher; James W. Heap, deacon. Adjourned to meet with Fall River Branch, February 15 and 16, 1908.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of Eastern South Dakota; Greeting: The year is nearly closed. There has been a generous response by some to the financial needs of the church. Those who are desirous of being among the willing and obedient ones have yet opportunity. Do not seek for excuses to avoid a duty that God makes as binding as the law of baptism; but rather be diligent to find an opportunity to make a sacrifice for the good of the cause we all ought to love. As the time is nearing for me to go home to my family, address all communications and make all remittances to my home address.

Corrections.

In article by O. B. Thomas, HERALD for October 16, page 954, second column, line 22, the words "not admitting," should read not omitting.

In article by H. A. Stebbins, HERALD for November 20, are found a few errors, some in copying, and some by the author: On page 1073, third paragraph, second column, where it reads, "that he is quite capable of taking care of himself," it should read, "quite incapable." Page 1075, fourth paragraph, second column, name of Indian tribe is Onondagas, not "Ouandayas." Page 1072, second column, fifth paragraph, word strange should be "strangely." Page 1076, the date 1873 should be "1837," date of publication of Spark's Life of Washington. The writer also erred in not making meaning clearer in the second column of page 1072, by saying that he knew the Russians use the term "Little Father," but they are not a dependent people like the Indians, but they are a nation of itself. Also they use the term for a person, the czar, while the Indian uses the term Great Father, for the United States Government, according to the word of the Lord, that "they shall be like unto a father to them," meaning not the ruler himself, not any one person, but referring to the people of the nation, and particularly, no doubt, to the paternal government, through the constituted officers in charge over the Lamanites as a separate and dependent people.

Conference Notices.

Conference of the Southern Nebraska District will be held January 20 and 21, at Wilber, Nebraska, and all branch presidents should see to it that their branch reports are made out in good time, so that they may be read before the conference. I also desire a report from each branch president, showing the condition of his branch. E. A. Stedman, president, Nebraska City, Nebraska.

Government Improves Grazing Lands in National Forests.

In its investigations for the improvement of grazing lands within the National Forest carried on during the past year, the Forest Service has found that the ranges on some of the forests can not be fully utilized by stock because of a lack of a proper water supply. Plans have been made for bettering these conditions as rapidly as possible.

Work to improve the water supply on the National Forest ranges will be started this year on the Leadville National Forest in Colorado and the Tumacacori National Forest in Arizona, and before the coming of another grazing season a number of ranges will be improved very materially.

On the Leadville Forest, the forest officers will clean out and protect twelve different springs, and pipe the water into troughs. The work on the Tumacacori Forest in Arizona will be somewhat more extensive, although it will be confined to the improvement of the supply of only half as many springs as on the Colorado Forest. This method of cleaning out and protecting springs and other watering-places will result in much benefit to stockmen grazing in the strips of ranges within the forests. Improvement work along the same general lines will also be begun on other National Forests.

We have opened a savings department, paying interest on accounts of $1 or more and each member of the family should become interested in having a bank account building for future needs. We also pay interest on time deposit certificates. A number of the brethren are living here, others are looking forward to this location as a future home, and late revelation and admonition foreshadow coming events, adding materially to our spiritual holdings necessary to signs of the times, and in this connection our Board of Directors propose to safeguard the financial interests of the Saints by offering to them a depository proof against graft, greed, or calamity, governed by a kindred feeling born of the interest we have in common. It is not popular men, large capital, heavy deposits, National or State laws, that offer absolute security to depositors, but directors and officers progressive and conservative, possessed of the virtue of true manhood, shorn of all political ambition, with no taste for frenzied finance or mining speculation, and no inclination to furnish funds for others in that line. ### GAIN BY WAY OF LOSS.

Now consider that it is expedient for us, that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not.—John 11: 50.

This language was used by Caiaphas, the high priest, and we are told that he spoke not of himself but in prophecy concerning the death of Jesus. To our mind he voiced a principle that has governed God in many of his dealings with humanity. If we bear that principle in mind it will clear up much that seems strange to us in reading the Bible and in watching the processes of nature. It simply means that God is working for the greatest good to the greatest number. That it is better for one to perish than many.

It is a principle that we recognize every day. We expect the engineer to stick to his engine in case of accident, because it is best for him to perish if thus he may save his passengers. We expect the fireman to risk his life to save others. We expect our soldiers to die that their country may be preserved for the good of many countrymen.

If God did not hesitate to sacrifice his own Son, when it became necessary to do so that he might save a multitude, we can not expect that he will hesitate to sacrifice others for the same reasons. In fact he demands that the individual shall be ready to sacrifice himself for the welfare of the whole; and he is counted greatest of all who becomes "the servant of all." This may entail much that is disagreeable to the individual, perhaps to God; certain it is that Christ bore much suffering in the interest of this principle, and spectators may accuse God of cruelty in permitting it. The end justifies the means; but we do not see the end, we simply see the means and thus judge from a partial knowledge. This is the secret of much in the work of God that to infidelity appears repugnant.

It is a thought that runs through all the workings of nature. There is a force known as electricity. It is governed by certain laws, else it were a lawless element, a thing unknown in nature. One of these laws is that a certain balance must be maintained between the electricity of earth and that in the atmosphere. When the atmosphere becomes surcharged, a portion of it violently detaches itself and joins that in the earth. In doing so it may kill a man or a family, or burn a dwelling, or perhaps a church. Yet electricity is a great force for good in the universe, how great no one knows, perhaps a vital force. It is now one of the greatest blessings that the world enjoys. It is better, far better that all should perish who have perished through its agency, than that the universe should be deprived of the force itself.

They that are loudest in their threats are the weakest in their execution of them. It is probable that he who is killed by lightning hears no noise; but the thunder-clap which follows, and which most alarms the ignorant, is the surest proof of their safety.—Colton.

Abuse me as you will; it is often a benefit rather than an injury.—E. Nott.

There is an element known as fire; sometimes it comes in contact with that which man had not elected to burn, and a dwelling, a theater, or a city is destroyed, and many lives are lost, amid intense agony. Yet this same element warms and lights our homes, cooks our food, runs our factories, and propels our trains and steamboats. Without it civilization would fade away and man become a beast, compelled to take shelter in caves and dens; nine tenths of the race would perish within a year, and the balance would take up the fight against wild beasts, and on as low a footing. God made no mistake in intrusting this element to man. It is better that a multitude should die than that the whole race should perish.

There are periodical disturbances of the elements, known as storms. Occasionally one of these destroys a city by flood or wind and a great many people suffer death or destitution. Yet it is better that they should perish than that there should be no more wind or rain. If the air currents ceased their motion, there would soon ensue universal stagnation and death. If rain storms ceased, soon all the water would subside to the ocean or the depths of the earth and our fertile lands become desert wastes.

Why curse God because one man perishes through operations of nature that meantime are causing a million others to live?

There must be a continuous, unchanging operation of law everywhere, else no form of life were possible. So God permits these operations to take their course, blessing the many and destroying the few, without interference, except in cases where special reasons demand interference. Sometimes he sends, upon the very wicked, destruction that would not come without a special dispensation, as in the case of Sodom and Gomorrah. Sometimes he interferes, to save the very righteous and faithful, as in the case of the Hebrew children in the furnace and Jesus on Galilee, and then fire loses its heat and the storm its fury.

There are few of the latter dispensations to-day, and we must admit that people as a rule do not ask for them or live for them or expect them. So we need not be surprised that in the majority of cases law takes its course. It is true that at times, when the steamer begins to sink or the theater to burn, a few begin to pray, but it is fear rather than faith that prompts it, and it may be the first earnest prayer they have voiced in years. Their petition lacks the force it had if back of it there were the righteousness and faith of a Daniel or of an Elijah or of a Jesus. It is also true that an occasional earnest soul is miraculously saved in time of disaster even as anciently; but the majority of people accept the blessings of life as they come, without much thought of the Giver, and must expect to bear the vicissitudes of life as they may come.

God in making the world might have omitted the power of gravitation lest some one should fall from a third story window; he might have omitted fire lest some one should be burned, and water lest some one should be drowned. He must have known that when these happened some lecturer in some nicely heated hall, having moistened his lips with a draught of cool water, would call him a cruel God.

Then the cheerful infidel, with the proceeds of the lecture, buys his boy a jack-knife and a bicycle, and gives his daughter a ride on the Ferris wheel, or if he can devise no other way to endanger life and limb, he takes the whole family to shoot the chutes. In fact, we can not justly criticize God because of natural dangers when we voluntarily incur so many unnecessary risks. We love to rock the boat, to loop the loop, to climb mountain ledges, to eat injurious food, to indulge in strong drink and drugs.

Pain itself, at times, seems to us a needless cruelty. Yet, in reality, while it is destroying one it is saving many. Pain is an alarm sent to the spirit that the body is in danger and must be saved. We do not abolish the telephone because it notifies the fire company that the town is on fire, thereby destroying the peace of the company. No child would ever reach years of maturity if pain did not warn him against fire and cold and edged tools. One may die because of excessive pain, but a thousand are saved. The wisdom of an Ingersoll might have devised a way to warn the inner man of danger to the outer man better than by way of discomfort,—and then again, it might not.

It seems unjust and cruel at times that the sins of the father so often are visited upon the son. Of course the father has been vicious and lawless, but why should his innocent child be punished with a weakened and diseased body; yet in truth it is a safeguard. Otherwise the world might continue under the rule of a degraded and wicked people. Rome brought the world under her rule, while her citizens lived frugally and simply, and were virtuous and studious. When they became immoral and voluptuous, gluttinous and vile, they were weakened in body and intellect, and their children after them, so that hardier races overthrew them and saved the world from their rule, making way for a better era. Theirs is the history more or less of all nations of the past.

There is no moral degeneracy without in time a corresponding weakening of the entire being, because it is not intended that the wicked and depraved should maintain their rule or standing in the world, either personally or through their posterity, who by force of their example and teaching are prone to be like them. Whether it is a family or a nation the rule is the same. It is a beneficent eliminating of the undesirable. It is better that a few should die thus than that whole nations should perish in darkness and sin.

On the other hand the good results of virtuous lives are handed down through generations, and so it comes about that peoples who are able to maintain leadership and rule for long are ever those who have sprung from a frugal and virtuous stock. Not without reason was it decreed that the wages of sin are death. The world could progress along no other lines. It is the survival of the fittest and is best for all, even though some apparently innocent people are sacrificed thereby.

In the history of the world God has not always waited for the disappearance of a very wicked people by the method outlined above, but has removed them swiftly by other means, thereby exposing himself to another charge of cruelty. But why? When one has forfeited his right to live we try him by law and condemn him to die. We do not regard the sheriff as a cruel monster when he executes the sentence, because we know that there is a principle back of it all. It is better that a guilty person should die than that innocent people should be exposed to contamination or violence at his hands. So in times past God has destroyed whole peoples on the same ground, and that destruction has included even their children, because like begets like, and the work were defeated to permit another like generation to grow up.

Such a work was done when the children of Israel were gathered to the Promised Land. It has been the subject of much adverse criticism, yet it was another case where the end justified the means. Severe diseases require heroic treatment. We do not think the surgeon cruel who cuts out the cancer; perhaps he loves the patient, certainly he makes him suffer that he may heal him.

In this case the world was sick. It was wrapped in vice, ignorance, and degradation. God chose the best people he could find and began to educate them, that through them he might reach others. He was justified in selecting a place where they could best develop. He was justified in cleansing that place entirely of the degraded people who dwelt there, not even permitting the younger generation of a degenerate race to live and grow up to intermarry with his chosen people, thus weakening and leading astray.

Certain spectators watching the operation for cancer would report only the harrowing and offensive details; and we, listening, might conclude that the surgeon was a heartless wretch, not understanding why he did what he did. The spectators in the far past have dwelt much on the distressing phases of some of the things they saw, and unless we understand the object we will judge wrongly. They saw but one side of God's character, the side that leads him relentlessly to pursue a certain course, providing it is ultimately worth while.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

A VISIT TO THE ISLANDS OF THE SEA.—NO. 2.

We left Laie, the Mormon settlement, early in the morning of October 24, driving through the village at a very early hour; saw no one at any of the houses. Whoever the inmates, they were either busy with their household duties, or away in the sugar-cane fields stretching away on either hand to the foothills and the sides of the mountains, hazy in the morning light.

Passing Laie, we came soon to the large sugar plantation and mill at Kahuku. The plantation covers some eight thousand acres and employs a thousand men and women and girls, comprising Portuguese, Japanese, and Chinese. To put them in their places of value as laborers the Chinese should be named first, according to the statement made to Bro. Sheehy by a very intelligent looking gentleman, tall and fine looking, of a German type, who kindly answered Bro. Sheehy's inquiries about the affairs of the industry. Wages, eighteen dollars per month for men; sixteen dollars for the women; boys and girls in proportion. He frankly stated that the Chinese were the best of the three, giving as reasons that while equally intelligent as to their work they were more faithful, docile, and to be depended upon; and this estimate of the race was reiterated by all of whom Bro. Sheehy made inquiry.

These acres upon acres of sugar-cane fields, through which our way lay for miles, were a "marvel and a wonder" to us. Cultivation to the extent of the productiveness of the soil aided by scientific irrigation and drainage, and fertilizing, work done by hand labor chiefly, field after field arranged to give its harvested product at successive periods from the planting to the cutting of the mature stalks and bearing them away to the mill, where the juices were pressed out between crushers and rollers, whence the refuse found its way into the "fiery furnace" under the engine boilers and the vats into which the nature-sweetened juices flowed through well-arranged conductors, thence through settling-tanks, filters, and separators, sugar into sacks and residue for the fertilizer, all to help fill the sugarbowls of the millions of homes adjacent to the markets of the world.

From Kahuku, our way lay along the southwestern shore of the island, through more cane-fields and cattle-ranges, with here and there a farm, hacienda, or ranch, whatever name they may bear in the musical Hawaiian tongue. Diverging from the shore and striking inland over the raised plateau of the highlands, we stopped at the Japanese-Chinese village of Waialua, where we baited our team on good California oats, and persuaded a Chinese restaurant keeper to bait the voyagers with ham and eggs and other good things for the inner man. After a due rest we pursued the way "over the hills and far away," still through the cane-fields and between the pastures.

At Wahiawa, still on the highlands, we reached the pineapple lands. Here we saw the most beautiful of all the sights the wonderful islands afford. On a wide and almost level plain, extending for miles, lie the lengthened lines of the pineapple plants in perfect squares, lines so straight as to suggest the thought of the surveyor's transit, and measuring-rod and chain, so perfect is the alignment of the growing plants. The apple grows in the top of a bunch of serrated, long, and spiny leaves, something like the yucca plant of the sandy desert plains, of a beautiful glossy gray blue color, glistening in the sun's rays, giving a landscape to the view incomparable to anything we ever saw for beauty. It challenges the eye from every direction.

After a turn through a mile of road, at the end of our day's drive, tired in body, but elated in spirit, sated with the memory of what we had seen, we drew up at the door of the ideal hotel kept by the hospitable and efficient hostess, Mrs. Henry C. Brown, whose unique building offers a resting-place for those who by chance or design seek its open doors; which promise of rest and comforting cheer is amply proved by a stay under its roof. Here, at Wahiawa, amid the pineapple plantations, we spent the night, meeting pleasant company and most excellent cheer at this exquisitely-planned and well-kept tourists' resort. Mrs. Brown was an eastern school-mistress, qualified and successful as a teacher, and is proving to be a successful entertainer of those seeking her hostelry for pleasure or health.

We here met Professor Crow, of Los Angeles, a student and scientist devoted to the study of insect life, the pests preying on vegetable life; and incidentally bird life. The Professor is in failing health and, with his wife, was at this excellent health resort. Mr. Brown is the station agent for the railway running from Honolulu to the Mormon settlement, carrying the products to the port for shipment abroad.

Passing through the fields of "pines," as the pineapple product is called on the islands, we rode in the early morning over the best of roads, reaching the Oahu sugar-mills at ten o'clock, and were shown through the huge plant by the kind attention of Mr. Bull, the superintendent in charge. The mill was shut down for cleaning up, repairs, and painting. The plant was erected at a cost of one million five hundred thousand dollars, and was equal to turning out two hundred and twenty-five tons of raw sugar per day. At the time of our visit they were finishing up a reserved lot of molasses left from the ten months' run, and stored for the purpose, and fifty tons per day was their output. The finishing touch is given in a series of separators operating upon the principle of the separators used by the farmers and creameries in separating the cream from the milk, revolving rapidly and throwing the moisture out of the sides of the revolving pan, and leaving the granulated sugar within, to be taken out and sacked.

The sack contained one hundred and twenty-five pounds of raw, or unrefined sugar. How much it loses in refining the superintendent did not know. Part of the output is refined at the Oahu Sugar Company's refinery, and part is sent to San Francisco for refining. Thousands of acres are in sugarcane, and thousands of hands are employed in the industry.

Leaving the mill, passing Pearl City and Pearl Harbor, we reached Bro. Ingham's in time for lunch at midday, tired, but conscious of having profitably spent three days in a trip around Oahu.

Bro. Waller left us at Laie, by rail, his business requiring him to be in the city on Friday. We greatly enjoyed the trip. Bro. David Piikoi, who drove and cared for the team, is a middle-aged man, quiet, and enjoyable as a companion, with a pleasant smile and a fund of dry humor which enables him to see the humorous things happening by the way.

While passing along the coast opposite to Honolulu, while pausing under a big tree, sheltered from a wandering shower, we were privileged to see a lunar rainbow spanning the eastern horizon, and lying along the mountain's near side. It was very beautiful. Not many days went by us in this "Paradise of the Pacific," as the enthusiastic dwellers delight to call the island, that we did not see rainbows, for showers were frequent, and a two nights and a day rain occurred during our stay.

The Straight Road

THE RETURN OF ISRAEL.

MARKET-DAY IN JERUSALEM.

Question.—Do the Scriptures teach the literal restoration of Israel to the land of promise?

Answer.—Yes, very plainly, as we read.

By the "land of promise" is meant the land promised to Abraham. We first read of the Lord revealing himself to Abraham in Genesis 12. The Lord told him to leave his country and kindred and go to a land that would be shown him, where he would become a great nation. Abraham obeyed, and came into the land of Canaan, where the Lord appeared unto him and said: "Unto thy seed will I give this land."—Genesis 12:7.

In chapter 13 the Lord renews and extends the promise in these words: "For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever."—Verse 15. In Genesis 15:18-21 the definite boundaries are given. We notice that the land was promised both to Abraham and his descendants "for ever."

Mr. Infidel.—That promise has never been fulfilled.

Answer.—We admit it; but that is not saying it never will be.

Sectarian.—If "for ever" denotes a limited period of time, as you people sometimes teach, why could they not have already inherited the land "for ever"; in which case the promise has been fulfilled?

Answer.—Possibly, if it were not for the fact that it is specifically stated that the promise was not fulfilled. Observe, in Genesis 23, Abraham says to the sons of Heth, while sojourning in the land of Canaan, "I am a stranger and a sojourner with you." Stephen says concerning Abraham, in Acts 7:5: "And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on: yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him." Paul says Abraham "sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country." (Hebrews 11:9.) And, referring to Abraham and other worthies, he adds: "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off."—Verse 13. Then verse 39 says they "received not the promise."

We take, in this connection, a brief glance at the history of the Israelitish nation. First, we see the patriarchal period; second, the four hundred years in Egypt; third, Israel under the judges; fourth, Israel under the kings; fifth, their division into two kingdoms—Israel and Judah; sixth, the captivity of the ten tribes about 721 B. C.; seventh, the captivity of Judah, 600 B. C.; eighth, the return of Judah (partially) 536 B. C. We find that from the time of the carrying away of the ten tribes up to the present, they have been in a scattered condition.

Was not their dispersion prophesied of? Yes. The Lord said (see Deuteronomy 28) he would "scatter them among all people" and that they should be "removed into all kingdoms of the earth." He also said he would "root Israel out of this good land" (Kings 14), and that he would "sift the house of Israel among all nations."

Sword, pestilence, and famine were to follow them, and they were to become a proverb and a byword among all people (see Jeremiah 24; Kings 9), all of which has been literally fulfilled.

Was their land to become desolate? Indeed; for proof of which see Isaiah 6, Jeremiah 4, and Zechariah 7, where we read that, following their rejection from their land, the land was to become "utterly desolate," etc.

Now, let us ask, Was it ever prophesied that they should be restored? Yes, and that all the curses should be removed. Isaiah 11:11 says the Lord shall "set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people."

Question.—Did he not set his hand the "second time" when he brought them from Babylon?

Answer.—No. The restoration from Babylon was only partial restoration—only Judah was restored, and not all of them—and the restoration spoken of in Isaiah 11 is to be a universal one, is to include "Israel" as well as Judah, and many of them are to be brought from the islands of the sea. The second restoration is to be "out of the north country, and from all countries." (Jeremiah 23.) They are to be "built as at the first." (Jeremiah 23.) Judah and Israel are then to have one "head." (Hosea 1.) Ezekiel 37 speaks of their final recovery, of their resurrection, of their reinstatement in their land for the last time. They are again to become nationalized, and take into captivity those who have made captives of them, "whose captives they were." (Isaiah 14.)

Joel 2 teaches us that their reproach was to be removed and that the fertility of their land was to be restored. Amos 9 says the plowman is to "overtake the reaper." Ezekiel 36 informs us that the "ruined places" and the "wastes shall be builded"; that it shall "become like the garden of Eden." Zechariah 2 says it is to be built regardless of walls—"as towns without walls." All these are in progress of fulfillment to-day.

In 1830 there were only thirty-two Jewish families in Palestine. Now there are over one hundred thousand. They have one or more railroads there, they have colonies established in parts of it, and the eyes of the whole Jewish world are turned toward the land God promised their fathers. No less than six congresses have they had at Basle, Switzerland, to consider schemes and means to bring about their nationalization in their unforgotten country. The Jews are the moneyed men of the world. How many nations have had to bow to their capitalists in order to go to war! Truly, though subordinate to the Gentiles, they "suck the milk of the Gentiles" and "eat the riches of the Gentiles," as we read in Isaiah 60 and 61.

Christ prophesied to them, that they should be "led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem should be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."—Luke 21. In 70 A. D. the Romans destroyed Jerusalem, in which one million one hundred thousand Jews perished, and ninety-seven thousand were carried into the various provinces of Rome throughout the known world. Thus they have been, thence till now. The temple was burned and the ground sown with salt, and the "pleasant land" has been comparatively desolate and barren from that time till recently. As may be seen by reading the public press, or articles on Palestine in Chambers' or McClintock's and Strong's Encyclopedias, it is a fact that in the very year 1853 the "former and latter rains," after an absence of long centuries, again made their appearance, and the land is yielding "two to three crops a year."

We look to see the descendants of Abraham become a nation in Palestine, to have a fleet in the Mediterranean, to have their colleges and institutions of learning,—and eventually to become believers in Christ. The latter fact is evident from Jeremiah 31 and 32, where it is said that the day is coming that a new and everlasting covenant will be made with Israel, and Judah, "not according to the covenant I made with their fathers,"—the Mosaic covenant. Then the "natural branches" (literal Israel) which had been "broken off," are to be "grafted in." Therefore, Paul says, "And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion [Zion] the Deliverer [Christ], and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob," etc.—Romans 11.

Objector.—I understand this to refer to spiritual Israel.

Answer.—No, sir. Read the context, the verses before and after, by which you will readily see that the apostle is talking of Israel after the flesh. It is so plain as to hardly need analysis.

The return of the Jews is one of the signs of the times. Jesus said, "Learn a parable of the fig-tree; When her branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is near. So ye in like manner, when ye shall see these things come to pass, know that it [his coming] is nigh, even at the doors." ALVIN KNISLEY.

THE PROMISED COMFORTER.

SERMON BY ELDER J. W. WIGHT, LAMONI, IOWA, FEBRUARY 24, 1907.

(Reported by Leon A. Gould.)

The passages of scripture to which I wish to especially invite your attention will be easily remembered by way of comparison. The first is the twenty-sixth verse of the fourteenth chapter of John, the next the twenty-sixth verse of the fifteenth chapter of John, and the next, just half, the thirteenth verse of the sixteenth chapter.

"But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things."

I believe that it would be a good plan to stop just for a moment there and notice that "he shall teach you all things." That is to say, that all that we learn of God we are to be taught by the Holy Spirit. If we keep that in mind, it will naturally serve to keep us humble and faithful.

"And bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you."

It would be much easier for the ministry in standing before a public congregation, to be free from embarrassment, if they could condition themselves,—or if we could condition ourselves so that we would feel a complete assurance that we are in that condition to receive of the fulfillment of this promise, that he, the Comforter, is to bring all things to our remembrance, whatsoever Christ has said.

But I scarcely believe that it would be out of harmony with what may be presented to-night, to call attention to this thought, before reading other passages, that some of the very strongest as well as most comforting evidences that have come to your speaker, have come in this way; that when standing to declare the word of God, there have been those times and occasions when the Comforter has acted just in this way. And think as we may, or feel as we may, it is nevertheless a fact that under conditions of this kind, there are brought to remembrance passages of scripture easily to be quoted that on other occasions can not be remembered; consequently a proof that the Master spoke in harmony with the divine mind; for he spoke prophetically when he gave utterance to this thought.

The twenty-sixth verse of the fifteenth chapter: "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me."

It seems to me that there is not a word in that verse but carries with it a wonderful weight of thought; such a wonderful amount of fact expressed in so few words, that it at once implies a mind divine in the construction of that sentence.

Now, the thirteenth verse of the following chapter: "Howbeit, when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak of himself." And right there is implied a thought that all of us will do well to take home with us and remember: that the Spirit of God, the promised Comforter, will not assume to speak of himself. What a wonderful lesson in that thought as to the necessity of our keeping self in the background. And one of the strong evidences of inspiration of the one speaking to a public audience, is that in the effort made, if he have true inspiration, he will keep Christ, will keep God in the forefront, and himself in the background,—one of the very strongest evidences of inspiration. And how beautifully this thought gives expression to that: "But whatsoever he shall hear,"—Now note. He emanates from God—this promised Comforter, this Holy Spirit—and "whatsoever he shall hear that shall he speak; and he will show you things to come."

There is a wonderful amount of fact couched in the short lesson story of this thirteenth verse; and perhaps one of the most important to impress upon the mind at this juncture, is that this promised Comforter is to come to bring all truth, to bring all things to our remembrance, and to take us and show us things to come. And as to the importance of not going forth as a representative of Jesus Christ, without first receiving this Comforter, this divine assistance, let me take you to the story, simple in thought and fact, of the Christ on the last occasion of his communication with the eleven apostles. It is recorded by Luke in the last chapter of his writing, that is his gospel writing, that Jesus took these eleven men out as far as Bethany, a little village something like fifteen furlongs southeast of Jerusalem, and that he raised his hands and blessed them.

Now, I believe that he contacted his hands with them, though the writer does not say. I infer that he did from the language of both Matthew, Mark, and Luke, relative to the blessing of children. Matthew in the nineteenth chapter, Mark in the tenth chapter, both tell us that he put his hands upon them in the act of blessing—that he put his hands upon them. Luke says he touched them with his hand. So we discover that he contacted with his hands the little ones when he blessed them; and therefore infer, though the language is not positive, that when he raised up his hands and blessed them, that he must have put his hands upon them, or come in contact with them with his hands.

But the immediate thought that we wish to impress upon your mind is that after so doing he commanded, "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." Now, let us remember that these men were the same ones to whom he had given power, when he commissioned them to go only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. They were to "cleanse the leper, heal the sick, cast out devils; freely ye have received, freely give." These were men whom he had chosen as special witnesses. Now he takes them alone, blesses them, and after pronouncing that blessing says unto them, "Tarry." That is to say, Don't go. I have given you a new commission; that new commission says, "Go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." But before starting forth on that mission, you go back up to the city of Jerusalem and wait there "until ye be endued with power from on high."

Do you know that in reflecting upon that thought I have reached what seemed to me to be the only feasible conclusion, that since these men to whom in their first commission had been given power, such remarkable power and faith,—had no authority to go and preach and build up the kingdom until they were endued with this power from on high, this promised Comforter, it would be on the part of myself as well as every other living man an unwarranted assumption to go forth without first waiting to receive the power and instruction of this Comforter? And if it so be that we have thus gone, we have simply, to the mind of your speaker, gone without authority, gone without being sent. And where we go without the authority so to do, the work accomplished can not be, and is not blessed of God. Now, I do not believe that such a thought is an unwarranted assumption; but that on the other hand, to go without thus waiting would be an unwarranted assumption. I wish to call your attention to another thought that seems to me to be one of the very essential thoughts relative to the necessity of the Holy Spirit. James gives expression to the most beautiful thought, and one that is so apparent that every child knows exactly what he means by simply reading the statement. He says, The body without the spirit is dead, or "As the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." That is to say, that this animate being, this sentient being, this active, moving, breathing being becomes inanimate, dead, when the spirit is removed from it. Now, the church of Christ, his church, is likened unto his body. And just so certainly as it is necessary that this body, this tabernacle, this outward house must have within it the spirit in order that the animation of life or vitality may be made manifest, so must the church or body of the living God have in it the great life-giving or animating force that will make manifest necessary life to its essential well-being, and take away that animating force, then the body is just as dead. That is to say, the church is just as inanimate without that promised Comforter, that Holy Spirit, as this body without its spirit,—consequently, one of the very essential reasons why this Holy Spirit should come, just as Jesus told them. It is possible that their countenances fell; that they looked sad; for he said unto them, "I will not leave you comfortless; I will send you another Comforter," implying that he had been their comforter while here; that he had given all the life-giving force or vitality essential to the life or animation of his church while here with them. But he is to take his departure. He is to go away; and to the mind of your speaker there is implied the thought that his body, the church, will lie in an inanimate condition while he is gone. Consequently, While the church is in such condition as that, do not make a move, as my ministry, my servants. You wait. Wait until the animating force or power essential to the well-being or vitality of my church comes. And when he shall have come, then you shall have authority to go forth. When you shall have received the enduement from on high, then act in conjunction with the commission I have given unto you, "Go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

So it seems to me to be so plain, so positively plain, that I can not see for a moment, how it would be possible for any one to dare to assume the right to go and undertake to build up the church and kingdom of God without having received this divine Comforter.

And, mark you, one of the wonderful promises in connection therewith was that he shall guide you into all truth. And it does seem to me that one of the striking evidences in favor of any man's claim, that the man making the claim that he is a minister for Jesus Christ, would be to determine if that which he presented was indeed in harmony with all truth, with the truth that Jesus Christ had presented as found recorded here. For he himself on one occasion said, "I judge you not." There was lack of assumption, again, you see, on the part of Christ himself. "I judge you not. The word which I speak, it shall judge you at the last day." Consequently, one of the means by which you as auditors might determine as to whether the speaker were in harmony with Christ, and as to whether the speaker were actually representing Christ as his minister, would be to determine as to whether he were presenting all truth, or only a part of the truth.

I illustrate. The illustration seems to be simple to the mind of your speaker. I take you to the statement of the apostle Paul, in the twelfth verse of his letter to the Galatian saints, and first chapter, wherein he declares that he did not receive the gospel from men, neither was he taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ. Having been taught the gospel by the revelation of Jesus Christ, he certainly was in a condition to know what that gospel was. And in writing to the Hebrew saints, in the sixth chapter and first and second verses, he takes pains to analyze. A teacher in the public school, saying to the boy or girl, "I propose to teach you such and such a branch, would undertake to impart to the boy or girl just what he meant by it, by giving an analysis of that which he intended to teach. Now, Paul speaks of the gospel of Christ, and of the doctrine of Christ, so that we can not be mistaken. So there may be no opportunity of mistake, he analyzes by separating it into its parts, exactly what he means, and calls these "principles of the gospel of Christ," faith, repentance, baptisms, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment.

Now, suppose I stand telling the audience that I am a minister of Christ and, remembering a part of our text to-night, that "He will guide you into all truth," then I declare unto you that I believe as such minister that all that you need to do is to exercise a principle known in the gospel economy as faith; so long as you believe and keep believing that is all that is necessary for you to do. Then you would measure me, as my auditors, by the statement, "He will guide you into all truth"; and taking the statement, and coupling it with the statement of the apostle Paul already referred to, you would have an opportunity there to measure me by my own statement and say, "Out of thine own mouth do we condemn thee." Why, you discover readily how easy it would be to determine as to whether I were actually a minister for Christ. It seems to me that it is the duty of every religious auditor to analyze, to criticise, from the standpoint of true criticism every man that goes behind the so-called sacred desk; for if there is anything in the world that is important for us to determine, it is as to whether any man or men are actually what they claim to be, when they lay claim to the thought of being representatives of Jesus Christ. And it does seem to me that we not only have the right to do so, but that it is a duty imposed of God that we shall measure men in that way; not take the simple fact of their claim and be guided by the statement made by them that they are ministers,—not, as we were told on yesterday, simply because the man is a minister, or at least he is called a minister, that therefore we are to take every word he says as though it were the very word of God; but measure his statement by the word of God.

Suppose, by way of illustration, that one of you ladies were to go down to one of the stores to-morrow to buy a piece of dress goods, and the merchant got from the shelf that which suited your taste, and you said, I will take nine yards of that, or twelve yards, or whatever your fancy might dictate as the amount necessary to make you a dress. And as the merchant began to unroll you said to him, "Here, that much makes a yard." "I will take it for granted," and he acted in harmony with your dictation, and measured in harmony with your eye; but come to put it upon the standard of measurement (for you know that in everything so far as business life is concerned there is a standard of measurement)—and come to put it upon that standard of measurement, thirty-six inches, you find it falls short.

Well, now, here is a standard of measurement by which we not only determine as to the words of the minister, but as to our own convictions, as to whether we have been convicted along right lines. And I want to say in this connection, that men bandy that word conversion as though it were a plaything to be toyed with sometimes, when in reality they are only talking about conviction. Then we have an opportunity here to determine not only as to the minister, but as to ourselves, as to whether we are acting in harmony with the standard of measurement or not, as to whether we have received that Spirit.

It is one thing to say we have received it. People may stand up and talk about having received the Holy Ghost, and how they have enjoyed the Holy Ghost; but it is another thing to determine as to whether, in reality, we have received it. For he is to guide us into all truth, that all truth determined, possibly, by the record here; and furthermore than that, another means of determining, Jesus said he shall take you and "show you things to come."

Suppose I stand here to-night, and say I do not believe in present revelation; that I do not believe in prophecy. Suppose I stand and say to you that it was right eighteen hundred years ago to have prophets in the church, that they were needed, the people needed the prophets then; and I might go on and declare that they were a necessity in order to establish the work of God, and in the next breath say to you that I believe that necessity has ceased, that prophets are no longer needed. Why, I would at once be out of harmony with this part of our text which says, "He will show you things to come." The moment that I denied the necessity of prophets, that moment would I deny the necessity of the Holy Spirit to the extent of showing us things to come, and consequently would be out of harmony with the word of God.

It seems to me, then, that we have an opportunity here to measure men, and determine. There is another fact to which I wish to call your attention. I am sometimes fearful, however, that a little too much stress is laid upon that fact. I am sometimes fearful that so far as our own people are concerned (and when I say, "our own people," I mean the people representing the church represented in this building) that they lay more stress upon the point (to which I wish to invite your attention, so that we may be able to determine as to whether we are in harmony with the promises made by Jesus or not), than what the Scripture warrants us to do. Paul expresses it in writing to the Corinthian saints, in the twelfth chapter. He says: "Now, concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant. Ye know that ye were Gentiles"—at once here is implied to the mind of your speaker that they have gotten out of that condition—"ye were Gentiles carried away unto these dumb idols, even as ye were led. Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed; and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost."

I do not understand here, that the apostle means to imply that a person can not stand up and say, "Jesus is the Lord," like the parrot might say it. But what I understand him to imply is this: that of a knowledge that Jesus is Lord, you can not say, you can not give expression to the thought from the standpoint of knowledge, without having first received the Holy Ghost. Why, he is to testify both of God and of Jesus. Jesus says, "He shall testify of me." And if we have that Spirit he will testify.

Now, I take you to this thought: God does not change. "Why," somebody says, "Elder, we always have believed that. We have never believed anything else." All right, I hope that is true. I really hope it is; but say, if God does not through the impartation of that Holy Spirit give the same blessings to-day that he gave eighteen hundred years ago to his people, then he has changed. If I were to say that I do not believe that God changes, and then immediately following say, "But"—but—that doubtful word! "But, we can not expect any prophets to-day; we can not expect any apostles to-day"; why actually I would say, "But he does change." "I do not believe God changes; but he does change." That is just exactly what it would mean. And yet I turn to Malachi 3:6 and learn there that "I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." I turn to James 1:17 and read there: "With whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." And referring to the Christ, I turn to Hebrews 13:8 and read there, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever."

Very well, now; being the same, and changing not, if his church is on the earth, if his church is organized, and he is working with that church, he is working exactly as he did then, by sending the Holy Spirit to the church. And no more than does God and Christ change, does that Holy Spirit change; and therefore the same thought expressed eighteen hundred years ago to people who had entered into the fold and family of Christ, out of Gentile conditions, may be expressed to you and me to-night concerning spiritual conditions: "I would not have you ignorant."

I want to call your attention to just what the Holy Spirit did. Not that I lay as much stress upon the impartation of these gifts as I do upon the real, actual, living, moving testimony of that Holy Spirit as it comes to your soul and to my soul and testifies to us that we have been born of God—that is to say (I hope I will not be misunderstood), I would not have you understand that we are to depend upon these spiritual gifts as much, with equal force, as we do upon the actual, living force of the Holy Spirit bearing witness with our spirits that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. But from a secondary standpoint, and a secondary importance, I believe that the Holy Spirit in the church will impart to-day exactly as it imparted eighteen hundred years ago. I am not sure as to whether I have made my thought plain or not, but I will risk it for the present. Paul goes on to say:

"There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit." Not another Spirit; the same Spirit. What spirit? That Spirit that is required in order that you and I can say that Jesus is the Christ. Now, if we have the divine knowledge given unto us that we can really say of a knowledge that Jesus is the Christ, is that not important, indeed? And pray tell me, would we not be like a ship at sea, without rudder, if we could not really say that Jesus is Christ? If as members of his church, or a church, or any church, we stood in a position that we could not really say that Jesus is Christ, we would be exactly in the condition of the ship at sea that had lost her rudder, and her anchor perhaps gone. That is the position we would be in.

And I want to impress the thought, now, if we do receive of that Spirit so we can say that Jesus is Christ, then that Spirit will make himself manifest by diversities of gifts, dividing unto every man severally as he, the Spirit, will. And if, as a church, we make the claim that the Spirit has been given to us; and yet there is no impartation of those gifts, then the very fact of no impartation being made manifest is contrary to the claim that we make. That is the position. That is what I would like to have you think about. And I hope that none of you have been converted simply from the standpoint of the gifts alone. I hope that none of you have been converted into this church because you have heard somebody speak in tongues, because somebody has prophesied. I hope that was not the basis of your entering into the church. For, I am afraid, if that is all you had, that it will take a gift about once a week, or once a month at least, to keep you in the church. I want you to have that actual, living witness that the Holy Spirit imparts to you when it testifies unto your spirit that you are indeed a child of God. Do not come in from the simple standpoint of the exercise of gifts in the church; but come in from the standpoint of the witness of the Spirit that takes you and teaches the things of the Father.

"There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all."

Wait, now, if there be any present to-night who belong to some other church. Just stop, as you listen to the reading here, long enough to ask yourself the question, "Does the church of which I am a member believe, actually, in Paul's statements here to the extent that as a church we have the right to receive the manifestations of the gifts enumerated here, now, in the same way that they had that right eighteen centuries ago?" Stop and question yourself. And if you can not satisfy yourself, then go to your minister the first opportunity you have, and ask him, "Does our church really believe, do our ministers teach that these gifts enumerated by the apostle Paul in his letters both to the Corinthians and the Romans, actually exist in our church, or do we believe that they should exist?" And if your minister tells you that they do not believe; if your minister says to you that they have a part of them but not all, then you ask him the question, "Has the Holy Spirit changed?" And if your minister says, not any of the gifts, not any of the signs, then you ask him, "Is it a fact that you claim that we have the Holy Spirit in the church?" And if he says, "Yes," then you just simply ask him, "How can we have the Holy Spirit, and it not do the same now that it did eighteen hundred years ago?" You will have him wishing you had not asked the question.

"But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom"—does the church need the manifestation of that gift to-day? Why, you could not get a negative vote throughout the entire realm of Christendom. And if the church needs wisdom, what kind of wisdom has it need of? Certainly the wisdom of God. And if in need of the wisdom of God, how will it get that wisdom in any other way than that God gave eighteen hundred years ago? Why, you can see at once that there is a necessity for the manifestation of the Holy Spirit; for you will readily determine, you can not help but determine—excuse me, but you can not—you can not help but determine as to the necessity of wisdom being in the church; and if wisdom in the church, the necessity of God's wisdom; and if God's wisdom, the necessity of it coming exactly as it did then, by the officework or operation of the Holy Spirit.

"To another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit." And the same argument as to this gift will apply.

"To another, faith by the same Spirit." Now, somebody in the audience might say, "Elder, I don't see the necessity of all this. Why you are simply standing there and talking to us about something we believe in." Well, if that be true it will not hurt to stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance at all. Let us examine ourselves, for Paul has said, "Examine yourselves." We are too apt, you know, to try to examine the other fellow. It is so much easier to do. "Examine yourselves, and see whether ye be in the faith." Why, he is writing here to the people in the church, and telling them to examine themselves; "prove your own selves." I wish we would always do that; and when I say that I mean every one of us. I wish we would always do that: prove our own selves, instead of trying to prove somebody else.

Now, then, if you really believe that these gifts should be in the church, all right. We are glad for it. Let us see:

"To another the working of miracles."

"Oh, well—well—I—I don't know, elder, so much about that." But, why not? Why not so much about that as the others? "Well—well I tell you; I don't see any miracles—I don't see any." Well, is it possible that simply because we do not see, that it therefore follows that they do not exist? You can not see England; but you believe it exists all the same.

Now, if the Holy Spirit is with you, is in the church, and is imparting wisdom and knowledge, why does it stop right there? Why the line of demarkation, and say, Thus far and no farther? For, if wisdom, knowledge, and faith were all that were essential to the well-being of the church eighteen centuries ago, it might be all that would be necessary now; but since these three were not all that were necessary then, it follows that they can not be all that are necessary now; consequently we might just as well go along and read all the rest of it. And say, by the way, while we are reading, continue to remember all the time that this we believe to be the word of God; and being the word of God we have no right to discriminate, we have no right to say just how much of it we are going to believe, and the rest of it we will not believe.

"To another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues. But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will. For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ." That is to say, these gifts (and they are parts) are just as essential in their place in the make-up of the church and the kingdom of God as my fingers are necessary to the extension of that hand, as the hand is necessary to the extension of that arm, and the arm is necessary to the completion of that body.

I might just as well stand and argue before you to-night that I had the right to take off an ear, saying by that act that in the placing of two ears on my head God had made a mistake, as to say that I can discriminate as to the gospel, or any principle of it, any part of it, any blessing given of God. Just as well say the former as the latter; and you see exactly where I would be.

Here I stop just long enough to call your attention to the thought that in the creation God gave us two ears, and two eyes, and but one mouth; and I wish that every one of us would remember the important fact that as a rule we ought to see and hear twice as much as we say. And for fear of going beyond the bounds of such rule I guess I had better stop.

Boldness is ever blind, for it sees not dangers and inconveniences; whence it is bad in council though good in execution. The right use of the bold, therefore, is, that they never command in chief, but serve as seconds under the direction of others. For in council it is good to see dangers, and in execution not to see them unless they be very great. Bacon.

POSITION OF THE CHURCH ON THE TEMPERANCE QUESTION.

Behold, verily thus saith the Lord unto you, in consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days, I have warned you, and forewarn you, by giving unto you this word of wisdom by revelation, that inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold, it is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father, only in assembling yourselves together, to offer up your sacraments before him. And, behold, this should be wine; yea, pure wine of the grape of the vine, of your own make. And again, strong drinks are not for the belly, but for the washing of your bodies. And again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill. And again, hot drinks are not for the body or belly.—Doctrine and Covenants 86: 1.

The elders and men of the church should be of cheerful heart and countenance among themselves and in their intercourse with their neighbors and men of the world, yet they must be without blame in word and deed. It is therefore not seemly that they indulge in loud and boisterous speech, or in the relating of course and vulgar stories, or those in which the names of their God and their Redeemer are blasphemed. Men of God, who bear the vessels of the Lord, be ye clean in your bodies and in your clothing; let your garments be of a sober character and free from excess of ornamentation. Avoid the use of tobacco and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 3.

It will be noticed that these instructions are not only to the "elders," but to the "men of the church," consequently the entire membership is included. We have heard a great many lectures on temperance, some of them by people of note who have made the question a lifetime study; but the advice contained in these two passages is still in advance of anything yet presented from the general temperance platform. It should also be observed that these words are not given to us in the nature of a command, but are presented as advice from a loving father to his children.

Temperance does not mean simply moderation in the use of everything, even though the thing used may be but slightly injurious when taken in moderation. It does mean the moderate use of that which is good. Temper means to mingle in due proportion, and temperance, the derivative word, means simply the state existing when this condition obtains. Then to use anything, even in the slightest degree, which is injurious, or to use to excess that which is good, is intemperance.

The church has rightly taken an advanced step in these matters, and while not forbidding (in the nature of a command) the use of that which is injurious, the right counsel has been given for our consideration. We recall several instances which came under our own observation, some twelve or fifteen years ago, where elders were engaged in the use of tobacco and sometimes intoxicating liquors, and though then but a boy, it always appeared to us to be very inconsistent with the position which they occupied. About this time the matter began to be agitated throughout the church, and was finally taken to General Conference. Previous to any action by that body it began to be rumored that the church would take the position that they would not sustain as a minister any elder who thus disregarded the words of wisdom which had been given by revelation. We heard one elder in particular make the remark that should that day come when the church would say that he must either give up his tobacco or his priesthood, he would let the latter go. That day did come, the church ruled just as it was intimated it would do, and that man stuck to his tobacco. What an awful estimate to place upon the priesthood of God, that a man would sacrifice the blessings and privileges of this calling rather than give up an injurious habit.

The church, as an agency for the betterment of the race here, intrusted with the great undertaking of bringing about man's redemption from sin, can not permit to grow up in human life practices which have even a tendency to evil, without letting her voice be heard in firm, yet gentle protest. The work of Satan does not consist in changing the laws which God has placed in operation, for this he can not do; but if he can get us to indulge in excesses his design is accomplished. When it comes to partaking of that which is evil, his argument is: "A little will not hurt you"; and when he convinces us to this effect he destroys in our minds the place which these instructions, given to the church, should occupy. You can readily see his method of operation. Intemperance is his principal weapon, and he has never failed to use it. Not only does he appeal to the natural fleshy appetite, but he even causes us to let grow into our lives desires which were not originally there. This is hinted at in the instruction given concerning our clothing. While it is necessary to be clothed neatly and to be clean, to follow the fashions in this direction is intemperance. Here again the tendency is only to go to excess. Most of our fashionable clothing has its inception in France—a godless nation, where at one time they sought to ignore God altogether and said they would get along without any religion, and be guided by the lamp of human reason. You all, doubtless, know the consequences.

It is right that in all these matters the church should take the stand which it has, not giving the command, "Thou shalt not," but simply imparting it as advice. As a church member you may engage in some of these excesses if you so choose, but if you do your spiritual growth will be hindered and you will suffer loss. It is a source of gratification to note that with but very few exceptions, the members of the church heed the counsel given. We are not in favor of the Carrie Nation method of teaching temperance; it is utterly opposed to the methods which God has employed, and will never be effectual. The church has left it to individual regulation, except in the case of the elder who is to teach. It is proper that he should not be permitted to stand as an instructor in a system, the counsels of which he himself does not observe.

A PLEA FOR MOTHERS.

Let's have a talk of mother,—
The dearest one on earth,
Whose heart's to thee been faithful
Since the day she gave thee birth.
Through weary nights in childhood,
She, low on bended knee
By thy sick couch her vigil kept,
And wept and prayed for thee.

And when to riper age you'd grown,
As new graces did unfold,
What tongue can tell the love and pride
Which filled the mother's soul?
Anticipated were thy wants;
Touched by thy faintest sigh;
No task too hard to do for thee,
The apple of her eye.

Should the home nest be forsaken,
And the world's allurements win
The mother's pride and darling,
Into slippery paths of sin;
And should all the world forsake thee,
When by darkest sin defiled,
The mother's heart would closer cling
To her wayward, erring child.

Then honor to thy mother give,
The bless'd command obey;
The eye of God sees every act,
No power his will can stay;
Long life is promised if thou wilt
Perform his just decree;
With all thy powers thy mother bless,
Who found a heaven in thee.

Yes, kiss the cheek and wrinkled brow,
And speak the kindly word,
Though seeming lost to earthly joys,
That old heart can be stirred,
And fanned to life 'twill comfort bring,
Her former joys renew,
And smooth the way down life's rough road,
God's blessings bring to you.

Notice.

Do not forget to order one or more of the new temperance story books for your children. The HERALD Office is putting them out in time for the holiday trade. All proceeds go to help swell the Birth Offering Series fund, with which more books for the children of the church will be put out from time to time.

Remember the title: The Indian Maiden and Her White Deer.

The Wings of a Dove.

At sunset, when the rosy light was dying
Far down the pathway of the West,
I saw a lonely dove in silence flying
To be at rest.

"Pilgrim of air," I cried, "could I but borrow Thy wandering wings, thy freedom blest,
I'd fly away from every careful sorrow,
And find my rest."

But when the dusk a filmy veil was weaving,
Back came the dove to seek her nest,
Deep in the forest where her mate was grieving—
There was true rest.

Peace, heart of mine! no longer sigh to wander—
Lose not thy life in fruitless quest,
There are no happy islands over yonder;
Come home and rest.

—Henry Van Dyke.

The Old Family Altar.

How clearly the memory of it comes back to me after all these years! I close my eyes, shut out the present, and, lo, I am living it all over again. It is evening, and the candles are lighted. The family gathers around the fire—father, mother, and seven stalwart lads and healthy girls. After the newspapers were read, the day's happenings discussed, and the outside world duly disposed of, father would say: "Get the books." We knew what that meant; and he would read to us from the blessed Bible—to us now a very Gibraltar against the world's wave-beats. And the precious words come afresh down the years, sweet and soothing as "the pulses of a lute when the waking hand has passed away": "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want." And a picture of "green meadows" and "still waters," with the strong, gentle shepherd close beside his flock, stands out even more vividly now than then. When we sat around that family altar we did not understand what David meant. Now it is a living picture; for in the years long since, when in our wilderness we could not trace our paths and thought we heard the howl of the wolf or the vulture's scream over our dead hopes and we shivered in fear, the same strong friend found us, and we were held as with hooks of steel to the faith of our fathers. And again: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me." Impossible experience was that to us. Surely David must have been of other workmanship. Aye, when fourscore years and more had sprinkled our mother's hair with white, and she entered that valley, we heard her say: "For thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." O Judah, thy jewels are rich, and they are for ever flashing their glory into the darkness of death, making it luminous as morning!

Then again, as father read on to us through the years, we would hear the heart-cry of the Psalmist "out of the depths," and when "all [the] waves and billows had gone over [him]" and no helper was near, he took hold on "God his rock"—his everlasting salvation. We wondered what this strange experience could mean; was it real? Ah, truly we have learned at last that each heart hath its own unwritten history, but "the waves and billows" are there just the same, also the "rock," thank God! When my sister Julia, who was the first to go, was stepping down into death's Jordan, she smiled back to those who wept, this triumphant message: "Underneath are the everlasting arms!" No mystery now; for in the school where shepherd, prophet, seer, and king had learned to sweep each tuneful harp, we too have been pupils. And often from the quivering chords—taut with the tension of faith without sight—the broken strains have rolled upward: "O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever!" And as we walked with Moses and Isaiah and Job and David and Saint Paul and John the Beloved, we heard through the holy oracles a voice saying to us: "The Lord God of Abraham and of Isaac and of Jacob is also thy God." Ay, and the Urim and Thummim have not failed us.

At the close of the Bible lesson, father would line a hymn, and, standing up, the voices of parents and children would blend in holy song. As far back as I remember, this was a part of our evening devotions. How we loved to sing! I can hear my sister's voice even yet, though her lips have long been dust, rising full, rich, and true above all others, in that dear old hymn rarely sung nowadays:

"Savior, breathe an evening blessing
Ere repose our spirits seal;
Sin and want we come confessing;
Thou canst save and thou canst heal.

"Though the night be dark and dreary,
Darkness can not hide from thee;
Thou art he who, never weary,
Watchest where thy people be,"

Or in that other blessed bygone note:

"The day is past and gone,
The evening shades appear;
O may we all remember well,
The night of death draws near!"

And our voices took on a faith which put every fear to sleep when the closing verse was sung—

"Lord, keep us safe this night,
Secure from all our fears;
May angels guard us while we sleep,
Till morning light appears."

Sometimes in these later years when all in our home is wrapped in sleep, I lean back in my easy chair, close my eyes and I see them all again—it seems almost real and yet father has been gone so long! And the singing? Why, I involuntarily join their matchless music:

"Forgive me, Lord, for thy dear Son,
The ills that I this day have done;
That with the world, myself and thee,
I, ere I sleep, at peace may be."

My brother was the last to join the heavenly company. As he neared the mysterious bourne, he exclaimed, with the rapture of Saint Paul: "Whether in the body or out of the body, I can not tell; God knoweth. I see mother; I see you; surely the two worlds are one and the rest is so sweet!—sweet as it is to the tired laborer who lies down to sleep." And the old faith sparkled back from that family altar:

"Teach me to live that I may dread
The grave as little as my bed;
Teach me to die that so I may Rise glorious at the awful day."

Oh, the prophetic glory of it! Surely the Lord was in that place and we knew it not.

Then, the singing ended, father poured out his soul in prayer for us, committing us to the care of the great Shepherd, who is also our faithful Creator and whose intimate connection with our lives we no more doubted than we did our mother's love. Surely these slender threads of family devotions were largely entering into the strength of the mighty cable by which our frail vessels have been making for the haven of eternal calm. Father, mother, sister and brother have all passed on before, but the holy influence of that evening altar holds those who are left with the strength of the hills.

In the home of my recent adoption, where scores of little ones pass under my touch, I feel no sweeter joy or more bracing atmosphere than when I gather them about me in the evening and say, as father used to say to me: "Get the books." And no music of the skies was ever sweeter than the half a hundred little voices repeating the same holy scriptures and joining in the same old hymns that left such sacred impress on my life. And if the benediction of this family altar hallows the aftermath of these young lives as that of the old home does mine, then their evening journey will, like mine, be to the sound of lute and harp. May it be so!—

Letter Department

RACE TRACK, Montana, November 22, 1907.

Editors Herald: Not having seen a letter from this part of the field for some time, I will attempt to tell you how the work is moving out here in the mountains.

There have been several new openings made this year by the limited force (consisting of Brn. Isaac M. and Edgar H. Smith and the writer) and in some localities good was effected. Not many have been baptized, but those that have come into the church are proving to be true to the name they bear.

Bro. Edgar Smith and the writer labored together for some time, but finally we separated, Edgar going to Red Lodge, while I went to Victor, located in the Bitter Root Valley. Here I held a few meetings in the Fairview Schoolhouse, where our worthy brother, John Johnson, resides. Not finding the interest as good as we would like, we made a trip up in the mountains, some forty miles from Hamilton, where Bro. N. C. Whitney resides. Here we preached a few times in a little log schoolhouse near his ranch. There was some interest at this place; but owing to the thinly populated condition of the place only a few came out to hear. In about ten days we returned to Victor and commenced a series of meetings at the Sears Schoolhouse. Here we found that some of our brethren had preached a few sermons several years ago, but there was some prejudice among the people which necessarily must be removed before any good could be accomplished. After preaching for a few evenings the interest began to increase and the attendance began to grow. Among those that came out was a man who had met a number of preachers in discussion, in private and in public, he himself being an exhorter. On one occasion we preached on the final destiny of man, showing that man was to be rewarded according to his works. The brother took offense and challenged us for discussion, and after some little disagreement as to what should be discussed we finally agreed upon a proposition, he affirming that man was saved by faith alone without works. I wanted to discuss church propositions with him, but he refused to do so.

On the first evening more than half his time was occupied in proving that there were two laws, one the Mosaic, the other the law given by Christ. Of course this only made it much easier for us, as he would confuse the law of carnal commandments with the "perfect law of liberty." He would spend a great part of his time exhorting and never touch the main question. In his closing speech on the second evening he admitted his defeat by saying that it was necessary to be baptized, after having denied it all along until he was forced to take some position on John 3: 5. One lady told him that the more she heard him the more she was convinced that we were right. Another man remarked at the close of the first evening's discussion, "Why, hasn't that many any sense? He is snowed under now," referring to my opponent.

Much good was done, we think, and some seemed very much interested, and we hope to see them accept the gospel at no distant day.

We preached some sixteen sermons, and left the people thinking seriously.

After leaving the Bitter Root Valley we came to this place, stopping over Sunday in Deer Lodge and preaching to the Saints in that place. Upon our arrival here, we found Bro. I. M. Smith laboring away by himself, and so we joined forces and are preaching every night to small crowds. A few seem to be interested, and we trust good will come from our efforts.

From here we expect to go farther east, reaching the Galatin Valley about the middle of December. Number 629 Main Street, Bozeman, Montana, will be our mission address the remainder of the year. Ever praying for Zion's cause.

Editors Herald: I am back in the Hocking Valley again, and am now holding a series of meetings at this place. Not many Saints here now, but there are some outsiders who have recently located here.

Have a new opening in Redfield, in Perry County, awaiting us, which we hope to reach soon.

PURYEAR, Tennessee, October 28, 1907.

Editors Herald: On October 8 we began packing our goods for shipment to the above address, it being rather too expensive to continue in the city for the amount of work we thought we would be able to accomplish this coming winter; seven or eight of the Saints having moved from the city, which left rather an unfavorable base of operation. There are two permanent openings; one two miles from the end of the car line, and the other at the end of car line. At the latter place three gave their names for baptism; one man, his wife, and a Mrs. Morris whose husband is a member of the church. We made arrangements for their baptism, but through some mishap they failed to come, but said they would be baptized later, and we hope they have been ere this. Bro. Willey, who is an elder, and whom I left in charge of the work, is a good reliable man, and will, we believe, do what he can to keep the work moving. The Saints who are left should assist him all they can with their presence, faith, and prayers, at least; then the Lord will bless him and them also. We located here at the suggestion of the associate minister in charge. There are about seventy-seven members in this branch of the church, and no officer to look after them, some having passed away while others moved away. Some years ago we were instrumental in reviving the work in this branch, after which it flourished and prospered for several years, but it has come to a standstill again.

Some of our elders while writing to the church papers say a seventy's place is not in the branches, but in the world. This is true under some circumstances, while under some other circumstances it is not true. At any rate we think we can see that some one is needed in this branch to run the wasps and fleas out of the church, and call the people together regularly to teach and instruct them, whether he be a seventy, "ninety-six," or a "twelve." We must admit that we have never been able to see the wisdom of building up branches, then leaving them to go to loss and ruin in order to go out and build up another. Our Savior said to the Father in prayer, "Of those whom thou hast given I have lost none, save the son of perdition, that the scriptures might be fulfilled." Yes, he left the ninety and nine who went not astray and went to seek and save the one that had gone astray. It is one thing to get people into the church, and quite another to care for and save them after they are in. It is much easier to travel here and there and preach a few sermons and baptize, than it is to educate them spiritually, and save them afterward. Those who go before may suffer more persecution from without, but those who save them afterward will have more trials from within. So the work in general, we suppose, is a burden and a trial.

While in Auckland, New Zealand, I visited the public library there quite often. I found there, History of the New World, called America, by Edward John Payne, fellow of University College, printed at Oxford, England; also "Last Histories of America," by W. S. Blacket, printed by J. R. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, and by Turner, Ludgate & Company, London, England; Prehistoric Races of the United States, by J. W. Foster; Table Talks, by Martin Luther; and Oahspe, A New Bible, from all of which I made several extracts. I will not ask for space to give all these, but will confine myself to a few names I copied from this "New Bible," and those of our opponents who try to denounce and condemn some of the hard names in the Book of Mormon can compare them and then judge.

I copy from page 363 on Lineage in Central America, verbatim: "Waneopongonoh; Mountain of Mein-how-an-go-to-bah. And then tribes commingled and Geiche (God) named them Bakhonughnenemhowangotobah. Jesson, son of Bakaoh married Wepon, daughter of Bakhawringhmemhowangotobah; and thence to his son after him named Arapanseekasondatoihatapanagooshhootlabanasee. The names of the people and of their cities became so long no one could speak or write them." This Bible is printed by the Oahspe Publishing House Association in Boston, Massachusetts, and London, England.

A boy in this neighborhood, after a strict command from his uncle not to do so, rode a fine mule of his uncle's into the swamp, where the mule mired and died. The same eve Sr. Anna Griffin's house took fire and burned to the ground, with nearly all she had. She lost her husband about three months ago. She has six children, the youngest a babe in arms. The neighbors and Saints are rebuilding her house, and have aided her quite liberally in other ways. Only a few days afterward one boy accidentally shot another who died in a few minutes, though told to go to school and warned not to take the gun out of the house. Disobedience to their parents brought death and sorrow. Only last Sunday two young men while trying to pass the horse and buggy in front of them were thrown from their buggy by the horse whirling suddenly around onto the wire fence and one of them came near being killed. A piece of flesh was torn from his neck, leaving the windpipe exposed to view, which was a close call indeed. Strong drink and rowdyism the cause, as it is said he had a bottle of whisky in his pocket at the time. If I could I would prevent its use in that way. It ruins many good young men.

According to a letter from Bro. Rennie in New Zealand the work is not making very rapid progress there as yet. May the Lord prosper his work everywhere, is the prayer of

Dear Herald: This latter-day work is surely the best on earth. It is certainly divine. Truly, Jesus said, "He that doeth the will of the Father shall know," not believe only, but "shall know of the doctrine." Still we may have great trials and troubles in this world. Did you ever stop to think how many people have been lifted from a hell, a hell of misery and distress, through the operation of the gospel? Is God mindful of his own? We sometimes forget our full duty towards God, and fall short in many things; but when we are tried and get blue, if we only look back upon the years that are passed, it sometimes makes our hearts rejoice to know of the assurance of the gospel.

It is encouraging to see how nicely the scientific discoveries of this century sustain the historical claims of the Bible and Book of Mormon. Truly the apostle said, "The word of the Lord endureth for ever," and so do the laws and teachings of the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. It matters not how many might try to change the plan of salvation; this does not change God's plan, nor his dealings with the children of men. While we, as the people of God, the Saints of the Most High, are striving to sustain life for our physical bodies, we should not lose sight of our spiritual bodies, nor allow our faith to be weakened by our striving for the goods of this world. As long as we are under the boundaries of God's law along this line, it is all right to my mind to make efforts to accumulate in an honest way; but in these last days there are many things to overthrow us in gospel lines. May God help each one that stands in charge of this great latter-day work to be humble and faithful, that the Spirit may lead in all things. May God bless his servants that have been set in charge, and the elders who have to confront the world and stand the hardships of evil hands. I do pray and hope that I may be able to endure to the end.

Dear Herald: I feel like writing a few lines to the dear old HERALD. As I scan its pages I am made to rejoice because of the many good things written therein. I hope the time will never come that I will have to do without the church papers, for in them I find food to my soul. I have been a member of the church for nearly three years, and am not sorry that I entered into the fold while young in years. I have had some trials, but have also had much pleasure in serving the Lord, and hope to be able to stand firm to the end.

Dear Herald: I have so often read such good, interesting, and encouraging letters in your columns, that I thought, as God has so blessed me, I would write, hoping that it might prove a blessing to some one else.

On the first day of this month, I contracted a severe cold, and I took such home remedies as I knew were good, but without effect. I continued to get worse, and on the evening of the 4th a physician was summoned. When he arrived he said I had pneumonia, and he appeared to be alarmed about my condition; but did not say so that evening. But the next morning he said he was greatly surprised at the change in my condition; for, said he to my husband, "I was looking for a call last night, for her pulse was one hundred and forty, and her temperature one hundred and three; and the way her lungs were congested, it was time to think seriously about her case." But between the time he was to see me on the evening of the 4th, and the morning of the 5th, I had called on the Great Physician. While the others were eating supper I was left alone, and this is what was suggested to me by the Spirit: Send for Bro. Tary and Bro. Martin, not one, but both of them, and when they come tell them how you feel [for I felt that I would not recover, only by faith in prayer and administration] and ask them to sing No. 104 in Saints' Hymnal.

"O for a faith that will not shrink, Though pressed by every foe."

And also,

"O thou God who hearest prayer
Every hour and everywhere."

And I was to ask them to sing them soft and low.

When my husband came in I told him I wanted the two brethren named to come, and, as requested, he went after them. They arrived about an hour later.

Then came suggestions from two sources, one saying to tell that which was first presented to me, the other saying, No one ever has singing before being administered to, and you can tell how you felt about being cured by faith in prayer and administration, after you are well. And while they were having prayer, I felt very sick, and after prayer, when they started toward my bed, I thought, "Oh, why don't I tell them what was given me to tell?" But I did not; and that is where I made a mistake. And so many of us do when we want our own way. They anointed my head with the oil and laid their hands on me, and prayed earnestly for the blessing I so much desired. Afterwards they took their seats quietly. I felt that I did not want to move. All pain and misery had ceased; and instead of my face being drawn in a frown through suffering, a smile seemed to pass over it. Then, in a moment, my body seemed to swell twice my natural size, and it was like clay that could be easily crumbled up. Then I felt another change, and that was a separation of the body and spirit or inner being. I knew I was dying. I tried to get up, but could not, neither could I open my eyes. All the time I was thinking of my husband, who has passed through so many trials, the last great trial being only a short two months ago, when we laid his darling boy, aged twelve years, an only son by his first wife, in the silent tomb. Then, to think of my leaving him with a babe only fifteen months old, was enough to make me struggle for life! I made a noise, and tried again to rise, when I was assisted by some one in the room. Tears seemed to burst open my eyes, and I could also speak. I then told them what was presented to me in the early part of the evening, and they sang the two hymns, soft and low, and again hands were laid on me, and I was prayed for, and I feel that I can not find words to express my thankfulness to my heavenly Father for the blessings of that night.

I took no more doctor's medicine (I had taken only one dose of each kind) for I had perfect confidence in God. And now I think differently toward him when I pray than I did before my sickness. I just feel that I am speaking to some one I know personally. And I can truly say I love God and this great latter-day work.

My earnest prayer is that we may each, as God's children, be more zealous and anxious to do what he wants us to do; and when he sends that gentle Spirit, telling us what we should do, that we may not let that stubborn will of our own rob us of the blessings that God has in store for us, and which he is so willing to bestow, if we only keep ourselves in condition to receive them. MRS. JOSEPH EBELING.

MAGNOLIA, Iowa, August 28, 1907.

Editors Herald: Will you give me space to bear my personal testimony, how I became acquainted with the latter-day gospel, and a part of what I have experienced in over fifty years. I feel that I am nearing the end of the eleventh hour of my life, as I was born the 18th of February, 1827, in Sweden. When about seventeen I began the blacksmith trade, and in 1852 I went to Denmark, and there I heard the preaching of the "angel's message"; but I was a well-trained Lutheran, and I was not able to understand that an angel was needed for me, but I could not be quiet for thinking of it. Two years from that time I took a long journey in Germany seeking for work in my trade, but with no luck, so I begged my fare back to Sweden, and in my poor condition I became more religious and studied my Bible. After a year I came in contact with the Brighamite elders and then I took more notice of the gospel principles, and it gave me a deep interest to seek for the truth, and I felt that I should follow in the footsteps of Jesus and be baptized. I was baptized the 19th of February, 1857, and one month from that time I was ordained an elder at a conference in Malmo, Sweden, and sent on a mission right away. I traveled hundreds of miles amongst strangers, and became an outcast, and was persecuted to a shameful degree. I suffered both hunger and thirst and slept outside in the timber, and had the Book of Mormon under my head. That morning I found some good people who gave me breakfast in their stable, for they were afraid people would come upon me. In time I was arrested and taken up before the sheriff and priests to answer for my religious belief. Notwithstanding this and much more, I offered myself as a lamb for the sake of Jesus, as he had sent his everlasting gospel, and I had such great love for it. It was before me night and day.

I was eleven years on a mission in my mother country, and had no hope of coming to Zion on my own money, so I asked a brother from Zion (his name was P. Beckstrom) how I should go there. He gave me a lovely answer. He said that inside of five years Zion should be redeemed. Those that can not come, the angel will care for them. So I waited and prayed. I baptized eight or ten families and they helped each other, and in the eleven years I have been helped by them; but I never came to that Zion, for I stopped in Omaha. This was in 1868. There were a good many Scandinavian people that belonged to the Reorganization, but none of them could give me strong testimony enough that I could believe them. But I made some money, and sent after my family, and got them to Omaha in 1869, and God helped me so that I got work in the Union Pacific blacksmith shop.

But one day, the 27th of September, 1871, myself and wife had the pleasure of hearing Joseph Smith, the son of the prophet Joseph. As this was the greatest blessing I had felt in my life, to see and hear him, I shall testify both to God and man that I became so truly baptized of the Holy Spirit that my tongue and pen can never describe that feeling, for it was the Spirit from heaven that testified to me that the Reorganization is the plan of salvation; and so I was baptized the 24th of October, 1871, and my good wife was baptized the 12th of April, 1872. So we have been united to serve the true and living God, and our separation in this life will not be long.

This is the second letter I have written to the HERALD, and I have read the HERALD for over thirty years. I thank you all for writing to the HERALD.

Your brother in Christ,
ANDREW JOHNSON.

TAYLORVILLE, Illinois, November 15, 1905.

Editors Herald: To-day when looking over the pages and letters in the silent preacher which arrived this morning, it made my heart rejoice. It is now thirty-four years since I obeyed the angel's message, but it has not always been smooth sailing with me. I fully know that God has said that he would have a tried people, so I suppose I am to be among those that are to be tried as by fire. I pray that God may give me grace to stand faithful in his work.

The most difficulty I have found has been with myself. If we can control our tempers and walk in the light, as God is in the light, we will be able to help, teach, and instruct our brothers and sisters. But if we do not walk in the light, and keep ourselves from the temptations of the Evil One, how are we to let our light shine, that others may glorify our Father? As the servants of God, we are instructed to keep our bodies clean from all filthiness. The late revelation to the church says strong drinks are not for the belly, but for the washing of your bodies, and again, "tobacco is not good for the body, neither for the belly," and is not good for man. When I hear brothers say that tobacco did them lots of good, I wonder to myself whether they or the great Lawgiver know best; and often in conversing with elders before the meeting, and smelling their breath, being foul with the odor of tobacco, I think of the command given to keep the body clean, for the body is the temple of the Lord. The elders, priests, teachers, and deacons are to feed the flock of which God has made them overseers. Now I, of a surety, know that this church is God's church, whether you or I continue faithful to the end or not. Brothers, discard all those bad habits and cleanse yourselves of all filthiness, so that when the Spirit of God comes, it will find an indwelling in your bodies.

We have had Bro. C. H. Burr here preaching for nearly two weeks, and the Saints have been greatly strengthened by the teachings of the brother. We need a lot more of such preaching throughout the Central Illinois District. We need the law of the church taught in its full sense, so that all will not have a law of their own, and have to comply to the law of God. If thy brother offend thee, "go and tell him his fault between him and thee alone," and if he will not hear thee, take another with thee, and if he will not hear thee then, "let him be to you as a heathen man and a publican." Brothers and sisters, time in this work is too short for you or me to fool away our time. "Be ye also ready, for ye know not the day nor the hour the Son of Man cometh." This gives us no time to fool away. We are commanded to pray often to keep the door shut, that the Evil One may not come in.

Oh, what a glorious thought when we know that we have an advocate who is Jesus Christ, the righteous. Now let us go on to perfection. That is, let us keep on trying to perfect our frail bodies. I want to be one of those who shall enter into that great marriage supper of the Lamb. My desire is that we may hear the welcome, "Enter ye into the joy of your Lord." Shall we all hold out faithful to the end?

I have been sick since last January, with a complication of diseases. My wife is also troubled with rheumatism. Will you all remember us before the throne of grace, that if it be the Lord's will we may be restored to health, that I may be privileged to do more for the Master's work, that Zion's children may become pure in heart, and that Zion may shortly be redeemed.

Your brother in the conflict,

JACOB WALTENBAUGH.

Editors Herald: My dear old mother was at church to-day, though she is lame and had to climb the hill the most of the way, and my father was at church also. They are both very old, but it is of mother I wish to speak. They came to my house, and after she had her dinner, we said something about the church, and she said to me, "I dreamed of telling some one about the church in the early days, and so I will tell it to you." And this is the story my mother told me:

My mother's name is Mrs. Marie L. Galland. She was born in Cincinnati in the year 1829, on the 12th of January, and it was at that place that her mother and father embraced the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. They came to Independence, Missouri, and stayed there till they were driven out by a mob. They were driven across the river, and it was quite cold, and when they stopped they saw a black cloud rising. Her mother sewed sheets together and her father went and got some poles, and they pitched their tent on a little knoll and put what they could under protection; and the men got logs and rolled them together and tried to keep them burning with the help of the bellows which her father had, as he was blacksmith. In the night her father came in and brought a poor old lady all wet and cold and tired out, who lay down while her mother sat up, and the old lady soon fell asleep. Mother said she thinks her name was Jones, but is not sure, for she was very small at the time.

She said it was in Independence that her father, Charles Alland, and David Partridge were tarred and feathered, and when her father came home her mother had gone to borrow a tub, and the sight of her father in that coat of tar frightened her till he told who he was; but her younger sister said, "Father, what you do that for?" He sent my mother after her mother and she soon had him clean, and he was soon out on the street all right. The enemy marveled and said, "There is no use to tar those Mormons."

Mother told also of her father meeting the man that had the whip to whip him after he was tarred and feathered, and as her father was hunting and had his gun with him, the man thought he was in danger of his life, and he fell on his knees and begged him to spare his life. Her father said, "Get up. I will hurt no one, but always try to do as I wish to be done by." And the man said, "I would kill the man that treated me the way I did you."

After being driven from Independence they settled near Far West, Missouri, and when the mob drove them from there the mob killed several, even little children who knew no harm. Then the Saints went to Illinois and there again were driven from their homes. My mother said those were awful times, and her dear old eyes filled with tears.

Now, dear Saints, I hope we may never see such perilous times; and I, for one, am thankful to the old veterans for their faithful endurance that we might have the light of God.

Your sister,

E. J. WORLEY.

NEW CASTLE, New South Wales, Australia.

Editors Herald: During the last three months I have been taking a hasty run through this district to assist in building up and strengthening the Saints as much as I could before leaving for General Conference. I find all religious classes becoming less interested or concerned in spiritual matters, and more taken up with the fleeting pleasures and frivolities of life. Occasionally some of the Saints drink into this same spirit to their own hurt, and also to the hindrance of our onward march in this latter-day glory. Our laborers certainly are few in this mission, and our progress, if such there be, is very meager. An extra talented preacher might be able to draw a fair audience in fine weather and good moonlight, if nothing else was on; but the fingers on his hands would be a fair gauge to number those who would be present at a week-night prayer-meeting, is my experience and observation. If these conditions prevail elsewhere, Zion's redemption is just a little farther in the distance than some, at least, have supposed.

Everywhere I have been the Saints are kind and generous, but are not as energetic and zealous for breaking the bread of life to others, as the law requires. He that has seen the true light, and heard the warning voice, should be diligent in warning his neighbor, that his hands may be free from the blood of this evil generation.

Each passing year brings us nearer the condition that prevailed in the days of Noah, which means sudden and sore destruction to the careless and unprepared. "Return unto me, and I will return unto you," is applicable now; and unless we get nearer to the Lord, or he comes nearer to us, it will be some time yet before the armies of Israel become very great in these latter days. I can admit that it is better to go slow and be sure, than to be hasty and uncertain; but if the death rate and expulsions exceed the additions, it is proof that the Lord is not working with us, or we are not working.

At one of our branches I visited recently, I was sorry to hear the Lord admonishing the missionaries and local officers to push out into the districts round about and warn the people, etc., which would have been unnecessary if all had been doing what they were able and called to do. It seems that there is still need for every one to learn his duty, and not only learn it but do it, and save the Lord this extra instruction to our shame.

I am of the opinion that a patriarch in this mission would prove one of the greatest additions we could have to comfort and keep the Saints in the line of duty. However, the Lord knows his own business, and will do all things best for his work in its time.

This part of the mission field may be said to be in a fair condition, with a large area for improvement. If no other instructions or arrangements are had from headquarters, I will be leaving for the States about the beginning of the year, and will leave the care of this mission to some one who can look to its wants until some one is sent to have the oversight. May peace and love be multiplied in Zion.

I am yours in the faith,

C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

A Testimony.

Dear Herald: It has been some time since I took up any space in your columns. I have been impressed, several times, to bear my testimony to God's goodness to me in healing, and to-day I thought I had better obey or I may be condemned; not that I wish to withhold anything that might prove a blessing to any, but I do not like to write.

I have had a good deal of sickness in my life, and so many times have been raised up by the power of God in complying with the instructions in James in sending for the elders (not for a doctor); for I fail to find where the good book tells me to send for a doctor when I or any of my family are sick. The last time I was sick while I lived in Oakland, I was taken violently, and while I was sick I dreamed that a black hearse came to my house and stopped right under my window, close beside my door. I awoke and knew what it meant, because I had had such dreams before. I sent for Bro. Terry, and during the administration the Spirit of God was present and I received such a blessing as I shall never forget, which I am enjoying now. Well, I was healed, and rose from my bed the same day; when, before I heard of the gospel, a doctor was sent for when I had the same kind of sickness, and I was not able to be out of bed for several days after the doctor administered his medicine. This is only one time out of several that I have been instantly relieved of severe pain, and enabled, through complying with God's law, to get right up and do my work.

I can not see where the Saints have money to spare for doctors, when there are so many calls from the church for necessary means to carry on the work that we all acknowledge is God's work. So much is needed to help the ministry in the field to preach what we all bear our testimony to knowing as the truth, and all express the desire to have others share with us. Why would not a Saint rather give that amount that goes to the already rich doctor, in most cases, to the poor elder's family. Sometimes the doctor's bill is small, and sometimes it amounts to hundreds of dollars, and even thousands of dollars. Now just stop and think what these sums could do for the church in its many branches. Of course the doctor bill must be paid, in most cases, because, if it were not, the next time he was sent for he would not come. But did the Saints ever stop to think that perhaps God would not come to our rescue, if they did not pay some of the bills they owe him? Sometimes there are many calls and pleadings, and prayers ascend, and still the spiritual blessing is withheld, and sometimes we hear Saints saying, "Why is it that I do not get this or that blessing?" Well, dear Saints, have all the debts to the Lord been paid? God does not require so much that it can never be paid. Sometimes a doctor does cure, especially if he thinks there is plenty of means behind the case, though his patient may be kept on the list of the sick for a long time, till he sees the funds are getting low.

Now what one of us would expect our best friend to be called on last when we are in trouble with sickness? If we did turn from our best friend here on earth, I very much think that friend would take it as an insult and stay away from us the next time we needed a friend, and let us have the stranger. And which one of us when we want our house repaired will send for an apprentice to do good work, or would we send for a horse-shoer or a dry-goods merchant? Is not the builder able to repair better than any one else? Or do we think he has not time to spare to his children that he loves? Do we not believe that if we die when we are so sick that he is able to raise us again, or take our spirits home to him? Why can he not raise our bodies from the sick bed?

It has been said by the Spirit that only those that can be trusted will be allowed to dwell in Zion. Now have we ever thought when sick, "Perhaps this sickness has been sent on me just to try me and see if I will trust my Master." Do you not believe, dear Saints, that there will be things come to us that no doctor can help us out of; trials that they have not made a study of? And do we not believe that as the end nears that such trials will come that will take all the faith we can muster from such past experiences in trusting God, not a doctor?

Perhaps some can say, "Certain doctors have saved my life." Perhaps some do owe their lives, to some extent, to a doctor; but do not some, and I believe a good many, owe their death to a doctor? I would not expect to get well if, when I was sick, I turned my faith away from him who said,

"Trust me," and sent for a doctor, and then gave the money to pay the bill when it ought to go to pay for the church papers, or the orphans' home, or sanitarium, or some other branch of God's work. How are we to build a temple if we do not learn to put the means that a loving Father has blessed us with in the right place. Honor him, and he will honor us. Keep his commandments, and he is bound. We can look up with faith when we know we have complied with the requirements of his law, just as our children can come to us and expect a promised reward for some obedience we have required, if they have obeyed. I do not believe that any Saint that leaves this stage of action without learning to be trusted with the means placed in his hands here, will be a priest or king hereafter, because the Scriptures say, "He that is faithful over a few things, shall be made ruler over many things."

And again if I had a loaf of bread and would not divide with one that was in need, I could not expect a blessing spiritually or temporally, because I could not ask in faith for any. Do not many of the elders' families need comforts that they never get? We brought nothing into this world, surely we can take nothing out, of this world's goods, but we can take great riches out with us, if we have been willing to sacrifice for the good and progress of the cause we profess to love. But do we really love it to the extent that we shall be willing to lay all at Jesus' feet, not holding back a portion?

May our heavenly Father help each of his children to "come up higher" in everything he has required of us, in the prayer of Your sister in the faith,
KEOKUK, Iowa. ADDIE DAVID.

• Gleanings from the Field.

After a stay at home and a little suffering with one of Job's afflictors, I am again ready for the battle and conflict of life which has become endeared to me (missionary work). I have enjoyed my home visit, and the preaching of the word since coming home. Have been blessed in the same. Saints have been encouraged, and some are investigating the work. I am arranging to spend the winter in Louisiana, and I would like to hear from the Saints of Louisiana; would like them to write me at my home address, which is 2211 East Avenue, Springfield, Missouri, giving me their names and addresses so I can correspond with them and arrange for meetings. I have met with my share of the discouragements of missionary life this year, and also have been encouraged. I like my field all right so far, and when I get into Louisiana, where I can parle le langage de francais I will enjoy it all the more.

I only wish we had more missionaries for this Southern mission. We ought to have at least four times as many missionaries in the South as we have, the condition of the work demands it, and those who have been raised there can do more effectual work than one who has not. I hope to be able to advance the work of the Master wherever I may be called to labor. May God speed the day when this glorious message will reach all the honest in heart. C. E. IRWIN.

Florida Reunion.

Conference and reunion met with the Santa Rosa Branch, October 19 to 27 inclusive. The conference lasted over Saturday and Sunday the 19th and 20th.

Brn. T. C. Kelley and J. M. Stubbart were elected to preside over the reunion. This was the first reunion ever had in this district, and it was a success. While none were baptized at the time, we feel that much good seed was sown among non-members, and that the Saints reaped as much benefit as the outsiders.

It was unanimously voted to have another reunion next year, and a committee consisting of L. F. West, O. O. Simmons, W. M. Hawkins, J. D. McArthur, Sam Dixon, Joseph Dixon, Mac Barnes, Riley Jernigan, Martin West, S. D. Allen, J. H. Johnston, and Willoughby Dixon was appointed to make all arrangements for it.

The order of services was: Prayer-meeting at half past nine in the morning, and preaching at eleven in the forenoon, and at seven in the evening, except Friday, which was given over to Sunday-school work, and in the evening to an entertainment under the direction of Mrs. C. J. Clark, which was voted a great success.

The speakers were T. C. Kelley, J. M. Stubbart, Alma and N. L. Booker, G. W. Chute, and C. J. Clark.

The Sunday-school normal work was not forgotten; but held three drills under direction of J. M. Stubbart and the writer.
C. J. CLARK, secretary.

A Trip to the Bayard Reunion.

On the 15th of September the writer, in company with Brn. Payne, Newberry, and Barks, set out for Bayard to attend the reunion, a distance of two hundred miles. The journey was quite tedious, as part of it was made by freight trains. There were four little folks in the company, in ages ranging from three to seven years, and it was pleasing to see how well they stood the journey. As we were compelled to walk one and one half miles one day, each one of them carrying a box or bundle, it made us think of the titles to two books published some years ago, "Innocents Abroad," and "Roughing It."

We chose a lodging house at Bridgeport for one night on the journey, and what was our surprise to find that it was kept by Latter Day Saints—two widows—Srs. Lepage and Melister. What a time of rejoicing we had! It was a treat for both sides.

On the 18th we reached Bayard and attended the first meeting. Bro. C. W. Prettyman, the pioneer preacher, was on hand and did most of the preaching, which he is fully able to do. Bro. Detrick spoke to us once. Bro. W. H. Kelley spoke three times. The first two days were cold and disagreeable, and in the evenings we sat wrapped up in blankets. A stranger coming in might have thought we resembled an Indian council, but the last two days were quite pleasant. The attendance was not large, but attentive. There was nothing to disturb the peace of any. The people of Bayard treated us finely, and the people of the town spoke well of the Saints which live near there, which pleased us all. Srs. Barkdoll, Hipp, and Knapp are surely to be commended for the part they took, as they faced the wind and cold, coming twenty miles in a wagon with a load of household goods for the comfort of those who chose tent-life while there. They also led the van in the cooking department, making every one as comfortable as possible. Sr. Barkdoll also presided at the organ, and did it well. We were well repaid for going, and hope the Saints will all come to South Tryon next year, as the reunion is to be held here at that time. Bro. and Sr. Shirk were missed on all sides, but their two sons were there and gave a helping hand at all times and wherever needed.

In gospel bonds,
MINERVA JOHNSON.

Those who have nothing else to recommend them to the respect of others but only their blood, cry it up at a great rate, and have their mouths perpetually full of it. By this mark they commonly distinguish themselves; but you may depend upon it there is no good bottom, nothing of the true worth of their own when they insist so much and set their credit on that of others.—Charron.

News From Branches

LAMONI, IOWA.

The pulpit in the chapel was occupied Sunday morning by John Smith and in the evening by J. F. Garver. R. M. Elvin spoke at the Saints' Home, A. S. Cochran at Liberty Home.

Eli Hayer filled the regular appointment at Andover Sunday evening, John Smith occupying at Wion. John Lovell and Roy Young preached and labored in the interest of the Sunday-school and Religio work at Ellston over Sunday. D. C. White occupied at Oland.

Thanksgiving exercises were observed at the chapel Thursday morning at half past ten. Heman C. Smith was the speaker. The services were appropriate, edifying, and well attended.

The Greenville Saints and their friends commemorated Thanksgiving Day with a short exercise of music and readings, and a brief address by J. F. Garver at half past seven Thursday evening.

On Friday evening the Lamoni local Religio gave a home talent number in the auditorium of the church. Those attending speaking in commendation of the exercises. An offering was taken up to aid in the work of the society.

J. F. GARVER.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

A large crowd was in attendance at the sacramental service the first of the month.

We enjoyed a very pleasant visit from Bro. Kelley the first Sunday of the month, and he gave us a fine talk at Sunday-school, and a splendid sermon Sunday evening.

We had a very enjoyable prayer-service Thanksgiving morning. The Sunday preceding Thanksgiving the Sunday-school gave a splendid program in the morning, after which an instructive sermon was delivered by Bro. Archibald, the Sunday-school again having charge of the evening service.

The Mite Society gave a bazaar and supper October 31, which was a decided success, both in a social way and financially.

Robert Carlswell was baptized and confirmed last Sunday evening.

The priesthood meeting was held November 12 and had section 70, in Doctrine and Covenants, under consideration.

Bro. Tanner has been at Nebo, Illinois, one week; and every two weeks he holds meetings at Alton, Illinois, with good results.

The Sunday-school and Religio are doing nicely. We have been having splendid programs in Religio, and interest is manifest in the lessons.

As a branch we have had many blessings, for which we express our thanks to our heavenly Father.

MISS E. M. PATTERSON.

2739 Dejong Street.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

The steady progress on the sanitarium building is encouraging to all, and quite a number visit the grounds every Sunday to view the work. Sr. Louise Palfrey was a welcome visitor at Religio last week, and, in a short talk, spoke to us encouragingly of the work. President Joseph Smith addressed the congregation at the Stone Church in the morning, giving a review of his trip to the Islands, and impressing us with the idea of the capability and intelligence of those who inhabit that far-off region. At night Mrs. Nellie Berger addressed a crowded house in the interest of local option, and the W. C. T. U. The address was well received, although a tendency toward the emotional detracted to a certain extent from the interest with some.

Sunday-school teachers' meetings are now being held at the home of Sr. Jennie Newton, and interest and attendance is increasing. Preparations are under way for the Christmas exercises of the school.

Thanksgiving Day, the prayer-service beginning at eight o'clock was of the spiritual kind that one looks back upon in after years as a bright spot, a landmark of encouragement. Sr. Peterson and Bro. Henry Kemp both spoke in prophecy to the edification of all present. J. A. GARDNER.

Eddie Hunter was ordained to the office of priest, Welby N. Bannister to the office of teacher, and Henry C. Stewart to the office of deacon. A resolution was passed praying the First Presidency to return to us as missionary in charge, Apostle J. W. Wight. Elder G. M. Shippy was recommended as historian for the district. Adjourned, leaving time and place of next conference in the hands of district president. F. O. Benedict, secretary.

Convention Minutes.

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA.—Met in convention at A. U. W. Hall, 162 South First Street, San Jose, October 4, at 2 p. m., 1907. District officers in charge of convention. Reports from officers were read. A balance of $15.02 was reported in district treasury. Report of committee on circulating library read and committee discharged. Motion to purchase one hundred of Bro. A. Carmichael's work on instruction to teachers was rescinded. Sr. Ethel Burgess was chosen a member of the library committee for the Sunday-school. A motion to use the money of the district for general expenses of the district carried. All home classes in jurisdiction of Sunday-schools are to be looked after by said school; those isolated, to be in charge of district officers, as stated in by-laws. Adjourned to meet at time and place of next district conference. Evaline Carmichael, secretary.

The Bishopric.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT, DISTRICT OF UTAH.

The Saints and friends in the state of Utah please take notice that Elder Gerard J. S. Abels, address 420 Twenty-fourth Street, Ogden, Utah, has been duly appointed Bishop's agent in and for the district of Utah, in place of Elder J. E. Vanderwood, resigned on account of having moved from the State.

Bro. Abels will duly receive and receipt for tithes and offerings in behalf of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, acting for the Bishopric of said church, and we cheerfully commend the brother to the Saints of the Utah District, and ask for him the assistance and patronage of every lover of the truth.

The Bishopric also extend special thanks to Bro. Vanderwood for his faithful services in the interest of this part of the church work in the past, and commend him to the Saints in his work as a missionary wherever he may be sent.

Asking the special blessing of the Lord upon every faithful doer of his word, and trusting all may remember the appointment of the new agent, Bro. Gerard J. S. Abels, I am, in behalf of the Bishopric,

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, November 26, 1907.

Expelled.

To Whom It May Concern: This is to certify that, on the 27th of October, Mrs. Sarah Love was expelled from the church by the Excelsior Branch, acting on the recommendations of an elders' court.

JASPER O. DUTTON, District President.

EVANSVILLE, Wisconsin, November 4, 1907.

Dedication of Southern Wisconsin Churches.

Notice is hereby given that the churches builded in the past few years at Flora, Grant County, and Soldiers Grove, Crawford County, will be dedicated as follows: Flora dedication will take place December 15, at 2 p. m. The Sunday following, December 22, at 2 p. m., the church three miles south of Soldiers Grove (Wheatville Branch) will be dedicated. Apostle J. W. Wight will be present as minister in charge of the mission. We hope there will be a good representation of the respective branches, and friends who have assisted in the erection of these two houses of worship.

JASPER O. DUTTON, District President.

Conference Notices.

Quarterly conference of the Northwestern Kansas District will convene with the Homestead Branch at Bazine, Kansas, December 21, 1907. Please be prompt with all reports, sending them to Mrs. Eva Teeters, secretary, Alexander, Kansas. Branches desiring next quarterly conference, send request to this conference. John Teeters, president.

Convention Notices.

Northwestern Kansas District Sunday-school Association will convene at Bazine, Kansas, December 20. John Teeters, superintendent.

Marriages.

STRUBLE-DIBBLE.—Bro. Alfred N. Struble and Sr. Myrtle C. Dibble were united in marriage, Monday, November 11, 1907, at 2 p. m., at Beatrice, Nebraska. They have the best wishes of a large circle of friends and acquaintances, amongst whom they were both born and raised, for a long and happy life. May the blessing of God be with them through life.

DYKES—HIGGINS.—At Salt Lake City, on the evening of November 20, 1907, Hugh J. Dykes, of Berkeley, California, and Pauline M. Higgins, of Salt Lake City, Utah, the ceremony being performed by Elder Evan A. Davis, at the home of the bride, in the presence of the family. There is a little romance connected with this marriage, they having been sweethearts when they were young; but they became separated thirty years ago, and never met again until this autumn.

Died.

HUNT.—At Harlan, Iowa, October 27, 1907, Sr. Mary E. Hunt. Was born near Lund, Sweden, October 31, 1833, and emigrated to America in 1856. March 22, 1860, married to Thomas J. Franklin, and of this union were born five children; four of whom survive. Her second marriage occurred February 1, 1877, when she was united to Elder John B. Hunt, who died June 10, 1892. Sr. Hunt became a member of the Reorganized Church in 1870. She remained a consistent and faithful member until death. Heman C. Smith preached the funeral discourse at Saints' church, at Harlan, October 29.

THOMAS.—Edmund Thomas, Jr., at Redfield, Perry County, Ohio, November 18, 1907. Born May 19, 1885, at Pomeroy, Ohio. He did not belong to the church, but was blessed when about five years old by Elder G. T. Griffiths. Funeral-sermon by H. E. Moler. Interment in Mount Horeb Cemetery, near Crooksville, Ohio.

SCHAEFER.—Sr. Faith Potts Schaefer, daughter of Elder George Potts, Brooklyn Branch president; born September 19, 1884, at Burton-on-Trent, Staffordshire, England; died at Brooklyn, New York, November 9, 1907. Married April 3, 1907, to Fred P. Schaefer; Baptized September 2, 1900, by U. W. Greene. Our sister manifested a cheerful, kind, and loving disposition that endeared her to all, as was shown by the beautiful flowers which filled two carriages. Services from new church, November 12, 1907, by B. R. McGuire and Joseph Squire. Interment in Evergreen.

WILSON.—David Wilson, at his home near Western, Nebraska, where he had resided for forty-three years, November 6, 1907. He was born at Middletown, Ohio, May 9, 1829. Was married to Rachel Henderson in June, 1858. Of this union five children were born. Four are still living. He united with the church, August 30, 1880, being baptized by R. M. Elvin. His funeral was largely attended, showing that he was well respected in the community when he had lived so long. Sermon by Samuel Brolliar.

HARDY.—At Nevada, Iowa, November 7, 1907, Sr. Myrtle Grace Hardy, daughter of Bro. and Sr. W. C. Hardy, at the age of 15 years, 4 months, 24 days. She was baptized September 8, 1900. She was a favorite among her associates, always of good cheer; an open, innocent countenance; a good Saint. She was buried on the 10th, from the Presbyterian church. The sermon was by J. S. Roth, from Hebrews 9: 27; assisted by Elder Cook and Reverend Boyd. Six of Sr. Myrtle's girl chums were the pall-bearers, all dressed in white. Another good Saint has gone to her rest, awaiting the first resurrection. The Presbyterian choir furnished the music from the Saints' Hymnal. The casket was covered with beautiful flowers. Notwithstanding the terrible snow-storm, the congregation reached into the hundreds, and yet there were very few dry eyes while taking the last look at the mortal remains of Sr. Myrtle.

BUTLER.—Senterlow Butler was born April 10, 1832, at Mansfield, Nottingham, England. Baptized at Waltham, Massachusetts, December 7, 1870, by Josiah Ells. Ordained to office of elder December 11, 1870, which office he held till death, which occurred November 4, 1907, at Fontanelle, Iowa. He leaves to mourn, a wife, and three daughters (Elizabeth Gaskings, of Canton, Ohio; Hannah Dempsey, of Nevada, Missouri; Mary Burlington, of St. Joseph, Missouri). Sermon by Joshua Carlile.

STEPHENSON.—Charles Naylor, was born at Lewiston, Pennsylvania, August 25, 1845. March 18, 1869, he was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Hills. Of this union were born ten children, seven of whom remain to comfort the mother, and to share the loss of a kind, loving husband and father. He is also survived by two brothers and two sisters. He was stricken with paralysis October 31, and from its effects never recovered, although conscious most of the time till death, which occurred November 6, 1907. Funeral-services at the home, conducted by Reverend W. M. Martin, of the Baptist Church.

Canadian School Gardens.

Everywhere these gardens prove with what delight and profit children may begin at school the work of later life, how principles of unending interest may be unfolded in simple tasks of sowing and pruning, hoeing and reaping. Here, harking back to noteworthy experiments, selected seeds are sown, with the striking contrast between their harvests and the crops reaped from ordinary seeds. Not less instructive is it to compare two plots planted with potatoes, one sprayed against blight, the other neglected and so only producing a few under-sized tubers. In the course of four years a special area, of, say, twenty-five square yards, is cropped the first year with wheat, the second with clover, the third with grass for pasture, and the fourth with a cultivated crop, as Indian corn or potatoes. All to illustrate the profit of a rotation which in four years works much less exhaustion to the soil, yields larger crops, and leaves the land freer from weeds, than if only grain had been sown year after year. These simple lessons form what Doctor Robertson calls the tripod of good farming: (1) sowing selected seed on prepared soil; (2) protecting crops against insects and fungous diseases; (3) a rotation of crops adapted to the soil and to the markets. At Tryon School Garden, Prince Edward Island, the children reaped 32 per cent more wheat from a plot sown with selected seed than was borne on an adjoining plot sown with unselected seed. When barley followed clover it yielded 17 per cent more than when barley followed a cereal without clover stubble having been plowed in. As remarkable as these results in crops are the effects on the young sowers and reapers themselves. Uniform examinations for entrance to high schools are held throughout Ontario in July. In 1906 in Carleton County from schools without gardens 49 per cent of the candidates were successful; from five Macdonald schools where all candidates had been school gardeners for three consecutive years, 71 per cent were admitted, mostly with high standing. As in all such education it was shown that when part of a school-day is given to toil with the hands, at the bench and out of doors, the book work at the desk takes on a fresh meaning, and inspires a new zest.—From "Doctor Robertson and the Training of Canadian Farmers," by George Iles, in the American Review of Reviews for November.

Of all vanities and fopperies, the vanity of high birth is the greatest. True nobility is derived from virtue, not from birth. Titles, indeed, may be purchased; but virtue is the only coin that makes the bargain valid.—Burton.

IN BEHALF OF THE MANAGEMENT OF THE JACKSON COUNTY BANK

I take the liberty of soliciting your patronage as we are in a position to do BANKING BUSINESS BY MAIL very satisfactorily. Open accounts can be placed with us for safety at your convenience and command. We have opened a savings department, paying interest on accounts of $1 or more and each member of the family should become interested in having a bank account building for future needs. We also pay interest on time deposit certificates. A number of the brethren are living here, others are looking forward to this location as a future home, and late revelation and admonition foreshadow coming events, adding materially to our spiritual holdings necessary to signs of the times, and in this connection our Board of Directors propose to safeguard the financial interests of the Saints by offering to them a depository proof against graft, greed, or calamity, governed by a kindred feeling born of the interest we have in common. It is not popular men, large capital, heavy deposits, National or State laws, that offer absolute security to depositors, but directors and officers progressive and conservative, possessed of the virtue of true manhood, shorn of all political ambition, with no taste for frenzied finance or mining speculation, and no inclination to furnish funds for others in that line. I point with considerable just pride (I assume) to our Board of Directors as named below. Feel at liberty to write us on matters that concern you in Jackson County, Missouri.

OFFICERS: Ellis Short, President; M. H. Bond, Second Vice-president; William Crick, First Vice-president; J. D. Briggs, Cashier.

DIRECTORS: Ellis Short, William Crick, M. H. Bond, J. D. Briggs, G. H. Hilliard, Doctor Joseph Mather, Doctor O. H. Riggs, Horace Shelley, A. L. Yingling.

Very truly yours,
J. D. BRIGGS, Cashier.

WHAT JOSEPH SMITH STOOD FOR: A CORRECT THEORY OF EDUCATION.

"Seek learning even by study, and also by faith."

Joseph Smith has been dead sixty-three years, yet the world has not forgotten him—and many have not forgiven him. Sixty-three years is a long time in this busy world. Men die and are forgotten in one year, except as we are reminded of them by some tombstone pointing heavenward to indicate where they went—or did not go, as the case may be. Yet sixty times that period of time, with three years added for grace, has elapsed, and the memory of this individual has not grown dim. Societies are still organized to fight him, books are written and sermons preached against him; while on the other hand he is loved and honored by many people and his name is defended by many able tongues and pens. In short, the prediction made to him in early life that his name should be had for good and evil in all the world is still true.

One who so impressed the world must have been possessed of a very strong character or else he must have taught very striking ideas—or both. The second proposition applies in this case, whatever may be said of the first: Joseph Smith is remembered because he told the world something that attracted attention; something that the world could not forget, has not forgotten, and never will forget.

Mr. Hyde in his exposé of "Mormonism" declared that Sidney Rigdon and Parley P. Pratt possessed great minds, that they gave force and direction to the movement inaugurated by Joseph, and that had he not succeeded in converting them he could never have reached the people.

Listen! If it required great minds like those of Pratt and Rigdon to reach the common people, what was it that enabled Joseph Smith to reach and convert the great minds of Pratt and Rigdon? It was the ideas which he taught that enabled him to influence them and many others of keen intelligence; and those ideas would have enabled him to carry on his work had Pratt and Rigdon never been born.

Among the ideals which he advocated was one which we believe to be the true theory of education, and perhaps it was most important of them all. We are asked, If the Lord had a message to present to the people, especially one touching education, why did he not commit it to Luther, who graduated from Erfurt College in Germany, or to Wesley, who graduated from Lincoln College in England, or to Campbell, who graduated from Glasgow University in Scotland, instead of to this graduate from nowhere?

The morality which is divorced from godliness, however specious and captivating to the eye, is superficial and deceptive. The only morality that is clear in its source, pure in its precepts, and efficacious in its influence, is the morality of the gospel. All else is, at best, but idolatry—the worship of something of man's own creation; and that imperfect and feeble, like himself, and wholly insufficient to give him support and strength. Piety and morality are but the same spirit differently manifested.—Piety is religion with its face toward God; morality is religion with its face toward the world.—Tryon Edwards.

When Joshua builded an altar upon Ebal he was instructed to use rocks that were unpolished and unshapen, upon which the tools of man had never rested, just as they came from the hillsides. Upon these rocks Joshua was instructed to inscribe the law of God. God could wash them with his rain and whiten them with his sun in his own time. When done the altar reflected the copartnership of God and man in the work of its construction, but to God was granted the initiative and the ascendancy all the time. None of the polished stones from the pyramids upon which the skilled workmen of Egypt had labored found a resting place in that altar. Just so God has often passed by the learned and polished and has selected some common man, and having washed him clean in the gospel covenant has inscribed his law upon his heart and erected him before men as a memorial—so it was with Peter, whose name signified a stone. A rough, unpromising stone he seemed; in the schools of the rabbis there were a hundred more prepossessing, yet God called him and made him one of the "lively stones" in his building.

Such men may be ignorant when called; it is no crime to be ignorant; it is a crime to remain ignorant, and that they do not do.

Joseph Smith availed himself of the true theory of education from the very beginning of his religious life, and there was the secret of his success. That theory was epitomized in a revelation given to him in 1832, and it is this, "Seek learning even by study, and also by faith."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36.

He put that principle to the test in the opening chapter of his religious life, when only fifteen years old. The great revival which had stirred his mind regarding religion was ended. The almost inevitable quarrel followed. Church was divided against church. Contention, confusion, and strife reigned. Men tried to "argue it out." The boy was torn in spirit, and he studied the matter but was not equal to the task of sifting the truth from the contradictory claims presented to him by various denominations. Then he exercised the second part of the principle and sought by faith in connection with his study.

In the woods, alone, he prayed for light. He had read in the Bible the very definite promise, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."

He accepted this promise as still being in force and at par. In response to his faith God gave him a most remarkable revelation.

Now mark the contrast: Here were the churches striving to settle divine questions in man's way, studying, disputing, contending; yonder was the lad in the quiet of the woods, taking religious questions to the author of religion.

The world says that God inspired the churches and that the Devil inspired the lad. We do not believe it. We believe that no sage or philosopher could have taken a wiser course. He had laid hold upon a great principle, and that is the principle which he came to stand for above all others, namely, the principle of continued revelation.

So far as we know he then stood as the sole representative of the thought that God would still answer prayer. That may seem a harsh statement but mark you: first, the general surprise when he declared that God had answered prayer; second, the general incredulity. The reception of his statement shows the condition the religious world was in.

When he came out with his message two courses were open to people: If they really believed in answer to prayer, they could say, "It may be true; we will examine it and see"; if they did not believe in answer to prayer, they could say, "It can't be true, because God no longer speaks." The latter course was almost universally adopted and is still maintained. The issue is fairly drawn.

Above the cry of the world, "God used to speak," Joseph Smith shouted, "God does speak," and the world has neither forgotten nor forgiven him. He restored the original text of John's great definition of God to read as of old, "God is love," as opposed to the popular rendition, "God was love."

God must not be defined in the past tense.

Men may learn a great deal by study, and when in connection with study a living faith is exercised, there exists a coöperation between the student of facts and the author of facts that is strictly in line with the divine plan. Christ taught his disciples to search the scriptures and he also promised that in response to faith he would guide the one searching until he should obtain all truth.

Here is the church, one day in seven men come to it to exercise faith; yonder is the school or college, to it men go five days in seven to study: we need a closer union of faith and study. Bring to the church the keen, analytical intelligence of free men, and study and assimilate all that is to be found in sermon or prayer-meeting or Sunday-school. Do not hire a pastor to do all the thinking, and evidence a sublime and self-effacing faith by accepting him as infallible. On the other hand take to the school or the workshop a faith that will bring God into your investigations.

This church stands for the thought that man is free to study all good books and thus find what his fellow man thinks about certain subjects; and in addition he is free to betake himself to intimate personal communion with God and learn what he thinks about those subjects. ELBERT A. SMITH.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

The Indian football team from the Carlisle school, met the University of Chicago, November 23, and defeated them in a desperate game, with a score of four to eighteen. The University of Chicago team had won the championship of the conference colleges of the Middle West and anticipated an easy victory. The founder of the Lamanites was a noted kicker in his day.

DES MOINES, Iowa, November 25.—The State anti-lodge movement was organized here to-day by the election of Rev. J. M. McGraw, of Morning Sun, president; Rev. H. A. Gray, of Auburn, vice-president; Rev. T. J. Adrian, of Des Moines, secretary; and C. Abner Branson, of Des Moines, treasurer.

It will conduct a campaign against secret societies of all kinds, declaring that they operate against churches and Christianity.

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 27.—The first step toward the retiring of the clearing house certificates issued in this city was taken to-day when the executive committee of the Chicago Clearing House ordered destroyed $25,000 worth of certificates that have been paid back to the clearing house.

David R. Forgan, president of the National City Bank, announced this action at a weekly dinner of the Chicago Association of Commerce, and added that the procedure will be continued daily "until the entire issue is paid back and normal conditions restored."

"We have received answers from one thousand banks that were questioned regarding the resumption of specie payments," said Forgan. "Just nine hundred ninety-eight declare themselves ready for such resumption at once. The other two asked for a little longer time, but merely for the purpose of ascertaining if the time is ripe for such a move. The answers come from all sections of the South, Middle West, and Northwest. About six thousand letters were sent out, and answers are coming in by the hundreds every day.—Exchange.

The report of the fatalities in the pineries of Northern Wisconsin and Upper Michigan during the open game and deer season of 1907 is far greater than during any season for many years past.

Thirty-one nimrods have lost their lives since the open season began, while thirty-seven and possibly more have been maimed and wounded.

The Chicago Tribune for November 11 reports that the earthquake which destroyed the town of Karatagh, Russian Turkestan, as well as wrecking all the villages in the vicinity, resulted in the death of about fourteen thousand people.

The Straight Road

THE OLD JERUSALEM GOSPEL.

HAVE YOU ASKED FOR BREAD AND RECEIVED A STONE?

If a man would step into a house by the wayside and ask for something to eat, and should get the following reply: "Now, I haven't anything for you, but if you will just be seated I will tell you of a sumptuous feast a party had here a few months ago, of delicious things that were set before them, or I will give you a book, in which you can read of the good time had," what would you think about it? And yet that is just how God is represented by men who profess to be his representatives. They tell men and women to "read the Bible" and learn how good God was to the people in the past, and then inform them that revelation, miracles, prophecy, healing of the sick, angelic ministrations, etc., are not for mankind to-day. And this is done notwithstanding the statement, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever."

JESUS CHRIST A COMMANDER.

He said, "ask," "seek," "knock." Do you not think that a subject of this nature is worthy your investigation? It is! See what we have to offer. We appeal to your intelligence. Your decision may mean the turning point of your life—the beginning of better days. May God direct you to the straight and narrow way that leads to life.

HOW IS IT WITH YOU?

How many valuable discoveries have met with derision; how ashamed one ought to be to think he once fought what was true, when with knowledge he could have supported it, and stood in the ranks of the victors. How many have fought the truth of God when they could have been colaborers with him.

DO YOU BELIEVE?

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," Jesus says. Believeth what? We answer: The teachings of Jesus Christ and his ministry—the Gospel as they taught it. Christianity can not be taught in any other form than it was taught by them: anything else is not Christianity. Belief is the result of impressions made upon the mind; before we can believe Christianity we must have it correctly represented to us just as Jesus and his ministry taught it, and until such is done we can not believe Christianity, for we can not believe something we have not thought of or had represented to us. From the reflectors appointed by God (the ministry) there should be reflected to the minds of men the promises, ordinances, and commandments of God as given nineteen hundred years ago. "He that believeth" those things shall be saved.

Christianity is of God. No institution was ordained, no commandment given, or promise made, but what was vital to the needs of man and had to do with his salvation. If we should not have all of the religion Jesus gave, who is to determine what part and how much we can get along without, and how little we can have and yet be saved.

A HUMAN INSTITUTION OR A HUMAN MESSAGE CAN NOT SAVE THE SOUL OF MAN.

Some pride themselves upon belonging to an undenominational church. The Christian church is a denominational one. To be "undenominational" is to have "all men speak well of you." He who stands committed in the belief that what he has accepted for his religion is of heaven, must be a denominationalist, he must be a sectarian if bodies arise teaching and holding doctrines conflicting with his own; he must be an enthusiast, for what man in possession of heavenly doctrines, full of effulgent glory, will be silent? He will be a proselyter. An undenominational body must be one that propagates a religion without doctrines.

Paul said: Take heed unto thyself and to the doctrine.

John said: Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God.

DO YOU LOVE CHRIST?

Jesus said: If you love me keep my commandments. Implicit obedience then is the test of our love. Do you love Christ? You do, if you are willing to obey him fully. Remember his words: "Not every one that saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father, which is in heaven."

A doctrine that is not essential to salvation forms no part of Christianity—all of Christianity is essential to salvation. One could with as much consistency talk about the essential parts of Christ's body as to talk about the essential parts of Christianity. It is a dangerous thing to say that when religionists engage in controversy respecting Christian doctrines, the matter disputed is not necessary to salvation.

Some people do not want taught "Controversial Theology"; is there any doctrine that is not controverted by some one? Is there not only a degree of infidelity between the one who opposes baptism and the one who attacks the divine sonship of Jesus Christ? If we leave out baptism, and other doctrines of Christ, because they are controverted, where will our reasoning lead us?

We come with a message from God. A message that prophets said should come in the last days to prepare for the second coming of Christ. A return to the simple gospel that anciently filled the souls of men with indescribable peace.

LIFE HERE IS SHORT. ETERNITY IS LONG.

Do not neglect this opportunity that may prove to be the greatest blessing of your life.

Jesus said: "Seek ye the kingdom of God."—Luke 12: 31.

You can find it at these meetings.

THIS IS A RARE OPPORTUNITY.

You will hear the clearest explanation of the Bible that you ever listened to, the gospel made wonderfully plain, even that a child can understand it. You will know how Jesus and his disciples preached and what they preached better than you ever knew before.—From The Grain of Mustard Seed, a four-page illustrated leaflet used by Elders U. W. Greene, A. B. Phillips, and R. W. Farrel, during a series of meetings at Attleboro, Massachusetts, November, 1907.

THE BIBLE AND INTOXICANTS.

No other book ever written is so strongly for temperance as the Bible. Almost its only mention of wine is to condemn it, and warn against it. Throughout the entire Bible "wine is a mocker." The great volume is filled with accounts of men who have "erred through wine, and through strong drink are gone astray; they are swallowed up of wine." We are bidden not even to look upon the wine, and we are supplied with an abundance of reasons why we should not. And all that with the light wines of the East, and with their blessed ignorance of the modern saloon! What if the Bible writers lived in the days of rum and whisky and brandy and gin! What if they lived in the days of free lunches and treating, and the dance hall, and the theater, and the thousand and one other temptations to intoxication that our modern ingenuity has devised! No words would be hot enough to express their indignation, or sad enough to set forth their warnings.

No temperance lecturer need go beyond the Bible for striking instances of the ruin wrought by strong drink. Very early in the book in the case of Noah, the first drunkard, the sacred writings show the shamefulness of intoxication, and the horror of it. Nabal is pictured as a besotted drunkard under the condemnation of Jehovah. Elah, when he was assassinated, was "drinking himself drunk" in the house of his steward. Benhadad, when he was defeated, was "drinking himself drunk in the pavilions, he and the thirty and two kings." The heart of King Ahasuerus "was merry with wine" when he laid his shameful command upon the plucky Vashti. Belshazzar, the king, was at his cups when the mysterious hand came out of the darkness and wrote his ruin upon the wall. Herod was feasting when his lustful fancy was taken with the vile dance of the daughter of Herodias, and he gave her the life of that hero, John the Baptist. And so one might go on recounting tragedy after tragedy associated in the Bible with the wine cup. The Bible, in short, has but one synonym for wine, and that is woe. "Who hath woe? They that tarry long at the wine." "Woe to the crown of pride of the drunkards of Ephraim that are overcome with wine!" "Woe to him that giveth his neighbor drink!" To be sure, there is the famous prescription for Timothy's weak stomach, but it is only fair to set off against that Paul's many exhortations to temperance, and especially his vigorous assertions that if the eating of meat offered to idols was a stumbling-block to any, he would eat no meat while the world remained. How much more emphatically would he say that nowadays of wine! And then there is the Cana miracle! But no one has a right to say that the wine Christ made was intoxicating, and certainly no one can imagine that our Lord, if he were living to-day, would not be opposed to the accursed saloon and all its works. It is impossible to follow his teachings and be a drunkard.

Prohibition laws, reform waves, temperance crusades, and anti-smoking and chewing clubs did not make the people of this country any more abstemious in the fiscal year closed June 30, than in other years. On the contrary, there were millions of gallons more whisky and beer consumed, more than half a billion, or more, cigars used, nearly a billion and a third more cigarettes, and thousands of pounds more of snuff consumed than in the previous fiscal year. Worse than all else, there were used many millions of pounds more of oleomargarine, cheese, adulterated butter, and such. All this is shown by the statement of the Internal Revenue Bureau as to the receipts of that bureau for the fiscal year that closed June 30. The total receipts from all sources for that year were, $269,664,022.85 as compared with $249,102,738.00 for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1906. From the different sources the receipts were as follows: Spirits, $156,336,901.89 compared with $143,394,055.12 for the previous year; tobacco, $51,811,069.69 against $48,422,997.38; fermented liquors, $59,567,818.18 compared with $55,641,858.56; oleomargarine, $887,641.31 compared with $570,037.93; adulterated butter, $12,743.60, last year $9,258.43; renovated butter, $161,795.79, last year $138,078.09; miscellaneous, $886,052.39, last year $926,452.49.

But in dollars and cents the failure of the people to be impressed by sumptuary laws and moral regulations is not shown half as well as in gallons, pounds, and numbers. Take cigars and tobacco for example. In the last fiscal year there were withdrawn for consumption cigars to the number of 8,642,278,219, an increase in a year of 57,543,375. The refinement of city life, the lectures as to the indecency of chewing and pipesmoking have all been lost sight of on an independent citizenship. In the last fiscal year the people of this country chewed and smoked 369,186,303 pounds of tobacco as against 354,415,499 pounds the previous year, an increase of 14,270,804 pounds. Cigarette smoking showed a tremendous increase, the number used jumping from 3,783,000,000 to 5,511,862,130, and these were only the manufactured kind. In the snuff line 693,658 pounds more than in the last fiscal year were used, the figures being 23,401,196 pounds in the year just closed, and 22,707,538 for the previous fiscal year. Oleomargarine, despite all the oppressive laws passed against it in recent years, showed an increased consumption of 15,842,194 pounds. Renovated butter, adulterated butter, all had an increased market over last year. As to alcoholic drinks, the Saints of God will be shocked. In corn, rye, and similar whiskys the consumption was 11,409,252 gallons above the previous fiscal year. The consumption in the fiscal year 1907 was 134,142,074 gallons against 122,732,822 gallons in the year before. In spirits made from apples, peaches, grapes, and pears, there was a similar increase, as shown by the fact that the consumption was 1,993,668 gallons against 1,781,643 gallons last year. In the consumption of beer, which has gradually become the national drink, the increase was 3,894,474 barrels over the former fiscal year. Each barrel represents 31 gallons, which makes the total increase 116,833,220 gallons of this beverage. The figures for the respective years 1907 and 1906 were 58,546,111 and 54,651,637 barrels. Internal revenue officials say the increase would have been much greater, but for an exceedingly cool and wet spring which reduced the consumption during that period, and yet the great divines say we are fast becoming a great Christian nation; also a sober nation. It might be well to think, when we say that we have no time for temperance talk. The Saints are in danger as well as others.

FIRST GENERAL EPISTLE TO GRUMBLERS AND FAULTFINDERS.

CHAPTER ONE.

Ever since the creation of the world man has been subject to grumbling and faultfinding, until in many instances it has become chronic, and has plunged many into a bottomless whirlpool, from which, when once entered, it is hard for any one to extricate himself. It is like a contagion, it grows with the years and spreads like wild-fire. Nothing is easier than to find fault and grumble. The little child can do that; the idiot and the wise alike can do it. Nothing will create more harm, more hard feeling, more discouragement; nothing will bring about more direful results if continued, especially when practiced in the church of the living God. Because of it the children of Israel were slain in the wilderness and not permitted to enter the promised land.

So long as we are in this mortal clay there will be faults and mistakes on the part of all men; but when all men are subject to faults and mistakes why then should we continuously be finding fault with others, when we ourselves are no better? "Let him that is without sin first cast a stone," (was the language of the Master) if such an one can be found; if not, what business have we to cast stones?

There is a right way and there is a wrong way of adjusting things, when adjustment is needed. The right way is to go according to the law. Grumbling and faultfinding and talking of the faults of our brethren and sisters to others is the wrong way, will never make things right if wrong exists. If faults and mistakes are found among the family of God, love, as the predominating influence of the Spirit of God, would prompt us to go to the one at fault and call his or her attention to what we consider a mistake, and try to have the fault corrected in this way, without further publicity. In this way true love would be manifested. "He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love."—1 John 4:8. "And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves: for charity preventeth a multitude of sins."—1 Peter 4:8, I. T.

Charity is the true love of God, and where that exists no backbiting, grumbling, fault-finding, evil-speaking, and scattering broadcast to the world the mistakes of each other can exist. Charity forbids it. Those who have by constant practice acquired that habit, virtually acknowledge that they have not the true love of God in them. "In this is the children of God manifest, and the children of the Devil: whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother."—1 John 3:10.

CHAPTER TWO.

And it came to pass in the days of Jacob, when he dwelt in the land of Canaan, that one of his sons, Joseph by name, had a dream which he told his brethren. And it came to pass that the dream displeased his brethren, because they recognized that they should do obeisance to him, and that he should reign over them, and they hated him all the more. And in the course of time he had another dream, which he told to his father and to his brethren. And it came to pass that his father rebuked him for the dream, and his brethren envied him and found fault with him and murmured against him.

And as the brethren of Joseph were feeding their flocks a long way off, Joseph was sent by his father to inquire as to their welfare, and when they yet saw him a long way off, their spirit of fault-finding and murmuring and envy was aroused within them, and they conspired against him, and said to each other, "Come . . . let us slay him, and cast him into some pit, and we will say, Some evil beast hath devoured him: and we shall see what will become of his dreams."

And it came to pass that one of his brethren delivered him out of their hands, and he was stripped of his coat, cast into a pit, and finally sold to some merchants on their way to Egypt.

And thus it was that envy, fault-finding, and murmuring against their younger brother had begotten a spirit of murder within them. And it came to pass in the course of time that the Lord punished them for their evil thoughts and deeds and caused a famine to come upon their land; and, having heard of the abundance of corn in Egypt, they went there to buy corn, but knew not that it was from their younger brother, whom they had sold into Egypt, and whom they had intended to slay, but by whose wisdom God prospered Egypt, they bought their corn. And it came to pass that in the course of time, he made himself known to them, and they did obeisance to him whom they had intended to murder.

In those days the famine was very severe in Canaan, and Jacob and all his sons went down to Egypt to dwell, where they were afterwards in bondage for four hundred years.

CHAPTER THREE.

And it came to pass that the kings of Egypt oppressed the Israelites greatly, and when four hundred years had passed away, and the children of Israel had endured many afflictions, the Lord raised up a man by the name of Moses as a leader and deliverer of his people Israel from Egyptian bondage.

"And Israel saw that great work which the Lord did upon the Egyptians: and the people feared the Lord, and believed the Lord, and his servant Moses."

And it came to pass that as they were traveling in the wilderness, that the people began to grumble and find fault with Moses, saying, What shall we drink? And the Lord provided a means whereby the waters were sweetened, because they were bitter, and their thirst quenched.

And again the whole congregation of the children of Israel found fault and grumbled at the Lord's anointed ones, and said: "Would to God we had died by the hand of the Lord in the land of Egypt, when we sat by the flesh pots, and when we did eat bread to the full; for ye have brought us forth unto this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly with hunger." And it came to pass that the Lord heard that they were finding fault with Moses and Aaron, "And Moses and Aaron said unto all the children of Israel, At even, then ye shall know that the Lord hath brought you out from the land of Egypt. And in the morning, then ye shall see the glory of the Lord; for that he heareth your murmurings against the Lord: and what are we, that ye murmur against us? . . . For that the Lord heareth your murmurings which ye murmur against him: and what are we? Your murmurings are not against us, but against the Lord."

And it came to pass, that after the Lord had given them manna to eat that they again began to grumble against Moses, saying, "Wherefore is this that thou hast brought us up out of Egypt, to kill us and our children and our cattle with thirst."

And it came to pass that, like the brethren of Joseph their forefathers, their fault-finding begot within them a spirit of murder: "And Moses cried unto the Lord, saying, What shall I do unto this people? they be almost ready to stone me."

And it came to pass that in the course of time certain ones, by the name of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, found fault with Moses and became jealous of his position, and poisoned the minds of two hundred and fifty men of prominence among Israel, and raised up a sedition against Moses and Aaron, and said to them, "Ye take too much honor upon you, seeing all the congregation are holy, every one of them: wherefore then lift ye up yourselves above the congregation of the Lord?" And they refused to listen to the reasoning of Moses, and they accused him falsely of having brought them up out of a land that floweth with milk and honey, or given us the wilderness and to make himself a prince over them. "Moreover thou hast not brought us into a land that floweth with milk and honey, or given us inheritance of fields and vineyards: wilt thou put out the eyes of these men?"

Thus they falsely accused Moses. And so great was their rebellion that they influenced the whole congregation against Moses and Aaron, and the Lord saw it and said to Moses and Aaron, "Separate yourselves from among this congregation, that I may consume them in a moment."

And it came to pass that the men of God plead with the Lord in their behalf and fell upon their faces and said, "Oh God, the God of the spirits of all flesh, shall one man sin, and wilt thou be wroth with all the congregation?" And it came to pass that the Lord answered the prayer of his servants, but told them to separate the congregation from these wicked men, and the Lord caused the earth to cleave asunder and it swallowed up Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, and all that appertained to them, and he caused a fire to consume the two hundred and fifty men who were associated with Korah, Dathan, and Abiram in this rebellion against Moses and Aaron.

And it came to pass that on the following day all Israel grumbled and found fault with Moses and Aaron, saying, "Ye have killed the people of the Lord." And the Lord heard it and said to Moses, "Get you up from among this congregation, that I may consume them as in a moment." And it came to pass that a plague went forth among the people, but the man of God prayed to the Lord and offered an atonement for the people, and the plague was stayed, but not until fourteen thousand and seven hundred had died. Thus the Lord punished the grumblers and the faultfinders.

And it came to pass that even Aaron and Miriam, the brother and sister of Moses, found fault with him, and the Lord heard it and caused Miriam to become leprous, and she was shut out from the camp seven days, when the Lord healed her in answer to the prayer of Moses in her behalf. And it came to pass that the Lord was displeased with all their grumbling and fault-finding, and he said unto Moses and Aaron, "How long shall I bear with this evil congregation, which murmur against me? . . . Say unto them, As truly as I live, saith the Lord, as ye have spoken in mine ears, [complained against me,] so will I do to you: your carcasses shall fall in this wilderness; and all that were numbered with you, according to your whole number, from twenty years old and upward, which have murmured against me. Doubtless ye shall not come into the land, concerning which I swear to make you dwell therein, save Caleb the son of Jephunneh, and Joshua the son of Nun."

And thus did the Lord punish all the grumblers and fault-finders in Israel who were witnesses of his wonderful works in leading and delivering them from the hands of the enemies who oppressed them.

"But with whom was he grieved? . . . was it not with them that had sinned [the grumblers, faultfinders, and false accusers], whose carcasses fell in the wilderness? And to whom swear he that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not? . . . Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it"—Paul.

ECHOES FROM THE PAST.

The millennium. This is a condition of the earth, described in the word of God as a rest, a time of peace, a thousand years' reign; but like most of the life-giving, soul-cheering promises that the Allwise has seen fit to give to the fallen race of Adam, the hope of this long-looked-for rest at many times has been jostled to one side by the storm-clouds of unbelief: But, though the mighty billows roll, and the winds and the waves of unbelief dash high, and, like the anchor, this glorious hope is buried for a time beneath the foam, yet when the warm sunshine of God's Spirit has again caused the storm-clouds to give way to the all-inspiring rays of celestial light, then this anchor has again and again been raised to view.

We can yet hear the vibrating strains struck upon the chords of inspiration so long ago. Patriarchs, prophets, and apostles have all voiced the glad refrain. Yea, more. A mighty voice from the celestial throne has been heard proclaiming, "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God."—Revelation 21:3.

The psalmist David has said, "Arise, O Lord, into thy rest; thou, and the ark of thy strength. Let thy priests be clothed with righteousness; and let thy saints shout for joy. . . . For the Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest for ever; here will I dwell; for I have desired it." Next we turn to the silver-tongued prophet of Israel. "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth! Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing: for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion."—Isaiah 52:7, 8. The apostle John in speaking of this wonderful condition says: "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."—Revelation 20:6.

There has never been a time when the inspiration of the Almighty was enjoyed by the children of men, but what this wonderful theme, the millennium, has been spoken of. It has been as an anchor to the souls of thousands of honest men and women. Yes, those who have lived in the sunshine of heavenly light, in the different ages of God's mercy to man, have poured out their gratitude to God in thanksgiving for such a wonderful provision. But as often as the true light of gospel principles has been obscured by the dark clouds of unbelief, this hope of the millennium has been lost to view.

I want to now give my readers a few items in support of the great and marvelous work of God in these latter days; and in doing so I will first call attention to some of the words of God to Joseph the Seer: and we might say, that this was when the "Spirit of God like a fire was burning," and men's hearts leaping forward in the hope of latter-day glory.

Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, your Redeemer, the great I AM, whose arm of mercy hath atoned for your sins, who will gather his people even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, even as many as will hearken to my voice, and humble themselves before me, and call upon me in mighty prayer. . . . Wherefore the decree hath gone forth from the Father that they shall be gathered in unto one place, upon the face of this land, to prepare their hearts, and be prepared in all things, against the day when tribulation and desolation are sent forth upon the wicked; for the hour is nigh, and the day soon at hand, when the earth is ripe; and all the proud, and they that do wickedly, shall be as stubble, and I will burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that wickedness shall not be upon the earth; for the hour is nigh, and that which was spoken by mine apostles must be fulfilled; for as they spoke, so shall it come to pass; for I will reveal myself from heaven with power and great glory, with all the hosts thereof, and dwell in righteousness with men on earth a thousand years, and the wicked shall not stand.—Doctrine and Covenants 28:1, 2.

This was given in September, 1830. Again the Lord says:

Behold, verily I say unto you, that these are the words of the Lord your God; wherefore, labor ye, labor ye in my vineyard for the last time: for the last time call upon the inhabitants of the earth, for in my own due time will I come upon the earth in judgment; and my people shall be redeemed and shall reign with me on earth; for the great millennial, which I have spoken by the mouth of my servants, shall come.—Doctrine and Covenants 43:7.

While we might give much more from this same source, we feel that what we have given will be an incentive to those who love the "light." Another evidence of the latter-day work that we wish to notice for the benefit of the reader is, that while the Lord was giving the above instructions to the prophet Joseph, in the way of calling his church out of the wilderness, there were others who seemed to, in some way, realize this "restoration" age. Walter Scott, the pathfinder of Campbellism, wrote in 1828:

Beloved Brethren:—The Christian of the nineteenth century has been permitted to witness the accomplishment of wonderful events. Providence has stationed him on a sublime eminence, from which he can behold the fulfillment of illustrious prophecies, and look backward upon nearly the whole train of events leading to the millennium. Afar off, and upon the background of the picture before him, of wonderful extent, and in all the greatness of imperial ruin, appear the three great empires of Babylon, Persia, and Greece. Nearer to hand lies Rome; eternal Rome! terrible in her origin, terrible in her glory, terrible in her decline and fall! Living and acting through a long series of ages, she approaches the very verge of the present scene of things, till she assumes the distracted form of the ten kingdoms spoken of by Daniel, the remains of which now reel to and fro upon the face of Europe, like a drunken man, ready to be engulfed in the yawning judgments of Almighty God. . . . Brethren, we have a right to expect great things of our Father, if we are united and stand fast, striving together for the faith of the gospel. And be it known to you, brethren, that individuals eminently skilled in the word of God, the history of the world, and human improvement, see reasons to expect great changes, much greater than have yet occurred, and which will give to political society and to the church a different, a very different, complexion from what many anticipate. The millennium—the millennium described in scripture—will doubtless be a wonder, a terrible wonder to all.—The History of the Disciples, by A. S. Hayden, pp. 171, 173.

Again under the heading, Expectation of the Millennium, we read.

The ardor of religious awakening resulting from the new discoveries in the gospel was very much increased about the year 1830 [indeed it was.—J. T. D.], by the hope that the millennium had now dawned, and that the long expected day of gospel glory would very soon be ushered in. . . . This hope of the millennial was based upon many passages of holy scriptures. All such scriptures as spoke of the ransomed of the Lord returning to Zion, with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: that they should obtain joy and gladness, and that sorrow and sighing should flee away, (Isaiah 35: 10,) were confidently expected to be literally and almost immediately fulfilled. These glowing expectations formed the staple of many sermons. . . . They animated the hope, and inspired the zeal to a high degree, of the converts, and many of the advocates of the gospel. . . . Some of the leaders in these new discoveries, advancing less cautiously as the ardor of discovery increased, began to form theories of the millennium. The fourteenth chapter of Zechariah was brought forward in proof—all considered as literal—that the most marvelous and stupendous physical and climatic changes were to be wrought in Palestine; and that Jesus Christ the Messiah was to reign literally in Jerusalem and in Mount Zion, and before his ancients, gloriously.—A. S. Hayden's History, pp. 183-185.

It seems almost useless for me to say that I believe that these people, some of them, were moved upon by the Spirit of the Lord that was then causing the gospel sun of the latter-day glory to shed forth her all-inspiring rays upon the nineteenth century. And I have sometimes thought, had such men as Walter Scott and others been a little more independent in their views, that, like Sidney Rigdon, they would have led those that were disposed to follow them into the enjoyments of the restored gospel.

But alas, for these bright hopes, and the joy that accompanied them! We will now present to the reader the "head and horns" of what is known in history as the "Current Reformation," by Mr. Alexander Campbell. And like the he goat of Daniel's vision, Mr. Campbell stamps upon these fondly cherished hopes with all his power. Hayden writes of him thus:

Mr. Campbell, whose eye was fully open to all, was not slow to perceive all this, and he felt called to undertake the needed correction. He commenced, in the Millennial Harbinger, for September, 1834, a series of articles under the title of The Reformed Clergyman, which . . . had for their aim the wider purpose of correcting the errors entertained and propagated to the detriment of the practical work of the gospel.

Again, "Mr. Campbell's non de plume of The Reformed Clergyman, was not to all a concealment of the real author of the essays." And then he concludes by saying "that the remedy had wrought its cure." (Hayden's History, pp. 188-190.)

We have noticed with a degree of interest that to this day, since the "remedy wrought its cure," the followers of Mr. Campbell have "stood pat" for this wonderful (?) "remedy." But to return: While these bright hopes have been brushed to one side by Dr. A. Campbell, I want to here append a few of the bright promises of the Lord to his Saints in these latter days. In speaking of the restoration of the gospel, the redemption of Zion and Jerusalem, and the great restoration age of latter days, the Lord says to the prophet Nephi:

Verily, verily, I say unto you, all these things shall surely come, even as the Father hath commanded me. Then shall this covenant which the Father hath covenanted with his people, be fulfilled; and then shall Jerusalem be inhabited again with my people, and it shall be the land of their inheritance. And verily, I say unto you, I give unto you a sign, that you may know the time when these things shall be about to take place, that I shall gather in from their long dispersion, my people, O house of Israel, and shall establish again among them my Zion. And behold, this is the thing which I will give unto you for a sign, for verily I say unto you, that when these things which I declare unto you, and which I shall declare unto you hereafter of myself, and by the power of the Holy Ghost, which shall be given unto you of the Father, shall be made known unto the Gentiles, that they may know concerning this people who are a remnant of the house of Jacob, and concerning this my people who shall be scattered by them; verily, verily, I say unto you, When these things shall be made known unto them of the Father, and shall come forth of the Father, from them unto you, for it is wisdom in the Father that they should be established in this land, and be set up as a free people by the power of the Father, that these things might come forth from them unto a remnant of your seed, that the covenant of the Father may be fulfilled which he hath covenanted with his people, O house of Israel; therefore, when these works, and the works which shall be wrought among you hereafter, shall come forth from the Gentiles unto your seed, which shall dwindle in unbelief because of iniquity; for thus it behooveth the Father that it should come forth from the Gentiles, that he may show forth his power unto the Gentiles, for this cause, that the Gentiles, if they will not harden their hearts, that they may repent and come unto me, and be baptized in my name, and know of the true points of my doctrine, that they may be numbered among my people, O house of Israel: and when these things come to pass, that thy seed shall begin to know these things, it shall be a sign unto them, that they may know that the work of the Father hath already commenced unto the fulfilling of the covenant which he hath made unto the people who are of the house of Israel.—Book of Mormon, pp. 463, 464.

Yes, we know that the work of the Father hath already commenced, and the children of Israel are being gathered home to their own land. Hence, we are still hoping and praying for the great promise, "the millennium," to be realized. Indeed, our faith in these promises is growing stronger; and our hopes are growing brighter. Listen:

And Enoch beheld the Son of Man ascend up unto the Father; and he called unto the Lord, saying, Will you not come again upon the earth, for inasmuch as you are God, and I know you, and you have sworn unto me, and commanded me that I should ask in the name of your Only Begotten, you have made me, and given unto me a right to your throne, and not of myself, but through your own grace; wherefore, I ask you if you will not come again on the earth? And the Lord said unto Enoch, As I live, then so will I come in the last days—in the days of wickedness and vengeance, to fulfill the oath which I made unto you, concerning the children of Noah: and the day shall come that the earth shall rest, but before that day, shall the heavens be darkened, and a veil of darkness shall cover the earth; and the heavens shall shake, and also the earth; and great tribulations shall be among the children of men, but my people will I preserve; and righteousness will I send down out of heaven; and truth will I send forth out of the earth, to bear testimony of my Only Begotten; his resurrection from the dead; yea, and also the resurrection of all men: and righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out my own elect from the four quarters of the earth unto a place which I shall prepare; a holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle, and it shall be called Zion, a New Jerusalem. And the Lord said unto Enoch, Then shall you and all your city meet them there, and we will receive them into our bosom, and they shall see us, and we will fall upon their necks, and they shall fall upon our necks, and we will kiss each other, and there shall be my abode, and it shall be Zion which shall come forth out of all the creations which I have made; and for the space of a thousand years shall the earth rest.—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 12, 13.

And so may it be! Let the echoes ring!

Yours for the "millennium,"

IS IT ACCORDING TO GOD'S LAW TO PREACH FROM NOTES?

So far as any direct and specific statement of the law is concerned, we know of none either permitting or forbidding this practice, and it therefore becomes a matter of deduction or inference from other statements which have no direct bearing upon the use of notes in preaching.

Like all other public speaking, preaching is intended to lay before us certain principles. These in the aggregate are known as the law of God, and where law is to be enunciated and explained we can not be too exacting in our efforts to do the work correctly. We know that lying at the bottom of all such efforts the intelligent forces are to be used to the best advantage. The old pagan idea of inspiration is that it seizes the faculties of man, controls and utilizes them exclusive of the will and thought of the individual; but the Christian interpretation is that inspiration comes into the mind as a stimulative and enlightening force, quickening the powers of perception, broadening the comprehension and leading our thought with intensified power, of which we ourselves are conscious at the time.

We can perceive of no valid objection to the use of notes in preaching where the mental condition of the preacher is such that they serve as an aid to him in the proper presentation of his subject-matter. By notes we mean merely topical headlines, directing the attention in a succinct manner to the presentation of thought so that each part of the subject-matter may occupy its proper place and aid in fixing in the mind the final purpose of the sermon. We know there are many speakers whose particular mode of thought and speech require the employment of all reasonable helps, and where such conditions obtain the previous study of subjects and arrangement of facts, to be used in note form, are but wise and precautionary measures which any prudent person would employ.

In Mark 13: 11, the Savior instructed his disciples thus:

"But when they shall lead you, and deliver you up, take no thought beforehand what ye shall speak, neither do ye premeditate: but whatsoever shall be given you in that hour, that speak ye: for it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost."

Language of similar import is found in Matthew 10: 18-20. This appears to be a special provision for extraordinary occasions, but of course can have no reference to the ordinary preaching of the gospel. In fact, if this were to be the general rule, there would be no necessity for giving this specific instruction to apply upon the occasions referred to:

"Verily I say unto you, He that is ordained of me and sent forth to preach the word of truth by the Comforter, in the Spirit of truth, doth he preach it by the Spirit of truth, or some other way? and if it be some other way, it be not of God."—Doctrine and Covenants, 50: 5.

The opinion seems to obtain with some that the inspiration of the Spirit must necessarily be instantaneous, yet this Spirit is promised to be with us as an abiding Comforter, and while with the minister out of the pulpit and in his studies, it is but reasonable to conclude that it will be operating then as well as when the hour of preaching comes.

Paul reasoned in the tenth chapter of his Roman letter concerning the preacher and his work and asked the question: "How shall they preach except they be sent?" indicating clearly that successful preaching requires more than mere oratorical effort; but this additional element of the "Spirit's presence accompanying the word spoken" in attestation of its truth, is not dependent either upon the absence or presence of notes which may or may not be employed by the speaker; but it is dependent upon the individual being sent and recognized of God, and upon his statement of truth. True we are told that we receive the Spirit through prayer, and if we "receive not the Spirit we shall not teach," (Doctrine and Covenants 42:5,) indicating clearly that no matter what our notes may be, in the absence of this essential factor at the time, the effort can not be successful so far as preaching is concerned. This does establish the fact that according to the law of God, either with or without notes, we are forbidden to teach without the Spirit's presence, but nowhere is the inference made that the Spirit will not be present simply because the speaker has notes to aid him in his effort or that it will be certain to be present simply because he has made no notes.

Those of us who have heard the general run of our preachers do not need to be told that many of them have the same ailment or deficiency of which Moses complained—but unlike him they are unwilling to admit it, and in the absence of similar [assistance] (their brother speaking for them) if they speak at all they are at a disadvantage even with all the helps they can command. We anticipate the objection will be here made by some that the Spirit's presence will overcome all this, "bring to your mind things past, things present, and show you things to come;" but we all know from practical experience that through some hindering causes this is not always done, and the Spirit itself appears to be restricted in its operations to some extent by the condition of the mind upon which it is working; and where deficiencies exist such as were recognized by the Lord in the case of Moses, alternatives and remedial agencies may be properly introduced. The man who, when standing before a congregation, becomes embarrassed so that he can not think clearly and readily, and his faulty expression is the natural consequence of this, will find notes upon the subject, made when in study and meditation, not only an acceptable and material help to him, but still more profitable to the people whom he is seeking to instruct.

In the case of one who thinks quickly and speaks fluently, and whose store of knowledge is ever at his command, notes are not only unnecessary but may be an absolute hindrance. This class of preachers, however, are in the minority; and even though they are our best, it is not because they speak without notes, but because they are in other ways so endowed that they do not need them. The duty to preach is placed upon every one who holds the priesthood, with the exception of one or two minor officers, and this duty is to be performed like all others, in accordance with our several abilities; and making due allowance for all that the Spirit's presence does for the preacher, we know that many are deficient both in their concept and in their expression, and where this can in any way be overcome by previous study, under the Spirit's influence, and notations made of the thoughts then begotten for future help, there can be nothing found in the law of God to prohibit such procedure, while in the light of reason and good judgment there are the strongest incentives to pursue such a course.

I mention one case which has come under my observation. I knew well an elder who belonged to the early church and who is now numbered with us, well informed upon all points, who had heard some of the best preachers which the restored gospel claimed present the gospel in its power. He considered this the greatest of all gifts, and in line with the injunction to "covet earnestly the best gifts" he asked the Lord, if it pleased him, that he might be thus endowed; but while making this request he stated that at the same time it occurred to him it might not please the Lord to give him this great gift, so he placed before him an alternative—to give to him what he considered the next best gift, that if he was not a great preacher to give him sense enough to know it; and I have heard him say at different times the Lord gave him the latter. Like Moses, he knew he could not speak, yet he was a most devoted servant, well informed, always at his post of duty, ready and willing to do all in his power. Why was he not endowed as he desired? Why are not many others similarly blessed? The use of notes may aid such speakers as these, but even then they can not hope to equal the efforts of those who excel as preachers without the use of notes.

This matter has rightfully been left to our better judgment; there being no law to prohibit, its employment must at least be permissible. Where passages of scripture, or references thereto, can not be readily or accurately quoted from memory, it is certainly a much better method of teaching to employ notes to be accurate in such matters, than to misquote the statements and thereby leave erroneous impressions.

SHE CONQUERED SELF AND WON THE BOY.

The sculptor takes the rough marble, and by patient, skillful work with a hammer and chisel, brings out his ideal, whether it be angel or demon. The marble is a senseless thing, a clod, and the sculptor makes what he will of it.

The mother takes her child, a bit of divinity wrapped in its garments of mortality, and she may make what she will of it. But not as the sculptor works may the mother work. No senseless thing, no clod is hers.

There is a great deal said about the grave responsibility of bringing up a child. But what sweet and gracious thing is there that is not attended by grave responsibility? If we look closely, we shall see that it is responsibility shirked or evaded, that causes discontent and unhappiness.

We know that there is a grievous wrong and evil in the world, but man is of God's creation, the crowning work of his hand, and all possibilities lie within him. And when we take a child to rear, we have but to teach it the sweet, true lessons of life.

It is not an outer form of good conduct that we desire, but that the child be genuine, true, and pure to the heart's core. It is one thing to tell a child a thing, and quite another to be loving and wise enough to convince him of its truth. But our children are alive, responsive, divine, and if we really love and care for them, and desire to be wise and true in our dealings with them, we shall not fail. But if we look upon our children as a trouble and a care, and require only an outer form of goodness, there are many pitfalls ahead for them, and much trouble for ourselves. A woman whose time and attention was largely taken up with interests outside her home, was the mother of a bright, active boy. But from the time he lay in her arms, a wee morsel of humanity, with pressing needs and many demands, she had looked upon him as a burden, a troublesome thing. It is hard to believe that such mothers love their offspring. But the bond of motherhood is something apart from the will or volition; it is heaven-born and deep-seated as the life power itself.

This boy was of an active, nervous temperament, and early evinced a mischievous turn that kept those about him wondering what would happen next. Pushing himself along and creeping from one thing to another, he never was quiet unless asleep; and when he became firm and sure on his baby feet, his waking hours were one long tour of discovery.

There were "don'ts" and "mustn'ts" and "No, no!" and "Let alone," until the mother felt that life was indeed a burden. She lived in anticipation of the time when the child would be old enough to know better. But she learned, as many another has, that if a child is left to outgrow a bad habit, he but outgrows it to grow into another. Her constant reproof and admonition had not made a good boy of him while he was a little boy, and as he grew older, he developed ill-nature and irritability.

If we will consider the law of cause and effect, we shall readily see how natural a sequence this was. An active, energetic child needs employment and direction, not repression and subjection, and a constant thwarting and crossing the disposition nature gave, must necessarily bring conflicts and discords.

During her boy's first years the mother felt that her problem was a hard one. Now he stood before her, strong, well developed in body, his head well up to her shoulders, and her problem was yet unsolved. Her boy was not well behaved, he was not mannerly, he was not even respectful. His habits were strong and well fixed, and she had little influence over him. His interests were entirely different from hers: he had his own companions and amusements. How could a woman be in touch and sympathy with a boy? Yet was he to be a discord in the home so long as it sheltered him?

One day the mother unwittingly disconcerted a cherished plan of the boy's by giving him a certain task and insisting on its performance. She saw his ill-humor and irritability, and, knowing nothing of his plans, she administered a sharp rebuke to his mood.

Instantly his anger blazed, and a rude, discourteous retort escaped him. The flash in his eyes was not keener than that in the mother's, as she placed a hand upon his shoulder and looked into his face.

"Do you know, my son," she said, "what is in your heart, what it is in your nature that prompts you to act and speak thus?"

For a moment the angry eyes of the mother held the angry eyes of the boy; a moment before he comprehended the question, then, between set teeth: "Yes, I know."

In that awful moment the mother had a glimpse of the future. What did she see in her boy's face? What did she see? What had she herself aroused? The sculptor may make a demon of the marble; the mother may do the same with her living child. And, oh the pity of it! She had given her boy a master. She had forced him to acknowledge the supremacy of evil, and to own himself its servant. Laid bare before her, she had seen the evil in her boy's nature.

For days, the flashing eyes, the set face, the hissing voice haunted her and robbed her of her peace. And a longing came over her, a deep and earnest desire to take her boy to her, and keep and save him from the future she foresaw. She marveled that she had been so blind, and looked with wonder and contempt on the things to which she had given her attention, to the neglect of this child that God had placed in her hands. Was her opportunity gone, or would it be possible for her to win him yet? Is there any reason why a mother may not be to her boy all that she desires to be?

It was several days before this mother had a word alone with her boy.

She was sitting alone in the firelight one evening, and he came and stood before her. He felt the restraint that had resulted from their last interview, and with all his faults, he was a boy, just a commonplace boy, and his heart yearned for love and sympathy.

There had been no caresses between them of late, and although the mother longed to press the curly head to her and kiss the boyish face, she remembered that boys are not fond of demonstration, so she only took his hand, the boy's brown hand, in hers and stroked it gently.

Whatever knowledge may have come to her of the mistakes she had made during her boy's tender years, and however deeply she regretted her lost opportunities, she realized that, although the past was gone, she still had her boy, and that, just as he was, he was her own son, her dearest possession. Her voice was sweet and low when she spoke to him.

"I was wrong to speak as I did the other day," she said. "I know that, deeper and stronger and surer than the passion and the wrong, there is good nobility and manliness in my boy's heart. We each have our choice which shall rule in our lives, the good or the evil, and that which we obey is our master. Let us think about this, my boy. Let us suppose a person yields to the temptations that come in his way, and does not control the wrong impulses that come to him: this is yielding himself a servant to evil. And what would follow? Think of the sin and shame, the crime and suffering there is in the world. Would any one care to be a servant to a master who is responsible for these doings? This is a grave and serious thing, my boy, and every day we must face it. Ignorance will not save us. Many years ago a great and wise man said, "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?"

The boy was silent. These thoughts were new to him, and perhaps he did not quite grasp their import. The mother felt this to be the case and endeavored to express herself as plainly and simply as possible.

"Now, let us suppose we choose good for our master, and determine that under all circumstances we will be an obedient servant. What are some of the things that will follow? We should never lose our tempers, nor say cross, unkind things."

Then an overwhelming sense of her own unworthiness came to her.

"My dear boy," she said, in a broken voice, "your mother has not always been kind and loving, but let us make a new start, you and I together, and from this time on let us try to be good and kind, and to make each other happy. My own dear boy, let us pledge ourselves to the master we wish to serve."

Her heart was full, and she gently drew her boy to her and kissed his boyish face.

He threw his arms about her.

"Mother," he said, and she felt the hot tears on his face, "mother, I do love you, and I will try to be good."

And this was the beginning of a new life for mother and son. The scene of the first night was not repeated. There were no more tears and caresses, for there are few boys who have not a natural aversion to these, but there was a firm and sure understanding between them; they were comrades, friends.

The mother seldom offered a reproof, and she made no direct mention of the boy's faults. She talked to him in a pleasant, simple way, less about manners and more about manliness. She held up high ideals; the true worth of life; the courage and self-control that mark the conquering hero and insure victory.

And in this larger vision her eyes were not blinded by her boy's little faults and thoughtless ways. There was real good in the boy—true worth and genuineness; for, as we have said, he was just a commonplace boy.

And although she never mentioned his faults direct, she soon noticed that he was growing out of them. Not into something worse, as she had before had occasion to deplore, but toward the ideals held up before him.

And the boy became sure of his mother's affection and sympathy; she was interested in all his plans and amusements, and even joined in them herself. And she made the acquaintance of his friends and companions, and invited them to the house occasionally, and helped him to entertain them. True, he had thought best to drop some of his companions, for he could not take all kinds into the home. But, at his mother's suggestion, he made the acquaintance of some boys he had not known before. And all the boys liked his mother; she was so companionable and pleasant. He thought her the very best mother in the world, and he was careful to do nothing that would grieve or vex her.

He made many failures and mistakes, as all boys do, but he had a friend strong and sure—his mother—who never lost faith in him.

And the mother learned that it is not the thing itself so much, as the way in which we look at it, that counts. The manner in which she had estimated values now became a wonderment, a source of amazement to her.

She had given her time and attention to work that in itself was harmless, but when she contrasted its usefulness with the keeping and saving of her boy, she no longer permitted it to take the whole of her attention, nor the first place in her life. If we look at the saving of a human soul, this alone is not a small thing. And who can estimate what may be accomplished by a truly great and good life? Whether it be amid lowly considerations, or in the higher places. A good and pure life is like leaven in a measure of meal. All that come in contact with it are uplifted and made better; some of the gloom and darkness is destroyed, and the world is nearer the condition in which it was created. Who the master shall be that the men and women of the future obey, depends largely upon the mothers of to-day.

Let us make no mistake in our estimate of values.—Christine Randall Beals in American Motherhood.

Questions upon January Reading.

Have we from the first an ideal for our children? How does the child differ from the marble of the artist? How does the mother's work differ from the artist's? What is a great cause of discontent and unhappiness? What kind of teaching will bring out the possibilities for good that be within the child? What is our desire for the conduct of our child? Are we sufficiently anxious for the genuine in his character? When we tell a child a truth what must be our attitude in order to succeed in convincing him? What would be the result if parents looked upon their children as a trouble and a care? Would giving the children an outer form of goodness lessen the trouble? To what extent should our time be occupied with outside interests? What is the effect of repressive, antagonistic treatment upon an active, nervous temperament? What treatment, then, should be employed to check bad habits before they become fixed, or are followed by others equally bad? How may employment with unobtrusive direction of the child's activities serve as an aid? Is it possible for a woman to be in touch and sympathy with a boy? Why was this mother not in touch with her boy? Why were their interests different? Where did she lose her influence? Ought any child to be a discord in the home? Has a mother the right to give her son a task and insist on its performance? To what extent should the son's plans be regarded? What was the primary cause of the clash between this mother and son? What did this reveal to the mother? How far was she responsible for the demon aroused in her son? Might she have given him better preparation for the turbulent period of adolescence? When the change in her feelings occurred, now did she look upon the things that had hitherto occupied her attention? How did the boy feel? During the early years of adolescence how do boys feel about accepting caresses? How did this mother show respect for this diffidence? What do you think of her manner of approaching her son by humbling herself? To what part of the boy's nature did she appeal? What do we see in her words, "You and I together"? What did the firm and sure understanding between them result in? How did she now regard the boy's lesser faults? Of what did she talk more? What is the effect of having faith in a boy? What should take first place in a mother's life? Upon whom does it rest to decide who shall be the master of our future men and women? Do we need to change our estimate of values?

Letter Department

PANA, Illinois, November 28, 1907.

Saints Herald: The real purpose of this letter is to sound a note of warning that the Saints may not be deceived by one Matthews, who with a woman he calls his wife (?) is traveling through the country and claiming to be a member of the church and recently from Columbus, Ohio; seeking to obtain money to help them to get to St. Louis.

They were in this city yesterday and first went to the residence of Elder Sharrock, the president of the branch, to obtain his aid in getting money. Bro. Sharrock not being at home, one of the sisters came with them to Bro. Nowack's, where I was staying; and, after listening to his story, and when he told his name, my memory was refreshed and I told him that they might as well pass on, as we were posted, and his name had appeared in the church papers, and he could not work any schemes on us. They lost no time in getting out, and after they had gone I learned that the sister who conducted them to the house said she thought she caught the perfume of beer in his breath; and about two hours later I had occasion to go down town and happened to see them on the street, so thought I could do a little detective work on my own account, and shadowed them for a short time, and saw them go into one of the saloons of the city. I waited for some time to see them come out, but they did not come out while I waited.

I am associated with Bro. David Smith, of Michigan, who has been preaching in a schoolhouse near Hanson, a small place about twelve miles south, and last Monday evening after he had closed his sermon a man by the name of Prophetr, a preacher of the Christian or Campbellite Church, arose, and, after some insulting remarks to some of the audience, challenged Bro. Smith or any representative of the Latter Day Saints' Church for public debate. Under the existing circumstances there was nothing to do but accept his challenge, and the propositions have been agreed upon; i. e., each church affirms its faith, organization, doctrine, and practice to be in harmony with the Bible.

It is expected that the debate will come off next week, unless the preacher backs out.

Your brother in bonds,

CHARLES H. BURR.

BONESTEEL, South Dakota, November 29, 1907.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I have written to the HERALD, but I have been trying to labor in the interest of this great work ever since I became acquainted with it, which has been about thirty-seven years. I went to Utah with my parents in my childhood, and experienced some of the hardships of Utah life. During the eight years I was there, although young, I had faith in God. My prayers were answered many times. At one time while up in the mountains I heard the voice of the Spirit warning me of danger I was in, and giving me instruction suited to my needs at that time, and well do I remember when that accursed thing (polygamy) sought to creep into our home, and, seeing the terrible effect it was having upon my mother, how I sought a secluded spot in the shades of night, and there cried unto God that he would turn father from that evil, that the peace of our home might not be destroyed. Then and there I received an assurance and such peace of mind that I knew my prayer would be heard. I went into the house and told mother to stop her grieving, that all would be well, that father would see his mistake, etc. And so it was, for in a little while after that he turned away from the thought, and when he heard of the Reorganized Church through J. W. Gillen and E. C. Brand, he embraced it at once. Then he thanked God many times that he escaped falling into that terrible snare.

These experiences, with others that I might relate, were a source of strength to me, and led me to believe that God is full of love and mercy. I have always had a desire to trust in him, and hope to continue to do so all the days of my life. It seems to have been my lot from my early childhood to wade through deep water, and everything I accomplish is through a hard struggle. When I entered the quorum of Seventy, in 1886, I fully expected to devote all my time and strength in trying to honor that calling till the church should say, Do otherwise. But several times since I have been compelled to retire from the active ministry through circumstances over which I had no control, or so it seemed to me; but through all those trying scenes I never lost faith or hope in God; and it is through the grace of God that I can say that I am still in the faith, and have full confidence in this work. Right here let me say a word in behalf of the church publications. All through those years of trial and trouble they were a source of comfort and cheer to me, and how any Latter Day Saint can live, month after month, without seeing them and say they have the Spirit, and an interest in the work, is more than I can understand. I do not believe they can do it truthfully.

I am interested very much in the articles written in Autumn Leaves by Bro. Lambert, giving his experiences in the patriarchal office; for it confirms me in the belief that the promises made to me in my blessing will be fulfilled. Oh, what precious things the Saints miss by not taking the church papers! Are they not some of the helps spoken of by the apostle Paul?

Another thing I have noticed in my travels: branches that are dead spiritually. Some have life, but it is life opposite to the life of Christ, because the officers fail to do their duty. I was in a branch not long ago where one of its members had just joined the Utah church, and their people were telling how they were getting our members. I learned that it was one that should have been expelled long ago, but was still retained in the church. He was a drunkard. He abused his family, and would steal money from his wife, which she had earned by washing and other hard work, and spend it for drink. He was not fit to be in any decent society. So, if the officers had done their duty, the church would have got rid of him before the Brighamites got him; then they could not have had so much to say. The Saints in some places do not expect to see a priest or teacher in their house unless some crime has been committed; then they come to arrest them or to prefer some charge against them. This should not be. God has placed those officers in the church to bless the home—helps in the church. They should be active men, possessed of the Spirit, and they should visit the Saints in their homes, teach them their duties, pray with them, then they will feel blessed; and, leaving a peaceful influence there, they will go their way, feeling that some good has been done; and the Saints will feel that an interest has been taken in their welfare. Those men should be as watchmen on the walls, that as soon as anything wrong appears, they should be on hand to check it. When a fire breaks out, the sooner the firemen get to work the more property is saved. So, on the same principle, are those officers placed in the church, and men should not accept such positions unless they have a desire to work and are in a condition to do the duty required. And in my judgment they should be united as one, and if they are not they should meet together in prayer-meeting as officers till they get the Spirit which makes men feel humble, feel like servants of the Lord and of the people. And when the Saints see that manifested, they will imitate it. There must be a head, and when the head is in a healthy condition, the body will feel the effects of it; but when the head is sick, the whole soul is faint. So it will be in this case. It seems to me the church, in many places, is losing sight of this important matter. It is getting too old-fashioned, and we are seeking new fields to move in, etc. But I do not believe God has changed from his purpose. He has given his law to bring about that perfection we all desire to attain unto, and that law is still in force. "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say; but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise."—Doctrine and Covenants, page 200. The sooner we wake up to that fact, the sooner this church will appear as a vineyard where the husbandman has gone through with his pruning-hook and removed the dead branches, cleared up the weeds, where the trees all present a good healthy growth, and are bearing fruit, as Jesus says: "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples."—John 15: 8. "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination."—Proverbs 28: 9. I believe we should be more devoted to these small (?) things, and not conform so much to the world. Hear what Paul says: "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you."—2 Corinthians 6: 17.

Whenever the Lord has spoken to us of late he has called our attention to these things. He wants us to be a happy and prosperous people. The Lord, speaking of the building up of Zion, says: "Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself."—Doctrine and Covenants, p. 281. This great salvation is offered to us; but if we will not receive it, he will pass us by and seek another people who will, for there must be a people made ready to receive him when he comes. He is no respecter of persons.

Well, I did not expect to follow this line of thought when I began to write; but you have it for what it is worth. There are a few Saints left here, and they would be glad to see a number more move in who would help in the work. They have a fine church building standing almost idle. This is a very fine farming country; good land. Any Saints wishing to buy good land would do well to visit this part.

Ever praying for Zion's redemption,

W. M. RUMEL.

Dear Herald: Perhaps a few lines from one who is isolated might be appreciated by some. I came here a year ago on the 29th of November, and am the only Saint here. Am nine miles from a branch, and do not have the privilege of meeting with the Saints very often.

A lady friend called on me one day, and while talking on church matters she asked me if our elders were still out preaching, and why none of them have been here to preach. She upholds our doctrines, and says she believes we are right. Would like to have some of the traveling missionaries make us a call. I believe some good could be done here. Hall rents are rather high but perhaps I could get one of the churches here, or a schoolhouse to hold meetings in. I am glad to do anything that I can to help spread this gospel that is so dear to me. I rejoice in this latter-day work, and though I am isolated, I find that the loving Master has blessed me and comforted me since I have come into this work.

I was baptized four years ago last August at Cleveland, Iowa, while there on a visit to one of my brothers. He and I are the only two of ten children that belong to the church. Saw in one of the HERALDS last spring where Bro. John Avondet, of Omaha, Nebraska, had donated a Book of Mormon written in the French language to the church library, so I wrote to him for information as to where I could obtain one. I wanted one for my father and mother, as they can not read English. If Bro. Avondet sees this, would like to hear from him, as I did not receive any reply to my letter. Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may ever be faithful.

Your sister,

KATE MALCOR.

KEOKUK, Iowa.

Editors Herald: Not having reported for some time I thought perhaps we had better speak, for fear some one would think we were asleep. We had the pleasure of hearing from the sub-missionary in charge, Bro. James McKiernan. Bro. McKiernan is very much liked here, and we are always glad to see him in the pulpit. Our meetings are very good, and especially our prayer-meetings.

We were made to rejoice to see Bro. Jared Jacobs bear his testimony. He also has been in faithful attendance at all other meetings. We have four services every Sunday. We have Book of Mormon study one hour before preaching Sunday evening. It is very interesting.

Bro. Robinson, Brn. Hall and Jacobs, have been helping along this line, and about five times as many sisters. Among them is Sr. David from California. Some evenings we have several outsiders. Some of these aged brethren like to see their servant sweat by asking him questions; but I manage to get one of the others to answer, and by so doing nearly all take part. If any of the traveling elders pass through here, we would like them to stop off and tell us what they know. Our chapel is lighted by electric lights, and newly papered.

The Keokuk pastor was looking kind of blue the morning before Thanksgiving Day, as some one stole his only chicken, given to him and family for dinner by Bro. and Sr. Dawson. But how things will change! For before dark a delivery boy came carrying a large turkey, all dressed ready for the oven. We tried to persuade him he was mistaken; but he insisted it was for the Mormon preacher. Who sent it? We have accused quite a number, but all say, No: some one of God's children that is practicing the teaching of the Savior. But that is not all. While Grandma Engles was shaking hands, a five dollar bill remained in my hand. We went to the Wednesday evening prayer-meeting, and heard many good testimonies. The good Spirit was present. Upon arriving home, we discovered Sr. Alice Jacobs' tracks, as under the tub was a large mince pie and a loaf of brown bread. Of course we had to do some planning before retiring, as Sr. Peters had prepared for us to eat dinner at her home. While we were bustling around next morning, the door bell rang, and there was Georgia. Grandma Bogue had sent her up with a basket well filled with apples and preserves, butter, and cocoanut cake. Sr. Bogue is one of the pillars of our branch. Surely God's richest blessings will be hers.

Perhaps I had better not say any more, for it may result in a lively scramble among the pastors next spring. I hope conference will favor Keokuk next spring, for there is a little band of faithful Saints here who are not selfish, but willing to do what they can.

I think we will have to trouble the water again soon. I hope the Saints will remember me in their prayers, for I am very much disabled by being hard of hearing, and also my vocal organs are affected.

Your brother,

A. C. ANDERSON.

OMAHA, Nebraska, December 2, 1907.

Editors Herald: Bro. Hale W. Smith and the writer just closed a very interesting series of meetings held in a school-house seven miles north of Blair, Nebraska. As a result of our meetings, I received the subscriptions to Ensign I am sending you, as also sold one Book of Mormon and Voice of Warning. The prospect at the place mentioned above is real good, for two families have said they were coming into the church. I believe that it is a good and safe course to pursue, to advise those contemplating entering the church to investigate the work quite thoroughly, and then they can take the important step with a feeling of assurance. My labors thus far this conference year have been mostly in the Northern Nebraska District, owing to the fact that their missionary force has been small, not to exceed two men at any one time.

Upon last evening, by the request of the officers of the branch in Omaha, we began a series of meetings, and were gratified to see so many Saints out, and the interest manifest. We hope to accomplish good here, and I am pleased to learn that the branch at this place is progressing so nicely. At Blair the branch seems to be receiving new life, and Bro. Lytle is working hard to get the gospel before the people there. Bro. Smith and the writer also held some very good meetings at Decatur, Nebraska. From this place I will go farther south in the State.

Editors Herald: In my letter, a part of which is found on page 1104 of SAINTS' HERALD for November 27, found in first column, fiftieth line from top, I quoted from memory and said, "affairs of the church in all the world," in which I did not quote correctly. The thing aimed at is in section 104, paragraph 12, and section 120, paragraph 4.

Will conclude a series of twenty-three meetings at this place this evening. Have had good interest, and the preacher has been benefited.

In the faith,

J. C. CRABB.

BANTRY, North Dakota, November 25, 1907.

Editors Herald: We are at present located where our reunion was held this year, and we are pleased to note the benefits derived through association with others of "like precious faith."

We had a truly spiritual time in prayer-meeting yesterday. The outward manifestations were abundantly bestowed upon us by our heavenly Father, and the true spirit of love and humility that accompanied each prayer and testimony was enjoyable to a degree that the Saints only enjoy once in a while. Oh, that we were more faithful! Why not live in this grand spiritual atmosphere all the time?

Through the gift of tongues, Bro. Elmer Weddle was called to take the presidency of the "Lake View Branch," "that my servant James Wagener may travel, preaching the word; and build up and strengthen the branches of this district."

Singing in tongues to the tune of "Israel awake from thy long, silent slumbers," the general sentiment of which was for the Saints to Prepare, for the gathering time of my people is now here; that my people may now enter in and dwell upon that land which I have chosen, even the land of Missouri; that they may live in righteousness before me, and be preserved from the calamities that are coming upon the earth.

Bro. Wagener was presented with a nice fur coat and pair of mitts costing twenty-five dollars, by the members of the branch and outside friends, and expects to accompany the writer at the conclusion of this series of meetings; and we bespeak for him the confidence and good will of the Saints, believing that he will make you an excellent district president. He is now free to devote all his time to the work until spring.

Three weeks ago we were called upon to baptize Srs. Hattie and Gertrude Kennicut. The two boys are happy in the thought of having their companions in the church with them. Little Dorothy Baumann was to have been baptized, but a severe attack of tonsillitis prevented for a while. We are glad to note Sr. Artie Ammon is somewhat improved, and hopes to join her husband shortly at Lethbridge, Alberta.

And now, dear Saints of North Dakota, a few words on temporalities will perhaps not be out of place. We are thankful for the generous assistance which you have always given in the past. It seems as though a time of trial is upon us, and a special effort is necessary to keep the four families of our mission supplied. It is truly a "hand to mouth" time. Please forward all the help you can. Make it a subject of prayer to God, and he will open the way for you. And remember, "The greater the sacrifice the greater the glory."

Your servant in the Lord,

WILLIAM SPARLING.

STEPROCK, Arkansas, November 28, 1907.

Editors Herald: 'Tis Thanksgiving Day, 1907. "Praise the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits." A day set apart by a great nation to praise and adore the Maker of the universe is upon us. A day of festivities. A day of joy. But, Bro. Editor, I would have your readers know that money, and not Jehovah, is the god of this old world. Money, money, money! is the cry of commerce; money to move the cotton and rice and lumber of the South, the wheat of the North, and the corn and cattle and swine of the central regions. Money, money, money, fills the mouths and hearts of the masses; lots of money, oceans of money in their hearts, but none in their pockets.

Money, money, money, this day absorbs the senatorial and legislative bodies of all nations. The panic, the panic! the awful need of money is the cry of all mercantile centers. Nor does it stop there; it reaches to the surface and edges. Why! the news of the panic has reached so far out that the average "Arkansawyer" this day is even praying for money.

Money, money, money, is the burden of all the papers. And oh, what tangled stories they do spin. Their columns are big with false reports; they are bloated to the bursting point with smoke and fog and dust of the money craze. So it is that in the place of thanksgiving, it is a day of jargon, and a confusion of gabble.

Well, we are not much concerned about these matters, so long as we are assured that the Lord is at the helm, yet we can not help being jarred a little by the tremendous vibration that shakes the financial universe.

So our hearts vibrate with joy, and our souls are lifted up in thanksgiving. Yes, praise the Lord, O my soul, for the privilege of coöperating with his Son in the work, the great work of emancipation of his children from Babylon. Amen and amen.

Elder E. L. Henson and the writer are on their way to Johnson County, western part of the State, where we are due on the 4th of December. This evening we go to Bald Knob to be with the Saints over Sunday. We need the prayers of all Saints.

Fraternally,

Dear Saints: I still love the law of God, and am striving to serve him, as he would have me to do. Although he has taken my loved companion from my side, and my life seems, oh, so lonely, still I believe that he doeth all things well; and some of the Saints have had dreams telling them that the Lord had a work on the other side for him to do. At times it seems as though it is more than I can endure. And if it were not for the precious promises of the gospel, I could not. But he was a man that loved the gospel above everything else in this life, and he told me fifteen years ago that the Lord had made it known to him that when he died he would be killed. He often talked to me about it, saying he wanted me to be prepared; but I told him I could not bear it, and should pray that it might not be. But the word of the Lord shall not return unto him void. So, though crushed, I bow to his holy will; and though my days here be few or many, with God's help, they shall be given to his service. Dear Saints, do not cease to pray for me, for my cross is very heavy, and I truly need your prayers. I eagerly look in each HERALD to see if his (my husband's) picture is there. I hope it will appear soon. Ever praying for the onward march of the gospel, and ever grateful for the kind letters and prayers of the Saints, I remain,

Your sister in the one faith,
E. A. PAYNE.

BEAVER, Missouri, November 26, 1907.

Editors Herald: I should like to know the whereabouts of one Bro. David Young and his family, who formerly lived at Plano, Kendall County, Illinois, and later at Carriatown, Jasper County, Missouri. Can some one of the HERALD readers furnish me with the address of any living member of that family? If so, it will be thankfully received, by reason of its being of historical importance.

J. C. CHRESTENSEN,
Southern Missouri District Historian.

MOUNTAIN HOME, Idaho, December 1, 1907.

Dear Saints: We have an afflicted child for which we have found no help as yet, and we ask and beseech you all to ask God to heal him if it be his will; otherwise, his will be done, not ours. We are out here alone, with no church privileges, but our papers, which we love to read. Ever praying for the right, we are,

ALEXANDER AND SARAH HOFFMAN.

POLLOCK, Missouri, September 27, 1907.

Dear Herald: Will send in my renewal. Everything is quiet here in the way of church work. Our branch is disorganized here. I am preaching once a month in a Union Church near the Deed's Schoolhouse. Those who have labored here will know where it is. I have started the work in two new places this fall; have monthly appointments at them. Have been blessed in presenting the truth to the people; have had good interest, and have been made welcome by those where I have been. I often think of the ones who have labored here: T. W. Chatburn, D. E. Tucker, M. M. Turpen, R. M. Elvin; and William Summerfield who has gone to his reward, but whose works still follow. I would appreciate a visit from those brethren who still remain, at any time; also, any that have labored with us in the past.

We had to give up our baby boy in September. We sadly miss him; but God knows best. This leaves us but one.

Wishing one and all peace and consolation, I remain,
F. M. BURCH.

NEVADA, Missouri, December 2, 1907.

Dear Brethren: Please announce in HERALD for my correspondents to send mail to my home address, Nevada, Missouri, 629 North Main Street, not to Cameron, Missouri, my field address. I am at home taking care of sick wife, who has been very sick.

Respectfully,
F. C. KECK.

A Dream.

About four o'clock on the morning of Sunday, June 30, 1907, the following dream was given me: I dreamed that I was occupying a position behind an embankment of earth which was quite extensive, both to the left and to the right; and saw a long column of brethren, young and middle-aged, thinly drawn out in lines as far as the eye could see. Some I knew, but the faces of many were strange. We were clad in ordinary citizens' apparel, but equipped with arms consisting of repeating rifles and light artillery. We were posing as soldiers in the front rank of a line of battle, our only object seeming to be to hold the position we occupied, while grape-shot and shell our enemy hurled at us was shrieking above us, and pounding the earth about us. The thunder of cannon, and confusion of voices fell upon our ears. Some faces were pale, but many showed their colors. I saw the forces of the enemy were divided into many companies, who would not hold one to another, while he who was commander of them all was clothed in red and sat upon a sorrel horse and wore secret emblems, and carried a sword in one hand. He whistled to attract attention, rattled with his sword, gave silent signals to rally and assemble, but they would not. They kept moving farther and farther away, while the noise of battle and confusion of voices gradually became less and less. I then noticed that it was becoming lighter and lighter about us and before us, and I heard one inquiring the cause of the great light which was increasing every minute, and our enemies all the time receding before us. Whereupon I cast my eyes about me to discern, if possible, the cause of the increasing light, and as I did so I beheld many lights, as it were, formed in a column, approaching side by side, forming a solid phalanx with many iron tracks running straight before them, coming directly to the position occupied by the front ranks. Then I answered and said, "These are war engines coming at our backs." When I looked again a dense cloud of smoke filled the sky above the engines, and the light above them was so great that solid and opaque bodies became as transparent as glass, and they came on until they were within a rod or two of the front column of men, and the empty space before us was whiter and fairer than a snow-covered plain. All the thunder and commotion of war was hushed. I turned about to look upon the splendid and stately column of engines which had approached so closely behind us, and lo, to my astonishment I was standing face to face with my brethren, and receiving kindly greeting.

Courage, brethren, who stand in trying places! There is, to support us, a world of glory which can not be broken, as well as a hope of an eternal crown.

News From Branches

NEW ALBANY, INDIANA.

Saints have continued in advancement during the month of November. The Sunday-school is progressing nicely, with much interest.

Bro. J. W. Metcalf of Louisville, has been with us, in company with Bro. Hanner, on several occasions. On last Sunday our sub-missionary in charge, Bro. C. E. Harpe, was with us, and gave much encouragement, and many words of cheer, which we all very much appreciated. On last Sunday we crossed with seventeen of our members to Louisville, to join the Saints there in partaking of the sacrament.

Bro. C. E. Harpe gave a very instructive sermon at our hall last night, assisted by the writer. We are looking forward to having a branch organized here soon. A good work can be done here if all continue with as great interest as in the past month.

LEEDS.—Quarterly conference of the Leeds District convened in the Leeds Branch room, Wortly, October 12 and 13, 1907. Business session opened at 7.35 p. m. W. R. Roberts was elected to the chair. Upon the entrance of the mission president and Patriarch Baty, at the request of the chairman, the previous motion was rescinded, and, after having accorded voice and vote to Bro. Baty, he was duly elected to the chair. District and branch spiritual reports were presented and accepted. Report of district and mission funds, showing a balance for the former of eight pounds, five shillings and one half pence, and for the latter, seven shillings and seven pence, together with the auditor's report thereon were presented and received. Committee on mission fund was presented, and it was moved that it be referred back for correction. Notice of motion was now entertained, as follows: Resolved, That this conference of the Leeds District petition the Manchester District that the two branches constituting this district be affiliated with the Manchester District. Resolved, That the secretary write the respective branches re the motion, to instruct their delegates how to vote. A communication re tithing and offerings, from C. H. Caton, Birmingham, was read and approved, and it was resolved that the same be read at the afternoon and evening meetings. It was provided that the expenses of Patriarch Baty, to Leeds, be paid out of the district funds. Adjourned to meet second Saturday in January, 1908.

Release of Missionaries.

To the Saints of the Atlantic States Mission: Elder Elmer E. Long, who was appointed to labor in the Maritime Provinces, is hereby released. Bro. Long has requested this for financial reasons. We cheerfully recommend him to the authorities of Lamoni Stake, as he is a faithful laborer in the vineyard of the Lord.

Elder L. R. Devore has been called from his work, in Ohio District, owing to the physical condition of Sr. Devore. As it is advisable for him to be near home, arrangements have been made between those in charge, and Bro. Devore will labor in Independence Stake the balance of this conference year.

Elder I. P. Baggerly being unable to fill his appointment in West Virginia for reasons presented to us, we hereby release him, and refer him to those in charge of Iowa, for labor.

Elder R. M. Elvin having failed to enter the field assigned him, Kirtland District, or to furnish us satisfactory reasons for not doing so, is hereby released.

U. W. GREENE,
G. T. GRIFFITHS,
Ministers in Charge.

Concurred in by the Presidency,
FRED'K M. SMITH, Secretary Presidency.

The Bishopric.

BISHOP'S APPOINTMENT—EASTERN MAINE DISTRICT.

To the Saints and friends in the Eastern District of Maine, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints: Please take notice that upon the resignation of Bro. Uriah M. Kelley, former agent for said district, Bishop Richard Bul-lard, permanent address, 107 North Street, Tufts College, Massachusetts, has been duly appointed to act as bishop of the Eastern Maine District of said Reorganized Church.

Bro. Bullard is now laboring in the territory of the Eastern Maine District, in connection with his other labors. The Saints and friends who desire to assist in the Master's work in said district, and who do not have an opportunity of meeting with Bishop Bullard, can communicate with him at his permanent address.

The Bishopric take pleasure in extending to Bro. U. M. Kelley, Indian River, Maine, especial thanks for his earnest and acceptable work in the Bishopric for so many years in the past. We trust the Lord will bless him in his present labors.

Commending Bishop Bullard to the Saints, and asking all that they will remember and perform their respective parts in the Master's work, and thus prove themselves laborers together with him in the redemption that all are praying and hoping for, I am, in behalf of the Bishopric,

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, December 7, 1907.

Bishop's Notice.

To the Saints of Lamoni Stake; Greeting: The year 1907 is now very near its close, and in order that the elders' families and the poor that are in our care may be properly supplied, and that our accounts may be closed promptly, we urge the Saints of the stake to hasten the payment of the tithes, offerings, and consecrations they may owe to the Lord's work. We have always been able to settle our accounts by the first day of January, though sometimes it has taken quite an effort, but unless the Saints come to our relief very soon, we shall not be able to close as satisfactorily for 1907 as we have for previous years. Saints should not fail to pay their tithe and offering accounts because of stringency in money matters, but should demonstrate their faith by the payment of these accounts with more than usual promptness.

As a bishopric we desire to express our thanks for the liberality the Saints have shown in contributing to the HERALD Office rebuilding fund, and we congratulate the Saints upon the increased capacity and effectiveness of this institution, which your action has made possible.

The sanitarium is also in process of building, and those who have not contributed what they desire to this fund should be up and doing.

Trusting that the Lord's people shall be as anxious that this branch of the work be in good shape as they are that they shall receive from the Lord the blessings that they need, we remain,

In bonds,

WILLIAM ANDERSON,

R. J. LAMBERT,

Lamoni Stake Bishopric.

December 9, 1907.

Pastoral.

The ministry of mission No. 3 will please be prompt in sending their January 1 reports to me at Lamoni, Iowa. If you have no blank notify me immediately.

In bonds,

J. W. WIGHT.

Correction; Change of Date.

To the Saints of the Southern Nebraska District: I see by the notice in the HERALD of November 27, that we gave the wrong date for the January conference. It should be January 19 and 20, instead of January 20 and 21. Please remember the date.

E. A. STEDMAN, President.

"The H. P. Annual."

To the high priests; Greeting: Before you read this you should be in possession of a copy of our long delayed quorum journal, which has been mailed to each member of the quorum. You will please correct errors as follows: Under caption of "Equality," page 22, paragraph 7, line 2, read "recognized," in lieu of "reorganized." On page 42, number 78, read "Crescent" for "Cresent." And on page 45, number 120, read "Missouri" for "Kansas."

Particular attention is called to the "Statement" that is inclosed. Brethren, the work has been done as by your order to the undersigned, and now the printer wants and needs his money.

Your fellow-servant,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

Wanted.

Boy and girl (brother and sister preferred) from nine to fourteen years old, by brother and sister in church. Apply to Elder C. J. Hunt, Deloit, Iowa, as to our standing.

F. M. SHELDON.

Conference Notices.

Conference of Northeastern Kansas District will meet with the Fanning Branch at 10 a. m., December 28, 1907. Frank G. Hedrick, secretary.

The St. Louis District Conference will convene at St. Louis, Missouri, Saturday and Sunday, December 14 and 15, 1907. Election of officers, and other matters of importance to the district will be transacted. Also desire a full report of the ministry. Secretaries will forward their reports by the 12th of the month. Let all come who can. C. J. Remington, clerk.

Addresses.

J. W. Rushton, 5 Woodland Mount, Spencer Place, Leeds, England.

S. F. Cushman, Jonesport, Maine.

J. B. Wildermuth, Baldwin, Iowa.

Marriages.

BAGGERLY—CLOW.—At the home of Bro. and Sr. I. A. Chamberlain, 124 East Locust Street, Davenport, Iowa, Bro. Joseph G. Baggerly, of Lamoni, Iowa, and Martha Annetta Clow, of Davenport, Iowa, were united in marriage, Wednesday evening, November 27, 1907, Elder J. W. Davis officiating. Bro. Baggerly is a son of I. P. Baggerly, of Lamoni, and Sr. Baggerly is a daughter of D. W. Clow, of Davenport. The wedding occurred in the house where the bride was born, it being where her mother was born and married; the property now falls to Martha by right of inheritance. The Saints of the Tri-Cities wish them happiness and prosperity.

SMITH—KRIEGER; BALSER—BOTKINS.—A double wedding occurred at the pleasant home of Bro. and Sr. W. J. Botkins, near Colgate, North Dakota, at 12 o'clock, noon, Thanksgiving Day, November 28, 1907. Ernest Smith, son of Sr. Botkins by a former husband, and Carrie Kreiger, and George Balser and Myrtle Botkins, second daughter of Bro. and Sr. Botkins, were married by Jerome E. Wildermuth. A sumptuous feast was enjoyed by the near relatives gathered to witness the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Smith go, in a few days, to their home near Roy, North Dakota, and Mr. and Mrs. Balser, near Hope.

Died.

WALKER.—Elder Joshua S., at Jonesport, Maine, October 25, 1907. He was born May 23, 1828, at same place; baptized June 28, 1871, by Josiah Ells. He held successively the office of teacher, priest, and elder, and was branch president many years. In all these offices he proved himself to be a loyal Latter Day Saint. He leaves behind him the savor of a good life. In 1874, he was married to Eliza M. Chase, who is still living and active in branch work. Thus more than thirty-three years of happy marital relations are terminated. Richard Bullard preached the funeral discourse.

CHRESTENSEN.—After an illness of but a few short hours, little Elsie Willmer Chrestensen passed away. She was born September 20, 1907, and passed away November 7, 1907. Her remains were laid to rest in the Fairview Cemetery of Joplin, Missouri.

RUMEL.—Amanda B., born at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, November 27, 1826. Joined the church about 1846. Was rebaptized by David H. Smith at Salt Lake City, August 23, 1869. Moved to Omaha, Nebraska, in the same year, where she resided until her death, which occurred November 9, 1907. Services from the Latter Day Saints' chapel, November 10, 1907, in charge of F. R. Schaffer. Sermon by J. R. Sutton. Sr. Rumel was the mother of eleven children, six of whom are still living.

THOMPSON.—Elder T. E. Thompson was born at Pomeroy, Ohio, January 23, 1853. Married to America I. Scott, at Scottsville, Indiana. Six boys and one girl were born of this union. He lived near Beeler, Kansas, since 1887. Bro. Thompson departed this life November 15, 1907, after an illness of less than a week. He leaves wife and seven children to mourn their loss. He was laid to rest in the Beeler Cemetery to await the resurrection of the just. Funeral-sermon was preached by John Teeters, assisted by E. H. Ebert.

HOWARD.—Bro. Austin Howard was born July 20, 1843, at Batavia, Kane County, Illinois. Was baptized into the church when young, by elder E. C. Briggs. Was united in marriage to Eleanor Biddoir, December 31, 1868. Of this union were born eight children, all living. Bro. Howard died November 21, 1907, at the Clarinda Hospital, Iowa. He was buried near Sugar Grove, Illinois, November 24. Sermon was preached by F. M. Cooper. Beside his children, the deceased left a loving and faithful wife to mourn his departure.

ROGERS.—Sr. Eliza Mather was born September 3, 1844, near St. Remi, Quebec, Canada. United in marriage to Daniel H. Rogers, January 1, 1867, near Sandwich, Illinois. Of this union were born four children, who, with the husband, survive. She united with the church when young. Died at Garfield Park Sanitarium, Chicago, November 10, 1907, after a long continued illness. Funeral-services held in the First Presbyterian Church, Piper City, Illinois, November 13, at 10.30 a. m., in charge of Reverend Long, pastor. Sermon by F. M. Cooper.

SHOEMAKER.—Martha Suradge. She was born December 7, 1864, at Salt Lake City, Utah. Married to Sherman Shoemaker in 1888. Eight children were born of this union, seven of whom survive. She was baptized at Bevier, Missouri, March 14, 1879. Died suddenly October 14, 1907. The funeral-sermon was preached in Saints' church by William Richards; Fred Mussel in charge. She was a faithful wife and an affectionate mother. Husband, father, mother, seven children, and a number of brothers and sisters mourn their loss. She was a niece of Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths.

JONES.—David M. Jones was born at North Ogden, Utah, November 25, 1860. Married Miss Margaret Thomas, January 2, 1882. This union was blessed with six sons and two daughters. Died November 18, 1907, at the hospital at Ogden, Utah. Was brought to his home at Malad City, Idaho, and buried November 21, Bro. E. E. Richards in charge, assisted by E. T. Richards, E. B. Morgan preached the funeral-sermon in the chapel.

GREEN.—Father George Green was born January 1, 1831, in the county of Norfolk, England. August 15, 1853, he married Kezia Lane Thurston. Of this union ten children were born. August 15, 1903, Bro. and Sr. Green celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. November 10, he was seized with a paralytic stroke while preaching from the stand, losing his voice. After waiting a moment to see if his voice would not return, he was obliged to retire. He passed away the 18th, at Appledore, Ontario. He did not regain his speech, but retained his consciousness to the end, and on that last morning called his family to his bedside, gave each a farewell, loving look, turned his face away and quietly and peacefully passed to his eternal abode. His oft expressed wish that he might die in the harness was fulfilled.

BELL.—Viola Armita, daughter of Mr. William and Mrs. Lena Bell, of Gage County, Nebraska, December 4, 1907, at the age of 1 year, 3 months, and 1 day. Funeral-service conducted by C. H. Porter, at the Dolen Schoolhouse, December 6. Interment in the Dolen Cemetery.

PETRE.—John Emmitt Petre, son of Bro. J. F. and Sr. Emma Petre, was born at Swink, Colorado, September 17, 1905. After an illness of nearly four months, he passed peacefully to his rest, November 26, 1907. Funeral-services at their home, in charge of A. H. Johnson. Sermon by J. E. Bozarth. Buried in cemetery at Knobnoster, Missouri.

A Physician Champions Candy.

"At its worst, candy is not half so dangerous as hash, soup out of a stock pot, bread pudding, or any other of the sacred mysteries wrought out of stale and decaying odds and ends, which are worshiped by many model housekeepers," says Dr. Woods Hutchinson, in the Christmas Woman's Home Companion. "The substitution of starch for butter or cream, to give body to the cheaper creams and pastes, while very disagreeable, is absolutely harmless, and like the use of rancid butter, or even cheaper fats, such as suet and lard, will promptly reveal itself to the unblunted palate. In fact, candy is peculiarly protected from many adultera-tions and dangers by the very delicacy and purity of the flavor demanded of it.

"At one time arsenic was said to be used to give the green color to the cheaper grades of candy, but it was never common, and has passed out of use entirely since the introduction of aniline dyes.

"To sum up, candy when eaten in moderate amounts and toward the close, or shortly after a meal is a harmless and often beneficial addition to our diet.

"While a liking for it is perfectly natural and wholesome, an excessive craving is generally a sign of disease. Those young ladies who are said to live chiefly upon candy and pickles do not owe their pallor to the candy they eat, but to some definite morbid condition, most generally based upon a lack of proper exercise in the open air or of sufficient sleep. This should be corrected by proper hygienic or medical means, and then their normal appetite for more substantial foods will return. Failing this, it is perfectly idle to try to cut off their supply of candy. They had better eat that than nothing, which will be their choice until their normal condition is restored."

Emergency Currency.

Just as past financial crises called for and found some old, some new, and some perhaps curious methods of carrying the country over a trying period, so has the present trouble seen a new development of the use of clearing-house certificates, so called. The usual forms of certificates employed were as outlined above, designed to circulate between the banks merely, and it was never intended by the original users that clearing-house certificates should be employed in the everyday operations of the public. This time, however, a form of emergency currency, credit checks, or, as they are called in many cities, "clearing-house certificates," have been issued under the authority of the clearing-houses of various cities. These have been for sums as small as $1, $2, $5, and $10, and not in the usual denominations of as many thousands. These small checks have been paid out for wages, accepted for food supplies and goods, and will presumably be returned and canceled when the craze for hoarding money in boxes, cupboards, and stockings passes away. Where a high rate of interest for their employment is charged they undoubtedly will be called in just as early as possible, except as numismatists and philatelists choose to preserve samples as illustrations of the various kinds of currency issued in our national history. Here it may be claimed that this form of currency is extra-legal in character, and there certainly have been some objections to accepting them, but they are not open to the imputation of being unsafe, as was the currency of an earlier time, which was often entirely unsecured. These certificates have behind them the pledged faith of the clearing-houses issuing them and they will be redeemed when presented. Still they are another and striking example of the burden to a country's trade of, to put it mildly, an unscientific currency system which has strewn the economic and financial history of the country with the wrecks of thousands of what would otherwise have been prosperous business enterprises.—From "The scope and functions of the clearing-house," by Frank Greene, in the American Review of Reviews for December.

Eat More Candy.

"Give children plenty of pure sugar, taffy, and butterscotch and they'll have little need of cod-liver oil," says Doctor Woods Hutchinson in the Christmas Woman's Home Companion.

"In short, sugar is, after meat, bread and butter, easily our next most important and necessary food. You can put the matter to a test very easily. Just leave off the pie, pudding or other desserts at your lunch or mid-day dinner. You'll be astonished to find how quickly you'll feel 'empty' again, and how 'unfinished' the meal will seem. You can't get any working man to accept a dinner pail without pie in it. And he's absolutely right. The only thing that can take the place of sugar here is beer or wine. It is a significant fact that the free-lunch counters run in connection with bars furnish every imaginable thing except sweets. Even the restaurants and lunch grilles attached to saloons or bars often refuse to serve desserts of any sort. They know their business! The more sugar and sweets a man takes at a meal, the less alcohol he wants. Conversely, nearly every drinking man will tell you that he has lost his taste for sweets. The more candy a nation consumes, the less alcohol. "The United States Government buys pure candy by the ton and ships it to the Philippines to be sold at cost to the soldiers in the canteens. All men crave it in the tropics, and the more they get of it, the less 'vino' and whisky they want. "In fine, the prejudice against sugar is born of puritanism and stinginess, equal parts. Whatever children cry for must be bad for them, according to the pure doctrine of original sin; besides, it costs money. I know families in the rural districts yet where the head of the family groans over every dollar's worth of sugar that comes into the house as a sinful and 'unwholesome' luxury."

When Honor Walks Abroad.

One evening at dusk, as Mayor Jones and I were going home, a negro tramp, unkempt and sinister, asked him for the price of a lodging. He had no change, but he handed the tramp a five-dollar bill, telling him to get it changed, and he could have his alms. We waited; the Mayor talked of other things; I, with far less faith than he, in some dubious expectation. But after a while the tramp came back, and into the Mayor's hand poured out the change in silver. The Mayor, humanly complaining of the heavy silver which the Treasury Department sends to us in the West so that New York may have all the crisp dollar bills, dropt the money in his pocket.

"Ain't you going to count it?" asked the tramp. "Did you count it?" asked the Mayor. "Yes." "Was it all right?" "Yes." "Well, then, there's no need for my counting it, is there? Did you take out what you wanted?" "No." "Here then."

The Mayor gave the tramp a coin and he went on. There was no possible ostentation about this; Mayor Jones had no need, in the dark, to do anything to impress me, his friend. I should not, indeed, stoop even to explain so much. But how much good did such confidence do that wandering outcast? How much good did it do me or others with whom he might come in contact? By the same law, possibly, my own lack of faith in the tramp would have led him to treat me differently.

When one understands this higher law as Mayor Jones understood it, every act of one's life, no matter how trifling or insignificant it may seem, becomes really of monumental importance, and the hasty word, the unkind glance, the very spirit, no matter how deeply hidden, in which a thing is said or done, are seen to have an effect which may reach further than imagination can go, an effect not only on one's own life and character, but also on the lives and characters of all those about one.—From "The golden rule in real life," by Brand Whitlock, in The Circle for December.

The Planters Discover Good Qualities in Norway Poplar.

Tree planters throughout the northern portion of the Middle West have had brought to their attention lately the extraordinary value of the Norway poplar, a near relative of the common cottonwood, which possesses fine qualities that bid fair to raise the prestige of the whole cottonwood family.

This cottonwood is shrouded in mystery, so far as its origin is concerned. It bears no cotton and is reproduced entirely from cuttings. The tree grows straight and lean and it is said that the bark never scalds or cracks. The wood is straight-grained and suitable for lumber. It splits easily, seasons quickly, and makes excellent fuel.

The Norway poplar grows very rapidly. In Minnesota it has been known to grow 50 feet high with a diameter of 17 inches in 14 years. It makes a good shade tree, retaining its leaves until late in the autumn, and on account of its rapid growth should prove very desirable for windbreaks and shelterbelts. So far as is known at present, this tree is perfectly hardy, and will grow under a variety of soil and moisture conditions. It seems, however, to respond quickly by increased growth to cultivation and care.

The advantage which the Norway holds over the Carolina poplar, one of the most popular of cottonwoods, is chiefly in its greater hardiness, better form, and the seemingly superior quality of its wood is shown in preliminary studies made by the United States Forest Service. It will be some time before the Norway poplar will be available for widespread planting, since cuttings of the true variety are at present very scarce and hard to obtain.

"Autumn Leaves"for 1908"Yesterday, To-day, and To-morrow"

There are three sisters that the world delights to love and honor—the past, the present, and the future. They never grow old. To each individual who will listen they whisper their secrets in turn. Those who listen and learn shall at last be in possession of truth. The past is fair to look upon, but a little shadow comes over her countenance. The present concerns us now, and soon we must learn the lessons of the future. It is of the present and the future that we wish to speak.

AUTUMN LEAVES STANDS FOR BEAUTY AS WELL AS FOR TRUTH. IT IS OF ARTISTIC AND LITERARY VALUE. IN ITS PAGES, "DIAMOND TRUTH" IS GIVEN A PROPER SETTING. THE BEST TALENT IN THE CHURCH IS USING PENCIL, PEN, AND CAMERA FOR YOUR PLEASURE AND BENEFIT THROUGH THE PAGES OF THE CHURCH MAGAZINE, YET LIKE ALL CHURCH ENTERPRISES IT WORKS AT A DISADVANTAGE FOR LACK OF FUNDS. WHAT CAN BE DONE?

The Messageof"Autumn Leaves"

Autumn Leaves is a magazine. If it were a person it would speak to you thus: The harvest is great and the laborers are few. We are admonished to pray the Lord of the harvest to send other laborers into the field. Shall we not help him to prepare and send those laborers forth? That is, has been, and shall continue to be my work. For that purpose came I into the world.

I help and strengthen the middle aged and the old who now bear the burden of this great work. But my special appeal is to the young men and women who must soon carry on the gospel work, if it is to be carried on at all by human beings.

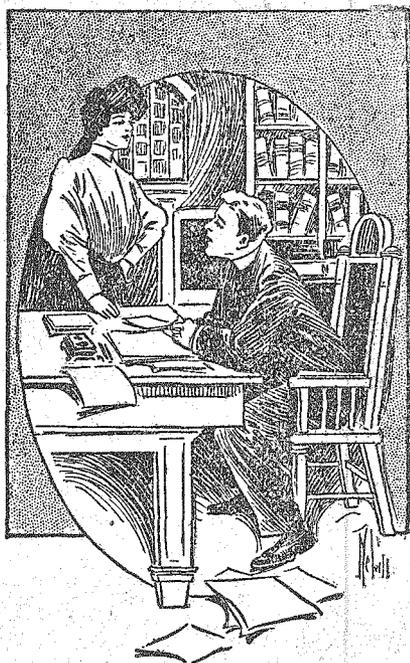

I go into the busy city and into the distant countryside. I go where the preacher can not go. My neat dress and the pleasant face catch and hold the attention of mine host and then I tell him the old gospel story.

I beguile lonely hours with poems, with true stories of adventure, with beautiful pictures, and with narratives of travel in foreign lands—and through it all I weave the golden thread of gospel truth.

I tell the people what the church has done in the past and what she is doing now. I delight to recount the histories of men and women who have borne an honorable part in the gospel service, and those who listen are inspired with new zeal and wisdom.

This is my work. No one else can do it. I ask little and give much. I am your magazine. Will you receive me into your home?

An Appeal to the Young

Do not forget the church literature. Get in touch with God and the church NOW.

What We Want You to Do

YOU HAVE HEARD the message of Autumn Leaves. If you are a subscriber we want you to continue as such. We are confident, though, that you will do so, because your past actions show that you know a good thing when you see it.

IF YOU ARE NOT a subscriber, will you join the ranks of our friends and send in your subscription for 1908? Pay your good judgment a splendid compliment and sign up now.

Autumn Leaves comes monthly to your home, beautifully bound and illustrated. You will enjoy reading it, and it will make you a better Latter Day Saint. Your visitor will read it and he will think better of the church. Your boys and girls will read it and will get in touch with the church and her teachings.

An Appeal to the Old

You can't scold religion into your children. We will show you a "more excellent way."

Autumn Leaves costs you only one dollar a year. Men give a good deal of thought to the food that they feed their hogs and horses; but too often they trust to luck when it comes to feeding the minds of their children. Why not reverse? Your child is the best thing that God ever gave you.

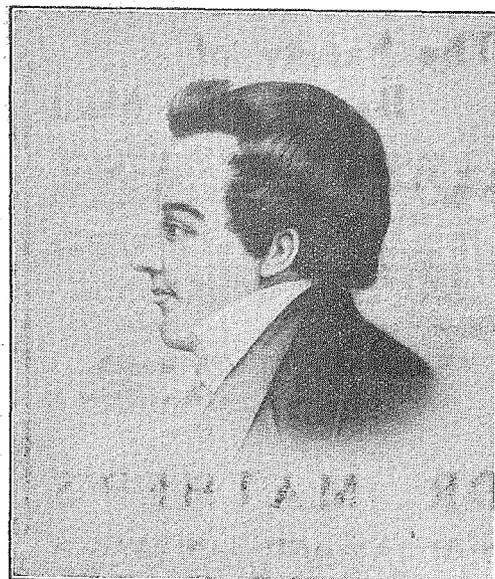

One wise mother writes, "Inclosed find one dollar for one year's subscription to Autumn Leaves. I am getting it for my son's Christmas present, so send it in his name. I thought it would be the loveliest gift a mother could give to her son."

There is a "time for every purpose under the sun." Now is the time to subscribe for Autumn Leaves.

A Glance at the Future

AUTUMN LEAVES will continue to solicit, secure, and publish special articles upon subjects of immediate interest, by men and women "who know." The Autobiography of Elder J. C. Clapp, at present running, will grow in interest and will be followed by others of equal value. The Daughters of Zion Department and Religio's Arena will still form an important part of the magazine. In fact old lines will be developed and from time to time something new, original, and attractive will be added—as for instance, forthcoming series, How I Became Converted, to which several have contributed.

Letters From The Past

One of the well known church writers has prepared a series of articles to begin in the January number. These articles are in the form of letters, supposed to be written by a young man, during the early days of the Restoration, from Manchester, Kirtland, Far West, and Nauvoo, relating the history of the church as it unfolded.

MANCHESTER, New York, March 29, 1820.

The three religious bodies before referred to have been holding a religious revival in the neighborhood. . . . And just to-day, to add to the excitement, it is rumored that young Joseph Smith has prayed over the matter and has had a vision that the churches are all wrong. I shall have an account from his own lips, for I have known him well.—Autumn Leaves, January, 1908.

JACKSON COUNTY BANK

I take the liberty of soliciting your patronage as we are in a position to do BANKING BUSINESS BY MAIL very satisfactorily. Open accounts can be placed with us for safety at your convenience and command. We have opened a savings department, paying interest on accounts of $1 or more and each member of the family should become interested in having a bank account building for future needs. We also pay interest on time deposit certificates. A number of the brethren are living here, others are looking forward to this location as a future home, and late revelation and admonition foreshadow coming events, adding materially to our spiritual holdings necessary to signs of the times, and in this connection our Board of Directors propose to safeguard the financial interests of the Saints by offering to them a depository proof against graft, greed, or calamity, governed by a kindred feeling born of the interest we have in common. It is not popular men, large capital, heavy deposits, National or State laws, that offer absolute security to depositors, but directors and officers progressive and conservative, possessed of the virtue of true manhood, shorn of all political ambition, with no taste for frenzied finance or mining speculation, and no inclination to furnish funds for others in that line. I point with considerable just pride (I assume) to our Board of Directors as named below. Feel at liberty to write us on matters that concern you in Jackson County, Missouri.

OFFICERS: Ellis Short, President; M. H. Bond, Second Vice-president; William Crick, First Vice-president; J. D. Briggs, Cashier.

DIRECTORS: Ellis Short, William Crick, M. H. Bond, J. D. Briggs, G. H. Hilliard, Doctor Joseph Mather, Doctor O. H. Riggs, Horace Sheley, A. L. Yingling.

THE MANHOOD OF CHRIST.

I drew them with cords of a man, with bands of love.— Hosea 11: 4.

There are three periods in the history of Christ that are filled with human interest. His first appearance in our midst is as the babe of Bethlehem. He comes to us in that period with all the appeal of helpless and innocent childhood, brooded over by careful and jealous motherhood. Here is an appeal to sentiment, reverence, and even pity when we read the words addressed by Simeon to Mary, "Yea, a sword shall pierce through thy own soul also."

At a later period he appears to us, following his resurrection, as a triumphant God, declaring that all power both in heaven and on earth, is given into his hand. He appeals to us as a deliverer.

Man has ever been ready to hail the conquering hero. Man has ever been ready to do homage to kings. Most heroes have had their weaknesses and most kings have had their vices. But here is the King incarnate, the impeccable hero. Those who really understand him do not withhold their allegiance; and when all come to understand, all will bow before him and acknowledge his sovereignty.

But between the infant and the conqueror there was a period when he was simply a man, when he was tempted in all things as we are tempted, yet with no more aid from divinity than any man may receive who will, he proceeded to show us what a man can be and do. He had passed out from under the fatherly care of Joseph; he was not yet crowned King of kings and Lord of lords: he was simply a man, and appealed to his followers to be his friend. He did not care for servants. Elijah, the prophet, had his "servant," and so did Elisha; but Jesus desired no servants—he wished for friends, comrades, some one to walk the road with him.

He was no fanatic, dreamer, sentimentalist, weakling, or coward. He was a live and virile man who could live in the desert, ride the heaving sea, climb the mountain, breast the tide of commerce in busy cities. He appealed to men and women, and with the "strong cords of a man" drew to him the tax-gatherers, fishermen, publicans, physicians, the pure Mary, the Magdalene, believing John, and doubting Thomas. He held them with "bands of love."

PARTICULAR ATTENTION.

Is called to the notice in the Original Article Department of this issue, by Heman C. Smith for the Board of Editors, concerning the publication of the "Journal of History." The publication of this journal was authorized by the last General Conference. The first number is to be issued in January, and it is especially desired that all who want to receive this valuable magazine from the beginning, subscribe at once. Let your orders be received not later than January 15.

How finely the "cords of manhood" and the "bands of love" were blended. God had his ideas of what a man ought to be; but it is doubtful if any one had ever fully lived the life of a man until Christ came. He was given as our object lesson of what a man should be. It is as though he said, "You admire manhood, but you look for it in the bloody butcher or the iron-heeled despot. Let me show you: In a man strength is blended with tenderness and power is blended with love. No man is a man who is cruel, or domineering, or false, or unable to rule himself."

All true men are not physically strong, all physically strong men are not true men; but we are constrained to believe that Christ was a perfect type of man. He endured forty days of fasting without the slightest weakening of purpose. Throughout his entire ministry he was a man without a home. He had no suitable food supply and at times was compelled to pluck and eat the raw grain. He had only a single garment. In a word, he worked hard for three years without what we would consider proper food, shelter, or clothing. So much for his physical strength.

But it is the real test of manhood to remain fixed and true when the body is broken. This he did. He watched and prayed while others, being worn and weary, slept. He showed himself worthy to command others by being always obedient to his superior officer. He typified the soldierly virtue of obedience when in the extremity he declared, "Nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done." He faced unpopularity, one of the severest tests. Finally, upon the cross, enduring terrible pain, he showed his ability to stand by a cardinal principle of truth, when he prayed the Father to forgive those who were persecuting him, on the ground that they did not know what they were doing. His moral vigor is undoubted.

Now here is the point for us to consider: Christ did not spring into the world a full grown man, physically and morally complete as we find him later on. Our attention is riveted by the fact that he came as a child, undeveloped, and achieved his perfect growth by always adhering to certain laws which are embraced in his gospel. Thus he not only brought that gospel but he was himself a product of it. If, as Amiel says, "The test of every religious, political, or educational system is the man which it forms," then we have an invincible argument in favor of the gospel, because representative atheists as well as representative Christians have lauded the manhood of Jesus.

That we should observe the laws that Christ observed and obtain the results that he obtained is perhaps best stated in the parting exhortation which David gave to Solomon his son, "Be thou strong, therefore, and show thyself a man; and keep the charge of the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, to keep his statutes, and his commandments."—1 Kings 2:2, 3, I. T. ELBERT A. SMITH.

ITEMS FOR "HERALD" READERS.

The following statistics will be of interest to the Saints who read the HERALD, showing the value of savings banks' deposits. The number of savings banks in the United States seems to be small from the following list, but the number of depositors is large, and the average value of deposit is rather surprising under the circumstances.

It is a wise provision for any one who can, to create a reserve fund by deposit:

Savings Banks Statistics: There are 1,319 savings banks in the country, with 8,027,192 depositors, and the average amount due each depositor is $433.79. Iowa, with 494 of these institutions, leads the list, but the number of patrons is only 335,527, while New York, with 134 savings banks, has 2,637,285 depositors. The deposits in New York are correspondingly high, and the average balance is $506.25.

While at Honolulu we were permitted to read a history of the Islands by a Mr. Alexander, who seemed to be well informed in regard to the subject matter, and from that history we learned what is stated in the item below. In 1836 there was an approximate number of Hawaiians 136,000, but the census of 1896 gave only some 36,000, showing a decrease of 100,000 of population. Where the statistics given below came from, we do not know:

Hawaiians Dying Out: The native Hawaiian population is rapidly decreasing. In 1836 it numbered over 108,000, and in 1900 it was less than 30,000, and at present it is estimated at 20,000.

In addition to the item of statistics above, there are some items in regard to the Hawaiian Islands that would be interesting to the readers of the HERALD because of the significance attached thereto. The independence of the kingdom as it was established by Kamehameha I, was acknowledged by England and France, November 28, 1843, and by the United States under Secretary Daniel Webster, December 19, 1842. The first legislature meeting under the constitutional provisions of the Monarchy assembled May 20, 1845. William L. Lee, a young lawyer from the United States, was appointed chief justice. In 1848 there was an epidemic of measles introduced from some transient vessel, which raged with violence to such an extent that one tenth part of the population perished by it.

The first census taken in the Islands in 1832 gave a total population of 130,313. In 1836 the census showed 108,579. There was no census taken from 1836 to 1850. In this year the population showed 84,165, making an apparent loss in the fourteen years of 24,884. There was a census of foreigners, 1,962. The census of 1853, population 73,137; a decrease in three years of 11,027. The census of 1860 was 69,800, showing a decrease in seven years of 3,338. The census in 1896 showed a total of population 109,020; divided, Hawaiian 39,504, Hawaiian born 6,599, Portuguese 13,733, and 2,040 other whites. A census taken in 1872 showed 56,897, a loss of 12,900 in nine years. Any one by consulting the statistics as given by Alexander in 1896 will discover what terrible loss in population happened among the Hawaiians since the first census was taken in 1832.

On December 24, 1824, Kapiolani, daughter of Keawaii Mauhihi of Hilo, Hawaii, broke the superstition of Pele, the fabled god of the crater Kilauea. This princess met the Priestess of Pele near the crater, who challenged her right to approach the sacred mountain, and threatened her with the fiery anger of the god of the crater if she persisted any further; but the princess disregarding the challenge, proceeded down into the crater until she stood on what is called the "Black Ledge," and said in the presence of those who went with her and of the priestess, in reference to the fabled god's defense of her domain, "Jehovah is my God. He kindled these fires. I fear not Pele. If I perish by her anger, then you must fear Pele; but if I trust in Jehovah, and he preverse me when breaking her tabus, then you must fear and serve him alone." She then threw stones into the burning lake and ate berries consecrated to Pele, thus defying the fabled protector of the crater and breaking the superstitions which bound the people to their idolatrous and superstitious worship. Ever since, her name has been justly celebrated throughout the Islands.

Rice was introduced into the Islands from South Carolina in 1860. Bees were taken in from San Jose in 1857. The first Portuguese immigrating to the Islands were a list of 150 passengers in 1875. Since then some 10,000 have entered the Islands. The first Chinese consignment of 500 reached the islands in 1865, and in 1868, 148 Japanese came in on the Sioto.

Schools in English were established after 1850. The Royal School opened December 5, 1851; the Oahu College in 1854. The Kamehameha schools were founded by Mrs. B. P. Bishop. English was taught in the schools compulsory in 1896. The Lunalilo Home for aged Hawaiians was opened in 1881.

Reciprocity was established with the United States in 1876. The Islands were annexed to the United States in 1898, and the flag raised August 12, 1898.

These items were gathered from the history published by Mr Alexander, and brief as they are, they show to some extent the vicissitudes through which the Islands have passed. But one's heart aches almost when one contemplates the terrible losses in population which have depleted the Islands of their native inhabitants since the discovery of the Islands by Captain Cook, years ago. Alexander, the historian, failed to set forth clearly all that had happened to the Islands, or state the times and places when and where the evils which accompanied the first visitors to the Islands were introduced among the native population, through the influence of which its strange depletion in numbers occurred.

One of the unique experiences of the visit of the Editor and Elder Sheehy to the Islands occurred Monday, October 28, when by invitation of a brother and friend of the Chinese race, in company with Brn. G. J. Waller and Edward Ingham, we had dinner at a Chinese restaurant, eating Chinese food prepared by the Chinese cooks at the restaurant. We do not purpose to describe the menu in Chinese, but the readers can draw their own conclusions when we give the bill of fare in English. It may not be out of place to suggest that the restaurant is located on Smith Street, so this may possibly account for it. The menu in English was: Boiled abalone; mushroom and lotus duck; boiled chicken; oyster salad; roasted pigeon; fishy fungus; fried rib; boiled mullet, and kidney soup; rice instead of bread. It is needless to state that the food was palatable. It was excellently prepared and the feast was crowned by a small cup of fine Chinese tea. To preserve the epicurean tradition, there were not thirteen at the table, but there were eleven. Elders Smith and Sheehy were the guests of honor, accompanied by Elders Waller and Ingham. Those sitting down with us at table (the table being round), were Mr. Tam Hung, Lau Chee, Tom Ayoy, Too Shau Chin, Mr. Whoe Tong, Hop Kee, and Wah Sue.

We thoroughly enjoyed the many good associations. These men could speak English and were some of them of good report among their own people, and well known to Brn. Waller and Ingham.

The next day, Tuesday the 29th, we had lunch at the same Chinese restaurant, with Bro. Tom Ayoy, Brn. Sheehy, and the Editor; all Chinese dishes, excellent in quality and enjoyable in taste. No matter what may be said of the objectionable character of Chinese food by others, we saw no reason, from what we ate on these two afternoons, to object to the food that was set before us. The Editor confesses at once without prejudice that he enjoyed them, and he so frankly stated to the keeper of the restaurant and his hosts of the occasion.

By previous arrangement, begun and perfected without consultation with the Editor, a luau (a feast) in the native Hawaiian custom, was given at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Paoa, in Wai-kiki, in the afternoon of Thursday, November 2.

Had the Editor stayed until the 6th of the month this feast would have been given on his birthday, but we had decided to leave the island on the Alameda, whose date of sailing was the 6th of November. Hence, the feast was arranged for Saturday. We can not do better for the readers of the HERALD than to give an account of this luau as it appeared in the Sunday Advertiser for November 3:

A most admirably appointed luau was given yesterday afternoon at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Paoa, in honor of President Joseph Smith and Elder Sheehy of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. It was the first occasion of the kind either of these gentlemen had experienced and was thoroughly enjoyed by them and by a number of other visitors in the islands, and by a company of at least three hundred kamaainas of longer or shorter residence here.

The guests were welcomed on entering the grounds at the Ena road, Waikiki. The grounds are ample and the lawn well kept. The luau was served in a large tent which pleasantly broke the somewhat strenuous trade wind. The floor of the tent was covered with mats about the tables and with cocoanut fronds elsewhere. There were six long low tables. Two of them were covered with yellow crepe paper, with yellow chrysanthemums in profusion, for decoration. Two were in purple, asters being the decoration. Two were in scarlet with carnations as decorations. The tables were low so that the true Hawaiian style of seating, on lauhala mats, was followed, a method provocative of many jokes and merriment among those to whom it is an unaccustomed position. President Smith in spite of his seventy-five years, adapted himself to it with grace and cheerfulness.

The tables were loaded with the accustomed things of the luau, all excellently cooked or prepared. The poi was served in cocoanut bowls.

Among those present besides the guests of honor were Mr. and Mrs. E. Ingham, G. J. Waller, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Willard of Los Angeles, Mr. and Mrs. Campbell of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Fishburn of San Diego, Dr. and Mrs. J. M. Whitney, R. H. Trent, Captain Piltz, Dr. W. T. Monsarrat, Ralph S. Hosmer, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. L. Rhodes, Mrs. George Lucas, Harry Winthrop Tappan of Los Angeles, Miss Piikoi; Miss Puohau, Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Harbottle, Mrs. Emma Gulick, Senator Kalauokalani, Mr. and Mrs. Moses K. Nakuina, Mrs. Wright, Miss Kahele, the Misses Kinney, Mrs. Wilson, Mrs. Bittman, Mrs. Hearne, Miss Vandenburg, Miss Marshall, Judge J. L. Kaulukou, Mr. and Mrs. J. Mahuka, John W. Francis, Supervisor Dwight, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Swinton, D. Kalauokalani, Jr., and many others.

The Hawaiian band was in attendance and rendered a very pleasing program of largely Hawaiian music. Miss Pih sang a number of songs to the accompaniment of the band. Her singing was very much enjoyed.

Among the interesting incidents of the occasion was the meeting of President Smith and Mrs. J. M. Whitney. It was Mrs. Whitney's father, Mr. L. L. Rice, who found the long lost and diligently searched for Spalding manuscript, in Honolulu, among a quantity of neglected manuscript, the remnants of a mass of matter that had come to him in the purchase of a printing office in Painesville, Ohio, years before. Mrs. Whitney said to President Smith, that she did not wonder that the Latter Day Saints considered the manner of the preservation of this manuscript providential when it was considered that it had been carried around by her father during many years and many removals without any knowledge that it was in his possession, or thought that it or any of the manuscripts among which it was were of great value.

The Spalding manuscript, which was the manuscript of a romance written by one Solomon Spalding, was claimed by the opponents of Mormonism to have been the original or to have contained the ideas of the Book of Mormon. In other words that Joseph Smith had transcribed or paraphrased this romance into the Book of Mormon. To disprove this the manuscript was sought everywhere by the Mormons, and when it was thus found after many years the mere reading showed that it had nothing in common with the Book of Mormon.

Following the luau there were short addresses by President Smith and Elder Sheehy. They were introduced by David Kalauokalani, Jr., who was the Master of Ceremonies for the occasion. President Smith spoke of the pleasure it gave him to visit these islands, and of the warm welcome he had received. He had found through a long life that men were generally kindly everywhere, and he took it as a token of the universal brotherhood of man. It had been his happiness to live during the era of great material progress. He had seen the development of transportation from the ox-cart to the locomotive and the great steamship, and of light from the tallow dip to electricity. He bore on his hands the evidences of injury by the first harvester, the sickle, and he had seen the development up to the self-binding machine.

He believed it the privilege of the Anglo-Saxon to lead in these material developments and thereby to be a great blessing to the whole human race.

We confess to a feeling of gratitude and pleasant recollections when we call to mind this feast, seated upon mats laid upon the ground, without chairs, and feasting at a low table spread with the abundance of nature splendidly prepared, the native method by which the guests were expected to partake without knives or forks, and to prove themselves adepts at this primitive fashion of eating, upon an occasion so fraught with friendliness on every hand, which the visitors from the States enjoyed to the full.

Bro. David Kalauokalani, Jr., who presided, is a young man of good promise. He is an acting priest of the branch; is also clerk of the country court, well known and respected; was secretary to the delegate at Washington for something like two years, is a very pleasant and able man. We were introduced to the other guests, our immediate neighbor at table being the wife of Doctor Whitney, who was the daughter of Mr. L. L. Rice with whom the Manuscript Story, which the church has been permitted to publish and give to the public, was found at Honolulu by Reverend Fairchilds of Oberlin College. The story of our visit to her, however, will be told in another article.

THE ANGEL'S MESSAGE.

The light that on Cumorah fell lay first on Galilee.

Our nation's blood flowed rich and warm,
Her heart beat strong and true;
But creed-bound faith with leechen hold
Sucked up her wine and dew—
Wearing old religion's cloak
Like ravens called with warning croak.

Young men and aged were stirred to thought,
And friends of old church creeds
Wagged slow their heads and gathered close
To tell of real soul needs—
Where pilgrims died and patriots bled,
Unseen, they heard the angels tread.

Men big of brain, of tender heart,
Great men with silver tongue,
Unloosed the creed bands from their souls
And wide love's portals flung—
To make life's way more bright and sweet,
And blaze a path for angels' feet.

But who of all who saw the wrong
Could tell just what was true and right?
They led to heights untouched before,
Then paused, or plunged to darker night,—
For man may walk where saints have trod,
But of himself can not find God.

The throbbing pulse of seventy-six
Set seal on future mother's heart,
And freedom, liberty, and God
Were of its nature bone and part,
And one was twin to notes that fell,
From liberty's far-ringing bell.

That bell sound ringing through the world
Brought heaven to earth, how near, how near,
For men threw down their priest-bound hopes
And cried, "The God we love is here."—
They heard the heavenly rhythm beat
Melodious time to angels' feet.

The shackles broke before their words—
Those men who felt that touch divine—
And prophet-poets, love-inspired,
Wrote pages in a golden line—
To them the angels came so near
Their rustling robes they seemed to hear.

How fast minds broadened with the years
Whose tide of life swept swiftly west
Toward Columbia's golden heart,
The land with many blessings blest,—
Foretold in ancient Jewish lore
When angels walked with men before.

It is of that land and of that time
We weave a story into rhyme.

Alone where the early buds put forth
In the stillness beneath the trees,
A lad with creeds of men perplexed
Sought God on bended knees.
Like men of learning he looked out,
And saw a world half lost in doubt.

The lad who knelt was young in years,
The warm spring day was new.
He read, "Who seeks will find," and felt
The promise must be true.

And thus he came to ask the way,
Half hushed with awe that sunny day.
How strange and weak his own small voice,
But the fragrant wood-mold near
Touched his soul like a clasping friendly hand,
And he prayed with none to hear,
Till there fell a light—such wondrous light—
In gladsome beams from angels bright.

He looked upon a well-loved form,
Bare were the shining feet,
And spotless breast and kindly hands,
With the face divinely sweet—
Whose voice with rapture pierced his heart,
"The creeds are wrong. Have ye no part."

Another night, another scene—
A golden night it must have been:
This time an angel came to tell
A message glad, describing well
The ancient record Nephi made,
The wind-swept hill where it was laid.
And afterwards they met again,
Afar from sight and sound of men,
Upon the sunny western slope
Where brown Cumorah held our hope.
The boyish eyes looked on the place,
That bow and bend of nature's grace,
That formed a frame of low hills near,
As clasping hands round something dear.
Beneath a bending sky of blue
The vision seen was so far true.
Four times Cumorah's grasses sweet
Were pressed by youth's and angel's feet.
Then came the time—ah, glad the day!
They bore the hidden book away,
From out its ancient bed of stone
To speak with no uncertain tone,
And tell to man the scenes of old
'Mong children of Christ's other fold.

What does it bring dear friends to you?
'Tis the Christmas spirit old,
The Christmas child and Christmas song,
And the peace the Christ foretold.
'Tis a link 'twixt the old world and the new,
A bond 'tween the Gentile and the Jew.

A balm for the troubled heart and sad,
A calm for all unrest.
'Twas not our land nor old Judea
The Master loved the best—
The world-wide brotherhood of man
Attests a broader, kinder plan.

Columbia's sons are rich to-day,
With the love of happy throngs.
Triumphant far o'er battle fame
Are their mighty pens in songs—
They lifted man and cleared the way
For angels in the latter day.

To us those messengers of light
Keep echoing the song
That rolled across Judea's hills,
Voiced by an angel throng,
And brought the anchor needed most
To a restless, waiting, troubled host.

O tell us not of light that failed
 Nor shone on land or sea!
 The light that on Cumorah fell
 Lay first on Galilee,— Adown a path that angels trod
 To watch the weary son of God.
 A living being clothed with light
 Down that same shining way
 Brought gifts of power and gave to man,
 And showed the place that day,
 To find the record of this land,
 And witness of the Master's hand.
 The same glad story Luke would tell,
 Had it been his to keep,
 The chapters of his well-loved Christ
 'Mong these, his "other sheep"—
 To both he came with love divine,
 Our own dear land and Palestine.
 Old Bethlehem's hills heard gladdest song,
 "Behold the Christ is born;"
 Cumorah lay unknown, unthought
 That glorious Christmas Morn—
 But soon she heard the echo sweet,
 And felt the touch of angel feet.
 Her light shall never, never fail
 In radiant majesty;
 For it was sent by one who walked,
 The far Tiberian sea.
 He knew men needed beams thus bright
 To lead them to the safest height.
 So the shining angel feet come near,
 Their beauteous hands reach down,
 Their voices ring as glad, as dear,
 As in old Bethlehem's town—
 With the song they sang when Christ was born
 They touch men's hearts each Christmas morn.
 VIDA E. SMITH.

THE STAR OF BETHLEHEM.

A star of old in grandeur shone
 Upon Christ's natal day,
 And shed its heavenly radiance on
 The manger where he lay.
 It led the wise men to the scene;
 With costly gifts they came,
 And homage paid the babe serene,
 Whilst angels sang his fame.
 In fear and envy Herod sought
 The infant King to slay;
 His soldiers cruel slaughter wrought;
 The guiltless babes their prey.
 But God his holy child did guard
 'Gainst Herod's dark design;
 And to angelic watch and ward
 The sacred trust consign.
 And when at length, with no lament,
 The tyrant's course was run;
 The Father into Egypt sent
 And called his royal son.
 With honor, his appointed place
 To fill, that son did aim;
 And sought by works of truth and grace
 To praise his Father's name.

And when his earthly work was done,
 His blood then paid the price
 Of man's redemption—love had won
 Through perfect sacrifice.

So now he lives and reigns supreme
 In heaven's brightest sphere;
 His eyes, like stars, in beauty beam
 Through love's pure atmosphere.

But still for us with light sublime,
 The Star of Bethlehem shines;
 Its memory sweet at Christmas time,
 Each heart to him inclines.

Still, as of old, its bright rays guide;
 And hearts true homage pay
 To God's dear Son, once crucified,
 To take man's guilt away.

WORK BY THE WAYSIDE.

Saints' Herald: The inclosure will perhaps interest you. Have many opportunities to interest people in the same way in different parts of the country, through which my business carries me. Trust much good will come out of work among men, for the great, growing latter-day Israel.

In gospel bonds,

MR. ALBERT N. HOXIE, Joplin, Missouri.

My Dear Mr. Hoxie: This will remind you of the man you met at Utica, Kansas (the pen man). I thank you kindly for the Voice of Warning, and the paper. The prophecies, fulfillment of which is spoken of in the Voice of Warning, are excellent reading. Truly wonderful, meeting you as I did. I got a large amount of comfort. 'Twas an inspiration. I have ordered a Book of Mormon and a few other books. If at any time you should be near Janesville, Wisconsin, kindly come and see me, and I will certainly try to give you a nice time while here. Thanking you once again,
 I am Truly yours,

THE THEATER.

"I have but very little time this afternoon to speak to you concerning the baneful influence of the theater. The burden of my message is to be along another line. I am not so ignorant as to say that there are not plays to-day which seem on their face to be of a high moral tone, and I have been told by those who have witnessed them that their influence was all for good, but I do know that some of the greatest actors of the present time are reported as saying that the influence of the theater, as it exists to-day, is not the best, and I am also persuaded that much of the danger in theater-going lies in this, that while your ideal might be an exceedingly high one and you would scorn the play that was low and vulgar, the person over whom you have an influence has no such conception of things that are uplifting in themselves, but naturally yields to the influence of a baser play, and such can be only harmful, first, last, and all the time. So until the theater is made the educating and morally uplifting agency it is capable of being, I can see danger in it.

"I am perfectly willing to stand by the teaching of the Scripture, which is this: That I have an influence in the world. I am my brother's keeper, whether I am willing to acknowledge it or not; one day I shall be called to account for the way I have helped, or offended my weaker brother, and 'if meat makes my brother to offend,' then I must eat no meat."—Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman.

PROSPECTUS OF THE JOURNAL OF HISTORY.

For some years the Historian has been calling the attention of the church to the necessity of a periodical for the purpose of publishing important matters accumulating, of an historical character.

The disastrous fire of January 5, 1907, emphasized this necessity, for in it many valuable documents were lost that would have been of great value to the searcher after the true in history.

At the last Annual Conference the First Presidency also recommended such a move and the conference referred it to the First Presidency, the Historian, and Board of Publication, with power to act.

On October 9, 1907, F. M. Smith of the First Presidency, E. L. Kelley of the Board, and the Historian, met at Independence, Missouri, and resolved that in their opinion the publication should be issued under the name of "Journal of History," the initial number appearing not later than January of 1908, if practicable.

They suggested that it should be about the size of Autumn Leaves, containing about 128 pages or more per issue, that it should be published under the auspices of the Board of Publication, under the editorial management of a Board of Editors composed of Historian Heman C. Smith, Frederick M. Smith of the First Presidency, and Assistant Historian, D. F. Lambert.

Subsequently this action was submitted to the other members of the First Presidency, and the Board of Publication, and the several suggestions indorsed.

It will be understood that this publication is not for the discussion of doctrinal points, but for biographical and historical matter, that much that is of historical value to the church may be preserved. It will be published on a good quality of book paper and in form that it may be bound by those who may so desire.

Until there is a demand for enlargement or more frequent appearance it will be issued quarterly, in January, April, July, and October, at the very low price of $1.50 per annum.

The price at first thought may seem to be high, but when the quality of the publication, and the cost of production are properly considered and compared with like publications, this seeming difficulty will disappear.

The State Historical Society of Iowa publishes a Quarterly of like character for which they have $2.00 per annum, or 50 cents per copy.

It is important that all who wish to preserve these valuable matters begin with the first issue, and to insure your receiving it, send your subscription at once to F. B. Blair, Business Manager, Lamoni, Iowa.

One thousand subscribers must be had at once in order to meet the expense of issuing.

Matters intended for publication should be addressed to Heman C. Smith, Historian, at Lamoni, Iowa.

Hunt up all your old letters, public, and private, and all manuscripts throwing light upon the history of the church, and send them in, and let us have them where they can be preserved and be of benefit to many.

Write your experiences and observations of early times, and give us the privilege to examine them.

Prompt response both as to subscriptions and material will insure success. We are enthusiastic at this end of the line. How is it with you? Let us hear from you NOW.

We promise you some rare treats in the way of documents not generally known. What will you do for us?

HEMAN C. SMITH,

In behalf of the Board of Editors.

THE WISE MEN.

(Possible History.)

The feast of the passover was drawing near; and Jews from all nations were gathering to their beloved city. Those annual gatherings caused much stir in Jerusalem. The dwellers in the country looked forward to those gatherings as a favorable time to make trade; they brought into the city droves of cattle and sheep, fruits, fowls, and doves. Booths also, of small wares, lined the thoroughfares. Each in his turn was energetic, and even boisterous in his endeavor to dispose of his wares before the commencement of the days of unleavened bread.

Upon all previous occasions groups of Jews were to be seen in the market places, about the temple, and on almost every corner of the streets, in earnest and loud conversation; emphasizing their words with fierce gesticulations. But not so upon this occasion. They grouped together more closely, and talked more earnestly; but their voices were subdued, and each face wore a look of concern, and perplexity. And the elders, who sat in the gates, were troubled.

The common theme of conversation was concerning three strangers who had recently come from the East in search of a young child, whom they claimed to be no other than the King of the Jews, the Messiah; the Hope of Israel. And of this Messiah they had said strange things. "What claim have they to any such child being born?" asked Rabbi Ezra, who had but recently arrived, and joined the Rabbis. "In that matter they are very positive," said Rabbi Amos, "and indeed their words carry conviction. They claim to have seen a peculiarly brilliant star, low from the firmament; the same that had been given them in description, as a sure token of the birth of the Messiah. And so sure were they, that they have made the long journey from their country in the East to worship him."

"They speak wisely," said Rabbi Ezra, "for according to our sacred records, the coming of our Messiah must be nigh at hand." "True," replied Rabbi Amos, "but we look not for a babe! Besides, they say this King shall scarcely have commenced his work among men, when he shall be slain. Thou knowest, honored Ezra, that our Messiah can not be slain. He is to be the King of kings, to establish the throne of his father David, and reign until he puts all enemies beneath his feet. And, further, those men say he shall be slain by his own people."

"That were a strange saying, indeed," replied Rabbi Ezra. "All Israel would welcome and defend our King. We long to see his day. But what says Herod to these things? for doubtless he has learned the cause of those men being in Jerusalem."

"Yes, he has heard them, and his countenance is dark. According to an edict sent forth by him, all the chief priests and scribes have assembled within his courts this day; and we wait anxiously for their reappearance; for we know not the heart of Herod."

When he had thus spoken, he saw the Magi drawing near and others following. "Thou shalt speak with them for thyself, Rabbi," said he, "for see, they are coming towards us."

When they drew near, and saw the venerable Ezra, and knowing they had not met him before, they reiterated their inquiry of, "Where is he that is born, the Messiah of the Jews? For we have seen his star in the East, and have come to worship him. Know you not where your King shall be born—who is of the lineage of David?"

"The Messiah, the Deliverer we look for," replied Rabbi Ezra, "is to be raised up among his people, like unto the great prophet Moses." Here the keen eye of this one of the Magi twinkled, and a smile overspread his face—"And as Moses remained in obscurity until he appeared unto our forefathers, as a prophet, and deliverer, so in like manner do we look for the Messiah. Though of Judah, and perhaps raised in our midst, yet unknown until he comes forth clothed in power, not only to deliver us from this Roman bondage, but to subdue all nations, putting all enemies under his feet."

"But tell us," continued the Rabbi, "how learned you of the Messiah, seeing you have not our sacred records?"

"That would be much to tell," replied the Magi; "yet since you desire it, you shall know briefly how the knowledge first came to us. Our forefathers were dwellers in Egypt in the days when your great prophet Moses, of whom you spoke, came there as the deliverer of the people, dwelling in the land of Goshen, who had long been in bondage to the Egyptians. And when it was known to Pharaoh that two prophets were in the land of Goshen, preaching and working miracles, our fathers went down to Goshen to bring tidings to Pharaoh. They heard the words of Moses, and of Aaron his brother, unto the people. They witnessed the power made manifest during that time of trouble in the land of Egypt, when Moses plead for the deliverance of his people, and Pharaoh continued to harden his heart that he would not let them go. They saw how the Hebrews were miraculously shielded from many of the plagues, while the Egyptians suffered. And they believed in the God of Moses, and on the Christ whom Aaron preached to the people; that he should be made manifest in the flesh, in the meridian of time.

"They heard his last message of warning delivered to the Egyptians in words of power. He said of the Christ that he was the Lamb of God, and his blood would save all who believed, and obeyed; just as the blood of the lamb that should be slain that night would save all who obeyed the words given them of God through the man Moses."—Here the Magi were interrupted by a hissing, and loudly spoken words of declamation by the Polish Jews, who believed that the Talmud was all that was needed for salvation. When the uproar was quelled, Rabbi Ezra said, "We will hear you through, Magi." Whereupon they resumed. "Our fathers understood not that saying; but on the morrow, when it was known that the Hebrews had gone with their flocks and herds, they were constrained to go to Goshen; and, passing through it, found no dead, neither of man nor beast. And seeing blood sprinkled on the door-posts of all their dwellings, they then understood the words of Aaron. And being filled with a vivid faith in the God of Moses, they followed the army of Pharaoh, who pursued in great anger. They knew that the God of Moses would deliver his people, and they wished to see the final triumph. When they reached the borders of the Red Sea, our fathers remained on the shore, while Pharaoh daringly led his army into the highway made by the great God through the sea for Moses and his people. For though the east wind had often piled up those waters, never before was there a wall of water so high, nor ever before was the river bed so dry. But an unseen hand hedged up the way of Pharaoh, so that he overtook not the Hebrews, and, when they had gained the other shore, the waters closed in upon Pharaoh and his host, and all perished.

"Egypt was then virtually destroyed; our fathers no longer desired to dwell there. They went to the far East, their faith being strong in the God whom Aaron preached, and in the promise of his Christ. This faith was nourished through their generations, by the great creator of all things, who in due time sent his messenger to us who waited to apprise us that the time of the birth of the Messiah was nigh at hand. And this is the token that was given. 'When you shall see a star low from the heavens, whose brightness shall outshine that of the morning star; and shall remain to be seen by you throughout the day, then know that the Messiah, the King of the Jews is born.' We have seen that star, Rabbi, and we came to the Mecca of his people expecting to find and worship him. We went to the courts of Herod the king; but there was no young child there. We have inquired of many of the Jews, but they know not of him. You have said that Bethlehem is the city of David; therefore we will go and make ready, and continue our journey to Bethlehem; peradventure we may find the child."

So saying they bade adieu to the Rabbis and walked towards the inn.

After they had turned into another street, and were apart from observing people, a messenger came hurriedly towards them, saying in a low voice, "Thus saith Herod the king, 'When the evening is come, he will see you at his court,' I will be outside the gate of the inn, to conduct you thither."

Now Herod could as well have had them come to him at noonday, as under cover of night, for none dared gainsay his command. But there was murder in his heart, and he feared his purposes might be discovered in the light of day, and he, thereby, might fail to gain access to the child. From the first he had determined in his heart that if there was such a child as was sought by the Magi, having any claim to become King of the Jews, he would find and destroy him. He had but just dismissed the chief priests and scribes, from whom he had learned the birthplace of their expected prince. It was for that purpose that he had called them together. And having obtained that knowledge, he now wanted to ascertain his age, then his way would be clear—for he believed not in a messiah.

He had heard from the Magi, that the appearing of the star was the sign of his birth, but he had not inquired when it appeared. Therefore, when the Magi came, being conducted by a private way, he inquired accurately when the star appeared. When he was satisfied, he sent them forth to Bethlehem, craftily telling them to return to him when they had found the child; making as though he would go also to worship him. As the door closed behind them Herod felt satisfied that he had the life of the child in his own hands.

The Magi, being prepared to continue their journey to that town, gladly went forth. When they were outside the walls of Jerusalem, lo, his star, which they had seen in the East, went before them till it came and stood over where the young child was. When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy.

While the Magi followed their brilliant leader, let us precede them to Bethlehem. We will see that it, the city of David, had its share of visitors also. Those who were of the house of David lingered with their own people until the feast days. Among the guests who entered the ancient town, was a comely young mother with a babe whose soft flaxen hair lay in curling rings about his shapely baby head, as he nestled against his mother's breast. These sat upon a beast, while the husband walked by their side. As they entered the town, the woman turned her face towards her husband, with a fond look in her dark, expressive eyes, and said, "If possible, Joseph, let us secure the same rooms to which I was removed shortly after the birth of this my sweet babe, one year ago."

"It shall be as you desire, gentle wife," said Joseph, "Those people were very kind to us."

"Yes," said Mary, "But more than that, the room itself seems almost sacred to me: in it I spent the first happy month of motherhood, an experience so new, and so pleasing. And it was there also that you placed upon this child the name given you by the angel. You remember, Joseph, how the whole room seemed filled with a holy light that departed not altogether while we remained; therefore it is, to me, like no other place in Bethlehem could be."

When they drew near to the house and made application, they were received gladly, the hostess saying she had kept those rooms in reserve, knowing that they would come. All this had taken place some days previous; their apartments were arranged for their temporary stay. They were rested from their journey from Nazareth, and were in readiness to go to Jerusalem on the morrow to attend the holy convocation.

It is evening; the babe is sleeping on a couch; the mother sits by him. Her gaze is bent full upon the child, and so intent as to be oblivious to the presence of any other, until her husband laid his hand gently upon her shoulder.

"Mary, my beloved, I fear you give yourself too much of anxious thought. I often look at you while you pore over the sleeping child, and sometimes see that your face is more than sad; it looks almost drawn as with anguish, or anxious care, as to-night."

"It is even so, my husband; yet I can not refrain from watching him much while he sleeps. I do not know that he is different from other sweet-tempered children in his wakeful hours; but when he sleeps I almost forget that he is a child, so vivid are the expressions of his little face. And it carries my soul with it in all its various changes. Sometimes a light, a radiance is upon his countenance, as if he were enjoying a happiness beyond what earth affords. And again, a sadness will settle upon him, so deep, so full of suffering, as though he were bearing the troubles of the whole world; at such times, he frequently sighs. And each time it pierces my heart like an arrow."

Here the conversation was interrupted by a gentle rap at the door. Joseph arose, and opened it wide. Seeing three strangers standing without, he cordially greeted, and invited them in. As they entered, they saw Mary and the young child. And without delay, they went near, and bowed themselves and worshiped him.

Joseph looked on in surprise. Mary reverentially bowed her head. When they arose from their knees, Joseph inquired of them who they were, and whence they came, and why worshiped they the child. And when they had made an answer to his inquiry, and greeted Mary, they took from their hampers, treasures, gold, frankincense, and myrrh, and presented them as an offering to the holy child.

Then spake Mary to the Magi, "You will abide with us for a season."

"Honored mother," spake the Magi, "we will abide with you for the night only, for on the morrow we must return to Herod, for so he bade us do, when we had found the child, that he also might come and worship him." While Mary arranged their sleeping apartment, they discoursed with Joseph concerning their journey to Jerusalem, their stay in the Jewish city, and their visit with Herod, until it was time to retire for the night. But long before the dawning of the day, they arose, and made known to Joseph and Mary that they had been warned of God in a dream, not to return to Herod; and that they had concluded to depart at once, and return to their own country by another way than that of going through Jerusalem, and thus get beyond the way of travel to Jerusalem before day to avoid being recognized. Upon hearing their words, Mary arose and set food before them, and put some in their hampers also. When they were gone, Mary said to her husband, "I feel a foreshadowing of evil. Herod will be very angry when he learns that those men have gone without returning to him, and if he finds us, we will be implicated in the trouble. I almost fear to go to Jerusalem to-morrow, lest we meet Herod in his anger. Therefore, if it please thee Joseph, let us return to Nazareth on the morrow, instead of going to Jerusalem."

"I fully concede to what you say, Mary, for I am ill at ease myself, knowing that there must be an important reason for the Lord warning them not to return to Herod. Therefore we will start in the early morning for Nazareth. So saying, Joseph went out and fed, and saddled their beast. Then they lay down for an hour or so of rest before starting.

Joseph fell asleep quickly; but not so with Mary. Her thoughts were too active for sleep; yet it was but a few minutes when Joseph arose, saying, "An angel of the Lord appeared to me in a vision, saying, 'Arise—take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and tarry thou there until I bring thee word; for Herod will seek the young child to destroy him.'"

A nervous chill swept over Mary on hearing those words. She hastily arose and completed the few needful preparations, feeling glad that they had made ready for a journey. Then she took up her sleeping child, pressing a hungry kiss on his little face as she did so, and wrapped him in his mantle. And casting her finely woven white shawl about her head, was ready to be seated upon their faithful beast.

How tenderly she pressed her babe to her bosom, drawing the folds of her shawl about him, as if she would shield him from all harm, as well as from the chill morning air.

The morning star shone down upon them in its splendor, as they started upon their lonely journey. The beast also seemed to understand the situation, and walked on lively. And by the time the sun rose, they were leagues distant from Bethlehem.

All the following day Herod looked for the return of the men from the East. But since it was the day of the holy convocation, he reasoned that they might be at the services. Yet he was angry to think they had not done him the honor of meeting him first. As the day waned, he sent his servant to the temple to see if they were at the feast. When the servant returned, he informed Herod that they were not in the city, neither had been during the day.

Herod was wroth at this delay. The town of Bethlehem was not so large that it would take so long to go through it; and he was meditating a punishment when they should return. But when another day passed, and they came not, his anger was kindled to a rage; and, gnashing his teeth, he inwardly muttered, "Do they dare to disobey me, and thus mock at my authority! Others shall suffer for this! My purposes shall not be thwarted! Had they returned as I bade them, one life might have been sufficient. But now I will give a wide range, that I may be sure to include this child, whoever he may be, and we will see if my kingdom is to be usurped by a Jew."

Whereupon he called his officers and gave command to take men and go forth and slay all the male children in Bethlehem and all her coasts, from two years old and under.

SECOND GENERAL EPISTLE TO GRUMBLERS AND FAULTFINDERS.

CHAPTER I.

But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another.—Paul.

From the history recorded in previous chapters concerning grumblers and faultfinders, the fact is clearly brought out that it was prompted by a spirit not of the Lord, and hence brought the displeasure of the Lord to bear upon those who fostered it unto their destruction. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."—Paul. And the Spirit of Christ is not a grumbling or faultfinding spirit, neither an accuser of the brethren, as that has a tendency to produce dissension, distrust, and confusion; while the work of the Spirit of God produces unity, confidence, and peace.

In unity there is strength; in dissension and distrust there is weakness.

The fruit of the Spirit of God is love; love unites and brings peace and confidence. Suspicion, grumbling, faultfinding, in their very nature, are not, nor can they be the fruit of love, hence, not of the Spirit of God; therefore, the Lord does not approve of it, and as the Lord is unchangeable we may well reason then that what he once disapproved he will always disapprove. The same cause will always produce the same result, and if he, in former days, so severely punished the grumblers and faultfinders, will he not do the same now? I do not mean by this that he will punish all grumblers and faultfinders in the same manner, as past records show that they were punished in different ways; but there is one punishment to which all of that class is subject, namely, the withdrawal of the Holy Spirit, and when this is the case there is no perfect love, no perfect joy and satisfaction in life, no peace, no long-suffering and gentle forbearance one toward another, no charity for each other, which is the greatest of all gifts of the Spirit, without which we are as sounding brass, that is to say, our profession of religion is like the sound, it dies away and is forgotten; but the works produced by charity remaineth, and is the echo of our faith, the sound of which will reëcho from land to land, and from shore to shore. This is the light of Christ. "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Christ.

"Charity suffereth long and is kind; charity envieth not; . . . is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth."—Paul. These are some of the fruits of charity, and we pronounce them good, hence the tree which produced them must be good; but can the same be said of uncharitableness, of which grumbling, faultfinding, envy, and evil-speaking are the results? Hardly.

The chronic grumblers and faultfinders have always been a menace to society. They accomplish nothing but the sowing of discord among men, creating distrust and suspicion, which in their nature have a tendency to undermine any institution, no matter how strong and good it may be; hence the wise man says that there are certain things the Lord hates, and among these he mentions "An heart that deviseth wicked imaginations, feet that be swift in running to mischief, a false witness that speaketh lies, and he that soweth discord among brethren."—Solomon.

The truth of this will be demonstrated in the next chapter. The faultfinder builds up nothing, but is constantly tearing down. Where wrongs exist he is doing nothing to correct them. When in error themselves, they are blinded to their own mistakes, hence do nothing to correct them. These are all stepping-stones to greater crimes, which also history clearly indicates.

CHAPTER II.

And it came to pass that after the grumblers and faultfinders of Israel had died in the wilderness, that the Lord permitted their children to enter into the promised land, a land flowing with milk and honey, where they might dwell in peace, unmolested by the oppressor, if willing to serve the Lord and keep his commandments.

And it came to pass that as the years rolled by they began to forget the mercies of the Lord in delivering them from bondage, and in giving them a goodly land, and began to find fault with the worship of the Lord as he had instructed them, and began to worship other gods, to suit their own taste and convenience.

And it came to pass that the Lord permitted the surrounding nations to harrass and annoy them, and lay siege against their cities, and lead their people into captivity.

And it came to pass that thus about eight hundred and fifty years passed away from the time they entered the promised land, and Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, laid seige against Jerusalem.

In those days there was a man of the Jews, Lehi by name, a devout man, one who feared God and walked in his statutes. And the Lord put his Spirit upon him, and he began to prophecy concerning the destruction of Jerusalem. But the Jews mocked him because of the things he spoke against them and concerning Jerusalem. And it came to pass that the Lord commanded Lehi to take his family and depart into the wilderness; and he was obedient to the word of the Lord and departed with his wife, Sariah, and his sons, Laman, Lemuel, Sam, and Nephi. They traveled for three days, when he pitched his tent in a valley by the side of a river. And Lehi counseled his sons to walk in the ways of the Lord, in uprightness and purity; but because of the hardness of their hearts they began to grumble and find fault with their father for having taken them from Jerusalem out into this wilderness, away from their gold and silver, and their inheritances. This was the same spirit manifested in them which had been manifested by their forefathers in the wilderness when they were led out of Egypt. And it came to pass that the elder sons of Lehi continually grumbled and found fault with their younger brethren, Sam and Nephi, with whom the Lord was well pleased because they kept the commandments. He revealed his will and spoke to Nephi, who was the younger, and when he made known to his brethren the will of the Lord they were exceedingly angry and wroth, and they did bind him with cords; for they sought to take away his life, that they might leave him in the wilderness to be devoured by wild beasts. And thus it was with the brethren of Nephi, as it had been with the brethren of Joseph and of Moses, who sought to take away their lives; the spirit of faultfinding had ripened into still greater iniquity, even that of murder.

And it came to pass that as they were journeying in the wilderness, and with their bows and arrows obtained meat for their families, that Nephi broke his bow of fine steel, and the bows of his brethren were also useless, having lost their spring, and several of the company, including himself, began to grumble against the Lord their God.

And the voice of the Lord came unto Lehi, and he was truly chastened, insomuch that he was brought down into the depths of sorrow.

And it came to pass that they traveled in the wilderness for the space of eight years, during which time they were continually grumbling against Nephi and their father Lehi. When they arrived at the seashore, Nephi was commanded to build a ship. Then they began again to find fault with Nephi for making pretensions to being able to build a ship. They refused to work, and were exceedingly angry, insomuch that they were desirous of throwing him into the depths of the sea; but the power of God was upon Nephi, which caused them to quake and tremble. They were made to realize that it was the power of God, and they fell down at his feet and would have worshiped him had he not prevented it. After this they went to work and assisted in building the ship, and provisions were placed therein preparatory to crossing the mighty deep.

And it came to pass that they all entered the ship and went toward the promised land, being driven by the wind. And they began to be very merry, and to dance and to speak very rudely and jestingly, insomuch that Nephi feared that the displeasure of the Lord would come upon them. He spoke against these things, and they became angry with him and found fault with him because he pretended to be their ruler. "We will not that our younger brother shall be ruler over us." They bound him with cords and treated him with much harshness.

And it came to pass that the Lord was displeased with them for this and caused the compass which directed the ship to cease working, so they knew not whither to steer the ship; and he caused a great storm to come upon them; and they were driven by the tempest for the space of many days; yet did they not loose their brother Nephi from the bands with which they had bound him, until they were about to be swallowed up in the depths of the sea, when they recognized the judgments of God in this, and loosed him from his bonds.

And it came to pass as they had loosed him, he went and took hold of the compass, and it worked whither he desired it. And he prayed unto the Lord, and the wind and the storm ceased, and there was a great calm. After the space of many days they landed in the promised land and began to till the earth and plant seeds which they had brought with them.

And thus it came to pass that the kickers, the grumblers, and faultfinders could not prevent the progress of the Lord's work, nor the carrying into effect of his purposes and designs, but brought upon themselves many afflictions and punishments.

CHAPTER III.

And it came to pass as the children of Israel dwelt in Canaan that many prophets were sent to them, from time to time, who reprovved them for their iniquities. They also prophesied many things concerning the Messiah which was to come. The people stoned and killed their prophets in various ways because they considered them as pestilent fellows. It appeared as though they had inherited the spirit of their fathers who perished in the wilderness, and they became a nation of grumblers, faultfinders, and murderers.

And it came to pass that when fourteen hundred and fifty years had passed away from the time they had entered the promised land that the Messiah was born—Jesus the Christ. As he went about doing good and ministering to their wants, and healing the sick and infirm, he also associated himself with the poor, the publicans and sinners, and this same spirit of grumbling and faultfinding which had descended from generation to generation in Israel was again manifest, and they said, "This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them. Why do ye do this? And again, "When they saw some of his disciples eat bread with unwashed hands, they found fault."

And as the Lord and disciples went through the cornfields on the Sabbath day, they plucked some corn and rubbed it off in their hands to get something to eat, and they said, "Why do ye do that which is not lawful to do on the Sabbath day?"

And it came to pass as the Master was going to and fro doing good among the people, that he entered into the synagogue, and there was a man there which had a withered hand, and they watched him to see whether he would heal on the Sabbath day that they might accuse him. And Jesus healed the hand that was lame.

And it came to pass that the spirit in them caused them to go straight away to the Herodians to counsel with them how they might destroy Jesus. And as the Master sat at meat at the house of one of the Pharisees, a woman of the city, and one who loved the Lord, heard that he was there and she went there bringing with her a box of very costly ointment. As she stood there behind the Master, she wept (an evidence of repentance); and, in her humility and contrition of heart, she washed his feet with her tears and wiped them with the hairs of her head, and kissed them, and anointed them with this precious ointment. She manifested true humility, love, and repentance. She found no fault with the Master for going to eat with one who was one of the many who constantly sought to entrap him in words, and laid snares before him, and took counsel how they might kill him. No. She loved the Master. She had no room for faultfinding; but not so with the man who had invited him. He thought within himself, "This man, if he were a prophet, would know who and what manner of woman this is that toucheth him: for she is a sinner." And Jesus said to him, "Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee."

And he saith, "Master, say on." And, after the Master had told him the difference of treatment he had received while in his house as manifested by this woman and himself, and the degrees of love manifested or not manifested, he said, "Wherefore I say unto thee, her sins, which are many, are forgiven; for she loved much." And he said unto her, "Thy sins are forgiven thee." Those who sat at meat with him and had heard this began to grumble within themselves and say, "Who is this that giveth sins?"

And as the Pharisees had taken counsel how they might destroy Jesus, he withdrew himself from hence and a great multitude followed him. And it came to pass that one was possessed of a devil who also was blind and dumb, and he healed him, and the blind and dumb both spake and saw. And the people were amazed and said, "Is not this the son of David?"

But the Pharisees, who were so thankful that they were not sinners like others, began to find fault and grumble, and said, This fellow does not cast out devils only by Beelzebub the prince of devils.

And it came to pass that the Master spake a parable concerning a certain householder which planted a vineyard and let it out to husbandmen. And he sent his servants into the vineyard, from time to time; but the husbandmen took them and beat them, stoned and killed them. When the Lord of the vineyard returns what will he do with those husbandmen? He shall miserably destroy those wicked men and let the vineyard out to others, which shall render him the fruits in their season.

And the priests and the Pharisees who had heard this parable perceived that he had spoken concerning them, hence they grumbled and sought to lay hands on him. But they feared the people who took him for a prophet.

And it came to pass that there was much murmuring, grumbling, and faultfinding among the people concerning him; "for some said, He is a good man. Others said, Nay, but he deceiveth the people." And it came to pass that the priests and scribes and the elders and all the kickers and grumblers assembled themselves unto the palace of the high priest Caiaphas and consulted together how they by subtlety might take Jesus and kill him. They sought for false witnesses who would testify against Jesus, and at last found two, evidently two of the grumblers and faultfinders, and they said, "This fellow said, I am able to destroy the temple of God and to build it in three days." And the whole multitude rose up and led him to Pilate, and they begun to accuse him saying, "We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, saying that he himself is king."

After the examination by Pilate, Pilate said to those who accused Jesus, "I find no fault in this man at all, as touching those things whereof ye accuse him." Pilate acted according to justice and was actuated by principle, although a heathen; but the grumblers and the faultfinders and false accusers who professed a belief in God cried out with one accord, "Crucify him! crucify him!" But Pilate answered him and said, "Take ye him and crucify him; for I find no fault in him." But the kickers and the grumblers cried out all the more, "Away with him! Away with him! Crucify him!" And he delivered Jesus over to be crucified to satisfy that howling mob of grumblers and faultfinders, children of those who had stoned the prophets and would have stoned Moses, and whose carcasses fell in the wilderness because of their grumbling and fault-finding.

Neither let us tempt Christ, as some of them also tempted, and were destroyed of serpents. Neither murmur ye, as some of them also murmured, and were destroyed of the destroyer. Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples; and they are written for our admonition also, and for an admonition for those upon whom the end of the world shall come. Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.—Paul. S. K. SORENSEN.

GRACELAND NOTES.

The fall term of Graceland, which is just about to close, has been a very successful one from every point of view. There has been marked improvement along all lines and the outlook for the winter term is very encouraging.

A larger per cent than usual of the students will spend their vacation time with parents and friends at home; however, as usual, a larger per cent will be obliged to remain here, on account of distance. For these a Christmas tree and Christmas exercises are being provided by the students and faculty. This promises to be an interesting feature of the vacation season. Parents and friends of students here are requested to send presents to President R. M. Stewart. He will see that they are placed upon the tree for the proper persons. Be sure to send the presents early, as the exercises will be held on Monday evening instead of Tuesday, so as not to interfere with the programs at the church. It is hoped that no students will be missed. Others not having children or relatives here can assist by sending something appropriate to boy or girl.

It has been suggested by some that we give the people of the church a further opportunity to assist Graceland at this time by sending a present for Graceland, in cash, books, laboratory equipment, etc. If any one feels like doing this the favor will be gratefully appreciated.

It is evident that it will be necessary to add an instructor in some preliminary subjects for the winter term. It has occurred to us that there is some competent person in the church who is willing to help the college out of this difficulty and who would be willing to teach a few classes for expenses, with the privilege of continuing advanced study. The work required will be for the benefit of the young people in the church who come deficient in the common branches. If you are interested, write by first mail to the undersigned.

A Christmas Carol.

It chanced upon the merry, merry Christmas Eve,
I went sighing past the church across the moorland dreary—

Oh! never sin and want and woe this earth will leave,
And the bells but mock the wailing rounds, they sing so cheery.

"How long, O Lord! how long before thou come again!
Still in cellar, and in garret, and on moorland dreary
The orphans moan, and widows weep, and poor men toil in vain,

"Till earth is sick of hope deferred, though Christmas bells be cheery."

Then arose a joyous clamor from the wild fowl on the meer,
Beneath the stars, across the snow, like clear bells ringing,
And a voice within cried,—"Listen! Christmas carols even here!

Tho' thou be dumb, yet o'er their work the stars and snows are singing.

Blind! I live, I love, I reign; and all the nations through,
With the thunder of my judgments even now are ringing;
Do thou fulfill thy work but as yon wild fowl do,

Thou wilt heed no less the wailing, yet hear through it angels singing."—Charles Kingsley.

Yuletide Memories.

The tallow candles were not yet lighted, and the fire in the huge cavern of a fireplace was only a great heap of glowing coals. The children were sitting on the wide hearth, chatting in their childish way. They had taken off their snow-soaked shoes and stockings, so the warm bricks of the hearth felt exceedingly nice to their bare feet, as they sat there joyously telling over their little experiences of the day while coasting down the hill behind the house.

Presently the outer door is flung open and two men bring in the great yule log, rolling it over the uncarpeted floor with levers, for it is far too large for even two men to carry. It is well coated with frozen snow. The children scamper out of its way, and the father rakes out a hollow bed for it in the ashes and coals at the back of the fireplace, and the great log is moved into place with many a "heave—o—" from men with strong arms who plied the levers till it settles with a thump and a hiss of melting snow into its place. The coals are shoveled back against it and branches of dry wood are piled on the andirons in front that soon send up a joyous crackling, such as only dry hickory and buckeye can make.

The laughing children resume their place on the hearth in front to watch it burn, and listen to the merry noise. The melting ice in the big log spits out mischievously at the row of little bare feet in front, causing their hasty withdrawal amid shouts of laughter. What a thing of life that fire seems as it goes roaring up the great chimney, causing those gathered about it to move farther and farther back towards the rear of the room. The mother and older daughters take up their knitting. No candles are needed. The father and the boys remove outdoor garments and settle down to enjoy life. All hearts seem to catch the merry cheerfulness of the fire, and respond to it in laughter and song. Our 'prentice lad sits with chair tilted back against the bed at the far side of the room. He is far from his mother and home, but he enters heartily into the joy of the evening. A few lines of the song which he contributes cling to memory along with the scene, though I do not remember to have heard them since that Christmas Eve. I transcribe them here:

"From toil and the care on which the day is closing,
The hour of eve brings sweet reprieve.
Oh, come, come away.
Oh, come where love will smile on thee,
And on our hearts will rapture be,
And time pass merrily,
Oh, come, come away."

The song was sung with feeling, and the rich German voice had scarcely ceased, when as if in acceptance of the invitation to come and enjoy the happiness of the evening, there came a knock at the door, and the son and daughter of a near neighbor came in. These are asked to contribute their share of the songs with which they comply. The mother responds that she does not know any songs, but she would like them all to join her in singing a hymn, and together they sing:

"Joy to the world! the Lord has come,
Let earth receive her King."

After this nuts and apples are brought, doughnuts and pumpkin pie passed around, with hot cider from the steaming pitcher on the hearth. A merry time was had with all this good cheer, and then games are prepared—old-fashioned games they were, but full of innocent fun—such as "blind-man's buff," and "puss in the corner," in which the little ones join with the older young folks, none of whom are past eighteen.

The mother has been putting away the remnants of the repast and leaves the pantry door slightly ajar that some of the warmth may enter and prevent freezing. Our "blind man" makes a sudden backward dash in the endeavor to pin one of the dodging figures behind him to the wall, when the treacherous pantry door swings in and lets the blinded one down with a thud, both elbows immersed in two large buckets of buttermilk left standing on the pantry floor. He picks himself up, joining in the merriment while he stands with white dripping arms spread out as one remarked, "like a goose prepared for flight." The blind man makes a grab at the speaker and catches her in his milky arms, and the fun goes on, while the little mother laughingly follows with mop rag along the milky way.

The evening was soon spent, but the yule log burned on for a week, and still burns in the hearts and memories of the two or three who yet linger on earth.

M. E. KEARNEY.

Was there ever a time when the publishing interests of the church needed to be remembered more than now, when we are struggling to overcome the loss we sustained by fire? Mothers, do you realize that by ordering books which are published by the church, it is in your power to greatly help this department of the Lord's work? Think, and act upon your thoughts, for the time is short.

The First Christmas.

Helaman 5: 5; 3 Nephi 1: 2-4.

The sun was sinking to rest, leaving the sky radiant with purple and gold, and throwing a shimmering light over the snow-laden boughs of the hemlocks, cedars, and pines of the primeval forests, making the frost on the snow glisten and sparkle in the uncertain light.

A youth with anxious face, tall, lithe, and sparely built, was striding through the pathless forest, the dead twigs and snow snapping and creaking with every step, all unmindful of the beauties around him, breathing deeply of the odorous air, as he hastened to reach his destination.

In a rude hut almost hidden by the overhanging branches of the forest trees, were gathered several men. The room was unlighted, save for that which was afforded from the huge fireplace, whose blazing log lighted up, then threw into shadow the anxious faces of the group. One of them, an old man with white hair and long flowing beard, was speaking, while the others were intently listening.

"'Tis five years since Samuel the Lamanite prophesied unto us that the Son of God should come to redeem all those who shall believe on his name. He also told us of the many signs and wonders that should be in the heavens. Verily we have seen many of these things of which he spake. We have seen the great lights in the heavens, and God through us hath wrought greater miracles than ever before. Yet there are those among our enemies, that say the words of Samuel are not fulfilled, and that our joy and faith hath been in vain; because we have not yet beheld the one great sign of the birth of the Christ. But be ye not sorrowful, but watch steadfastly for that day, and that night and that day, which shall be as one day, as if there were no night."

A step was heard without, the door was thrown open, and a youth stepped in; when they beheld his face a silence fell upon the group. "Thou hast news, grave news; I see it by thy countenance, speak up that we may know the worst," said the old man.

"Father, I have. I hastened to you from the city, where I heard that a day had been set apart by the unbelievers, that all those that believe in those traditions (of the coming of the Son of God) should be put to death; except the sign should come to pass, which had been given by Samuel the prophet."

At these words the little group became very sorrowful, lest by any means, these things which had been spoken might not come to pass. Nephi being exceedingly cast down, passed out from their midst and bowed himself down upon the earth, and cried mightily to his God, that they might not be destroyed because of their faith in the traditions of their fathers. He continued in prayer all the next day, and behold the voice of the Lord came to him, saying, "Lift up your head and be of good cheer, for behold the time is at hand, and on this night shall the sign be given, and on the morrow come I into the world."

The good news was rapidly spread among the believers, and their hearts were filled with joy and thanksgiving that God had remembered his people on this continent, and that on the morrow the Christ would be born in the lands of their fathers.

When the time for night had come, the great golden orb of day set in the west as before, but the whole earth was bathed in light and glory, from the east to the west, from the north to the south. The unbelievers fell to the earth with fear and trembling, but from the throats of the believers burst a song which was echoed and reëchoed, and sung by the angel chorus: "Glory to God in the highest," and looking heavenward they beheld a new star, His star, larger and more brilliant than all others, radiating such light as they had never yet beheld, and they exclaimed, "So are the words of the prophet fulfilled. There shall be a new star, such an one as ye never have beheld." They bowed down to the earth, worshipping God, and knew that the Christ was born.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri. MRS. M. A. ETZENHOUSER.

Letter Department

ADAH, Pennsylvania, November 16, 1907.

Editors Herald: I have just read a tract entitled, "The personality of God." From the reading, I think this little tract is published by your people. I agree with you on the personality of God. I firmly believe that he has parts and passions; that he has eyes, ears, mouth, and nose, and feeling; that takes in all the five senses. I do not understand why you left out the nose when the Bible speaks so plainly on this subject. Isaiah 65:4 we read, "Which eat swine's flesh, and broth of abominable things is in their vessels." And verse 5 says, "These are a smoke in my nose, a fire that burneth all the day." Surely the Lord has a nose and he can smell the broth and the frying of the swine that the many people use who profess to be his children. And again in Isaiah 66:17 we read that those who eat the "swine's flesh, and the abomination, and the mouse, shall be consumed together, saith the Lord."

Many who profess to be Christians claim that the Lord made all the beasts clean when he let down the sheet to Peter (Acts 10:15); but in verse 28 we read that Peter says, "God hath showed me that I should not call any man common or unclean." We know that Peter had been with Jesus during his three and a half years' ministry, and if Jesus had intended his followers to eat all kinds of abominable things, Peter would have known it. Jesus was only using the beast as a symbol, and while he was thinking on what the vision meant, the three men called for him. Please read Acts 10 and let us for ever abandon the abominable things that God has so graciously told us not to touch, the unclean thing. (2 Corinthians 6:17.)

I am much pleased at the way you magnify the holy and perfect law of God. So many profess to be Christians who violate the holy law of God in so many ways. I believe just as your tract says, "To the law and to the testimony." If they speak not according to this there is no light in them. And surely it is changing the law when we drop the command which says, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." We can not change one jot or tittle and be guiltless of the law of Christ, because it was sin that caused the suffering of our Lord, and sin is the transgression of the law. I also believe in being born of water by immersion; and I believe in the laying on of the hands, and in all the gifts of the Spirit. The Bible says, "To the law and to the testimony." And we read in Revelation 19:10 that the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.

So we can not have the church of God, unless we have the gift of prophecy and the gift of healing, and all the officers spoken of in the Bible. I hope you keep all ten of the commandments; and that you do not defile the temple of God by eating unclean things, and using tobacco, and any stimulants; and that you render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's. This is the way the saintly Daniel did, and his three companions, and the fifty million martyrs who suffered cruel death under Catholicism; and let us suffer also that we may all be glorified together. We can not be the children of light unless we accept all the light; for we are the light of the world, and can not be hid.

Your sister in the hope of the soon coming of the Lord.

ANNIE BROWN.

WASHBURN, Maine, November 12, 1907.

Editors Herald: I left home early in May for the "Pine Tree State," my field of labor. I called at Haverhill on my way, spending a few days trying to encourage the Saints, and help them over some of the hard places they were encountering. The evening before leaving a very pleasant surprise awaited me. Meeting had been appointed at the home of Bro. George W. York, president of the branch. At the close of the meeting the Saints lingered and talked. Some of the young sisters, with knowing winks and smiles, skipped from the parlor, returning in a few minutes with ice-cream and cake, to the surprise of the elder, for he had no intimation whatever of the pleasant arrangement made. A surprise of this kind is very refreshing and helps cement the already strong ties of sainthood more securely. After some musical selections and good hearty laughter (refined), I was asked to stand by Bro. York. Upon arising he delivered a very nice little speech of appreciation for my labors among them for many years, regrets at my leaving them, etc., and presented me with some very useful "details" that make up the outfit of man. These little green spots do not come with such frequency that we are liable to soon forget them. For such remembrances we are truly thankful. The spirit of appreciation, manifested towards those laboring for the good of mankind, is helpful.

Arriving in Maine I attended the Western Maine conference of Stonington. A very peaceful and profitable session was enjoyed, Elder W. E. LaRue, sub-missionary in charge, presiding. I stayed, while there, with Bro. and Sr. Frank Carter, two good, loyal Saints, Sr. May being the writer of that splendid story, "An instrument in his hands," as published in Autumn Leaves. Would have enjoyed a longer stay among them, but duty called me elsewhere. Since entering my field I have directed much of my labors in and near Jonesport. Developments here proved to me conclusively my appointment was rightly directed. I was blessed in a remarkable manner among the people and Saints of that place. Bro. Greene, missionary in charge, labored among his old friends and associates there, and was accorded a hearty welcome. Two were baptized by him while there; and seven others, all heads of families, have been baptized since; and others are near the door, one lady living at Machias awaiting an opportunity.

The powers of darkness sought to obstruct the work in a peculiar manner, but the one whom God has placed at the head of his church, and who will eventually hand it over to his Father perfected, was equal to the occasion, and triumphed.

The sweet, fresh fish, lobsters, etc., along the Maine coast are just splendid, and were enjoyed. I was called home October 1 to perform the marriage ceremony of our only daughter, Lillia, to Bro. Charles L. Warren, of Los Angeles, California, where they have made their home. One more vacant chair in our home, and her companionship to her mother greatly missed; but this is as it has been appointed, and we must learn to endure such changes.

On my return to Jonesport I found our brother, Elder Joshua Walker, very low, and October 26 he passed quietly and peacefully away to rest with the faithful ones in the paradise of God. He was president of the branch here for many years, and leaves an untarnished record behind, living a consistent, saintly life, and faithful to the end. To such the crown of life is promised. His faithful companion, Eliza, is left to do good among the Saints wherever she may desire to make her home.

The work in Washburn is at a very low ebb, and in a most discouraging condition. The clouds have gathered thickly over the horizon, with no apparent rift in sight. We most earnestly pray for light and spiritual direction. A freezing-out process is in progress, and not wholly from the outside. Who is to blame for these conditions?

An early cold snap here, of several degrees below zero last month, has frozen twenty thousand acres of potatoes in this country. This comes almost as a calamity to the farmers here. Surely we have many things to remind us of the visitation of God in judgment to the inhabitants of the earth. What is not being destroyed by the elements, are subject to the scourge of destroying insects. The promise to Israel in the days of Malachi was, I will destroy or rebuke the devourer for your sakes, if you will bring in all your tithes and offerings into my storehouse. The curse upon the earth is largely due to the ingratitude of its inhabitants. How shall modern Israel escape the effects of these scourges? I am the Lord, I change not? Then the ages that move along can not bring change to the purposes, plans, or justice of the Lord. He ever abides the same. "His course is one eternal round."

The Lord has told us he has cursed the waters in these last days, but he has blessed the earth for his Saints' sake. But blessing from God comes to his Saints upon certain unalterable conditions. In nothing doth man displease God more than failing to recognize the hand of God in all things, and in not keeping his commandments. Then to be entitled to the riches of the earth's products, we must keep the commandments, and the one especially emphasized to us, as to Israel of old, is the paying of our debts to the Lord, and giving our offerings and consecrations to the building up, redemption, and enlarging of Zion. If these things are strictly attended to, the devourer will be rebuked for our sakes, as of old, and we shall be a delightful people.

The Lord, in his mercy and long-suffering, yearns after his people, and is offering every inducement in promise (and his promises are sure) if his people will stand in holy places, where he can unstintingly give to us according to his promise.

"Oh, that my people would hearken," comes to us as of old. May we heed the counsel of our heavenly Father, that we may not suffer with the wicked and rebellious the judgments which are to be poured out, without measure, in these last days, is my prayer.

Yours in gospel bonds,
RICHARD BULLARD.

BYRNEVILLE, Indiana, December 6, 1907.

Dear Herald: We hardly ever see anything written from Byrneville, Indiana, but we are not dead, nor asleep in the work here, but have a flourishing Religio, Sunday-school, Saints' meeting every Sunday at two in the afternoon, and each Wednesday night, and of late, quite regularly, preaching each Sunday by Elder F. L. Sawley. Bro. Sawley, our missionary, moved his family here in July. Since that time he reorganized our Religio and Sunday-school that had gone down, and because of sickness in his family the last month he has been detained at home. The stork visited his home the 7th of November and left a baby girl. But he has not been idle in church work, so far as he has had time and strength to labor for the advancement of our work. In addition to this, we are to have a Christmas tree and entertainment. We have some nice young people in our branch, who are willing workers, and only lack proper development to make them proficient, devoted church workers. Bro. Sawley is one of our peculiar all around men, not only a successful preacher, but a musician, singer, an earnest worker with the young people and children, a chart builder, and blackboard and chart preacher, hence a useful man. We feel that our work here is surely making progress, if some things are not just as we think they ought to be to make a branch strong and spiritual.

Hastily, in gospel bonds,

H. W. AND HELEN KEPLEY.

TIPTON, Iowa, December 7, 1907.

Dear Herald: I would like to state that we are alive yet, though silent for a long time. Bro. F. B. Farr and wife were here and held two services in the opera house December 1, afternoon and evening, with a splendid crowd in the afternoon, two hundred or more, but not so many in the evening, owing to services in four different churches. Splendid interest was manifested by the close attention paid, though Elder Farr spoke for nearly one hour and a half with good liberty. Sr. Farr rendered noble assistance with the music, and people appreciated it, from comments heard afterwards. Some are investigating already. Bro. Farr would have stayed longer, which would have been the thing to do, could we have gotten a place to occupy. We had to pay five dollars for the afternoon and evening, and the writer did not feel able to stand it very long at that rate, as we are the only Saints here that we know of.

"They are just lovely!" was the expression of outsiders, and we, too, could echo the same. We believe they could do a noble work here, as there are so many that belong to no church, and are just fine people. We will try to get some place in the near future, and have them sound the trumpet again before the echo of this effort dies out.

With lots of love for the onward march of Zion, we are,
I. M. LANE.

DELOIT, Iowa, December 3, 1907.

Editors Herald: October 3, 1907, I commenced services in the Cooper schoolhouse, some eight miles northeast of Glidden, where, in connection with the branch officers, Orman Salisbury, and George Juergens, I preached some fourteen discourses, staying at the home and enjoying the hospitalities of Bro. Juergens and family. Bro. Juergens manifested a zeal that is commendable in any officer by taking me nightly to the place of meeting and back, though very busy with his farm work. Bro. O. Salisbury, when home, manifested the same zeal, and showed equal kindness. These meetings were held in what we usually call the Benan Salisbury settlement. Bro. Benan Salisbury and wife, Mother Harons, who for so many years so kindly entertained the ministers, with others, are evidently at rest in the paradise of God. May their rest be glorious. However, one can scarcely resist a feeling of lonesomeness which creeps over them as the vacancies in the homes and church are noticed. Mr. Samuel Duckett, who with his family entertained us kindly, has fallen asleep, and his excellent family have moved away, so that my old locality no longer seems to be what it once was, though we are glad to believe "what is our loss is their gain." The branch is badly scattered; but the few still remaining are alive in the work, and making an effort to keep the gospel standard unfurled.

November 6, Bro. Juergens furnished conveyance to the home of Bro. and Sr. John Byerly, five miles west of Scranton, where I commenced services the same evening in the schoolhouse near by, and continued over the Sunday following. Bro. Byerly and family and a Mr. Whitmore and family were about the only ones who attended. However, I enjoyed good liberty in presenting the first principles of the gospel while there. Mr. Whitmore and family are Free Methodists, and they gave the best of attention. They invited me to their home Sunday afternoon of the 10th and entertained me very kindly, requesting me to call again when coming that way.

Sunday, November 10, in the forenoon, I attended the Free Methodist class-meeting, and noted carefully the zeal manifested, which I admired, though I felt sorry that they did not have a better understanding of the conditions of salvation. Among the most zealous ones at this meeting was a Mrs. Wolf, widow of the late Reverend Wolf, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, perhaps the one referred to by one of our missionaries in the HERALD not long since. As I listened to the old sister tell how she "had it," my mind went back to the time when Father R. D. Butterworth used to tell me how grandmother was a member of the "Ranters," and in spite of her new faith I was forced to the conclusion that Sr. Wolf is a "Ranter" in practice, if not by profession.

The writer and others will long remember the kindness of Bro. and Sr. Byerly while members of the Christian Church at Lake City, Iowa. Their house was not only a home for our ministers, but also a place where we held a good number of cottage meetings. Such Christian liberty is a jewel, and is not often found among those not of our faith. The Lord is sure to bless those who manifest such charity towards the ministers of Christ.

At this writing I am holding some services in the Deloit Branch, in connection with the branch officers. Thus far the attendance has been good, and the liberty enjoyed and the attention given has been excellent. The watchword is ever perseveringly onward and upward to victory under the blood-stained banner of King Immanuel.

"'Tis a war that calls for valor;
 'Tis a conflict with the world;
 There can be no furlough granted,
 Never must the flag be furled.
 We can never cease the conflict,
 Till the summons home be heard;
 We have all for life enlisted
 In the army of the Lord."

Yours in gospel bonds,
 CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

WARNSLEY, Ohio, December 8, 1907.

Editors Herald: I have been reading the letters in the HERALD this morning. They produce a satisfaction and enjoyment to me that the world can not give. May the Lord continue to bless the Editors and inspire their hearts and minds with the Spirit of Truth, or Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost.

I was at Crabtree about three weeks ago, and found Brn. I. N. Roberts and Jenkins there. Bro. Roberts was with us a few days. We have no place to hold meeting except at private houses, and the people are very bitter against us. There are two church houses within one mile of us. One of them is in sight. It is a Methodist. All we can do is to get along the best we can. All will be right in time. I do what talking I can. There are some honest people here, and some that are so bitter against us that they will not accept the gospel of Christ which is the power of God unto salvation; and that perfect law of God that converts men to God, and brings them under subjection to his law, and by obedience to the law of God, or in other words the gospel of Christ as taught by Christ and the apostles, will save the race of mankind in the celestial kingdom, or the same law will condemn them in the day of judgment.

I am glad that I have found the church of Christ, with all of the gifts and blessings as they were in former days, as the same God still exists, and his law never changes. I ask all the Saints to stand firm in the faith that will stand the test. I am your brother in Christ with all love and best wishes to all Saints, the family of God. May God be with you until we meet.

I. T. MITCHELL.

FOREST, Ontario, November 22, 1907.

Editors Herald: We are now all alone. Not a Latter Day Saint nearer than Petrolia, twenty-five miles away from us. There were, at one time, six here; but now only my wife and I left. The last one, Bro. Jackson, died October 29, 1907; buried the 31st in Beechwood Cemetery, a Campbellite officiating. There are many around here who have been at us to join their church, as we are alone here; but we prefer being alone with Christ, than to leave the true gospel and go back into darkness. Our daily prayer is that there may be a branch raised up here. We are trying to let our light shine, and I am giving out the HERALDS and Ensigns and Canadian Messengers, to all that will read them. My wife has been poorly for a long time, but in October our son was over from Applegate and administered to her, and she has been better since, thank God. We are getting old, close on to seventy. We hope at last to meet all our brothers and sisters in Christ.

HENRY HUSTON.

HOLDENVILLE, Oklahoma, December 5, 1907.

Editors Herald: The battle is on at Holdenville. A twelve nights' debate commenced last night between W. M. Aylor, and J. W. Crumley, of the non-progressive Christians. Mr. Crumley follows the old lines of misrepresenting us. We are hopeful, knowing that truth will prevail. The Saints have a nice church building here, but it may not be large enough to accommodate all that would like to attend the debate.

I am enjoying myself in this new field. Have the best of health; also find plenty to do. I had the pleasure of baptizing three on Thanksgiving day. My address, for a time, will be Box 185, Holdenville.

Yours for truth and righteousness,

WILLIAM DAVIS.

ROCKY FORD, Colorado, December 10, 1907.

Editors Herald: Since leaving home about November 1, I have preached at Pueblo, Florence, and this place; have also visited Saints at Canon City, Williamsburg, Rockvale, Heathton, and Swink. Most of those visited are still in the faith, though some, owing to their isolated condition, are not as enthusiastic as we would like to see them. Organized Sunday-schools at Florence and this place. Bro. F. A. Russell joined me December 3, and we are holding cottage-meetings at night and street-meetings in the afternoon.

Some have signified their intention of joining with us. Unless the smallpox scare hinders, we think to spend a few more weeks farther east in this (Arkansas) valley, and then move on over the range. We had intended visiting that part of the mission on the western slope ere this, but have been hindered. There are more calls than we can fill.

E. F. SHUPE.

PITTSBURG, Pennsylvania, December 8, 1907.

Editors Herald: Within the last few months the church has suffered a loss in the deaths of T. J. Beatty (seventy) and Thomas Matthews, both of the Ohio District. The former had been a missionary for many years, and was instrumental in opening up the work in many new places, and in bringing a great number into the church. Notwithstanding that he was severely afflicted in body and a great sufferer at times, still he would move out and make new openings. He was a man who was greatly beloved by those who knew him. He often said he wanted to die in the harness, and he realized his desire in this respect, as he was only home a few months prior to his demise. He sat in his chair and talked encouragingly to those around him, bade them all good-bye, and admonished them all to be faithful, and fell asleep in the arms of his wife and daughters; and thus passed away one of God's meek and humble servants to his eternal rest.

Elder Thomas Matthews was another one of our faithful men. He had served the church in various capacities; as missionary, president of branch and district. He was not only respected by the Saints, but highly honored by the citizens of his home town, who honored him with many positions of trust. We regret that with his death the work in Syracuse, Ohio, has virtually died, too, as there is not a man left there to carry it on or to continue it. The strangest thing about it is that the work at this place was established by Brn. James Blakeslee and W. W. Blair in the very incipency of the Reorganization, and we have been able to maintain a branch, sometimes very large in point of numbers, until now. We had some sisters left, also one brother, all of whom have moved away. The brother, David Hopkins, an elder, is now living at Shawnee, Ohio, and to make things worse, he united with the Baptist Church recently. We have a church building in Syracuse, and hope the Lord will send some minister there to revive the work ere long.

I am pleased to be able to write that at Limerick, Ohio, the home of T. J. Beatty, that his son Luther has become an active worker and is now president of the branch, and seems determined to take up the work left by his father. May the Lord inspire him and supplement his efforts.

The Columbus Branch is in a very fine condition, spiritually. Some ten or eleven families have moved there within the last year, and a few have been added by baptism. Bro. Josiah Matthews, ex-president of the branch, rendered excellent service in the occupancy of that office. He was ably assisted by Bro. Calvin Rich and the branch officers. At the last business-meeting, a week ago, Bro. Harry French was elected president of the branch, Bro. Matthews being unable to attend all of the meetings by reason of his being a traveling salesman, therefore he preferred Bro. French to occupy. Bro. Harry is a very capable minister, and if properly supported will make an efficient president. Brn. Rich and Wilson have started a small grocery. We wish them success in their new venture. By the way, we have a very interesting Sunday-school under the superintendency of Bro. Clark, and a wide-awake Religio society in charge of Bro. Rich.

Within the last ten weeks I have visited all the branches except one in the Ohio District. All do not come up to the mark in point of spirituality, and in many instances the officers are responsible for the spiritual dearth, because of inactivity and the failure on their part to magnify their calling. The admonition of the Lord to the officers of the church, "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence," is not honored and respected by some officers; for instance priests, who in some instances do not visit the Saints at all, and in other cases the visits are months apart. Again, in some branches the teachers make no attempt at laboring with unruly and delinquent members. By reason of this neglect the church in many places suffers reproach and is subjected to ridicule, because of the unrighteous doings of some who call themselves Saints, who should be expelled from the church unless they repent and cease their evil doings. And what about the officer who permits himself to become offended at some insignificant or trifling thing, and condescends to absent himself from church services for weeks and months at a time? How can such an one expect to have the confidence and support of the Saints and the blessings of God resting upon him? What is wanted, in my opinion, in most of the branches where I have labored, is a corps of wise, active, spiritual officers. Where such is found in a branch, you will find a spiritual branch.

I have also detected the great slothfulness on the part of some of the Saints in complying with the financial law. As a consequence of such negligence, the hands of the Bishop's agents are tied, and a number of the ministers' families are in arrears with their monthly allowances. And this condition makes it hard, and inconveniences those families who have to depend upon the agents for their monthly pittance. And in view of the high prices of commodities it makes it a very difficult and trying task for the traveling elders' wives to make ends meet. Some few of the ministers have quit the ministry, and some others are threatening to do so. We, therefore, hope the Saints will try to be more diligent in meeting their financial obligations. We also have complaint made to us by some of the traveling ministry, that officers and Saints in many places, where they have occasion to go, do not supply them with the necessary means to meet their traveling expenses and other necessities. We think this neglect is more for the want of thought than a desire to ignore or to treat illy these brethren. Perhaps it would be well for us to refresh our memory by reading what the Lord has said the duties of the Saints are in this respect. "Whoso receiveth you receiveth me, and the same will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money. And he who feeds you, or clothes you, or gives you money, shall in no wise lose his reward; and he that doeth not these things is not my disciple; by this you may know my disciples."—Doctrine and Covenants 83:16.

I have visited Wheeling and Pittsburg within the last week and found both branches in fair condition, and good prospects ahead of them, if Brn. C. Ed Miller and J. A. Becker are permitted to remain in these respective cities to continue the good work they have begun. Both of these men are highly spoken of by the Saints, and their efforts to build up and extend the work in these places are being heartily supported by the officials and membership. Also Bro. Paul M. Hanson is diligently at work at New Philadelphia, Ohio, and indeed he is a workman that we can be proud of. He, with the assistance of Bro. Miller, is at present regulating and setting in order church affairs, under the direction of proper authority.

Bro. S. J. Jeffers accompanied me on my tour through his district, and I found him to be a congenial colaborer, whose heart is in this work.

We received the sad news of the death of Elder David Strachan, president of the Youngstown, Ohio, Branch, who was laid to rest on Thanksgiving day. He will be greatly missed, as he was the leading and prominent worker of that city.

I leave in the morning for Buffalo, New York, and the Eastern States. I wish all my acquaintances and the Saints a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
GOMER THOMAS GRIFFITHS.

Editor Herald: I received this from the hands of Sr. Stuart. It had been lying for years in her trunk, and was yellow with age. I send you a copy, thinking it may be interesting to the HERALD readers.

M. J. -PHIPPS.

"Given in tongues by Sr. Henrietta Lake:

"O my people, be not lifted
Up in pride of wicked hearts;
If you do you will be sifted,
And from me bade to depart.
For a poor, afflicted people
I have chosen for my own,
And a pure and holy people
I must have when I do come.

"Cease your jarrings and contentions
Or in judgment I will come,
For in my law 'tis there made mention
That such things must not be done.
O my people, be more careful;
How you trifle with my word;
Live more humble, watchful, prayerful,
Then I will your prayers regard.

"I entreat you now to hearken,
And to heed what I have said,
Or your minds will soon be darkened,
And by Satan's power led.
How oft I've told you in my kindness,
How to flee the wrath to come,
But if you will walk in blindness,
You must share the dreadful doom.

"Yes! I've spoken to you often,
Yet some have me heeded not,
For awhile your hearts did soften
But my words you soon forgot.
Come and listen to the teachings
Of the Spirit's warning voice,
As it whispers so beseeching,
Hear! O hear the Savior's voice.

"If you heed what I have spoken
And observe to do my will,
Keep your covenants unbroken,
I will all my words fulfill.
I will pray unto the Father
That he will not hew you down,
That you may prepare to gather Unto Zion with his own."

HAMBURG, Iowa, December 6, 1907.

Editors Herald: I have been taking your paper a long time, and I do not know how I ever could do without it. I like to read it all so much that I am always anxious for it to come. I have been a member of the church a number of years. I was baptized in 1882, by Elder E. C. Brand, but have not lived as I should live, but ask your prayers that I may live a better member in the days to come.

I have been blessed of the Lord many times, in sickness and health. He has heard my prayers many times. Oh, how I long to attend some good meetings, such as we had many years ago. We have a little Sunday-school here, where four or five meet together, and once in a while we have a meeting; but we do not have the Spirit to testify to us as of old. Pray for us, dear Saints, that we may receive the Spirit of the Lord again, like we used to have it.

Your humble sister,
EMMA.

GLADSTONE, Illinois, December 6, 1907.

Editors Herald: There are a goodly number of the brethren of the church that I am acquainted with, whom I love, and have not seen for years, but being a constant reader of the church publications, they have kept me in touch with the general progress of the church. I have been living in an isolated condition for a long time, and at times feel very much isolated. Some few elders have called on us, and there has been some preaching done here. I think likely I have done more private preaching than any one else, and distributed tracts and church publications to all who would read them. The people of Gladstone understand the position of the Reorganized Church better than they did. We are all human and have to learn. The words everlasting and eternal appear frequently in the scriptures. Everlasting and eternity I understand to be synonymous terms. Eternity always was, and is, and always will be, in which worlds may be brought into existence, and answer the purpose of their creation, and pass away; still eternity will exist. And when the knowledge of the eternal God the father shall dawn upon the minds of his children, their minds and spirits will be quickened into a knowledge of God the father's eternal day, which was, and is, and always will be. Men may pervert the gospel, but that does not affect the everlasting and eternal principles of the gospel of the Son of God; for they are everlasting and eternal. Therefore John, the beloved disciple, says, "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people."

Brethren, when you come this way, call and see us. Bro. Frank Morgan and myself live here, with our families. When Bro. Joseph can go to the islands of the sea, it seems he might call on us some time; and Bro. Alexander Smith also. I dreamed of seeing Bro. Joseph not long ago, and he was shaved clean; I could scarcely recognize him.

In hope of the final triumph of the everlasting gospel,
JACOB L. RUST.

ROCK ISLAND, Texas, December 9, 1907.

Dear Herald: During this conference year I have been associated with Elder Johnnie Hay, a very agreeable and progressive young man, and feel justified in saying that our work was not without profit. Nine or ten have thus far been baptized. The Sunday-school is kept in thriving order, and isolated members encouraged.

During our summer's labor, points near New Baden, Hearne, Sky, Waco, Houston, Brookshire, Katy, and Goldenrod have been worked. Very favorable reports, from different points, have been made of the work of Elders I. N. White and S. S. Smith in their recent tour through the State. Last month Elder John Nunley, son of E. W. Nunley, was with me, rendering good instruction in the line of his calling as Bishop's agent. On my arrival at home in Houston about three weeks ago, I found my wife sick with fever. After a confinement to bed of nearly three weeks she is now upon her feet. During this illness there were times when by administration the Lord wrought deliverance that no other power could effect. Since regaining liberty of strength, we are trying with glad hope to be useful in prosecuting the great mission work of the gospel. Perhaps I had as well mention that a large man ran at me fiercely to fight me during the time I was with Bro. John Nunley at "George." His two sons begged at him to quiet down sufficiently so that I was allowed to walk away. I had provoked him by declaring that he was not director, neither authority, when he was interrupting my conversation with the school board by saying, "You shall not preach in the schoolhouse, sir," repeatedly. Not knowing that he was an overbearing monarch of the community I wounded his pride more than I supposed by asking others loud enough for him to hear, "Is that man drunk?" When the challenge came to fight I remarked to him, "If you come out to hear me preach, I will teach you better than to fight." He was a "Free-Will Baptist" and exercised the "free will" to do as he pleased; to fight if he lost out in an argument.

I am domiciled at the always welcome home of Bro. and Sr. O. F. Belkham, and intend to conduct meetings here or at Goldenrod as soon as the roads become passable.

WM. H. MANNERING.

ITHACA, Michigan, December 9, 1907.

Editors Herald: We opened up services in the G. A. R. hall at this place Sunday evening, December 1, and have continued nightly and twice on Sunday. At first the people were shy, but gradually prejudice gave way, and we have been greeted with very fine audiences. We have been given "good liberty" in the public administration of the word. I never attended a meeting where so many gray-haired old people attended, and so few young folks. I am impressed that the Lord has a people here. There are four Saints of the Reorganized Church residing here, and one of the old organization. Those of the Reorganized Church are Bro. and Sr. Asa Ward, formerly of Detroit, Michigan, and Bro. and Sr. Joseph Salenau (pronounced Saleno), formerly of Nebraska City, Nebraska. Bro. Phillips, of the old church, is eighty-seven years old, and came with Saints to Kirtland from New York. He loves to talk of early times, gets animated, and says Joseph Smith, the Martyr, and Oliver Cowdery and David Whitmer were as good a class of men as were to be found on the earth; that Joseph was as "companionable a man as could be found"; that he did not possess the natural ability to bring forth and inaugurate the latter-day work, and "the only conclusion any man can come to," he says, "is that Joseph was inspired of God." Bro. Phillips did not know that Brigham Young and the original Quorum of Apostles led off into apostasy. He has been a citizen of Gratiot County, Michigan, for forty years; held office of public trust here for years. His mind is clear on the incidents occurring in Western New York, and at Kirtland, Ohio. He informs me that "when the latter-day work started in New York it broke up churches, and sometimes the whole membership would come over to the truth and be baptized." If this be the case, we can see the grounds of persecution.

Bro. and Sr. Ward are alive to the interests of the work here, and desire to succeed. Indeed, there is excitement prevailing, and an interest getting strong. Hopefully,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

WEATHERBY, Missouri.

Editors Herald: We are still alive down here. We belong to the Delano Branch. There are a few faithful ones here. We are doing our best to let our light shine. We meet every Sunday. Our Sunday-school is small. We hope soon to take up the study of the Book of Mormon. We would appreciate a visit from any of the elders passing this way.

MRS. W. C. ROTH.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. Annie Brooks sends five dollars as a Thanksgiving offering, saying, "I feel to thank the Lord for all good blessings, and ask the prayers of all the dear Saints, that I may live more faithfully; for we live far away from any branch of the church, and have not the privilege of attending meetings; and we feel the need of it very much."

News From Branches

FIRST BRANCH, CHICAGO.

Editors Herald: As the seasons change, first the rain and then the drought, now the seed time, next the harvest, so are the conditions of society. The branch at this time enjoys a wave of prosperity. The faithful few are supplemented by a regular attendance of many who have for a season been conspicuous by their absence from the meetings. We are glad to note the increasing interest, and we cheerfully give God the praise in having answered our prayers for "those who are absent."

Thanksgiving supper given for the benefit of the building fund, netted us something near fifty dollars, which will apply well on our present fund, which is almost large enough to "start something." A handsome cake was donated the committee by Bro. Charles W. Camp, which brought sixteen dollars and fifty cents from the "block," being knocked off to little Francis Hartshorn, as the most popular lady present.

At branch business-meeting December 2, Elder S. C. Good presented what had been given him by the Holy Spirit, to-wit: Calling of James F. Keir and Harry Passman to the office of elder, which the branch ratified and referred to the coming district conference; also the calling of Guy Fairbanks to the office of deacon. Bro. Fairbanks was ordained at once, and sets out to fill his office with the earnest wishes of all.

Election of branch officers was as follows: Harry Passman, president; James F. Keir, priest; Charles Shaw, teacher; Guy Fairbanks, deacon; Sr. Grace Johnson, secretary; Marie Richter, organist. They need first your prayers, then your advice.

J. H. CAMP.

2270 West Twenty-fifth Street.

LONDON, ONTARIO.

Elder John Shields, missionary, who has been laboring in St. Thomas, occupied the pulpit here the other Sunday morning and evening. He gave two forcible discourses, which were appreciated by the Saints.

The officers and teachers of the Sunday-school are hard at work preparing for their annual Christmas entertainment, to be held on the 27th.

At our last regular business-meeting the following officers were chosen for the ensuing term; President, T. R. Seaton; priest, George Henley; assistant priest, S. Pope; teacher, W. A. Hardy; deacon, R. Y. Martin; assistant deacon, J. Judkins.

A large number of the Saints and friends of Sr. R. B. Howlett met at her home the other evening and gave her a birthday greeting. A very enjoyable time was had, the affair being a surprise to Sr. Howlett. During the evening the sister was presented with a purse of money. The presence of the Saints, and also the gift, were greatly appreciated by Sr. Howlett, more so as Elder Howlett is still away on his mission to the Manitoulin Islands.

It is motive alone that gives character to the actions of men.

Mogg, Ortentia Mogg, Goldie Anger. Those present empowered to cast entire vote and in case of division majority and minority vote. A motion to amend the election clause of the Constitution and By-laws, was followed by a substitute, "To petition the missionary in charge to formulate an amendment to the election clause of the Constitution and By-laws, and publish same in the HERALD previous to the convening of the General Convention. Substitute carried. The amendment was ratified by the district, and is as follows: "Notice is hereby given that at the General Sunday-school Convention of 1908, the following amendment to the Constitution and By-laws will be moved: Under "ELECTIONS, 2. Voting."—After the word "represents" and before the word "in" insert as follows: "or otherwise, as the district may determine," so that as amended it will read: "2. Voting.—In the election of officers of the district association and of the delegates to the General Association, the vote shall be taken by the yeas and nays, each delegate casting one vote for every ten members or fraction thereof of the school he represents, or otherwise, as the district may determine. In all other business a majority of the members present shall rule. Delegates elected to the General Association shall be elected at the meeting held preceding the session of the General Association." Adjourned to meet at the place where the next conference meets. Addie Grant, secretary.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

I wish to again speak to the Saints of the Central Michigan District, as there is so much required and so little given, in comparison with the abundance that our heavenly Father has bestowed upon his believing children. We have in our district a membership of over one thousand members, and less than four hundred names on our books. Where are the other six hundred? Jesus has said that, If a man love me, he will keep my commandments. We find in Doctrine and Covenants, section 106, where the Lord requires all of our surplus properties, as a consecration, and one tenth of all our interest annually; this to be a standing law for ever; and they who fail to keep this law shall not be found worthy to remain in Zion; given with promise that he that is tithed shall not be burned. The Lord has left us to be our own judges. He has also promised to open the windows of heaven and pour out blessings upon us that there will not be room enough to receive them. Will you take God at his word? Will you rely on his promises? Will you obey his commandments? If you will, then let us hear from the six hundred silent ones. It is not too late; for each one can yet get his name on the Bishop's books this year.

Now, dear Saints, we have some calls for help from the poor, and scarcely funds enough to pay the allowances. What will we do? The Lord's work depends upon his Saints to move it. Now we wish to make an appeal to each Saint to give something to the storehouse of the Lord between now and Christmas. Will five hundred of our members give fifty cents each? That will make two hundred and fifty dollars. It may be a sacrifice. Will you make it? Will you place money enough in our hands before Christmas, that we can pay each family on our list their allowance before Christmas? Remember they, too, have little ones that want a present. Will you kindly remember them? Besides, there are the poor, that have no flour; will you kindly remember them? If you will, the Lord will remember you; because Jesus has said that whosoever will give a cup of water in the name of a disciple, shall in no wise lose his reward. And there is the sanitarium. The Lord has spoken, and said such should be built. How many will give one dollar each this year on the sanitarium fund? It may be a sacrifice. God wants those who will be Saints by sacrifice. How many will respond to our call? Money paid to Elder J. A. Grant will be receipted for, and will reach the proper channel. My address is Bay City, Michigan, Station A., R. F. D. No. 6. Will sub-agents do all they can to assist in the one great cause? May the Lord's work roll on, is my prayer.

December 6, 1907.

E. S. WHITE, Bishop's Agent.

To the Saints of the Ohio District: Again we come, asking you to remember that another year is near its close, and that many have not their names recorded on the Bishop's agent's book. Why is it? Are times so hard we can not, or is it lack of interest in this great work? We think the latter, for when times were hard, wages low, farm products cheap, there were more tithes and offerings coming than now, with an increased membership, with increased wages (nearly double) for those who desire to work, and the farmer has no chance to complain of the prices he receives. Yet but few have anything to give to help send the angel's message forth.

"But," says one, "I am in the faith." About how much? Enough to give the Lord a little lip service when we want his help in time of trouble or sickness; but our faith weakens when we think of the law of tithes and offerings and consecration that the Lord has commanded us to keep? I feel sure that he will hold us just as responsible for the performance of this as any other command he has given. I believe we will have to meet it some place, some where, some time, and I think it would be far better for us to meet it here, do our duty, and have the blessing of God to help us along, than to hold on to see how much worldly pleasure we might get out of what we can gather together.

Let me give you the testimony of a brother and wife; they send their tithing in regularly; but he told me a few days ago that the last he sent he needed it very much, as winter was coming and he needed coal and other things; so he and his good wife talked about using it, but finally they said, "No, that is the Lord's, we will send it and trust him." In a few days the brother made his report to the company he was agent for, and when he got returns they had just doubled the pay he had been getting, and did so on the next report, so he had plenty to supply his present needs. He says, Surely the Lord was in it.

Faithfulness surely brings its reward. Dear Saints, let us be more faithful in all things. Do not forget that in about five weeks I will have to make my report to the Bishop for the year; and see how many names I can have to send in. Send what you have, much or little, and the Lord will bless you.

S. J. JEFFERS, Bishop's Agent.

RADCLIFF, Ohio, November 31, 1907.

Convention Notices.

Died.

MANCHESTER.—Sr. Helen, daughter of Bro. and Sr. A. R. Manchester, of Akron, Ohio, November 9, 1907, of diphtheria. She was a sweet, spiritual young sister, about fourteen years of age; but far in advance of her years in disposition, modesty, loveliness, and usefulness in the Sunday-school and church; loved by all who knew her. She was placed in the narrow house in the twilight, after a little talk by G. A. Smith to a yard full of friends; and many were in the street, the house being quarantined. Father, mother, two sisters, and one brother remain to mourn.

A Modern View of Nazareth.

As we climbed out of the mud and up the hills toward Nazareth on smooth, good roads, zigzag after zigzag, we looked across to the mountain where Isaac was to have been sacrificed, to the Mountains of Gilboa, to little Hermon, the site of the story of the Widow of Nain, and of the Witch of Endor, then to the Mount of Transfiguration, and at last, swinging around a hill, we were in full view of Nazareth itself. We must grant that the locations ascribed to scriptural history are "based on traditions rather than on inscriptions as in Egypt." Moreover, the people living on these brilliant, beautiful hills are a sad sight, deadly poor and crushed by taxes. They live in houses that are just stone boxes, crowded in together so that the walls of one are also the walls of others. On the roofs there are brushwood arbors where in summer people can escape from heat and fleas.—Travel Magazine.

The daily Register and Leader is offered to new subscribers from now to April 10, 1908, for one dollar. Thousands of Iowa people consider The Register and Leader to be the best newspaper printed for Iowa readers. It gives all the news of the State and nation every morning. Delivered on almost all rural routes on the day of publication. Get the full advantage of this trial offer by sending your dollar to-day. Address, The Register and Leader Co., Des Moines, Iowa.

We also pay interest on time deposit certificates. A number of the brethren are living here, others are looking forward to this location as a future home, and late revelation and admonition foreshadow coming events, adding materially to our spiritual holdings necessary to signs of the times, and in this connection our Board of Directors propose to safeguard the financial interests of the Saints by offering to them a depository proof against graft, greed, or calamity, governed by a kindred feeling born of the interest we have in common. It is not popular men, large capital, heavy deposits, National or State laws, that offer absolute security to depositors, but directors and officers progressive and conservative, possessed of the virtue of true manhood, shorn of all political ambition, with no taste for frenzied finance or mining speculation, and no inclination to furnish funds for others in that line. I point with considerable just pride (I assume) to our Board of Directors as named below. Feel at liberty to write us on matters that concern you in Jackson County, Missouri.

"I'VE FOUND A FRIEND IN JESUS."

(Reprinted from Autumn Leaves.)

While the angels waited for the arrival of the exact hour of a certain great event, they busied themselves condensing the wisdom and poetry and love of the ages into a Christmas greeting, and this was the result, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." It is the best wish that can be uttered at this or any other season. The man who glorifies God and has peace and cherishes good will is fortunate, whatever else he may lack. This happy condition can follow only a very close intimacy with the one whose birth was celebrated by the utterance of the words quoted.

It has long been evident to us, as a church, that the religious world has made a mistake in its attitude toward Christ. Their mistake is simply this: they have fancied it possible to get close to him while ignoring parts of his gospel law. They have taken the statement that Paul made, "I am determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified," and have regarded the closing clause as restrictive and limiting in its nature. They have made Paul to say, "I am determined to know nothing but Christ, and nothing about him save that he was crucified," whereas he clearly meant more like this, "I am determined to know all about Christ, including the crowning fact that he was crucified for you and for me."

No man can limit himself as some have done and get any meaning out of the death of Christ. The fact that men have died is not important to us, but the thing they died for—that counts. The death of Christ has meaning only as we learn what he died for. His death was the seal of his testimony. His testimony had been borne both in word and in deed, so that men seeing and hearing him, saw and heard the word of God made flesh.

Now we are getting at the root of the matter, and we see that to know Christ and him crucified does not preclude us from teaching, and if need be, practicing, everything that he said and did from the time of his baptism until the time when the clouds of glory received him. We are just as free to tell people that they must be baptized as we are to tell them that they must believe, because both were a part of his testimony, sealed by his blood.

Entered as second-class matter at the Lamoni post-office.

The Smith Family Association met at the home of Bro. B. M. Anderson, Lamoni, Iowa, on the evening of December 23, to celebrate the anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith, the Martyr. President Joseph Smith and Patriarch Alexander H. Smith are associated as presidents of the Association, and annual meetings are held. More regarding the program will appear in the next issue of the HERALD.

* * *

Men of real merit, whose noble and glorious deeds we are ready to acknowledge, are not yet to be endured when they vaunt their own actions.—Æschines.

* * *

I have learned to judge of men by their own deeds, and not to make the accident of birth the standard of their merit.—Mrs. Hale.

But while the world makes this mistake, we fear that at times some of our people make the opposite mistake, and set great store on certain ordinances, but do not get close enough to Christ himself. We need to realize Christ as a personal friend, one that is very close and dear.

Sometimes you have called on some elder to administer to you in time of sickness. You felt while he was doing so that he pitied you and wanted to help you. But unless you felt also that one stood by his side that loved you more than he, and pitied you more than he, and above all was more able than he to help you, you have not learned all that you should have learned from that administration.

In fact if you have looked at any friend and prized his love and have not seen that he was but a type of your Great Friend, you did not get all that you should have gotten out of that great gift of friendship.

Jesus suffered for you and did for you more than any other friend can. He fought your fight in the garden of Gethsemane.

Do not think that he was less brave than other men, who have faced death unmoved, simply because he shrank from it, and suffered, and sweat great drops of blood.

It was not death alone that he faced. But then every enemy that you have in all the realms of hell came against him and fought with him for your soul.

The Prince of the power of this world came that he might find something in him. Darkness settled over him and he was put to the rack and the torture, and the Devil searched him in every nerve and fiber that he might find something of his own there; that he might claim at least a partial dominion over the Savior.

As he hung upon the cross before helpless friends and among bitter enemies, he felt forsaken even of God; but he did not flinch—he died with forgiveness on his lips and in his heart.

Think what that meant! Had he railed upon his enemies and cursed them, every man from then till now might have said, "You may preach your gospel of love and forgiveness, but the Son of God himself could not live it."

But our great Father did live it, and we can trust him because he can feel for us in the hour of our deepest darkness, when the Devil is searching us and we need a friend to hold our hand.

Can you see him? Can you feel the tender gaze of his loving eyes? Can you discern the lineaments of his most beautiful face? God, quicken our vision, that we may know Christ!

There is an old song that many love, and it does not hurt us a bit because some Salvation Army lassie has sung it by the wayside:

"I've found a friend in Jesus, he's everything to me,
He's the fairest of ten thousand to my soul;
The Lily of the Valley, in him alone I see
All I need to cleanse and make me fully whole.
In sorrow he's my comfort, in trouble he's my stay;
He tells me every care on him to roll;
He's the Lily of the Valley, the Bright and Morning Star,
He's the fairest of ten thousand to my soul."

THE OLD YEAR AND THE NEW.

Another year hath flown, and that to which
We all looked forward, hath passed behind
The present. The earth hath gone her rounds once More about the sun, as she hath gone, how Long we may not know; since the beginning,
God hath said, but who may ask the date, or Count the ages that have fled for ever.
When the glad year was young, the earth had turned From the warm sun her northern temperate zone,
And over the dear land on which we dwell
The starry flakes of snow came shining down,
Spreading their purity o'er hill and dale.
The earth moved on a little space and bowed
Her face a little to her Lord, when, lo!
Her sides grew emerald with the springing life;
Bright flowers opened and the soft winds sang hymns.
A little farther on her circle moved,
The full leaf spread, the young fruit golden grew,
The glorious summer poured her light and heat,
Around the mighty circle she hath sped,
Until we near the young year's starting place;
Autumn hath passed; the snow hath come again,—
The year is with the past. A single note
In God's great song. A notch of time. An inch
Of all eternity. What have we done
While it was passing? Have we filled our place
In all its changing scenes? Have we made use,
In righteous judgment, of the priceless gifts
Strown in our pathway? Have its sorrows taught
The useful lessons that we should have learned?
If so, 'tis well; because the page is full,
With record written, not to be erased,
Revised or altered.

We may not turn back
The estranged friend, the unkind word unsay,
Or do again the duty illy done.
We may not preach the gospel in the year
Now fled; nor yet repent, nor do good works;
That opportunity for good is gone.
The influence we have shed abroad hath wrought
Its work, or still is working, and the year
Hath garnered up its store of good and ill,
And like a servant of the Lord hath gone
To seek its rest. Farewell Old Year.

Yet there
Is one thing we may do. Our Father grants
Us still another year, just coming in;
Blest be the Lord, his gifts fail not, for when
Time ends, eternity begins;—and so
Each mighty dispensation circles on.
The New Year dawns for us, thank God, and we
Can rouse our faith, and fire our hearts with hope;
Lay to our hands again with all our strength;
Begin the record on this yet white page,

That in its freshness our great Master spreads
 Before his children, with a high resolve
 That the good things recorded shall outweigh
 The evil of the other blotted leaf
 He hath turned over; that more light and truth
 Be added to the store the other held.
 O! if my hand might raise the veil between My clouded eye and all the year contains,
 The veil would pendant be, I would not lift
 The blessed curtain; better that we meet
 Our labors one by one, and conquer them,
 Bearing our sorrows as they singly come;
 Receiving all our gifts with grateful hearts;
 It is enough to know the Lord is good.
 And if the world would turn and lay their hearts
 Before his throne, and leave their wickedness,
 The Lord our Savior would appear this year,
 And the Millennium begin on New Year's Day. Be that as it may be, the year
 Shall fail and pass.

And so the years glide by,
 And soon the thousand years, of which we love
 To talk, appear. Help us, O Lord, to hail
 The glad New Year.

—David H. Smith, in Hesperis.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

The HERALD Editors have received the following signed, but undated, communication, which may be of interest to the church members in general:

"FORDSVILLE, Kentucky.

"The American Party organized to oppose the political plots of the polygamous hierarchy of the Latter-day Saints and secure an honest administration of the affairs of the United States, in its executive meeting formally recommends the nomination of Daniel Braxton Turney, of Illinois, for President of the United States, believing that the people opposing polygamy have said in unmistakable language that Doctor Turney is their choice for President. We would thus serve notice on the politicians who hindered the coming in of evidence as to the secret treasonable oath taken by Reed Smoot, that the incident is not yet closed, and that facts which were suppressed in the U. S. Senate shall yet be duly considered.

"WM. ADAMS, Chairman.

"SILAS CLAY ROBERTS, Secretary."

Canadian papers contain the following items regarding Elder George Green, who recently passed into the beyond:

"There passed away this morning, at his beautiful home in Chatham Township, George Green, one of the best known and most highly respected residents of the county, aged 76 years, 10 months and 18 days."—Chatham Banner-News.

"Mr. Green being a man of affairs, intelligence and progressive spirit, has been called upon to serve in office almost ever since he first located in the community. In political sentiment he was a Liberal. For many years Mr. Green has been a member of the Church of Latter Day Saints, and he was instrumental and assisted in the founding of a church of that faith in this section, the first Saints' church ever built in Canada, of which he was one of the elders. Mr. Green was a man of liberal impulses, and was always ready to assist in movements to advance the interests of the country."—Kent County Biographical Record.

The congregation of the Central Methodist Church has sold the old church building at Ninth Street and Lydia Avenue to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The price was $21,750. The church cost about $50,000. The "Saints" have also acquired two pieces of residence property adjoining and will take charge of the property January 15. The Central Methodists are now building a fine church at Tenth Street and the Paseo.

The "Saints" will make extensive repairs on their property and use it as a central church for its work in Kansas City. One of the two houses adjoining will be used as a home for the pastor of the church.

In faith and belief the Reorganized Church differs materially from the Utah Mormon church. The Reorganized Church has neither believed in nor countenanced polygamy. Its headquarters is in Independence, where it has a large membership. It has been growing steadily in Kansas City since 1878, when the first organization was effected. A small frame church building was erected at Twenty-fourth Street and Wabash Avenue. A second congregation was formed in 1896, and it is now building a stone church at Twenty-third and Holly Streets. The third congregation was formed in 1901 and it has a church at Prospect and Nicholson Avenues. The fourth, organized last January, meets at Thirty-ninth Street and Woodland Avenue. The new church at Ninth Street and Lydia Avenue will be the central body. The church also has missions at Malvern Hill, southwest part of the city, at Centropolis, Sheffield, and Sugar Creek.—Kansas City Star, November 30.

The Canadian Courier, a weekly, published at Toronto, Ontario, has an article in reference to the church, by Norman Patterson, in its issue for December 7. Minus a few items not correctly stated, it is a very fair article. It gives the number of Latter Day Saints, contradistinguished from the Mormons, as follows: "British Columbia, 125; Manitoba, 65; New Brunswick, 11; Nova Scotia, 73; Ontario, 3,377; Quebec, 3; Territories, 3,237; total, 6,891."

But he further states that there were more in 1901 than in 1891, and that there are many more to-day.

It gives a picture of the last church built in Toronto, and has the following description of Bro. R. C. Evans:

"Slight of stature, large black eyes bespeaking hypnotic power, language which betrays the lack of a school education, a command of vocal expression, a marvelous knowledge of the Bible, a sense of humor, and a wide acquaintance with human nature, he has held the undivided attention for hours of a cosmopolitan gathering of Toronto people. He impresses his personality upon his audience, whether in the assembly hall or to a solitary interviewer.

"Some twenty years ago the writer had an opportunity of studying Mr. Evans in a Western Ontario village. His advent was not heralded by press notices. Only small handbills served to tell the people that Elder Evans of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints would preach on Sundays in a small, disused church. But somehow the village paper was not needed. A congregation of twenty grew until it fairly packed the little church, and the other ministers of the village began to wonder what had become of their flocks. They began to take notice, then to denounce, and even a casual observer could then realize why Elder Evans had not expended his dollars in printer's ink. People flocked to the Mormon church out of curiosity, and many stayed to become adherents. They were not the riffraff of the village, but many of them men and women who were commonly supposed to have good ordinary judgment in most of the problems that life presents. The evangelization of the village had been accomplished in a twelvemonth, and Elder Evans left the church in charge of an assistant, to pursue elsewhere his work of evangelization."

The editor calls attention to the article, in his editorial page in the Editor's Talk, in the following short but expressive sentence:

"MORMONISM is making an impression in Canada, but the particular brand which has taken root in the East is different from that which has been planted in Alberta. The article in this issue gives the explanation."

We note, by letter from Toronto, that on Sunday evening, the 8th inst., notwithstanding there was a rain falling in the city, and another revival effort going on at Massey Hall, the largest hall in the city, and meetings at the Grand Opera House and another theater, the audience at the Majestic was all that the house would accommodate, showing that the interest in Bro. Evans' meetings still continues in the city. Baptisms were performed on the 8th, and it is known that there are several more ready for baptism.

Some four or five years ago we advised Bro. Evans to make special efforts in the cities. I believed that the time had come when the movement would be opportune. Very properly, he selected the largest city in the province to begin his effort, and it has proved, so far, a marked success. Bro. F. R. Tubb, A. E. Mortimer, Archie McLean and his wife, Alice, all write enthusiastically of the effect that the Majestic movement is having in the city. It strikes us that other cities might be treated in a similar way and success be secured in many instances.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

King Oscar of Sweden passed to his rest December 8. He seems to have been a good ruler, and is sincerely mourned by thousands of his followers, yet the march of events stops not, even for kings; at noon of the following day his successor, King Gustaf V, received the homage of the people. "The king is dead! Long live the king!"

Better, perhaps, to be a dead king than a live hero. General Stoessel, whose long and able but hopeless defense of Port Arthur, during the Russo-Japanese War, won the admiration of the world, is now on trial at St. Petersburg, charged with "needlessly surrendering" the fortress. The indictment which was read before the court seems to have been almost as long as the siege.

The evangelist "Billy" Sunday is breaking all former records at Muscatine, Iowa. Two hundred and fifty-four converts came forward in one evening, and at last reports the total number "converted" exceeded two thousand two hundred.

Helen Gould has presented many Bibles to sailors who are to sail with the fleet of battle-ships bound for the Pacific. She hopes to offset the famine of chaplains in the navy. There are only four ministers to accompany the fleet. Orthodox ministers at times are rather inclined to avoid water.

"I am in favor of local option," said Busch. "If the saloon is obnoxious to a community let it be voted out," he continued. "As to Sunday closing, I have a plan that should meet with universal approval. It is this: Close the saloon from midnight Saturday until two o'clock Sunday afternoon and then let them open. That would give every one an opportunity to go to church in the morning."

The widespread prohibition movement was viewed with some alarm by Busch. "It is spreading all over the South," he said, "and even Oklahoma went prohibition. That cost me a million dollars."—Exchange.

Press reports mention a "tidal wave of sentiment against the saloons" now sweeping over Chicago. Several classes of citizens, including some who are referred to as "the more respectable liquor dealers," unite in a demand that the saloons be made to strictly observe the law. It is stated that back of the movement in Chicago is a greater one that "looms up all over the State." State's Attorney Healy is reported to have said: "Until you wipe out the disorderly house, and the low saloon, you will have the conditions now existing—conditions that fill our criminal courts with cases that will take years to dispose of—one hundred and fifty murder cases on the average every year.

"When a man goes into a saloon at eight o'clock in the evening, and stays until three o'clock in the morning, guzzling beer, he is in a fit condition to commit crime.

"They say the saloon is the poor man's club and therefore we should not deprive him of this solace on Sunday. That is a most fallacious argument. The man who works all day usually has a family, and the best place for him is at home getting acquainted with his family and saving his money."

A little paper called the Missouri Issue, published at St. Louis, Missouri, in its number for Friday, December 13, has the following item concerning the late campaign in Missouri against the liquor traffic. This is valuable as showing the drift of proper sentiment in regard to the position taken upon this matter by the church.

"In Independence the results were not so satisfactory. Many old residents remembering the experiences of years ago when the city was nominally dry for four years, but in reality very wet, and not realizing the vast change in public sentiment that has taken place in ten years, seemed to fear that should the town go "dry" the old conditions would appear again. Hence they voted for the licensed saloon. Church members were far from being unanimous on the question. The Latter Day Saints, who are very numerous in the city, threw their undivided support in behalf of prohibition and so won great respect, but the same course was not followed by the rest of the church-going people.

"Then, too, the negro vote did not respond to moral appeals as was expected. Some even go so far as to say that this vote was bought by the whisky interests."

What is said to be the largest fleet of battle-ships that has ever attempted a long voyage, sailed from Norfolk, Virginia, for the Pacific coast, December 16. The object is to ascertain the cost, time, and feasibility of such a voyage. The maneuver is "entirely pacific"; we only wish to know what we could do to our friends in case we thought it necessary.

Is this a sign of the times? Those who remember the furious controversy which raged twenty-odd years ago between science and religion may be somewhat stunned when they learn that the famous "Humboldt Library of Science," the ten-cent bulwark of the evolutionists, is to be discontinued. The publishers, with large flexibility, have decided, instead, to "go in" for Roman Catholic books with a side line on Ireland.

When Charles Darwin first rapped at the doors of the civilized world with his "Origin of Species," the intellectual "rough house" which followed was contagious to the point of including most, if not all, of the old line publishers.

Few printing-house doors were open to Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall, et al, and at this juncture the Twentieth Century Publishing Company was organized, launching immediately a paper-covered edition of contemporaneous scientific works.

These were issued serially at ten cents a copy, and probably did more to put the new ideas into wide circulation than any other factor. Thousands of intelligent artisans and mechanics had no other reading matter whatever.

Now the back stock of the "Humboldt Library" is being disposed of rapidly and the plates turned over to other houses, while the Twentieth Century Company, visions of comfortable dividends ahead, is preparing to feed the public maw with books on Catholicism.

"Does it look like a volte face?" said a member of the house with a laugh. "Well, business is business. As a matter of fact, while the world is undoubtedly scientific in temper, the old controversy upon which the 'Humboldt Library of Science' was built up has to a large extent died down. People aren't as strenuous in their scientific convictions, I suppose. But the market for religious books has steadily increased and we are satisfied with our decision to specialize in that direction."

The house has a large stock of books of socialism which are being sold off along with the purely scientific works.—Exchange.

DO YOU KNOW?

Do you know that Christ named the Apostle Paul as a "chosen vessel" to bear the gospel unto the "Gentiles"? We are among the "Gentiles" here named. We may look for him to have something of especial interest to us, and we are not disappointed. For us he has epitomized the principles of the gospel of Christ into a single sentence: "Therefore, leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, and of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment."—Hebrews 6: 1-3. Here are six gospel principles that take one from the birth of faith clear through to the dawn of the Judgment Day.

Do you know that the "epitome of faith" of the Latter Day Saints reads as follows, touching gospel ordinances: "We believe that these ordinances are: First faith in God and the Lord Jesus Christ: second, repentance; third, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost; fifth, we believe in the resurrection of the body, that the dead in Christ will rise first, and the rest of the dead will not live again until the thousand years are expired; sixth, we believe in the doctrine of eternal judgment, which provides that men shall be judged, rewarded, or punished according to the degree of good, or evil, they shall have done."

Do you know that this statement of faith parallels the one made by Paul?

Do you know that no other published statement of faith and no other creed has ever paralleled that statement since the days of the apostles?

Do you know that men quarrel about the gifts and legacies willed them by their fathers and forget some of the gifts that Christ gave them? We are told: "He led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men. . . And he gave some apostles; and some prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers."—Ephesians 4: 8-13. These were a perpetual gift, or until "we all come in the unity of the faith." The will is still in force because we have not reached that time. Have we preserved the legacy? or are we satisfied with pastors and evangelists only?

Do you know that this means that Christ organized his church in a certain specific way? "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues."—1 Corinthians 12: 28.

Do you know that God organized his church in that way and set those officers and blessings therein and that man had no right to take them out?

Do you know that the Latter Day Saint Church is organized after this plan and has in it all the officers and blessings named in the New Testament Scriptures?

Do you know that you will find it difficult to find any other church that is so organized, or that even believes in these things?

Do you know that God never appointed any man to draw a line through the ages prior to the second coming of Christ and to say "Revelation ends here!"

Prophecy ends here! Miracles end here! Spiritual manifestations end here!" and so on?

Do you know that on the day of Pentecost the Holy Spirit was promised to all whom God should call till the end of time? (See Acts 2: 38, 39.)

Do you know that the evidences of the Holy Spirit are as follows: "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues."—1 Corinthians 12: 7-11.

Do you know that several of these nine gifts are rarely believed in, seldom preached, and almost never witnessed in the popular churches?

Do you know that the Latter Day Saint Church believes in them all, experiences them at times, and is living for a more abundant outpouring of them?

Do you know, in a word, that we parallel Bible teaching along every line?

Do you know that you ought to stand with the church that stands with the Bible? Elbert A. Smith in Good News, a gospel tract edited by Elders Edward Rannie, H. O. Smith, and L. G. Wood.

THIRD GENERAL EPISTLE TO GRUMBLERS AND FAULTFINDERS.

CHAPTER I.

Do all things without murmurings and disputings; that ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world.—Paul.

In the closing part of the last epistle, we noticed that the grumblers and faultfinders had succeeded in securing the conviction of Christ by their false accusation; and, as a result, he was put to death. The same spirit continued to exist, by reason of which the apostles suffered much, and finally died.

Having suffered so much among his own nation, Paul advised the Gentiles who received the gospel to refrain from partaking of that spirit, that they might be blameless and harmless, the children of God, and lights of the world.

The spirit of grumbling and faultfinding has always paved the way, or has been the foundation of persecution. So it was among the Jews, and continued to be among the Gentiles, and caused the overthrow and rejection of the church of Christ.

The perverting of the gospel was done because certain ones found fault with the plan which God had established, and sought to introduce a better system, hence Paul expresses his surprise as follows: "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel: which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ."

We have in the previous chapters touched briefly on the disposition to find fault in different periods, and under various circumstances, and invariably disastrous results have followed. We have followed the history of the Jewish race, because to them were the oracles of God committed, and greater things might be expected from them than from the nations who lived in ignorance of the true God, and without the light of his Holy Spirit; but alas! such is the depravity of human nature, that even those to whom were committed the revelations of God's will to men were so obstinate, rebellious, and disobedient, that they sought, and did put to death those whom God had sent to them to lead them in the way of righteousness; and at last, they also slew the Son of God. For all these things the Lord destroyed them as a nation, and made them wanderers among the nations, suffering persecution of every conceivable kind. This has been their lot for nearly nineteen hundred years now. How terrible it is to fall into the hands of an offended God!

In order to draw this to a close we shall pass by the great apostasy, and the period called the Dark Ages. We naturally look for great perfection, and less of human weakness among those who profess to walk in the light of the Lord; therefore, we take up the condition which prevailed after the gospel was restored, the oracles of heaven again committed to men, and the light of inspiration shed upon a benighted world.

CHAPTER II.

As soon as the church of Jesus Christ was organized in the year 1830, faultfinders and grumblers began to put in their appearance. The same spirit had continued through the dark ages and the reformation period, and as soon as the church was set up it joined the church also; but like every other class of evil spirits, did not know how to behave itself in the assembly of the Saints.

As early as May, 1837, this spirit was fully manifest, of which Joseph Smith writes as follows:

At this time the spirit of speculation in land and property of all kinds, which was so prevalent throughout the whole nation, was taking deep root in the church. As the fruits of this spirit, evil surmisings, faultfinding, disunion, dissension, and apostasy followed in quick succession, and it seemed as though all the powers of earth and hell were combining their influence in an especial manner to overthrow the church at once and make a final end.—Church History, volume 2, page 93.

In the year 1837 this spirit has taken such hold of the church that many of the leading men in the church were affected by it, and arrayed themselves against Joseph the Prophet. One of them writes as follows:

About this time, after I had returned from Canada, there were jarring and discords in the church at Kirtland, and many fell away and became enemies and apostates. There were also envyings, lyings, strifes, and divisions, which caused much trouble and sorrow. By such spirits I was also accused, misrepresented, and abused. And at one time, I also was overcome by the same spirit in a great measure, and it seemed as if the very powers of darkness which war against the Saints were let loose upon me. But the Lord knew my faith, my zeal, my integrity of purpose, and he gave me the victory. I went to Brother Joseph Smith in tears, and with a broken heart and contrite spirit confessed wherein I had erred in spirit, murmured, or done or said amiss. He frankly forgave me, prayed for me, and blessed me. Thus by experience I learned more fully to discern and to contrast the two spirits, and to resist the one and cleave to the other.—Ibid., p. 102.

And thus ended the year 1837, or the seventh year of the existence of the church, having suffered greatly by grumblers and faultfinders within, and apostates, persecution, confusion, and mobocracy from without.

And it came to pass that the new year of 1838 opened under similar conditions, and that the kickers, grumblers, and faultfinders turned out to be apostates, and continued to harrass and persecute the church from without, as they had done from within. Thus they gave valuable assistance to the mobs and enemies of the church. False brethren, conspiring and wicked men, had also crept into the church, and together with the class before named, it appeared as though all the powers of the infernal regions had been turned loose to destroy the infant church of the living God. What this power could not accomplish by the grumblers and faultfinders, it sought to bring about by one Sampson Avard, who had only belonged to the church for a short time. This man was secretly aspiring to be the greatest of the great, and to become the leader of the people. And it came to pass that this Avard organized a secret order called "Danites" whose object was to rob, plunder, and get gain, and they were sworn to everlasting secrecy; but when a knowledge of this rascality came to the heads of the church, he was cut off from the church, and every proper means used to destroy his influence, at which he was highly incensed, and went about whispering his evil insinuations. Finding every effort unavailing, he again turned conspirator, and sought to make friends with the mob.

And it came to pass that during this year some of the leading men (like Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, Aaron and Miriam, and others of old) found fault and grumbled, and turned traitor to that which had been intrusted to their care, and to the high and holy calling with which they had been called.

Among them was the president of the Twelve, Thomas B. Marsh, who, having been taken possession of by these faultfinding spirits, circulated the vilest stories, lies, and slander, about Joseph and the church, which only such ones who are fully inspired by such spirits can do, until he was about ready to take the lives of his best friends.

And thus the years of 1838 and 1839 passed away, with much dissension and rebellion in the church, and thus with those spirits yet in the church the year 1840 opened up.

In the year 1838 one Elder Willard Richards had been called to the apostleship, but the Devil seemed to take a dislike to him, and strove to stir up the minds of many against him. Some found fault with Elder Richards because he took unto himself a wife. They thought he should have given himself wholly to the ministry and followed Paul's advice. Some grumbled because his wife wore a veil, and others because she carried a muff to keep herself warm when she walked out in cold weather; and even the president of the church there thought she had better done without it. She had nothing ever purchased by the church, and to gratify their feelings, wore the poorest clothes she had, and they were too good, so hard was it to buffet the storm of feeling that arose from such foolish causes. Sr. Richards was very sick for some time, and some were dissatisfied because he did not neglect her entirely and go out preaching; and others that she did not go to meeting when she was not able to go far. (See Ibid., p. 483.) We presume that Elder Richards wore only one coat or they would surely have found fault with him. Likely they had no overshoes in those days or else somebody would have found fault with him for wearing two pairs of shoes. And it came to pass that when Elder Richards made proclamation from the pulpit that if any one had aught against him or his wife Jennetta, he wished they would come to him and state their grievances, and if they had erred in anything, he would acknowledge his fault, only one of the brethren came to him, and that to acknowledge his own fault to Elder Richards in harboring unpleasant feelings without a cause.

This seems to be one of the peculiar characteristics of a grumbling and faultfinding spirit. It will go and tell its grievances to every one except the party concerned, which is in direct opposition to what the law directs. This ought to be evidence to the ones who entertain such spirits, that they are not of God. The Spirit of God will prompt men and women to go according to the law, that is, to go to the ones with whom they are aggrieved, instead of making their complaints known to everybody else.

And it came to pass that the fourteenth year of the existence of the church had passed away, and yet the church was stirred from center to circumference by the class of which we write, and by dissenters who stirred up the minds of the populace against the church and its leaders.

And it came to pass that this evil spirit entered several of the prominent men of the church, such as Foster, the Laws, and the Higbees, who were cut off from the church for unchristianlike conduct. Said F. M. Higbee on some pretext had Joseph the Prophet arrested, but the evidence in the case disclosed the fact that a conspiracy had been formed between said Higbee and others to take the life of Joseph Smith.

Of William Law, who was at one time one of the First Presidency, it is said that "he figured prominently in church circles for a few years in Nauvoo; then was involved in difficulties, and was expelled from the church. He was one of the dissenters in 1844 whose agitation contributed to bringing about the murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith."

This is only a repetition of what we have presented in former chapters, that the spirit of grumbling and faultfinding leads to murder; it is an evil spirit which prompts one to grumble and find fault and is the stepping-stone to the palace of the Devil, to which he desires to lead us, to initiate us in still greater crimes.

We shall learn in the next chapter what the Lord has told us concerning this evil in this the dispensation of the fullness of times.

CHAPTER III.

And it came to pass that as soon as the church of Christ was organized in this last dispensation that there appeared tares also among the wheat; and grumblers and faultfinders with every other shade of characters found their way into the gospel net; and the Lord saw and heard that they were a grumbling and a rebellious people, and spoke to them as early as 1831 as follows:

Hearken, O ye people who profess my name, saith the Lord your God, for, behold, mine anger is kindled against the rebellious, and they shall know mine arm and mine indignation in the day of visitation and of wrath upon the nations. And he that will not take up his cross and follow me, and keep my commandments, the same shall not be saved.—Doctrine and Covenants 56:1.

And it came to pass that the Lord did speak to his people oft after this manner, and warned them of his wrath to come on the rebellious.

And the word of the Lord came again unto the people saying,

Therefore cease from all your light speeches, from all laughter, from all lustful desires, from all your pride and light mindedness, and from all your wicked doings. . . . See that ye love one another; cease to be covetous; learn to impart one to another as the gospel requires; cease to be idle; cease to be unclean; cease to find fault one with another.

Yet for all this they did not hearken unto the word of the Lord, and because of this they polluted their inheritances, and the word of the Lord came unto them again on this wise:

They were slow to hearken unto the voice of the Lord their God; therefore, the Lord their God is slow to hearken unto their prayers, to answer them in the day of their trouble. In the day of their peace they esteemed lightly my council; but in the day of their trouble, of necessity they feel after me.

The Lord commanded his people that they should live together in love, and thus become of one heart and one mind, and this would be an evidence of the fruit of the Spirit of God. "If ye are not one ye are not mine, saith the Lord God."

And it came to pass that because they had treated lightly and with unbelief the things which God had given them that the whole church was brought under condemnation: "And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all." And as a result of this condemnation and disregard for the commandments of God, the church was rejected and scattered, and the rebellious, the grumblers and the faultfinders were sent away, but not all. For when it came to pass that the sons of God met together to effect an organization of the remnant that was left of the people of God, the kickers and grumblers met also, and not until the power of God dispelled the darkness, which was there manifest because of the spirit of contention and opposition, were they enabled to organize.

Thus we see that that evil spirit still remained to vex and annoy the people of God, and it continued to be with them so that the Lord found it necessary to again speak in the year 1873, as follows: "Let contention and quarreling among you cease." And again in 1887 the Lord says: "Let him that partaketh and him that refraineth cease to contend with his brother, that each may be benefited when he eateth at the table of the Lord."

CHAPTER IV.

We have thus briefly set forth from the word of God to us, his law in reference to grumbling, faultfinding, contention, and strife. Now the question might arise, have we profited by the sad experiences of others who were before us, whom the Lord chastened, rejected, and punished in various ways?

Are we still in the business of faultfinding? If so, we are engaged in a very dangerous and unprofitable business, if we may judge the future by the past. If we were to enter the premises of another man and rob him of that which belongs to him, it would be considered a crime, and we would be punished for it; but if we circulate slanderous reports by which we rob each other of that which is sacred above all and worth more to us than our earthly possessions—our good name and reputation—and thus create distrust, suspicion, and lack of confidence, how infinitely worse is this crime compared to the robbing one of his earthly possessions?

The grumbler and the faultfinder may be found everywhere. He is not only sitting on the dry-goods boxes whittling in the towns, or standing on the street corners, giving vent to his feelings and grievances to every one who is willing to listen; but he or she may be found in the prayer-meetings and preaching services, and may even put on a certain air of piety.

Did you ever hear any of these pious (?) grumblers and faultfinders find fault with the prayers and testimonies of the Lord's people? Did you ever hear them speak lightly, jestingly, or sneeringly of what this or that brother or sister said in his or her prayer or testimony? Did you ever stop and think what effect this would have upon these brethren and sisters should they hear of it? If you have done this, did you ever consider what effect it would have upon yourselves? Did you ever stop to consider that the Lord had forbidden this? Did you ever stop to think that such as do this are not animated by the Spirit of God?

Did you ever hear any one find fault with the preacher's sermons? either that he was not polished enough in his manners, or perhaps used very bad grammar, or perhaps he touched a little too strongly on certain points, which some did not take very kindly to, or perhaps he was new in the business and was not much of a talker, and some one would say, "Pshaw! he is no preacher!" Did you ever stop to think what the Lord thought about you when you were doing this? Did you ever stop to think that this man was in line of his duty and doing the best he could in his Master's service, while you were sitting listening doing the best you could to find fault with him? Did you ever stop to think which of you were doing the Master's will? Did you ever stop to think what effect it might have upon those who are affected by your faultfinding, should they ever hear of it? Did you ever think that it might ruin some men's future usefulness whose sensibilities are easier touched than others?

Did you ever hear of any one finding any fault with the leading men of the church upon whose shoulders has been placed the responsibility of teaching and carrying into effect the law of God? Did you ever hear of any one who by faultfinding sowed the seeds of discord and distrust by which these men were hindered in carrying out the will of God as laid down in his law? Did you ever hear of any one finding fault with this or that brother or sister for doing things, saying things, and buying things which they, the faultfinders, did not approve of? Too bad they did not ask somebody's counsel before acting! Did you ever hear of any one finding fault with the missionaries' families, or those dependent upon a church allowance, for the way they spend it? "Why, they dress and furnish their houses (?) as well as those who are better able." And perhaps those who make such charges have an abundance, but do not contribute thereof as the Lord requires for the support of his work, and yet he has said:

He who is appointed to administer spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire, even as those who are appointed to a stewardship, to administer in temporal things; yea, even more abundantly, which abundance is multiplied unto them through the manifestations of the Spirit; nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld.—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

Did you ever hear of any of the grumblers and faultfinders pointing out the inequality between those who labor in spiritual things and those who labor in temporal things?

Did you ever hear of any one finding fault with the missionary for coming home to stay awhile and look after home duties? Did you ever stop to think that the missionary loves his home and family as well as you do yours? Did you ever hear any one say, "It would be impossible for me to be a missionary because I couldn't stand it to be away from home"? Did you ever hear of any one of these faultfinders desiring to go out in the missionary field and leave home and loved ones and their various money-making occupations, and willing to get along with the church allowance as their all? Did you?

Did you ever hear of any one finding fault with the minister for preaching too long sermons? It is not fashionable to preach long sermons now, we are told. Did you ever think that while the preacher's mind is filled with the light of the Spirit of God, and he sees in the countenance of some of his hearers that they rejoice in that light, that he would be excusable for preaching long? Did you ever hear of a real, genuine kicker, grumbler, and faultfinder that could not find fault with most anything under the sun? Is it not a fact that the church is harboring some of that class of people, and that the conditions referred to, and many more, actually exist, notwithstanding the frequent warnings of the Lord to refrain therefrom?

Is it any wonder that the Lord should again lately speak by his servant, Bishop Bullard, as follows: "Cease from faultfinding and complaining. Cease from speaking evil of your neighbor, your brother, or your sister; for this is not seemly before me; but displeasing to your Father who is in heaven"?

How long will these conditions continue to exist? Until the midnight cry is made, "Behold the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him," and they discover that they have no oil in their lamps.

These are some of the causes that will bring about this lack of oil (the Holy Spirit). If we are wise virgins we will heed the warning.

The Lord has said by his servant Joseph Luff,

My fires shall consume and my floods shall overwhelm, and men within and without my church shall yet learn that but one pattern hath been given by which ye shall build, if I shall accept your labor; and but one line hath been given by which to measure; and whosoever shall not gauge himself thereby and crucify himself to the world, shall yet be gauged thereby, and shall lose his all; for "whosoever shall fall upon this stone shall be broken, but upon whomsoever it shall fall, it shall grind him to powder."

Therefore, beware, lest the anger of the Lord be kindled against you, and the arm of the Lord be made to fall heavily upon you; and in his great displeasure he shall make you feel his chastening rod in this life, and cut you off as to things pertaining to righteousness in the life to come, and you fail to secure your reward in the celestial kingdom of God—the promised land.

If wrongs exist, let them be settled according to the law of God. Grumbling and faultfinding will never make wrongs right.

It is often the case that grumblers and faultfinders do not intend to find fault, and actually are not aware that they are finding fault; it may become second nature to them, and before they are aware of it they have been found guilty of it. Then there are others who think they are almost, if not altogether, divinely called to act as a kind of a balance wheel to society and the church, and point out the faults and mistakes in others, little thinking that the faults and mistakes are in themselves; and it is a good deal like the boy that looks at the world through a blue-colored glass, all the world looks blue to him. He is the only one who is not blue, but if he could look at himself through the same glass through which he is looking at others, he would discover that he was blue also. "Seek and ye shall find," says the Savior. If we seek for faults we shall find them; but if we sought our own faults with as great a zeal as we seek for those of others, no doubt we would find them also, and we would then be less busy in looking for faults in others.

It was by grumbling, kicking, and faultfinding that a rebellion was brought about in heaven and by which a son of the morning became the Devil, who led away a third part of the hosts of heaven. What was done in heaven by faultfinding may also be done on earth by the same means.

In closing these epistles I desire to state that nothing but the greatest desire to see all of latter-day Israel saved has been my motive; for this reason I have sought to plainly and briefly set forth conditions of the past of former-day Israel and the consequences that followed. They were a nation of grumblers, murmurers, and faultfinders; all of these terms practically mean the same thing, and that these things have been written as a warning to us in the end of the world. I therefore call attention to the statement of Paul as a fitting benediction to all to whom the language may apply.

"Neither murmur ye, as some of them also murmured, and were destroyed of the destroyer. Now, all of these things happened unto them for ensamples; and they are written for our admonition also, and for an admonition for those upon whom the end of the world shall come.—Paul.

To the Daughters of Zion.

For some time I have been wanting to write to the Daughters of Zion, but have deferred doing so, hoping to have something more definite to write. But still the matter that I know you are all anxious to hear about, that is, the children's home, is biding the further development of the sanitarium, and I expect the best way to speed the home is to help the sanitarium. And, by the way, I have lately become more and more impressed with the thought that that work should receive more careful consideration and hearty support from the Saints than it has hitherto received; not alone in donations for its completion, but by their faith and prayers. It means much to the church, indeed, very much, and involves great responsibility: So, then, let us give it our most earnest cooperation. The Lord has required it of us, and if we neglect that which he has commanded us to do, how can we expect him to bless us in any efforts to further his work that we may put forth of ourselves, however good they may be? We surely ought to have learned by this time, those of us at least, who have been following the Lord in his dealings with the children of Israel, in our late Sunday-school lessons, that it is only the willing and obedient who are blessed of the Lord.

But, while giving that work its needed and rightful support, we must not forget that the Lord has also said that a "children's home should be built and the efforts of the Daughters of Zion in that direction should be encouraged." Though there be sufficient money on hand for the building of a house for the children's home, we must not think that our work ends there; for it has ever been our purpose, not only to help build a home, but to help provide for its expense after it is builded. After we get the house, there will be numerous little things needed that we may be able to supply, such as bedding and bedclothing, towels, table-linen, carpets, etc. And after it is filled with little folks, think of the coats, dresses, shoes and stockings, hats, mittens, etc., that will be needed, beside books and playthings. There will be work for all of us, and for all the time, too. While we are waiting for the call, let us be getting ready, by saving our little offerings, and preparing our material for work as it comes to our hand.

Then we should be strengthening our forces, that there may be more of us to carry on the work. No doubt there will be many who will assist in this work who do not have their names enrolled with us, and if we could have their coöperation along other lines of our work that are just as necessary as this, we should feel strengthened indeed. We should all join hands in the effort to raise the standard of our homes to a higher plane, and to fortify our children against the evils of the world, and they may go out into the world strong to resist its temptations, and earnest supporters of every good work. Oh, that Zion may arise and shine in righteousness, is our earnest desire.

And now, sisters, I must appeal to you for financial aid to carry on this work. This is the first time in a year that we have asked for money for the running expenses of the society, and we hope that you will respond as liberally as you can, for there are some expenses that will have to be met, and our funds for general work are low. If the work of the Daughters of Zion has been any help to you, let it have your support, that we may pass it on to others. Send all money, either for general work or for the home, to our treasurer, Mrs. M. E. Hulmes, 909 Maple Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

Please do not forget to give what encouragement and help you are able to give, to the editors of our departments in the different church papers. They work hard that you may have good reading, and it is only just that they should receive your support.

It will not be long before our secretary will be sending out report blanks to the different locals for them to fill out for our general meeting in the spring, and we hope that no local will fail to fill out and return them in due time. If any local does not receive such blank, do not fail to write for one; for it may be that the secretary has no record of your local, as I fear all have not been as careful to report as they should have been. Each local should keep the general secretary, Mrs. T. A. Hougas, Macedonia, Iowa, informed of the changes of the officers of their respective locals, that she may know to whom to write.

MRS. B. C. SMITH, President, Daughters of Zion.

Dear Home Column: I want to give my experience on the Sunday-school question.

For nearly twenty-five years I lived where there was no church of our own. The children went to the Methodist Sunday-school. I read the Bible to them; I read Foster's "Story of the Bible" over and over; I read a book of short Bible stories; I read Sr. Walker's little book, and many other Bible stories. They were just as interested in the Old Testament as in the New.

Two years ago, I was reflecting how those in the branches would have more chance for study, in organized classes, than I could have alone, and I prayed to the Lord to send me help. I did not want to be behind others, though I had the church papers, and I had read and studied much.

It was only a few days till I had a letter from my sister, Sr. Callie B. Stebbins. She said: "I am sending you the Sunday-school Quarterlies, primary, intermediate, and senior. It just occurred to me that it would be nice, and perhaps you would like to study the lessons with us. They are so interesting and so good." It had not occurred to me to send for them, and here they were. And it was such a good beginning place—away back in the Old Testament. How many times I have thanked the Lord for sending that study to me just at the time it came.

We had our lessons every Sunday night; first the Primary, then the Intermediate, and after the little folks were asleep I would study the lesson in the Senior Quarterly.

I did not stop to think that the lessons were not interesting—I was just so glad to be studying with the rest. And the history of Israel can never be anything but interesting. I am always exceedingly interested in the Jew; and the Jewish history that we have acquired in this systematic study is something good to have. More people ought to take it up.

Six months ago we came here, and I could fall right in with the others in the study of the Sunday-school lesson. I have an intermediate class, and my little folks are just as interested as can be in the lessons. I think the Exponent's explanation of the matter must be right, that sometimes older children are not interested in any lesson. But I know of many who are.

For my own part, I want to study the Bible right through, from beginning to end. I think the Quarterlies are fine, and the lessons intensely interesting. This study, together with the normal work, and the study of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, in the Religio Quarterlies, is surely a splendid education in the religious life, a splendid chance to understand the gospel as taught by our people.

WINNIPEG, Manitoba, December 7, 1907.

Editors Herald: A few lines from this part of the Lord's vineyard will not be amiss, we think. It is so long since we have seen any news from this part, that we think it will not be objectionable to the HERALD, and many others will be glad to hear from us.

Our branch is gradually increasing in numbers, mostly by new arrivals, who, we think, are brought here by the Master to assist in his work in our city. We have a good Sunday-school, which is well attended, and where much good is being done by the study of the Lord's word. There are some outsiders who also come to our school and seem to be interested.

But the adversary is hard at work, and at times he makes things appear so dark and gloomy that we feel almost like giving up in despair, and returning to the world and its people. Were it not for the blessings that we have received from the Master, we would have long ago been overcome by the Evil One. But we believe that there are some righteous ones, and that their fervent prayers avail much, and we desire their prayers in our behalf, that we, as members of the body of Christ, will not be left alone to wither and die, which we are sure to do unless we receive spiritual aid.

We have also formed a Religio home class, but few of the Saints here have availed themselves of the opportunity afforded them to study God's word in this way. Those who do come, are more than repaid for the effort they put forth in seeking for truth. We have not as yet associated ourselves with the home class department, and we are wanting to obtain some information through the columns of the HERALD.

There are none of us who understand how the society should be organized, and how it should be conducted, and we would ask you to answer our questions fully and give us any other advice that we have overlooked in asking for, through the HERALD, so that there will be no mistake made by any of us afterward.

We meet in a private house, but the doors are open to every one who will come. The lessons are exceedingly interesting and instructive to us all.

We would like to know if it requires one who has been ordained unto the priesthood to organize a home class. Can one who is not a member of the church act as teacher of a class, if he does not deviate from our teachings? Should the class be opened by singing and prayer, if it is conducted by one who is not ordained? Would it be wrong to call upon one who is not a church member to lead in prayer and also to teach the class? How many members does it require to organize, and what officers should be chosen?

As one who is desirous to see the work advance in every way, and awaiting your further instructions, I am,

Yours obediently,
G. T. MCLEOD.

Dear Brother: Through the kindness of the Editors of the HERALD I am permitted to answer your inquiries respecting the organization and work of local societies and home classes of the Religio.

In order to be identified with the General Home Department, if you are not in a district organization—and I think you are not—you simply report your class to the General Superintendent of the Home Department, Sr. Altha R. Deam, Independence, Missouri, giving the names of the members of the class and the name of the leader, and report to her from time to time, as advised, the progress of the class. The only organization of the home class is to select a leader, and perhaps a secretary and treasurer if desired. For any other information you should address the Superintendent of the Home Department.

As to organizing a local society, it is quite simple. The following officers are elected by ballot or otherwise, as the society may decide, at the first meeting in January and July: President, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and librarian. The following committees are to be appointed by such method as the society may provide: Program (of which the president of the society is ex-officio chairman), social (vice-president ex-officio chairman), lookout (secretary ex-officio chairman), relief (treasurer ex-officio chairman), and good literature. The number on each committee to be determined by the society, according to its needs and conditions. The course of study is published in the Religio Quarterly, which is published at the Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, price ten cents per quarter, or thirty-five cents per year.

Priesthood is not a qualification for doing any work or holding any office in the Religio. In unorganized territory, that is, where there is not an organized district Religio Society, any one may start a home class and report as I have mentioned above. But to organize a local society, any one other than a district or general officer of the Religio or a general missionary of the church, is required to procure a commission to organize, which is secured by writing to the General Secretary, whose address is given below.

Any one, a church member or not, who is acceptable to the class, may act as teacher; other things being equal, a member of the church preferred, of course.

Whether a class be opened with singing and prayer depends upon the class or leader. There should be prayer, at least, and a song would be perfectly appropriate and in order. Whether the one conducting the class be ordained or not would not make any difference in this respect. A lay member has as much right to pray in public as a minister, and perhaps as much necessity, and the prayer is just as acceptable.

The fact that one is not a church member does not disqualify him for leading in prayer or teaching either, if he have enough faith and is willing to do so. There seems to be a sort of tradition in some places that the priesthood have a monopoly upon all public service, or nearly so. There is no foundation for such opinion, especially so far as it applies to Religio work.

The constitution does not require any certain number to organize a local society, but it has been held, and so announced in one of the leaflets, that six members may organize. It is doubtful whether it would be advisable to organize with so small a number. It might be, if all other things seemed favorable.

For any other information address either of the undersigned,

STANBERRY, Missouri, December 16, 1907.

Editors Herald: Ere the year 1907 passes into history, I want to send you a few lines from this part of the field. Though we are isolated from the branch, we desire to prove faithful and finally be numbered with those who shall enter into that rest that is in reservation for all the people of God. Our hearts ache sometimes, because of the indifference of some of the Saints, who manifest no interest in the work and are willing to sit down with folded hands and wait for opportunities to be presented before they can take any interest in the work. May the Lord pity them is my prayer. The HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves are welcome visitors at our home. How many times have our hearts been comforted with the glad message they bear—sometimes a message of sadness, but we do not blame you, dear HERALD, for doing your duty in presenting both sides of any question. If every Latter Day Saint took these three standard publications, and would renew their subscriptions promptly, what a help it would be to the church.

Bro. Bess and family, of New Florence, Montgomery County, Missouri, have moved to Stanberry, which adds a few more to our number. May they give strength to the work at this place. Ever praying for the welfare of the work, and that we may be numbered with the faithful.

JAMES SCHOFIELD.

CLITHERALL, Minnesota, December 12, 1907.

Dear Herald: I have so often read such good letters in your columns I thought a word from this part of the Lord's vineyard might help some one, as I have often felt the influence of God's Spirit in reading and searching its sacred pages; and often there comes to me that blessed assurance of the truthfulness of the work that confirms my faith and makes it stronger. I once was a member of the Cutlerite faction, and as such they taught me that there was no more preaching this blessed gospel to the Gentile world because Joseph and Hyrum were martyred; God had taken the gospel from among the Gentiles. This seemed to be wrong, and it used to trouble my mind a great deal to think that God's arm had been so shortened that there was no more work to be done among the Gentile nations; for I would come in contact with inquiring minds that had never heard anything about a restoration of the gospel; and when I commenced to think for myself I could not believe it to be true. One thing and another taught by them so discouraged me that I concluded to stand still; and if God would direct me I felt willing to move. And thanks be to Him that knoweth all things, and in these last days is looking after the honest in heart, he did call me to the marvelous light of Christ; and the teachings I have received since obeying the truth as it is in Jesus have so satisfied my mind that God is in this work, by the manifestations of his sweet Spirit, that I can stand as a witness for Christ, and am able to bear a faithful testimony that the work is indeed of God. Dear Saints, let us be determined to press on in this grand work of redemption which will secure to every soul, who is willing to embrace it and live right, eternal life in the kingdom of God, to go no more out.

We are striving to accomplish as much good as is possible under the trying circumstances which we have to meet; but we are hopeful of the ultimate triumph of this work; and we can rest assured that the little stone that Daniel saw cut out of the mountains without hands will continue to roll forth until it fills the whole earth, and, while it is doing this, will break in pieces all other kingdoms; and—here is the beauty of it—it will stand for ever. Yes, God is in it. He has brought it forth, and it must roll on, and will, till all other kingdoms are subdued. With a desire for righteousness burning in my heart, I hope to stand firm to the end.

Your brother in Christ,

L. WHITING.

SCRANTON, Pennsylvania, December 17, 1907.

Dear Brothers and Sisters: For some time I have been thinking to write a few lines to the columns of our dear paper, notwithstanding I am a stranger to so many.

As Christmas time is near, my burden seems to get heavier, and harder for me to become reconciled to my lot. I write to ask you to kindly remember me, and the little one, at the throne of grace.

We have been in this country about four years, and had to borrow means to pay our way; but I am grateful to say that we have paid it all back, and were in hopes that soon we could buy us a little home on the installment plan. But last May my hope was blasted, when the messenger of Death came and took my dear husband and the father of my seven helpless children from us. He was killed while working in the mines here. Two months after his death our seventh child was born, and while upon my bed, sick, and thinking of my lonely and helpless condition, nearly heart-broken, living in a small house for which I had to pay nine dollars per month rent, and not one penny of income, I had a dream or a vision, I can not say which. However, that which I saw was so real and did me so much good that I shall mention it. I saw my dear husband on his knees by my bedside, looking so well, much better than I had ever seen him before, and he called me by name, "Ellen, you must not give up. Take courage; you have those little ones to look after, and care for, and I want you to be faithful, and the Lord will provide for you. He will raise up friends who will see that you shall not lack for the necessaries of life. Be of good cheer, and you shall be blessed spiritually, physically, and temporally." Oh! what comforting words!

All seemed so real and true that I have taken courage, and do try to worship God aright and have faith in him; and truly the way has opened up. Friends without the church have been kind; and the few Saints here have been of much strength to me. Bishop John Zimmermann called on me and spoke very encouraging words to me. The Bishop's agent here, Bro. R. Hawkins, has been good to me, with the limited means which comes to his hands.

Dear Saints, will you remember me and mine at the altar, to ask the Lord to give me needed strength, understanding, and wisdom to worship him in spirit and in truth; then, as I was told by him who came to comfort me in the hour of need, I believe it will be well with me.

To my many friends in Wales, I wish to say that, I am getting along as well as can be expected under the circumstances, and have found some noble friends.

Your sister,

ELLEN MORRIS.

An Explanation.

That there may be a proper understanding, and that none of the Saints may be misled by any one, as is apparently the case from articles being published in both the Ensign and SAINTS' HERALD, we desire to make the following statement:

Inasmuch as one claiming to be Matthews, of Columbus Branch, is imposing upon certain parties by pretending to be going west, and collecting funds from the Saints for such purposes, we desire to state that there is only one man by the name of Matthews belonging to the North Columbus Branch, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. That said Matthews is at present the presiding officer of Columbus Branch, and that both he and his family are permanently located in Columbus, and could not in any way be associated with the man claiming to be him. Trusting that this will serve its purpose, and also stating that J. E. Matthews is not a man that would at present be in need of such help, even if as stated, we remain,

Yours in the cause,

NORTH COLUMBUS BRANCH.

Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Signed:

J. E. MATTHEWS, President.

C. W. CLARK, Clerk.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, December 16, 1907.

Request for Prayer.

Dear Herald: I would request the prayers of God's people that Bro. Isaac Rook may be restored to health if it be God's will. He has been afflicted for a number of years, and suffers greatly at times. Nothing that doctors have done seems to help him.

Yours in bonds,

J. B. HEIDE.

News From Branches

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.

Elders J. R. Sutton and J. S. Roth held a series of two-weeks' meetings. The attendance was fair, mostly of the membership. The preaching was very edifying, and greatly appreciated by the Saints. Bro. Roth has no copyright on his sermons; but none can imitate him.

The ladies' aid society held a very successful bazaar and oyster supper at the home of Sr. Joseph Gorman, to swell their funds for benevolent work, in which the sanitarium is included.

Several are sick among us, the most severe being that of Sr. Eden with the typhoid fever; but she is now convalescent.

The Sunday-school is very busy preparing for the annual Christmas entertainment.

A special offering for the sanitarium will be received at the sacrament-service on January 5, 1908.

Yesterday was called "Blue Sunday," because of an attempt to enforce the Sunday law to have all class of labor except that of necessity cease, and business houses close. The police department was busy taking the names of violators of the law with the purpose in view of having warrants issued for their arrest and special cases will be made a test in court; among that number are street-car men. It was rumored that the county sheriff intended to arrest the policemen for working on that day. E. RANNIE.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.

The usual stir and bustle incident to the holiday season is apparent among us. Mystery pervades the air and peeps out at us from many a well-known face. 'Tis the season of "Peace on earth, good will toward men." How blessed are we if we can observe it in its most sacred sense.

Our meetings are being fairly well attended, especially the Sunday services, and we have been having excellent prayer-meetings of late, marked by a wonderful degree of the Spirit. The young people of the branch have shown a gratifying interest in the meetings lately, and many an eye has been suffused with happy tears under the softening influence of the Spirit, as they have bravely striven to give a reason for the hope they have in Christ Jesus.

Quite a number have been baptized recently, among them being several promising young men and women.

The branch observed Thanksgiving Day by holding prayer-service in the afternoon, with preaching at night, Bro. Gowell in the pulpit. At the prayer-meeting a collection was taken for the benefit of the poor. We have been considering the advisability of heating the church by means of gas in the furnace. A committee is investigating in regard to it.

A two-day meeting is appointed here for to-day and to-morrow, in charge of Brn. C. P. Faul and F. C. Keck. It is also expected that Bishop Hilliard will be with us. So we are certain to hear some good sermons to-morrow.

All the auxiliaries to the church are in good working order here. The Sunday-school is preparing the regular Christmas entertainment which is always eagerly looked forward to. The school has a birthday-box every year. Last year the money thus accumulated was donated to the poor. This year it will be given to the children's home. And a special collection will be taken up to help swell the amount, at the Christmas entertainment.

Elder Goodrich has been suffering from a severe attack of "grip," but is improving now. He has recently changed his residence, and can now be found at 108 South Seventeenth Street, where his family is pleasantly situated, close to the church.

The Religio has been having interesting sessions of late, and we trust the interest now manifested will continue.

Cupid seems to be a very busy fellow, at present, and we look for things to happen in the future. CORRESPONDENT.

Miscellaneous Department

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Kirtland District, and especially the Branch Presidents; Greeting: As the year draws near its close, allow me to call your attention to the great need of new and firmer resolutions for the right than ever before. I had intended to visit many more than I have; but on account of the sickness and death of my brother so near the end of the year, and needing some rest because of my condition of health, I will remain home until after the holidays. Unless unseen conditions arise I will be calling along the line immediately after the first of January.

And, as the year is closing, may I not look for reports from all the presidents of branches, January 1? Some of you have forgotten one quarter. Please do not forget this time. Our missionary in charge wants reports. Your brother, RAY, Indiana, December 18, 1907.

G. A. SMITH.

Amendments to Sunday-School Constitution.

Please take notice that at the next General Convention of the General Sunday-school Association to be held at Independence, Missouri, April, 1908, the following amendments will be proposed to the Constitution:

Amend Art. V, Sec. 5, page 5, by striking out all after the word "be" in line one, and adding "a member of the Latter Day Saint Library Commission and as such shall have full powers to represent the library interests of this Association."

Also under "District Association," amend Art. IV, Sec. 5, page 10, District Librarian, by striking out all after the first line and adding "be a member of the district or stake library board, and as such shall have full powers to represent the interests of the district library of this association and join in the selection of a custodian of the circulating or district library; and as such member he shall seek to promote the efficiency of the library in this district in all ways possible and shall also do what he can in collecting and preserving such evidence of archaeology and other data as have bearing in establishing the fact of the ancient civilization of America and the latter-day "restoration." Also under "by-laws," amend Art. II, Sec. 5, page 12, by striking out all after the word "shall" in line one and adding "be a member of the local library board, and as such shall have power to join in the selection of suitable custodians for all books and papers in the local library."

Please take notice that at the next General Convention of the General Sunday-school Association, to be held at Independence, Missouri, in April, 1908, the following amendments will be presented to the constitution of said Association.

Amend Art. VIII, Sec. 2, by inserting before the words "general officers" in line one, the words "members of the First Presidency and of the Quorum of Twelve," so that said section when amended shall read "2. Ex-Officio Members of the First Presidency and of the Quorum of Twelve, general officers of the Association, and general officers of District Association shall be ex-officio members of the General Association."

Also amend District Constitution, Art. VIII, Sec. 1, by inserting before the words "all officers" in line one, the words "members of the stake presidency (within a stake) or the district president," so that said section when amended, shall be "1. Ex-Officio. Members of the stake presidency (within a stake), or the district president, all officers of the district association, and all officers of the several schools forming the district association, shall be ex-officio members of the district convention."

RICHARD B. TROWBRIDGE.

Conference Notices.

Conference of the Northeastern Illinois District will meet with the First Chicago Branch, at their hall, 989 West Harrison Street, Chicago, Illinois, January 18 and 19, 1908, at 10 a. m. Branch secretaries and the ministry send their reports in time, to W. A. McDowell, 354, West Congress Street, Chicago. W. A. McDowell, president.

Died.

BISHOP.—At the home of her parents, Independence, Missouri, Mary Ann Bishop, eldest daughter of Otto Bishop and his wife; born September 28, 1890; died December 6, 1907. She was the granddaughter of Albert and Annie Bishop, well known to the Saints in Independence. Her parents, two sisters, five brothers, and the aged grandmother, with other relatives, mourn their loss in the departure of this young sister from their midst. She had been sick something like a year, from tuberculosis. Funeral-services took place from the church in Independence, M. H. Bond in charge; sermon by President Joseph Smith.

BELL.—Elizabeth, was born at Florence, Nebraska, May 25, 1857; baptized by Elder Henry Halliday, June 6, 1875; died November 15, 1907. She leaves father, son, three brothers, and two sisters to mourn her departure. Funeral was held in the Methodist church at Portsmouth, Iowa, November 18, in charge of Frederick Hanson; sermon by Joseph Seddon, to a large concourse of friends.

CRANDALL.—Jane Newberry was born in Orange County, New York, October 17, 1812; baptized into the church of Jesus Christ March 14, 1831, by Herman Basset. Was united in marriage to Jacob Crandall, in Clay County, Missouri, December 5, 1833. Of this union nine children were born; two of whom died in infancy. Her husband preceded her to the better land fifteen years ago, since which time she continued to reside at her home in Panama, Iowa, with her daughter, until death relieved her of her sufferings on the evening of December 13, 1907, at the age of 95 years, 1 month, and 26 days. She leaves to mourn her departure, three sons, one daughter, nineteen grandchildren, and twenty-four great grandchildren. She retained consciousness till within a few minutes of going to sleep, and bore a strong testimony to the truth of the gospel, and of God's goodness to those that put their trust in him. Funeral-sermon in the Methodist church in Panama, Sunday, December 16, by Joseph Seddon, to a large concourse of friends, assembled to pay their respect to the departed.

SPAUN.—Sr. Anna E. Boyd Spaun, December 8, 1907, at her home in Holden, Missouri. She was born March 10, 1842. She was married to John Oldham. Of them were born five children who died in infancy. October 30, 1869, she was married to James E. Spaun, who survives her. She was baptized November 6, 1887, by Elder Beatty. Came to Holden some two or three years ago, and lived and rejoiced in the opportunity of meeting with the Saints. She was a faithful member. Funeral in the church.

ENGLER.—November 8, 1907, two of the triplets, George and Mary, born October 7, 1907, at the home of Mr. Charles and Sr. Engle, at Archibald, a suburb of Scranton, Pennsylvania. Service in charge of William Lewis.

ISAACS.—At Plymouth, Pennsylvania, November 13, 1907, Mr. David Isaacs, husband of Sr. Mary Isaacs, age sixty-eight years. Service in charge of Doctor Edwards, of Edwardsville, Pennsylvania, minister of the Congregational Church. Bro. William Lewis did not receive word until too late to attend the service.

CHENEY.—Mary Ella, infant daughter of Bro. and Sr. George Cheney. Born January 18, 1906; died April 13, 1907. She was blessed by Hubert Case and W. M. Aylor. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," and her resurrection will be at Christ's coming.

BOOKER.—Comer Booker was born January 12, 1906, at Harp, Alabama. Died June 10, 1907. He was the son of John and Maud Booker. Blessed by J. M. Stubbart.

STRACHAN.—Elder David M., of Youngstown, Ohio; born February 13, 1843; died November 25, 1907. Interred in Belmont Cemetery. Was baptized November 28, 1869. He leaves wife, eight sons, and three daughters. The youngest six sons acted as pall-bearers. Services in charge of Richard Baldwin. Sermon by Eben Miller. A large number came to pay their last tribute to their neighbor and friend, the home being filled to overflowing. The liberal amount of rich flowers betokened the high esteem in which our brother was held. Elder Strachan was president of the Youngstown Branch for quite a number of years.

HOTZE.—At her home near Carson, Iowa, Sr. Sarah Hotze, December 2, 1907. She was a Saint indeed, beloved by all who knew her. Born at St. Louis, February 14, 1859; came with her parents to Iowa in 1865; was married to Theo. Hotze October 2, 1882. Sr. Hotze united with the church August 25, 1894, and remained a faithful member until her death. She leaves to mourn, four sons, a mother, three brothers, two sisters, and a host of friends. Funeral from the Saints' church, in charge of S. K. Sorensen and M. F. Elswick. Sermon by D. Hougas.

Back to the Old Ways.

Every physician, indeed, knows in his heart that we have eaten of the tree of knowledge more than we can digest, and that if the known laws of public and private hygiene were put into execution the death-rate would instantly drop fifty per cent. Moreover, the modern serpent in the tree is atheistic, monistic, deterministic, and therefore hopelessly loveless. There can be no cure, nor is there any prevention, of disease unless the little physician is the child of the Great Physician, and learns of Him how wounds heal, how sleep restores, how wise "Nature" persists for years, for a life time, through all lives, to outwit, heal and undo the injuries of disease. Aping an unenviable and blind science, medicine has been too prone to materialism, although before the physician's eyes, as before those of no other man, have been the amazing miracles of sexual and mother love, of the healing of wounds, of the giving of the body to be normalized in sleep to something infinitely wiser than we, and of the ceaseless struggle of the hidden physiologic God of Health against the hurts of disease. All these, in addition to the absolute non-existence of spontaneous generation, would convince men with logical and open minds that materialism, atheism and determinism are the shallow delusions of fools.—Dr. George M. Gould in Putnam's.

Fungus Checks the Ravages of Black Hills' Timber Beetle.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The bark beetle, which for several years has been working havoc in the valuable pine timber of the Black Hills, S. D., has apparently been given a check by a fungus which finds in the dying trees a congenial place of lodgment, and at the same time kills the beetles in the bark. There is hope that the worst of the scourge in that region has passed.

For ten years this beetle has been sweeping through the Black Hills forests, every year invading fresh areas. The total amount of pine destroyed by it is reckoned at not less than one billion feet board measure. At the present stumpage price of green timber in South Dakota this loss would amount to $6,000,000. It now appears that its maximum destructiveness was reached about two years ago, and it is now on the decline.

Two years ago the discovery was made that a fungus was at work in the timber, killed by the beetles, in which the broods were passing their infant stages preparatory to taking flight to new forests. It was noted at that time that the fungus was fatal to the young beetles, but the full extent of the work done by the fungus has just been made known in a report covering investigations of many months by the Forest Service.

The fungus is a "bark peeler." Experts have claimed all the time that the beetles could be checked if some way could be found to peel the trees in which the young broods are harboring. They live in the inner bark and next to the wood. When the bark is separated from the wood their galleries are laid open and they die. Efforts have been made in the affected districts to peel standing trees. Machinery has been made for that express purpose, and trunks were stripped to a height of twenty feet. But so large are the affected areas that the few trees peeled were not a drop in the bucket.

Efforts were made at different times to cut the dying timber. Tracts were sold to mill men, and large quantities were cut, but not enough to have any appreciable effect on the beetle invasion. Woodpeckers helped the work along. They flocked to the dying trees by hundreds and stripped them of their bark and devoured the young beetles by the million. But that was not enough. The pest had gained such headway that it was beyond the power of barkpeelers, log cutters, and woodpeckers.

Meanwhile the peculiar fungus was gaining headway and getting in its work. It appears in the form of a grayish slime between the bark and the wood. It makes the bark loose and it falls, leaving the trees bare, and bringing down the multitudes of young beetles to their certain death; or, if the bark still hangs on the trunks, the effect on the beetles is equally fatal, for they die in their galleries and larva mines.

The habit and life history of this bark beetle render it defenseless when attacked by the fungus. The parent beetle bores a gallery several inches long in the inner layers of bark, grooving the wood. Eggs are deposited at intervals along both sides of the gallery, often as many as sixty or seventy. These eggs hatch, and while in the larval state, they bore short galleries at right angles to the parent tunnel. They remain there a year, eating and growing. Their depredations kill the most vital part of the tree—the cambium, though the tops and needles do not succumb at once, and it is at that stage that the fungus appears and brings the career of the beetle brood to a close.

In normal conditions it probably finds a few lightning-struck trees in the proper decline to suit its purposes, or it may attack storm-thrown timber, but it is not numerous enough to kill trees, and its invasion can not gain headway. But when some unusual condition—such as caused by a hurricane sweeping over a large timber area—provides a start, the beetles may increase in numbers until they are able to attack vigorous trees and kill them, and in fact when the epidemic is at its height they almost invariably attack living trees. That is what has happened in the Black Hills. The invasion continues until some enemy reduces the beetles below the point where they are able to kill timber. That puts an end to the invasion. This is, apparently, what the fungus is accomplishing in the Black Hills at this time.

Advice and reprehension require the utmost delicacy; painful truths should be delivered in the softest terms, and expressed no farther than is necessary to produce their due effect. A courteous man will mix what is conciliating with what is offensive; praise with censure; deference and respect with the authority of admonition, so far as can be done in consistence with probity and honor. The mind revolts against all censorian power which displays pride or pleasure in finding fault; but advice, divested of harshness, and yet retaining the honest warmth of truth, is like honey put round the brim of a vessel full of wormwood.—Even this, however, is sometimes insufficient to conceal the bitterness of the draught.—Percival.

IN BEHALF OF THE MANAGEMENT OF THE

JACKSON COUNTY BANK

I take the liberty of soliciting your patronage as we are in a position to do BANKING BUSINESS BY MAIL very satisfactorily. Open accounts can be placed with us for safety at your convenience and command. We have opened a savings department, paying interest on accounts of $1 or more and each member of the family should become interested in having a bank account building for future needs. We also pay interest on time deposit certificates. A number of the brethren are living here, others are looking forward to this location as a future home, and late revealment and admonition foreshadow coming events, adding materially to our spiritual holdings necessary to signs of the times, and in this connection our Board of Directors propose to safeguard the financial interests of the Saints by offering to them a depository proof against graft, greed, or calamity, governed by a kindred feeling born of the interest we have in common. It is not popular men, large capital, heavy deposits, National or State laws, that offer absolute security to depositors, but directors and officers progressive and conservative, possessed of the virtue of true manhood, shorn of all political ambition, with no taste for frenzied finance or mining speculation, and no inclination to furnish funds for others in that line. I point with considerable just pride (I assume) to our Board of Directors as named below. Feel at liberty to write us on matters that concern you in Jackson County, Missouri.

OFFICERS: Ellis Short, President; M. H. Bond, Second Vice-president; William Crick, First Vice-president; J. D. Briggs, Cashier.

DIRECTORS: Ellis Short, William Crick, M. H. Bond, J. D. Briggs, G. H. Hilliard, Doctor Joseph Mather, Doctor O. H. Riggs, Horace Sheley, A. L. Yingling.

Very truly yours,
J. D. BRIGGS, Cashier.

Are You Seeking a New Location?

Then you should not fail to look up the desirable new districts being opened up along the line of the Burlington Route.

The Irrigated Districts of the Big Horn Basin and the Yellowstone Valley, the Dry Farming Districts of Western Nebraska, Eastern Colorado and Wyoming and the Valley of the North Platte River all offer exceptional opportunities to the new settler. Good Lands at low prices.

Folders of all these districts are published by the Burlington Route and may be had free for the asking. Ask me for the ones you want.
